GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. First, let me welcome you and other Members back to the House of Commons for the fall sitting. It is nice to be back and see everyone, after they have had an opportunity to spend the summer in consultation with their constituents.

The first item of business deals with Bill C-49. Consultations have taken place with respect to this legislation. As you know, today is the first day we are proceeding with the change in our rules and these rules, among other things, contemplate the existence of legislative committees.

You will also be aware of the fact that as Bill C-49 now stands on the Order Paper, the motion will refer the legislation on second reading to a standing committee, in this case the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

In order to proceed in the spirit and indeed in line with the new rules, I have discussed this matter with Opposition House Leaders and we have agreed that legislation now at second reading stage will be moved after second reading to legislative committees.

Accordingly, I believe you will find there is disposition to accept the following motion and give it unanimous consent:

That all the words after the word "That" be deleted and the following being substituted therefor, Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Prostitution) be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, we did in fact have the kind of consultation which the Government House Leader indicates. This will be a matter that will arise from time to time over the course of the next few weeks as we deal with legislation that is presently on the Order Paper.

It may well be that with unanimous consent we can agree today to make the appropriate changes to all the legislation that now stands on the Notice Paper, to refer each piece to a legislative committee rather than go through the process on each occasion that arises.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition we would not only be willing to accept the motion just proposed but also to agree that this motion apply to the other legislation on the Order Paper that has not yet received second reading. However, I believe it should be clear that we are not changing the existing references to standing committees so that their work will not be disrupted.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think the points brought up by the Opposition House Leaders are germane and valid. I thought we would discuss the matter at a subsequent date. There may be instances when we may want to talk about grouping certain similar Bills to one legislative committee rather than two.

Accordingly, I took my usual cautionary position of only dealing only with the legislation before us at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue the debate on second reading of Bill C-49, entitled an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution). The purpose of this Bill is to help the citizens of this country who live in certain of our major urban areas and the police forces of the country to regain the streets because they have lost control of the streets and neighbourhoods in certain urban areas of this country.

The Bill was introduced first on May 2. I spoke briefly to it on the evening of June 26. I might also say that I have been under tremendous pressure from the Member for Vancouver Centre, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney), in this matter. She has been very much concerned with the problem that this Bill deals with and has been a constant source of pressure for some action to be taken so that the Criminal Code would be more effective in dealing with this problem.

The legislation does not attempt to deal with all of the problems that prostitution creates or with the problems of prostitution generally, which of course is the sale of sexual favours or sexual services for pay. It only purports to deal with one aspect of the problems that prostitution can create, which is the nuisance to others created by street soliciting not only by the prostitute but by the customer of the prostitute.

As Members will recall, several years ago the Government of the day appointed a committee to look into the question of pornorgraphy and prostitution in Canada. The committee was headed by Mr. Paul Fraser, former President of the Canadian Bar Association. We received the report some months ago.

Let me quote from Volume II of that report because it deals with the same question. At page 540 of Volume II of the report of the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution in Canada, the commission said:

> Furthermore, it is clear that as long as street prostitution exists, annoyance and interference will accrue to others, whether members of the public using the streets or other public places, or residents or occupants of adjacent properties. The Committee is of the view that those who are adversely affected by street prostitution are entitled both to consideration by the law, but more than that, to forms of legal protection which can be effectively enforced.

I might insert there that that is the problem. The form of legal protection which has been in the Criminal Code since 1972 is not a form of legal protection which can be enforced effectively. It cannot be enforced effectively because, through the interpretation of that provision by the courts and, in particular, by the Supreme Court of Canada, it is no longer possible to secure a conviction under that section for violation of the section. I will explain how that came about in a few moments.

The commissioners went on:

> There is to our minds no justification for ignoring the disturbance and interference with the peace and quiet of citizens which is associated with street prostitution.

Let me emphasize, no justification. One has to wonder why our predecessor Government left this matter as it did for so long in view of that. The commissionners went on:

> Few, if any, of those who are not currently affected by the nuisance caused by street prostitution would be ready to ignore its negative impact on them, if suddenly and consistently confronted by it. Although doubts were expressed to us in the course of our study about the necessity and merit of using the criminal law to deal with this problem, we have concluded that it must continue to have application.

The committee approved the course of action that we are taking now, and it found that street soliciting must be dealt with because of the nuisance it creates for others.

The commissioners went on in the next paragraph of their report to state:

> In the opinion of the Committee, it is the nuisance caused to citizens, whether by harassment or obstruction on the street, or by unreasonable interference with their use and enjoyment of property, which is the ill to be addressed. This means that some perceptible interference with members of the public or neighboring occupiers must be proven. There is no justification, in the minds of Committee members, for reviving the old status offence of being a streetwalker unable to give a good account of herself.

The committee itself suggested certain amendments to deal with the problem, but we do not think the amendments, which the committee suggested, would be effective in dealing with the problem. Therefore, we have come up with the amendment that we are now proposing to the House.

What do we propose, Mr. Speaker? The wording of the amendment is before you. We have new Section 195.1. It will read:

> Every person who in a public place or in any place open to public view
> (a) stops or attempts to stop any motor vehicle,
> (b) impedes the free flow of pedestrian or vehicular traffic or ingress to or egress from premises adjacent to that place, or
> (c) stops or attempts to stop any person or in any manner communicates or attempts to communicate with any person
> for the purpose of engaging in prostitution or of obtaining the services of a prostitute is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

It will be quite clear, if the House passes this amendment, that it will be an offence to propose to engage in prostitution or to propose to obtain the services of a prostitute. Therefore, the customer of a prostitute will be just as liable to conviction under this section as the prostitute herself or himself. We have to realize that prostitutes are male as well as female.

Subsection (2) of the new Section 195.1 deals with the question of "public place". There is some doubt as to what a public place is. It reads:

> (2) In this section, "public place" includes any place to which the public have access as of right or by invitation, express or implied, and any motor vehicle located in a public place or in any place open to public view.

This is necessary because it has been held that a motor vehicle located in a public place is not a public place. Any activity taking place in it is not taking place in public, even though anyone passing by can look into the motor vehicle and see what kind of activity is taking place.

You will notice from these provisions that repeated conduct is not a requirement, that one act can be sufficient to violate this section. The weakness of the section we are replacing is that the courts have held—and I will go into that in a little more detail shortly—that repeated conduct is required. The weakness of the amendment suggested by the Fraser Committee is the same weakness which, in the formulation it developed, require repeated conduct. By the way, we must not forget that in any conviction under this section, the Crown would require proof beyond a reasonable doubt, as is the case with respect to any particular criminal conduct.

Another feature of the amendment which we are proposing is that in Subsection (2) we propose that within three years after the Act comes into force there will be a comprehensive review of the operation of the new Section 195.1 by a committee of the House of Commons, designated or established for that purpose. The committee will have a year thereafter to complete its review and to submit a report to the House, including a statement on any changes which the committee recommends. I think this is an extremely healthy provision. I am sure concerns will be raised as to what effect this section might have and what dangers there might be in how it is interpreted by the courts or how the police act in connection with enforcing it. Within three years, if the Bill is accepted, we will have a committee of the House review the experience during that three-year period to see how the section has worked and to see whether or not any amendments are needed.

The problems with the present Section 195.1 really commenced in 1978 as a result of interpretations of that section by our courts, the Supreme Court of Canada and the appellate courts across the country. As I mentioned earlier, that section was passed in 1972 to replace the old vagrancy offence of being a street-walker unable to give a good account of herself. That was a status offence, and it was recommended by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women that that section be removed. However, court decisions since Section 195.1 was enacted limited the effectiveness of the section and of course the instances of street soliciting in Canada have increased dramatically since 1978. In that year the Supreme Court of Canada held that behaviour must be "pressing or persistent" to constitute soliciting.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, with your encyclopaedic knowledge of legislation passed by the House, the present section reads as follows:

Every person who solicits any person in a public place for the purpose of prostitution is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Thus, the courts had to determine what the word "solicit" meant. The courts decided that to be guilty of an offence under that section, the behaviour of the prostitute had to be pressing or persistent. In other words, the prostitute involved had to accost someone or a series of persons in a pressing or persistent way to constitute soliciting. Then, in later judgment, the court held that there had to be not just pressing or persistent conduct but repeated solicitations with respect to one individual, that it was not an offence if one person was accosted by a prostitute once with an invitation to engage in a sexual act for payment. There had to be repeated solicitations of this one individual by the prostitute concerned. Therefore, if there was a sequence of non-pressing approaches by a single prostitute to a series of individuals, it did not constitute the act or offence of soliciting. The result of these decisions was that it became impossible to enforce this particular section of the Criminal Code. We have really had that problem since 1978.

In addition, the Supreme Court indicated in what is known by the lawyers as obiter dicta that the interior of a motor vehicle was not a public place but was a private place for the purposes of the section. That caused confusion as to whether or not soliciting which takes place in a car parked in a public place or in a place open to public view fell within the soliciting provision.

There was a third problem with the present legislation, Mr. Speaker. There were conflicting decisions at the level of the provincial appellate courts. Some of those decisions held that a customer who accosts a person while looking for the services of a prostitute in a public place could be prosecuted while in other provinces, decisions held that the customer was not liable to prosecution. That, of course, is an imbalance in the application of the law, an imbalance that we do not wish to allow to continue. Therefore, in the proposed legislation, it will be an offence for either a prostitute or a customer to seek one another out in a public place.

The problems that arise with soliciting do not arise only from the presence of prostitutes and customers in public locations but from the conduct in which they engage while they are there. Our proposals are intended to remove the opportunity for them to carry out their business in public and to prevent such conduct from occurring in public. Therefore, in addition to making it clear that customers as well as prostitutes are liable to criminal sanctions for negotiating sex in a public place, the amendment specifies that if the activity takes place inside a motor vehicle in any public place or place open to public view, it is still an offence. The penalties that we are attaching to this new offence are identical to those that can be imposed at the present time under Section 195.1 of the Code. The court can impose a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for six months or both. When Bill C-18 which was enacted by this House earlier in the year becomes law, the maximum fine for a summary conviction offence will be increased to $2,000.

What are some of the problems the public feels that we must resolve for them in connection with street soliciting? These problems range from the slowing down or blockage of motor vehicle traffic as can be observed in Halifax, Vancouver, Calgary, Niagara Falls and Toronto as well as the slowing down or blockage of pedestrian movement on the sidewalks to active behaviour in connection with the selling of drugs, with pimping and with being accosted while walking down the street by persons who ask if a pedestrian wants sex or is prepared to sell sex. The residents of neighbourhoods into which street soliciting has moved complain that their property values are lowered, they are harassed by prostitutes or customers, there is noise and confusion and their children are exposed to the practice of the buying and selling of sex as part of their daily routine. These are the incidents of nuisance from which we must protect the public and this is why we are asking the House to deal with this Bill. As I indicated earlier, the Fraser Report verified the proportions of the problem which this behaviour has caused in some communities and it recommended that action be taken to correct this.

In interpreting the present provision, when the courts in effect emasculated the provision as an effective piece of enforcement machinery to deal with this problem—of course, we do not ascribe any blame to the courts in doing that as they are there to interpret the laws that this House enacts—municipalities attempted to get around what appeared to be a lacuna in the law, and they attempted to deal with street soliciting by initiating approaches of their own. They passed by-laws prohibiting street soliciting for the purposes of prostitution. However, in 1983, the Calgary by-law was struck down by the Supreme Court of Canada on the basis that the real character of that by-law was an attempt to control prostitution and that this was a function of criminal law that falls exclusively under federal jurisdiction. Montreal has passed a similar by-law which was also quashed by the Supreme Court of Canada. Montreal then imposed a further by-law which was directed at the sale of any service on public streets and that by-law withstood challenges in the lower courts. The City of Vancouver took a different approach and it eventually got an interim injunction to prevent street soliciting in certain areas. However, in Halifax, the same solution was attempted, but the court there rejected the attempt of the Province of Nova Scotia to obtain an injunction such as that which was obtained in Vancouver. Thus, it is a consensus of officials who are responsible for law enforcement, the mayors of the major cities and many community groups in the country that changes to the Criminal Code are required. Of course, the Fraser Committee has agreed in that respect as well.

This is an area in which there appears to be consensus in the minds of the public. The Fraser Committee had a national population survey conducted in 1984 to do with prostitution. This public opinion survey showed that 84 per cent of those surveyed found street prostitution unacceptable and that 71 per cent believed the police should be given more power to control adult street prostitution. I think it is clear that the Canadian public wants action taken in connection with street soliciting.

We know, and I acknowledge, that prostitution will not disappear as a result of these amendments. The amendments are not designed to attempt to make prostitution disappear. Prostitution is something that has been with us in society for as long as we have had organized societies. I suppose that is thousands of years. The prostitute has been with us just about as long as the judge has been with us. These are probably the world's two oldest professions. I am not suggesting we are dealing with other problems of prostitution. Later this fall, hopefully, we propose to introduce other legislation which will deal with different aspects of the prostitution problem, pornography and the like.

We have received two very complicated reports which deal with sensitive areas of human life. They are the Badgley Report and the Fraser Report. Both deal with areas not just of federal jurisdiction but areas of provincial jurisdiction. We have to consult with the provinces and many other interested groups across the country, which is why it is taking some time to formulate a response to those two reports and all the very sensitive and complicated matters with which they deal.

The Bill before us is here to remedy a specific problem which the public in our major cities wants dealt with. They want it dealt with now. They have been waiting far too long to have it dealt with. In fact, they have been waiting since 1978 and they do not propose to wait any longer. Since we have Hon. Members who are intensely interested in seeing this matter resolved, such as the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson), and other Members from our large city constituencies, we are dealing with it. I hope that the House will deal with it quickly at this stage.

We believe that the public should be able to use the streets free from harassment, not only by prostitutes, but by their customers. We think residential neighbourhoods should be protected from the problems associated with street prostitution, which certainly diminishes the quality of life in these areas.

One of the principal purposes of the Bill is to preserve and protect the urban environment from this blight. However, I suggest it will also have the benefit of reducing the opportunites available to young people to become involved in prostitution. We all know that the street life attracts new participants. The number of prostitutes engaged in the trade, and their customers, when you see them on the streets of Toronto, Vancouver, Halifax, or wherever, is visible evidence of the fact that there is money to be made in pursuing these activities with relatively little effort. One who may be a runaway, or whatever can easily see where this activity can be engaged in and how he or she can engage in it so long as street soliciting is allowed to continue unimpeded, as it is at the present time. The number of prostitures in the street will continue to incease as long as there is a sufficient supply of customers. More customers are attracted to the street scene because of the availability of prostitutes. The cycle can be broken, I suggest, if the law provides an effective deterrent to both the customer and the prostitute. The customer who is faced with the prospect of arrest and prosecution is certainly going to be less likely to drive downtown to seek out a prostitute. A diminshed supply of customers is going to make the business less attractive to those who now make their living from it.

Some people argue, Mr. Speaker, that if the prostitute is forced to conduct his or her business elsewhere than on the street, they are going to be unprotected from the exploitation and violence of customers and pimps. I cannot see the connection, Mr. Speaker. The prostitute today is relatively unprotected from violence and exploitation by customers and pimps whether or not he or she solicits on the street. That is the terrible risk that anyone takes who engages in the business of being a prostitute. One never knows when there will be a customer who will turn out to be a monster and the fact that one solicits a customer on the street or privately somewhere else is not going to do away with that danger. The pimp is not there because there is soliciting being carried out on the streets. The pimp is there because of the nature of prostitution, because of the loneliness and the desperate state of many of the women who engage in prostitution and who feel they need protection, companionship or whatever. It is not because they are soliciting on the street that they feel they need a pimp, nor is the pimp there because the prostitute is on the street. He is there because he is a vicious and depraved type who is going to prey on whoever he can whether it happens to be a prostitute on the street or in some other place. They will find a victim to prey on as long as there is prostitution.

As we all know, Mr. Speaker, we have always had prostitution. Therefore, I do not think the argument is sound that if we pass this Bill the dangers which arise from pimps and customers will increase. That danger is always there.

I mentioned previously, Mr. Speaker, that we do not propose to pass this legislation and then to forget it. We must all be concerned about the rights of free speech and association, the right to be on the street and all of the other rights about which we are concerned. It is a delicate area and no one can be sure just how the legislation will be interpreted. That is why we have a provision for a review after three years.

Some people have suggested, and I believe wrongly, that this Bill will infringe upon the rights of free speech and association which are guaranteed in the Charter. We all know that the rights of free speech and association are not absolute. They are constrained by limits which are imposed in order to ensure that the freedom of one person does not violate that of another. I do not think we can argue that just because one person has the right to be on the street it gives them the right to violate the rights of others. No one has an inalienable right to offer to sell or purchase sex on the streets. There is certainly no such inalienable right in the Charter of Rights and it is not marked anywhere that I have ever seen. There is no inalienable right to sell sex on the streets of this country and if this Bill is passed, Mr. Speaker, it will be positive proof that there is no such right. When the consequences of that kind of conduct becomes intolerable to the community, then parliament has a responsibility to act. We have a responsibility to the people who are affected in Vancouver, Calgary, Toronto, Halifax and Niagara Falls. They have a right to have us act on their behalf, and that is why this legislation is before the House.

I touched on the question of juvenile prostitution. I believe this Bill may be of some assistance in doing away with the high visibility of juvenile prostitution which attracts troubled youths to that practice. I believe that rather than increase the dangers from pimps and the like, it will have the other effect with respect to juvenile prostitution and should be of some help in making prostitution less attractive to those youths who may be heading in that direction. The new law, we hope, will help to salvage young prostitutes by removing them from the streets. Second, if they are removed from the strets, they no longer will be role models for other troubled young people who might view that kind of lifestyle as an acceptable and easy way to make a living.

I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, that the customers who solicit in public will be committing an offence under this Bill. The customer who solicits the services of a juvenile prostitute will, of course, be subject to prosecution. I think the knowledge that they can be charged themselves with attempting to pick up a young prostitute on the street will discourage those who have such propensities. It will certainly make it a less attractive proposition.

In 1983, the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Justice and Legal Affairs in its report on street soliciting for the purpose of prostitution did recommend the creation of a new offence of offering or accepting an offer to engage in prostitution with a person under 18 years of age. However, we did not think that this approach would be a workable one. The Fraser Commission also adopted this type of approach. However the Badgley Commission went even further. It suggested that it be an offence for a young person to be a prostitute whether or not he or she solicits for the purpose of prostitution in a public place. That proposal would raise problems, Mr. Speaker, because it might offend the equality provisions of Section 15 of the Charter that guarantees every individual equality before and under the law and equal protection and benefit of the law without discrimination based on age. However, that can be discussed at a later time. The Badgley Commission recommendation on juvenile prostitution was not adopted by the Fraser Commission.

I have not yet heard any argument against this proposed legislation that is convincing in any way. This is a serious problem which has not been dealt with for too long. I will not mention who might have to accept any blame in that connection. Our Party has been in office now for a year. We introduced this legislation on May 2 last following receipt of the Fraser Commission on Badgley Commission Reports. We did attempt to come forward with this legislation last June but—and I do not believe I am over-emphasizing when I say this—the official critic of the New Democratic Party was not keen on this legislation. It may be that he will even be in opposition to it today. But I hope will have a reasonable debate which I feel could be completed in a day or two at the most. The Bill would then go to a committee which would hold hearings, representations would be received and, hopefully, we could have this piece of legislation passed in the next several weeks.

When this legislation goes to committee, I would not like the committee to, as we say in Newfoundland, "get into the fat". In Newfoundland when they go to a seal hunt, they "get into the fat" and they stay in the fat for many weeks or months. I hope that if this suggested legislation goes to committee, the legislative committee will deal very promptly with it and report back, because that is what is wanted by the citizens of Vancouver, the Niagara Peninsula and Toronto and all those who want to see their streets given back to the law-abiding citizens.

Those who want to see their neighbourhood cease to be despoiled, those who no longer want the traffic jams, the leering, the sneering and the soliciting, expect this Bill to be dealt with in all stages and passed over the next few weeks. The police have that hope and expectation as well because their hands have been tied in dealing with this problem certainly for the last five or six years, and really since 1978. I hope there will not be any attempt by the Opposition to straddle the issue by supporting second reading of the Bill and then coming up with a thousand equivocations and disputes in the committee stage, trying to hold up the Bill by way of the threat of a filibuster or the like.

I visited Vancouver a month or so ago and I was delighted to be able to explain to the people of Vancouver what and who had held up the Bill last June. I delighted in explaining to them the ferocity of the reaction of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who was extremely angry because I could not get the Bill before the House and passed last June. She is a formidable woman, I can assure you, and I believe she is going to speak today.

I hope we will have a constructive debate. It is a specific problem, one of nuisance. We all know that we are doing today will not resolve the problem of prostitution as a whole, but it will protect ordinary law-abiding citizens. It will enable those who represent our citizens, particularly in our metropolitan areas, to regain control of the streets. It is not a Bill which affects us in Newfoundland. Of course, we do not have this kind of activity in Newfoundland. But I am glad to be here on behalf of the people of Newfoundland to help the mainlanders resolve this pressing problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is appropriate for us to begin with this Bill as we return from the summer break. It is an important subject and it is certainly time for Parliament to deal with it. The municipalities have tried to cope with the problem but they do not have the constitutional authority to do so. This is the place for that and I am glad that now is the time for Parliament to address the subject.

On behalf of my Party I can say that we are looking forward to a short debate. We certainly do not intend to prolong it. We are looking forward to the committee hearings and to action being taken; however, as I will indicate in a moment, we have some extremely grave reservations about the way the Government proposes to deal with the problem of street soliciting. I was astonished, I confess, to hear the Minister say that he has not heard any valid reservations over this legislation. I would remind him that this past weekend at the meeting in Yellowknife of the Canadian Federation of Municipalities practically the whole of the time was spent discussing the Minister's Bill. The municipalities are in the front line, they are more aware of the problem than anyone else, and they expressed their reservations about the solution the Government has put forward.

I would like now to say a word about the background of this Bill and the deteriorating situation in the streets of our cities which has led to the necessity for legislative action. The Minister outlined very well the legal developments since the Hutt decision in the Supreme Court of Canada which found that pressing and persistent behaviour was required in order to obtain a conviction under Section 195.1 of the Criminal Code. Since 1978 there has been a problem in our streets, one which has been steadily deteriorating. When the former Government established the Fraser Commission, it did so after a lot of national debate about how serious the problem was. When the Commission was established, the problem had become very serious and something had to be done about it. This was confirmed by the public opinion polls to which the Minister referred.

What were some aspects of the problem? The issue on which the Minister focused almost exclusively was that of the nuisance in the streets. That is not the whole of the problem but it is certainly a very serious part. The Minister is right, our communities are entitled to legislation which removes street prostitution from being the visible nuisance, humiliation, harassment and embarrassment which it represents. The Official Opposition agrees with that. We also agree that the spectacle of street prostitution has increased the volume of prostitution in our society. There is no doubt about it; people, young people in particular, when they see this activity, can find role models and apparent solutions to the problem of earning a living and establishing a lifestyle. I believe that if we can find a method of reducing or removing street prostitution, we will also reduce the absolute amount of prostitution and save many young people who would otherwise, by the dynamics which have been described, be attracted to and sustained by prostitution. Furthermore, the street prostitute is exploited, and this is a serious factor. The domination and exploitation of women and young people has been increased by the fall-out from the Hutt decision in the years since 1978. As well, drugs have been infiltrated into this picture and organized crime has exploited the situation. All in all, there is, to the minds of those in the Official Opposition, a serious problem which needs to be addressed by Parliament now, and we are pleased that the Government is taking the opportunity to do so.

The Minister summarized the state of public opinion very well by reading from page 540 of the Fraser Commission Report. I will not read it again, but the fact that he read from it shows that he is aware of the report, and I hope that when the Bill goes to committee we can attract members of that commission to come forward and give us the benefit of their experience in analysing the problem. But to those who appreciate the Minister's recognition of the Fraser Report, it is worth pointing out that he overrides and rejects totally all of the important insights that the members of that Commission developed about the problem. In reading the report carefully, I have the feeling that they will be the first to attack and condemn the so-called solution which the Minister has put forward, and I hope he will take their concerns as seriously as he took their observation that the public deserves to be protected from street prostitution.

Given the Government's recognition of the problem, I would say that the solution proposed is a bankrupt and hypocritical one. It can be characterized almost literally as a band-aid solution. It is like putting a band-aid over a very serious social problem. People who look at it from their houses, their front porches, will see that the problem disappears from sight, but it will not disappear in fact. Anyone who considers this legislation carefully can predict that the problem of prostitution will become much worse. I recognize that the total amount will be reduced, and that will be a good thing, but the prostitution which will continue will be pushed into a much worse situation. It is not satisfactory for the Minister to tell us that we will consider this matter in the fall because the band-aid solution which the Minister is proposing will lead to more serious crimes. It will condemn those who practise prostitution, much as we would like to encourage them to find other ways of making a living. It will make their lives for worse. I think it will lead to more corruption in police departments, to more power held by pimps, and to greater opportunity for organized crime.

The direct interface between the prostitute and the customer in the public place is being removed, but since, as the Minister admits, prostitution will continue, prostitutes will be far more at the mercy of the underworld and of the corrupt participant in the drug scene who will find them their clients. While we are not taking the brief for prostitutes, it is very difficult to ask us to support legislation which will create more crimes and put prostitutes in a more difficult, precarious, dangerous, and vulnerable situation.

Therefore, we cannot agree with the solutions proposed by the Government for that very reason. We must look behind the band-aid. The Fraser Commission proposed solutions in some areas to deal with those serious vices which will become worse if the Minister's Bill is accepted in its present form.

The Official Opposition has another very serious objection to this legislation. Most of the media that have commented on this Bill have expressed this objection most of the editorials condemning this Bill have emphasized it, that is, the civil liberties dimension. When one reads the language of Bill C-49 one sees that it vastly increases the power of the police in this country to arrest citizens.

I am concerned about the definition of "communication". It includes very minor gestures by an individual which can hardly be considered a street nuisance. Such gestures would not interfere with other members of the public on the street. I do not feel that such unobtrusive activities as that should attract police attention. As well, there is much more room for mistakes. The police are in a position to interpret activities which they see on the street in a way that can impede non soliciting activities in the street.

There must be better answers than those proposed by the Minister. Fraser has proposed some better answers. Although we want to see the problem addressed by legislation quickly, this legislation must bear the study of a parliamentary committee. It must bear the review of all the various groups in society that have been appalled to hear that a political Party which paraded itself as being civil libertarian before the election would bring forward as Draconian a measure as this. It not only removes street nuisance, which is a very desirable goal, but it inhibits a tremendous number of innocent activities which in no sense of the word constitute anything that could be called a nuisance by rate payers, as sympathetic as we are with their concerns, and as willing as we are to have the Criminal Code address those concerns and remove the problem of street prostitution.

I indicated, Mr. Speaker, that it would not be the position of Her Majesty's Official Opposition to prolong this debate. A number of my colleagues have been very concerned about the problem of street prostitution for years. They have been outspoken proponents of various solutions for dealing with the problem. We encourage them all to speak. After dealing with the issue of support in principle we look forward to serious legislation dealing with the nuisance of street prostitution. We hope that the Government, which claims to have other plans for later in the fall, will bring those plans forward and allow us to hear the whole package dealing with this problem. In addition to making the problem disappear from the view of the front porch, we must deal in a humane and realistic way with the problem of prostitution which the Minister himself admits, and which we all know, will continue even after legislation is passed dealing with the problems created by the Hutt decision.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to rise to speak on behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party on this very important Bill. I would like to indicate clearly at the outset that we believe that the approach taken in this Bill is fundamentally wrong. It is wrong from the perspective of the victims of this crime, from the perspective of the communities in which soliciting takes place, and indeed from the perspective of a society which values the freedom of speech and civil liberties. It is an approach which reeks of hypocrisy. It is a sledge hammer approach which will, in the long run, do nothing other than aggravate the problem with which it purports to deal.

Before dealing with the substance of the legislation I would like to respond briefly to the suggestion made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) in the House today and recently in British Columbia that members of this Party—and I believe he went so far as to suggest that I in particular—sought to obstruct, delay, and refuse him the right to bring this Bill before the House of Commons. He suggested that he and his 210 Conservative colleagues were being single handedly thwarted by the Hon. Member for Burnaby. Mr. Speaker, I think the record makes clear that that is patent nonsense. The record and the reality is that it was not until the evening of Wednesday, June 26, two days before the House rose, that the Minister even attempted to bring this Bill before the House for second reading.

Not until June 26, at ten o'clock in the evening, did the Minister stand up to introduce the Bill for second reading. Any delay in the introduction of this Bill must rest squarely on the head of the Minister of Justice himself who did not even bother to bring the Bill forward until a couple of days before the House rose.

Having brought the Bill forward on Wednesday evening, did the Minister come back to the House on Thursday morning to move forward with this important legislation? We were prepared to debate this Bill recognizing the serious concerns of residents of Mount Pleasant and other residential communities who are victimized by this problem. No, Mr. Speaker, he made one feeble, gasping effort at ten o'clock on Wednesday evening and then dropped it. He did not come back to the House on Thursday to try again. He did not return to the House on Friday. He then went rushing off to British Columbia and bitterly attacked the Member for Burnaby because he did not co-operate with the Government. What horse feathers, what absolute nonsense on the part of the Minister of Justice. He and he alone must accept responsibility for the fact that this Bill was not brought forward until two days before the House rose this summer.

I said that the approach taken in this Bill is wrong. I would like to indicate why we in the New Democratic Party believe that this approach is wrong, but before I do so I want to indicate very clearly that all of my colleagues are gravely concerned about the reality in residential communities across the country. No one has worked harder and spoken out more eloquently on behalf of the concerns of residents of the Mount Pleasant area than my colleague, the Member of Parliament for that area, the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). My colleague will be speaking later in the course of this debate. We are aware of the fact that these residential communities are in an intolerable situation at the present time.

I received a letter from a woman who lives in an apartment on 23rd Avenue in Vancouver. She talked about the fact that she recently discovered a prostitute conducting business in the laundry room of her apartment building and her son being woken up at 3 a.m. on several occasions by arguments and fighting taking place outside his window at 8th and Fraser as well as cars screeching throughout the neighbourhood and fights taking place in the street between customers and clients.

No Member of the House is prepared to accept that kind of activity in residential communities, whether it be Mount Pleasant, the west end of Vancouver or anywhere else in the country. However, the question that arises is, what is the appropriate response? While there must be a response, of course, what is the appropriate response to this serious problem? More important, what about the Bill that is before the House at this time? Does it in fact constitute a measure that is an appropriate response to what is a serious problem in residential communities?

As has been stated, the Fraser Commission conducted an extensive study into the question of pornography and prostitution and examined a series of proposals, both short-term and long-term. It was a comprehensive package for dealing with what all of us recognize is the degrading practice of prostitution. It is a practice which depersonalizes sexual relations. However, when one examines the approach taken by the Fraser Commission, it becomes immediately clear that the Bill before the House today fundamentally rejects the entire thrust of the recommendations of the Fraser Commission. I say that for several reasons. First, let us deal with the short-term, specific elements of the Fraser Commission's response to the concerns of residential communities that they want to be able to live in peace and quiet. The Minister quoted extensively from page 540 of the Fraser Commission's Report. I believe he went so far as to say that the Fraser Commission has approved the course of action that the Government is taking now. That is nonsense. In fact, the Fraser Commission has explicitly rejected the approach which the Government is taking in this legislation.

The Minister read about two-thirds of the way through page 540 but he did not read the following sentence:

> We also believe that it should not be sufficient basis for attaching criminal responsibility that a prostitute or a customer offer to engage in prostitution. Apart from the fact that it is difficult to characterize this as an intolerable interference, the methods which would be employed by the police to secure convictions are unacceptable. While undercover and decoy work may be necessary in certain cases to provide a basis for prosecution in the case of serious crime, we see no justification for its use in dealing with this relatively minor form of criminality.

In other words, in dealing with a nuisance.

Interestingly enough, the Minister of Justice did not bother to read that provision of the Fraser Commission Report. Had he done so, it would have been immediately obvious that the Fraser Commission rejects the approach taken by the Government, even on the short-term provisions with respect to nuisance.

What does the Government's Bill actually do? First, it provides that those who impede or molest individuals and attempt to solicit for the purpose of prostitution in public places will be subject to a criminal sanction. It is a sanction of six months in jail or a fine of $2,000 to those who impede, molest or harass people on the sidewalks.

The Bill does not just deal with those who harass people on sidewalks or the streets. It could be argued that there is a legitimate concern which may have to be addressed by Criminal Code provisions if existing laws are inadequate to deal with those concerns.

However, the Bill goes far beyond that. The Bill states that every person who, in a public place or in any place open to public view, in any manner communicates or attempts to communicate with any person for the purpose of engaging in prostitution or of obtaining the services of a prostitute, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction. I referred to a sledge hammer approach to the nuisance problem. Think of the implications of this particular clause as it deals with any form of communication whatsoever in any public place anywhere in Canada. What does it mean? What does it do for freedom of speech and civil liberties in this country? Does this include a nod in a crowded bar? Does it include a wink on the street? The answer is yes. Clearly, both of those are forms of communication, and as of the date of passage of this Bill those forms of communication will be branded criminal in this country. If that is not an assault on freedom of speech, if that is not an attack on civil liberties in this country, I do not know what is.

The Minister, in purporting to deal with the acknowledged nuisance in residential communities of those who would impede and harass individuals, goes far beyond that to deal with any form of communication, not just on the street or in alleyways but any form of communication in any public place. What possible justification can there be for that kind of attack on freedom of speech in Canada?

Certainly, no resident of Mount Pleasant, Niagara Falls, Toronto, Halifax or the west end has suggested in his or her representations to the House that those forms of communication in a public place anywhere in Canada should subject one to a sentence of six months in prison. It is absolutely unbelievable.

In fact, that is what the Bill does. The question we must ask is, what should have been done to respond to the genuine concerns of the residents of communities such as Mount Pleasant? Let me come to what we in the New Democratic Party propose as an alternative—I emphasize alternative—to the short-term problem of nuisance and harassment.

As well as dealing with the question of the over reaching aspects of this Bill in terms of freedom of speech, I want to look at some of the other implications of the Bill. We, as Members of Parliament can sit here in the Chamber and feel very proud of ourselves that we are sweeping the prostitutes off the streets. We will sleep well at night, knowing that that low life is gone.

Well, the implications of this Bill do not deal with just residential concerns. They go far beyond that. As pointed out by one member of the Fraser Commission, while it is all well and good to sweep prostitutes off the street and out of sight, under the existing laws, where do they go? According to this Bill, not only are they swept off the street, they are swept out of any public place anywhere in the country. We are not just dealing with the nuisance of street soliciting, we are dealing with any form of communication for the purpose of prostitution in any public place, anywhere in Canada. Under existing laws, under bawdy house laws in particular and other laws, any activity in a private place involving prostitution on more than a couple of occasions makes that private place a bawdy house.

What the Government believes it is doing is eradicating prostitution from all public places. It is already a criminal activity in all private places. The Government is saying that it is prepared to eliminate prostitution in Canada. That is the effect of this Bill, Mr. Speaker. One has to state only the proposition to recognize how ludicrous it is.

I am sure all of us would seek the eradication of prostitution as our objective. It is a practice that degrades and exploits women and young people. The reality is, as was clearly recognized by the Fraser Commission, that social and economic changes, and those changes alone, have any hope of ending the scourge of prostitution, and until we come to grips with them we will not eliminate prostitution in Canada. What this Bill will do, in concert with the existing bawdy house laws which must be repealed, is to drive prostitutes directly underground.

Let us think of the implications of that for a moment. It will not be that much of a problem for the wealthy, for the call-girls, for the Wendy Kings whose clients are the wealthy, the establishment, the lawyers, the judges, the doctors and those who can afford to pick up the phone and phone the Wendy Kings, the call-girls. Their business will carry on as usual. But what about the others, Mr. Speaker? What about the kids on the street? What will this Bill do about the problem of young boys and girls on the streets? Not only does the Bill not address the problem of kids on the street, but it makes their plight worse. It means that kids can be charged as prostitutes and be thrown in jail or fined. Is that really the answer to the social tragedy of juvenile prostitution? Is that really what this Government is proposing as a serious response to the tragedy in our communities of kids who sell their bodies to survive?

No other answer has been put forward by this Government. Indeed, we see the spectre of provincial Governments shutting down existing services for juvenile prostitutes. The Senator Hotel in Vancouver at least gave kids a roof over their heads and got them off the streets and the people tried to train them for jobs. But what did the Social Credit Government do in British Columbia? It shut the project down.

This Bill does nothing whatsoever to deal with the problem of juvenile prostitution. In 1983, when we studied this problem, if there was one unanimous recommendation by the House of Commons Justice Committee, it was to take tough and effective measures to deal not with juveniles, kids, not to throw them in jail, but to deal with the customers of juvenile prostitution. Where in this Bill put forward by the Government is there any attempt to deal with the customers of juvenile prostitutes? Nowhere, Mr. Speaker. Instead, the effect of this Bill would throw kids in jail.

Mr. Crosbie: And their customers.

Mr. Robinson: For over a year the Government has been studying the recommendations of a major commission that dealt with the sexual abuse of children in Canada. I speak of the Badgley Commission Report. That report should have been acted on long ago. Only in this month is the Department of Justice finally sending out a series of questions and discussion papers asking for comment on the report. Where has the Government been for the last year? Why was that process of discussion and consultation not started immediately after the Badgley Commission Report was tabled? If the Government is serious about dealing with prostitution of young people, it should start dealing with some of the social and economic causes, including the taking of effective measures to deal with the sexual abuse of young people.

It has been argued that this Bill will be equal in that it will be applied to both customers and prostitutes. That is on paper, Mr. Speaker. The reality has been, I venture to suggest, very different.

In Ontario, for example, the police can charge both customers and prostitutes. The experience has shown clearly that prostitutes are charged overwhelmingly. In 80 per cent of the cases prostitutes, and not customers, are charged, despite the fact that the law is supposedly equal in its application.

What are some of the other effects of this sledge-hammer approach to prostitution put forward by the Government? In effect, it will put prostitutes through the old revolving door of arrests, fines, jail for those unable to pay fines, and then it will be back to the street for them, working that much harder or back to the seedy hotels to pay off their fines, and being in jail exposes them that much more to criminal influence. There will be a few who will not go to jail, because we all know that the police use prostitutes, in many cases, as a very effective means of surveillance of the community within which they work. Deals will be made because the police will have their club if this Bill passes. Certainly the police will use it and they will use it with a vengeance.

The Government has brought this Bill forward because the police have thrown up their hands and said, "We are powerless to act. We have no tools. We need this change in the criminal law".

It might be one thing for the police to come before Parliament if they had tried to use the existing tools but they have not done that. I speak of the existing nuisance provisions of the Criminal Code and of other provisions of the Criminal Code, of provincial highway traffic legislation, of by-laws, not those rejected by the Supreme Court but by-laws which were carefully drafted by local municipalities to respond to the concern of those municipalities about nuisances in residential communities.

Where by-laws have been carefully drawn, they have been upheld by the courts. The Minister himself conceded that the Montreal by-law was upheld by the courts. Surely it is within the constitutional jurisidction of a local community to say that it is not prepared to accept that kind of harassment and nuisance in its community. Indeed, I want to commend the Mayor of Ottawa, Marion Dewar, for the sensitive approach that she has taken on this question. She recognized that it is not acceptable in her community, just as it is not acceptable in any other community, for soliciting to take place in residential areas. Therefore, as a result of a combination of community policing and other measures which she has been prepared to take, prostitution and soliciting have not been problems in residential communities. In fact there are alternatives. I very much regret that in my view it is residents of areas such as Mount Pleasant and of the west end of Vancouver, until the injunction, who have been manipulated and used to a certain extent as guinea pigs in the fight by police forces for this repressive legislation.

We will see the revolving door syndrome. In fact, this Bill will make prostitutes more reliant on pimps to obtain customers for them. If they cannot solicit in a public place and if any place where they are acting in private is considered a bawdy house, the only way they will be able to obtain customers is through reliance on pimps. Certainly that means increased violence and the possibility of more organized criminal involvement in prostitution.

By adopting this Criminal Code approach, prostitutes will be given criminal records, which, once again, makes it that much harder for them to get off the streets and out of prostitution. It condemns them to remain in that vicious cycle of arrest, fine, back to prostitution, more violence and ultimately, in many cases, death.

I have mentioned the problem in terms of threat to civil liberties. In that context I want to mention as well the very real threat to women who in fact are lawfully going about their business in our communities. Under the provisions of this Bill, those women can be harassed as well by the police as they go shopping or as they wave at someone they recognize in the street. This Bill opens up tremendous possibilities of abuse with respect to women who are not in any way engaged in prostitution but will be subject to harassment under the provisions of the legislation. The approach is a piecemeal one. It is an approach which has been explicitly rejected by the Fraser Commission. Certainly it is one to which we in the New Democratic Party are strongly opposed.

I have mentioned the rejection by the Fraser Commission of both the short-term response of the Government and of its failure to move forward in terms of meaningful social and economic programs. The Fraser Commission indicated that it saw no virtue in replacing the present system with a more repressive regime. It indicated that there was no evidence in the history of this country or of those countries such as the United States which retain a Draconian system that the results of such a move would justify it. Indeed, we are inclined to think that a move in that direction would subvert any attempt to treat prostitution sensibly as a major social problem. Despite that, the Government insists upon proceeding with this legislation.

I have mentioned that in fact there are alternatives. What are those alternatives for residential communities? I have talked about the possibility of the Criminal Code provisions already in effect being used—the nuisance provisions of the Criminal Code. For example, Section 171 of the Criminal Code makes very clear reference to a number of the acts which are going on in residential communities and which we recognize as unacceptable. There are other provisions of the Criminal Code as well which could be used. I am not convinced that where conduct is aggravating and pressing the police could not move forward even under the existing provisions of Section 195 of the Criminal Code. They do not have to rely on that in residential communities. As I said, there are the existing provisions of the Criminal Code. There are provincial laws with respect to traffic—highway traffic and impeding traffic. There is a whole series of municipal laws and indeed the possibility of municipal by-laws. It is argued that a municipal by-law is like a ticket. However, the reality is that the greatest risk for a customer is exposure. A customer does not care whether he is charged under a traffic by-law in the City of Vancouver or under the Criminal Code of Canada. A customer is afraid of public exposure of his name. I suggest that a name can be exposed just as effectively under a traffic by-law as it can under the Criminal Code of Canada.

There are alternatives. I have mentioned the alternatives within the legal framework. Certainly there are alternatives within the social framework in terms of greater community policing and collective community action to deal with these problems. In particular, I comend the residents of Mount Pleasant who have addressed a number of these community proposals for dealing with what is a community problem. However, in looking at this Bill, I think it is also important to look at the objectives not only of the Government but of the police themselves. I could do no better than quote Staff Inspector William Donaldson of the morality branch of the Metro Toronto Police who said:

> We are the last people in the world to believe we can stamp out prostitution but . . . we can force it into the several seedy motels and hotels and rooming houses downtown and knock those once in a while to keep it under control.

Is that really the answer, which the Government is suggesting is appropriate, to the serious problem of prostitution? I suggest that it is a pretty cynical cop-out to what is a serious problem.

I have dealt with some of the short-term problems in terms of nuisance and so on. We as a community or a society have to come to grips with the fact that this is a fundamental social and economic problem, a problem which reflects the broader sense of exploitation and degradation of women in our society. It is a problem which ultimately relfects the sexist nature of our society, in that women continue to be dealt with unequally, economically and socially. Women continue to be victims of sexism in advertising. Women continue to be victims of violence, whether it be wife battering, which we know is a problem that touches all levels of our communities, sexual harassment, rape or other forms of violence. As well, they continue to be victims of pornography. It is only when we come to grips with these things that we will be able to deal with the underlying causes of prostitution. It is about time that we started to come to grips with these problems.

Also I commend the Fraser Commission for recognizing that there is a number of concrete steps which could and should be taken to deal with these concerns. For example, it recommended a series of measures to deal with the economic and social concerns in this area. It dealt with the whole question of improved child care facilities, retraining programs for women to assist them to get out of prostitution, extension of benefits to part-time workers and changes to social benefits legislation in order to allow women to support their families adequately. Indeed, recommendations were made by a group in Vancouver, the Alliance for the Safety of Prostitutes in Vancouver. They were concrete steps to assist women to get out of the vicious treadmill of prostitution. For example, it proposed the establishment of drop-in storefront centres to provide health care, family planning information, legal services, court advocacy and welfare appeals. It went on to point out that the instances of prostitution could be reduced if some or all of the following services were available to ease the financial burden for single women and sole support mothers: day care, which I mentioned earlier, so that single parent prostitutes could obtain regular jobs; student grants to allow prostitutes to improve their education or job skills; co-operative housing to reduce the cost of living of single parents or single women; an increase in welfare payments so that welfare women would not have to resort to prostitution on the last few days before their next cheque arrives; an increase in the minimum wage so that low-income women would not have to resort to prostitution to make ends meet; and special training for social workers and police who do not presently know how to deal with prostitutes.

In this connection, before closing, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could quote from the words of a young woman who is in fact a prostitute about the nature of that life. Those words lead me to ask why on earth we should be further victimizing these individuals. What kind of society is it that further victimizes women who are already victims and in many cases have suffered from sexual abuse as children? Studies have shown that as many as 80 per cent of these women suffered from sexual abuse and violence. The overwhelming number of these women would, given the choice, want to get off the streets and out of the life of prostitution. A recent study carried out in Winnipeg, Manitoba, by the YWCA and the Elizabeth Fry Society revealed that over 90 per cent of the city's prostitutes wanted to get out of the business. That is not surprising given the levels of violence, assault, degradation, humiliation and depersonalization that exist. However, these women need support. They need job-training skills and education upgrading.

We can sit comfortably here in Parliament and pass laws which sweep this problem out of sight. It is very easy for us to do that. However, by doing that, we are failing the people we should be representing. We are failing our communities because we are doing nothing whatsoever to deal with the underlying causes of prostitution. I spoke of the hypocrisy of hearing the Attorney General of British Columbia calling for tough new sanctions against prostitutes while his Government hammers single women, makes it impossible for them to survive and shuts down hostels for juvenile prostitutes. That is hypocrisy of the worst sort.

With whom are we dealing? One young woman has spoken about her life. She has said the following:

> Why do we turn so much away from the straight life? Because we're not even considered part of society. For example, to rent a place, you need to put down your occupation. You can't get a bank loan, buy a car . . . You need to come up with stories. So you live in a world that is strictly cash . . . When you leave the business, you have to start at the bottom again. People ask what you've been doing the last five years. Society is what shapes how girls get out of the business. The minute you try to do anything like open a busines with money, the government is down your back. You have to fight the whole world. You try to make it back into the system, get fired, and then people ask, 'Why didn't you make it.'
> For years I had a very low self esteem. Society's attitudes makes one feel different about themself. The reinforcement that you're a whore, that you're nothing, that you're a low life does have an impact on how you feel about yourself. If you're constantly being told that, given the same message for years and years and years by society, by the social agencies, by the police force, by your family, you can't help but have a low self esteem and it's only in the last couple of years that I've started feeling good about myself. For years I didn't.

We as parliamentarians are being asked to respond to a crisis in residential communities. However, I suggest that the response of this Government is profoundly mistaken. I would hope that when this Bill goes to committee, we will give the opportunity to speak to those who do have serious concerns about the Bill. I hope we give the opportunity to speak to representatives of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women who have spoken out strongly against this Bill, representatives of the National Association of Women and the Law and representatives of many other women's groups. I hope we will give this opportunity to civil liberties groups as well as encourage members of the Fraser Commission and representatives of the communities affected to come before the committee. It is my ultimate hope that this Parliament will recognize that it is not by taking a sledge-hammer to civil liberties, and not by this assault on women that we will deal with this nuisance. We will deal with it in the short term, only by taking the kinds of measures to which I referred earlier in terms of community responses and, in the longer term, by recognizing that we as a community must deal with social and economic causes of prostitution. Only in this way will we begin to recognize the nature of this problem.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to participate in this debate. It is one of which I am very appreciative in view of the particular concerns of the people of my riding. I am also pleased that this Bill is the first matter on Parliament's agenda for the fall sitting of the thirty-third session of Parliament.

Many of the subjects of debate in this Chamber come and go in our communities and very little notice is taken of them. I can tell Hon. Members that this debate will be watched very carefully by the people of Niagara Falls. This is a problem that concerns them and it is a problem that has concerned me for some time. It is a matter on which I have spoken with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and my colleagues on the Justice Committee. Indeed, I believe the first words that I spoke as a Member of Parliament in this Chamber urged the House to deal with this very serious problem of solicitation for the purposes of prostitution.

I would like to give the House a bit of the background of this problem and in particular mention how it affects the community of Niagara Falls. I think we all know, and it is conceded by Members on all sides of the House, that the problem of prostitution will never disappear. However, I think it is incumbent upon us as Parliamentarians and indeed upon all members of society to do what we can to control and reduce this problem, and, as the Hon. Minister of Justice has indicated, to decrease its attractiveness to misguided young people.

In my community, the problem of prostitution increased dramatically after the Supreme Court of Canada in 1978 in the case entitled Regina versus Hutt. As Members of the House are aware, that case indicated that for a conviction under the present soliciting Section of the Criminal Code, the solicitation must be pressing and persistent. To all intents and purposes, at that point and in subsequent cases, that Section of the Criminal Code became useless when trying to control and deal with this problem. It made the buying and selling of sex on our streets legal for all intents and purposes. At that time and since, it has constituted a problem for many of the major communities, some of which were enumerated by the Minister of Justice in his remarks. It became a particular problem in the City of Niagara Falls for a number of reasons.

Niagara Falls, as I am sure all Members are aware, is a border city. On the American side of the border there are a number of large communities, the largest of which is Buffalo, New York. Shortly after the 1978 Supreme Court decision, there was a crackdown on prostitution in New York State. Tougher laws and regulations were enacted and these were particularly useful and successful in the City of Buffalo. Niagara Falls, because of its proximity and even because of its warm climate, became very attractive. It is a fact, a fact of which I am sure most Members are aware, that the streets of a place like Niagara Falls are much safer for every kind of business, legal or illegal, than the streets of a large American city like Buffalo.

Niagara Falls was and remains to this day for the most part a quiet, middle-class community with safe streets. However, therein lies the problem. According to various estimates, as this problem increased after 1978, there were on any given night approximately 100 prostitutes crossing the Canadian border to do business in the City of Niagara Falls. As the representative of that community, I should be very careful to make sure that parliamentarians understand that this problem is basically confined to one area of Niagara Falls. It is not the tourist area which is affected. Niagara Falls remains the primary family tourist destination on this continent. That has not changed. Millions of tourists come and go and are never exposed to the problem. It is the residents of the city who have suffered since 1978. The quality of life in that particular area of town has deteriorated in a number of ways.

During the election campaign last summer when I was knocking on doors, as many other Members of Parliament did, the problem of soliciting was put forward to me time and time again. Home-owners asked me who would buy their homes when there is this problem out their front doors. It is there all the time—day and night. I was told by home-owners that no one wants to buy their houses and that property values are declining. The houses that they have worked all their lives to buy cannot be sold.

It was not just home-owners who were concerned about property values who voiced their concerns about this problem. I heard all types of stories from people who told me that their wives could not go to the store any more. If they attempted to go to the local confectionary they would be bothered by people who know of the prostitution problem in that part of the city. People in their cars slow down and blow their horns at women who are legitimately going to the stores to shop. They are being harassed and insulted.

The shopkeepers also suffer as a result of this problem. They all tell me the same story. They ask me why anyone would want to come to this part of the city to shop. There are many other places where people can go to shop in the city. Areas of Niagara Falls in which commercial stores have been located since long before the turn of the century are feeling the pinch. These are the people who have been talking to me.

However, there is an even more sinister element to the problem. The Fraser Report, and others, have indicated that prostitution is not the only result of the problem. There are many other types of associated problems which come with it. It is estimated that approximately 60 per cent of the individuals engaged in prostitution are also heavily engaged in the drug trade. I found this summer that not only were there crimes involving drugs but other crimes as well. I am speaking of crimes of violence involving prostitutes, pimps and the customers of this business. It has come to the point where words cannot describe how seriously the people of this particular area feel.

A couple of weeks ago the employees of the largest department store in this area of town, Rosbergs Department Store, asked me if I could meet with them. They told me story after story of how they were scared to go into parking lots to get their cars no matter what time of the day or night. They told me of how they were treatened with beatings by pimps who felt that they may be trying to infringe on the territory of the prostitutes under their charge. These are the people who are looking to Parliament to do something about this problem. We have heard a number of solutions. The City of Niagara Falls tried a number of them. A number of years ago we adopted what has been referred to as the Calgary by-law. However, quite correctly, that by-law was struck down by the courts as being unconstitutional. Judge Hubert Oliver described the by-law in this way:

> The Aldermen may not like hookers on Calgary streets but it is Parliament that must provide solutions. Municipalities must not assume that function by the enactment of what is, in essence, criminal law.

I say to the Members of this House that that stand is exactly correct. It is not for the regional municipalities or the provinces to find the solution. The solution should be found here in Parliament. Any suggestion to the contrary is simply passing the buck. What we are dealing with is Criminal Code legislation. It is unfair to say to the municipalities: "Take a go at it. See if you can skirt the criminal law." It is unfair to allow them to spend the money litigating and paying the lawyers' bills in the hope that one day they will make it and have their solution approved by the Supreme Court in the process. The responses taken by municipalities were taken because Members of Parliament did not come to grips with their responsibilities. This is why I am pleased that after seven years we have Bill C-49, a Bill which finally addresses the problem.

The Fraser Report was recently released. It has been referred to by my colleagues. As I have said, it is of particular interest to me because of my involvement with the problem. It was an exhaustive and extremely thorough study. I believe it points out the complexities and difficulties of dealing with the subject of prostitution, as well as with the subject of pornography. However, I believe the amendments which it asks us to make to the Criminal Code would not be as effective as the ones proposed in Bill C-49. It bothers me when I see the suggestion proposed by the Fraser Commission to amend Section 171(1). I see words which state that it becomes an offence for everyone to stand, stop, wander about in or drive through a public place for purposes of offering to engage in prostitution or of employing the services of a prostitute or prostitutes and on more than one occasion to beckon to, et cetera. This is part of the problem we have before us. The problem with the present legislation is the "pressing and persistent" aspect of it. I do not want to see any reference to that in the legislation which is before Parliament.

In addition, I have serious reservations about one of the other recommendations found in the Fraser Report. It states that it becomes an offence for everyone to disturb the peace and quiet of the occupants of a dwelling by engaging in certain forms of conduct, including prostitution, et cetera. I see potential difficulties with that suggestion as well. The people who are bothered by the problem of prostitution in my communities are not bothered by one prostitute on one occasion who disturbs the enjoyment of the dwelling. It is a cumulative process. It is a problem which continues day and night, and one which continues over a long period of time. I ask Members of this House what dwelling owner will say that, yes, a particular woman or man on a particular occasion has unnecessarily disturbed the peace and quiet of his home? My guess is that the courts would make very short work of that. It is something which would have to come before Parliament again. We would have to make other changes in order to make the law effective. This is why I believe the Bill before us provides the solution we are looking for.

I reject the comments of the member of the Official Opposition and the member of the New Democratic Party who have said that the Bill before us is a Draconian measure and that an innocent nod or wave would somehow land a person before the courts. I believe that the police who are trying to deal with the problem have tried to deal with it responsibly and effectively. I know that the members of the Opposition who have spoken have legal backgrounds. They should know that there are protections provided by the court. As the Minister of Justice has said, every single Criminal Code charge in the country has to be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. All the protections which are built into the Criminal Code in a British justice system will apply to Bill C-49. Thus I reject out of hand any suggestion to the contrary.

I cannot over-state the concerns expressed to me by the Mayor of Niagara Falls and other members of City Council when they heard that Parliament would be dealing with this issue first. The Mayor asked me to express his concerns. I think the Mayor of the City of Niagara Falls put it very succinctly when he wrote, and I quote:

> —the current status quo of the Criminal Code of Canada as it pertains to this problem of street solicitation regarding prostitution is totally unacceptable to our law-abiding citizens. Indeed, it is perceived by many of our citizens that those who will not live within the law and abide by the laws of our municipalities and our country appear to have more rights than our law-abiding citizens. Our Regional Municipal Police Force is most frustrated in that in the practical sense they cannot keep these incidents of blatant prostitution solicitation under control.

It is my understanding that some Members of Parliament have concerns about the human rights issues related to Bill C-49. May I say to them most strongly: please look at this most important legislation in the broadest sense: The rights of all citizens who live within the law must be protected. Human rights must be relevant to lawfulness. Those who live outside the law should not have rights which take precedence over those who live within the law.

It is signed by William S. Smeaton, Mayor.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that many times parliamentarians complain that what goes on in this Chamber does not matter. They feel it is not reported and is of no concern. But I assure them that this is a very important debate. The people of Niagara Falls, Calgary, Halifax, Vancouver and Toronto do not want this debate prolonged. They do not want to see a filibuster on this Bill. Indeed, I will be presenting a petition this afternoon from 2,000 residents of Niagara Falls, who have expressed the sentiments of tens of thousands of residents of my home town. They want Bill C-49 passed immediately by this Parliament. I believe the sentiments expressed in the petition are sentiments which are shared by our citizens right across this country. I believe that parliamentarians would be doing a service to themselves and to everyone in Canada if we expedited the passing of Bill C-49.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for my colleague, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). He has certainly been very eloquent in expressing the concerns of the residents of Niagara Falls with respect to the very serious problem of street soliciting in his community, and I recognize that concern. But why is it that the Hon. Member believes that we should support and in fact immediately pass legislation which does not just deal with the problem of street soliciting? That is the only concern he has addressed, and quite properly so, in his remarks. Why is it that the Hon. Member believes we should in fact pass a piece of legislation which deals with any form of communication in any public place anywhere in Canada?

I suggest that none of the Hon. Member's constitutents have raised as a great concern the possibility that there may be an offer of solicitation in a bar, pub or other public place. The concern raised by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls is about street soliciting in public places. Section 195.1(1)(a) and (b) deals with stopping or attempting to stop motor vehicles and impeding the free flow of pedestrian and vehicular traffic and so on. Paragraph (c) even refers to stopping or attempting to stop any person. Why does my hon. friend believe it essential that we go beyond the concern of dealing with street soliciting to any form of communication, not just on the streets but in any public place anywhere in Canada?

The Hon. Member referred disapprovingly to the recommendation of the Fraser Commission that the legislation require more than one occasion of standing, stopping, wandering about or driving through a public place. He suggested that that is encoded in the existing law. With respect, that is simply not the case. The Supreme Court of Canada said that repeated approaches to different people are not covered by Section 195(1). That is a problem.

There is no such suggestion in the proposal of the Fraser Commission. Indeed, the proposal of the Fraser Commission explicitly deals with repeated approaches to different individuals. I do not buy the argument of the Hon. Member with respect to more than one approach.

I have in effect a double-barrelled question. Why is there this sweeping extension into any public place anywhere in Canada when the Hon. Member's reported concern is street soliciting? Second, what is the Hon. Member's real concern with the proposal of the Fraser Commission in this area?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member wants to know why I support the proposition that this offence be related to any public place. Why drive it off the streets into the bus stations? We do not want soliciting in the bus stations, in the parks, on the sidewalks, the streets, or any public place. The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) is very correct when he says, what sort of behaviour we are trying to control is spelled out very clearly. He mentions a communication anywhere in Canada. Well, it is communication for the purpose of engaging in prostitution or obtaining the services of a prostitute. That is what this legislation is directed towards. I believe that is the problem it will control.

The Hon. Member wants to know why there is an urgency with respect to this particular element of prostitution, street soliciting. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) has indicated that this Parliament is prepared to deal with the other aspects of this problem but there is an urgency because the police have lost control of the streets. When the legislative committee meets I hope one of the superintendents of the Niagara Falls police will appear and I believe he will say the same thing. The police cannot control that problem and all the associated problems. In fact, in many cases the prostitutes welcome police surveillance because they feel it makes it even safer to do business. It is basically legal to solicit in Canada and now they will have police protection. Because the police have lost control of the streets it is very appropriate that Parliament comes forward with Bill C-49 which deals directly with a problem which affects so many people in my community, the Hon. Member's community and in hundreds of communities across Canada.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, what causes me considerable concern with respect to Bill C-49 is the civil libertarian aspect and the possible abuse by the police of this particular section. I am concerned about that the powers which would be given to the police forces in the country and the innocent people who might be subjected to harrassment. I would like to ask the Hon. Member first whether he feels that this particular piece of legislation gives too much discretion and power to the police? Would the Hon. Member not agree that this particular piece of legislation could result in innocent persons being harrassed by police officers?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I believe this section will be treated like other sections of the Criminal Code. There is always the possibility with every single section of the Criminal Code that there could be police abuse. I have spoken to members of the police force in my own community and have read comments made by members of the police in other communities and they indicate that they sincerely want to address the problem. What I said earlier in my remarks I will say again to the Hon. Member. All the protections of our system of justice will apply equally to this amendment to the Criminal Code. The Hon. Member asks if police power could be abused. I suppose it could be abused with respect to every single section of the Criminal Code. There is no doubt about that. If the Hon. Member is asking me whether I believe it will be abused, I can say from my own experience that I do not believe so. The law is specific as to what Parliament is trying to do. I believe it is better worded than many of the sections in the Criminal Code with which the police forces now have to deal. They are sometimes vague and leave too much discretion. But this section is very specific and anyone who is charged, as I have indicated, has all of the protections of our system of justice, and that is a good thing.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WELCOME TO NEW PAGES

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before proceeding to Standing Order 22, there is a traditional matter I would like to deal with. You will see in front of you a new group of pages. Perhaps the House would join me in welcoming them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I can assure you from my meetings with them that they are at least as good as the group we had last year, and I think they may turn out to be letter. They have as a group successfully passed the recognition test regarding Members more quickly than I did.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of utmost importance to all Canadians, that is, those Canadians who are not part of the federal Conservative Government. This summer we witnessed the passage of the American Coast Guard ice breaker The Polar Sea through the Northwest Passage. This was undertaken without requesting the permission of the Canadian Government.

We have also seen the Government take credit for something which was largely the result of a Liberal Government's efforts—the North Warning System. We are constructively spending a great deal of money on this new system for North American air defence and surveillance. We have been told it will greatly improve our position in the North and help increase our claim of sovereignty over the disputed Arctic region. However, within months of announcing the new North Warning agreement with the U.S., the Government severely undermined any claims to sovereignty which would have developed from that system.

The silence of the entire Government, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen), has sent a signal to all interested parties that we are not prepared to defend what we think is ours.

The Prime Minister and his Government have once again proven to all Canadians that this is a spineless Government based on reckless rhetoric on the one hand and totally irresponsible silence on the other.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARLIAMENTARIANS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the recent conviction of a Member of Parliament highlights once again the grave problem of wife assault. Canadian women expect their elected representatives to treat this matter very seriously and to be positive examples as public figures. They are disappointed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has not acted on his election promise to provide financial leadership, intervention and co-operation with the provinces. Instead, he has drastically cut transfer payments to the provinces which will curtail services for battered women.

This latest incident symbolizes the seriousness of domestic violence and the responsibility of each MP to speak out against battering, as well as the need for government action. Women in northern communities are at particular risk and have few protections or services, according to recent studies sponsored by the territorial Government. Communities throughout Canada urgently need funds to establish and maintain shelters.

Constituents in the Western Arctic have called for the resignation of their MP and they will deal with him at the polls. I challenge the Prime Minister not to ignore this incident. He must publicly condemn wife battering and prove his concern by acting now to fulfil his election promises and provide special funding for emergency shelters for battered women and their children.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUPPORT FOR THE SPEAKER

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, this statement refers directly to you so I beg your indulgence.

Over the summer I noticed the combined media at one point came down on you with both muddy feet. You were accused of everything from recommending profligate spending, and heavy-handed treatment of the House, to lacking the confidence of the Members. I want to go on record as one member of this Party, and I suspect I speak for many of my colleagues, in extending my full support to you and your office.

In the first year of your speakership you have added a much needed modicum of wit and humour to one of Canada's most difficult positions. Despite criticism you have dealt fairly with all Members, displaying a patience and courtesy I would not have believed possible. You have presented your rulings firmly, soundly, and with tact and dignity. I congratulate you on your first year in office and I look forward to the year ahead with you in the chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that messages of congratulation under Standing Order 22 are out of order.

COMMUNICATIONS

TELEPHONE SERVICE IN GATINEAU AND HULL-AYLMER CONSTITUENCIES

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, residents in the riding of Gatineau and some residents in Hull-Aylmer do not have a telephone system commensurate with their needs. Because of long-distance charges within the municipality of Gatineau, and in some cases this means when calling from one side to the other side of the same street, between the municipalities of Buckingham and Gatineau, and between Gatineau and Aylmer, customers are more likely to do their shopping in Ottawa, where they can call without long-distance charges.

Mr. Speaker, it is not fair that large and small businesses, in Gatineau, Buckingham and Aylmer should suffer this kind of disadvantage compared to businesses in Ottawa, and that families cannot communicate with each other without paying additional charges. On the Ontario side, communities in the suburbs can call locally, except for one community where the problem is the same.

Mr. Speaker, we must have equity, and we ask Bell Canada to finally take a serious look at this aspect of its telephone services in the National Capital Region.

Later on I will be presenting a petition from 10,000 residents in the area who would like to feel that they are really part of the National Capital Region and enjoy the same rights and receive the same services as their fellow citizens.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, September 7, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that the Canadian Government would not participate in star wars research but that Canadian business would be free to do so. What kind of double talk is that? Either star wars will escalate the nuclear arms race, or it will not. Either it will destabilize world peace, or it will not. If the Canadian Government has concluded that it will destabilize and lead to escalation, then to condone participation by Canadian business is nonsense. It is an attempt to play both sides of the fence at the same time. In addition, there is considerable opinion that the Prime Minister's decision violates our legal obligations under the non-proliferation and anti-ballistic missile treaties.

When nations disagree with some practice internationally, Mr. Speaker, whether apartheid or the invasion of Afghanistan, the restrictions apply to their nationals and businesses as well as to their Governments. The Prime Minister's decision reminds me of Pontius Pilate who washed his hands and said he would not condemn Christ to death, but left the mob free to do so. Star wars is wrong, not only for the Canadian Government but for Canadian business as well.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RETENTION OF WINNIPEG AS REGIONAL HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on May 2, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) for assurances that there would be no amalgamation of the CN's prairie and mountain regions into one region headquartered in Edmonton. I was given such assurances by the Minister, as reported at page 4341 of Hansard: "Yes, I can give the Hon. Member that assurance."

Subsequent to this worthless assurance I learned that just such an amalgamation was quietly going on. Former senior positions in the prairie region were being abolished and new senior positions were being created and filled in Edmonton. I provided the Minister with documentation to that effect this summer, along with a letter outlining what was really going on. All I got back was a know-nothing letter which asked me to be assured by a statement that Dr. LeClair, chairman of the CN, had made a few days before the Minister got around to answering me. That statement, to the effect that CN had no plans to do this, was not reassuring, and was totally contrary to the facts. The only people reassured were the Tory MPs from Manitoba, and Manitoba Tory Leader Gary Filmon, all of whom sat sucking their thumbs through this whole affair, believing everything they were told, or being too afraid to tell the truth.

Finally Mr. LeClair, a Liberal appointee from Quebec, had to do what no Manitoba Tory would do, stick up for Winnipeg. He admitted what was going on—blamed it on someone else, mind you—and said a halt would be called to the senior management transfers. We will come to know in future weeks just how deep a reversal has actually taken place. But no matter how you cut it, Manitoba Tories should hide their faces in shame.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CANADA-UNITED STATES EXTRADITION ARRANGEMENTS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, this past summer Canadians were outraged and shocked to learn of the possibility that Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler might not be extradited to the U.S. for crimes they committed in that country. I believe it is time for the Government to take a long hard look at our extradition process and remove any obstacles which prevent people like Ng and Kindler from facing justice in their home country.

Canadians do not want their country to become a refuge for foreign murderers. We need to send a strong signal to nations around the world that Canada will deal swiftly and expeditiously with any convicted criminal who tries to take refuge in this country.

In the next few days the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) may be called upon to act in the Kindler case. Mr. Speaker, I believe I speak for millions of Canadians when I say that, in the name of justice and humanity, this murderer should be sent back to the United States without hesitation.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ACCESS TO ONTARIO PREMIER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, what do you know! For a long time the people of Ontario could rent a car, rent a house, rent a farm, and now they can "rent a Premier". The rent will be $1,000 per hour, which sounds pretty expensive, so advertisements reading "Sixty golden moments with the Premier of Ontario for just $16.60 per minute!" may make it more enticing.

However, most rentals these days are for longer than one hour and since only the very wealthy will be gullible enough to join the "Rent the Premier Club", weekend specials may be arranged for $20,000. If this gimmick catches on, the Premier's Ministers could rent themselves out too, at reduced rates, of course.

What will the renter get for his money? The Premier says "no special favours". Does that mean there will be favours, but not special ones? If the favours are not big enough to cover the rental charges, will the Government reduce the rates, or will the NDP, the Premier's bedmates, have to call for rent controls? This new Liberalism is sure catering to the rich.

Do you know what, Mr. Speaker? I cannot afford luxuries like these so I am heading back to Alberta where I can see the Premier—and a better Premier at that—for nothing.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION'S 74TH CONFERENCE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the former Speakers of the House of Commons and the Senate, the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé and the Hon. Jean Marchand, and also the Hon. Lloyd Francis and the Hon. Maurice Riel of the Senate for allowing me, when I was Chairman of the Canadian Group of the Inter Parliamentary Union, to invite the union's conference to Canada.

A word of special thanks is due to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Hon. Speaker of the Senate for renewing permission to hold this conference.

Obviously, the host country, in this case Canada, has to issue entry visas to all delegations accredited by the Union, since otherwise the general assembly cannot take place. I therefore want to thank the Government for authorizing the issuing of entry visas to members of the delegation of the Palestine National Council.

Mr. Speaker, you may be proud of the excellence of our House of Commons staff, and the Hon. President of the Senate also has reason to be satisfied. Both Speakers have every reason to be proud of the success of this conference, during which this country made a tremendous impression on the 1,000 delegates from more than 90 countries who accepted our invitation. I am sure that the friendliness and helpfulness of the entire conference staff will be long remembered by the delegates.

The fact that, generally, bilingualism was the order of the day was considered quite remarkable by all, and in fact it was an advantage in this case, because the Union's two official languages are French and English.

Finally, a special word of thanks to the security services, and I am thinking of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which understoood its role, perfectly that is to provide full and complete security for all—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp).

MULTICULTURALISM

APPOINTMENT OF HON. LINCOLN ALEXANDER AS LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, another milestone in the multicultural history of Canada has been achieved this month. The appointment of Mr. Lincoln Alexander as the next Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario is an event of historic significance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): It is also of great symbolic importance in Canada's relations with the Third World. The appointment of a black Canadian represents a vital recognition of the ethnocultural diversity of our country. His rise from humble beginnings to service as the Queen's representative in the Province of Ontario crowns a long career of public service and indicates the opportunities that one able member of Canada's visible minorities could find in this country.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) deserves commendation for an appointment which is sure to be more than symbolic. At a time of increasing recognition of the need to deal forthrightly with racism in our communities, Lieutenant-Governor Alexander will undoubtedly encourage all Ontarians to develop the sensitivities needed in this area and government to take the actions that appear necessary at the provincial level.

The Government of Canada also needs to take firm action in many areas of federal responsibility and I urge the Prime Minister and his colleagues to meet the challenge. The appointment of Mr. Alexander renews hope for such action in the minds of thousands of our citizens.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER—REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Particularly in recent days, the bumbling incompetence of the Government and the Ministers of the Government is eroding confidence in our country and certainly in its financial stability. The climate of confidence was not helped by the Prime Minister's statement on Friday that Canada is broke, that Canada is bankrupt. Nothing is better calculated to destroy confidence, both at home and abroad, than for the Prime Minister to make such an irresponsible and indeed false statement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will the Prime Minister withdraw that statement in the House of Commons and attempt to repair some of the damage he has done to the financial stability of the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to welcome the Leader of the Opposition and all Members of the House of Commons back after the summer recess and wish them all well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I extend a special welcome to the Yugoslavs who are here today. I can assure them that Canadian Yugoslavs are making a tremendous contribution to the growth of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Irish—so, so.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the reference that I made on Friday was really to draw attention to the rather excellent state of affairs that Canada enjoyed when my right hon. friend was Minister of Finance as compared with the dramatic historic deterioration over the subsequent 12 years. Where I come from, if you have a debt so large that you are reduced to borrowing ad vitam aeternam to pay interest on the debt, then you are not in a healthy situation at all.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is the state of affairs which we were left by the Liberal Party. I think my right hon. friend would agree that it is of grave consequence and must be dealt with.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That statement won't help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let us get down to specifics and talk about the demise of the Canadian Commercial Bank which has added to the deficit by an unknown amount. Was it a $1 billion screw-up by the Minister of Finance? $1.5 billion? $2 billion? Would the Prime Minister tell us what the loss to the taxpayers will be in the estimate of the Government? Will he assure us that the whole matter will be brought before a parliamentary committee and that the Auditor General will have an independent scrutiny of the whole matter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated, as the Government has through the excellent representations and statements made by the Minister of State for Finance, that this matter will indeed be referred to a House committee as quickly as possible. All Members of the House will be able to examine every aspect of this transaction as they should.

I can tell my right hon. friend that the Government was confronted with a situation where two fledgling western based corporations were in need of assistance, and a value judgment was made. He can interrogate people about that at an appropriate time.

However, there can be no doubt at all that these two western institutions, along with other areas of western Canada, suffered in a very catastrophic way from the implementation, unilaterally, of the National Energy Program. That is one of the things we will examine as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The question really relates to the fact that the House was misled, including this side of the House, when we supported the Minister of Finance in the original bail-out for that purpose. That is what it gets down to—the question of incompetence and the House being misled by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and, indeed, the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

PENSION FUND DEPOSITS OF AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN NATIONAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My supplementary question is in French, Mr. Speaker.

Apparently the bankers had been provided with information in the month of July or the month of August; bankers in Toronto and Montreal knew that the Government was considering the possibility of abandoning the Canadian Commercial Bank to its fate in July. Here is my question to the Prime Minister: Why were the Air Canada pensioners, the CNR pensions, who held shares in this bank not treated the same way as the bankers of those two major cities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated the Government's intention to make sure that the whole matter will come under close examination by a parliamentary committee. I think it goes without saying that such an important incident has to be reviewed and scrutinized by all Hon. Members. The Leader of the Opposition has just made a strong and unusual accusation against the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Unless I am mistaken he is saying that the Governor of the Bank of Canada misled the people. The Governor of the Bank of Canada is a public servant who is not here to defend himself. I think the accusation made by the Leader of the Opposition is extremely serious and, if he cannot substantiate it, he will undoubtedly want to stake his seat on this issue.

OFFICIALS' ACTIONS—GOVERNMENT ASSURANCE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will he tell the House why his officials were sounding out the financial and banking community about closing the Canadian Commercial Bank in early July when, in late March, after the $255 million bail-out, the Government assured us that the bank would survive and be profitable?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we took our interest in the Canadian Commercial Bank as a great responsibility and in the spring we had put together a package that was intended to make this bank viable. It was up to us to watch the activities in the bank, to watch its role in the economy, and we did that throughout the spring and the summer.

It was a consistent action and a responsible action on behalf of the taxpayers of this country.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR LISTS OF DEPOSITORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have here a profile of who the bank's depositors were at the time of the bail-out. Will the Minister table in the House lists of the bank's depositors as of July 7 and as of the closing date, September 1, so that we can begin to examine who may have moved their moneys as a result of receiving advance information from the Minister's officials?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have already indicated that there will be a parliamentary committee examining the full process around the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank.

All the information that is required to indicate the responsible actions that the Government has taken in connection with a western financial institution, which included many western business people among its depositors and many western credit unions among its depositors, will be available to the parliamentary committee.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In the House on March 25, as reported at page 3312 of Hansard, the Minister said the following:

> In consultation with the support group—namely the chartered banks—

> —we are satisfied that this bank—that is, the Canadian Commercial Bank—

> —is now a viable bank, that it will be profitable in the future—

She went on to offer her ironclad guarantees about this.

We have now learned that none of the chartered banks did an independent solvency assessment of the Canadian Commercial and since that guarantee was given to the Minister, several similar guarantees have been given to the public by many of her officials, all of whom have turned out to be utterly wrong in their assessment. The people of Canada, the taxpayers, are now being asked to bail out herself and her officials. Considering these facts, will she do the honourable thing in our parliamentary system of government, accept her responsibility and tender her resignation to the Prime Minister?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I said in the spring, and I say it again now, that I do accept the responsibility of my office. My responsibility is to ensure that we have the best possible regulatory system in the banks in the world.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister has a responsibility to the people of Canada and to the people who she said could rely on her judgment that this bank would be solvent. She turned out to be wrong, and she should acknowledge that and resign.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DEMAND MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Considering that he, as Prime Minister has ultimate responsibility for his Minister's performance, and considering that what this Minister assured the House on March 25 turned out to be completely wrong in its assessment, that she obviously made a quick decision without adequate consultation with the chartered banks, without adequate investigation of this situation by the chartered banks themselves, will the Prime Minister do the correct thing and demand that his Minister resign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated, even prior to today, that this entire matter would quite properly go to a parliamentary committee for exhaustive analysis and review.

I think that my hon. friend, who is a longstanding Member of the House, would acknowledge that fairness would require that, prior to bringing the quick rush to judgment that he suggests today, he may indeed change his mind when he has heard the full evidence. He may conclude, as I have already, that the Minister of State for Finance is one of the most outstanding and competent women in Canada who has acquitted herself very honourably.

Mr. Broadbent: She should try to tell that to the people who have lost money in the bank and see what they think.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT IN MARCH

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister told the House that it was after consultation with the support group—which was the chartered banks—that she was offering the guarantees to the people of Canada that the $255 million package would lead to profitability. That turned out to be completely false. We have learned that none of the chartered banks actually did an assessment of the solvency prospects of the Canadian Commercial. Therefore, would the Prime Minister not agree that what his own Minister was offering to the House was supremely misleading in terms of judgment and is now costing credit unions, municipalities and taxpayers millions of dollars? If he agrees with that, I repeat, why wait until a committee makes a report? Why not do the right thing now and demand that she resign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these matters will all be gone through, as they should, on a day-to-day basis, event-by-event basis before the proper committee. My hon. friend will have every opportunity to question very carefully all those associated with the decision.

If my hon. friend, as the Leader of the NDP, is saying that it was a mistake for the Government of Canada to come to the assistance of fledgling financial institutions based in western Canada in March, stand up and say it. Stand up and say it now. Those fledgling institutions were devastated by the National Energy Program and the climate that it brought forward. We are going to hear about that as well, at the parliamentary committee.

• (1430)

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question will be very brief and is directed to the Prime Minister.

How can the Prime Minister say what he just said, considering that when the Canadian Commercial Bank's situation was examined in committee, it was made clear that the problem was caused by loans connected with energy transactions in the United States? How can the Prime Minister say what he just said about the National Energy Policy, when we have proof that the bad loans were the result of loans made in the United States in the energy sector?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the things that happened in Alberta over the last five years are a direct result of the problems of the national energy policy and what had happened to world energy—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: —and we are fully prepared to explore that in a parliamentary committee. The financial institutions of western Canada deserve every bit as much support from this Government as the kinds of companies that were given support by the Liberal Government when it was in office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING GOVERNMENT STATEMENTS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the Minister's reply.

In the House, the Official Opposition supported the position the Minister took last March, on the basis of her announcements regarding Bank's financial situation. She can hardly blame us today for asking questions on the subject. We supported her in the past.

What we are asking the Minister today is: How is it that last March, the people of Canada—and the Minister of Finance said this from her seat in the House—were told that the $255 million was adequate and that the Bank's situation would improve?

We are asking the Minister what has changed between March and July, and today? Were we lied to during the whole exercise in March?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order please! I think I heard the Hon. Member use an unparliamentary term, and I must—

Mr. Garneau: —were we lied to?

Mr. Speaker: One may not say indirectly what one cannot say directly

[English]

A word that is unparliamentary in its intent cannot be put into the record indirectly. May I simply ask the Hon. Member to rephrase his question?

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, the matter is much too important to spend time debating a point of order. What I said, I said. I am prepared to withdraw what I said, if it serves the purposes of our debate.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in March this Government faced a decision on a western financial institution in consultation with the chartered banks and two western provinces. Had we closed that bank then the economic impact in Alberta would have been devastating, absolutely devastating. We have been monitoring the situation ever since.

An Hon. Member: Is it any better now?

Mrs. McDougall: We are prepared to take the decision today that we must take today. It is a different decision and circumstances have changed. We have prepared to face that decision today, just as we were prepared to face that one then.

BANK'S LENDING PRACTICES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Prime Minister when something is wrong it is wrong whether it is in western Canada, central Canada, or eastern Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. After saying in March that she had full confidence in the rescue package, was she aware of the imprudent lending practices of the Canadian Commercial Bank at that time, and the highly questionable accounting practices that described the financial situation, as well as the size of the bank's non-performing loans? When she said she had complete faith in that institution, was she aware of those types of matters?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we were aware that the Canadian Commercial Bank had problem loans. The package we put together was to deal with those problem loans. It was done in our best judgment, on the advice of the best bankers of the country, and with the advice of two western provinces. We made our decision, and we made it based on the evidence that we had at hand.

ADVICE GIVEN BY PUBLIC OFFICIALS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. At a time when we are all concerned about the stability of the banking system in Canada as well as about the confidence of Canadians and external investors, questions are being asked about other financial institutions.

The Inspector General of Banks said that the Canadian Commercial Bank was sound, as were all the other banks in Canada. The same was said by Governor Bouey of the central bank, the Minister of State for Finance, the Minister of Finance, and the Chairman of the Finance Committee. They were all wrong. Now when people ask us whether there are any other financial institutions in difficulty, to whom is it that we should turn it for real honest advice, Mr. Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I think, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend asks an important but a delicate question. The assets in this unfortunate situation, and we will explore all of the facets of it, amount, as I understand, to less than 1 per cent of the assets of the chartered banks in Canada. I think it is widely known that the chartered banks in Canada are ranked with the strongest in the world. We have that kind of integrity in our banking system, and this Government proposes to maintain it.

DEPOSIT INSURANCE LEVELS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, in the Report on Business of September, 1985, the Minister of State for Finance is quoted as saying "deposit insurance levels will be adhered to religiously if a lending institution fails". In view of that, how can she bring the proposal to us to reimburse uninsured depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility to those depositors because they are institutions, businesses and credit unions. If the Hon. Member is suggesting that we do not have a responsibility to those people in that economy, I would certainly be interested in knowing it.

POSITION OF SHAREHOLDERS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister has changed religions. We have a born-again bail-outer here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: The statement is clear and unequivocal in the Report on Business. How can the Minister if she is going to reimburse uninsured depositors, at the same time not reimburse the shareholders, many of whom are small pensioners who are seeing their interests in this bank wiped out completely through this exercise?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member is using scare tactics around small pensioners. The amount of assets in those pension funds invested in this bank is very small. I can assure the pensioners whose pension funds are in the CCB bank that their assets and pensions are not at risk.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL SEEK RESIGNATIONS OF GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA AND OF INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns the Government's confidence in the Bank of Canada and the Inspector General of Banks. Considering the fact that the advice given by these two authorities is going to cost the taxpayer about one billion dollars, do the two public servants concerned still have the Government's confidence? If not, is the Prime Minister going to ask for the resignations of Messrs. Kennett and Bouey?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, after the rather surprising statement . . . the accusation made by the Leader of the Official Opposition concerning the Governor of the Bank of Canada, which was unusual to say the least, I find the Hon. Member's statement even more astonishing.

We have already said there would be a parliamentary commission in order to shed light on this complex affair. Wait! Wait! . . . The Hon. Member will then be able to judge the behaviour of all those involved in this matter, but he should not accuse anyone of bad faith or incompetence before hearing all the evidence. That is all.

[English]

FINANCE COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. A first-year finance student in university would have known that the Canadian Commercial Bank was a total disaster if that student had read the report of the Finance Committee in June. The information which that committee found was available to the Governor of the Bank of Canada and to the Inspector General of Banks in March when they advised that the support package be given. How could the Government be prepared to give its confidence when it had such advice which cost taxpayers a billion dollars?

● (1440)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, had the Canadian Commercial Bank failed in March there would have been a cost roughly equivalent to what the cost is now. This has not cost taxpayers a great deal more money.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: It was worth taking that step to save that institution. Had we chosen to take the same action then—

Mr. Gauthier: What's a billion!

Mrs. McDougall: If we had closed that bank in March, the over-all cost to the Government and to taxpayers would have been roughly equivalent to what it is now, and the economic impact in western Canada would have been enormous.

HAIL DAMAGE SUFFERED BY TIMISKAMING FARMERS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As he is very much aware, earlier this summer 38 farms in my riding were affected by severe hail damage. Has the Minister received any correspondence from his provincial counterpart dealing with any type of assistance which may be arranged?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for his help and his assistance on behalf of the constituents whom he represents. In addition, he will know that we sent a federal-provincial task force to the scene and that we are dealing with our FCC clients on an individual basis. Of course the province will have to take the initiative and declare the area a disaster area before we can respond to that action.

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION FOR ABSENCE OF FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In its famous Budget of May 23, his Government was asking 3.5 million families with children to make sacrifices and to accept a 3 per cent cut in the indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. Today, how is this Government going to explain to those millions of families in Canada that it does not have the money, that they will have to make sacrifices while at the same time his Government manages to find one billion dollars to pay rich depositors $60,000 or more in compensation, following this bankruptcy?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on the new-found responsibilities given him by the Leader of the Opposition. He asked a question regarding the family allowance provisions in the Budget. I remind him that the Budget has been passed. I believe it is the intention of the Government to bring forward legislation at a very early date regarding the subject about which he asked.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING $1 BILLION EARMARKED TO SAVE BANK DEPOSITS OF THE RICH

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I cannot afford to waste time on polite conversation. What Canadian families want is an answer from the Prime Minister. He showed moral cowardice when dealing with senior citizens and he is doing the same at the beginning of this session with respect to families with children.

How does the Prime Minister intend to explain to those families today who still trust him . . . He asked them to make sacrifices and indeed they are going to lose $22 next year, 1986 . . . how is he going to explain that he found one billion to safeguard the savings of richer Canadians? How is he going to explain that to these families?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member, when he asks that question, that he has not said anything about the increase in the child tax credit for those families with dependent children who receive the lowest incomes. All social agencies which have looked at it feel that that is a better approach. In fact I also remind him that the Macdonald Commission made a suggestion along similar lines. I hope he would be in favour of putting more money into the hands of those families with dependent children who are at the lower end of the scale, rather than the approach which he has taken.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—RESEARCH CONTRACTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I will turn to another potential bail-out and direct my question to the Prime Minister. He seemed to indicate that although the Canadian Government would not officially participate in star wars research, it would give financial support to private firms which wished to bid on defence research contracts in the star wars area. Would the Prime Minister clarify the following for many Canadians? Is he saying that the Canadian Government would provide the same kind of assistance to firms engaging in star wars research as in other defence fields? Will the Canadian Commercial Corporation be the intermediary, and will the RCMP provide security clearance of the classified materials involved?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government has taken a decision with respect to SDI which reflects what we believe to be the national interest in terms of ongoing research activities, as we have been doing over many years. We intend to co-operate with the United States, as we have in the past, and we hope that that research activity will increase. All these projects are subject to a decision-making process which is in place and will be utilized when any new project comes up for consideration.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want us all to be very clear. I take it that the Minister of National Defence is saying that the Canadian Government will not give the kind of assistance to star wars related research that it does through the Canadian Commercial Corporation to other defence research projects? Is that explicitly what the Minister of National Defence is saying?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may take it that we intend to continue our research efforts in co-operation with the United States, and we hope that that activity will grow. We will be consistent in that pursuit, unlike the Hon. Member and her Party with respect to the over-all question of membership in the NATO alliance.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PROTECTION OF PENSION FUND INVESTMENTS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the light of recent expressions of concern, what progress is being made with respect to setting up a mechanism to protect pension funds, which are really trust retirement funds, from bankruptcies and creditors' claims?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my hon. colleague, back in April we set up a consultative committee to study the Bankruptcy Act. As a matter of fact we have already announced that we will look into the matter and make a recommendation in due course.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he give his assurance to the House that neither the Governor of the Bank of Canada nor the Inspector General of Banks will be used by his Government as scapegoats for this billion dollar fiasco, and that the responsibility for this fiasco will rest on the shoulders of the Ministers responsible, namely, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of State for Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most interesting questions that I have heard in a long time, inasmuch as why does the Hon. Member not ask his Leader if he will give the assurance that he will not hang the Governor of the Bank of Canada before he has heard the evidence? That is what he wants to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That is an interesting answer.

Mr. Mulroney: We will wait for the "blues", but unless I misunderstood my right hon. friend I thought I heard him say that the Governor of the Bank of Canada had misled the House of Commons and misled the Canadian people, deliberately—

Some Hon. Members: You have!

Mr. Mulroney: And that is a grave, grave accusation to make against a senior servant who has served Canada loyally, honourably, and well.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY BY AUDITOR GENERAL

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, we want to make sure that it is the responsibility of the Ministers for overseeing and recommending this billion dollar fiasco to the people of Canada. That is who is responsible for it.

The Leader of the Opposition asked the Government and the Prime Minister to allow the Auditor General to conduct an independent inquiry into the state of affairs which led to the collapse of the bank. Would the Prime Minister agree to that request?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this gentleman was a member of the Liberal Government, a Government that would not let the Auditor General investigate Petro-Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: They absolutely turned him down.

Some Hon. Members: Really?

Mr. Mulroney: And we said absolutely yes. The only thing that we would not do was allow the Auditor General access to the papers of the former Prime Minister and his predecessor because we believe in British parliamentary tradition. That was done in order to protect the papers of the former Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We will refer this matter to a parliamentary committee. We will expect everybody to be heard. Having turned down the Auditor General with regard to Petro-Canada, if my hon. friend wants to go before a committee, the Auditor General will tell him and any Member of the House that the only reticence the Prime Minister had was with regard to the Auditor General digging into the papers of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and of the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau because I said that that was unacceptable, and I believe it to be unacceptable. The rest the Auditor General can have.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—REQUEST FOR SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister who has been quoted as saying that there are loud voices rejecting sanctions directed against the South African regime, voices to which presumably he is listening. Can the Prime Minister tell us what loud voices he is hearing which would outshout the 77 per cent of black Africans and their most respected leaders who are demanding sanctions in support of their struggle?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the House has noted and would join with me in expressing approval for the statement made by the President of the United States today announcing some sanctions against South Africa. I point out to Members of the House of Commons that the sanctions announced by the United States at noon today were, by and large, sanctions announced by the Government of Canada in early July.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is the view of this Government that it is now essential for us to do everything that we can to encourage change in an offensive and unacceptable regime in South Africa. For the moment, that involves maintaining steady pressure upon South Africa. Obviously, if we have to resort to the full disruption of economic and diplomatic relations, we are prepared to do so if other measures do not work. However, most of us in this House believe that it is important to keep a door open and to use the influence that we now have, rather than to spend it immediately in a gesture that may be more effective in terms of public relations at home than it would be in ending apartheid in South Africa.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, first I would suggest that the Government listen to those who are fighting for their freedom in order to determine what sacrifices they should be making. I would ask the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs when Canada will get leadership. This is ridiculous. Constructive engagement is ending down South while Canada, to whom the world is looking for leadership, is still silent. The Americans are being more forceful than the Canadians.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what is at issue here is what steps Canada can take to end an offensive regime in South Africa. What is at issue here is not how loudly our voices will speak but how loudly our actions will speak.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): To use the word "leadership", we have already demonstrated leadership in the actions and sanctions that were announced in July. Those Canadian initiatives were followed by similar intitiatives in Australia, Japan, France, and now the United States. We intend to continue to play a leading role. I expect to make a statement on the response not only of this Government but, I hope, of this country to the South African situation later this week in the House.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I do not believe that it has gone unnoticed that the questions put in the House relating to the Canadian Commercial Bank have been replied to by the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister of State for Finance may have been delegated certain responsibilities. However, the statutory and parliamentary responsibility for the stability of our financial institutions and for the management of this country's economy rests always with the Minister of Finance. I would ask the Prime Minister why it is that the Minister of Finance has not been addressing this question in the House. Would the Prime Minister assure us that he still retains confidence in that Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because it is Day One, I will dignify a frivolous question with an answer.

Ms. Copps: It's not frivolous to the Canadian people.

Mr. Mulroney: My right hon. friend knows full well that the Minister of State for Finance has performed extremely well, has held a responsibility and acquitted herself well from the beginning.

With regard to the Minister of Finance, on September 17, and even today, we can say that, because of his stewardship of the economy, 284,000 new jobs have been created—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: —interest rates are down by almost 3 percentage points, and the economy is growing at a rate of—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is indeed Day One.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to answer any further questions the Right Hon. Member may have.

MULTICULTURALISM

ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES OF AIR-INDIA CRASH VICTIMS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. Last month the federal Government contributed $30,000 to the installation of a toll-free telephone information service for the families of the victims of the Air India disaster. Could the Minister provide the House with an update on this assistance project and other measures that the Government has taken to help these particular families?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Beginning now, I am going to try to discourage the waste of time with clapping, if that is all right.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the Hon. Member that since this project was initiated on July 15 there have been over 1,500 calls for assistance. Some of that assistance included providing information about death certificates, legal referrals, psychiatric help, family reunification and other things. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that, further to that, all federal government Departments are involved in a co-operative and co-ordinated way to help the families in this disastrous situation, and assistance will continue to be provided by the Government after the six-month expiry date.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor. One question.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is a question for the Prime Minister. There is great confusion in the country about the Government's intentions regarding free trade moves with the United States. The Prime Minister is saying one week that nothing will happen until after to November discussions with the provinces, and is saying the next week that decisions will be announced by September 17. Would the Prime Minister clearly and unambiguously tell the Canadian people about the Government's plans with respect to this issue?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that my hon. friend has had difficulty understanding what is a very clear-cut position. When I met with President Reagan in Quebec City we agreed that, within a period of six months, our Governments would send out respective signals as to whether or not it was our intention to embark upon these exploratory conversations that could lead to new trade arrangements.

There are commercial arrangements in which Canada is interested. We are interested in them for two reasons. First, for us, trade means jobs. Second, we are concerned about the growth of protectionist sentiment which is now infesting many areas of American life. A growing percentage of our trade—almost 80 per cent—is with the United States. We want to ensure that those markets are secured for Canadian producers because they mean jobs in British Columbia, Sault Ste Marie, Sydney, and everywhere else across the country.

Thus, at an appropriate time, and on a schedule agreed upon, we will send out a signal, in co-operation, after having consulted with the provinces, and after having discussed it with the House. A parliamentary committee went across the country this summer and it has made its recommendations. It will be done, as with our decision yesterday with respect to SDI, in the national interest of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE GOVERNMENT

TABLING OF FOUR DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 47(2), I have the honour of laying on the Table, in both official languages, the four following documents: First, a new conflict of interest/post-employment code for public office holders. Second, instructions to Ministers imposing specific and strict limitations on the hiring of family members. Third, letters to the Leaders of the Opposition on the subject of ethical conduct for all MPs and Senators. Fourth, advice to Crown corporations concerning their relations with the central Government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, anyone who expected the documents to be tabled with a red ribbon on them knows that my non-partisanship only goes to so many limites.

It is a great principle of public administration—I could even say an imperative—that to function effectively the government and the public service of a democracy must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve. In order to reinforce that trust, the government must be able to provide competent management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct. To this end, I am tabling today a set of documents detailing several aspects of a package of major initiatives on public sector ethics undertaken by this Government.

This afternoon I wish to provide my colleagues in the House with some thoughts in explanation of the documents and to acquaint the House with other elements of the package which will soon be placed before the House in documentary form. There are seven components in the over-all program.

First, there is a new conflict of interest/post-employment code for public office holders, which has been tabled. Second, there are instructions to Ministers imposing specific and strict limitations on the hiring of family members, which has also been tabled. Third, there are letters to the Leaders of the Opposition on the subject of ethical conduct for all MPs and Senators, which has been tabled. Fourth, there is a document dealing with an experimental program of parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments, which I know we all hope will become a permanent feature of our parliamentary democracy here in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Fifth, there is a document dealing with the registration of lobbying activity in Ottawa. Sixth, a document dealing with advice to Crown corporations respecting appropriate conduct in their dealings with the Government has been tabled. The seventh document deals with a review of the judicial appointments process.

To this end, Mr. Speaker I am tabling today a set of documents detailing several aspects of a package of major initiatives on public sector ethics undertaken by this Government.

This afternoon I wish to provide my colleagues in the House with some thoughts in explanation of the documents and to acquaint the House with other elements of the package which will soon be placed before the House in documentary form.

There are seven components in the over-all program, as I mentioned earlier. First, there is a new conflict of interest/post-employment code for public office holders, which has been tabled.

Second, there are instructions to Ministers imposing specific and strict limitations on the hiring of family members, which has also been tabled.

Third, there are letters to the Leaders of the Opposition on the subject of ethical conduct for all MPs and Senators, which has been tabled.

Fourth, there is a document dealing with an experimental program of parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the work done by all Members on the Committee, and especially by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who did an excellent job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Fifth, a document dealing with the registration of lobbying activity in Ottawa.

Sixth, a document dealing with advice to Crown corporations respecting appropriate conduct in their dealings with the Government has been tabled.

The seventh document deals with a review of the judicial appointments process.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, we have not made final decisions in all of the component areas. However, we are putting forward an authoritative outline of our intentions today. Some elements, such as the new conflict of interest/post-employment code for public office holders are ready for implementation. The code will take effect on January 1, 1986, once the necessary infrastructure is in place. In the interim, Ministers and Governor in Council appointees will conduct themselves in accordance with its provisions.

Other elements, such as the experimental program of parliamentary scrutiny of Order in Council appointments, will be refined through discussion with Leaders of the Opposition and with the benefit of experience. We would like to consult, again, the distinguished Members, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons.

Still others, such as the review of the judicial appointments process, will require more consultation with the Canadian Bar Association before detailed proposals can be advanced.

For the first time in this country's history, Mr. Speaker, the government has laid before Parliament a broad program of iniatives concerning public sector ethics.

This is tangible proof that the government is determined to see to it that the affairs of state are conducted according to the very highest standards.

[English]

Rather than dealing at some length with each component orally, I have tabled today an open letter to Members of Parliament and Senators which delineates each of the seven components in summary form, highlighting the most important aspects which Members should consider.

As indicated in the document I have just tabled, it provides a set of reform measures that reflect the Government's intention, and I would add that of all parliamentarians, to adopt a standard of ethics that will meet with the respect of all Canadians. In this way, we want to strengthen the economic renewal process and enhance the faith of Canadians in our Government institutions.

Many of these measures have been awaited for some time, and sometimes, Mr. Speaker, this Government would have wished that they were already in place. They now are or are about to become so, and we can look forward, in the near future, to a new era of confidence and respect.

• (1510)

[English]

The documents, the ideas and the propositions, Mr. Speaker, are placed before all Hon. Members of Parliament today in the genuine belief that they will enhance the respect which Canadians must have for Parliament as a noble institution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I believe I just heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at his unctuous best attempting, presumably in a non-partisan fashion, to disguise the most blatant series of partisan appointments over the last year than we have had in the history of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister has spoken about civility in this House. I received a copy of the documents which were just tabled and a copy of the statement the Prime Minister has just read at one thirty this afternoon, a half hour before Parliament assembled for Question Period. I do not know whether my friend, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, received earlier communication.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was in accordance with our arrangements.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is absolutely impossible for any member of the Opposition, particularly myself and my colleague, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, with our responsibilities, to respond with some clarity and with some profound appreciation of what is in that pile of documents.

Mr. Cassidy: Never complain and never explain, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will say as well, of course, that I am suspicious. The House Leader may protest but he knows how the business of the House ought to be conducted.

An Hon. Member: He's a dummy, anyway.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He knows.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am also suspicious of the coincidence of the timing of the tabling of these documents today. The Government is faced with a bank scandal. The Government is faced with a financial Titanic and it hopes that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) may be able to pre-empt the news and distract the attention of the country and of the media by this little subterfuge.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is running away now.

Ms. Copps: Run away, Mike.

Mr. Chrétien: Bye, bye, Mike.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance has just left the House shaking his head. We hope he will stand in this House tomorrow and defend the issues for which he has statutory responsibility.

Mr. Chrétien: Right on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The issues of the guidelines and the conficts of interest, Mr. Speaker, arose in this House several months ago. Why the delay? Why do we have to wait until the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark)—and he is now leaving—is able to favour his brother? Why do we have to wait until the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) is able to dispense his largesse to his sons in Newfoundland? Why do we have to wait until the Minister of Finance—who just left the House—has favoured his brother-in-law? Why so late? Are these guideliens retroactive? Will the so-called experimental scrutiny affect the 1,200 appointments which have already been made?

Mr. Chrétien: One every three hours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I suppose, Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members of the House are entitled to ask the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) if these guidelines are going to be any more enforced than the guidelines which are currently before the House. Are these guidelines going to be breached the way Mr. Trudeau's guidelines which are currently in force were breached by the Minister of Justice, by the Minister of Finance and by the Secretary of State for External Affairs? That is a question we are entitled to ask.

I notice that the Prime Minister, following some of the recommendations of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), on an experimental basis only, will allow some Governor in Council appointments to be scrutinized by a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We will see, and we will see how effective that is. That is not what the Prime Minister said during the election campaign. He said all appointments were going to be scrutinized.

An Hon. Member: And not on an experimental basis.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And not on an experimental basis. We want a commitment—

Mr. Chrétien: And not a year too late.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and not a year too late, not after the barn door has been closed and the horse has escaped.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: All of them retroactive.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister's supporters, his friends and intimates, have been in the trough for over a year. That is enough time to accomplish the evil. Now we look sanctimonious, we look statesman-like, we look parliamentary and we bring in these guidelines, some of them on an experimental basis.

Mr. Dick: He looks better than you.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): During the election campaign the Prime Minister set very high expectations for the performance of this House. He breached those expectations blatantly during the last 12 months. There has been the most consistent patronage, partisan and crony-like appointments in the history of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Frankly, when I looked at the Prime Minister closely as he wrapped himself in the cloak of prime ministerial non-partisanship, I said, what a shameless hypocrite after his conduct during the last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Withdraw.

Mr. Rossi: Bravo.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is an experienced Member of the House. I think he knows that to accuse someone of being a shameless hypocrite is not terribly parliamentary. I would ask him to withdraw.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Which word, Mr. Speaker, would you like me to withdraw?

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows the difficulty these situations create. I would simply ask him to do what he knows is the right thing and to withdraw the comment.

Mr. Chrétien: Which one?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Do you want me to withdraw the word "shameless" or the word "hypocrite", Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Dick: You know better, John Turner.

Mr. Speaker: I invite the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to do the right honourable thing and withdraw the comment "shameless hypocrite".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If that is your interpretation of the rules then, of course, I accept it, Mr. Speaker. May I say—and I do withdraw those words—that the Prime Minister has been blatlantly cynical over the past year in the way he has treated appointments of the Crown.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I notice that the guidelines, or the package tabled under "blue ribbon" today, does not include contracts awarded by the Crown. I would invite the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and the House Leader to review with the Hon. Member for St. John's East whether contracts under the benefit of the Crown also ought to be included within these guidelines because, coincidentally, The Ottawa Citizen headline of September 7, reads, "Firm hires PMs pal, $200,000 job follows". This involves the Prime Minister's pal, Sam Wakim, apparently a former classmate at St. Francis Xavier University. Is this type of thing covered? We had a preliminary review of those documents and we do not see this type of arrangement covered at all.

All I will say, Mr. Speaker, is that we were not given the time to review these documents thoroughly. We will give them a close study. We suspect that they may well be more cosmetic camouflage. In any event, the Government will have the co-operation of this side of the House if there is any sincerity at all on its part.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, among the many things said by the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) which were accurate, was the fact that we did not receive advance notice with regard to the tabling of the documents here today. For that reason I am responding on behalf of my leader and my caucus. I would like to begin by saying that at first glance—which is really all we have been able to have—it seems as if the guidelines will go further than the guidelines which previously existed. It seems as if what the Government is intent on doing will provide more restrictive guidelines and will bring about a better code of behavious than existed under the guidelines which are now in place.

The question, of course, will be—as is now the case—will these guidelines be adhered to any more closely than the guidelines which are presently in place? It has been a question asked in the House of Commons for the last five years. The guidelines are interpreted, it seems, to satisfy the mood of the government of the day. I want to say that if in establishing new guidelines we can have some assurance that there will be a common interpretation by everyone in the House of Commons as to how they are to be enforced, then I think we will have gone a long way towards solving what was a very difficult and acrimonious period. And that was from the early part of 1980 into the early part of this administration.

I also want to say that it strikes me, at first glance, that these guidelines may well put in place a regime which will preclude another orgy of patronage such as occurred at the end of the last Liberal Government. I hope that that is the case. I hope that as a result of these guidelines this Government will not be in a position, at the time of its defeat, to appoint any number of its inadequate back-benchers and hangers-on to positions of a permanent nature in the Public Service or government agencies.

I also want to say that the performance of this Government until now in its appointment of friends and cronies and old pals to political patronage positions is not something to be proud of. I admit that there two or three notable exceptions, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) frequently points out, but when you compare those to the thousands of appointments made, this is hardly a record to be proud of. Therefore, I was pleased to note that the opportunity will be there in the future for Members of Parliament to review retroactively the qualifications and quality of the appointments made by this Government after it assumed office on September 4, 1984.

Having said that, I hope the House of Commons and the Senate will take seriously, if you will, the request of the Prime Minister and that the Speakers of both Houses will in fact review in consultation whatever is required to be reviewed in order to determine the appropriate behaviour for Members in addition to those who happen to be Ministers of the Crown. However, based on past performance, I am not too optimistic about what the future holds. I look at the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Nielsen) and I remember the long debates we had in the House over what was appropriate behaviour when the Liberals were in government regarding certain of their former Cabinet colleagues who engaged in business after they left Government. I remember the way this Government castigated the previous Government for its despicable abuse of both patronage and entrée to the Civil Service using powers that had been gained while in office.

I am hoping to see an end to this kind of thing. I note that it is referred to but I am not quite sure how it is going to be dealt with. Therefore, I think the proof will lie with the passage of time. Once we see the more definitive description of how we intend to implement and enforce, then perhaps we will have more confidence. However, I say to the Prime Minister that were we to base our confidfence on the performance of the past year, it would be pretty shaky.

PETITIONS

CALL FOR PASSAGE OF BILL C-49

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege as a Member of Parliament to present a petition signed by almost 2,000 residents of the City of Niagara Falls who, because of the increase in the incidence of prostitution and associated violence, have asked that this House immediately pass Bill C-49.

HIGH WATER LEVELS IN LAKE SUPERIOR

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 247 of my constituents, including residents of the Township of Shuniah, Amethyst Beach, as well as members of the Island Beach Campers' Association. They are seriously concerned about damage to their property caused by high water levels in Lake Superior. This damage is due in part to unseasonably heavy rainfall, but it is also due to actions by the Board of Control of the International Joint Commission in keeping the water level of Lake Superior high to preserve properties in the lower lakes. Your petitioners humbly pray that the Government of Canada intervene on their behalf by taking action to prevent the IJC from raising the level of Lake Superior to its maximum height.

TELEPHONE COMMUNICATIONS

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 10,000 residents of the ridings of Gatineau and Hull-Aylmer who exercise their ancient right to present a common grievance to the House.

These residents are complaining about the telephone communication system, in very many cases with long distance rates within the territory of the National Capital Region. They find that Quebecers, men and women alike, are treated unfairly with respect to telephone communications. They suggest as well that everybody should have the same ready access to communication facilities because that is essential to the development of the esprit de corps and the feeling of community membership of all residents of the National Capital Region.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-226

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present to this House a petition signed by Members of the Mennonite Breathren Church in Borden, Saskatchewan, in my constituency. They call upon Parliament to support the Private Members' Bill C-226, coming before the House later this week, which proposes to make abortion in Canada less available.

ILLEGAL DRUGS TRAFFIC

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of residents of the MacDonell and Fuller Avenue area of the City of Toronto. They ask this House to provide them with relief from the indignity of the harassment and abuse they have received at the hands of individuals involved in the suspected illegal drugs traffic in their neighbourhood. They ask for police protection from such harassment and urge the responsible federal Ministers to use all powers at their disposal and to initiate appropriate legislation to resolve this problem and return the neighbourhood to a safe environment in which to raise a family.

2. Will the Minister change her mind in order to appoint a young French-speaking member to the committee and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): 1. The Minister of State for Youth selected a group of 24 young people from across Canada to act as her advisors on an International Youth Year Advisory Committee. The committee has a mandate to: attend various International Youth Year events; facilitate the development of the International Youth Year federal youth forums; advise the Minister on matters of interest and concern to Canadian youth which arise during the Year.

The committee members were chosen on an individual basis to reflect the various interests and backgrounds of young men and women as well as the different regions, and linguistic and cultural groups in Canada. The members do not represent a specific region or group. One of the members is from Saint John, New Brunswick. While she is bilingual, her mother tongue is English.

(a) The Minister selected these members based on suggestions received from her departmental officials, various groups and individuals from across the country.

(b) The possibility of selecting a French-speaking youth from New Brunswick was considered as was the possibility of selecting French-speaking young people from other provinces and other linguistic and cultural groups.

2. There are seven French-speaking committee members, two of whom come from French-speaking communities outside of Quebec (i.e, Ontario and Saskatchewan). At this time, the Minister is not planning to appoint additional members to the committee. However, the Minister has appointed Martin Pitre of Robertville, New Brunswick, as an International Youth Year ambassador.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 368 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 368 be made an Order for Return?

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 31

COLLAPSE OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

Mr. Speaker: I have received two notices under Standing Order 31. I propose to take them in the order in which I received them. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 31. If you make the correct ruling in a few minutes, I would be pleased to move the appropriate motion. This motion would call for a debate concerning the circumstances flowing from the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank. At that time the Opposition will present our serious concerns about all those Canadians who are adversely affected by this failure, and we expect the Government of Canada to give a thorough acounting of the lamentable job it has done in dealing with this extremely serious situation.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has given the Chair the proper notice of his intention to seek leave of the House to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 31. The matter that he wishes to debate is, of course, a matter of great interest, not only to the banking community, but I am sure to all Canadians.

Standing Order 31(5) directs the Chair to take account of two main criteria in order to determine whether the request for leave should be granted. First, the Chair must determine that the matter is within the administrative responsibilities of the Government. Second, and more importantly in this case, the Chair must consider the probability of the matter being brought before the House within reasonable time by other means.

In the present circumstances, on April 18, 1975, the House charged the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to inquire into the regulation of Canada's financial institutions and on June 26 last the House instructed the same committee to make its final report by October 30, 1985.

Furthermore, the Finance Committee has scheduled a meeting for 3:30 p.m. this day and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) is scheduled to appear on that particular order of reference. For the Chair at this time to ignore that Members of the House are considering that matter in committee would not only be a violation of our precedents, but a violation of the very specific limitation imposed on the Chair by Standing Order 31(5). I do not think it proper, therefore, at this time to allow the request for leave while the matter is and can be considered by a committee of the House.

The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) gave a notice of a similar question. She may wish to make her case.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 31, I too, ask leave to move that this House do now adjourn for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Government activities in relation thereto. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest respectfully that the failure of the Bank, the Government's decision to put it into liquidation in the last few days, is a separate matter from the order of reference previously given and, therefore, I ask you to consider this request.

Mr. Speaker: When the Hon. Member reads what I said in response to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) she will find that it is a very tight ruling. The Chair is given the power to simply say yes or no to these questions without comment.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether that was a suggestion that I should say yes without comment or no without comment, but I will take it that it really meant without comment. I am trying to convey to the Hon. Member that the Chair takes extremely seriously the representations made on this question. I invite her to read precisely what I have already said.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I will now advise the House, if I may, that because of the new Standing Order 19(4) the House will sit for an extra 20 minutes this afternoon. Government Orders will be extended for 20 minutes. What is usually five o'clock becomes 5:20, etc. The floor was open at the time of adjournment.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my confusion, my astonishment and my concern about Bill C-49 to amend the Criminal Code with respect to prostitution.

First I should like to stress that Bill C-49 is not by any means an intelligent response to the Fraser report and the Badgley report. Indeed the commissioners of the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution have stated that a global approach taking social aspects into account was necessary to find solutions to the prostitution problem.

Bill C-49 deals only with a minor aspect of the Criminal Code concerning prostitution. It summarily rejects the global approach advocated by the Fraser committee, and Canadian men and women can now see for themselves that the Minister of Justice took a rather short-sighted view of prostitution.

Let us refer to the fact that in a survey made this summer 92 per cent of Canadians said that prostitution ought to be legalized, but indeed that a special effort should be made in cases of juvenile prostitution.

The Bill now under consideration does not contain anything at all concerning young people who prostitute themselves, nor is there any kind of reference to pimps who work with those young people.

This morning I heard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) conclude his remarks by saying that there simply would not be any pimps if there were no prostitutes. I would simply add that I am convinced that there would be no pimps if there were no customers, for we know full well that pimps get their money from prostitutes.

In addition, the Bill to amend the Criminal Code now under consideration aims at reinforcing repression against street prostitution. Many organizations, including the Advisory Board and the Women and the Law Group, had already expressed the wish that nuisance related to prostitution be reduced. Commissioner Paul Fraser and his colleagues also agreed on the importance of restricting prostitution-related activities.

We must not think however that criminal law can eliminate the phenomenon we are dealing with today. In my opinion, it could be dangerous to make improper use of our criminal law to solve problems for which global social strategies are better suited. I believe that prostitution is such a problem.

Bill C-49 brings absolutely no change to the sexist view of the Criminal Code sections dealing with prostitution. Indeed, its aim is to define soliciting even more narrowly, which means that the target still remains the prostitute. This reflects a rather hypocritical point of view. The Government turns a blind eye to the customers, the pimps, the touts, and the owners of the premises where prostitution occurs.

The way in which Bill C-49 has been presented today gives us the feeling that only the prostitutes are punished and stigmatized. While it is absurd and unfair to put all the blame for the ills of this complex phenomenon on the prostitutes, these are the conclusions we must now draw from this Bill.

Both the Badgley Report published in September 1984 and the Fraser Report published last spring recognized that the Government should develop special programs to eliminate disparities and economic discrimination. More specifically, recommendation 50 of the report noted the importance for the Government to intensify its moral and financial commitment to eliminate economic and social disparities between the sexes and discrimination based on sexual orientation.

Commissioner Fraser and his colleagues also stated that the Government should see to it that social programs are developed for women and young people in need.

The Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution very rightly pointed out that prostitution is related to the lack of social and educational programs to help young Canadian men and women to deal confidently and responsibly with the problems of sexism, sexuality and sexual identity.

At the time when the Progressive Conservative Government is closing down the Family Planning Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Fraser Report states that the Government should help finance the development and implementation in schools of educational programs dealing with relevance and tact with the issues of sexuality.

The members of the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution also believe the Government should provide joint funding for a national centre on sexuality and training for life in society, with a program to prevail on academics and well-known specialists to do research work and develop teaching programs and models. They also feel federal and provincial governments should commission further research on prostitution and come to grips with that social phenomenon and its impact on those who engage in it.

Bill C-49 is a further step on the road to criminalizing prostitution, although the Fraser Report and a number of groups now recognize that criminalization has fallen short of its goal of reducing prostitution.

Because total elimination of prostitution is altogether unrealistic, it is normal to try to limit it. As I said earlier, prostitution is one of those problems against which criminal law is of no avail. What must be found and implemented is a social strategy rather than the big stick approach which the Minister of Justice is proposing today. In that sense, Mr. Speaker, I personally call for the de-criminalization of prostitution. The actions of people engaging in prostitution should not be considered as offences under the Criminal Code whenever they cause no public nuisance.

Like the members of the Special Committee, the Fraser Committee, I believe that criminal provisions concerning bawdy houses should be rewritten in order not to prohibit small groups of persons, one or two people, from engaging in prostitution in residential premises, nor to prevent provinces from authorizing and regulating small prostitution establishments located on non-residential premises and involving adult people.

I am aware of the dangers of such an attempt to allow the commercialization of prostitution, but it is my view that this is an approach that should be considered and looked into. We should look at foreign experiments, especially in Sweden and the Netherlands.

• (1540)

Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker: the idea is not to encourage prostitution but to place it in its proper social and economic context. It would be irrealistic to try to abolish prostitution in view of the inequalities which continue to exist in our society and the place occupied by women within the political and economic pecking order. We would be better advised to try to limit prostitution and reduce its harmful effects.

With an open mind, the Government should take steps to help women involved in prostitution to adopt a different lifestyle, if they want to.

Prostitutes may have a hard time trying to do so. Economic inequalities which women are faced with on the marketplace are not likely to encourage them to adopt massively a lifestyle more consistent with social morality.

A woman who has spent a major part of her adult life in marginal or even illegal activities is not likely to have the knowledge and abilities necessary to carry out most ordinary duties. She will also lack the contacts which would enable her to find a job on the normal labour market.

Any woman outside the labour market should have access to programs where she can learn what qualifications are required to join the paid work force. She should be able to obtain information about jobs offered and the required training.

Mr. Speaker, prostitution is a complex phenomenon and I think it is sad that after the Fraser report the Government is introducing a bill which will solve none of the issues this report has raised. This patchwork approach borders on misunderstanding. I find it quite disconcerting and disappointing that after the Fraser and Badgley reports, the Government should view prostitution from such a narrow angle.

Street soliciting seems to be the major issue for this Progressive Conservative Government and the Minister of Justice. It should be emphasized that soliciting represents only 15 per cent of prostitution. They fail to recognize the fact that for women de jure and de facto equality is a basic right, as well as the means to achieve it. Prostitution is but one result of social and economic inequalities, and I feel that the Government should deal with these inequalities much more urgently than with street soliciting.

The institution of a truly egalitarian society where all men and women could really be involved in the decision-making process which affects their personal, economic and social lives is one of these prerequisites. The issue of prostitution is one which should be dealt within the broader context of the type of society we want to develop.

We should emphasize, therefore, that in a truly egalitarian world, all exchanges, sexual and otherwise, should neither be bought nor sold.

I strongly encourage the Conservative Government to widen the debate on prostitution. This problem should be considered more from the social point of view than the legal one. I am not alone to hold that view: many groups of women, as well as the Special Committee on Pornography and Prostitution and the Badgley Committee have drawn the same conclusions.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-49. As we know, this Bill will amend the Criminal Code to make it a criminal offence, punishable by summary conviction, for persons in a public place to stop or attempt to stop a motor vehicle, impede the flow of traffic, to stop or attempt to communicate with any person for the purpose of engaging in prostitution or obtaining the services of a prostitute. It also provides for a review of the legislation after three years.

As my colleague stated this morning, our Party is opposed to this Bill. However, I also want to say that contrary to the propaganda that some of our Conservative friends have been pushing, we do not intend to unduly delay this Bill. Although my colleague elaborated on this in some detail this morning, let me quickly relate some of our major concerns about Bill C-49. We believe that although much stricter enforcement legislation that affects communities is needed to protect communities and its citizens, this Bill is unlikely to be a quick fix, contrary to a rather common belief held by the public.

There are some serious omissions in this Bill. It ignores the recommendations of the Fraser Commission that would deal with community problems in a more non-criminal way with the strengthening of some nuisance provisions of the Criminal Code. It also ignores major recommendations of the Badgely Report. They are two very important federal reports that involved input from all parts of Canada and considerable study and research.

The fact is that it will be mostly women who will be charged under the Criminal Code. They will be thrown in jail, given a criminal record and returned to the streets to pay their fines. With such a record, it is doubtful that there will be very much chance to move into any kind of occupation in the future.

There is no provision in the Bill to deal with pimps. Although the Bill includes a provision by which customers could be charged, they are less likely to be charged. It is much easier to pick up a woman or young person who is on the street than it is to pick up the fancy customer who is in a car cruising around the neighbourhood. There is no question that past experience shows that it will be women and an increasing number of young people, including young men, who will be the primary victims of this legislation.

I hope the Government will seriously consider addressing our deep concern about the fact that this Bill also criminalizes juveniles and provides no strong sanctions against customers of juveniles. This was one of the most important recommendations of the Fraser Commission. I do not understand why there is no clause in the Bill dealing very strongly with such sanctions.

The Government has no plan to deal with the comprehensive situation that causes and has spin-offs from prostitution. Most of us agree, and the reports I have mentioned underline strongly, that prostitution has a social and an economic cause. Therefore, we must look at social and economic solutions along with protections for neighbourhoods.

We will oppose this Bill. We will present further details in debate and committee. Being the Member for Vancouver East, where this summer there have been intolerable kinds of activities particularly in the Mount Pleasant area of my riding, I wish I could support a Bill that would be a quick fix to solve community problems relating to street soliciting.

I know the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) will agree that as street soliciting is concentrated in one neighbourhood it starts out as a nuisance problem which quickly escalates to include very serious problems leading to violence and intimidation. In one apartment building in my riding a prostitute was murdered and an incident took place involving 13 year-olds on private property. These are but two extreme incidents but they must cease. We cannot tolerate disruption to neighbourhoods. Citizens and communities have rights and it is up to all of us to assist in protecting these rights.

Our party and certainly myself feel that aggressive action must be taken on many fronts to deal with community problems. We feel that not enough has been done to deal with these problems. We would like to see much more aggressive enforcement by police. I have spent a lot of time talking to people regarding specific incidents that involved local people calling police. Much more aggressive enforcement by police must be taken under existing provisions of the Criminal Code as well as under municipal by-laws and provincial laws, all of which have provisions to deal with nuisance, loitering, intimidation, indecent acts, traffic violations, noise, trespassing and the involvement of juveniles. In Vancouver and in some other cities, there has not been a concerted attempt to follow up with concentrated police action, particularly community policing.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has spoken very eloquently and in great detail about the many reasons we have concerns regarding Bill C-49. Unfortunately, it is impossible to improve this Bill in committee. It would be nice if we could change the focus and modify it in some way to be helpful. Under the existing terms of reference and the purposes of this Bill, it cannot be amended. It is an extremely simplistic Bill which has many serious omissions regarding street soliciting, community problems and prostitution generally.

I want to repeat that while we cannot agree with this Bill, we do not intend to delay it beyond the normal period for debate. We feel it is important to have all views presented in committee, including views of community groups which have considerable expertise in the area. We know in advance that the Bill will be passed by the Conservative Government majority, despite its inadequacies and despite a complete disregard of the Fraser Committee recommendations.

In the New Democratic Party we agree most emphatically with the comments made by the Minister this morning, that the quality of life in residential neighbourhoods and the safety and rights of residents must be protected and of primary concern. Situations have almost destroyed a neighbourhood in my riding which has experienced nuisance problems, harassment, obscenities and violent crimes. Citizens and communities have rights to a safe environment.

Young people are drawn into street prostitution, a point which the Minister stressed. We too are most concerned about this. I have talked to many women who are raising young children on very low incomes and little security. They are forced to take to the streets to increase their incomes. As well we have people on grossly inadequate welfare rates who have to go to food banks and must prostitute at the end of the month to feed their kids.

I want to add my voice to those of my constituents who are demanding an end to this intolerable community disruption experienced in the Mount Pleasant community. Noise and offensive behaviour of customers, prostitutes and pimps has escalated, as I said before. Many women are afraid to go out at night. Parents are rightfully incensed at the obscene behaviour which their children are witnessing. I am very concerned when I hear about calls to police that more often than not are unable to be completed. I have heard about calls being unanswered. Responses are delayed. I am told there is no chance to follow up and charge people in cases where they should be charged. Residents feel unprotected.

Juvenile prostitution and activities of pimps are largely ignored in this community. They are tolerated. This should not be happening under our existing laws. I am proud to say that residents in the Mount Pleasant community, and I am sure it is an example of other communities, have dealt with the situation in a positive way. People are concerned about the need for alternate jobs and adequate income so that women particularly have an alternative to prostitution, even though we know many are caught in chronic situations. People are demanding stronger police enforcement.

I helped to convene a meeting during the summer. Block representatives were established and a positive program was set up. Many proposals were made, including police task forces, community policing, neighbourhood block programs. Meetings with city hall people were set up to press for more community services. In Ottawa, Mayor Dewar has been successful in curtailing the effects of prostitution in residential neighbourhoods. Montreal has a special by-law which our provincial Government refused to allow in Vancouver. We believe enforcement has been lax. Much more emphasis should be given to this. If the present sections of the Criminal Code that deal with nuisance are inadequate, they should be changed. I hope the committee will take a good look at some of the proposals of the Fraser Commission.

I want to speak as the NDP critic for the status of women and for social policy. Prostitution has always exploited and degraded women, particularly poor women, disadvantaged women and native women, women who are unprotected and who have inadequate income. These are the ones who we find on the streets. Many prostitutes have a history of childhood abuse. Most would have few employment skills to cope in other jobs. It is most important we recognize the root of prostitution, and from that the very many social problems that exist in prostitution-related activities.

We need social and economic approaches as well as a legal approach to deal with problems. There must be an alternative way of life. Young people must be made to realize that this is a dangerous and not a glamorous occupation. To accomplish this, we have to be able to reach them. They are street kids, many of whom are foster children and do not have any home base. They must be reached through Outreach programs. They must have alternative job opportunities. They must have places in which to live with role models. They must have training and community support. I am pleased that our community recognizes these facts and is working on community programs, as well as ridding itself of street prostitution.

Government politicians at all levels have a responsibility. However, I particularly appeal to the federal Government—and I see that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) is with us this afternoon—that it is not enough to have criminal sanctions. We do not agree with the particular approach of the Government. It is not enough just to do that and ignore employment opportunities or ways of ensuring adequate incomes and alternative lifestyles. The New Democratic Party wants stronger enforcements of nuisance laws, both local and federal, to protect citizens and to deal with community problems. Primarily, we feel that they should be directed at customers. Bill C-49, in its application, will be directed more to punitive measures against prostitutes, most of whom are women. I am not convinced that it has a strong method of dealing with customers. Customers provide the demand. If the customers are not there, the prostitutes and the pimps will not be there because they will not have any business. We would like to see the enforcement of nuisance measures strengthened in order to deal with and discourage customers. We also want social and economic solutions so that young people and women will not have to earn their living on the streets. Unfortunately we do not feel that these methods of dealing with a very complex social and economic problem will be met under Bill C-49.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is with great satisfaction that I am able to participate today in the debate on Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code dealing with prostitution. As many Members of the House will know, I am very pleased with the action taken by the Conservative Government and by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to deal with an issue which affects families and neighbourhoods right across the country. It deals with the blight of street soliciting which has invaded residential neighbourhoods, which is helping to destroy juveniles in particular, and which has led to a deterioration of some of the most historic neighbourhoods of Canada.

While I agree with the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), that there are other issues in the whole field of prostitution which must be addressed, I think this Bill which deals with street soliciting certainly is a major step forward in dealing with the problem. It is particularly a victory for citizens across Canada, because it was the pressure brought by citizens from Vancouver to Halifax who wanted to preserve their neighbourhood which led to the introduction of the Bill by the Conservative Government. It was one of our campaign promises. It is very satisfying to know that we have been able to meet this campaign promise within the first year of our mandate. It is also gratifying to know that it has the support, if only the qualified support, of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

I want to point out that the problems which the Hon. Member for Vancouver East now has in her riding are very similar to the ones which I had in my riding when this issue was first raised. I should like to refer to Hansard of December 17, 1981, and to quote, with Your Honour's permission, some sentences from the speech I made at that time. I was describing what street soliciting was doing to my riding and to my neighbourhood, and I said:

> It is one of the most historic neighbourhoods in our city. For the last couple of years it has been invaded by prostitutes and pimps who are found on every corner. It is a business well organized by pimps with walkie-talkies— It is organized in relation to territories— It is dangerous for residents. They are not only accosted every time they leave their apartment or home to get a loaf of bread or to pick up some milk or go to the post office, but there has already been one knifing incident.

Also in that speech I added:

I would like to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that we are not dealing with the age old problem here of street prostitution . . . we are dealing with the problem of prostitution on people's lawns, by their paper boxes, right in front of their grocery stores, in their churches and in their daycare centres. It is an infestation of a quiet and beautiful neighbourhood.

I made those comments with regard to Vancouver Centre, my riding, but the very same comments can be made right now with regard to Vancouver East, as the Hon. Member indicated. It is another historic neighbourhood, another family neighbourhood, which is being subjected to this blight.

I talked with some of the residents of Mount Pleasant last week and went through some areas in the Vancouver East Riding. I found that the same churches, the same lawns and the same beautiful homes were now afflicted. It is too bad the Hon. Member for Vancouver East could not have supported me in my efforts four years ago to have this problem corrected and that now that it is in her riding she recognizes the problem. When it was in my riding, she ignored it. In the meantime there have been four years of problems in neighbourhoods, a deterioration of neighbourhoods, harassment of ordinary citizens and corruption of juveniles in the four years of delay and procrastination before the Bill was brought before the House for second reading. I urge Opposition Members not to delay unduly this Bill, as they know the injunction which applies in British Columbia could be challenged in October. As they also know, there have already been instances of violence in other ridings. No matter what qualifications the Opposition Members may have about the Bill, we share a common desire to avoid the vigilante type of action which is surfacing in the Vancouver area and in other centres across the country.

I want to review some of the history of this measure and the role which my own constituents played in getting us to this stage, because the Conservative Party has been the only Party which has consistently dealt with the issue of street soliciting in a way that enhances families and neighbourhoods. We have consistently advanced the argument, since I entered the House in 1980, that the preservation of neighbourhoods and the preservation of families require that steps be taken to deal with soliciting. I would like to review some of the steps which got us here today. In Vancouver Centre I first became concerned about this issue in 1979 where, with the help of Denny Boyd of the Vancouver Sun, I participated in a well televised and well covered walk through some of the areas of my riding. It was the first time that attention had been focused on what happens to a neighbourhood, a family residential area, when it is invaded by this kind of blight. I can still remember the shock of the people who were with me when they saw little children on the streets soliciting, when they saw young women on the streets soliciting, and when they saw what was happening in terms of the noise and degradation of neighbourhoods. It was the first time that people realized that what happened in Vancouver Centre could and subsequently did happen in other centres across Canada.

In early 1982 I tackled the then Liberal Minister of Justice on the issue. We had just repatriated the Constitution; we just had the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In response to my continual raising of the issue of what good was the Charter of Rights if residents could not go to church without being hassled by hookers, he finally referred it to the Justice Committee of the House of Commons. About the same time a group was formed in my riding to which I give a lot of credit, the Concerned Residents of the West End, with people like Gordon Price and Jerry Stafford who got together to see what they could do to support myself as their Member of Parliament and other MPs in getting the changes through the House. They lobbied right across Canada and helped form other groups in other cities to focus attention on this issue. This is one of those issues which, if it does not occur in one's own neighbourhood, one tends to ignore it but when it does occur in one's own neighbourhood, one becomes very concerned by what can happen to friends, families and home life.

In 1982, the Justice Committee which, on our side of the table, was spearheaded by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn), heard representations from all across the country. Again, since it is now three years later, I would like to read into the record the organizations from which we heard before making our recommendations.

We heard from witnesses who came to Ottawa to appear before us representing the Concerned Residents of the West End; the West End Hotel Association; the West End Businessmen's Association; the Mayor of Vancouver, Mike Harcourt; Gordon Neighbourhood House which is in my riding and deals with the issue of juvenile prostitutes; the National Association of Women and the Law; the Elizabeth Fry Society of Toronto; the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police; the Vancouver Coalition for a Non-Sexist Criminal Code; the National Action Committee of The Status of Women; the Mayor of Niagara Falls; the Mayor of Calgary; the Metropolitan Toronto Board of Commissioners of Police; the Justice Department; Priscilla Platt, a barrister from Toronto; Professor Gerald Beaudoin of the University of Ottawa; and the Canadian Association of Elizabeth Fry Societies. I have read that list into the record because I want to make the point that in 1982, we were already getting substantial input from citizens across the country regarding this issue. What is now before us is a Bill which can deal with the matter and which should not be unduly delayed.

The results of the Justice Committee hearings were very similar to the legislation that is now before the House. The proposed amendment of the Justice Committee, and all-Party committee, contained in its majority report, dealt with the issue of soliciting for the purposes of prostitution and suggested that it should be banned in public places or any place open to public view including vehicles on the street or in driveways. That was important because today, as then, soliciting does not only take place on the street, it takes place in back lanes, churchyards, shopping plazas and apartment foyers of affected neighbourhoods. The present law does not address this problem. The majority report also dealt with the issue of public places including automobiles since a great many of these transactions take place in automobiles. As well, it recommended that both the prostitute and the customer may be charged, something which is of course essential and for which there has been general agreement.

The Justice Committee recommendations also dealt with the issue of juvenile prostitution, an issue which, according to the Minister of Justice will be dealt with in a separate Bill after more consultation with the parties affected. We all share the wish to protect these children rather than to penalize them and we wish to ensure that whatever steps are taken are humane and not punitive.

The recommendations of the Justice Committee were ignored and the Liberal Government brought in Bill C-53, a Bill which of course was toothless. The Bill did acknowledge the need to charge clients as well as prostitutes but since we could not charge prostitutes under the old Act, there was no particular point in trying to charge clients under legislation which could not be effectively enforced. At that time, the Fraser Committee was set up and of course there was a delay while its report was being made, during which time the problem spread to other cities.

In 1984, the residents of my riding formed the Shame the Johns Committee. It was a source of some pride to me that the citizens would continue to defend their neighbourhoods but at the same time it was a concern to me because, in the confrontation between the neighbours and the hookers and pimps, there was, of course, an atmosphere conducive to violence and I did not feel that people should have to risk their lives in order to defend their nighbourhoods. However, the Shame the Johns Committee movement spread. I walked with the Shame the Johns Committee in Halifax, a city which had the same problem in a historic neighbourhood, and such committees have been organized in other cities.

The point I would like to make is that this problem is not confined only to Vancouver. It is a problem that has spread across the country. It is a problem which has frustrated people such that they have gone from making complaints to the organization of community groups. What I fear now is that if the House does not deal with this issue, debate the issue, make recommendations and pass the Bill so that we have new laws in place, the formation of vigilante groups could lead to incidents of violence. Last weekend in Vancouver, there was such an incident, an incident which should spread fear among all legislatures regarding what happens when people take bad laws into their own hands.

I am suggesting that we proceed in a lawful manner by processing this legislation. We should examine it. Opposition Members should offer improvements. I beg opposition Members not to filibuster this Bill, to stop its process or to create an environment in which citizens are forced into the streets to defend their neighbourhoods because then anarchy prevails and the faith in legal institutions such as Parliament will break down. Right now what we have is an uncontrolled and unlimited problem. While this legislation will not resolve all the problems, it will deal with the issue of street soliciting in residential neighbourhoods. That will give us a good basis on which we may continue to work together to resolve some of these other issues.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question regarding a statement which she made in the latter part of her speech. She suggested that we should pass this Bill expeditiously because if we did not do so, we would find people taking the law into their own hands and perpetrating violent acts on society. It would seem to me that if that were the rationale used for the passage of laws across this country, it would in fact lead to anarchy.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that it is a Liberal Member who has brought that proposition forward because it was the Liberal Government that delayed and delayed on this kind of legislation until what was a fairly small, localized problem had spread right across the country. It is because of the delay in passing this legislation, because of the blight of neighbourhoods, because of daycare centres with little kids playing in the shadow of hookers, and because of all of the activity in the churchyards that people in defence of their own neighbourhoods got together and served notice that if the Government of Canada cannot deal with this problem, they will.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the Minister's rationale for suggesting to Parliamentarians that we should expeditiously pass this particular Bill for fear that if we did not pass it, society will be taken over by vigilante groups. That is a rationale that I do not understand and I would think that as a Parliamentarian, the Minister would find it very shocking that we should pass laws simply as a response to groups that could potentially become vigilante groups.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I accept the fact that the Liberal Member does not understand the situation. The Liberal Party never did and the Liberal Government did not either.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question with respect to the report of the Fraser Commission to which she has made reference. In dealing with the question of prostitution, the report of the Fraser Commission pointed out that one of the causes of prostitution was economic roots and in particular, and I am now quoting from the report:

> —the discrimination in employment that some gays, and gay males in particular appear to encounter. The latter problem is accentuated in the case of transsexual individuals who may find themselves virtually unemployable.

The Fraser Commission went on to recommend that the Government of Canada in conjunction with the Government of the provinces and Territories should strengthen both their moral and financial commitment to removing the economic and social inequalities between men and women and discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. The Canadian Human Rights Act should clearly be the appropriate piece of legislation to be amended in order to prevent discrimination against gays and lesbians, discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. This is a recommendation which has been made repeatedly by the Canadian Human Rights Commission and one which I myself have made to the House through a Private Member's Bill which is now before the Committee on Equality Rights. Indeed, it is one which the Minister herself, when she was a private Member, made to the House through a Private Member's Bill. Does the Minister continue to support amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation, and if so, what action is she and the Government taking to ensure that those amendments will in fact be enacted?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has indicated, I have supported this measure. He did not indicate the fact that I was the first MP ever of any Party to introduce a Private Member's Bill in this House urging a change to the Canadian human rights legislation to include sexual orientation. He did not mention the fact that I supported his Private Member's Bill as, in fact, he supported mine; nor did he mention that when we were of a minority opinion in the House that we both advanced this cause.

When he asks whether I would support any changes in this light, of course, I would. When he asks what our Government is doing about it, I note that the matter is before a committee dealing with equality rights and I am watching the focus of that committee with great interest.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's indication that she has supported this measure in the past and continues to support it. In the event that the sub-committee recommends the inclusion of sexual orientation in the Canadian Human Rights Act, does the Minister intend to press on her colleagues in Cabinet the implementation of this important recommendation, as she has recommended in the past and as the Fraser Commission recommended in its report to the Government?

Miss Carney: The answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, is yes.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity to participate in this debate. I believe there is one issue upon which all members can agree, that is, where we have come to a parting of the ways and, in particular, come to a parting of the ways with this Government, is in the selective application of recommendations emerging from the Fraser Commission. The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) spoke earlier about the specific problem in the city of Vancouver and how a number of community groups, including the Mayor of Vancouver, joined together in an effort to eliminate a problem in an historic neighbourhood of her community. She also outlined the difficulties faced in another community, specifically in an historic neighbourhood in Halifax.

It seems to me that one of the things we must do when we look at the question of prostitution is set aside the issue of whether or not it happens to be occurring in a nice neighbourhood or a not-so-nice neighbourhood. The members of my Party and I believe that every citizen in the country deserves to be free of annoyance and free of any difficulties when it comes to solicitation and prostitution. Of course, everyone would agree that it is not a problem which should only be addressed in nice neighbourhoods.

During the past weekend, I happened to be in Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories. At that time, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities was holding a national meeting on this and other important issues. Included among its members and representatives who attended that particular meeting was, in fact, the Mayor of Vancouver. The Mayor of Vancouver and, presumably, the municipalities across the country, have been directly involved in the implementation of the recommendations of the Fraser Commission.

I would like to bring to the attention of the House the feelings of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. These are feelings which, in fact, do not concur with the words expressed earlier by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) to the effect that no one has disagreed with Bill C-49. I would like to take a few moments to read into the record the serious concerns which have been expressed by the Task Force on Pornography and Prostitution which were unanimously endorsed last weekend in Yellowknife by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. I realize that the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre cannot accept the word of a Liberal because she is blinkered by partisanship when it comes to discussing serious and substantial issues. However, she may listen to the words of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities in which they unanimously endorsed a report which states:

> The Task Force has serious concerns about the approach adopted in Bill C-49. First, this approach is not comprehensive. It is like trying to remove the tip of an iceberg and assuming that the rest will disappear. Second, as stated in the Fraser Report, "We see no virtue in replacing the present system with a more repressive regime. There is no evidence in the history of this country, or in those countries like the United States which retain a Draconian system, that the results of such an approach would justify it." In short, we have serious doubts about the likely effectiveness of Bill C-49.

This report was not written by the Liberal Party. It was not written by members of the Opposition about whom the Minister would pretend obstructionism. This report was written by a task force established by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities because that Federation was extremely concerned with the issue of street solicitation, which is one portion—a very small one—of the market of prostitution. This particular report was unanimously supported not only by the task force but by representatives from coast to coast who were at the meeting in Yellowknife.

I know we have a problem. I think the members of the New Democratic Party have also recognized the problem when it comes to the issues of street solicitation. When I look at the recommendation in Bill C-49, which is particularly punitive toward the prostitutes, I would like to ask the Government: Where are the purveyors? Where are the pimps? Where are the customers when it comes to this piece of legislation? The suggestion that the Government will move in with a half measure which targets solicitation without dealing with the issue of procurement and without dealing with the issue of customers in a very direct way is in and of itself flying in the face of all of the recommendations of the Fraser Report.

Even if the Government is insistent upon adopting a one-tier approach to the problem, and if it refuses to look at the comprehensive recommendations made in the Fraser Commission Report, then, at best, it should introduce amendments to this piece of legislation which would ensure equal treatment of the pimps, the customers and the prostitutes. As long as there is a single piece of legislation which will light out simply on the issue of solicitation against the prostitutes, then we will not reach the root of the problem of prostitution, nor will we deal with the difficulties intrinsic in street solication. I would ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, who has walked the streets of Vancouver, to tell us how many prostitutes are operating out there without a pimp in the background, without a purveyor or without customers. It takes a trio to operate in this particular situation in dealing with street solicitation. Unfortunately, the Bill before us makes a feeble attempt to deal with only one third of the group involved in this activity.

Again, the task force, in a report which was unanimously endorsed on the weekend by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, expressed some concerns with respect to the decision of this Government to target legislation toward prostitutes without looking at the entire question. They make certain recommendations. The first is that they have an opportunity to meet directly with the Minister of Justice to address some of the specific concerns related to amendments to this Bill. They do not particularly want Bill C-49 to proceed at this time. However, if it is to proceed, then they are encouraging the Government to at least include recommendations 59 and 60 of the Fraser Commission Report which cover the areas of the purveyors as well as the customers of prostitution. The task force recommends that the effectiveness of Bill C-49 be reviewed in a period of two years following the introduction of the legislation. However, before that happens, the Federation would like to have a chance to meet directly with the Minister of Justice with the intent of developing a more comprehensive approach to the problem of prostitution.

It is clear that prostitution, whether it be street solicitation or other forms of prostitution, is not a unique problem to Vancouver, Halifax, or nice neighbourhoods. If looked at historically, the issue of street solicitation only became an issue when the prostitutes started to move into "nice" neighbourhoods. In many neighbourhoods where the political clout of the residents has not been as strong or as effective over the years, prostitutes have carried on their business for a number of years. Prostitution was not discovered in 1978, 1979 or in the decades previous to that. Recently in my own community in Hamilton a concern was expressed in a neighbourhood which certainly could not be described as an historic neighbourhood. It is a neighbourhood of working people who expressed the same kinds of concerns about the intrusion into their private lives as has occurred in Vancouver and Halifax.

The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) has often spoken to me about some of the difficulties faced in the Kensington market neighbourhood in Toronto and how she and others would like to find a way of solving the problem in the short and long term. I think it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that this rather piecemeal and in fact discriminatory piece of legislation which deals specifically with prostitution without including in its legislative target the customers, the purveyors and the procurers of sex, does not deal with the problem. I would suggest to the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, as well as other Hon. Members who have been involved in this dossier for a number of years, that when we have the kind of strong objection raised by organizations like the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, which has been in the front line of the fight from the moment it became apparent that it was a public problem, there is something intrinsically wrong with this legislation which must be corrected before we can expect to see all-Party support.

I believe it would be wrong and unfair of the Government to suggest that Members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties were not interested in trying to find meaningful solutions to the problem of prostitution. Organizations like the Federation of Canadian Municipalities unanimously suggested that this particular piece of legislation will not do the job. People like the Mayor of Vancouver who were at that meeting and endorsed this task force recommendation are calling upon the Government not to introduce Bill C-49 without some very specific amendments and have expressed concern that even with amendments, Bill C-49 will not address the basic problem of juvenile prostitution, delinquency and all the other inherent social problems we saw very fully explored in the Fraser commission report. In a sense, the Government is throwing up a smoke screen. It is trying to address a problem through legislation which does not do the job. Across Canada that appears to be an emerging consensus, not only from women's groups and from groups representing, for example, the question of civil liberties for Canadians, but also from the Federation of Canadian Municipalities which has been elected to speak for the major communities across this country which are specifically facing the problem.

I would like to read for the record some of the names of people who were on that task force so we know we are not just speaking about partisan Liberal opposition: Baryl Gaffney from the City of Nepean who was the chairman of the task force; Harold Macdonald from the City of Winnipeg; Donna MacArthur from Prince Edward Island; Jack Layton from the City of Toronto; Larry Gilchrist from the City of Calgary and a staff member from the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. These people are dealing on a daily basis with the direct complaints in their communities, and who are dealing on a very specific basis with the kind of problems which were outlined by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson). When they express serious concerns and reservations about Bill C-49, they are echoing the sum and substance of the statements which have been made in this House and outside this House. I do not think that anyone believes that Bill C-49 is the answer to the question. It is simply a clouding of the facts when the Government and the Minister parade Bill C-49 as a fulfilment of the Conservative promises on the issue of prostitution.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House will want to work with the Government and with the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to encourage the Government to back off on this particular piece of legislation. We believe it should introduce instead a more comprehensive package which will take into consideration not only the issue of street solicitation, which is 10 per cent of the problem with respect to prostitution, but the over-all difficulties as outlined in the Fraser Commission report. This report begins to address this problem for all Canadians in a way which is not specifically punitive toward the prostitute while in fact allowing the procurers and the customers to go scot free.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member two questions. She correctly pointed out that prostitution did not begin in 1979, but I would suggest to her that street soliciting did emerge about that time. Since prostitution has been with us for about 4,000 years, is the Hon. Member proposing that we wait another 4,000 years to deal with the over-all problem of prostitution as she seems to infer from her remarks?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I am suggesting that the problem of prostitution was dealt with in a very complete and informative way by the Fraser Commission. This piecemeal piece of legislation does absolutely nothing to deal with the over-all social problems which derive from prostitution. Why is the Minister and her Government hiding behind a piece of legislation which is so flimsy that it cannot even get the support of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, that raises my second question. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) had indicated that he will be consulting with provincial Governments and other groups before bringing in some of the other legislation which was suggested by the Fraser report. Of course, that would include the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. I would ask the Hon. Member one specific question: since I know that the Mayor of Vancouver totally supported myself and the constituents of Vancouver Centre in backing the measures we took to bring the problem of street soliciting before the House, and totally endorsed the Justice Committee recommendations which are contained in this legislation, is the Hon. Member suggesting that the Mayor of Vancouver does not support this legislation?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, what I am suggesting is that there was a unanimous recommendation passed on the weekend in Yellowknife at a meeting which was attended by the Mayor of Vancouver. This particular recommendation was endorsed unanimously by all municipalities at a meeting which was attended by the Mayor of Vancouver at which very serious concerns were expressed about the approach adopted in Bill C-49. It is like "trying to remove the tip of an iceberg, assuming the rest will disappear". That particular report was endorsed by, among others, the Mayor of Vancouver, so the Minister can draw whatever conclusion from that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If there are no further questions or comments, we shall resume debate.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Bill C-49. I applaud its intention. I believe all Members of this House and the many people who are concerned with it applaud the intention which seems to be espoused by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) and by some Conservative Members. However, I think it is the responsibility of every Member of this House, even if he or she is on the Government side, to take a close look at the way this Bill is drafted because it is dangerous law, Mr. Speaker. It is police law and I intend to expand on that considerably as I speak this afternoon. What this Bill is going to do is force a realignment of prostitution in Canada, as previous speakers have pointed out. The street prostitution is going to be dealt with here but will be at the choice of a municipality or police force or an individual police officer who wants to apply this draconian, steel fisted wording which the Minister of Justice put before us to deal with today.

I come to the House of Commons having been a probation and parole officer in British Columbia. I have dealt on a regular professional basis with both male and female prostitutes, with pimps and with the general grouping of people we find associated with the criminal element. I intend to expand at some length at what the real issue is here, how prostitution should really be dealt with in a Canadian way rather than this typically narrow way which is an attempt to be able to say to a few concerned constituents across the country, "We have brought the legislation in. The Liberals, the New Democratic Party and a few groups across the country did not like it but we have brought it in and we are able to deal with it". If anyone in this country is going to give the highest of all ratings to this Bill it is going to be organized crime, not those community groups which are concerned about street soliciting. It is organized crime which stands to reap the very greatest benefits from the kind of inflation we are going to see in the whole field of prostitution in Canada.

I believe Canadians should take a close look at the wording of this Bill. I am not persuaded, and I do not believe the Minister of Justice has persuaded anyone in his own caucus, that this is the way this problem should be approached. I quote Section 195.1 of the Criminal Code which states as follows:

● (1640)

Every person who in a public place or in any place open to public view

(a) stops or attempts to stop any motor vehicle,

(b) impedes the free flow of pedestrian or vehicular traffic or ingress to or egress from premises adjacent to that place, or

(c) stops or attempts to stop any person or in any manner communicates or attempts to communicate with any person—

Subparagraph (c) is really crucial:

(c) stops or attempts to stop any person or in any manner communicates or attempts to communicate with any person for the purpose of engaging in prostitution or of obtaining the services of a prostitute is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

As we heard from the Minister of Justice that is $2,000 or six months in jail. It goes on to define in Clause (2) a "public place". It says:

In this section, "public place" includes any place to which the public have access as of right or by invitation, express or implied, and any motor vehicle located in a public place or in any place open to public view."

When I opened my remarks this afternoon I said that this is police law. I have watched over the years while I was in corrections the kinds of laws which came out of this House. From time to time I saw police law come from here. It shocked me. Police certainly like to have that kind of law. They can determine at what point they do not like a prostitute or pimp. As you can tell by the wording, this is a guaranteed power to bust. Whether we are talking about Mount Pleasant, Toronto, Halifax, Calgary, certain areas of Vancouver, Prince Rupert, Terrace, Smithers or Atlin, this gives the police the kind of power they really like. The power is incredibly broad and gives police an almost guaranteed bust when they want it, but it does not deal with prostitution per se. I disagree with the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney).

This Bill deals with a very narrow part of prostitution and, from my professional experience, it deals with those who are already in the weakest position. I never met a street hooker who wanted to be there. Not one. We heard earlier today about the Government of Manitoba Study which found that 90 per cent of prostitutes did not want to be in that line of work. Well, I never met anyone in the line of street prostitution who wanted to be there. In driving them off the streets, Members of this House had better keep in mind one of the reasons these people are on the streets. In many cases they do not have the kind of organized crime network for personal, physical protection. They are on the streets so they at least have that narrow opportunity to determine whether or not the customer, male or female, is likely to stab them, shoot them, or put them in a sack and dump them off a bridge. In bringing forward this Bill the Minister should keep in mind that these people, particularly the young people, should be dealt with by social workers, probation officers and a more loving and caring support system rather than by the police forces of this country. The police have a unique opportunity with this legislation to not only harass these people while they are on the street but to place them in an even more difficult situation, that of the revolving door of our penal system. As many Canadians know, we have one of the highest rates of incarceration in the world. Canadian taxpayers want to get people out of jail and get that barbaric burden off our back. What this legislation will guarantee is that a lot of these young and underprivileged people, almost all of whom were sexually abused as children, are going back into the correctional system.

Even if they move out of prostitution, where are they going to go? They have to go into either the world of drugs or other forms of crime. As another Member said, if you have been a hooker for five years, what are you going to tell IBM when you apply for a typing job? You cannot say you have been a hooker on Davey Street. If they say that is why you do not get the job, then you may be able to appeal it under the Human Rights Act, but you are not going to get very far.

I think this institution has a responsibility to take a situation like this a little more gravely rather than simply throwing a bone to the police or to organized crime. I will be the first one to admit that I do not like to go into Mount Pleasant and hear people say they are tired of pimps beating on each other in the front yard with saps and knives, hookers all over the streets, screaming tires, and liquor bottles being thrown out the window. No Member of Parliament in his or her right mind would support that kind of activity, but to pass Draconian law is wrong.

We in British Columbia know why there are more juveniles on the street involved in prostitution. It is because the Socreds are interested in restraint. They closed the transition houses and got rid of the probation officers. They got rid of the social workers and all kinds of teams of professionals who go and deal with these people to get them off the street. What is the Socred and Conservative way of dealing with this kind of thing? They say they will give the police all the powers they need. They can pick and choose and we will get the hookers off the street. Brian Mulroney makes the country strong! What a lot of poppycock. Look at the implications for civil rights and human rights. Let us look at what a few newspapers have had to say about it. There are a few people who are willing to stand up and say that even though you are a hooker, you are a Canadian and you have human rights. There should be a few more Members here standing up and saying they will be counted for the human and civil rights of a hooker or pimp. Yes, we will make sure they know the activity they are involved in is criminal and we will get them into other occupations until we reach a state where it is recognized that this kind of activity is inherent in this economic situation.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says prostitution has been here for 4,000 years. The Minister of Justice says we cannot get rid of it, but do they offer any realistic way of dealing with it? You can suppress it, decriminalize it or legalize it. What they have done is take what I consider to be a totally inappropriate and narrow-minded approach, not supported by the Fraser Commission or the Badgley Commission, and which should not be supported by Members of this House. You have to take a broad and far-ranging approach to these kinds of social problems. An Alberta newspaper says:

Crosbie, then, is rolling up his sleeves to tackle a symptom while ignoring the disease. If he does a good job on the symptoms the disease will probably get worse.

They are absolutely correct. A couple of years from now this House will be dealing with this problem all over again. In a few minutes I will read the chronology of action taken by this House as provided by the parliamentary library. Sure, people in Vancouver and Halifax will be happy; the police can move in and move the hookers and pimps from these residential areas, and so they should. They have had the capacity to do that all along but they have been waiting, choking Parliament into producing a law we should not be producing. The article goes on to say:

> Whatever one may think of some of its recommendations, the Fraser committee did appreciate the multifaceted nature of prostitution. It suggested a measure which it hoped would reduce or eliminate street soliciting. But, recognizing that if prostitution is driven from the streets it will go elsewhere, it tried to deal with that reality.

Bill C-49 does not deal with reality and people in this House should wake up. We should not keep passing law which is totally unrealistic. It goes on to say:

> Hence its proposals that one or two prostitutes be allowed to carry on business in their own residence and that provinces be allowed to licence non-residential brothels. Hence, also, its recommendation that pimping and living off the avails of prostitution be illegal only if the prostitute concerned is under 18 or if a pimp uses force or the threat of force. Hence, not least, its plea for increased governmental support for efforts to ameliorate the social and economic conditions which often push young women into prostitution and for those aimed at helping and encouraging them to leave that way of life.

We have not heard anything from the Minister of Justice, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) or the provinces. As economic conditions get worse, you get more prostitution. Look at places like Mexico City. It is incredible! Anyone who thinks that as economic conditions get worse this kind of law will deal with prostitution is dreaming in Technicolor. The articles goes on to say:

> Essentially, the Fraser committee argues that, street soliciting apart, the criminal law respecting prostitution should be limited to proscribing violence or the threat of force. This is a marked departure from the traditional approach of Canadian government and society. It is pragmatic rather than moralistic. The committee's proposals for legalized places of prostitution underline how radical its thinking is.

Let us see what another newspaper has to say. The Ottawa Citizen says: "Crosbie's bill threat to free speech". It says:

> John Crosbie has responded to pressing and persistent pressure to get prostitutes off city streets. But his anti-soliciting bill is a dangerous answer to the wrong problem.
> The Justice Minister's new bill would make it a crime to stop a car or impede pedestrians to offer sex for sale. That would be acceptable enough.
> In an over-reaching subclause, however, the bill goes much further. In makes a criminal of anyone who "in any manner communicates or attempts to communicate with any person" in public in order to supply or obtain a prostitute's services.

Let us look at a few other implications of Bill C-49 going forward. As I pointed out earlier, it essentially deals with the poorest and most disorganized of those involved in prostitution. Some people may think that is great. However, where are those people going to go? Many of them cannot find other employment. Governments in British Columbia and other areas of the country do not have, or have cut off transition houses and training programs so that these people cannot move into the job market. They will move in with organized crime in "escort services" and the whole gamut of organized crime in relation to prostitution. It is true that it will remove the majority of prostitutes from the areas where people do not like it because when they are reported the police can simply go in with this "easy bust" legislation. If the police are looking for a piece of legislation which they can wave as a guaranteed bust, this is it.

Previous speakers have said that prostitution is a victimless crime but some Canadians have become associated victims to the effects of prostitution in this country. We feel badly about it and everyone in the House wants to do something about it because we do not want that kind of activity. It is very disruptive to have that kind of hassle in the community. It is not anyone's idea of a particularly good time to have a lot of heavies—the pimps—on the streets with batons and knives.

We must look carefully at what the Bill proposes to do and what its effects will be. When I was a probation and parole officer I dealt with hookers from the courts. In the late 1970s they were given probation orders which were very similar to the process of cities and provinces passing by-laws and injunctions to keep people out of certain areas of the community. Those probation or parole orders would stipulate that a prostitute could not be between certain streets or in certain premises where this prostitute was known to have made a living. Part of my job was to find out whether that order was being broken. If it was I would have to breach them and they would go to jail, be fined, or get another order of some kind.

In almost every case where the hookers had some kind of initiative they would get in touch with someone on another echelon of organized crime. If they had simply worked with a pimp before, they would move up into the call girl echelon of prostitution. They then had a more select clientele and less opportunity to have to deal with myself who would bust them, or with a police officier who would recognize them. They moved into another milieu where there is no opportunity for them to come into contact with police. That is how organized crime is starting to operate in the field. If any group in the country will give a ten star rating to this legislation, it will be organized crime. When we come to vote on this legislation we should consider whether we want to guarantee hundreds of millions of dollars to organized crime in this country as a result of the legislation that we would be passing.

The problem of the involvement of juveniles in prostitution has been raised with almost all Members of the House. This Bill does not deal with it. British Columbia now is almost resourceless. There is almost nothing that can be done there any longer because British Columbia has been made resourceless by political decisions. Camping opportunities and even incarcerative facilities are extremely limited and job-training programs have been eliminated. Society should be dealing much more effectively with the source of the disease rather than with symptomatic legislation such as we have before us.

I said I was going to discuss a paper produced by the Library of Parliament, but I do not have a lot of time. I will simply recommend that Members who are interested in this get it from the parliamentary library. It is called "Prostitution" and starts in 1892 with the first vagrancy and bawdy house legislation in the Criminal Code and continues on to the Hutt decision. It includes various attempts made by cities and provinces to deal with this problem.

Let us take a look at what the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women said in May when this Bill was first made public. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) made very clear, the Minister did not actually introduce this Bill until June 26 at 10 o'clock at night. The Minister of Justice cannot go to my province and say that the Opposition is holding up a Bill when he did not introduce it until 10 o'clock at night two days before we rose and then never reintroduced it until today. If anyone stalled on this Bill it was the Government, and it does not deal with the problem.

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women described this as unimaginative, narrow, and punitive. It said that the Government's new anti-soliciting Bill only addresses half of the problem and it is going to result in more fines, jail sentences and criminal records and does not deal with the disease. Mr. Speaker, I think we should be very careful. Members of the Government should speak to prosecutors, social workers, and the Elizabeth Fry Society to find out the implications of the passage of such a Bill. Otherwise, in 18 months to three years from now we will be dealing with a much more broadly based piece of legislation involving the provinces as the Fraser Commission recommended. It is a sorry day to pass another piece of legislation just like Bill C-51 which had the search and seizure powers without warrant.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the previous speaker. I congratulate him on his excellent speech. I have listened very attentively all day. I am sorry he did not get an opportunity to speak of the customers. Would he share with us some of the information that he has in that regard, thereby enabling us to have the benefit of that information as well.

• (1700)

Mr. Fulton: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It is intriguing how the Bill is written. It really does not deal with the whole question of customers. I think that Members of the House should remember that the Bill deals with a very narrow band of prostitution in Canada. It is the poorest, least educated, most abused and most violence-prone people who end up having to ply that trade. The customers who are involved, when dealing with street prostitution, are generally a rather rag-tag crowd. By that I mean they are not those who tend to use the more exclusive mechanisms of finding their way to prostitutes. Those in more exclusive lines of work, whether MPs, judges, doctors, or whoever, would tend to be made aware of the exclusivity of prostitution. Here we are talking in terms of street prostitutes.

Let me deal with Vancouver where I worked with the Vancouver Court team which worked out of the corner of Hastings and Main which is the toughest part of Vancouver to say the least. The customers of the female prostitutes tended to be men coming from the mining or logging resource based industry camps who had been away for some time. They tended to be a fairly rough crowd but not violent.

Street prostitutes now must also deal with a more peculiar phenomena. As they move up to the lowest levels of organized crime they will be faced with an even more difficult problem. As they get into the clutches of organized crime they will not be able to make the decision I talked about concerning the protection they get on the street. In that case, when they become involved in transactions with someone on the street, they are at least able to make a superficial judgment about whether they are afraid of that person. Once they become involved with organized crime it will not be that easy. That small protection will disappear.

I believe Parliament must play a bigger role in this respect because it also involves the issue of pornography. The random evolution of violence within human sexuality in the western world is exemplified in much of the pornography available today and street prostitutes will have to deal with this frequently. Prostitutes with whom I dealt professionally were frequently beaten, stabbed and mugged. It was terrifying and most, if not all, wanted to get out of the trade but were in it for very real economic reasons and could not get out.

As some of my colleagues have pointed out, in many cases these might be women with three children at home, living in a hovel. They run out of money and decide that they could use that $50 or $100 for their kids. I have met prostitutes who found themselves in that situation. When I interviewed them in their home and met their children I was flabbergasted that these women were prostitutes. Imagine the effects of this Draconian Bill on a woman, typing out of her home, who occasionally had to become involved in prostitution for economic reasons. She may face 30 days in Oakalla. Subsequently, she has a criminal record and cannot be bonded to do typing at home for students at Simon Fraser University.

We must consider the implications of this Bill more carefully. I want to talk more about the customers. We are beginning to see that there is more violence, as we learned in Vancouver with the murder of young prostitutes. Some of the prostitutes involved are 12, 13 and 14 years old. This Bill does not deal with that fact. The Government is throwing a bone to the police in order to vacuum-clean hookers off the street. While it will make a few people happy, Canadians must be aware of the implications of this legislation.

I suggest that customers may well be far more satisfied in their dealings with organized crime because if they want to beat a hooker once in a while, you can be sure that organized crime at the higher levels will send an unknowing individual into that situation knowing that they will make a lot of money from it. Even under the present law which is inappropriate and inactive, these prostitutes at least have an opportunity not to go back to be beaten by the same person.

Street prostitutes deal with a very different crowd than prostitutes within the more organized levels. It is much more dangerous to push them off the street and into a situation where they must deal with a pimp, operating out of a sleazy hotel. It does not deal with the fact that they are human beings. We cannot sit in the House and say that hookers are no good and have no rights and therefore will be dealt with in this way. As Canadians, even hookers in our society deserve better than this Bill and the customers deserve to be included in some kind of legislation in a more direct way.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the eloquent remarks of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I wish he had more time to speak, given his experience as a parole officer dealing firsthand with many of these problems.

In the limited time which is available, would he indicate some of the background chronology of this particular area of the law? I believe he began to do so and it would be most helpful to all Members to have some sense of the many attempts that have been made in the past to address this important question.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, before doing that, I know that this Bill will go to a committee soon and I think we should remember that we are dealing with real human beings who are faced with a real human situation.

There are three options which the Fraser Commission carefully considered. First, we can take the action that is in this Bill, which is suppression legislation. We can decriminalize or we can legalize. I do not believe that that debate has been heard here. Some are worried that this is a controversial issue which will cost votes. However, I believe we must be practical.

Let me point out the serious situation which is developing by relating the chronology of changes in this legislation. It comes from the parliamentary library. In 1892, there was the inclusion of vagrancy, bawdy house and procuring provisions in the first Criminal Code of Canada. These provisions remained essentially unchanged for 80 years. In 1970, the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women recommended repeal of the vagrancy provision dealing with prostitution and a study of how best to deal with the activity. One can see that there is an enormous lapse of time before there was any substantive movement in terms of change to the sections we are dealing with.

On July 15, 1972, there was the Criminal Code amendment Bill which repealed Section 175(1)(c) of the Code and introduced Section 195.1 on soliciting with which we are dealing today. On February 8, 1978, we begin to see that the action being taken by Parliament is becoming compressed. The decision of the Supreme Court in Hutt is handed down, giving a narrow interpretation to "solicit". That is the pressing and persistent ruling that was spoken about earlier today.

On May 1, 1978, the Government introduced the first of three Bills designed to reverse the effect of Hutt. In November, 1978, the Law Reform Commission Report on sexual offences recommended making it clear that the word "prostitute" applies to both men and women. It also recommended further study of the law dealing with the practice.

In November, 1979, the Conservative Government indicated that its policy was that no amendments be made to the Criminal Code dealing with soliciting. On May 26, 1980, the City of Montreal passed an anti-prostitution bylaw restricting soliciting on city streets. There was recently an interesting ruling by the courts on that bylaw.

On June 25, 1981, the City of Calgary passed two bylaws.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) but the time for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on this Bill. I have listened to much of the debate today. Again, I want to reiterate my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who I believe contributed much to the debate this afternoon by adding some very new and very interesting points of view. Of course, we recognize that those comments came from someone who had worked as a social worker and has had to deal with this situation in a way that makes him far more knowledgeable about those issues than perhaps many other people would be.

We are dealing, of course, with a very serious problem and I know that the topic is not always dealt with by many people in the serious manner that it deserves. I suppose there are reasons for that. The stigma and so forth attached to the topic we are talking about today creates a situation whereby this happens.

The first thing we should recognize, the Minister himself recognized it today in his opening remarks, is that the problem has been with us since the beginning of time and since the beginnings of society. It is obvious that the problem, in the last 100 years and even more so in recent years, seems to be coming more and more evident. We are experiencing difficult economic times and street solicitation does augment income when people are out of work. Prostitution is a way of making a living, not perhaps an occupation that many of us agree with, but nevertheless it exists. Many do not want to do it for a living but have to because they are unable to do anything else. One must conclude, therefore, that unemployment is not a cause for prostitution to exist but is a reason for its increase, particularly in large metropolitan areas, that are suffering from the terrible effects of unemployment.

We must also recognize that the average salary paid to women is considerably less than that paid to men. We know that women make only 60 per cent of the salary of men. The present inequality is a contributing factor to this situation. We heard the Minister say that in his view if we get the prostitutes off the street, it will eliminate the pimps. At least, he said something to that effect. By the Minister's logic, if there were no prostitutes, there would be no pimps. If you follow that logic to the extreme you can also say that if there were no customers, there would be no need for prostitutes or pimps. I have not heard the Minister address himself to that issue. We have not heard the Minister address himself to any of the other issues involving prostitution, other than what he has chosen as the instrument to remove people from the street, which is to place this burden on the prostitute herself, as opposed to the customer and the pimps. Also absent from the Minister's remarks today, and not in the Government's intentions, at least at the present time, are ways to deal with the pimp or to stop them from doing what they are doing. There is nothing new and significant. There is nothing new to stop or to curtail the activities of the customers on the street, at least nothing major. Even more important, there are no measures for rehabilitation or measures to find employment or other ways in order to assist the prostitute herself or himself as the case may be.

We should all be very concerned as legislators about one aspect of prostitution, namely the age of prostitutes. You would have to be blind not to notice, when walking down the streets of any major city, how young they are. Statistics were given in the House today about the increasing number of juveniles involved. Again, you will recognize, Mr. Speaker, that unemployment among juveniles is higher than in any other age group. We talked earlier about the salary of women being less than men as being a contributing factor to the problem. We can apply that circumstances to young men, and young women particularly, where changes for employment are even less because unemployment is extremely high. The problem is compounded with ever increasing numbers of young women involved in prostitution.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF NOTICE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member for disturbing his very interesting and germane remarks on this important legislation.

Before the end of the Government business, pursuant to Standing Order 65, I would like to table in both official languages a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the statute law relating to income tax and to make a related amendment to the Tax Court of Canada Act. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that you designate an order of the day for consideration of this Ways and Means motion.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order just to seek clarification. Is it in order to undertake an action of the nature of that undertaken by the President of the Privy Council on a point of order? Certainly if he sought unanimous consent of the House that would be one thing, but surely the nature of this type of motion is such that it cannot be undertaken on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Standing Order 65(1)(2) indicates that the Government House Leader can do this at any time during a sitting. I, therefore, find it in order.

Mr. Robinson: But he did not have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I presume the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is also rising on a point of order?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Chair that this can be done at any time on the orders of the day. However, I think that it is unacceptable to interrupt a member on a point of order which is not a point of order to introduce or table in the House a ways and means motion. I would not want any precedent to be set. I merely want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that you take into consideration the procedure used by the President of the Privy Council and advise us perhaps tomorrow whether it is appropriate, but I do not think it is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Very well. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I want to conclude my remarks today. It has been said by some that prostitution is a victimless crime. I beg to differ with that comment. I believe the prostitute herself is a victim of the crime because the prostitute is generally controlled by others who place the prostitute in a position of quasi and even outright slavery. The attitude of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), who has decided to remove the enslaved from the public view and believes that that is somehow a solution to the problem, is very inadequate. I do not think it is right. None of us should be participating in any way to give this Minister the approval of the Bill. I cannot support this kind of legislation.

● (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question? The question is as follows: Mr. Crosbie, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn moves that Bill C-49, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (prostitution) be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Since it is 17.20 p.m., the House will now proceed with the consideration of private members' business as indicated on the Order Paper today.

MULTICULTURALISM

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a Department of Multiculturalism and a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon), seconded by Mr. Marchi, moves:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of establishing a Department of Multiculturalism and a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

Does the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon have a point of order?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, may I begin to speak to the motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It was my understanding that the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon had a point of order concerning the motion.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think Your Honour suggested that I seconded the motion of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp), and I did not, just for the record.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): It is seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): This time we will try to get it correctly. The motion is moved by Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon) and seconded by Mr. Waddell. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon on a point of order, I believe.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, before I begin to speak to this motion, and recognizing that I am unable to amend it, I would ask for the indulgence of the House to delete the last six words of the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is that agreed, by unanimous consent?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, by way of very brief explanation of that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Just a moment, please. The Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges).

Mr. Mitges: Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that the Government is willing to acept this motion with some possible amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): It is the understanding of the Chair that by unanimous consent we will drop the six last words in the motion, which read as follows:

—and a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

It was already established on June 28, I believe. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you I thank colleagues. By way of brief explanation, I need only say that on June 19, when I put forward this motion, there was no expectation that a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism would be established. On June 28, I had the great pleasure, with other Hon. Members, of seeing the standing committee established. Therefore, that part of the motion is now superfluous.

Before speaking to the motion, I should like to take a moment to recognize the presence in the House of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) who has recently assumed these duties. I am honoured to have him present in the House this afternoon to participate in or to listen to this debate.

Mr. Jelinek: Listen.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Thank you very much. It gives me great pleasure to speak to this motion on the first day of the resumption of sittings of the House of Commons, given the events of recent days which make the motion a most timely matter. The establishment of the standing committee by unanimous consent of the House on June 28, 1985 has already been noted. At that time the following was indicated:

That the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism be empowered to encourage and monitor the implementation of the principles of the federal multiculturalism policy throughout the Government of Canada, and in particular,

(1) to encourage the departments and agencies of the federal government to reflect the multicultural/multiracial diversity of the nation; and

(2) to examine existing and new programs and policies of federal departments and agencies to encourage sensitivity to multicultural concerns and to preserve and enhance the multicultural/multiracial reality of our nation;

Those terms of reference can be found in Hansard of June 28, 1985. It is worth having them before us because we do not have them in the Standing Orders of the House where this committee now exists in Standing Order 70.

The establishment of this committee is likely to be—and perhaps is expected to be—of enormous importance to the country and to all Canadians who are concerned that, as Section 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms declares, the Charter be interpreted in a manner consistent with preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians. Although those words were not included in the permanent terms of reference for this committee or, rather, the section of the Charter for which my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), worked hard earlier in this debate to see that included, I am sure the committee will be working in that spirit.

This establishment of a committee, if I may say so, occurred in rather surprising ways at the end of June. I gather that the Minister was not at all sure that the committee would be established. The report of the Parliamentary Reform Committee of the House of Commons did not include this committee in its list of standing committees. Suddenly, on June 28, we were able to give unanimous consent. It is in a context of labours toward that end but limited expectation that it would happen very quickly that I want to deal this afternoon with the question of establishing a Department of Multiculturalism, a full-fledged Ministry of Multiculturalism.

In the past few weeks there have been media reports suggesting that such a Department is under consideration. These media reports, particularly out of Toronto and Winnipeg, suggested that a new Department might be established which would bring together responsibilities for immigration, for multiculturalism and for citizenship affairs. Of course this could be done by splitting immigration off from the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, by combining it with the present Multiculturalism Directorate and by moving the Citizenship Branch of the Department of the Secretary of State over and constituting that as the core, though perhaps not the sole structure of a new Department of Multiculturalism.

The Government is at work on a White Paper dealing with multiculturalism. That White Paper has been expected for some time and is likely to appear early in the new year, one gathers. Presumably it will be followed by a Multiculturalism Act, which has long been hoped for by persons active in ethnocultural affairs across the country. This suggests that the deliberations of Government may well be involved with this question. That makes it all the more appropriate that the House of Commons, in its advise and consent responsibilities, has this opportunity to consider the question this afternoon.

I would suggest as well, with perhaps a touch of hesitation, that the curious arrangements which exist at present with a part-time Minister of State for Multiculturalism may of course represent an interim arrangement. The former Secretary of State is now the first Minister of State for Immigration in the Canadian Government and has declared that he has a mandate to consider the question of combining these functions which other press reports have suggested were under consideration for inclusion. This makes it all the more timely and topical for us to consider this afternoon what the purpose and structure of a Ministry of Multiculturalism might be, a Ministry which may well materialize some time between 16 months and 18 months hence, if one may speculate about the speed with which Government acts.

In this context, I would like to note briefly the positions that the political Parties of Canada which determine these events have taken on these questions in the past. The Canadian Ethnocultural Council made the effort during the summer of 1984, before and during the election campaign, of consulting with the three political Parties to determine where they stood on a dozen or so questions which were of great importance to the member organizations of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. From that effort, we learned that the establishment of a permanent Standing Committee on Multiculturalism was in fact approved by all three of the political Parties with their own nuances, and at that time the now governing Party indicated its support in principle and its promise to give it full consideration. That particular statement was clearly fulfilled by the end of June of this year.

As far as the establishment of a Department of Multiculturalism is concerned, however, there was some considerable difference of view among the three Parties. I may say immediately that only Members of the New Democratic Party were in full support of a Department at that point in time. Members of the Liberal Party were not favouring a full Department at that point although they promised to increase support to the Minister in his advocacy role. I look forward this afternoon to hearing whether or not there has been any development in that position. I do hope that there has been. As far as Members of the Conservative Party were concerned, they felt last summer that they did not favour a full Department at that time but promised to increase Ministerial support after consultation with ethnic groups. Since the process of consultation has been underway for some time and given some of the straws in the wind to which I have already alluded, I would like to conclude this afternoon by indicating that the Government of Canada is inclining toward the establishment of a full-fledged Department of Multiculturalism.

If I may, I will paraphrase a few lines from a speech given by the Leader of the New Democratic Party last June to the Council of National Ethnocultural Organizations. Of the Equality Now Report which had been produced by the Special Committee on the Participation of Visible minorities in Canadian society, he noted that the report called for the immediate creation of Ministry of Multiculturalism with its own Deputy Minister and he added that his Party was the first in Canada to call for that. The fact, of course, is reflected in the work done by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council. I may note that my predecessor in the multiculturalism spokesperson role for this Party, the former Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River, was credited by the Leader of the New Democratic Party for the efforts that he had made within the Parliamentary Committee on the Participation of Visible Minorities, the report which led to that particular recommendation.

There was, then, out of a Parliamentary Committee of representatives of all three of the Parties, this particular Recommendation No. 25 which urged the federal Government to immediately introduce in Parliament a multiculturalism Act creating a Ministry of Multiculturalism. Given the importance of that recommendation in placing this matter on the public agenda, I would like to give some attention to what that Parliamentary Committee had to say about this report.

I may perhaps note that the last Government responded in the negative to this report when it issued its response in the spring. After describing various ways in which the multiculturalism directorate would be strengthened, the conclusion was that Multiculturalism Canada within the Department of the Secretary of State would have its visibility increased and be made more accessible to the community both at headquarters and regional levels. That, of course, only underscored the continuation of the directorate within the Department. What has happened, of course, under the present Government, is some further upscaling of the importance of this directorate within the Department by giving it its own Deputy Minister and that augurs well for the development to which I am addressing myself this afternoon.

In the context of institutional evolution, I want to say something about the importance of a Ministry of Multiculturalism in playing a lead role in a number of different areas. I have already referred to the Equality Now Report in which such a Department was called for and that obviously suggests that one important public role of the Ministry would be to play this lead role in ensuring that the participation of visible minorities is enhanced. I would further suggest that the Ministry could continue to play a strengthened lead role in the varied cultural, heritage, language and other concerns that so many of Canada's ethnocultural groups feel and for which they depend on the federal Government as well as provincial Governments across the country to ensure that there are resources to meet these particular cultural needs.

The report of the Special Committee on Visible Minorities is very revealing in emphasizing the importance of having a full-fledged Department. I would suggest parenthetically that at a time when matters of employment equity for a number of groups including visible minorities are so largely on the public agenda, ensuring that a Department is able to play this lead role is of very great importance. Without taking the time to read these paragaphs, I would note particularly that in the paragraph on priority which appears on page 55 of Equality Now, there is a delineation of the difficulties of the directorate. A couple of paragraphs earlier, in a discussion under the heading "Limited" on page 54, it is pointed out the extent to which the existing structure, somewhat enhanced by the present Government, of having a directorate within a Department with limited power and limited authority in the structure of Government impedes the race relations work that is of such importance to the Canadian nation. I would suggest that the same thing could be said of the area of cultural concerns.

I would like to make an impassioned appeal both on the side of the participation of visible minorities and the enhancement and preservation of the multicultural reality of the country that it is of vital importance to have a Ministry that can play a lead role. It is of enormous importance to have such a Ministry with a scope large enough to ensure that all Canadians realize that the very history of our country and the very nature of society is multicultural and that multiculturalism is not a term used to describe only one third of Canadians. In fact, multiculturalism is the recognition of the fact that people of many backgrounds including natives of North America and migrants from other parts of the world than Europe, long before the end of the Second World War, played their own important roles in building this country. There should be recognition by the federal Government and Canadian institutions generally of the importance of that fact in order to ensure that within our teaching of history and cultivation of culture there is genuine recognition of that. If one looks at Book IV of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism, one finds an unwillingness to take that step by actually providing recognition.

There is one particular question that is clearly before the Government if one recognizes that which the present Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. McLean) has indicated. That is the question of whether or not immigration should be an important part of this new Government. I would ask the Government to consider that question with particular care.

Eloquent arguments have already been made by certain persons suggesting that to make immigration a part—and it will inevitably be a large part—of such a department will reinforce the unfortunate impression that multiculturalism has to do with immigrants, with new Canadians and with the concerns of those who are still, in a sense, "other" to the country. Of course, in its way, the citizenship branch activities would only underscore the fact that multiculturalism is involved in facilitating the assimilation process which this society is carrying on. That particular impression would be a profoundly unfortunate one because, as I have already suggested, it is recognized that multiculturalism is the very basis of this country. It is recognized that it is the essence of this country which was built by persons from a great variety of backgrounds. Each made their contribution. The Asian contribution was fundamental to the opening of the West, if one considers the Chinese labour which built the transcontinental railway.

It must be recognized that at one place and another we have had diversity building the country. If for too long the life of the country was dominated by those of British background, then it is clear that in the last 15 years that dominance has been shaken. In the Liberal Governments past, and the present Conservative Government, it is obvious that a British dominance is a thing of the past. What many Canadians are calling for these days is a realization that it is not two founding peoples, even with the addition of some recognition of the native peoples who built the country, but that, in fact, people of many colours and many creeds from many parts of the earth worked together in building the country and they play their part in it. The Ministry of Multiculturalism should be one which pulls that fact up bravely and boldly before the Canadian public, which insists that the Department of Multiculturalism must be one which cultivates the diversity and preserves and enhances the multiculturalism, which is the very nature of this country and which makes it genuinely a part of the consciousness of every Canadian.

It is with these comments, Mr. Speaker, that I conclude. I think the establishment of a Department of Multiculturalism is of enormous importance to the cultural, political, social and economic evolution of the country. There are great concerns with respect to employment and other matters which need to be addressed. We need a Department which can play a leading role in pressing these matters on in ensuring that the federal Government itself remains sensitive and becomes still more sensitive. The Department must ensure that the provincial Governments act and that in jurisdictions, both federal and provincial, this country reflect in all of its life the multiculturalism that is the very essence of its history and its stature.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In a bit of confusion, and because of the new timing provisions of the House which we are following for the first time today, I had tried to catch the eye of the Chair when you called Bill C-49.

I wish to say that I had intended to speak on Bill C-49, which is an Act respecting prostitution, since the Mount Pleasant area of my constituency is directly affected, but did not speak in order that there be no delay in passing the Bill, as I promised my constituents this summer. Therefore, I did not speak and the Bill received second reading without a recorded vote in just one day of debate. I would like to bring this matter up as a point of order. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I do not think it necessary to rule on the point of order.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp). Before proceeding with my remarks, I would like to recognize the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek). I congratulate him on his new portfolio and I wish him well in the coming weeks, months and, perhaps, years.

I believe that in the last decade and a half multiculturalism has travelling a long and fairly successful journey. It was initiated in 1971 by the then Government of the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau. I think a national multiculturalism policy has become a permanent fixture within the Canadian political, social and cultural landscape and that one can point to a number of successful developments which have come about since 1971. However, we on this side of the House cannot and should not point to the list of achievements which have been developed over the last decade and a half with respect to the policy of multiculturalism as an answer to the new and evolving challenges, problems and questions which we will not doubt be facing in the coming years.

It is from this perspective that we on this side of the House are in full concert with the motion as put forward by my hon. friend from Thunder Bay-Nipigon. The Government should consider the motion as a way of enhancing and strenghtening the role that multiculturalism should play in the federal Government and throughout the country from coast to coast.

The initial part of the amendment, as my friend has mentioned, concerns itself with the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. I, too, am pleased that on the last day which the House sat before the summer recess that we unanimously passed a measure to establish the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. I say that I am pleased because we on this side of the House in parliamentary debates, through Standing Orders and in discussions with the former Minister, have been urging that a separate committee should be put in place by this fall. I am fully confident that this new committee will go a long way toward strengthening the role which multiculturalism should be playing in the country through Parliament Hill channels. I say that because all issues affecting multiculturalism used to flow through the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. The problem with that was that a number of Ministers reported to it, namely, the Secretary of State, the Minister of Communications, as well as the Minister of State for Youth. What I found disconcerting was that multiculturalism was somehow placed on the last rung of the ladder by this committee. In fact, during the course of the last year there has been only one occasion when the Minister of State for Multiculturalism appeared before the committee.

A separate standing committee will certainly aid and enhance the regular dialogue, if you will, which will be taking place between the Minister, his officials and parliamentarians. It will also provide an opportunity to specifically focus on and specialize in a number of areas affecting multiculturalism. One exemple which comes to mind in this regard is the jam which we are presently in with respect to the Japanese Canadian redress issue. I think a separate committee will certainly go a long way in playing an active role in trying to establish a consensus and solution to this most urgent problem.

I think that politically it is a shot in the arm for multiculturalism in terms of the establishment of a separate standing committee. From a perception point of view, I think the committee places multiculturalism in the proper perspective. I think the committee will provide a vehicle for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism in carrying out his role within the House of Commons and within Cabinet.

Finally, with respect to the new committee, I think it is for the public at large since it will provide a permanent platform and resource for people from the ethnocultural communities and organizations, and Canadians in general, to come before the committee and communicate with their Minister and their parliamentarians the aspirations which they feel and the problems they see on a regular basis. I think that the new committee will be a welcome and powerful addition to the committee structure as we see it.

A separate, full-fledged Department would have similar and positive repercussions in the apparatus. First, I think we could be looking at improving the administrative infrastructure of multiculturalism. We are not necessarily talking in terms of spending a great deal of money with respect to implementing a new Department because, as it stands now, there are a number of programs and services closely associated with multiculturalism which exist in other Departments. When we speak of a full-fledged Department, we are trying to gather a number of roles and services which are presently being provided by other Departments under one roof.

On this specific point, I agree with my hon. friend that if we are to take the role of immigration and put it with multiculturalism, then it would be a serious mistake. I say this not only because multiculturalism will again be second on the two-pronged ladder, but because it will fuel the perception that multiculturalism is only for new Canadians or immigrants. If that perception were allowed to travel from coast to coast then it would set multiculturalism back another decade. I believe that on a political level a separate Department speaks for itself. A separate Department and a separate deputy minister would certainly enhance the clout, the feasibility and viability of multiculturalism within the federal Government. I believe there is a danger in the motion before us if it is taken as a limited motion, in other words, if it is perceived by the Government that this is the only way to go to strengthen multiculturalism. I believe the present motion should not be seen as a substitute for political commitment. We should be looking at the political will of this present Government vis-à-vis multiculturalism. I believe that is the real thrust of the matter. That is the real heart of the issue and of the debate. If we are to look at the political will, that is different from looking at the structures or new structures which one may be implementing. I would respectfully submit that we can have all the structures, all of the changes and all of the reforms we like but if we have within those structures a lack of political will and encouragement, then those structures will not service.

When I speak of political will, I mean exactly that. Looking back over the last year with respect to multiculturalism, I for one cannot say that I am terribly heartened by the way in which this Government has dealt with multiculturalism. We could point to a number of issues, for instance, the reduction in the multiculturalism budget, as an example of political priority. At a time when expenditures were at least staying the same, multiculturalism suffered an 8.5 per cent reduction in financial support and resources. That to me does not put it on a level of priority as far as this Government is concerned notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) back in June of 1984 at the Conservative Party Conference said, "We have seen millions of dollars spent on advertising and promoting our linguistic duality and a mere pittance directed to promoting our cultural diversity". Canadians from that comment, and others, assumed that multiculturalism occupied a greater priority in this Government. I believe it has not from a purely financial point of view.

We can look at the 46 specific multiculturalism promises which were made during the election campaign and then at the follow through and we must come to the conclusion that there are still 46 promises to be kept. We can look at the appointments of nearly 1,500 Canadians to various commissions, boards and committees. If we are to simply look at those appointments from the perspective of a balanced view of Canadians and their various cultures, we have to come to the conclusion that while there are a few appointees from Canada's so-called ethnocultural communities, certainly we are not pleased with the handful of appointments on a global sense considering the 1,500 appointments which were made.

We also cannot take solace in the refusal by the former Minister of Multiculturalism to get involved in a very direct and practical way in the racism which is currently going on in the taxi industry, not only in Montreal but in Toronto and Hamilton. We must look also at the absence of movement on the recommendations in Equality Now and the Abella Commission report. The Equality Now report, it was agreed by all three political Parties, was received with great enthusiasm out in the communities which are still wondering what happened to the many recommendations which have not been implemented.

We also have a lack of concrete results from the First Ministers' Conference on Multiculturalism. Every question I asked in this House of the then Minister of Multiculturalism was answered by saying that this conference was to be the answer to many of the problems. Yet we saw a two-page memorandum which said absolutely nothing. It gave us platitudes but in terms of concrete results, co-operation and eliminating duplication, there were no results. It was a closed door policy as well. It was a conference which was completely void of any input from the communities which that conference was supposed to be addressing. If there was any genuine interest in having a relevant agenda, then there should have been some dialogue with the communities at hand and that was not the case.

We can also look at the recent shuffle. This is not to be meant as a slight against the new Minister, by any means, because he did not make the decision. I feel we are going backwards, to the year 1979 when the former Government of Joe Clark appointed a Minister to be responsible for multiculturalism as well as an additional ministry. If we are talking about political will and a genuine desire to place multiculturalism on a solid footing, I would submit to you, with all due respect, that that is not the road to go. A caucus of 212 members have a lot of able men and women to perhaps dedicate themselves on a full-time basis to a multicultural program without taking the time and energies away from another portfolio. When I talk of political will, I talk of these and other movements we have seen in the last year.

Of course, we cannot overlook the handling of the Japanese-Canadian redress issue. Once again there were tremendous expectations on behalf of the Japanese-Canadian community based on the promises and utterings of the Prime Minister during the last election campaign. He promised that a solution would be forthcoming. Yet we see we are still in a log jam. The community has not been given a genuine opportunity to make proper representations at the proper time. It is fine indeed to talk about reforms and modifications but we also need the political will to make those recommendations viable.

We do not have to stop at the recommendations in this motion which have been already undertaken in the sense of a new committee and in terms of the separate Department. We can also talk about other structures. We can perhaps have a Parliamentary Secretary to the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism. For the last year that Minister was one of the new Ministers without a Parliamentary Secretary. I do not know if things have changed with the new Minister but certainly it would be a welcome addition. Whenever the former Minister was absent in order to fulfil his legitimate responsibilities across the country, we in the Opposition were not able to get an answer from a person who spoke with any sense of authority or in any specific detail. I think perhaps we can start there as a way of reforming these structures as well.

We can look at the Canadian Multicultural Council and make reforms there as well because initially there were a number of ethnocultural communities which complained they were not represented. Specifically the German Canadian and Spanish Canadian communities did not have a representative on that council and that was a problem. There was also the problem that a number of people who were appointed to that 60-person committee did not have their roots in these communitees so there were complaints from these various communities that in fact the representative who was supposed to be speaking for them were unknown. Therefore, I ask myself what use there was in having an advisory committee to the Minister when members of that Committee do not have their grass roots in the communities they are supposed to represent. Why should the Advisory Council only recommend and speak to the Minister directly? Why can it not come to this new committee on multiculturalism and exchange information with Parliamentarians and representatives of communities alike? Why should it only speak to the Minister rather than report back to Parliament directly?

We can talk about a Cabinet committee on multiculturalism. We all know that the major decisions of the day are made by Cabinet and specifically by the Planning and Priorities Committee. We all know that both the former and present Minister of State for Multiculturalism do not belong to that committee. That is not a slight against them, but if we are serious about this we can have a special or separate Cabinet committee to deal with multiculturalism so that aims and objectives of this policy can be put in front of the major decision-makers in Government on a day-to-day basis. We can go a long way toward improving the appointment procedure as I indicated earlier. We can look at the international scene and say why can the Canadian Government not make more use of the natural resource which many Canadians possess, namely a key to the language and culture of the various countries we do business with? Why not employ some of these Canadians in our trade missions abroad, our consulates and our embassies? These, too, are reforms or perhaps modifications to structures which can aid, enhance and strengthen an active and vibrant and bold multiculturalism policy, in addition to the changes announced by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon.

My point is this. We can have changes in structures, yes. These will be improvements, yes. But if we do not have the political will to make the required changes, then those structures are rendered useless. I look forward to hearing from the Government side on how they would approach this issue.

In the time remaining to me I would like to talk about something which I think is very important to this debate. That is to say, I think it is this Government's responsibility to recognize that perhaps there are aspirations for a second phase, if you will, of multiculturalism. It can be said that the first decade and a half has focused largely on the cultural retention aspect as the foundation for our multiculturalism policy. I think that is fair; it had to go that way for the first decade or so, but I think Canadians, particularly younger Canadians, are saying that multiculturalism must also address the social, political and economic forces and realities at play in this country. They are saying that the colour of your skin or the pronunciation of your name does not matter when it comes to being a full-fledged Canadian. Multiculturalism certainly can advance these aspirations, but it should also tear down what John Porter described 20 years ago as the Canadian reality, namely the vertical mosaic.

I hope that with these words the Government can perhaps reflect on not only this motion but some of the other issues I have raised. I look forward very much this afternoon and in the new Standing Committee on Multiculturalism to pursuing this motion and other ideas which have been put forward.

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the remarks of my friends from Thunder Bay-Nipigon and York West. I noted that my friend from York West referred to the long road multiculturalism has travelled over the last 14 years. I also noted that he failed to elaborate on the specifics of that long road. He failed to advise us as to why in 14 years the previous Government had not set up a standing committee, a separate department, or why it had failed to bring Canadians from these very essential cultural groups into the mainstream of Canadian life. He also referred to the track record of this Government in the 12 months it has been in office. Therefore I think it is appropriate for me to refer to that record and in fact set it straight.

This Government has initiated a number of key accomplishments in the field of multiculturalism. One of the highlights of the Government's work in bringing us all on stream with the provinces was the convening last May 14 in Winnipeg of the first ever federal-provincial-territorial conference on multiculturalism. This was the first time we had all sat down together to discuss common goals. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the conference was an unqualified success. It marked an important step forward in sharing ideas and working together to strengthen the rich fabric of Canadian society.

What came out of the meeting was a willingness to work together and mesh federal and provincial programs. You have to remember that this country runs because we all talk together. As I said at the outset, this was the very first time both levels of Government had talked together on multiculturalism and the meeting was long overdue.

Another achievement of this Government was the setting up of the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. That was one of 80 recommendations made by Equality Now!, the report of a special all-Party House of Commons committee on "The Participation of Visible Minorities in Canadian Society." The creation of this committee shows how important the Government viewed the changing patterns of Canadian society which have evolved greatly over the past 30 years.

Canada's ethnocultural population now stands at 7.8 million people, or 31 per cent of the Canadian population. Ethnic minorities are now the majority in several urban centres. As an example, close to half the populations of Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Edmonton are now members of ethnocultural groups. This gives you an idea of why the Government deemed it imperative that those groups be given a voice and help make them more a part of the democratic process.

Previously, questions dealing with multiculturalism had been dealt with by the Standing Committee on Broadcasting and Culture, so its members did not exactly have a handle on the subject matter at hand. It was one of many issues they had to contend with and therefore was not a satisfactory arrangement. Now that multiculturalism has its very own standing committee, the whole gamut of multiculturalism issues can be examined in depth. The committee's mandate will be to encourage and monitor the implementation of the principles of the federal Government's multiculturalism policy throughout the Government of Canada. This general mandate is subdivided into three specific target areas. The first is to ensure that the Departments and agencies of the federal Government reflect the multicultural-multiracial diversity of the nation. The second is to examine existing and new programs of federal Departments and agencies to encourage sensitivity to multicultural concerns and the multicultural-multiracial reality of our nation. The third is to select and initiate projects for investigation within the jurisdiction of the standing committee and prepare background papers, reports and research in this regard.

Another major step this Government saw fit to implement was to give a higher profile to the Multiculturalism Directorate by moving it from a directorate to that of a sector. One of the moves which came with this upgrading was the appointment earlier this year of an Assistant Undersecretary of State at the Department of the Secretary of State to head the new sector.

Another accomplishment, Mr. Speaker, was the establishment last July of an interdepartmental working group to examine a framework and mandate for a national advisory committee on ethnic broadcasting. The establishment of such a national committee was one of the recommendations of a policy paper on ethnic broadcasting issued this summer by the CRTC. This new working group is an excellent beginning toward encouraging the Canadian broadcasting system to better reflect the cultural and racial diversity of Canada.

Only a few days ago Canada's Association of Police Chiefs representing 250 chiefs of police from across the nation held their eightieth annual meeting in Saint John, New Brunswick. It was an important meeting in that the theme was "Police in a Multicultural Society". As I mentioned a few minutes ago Canada's ethnocultural population is now at 7.8 million people with 90 per cent of the country's estimated 1.2 million visible minorities concentrated in Canada's major urban centres. This puts a whole new perspective to policing work as police officers have to learn how to deal with Canadians of many races and with many new arrivals who have lived under authoritarian governments where the police are deeply feared and mistrusted. The multiculturalism factor is funding various projects across Canada where representatives from ethnocultural communities are working with their respective police forces, such as in Ottawa and Vancouver, to learn from each other and understand each other better. The Saint John meeting also saw the start of the newly established Police Multicultural Liaison Committee comprised of police chiefs from the nation's seven largest cities. The multiculturalism sector is also co-operating with the Canadian Federation of Municipalities to mount race relations programs in centres across Canada. The multiculturalism sector is assisting immigrant women to gain access to women's organizations and to sensitize these networks to their needs. Effective systems are also being established, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that qualified members of ethnocultural communities gain access to federal appointments to boards and commissions.

This is a necessarily superficial rundown of the accomplishments so far in the multiculturalism sector. In a few days time the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Jelinek) will be meeting with Ministers responsible for Human Rights from the Provinces and Territories. At this meeting the Minister will be discussing ways to promote and co-ordinate action to combat racism and discrimination. Our objective is to bring one-third of Canada's population into the mainstream of Canadian life. In the process we must not in any way endanger the right of any group to maintain and expand its cultural traditions. Needless to say, this is a difficult and complex task. Creating a standing committee on multiculturalism was a positive first step. Establishing as full-fledged Ministry could be a positive second step. In the end we must make it pefectly clear by our actions that multiculturalism is synonymous with being Canadian. I am confident that this Government will accomplish exactly that.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to speak to the important motion tabled by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp):

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of establishing a Department of Multiculturalism and a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

The creation, on June 28 of this year, of a Standing Committee of the House on Multiculturalism, clearly proves how important the issue of multiculturalism is to this Government. It was a decision that reflects the same concerns as the Hon. Member's motion and constitutes a major milestone in the development of government policy.

The policy on multiculturalism and its programs are the result of post-war developments. Canada has always been a nation of immigrants, but the massive wave of immigrants and refugees after World War II brought new life to the ethno-cultural communities already existing throughout North America. This new wave made it possible for many groups to renew their ties with the culture of their native land. Among the new arrivals, children of immigrants and their grandparents often spoke only their mother tongue, not having had an opportunity to learn English or French. Across Canada, especially in urban areas, it was possible to live in one's own culture.

Through the rising demand for social services, immigrants made their needs known directly to the various levels of government. At this time, around 1953, the first federal-provincial agreement on civic and language training came into being. It was then that established groups started to express to governments and other Canadians the needs of their community.

At the same time, French Canadians and native peoples started organizing and expressing their views more actively and effectively on Canada and their place in this country.

Before our centennial year and throughout the sixties, Canadians were asked to examine their views of the country and of themselves as Canadians. The Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism acted as a catalyst, making it possible to clarify many of these issues. It was an incentive to ethno-cultural groups of other than English or French origin to make Canadians aware of their contribution to this country, especially in the West.

Mr. Speaker, according to the 1981 Census eight million Canadians consider themselves to be of other than British or French origin, which means 31 per cent of the population. About six million live in our large cities. For instance, 27 per cent of the population of Montreal belongs to this group, with comparable figures for Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton and Vancouver showing percentages varying between 40 and 50 per cent.

The economic impact of this population is considerable. It is estimated that a large proportion of all small businesses in Canada are owned by persons of other than British or French ethnic origin. In Toronto, the ethnic market is estimated at about $6 billion annually.

Each province has a population that is characteristic in terms of its ethnic origins. In this respect, we would like to stress the contribution of Quebec's cultural communities.

Although the proportion of Quebecers who consider themselves to be of other than French or British ethnic origin is small—11 per cent compared with 37 per cent in Ontario and nearly 50 per cent in Western Canada—their contribution to Quebec society is tremendous.

Montreal is a city with a flourishing mixture of various groups, cultures and races. For instance, there are 166,000 people of Italian origin, 93,000 of Jewish origin, 50,000 of Greek origin, 51,000 of black origin and 18,000 of Chinese origin.

Many Francophone immigrants arrived in the last 20 years encountering a North American culture often different from that of their country of origin.

Others have made a considerable effort to learn French as a language of work and communication, in addition to adapting to life in North America.

The Government of Quebec has recognized the fact of this cultural diversity in the province. It constitutes a major element of the Quebec Charter of Rights and Freedoms. More recently, legislation on a Quebec Council on Cultural Communities and Immigration has demonstrated a desire to reflect this reality.

Considering the recognition of multiculturalism in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and the importance attached by this Government to multiculturalism in Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): With respect, I must interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and inform the House that the hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES—(A) MINISTER'S MIDDLE EAST VISIT. (B) INQUIRY WHETHER TRAVEL EXPENSES WILL BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity this afternoon to take part in the adjournment debate on a subject I raised in the House on May 3, 1985.

[English]

I am sure you will vividly recall that on May 3, 1985, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) to account to the House why his colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) spent $57,000 of taxpayer's money to fly himself, his wife and five aides to Algeria, Greece and the Middle East on a government jet to cut a ribbon. I am sure you will agree that this was a terrible waste of taxpayers' money and only Tories would think of such a way to squander the hard earned dollars of the taxpayers of this country. I believe it could be said that the Minister of Communications in so doing has made the whole Cabinet look like a Mickey Mouse outfit. I believe that kind of waste of funds must end.

We see that the Budget of the Prime Minister's Office for staffing and so on increased by 57 per cent over one year and that the salary increases for two Tory losers—and I know this is enough to make most Tory winners cringe and wish they had lost—Lawrence Hannigan and Roy McMurtry whose appointment we will be reviewing shortly under the new process announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were $38,000 a year. That would have been enough to restore the indexed Old Age Security to all the seniors of my riding. Apparently the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has found other ways of finding the money to do that. In order to replenish the coffers of money that was squandered, I am sure the Hon. Member for Durvenay (Mr. Della Noce) is aware that the gasoline prices have had to be increased. If that is not enough, let me talk about other instances of government waste.

As I came into the building today I was looking at that used car lot beside the west door, namely the fleet of limousines of the Cabinet Ministers. There are 39 or 40 of those limousines, all idling out there, with the chauffeurs chatting while waiting for their bosses to do whatever it is that Ministers do. The Government bought $173,000 worth of limousines in the first six months it was in office. I know the Hon. Member for Durvenay is hiding his face in shame for being a member of a Party that partakes in that kind of act. No doubt he will cross the floor very shortly after seeing the light when he notes that kind of action perpetrated upon the people of the riding of Durvenay.

Even today in the House of Commons we learned that Cabinet Ministers are not only using government jets that way, they are now chartering private jets. Today in a written response to a question I placed on the Order Paper we learned that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) one day chartered a jet to go from Ottawa to Toronto. There are about 35 flights a day from Ottawa to Toronto. At some periods of the day there is one every 15 minutes. It seems none of them could accommodate the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He must have wanted to go to Toronto at 3:30 a.m. because that is about the only time of the day when there are no commercial flights from Ottawa to Toronto. That trip cost the taxpayers thousands of dollars.

There must be not only the reforms we talked about before, Mr. Speaker, but there has to be some respect for the taxpayers.

During the election campaign, what did we hear from the Conservative Party? I am sure you will recall hearing the Conservatives in the last election campaign talk about the Liberals who were squandering the taxpayers' dollars. In their view it was shameful that the Government would be using funds in a way that they considered was inappropriate.

When I hear of things like $130,000 to wallpaper the offices of six Cabinet Ministers and $22,000 for the office of the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and other squandering of funds, responses given by this Government are unsatisfactory. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary across the way will provide a better explanation today. If not, I am sure he would not be here because he is a good, honest and sincere Member. He would want to provide this House with correct facts.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I respond to the concerns raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). He originally addressed this matter in the House of Commons on May 3, as reported at page 4380 of Hansard.

On January 24, 1985, Mr. Brian O'Regan, Vice-President of public affairs at Northern Telecom, requested that Canada undertake an official mission to support Northern Telecom's efforts in securing a $487 million contract with the Algerian Government, representing 7,000 person years of employment for Canadians over a five-year period. This request was supported by officials in both the Department of Communications and External Affairs and was then recommended to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse).

The main thrust of this official mission was to support the bid of Northern Telecom. In view of the considerable Canadian business interests in various industries currently under way in northern Africa and the Middle East, it was deemed opportune and useful for the Minister to take advantage of the request from Northern Telecom to show the Government of Canada's support for these additional business endeavors.

These companies included Radio Canada International; Bell Canada International, as well as other Canadian companies with $400 million in projects completed to date in addition to $1 billion in potential contracts.

With the preliminary planning for a visit to Algeria under way, External Affairs requested through the international relations branch in the Department of Communications that the Minister officiate at the opening of the new Canadian embassy complex in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. In addition to this request, Department of Communications officials informed the Minister that a Montreal-based company was pursuing a major spectrum management contract with the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. As the responsibility for this contract was in the control of Dr. Kayal, Minister of Post, Telephone and Telecommunications for the kingdom, a meeting was requested between the two Ministers to discuss the contract as well as to renew co-operation between Canada and Saudi Arabia.

As is normal practice, commercial flights for this trip were investigated but, given the commitment of the Minister for April 9 to address the conference of the Canadian Cable and Television Association in Toronto, the requirement for his attendance at the meeting of the Priorities and Planning Committee on April 16, 1985, as well as the religious holidays one must observe when in Moslem countries, the commercial option was impossible.

To demonstrate the logistical problems experienced in travelling to Algeria, it should be noted that the two ministerial assistants, who accompanied the Minister during his visit in the Middle East, travelled to Paris commercially where they experienced a 36-hour delay before available seating on a connecting flight to Algiers could be confirmed.

The Hon. Member also made a number of substantially incorrect statements in a radio interview in April. First, the Minister's trip did not take him to Israel as alleged by the Hon. Member. The stop-over in Greece was a mandatory refuelling stop and maintenance operation in accordance with Department of Transport regulations. It was not a stop requested by the Minister or any of the passengers.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this information answers some of the concerns of the Hon. Member. I will be happy to answer any further questions he wishes to place to me at a later date.

ENERGY—ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF CAPE BRETON HEAVY WATER PLANTS. (B) GOVERNMENT'S POSITION. (C) MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time concerning a question I directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on May 24, 1985 regarding the announced closure of the Cape Breton heavy water plants in Glace Bay and in Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia.

At that time I indicated to the House, and in particular to the Minister of Finance, that certain assurances were given to the workers of those two plants prior to the particular announcement which was made in the Budget. Again I want to quote, for Your Honour's edification, as I am sure you are concerned about the workers and their families in my riding and in the Port Hawkesbury area, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) who indicated on a couple of occasions that there would be no closure of those plants until alternate employment took place. In fact she indicated that her plans to close the two heavy water plants would not proceed before alternate employment could be found for displaced workers.

Since the closure of the two heavy water plants there have been no new jobs for those workers, absolutely none. There has been an agreement by the union representing the employees and by management representatives in regard to a severance package. That particular severance package goes beyond the collective agreement. It is certainly not a rich package, by any means; it is not rich at all. It fails to address a number of important measures. However, in view of the position of the union, which has attempted to represent those workers to the best of its ability, that was all that management and the Government was prepared to do for those employees. The bigger issue is alternate employment.

The Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) gave the impression to many media members that something great and specific would be done forthwith. All that has been done by the Conservative Government in Ottawa and by the Conservative Government in Nova Scotia has been merely in the area of media news releases. Nothing concrete or specific has been done for that area of Canada by the Tory provincial Government or the Tory federal Government. There are things which they could have done and still could to in terms of relocating and allocating moneys, perhaps for automotive companies, whether it be Hyundai or other foreign manufacturers. There is no concern for the workers in that region of the country. It is the same old story—the theory of trickle down economics practised by the Conservative Government in Ottawa. The thrust of the thesis is very clear, that hopefully at some point in time when the wealthier regions of the country create even more wealth and more jobs, somehow, by some miracle, it will seep down into the less fortunate areas.

My Party and I believe that there is a major national role to be played by the national Government. I suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that those workers should not be given a plane ticket or free fare on VIA Rail to leave those regions. These workers are highly qualified individuals with families, mortgages and commitments to those communities. By its very actions as a Government, it is suggesting that those well-trained individuals should leave. The Government is exporting competent individuals out of our region of the country. In the long run that does not make good economic sense for those individuals in Atlantic Canada. Nor does it make good economic sense for Canada as a nation as we know it.

It can be argued effectively that the Conservative Government of the Prime Minister is breaching the Canadian Constitution which talks about, in real terms, equal opportunity for all Canadians. Why can the Government not provide the needed jobs for those displaced workers at the heavy water plants? What is so different about that area of Canada? If the Government can afford to provide $1.3 billion to the multinational oil companies and if it can provide billions of dollars to the Canadian Commercial Bank, why can it not deliver on a promise made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on two specific occasions to the people of Nova Scotia?

The Premier of Nova Scotia ought to resign from office. He has said absolutely nothing with regard to the welfare of those workers. The Premier of the province has acquiesced to this conduct by the Conservative Government. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to rise today to make an unequivocal commitment that there will be jobs in place by the end of the year to compensate for the substantial loss of employment in Glace Bay and the surrounding communities, as well as the Town of Port Hawkesbury which has also been delivered a serious economic blow. That is the role the national Government ought to play with regard to economic development in the less prosperous areas of the country.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), the federal Government has clearly stated its position on the closures of these plants on many occasions before various audiences. Indeed, the record shows that we debated this issue with the Hon. Member in the House as recently as June 18. Since then, our position has not changed.

The Hon. Member has been the sitting Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond for a number of years. He has been well aware of the problems related to AECL's heavy water plants on Cape Breton and how governments have long searched for an appropriate solution to these problems. Federal Governments have provided much support to this industry which has been historically plagued with problems linked to international marketing. The Government took decisive action in announcing the closure of these plants. It faced the hard fact that there existed a very major over-capacity in Canada's heavy water industry and that there were no immediate solutions to the marketing difficulties.

Under these circumstances, the Government could not longer justify continuing operations at the plants. It could not, in good conscience, keep these plants open at a cost to taxpayers of $100 million per year when there was not market for the heavy water being produced. We firmly believe that such action would have been irresponsible and it would have been unfair both to the Canadian taxpayer and to heavywater plant workers. Workers have known that these closures were inevitable and that the indefinite perpetuation of operations would only have delayed the time when thee plants could be replaced with viable long-term industrial activity on Cape Breton.

When the federal Government announced these closures in the May 1985 federal Budget, it was made quite clear that it had not abandoned the people of Cape Breton. As outlined in the Budget, workers have been provided with generous severance benefits, retraining and relocation assistance and financial and career counselling together with measures designed to facilitate re-employment. In addition, the impact on the affected communities' property tax revenues will be offset for a specific period. The Budget also introduced a special tax credit instituted to enhance private-sector investment and productive employment on Cape Breton. This will result in no federal income tax being payable by investors for 10 to 15 years.

Announcements made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) have significantly offset unemployment triggered by the plant closures. The Minister has stated that $1.5 million in federal funding has been designated to rebuild a burned-out fish plant; $4.1 million has been committed for improvements to the Point Tupper pulp and paper mill and $16 million has been earmarked for a new coal mine tunnel.

In addition, the Minister responsible for DRIE appointed an advisory committee on economic development measures for Cape Breton Island which is scheduled to submit its first report this fall. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) has repeatedly indicated that she is ready to assist in bringing economic renewal to Cape Breton through reliable, sound employment creation.

I would like to conclude by saying that this Government has recognized that a very difficult problem existed and we have taken action to ameliorate it. The Hon. Member is aware that AECL had first recommended the closure of its heavy water plants in 1982. However, the federal Government of the day believed it impolitic to act on such a recommendation. We gave considerable study to the problem and acceptable options before arriving at our decision. We believe that we have made the only sound decision available and have put into place responsible measures which will direct Cape Breton toward ecnomic renewal.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—STORAGE OF LETHAL GASES. (B) TRANSPORTATION OF LETHAL GASES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Gurbin), whom I welcome back after the summer recess, some questions related to the protection of citizens who live in communities nearby plants or storage sites of lethal gases which are commonly used in the manufacture of pesticides, herbicides or other products. I would also like to ask him a question about the inspection of transportation arrangements for these lethal gases which, as we know, have horrendous consequences on human health.

By way of background, I remind the House that on December 6, 1984, I asked a question of the previous Minister from whom I received a rather inconclusive answer. This makes it necessary for me to pursue the matter further. My question is also intensified by the fact that last August, just south of the border, a spill in West Virginia at a Union Carbide plant occurred. This company was the cause of a very tragic event which occurred in Bhopal, India, in November of last year, where approximately 2,500 people were killed. In the case of Institute, West Virginia, where a Union Carbide plant had a leak of lethal gas, some 135 people were sent to hospital.

What struck me from the newspaper reports of a few days ago is the fact that the Chairman of Union Carbide was quoted as saying that the recent gas leak was "more damaging in a way" than the one that killed more than 2,000 people in Bhopal because it was preventable. When one reads a statement like that, one becomes rather nervous and uneasy.

Since last December, when the question was asked, and since the coming into force of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act on July 1, have there been any discussions or meetings with provincial and municipal authorities with respect to inspection services, both at the manufacturing plant and the storage sites of dangerous substances. As well, with regard to inspection procedures in the transportation of these goods when they are not a federal responsibility, have there been any discussions? If such discussions or meetings have taken place, I would like to know by whom they were initiated and what is the present state of achieving protection of communities which could be in potential danger in the case of emergency. Can the Parliamentary Secretary indicate whether or not the inspection staffs in charge of these matters are adequate, both at the plant level, as well as at the transportation level of these goods? I also asked the Parliamentary Secretary how many provinces have on their own brought in or are in the process of bringing in complementary provincial legislation for the protection of Canadians with respect to lethal gases?

There is something very peculiar about this issue, Mr. Speaker, because there are contradictions one can find. I quote from an article in the New York Times in January of this year. A company spokesman for the Union Carbide Corporation is quoted as saying:

immediate attention had been given to an internal safety report warning of a possible "runaway reaction" in a tank storing a toxic chemical in West Virginia.

That is the one to which I referred earlier. He continued:

a simple change in operating procedures completely eliminated the concern—

Seven months later, in August, a spill takes place at that same plant despite these declarations on the part of a safety official of that company.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am brought to my feet on this matter after reading a report from the Canadian Press here in Ottawa in June wherein a spokesman for the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police is quoted as saying:

We cannot take on additional duties without dropping something else—

He indicated that the enforcement of the majority of these regulations is best left in the hands of highly qualified and thoroughly trained personnel and that the 258 Ontario inspectors employed across the province are in the same position as the police, they will not be getting any additional personnel. So there seems to be a shortage of people qualified to carry out this very important mandate.

I would like to conclude by saying that we are not talking of a situation which affects communities in Ontario and Quebec alone but in the West as well where we have learned there is a $3.4 billion plan to export Alberta gas—surplus of natural gas—to Japan and that the communities nearby the liquefied natural gas projects will have to be protected. In essence, it boils down to the fact that it is better to anticipate and prevent than to react and cure. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary looks at this matter in the same light and I am most anxious to hear his comments.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to welcome my colleague back from the summer recess. He look like he is in fine form and I can see from his comments that he is carrying on with vigour his usual approach to these important environmental matters. I congratulate him on that.

I believe all Canadians were struck by the tragedy which occurred in Bhopal. It caused the Canadian Government in December of last year to take specific actions which in fact address precisely the points raised by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). At that time, and in the absence of having the information and the kind of perspective we needed, Canada's Minister of the Environment instituted a government-industry task force consisting of a steering committee and three working groups. The working groups were to examine, first, the potential in Canada for Bhopal like incidents and, second, to review the measures taken by industry and Government to date in order to prevent accidents, and third, to evaluate the ability of industry and governments to respond to accidents. Therefore, in fact, we have this task force which was initiated in December of last year, in the absence of the kind of information we needed to precisely answer the questions raised by the Hon. Member.

In July of this year that task force distributed a discussion paper amongst the provincial agencies and industry associations, such as the Canadian Chemical Producers Association, the Petroleum Association for Conservation of the Canadian Environment, the Canadian Labour Congress, and over 25 environmental organizations, including the Friends of the Earth, Pollution Probe, and the Canadian Environmental Law Association, in order to solicit their input on the paper. The final report of the steering committee will be available later in the fall. Follow-up discussions will then take place with agencies responsible for the various jurisdictional aspects of the issue.

I would also like to remind the Hon. Member of an activity which took place in the Department of the Environment over at least the last year. There has been issued what to me is a very important manual for the management of hazardous spills and wastes. I can inform him that there are two very specific papers subsequent to that, one for sulphuric acid and one for oleum, which describe in much greater detail all actions surrounding those two chemicals insofar as possible.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, all Canadians can look forward to the final report in the fall and the expansion of the work already done in Environment Canada on this subject. This will not completely replace the experience in other countries, and certainly we can do nothing directly about what has happened there, but it should put us in a position where we can look at the broad range of things involved in handling these materials competently and in a preventable, if you like, protective fashion.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF NOTICE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order. I notice that we do not have yesterday's Hansard, which is unfortunate because I wanted to refer to something that happened yesterday—

[English]

Something happened in the last hour of House business. The Government House Leader on a point of order asked that the House allow him to table a certain document, namely, a notice of Ways and Means motion.

Since yesterday was the first day under our new rules, some of us were uncertain about them, although I did voice some reservations about the Government House Leader's procedure followed at the time. I cannot see how a private Member would be allowed, for example, to adjourn the House on a bootleg by asking the House to be recognized on a point of order.

If the Minister had the floor, I agree he could table documents, but he did not have the floor. He interrupted the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell who was speaking and when he had the chance during his point of order, the Minister tabled the document.

I know the rules say that a Minister can table such a document at any time but I take it that we underline "at any time when he has the floor". If I cannot move the adjournment of the House at any time in the deliberations, how can a Minister do what he did yesterday?

I just want to refer the whole question to you, Mr. Speaker, so there are no precedents set as a result of what happened yesterday. I would like to point out that motions to adjourn the House were covered under Standing Order 26 under the old rules. Beauchesne's Fifth Edition in Citation 283 reads:

> A Member may not use a point of order to secure the floor in order to move the adjournment of the House.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that a Minister also may not secure the floor on a point of order in order to table documents. To me, that would be contrary to the spirit of our rules. Second, it may be impolite in terms of parliamentary procedure.

I would ask you take this question under advisement and give us a ruling if no such ruling has been made previously.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point raised by the Hon. Member. All I can say is that this particular tabling of documents is as much in the interests of Hon. Members sitting in the Official Opposition as it is with respect to the Government. What we are doing is simply tabling for future consideration a Ways and Means motion. I explained to the Hon. Member during the course of yesterday's deliberations, that it was near the end of the day and normally I would have discussed the matter in advance, as I have in almost every other instance, but having found myself in this position I took a quick look at the rules. It seemed to me to be quite clear that the Standing Orders do not restrict in any way the method by which these particular documents can be tabled in the House.

Second, that impression I had was confirmed by the Acting Speaker in a ruling made at the time the documents were tabled yesterday. The Speaker in the Chair indicated that the Ways and Means motion was properly before the House in the way in which I had proceeded.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the seriousness of the point and the issue. There is a minor dilemma for me. I think the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) knows that the only time at which a point of order about the tabling of documents can be raised is at the time of the tabling. I cannot allow the suggestion that today I would take the matter under advisement because in effect the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is appealing something that happened yesterday. I cannot now go back and re-open the question of whether it was in order to table the documents yesterday. I have no way to do that.

My understanding of what happened yesterday is not that a ruling was made but that a comment was made. I am not about to make a ruling, other than to say that there is nothing to rule on today because what happened happened yesterday.

I have some sense that we may want to consider collectively whether points of order are the way to do such things as opposed to rising to seek consent to revert to tabling of documents. This may be a procedure allowing the result that occurred without potentially—this is not a ruling—creating a situation on which the Speaker might have to rule.

I am afraid that in the existing situation I must find that there is no point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, what is the sense of Members of the House raising questions with the Chair? I said yesterday that I felt uneasy about this situation immediately after the tabling of the document. I wanted the Chair to look at it attentively because I felt it was not in order. If a Member of the House cannot raise a point at the time, which I did, and be told the next day that because he did not raise it at the time he cannot raise it today, we will all be going around in a circle.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I must have misunderstood the Member. I was not aware that a point of order had been raised yesterday.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, I raised one.

Mr. Speaker: Today we do not have a Hansard. I am not sure why that is and I must find out.

If a point of order was raised yesterday and a decision reserved, then that decision remains reserved. If a point of order was raised yesterday and it was not reserved by the Chair, then nothing remains today. What I shall do is to look into whether a reservation was made yesterday.

I am saying to the Hon. Member that I am in difficulty this morning because I cannot accept the suggestion that the matter be re-opened this morning. I think the Hon. Member knows that. Let me leave it in that obviously clear circumstance, and maybe we can continue with Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION REORGANIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion) moved that Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before my distinguished colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), introduces this matter at second reading, Your Honour will recall that yesterday I brought to the attention of the House the fact that we were operating under new rules with respect to legislative committees. I have consulted with the Opposition House Leaders with respect to this matter, and we have come to an arrangement whereby in each of the instances of motions now on the Order Paper referring Bills to standing committees, the Bills in question would be referred to legislative committees, as contemplated by the Provisional Standing Orders.

Rather than going through this exercise on every occasion when every Bill comes forward, I think there would be a disposition to have an Order of the House to amend each of the motions now standing on the Order Paper for second reading. Rather than having the motions read that the Bills would be referred to specific standing committees, in each instance the motions would be amended as follows:

That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "and referred to a legislative committee."

For the sake of pro forma, the motion would contain the appropriately numbered Bill, its title, and "be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee." If all existing motions on the Order Paper for second reading were accordingly amended, I think Your Honour would find unanimous consent of the House to accept that suggestion and my motion in each instance. Then we would not have to use the time of the House to make an amendment on each occasion.

Mr. Speaker: For the sake of clarity, do I understand that the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) means government Bills and only government Bills?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Not Private Members' Bills?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I think we will deal with Private Members' Business some time later. I do not think it is necessary to do it today.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is right.

Mr. Deans: However, I agree. In the interest of speed, we can give unanimous consent to allow the Orders which now stand on the Order Paper to be changed so as to guarantee that each of the Bills, when referred, would be referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of co-operation, this time I give my consent and agree to this suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, it was just three months ago, on June 27, that I introduced Bill C-66 respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation in the House for first reading.

As Hon. Members will realize, the Bill makes it possible for private investors to buy the majority of government shares in the CDC. It is in fact the first step in the Government's announced intention, indeed its commitment, to turn many of its business holdings over to the private sector where they properly belong.

We have begun this program with the CDC because, frankly, the corporation fulfils absolutely no governemnt policy objectives and has not done so for a long time. Reducing the Government's stake in the company will benefit not only the corporation and its investors but the Government and above all the people of Canada and, incidentally, will put approximately $250 million back into the country's Consolidated Revenue Fund.

As some Members will recall, there were earlier indications that the Government planned to divest itself of the CDC. Indeed, the previous Liberal administration stated its intention to get out of the corporation when the time was right. That being the case, I fully expect that this Bill will receive support from most parts of the House, and it is support which I would suggest is fully deserved.

As we will recall, the Canada Development Corporation was set up in 1971 as a government-owned corporation to develop Canadian-controlled corporations in the private sector. Initially the Government transferred to CDC ownership of some of its investments in the petrochemical industry. Subsequently, CDC acquired and developed major industry investments in petroleum and sulphur, mining, petrochemicals, office information, life sciences and industrial automation.

The corporation now owns all of Kidd Creek Holdings and Kidd Creek Mines and a majority portion of Canterra Energy Limited. It also owns Polysar Limited, the world's largest manufacturer of synthetic rubber, all of AES Data and most of Savin and has recently expanded into biotechnology with the acquisition of Connaught Laboratories. In fact, the corporation has been acting like a private company for many years. Since it no longer serves Government, we must allow it to continue successfully to serve private industry. Investors now will have an added opportunity to participate in a private company with the potential for tremendous growth.

As the House may be aware, the corporation has, in the past, made issues of voting shares available to the Canadian public, so the Government is now carrying only 47 per cent of the voting rights of the corporation. To divest our shares, we could have simply continued to offer them under the terms of the Canada Development Corporation Act. However, in proposing this legislation, we wish to change the rules governing share issues for several important reasons.

First, under the old Act the Government was obliged to retain at least 10 per cent of the voting shares of the corporation. We wish to permit the Government to divest its entire holdings in CDC, although it must retain a 10 per cent holding for another couple of years. As well, Canadian investors or groups of associated investors could each purchase only 3 per cent of the corporation's interests. We are raising the limit to 25 per cent to permit individual Canadian investors or groups of investors to have a significant stake in the affairs of the company. This is important for two reasons. It permits companies to meet equity accounting provisions with investments larger than 20 per cent and it provides the possibility for a large sponsor to take a direct and active role in the corporation's affairs. This will provide for a check on management, and all shareholders should welcome this move.

Additionally, in the past, non-Canadian investors were excluded from ownership in the corporation. We feel this restriction is no longer necessary and that non-Canadian investment in CDC can be beneficial for the fortunes of the company. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced when this Government came to power, Canada is open for business.

• (1120)

Mr. Stevens: However, we are proposing limits on non-Canadian investment in the Corporation. The Bill provides that any single non-resident investor, or group of investors, can purchase at most 10 per cent of the voting shares. Total foreign investment will be restricted to 25 per cent. In this way, we will still preserve, by a very wide margin, Canadian control of this major corporation.

One Hon. Member has been telling the media that this Bill could allow a non-resident to buy a controlling interest in the corporation. That is simply not so. The provisions limiting non-resident investment are detailed and make it impossible for a non-resident investor or group of investors to acquire a controlling interest.

On August 21, the Government offered for sale 23 million shares of Canada Development Corporation stock at an attractive price and under an innovative and tailor-made approach. I wish to explain that transaction in some detail.

In essence, we sold the shares on the instalment plan. Investors paid one-half of the purchase price by September 6 and received an instalment receipt. The second instalment is due when this legislation is passed and no earlier than one year from September 6. At that time, the investors will exchange the instalment receipts for CDC shares.

It was deemed a good time for the Government to sell its stock. Only a year ago, CDC stock was selling for less than $4 a share. Over the past 10 months the price has steadily moved up and we were able to achieve a price of $11.50 for each of our shares.

We expect to realize approximately $250 million from this sale, which will go to the Consolidated Revenue Fund over the next two years. We have already received our first cheque. Through the sale of the instalment receipts, we have already put in the order of $120 million into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Investors have reacted enthusiastically to the issue. They have given a clear indication that they approve of the Government's decision to move the company into the private sector. They like the corporation's mix of natural resources, technology and life sciences. They like its emphasis on long-range and high technology projects with strong futures. They like its profit and potential.

Frankly, why should they not like the potential of this company? The corporation has turned around from a loss position to a more profitable basis, and its performance continues to improve. Long-term indebtedness has been reduced and the outlook for the future is bright. As a result, the corporation is attractive to investors.

Our share issue has attracted a wide and rather broad base of shareholder support. I think, again, this gives an indication of the wide interest in the company. We are particularly pleased that Noranda Incorporated, a solid Canadian company, purchased receipts totalling 6.5 million shares, or 28 per cent of the issue. Obviously, Noranda sees the potential for tremendous growth in CDC. If the sale had been bound by the 3 per cent limit, Noranda could not have such a large investment in Canadian development.

There is another reason why a new CDC Bill is required to complete divestiture of the company. As some Hon. Members will be aware, the Canada Development Corporation, by virtue of its governing statute, is now an eligible investment for insurance, loan and trust companies under the legislation governing these institutions.

Investors appreciate the fact that under this legislation we will be phasing out the special treatment of CDC shares. The corporation will operate under the Canada Business Corporations Act, with its common shares treated like those of any other company for investment purposes.

Under the current CDC Act, the special provisions for CDC shares were to continue for the life of the corporation. We will remove that protection after a transition period of three years. I might add as well, Mr. Speaker, that CDC shares are also eligible investments for registered retirement savings plans under the Income Tax Act. Investors would not be able to buy up the Government's total interest in the Canada Development Corporation right away. Passage of this Bill will allow the Government eventually to sell its remaining 11.8 per cent interest in the corporation. However, the Government will not sell its remaining interest until after December, 1986. To do so would constitute a default under certain existing loan agreements. We will continue to maintain at least a 10 per cent holding until the CDC repays the loans or arranges to have these agreements amended by the lenders.

The transition period I am talking about is an important middle step. It will allow the corporation to move into the market on an equal footing with other private companies. During the next two years, the Government can still have a presence in the corporation as it will retain its right to appoint up to five directors to the board. In effect, the government will have the role of "watcher of the store". Our investment in the Canada Development Corporation will be properly supervised until the Canada Development Corporation completes its orderly move to private control. If, for any reason, the Government still holds 10 per cent or more of the company's interests after the number of years to which I referred, the directors would remain on the board.

All of these measures in Bill C-66 paved the way for the Canada Development Corporation to change hands, to move from government ownership to private enterprise. Our route toward reducing the Government's stake in the CDC has been carefully planned to ensure the continued success of the company and to retain its objective of offering Canadian solid business opportunities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the legislation before the House will provide for the orderly transfer of the Canada Development Corporation to private hands. That is where it should be. That is where it belongs.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, this being my first opportunity to welcome the Minister back to the House after the recess, I want to do so and to congratulate him for showing such great judgment over the summer recess in travelling to Atlantic Canada. I think he ought to do more of that and, hopefully, he will make more visits to my own riding and perhaps have some positive things to say with respect to economic development.

The Minister in his remarks talked about the carefully planned, if you will, transfer from government ownership or involvement to the private sector. The Minister certainly is right. In fact, my Party approves of this transfer to the private sector. If one goes back, Mr. Speaker, and looks at the history of the Canada Development Corporation, one is reminded of statements which were made on February 22, 1971 by the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Edgar Benson. He said, as reported on page 3630 of Hansard:

This government believes that there is a role to be played by a new institution, backed by substantial sources of Canadian capital and managed by skilled, experienced Canadian entrepreneurs, to help make possible fuller Canadian participation in the growth and development of Canada. Such an institution will be able to work closely with the other members of the Canadian business and financial community and provide Canadian entrepreneurship with the access to more substantial concentrations of Canadian capital required to ensure a greater Canadian presence in the growth of our own economy.

As the Minister and other Members know, the purpose of the CDC was twofold: To help develop and maintain strong Canadian-controlled and managed corporations in the private sector; and to give Canadians greater opportunities to invest and participate in the economic development of Canada. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that has been achieved. However, in addition, the intention of the Government of the day was to have an orderly transfer, if you will, to the private sector of the shares referred to by the Minister in his remarks. It was also anticipated that the corporation would operate throughout the 1970s, as it did, on sound basic principles of good business with the profit motive being one of the primary objectives. Of course, Canadians were to be substantial investors in the initial days of the CDC. However, my Party agrees with what the Minister has just said about the transfer of the shares. It has been stated on numerous occasions that the shares would be sold under two conditions. The first was that they would be sold at such time as market conditions would permit recovery of the approximate original investment and, second, that they would be sold in such a way as not to damage the company or its shareholders. I think those conditions have been met and it is time to sell the shares.

However, I am a little disappointed that the Minister did not touch on some of the issues I thought would be of some concern to him and his Government. For example, I refer to the comments made in The Financial Post by an analyst of First Marathon Securities Ltd. The article says:

> From the $81-million bottom-line figure, he deducted a $49.5-million gain from the sale of certain investments, $136 million of capitalized overhead and financing charges, $50.5 million for the amortization of frontier exploration expenses, and $71 million from the sale of sulphur inventory, which . . . is being drawn down at such a rate that it will be gone within 2½ years.

I had hoped the Minister would perhaps avail himself of this opportunity to put to rest some of these fears, speculation, indeed allegations. It has even been suggested, not by this particular financial institution but by others, that there may be an investigation by the Toronto Stock Exchange regarding the sale of these shares and how they have increased in price. I do not know that to be true but the Minister has information at his fingertips and I had hoped he would shed some light on that. As well, this financial institution suggests that the CDC is understating its debt to the extent of $330 million, because much of it is in U.S. dollars and the company has failed to account for changes in the exchange rate.

I am also a little concerned that the Minister failed to refer to consultations with labour organizations affected by the sale of these shares. Perhaps we will have an opportunity in committee to question him regarding that subject. I hope the information will be readily available from the Minister.

The original Act as legislated in the early 1970s, Mr. Speaker, restricted individual or corporate holdings to a maximum of 3 per cent. It did not permit foreign investors to sell shares. However, this new Bill has dramatically changed those rules. Clauses 5(a), 5(b) and 5(c) limit any Canadian or associated group of Canadians to 25 per cent of the voting shares. Non-residents are limited to 10 per cent of the voting shares. Total foreign investment is limited to 25 per cent of the voting shares. This Government seems to be pro-foreign investment and anti-Canadian investment. This legislation was originally drawn up so as to promote Canadian ownership and management, but the Minister has increased the limit of foreign ownership to 25 per cent. Some people can argue with some substance that 25 per cent is not a substantial amount. Well, it is substantial enough. I can see the point of allowing some foreign investment, but perhaps half that amount would be a more just and equitable figure.

I would like to take a moment to talk about polls. I do not like to put too much faith in Gallup polls for obvious reasons. However, I know the Government does and, in some instances, rightly so. Last July a Gallup poll was taken and it showed that the majority of Canadians polled, 51 per cent or 52 per cent, think we have enough foreign investment in this country. Yet, in the face of that fact, the Government has done the opposite. It is going against the wishes of the Canadian people. I am not suggesting we totally abandon foreign investment. I do not advocate that course of action. However, I do ask the Government and the Minister to be reasonable in the best interests of Canadian ownership and management. Just because one individual or Party wishes to limit foreign investment where practical—and I emphasize the word "practical"—government Members and their friends in the media should not accuse us of being anti-American. We are not anti-American. We are not anti-France, anti-Britain, or anti any other country. When dealing with the best interests of Canada one must examine, in a careful and prudent way, restrictions or lack of restrictions with regard to foreign investment.

I have indicated before in the House, and will indicate again, that Canadians want to own and manage their own companies and they want governments, particularly the national Government, to facilitate that process at every opportunity. I think, and I hope the Minister would agree, that the Canada Development Corporation has done that. I would ask the Minister to step back and examine the provision in this particular Bill with regard to foreign investment. We will have an opportunity to debate this in committee and to hear from the various witnesses which our Parties will want to have at the committee meeting.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Canada Development Corporation was conceived by a Liberal Government, and implemented by a Liberal Government notwithstanding the objections of the New Democratic and Conservative Parties. We believe very strongly that this transfer from government ownership to the private sector is right. We proposed it in 1972. The Conservatives had an opportunity to divest themselves of this at $16 a share in 1979 but, because of the total incompetence of the Government of the day, they did not avail themselves of that opportunity. I close by saying that I want to have this Bill referred to the legislative committee in order that we can debate its provisions in greater detail.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to add my welcome to the Minister to that of my Liberal colleague. I am particularly pleased to see him back after his recent trip because, although I should not want the House to collapse with shock, I have some words of congratulation for the Minister. I hope I can take some credit for aggressively urging him to be a little tougher in his negotiations with the Japanese because he has succeeded in getting commitments from Toyota, which are more important and more significant than the commitments we have had from other Japanese auto producers because Toyota has made it clear that it wishes to produce under the Auto Pact. That will mean a commitment on its part to Canadian content levels, which will create significantly greater employment in this country. I was very pleased about that. I was also very pleased about his success in discussions with Hyundai. Now that the Minister has heard my words of congratulation, it is possible that that will be the extent of them for this session.

I would like to refer the House back to the early days of the establishment of this Bill. The Bill was put in place, the Act passed, and the corporation established at a time when I was a member of the Press Gallery here. I recall my pleasure and pride at that time that efforts were finally being made to deal with the serious matter of the extent of foreign ownership in this country and to try to establish at least one mechanism that would attempt aggressively, in partnership with the private sector, but very much with the influence and support of Government, to do something about that foreign ownership problem. I recall saying at that time that this was a minor step which, like so many things done by the previous Liberal Government, was caught up in contradiction and limited the potential impact step which it could have, but nevertheless represented an important step forward in giving us a series of Canadian corporations that could act effectively, especially in the manufacturing and resource sectors in which levels of foreign ownership were especially high.

It is interesting that the Minister said this morning that the CDC filled absolutely no government objective. I take that as a clear and unambiguous statement with respect to the commitment of the Government to those Canadianization objectives which the CDC has followed and could continue to follow given effective support and an attempt by the Government to make creative use of this instrument of industrial and technological policy. However, the Minister has made clear that these objectives do not exist, and I can therefore understand the logic, from the perspective of the Minister, of doing away with the instrument by passing it off to the private sector because his Government is not concerned with the Canadianization of our economy or with using creatively the industrial policy instruments and the research and technology instruments which exist under the jurisdiction of the Government to achieve social and industrial objectives. The Minister's honesty deserves respect even if his abandonment of those important, indeed crucial, objectives in terms of obtaining jobs for our people in the future merits derision.

I want to spend a few minutes talking about public ownership. That is something which is not popularly done in our country. It has become conventional wisdom that public ownership in this country represents an attempt to prop up bankrupt firms and to stick the Government's nose into places where it does not belong. According to those who propagate this myth, in virtually every case government ownership shows up in inefficiency, losses, and lack of attention to the interests of this country. According to the small "c" conservative view which is shared by both of the other Parties in this House, public ownership is generally a disaster, at best a temporary requirement, and never something which is central to the potential of building our economy. Therefore, it follows again logically that if there is an example of public ownership, control and initiative which is working like the Canada Development Corporation, you had better get rid of it because it is a serious embarrassment when you must face the fact that there is public ownership at work in this country, in living technicolor, presenting reports, indicating profits, demonstrating commitment to research and demonstrating success in export markets. What a disgrace. Let us get rid of it as fast as we can and by all means, get rid of it at a loss, because if it were sold at a profit it might demonstrate to the Canadian people that public ownership can not only succeed while it exists, but can be sold at a profit.

Never fear, the point at which the Government has chosen to get rid of its share in CDC is when it is certain that the $250 million which the Minister talked about would be less than the amount which the public originally put into this corporation.

It is clear that, in the opinion of the Governemnt, public ownership belongs in the realm of bail-outs. Public ownership is charity, taking money from the working people and the poor in this country and using it to subsidize, bail out or forgive institutions like the Canadian Commercial Bank of Canada and the Northland Bank. Public sector in this country, according to the Government, means a drain on the pocket books of Canadians. It is a cost to taxpayers and, therefore, when a public corporation operates successfully and does an excellent job for Canada, the Government must quickly get rid of that corporation and make certain that it cannot survive as an embarrassment to the myths that the Government wishes to propagate.

I must say that the Minister has an aggressive approach toward the sale process of our public sector. I once facetiously suggested to him that perhaps he should display his face on billboards throughout the world with the saying that Canada is once more open for business. I suggested that this may be a less costly way of fulfilling his ideological purpose.

Perhaps the Minister accepted the essence of my remarks because he went to Japan and has been operating there as the greatest salesman since Barnum and Bailey. I am not aware if he carried a sign over his shoulders, rang a bell as he walked down the streets of Tokyo to attract attention to himself or banged cymbals in good Japanese fashion to make certain that this message got across, but he stated, "If you are interested in buying into one or more Crown-owned companies, let us know". I can almost hear the sound of organ music in the background just as in other advertisements. I hope, for the sake of salesmanship, that the Minister at least used triumphant music that reflected the glorious records of many of these companies. However, knowing the Minister's proclivities in talking about public ownership, I fear that the music was probably a funeral dirge. I suspect that the low prices we may receive for these companies will in fact reflect the choice of funeral music. He stated, "We are currently offering two aircraft firms, a uranium company and a state of the art high technology electronics firm that is active in the satellite telecommunications field". He did not talk about a partridge in a pear tree but I am sure that it crossed his mine. He said, "See me later if you are interested".

With respect to his sales technique, I would suggest to the Minister that perhaps "See me later" will be met with a polite

"Indeed" in the case of the Japanese. I suggest that he must be more aggressive. He should change the music of funeral dirges which marks his speeches with respect to public ownership and promote the marvellous success of some of our experiments in public ownership in this country. If he is going to sell these companies, he should do it in a way that will return money to the Canadian people. Therefore, I would expect the Minister to make speeches throughout the world about the glories of public ownership in this country. In fact, since it has been some time since I have visited South Korea and Japan, if the Minister has difficulty delivering that part of the speech, I will do so for him. Perhaps he could let me deliver that part of the speech which talks realistically and honestly about the virtues of public enterprise in our history and our present economy. I would certainy choose the excellent record of the Canada Development Corporation as part of the biblical style lesson we would read to these foreign investors.

It must have been a terrible shock to the Minister to read the ten-year financial summary of the CDC and see that with the exception of two difficult years the company was consistently profitable. It increased its sales level from $470 million in 1975 to $4.079 billion worth of sales in 1984. Faith, hope and charity go together. I hope the Minister's faith will disappear if he is charitable to the real record of the CDC because that record has been superb, with a cash flow before financing charges which has gone up from $57 million in 1975 to almost a billion dollars in 1984. That is a magnificent record which I suggest owes a great deal to the excellent management of Tony Hampson and the team of people whom he brought with him in the CDC.

I also want to say that the CDC is not an exception. We in this country have used public ownership creatively and we have used it to develop our regions. We have used it to take us into new product areas as with the Polysar and its entry into rubber production during World War II. We have used it creatively at the provincial level to try to get us a fair share of revenues from the resource sector. Foreign ownership in this country is something of which we should be proud. It is something which has served the Canadian people and will continue to serve Canadians in the future. It is something which this country should realize is a crucial instrument as we face a much more powerful and extremely aggressive economy to the south of us.

It is not just by chance that the best company in the CDC, namely, Polysar, sells 38 per cent of its output in the U.S. market compared to 36 per cent here in Canada. Public ownership is the instrument that can get us the jobs. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told us yesterday in his amazingly insighful statement, trade leads to jobs. Yes, indeed, trade does create jobs, but you need to have the enterprises that aggressively seek trade opportunities. Public enterprise has done it in Canada and could continue to do so.

There is, a further question that emerges beside the question of whether we should take an ideological approach and get rid of as much public ownership as possible or whether we should take a pragmatic approach and use public ownership where it makes sense. There is a second question. What are we going to do to Canadianize our economy? Every public opinion poll taken demonstrates massive support for greater Canadianization of our economy. The CDC has been a very helpful instrument in achieving those Canadianization objectives. I have only to mention the successful, daring, and quite remarkable raid which CDC undertook on Texas Gulf Sulphur in the United States leading to the transfer to Canadian control of the important Kidd Creek Holdings in northern Ontario.

This Government has perhaps the most sorry, dismal, disappointing record on Canadianization of any Government in recent history. Near the end of the last session we threw five challenges, five ways in which the Minister could demonstrate that he was not totally insensitive to the aspirations of the great majority of people for more Canadian control. We suggested that the Government could take Canadian Porcelain and help its workers realize their dreams of controlling the company and at the same time giving to the community of Hamilton a greater sense of control over its future. The Minister did not accept the challenge. He helped the American company take over Canadian Porcelain, which company had been responsible, at least in part, for driving Canadian Porcelain out of business to start with by dumping in Canada.

We suggested to the Minister that he could assist White Farm. Here was a pretty brave, gutsy Canadian entrepreneur who, I think, had quite successfully started the rebuilding process within White Farm. The company had had a commitment from the Ontario Government. The trade union movement was strongly supportive of him but, once more, Mr. Speaker, this Government refused to move. Something like 600 jobs were lost and the potential for small Canadian enterprise to survive, prosper and make a contribution to this economy was undercut.

We suggested that the Minister could do something about Mitel. Unfortunately, he did not take my advice on Mitel despite the fact that he took my advice on the Japanese auto companies. I gave a warning in our earlier debates that the nature of British Telecom made it quite likely that the matter would be referred to British government authorities, with the potential of the Mitel takeover either being reversed or quite significantly changed from the position he had tried to defend in the House. Once more, the summer has demonstrated that to be the case. Mitel is now hanging in limbo, attacked by the British Monopolies Commission, under scrutiny from British Telephone regulation people, again exactly as we predicted. Again exactly as we predicted, instead of job gains, which the Minister talked about, we have seen over 100 job losses as production has shifted, again exactly as we predicted, to Britain, as a result of that fiasco. I could go on. I could review the case of de Havilland, which is still hanging in the balance. I could review the case of Gulf and Western in the Prentice Hall takeover, a very interesting subject. I have had assurance from the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) that this is one case, by God, where he is going to see that Canadianization objectives are met.

Mr. Riis: Hold your breath.

Mr. Langdon: I have been holding my breath. I must say it is a difficult experience holding one's breath waiting for decisions from this Government. You get verbiage and ideology, but when you are faced with a tough decision, as the Government has been in the case of Gulf and Western, nothing happens. Nothing happens, nothing happens and nothing happens. It has been nine months since the opening steps in this little saga and still there is no word.

Let me turn to the CDC itself. I have stressed the CDC as an example of creative, aggressive effective public ownership. I have explained why the Conservatives now feel they have to get it out of the public sector as quickly as possible. It is an embarrassment. At the heart of the CDC's success—and I want to bring this forward a little more forcefully than some of the other parts of the CDC story—is Polysar. Polysar demonstrates a lot to us as a country. It started with World War II. We had a war to fight. We had certain strategic and crucial concerns and we looked around to find out how to meet them. The private sector could not do it. American companies could not do it. We had to do it ourselves, and we did. We established Polysar. It was called Polymar in those days. It developed synthetic rubber production aggressively and effectively. After the war it took that technology and those sales to create jobs and establish exports throughout the world. Therefore, Polysar is now a powerful, progressive, exciting public Crown corporation with investments throughout the world.

I visited Polysar last January as part of my work as industry critic for my Party. Polysar representatives told me just how much co-operation they were receiving from the Government. The Conservative Party—and I remind Hon. Members of one of many promises which has not been kept—talked about a petrochemicals task force which would lead to Polysar being assisted quite effectively. As of January, when I visited, nothing had been heard of that great promise. As of September, I ask the Government: What has become of that commitment to that crucial section of our industry? Again, as with so much, it is a Government of ad hockery; it is a Government of quick responses to immediate crises; but it is not a Government which plans, thinks, organizes and prepares. As a result, it is not a Government which succeeds in economy strategy. Nothing demonstrates this more than the fact that instead of helping Polysar, instead of making it something to penetrate the United States market—and Hon. Members on the other benches claim that they are in favour of more trade—the Government is prepared to sell it off so that it can potentially be controlled by Noranda, with all of Noranda's expertise in high technology chemicals. Instead of helping Polysar through a response to the petrochemicals task force which the Conservative Party set up, it backs off. There has been no help, no assistance. It is typical. It is a Government which does not act. It is a Government which talks. It is a Government which plays with words.

The point which we will be making very, very forcefully in the trade debate concerns the complete and utter failure of the Government to act on the aggressive back-door efforts by the United States to hurt our hog producers, our lumber producers in western Canada and our fish producers on the East Coast. Now there is talk about further aggressive moves against our steel industry. There is a lot of rhetoric, but no action. Government Members say: "Yes, we will get a freer trade agreement". If one believes them, two years from now we might get something. In the meantime, we have a crisis which is not being addressed and on which action is not taking place. It was our Party on the special joint committee this summer that called in city after city for urgent, immediate action on the problems faced by our exporters. The Government has refused to move. Talk about inaction, talk about bankruptcy! The bankruptcy in this country is not in our financial accounts; it is on our government benches.

Let me refer specifically to the Bill. It is a Bill which does three things. It follows through and allows the complete sell-off of CDC. This is consistent with the Conservative strategy to throw into the private sector anything that is doing well as a public corporation. Also, this Bill is designed to increase corporate concentration in Canada. Government Members, in their days on the opposition benches, used to talk about the need for competition and diversity and about the virtues of smallness. Now we have government Members in office who are permitting a couple of a large Canadian corporations to take over one more holding company in Canada. They are permitting Noranda to take what in effect will be an extremely strategic, perhaps even controlling, share in this company. It is a Bill which permits more corporate concentration. In the case of Noranda, that is consistent action on the part of Conservative Members in office. Noranda is a good friend of the Government and, now that it is in office, it is good to its good friends. Also it is a Bill which turns one of our instruments for Canadianization of the economy into an instrument of increased foreign ownership in Canada.

How any Government can bring forward such legislation without blushing is beyond me. There should be at least some sense of shame. If government Members bring forth a Bill which increases corporate concentration, we will attack them on that. Let us have a debate about their being in favour of the big guys and our being in favour of the small guys. It is a debate which has gone on for years; it is a debate which we will ultimately win. However, we have to add to that the fact that not only is the Conservative Government in favour of the large guys, it is in favour of foreign companies. Earlier I talked about funeral dirges on the part of the Minister. I say to the Government that dirges on the part of the Minister. I say to the Government that it is its funeral. If its Members want to take to the people of the country a philosophy which says: "Yes, we will sell off an active, viable company with good management, as demonstrated by an effective record, and open up the possibility of a large Canadian company, in conjunction with three United States firms, having control of this corporation", it can go ahead and do it because we do not have the numbers to stop it. However, government Members, as they do it, should think of the lack of logic in their own position. They should think of the lack of logic for people who they say believe in small business including a clause in this Bill which allows 25 per cent of this company to go to one corporation. They should think of the logic of people who still talk about Canadianization on good days, taking this company and giving 25 per cent of it to foreigners. Perhaps Hon. Members opposite will say that it is necessary, but even that hollow excuse flies in the face of the facts. Their share issue has been fully subscribed. They did not require massive purchases by foreign companies. It was not necessary; it was quite possible to sell out these shares to Canadians. They could have taken the imaginative approach of certain other regimes and said to Canadians: "You originally paid for this company; perhaps you should get a piece of it without having to pay for extra shares". Instead we have a thoughtless effort to make this company part of another corporate empire, the Noranda empire.

My last point concerns the disrespect shown to Parliament as an institution as a result of doing this prior to the legislation coming before the House of Commons. Just so that Members are clearly aware of this, the shares have already been nabbed by Noranda. Noranda has 28 per cent or 6.5 million shares set up for it to take in the future. I am sure the Minister has found a technically legal way to do this, but I think it is contemptible to bring before Parliament a Bill which will allow something to take place before the Bill has even been debated. A share issue is being allowed to take place under conditions that permit Canadian companies to follow the new rules the Minister wants to follow, rules which have not even been debated in Parliament.

In the past, I believe that the Minister has at times displayed disrespect for this House. However, he has never reached these depths before. He has never before brought before us a Bill to permit something to take place after he has already set it in motion.

We are now operating under new Standing Orders. These Standing Orders are supposed to permit us some freedom of discussion and action in legislative committees which are to be set up. It is no longer to be a question of confidence if a Bill is amended within a legislative committee. I will certainly be moving amendments to this Bill within the legislative committee, amendments to cut down the extra boost to corporate concentration that this Bill will establish. Yet the Minister has simply assumed that the legislative committee will be formed of a group of trained seals who will accept his views and that he will be able to justify having gone ahead despite lack of parliamentary debate even of the principle of what he is doing, despite lack of parliamentary scrutiny of the details of what he is doing. He has had the effrontery and impropriety to allow this share issue to go forward and effectively to permit Noranda to take 26 per cent of these shares.

I have talked in this speech about many failures on the part of the Government. I do not want to go over that again, but I do want to underline to the House of Commons the fact that the lack of respect for Parliament and parliamentary procedure in the actions which have been taken by the Minister should lead the House to reject this Bill as an affront to its established procedures as well as a sign of the bankruptcy of the industrial policy of this Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): First, concerning the point of order brought to the attention of the Chair this morning by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), having been in the chair yesterday, I brought to the attention of Mr. Speaker himself the fact that it was the intention yesterday to reserve on the question brought to our attention by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. That being said, we shall now resume debate.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to speak today to Bill C-66, the purpose of which is to continue the Canada Development Corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act. The legislation provides for restrictions on share ownership. An explanation of these restrictions has already been given to the House and I do not think it is necessary to repeat them.

The passage of this Bill will make it possible to approve the sale of shares representing nearly 37 per cent of the Government of Canada's voting rights, as a first step. The share offer was very well received by the Canadian public, and reflects the new climate of openness vis-à-vis the private sector, which is the only approach that can lead to long term renewal of Canada's economic activity and development.

The Government is of the opinion that those who sit on corporate boards of directors should be accountable to the shareholders and not be able to hide behind the anonymity of Parliament, Crown corporations or government-owned companies.

The public has shown that it understands the approach taken by the Government. Attempts had been made by the former Government to take the place of the private sector and direct it from a number of central "laboratories" full of technocrats. Our Government, however, is aware that profitability, economic development and creativity should be left to the private sector. Our Government's faith in the private sector is clear for all to see and the sale of shares of the Canada Development Corporation is a very good example.

The public's faith in this Government is also quite clear. The share issue was a success. It is an initial step, and the Government intends to continue, in the same skilful manner, the process of share distribution and divestiture of corporations owned by the Government of Canada.

The magnitude of the CDC's assets and the range of its activities justify the continued presence of the Government through control over the ownership of shares sold, and its presence is also justified by the obligation the Government has to the first generations of shareholders. It means that not more than 25 per cent of CDC shares may be held by a Canadian shareholder or group of shareholders, not more than 10 per cent by foreign shareholders in Canada and not more than 25 per cent by a group of foreign shareholders in Canada.

The Government, with the same obligation to the historical evolution of the Canada Development Coporation, will temporarily retain a number of members on the board of directors of the Corporation.

The transaction, and this is very important considering the imbalance in the Government of Canada's Consolidated Revenue Fund caused by our predecessors, will bring to the Consolidated Revenue Fund the sum of $250 million. It was also an important factor in connection with cash flow considerations and it is clear that the Government's present state of indebtedness makes this transaction even more important.

The Government has been very skilful in its negotiations and its approach to marketing the shares of the CDC, the result being that a large number of new shareholders can afford the shares since they can purchase an option on a share worth $11.50 for $2.88, or buy the shares outright, paying only 50 per cent of the purchase price immediately and 50 per cent again a year later, in July 1986. This approach has ensured a broader distribution of the shares. It was therefore very sensible of the Government to divest itself of these corporations and to return to the private sector the administration and management of nearly $8 billion in assets. Granted, these assets have been profitable to some extent in recent years, but one may well ask what the situation would be if the initial capital cost were calculated as well and also what the profits might have been if the fate of these corporations had been controlled by the private sector.

Mr. Speaker, I think, and I hope, that after this example of divestiture of a Crown corporation, we will see a measure of continuity with similar occurrences in the months to come, for the greater benefit of the development of our economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

• (1230)

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask about the subject I dealt with in my remarks. Can the Hon. Member tell the House whether he is in favour of a procedure whereby the Minister would sell the corporation through a share issue whose terms would differ from those prescribed under the current legislation, but with terms similar to those provided under this Bill?

Would that be an appropriate parliamentary procedure for now? Would the Hon. Member comment on that?

Mr. Fontaine: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague and commend him for asking his question in French. I am trying to improve my command of the other official language, so I fully appreciate this initiative on your part and I expect to be able as well to answer you in your mother tongue in the not too distant future. For the time being, however, I would rather answer in French.

Considering that the corporation operates in a very important sector which has a significant impact on the Canadian economy, and considering as well its huge assets, I would suggest that the Government was justified in providing additional constraints besides those already prescribed with respect to foreign investors and in making sure that there will be some form of disclosure of foreign investments with a view to preventing such an important corporation from being completely taken over by foreign interests within a short time. That it why it was deemed advisable—and I fully agree on this—to limit foreign investments in voting shares to 25 per cent of the total, or again to 10 per cent for any share purchase by a non-resident investor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, that was not quite the thrust of my question. Perhaps I would be more precise in English.

[English]

As I pointed out in the last part of my speech, if we pass this legislation then there is no problem. Shares can be sold to the public and a given company, such as Noranda, can purchase up to 25 per cent of those shares. That is fair enough. Such legislation would be debated by Parliament. The details would have to be handled by the legislative committee. It would have to come back for final passage after we, as legislators, give it the go-ahead. Then, share issue could take place and Noranda could purchase its 25 per cent.

In fact, what has taken place is exactly the contrary to that scenario. The share issues has already been placed. Noranda has been permitted effectively to indicate its purchase of 6.5 million shares, representing 28 per cent of the issue. The issue itself is small enough. However, that does not mean Noranda would have over 25 per cent of the total shares. In fact, it is much higher than what the present law permits. The present law makes 3 per cent the limit. No other company is permitted to have more than 3 per cent of the shares of Canada Development Corporation.

What has happened is that a share issue has taken place under rules which are still being debated, as opposed to under rules which are presently the law of the country. My question is, as new Members of Parliament, do we feel that that is something which is legitimate? Is that how Parliament should operate? Or should the legislation be passed first and be put into effect, as opposed to putting the goal into effect before the legislation is even talked about? Which of those alternatives is the parliamentary way to proceed?

Mr. Fontaine: In answer to your question, I would suggest it is two-fold. First you seem to be concerned about the fact that Noranda acquired 28 per cent of the issue whereas the Bill under consideration sets the limit at 25 per cent of the total shares. Noranda is a private corporation which made its offer through brokers and that will be covered under the pending legislation. The Government will always be in a position to impose the 25 per cent limit.

Secondly, I would also point out to the Hon. Member that if the proposed legislation were not adopted the Canadian Government would refund 50 per cent of the amount paid by the buyers, it would refund one half of $11.50. The deadline for such refund would be July 1987 and the deal would bear interest at 10 per cent. The only inconvenience to the Government in such a case would be expenditures incurred for advertising and selling the shares.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-66 which is before the House this morning. As the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has stated, and I wish to reiterate the importance of what he said, Canadianization of our econmomy is necessary in order to keep control of it. I agree with him when he stresses the importance of not trying to build up a corporate concentration and not allowing more foreign ownership and control in our economy.

The Bill before us makes a number of changes which will allow for total and complete privatization of the Canada Development Corporation. I was in this House a number of years ago, back in the late 1960s and early 1970s, when the CDC was a brand new piece of legislation. That was back in the days when members of all Parties thought it was important to make sure we had a bit more Canadian ownership in this country and more control over our own economy and destiny. The Bill before us today, Mr. Speaker, takes that away. I have known the Minister across the way for a great many years. He is a very honest and direct man. He is an ideological Conservative. He believes there should be privatization of a number of Crown corporations. In that way he is very much of an ideologue in terms of where he is going. However, I for one, do not believe that that is the way the people of Canada want to go.

Back in 1979 when Joe Clark was Prime Minister of this country for the brief "hiccup" in the history of this country, he wanted to sell off Petro-Canada and there was an outcry in this country that that was the wrong thing to do, that we needed a foothold in the oil industry. It was felt that the Canadian people deserved to have their own oil company. The fact that he was so determined to go in that direction was one of the reasons he was thrown out of office in February of 1980, which resulted in an increased number of seats in this House for both the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is the direction in which the Canadian people want to go. I appeal to my progressive friends in the Conservative Party—I know there are some in this House—

Mr. Gormley: Many.

Mr. Nystrom: There are many, the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) says. I ask my Conservative friends to look at the history and roots of their political Party. They can go back to the days of Sir John A. Macdonald with respect to building a free and independent Canada and the role of public ownership in this great country of ours. From the time of Sir John A. Macdonald right on through to the time of John Diefenbaker, the Conservative Party more so than the Liberal Party has been historically the nationalist Party of this country. It is the Party which started the CBC, the CNR and the Canadian Wheat Board, these great public institutions which sometimes intervened to a great degree in the economy of Canada. I ask the Conservative Party now: Why this change in direction? If John Diefenbaker were still in this House he would be furious to find this dogged ideological move made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) in privatizing the CDC.

I appeal, therefore, to the individuality of the Conservative Members of Parliament. I appeal to their rugged individualism and ask them to stand up in this House and be counted, not to let themselves be pushed around by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. They should not be trained seals sitting in the back-benches of Parliament rubber-stamping legislation. We now have parliamentary reform. We have legislative committees about to be formed. We can make changes in Bills without voting non-confidence in the Government of this country. So I appeal to Members of the Conservative Party to exercise their muscle. Do not prove that Pierre Trudeau was right when he said that Members of Parliament are nobodies. They should not let their Prime Minister push them around like the former Prime Minister pushed around his back-benchers. They should rise and speak their minds. I know there are many members of the Conservative Party who do not want to sell off the Canadian Development Corporation totally and absolutely and let all the shares be owned privately. Up to 25 per cent of these shares can be owned by a particular individual or corporation and a large number of these shares can be owned by a foreign company which means more foreign ownership and control in this country. I know that is not the way in which a lot of Conservative Members of Parliament want to go.

There is something else I find very repugnant about this whole procedure, Mr. Speaker. As a Member who has been here for a number of years, I have observed the Conservative Party when it is in opposition criticizing the Trudeau Government on the whole question of respect for Parliament and parliamentary procedure. The Hon. Member for The Batt-lefords-Meadow Lake sits in the front bench down there in the "rump", and that is about the place where John Diefenbaker used to sit in this House. Mr. Diefenbaker used to make speech after speech about the Government of the day showing disrespect for Parliament in doing things before it introduced legislation in the House, about the executive having too much power and the Prime Minister's Office having too much power. He used to make speech after speech about the Government's disrespect for this institution and, of course, this institution represents the people of Canada and, therefore, the Government was showing disrespect for the people of Canada by doing things without consulting Parliament. But what is happening with this legislation, Mr. Speaker? If I understand it correctly—and please correct me if I am wrong—these shares have now been offered in the market without this Bill being passed by the House of Commons, and without this Bill even being discussed in the House of Commons. The Government has done this without having the Bill go through the legislative committee of the House of Commons where it may be changed or amended because some of the Conservative Members of Parliament may agree with the Opposition on certain points and amend this particular legislation.

Mr. Lewis: Never.

Mr. Nystrom: An Hon. Member of Parliament says "never". I believe that the Government has shown disrespect for this institution, for this Parliament, in offering to sell the shares of the CDC on the market, starting the whole process, and then coming to Parliament with a Bill. I see my friend, the Hon. Member from Ontario, sitting opposite. I am sure that if he were in the Opposition and this were being done by a Liberal Government, he would be standing here ranting and raving that we live in a parliamentary democracy and the executive in the Prime Minister's Office and the Cabinet should not prejudge what Parliament wants to do.

The honeymoon period is over. The election took place over a year ago now. If the Conservative Members of Parliament are going to make any changes now in terms of democratizing this institution, of making their Prime Minister more sensitive to what they want as individual Members, this is the year it will have to happen. They will need to have to have the guts and the courage to say, "Mr. Prime Minister, don't push us around. We are all equals in this House". Just because the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion says jump, Conservative back-benchers should not ask how high. Just because the Prime Minister says jump, they should not ask how high. They should stand up and be counted. They should speak their minds and say to the Government that it should not prejudge this institution. It should not show that kind of disrespect for the people of Canada but should indeed consult Parliament. If the Government brings a Bill before Parliament and the Bill is passed, then, fine, we can disagree with it, we can complain, but at least the proper method will have been used and respect shown to the Canadian people. I can see many Conservative Members of Parliament restless in their seats, wanting to rise to speak their minds.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: In fact, I see the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake sitting there. He is leaning towards the front just as John Diefenbaker used to lean. But those Hon. Members are afraid, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister is everywhere. It is just like the book 1984. He is Big Brother. Those Conservative Members of Parliament may not get a Cabinet post, they may not become a Parliamentary Secretary and they may not receive things for their ridings if they speak their minds, but I appeal to them to have the courage of their convictions and tell the Prime Minister and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion that they should respect Parliament and the parliamentary tradition.

Perhaps my last word on that point is that if those Members of Parliament want any argument to prove what I have been saying, they should take a look at speech after speech made by Members of their Party when they were in opposition for many years. They should look up the speeches of John Diefenbaker, Ged Baldwin, Robert Stanfield, Joe Clark, Walter Baker and many other distinguished leaders of the Conservative Party. These speeches were all about how important it is to respect the parliamentary tradition and procedures and how the Conservative Party would never, if in office, do like Pierre Trudeau and prejudge what Parliament has to say. A Conservative Government would involve its back-benchers and make sure they were consulted rather than come to Parliament with a Bill which is a fait accompli.

I appeal on those two points to my friends in the Conservative Party and ask them to show a little courage and rise and tell the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion where to get off.

We have a lot of problems in this country, Mr. Speaker. I come from a part of the country where there is a tremendous drought. We need action on things like assistance to farmers to make sure they get the income they need to stay on the farm. We do not need to bail out the big banks in this country. We have sitting across the way, "billion dollar Barbara".

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Garneau: Billion dollar woman.

Mr. Nystrom: Billion dollar woman. That is the kind of thing that is going to happen more and more often if members of the Conservative Party do not get up and speak their minds.

The CDC has had a pretty positive record. It has done a number of things to make Canada a much better country. The company's assets are fairly strong and it has made a fair profit in a number of areas over the years. I say that we should not be selling this successful Crown corporation. It is a move which reflects the Minister's ideology. We know what that is; more free trade with the U.S., greater corporate concentration here in Canada, greater foreign ownership. But I do not think that is the direction in which the Canadian people want to go. I think Canadians want more local initiatives, more self-reliance in developing their own country, more assistance for small business, for co-operatives, worker co-ops, old people and farmers. They want to create jobs from the bottom up, yet this Minister comes in the House with a Bill which will open us up to much greater corporate concentration in fewer and fewer hands. That is the wrong way to go. The Minister said we are open for business. This Bill is not an open for business Bill, it is a sell out Canada Bill. We are selling out Canada to big corporate and foreign interests rather than providing Canadians with the tools to take over their own country's economy, an economy which is more self-reliant and which provides more and more jobs at the local level for the betterment of Canada.

I will take my seat after one last appeal to my friends in the Conservative Party to show a little bit of courage and conviction. Do not let the Minister and the Prime Minister push you around. This Prime Minister is becoming every day more and more like the former Prime Minister. There is no difference between his attitude towards the Parliament of Canada and the attitude of Pierre Trudeau. When the Conservatives were in opposition they found that to be a disgusting thing and said it would never happen to them. But this Prime Minister is doing exactly the same thing. For me, an even bigger disappointment is that the members of his Party are afraid to stand up to him. They are afraid to say, let's democratize this place and show more respect for Parliament and the Canadian people. Is it any wonder that more and more people see the Prime Minister as a phoney and insensitive person who is concentrating more and more power in his own hands? The people of this country are becoming more and more cynical about politicians in general. We can change that, but those people in the Conservative Party can only do it by getting up and showing us that they have some courage. They should show us that they respect the traditions of the Conservative Party, which historically has been a nationalist Party, one which believed in some public intervention in order to make this country much stronger.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments in light of my friend's speech. He mentioned me several times and I appreciate that. I know that all of us from Saskatchewan think of ourselves as progressive, and I would like to thank him for his intervention. In the one year I have been in Parliament it has been interesting to listen to him, and I would like to compliment him on his remarks today. However, if you spend too much time reacting to what a lot of NDP Members say, you only dignify their comments and encourage them in their tilting at windmills.

I want to address a few comments to a specific matter relating to the CDC. Mention has been made this morning of Canterra Energy. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) will know that this company is an integral player in the oil and gas business in my constituency, it has excelled in its field. However, I have some difficulty with the Hon. Member's point that maintaining government ownership or control of that company will benefit the people of Canada. Recently the company issued some of its own shares but, if I am not mistaken, the CDC still controls about 90 per cent of the company. This company is doing some leading work in the heavy oil end of the business in my constituency, so would it not be a better idea to let the people of Canada buy shares in this company and directly participate in its success? It strikes me as odd that the Hon. Member wants the Government to hang on to this company and not let the people of Saskatchewan share in the ownership and control of a company which many of them admire.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I made it very clear in my remarks that I thought the people of this country wanted to diversify ownership. They want more control at the local level. I mentioned the importance of more self-direction and self-reliance, grassroots economics, in the creation of jobs. My complaint about this Bill is that it goes in exactly the opposite direction. It calls for greater corporate concentration. The present legislation requires that the Government maintain a minimum of 10 per cent equity. My God, that is not a stranglehold. It is only 10 per cent. But the Government and the Minister are allowing that to be reduced to zero. I do not see this as a black and white issue, although the Hon. Member seems to. All I am saying is that a 10 per cent equity participation by the Government is not very much. Some 90 per cent of the company would still be held in private hands. My beef, I suppose, is that the Government is now allowing this to be reduced to zero. I think that is absolutely wrong. We want to develop a country with equality between regions. We want fair development of small business. Therefore, the Government must have its foot in the door. It must have some say over the public policy of this institution. The problem my friend raises will become even more of a problem if the Government has no say whatsoever over the direction of the CDC. If it is totally in the hands of a small corporate elite, many of them foreigners, then it will have a lot more problems in developing projects such as the one he refers to than it would have if the Government had at least a 10 per cent equity.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like my friend to tell us whether he believes the Government's decision to sell this final 10 per cent it holds in the CDC is for economic reasons or would he say it was for ideological reasons?

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps the Hon. Member was not here earlier when I said that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is a very dogmatic person when it comes to ideology. He is a small "c" conservative, and the reason this Bill is before Parliament is to push his small "c" ideology on the people of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am very sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but it being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AIR SAFETY

AIR CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, ever since the beginning of the labour dispute between Air Canada and the union representing about 3,000 flight attendants the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has strangely remained silent about the major issue of air safety.

Indeed it has been stated in some circles that the safety of passengers travelling aboard Air Canada flights these days may be jeopardized because of the lack of experience of hastily trained substitutes who replace the regular flight attendants. Mr. Speaker, the Canadian public has the right to be protected.

According to Air Canada flight attendants association member Paul Roy, in an emergency situation such as a fire aboard an aircraft, a passenger suffering from a heart attack, a case of highjacking or any other incident requiring the immediate evacuation of passengers, there is no assurance that the so-called flight attendants would show the calmness, discipline and competence required in such situations.

If the opinion of Mr. Roy is founded, Mr. Speaker, I think it is inconceivable that neither the Minister of Transport nor the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) have seen fit to intervene to solve this Air Canada dispute before an air disaster occurs.

NATIONAL PARKS

ESTABLISHMENT OF ELLESMERE NATIONAL PARK

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House applaud the new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for the announcement he made two days ago in Banff. It has taken several years to finalize arrangements for Ellesmere National Park. Everyone in the House will agree with the Minister that there is no finer way of establishing Canada's sovereignty in the Arctic than through national parks. We urge the Minister, therefore, to create a network of Arctic parks in which Ellesmere represents only the first.

We also applaud the new Minister for the will that he expressed in supporting the establishment of a park in South Moresby, one of the richest wilderness areas in the world. On the eve of Expo 86 the eyes of the world are on us. Premier Bennett will want to let the world know that his Government is positive about preserving the rich ecology of South Moresby for keeps. The area in question represents only .2 per cent of the forest area in B.C. The number of loggers affected is 35. The native peoples are in favour of retaining the wilderness area. Now that the Minister of the Environment has made a strong positive statement, we urge him to negotiate speedily with Victoria.

Recently the federal Government was capable of finding over $250 million to rescue a bank, using taxpayers' money. It surely can find the money needed to protect the heritage of South Moresby considering the strong and enthusiastic support given to the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

RECOUPMENT OF RENT SUBSIDY OVERPAYMENTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, why is there one set of rules when the Government makes a mistake respecting rich people and another when it makes a mistake affecting ordinary Canadians? The Government made a mistake—a very high level mistake—when it took part in an attempt to rescue the Canadian Commercial Bank. As a result, depositors thought that the bank was basically sound. Now that the bank has failed in spite of the Government's assurances, the Government plans to make good its mistake and to use taxpayers' money to bail out depositors. That is how the Government acts when it makes a mistake which affects the well-to-do, but what happens when a Government mistake affects ordinary Canadians?

Between 1982 and 1984 the Government miscalculated and overpaid rent subsidies for married quarters at CFB Esquimalt. Now that this $.5 million mistake has been discovered by the auditors, the Government is deducting the overpayment from the pay cheques of those people who are still in the services. Individual debts range from $100 to $1,700. At the very time when rent increases will strain family budgets, service people face the additional burden of paying for a government mistake. Why can we not have justice rather than a double standard?

LITERACY

PARKDALE PROJECT TO ERADICATE ILLITERACY

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, every September 8 is observed as International Literacy Day by the members of the United Nations around the world. One in four adults in the world cannot read or write. In Canada one in four adults needs help just to read the daily newspaper. Four million Canadians cannot read street signs, fill out job applications, or read labels on consumer goods, simple daily activities which most of us take for granted.

In my riding the Parkdale Community Centre initiated the Parkdale Literacy Project last February through a federal constituency grant. The program presently co-ordinates 35 student-tutor pairs, publishes a monthly newsletter, and organizes such activities as film nights. The most telling success of the program is the student publication which is a collaborative effort of students and tutors. Imagine the sense of pride and personal achievement each student felt seeing words, once intimidating, now in print.

Literacy is an issue of human rights and social justice. Every person should have the right to and benefit of a basic education. Being able to read and to integrate in workaday activities is the first step toward individual advancement. It is the first step toward eradicating illiteracy in Canada. I call on all Canadians to support their local literacy projects. Through awareness and support we can all help the four million Canadians who are unable to read and write, become literate.

AIR CANADA—EFFECT OF FLIGHT ATTENDANTS' STRIKE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members hope the current round of negotiations between the Canadian Airline Flight Attendants and Air Canada will bring an end to the strike and a return to the excellent safety, security and service that the public has become used to with Air Canada. However, Members on this side are deeply concerned about the lack of interest displayed by the Government in safety standards and about its taking sides with the company in a labour dispute.

There have been several instances of underqualified flight attendants being removed from aircraft by the pilot in command because of incompetence, only to be returned to duty on a different aircraft without further training or scrutiny by the MOT. Several other reported instances of flight attendants' incompetence while in the air have also gone uninvestigated by the Ministry of Transport.

This morning the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) asked CALFAA to do his job for him by asking it to provide the evidence for its concern about safety standards. Why is it that the Minister must rely upon the resources of CALFAA to monitor safety in the skys when it is his job? Why has he not increased the number of inspectors for cabin crews from the low level of eight to do his own monitoring, instead of asking the union to give him information that should be at his fingertips?

We are also concerned about the fact that Canada Employment Centres have been used as a recruiting tool by the airline to find strike breakers. This unprecedented move on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) must discontinue because the Government is taking sides in a labour dispute. We believe that air safety should not be jeopardized for political ideology—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Member that his time has expired.

MULTICULTURALISM

APPOINTMENT OF HON. LINCOLN ALEXANDER AS LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has chosen wisely in selecting Hamilton's own Lincoln Alexander as the next Lieutenant-Governor of Onatrio. Linc, as he is known to us in Hamilton, clearly established an outstanding reputation among the voters of Hamilton West that is second to none. I have personally known him for more than 20 years and I can say that he is a man of few pretensions. He enjoyed an excellent rapport with his constituents which would be the envy of every Member today. His continued success in five general elections certainly bears that out.

Similarly, as the Minister of Labour in 1979, and more recently as Chairman of the Workers' Compensation Board, Linc's name was synonymous with public sevice of the highest order. He is certain to bring qualities of dedication, compassion, and dignity, which are prerequisites, to his new position at Queen's Park. His appointment, Mr. Speaker, marks a proud day for my riding of Hamilton West and a historic day for Canada.

SHIPBUILDING

CONTRACTS AWARDED TO ICELANDIC SHIPYARD

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, some things are hard to change. With Canadian shipyards on lay-off struggling for survival, Canadian ship construction, and now repair, refit, and conversion go to foreign yards. All Canadians contribute to the support of the fishing industry. Historically the fishing industry and the shipbuilding and repair industries have gone hand in hand. In the past those yards were there when the fishing industry needed them. It is in the interest of all those fishing that Canadian shipyards survive.

Now two major trawler conversion jobs are to be undertaken in an Icelandic shipyard. We know those off-shore yards are subsidized, but we know as well that it is cheaper to meet that subsidy and keep Canadians working than it is to support the unemployed on assistance programs.

The present government policies, which permit foreign-built vessels to be freely imported and major conversions and repairs to be carried out in foreign yards, result in the loss of thousands of Canadian jobs. If we are to meet the challenges of tomorrow in our marine industry, there must be a review of our shipbuilding policies of today.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

CALL FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the objective of the Young Juveniles Act was to keep girls and boys outside of the criminal process, but it is actually training and encouraging young people who have criminal intentions to become the hardened criminals of the future. They know they can do almost anything they like without any punishment.

For example, a 17-year old man deliberately damaged the vehicle of a constituent of mine and then laughed at the police who had to treat him as a juvenile. The owner had to pay for the damage.

● (1410)

A 10-year old boy who is already a seasoned criminal having been found guilty of theft, possession of stolen property, and arson, played the "big shot" when the police could only take him home to his mother.

In one major city in the first seven months of 1985 there have been over 1,000 offences committed by juveniles, ranging from sexual assault to arson.

I urge the House to give this legislation a major overhaul that will treat 17 and 18-year old youths as adults and not as children, that will lower the chargeable age to seven or at least allow the police and the courts some discretion, and that will permit the police to publish the names and descriptions of youths who are on the rampage and who may commit further heinous crimes.

We are not being kind to children by overlooking such crimes.

Let us change the Act, and take the handcuffs off our police and show our young people that crime does not pay and crime will not pay.

PUBLIC SERVICE

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF FORMER OFFICIAL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that most Members of the House will share with me a sense of relief over the decision not to prosecute Mr. Richard Price, the former employee of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who was charged with allegedly revealing a confidential document which proposed drastic funding cuts to Indian and native programs.

We know that Mr. Price was guilty of no criminal offence. He did not breach any national security. He acted out of conscience. The Government never did admit that the leaked document was authentic.

To the Indian people of Canada, Mr. Price acted courageously and heroically. He acted in the best interests of the Indian people of Canada. The concern and opposition generated in the House and across the country over the document's cynical and irresponsible contents no doubt prevented immediate government implementation of the $300 million suggested cut-back.

The decision not to prosecute Mr. Price was made by the Attorney General of British Columbia. The federal Government's treatment of this gentleman was vindictive in the extreme. Now Mr. Price should be reinstated in the Public Service of Canada. It should be done speedily and should be done graciously.

STATISTICS OF IMPROVEMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Liberal rat packers and NDP naysayers notwithstanding, any objective observer will applaud the substantial accomplishments of the new national Government during its first year of office.

The economic recovery is well on its way. Some 300,000 more Canadians are working now than under the old regime. The Conservative low interest rate policy is working. Rates have declines and astonishing 2.75 per cent to their lowest level in seven years. As a result, housing starts are elevated to a rate of 155,000 units per year.

Business confidence is up, resulting in high investment intentions. Manufacturing orders are up 10 per cent, and retail sales are up 8 per cent.

Inflation has finally been wrestled to its knees. Wherever we look, glowing indicators of the new prosperity abound—all directly attribuable to the eminently sensible policies of the new Conservative Government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF JAPANESE PARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to Oral Question Period may I draw to the attention of the House the presence in our gallery of Mr. Mutsuo Kimura, President of the Japanese House of Councillors and leader of a parliamentary delegation visiting Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

With regard to the other part of the question, I can advise the House that the training taken by the substitute employees is the same training that is given to flight attendants.

Concerning the level of safety, Transport Canada is monitoring the situation very closely.

Mr. Benjamin: What about the inspectors?

Mr. Mazankowski: There are more than eight inspectors, Mr. Speaker. There are over 200 as a matter of fact.

Mr. Benjamin: Not for cabin crews.

Mr. Mazankowski: The whole effort of Transport Canada is behind monitoring, inspecting and ensuring a high level of safety as far as Air Canada's operations are concerned.

CONSEQUENCES OF LABOUR DISPUTE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister was rather lukewarm in his comments to reassure the travelling public, and I think it is his duty or otherwise that of the Minister of Labour to intervene forthwith to help the parties settle a dispute that has gone on long enough—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will please put his supplementary question!

Mr. Ouellet: Is the Minister waiting for tragedy to strike before he decides to act responsibly?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as long as the Parties are negotiating, I think the Hon. Member would want that negotiating process to take place. Surely he does not want to engage in the collective bargaining process on the floor of the House of Commons. I am surprised at him.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance or the Minister who has been answering the questions concerning the Canadian Commercial Bank. The question is really quite simple. When did the Inspector of Banks inform her that the major chartered banks were withdrawing their deposits from the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have a parliamentary inquiry that is going to go into every matter related to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. Deans: This is the House of Commons, answer the question.

Mrs. McDougall: —to the CCB and the Northland Bank. That is an action I volunteered.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I am asking members of the Opposition and members of the New Democratic Party to participate fully in a discussion around this inquiry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIMING OF WITHDRAWALS BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, that indeed is a most amazing answer. Surely this is the most important committee in the land.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: We deserve answers right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Considering that Governor Bouey informed the Finance Committee that he had people in the bank at all times, surely the Minister is in a position to tell us today when the commercial banks were withdrawing their deposits from the CCB. Please inform us today and inform the Canadian public on this important item. When did they start withdrawing the money?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Bank of Canada was standing behind the CCB throughout this, as the Hon. Member knows and as I know, and provided liquidity support to the CCB. The Government of Canada was investigating that time with its monitors, and when the problem became serious we sent in more people to look.

Mr. Broadbent: Wonderful.

Mrs. McDougall: We have taken responsible action. Since when is the NDP forgetting about the small depositors of this bank which we are supporting?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

UTILIZATION OF CANADIAN FUNDS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

In light of the decision made Saturday and for which the Prime Minister deserved congratulations from the Opposition parties—and we are glad that we raised the issue as early as January with respect to Canada's non-participation in the star wars research program—would the Prime Minister assure the House, better than the Minister of National Defence did in the House of Commons yesterday, that Canadian public funds will not be used to assist any Canadian contractor whatsoever in the star war research program right here on Canadian soil?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question was given by the Prime Minister on Saturday. It was repeated by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence yesterday in the House. I can only repeat again that the defence production sharing agreement which has been in place since 1959 will carry on. Any support the Government of Canada might or might not give to companies undertaking research will be done in accordance with existing procedures which were in place while the Hon. Member was in Government, and will reflect Canadian priorities and Canadian needs.

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Will he come clean with the Canadian public? Are we or are we not involved in star wars research programs? Yes or no? Is he trying to do by the back door what he is telling Canadians that he does not want to do by the front door?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I will tell you what we did not do, Mr. Speaker. We did not spring Cruise missiles on the Canadian people unannounced, like that Government ahead of us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That's what we didn't do.

[Translation]

I said so in both French and English. My hon. friend from Bay Street finds that somewhat difficult to understand. Again I repeat it, my words were clear and all Canadians got the message. It is unfortunate that my colleague had the rug pulled right from under his feet. As far as we are concerned, we have made a decision to uphold the interest and integrity of Canada, and I am proud of it.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—PAYMENTS TO FOREIGN BANKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to this $1 billion bail-out for which the Minister of State for Finance is responsible. On a number of occasions she has taken steps to assist the domestic banks. However, does she really believe that it is appropriate to expect Canadian taxpayers to cough up $1 billion to bail out the largest depositors, which are the foreign banks? Is the Minister really saying that Chase Manhattan, Barclays, and Bank America need help from the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have told the House that the people we are moving to protect are small Canadian towns, hospitals, and colleges. They cannot have it both ways. They are saying that the domestic banks pulled out and that we should not pay the foreign banks. What are they talking about?

BANK AUDITORS' REPORT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Ordinary Canadians on Main Street are being asked to bail out the foreign bankers on Bay Street. We in this Party think that that process must now come to a start—come to a stop.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a good time to stop the preamble and to start the question.

Mr. Riis: I think I will try that again, Mr. Speaker.

During the collapse of the bank, of course auditors were sent in and they reported to the Inspector General of Banks. Did the Minister communicate directly with the bank auditors? She knows that the financial statements which they are presenting ought to be in the fiction section of a library. Knowing that, did she actually sit down to talk with those auditors about the real state of the of the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the auditors of a bank report to the shareholders. The parliamentary committee looked into that to a very considerable extent. The monitors were in from the Inspector General's office through the spring. We were watching the situation very carefully with our own people and through our officials. We sent in bank examiners and private sector people to take a look at that bank, and we took the most responsible action of any Government in response to a situation which was created long before our time.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—COST TO TAXPAYERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Having forced the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank, I hope the Minister will stand in his place today and respond to questions completely within his jurisdiciton.

I know how concerned he is about the deficit and I know that the Prime Minister has added to the uncertain climate of the country by saying that Canada is broke. However, what will he do to repair the $1 billion-plus loss as a result of the liquidation of the Canadian Commercial Bank? Will he raise taxes? Will he withdraw aid from Canadian farmers or Atlantic fishermen? Where will he find that $1 billion?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first, I am not going to say to the House of Commons that the Governor of the Bank of Canada misled the House of Commons, as the Leader of the Opposition did yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He owes an apology to the Governor of the Bank of Canada, or should step outside the House and repeat those allegations and substantiate them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In response to the question from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the figure that he has mentioned is not necessarily the right one. We don't know what that figure will be—let us be frank—it is a substantial figure. At that point in time that amount will be added to the size of the deficit and any further action will have to be taken at the time of the next Budget.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think my remarks about the Governor will be borne out if Hon. Members will read the transcript of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for Thursday, May 9. I will leave it at that.

WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question for the Minister of Finance relates to obvious insider trading in the deposits of the Canadian Commercial Bank before the plug was pulled by the Minister.

Did he personally or did his aides communicate directly or indirectly with senior executives of the major financial institutions, trust companies, banks, insurance companies, in Toronto or Montreal during the months of July or August? If not, how does he explain the coincidental withdrawal of deposits during those months conveniently before the plug was pulled, leaving the pensioners with pension funds in Air Canada and Canadian National to bear the brunt of the loss?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the allegations made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition are extraordinarily serious and are a subject for the Ontario Securities Commission, as he well knows.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of State for Finance is obviously not able to respond to that question. It was a personal question to the Minister of Finance relating to his conduct and that of his staff.

EXPLANATIONS REQUESTED FOR GIVING FOREIGN BANKS MILLIONS OF DOLLARS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a third question.

Could the Minister explain why he is paying millions of dollars to foreign banks which had deposits with the Canadian Commercial Bank but is refusing to pay a cent to pension funds that had shares in this bank?

How can he give millions of dollars to foreign banks and not provide any compensation for Canadian pension funds?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have moved to meet a situation whereby we are paying uninsured depositors in this bank. They include such things as small hospitals in the Province of Alberta.

MINISTER'S MARCH STATEMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. On March 25 the Minister stated that the bail-out package for the Canadian Commercial Bank was based in part on an on-site assessment of assets. We now learn that at the end of June the Minister appointed an independent consultant to examine the bank's assets and that the decision to liquidate was later, after he reported on August 14. Does the Minister still stand behind her statement of March 25?

• (1420)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in this House many times that we took advice in March and that we acted on the best possible advice. We continued to pursue the matter in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer and took a different decision later.

DEPOSITS WITHDRAWN BY CHARTERED BANKS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. By August the Minister had the consultant's report, the Inspector of Banks had talked to the six banks which participated in the bail-out, and the CCB's president had been called to Ottawa for meetings. Can the Minister assure the House unequivocally that none of this activity and knowledge resulted in certain depositors in the financial institution being able to move their money while the hospitals of which the Minister spoke were left unprotected?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think we have indicated by the action we have taken with the uninsured depositors that we have not left them unprotected.

WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS FROM CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance). In March, the chartered banks co-operated with the federal Government in order to save the Canadian Commercial Bank. Yesterday we were told that a number of banks had removed their deposits from the Canadian Commercial Banks.

My question is as follows: Could the Minister inform the House today whether the same banks were involved in both cases?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the chartered banks, like other business organizations, make decisions, commercial decisions, every day. The depositors that we have moved to save include some small towns in Alberta and some small towns in British Columbia.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister that all kinds of small groups of Canadians, whether in hospital funds, pensioners, or municipalities, were not asked to participate in the original bail-out. The banks were, and that is why this question has to be answered.

I would like to ask her again, if, as has been suggested, the banks that participated in the bail-out shortly thereafter withdrew funds from the bailed out bank, surely they helped scuttle a project they were supposed to save. Can the Minister tell us if she found out, or if she had her officials find out at the time whether the banks involved in the original bail-out shortly thereafter took funds out of the bank they were supposed to help save?

Mr. Benjamin: Insider information.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the banks took part in a support package in March in order to help us reach a decision on the basis of the banking system. Whatever actions they took thereafter, they would take in their commercial interests.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: The revolving door again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE INQUIRIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I want to say to the Minister that she has an obligation to be speaking for the people of Canada here, not for the banks of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: She should understand that.

Considering that the people of Canada put up millions of dollars in March and are now being asked to put up perhaps in excess of $1 billion, will she find out for the House, use her ministerial office and exercise her responsibility, whether the banks that participated in the original bail-out with the people of Canada subsequently helped scuttle the project by taking money out themselves? Will she exercise her responsibility for once?

An Hon. Member: Resign.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has totally lost interest in what we have tried to do in the last week, namely, to look after the small depositors in this bank, which include small businesses and others—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR CANADA

PASSENGER SAFETY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in view of the strike by some 3,000 Air Canada flight attendants which is entering its fourth week, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can advise the travelling public that it is perfectly safe to fly Air Canada. More specifically, does the Minister believe that the training being given to those who are replacing the flight attendants is adequate?

Furthermore, could the Minister give the House the assurance that the Pratt & Whitney engines used on Air Canada's 727 and DC-9 aircraft have been checked and that these engines are in perfect condition?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): First, Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member and other Members will be pleased to know that the negotiations have resumed between CALFAA and the airline. We hope those will be productive.

BANK'S LENDING PRACTICES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance).

[English]

Last night the CBC television program Venture highlighted the fact that the bad lending practices continued in March after the Government stepped in. For example, we have learned that the Canadian Commercial Bank gave a second $4 million loan at a 30 per cent rate of interest to a construction company in Nova Scotia. That was not in the energy sector of western Canada.

The Minister of State for Finance just told us that many people were looking at the affairs of the bank. Why did she allow the Canadian Commercial Bank to continue these bad lending practices which were responsible in the first instance for the bankruptcy of the bank? Why did she not stop those bad lending practices?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the reason that we were watching the bank very carefully throughout the period of the spring and summer was to ensure that it would serve the interest that we had helped to support, which was the interest of western Canada. We looked at the bank from every aspect over the course of six months and, when we came to the decision that the bank should be closed, we closed the bank.

ALLEGED DISCUSSIONS WITH TORONTO INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have more questions, but we still have most of this week to get back to these aspects of the case. I would like to get back to the Minister of Finance.

Earlier, the Leader of the Official Opposition asked a very specific and very clear question, which none of the Ministers in the House could answer. I would like to repeat the question put by the Leader of my Party.

[English]

Did the Minister of Finance or any of his personal staff call the senior management of Toronto financial institutions in July or August to discuss the potential collapse of western Canada's Canadian Commercial Bank? It is a very simple question. Could the Minister answer it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I saw those allegations in the press this morning. I checked in my office. I have been unable to find out that there is any way to substantiate those allegations.

WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Did she know at any time prior to Labour Day weekend, when the announcement was made, that the Canadian Commercial Bank was to close? Did she know that the Canadian domestic banks were withdrawing substantial sums of money from the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, yes, there was evidence that some of the banks were withdrawing their deposits. I have no power to stop that. We will have a parliamentary inquiry into everything which happened surrounding CCB and Northland. I would hope that those questions would be addressed to the bankers and to the people involved.

SIZE OF WITHDRAWALS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Did she investigate the amounts being taken out by the Canadian domestic banks? Did she determine whether in fact those banks were the same ones which had entered into the agreement with the Government to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank? Did she take steps to insist that those banks live up to their responsibilities and protect the small shareholders?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the House that I have no power to direct the banks to leave their deposits in or to take them out. The banks were shareholders in this bank along with ourselves. It was in their interest to act in their best interest and in the interest of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

PUBLIC WORKS

CONSTRUCTION OF CANADA PLACE IN EDMONTON

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Last June 1 asked the Minister why the construction of Edmonton's Canada Place had been delayed. Two and a half months have now gone by and there is still no action. Can the Minister give me a definite date for construction and can he tell me why it has taken a full year for this project to get on the road?

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I remember clearly answering the Hon. Member that I hoped construction on Canada Place in Edmonton would start during the summer. I think Hon. Members will understand that, considering the scope of the project in Edmonton, there are some adjustments to be discussed by the City of Edmonton, Public Works and the company in charge. Today, I am delighted to be able to inform the Hon. Member that according to information I received this morning, my Alberta colleagues and I will be attending the first sod-turning before October 30.

WESTERN DROUGHT—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Considering that the Government is willing to spend $1 billion on the Canadian Commercial Bank fiasco and considering the desperate situation that is facing thousands of farmers in western Canada because of the worst drought since the 1930s, which is driving many of them to welfare and off their farms, can the Minister tell us when he will announce a program to assist the grain growers of western Canada? Can he tell us when funds will be put in the hands of the grain growers so that they may be compensated for this situation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question and I know that, if he takes the time to check the record, he will find that there has been more action taken by this Government in the past eight months than was taken by the previous Government in the last eight years. He will also realize that we have had a team on the scene in western Canada chaired and provided with great leadership by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Assiniboia. He will know that shortly after that, within about a 10-day period, a report was given to us and we responded by providing $48 million through Phase I of the Government's commitment to action with respect to the very serious drought condition in western Canada.

I hope to receive a report prepared by this same excellent federal-provincial committee within the next two weeks with reference to other actions that we may take with respect to the crop—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR DIRECT PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister did not answer my question. He has been procrastinating not only on this matter but on the matter of tripartite red meat and many other issues. When the Minister makes a decision about drought compensation for the western grain sector, I wonder if he will ensure that the payments are made directly to the farmers so that the benefits will not be grabbed off by the provincial Governments as occurred in Saskatchewan with the assistance that was provided for the livestock producers.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had the patience, he would find that when we make a decision with reference to the crop loss aspect of the matter, Phase II, we will be dealing as fairly and equitably as we did in the first phase with respect to the livestock contributions.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the devastating drought in western Canada and the fact that the Minister has not spent one cent to help western grain farmers. Can the Minister explain to the House and to western grain farmers how the Government can find millions of dollars, courtesy of "Billion Dollar Barbara"—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nystrom: —to bail out foreign bank depositors, without finding a single penny to help western grain farmers suffering from a devastating drought? Can he explain that to the House?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that observation is completely inaccurate and erroneous. If the Hon. Member would look at what we have done in the last eight months he would find that the total amount of action that we have taken amounts to something in the vicinity of $1.4 billion in the hands of Canadian farmers—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member will certainly recall our commitment to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act so that we could make an interim payment, and my colleague, the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board, amended that Act and indeed placed in the hands of western farmers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is both a long answer and a speech.

SITUATION OF GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question was put to the Minister of Finance as he controls the purse strings. I would like to know from him why the Government has not spent one penny to assist the western grain farmers. I know the Government has spent a few peanuts, like $48 million for the cattle producers in the West, but why has nothing whatsoever been spent on western grain farmers while millions of dollars are spent bailing out the big shareholders and depositors because of the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank? Explain that to the ordinary farmers.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first let me remind the Hon. Member that there are a number of farmers who deposited in and borrowed from the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. That is one of the principal reasons why the Minister of State for Finance did what she did. The second reason why I did not answer the first question is that my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, has so many things he has to say that he did not have an opportunity to get them all out before Mr. Speaker asked him to sit down.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the future of Terratransport, the Newfoundland Railway, and the approximately 1,000 people who depend upon that railway in the Province of Newfoundland. Can the Minister tell the House whether or not the federal Government has taken a decision with respect to its future commitment to the Newfoundland Railway and can he tell us as well whether or not, after approximately six months of negotiations with the Province of Newfoundland, the federal Government is now prepared to commit the funds necessary to modernize that railway so that it may continue its operations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the last five-year agreement respecting the Newfoundland Railway was put together by this Government when it was in office in 1979. The agreement has expired and there are negotiations and discussions taking place with the province. I will be meeting with representatives of the province next week and I will be visiting Newfoundland later next week.

FUTURE OF RAILWAY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that rumours are running rampant in Newfoundland that the railway is going to be shut down by hook or by crook. Is the Minister now prepared to make a commitment in this House that the Government of Canada, in conjunction with the Government of Newfoundland, will not pursue a course of action that will cause either the immediate shutdown of the Newfoundland Railway or the strangulation of the railway over the next year or two because of the pricing practices that are currently going on in that railway? Is the Minister prepared to tell the 1,000 employees today that their jobs are safe and that they will have them five years from now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, most of the rumour, innuendo and fear was started by that Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Most of it bears no resemblance to fact and has no foundation. The Government does not move unilaterally. It will discuss with the province the future of transportation in the Province of Newfoundland in its global context. There are more issues that need to be addressed than simply the railway. There is the issue of roads and ferry services as well. We are going to be discussing this with the province next week. When a decision is reached, I am sure that I will be very pleased to let the Hon. Member know about it.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance arising out of the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the billion dollar bail-out for which she is responsible. Can the Minister say, now that we have established that chartered banks which were part of the rescue effort back in March began soon after to withdraw their deposits, when she became aware that the chartered banks that were meant to help save the Canadian Commercial Bank were in fact working to scuttle it?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we were aware during the spring of many of the activities in the Canadian Commercial Bank. There were many depositors who withdrew their deposits at that time. They had every right to do so, no matter whether they were a chartered bank, a union or anything else. The depositors that remained, including a major Canadian cultural organization and a major Canadian union, are the organizations we are looking after.

INSPECTOR'S DISCUSSIONS WITH CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Inspector General of Banks indicated to the committee yesterday that he had confidential discussions with the chartered bank presidents, or with their officers, about the condition of the Canadian Commercial Bank. Will the Minister agree, therefore, that the banks were working on the basis of that confidential information as well? Why should the banks be privileged to get their deposits out when other depositors did not have that type of information on which to act?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what a parliamentary inquiry is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: That is why I have asked the House for a parliamentary inquiry. I hope it will be conducted in a spirit which will help us create a better environment in the future with respect to our financial institutions.

Oral Questions

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It deals with saving young Canadians from lives of crime. Will the Minister consider bringing in amendments to the Young Offenders Act which will enable the police to deal more effectively with crimes committed by 17 and 18-year old youths and by juveniles?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I take up my new responsibilities, may I start by thanking the Right Hon. Prime Minister for giving me something easy for a change.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, jealousy will get those fellows nowhere.

The Hon. Member has had long-standing concerns, as have a number of other Members, with respect to the Young Offenders Act. I have asked my staff to bring me up to date at an early stage on the provisions in the Act, the philosophy behind it, and the provisions of the previous legislation, with a view to ensuring that I am made fully aware of what concerns there are and of what problems may have to be addressed in a legislative sense.

It is still early in the life of the new Act to make any final decisions. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that I will be consulting broadly.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PLACEMENT OF LEGAL BUSINESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, since I am on my feet now I would like to take this opportunity to wish the new Solicitor General well in a tough job.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last Saturday's The Citizen, of Ottawa, reported a favour conferred by the Export Development Corporation, a Crown corporation, on a close personal friend of the Prime Minister in the form of taking legal business from an existing firm and awarding it to another firm which the close personal friend had just joined. Bill Fox in the Prime Minister's office told CP that categorically and absolutely the Prime Minister's office had no involvement in the matter whatsoever. Did the Prime Minister himself play any role whatsoever, direct or indirect, with respect to Sam Wakim's firm obtaining the Export Development business, or was it merely a coincidence?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no, I played no role in business going to that very reputable firm, even though—and I do not wish to offend any legal spirits—it is widely known that the Leader of the Opposition did not join McMillan Binch to write trust deeds. It was widely known that he had a certain attractiveness to clients.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mulroney: All lawyers try to get business. What is wrong with that?

INQUIRY OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister discuss the prospective work with Mr. Wakim before it was awarded, or with any government office holder, to use the terms of the new conflict of interest guidelines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had no such discussions. However, may I ask the Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Mulroney: Has the Hon. Member personally visited law firms in Toronto to ascertain whether he could secure any allegations against Mr. Wakim? Perhaps he could tell the House whether or not that was the case.

Mr. Kaplan: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—DEMAND FOR STRONG ECONOMIC SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday I was denied the courtesy of a response when I asked the hon. gentleman, as I ask him again today, what loud voices he is listening to which are more compelling than the 77 per cent of black South Africans and their most respected leaders who are demanding strong economic sanctions against the South African regime?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have made statements, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs has announced serious policies and sanctions, which convey this Government's attitude of absolute adhorrence with respect to the policy of apartheid practised by the Government of South Africa. I have had conversations, as has the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with people ranging from Bishop Tutu to other leaders involved in the process who have shared their views with us.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs announced in early July, prior to many other friendly nations, serious policies which indicate the strong abhorrence of this Government vis-à-vis apartheid. I believe the Secretary of State shortly will be announcing further stands which I think the Hon. Member will find helpful and appropriate for the Government of Canada.

CANADA'S ROLE IN COMMONWEALTH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Bishop Tutu expressed utter contempt for the American action, which was cited as an example by the Prime Minister's colleague. Will the Prime Minister not accept the judgment of oppressed South Africans that tough sanctions are necessary, even if it requires their sacrifice, impose mandatory sanctions and go to the Commonwealth Conference to exert the kind of leadership that black South Africa expects?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister has indicated, I will be making another statement with respect to South Africa later this week. However, I simply wish to anticipate that somewhat to say that it is the view of this Government that one of the cards which Canada holds, which may have some influence on ending a totally unacceptable regime in South Africa, is, in fact, our membership and our influence in the Commonwealth. That involves a patient exercise of that influence, which is the way we intend to proceed.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MODERNIZATION PROJECT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On May 17 last I asked the Minister: When will the federal Government let the people of Sydney, Nova Scotia, know when the second phase of the modernization of Sydney Steel Corporation will begin? He stated, on that day, "very soon". I wish to ask the Minister the same question today, September 10. When will this announcement be made? Give us the exact date.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, even sooner.

However, I would like to continue by telling the Hon. Member that yesterday I had an opportunity to speak to Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia on this subject. We have arranged to meet in the coming week to discuss, first, a report which is now in hand with respect to the alternatives with regard to Sysco. I think we will be able to make an announcement, as I say, even sooner.

TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the meeting with Premier Buchanan will bring the same results as did the last ones. When will the Minister make an announcement approving the second phase of the modernization of Sydney Steel Corporation? Give the people an exact date. Stop leading them down the garden path.

Privilege—Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)

● (1500)

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, this is not by any means solely a federal matter. It is a Province of Nova Scotia matter. I am consulting with the Premier and after that meeting we will be in a much better position to give an answer, such as a possible date to which the Hon. Member is referring.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Monday, September 9, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) by filing with the Clerk of the House also meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petition presented by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) by filing with the Clerk of the House does not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of notice of a question of privilege, I take it, from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a question of privilege. I would not have entered into the issue of whether Sam Wakim, the former classmate of the Prime Minister at St. Xavier, had received legal business from the Export Development Corporation had not the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gratuitously intervened the way he did to suggest or to imply that when I was in private law practice, the firm in which I was honoured to be a partner received legal business from the federal Government. That happens not to be a fact. I never sought any business during my private law practice from the Government of Canada, nor have I received it. I want the Prime Minister to be clear about that.

I also want the House to understand that the connotation of the Prime Minister's question in return to my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), as to whether the Hon. Member had telephoned or sought information from law firms in Toronto, illustrates that the Prime Minister knew more about this issue that he let on to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And if the right hon. gentleman would like, I would suggest that we bring the whole issue before the Committee on Privileges and Elections to find out what Sam Wakim did to peddle his wares to a number of law firms in Toronto to see whether he could get that business and then invite two members of the law firm of Gowling Henderson to leave that law firm and join him with the new business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of privilege involved.

Some Hon. Members: Up, up, up!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Right Hon. Member knows full well that I must find that he has not raised a question of privilege.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): To my recollection, I may be wrong—and if I am, I will apologize to my hon. friend—I think he raised the name of Mr. Wakim yesterday. I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) raised it yesterday, which is the first time it was placed on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Wakim is a former Member of this House. He is a former distinguished chief counsel to the Ontario Securities Commission. He is a very honourable man. I am honoured to have him as my friend. There was no suggestion at any time that any lawyer, be it the Hon. Member from Shawinigan or be it the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra when he was practising law, or myself when I was practising law, that when we were all out looking for business and got business, there was anything wrong with looking for clients.

Mr. Lapierre: That's not what he said.

Mr. Mulroney: It is widely known that lawyers do that. I have never at any time impugned the integrity of my right hon. friend.

Ms. Copps: Ten minutes ago.

Mr. Mulroney: But I think my hon. friend would think less of me if I sat in my place and allowed anyone directly or indirectly to slander someone who is not here in the House to defend himself. And that is exactly what I am going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I want to say that the Hon. Member for Shawinigan is associated with a distinguished Toronto law firm—

Ms. Copps: Oh, sit down. That's not a point of order.

Mr. Mulroney: The Hon. Member from Shawinigan represents clients here and in Toronto, New York and Montreal. They are very important clients. He goes out and seeks them and represents them and I wish him well because that is an honourable calling. I do not criticize him for it, and I won't stand for criticism of anyone else in that situation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: And you protest too much.

Mr. Blaikie: There are too many lawyers in here anyway.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I am forced to come to the defence of lawyers. That would pain me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POINT OR ORDER

STATEMENT BY LEADER OF OPPOSITION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I indicated to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) my intention to raise this point of order at the beginning of Proceedings today once I had the opportunity of seeing Hansard from yesterday which came late today as Your Honour will know.

I rise on the basis of exchanges yesterday between the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. It is to be found at page 6391 of Hansard. I am sure you will be aware, Mr. Speaker, of Citation 321(3) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states in part:

> The Speaker has traditionally protected from attack a group of individuals commonly referred to as "those of high official station". The extent of this group has never been defined. Over the years it has covered senior public servants—

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition clearly made an attack on the integrity on the Governor of the Bank of Canada. He said in the House yesterday, and I quote:

> The question really relates to the fact that the House was misled . . . being misled by the . . . Governor of the Bank of Canada.

The point of order which I wish to raise is a very serious one. An unsubstantiated accusation has been made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, who is an officer of the House, Sir, which constitutes an attack on a senior public servant who, in discharging his responsibilities, gave advice to the Government.

When the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, who is an experienced Parliamentarian, engages in a partisan attack on a leading public administrator, our system is undermined. The Prime Minister can defend himself. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) can defend himself. The Governor of the Bank of Canada cannot.

Mr. Ouellet: Come on.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: To say that the Governor misled the House is, I suggest, Sir, using the privileges of Parliament to protect oneself against an action which, very simply, if stated outside the House of Commons and outside of the protection of the House of Commons would be libelous in nature and subject to the commencement of legal proceedings, in my estimation.

Mr. Gauthier: What a lawyer!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It has been the custom here for Hon. Members of this House, when they have uttered words which in effect constitute an attack upon a senior government official—with whom the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has had personal contact in his ministerial capacity—to do the honourable thing; stand in their place and withdraw the offending words and apologize, in this case, to the Governor of the Bank of Canada. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to find that there has been a breach in terms of Beauchesne and to ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to withdraw his remarks and apologize to Mr. Bouey.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the point of order raised by the House Leader. He did give me verbal notice of his intent to do this as the House began proceedings this afternoon. What I said was, and I quote:

> The question really relates to the fact that the House was misled, including this side of the House, when we supported the Minister of Finance in the original bail-out Bill for that purpose. That is what it gets down to—the question of incompetence and the House being misled by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and indeed, the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

Those are the words which are being challenged. Let me go to the technical point first. If one looks at Citation 320 in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition we find, in looking at the word "misled", that it has been consistently held by the House that it must be "deliberately misled".

I submit to Your Honour that if you go further to Citation 321, which relates to protected persons, that is to say not just Hon. Members of the House but those persons traditionally protected, you find they are a group of individuals commonly referred to as "those of high official station". I am not going to argue for the purposes of your ruling, Mr. Speaker, whether the Governor of the Bank of Canada is of high official station or not, but I will assume he is. I will concede that point. However, I submit to Your Honour that the same judgment you have to apply concerning misleading statements or unparliamentary language regarding Members of this House should also be applied against protected persons. In other words, I used the word "misled"; I did not use the words "deliberately misled". I also want to refer Your Honour to Citation 323(2) regarding unparliamentary language, which reads:

> The proper time to raise such a point of order is when the words are used and not afterwards.

Even if there were a point of order, it is already too late. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) points out that it was challenged by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) yesterday, but not on a point of order. I also refer Your Honour to Citation 324(2), which reads:

> An expression which is deemed to be unparliamentary today does not necesarily have to be deemed unparliamentary next week.

Let us get down to the substance. What I said to the House, and the tone of my questions to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, who ducked, and to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), was that when they came before the House in March and then in April to ask for the support of the House for the original bail-out of $255 million, we on this side of the House were assured—and the Liberal Party agreed to the bail-out only on the basis of the assurance—that it would render the bank viable.

Mr. Dick: Where?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let me just cite the words of the Minister of Finance. This is the issue, and I am going right to the substance, Mr. Speaker. This is what the Minister said on March 25, 1985.

An Hon. Member: This is no point of order.

Mr. Kaplan: You asked for it.

Mr. Chrétien: You raised it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am now saying that not only did I not use the words "deliberately misled", but there was a misleading. This is what the Minister of Finance said, as reported at page 3321 of Hansard:

> So I think that is a very broad support program for the bank indicating the confidence that not just the Government of Canada but the Province of Alberta, as well as the Canadian chartered banks, have in the future viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank—

They have confidence in the future viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank. We took that assurance. The Minister of State for Finance said on the same day, as reported at page 3310 of Hansard:

> —an agreement was reached this morning . . . which will ensure the long-term viability of this Edmonton-based bank.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what did the Governor say?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Penner: He is the Leader of the Opposition!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He is a fool nonetheless.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that I have a duty to remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) that I need to find where this argument ties into the point of order. I therefore—

Mr. Lapierre: Well, listen to him first.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) will please bear with me. Therefore, since I sense that he is attempting to reintroduce into this discussion the question of a fact with regard to a misleading statement, which

I think he will know departs from the question of the point of order, I must ask him to restrict himself to the issue of a point of order and not to a factual question which may or may not have occurred sometime in the past.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am addressing the point of order not only with regard to procedure but also with regard to substance. My submission is that not only did the Minister of Finance tell this House that the bank would then be viable, but the Governor of the Bank of Canada, appearing before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, on several occasions which I could recite to Your Honour, said categorically that this arrangement would render the bank viable. That is what I said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is only day two.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not the Liberals were misled in March and April. Frankly, I do not know whether or not the Speaker should find that if they were, the acceptance and admission of that by the Leader of the Official Opposition constitutes a breach of order or privilege. The same applies to the use of unparliamentary language. All I do know, Sir, is that we were not misled and we voted against the package because we saw through it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) for a speech which was so clearly on a question of order.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has raised a point of order relating to the use of language in yesterday's Question Period. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition quite properly cites Beauchesne's regarding when it is appropriate to draw matters such as this to the attention of the Chair. He goes further to ask me to consider questions of fact. I think he knows full well that I cannot do so even though, for his reasons, he may wish to put them in the record.

I must find, under the practices of the House, that whatever happened yesterday happened yesterday, and it happened yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, sovereignty can be a very emotional issue in this country, and that is quite understandable, since sovereignty involves the identity and the very character of a people. We Canadians want to be ourselves. We want to manage our own affairs and control our own destiny, but we also want to go beyond this to play a constructive role in a world that is become increasingly inter-dependent. We have something to offer and at the same time we have something to gain.

Since it came to power, this Government has shown a keen interest in the sovereignty issue. We have consolidated national unity, because a house divided cannot stand. We have reinforced the national economy, because sovereignty means nothing without solvency. Unity and strength: these are the hallmark of sovereignty and of the policies and achievements of this Government.

[English]

We have declared a Canadian ownership policy in respect of foreign investment in the publishing industry. We have made our own Canadian decisions on controversial issues of foreign policy, whether in Nicaragua or South Africa. We have passed the Foreign Extraterritorial Measures Act to block unacceptable claims of jurisdiction by foreign Governments or foreign courts seeking to extend their writ to Canada. We have arrested foreign trawlers poaching in our fishing zones. We have taken important steps to bolster and improve Canada's defences, notably in increasing Canadian forces in Europe and in putting into place a new North Warning System to protect Canadian sovereignty over our northern airspace.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As well, Sir, we have reconstructed relations with traditional friends and allies who have welcomed our renewed unity and strength and the confidence they generate.

Sir, my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), and other Ministers of this Government on other occasions, will be making announcements through the life of this Parliament on other steps this Government intends to take to assert and guarantee the sovereignty and independence of Canada. In domestic policy, foreign policy, and defence policy the Government has given Canadian sovereignty a new impetus within a new maturity. However, Sir, much remains to be done. The voyage of the Polar Sea demonstrated that Canada, in the past, had not developed the means to ensure our sovereignty over time. During that voyage, Canada's legal position was fully protected, but when we looked for ways to exercise our sovereignty we found that the Canadian cupboard was nearly bare. We obtained from the United States a formal and explicit assurance that the voyage of the Polar Sea was without prejudice to Canada's legal position. That, Sir, is an assurance which the Government of the day in 1969 did not receive for the voyage of the Manhattan and of the two United States Coast Guard ice breakers. Sir, whatever was done this summer, and however it may contrast with what was done before, nonprejudicial arrangements will not be enough in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The voyage of the Polar Sea has left no trace on Canada's Arctic waters and no mark on Canada's Arctic sovereignty. It is behind us and our concern must be for what lies ahead. Many countries, including the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany, are actively preparing now for commercial navigation in Arctic waters. Developments are accelerating in ice science, ice technology, and in tanker design. Several major Japanese firms are moving to capture the market for ice breaking tankers once polar oil and gas come on stream. Soviet submarines are being deployed under the Arctic ice pack and the United States Navy has, in turn, identified a need to gain Arctic operational experience to counter new Soviet deployments.

The implications for Canada are clear. As the western country with by far the greatest frontage on the Arctic, we must come up to speed in a range of marine operations that bear on our capacity to exercise effective control over the Northwest Passage and our other Arctic waters. To this end, Sir, I wish to declare to the House the policy of the Government in respect of Canadian sovereignty in Arctic waters, and to make a number of announcements as to how we propose to give expression to that policy.

Canada is an Arctic nation. The international community has long recognized that the Arctic mainland and islands are a part of Canada like any other, but the Arctic is not only a part of Canada, it is a part of Canadian greatness. The policy of the Government is to preserve that Canadian greatness undiminished. Canada's sovereignty in the Arctic is indivisible. It embraces land, sea and ice. It extends without interruption to the seaward-facing coasts of the Arctic islands. These islands are joined, and not divided, by the waters between them. They are bridged for most of the year by ice. From time immemorial Canada's Inuit people have used and occupied the ice as they have used and occupied the land. The policy of the Government is to maintain the natural unity of the Canadian Arctic archipelago and to preserve Canada's sovereignty over land, sea and ice undiminished and undivided.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That Canadian sovereignty has long been upheld by Governments of this country. However, no previous Government has defined its precise limits or delineated Canada's internal waters and territorial sea in the Arctic. This Government proposes to do so. An Order in Council establishing straight baselines around the outer perimeter of the Canadian Arctic archipelago has been signed today and will come into effect on January 1, 1986.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): These baselines define the outer limit of Canada's historical internal waters. Canada's territorial waters extend 12 miles seaward off the baselines. While the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act requires 60 days notice only for the establishment of fishery limits, we consider prior notice should also be given for this important step of establishing straight baselines.

Canada's jurisdiction over its continental margin and 200-mile fishing zone is unchallenged in the Arctic as elsewhere. Canada also exercises jurisdiction over a 100-mile pollution prevention control zone in arctic waters, in order to protect the unique ecological balance in the area. That too has been recognized by the international community, in a special provision in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea.

However, no previous government had ever extended the application of Canadian civil and criminal laws to offshore zones in the Arctic and elsewhere. The present Government will take this action. To this end, one of our priorities will be the speedy passage of legislation covering the offshore application of Canada laws.

The exercise of functional jurisdiction in Arctic waters is essential to Canadian interests. However, it is no substitute for Canada's full sovereignty over the waters of the Arctic archipelago. Only with full sovereignty can we protect the entire range of Canadian interests. Full sovereignty is vital to Canada's security. It is vital to the Inuit people. And it is vital to Canada's national identity.

The policy of this Government is to exercise full sovereignty in and on the waters of the Arctic Archipelago and this applies to the airspace above as well. We will accept no substitute.

[English]

The policy of the Government is also to encourage the development of the navigation in Canadian Arctic waters. Our goal is to make the Northwest Passage a reality for Canadians and foreign shipping as a Canadian waterway.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Navigation, however, will be subject to the controls and other measures required for Canada's security, for the preservation of the environment, and for the welfare of the Inuit and other inhabitants of the Canadian Arctic. In due course the Government will announce the further steps it is taking to implement these policies, and especially to provide more extensive marine support services, to strengthen regulatory structures, and to reinforce the necessary means of control. I am announcing today that the Government has decided to construct a Polar Class-8 ice-breaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): My colleagues, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) will shortly bring to Cabinet recommendations with regard to the design and construction plans. The costs are very high, in the order of $.5 billion, but the Government is not about to conclude that Canada cannot afford the Arctic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Meanwhile, we are taking immediate steps to increase surveillance overflights over Arctic waters by Canadian Forces aircraft. In addition, we are now making plans for naval activity in Eastern Arctic waters in 1986. Canada is a strong and responsible member of the international community. Our strength and our responsibility make us all the more aware of the need for co-operation with other countries, and especially with our friends and allies. Co-operation is necessary, not only in defence of our own interests, but in defence of the common interests of the international community. Co-operation adds to our strength and in no way diminishes our sovereignty. The policy of the Government is to offer its co-operation to its friends and allies and to seek their co-operation in return.

• (1530)

We are prepared to explore with the United States all means of co-operation that might promote the respective interests of both countries as Arctic friends, neighbours and allies in the Arctic waters of Canada and Alaska. The United States has been made aware that Canada wishes to open talks on this matter in the near future. Any co-operation with the United States or with other Arctic nations shall only be on the basis of full respect for Canada's sovereignty. That too has been made clear.

In 1970, the Government of the day barred the International Court of Justice from hearing disputes that might arise concerning the jurisdiction exercised by Canada for the prevention of pollution in Arctic waters. The Government of that day said to that court, "Your jurisdiction shall not affect Canada. We will not put our case before that court". This Government will remove that bar. Indeed, we have today notified the Secretary General of the United Nations that Canada is withdrawing the 1970 reservation to its acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court.

The Arctic is a heritage for the people of Canada. They are determined to keep their heritage entire and to keep their heritage intact. The policy of this Government is to give full expression to that determination.

We challenge no established rights, for none have been established except by Canada. We set no precedents for other areas, for no other area compares with the Canadian Arctic archipelago. We are confident in our position. We believe in the rule of law in international relations. We shall act in accordance with our confidence and belief, as we are doing today in withdrawing the 1970 reservation to Canada's acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the World Court. We are prepared to uphold our position in that Court, if necessary, and to have it fully and freely judged there.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, these are the measures we are announcing today: first, immediate adoption of an Order in Council establishing straight baselines around the Arctic archipelago, to be effective January 1, 1986; second, immediate adoption of a Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act; third, immediate talks with the United States on co-operation in Arctic waters on the basis of full respect for Canadian sovereignty; fourth, an immediate increase of surveillance overflights of our Arctic waters by aircraft of the Canadian Forces, and immediate planning for Canadian naval activity in the Eastern Arctic in 1986; fifth, the immediate withdrawal of the 1970 reservation to Canada's acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice; and sixth, construction of a polar, class 8 ice-breaker and urgent consideration of other means of exercising more effective control over our Arctic waters.

These are the measures which we can take immediately. We know, however, that a long-term commitment is required. We are making that commitment today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to receive the Right Hon. Minister's statement. My only objection is that it is exactly three months too late. When I rose in the House in the middle of June to raise this issue, the Minister remained silent, and today he rose in the House to propose a series of measures that would have been unnecessary if the Government had been truly in control of the situation last summer, when the problem arose.

[English]

We have been hearing about the great friendship between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan of the United States for many, many months. For 15 years the Americans have protested the Bill that I introduced in the House of Commons in 1970 concerning the prevention of Arctic pollution. For 15 years the Americans did not want to challenge the sovereignty of Canada which was reinforced at that time. They never sent a ship through our waters for 15 years.

In September, 1984, when my leader was Prime Minister, they did not come to challenge our sovereignty. They did not do so in the 14 previous years with former Prime Minister Trudeau. However, this summer, with their great friend, the Prime Minister of Canada in office they came and humiliated him. They also came and humiliated the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Worse still, they came and humiliated the whole nation by challenging our sovereignty in the north.

If it is true that the motto of the two Governments today is "good frienship", it would have been so easy for the Prime Minister to call President Reagan and simply explain our case. The first argument given by the Americans for the voyage was that it wanted to save $500,000. Imagine, the poor little Defence Department of the United States needing to save that money. We could have sent them a cheque for $500,000 and offered to pay the gas to go through the canal rather than challenge our sovereignty. However, the Government was silent. Now that the horses have left, it is attempting to close the gate.

It did the same thing yesterday. After appointing one Tory person every three hours since it came to power, suddenly it closes the gate on patronage appointments because the number of Tories needing jobs is decreasing. I hope the Minister recognizes what he is doing. There was a strategy behind what took place in the past with regard to our sovereignty because the key in international affairs was he exercising of jurisdiction and we have had that jurisdiction and we have exercised it. This began under Louis St. Laurent when we ensured for many years that there were RCMP, Armed Forces and viable Inuit villages in these areas in order to inform the world that it was Canadian land.

Time is a very important element. When sovereignty is exercised for 100 years, no one can challenge it. Today, the Minister is taking a gamble and making a bold move which might cause the court to look into this case. Now we will either win or lose. The Minister could have been prudent and carried on with our acts of sovereignty protection this summer, without anyone being able to challenge it. We could have used all the "supposed friendship" this government has in the world to make sure our sovereignty was not challenged. Our sovereignty would have been greater in 50 or 100 years.

I hope the Minister will not have to get up in the House in the future to say he is sorry but it is typical of how this Government reacts. It does not know where to go. It makes a decision and then backs off. Last summer my leader challenged the Government to call President Reagan. I raised this problem many times during the summer and I raised this question in the House of Commons. However, the Minister is too late again, fumbling and trying to repair the disaster and humiliation of the nation which his inaction has caused.

We will have to support that action now because we have no choice. He has opened the case in court. I hope we will win but I believe that 50 or 100 more years of sovereignty exercised by the Government, with no challenge from anyone, would have been better. If it is true that there is a policy of friendship with the Government of the United States, it is a shame that President Reagan sent a quasi military ship in our water this summer despite the requests and pleas of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If we had a Prime Minister who did not always go to the President on his knees, we would have been in a position to challenge the President and say that we will not tolerate such action. We would not be put in the shameful position we are today.

I hope in this case the Minister is sure of himself. I hope we will not lose. I wish the Minister well. He would have been well advised last summer, rather than to laugh at my question in the House of Commons, to have taken the problem seriously and acted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: We would have more positive results now. Probably it is now too late. If the Government wanted to act, why were these actions not proclaimed in July? It was not a technical problem.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Or last year.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, or last year or 10 years ago. In court, it is not for the one who occupies land to provoke a case. At least I know that. When I have a good case I do not necessarily go to court myself. I wait for the other guy. You never know what the court's decision might be. When you own land, you do not go to court yourself. You wait until your ownership is challenged. That is basic law I learned at university.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, I fear it is too late. I pray to God that the Minister has not created a situation on which we will be prematurely challenged. I am sad today because the danger is now more than ever caused because we had a Government that did not know what to do. The Government was afraid to offend President Reagan. This Government let him challenge and humiliate Canadians. After the humiliation lasted all summer, the Government comes with an ice-breaker. I am not impressed with the ice-breaker. With the disaster of the Canadian Commercial Bank, we could build two more ice-breakers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I just pray the Minister knows what he is doing. If he had not acted as as slowly on such an important matter, he does all the time, we would not be in the awful situation in which we are today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I agree with one of the remarks of the previous speaker that Canadians were humiliated by the Polar Sea incident. The image many Canadians have of the new Conservative administration is that a green light has been given to the White House to use our Arctic as a military and economic playground. The image of our Arctic as the new battle-line of fortress America toward the Soviet Union is not without foundation.

Let me deal first with the matter of the Polar Sea. I have confirmed today with the Canadian Coastguard that not one but seven Canadian Coastguard ice-breakers could have gone through the passage ahead of the Polar Sea. This is a matter of marine sovereignty. The films of overflights from Canadian aircraft were interesting at best, but did little to express the Canadian mood on this issue or to achieve basic requirements under international law. The Louis St. Laurent was available, the Sir John A. Macdonald was in the area and was available and, the John Cabot was available. Three R-class 1200s, the Des Groseillers, the Pierre Radisson, the Sir John Franklin and even the Norman McLeod Rogers were available. One of these vessels should have preceded the Polar Sea and the U.S. should have been billed every maple leaf penny of the cost. Only in Viscount Melville Sound did pack ice even slow down the Polar Sea, and throughout this so-called without prejudice journey, we should have followed our own precedent of 1969 when the Sir John A. Macdonald accompanied the Manhattan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Parliament then moved quickly to enact the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Control Act just months after the penetration of our sovereignty by the Manhattan. Parliament then should have moved to designate closing line or straight baselines as they are known around the outer perimeter of the Arctic archipelago. I pay tribute to the Right Hon. Minister for putting in place today such law to become effective January 1, 1986.

By demarcating our headland to headland closing lines, we will demonstrate to the international community our internal waters, which was at issue with the Polar Sea, our 12 mile territorial sea, our 100 mile pollution prevention control zone, our 200 mile fishing zone, our 200 mile limit and our 200 mile and beyond continental margin. These are pressing and urgent matters of national sovereignty, and I look forward to seeing them in The Canada Gazette and on all international marine charts.

I also pay tribute to the Minister for producing the Canadian Laws Offshore Application Act. I look forward to seeing it, although I accept the Minister's words that it fully extends the application of Canadian civil and criminal laws to offshore areas, the Arctic included.

In 1975, the Polar 10 was considered for construction here in Canada, a nuclear-powered class 10 ice-breaker. The Government did not proceed. Since 1977, the conceptualization and design of the 100,000 horsepower gas-diesel electrically-driven Polar 8 has been on the drawing board, some eight years now. Tenders will be complete by December, I am advised, and this vital new vessel to exert Canadian sovereignty will be under construction, we hope, in the new year. All Canadians should support this vital component of our Arctic sovereignty.

On our boundaries we have successfully negotiated agreements with Greenland in such areas as the Davis Strait and Baffin Bay. Now we must move on the Labrador Sea. By demarcating these boundaries headland to headland with Greenland, let us not forget the crying need to move on the 141st meridian with Alaska in the western Arctic, Dixon Entrance and our rights in the Gulf of Alaska as well as the Straits of Juan de Fuca off Vancouver. Previous administrations have been lax, and under former Prime Minister Trudeau to the point of losing ground on some of these boundary issues with the United States.

Let us not forget that as recently as last summer during the election, the United States Secretary of the Interior had a piece of Canada for sale off the Queen Charlotte Islands for gas and oil development. It was only under pressure from my Party that steps were taken that resulted in the withdrawal of that sale.

On this point, I urge the Minister today to direct Petro-Canada under the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Act, Bill C-48, to register submarine rights to the maximum, to all our boundary positions as outlined by myself and the new declarations. This is vital as we so sadly learned concerning the Georges Bank case most recently before the World Court.

The Right Hon. Minister, like many of his predecessors, climbs on the backs of the Inuit and other aboriginal Canadians to plant Canada's flag. To be intellectually and constitutionally honest, the Government must now move forward promptly to deal with the matter of aboriginal title and rights thereto.

There are no legal treaties with our first citizens north of 60, despite our constitutional recognition and affirmation of their rights. Do not forget, Mr. Minister, that in 1953 and again in 1955 the Inuit were taken from their homes by the federal Government to Cornwallis and Ellesmere Island. On that point, as recently as yesterday, I received a letter from the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs (Mr. Crombie) indicating that he does not intend to move on that very important Inuit matter, particularly regarding the elders who want to move home from those two communities. They were transplanted to exert Canada's sovereignty. I urge the Minister will all sincerity to move now with this House to settle their title, which as the Minister says, has been outstanding since time immemorial, on the land, water and ice of the Arctic. Now is the time to act on this vital constitutional matter.

On the matters of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zone Act, I trust the Minister intends to move forward quickly with notice on these new fisheries limits. I trust that he and his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), will ensure that these matters are referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

On the matter of notifying the Secretary General of the United Nations today of our intention to withdraw the 1970 reservation, to accept compulsory jurisdiction to the World Court regarding disputes that may arise concerning Canadian jurisdiction for the prevention of pollution in Arctic waters, I warn the Minister that there are steps he must now urgently take to set our house in order first, some of which I have touched upon. In particular, I advise the Minister to look with care at the matter of the MV Arctic. The Minister's colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) just this summer exempted that vessel by Order in Council from the strict requirements of the Arctic Waters Marine Prevention Control Act to carry crude oil south from Cameron Island, as part of Pan Arctic's Bent Horn project. This would mean that we would end up litigating against ourselves under the Minister's proposal by withdrawing the 1970 reservation.

In conclusion, let me congratulate the Right Hon. Minister on his new-found interest in boundaries, the Polar 8 and accompanying declarations. I think they are very Canadian. Let me ask the Minister to move now on aboriginal title, complete boundary actions,—including a movement today, I hope, because the Americans no doubt will have listened, under COGLA which is very important in terms of law—submarine rights, economic development in the north and with caution in the environment so sensitive to change. It is the great desert of the north.

I heard great applause from that side of the House encouraging navigation, but we have to deal with Lancaster Sound and many other very serious and sensitive ecological matters first.

Finally, I ask the Right Hon. Minister to understand the fear of Canadians of connecting the North Warning System and the forward bases for F-18 interceptors to missile bases, star wars and the front line of Fortress America. It is a powerful image. The previous Hon. Member who spoke touched on the humiliation of the summer, but it is a matter of imagery about which Canadians are very frightened. Our North was penetrated this summer. With all the overlying factors, there is a real fear in the country about the whole issue.

In conclusion, let us somehow make the Arctic nuclear-free and fully sovereign from the psychological rape this summer by the penetration of the Polar Sea.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

PENSIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have in hand a petition signed by a hundred workers from Quebec who are asking that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance allowances without any deduction from their pension income.

[English]

The problem toward which this petition is directed affects workers across the country.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of Winnipeg residents who protest the move by the Government to deduct benefits from unemployment insurance benefits. It will have a detrimental impact upon family income and robs people who have worked a lifetime of the pension benefits which they have earned. The petitioners call upon the Government to reverse its intention in this regard.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present some petitions. One is from the Province of New Brunswick and it is signed by several residents of that province. The others are from Edson, Alberta; Prince George, British Columbia; and Scarborough, Ontario.

These petitioners ask the Government to change the particular provision of the Unemployment Insurance Act which would make pension income deductible from unemployment insurance.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Vancouver and Kamloops, British Columbia. They are concerned that after the end of this year they will have their pension benefits deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits, thus effectively eliminating the benefit of the pension package to the worker.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations among House Leaders with respect to the operation of the new rules relating to legislative committees. I think Your Honour would find disposition to allow the following motion to be put and to be passed without debate at the present time. It reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 70(5), the Striking Committee shall meet and report not later than six o'clock p.m. on Monday, September 16, 1985.

Mr. Speaker: That motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Shall it carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): As of March 31, 1984, the reply for Canadair Ltd. is as follows:

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary to Question No. 379 which has been standing in my name since May 24. That question is a companion question to Question No. 383, which was answered yesterday. As these two questions are closely related, it is not understandable to me why they could look up the status of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Accounts for several sets of government employees but were unable to look up the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account at the same time. I wonder whether he would ask them to hurry along with the second part of this duet of questions.

Mr. Dick: Certainly.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stevens that Bill C-66, an Act respecting the reorganization of the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that when the House rose at one o'clock there were five minutes remaining in the question and answer period. Is the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) rising to participate in the debate?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Before recongizing the Hon. Member, may I indicate that according to Standing Order 19(4) the sitting of the House will be extended by 33 minutes.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise with regret to speak on this Bill to privatize the Canada Development Corporation because I think that the CDC, whether it is under the Conservatives or whether it was under the Liberals, in the period since its foundation some 15 years or 18 years ago represents a failed opportunity for Canadians. It represents a failed opportunity in terms of diversification of the Canadian economy, in terms of its original goals, and in terms of the possibility of creating a different model of the way an economic organization or corporation would work to serve the people of Canada, its owners, and to serve the workers, customers and suppliers who dealt with and worked for the various entities under the control of that corporation. It is a failed opportunity in terms of a kind of model which could have been created for our future development.

The Macdonald Commission report has just been brought down. Unfortunately it is retrograde; it looks backward rather than forward. It seems to be looking into a rear-view mirror in terms of its idea about the kind of corporate Canada we could have in the future.

It is regrettable because during its earlier stages the Macdonald Commission asked appropriate questions about what kind of future organization we could have in our economy to ensure that we were flexible and adaptable to change and to ensure that ordinary working people could feel that they were a part of our economic society rather than feel that they were simply pawns, that they were exploited by society or that they had no say in the wayin which things were run.

The Canada Development Corporation has grown to a $4 billion or a $5 billion corporation in a few short years. It could have been a model by which working people could have in fact had a say in the future of the enterprise within which they were involved. The Liberal Government, which went down in defeat last year, did not see it that way. In fact, it successively loosened its grip on the CDC until it was almost not worth the bother to try to resuscitate it as an instrument of public policy. However, there was still a strong case to be made that the CDC as an instrument of public policy or as a public corporation could have shown how the public sector could in fact be different and still be efficient, profitable and all the other things which were put forward as its goals and objectives.

Under the Conservatives there simply was not a chance. I now have the honour to be the critic of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens). Once that Minister came to power, he was determined to proceed with privatization. In that goal he had the support of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and, I suppose, the tacit support of other Members of the Government. They did not stop to see whether there were some other alternatives. They did not stop to see what might be the consequences of letting this major portion of our economy go into private hands. They did not stop to ask themselves whether or not this really was in the best interests of Canadians. As far as the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was concerned, it was a good thing if it was in the private sector and it was a bad thing if it was left in the public sector and therefore it had to go. One of the reasons offered by the Minister for this was that Crown corporations should be sold in the event that they were not fulfilling a public policy purpose. I think it can be argued that the Canada Development Corporation has ceased to fulfil a public policy purpose becuase it was being run as a private sector conglomerate corporation with next to no input as far as the public sector was concerned.

Through the years, the Canada Development Corporation did play somewhat of a public role. It made some investments in high tech early on. It Canadianized the Texas Gulf Mine in Timmins which is now known as the Kidd Creek Mine and brought it into Canadian hands. It has pioneered investments in the field of biotechnology. The Canada Development Corporation took over control of Connaught Laboratories and sought to modernize that particular institution which had belonged to the University of Toronto for many years. It sought to make it effective, efficient and competitive in order to allow it to continue to make a contribution to Canadian life as one of the only pharmaceutical companies in the country carrying out indigenous research and developing products here in Canada rather than simply importing patents from elsewhere.

The fact is that the CDC, in its early years, did seek to fulfil a public policy purpose but it lost its direction quite quickly. I cannot think of anything that it has done in the last few years which really indicates a particularly strong thrust. I think it epitomizes one of the problems of public ownership which has been endemic under both the Liberal and Conservative Governments which is that when there are governments that do not believe in public ownership and accountability and when there are governments that do not understand that public ownership should be something different from private ownership, then it fact Crown corporations will not be particularly effective. That has been the case with Canada Development Corporation.

What is happening now? As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) has said, the Government has finally announced its plans. On June 27, a day or two before the House rose for the summer, a Bill was put before the House by the Minister. There was a long summer recess and now the Bill is being rushed through the House by the Government. Did the Government at least have the grace to wait until the Bill was enacted before it acted as though it were law? The answer is no. Not only is the answer no, but quite specifically the share offering which was undertaken this summer in Toronto and on the financial markets of Canada directly contravened the existing Canada Development Corporation Act and permitted a private-sector corporation, Noranda, to effectively take over 25 per cent control of the Canada Development Corporation despite the fact that the law currently reads that until this Act is amended if it is to be amended, no individual shareholders should have more than 3 per cent ownership of the Canada Development Corporation with the exception of the Government of Canada.

Noranda is effectively buying operating control of the Canada Development Corporation. I am not sure if that was intentional on the part of the Government. Did Mr. Zimmerman of Noranda meet with the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion in order to arrange all of this? Is the fix in so that the Kidd Creek Mine will be absorbed into the mining operations of Noranda and the rest of the Canada Development Corporation will be spun off to private sector shareholders? Will there be any limitations if Noranda decides to sell off Polysar, a corporation which has been a Crown corporation for some 40 years, into American hands so that the synthetic rubber activities will become a part of Goodyear, B. F. Goodrich or one of those companies? We do not know. We may find out during the course of the committee hearings but the fact is that we do not know.

Major elements of our economy are being privatized. If we ask what has happened when we find that companies have been shut down, that ownership has been spun off or that they have been bought piece by piece by foreign multinationals, we will be told by Ministers of the Crown that those are commercial activities over which they do not have any control.

Today in the House of Commons the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) gave us an example of something like that. Last March, she was involved in the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank in which six commercial banks contributed $60 million to a rescue operation that we were assured would make the CCB a viable entity once again.

Shortly after that, those banks and other Canadian chartered banks proceeded to systematically bring their deposits in the CCB down to the lowest tolerable level. They brought their deposits down to a mere $5 million from $41 million in the course of a few short weeks. When the Minister was asked today if she did anything about that, if she knew about it and if she tried to stop it, she said that those were commercial activities and she had no power to stop them.

The Bill before us not only allows the Government to reduce to nothing its shareholdings in the Canada Development Corporation, it also effectively provides a blueprint for the destruction of the Canada Development Corporation. For one thing, its name can be changed without recourse to Parliament. The Canada Development Corporation can become Noranda (CDC) Incorporated or it can be changed to Uncle Sam Incorporated if the new owners or controllers think that that is a good idea. The company could easily be controlled by Noranda and by a couple of other shareholders who do not have to be Canadians because foreign share ownership is to be permitted up to 25 per cent and individual foreign multinationals will have the right to own up to 10 per cent of what is now known as the Canada Development Corporation.

Now there are controls on the CDC but once the corporation is in private hands, will there be anything to stop the CDC from continuing the program of divestment that it has taken over the course of the last couple of years? Last year I was contacted by a friend of mine who was very concerned about what was happening with Connaught Laboratories. CDC systematically puffed up the value of Connaugh in order to sell the shares on the private market. It boasts about that in its most recent annual report. It stripped assets from the pension fund in order to help bolster the company's cash reserves.

Connaught represents only a modest proportion of CDC's total assets. However, the same thing could be done with Kidd Creek. Kidd Creek could be sold off through a share exchange with Noranda. It could be done with Canterra, a corporation which accounts for 8 per cent or 9 per cent of the annual sales of the Canada Development Corporation. It could be done with Polysar or with Petrosar, companies which are both wholly owned by the CDC and which account for half of the value of its sales on an annual basis.

In a few months, we may well read in The Globe and Mail Report on Business that these corporations have been spun off in very much the same way as were portions of the CDC's ownership in Connaught Laboratories. In other words, this entire entity may simply disappear or it may turn into a totally different type of conglomerate, certainly one which would serve no functional purpose at all in terms of public policy. It would simply be a vehicle for making money, for providing jobs for corporate leaders and perhaps incidentally for helping to maintain a certain sector of the economy by contributing to the prosperity of Canadians, but only incidentally. I find that very disappointing.

It seems to me that a new Government which was elected on a mandate of change and which has revealed itself prepared on a number of occasions to rethink the shibboleths which it brought into office when it was elected last September 4 might well have looked at the Canada Development Corporation not as a problem, not as a dog to be divested of in the manner of the Harvard Business School, but as an opportunity for Canadians.

I draw to the attention of Members of the Government Party the contrast between the development of the CDC on the one hand and la Caisse de dépôt and Placements de Québec on the other. The Caisse de dépôt was established in 1966 or thereabouts as a vehicle for Quebec Government investments around the same time the Quebec Pension Plan was being established to parallel the Canada Pension Plan. It used funds which were invested in it from the Quebec Pension Plan. It was assured, therefore, that as an investment of public policy, it would have a continuing and growing source of capital which could be used for the diversification and expansion of the economy of the Province of Quebec. Since Quebecers were the contributors to the fund, it was quite natural that it was used as an instrument of public policy. Many corporations in manufacturing, textiles, steel and pulp and paper industries have now had major shareholdings acquired by the Caisse de dépôt. Canadian Pacific is now partially controlled by the Caisse de dépôt and in fact the Caisse de dépôt has become such a large operator in the financial markets of the country that the private sector is crying uncle and saying that it is suffering from unfair competition. The previous Liberal Government tried to pass a piece of legislation which would have clipped the wings of the Caisse de dépôt in order that it would not get too large. It is one of the curiosities of the private sector that when it feels that the heat is on it comes to the Government asking that the rules be changed in order to favour it. It does this when the going is getting a bit too competitive.

That is something which has been done by a pension fund in one province. The Caisse de dépôt has become a major actor in financial markets right across the country. The Canada Development Corporation could have done that as well. However, it was not done because the Liberal Government of the day, after an initial burst of enthusiasm, did not carry out what it intended to do when the idea of a Canada Development Corporation was dreamed up by Walter Gordon, when the nationalists within the Liberal Party—and there were a few in those days—saw it as an instrument of the Canadian economy, of an economy that would be owned and controlled by Canadians.

The CDC stopped its efforts to Canadianize our economy God knows how many years ago. It simply settled down into a corporate very much like any other. I had a look at the Board of Directors of the corporation which, even up until today, is something in the order of 87 per cent or 90 per cent controlled by the people of Canada, who are currently the shareholders until this Bill is passed, if it is passed, and until the tentative share issue made in the summer has been legitimized by Parliament. I looked to see how this public corporation had been made somehow different from any other conglomerate in the country. I wanted to see how it reflected the vast diversity of our country and of our population. I have to say, with regret, that I could find no difference between this corporation and Power Corporation, CP Investments, or any other private sector corporation. Of the 20 people on the Board of Directors, I found one representative of the Government of Canada. That is the Deputy Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. There were no other representatives of the people of Canada, despite the fact that we, as the people of Canada, hold 87 per cent or 90 per cent of the shares. There are two women on the Board of Directors—hardly bold leadership of a Government dedicated to showing that women should have a place of equality in the economic life of our country. In 20 years no government ever got around to appointing more than women to the Board of Directors.

It is common knowledge on Bay Street and St. James Street that the direction of the Canada Development Corporation has been very much in the hands of Anthony Hampson and the group around him and that they have successfully fought off overdue influence and participation from the chief shareholder. That chief shareholders, the Government of Canada, has simply sat back and taken it rather than saying that the Canada Development Corporation is different to ensure that it will be run in a manner which, in fact, is different.

Mr. Speaker, we in this Party are against this Bill to privatize the Canada Development Corporation. We intend to vote against this piece of legislation because we believe the Government missed a good opportunity when it decided to get rid of its shares in this corporation instead of seeking an efficient and novel way to use this group of companies, with assets of about $5 billion, to the benefit of all Canadians.

We have in this country an economic culture which readily lends itself to a mixed economy. We have Crown corporations such as Air Canada, Canadian National Railways and, until now, the Canada Development Corporation, Ontario has Ontario Hydro, Quebec has Hydro-Québec, and practically all provinces have power companies in the public sector, telephone and transportation companies, marine companies, communications and satellite companies which belong to us as Canadians. A great many of those companies are healthy and quite profitable and they must remain under public ownership so that Canadians will have the necessary means and tools to control and direct their own economy and make sure that it is managed in the best interest of Canada as a whole. Unfortunately, notwithstanding the wide variety of public companies and Crown corporations existing in Canada, we have been unable to find the means to manage those corporations in a way that is significantly different from the way privately owned companies are managed. For instance we have failed to find ways to ensure the participation of workers, possibly those who buy from or sell to those companies. We have not really developed different ways that would enable those companies to operate much differently from privately owned companies.

[English]

That is a pity because it seems to me that we are different in this country. One of the reasons our economy differs from that of the United States is because of the fact that, essentially, the United States does not have public ownership. It does not have the ideology which believes in public ownership and, therefore, there is little or no public sector involvement in the economy of the United States.

I recall going to Minnesota some years ago and talking to the Secretary of Commerce there. I asked him what activities there were in the State in the public sector. After describing what we did in Ontario, where I was an MPP, he thought for a long time and said: "Well, I think that our sewers are publicly owned." That was all. That is a great pity because there is a role for the public sector.

We, in Parliament, responding to the people of—my time is up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: In responding to the people we recognize that and we have set up these public corporations. We should not allow them to dwindle away into insignificance.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Cassidy: That is why we are opposing this particular Bill, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member was quite right in saying that his time was up.

Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the remarks of my colleague have given me reason for reflection. Can he elaborate on the potential damage to the Canadian economy with respect to eliminating the role of the public sector in the Canadian economy? Will he tell us just how much of a risk we are running in terms of our economic health by going on a privatization binge?

Mr. Cassidy: I would like to respond to the Hon. Member and give a specific example, which is Polysar. Over the last 40 years, Polysar has become a genuine success story and a Canadian multinational corporation. It was founded during the war to produce artificial and synthetic rubber because of the needs of wartime. It was maintained in public ownership since 1945. Now, for what amounts to a modest amount of revenues to the people of Canada, we are receiving about $200 million from the sale of all of the corporations in the conglomerate called the Canada Development Corporation. We are giving up control of Polysar. While the corporate shell, the Canada Development Corporation, is meant to stay in Canadian hands, there is nothing to stop CDC, under its new ownership, from selling off Polysar. This is a successful Canadian multinational which has operations in 40 or 50 countries around the world. There is nothing to stop the CDC from selling that corporation off into American, British, French or—God forbid—South African hands. God knows, it might not even be operating within the country in a few years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-66, an Act respecting the re-organization of the Canada Development Corporation, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): All those in favour will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not vote in this division because I own interests in CDC and I intend keeping them.

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-60, an Act to authorize procurement of the dissolution of certain Crown corporations and to amend or appeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties with respect to Bill C-60. Notwithstanding the motion before the House, I think Your Honour would find an inclination to accept the following motion rather than have the Bill referred to a legislative committee. There is an inclination to accept it, by unanimous consent, and to pass it without debate. The motion reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, when Bill C-60, an Act to authorize procurement of the dissolution of certain Crown corporations and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, is read a second time, it shall stand referred to a Committee of the Whole and shall be read a third time not later than the end of the time provided for Government Orders tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposal which requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, does the word "tomorrow" mean the next day, the next sitting of the House?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The next sitting of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly to this Bill and to review why the Government is putting it forward for consideration at this time. It is part of our effort as a Government to rationalize the Crown corporations which we found in the portfolio when we assumed office. We have made efforts to privatize some, but the purpose of the Bill which we are discussing today is to remove four Crown corporations which serve no useful public purpose. Indeed, three of these Crown corporations are completely inactive and the fourth merely holds a piece of property for the Crown.

For the edification of the House, I intend to run through the intent behind the Bill as it deals with each of the four Crown corporations. The first is Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd. which was incorporated under the Dominion Companies Act in 1927 to provide a steamship service to the West Indies. The corporation has been inactive since 1958 when its fleet of ships was sold to Banco Cubana of Havana. In 1959 the corporate management was transferred to federal Government officials for the purpose of collecting the proceeds from the sale. An irrevocable letter of credit was issued through the Bank of America to cover the final principal payment which was not honoured due to the passing of the Cuban Assets Control Regulations by the Government of the United States on July 3, 1963. The sole purpose of maintaining the company is to collect the outstanding principal plus interest totalling perhaps $900,000 as of December 31, 1984. These funds are frozen today in the Bank of America in New York.

The Department of Finance, in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), is the registered holder of the share certificates. That Department and the Department of External Affairs are making efforts and representations, now that our relations with Washington have been improved, to secure the release of the frozen funds. If that approach does not succeed within a reasonable period of time, steps will be taken to ensure that the present obligation owing to Canadian National (West Indies) from the sale of its steamships would become an obligation enforceable by Her Majesty. This would necessitate a written agreement with the Bank of America that it would eventually reassign the payment to Her Majesty if Canadian National (West Indies) were dissolved. In any event, that will go forward if in fact this Bill is passed. We do not intend to dissolve the corporation formally until we are certain that the outstanding balance of approximately $1 million will be paid to the Crown.

The second Crown corporation to be dissolved is the Societa a Responsibilita Limitata Immobiliare San Sebastiano which was acquired by the Department of External Affairs as a means of purchasing, without tax penalties, the official residence of the Canadian Ambassador to the Holy See in Rome, Italy. This was a private Italian company whose sole asset was a residence. I might say that it was the subject of some discussion in one of the Auditor General's reports some time ago. Normally External Affairs purchases these residences directly on behalf of Her Majesty. What we are proposing now is to change the company into a limited partnership and subsequently to have the property donated to the Crown. We will then proceed to have approval of the acceptance of the gift by Her Majesty the Queen in right of Canada authorized by the Government of Italy pursuant to Article 10 of the Italian Civil Code. Officials are pursuing the ramifications and methods of doing that at the moment.

The third Crown corporation to be wound up is St. Anthony Fisheries Limited which was established in 1982 to reopen and operate but not own a dormant fish processing plant at St. Anthony, Newfoundland. It was agreed that the plant's owner, Fishery Products which, as the House will know, has now merged with Fishery Products International Limited, would market production during the 1982 season. This plant is now owned and operated by Fishery Products International Limited which is the combined entity set up in Newfoundland under the Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring Act.

Because FPIL has now taken over the operation of the St. Anthony plant, St. Anthony Fisheries is an inactive corporation. It continues to exist as a shell corporation in order to collect arrears from FPIL with respect to sales made on behalf of St. Anthony Fisheries by Fishery Products. The corporation will not be wound up until these arrears are collected.

When the corporate plan for St. Anthony Fisheries Limited was approved by the Treasury Board in March 1985, the Treasury Board requested that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) settle the arrears of FPIL to St. Anthony Fisheries prior to or in conjunction with his next request for funds for FPIL. Action on this request is expected before the end of this curent calendar year.

The last Crown corporation with which we are dealing in this Bill is Uranium Canada, Ltd. which was created in 1971 pursuant to Appropriation Act No. 1, 1971, and the Atomic Energy Control Act with a mandate to purchase $29.5 million worth of uranium concentrates on behalf of the Crown from Denison Mines Ltd. over the period 1971 to 1975.

During the period 1971 to 1980, Uranium Canada sold or made loans of portions of the stockpile and returned some $114 million to the Crown. During this time, uranium prices increased and Canada's known reserves increased dramatically, primarily due to the discovery of large, rich deposits in Saskatchewan. Therefore, the need for a Canadian Government stockpile or government support of Canadian mines disappeared.

In May 1981, the Government transferred the ownership of the remaining stockpile having a book value of $96 million to Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. and directed the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to wind up Uranium Canada. However, the House will recall that the company was subsequently charged along with five other uranium companies with offences under the Combines Investigation Act. The matter was finally settled on December 15, 1983, when the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that Uranium Canada, as an agent of the Crown, was immune from the terms of the Combines Investigation Act.

Uranium Canada is now dormant, having no operations, no staff and assets totalling $9. The company's affairs are conducted on an as required basis by Public Service employees and its resource requirements are minimal. There being no further use for the corporation, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is requesting the authority of Parliament to dissolve it.

These are the corporations which we are planning to dissolve at this time. I think they can best be described as loose ends. I would refer to one other Crown corporation which is not referred to in this Bill. For the edification of the House, there was a fifth Crown corporation, Mingan Associates, a corporation which it had been our intention to dissolve as well. It was the owner of some land in Quebec which the Government subsequently transferred to native people. This action is being challenged in the courts by the Province of Quebec and therefore the Government does not feel that dissolution would be appropriate or diplomatic at this time.

That is the information that I have at my disposal to give to the House in order to explain why we are taking this housekeeping action. I would urge the House to support the Bill.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, while listening to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary introduce this Bill for second reading, I was wondering if the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), under whose name the Bill has been introduced into the Chamber, would perhaps have a few words to say about this supposedly important piece of legislation. As the Parliamentary Secretary has stated, this is a matter of priority and of government policy.

As the Parliamentary Secretary said just a moment ago, these are the only Crown corporations the Government wishes to dissolve at this time. A few moments before that, we heard the House Leader say that there is now agreement to sit for the rest of the afternoon and then all day tomorrow to do this. With all of the important issues facing this nation, with the President of the Treasury Board announcing such incredible cuts to government Departments across the country without really answering to them in the Chamber, with the Government proclaiming all kinds of great policies to help the Canadian people, what does the Government do on the second day of sitting? It introduces a Bill. What is this Bill to do? The Government has indicated that it wants to wind up a Crown corporation that used to sail ships into the West Indies, a corporation that is no longer in existence. It also wants to wind up a Crown corporation that was created in 1981-82 for a one-year period, a corporation which is no longer in existence and it wants to dissolve Societa a responsibilita Limitata Immobiliare San Sebastiano along with Uranium Canada, Ltd. The second last corporation to which I referred was set up to purchase a residence for the Ambassador to the Vatican and the last one was to be dissolved because, as I understand it, all of its stockpile was passed over to Eldorado. This was a Crown corporation created in the 1960s which was passed over to Eldorado in 1981. The question that should be before the Chamber is why the President of the Treasury Board should take up so much of the time of the House to get rid of these Crown corporations.

The fact of the matter is that this Government is a Government of contradictions. It cannot synchronize professed policy with what it is doing. We can examine the Crown corporations that are being disbanded. The first one is called Canadian National. We are going to get rid of a corporation which is now on the books under the name Canadian National. In the November statement, the President of the Treasury Board announced a new Crown corporation under the name of Canadian National to take care of ships. He announced that CN Marine would be created to save $20 million. He created a new Crown corporation. Where does that mesh with the great government policy of doing away with Crown corporations? What about all the criticism government Members levelled at the previous Government? Now what is the President of the Treaury Board doing? He wants us to deal with this important Bill which will do away with some Crown corporations that are not even in existence and have not been operative for years.

Members of the Canadian public are watching us in this Chamber and wondering what we are doing here in Ottawa. They wonder why we are using up days discussing things that are not even in existence. Surely there are more important priorities than that.

Let us look at the next Crown corporation on the list, St. Anthony Fisheries Limited. We are now going to do away with that Crown corporation that is not even in existence. We are going to do away with it because it is government policy to get rid of Crown corporations. The Parliamentary Secretary did not say that the very thing which is replacing that Crown corporation in the operation of those fish plants we are talking about here is another Crown corporation, a Crown corporation to which the President of the Treasury Board and the Government of Canada has committed all the money necessary to maintain the operation of that fish business. Even the Premier of Newfoundland, a famous Progressive Conservative Premier, said that Crown corporation, to use his words, "is the greatest thing that has happened since Confederation with Canada".

Thus, there is really no continuity with respect to what the Government says, on the one hand, and what it is actually doing on the other. Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board in addressing this Bill, since a portion of it deals with the Crown corporation which was created under Canadian National, and another Crown corporation that was created to take care of some of the problems in the fisheries, should explain to the Chamber, and to the people of Canada, how he is carrying out the $20 million cut with the other Crown corporation. What does the Minister propose to do with respect to the problems which still face the fishing industry and the fish plant that was under the control of this particular Crown corporation about which we are speaking in this Bill?

Mr. Speaker, approximately 20 seconds ago you told me that I had but one minute left. Perhaps I could speak for a few moments longer and pick up tomorrow where I leave off today.

I am sure that the President of the Treasury Board will be making an address tomorrow. I am sure he will spend tonight preparing that address since this piece of legislation cannot wait until next week, next month or next year. It is so important to the President of the Treasury Board that I am sure he will give us a complete address in the House tomorrow.

Is my time up, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING PRE-BANKRUPTCY ARBITRATION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the current bankruptcy legislation to provide farmers and fishers with a pre-bankruptcy arbitration procedure which would provide them with, as a last resort, a court ordered settlement to be fully binding on all creditors and the farmer(s) or fisher(s) involved.

He said: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The motion I have before the House today is inspired by the terribly serious situation which we have in agriculture at this time. It is a situation which we have had for the past year or so with regard to the loss of farm equity, the loss of farms, and so on.

Hon. Members will note that the motion is dated April 1, 1985. It is so dated because it became apparent at that time, after an experiment which was carried out in Bruce County, which was a pilot project, that there really had to be legislation of this nature put before the House and adopted by Parliament in order to deal with bankruptcies in the farming sector. I would like to quote a couple of figures in that regard. Last October, we received a report which indicated that some 17 per cent of farmers were in serious financial difficulty. This year, when that report was examined, some 18 months after the original study was carried out, the percentage of farmers in serious financial difficulty had risen to some 23 per cent. Farm asset values had dropped by 12 per cent from $116 billion to $102 billion, a massive loss of equity by farmers.

The discouraging part of the reports, which indicate the serious financial difficulty in our farming communities, were even more distressing because most of the farmers in difficulty were our youngest, our most productive and our most technologically advanced. Apart from that, the studies indicate that some 50 per cent of all the food produced in our country was produced by these young farmers who are in serious financial difficulty.

In the past weeks, the crisis has heightened. For instance, I have been told by representatives of the Farm Credit Corporation that in the first two months of this fiscal year there were 169 foreclosures by the Corporation. That is a rate of 87 per cent faster than in the previous year. That works out to 11 farms a week which are being taken over by the Farm Credit Corporation.

The Bruce County study indicated that the Farm Credit Corporation, because of its current rules and regulations, is not willing to write down any of the debt which it holds with young farmers. The procedure proposed in my motion would allow for this to take place.

In Bruce County, recently, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture passed a resolution suggesting that there be a declaration of a moratorium on farm foreclosures. This took place at a meeting in Chesley on August 29 which was attended by some 200 or 300 farmers who were calling on the Government to take action. The OFA will be considering that resolution further at its regular meeting on September 18.

Clearly, the situation is chaotic. There needs to be better procedures. I suppose we are more concerned because the Government has really taken no action to provide, in the Budget, for instance, a special write down procedure for lower interest rate loans. We have seen action by the new Ontario Liberal Government; but there has been no action taken by our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I have had contact as well with young farmers in the Maritimes who are calling for action in this regard, as is proposed in the motion. I have heard from farmers in western Canada. In July, I had an opportunity to visit some of the areas hit by drought in southern Saskatchewan. I met with dozens of farmers at a conference in Moose Jaw. At that time we saw the ravages of the massive reduction in farm values and the continuing low commodity prices.

We recently heard a call from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool for a $500 million program to assist the grain growers of western Canada. We have all seen the clips on television news reports of farm families applying for welfare and many farmers desperate with thoughts of losing their farms.

The motion before the House today proposes that the Government get on with the legislation which was before the House in the previous Parliament under Bill C-17. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) on July 10 said that he would be bringing forward such legislation. Thus far we have not seen it.

I hope that when the Parliamentary Secretary speaks this afternoon he will be able to indicate that in fact the Government is not just stalling and that it will get on with such legislation. Clearly, there is a question in everyone's mind because the same press clippings indicated that the Minister was going to bring forward such legislation while the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) has indicated that he did not know anything about it. He was in charge of the legislation so it seems highly in doubt that the Government is actually moving on this. Perhaps the Minister is just talking because of the tremendous need for action, but maybe no action is forthcoming.

In Bill C-17 of the previous Parliament there was a provision for people facing serious financial difficulty in that they could apply to the bankruptcy court to make arrangements with respect to their debt. Amendments were proposed at that time with respect to arrangements which would have applied to bankruptcies of more than $1 million in that a similar provision would be available for fishermen and farmers. The procedure, as I understand it, is one in which the farmer facing serious financial difficulty and on the verge of bankruptcy can file a notice of intention to secure an arrangement from the bankruptcy court. This would prevent his creditors from moving in on him. It would allow a trustee, secured by the farmer or fisherman, to negotiate an agreement with the creditors. Where an agreement was arranged around the table for a write down of debt, it would allow for that agreement to be simply filed with the registrar of the court and it would become effective on the debts of the individual. Where there was no agreement, the farmer could apply to the judge of the court and if the judge agreed to establish an arrangement for writing down the debt, he could appoint an expert panel of qualified people to assist the court in reviewing the circumstances of the situation and make a recommendation to the court and the judge could accept or reject or modify the panel's recommendation. If there were no agreements reached or if an agreement was rejected by the judge, it still would not deprive the farmer or fisherman of their rights in that they could not be petitioned into bankruptcy. Therefore, it would protect the rights of the farmer or fisherman in that regard.

So often we see in bankruptcies too much money and property lost. Everyone loses. In fact, the Farm Credit Corporation has said that in every bankruptcy they see something like $90,000 to $100,000 lost regardless of the circumstances of the bankruptcy. This procedure which was originally proposed in Bill C-17 would allow an arrangement for agreements between creditors and farmers in serious financial difficulty and perhaps in many cases would allow them to continue on in business while at the same time writing off substantial debts instead of not allowing them to continue in business.

My concern would be that this motion pass tonight to indicate the will of the House to support it and to indicate to the Government to get on with it and bring in such legislation at any early date. I wish Government had adopted the recommendation of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which recommended a massive program of assistance to those farmers who are facing serious financial difficulty. However, Government did not do that and it will have to live with the political consequences of not taking action like the Ontario Government and other provincial governments.

I think there is a place for such legislation as is proposed in this motion. Clearly it seems like the Government has been procrastinating. The legislation was before the Committee 15 months ago. They have gone through the reports of the FCC indicating these serious financial difficulties. They have gone through a moratorium on foreclosures and they have studied the Bruce Country pilot project. There is apparently no money forthcoming from the Government in the Budget to deal with these serious financial difficulties. Now is the time for the Government to indicate that it is prepared to bring in this modest action which would help a certain number of farmers. The Minister indicated on July 10 he wants to do that.

We are waiting on so many things. We are waiting on the tripartite red meat decision by the Minister. We were disappointed there was no money in the Budget for the financial debt crisis. We are waiting on a dairy policy. We are waiting on aid for the western drought assistance program. We just hope that the Minister will get on with at least this legislation in order to bring it into the House at any early date because the situation in the West is desperate. It is going to become apparent with the rallies and marches which will take place this fall by groups like the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and other agricultural groups. They are desperate for help, especially those farmers in the grains and red meat industries because of the economics and climatic circumstances in other parts of the country.

I hope that the Government will not talk out this motion but allow it to pass. The support of the House has already been indicated. The Minister has already promised to introduce this legislation at an early time in this session.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first I want to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleague from Algoma (Mr. Foster) for having been maintained in his capacity as agriculture critic. Perhaps one might have wished to see, who knows, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) or somebody else take his place, to be different, you know, because I have to keep on listening to the same speech I have been hearing for weeks and months, in fact ever since the session began last year.

Still it takes a lot of nerve on the part of my colleague to say that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has done nothing at all to help the agricultural sector since last year, considering that farm producers had to come to grips with interest rates ranging from 18 to 20 per cent under the previous Government. It takes a lot of nerve to stand here today and say that the Minister of Agriculture has not done anything. Either they are not aware of it, or they have taken leave of their senses, or again they have lost their memory, or perhaps they have forgotten that the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) was proud to say on September 4 he was glad he could go leaving the treasury empty. There is no mistake about it. Now that interest rates have dropped by more than 2.5 per cent since last year, the lowest they have been in nearly eight years, I think they could at least have the decency to acknowledge those facts which are clear and unmistakable in the mind of everybody else.

When they claim they are still waiting . . . My colleague from Richmond can take the floor later on, that is if he has anything to say besides the redundant utterances we have usually been hearing from him for a number of months.

As to the other matters, they talk about the drought, they talk about red meat tripartite programs, but they should at least read the newspapers. The Hon. Member might find out that for many weeks now certain groups have been working and trying, along with the provinces and producers' federations, to find solutions to the problems facing the Canadian agricultural community.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), I think it is important to respond to the concerns expressed by my colleague from Algoma (Mr. Foster). I think they may be legitimate, particularly with respect to bankruptcies in agriculture and fisheries. More specifically, the Opposition critic feels that the Government should consider the advisability of amending the current legislation in that field. He would be in favour of another pre-bankruptcy arbitration procedure for agricultural producers or commercial fishermen. Indeed we might abide by a prior ruling by the courts which would be rendered before the bankruptcy. As we know there exists a rather clear and specific bankruptcy procedure which makes it possible to draft propositions in advance of what might be a de facto bankruptcy situation. In my opinion, my colleague from Algoma ought to know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) is responsible for the Bankruptcy Act, that it has nothing to do with the Minister of Agriculture and that, as it happens, he has appointed a committee of experts in bankruptcy matters. His colleague the Minister of Agriculture gave him his views on this question.

I should think that the committee of experts will advise the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs concerning amendments likely to improve the existing legislation. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has already said that major amendments to the Bankruptcy Act will be announced within a few weeks.

I believe that we now have to let time do its work. Action has already been taken to bring interest rates, which were in the range of 14, 15 and 16 per cent, down to 11, 12 and 13 per cent. That is much more acceptable for farmers, for instance.

In addition to the recommendations of the experts, Mr. Speaker, we shall also have to take into account the various representations which have already been made and which will probably be made in the near future. The Committee has had consultations throughout Canada, and with all due respect, my colleague for Algoma will have to admit that during the 20 years before we came into power, the experts in the opposition did not have the kind of great success that could be considered an example for us to follow today.

Mr. Speaker, we are well aware of the financial problems which many farmers and fishermen now face and of the fact that these problems can make it difficult for many of those people to make it through this crisis. That is understandable. We would of course like every operation likely to be viable in the long term to continue. That is something with which we all agree. However, we must use the present legislation and correct it in accordance with the recommendations that will be made by the Hon. Minister in the coming weeks.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in support of the motion before us today which calls upon the Government to amend the current bankruptcy legislation to provide farmers and fishermen with a pre-bankruptcy arbitration procedure, which would in turn provide as a last resort a court ordered settlement to be fully binding on all parties concerned. This proposal has been before the House for some time. As you will be aware, Mr. Speaker, it involves the Bankruptcy Act but it has a great effect on farmers. Farmers, as well as parliamentarians on this side of the House, are very patient people. We have waited a long time for a solution to the problems that changes to the Bank Act created for farmers some 15 or 18 years ago. We thought that Bill C-17 in the previous Parliament would redress the situation. As you know, we went into an election before that Bill proceeded through the House and we have waited over a year for it to be reintroduced. I am not sure what the problems in this respect have been, but when you go back and read the speeches in the last Parliament, particulary those by the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who is now chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, it appeared that we had at least achieved agreement on the question of how farmer and fishermen bankruptcies should be dealt with.

I pointed out that the problem seems to have arisen with changes to the Bank Act. That seems to be an oblique way of attacking the question, but in reality the bankruptcy legislation we have worked under has been pretty much the same since 1919. There were some minor amendments in 1949, but there were no real changes to the way a bankruptcy is proceeded with. Why, then, have there been problems in the intervening years? I submit it is because the Bank Act has resulted in some radical changes in the way security for loans to farmers and fishermen is handled. Under the old Farm Improvement Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, lending institutions could provide a loan to a farmer or a fisherman under the following conditions. The borrower would have to put up 25 per cent of the cost of a new piece of equipment and the balance would be financed by the lending institution. The terms of the loan were very clear. The interest rate was fixed, usually at 5 per cent, sometimes 6 per cent. The term of repayment was made quite clear, from three to five years in most cases. The bank took security only on the equipment being purchased. If it was a fishing boat or a new tractor, that was the security. The Government of Canada insured the loans so that there were no untoward losses under this program.

Under that system the old Bankruptcy Act worked fairly well. Then we had changes to the Bank Act. The first change was in the late 1960s. Section 88 was added and the terms of the loans were changed quite dramatically. Instead of taking as security only the equipment being purchased, it was extended to the grain, livestock and machinery; in short, all of the movable inventory the borrower had on his farm or in his business. That was a substantial change in the amount of security required for a loan. Fortunately, the bank rate stayed the way it was written up in the original loan and the terms for repayment were spelled out quite clearly. However, when the Bank Act changed in 1980 or 1981, Section 178 dealt with these types of loans. Under that section we still offer all of our movable goods as security. As well, the interest rate changes whenever the bank decides it should and the loan is on call. It is no longer repayable over three to five years but is due any time the lending institution decides to call it.

Under those circumstances the old Bankruptcy Act is no longer adequate. Previous Governments have recognized that. The Liberal Governments of the 1970s, the short-lived Clark Government, and the last Liberal Government all attempted to change the Bankruptcy Act, but none of them succeeded in getting a new Act through the House. Just before the summer recess the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Erola) succeeded in achieving a consensus of the three Parties which would have treated farmers and fishermen in the same way as bankrupts of $1 million or more would be treated. The farmer or fisherman would have had the right to appear before a tribunal which would have examined all of the circumstances of the proposed bankruptcy and decided whether that farmer or fisherman had to go through the bankruptcy procedure or whether the lender should grant further time for payments to be made, or even go so far as to reduce the amount of the payments. That is quite a dramatic change from the way in which farmers and fishermen are treated under the present legislation.

Under the current Bank Act the rights of the lender have been over-extended and the borrower does not retain the protection which existed prior to the upsetting of the careful balance that had been struck between the old Bankruptcy Act and the old Bank Act. As the Bank Act changes there is obvious need for changes to the Bankruptcy Act to recognize that new circumstance. We must ensure that the borrower has some rights in the arbitration between borrower and lender. That does not exist in the current Bankruptcy Act or in the current Bank Act. Nearly all of the rights and privileges lie with the lending institution and the borrower is very much at the mercy of that lending institution.

It is absolutely vital to farmers and fishermen in this country that there be immediate changes to the bankruptcy provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. There seemed to be universal agreement in the last session of Parliament and I had hoped that there would have been a new attempt to introduce a new version of the previous Bill C-17. We were near the end of a long road of attempting to make major amendments to the bankruptcy laws of this country. I urge the Government to reinitiate that process and reintroduce Bill C-17 which was agreed to just before the last session of Parliament adjourned.

We waited and watched as the current Government went through the Bruce County experiment. We hoped that something would develop from that which would be of use to farmers and could be adapted to fishermen. It appears that we waited in vain. It is now time to introduce a new version of the old Bill C-17 which will deal fairly and adequately with bankruptcy problems which have arisen due to changes in the Bank Act as they affect farmers and fishermen. I am sure that the Government is aware of the major financial problems that face farmers and fishermen in particular and I would urge it to reintroduce the necessary legislation as quickly as possible in order that farmers and fishermen can again be fairly dealt with in the process of bankruptcy.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): I also welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate, but first of all I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague from Algoma (Mr. Foster) for presenting a motion that, considering the circumstances, should be seen as a very positive contribution.

I was listening earlier with a great deal of interest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais), who seemed very proud and very pleased with his Government's performance over the last year. I am not going to discuss the Government's record, because I would probably need far more time than I am allowed, but I would like to say that not long ago, in a newspaper that has a great readership among Quebec farm producers, the Government's record after its first year was discussed and I was really surprised, and agreeably so, when I read a comment by Mr. Proulx, the President of the UPA. He said that farm producers were being offered cute little programs, but that agriculture did not need cute little programs. Farmers needed help in dealing with their problems and concerns. To my mind, the few announcements that were repeated earlier by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture were just so many cute little programs that have made farmers feel very disappointed and also made them very anxious about the future, about whether they will be able to make a living on those operations in which they have invested tens of thousands of dollars.

We are still waiting for the long-term dairy policy that was promised with a great deal of fanfare and is now being promised again. We are still waiting for the $13 million and for what the Government is going to do with Bill C-25, the legislation on agricultural stabilization. In other words, there is a lot of anxiety, insecurity and trauma. There are many, many producers in Quebec, like everywhere else in Canada, who are worried about the future and are wondering whether this year it will be their turn to be hit by bankruptcy. I think they have every reason to be worried.

This brings me to the motion presented by my hon. colleague from Algoma which, in the circumstances, appears to be a very interesting and fascinating proposal, I am surprised the Government did not itself initiate the appropriate corrective action.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about the agro-food sector, I think every self-respecting society tends to have, or should have, self-sufficiency in the agro-food sector as its objective. I feel this is a generally recognized principle and a goal we all want to achieve.

Mr. Speaker, in my view, this presupposes that the Government is prepared to help and support those who are helping to feed the country.

Agriculture over the last decades has enjoyed, and rightly so, a number of privileges in terms for instance of subsidies, loans, special treatment as a vital industry in our society, and in fact it needs that support for a good many reasons. Here we have an industry that is dependent on nature. It is dependent on markets. And, finally, when things go wrong, it is not necessarily because of mismanagement or neglect. In many cases it is the result of a number of factors beyond the control of producers.

Mr. Speaker, ever since I entered politics I have always been surprised to see from time to time, and increasingly over a number of years unfortunately, that many farm operations are forced into bankruptcy. When I see a family farm that has been in operation for years being liquidated, the question that comes to my mind is: Who benefits? The corporation more often than not takes over the assets; these assets are left to themselves and deteriorate over the years. There are virtually no offers to purchase in 1985, because of the market situation, for it is extremely difficult to earn one's living on a farm. Those assets deteriorate to such an extent that they become useless at some point. And when we consider the situation in the months that follow the bankruptcy, we realize that finally everybody has lost. The family who lived from the industry, who used to produce, to contribute to the regional, provincial and national economy, who made an honest living on the farm simply lose all that, after having worked on it as a family, to a truly unbelievable extent. Who benefits? In what way? The answer is, no one benefits whatsoever. The community loses a lot of money, the bank loses, because there are less and less potential purchasers for that kind of assets.

And I say: Why not? Knowing that with the current legislation, we are going to lose a lot of money anyway. Why not, through regulations or legislation of sort, try and find a way to allow these families or these farmers to keep their farms and facilities and continue in the agricultural industry.

A major problem within the farm community is who will take over the farms. As my honourable friend mentioned a while ago, our youngest, most productive and technologically advanced farmers are those who are facing the most serious financial difficulties. These same young farmers who are willing to work hard and who are responsible for most of the food produced in our country are unable to meet their financial commitments because of high interest rates, natural disasters, the market uncertainties and are on the verge of bankruptcy.

If we had means or mechanism to keep these young farmers on the farm, in my view they could continue to perform and contribute very significantly, because I believe the continued success of our agricultural community is fundamental and vital to the economic well-being of their areas and the whole of Canada.

To my mind, the interesting aspect of a measure such as this one, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government keeps telling us day in and day out: Listen, our financial situation is so precarious that the Government simply cannot make new expenditures. We cannot secure the funds required to implement this or that measure. Well now, this is one measure which does not require any kind of funding. It is a measure which can be implemented without any investment whatsoever. As I see it, it is strictly a matter of political will implying that we have faith in our young farmers, that we have faith in men and women who are faced with problems and who, as I said, are in no way responsible for the current financial woes. It seems to me that, if not as a Government, at least as a society we might help those who have been forced to live with such problems, and that would not be tantamount to giving them a chance since nobody would stand to lose anything at all. It seems to me we might actively and openly support any measure to improve the agricultural food sector, an initiative which would surely boost productivity and benefit the agricultural community as a whole.

So I quite sincerely hope that, if we have so much faith in our agricultural food industry, if we are ready to support it, if we are quite willing to make a special effort, I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that the initiative of my colleague will be approved and supported to that it will lead to concrete measures at the earliest opportunity.

[English]

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to participate in this debate on the proposal by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I know that he is very serious about that matter and has given it much consideration.

However, it should be pointed out that one reason why we are debating a motion concerning bankruptcy today is that the previous Government simply did not take agriculture very seriously. Rather than debating the future of agriculture we are debating how to cure some of the ills of the past.

The Hon. Member for Algoma would indicate that farm bankruptcies only started a year ago last September 4. However, farm bankruptcies have been increasing since the late 1970s and one reason for that is the unreasonable interest rates which young farmers have had to pay as a result of mismanagement by the previous Government. They have had to pay the highest interest rates in the history of Canada.

They were also told to borrow, plant large amounts of crops and modernize their equipment. They were told that what they would grow would be sold by the Government. Unfortunately, those words ring rather hollow today. Those farmers are now facing bankruptcy.

The Hon. Member mentioned a program which is now in effect in Ontario. We know that that program is simply an election gimmick. The farmers will receive a small amount of money now but will lose it after the next election. I do not believe that Ontario farmers want election gimmicks to solve their problems.

Many farmers owe hundreds of thousands of dollars but their equity is not enough to cover their debts. Today we are discussing how to save them from bankruptcy. One of the first steps taken by our Minister last fall was to impose moratorium on farm bankruptcies. This was followed by an interest rate adjustment program to lower those high interest rates imposed on farmers by the previous Government.

As was mentioned, the Government also set up a pilot program in Grey-Bruce to determine whether something could be done to help those farmers in cases of arbitration. Studies showed that farmers face very grave problems, especially those involved in the beef business. Those of us who represent rural areas realize how tragic it is that a farm that began generations before must now go on the auction block because of bankruptcy.

I would like to go over some of the figures and bring this House up to date on the present situation regarding the Farm Credit Corporation. There are serious financial difficulties in agriculture today. A Farm Credit Corporation survey published last year, and a more recent update, suggests that some 23 per cent of farmers are experiencing financial difficulty.

The difficulties in the farm sector are well reflected in the FCC lending. In the 1984-85 fiscal year, the demands for loans dropped by 59 per cent from a record level the year before. This year the level of lending is likely to be even lower, which reflects just how bad the farm economy is.

Other evidence of difficulties can be found in the arrears figures for the Farm Credit Corporation. On August 1, about 17,000 or 22 per cent of Farm Credit accounts were in arrears. This is a sign of the difficulties farmers are facing. It is a reflection of the fact that the FCC's role is to provide credit to beginning farmers unable to obtain financing from commercial sources. This means that FCC's borrowers represent the riskiest part of the agricultural credit market.

Although it is not possible to save every farming operation, the Corporation is sensitive to the cyclical nature of agriculture. Thus it has a compassionate policy with respect to those in arrears. The Corporation has been known to carry some accounts in arrears for several years, something that few other creditors would be willing to do. This policy is meant to give borrowers time to explore every available option to keep them in business. Unfortunately, in some cases there are few options and a farmer has little choice but to close down.

At the moment, over 6,000 loans are under recovery action. A total of 42 FCC borrowers filed for bankruptcy between April 1 and July 31, 1985. During the 1984-85 fiscal year, 96 FCC borrowers declared bankruptcy. The year before there were 121. Often, of course, it is not the FCC that forces the farmer to declare bankruptcy, but other creditors. However, the Corporation's employees are working closely with farmers to try to help them organize their finances to cope with today's difficulties in which they find themselves. Currently over 3,000 of the the Corporation's borrowers are receiving formal financial counselling through the Corporation's advisory services program.

The legacy of a large federal deficit has given this Government very little room to manoeuvre to respond to these difficulties. Despite this, I believe that our Government has taken a number of positive steps to solve the credit problems of agriculture.

Soon after taking office, the Government responded by suspending the Farm Credit Corporation recovery actions for two months to give the Government and the FCC's borrowers breathing space in which to look for solutions for farm financial problems. Subsequently, the mandate of the FCC appeal board was extended to include the review of FCC foreclosure cases. These boards are made up of practising, experienced farmers who can offer an impartial, third-party analysis of each borrower's situation. From January 15 to July 31, 1985, about 65 cases have been heard by the appeal boards. In 14 cases, alternatives to foreclosure were recommended and FCC concurred. In 49 cases, the appeal boards upheld the FCC decision. Decisions are pending in the remaining two cases.

During the past year, the over-all trend in interest rates has been downward. This has been of tremendous benefit to the agricultural sector. Farm Crown Credit corporation charges 11⅞ per cent on its loans with five year interest rate terms and 11.5 per cent on its shared risk mortgage program. While we would like interest rates to fall even lower, these are, in fact, the lowest rates charged by the Corporation since 1979.

In 1981-82, interest rates had reached record levels. Some FCC borrowers were locked into long-term mortgages at interest rates as high as 16.75 per cent. We know this is when many of our young farmers first got into difficulty. To assist these borrowers, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), announced earlier this year that borrowers who took out loans in 1981 and 1982 at rates above 14 per cent would be helped by an interest rate reduction program.

Over 5,400 FCC borrowers accepted the conversion of their mortgages to a five year term at 12.75 per cent. This important assistance was provided through foregone revenue to the Government of Canada. The FCC was allowed to use about $600 million of its 1984-85 borrowing authority to refinance its outstanding high interest rate loans at a lower rate. Over five years, this will provide a benefit of approximately $80 million to the borrowers who took part in this program.

In April, 1984, the FCC expanded its credit options to farmers. It began to offer five, ten and 20 year fixed interest terms. This gave borrowers a greater range of choices compared to the single 10 year term offered previously. More choice meant more flexible financial planning.

Since then, another option, a 15 year term, has been added. As well, in April, 1985, the new FCC shared risk mortgage was introduced. This innovative mortgage is meant to respond to the economic forces affecting today's farmer.

In the 1980s, one of the problems that farmers faced was not just high interest rates, but the fact that interest rates fluctuated greatly. This increased the risk to farmers and made financial planning more difficult. At the same time, fixed interest rate loans taken out at a time when rates were high offered farmers little chance to benefit when rates fell.

The shared risk mortgage program offers protection against interest rate volatility. This unique mortgage offers security against increasing rates while also allowing borrowers to take advantage of decreases. The risk of annual interest rate changes are shared between borrower and lender. Moreover, a ceiling of 2.5 per cent is placed on increases.

Since its introduction, 190 or 17 per cent of FCC borrowers have opted for the shared risk mortgage. It is a realistic and innovative lending program. Farmers appreciate this act taken by the Government.

However, the Government's quest for solutions to the difficult financial problems of agriculture have not stopped with these initiatives. FCC officials are researching new programs. For example, a form of indexed loan is being examined.

The federal Government is very conscious of and deeply concerned with the problems facing farmers. In July, the Minister of Agriculture announced plans for an in-depth review of the role and mandate of the Farm Credit Corporation. The Minister invited anyone to submit ideas on the subject of the federal Government's role in the field of farm credit.

Farm Credit Corporation officials have been consulting with farmers, commercial and public sector lenders, provincial Governments, commodity groups and university researchers. A diverse range of opinion has been offered, often reflecting common concerns about the level of interest rates and the need to help beginning farmers. The results of this consultation process are being compiled and will be ready in the near future.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this points out just some of the actions our Government has taken to try to help farmers who have found themselves in great financial difficulty, and of course, we will continue to do so.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to speak on the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I realize I do not have a great deal of time to express my views. It is ironic that the Hon. Member for Algoma introduces a motion of this magnitude today. Does he really think that he and his Party are going to be the saviours of the farmers.

I recall in 1981 as my colleague, across the way stated, when interest rates were 22 per cent. Where was his Government then? Where were the Liberals? Were they trying to help me? I was caught in that bind with 22 per cent rates at the bank. What kind of a policy did that Government come out with to help me, my neighbours, and the neighbours across western Canada? I will tell you where the Liberals were, Mr. Speaker. At that time they had a Prime Minister who came west and said: "Why should I sell your wheat?" Do you recall those days, Sir? The Wheat Board, by the way, was run by the federal Government. That attitude prevailed during all the hard times in the 1970s and 1980s experienced by the farmers of western Canada. Today the Member for Algoma stands up and says "We better start helping farmers". I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member for Algoma that our Party and this Government is determined to do everything we can to help farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: We will not on some ad hoc basis throw something at the farmers by saying "I will help you a little bit today. We will chuck this little bit of legislation in here to help your group". That is not our way. We will determine the needs and the importance of their problems and how we can affect them in the long term.

● (1830)

When they introduced a Bill of a similar nature, Bill C-17, that mighty Government of the past could do nothing with it to help farmers. The Hon. Member referred to that Bill and how great it was. When there was an amendment by the Opposition Party, the Conservative Party at the time, they never let it come to the floor. They debated it for days and days, but we must remember that it really added some substance. If we follow it all the way through, it finally died on the Order Paper when a leadership convention was called. That was how they treated farmers. I cannot help but believe that its actions today will reflect on its importance as an Opposition Party. They had an opportunity and could do nothing with it.

In the House of Commons today—and they were supported by some hon. colleagues in the New Democratic Party—they were very upset with the Government of Canada supporting a bank foreclosure. Although the figures are not out as yet, 20 per cent of the investors in that bank could very easily be farmers who retired after working all their lives for that money.

They feel that it is wrong for the Government to support that action. Shame on such an attitude! They are not really for farmers, those farmers who perhaps worked for 40 years and invested all their hard-earned money in that bank. When we say that we are prepared to support a bank which has gone down, we are supporting farmers. Today they did not consider that at all. Why did some important legislation fail during their administration? It failed because they had no will or determination to do something for agricultural people.

I come from a farm background. I have farmed. I have gone through the tough times. Yes, we have to be very concerned whenever problems develop in agriculture. Today we do have many problems. We have problems in western Canada, some involving more than just one year of drought. The Province of Manitoba was looking forward to a tremendous crop. As of today it has now had 3.5 weeks of rain. It will now be very difficult to get off a crop which is so important to western Canada. It is not only important to the Province of Manitoba; it is also important to those provinces which need feed and fodder. Indeed it will not be in the best of shape after all this rain. However, Manitobans are prepared to help out wherever they can and to give supplies to needy farmers in southern Saskatchewan—stocks of fodder, straw and so on.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

APARTHEID—SOUTH AFRICA—REQUEST FOR ECONOMIC SANCTIONS. (B) REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION

Hon. Warran Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, on April 15, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) whether, considering the escalation of violence in South Africa, he was then ready to implement economic sanctions and a mandatory program with respect to Canadians doing business in South Africa. I also asked whether he would consult with the Opposition Parties in order to develop a united national position with respect to South Africa.

In answering my question, the Minister replied that a review of this policy was under way at that time and that he would consult with the Opposition Parties. On the other hand, he was not ready at that time to announce any new policy. To his credit the Minister, through his Parliamentary Secretary, convened a meeting of representatives of all Parties. I attended on behalf of the Liberal Party; there was also a representative of the New Democratic Party. We met three times in an attempt to develop an all-Party position with respect to South Africa. Our purpose was to explore the possibility of developing a position on apartheid which would have all-Party support and would result in a unanimous resolution in the House of Commons.

At those meetings, I had proposed that the Government consider the following approaches: first, that he ban all new investment in South Africa; second, that there be a program of disinvestment; third, that there be no bank loans allowed to South Africa; fourth, that we stop Krugerrand sales in Canada; fifth, that we stop the landings of South African airlines in this country; sixth, that we completely boycott sports, cultural and scientific exchanges; seventh, that we have a mandatory code of conduct for Canadians doing business in South Africa; eighth, a full arms embargo; and ninth, a full energy embargo. I pointed out that many of these measures were already implemented or were in the process of being implemented in other countries; as a matter of fact, there are 22 Bills going through the American Congress this year in an attempt to implement all or several of those measures to which I have referred. The most important of those Bills are House of Representatives Bill 1460 and Senate Bill 635. As well, the Swedish Parliament passed a law banning all new investment in South Africa.

Unfortunately, it was not possible for Parliament to pass an all-Party resolution during the last week of the Session due to the many other matters which preoccupied Parliament. As a result, the Minister made a statement on his own behalf on July 6, a week after Parliament adjourned. While that statement of new policy was a step in the right direction and imposed more severe restrictions on South Africa with respect to Canada, it was not enough. The code of conduct is still a voluntary code. It is not mandatory and, stricktly speaking, there were no economic sanctions imposed against South Africa although there were measures to discourage Canadian trade with South Africa.

Since July, the situation in South Africa has deteriorated. There are now emergency measures in place in that country. Violence is escalating and deaths are reported each day, particularly in the black townships. Arrests of political leaders who are working for the good of the black African people are occuring.

Yesterday the President of the United States introduced some measures to deal with the South African situation. These measures go beyond those that have existed in the past against South Africa and go beyond those which were announced by Canada. However, they do not go as far as measures already voted on in the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives. They are not even acceptable to the moderates in South Africa.

I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will make a statement later this week, perhaps tomorrow. I would urge him to go at least as far as the American Congressional Bills to which I have referred and at least as far as the Swedish Parliament. In the past, the Minister has rejected sanctions because he felt that they would destroy communications with the Government of South Africa and that they might hurt the blacks. That might have been a reasonable position at one time but it has been tried for several years and has not worked. It is time for something new.

In conclusion, I would say to the Government and the Parliamentary Secretary who is present that we have reached the point of no return. Everyone agrees that apartheid is wrong, injust, cruel and immoral. It is time to play hard ball with South Africa. We await the Minister's statement later this week. If it is a tough statement, I can assure the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister that the Government will have the support of this Party and that we will be behind him 100 per cent in imposing tough measures on South Africa.

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, through you, I hear my hon. friend loud and clear. We are discussing here today a tragedy which touches Canadians in their hearts. The revulsion felt by Canadians toward apartheid and indeed toward all forms of racial discrimination is very clear. Apartheid shrieks against everything that our multicultural society stands for.

The South African Government would have us believe that it is engaged in substantive reform. No one denies that blacks there have made economic and social progress in recent years. However, the fact remains that there are more than 300 apartheid laws still on the books which dictate where blacks must live, where their families must live, where they may work, where they may own land and where they may open and run a business. These laws deprive three-quarters of the population of basic civil rights, citizenship and the franchise.

It is not by incremental, piecemeal reform aimed at diluting such a system gradually that peace and elemental justice will come to South Africa. On this side of the House, we believe that something more basic is required from the present white minority Government. It is the heart of the system itself, not the tattered edges, which must be removed.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, who is a white in South Africa? According to the law of the land, and I quote, it means:

—a person who (a) in appearance obviously is a white person and who is not generally accepted as a coloured person or (b) is generally accepted as a white person and who is not in appearance obviously not a white person.

In deciding whether any person is in appearance obviously a white person or not a white person, within the definition of white person, his, and I quote again, "habits, education and speech and deportment and demeanor . . . shall be taken into account".

How can reasonable people anywhere accept this in the 1980s at the close of the 20th century? Who can blame the black population for their rising anger and frustration? Their plight is one which moves us; their struggle is one which we must share.

The situation in South Africa calls out for vigorous action. The Government of Canada has already acted in the right direction. In fact, Canada was the first major western country to take concrete steps, as announced on July 6—you are indicating that my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

Further measures are by no means ruled out at all. We will be working closely with our Commonwealth partners in the coming weeks on the run-up to the Heads of Government Meeting in Nassau next month. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), as my hon. friend pointed out, will be making a statement shortly on the matter.

Speaking personally, I am delighted that the Hon. Member has indicated for his Party that they will support us if we make a strong statement.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—RETENTION OF WINNIPEG AS REGIONAL HEADQUARTERS. (B) GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my intention today is to follow up a concern which I first raised in a public way back in April, and one which I raised in the House on May 2 with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) concerning the consequences of the CNR appointing a Senior Vice-President for Western Canada to be located in Edmonton.

On May 2 I rose in the House and asked the Minister of Transport a question pertaining to that appointment because I was concerned that the CNR might be planning to revive a plan which it had in place a couple of years ago to amalgamate the Prairie Region, headquartered in Winnipeg, and the Mountain Region, headquartered in Edmonton, into one single region, the Western Canada Region, headquartered in Edmonton. I asked the Minister of Transport for assurances that that was not the case and that that action would not be carried out. The Minister of Transport said, and you can check the record, Mr. Speaker, "Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give the Hon. Member those assurances".

Subsequent to those assurances it became clear to me through documents which I received from various people who worked at the railway, and from documents which others such as the MLA for Transcona, Mr. Wildon Parasiuk, received, that this type of amalgamation and consolidation of the two regions was going on and that Winnipeg stood to lose its position as a regional headquarters of the CNR.

It took a long time for those of us who knew this was happening to get the message across to those in Winnipeg who did not want to believe that it was actually happening. We knew that this was happening. On a number of occasions we released documentation to that effect. At one point I wrote to the Minister of Transport providing him with a document which came from the office of the senior vice-president. This document talked about the amalgamation of the Prairie and Mountain Regions. Yet when I received the Minister's answer after some time it simply referred me to a statement that Dr. LeClair had made in which he indicated that the CN had no plans to do this. Subsequently he had to come to Winnipeg and say that they had reversed their plans to do this. He apologized to the people of Winnipeg for the anxiety caused by the CNR through this move and said that it was now all cancelled, that it would never surface again and that the 10 appointments which had been made, and which constituted transfers of senior positions from Winnipeg to Edmonton, were cancelled. Those of us, Mr. Speaker, who were on to this move on the part of the CNR from the very beginning were very pleased to hear Mr. LeClair, as the chairman of the board of the Canadian National and chief executive officer for that company, say that this was now stopped and that it would not surface again.

But what I am concerned about is that over the coming few weeks we need to know whether or not the positions which were created in Edmonton called manager, Western Canada, have actually been abolished and whether or not the positions which were formerly abolished in Winnipeg have been recreated, because it will not be enough, Mr. Speaker, to simply cancel those appointments which constitute an actual transfer of certain people from Winnipeg to Edmonton. What we want to know is that the reorganization which caused those transfers to be made in the first place is actually cancelled. Otherwise, we will have only achieved a partial victory which will not in the long run protect Winnipeg from the kind of erosion of its status as a transportation centre. Therefore, I hope it will become clear to me and others who are concerned about this matter, Mr. Speaker, in the coming days and weeks that these new positions which were created in Edmonton and filled by people in Winnipeg—some of whom no longer have a job in Winnipeg because their old job as the senior regional person has been abolished—will in fact be abolished.

I am also concerned, Mr. Speaker, with the over-all attitude of the Government towards the transportation sector in Manitoba. There are a series of federal-provincial agreements with respect to building up the transportation sector in Manitoba which came about as a result of negotiations between the Province of Manitoba and the federal Government prior to the last election. One that I am particularly concerned about, for instance, has to do with agreements pertaining to the future of the Port of Churchill and a program for the rehabilitation of rolling stock, in this case, boxcars, which would serve the Port of Churchill. This is a program which has been agreed to and has been on the books for a long time now but it seems to have a great deal of difficulty actually happening. It is of crucial importance to railway carmen in my riding who came back to work this week after a two-month lay-off, an extended shutdown, and were hoping that they would not be facing another lay-off in the very near future.

I am hoping that whoever is speaking for the Government—I see the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) here, who perhaps will be responding on behalf of the Government—can indicate to us whether or not those federal-provincial agreements are now to be honoured and whether or not they have assurances from the CNR now that those positions which were created in Edmonton as part of the new western region have in fact been abolished and the senior positions which were abolished in Winnipeg have in fact now been reinstated. That is what we need to know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), on May 2, 1985, in respect to transferring CNR workers to Edmonton, the Minister stated, and I quote from Hansard at page 4342:

—this Government has no intention of downgrading the role of Winnipeg as a transportation centre and as an important part of the CNR. The fact of the matter is that the growth in western Canada should augur well for the future of the CN operation in Winnipeg, including Transcona, because as the traffic increases it will clearly provide more jobs and more activity in western Canada, particularly in Winnipeg.

A vice-president in Winnipeg acted against Government policy and without any authorization sent out announcements that personnel would be transferred.

● (1850)

After I made a public statement in Winnipeg that this vice-president should be fired for insubordination, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill said that I should be fired. He defended the actions of this vice-president in announcing the movement of CNR personnel from Manitoba to Edmonton.

Mr. Blaikie: That is not the way it worked, Dan.

Mr. McKenzie: Winnipeg, Manitoba, is and will remain one of CN's greatest areas of activity. Over 7,000 CN employees work in Manitoba, representing more than one-third of the CN workforce in western Canada. Between 1978 and 1986, CN will have spent approximately $41 million in the Winnipeg area. This includes a material handling facility at Transcona, modernization of the wheel shop, the installation of a paint and grit blast shop, and the development and application of computer technology to the industry. As well, the Winnipeg Symington yard has grown to become the busiest of all six major yards in the CN system. Concurrent with the importance of their operations, CN has developed in Gimli, Manitoba, one of the finest transportation centres in North America.

Maurice LeClair, chairman of the CNR, had to come to Winnipeg on August 21 to make an apology to the people of Manitoba for the actions of this vice-president, who acted without any authorization at all from the chairman of the board or the board of directors itself. That is why I called for his dismissal. That is out and out insubordination. Dr. LeClair did not say that the decision had been reversed. He had no knowledge of the decision in the first place. He blamed this senior vice-president in Edmonton and said that no such proposal had ever surfaced at the board. There was no approval whatsoever of this move. He said the company did not give this officer more decision-making power and that these transfers went beyond that officer's limits. Dr. LeClair said that Winnipeg is and will be the greatest area of activity. He also said that Winnipeg will not be downgraded in favour of Edmonton.

Contrary to statements made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill that he does not trust the CNR and is skeptical of CNR's plans, I want to assure him that the CNR has learned a real lesson from this. They will not pull another stunt like this. I called for this man's resignation or firing and I stand by that. As a Member from Manitoba I am not going to tolerate this kind of insubordination from senior vice-presidents of Crown corporations. As Dr. LeClair pointed out, this has caused all kinds of anxiety and concern in Manitoba.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that I will never at any time tolerate any shenanigans like this from senior civil servants, the heads of federal government Departments, or whatever. I am glad to see that the Winnipeg media covered this incident well and pointed out that it was all a mistake. I have never seen a man eat humble pie like Dr. LeClair had to do when he came to Manitoba. I hope we never see a repeat performance like this by any senior personnel in Crown corporations or government Departments.

STATUS OF WOMEN—REQUEST FOR FUNDING FOR REAL WOMEN ORGANIZATION

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to take this opportunity to speak on behalf of the REAL Women organization. This group was formed in Toronto in 1983 by professional women and homemakers who joined together with 20,000 members from all across Canada. Their objective is to secure for all women a meaningful, equal and progressive role in the 1980s, an objective broadly embraced by the Government in freeing women from the effects of discrimination over the years.

● (1855)

REAL Women, although desiring equal opportunity for women in the workforce, as well stresses the importance of the family unit and the role of women as mothers and homemakers. Having witnessed the drastic changes that have altered our society in the last 20 years, the supporters of REAL Women have come forth with a very important point.

Throughout history the family has been the building block of our society and it is becoming increasingly obvious that the fragmentation of the family leads to a poorly functioning society and widespread social disorders are seldom unaccompanied by weakening family bonds. Alienation and delinquency are most often the result of broken homes, in whatever circumstance.

REAL Women is a group that is sensitive to these dangers and they make this awareness a constant companion in their efforts to secure wider opportunities for women in society. In other words, Mr. Speaker, their agenda has been conceived to offer the greatest possible hope for progress for women while maintaining the family as a basis of Canadian society.

To date there has been a reluctance on the part of the Government to fund REAL Women, even though many other women's groups do receive such funding. I believe that if the Government is going to fund some women's groups, such as the National Action Committee for the Status of Women, it certainly should be funding another legitimate point of view like that of the REAL Women's organization. I strongly believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is not for a group of bureaucrats in the Ministry left over from the previous administration to decide which values best represent the interests of the women of Canada. REAL Women is a rapidly growing organization representing a view which I believe is widely held by a majority of Canadian women.

Many Members of the House have indicated to me their support for the approach taken by REAL Women. Also, thousands of women across Canada have shown their support through their membership and activism. The ideas put forth by this group represent a positive way for Canadian society to undergo important changes.

I have taken the opportunity of consulting with the new Minister, the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Bouchard), who has given me assurances that he will be looking into this situation and rendering a decision. I look forward to that news.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson) for the interest he has shown in women's rights, thus demonstrating that all Progressive Conservative Members, irrespective of their sex, are concerned about the status of women.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to describe the role and the mandate of the Women's Program of the Department of the Secretary of State and explain why the Department decided against funding for REAL Women of Canada.

In 1973, a women's program was created at the Department to implement one of the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. Recognizing the important role played by women's voluntary associations in women's struggle for equal rights with men, the Commission recommended that the Government provide funding to encourage these associations to pursue their efforts, and also provide funding for other voluntary associations working in fields of particular concern to women.

The Women's Program is funding a broad range of women's groups across the country and in a broad cross-section of society to help them improve significantly the status of women in Canada.

The program tries to fund groups which through their activities are trying to make a positive contribution to the status of women, which are representative of the female population and whose work will benefit all Canadian women.

Although the work of women in the home constitutes an important contribution to society, the fact remains that in its efforts to improve the status of women—which were specifically referred to in the Throne Speech—the Government is not necessarily trying to promote a particular prototype of the family. This particular goals of REAL Women is not one of the objectives of the Women's Program, which tends to fund groups that see it as their task to explore the entire range of options women have in their struggle to achieve full equality.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that women's rights groups have been working constantly to obtain recognition of the non-remunerated work done by women in the home. For instance, a number of organizations such as the National Action Committee on the Status of Women have been promoting for many years the concept of providing a pension for women in the home.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I can inform the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Jepson), as in fact he himself said earlier, that the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Women's Program intends to review and analyze all programs under his jurisdiction as part of a comprehensive study of his new duties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 7.01 p.m.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

TREATMENT OF SEVERANCE PAYMENTS AND PENSION INCOME

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, when will the Conservative Government realize that measures which it has taken to reduce the unemployment insurance deficit are discriminatory and unfair? Specifically, I am speaking of the regulatory changes announced by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) last December regarding the treatment of severance payments and pension income for the purposes of unemployment insurance entitlement.

When will the Government realize that surpluses in pension assets belong to the workers, not to the companies, and that companies should not be allowed to use pension plan assets to reduce their corporate debts?

When will the Government realize the fact that the nature of the workforce is changing and many older workers would choose early retirement to make room for younger workers if conditions were favourable?

Up to 1,000 Inco workers in Sudbury will be faced with this dilemma in the very near future. Sudbury has been hit hard in the past with massive lay-offs, and this is a new blow to my community. All of those involved are attempting to find the best possible solution, yet the measures taken by the Conservative Government severely curtail the options available.

Unemployment insurance has a role to play in these situations. UIC can be used as a bridging mechanism between the older and younger generations of Canadian workers. I urge the Minister of Employment and Immigration to reconsider the changes which she announced last December and to allow older employees who choose early retirement to live in dignity and security and, at the same time, save jobs for our younger workers.

HISTORIC EVENTS

CREATION OF PROVINCE OF SASKATCHEWAN IN 1905

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, you will notice that many Hon. Members are sporting "I love Saskatchewan" buttons. On September 1, 1905, 80 years ago, an Act creating the Province of Saskatchewan came into force. Today the very mention of the word "Saskatchewan" brings to mind the vision of waving wheat and endless skies which characterize the province known as Canada's bread-basket.

Back in 1911 there were 492,000 souls in the province. In 1984, with the large influx of immigrants who came out on the new railroad and highways, we had a healthy 1,010,900 citizens enjoying our clean air, water, and lowest rate of unemployment.

The vastness of our land, 252,000 square miles, is enriched by an astonishing diversity of languages and cultures, including native people, English, Ukrainian, Chinese, Polish, German, and French, who settled in Saskatchewan in our early years. Our main industries are agriculture, fishing, mining and forestry. It may come as a surprise to many people that two-thirds of Saskatchewan are covered with forests and it has more lakes than any other western province. Agriculture is the mainstay of our economy and we are a supplier of wheat for the world.

Saskatchewan has grown from buffalo trails and wilderness to a modern society, thanks to our pioneers. However, we in Saskatchewan are not without our troubles in agriculture. We rely on our federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and other Ministers to assist us in our time of distress—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ENERGY

OPPOSITION TO CONTINENTAL ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) is meeting with her United States counterpart, the U.S. Energy Secretary, to discuss energy relations between the United States and Canada. I should like to take this opportunity to warn the Minister to stay away from any discussions with the U.S. Energy Secretary on a so-called continental energy policy.

Recently in a meeting of the Canada-U.S. Interparliamentary Group, held last May, the U.S. delegation proposed what would be known as a North American, or continental, energy policy. One Senator said that its objectives would be to permit continental planning, to reduce transmission costs, and to rationalize supplies. On the surface that sounds good, but it really represents another attempt by the United States to obtain unlimited access to Canada's natural resources and to further its unspoken policy of treating Canada as a resource colony, or a milk cow, for the United States.

It may seem attractive to Canadian energy producers who are anxious to increase their sales and are hungry for new markets, but in the long run any merging of the Canadian and U.S. energy markets would only result in the United States swallowing our precious non-renewable resources such as natural gas which is now at bargain basement prices, while leaving Canada high and dry to pay higher prices in the future.

The Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has already taken Canada down the road to losing our independence. We must not do it in an energy policy. Energy is a key area, and we should not have a continental energy policy.

DAIRY INDUSTRY—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, this morning, 32 Conservative Members from Quebec were able to meet with the Executive of the Fédération des producteurs de lait du Québec.

The federation submitted its views to us in a very comprehensive brief on the long-term dairy policy. Personally, I can assure producers that the brief will not be set aside and forgotten, since it contains a number of constructive recommendations. In our election platform, we in the Progressive Conservative Party promised to put in place, with the co-operation of the sector concerned, a long-term dairy policy that would consider the needs of our Quebec producers.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has set up a committee that will be reporting soon, and I may add that there is constant consultation going on between the Department, the organizations concerned and Quebec Conservative Members with respect to the needs of our farmers. Dairy producers and all farm producers in Quebec can rest assured that the Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) and his Quebec colleagues promise to listen to what they have to say and to support them at all times. We are visible, we are available and we are accessible. We consult a great before making decisions. Quebec farmers may be sure that we will support their cause, provided their demands are fair, equitable and above all reasonable.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SIZE OF SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS BUDGET

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, small craft harbours all across the country are in a sad state of disrepair, and fishermen know that things are going to get a lot worse under this Government. This year's budget forecast is $60 million, or less than a third of what it was last year and what it should be. The Government is allotting a paltry sum to Canadian fishermen. My hon. colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser), knows that the money in the small craft harbours budget is totally insufficient to honour the Department's mandate to maintain and upgrade small craft harbours.

When I toured fishing ports in my riding of Egmont this summer, I saw holes in the docks, holes big enough for a grown man to fall through. Those wharves are dangerous places to work. In my riding alone $3 million is needed to fix the wharves to make them safe. That is not an exaggerated figure; it is the Department's own estimate. The breakwaters need work, the docks need repair, and the harbours need dredging. The list goes on and on.

Everyone in the industry knows that the major problem with small craft harbours is underfunding. The budget should be tripled. It should be at least $160 million per year if the Government intends to honour its promise to maintain those harbours. It is time for the Minister to fight with his Treasury Board colleagues for more money for small craft harbours before fishermen lose their lives because of unsafe working conditions.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

CONSTRUCTION OF ICE-BREAKER—ASPIRATIONS OF LÉVIS CITIZENS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs announced yesterday in the House a Government strategy concerning Canada's sovereignty in Arctic waters. Canada has for many years considered the continent and the Arctic archipelago as an integral part of its territory.

Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Lévis, I am the proudest citizen in my riding and in Canada, because yesterday's statement by the Secretary of State has demonstrated the continuing significance of the official act of possession of Arctic lands and waters by Captain Joseph Elzéar Bernier, a citizen of Lévis. Captain Bernier took possession of this territory on behalf of the Government of Canada on July 1, 1909.

In so doing, Captain Joseph Elzéar Bernier added 500,000 square miles to Canada's territory. In 1909, Captain Bernier's ship had left Lévis to conquer the vast territories of the Arctic.

Since the Secretary of State mentioned the Government's decision to build a Polar Class 8 icebreaker to affirm our sovereignty, I hope that this ship too will be built by Versatile Davie of Lévis, in Lauzon, in my riding, since the icebreaker's task will be to continue the work started by Joseph Elzéar Bernier.

In expressing this hope, I am also reflecting the hopes of the authorities of Versatile Davie, and of Mr. Robert Monette, President of the Employees' Union, Mr. Louis Larivière, President of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, and Mr. Marcel Gosselin, President of the Lévis-Lauzon Economic Council.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope Lévis will have its ship.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ELIGIBILITY FOR NON-INSURED MEDICAL SERVICES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, last March the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) promised that Indians would receive funding for all the people who were recognized as band members, whether or not they met the federal Government's criteria for Indian status. As I said at the time, without that guarantee the right of Indian bands to determine their own membership would be meaningless. Now, however, the Government is singing a different song.

On August 12 the Director General of Operations for Medical Services in Health and Welfare issued a directive specifically repudiating the Minister's promise. The directive reads:

> Eligibility for payment of non-insured services is dependent upon being registered as a Status Indian.

This means that the Government plans to perpetuate a two-tier system of health care in Indian communities. The directive calls into question the credibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs. In the interests of Indian health and his own credibility with Indian people, the Minister of Indian Affairs should talk with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and urge him to provide full health services for all Indian people.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

INSTALLATION OF NEW PLANTS—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO CONSIDER CERTAIN FACTORS

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Last month, Mr. Speaker, the Toyota Company announced its intention to build an assembly plant in Canada. The moment I heard the news I immediately invited the company to build its plant in Quebec, more specifically at Brossard in my constituency of La Prairie.

The City of Brossard can offer a parcel of land of over five million square feet and all services required for the construction of such facilities, including railroads, a seaway, a highway just a few minutes from the American border and the airport, and all this for a very good price.

Later on other announcements were made by other companies. I must say that they are welcome as well.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I might point out to the House that Quebec did not get preferential treatment from the previous Government when it comes to the auto industry. I therefore express the wish that our Government will steer those companies towards regions that offer them what they need, and that it will bear in mind the economic situation and the unemployment rate in the Montreal region where it is still very high.

FISHERIES

CONDITIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, a critical situation exists in the inshore fishery in Newfoundland and Labrador. Because of the failure of the inshore fishery close to 50 per cent of fishermen and plant workers in the province will not be able to draw unemployment insurance benefits this winter. That means that thousands of workers will be without income during the winter months. In the long term, this is a situation that must be dealt with through discussions dealing with the unemployment insurance review and the Macdonald Royal Commission. However, Newfoundlanders and Labradorians need help right now.

I call on the Government to allocate sufficient funds to provide work projects for fishermen and plant workers so that they can qualify for unemployment insurance and at the same time improve their working facilities.

Second, I call on the Government to supply offshore fish at inshore plants so as to ensure continued employment for plant workers. This is an urgent matter with which the Government must deal right now.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—INQUIRY CONCERNING MINISTER'S CONVERSATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Government's handling of the Canadian Commercial Bank situation has been a national disgrace. The way that the Minister and his colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, have attempted to cover up the matter is even more serious and almost amounts, I believe, to a scandal. Canadian pension funds have lost millions of dollars and individual Canadians have been totally wiped out all because of the incompetence of two Cabinet Ministers. Will the Minister of Finance tell us with whom, other than his colleagues, the Prime Minister, and the Officials of his own Department, he had conversations with relating to the bank during the months of July and August?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the preamble to the question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition since I think certain matters have to be set straight.

The failure of this bank did not start on March 27, nor did it start on September 2. It started many years back. There are two factors which led to this. First, there were the decisions which have been made by the management of the bank that led to a deterioration in the loan portfolio of the bank and which resulted in a great many bad loans. That is what led to the insolvency of the bank. That is what led to the decision by the Inspector General to give his advice to the Minister of State and myself. One of the causes for that, as the hon. gentleman full knows, since he has spoken to this matter many times, is that the National Energy Program itself was at the heart of many of the bad loans that the bank wrote during that period of time.

I would also like to make it clear that there has been no attempt at cover up at all with respect to this matter. What we have offered to the opposition Parties is a full committee hearing in order that all the specific questions can be put, and in order that answers can be found.

In answer to the Hon. Member's specific question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In answer to the specific question—

Mr. Speaker: Very short, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition throws a great deal of innuendo out there—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VIABILITY OF BANK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance made that same argument at the time of the original bail-out, news of which he brought before this House in March and April. When he brought that measure before the House, why did he and his colleague mislead the House with respect to the viability of that bank as a result of the bail-out?

Can the Minister assure us that no member of his staff, no senior official of the Department, or the Minister himself, had conversations with leading officers of the chief financial institutions of the country, or any customer of the bank, giving them the feeling or understanding that the Government was thinking about pulling the plug on this bank?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition would expect that either the Minister of State for Finance or myself would go to a few of the top bankers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —in order to see whether or not there was an interest on the part of those banks to participate in some means of saving this bank. We did that in the latter part of August and we make no apologies for it. That is something which we felt was our responsibility to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TELEPHONE CALLS AND TRAVEL PLANS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in light of the Minister's answer, the Canadian people have a right to know just who destroyed this bank, who pulled the plug and who was an accessory to the pulling of that plug. I want the Minister of Finance to table in the House at an early opportunity a list of his phone calls and the phone calls of his senior staff and senior officials.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want a list of the travel plans of the Minister and his senior officials covering the relevant periods in July and August so that we can have, with precision, the names of the people with whom they spoke, in order to compare that list to fit the list of deposit records of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

• (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was casting a lot of innuendo outside the House of Commons yesterday about alleged phone calls which I had made.

Mr. Lapierre: You made some.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): And alleged phone calls which were giving inside information to the banks. I challenge him to step outside and give the names of those people to whom he says I have given inside information. And if he cannot prove that, resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Out, out!

An Hon. Member: Take a walk, John.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS—ADVICE GIVEN TO CHARTERED BANKS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Inspector General of Banks has stated that during the summer as he became increasingly concerned about the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank, he advised the chief executive officers of the banks which contributed to the CCB bail-out. Will the Minister confirm that these calls were made under his authorization?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, those calls were made by the Inspector General of Banks. The Minister of State for Finance is the person to whom the Inspector General reports directly.

Mr. Lapierre: It's your responsibility. Come on.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I cannot comment on the nature of the communication between the Inspector General and the Minister of State for Finance at that time.

Mr. Chrétien: You are the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): But I would encourage the Hon. Member to raise that point in the committee hearings—

Mr. Gauthier: Do it here . . . now.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that we have offered to the opposition Parties and to the people of Canada, so we can deal with what are very, very complex issues in a more appropriate way.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ABOUT DEPOSITORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, some of the information which has been requested in committee has been denied us. Therefore I would now ask the Minister again if he will provide to the House full details of the names and addresses of all depositors over $100,000 in March, in June, and at the date of closing, September 2, so we can see what movement there has been. And can we also have full details of who bought the banks' loans at bargain basement prices?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is very well aware of the section in the Bank Act which prohibits the Government from releasing information which is of a confidential nature. We might like to do that. We are bound by law not to do that. That is the reason we cannot respond to those specific questions.

Some Hon. Members: Give us the names.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, that great lawyer from Bay Street, says for me to break the law. Would he give me the legal advice as to how he would like me to break the law?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to hear two boys from Bay Street fighting about the banks.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister and arises from an answer given yesterday by the Minister of State for Finance. The Prime Minister knows that in March the Government of Canada, along with the chartered banks, participated in a multimillion dollar bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank. Then the Government, as well as the chartered banks, assured credit unions, municipalities and others, that the Canadian Commercial Bank would be a profitable entity.

We now know that the same chartered banks which participated in the bail-out began to scuttle the viability of the Commercial Bank by making withdrawals. The Minister said yesterday it was her view that such withdrawals were perfectly normal commercial practice. Does the Prime Minister agree with that opinion?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, Mr. Speaker, is my hon. friend certain that is what the Minister said?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Mr. Mulroney: You are certain that is a direct quote from the Minister? Because I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that is at variance with what I recollect the Minister saying.

Perhaps I could tell my hon. friends this. If a support package were put together in the neighbourhood of hundreds of millions of dollars with a view to saving a financial institution in western Canada, when the Minister spoke to that issue it would have been contradictory in the extreme, having put together a support package to save an institution in western Canada, to then say: "I don't think it's going to work".

Mr. Broadbent: That is not the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Obviously the Government believed, the banks believed, and the Opposition believed, that the package put forward was designed to be of assistance to that institution, its depositors, and western Canada.

In regard to the question my hon. friend specifically raises, and we have to go very carefully to the premise, which is the alleged statement of the Minister, I will answer as follows. We asked and invited Members of Parliament to bring this matter to committee as quickly as possible, because if anyone, a chartered bank or anyone else, acted incorrectly, then let the public know, and if they acted illegally then immediate prosecution will be initiated against them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WITHDRAWALS MADE BY CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, given the proceedings going on both inside and outside this House, there may at some point be criminal charges. One hopes that is not necessary or the case, but it may happen. However, my question to the Prime Minister has nothing to do with that. It has everything to do with the fact that Ministers of the Crown have responsibility for millions of dollars of taxpayers' money and when they enter into an agreement with the banks they should make sure the banks do not scuttle the project. That is what the question is all about.

I ask the Prime Minister to answer the question this time. If he checks the record he will find the Minister of State for Finance in this House yesterday accepted as normal business practice the right of the banks to withdraw their deposits from the Canadian Commercial Bank even if it led to a scuttling of the project.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Read the record.

Mr. Deans: I have read it.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Read Hansard. Tell the truth.

Mr. Deans: I have read it.

Mr. Broadbent: Since we know the banks made a deal with the Government of Canada, and since we know that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Could the Hon. Member come right to a question?

Mr. Broadbent: We know they withdrew their funds, which helped scuttle the project. Does the Prime Minister agree that they ought to have made that kind of withdrawal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what I know is that the chartered banks contributed something in the neighbourhood of $60 million as part of a support package to save that institution in western Canada. It would be preposterous in the extreme, having contributed the $60 million on a Wednesday, for them to withdraw it on a Thursday. It may be that that is the evidence to be adduced before a parliamentary committee. That is why we want this matter to go to a parliamentary committee so that value judgments can be made.

My hon. friend says the banks scuttled the project. He does not know that at all. Not at all. If that is the case, we will deal with the banks of Canada with the utmost severity, but we will not hang anyone until the proof is in. You want to hang people before the proof is in; that is what is wrong.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that he ought to know now whether the banks made those withdrawals soon thereafter. He should not have to wait for an inquiry; he should know now.

CABINET RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has responsibility for his Minister of Finance and his Minister of State for Finance. Was the Cabinet not kept informed of the withdrawals that were being made? Was there not a continual monitoring of the process by the Cabinet in exercising its responsibility to the taxpayers? Or were Ministers prepared to sacrifice not only the Canadian Commerical Bank but the credit unions and municipalities, and then come back to all the rest of the taxpayers of Canada to ask for another $1 billion to pay out? I ask the Prime Minister is that responsible leadership?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat mystified by the line of questioning of my hon. friend. I know the Liberals would be. They are criticizing us for helping a fledgling institution. They didn't say a word when they pumped a couple of billion dollars into Canadair in Montreal and refused to allow an accounting here in the House of Commons. That is what happened. We want this to go before a committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I can remember asking a previous Prime Minister for a committee of the House so that we could examine and try to save that institution in Montreal, and the answer was no.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: I am telling my hon. friend that the matter arose and, in combination with all of the institutions, we tried to put together a support package to save this institution in western Canada. The Government believed, acting on advice, that it would work. I am sure that everyone in the House hoped that it would work because it would be in the interest of Canada and all of our national institutions. Obviously it did not, and there are consequences of that. The only way that we can objectively examine the responsibility for this is before a parliamentary committee and by having the matter adjudicated in a proper forum and according to the proper rules. I will not accept the notion that you hang them now and try them later. That is the NDP way.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WITHDRAWAL OF FUNDS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be clear that the contacts were made by members of the Minister's official in financial circles. So would the Minister not agree that people thus contacted this way felt that it was in their own interest to withdraw their money from the bank at the earliest opportunity?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Hon. Member—

Mr. Lapierre: No, he is asking the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —if he has specific information on which he is basing that allegation. If so, let me have it and I will respond to it. I am not aware of any contact that has been made, apart from what I mentioned in my response to the Leader of the Opposition. If he or his Leader has any other information, let me see it.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying that if it is established that such contracts were made by people in his office, then they contributed directly to the downfall of that bank and to the cost of $1 billion to Canadian taxpayers?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What is the question?

Mr. Johnston: Would the Minister agree that if it is established that those contacts were made, that that would have contributed directly to the downfall of the bank and a cost of $1 billion to Canadian taxpayers?

Mr. Mulroney: A hypothetical question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Out of order.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the nature of the question. If he would like to repeat it more clearly—

Mr. Gauthier: Did you help the bank go down the drain?

Mr. Speaker: There are some traditions about hypothetical questions. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

REASON FOR GOVERNMENT DELAY IN ESTABLISHING TRUE SITUATION OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and deals with the same issue.

I have just found out today that the chartered banks which took part in the rescue operation of the Canadian Commercial Bank decided right from the beginning to write off the $60 million they put up for this rescue operation treating the whole amount as a loss.

Was the Cabinet or the Government aware of the opinion of the chartered banks, namely that it was a loss from the word go, with perhaps the possibility of earning a small return? If not, why did the Government fail to act for nearly four months before even trying to assess the real situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has information which is not available to the House. I mentioned that in the month of March the Official Opposition and the Government, the interested parties in this case, shared the common opinion—if I am not mistaken—that such action was likely to save this national institution located in Western Canada. That is why we acted as we did. Now if you tell me... Yes, but you were in agreement. It is because you believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mulroney: If you have new information ... All we knew at the time was that the bankers and the others believed that the operation was likely to save the institution in question. That is why we acted as we did.

[English]

CABINET'S KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. We are looking at the ability of the Government to manage the affairs of the country. It has now lost Canadian taxpayers $1 billion. The Prime Minister says that he is not aware of the fact that the chartered banks wrote off the $60 million that they put into the rescue effort which they made in March. If the Cabinet was not aware of that, what kind of management were we getting for the people of Canada, and isn't that why we lost $1 billion of taxpayers' money?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I said no such thing. The problem with the NDP is that they ask questions and will not even listen to the answer. That is what is wrong with the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY WHETHER STUDY MADE OF NORTHLAND BANK

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

It now seems obvious that we shall have to do without the Canadian Commercial Bank. Basic mistakes were made in this affair, but there is another bank which I believe might deserve to be saved, namely the Northland.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he or the Minister of State for Finance have reviewed the value of the assets of the Northland Bank to determine its viability.

We have learned that it took four months before a study was undertaken in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Can the Minister now tell us whether such a study has been made, and if so, whether this bank is viable?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a former banker himself. He should know the answer to that question. There is only one basis on which I, as the Minister of Finance, can appoint curators for any bank. The only basis on which I can do that is on a report from the Inspector General of Banks. I have that report for both the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank and the decisions were based on those reports.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF CERTAIN STUDY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to this question because it is of capital importance and I believe that this is why the whole bail-out operation failed in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Is the Minister of Finance now saying that he has in his possession a study similar to that prepared by Mr. Hichman which led to the closing down of the Canadian Commercial Bank? Is that what the Minister has just said?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, do you think that I would make this decision just by pulling the answer out of the air?

Mr. Garneau: That's what you did. That's what you did in March.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Member for Laval-des-Rapides does not know what he is talking about. He is a former banker himself and he should have read the Bank Act before he took on the responsibilities that he held as a president of a bank. I have to have a report for both of those banks before I can appoint a curator. Both of those banks collaborated with the Inspector General of Banks to produce and provide the information on which the decisions were made. There is a report for both the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank, based on a considerable amount of work done by the Inspector General.

GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He is well aware that the Canadian banking system is one of the most profitable banking systems in the world and that in the third quarter the Canadian banks indicated a profit increase of 27 per cent over last year's third quarter. The Minister will also realize that banking history has indicated that banks have always come to the rescue of their own during troubled times.

Why did the Government decide, in this instance, to break from that tradition and ask the taxpayers of Canada to cough up something in the neighbourhood of a thousand million dollars to bail out this particular bank, the CCB, as well as the Northland if necessary? Why did he break from that tradition?

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in March we entered into an agreement with the banks, the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Province of Alberta and the Province of British Columbia to do exactly what the Hon. Member is suggesting we should have done on September 2. We talked to the heads of those banks. There are a couple of other banks that came to us and said that they might be interested in merging with these banks. They looked into the situation and decided that they could not do so.

On that basis we felt we had to move the way we did. These are very complex areas and very specific questions which he is putting, and the Hon. Member will get more complete and comprehensive answers by putting those questions at the committee hearings.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF PROTECTED DEPOSITORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister believe that he now has a right to ask the taxpayers of Canada to come up with a billion dollars in bail-out money without providing a list of those people who will benefit from this bail-out? Whom is he trying to protect? Is this a cover-up? Are there firms that he does not want the people of Canada to know about in terms of this bail-out?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Masters of innuendo.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Innuendo has been flying around this place, starting with the Leader of the Opposition and now the finance critic of the NDP. I encourage him to bring those questions to the committee.

Let me say one thing to him; you can't say that one can treat one depositor this way and another depositor that way. All depositors are equal.

Mr. Riis: Who are they?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I remind him, if he would listen—

Mr. Broadbent: Why do you have an in-house committee then?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If his Leader would listen to the answer to the question, the depositors are a wide range of people, be they individual Canadians such as farmers, or small businessmen from a number of small communities in Canada. There are hospitals that are depositors. We have seen the City of Kanata as a depositor. There is a wide range of people as well as some of the major—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They all have to be treated equally under the law.

PLACEMENT OF LEGAL BUSINESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister told us that he had nothing to do with Sam Wakim or Sam Wakim's firm getting the legal work of the Export Development Corporation. Therefore, I want to ask the Minister of State for International Trade who recommended that firm to the Export Development Corporation, and whether he or any members of his staff discussed with Mr. Wakim the prospect of the legal work which was to be awarded.

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, upon assuming responsibility for the Export Development Corporation we reviewed many of its activities and noticed that outside legal work amounted to $1 million a year. We felt that other firms across Canada should have an opportunity to share in that work—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kelleher: We asked EDC to explore the possibility of retaining other legal firms. It said that it was prepared to do so if three criteria were met; expertise, an Ottawa office, and competitive rates. Weir and Foulds, a distinguished legal firm, met that criteria and were retained to do some of that work.

I would like to point out that EDC had been using that firm for legal work prior to the change in government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DISCUSSIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is very interesting information. However, I want to repeat my original question to the Minister. Before the legal work was awarded to the firm that Mr. Wakim just joined, did the Minister or any of his staff discuss the prospect of that legal work going to the new firm?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to remember that the legal firm of Weir and Foulds was the one that was retained. Many lawyers, including Mr. Wakim—he was not the only one—discussed with me the possibility of doing legal work not only for EDC but other corporations that must report through me.

IMPACT OF PENSION INCOME ON BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Inco Limited of Sudbury announced yesterday that it would have to reduce its work force by up to 1,000 employees, based on production. It is preferable to the community and the workers themselves that an early retirement program be offered to protect the jobs of the younger workers. One deterrent to that is the present change in the Unemployment Insurance Act regarding pension income. Is the Minister prepared to abandon, or at least postpone, that whole proposal for pension income being used in calculating unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think we should be clear that the issue here is not unemployment insurance. The issue here is the behaviour of a company that has returned to a substantial profit margin—$33 million in the first half of this year—has done that on the backs of the employees, and is now threatening the employees, and indeed the community, with further lay-offs. By its own estimates the company has said that a substantial number of employees will accept early retirement knowing the UI provisions. I want to say to the Hon. Member that I find that kind of corporate behaviour irresponsible, and I hope he would as well.

INCO EMPLOYMENT LEVELS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. I wholeheartedly endorse what the Minister of Employment and Immigration said. In light of the correct analysis which the Minister has given, what steps will the Prime Minister take to ensure that the employment levels at Inco will be kept at the present level?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I could speak to the Leader of the Opposition who is a former director of Inco, I think.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, he wasn't.

Mr. Mulroney: I just wanted to find out if he was awake.

As the Minister of Employment has indicated, we will work carefully to make sure that corporations fulfil their social responsibility.

Mr. Rodriguez: Like Iron Ore?

Mr. Mulroney: Pardon?

Mr. Rodriguez: Like Iron Ore?

Mr. Mulroney: Like Iron Ore, precisely, which we may use as a model of a program where there was no provincial or federal legislation. I had the honour of introducing and passing the most generous package for retirement in the history of Canada. That is what we are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear! More.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could stick to the answer.

Mr. Mulroney: And I then ran in the riding where Schefferville is and I won every poll.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

SERVICE AT BLUE WATER BRIDGE INTERNATIONAL CROSSING

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It is reported that the customs complement at the international crossing at the Blue Water bridge is faced with a further reduction in personnel. Can the Minister assure me that we will find a solution, first, to the existing problem at this customs entry point, which causes a backlog of vehicles and hour-long delays, prior to any further reduction in personnel considerations?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton with regard to the level of service and the problems that he has raised. I can tell him that I have already discussed the matter in a preliminary way with my officials. I will report back to him as soon as I have something of substance to tell him.

SITUATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERY WORKERS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I hope her answer to this one is as good as her answer to the last question put to her. It also concerns a disastrous situation that affects workers. There is a complete failure in the inshore fishery in Newfoundland. The Minister knows that. She knows that 50 per cent of the plant workers and fishermen will not have enough to qualify for benefits this winter. What is she going to do? Is she prepared now to take measures that were taken before, and announce a special work program so that people will not have to be demeaned by welfare this winter?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member that we are well aware of this situation. We have been following that matter very carefully. We know of the water temperatures and the failure in some parts of the fishing industry this summer. My colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, is monitoring the situation in an ongoing way. Let me say to the Hon. Member that it would be premature to announce action at this point before we have seen the results of the fall fishing season. That is why we are keeping a very close watch over the situation.

REQUEST FOR WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): I would say to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, it is not the temperature of the water, it is the temperature of the fishermen I am concerned about. It is getting hotter. If we wait until the end of this season in November, it will be too late. We need money. We need it now. If the Minister waits, it will be too late. Will the Minister now announce a works program for this winter?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that we took action this past spring in light of the ice conditions. We did that as we evaluated what was happening on an ongoing basis. We are doing exactly the same thing now. We will be in a position to see how the fall fishing season produces.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

ROLE OF INUIT IN ESTABLISHING CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding Canada's new policies on Arctic sovereignty. The Minister yesterday laid claim directly through the Inuit to Arctic sovereignty since they have been there, to use the Minister's own words, since time immemorial on the lands and ice of the Arctic archipelago.

Since the Inuit and aboriginal presence is vital to Canadian sovereignty, is the Government now serious about settling matters of aboriginal title in non-treaty areas of Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may depart very briefly from normal parliamentary custom, I would simply like to express my appreciation of the spirit in which the Hon. Member responded yesterday to the statement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The answer to the Hon. Member's question, as my colleague, the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs will confirm, is, yes.

SUBMARINE RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, let me pay tribute to the Minister also. I think some very important moves on behalf of our country were made by the Minister yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: I will not go any further, Mr. Speaker.

On the new policy of Arctic sovereignty, the Minister was silent on a number of other vital matters related to securing sovereign title firmly in international law. Is he now going to order through the Canada Oil and Gas and Lands Act claim to the geographical maximum to submarine rights to all Canada's maritime boundaries, including the 141st meridian between Yukon and Alaska?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what I am going to do, and the thought occurred to me yesterday, is add the Hon. Member for Skeena to the list of people whom I consult closely on this question.

REQUEST FOR STRONGER LAWS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. I applaud the Minister for having recently brought before this House progressive legislation to crack down on the problem of prostitution in our cities. In light of this initiative, can the Minister give us any indication of when he might, in an equally firm manner, bring forth measures that will strengthen our laws against pornography, especially that with violence and exploitive content?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his thanking me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It is not too often one gets thanked in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: If the Pied Piper arrived on the scene in Ottawa, we would have no Opposition left.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: He has been waiting all summer for that one.

Mr. Crosbie: These issues, as the Hon. Member knows, are very complicated. We are now discussing with the provinces and other very interested groups what our package should be. I hope we will have a package of legislation by Christmas, and if not, certainly shortly thereafter.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT AID TO FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

In the Prime Minister's first Throne Speech on November 5 last year, it says under the heading Social Justice in the paragraph on families with children, and I quote:

My Government has as a high priority measures to support and strengthen the Canadian family—

Could the Prime Minister inform our 3.5 million families in Canada that the message was that there would be a 3 per cent cut in the indexation of family allowance, a 3 per cent cut in the child tax credit, a $55 million cut in the benefit program for these families?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has recognized the importance that both the Government and Canadian society place on the family unit. I think many of us in this House and in society generally feel that that concept had to be strengthened, that there were certain trends in society that were possibly reducing the importance of the family. This Government wants to bring forward initiatives that will enhance both the Goverment's position relative to the family, but more important, show that the family is the cornerstone of society. I am glad the Hon. Member has recognized that.

Second, in terms of the family allowance proposal that the Member has put forward, I remind him that in 1976 when he was a member of the Government opposite, the Government froze indexing of family allowances.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at the Prime Minister's decision to remain seated, because it is embarrassing when the Government cuts $55 million from its spending program for families but can find one billion . . . I am not surprised he is embarrassed.

Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Social Injustice in Canada. Speaking of the Throne Speech, the Minister said that it was his task to initiate action to improve the quality of life of our families. I am asking a straightforward question, and I would like a straight answer: Was it the Minister's task to cut $55 million from family benefit programs? Was that his position?

[English]

Ms. Copps: You guys think this is a real joke. Families don't.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member should look at the proposal the Government is putting forward. Most social agencies said: "Increase the child tax credit". We have done that. If the Hon. Member takes a look at the proposal that was in the Budget itself, the reduction of the escalation is less than what the Liberals imposed in 1976.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF NOTICE OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION—RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: On Monday, September 9, 1985, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised a point of order as to the appropriateness and procedural acceptability of the tabling of a notice of a Ways and Means Motion by the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order and thereby interrupting another Hon. Member's speech.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, in his submission yesterday morning, drew an analogy between the prohibition in our rules of moving motions to adjourn or of amendments on a point of order. He argued that the Hon. President of the Privy Council had acted contrary to our practices and precedents.

On that particular point, I would point out that motions to adjourn and amendments are subsidiary motions and consequently are related to and dependent upon a main motion before the House. That is why they must be moved within the confines of a particular debate and not in an incidental manner.

Standing Order 65 permits a Minister of the Crown to table Ways and Means motions at any time during a sitting regardless of the matter then before the House. However, the Chair has some difficulty in interpreting the words "at any time" in the absolute. For instance, it would not be proper to do so during Question Period. Our practice is certainly clear in that instance.

Having now had the opportunity to review previous cases, I can inform the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier that the Minister has in fact not contravened our practices, nor set a precedent. I would refer him to the Debates of December 11, 1973, page 8639, where a similar motion was tabled by means of a point of order. While I must find, therefore, that the action of the Minister on Monday was in order, I hasten to add that I have some reservations about interrupting another Hon. Member in order to table such documents unless the adjournment hour is about to preclude such a tabling.

In the future, may I suggest, it would be preferable to table such notices of motions at the end of Government Orders and before Private Members' Business, or after a Member has resumed his or her seat and before another Member is recognized for debate.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that in your ruling you identified and described precisely what I did last Monday.

They call upon the Government to create a new youth employment program which will deal effectively with unemployment among all groups of young people, which will meet significant community needs and which will permit non-profit organizations as well as the private sector to benefit significantly.

PENSION BENEFITS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer a petition on behalf of a number of residents of British Columbia. They point out that pension benefits are essential for the maintenance of family income and the compensation of workers for their lifelong contributions to society. They ask, therefore, that pension benefits not be deducted from their unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from residents of Halifax, Nova Scotia. They call upon the Government to withdraw the provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act which would see pension income being used as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes.

MOTION UNDER S.O. 31

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SDI RESEARCH

Mr. Speaker: I am in receipt of a notice of motion from the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) under Standing Order 31.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 31, I ask leave to move that this House do now adjourn for the purpose of debating an extremely urgent and important matter, namely, the undermining of Canada's national interest by various Ministers offering assistance to Canadian companies that wish to take part in star wars research, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) clearly said on September 7 that participation would not be in Canada's interest.

If leave is granted, we in this Party will present the serious concerns of Canadians on this matter and will impress upon the Government the danger to Canada's national and international interests of any involvement in the Strategic Defence Initiative.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam has given the Chair the required notice of her intention to seek leave of the House to move a motion to adjourn.

While I appreciate that the matter she has raised is one in which she has a particular interest, as do many Hon. Members of the House, and is one of continuing interest to the House, I have been unable to find in her submission the elements of a genuine emergency. Consequently I cannot justify ruling in favour of an emergency debate.

Furthermore, to be consistent with the ruling that I gave earlier this week, I should remind the Hon. Member that the first report of the Special Joint Committee on International Relations is currently before the House and she may find therein a method to have a debate on the matter at some early moment.

CROWN CORPORATIONS DISSOLUTION AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, September 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret, that Bill C-60, an Act to authorize procurement of the dissolution of certain Crown corporations and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying yesterday, the intent of Bill C-60 certainly does not match the intent of the Government in its statements concerning Crown corporations prior to getting elected. I want to conclude simply by saying that we have under discussion in the House today the principle of this Bill. Hopefully, this non-Bill will be dealt with in Committee of the Whole, at third reading stage and disposed of very quickly. I say that because the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill, to use his exact words, said that it was an effort "to rationalize . . . Crown corporations". He also said that "we are going to dissolve at this time" these four Crown corporations. The fact of the matter is that these Crown corporations are not even in existence in reality.

The first Crown corporation with which we are dealing is Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd. It has not been in operation for a couple of decades and was used as a shipping service to the West Indies. It was sold to Cuba.

The second Crown corporation of the four, St. Anthony Fisheries Limited, was formed only for a one-year period. Then it was taken over a couple of years ago by another Crown corporation supported by the present Government. It is a Crown corporation that has been spoken of in flowery language by the Progressive Conservative Premier of Newfoundland. As I said before, he said that it was the greatest thing to happen since confederation with Canada. The particular Crown corporation with which we are dealing in this Bill was dissolved. It was finished after a year.

The third Crown corporation with which we are dealing is a strange and important one. It is called the Societa a responsibilita Limitata Immobiliare San Sebastiano which, quite simply, was a Crown corporation formed to buy a residence for the Ambassador to the Vatican. Its one asset was transferred to the Government of Canada.

The fourth Crown corporation contained in this very important Bill before the House of Commons, a Bill enunciating government policy on Crown corporations, is the Crown corporation called Uranium Canada Limited. This corporation passed over all of its stockpile of uranium to Eldorado quite some time ago. It is really not operative.

We are debating the principle of this Bill. The principle of the Bill is really a big zero. The principle of the Bill is to dissolve things that are not even in existence.

I would ask Hon. Members to deal with this matter in a very fast manner and to ask the President of the Treasury Board, if he is going to say anything, to be very quick about it so that we can dispose of this Bill and get on to something of greater importance to the Canadian people.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Parliamentary Secretary's assistance in explaining just what these now insignificant Crown corporation are all about. However, he did not explain to me satisfactorily nor to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), why with an unemployment rate of 10.5 per cent with British Columbia, the Atlantic provinces and part of Quebec suffering not continuing recession but real 1930s-like depression, this would be seen to be a priority by the Government.

Since the Government chose to bring the Bill forward, I thought that I would make a few comments with respect to Crown corporations in general because I think it is a subject which is extremely important and one in which there is scope for action by Government. Unfortunately, I am not sure if we will see such action from this particular Government.

There are some 400 or perhaps more Crown corporations under the purview of the Government of Canada. I do not think anyone knows exactly how many exist. The four that are mentioned in this particular Bill are, as the Parliamentary Secretary has said, not particulary important. There are others, however, like Air Canada, VIA Rail and Petro-Canada which are important. The operations of the Government of Canada through such Crown corporations touch almost every aspect of the lives of Canadians.

Crown corporations have been established at various times because the Government of the day was convinced that there was a need for the public to be involved and that this was not an area in which the private sector alone could be counted upon to do those things that were necessary to be done in the public interest. That is something that my Party has always accepted. We think that there is a constructive and positive role for the public sector to play. The fact that there is a substantial public sector in this country is part of our political culture. It is something which we feel is in fact an essential part of Canada. We would not have a country if we did not have a tradition of public involvement. As you know, Mr. Speaker, in the past the people of Canada contributed to the railways, some of which now form part of CN and, since you want me to come to order, CN eventually had a subsidiary called Canadian National (West Indies).

The point I would like to make is that we in Parliament do not have a mechanism for the accountability of Crown corporations. If these four particular Crown corporations had fallen into desuetude as they did several years ago and if there had been a regular review and accountability to Parliament, this matter would have come to our attention, recommendations would have been made and we would have done the appropriate thing. The new Government has found this loose end dangling and it is now dealing with it in what amounts to a few minutes of Parliament's time.

Over the last 10 years, Auditors General and the Lambert Commission Report have spoken to the failure of Government to hold Crown corporations accountable and particularly the failure of parliamentary accountability. Some steps have been taken with respect to Government accountability but the fact is that in the busy life of Cabinet Ministers and the Government in general, the original purposes get lost. Crown corporations drift along. Their management does not quite know what to do about them. As I stated when we were debating the Canada Development Corporation, the idea of the distinctive economic activities of Crown corporations has basically been lost as far as the Government of Canada is concerned. I would appeal to the Parliamentary Secretary and through him to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), a Minister who has a number of these Crown corporations under his wing, to look seriously at the fundamental question of establishing the mechanisms by which Parliament can in fact hold Crown corporations accountable.

I wrote at length about the Lambert Commission's recommendations in The Parliamentarian some two or three years ago. The Commission recommended that there should be the fullest possible disclosure of all relevant information to Parliament, that Crown corporations should adapt and share with Parliament a strategic plan including long, medium and short-range goals and that committees of the House of Commons should have the right to call the management of Crown corporations before them in order to get them to account directly for their stewardship of Crown corporations. As it exists now, when the Auditor General wants to find out about, for example, Petro-Canada, there is no power, either through the officer of Parliament or through the Public Accounts Committee, to get to the bottom of matters which are of grave concern and which may well have been extremely costly to the people of Canada.

There has been an agreement that this Bill go forward relatively promptly. You are encouraging me to continue, Mr. Speaker. However, I will not take up the invitation. I will simply say to members of the Government who are present and listening that this is a subject which was ignored by the previous Government. There are some models of this subject but not too many in the provinces. In the Province of Ontario, the legislature of which I was a Member previously, the Procedural Affairs Committee reviewed agencies, boards and commissions every summer. It looked rather lightly, I am afraid, at half a dozen of them. With the new committee procedure we have here whereby committees have the power to hire staff, there are the resources for committees of Parliament to spend time reviewing in much greater depth the operations of Crown corporations.

The President of the Treasury Board knows that he and his colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens), do not have a great deal of time to look at these things. It might be helpful if, from time to time, their efforts to provide direction and a sense of purpose to Crown corporations were reinforced by Parliament. Since Parliament is the ultimate place where responsibility ought to lie, it seems to me that whether or not it would be useful to the Government, it would be appropriate if Crown corporations, which amount to tens of billions of dollars worth of assets and are an extremely important part of the economy, were not forever distanced from Parliament.

As the President of the Treasury Board will recall, when he was in opposition, there was a bail-out of Canadair and de Havilland. I am sure that he has asked himself, as I have asked myself, whether or not those companies would have got so far off the track if there had been some form of parliamentary accountability to find out what the devil they were doing and why they were taking on enterprises so far removed from their original intent.

The corporation to which we are now referring seem to have assets of $9 or a few hundred thousand dollars. They are trivial and will not be missed. However, I would urge the Government to look not just to a series of housekeeping Bills from time to time but, when they find curiosities, eccentricities or anachronisms in the area of Crown corporations, to look toward putting the management of Crown corporations and their accountability before Parliament on a much more substantial, positive and regularized basis.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) on debate.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I wish to remark briefly on the comments of the last Member who spoke who decried the position of the Government and the need for gaining control of Crown corporations.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that gaining control of Crown corporations is done at the board of directors level. The way this is done at the board of directors level is to appoint a board of directors who will make themselves accountable to the executive of the Government. All of the appointments we have attempted to make to Crown corporations in this Government have been decried by the Hon. Member and the members of his Party. They have decried the fact that we appoint members to the boards of directors of these Crown corporations for the very control about which he speaks. I suggest that the Hon. Member is perhaps speaking from both sides of his mouth.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. de Cotret, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-60, an Act to authorize procurement of the dissolution of certain Crown corporations and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and be referred to a Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Horner in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Horner): Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-60, an Act to authorize procurement of the dissolution of certain Crown corporations and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof.

On Clause 2—Procurement of Dissolution

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I have one short question on this clause. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary, according to his remarks with respect to the Bill, can answer the question. What is the amount of money that is outstanding? I believe the Hon. Member said it was something in the order of $900,000. To what Department will that debt revert? Will it revert to the Department of Transport?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, it would be of assistance to me if the Hon. Member could tell me which Crown corporation he is referring to, since the Bill deals with more than one.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Chairman, I presume that since we are on Clause 2, as the Parliamentary Secretary should realize, it deals with Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, as I have indicated to the House, the sum will go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. I am not exactly sure whether or not it will be designated as funds of the Department of Transport. However, I think at this point it is a debt outstanding to the fund. It will not come into any particular ministry's funding.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 10—Procurement of Dissolution

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, Clause 10 deals with a very serious matter. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary can tell us who receives the $9 in assets for Uranium Canada, Ltd. and how it was overlooked and left in the account.

Mr. Lewis: It is my understanding that the Consolidated Revenue Fund will also benefit to the tune of $9. That amount was probably left in the account so that the bank account could be left open in case of additional funds being received.

Clause 10 agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 17 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the third time? By special order, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-60, an Act to authorize procurement of the dissolution of certain Crown corporations and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise an important matter relating to Bill C-60. It is for the consideration of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret).

Mr. Speaker, it must be kept in mind that the President of the Treasury Board is really the man who keeps the Government going, supposedly on the right track. As he has stated many times, that track is to reduce the deficit but also to respond to special requests from Cabinet Ministers. With respect to Bill C-60, and in speaking about Canadian National and the dissolution of a Crown corporation, the November statement establishes a new Crown corporation to be created by CN Marine to manage its boats. Since Bill C-60 would get rid of a Crown corporation which used to manage CN's boats, I would like the Minister to keep in mind that to cut $21.5 million from a new Crown corporation to be formed by the Government is an exercise which should be followed with great care. You cannot cut that amount of money from a service and not have this service downgraded and not have people laid off. By the same token, Mr. Speaker, the Crown corporation referred to in this Bill by the name of St. Anthony Fisheries Limited was replaced by another Crown corporation. The situation in Newfoundland today is one of complete disaster. That Crown corporation which replaced St. Anthony Fisheries Limited is in great financial need. I am not all that concerned about the new Crown corporation. I could not care less whether it existed or not. I could not care less whether it made money or not. But we are concerned about the workers and the fishermen who were saved by the Crown corporation which is now under the control of another Crown corporation at a moment in time when there is an absolute disaster in the fisheries.

• (1530)

So I say to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) that when the request comes from the Minister of Unemployment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Fraser), as I am sure it will, for additional funding from the Treasury Board for a special program to assist fishermen in the Province of Newfoundland, he should approve that expenditure, keeping in mind that he has done such a great public service in doing away with this Crown corporation which did not really exist.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, did I understand you to declare the motion passed?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. That is why we read it a third time.

CUSTOMS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill C-59, an Act respecting customs, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, what we are seeing here today is an initiative which had previously been attempted. The Customs Act, which regulates the flow of goods into and out of Canada, is one of the oldest federal statutes on the books of this country. In fact, one of the earliest undertakings of Canada's first Parliament was to pass Customs and Tariff legislation to give effect to the Customs union among Canada's provinces.

It is a unique opportunity for me today to discuss in this House a Bill to provide the first complete revision of the Customs Act in more than 100 years. This piece of legislation was introduced in substantially the same form by the former Government. At that time it was recognized as a Bill which was long overdue. Of course, amendments to the present Customs Act has been made from time to time but none of these represented a major restructuring of the law. Many of the amendments adopted over the years have remained in force long after the need which had prompted their adoption had disappeared. For example, the current Act still retains a provision enacted during prohibition regarding vessels found "hovering in Canadian waters".

What we have now is a hodgepodge of an Act, essentially a nineteenth century document trying to cope with modern needs. I believe all Hon. Members will agree it is time for a full-scale review.

As my colleagues will know, the Customs Act provides the legislative authority and powers for Customs to administer the law governing the import and export of goods and to collect customs revenues. This is not a tax Bill like the Customs Tariff. The Customs Act is essentially an admnistrative statute and, with this Bill, we are seeking to provide a complete revision of the Act for the first time since its inception.

For Canadians generally, Customs law is not a particularly high profile concern. The only contact most of them have with Customs is occasional dealing with Customs officers at border points, although with border crossings totalling about 80 million annually, this in itself represents an important segment of the work of the Department.

Like the tip of an iceberg, border control represents only one of the major responsibilities of Customs in administering legislation regulating the import and export of commodities and in collecting of Customs and Excise revenue. Canada, as we know, is one of the great trading nations of the world and Customs each year must oversee some 10 million commercial import and export transactions.

The need for an updated Customs Act which reflects the realities of the 1980s and beyond is very clear. The passage of this Act is especially timely, Sir, in view of Expo '86 which will be hosted by Canada next year. National Revenue, Customs and Excise, is responsible for collecting some $18 billion in revenues annually, almost 25 per cent of total federal revenues. It is therefore a major source of our country's total tax revenue and as such it behooves us to make certain that our laws in this regard are up to date, logical, efficient and equitable.

We must be fair and even handed in our approach but Canadian citizens must also be confident that Customs revenue which should be collected is in fact being collected.

In preparing this new Act, we were guided by these four overriding objectives: First, the need to eliminate provisions of the Act which were obsolete or inconsistent. Examples of obsolescence in the present Act include the provision for restricting importation to daylight hours; restricting Customs brokers' licences to British subjects; and allowing the seizing officer to share in the proceeds of a seizure.

Second, the desire to restructure the Act in a logical sequence. The new Act follows the natural sequence of Customs' requirements from report through transportation and warehousing, release, accounting and payment, tariff classification and valuation, appeals and refunds to seizures and forfeitures and offences and penalties.

Third, the need to provide greater flexibility so as to be able to respond to developments in transportation, communications and business practices is imperative.

Fourth, the need to redesign and modernize the provisions for the collection of revenue and enforcement generally is very important. The new Act will accommodate all modes of transport—which I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski), will be very pleased to see happen—for example, pipelines, containerization and so on.

Modern business practices such as computerization are taken into account.

The new Act will provide for accounting and payment of duties after release of goods on a periodic basis. It will no longer be a "cash on the barrelhead" approach. I believe that in this Bill now before the House we have met these objectives.

In addition to meeting these broad objectives, we have, in reviewing and amending early drafts of the Bill, kept very much in mind some of the general commitments made by this Government in respect of its dealings with Canadian taxpayers. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, I believe Hon. Members will find that this new Bill reflects our commitment to fairness and equity in dealing with Canadian citizens; to clarity and simplification to the degree possible in the application of the law; and to consultation in developing regulations and administering the law.

It is not my intention to go into lengthy detail on the many provisions of the Bill at this time. There will be ample opportunity to do this later.

Hon. Members have had copies of the Bill and related material made available to them and I am sure they will wish to give it individual study. As I mentioned earlier, many of the principles outlined have been considered previously.

I would like to comment briefly, however, on a few of the features of this Bill which demonstrate our particular emphasis on aspects of fairness, simplification and consultation. With respect to the question of fairness and equity, Mr. Speaker, I would draw Hon. Members' attention to Sections 59 to 72 of this Bill which deal with those individuals or companies who disagree with a departmental or tariff board decision and request a redetermination of the tariff classification or a reappraisal of the value for duty of the goods they have imported. In addition, where a departmental ruling is successfully challenged by a member of the public, he or she will be entitled to receive interest on the duties paid. Conversely, interest will be charged where the decision is in favour of the department.

Concerning the collection of taxes of duties owning, our Government has been clearly on record as opposed to the "presumption of guilt" approach in disputes between the Government and individuals. I am pleased to say that with the passage of the new Bill, individuals who disagree with a ruling will not be forced to pay the duty before the matter has been resolved. They will have the option of depositing security in lieu of payment or, if they wish, making payment with the guarantee that interest will be paid on any refunds to which they ultimately may become entitled. I think this is a fair solution to a problem which has been a bone of contention. I believe it is one which will be well received by importers.

Protection of civil rights is reflected in a number of the provisions of the Bill. For example, in proceedings under the new Act relating to the importation or exportation of goods, the burden of proof of such importation or exportation will now rest with the Government. Under current law, the burden rests with the importer or exporter, a condition which we consider unfair. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that these and other proposed changes to the Customs Act reflect the spirit of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and human rights legislation. The new Bill also spells out clearly the procedures to be followed by Customs officers in inspecting mail items, as is required in the course of their duties. As you know, Customs officers must have authority to inspect items which they have reasonable grounds to believe may contain material subject to Customs regulation. Otherwise, they would not be able to enforce fully the provisions of the Customs Act or the many other federal statutes for which they have certain administrative responsibilities.

To protect the public, the Bill provides that mail items 30 grams or less may not be opened without the consent of the addressee or sender. To the public, a letter is correspondence which can be mailed with a 34-cent stamp. Only mail items weighing 30 grams or less can be mailed for 34 cents—the average weight of such mail is around 20 grams.

In the course of their duties, Customs officers must administer and enforce parts of more than 60 federal statutes, many of which are designed to protect the social values of the nation or the health and well-being of individual Canadians. Customs officers have responsibilities ranging from checking certificates required by the Livestock Pedigree Act, to preliminary screening of travellers under the Immigration Act, through to stopping the importation of prohibited weapons under the Criminal Code. Laws such as the Food and Drugs Act, the Hazardous Products Act and the Cultural Property Export and Import Act and many others are administered in so far as they relate to the importation and exportation of goods by Canadians. This new Bill updates the provisions allowing Customs officials to search for, examine and seize goods, and thus confers on them the necessary authority to ensure compliance with these various important statutes. These officials are doing important work and they deserve to have a good framework in which to operate.

This new Bill has been radically simplified, Mr. Speaker, so that it may be more easily and clearly understood and acted upon by those who must comply with its provisions. The language used is simple and direct. The 290 sections of the current Act have been reduced substantially and the current 35 sections which deal with reporting requirements have been consolidated into just four sections. The current Customs Act contains numerous sections dealing with offences and penalties. In fact, only about half a dozen of these sections are actually being used now. The new Bill simplifies this area immensely and removes a number of sections which are covered by the Criminal Code.

I am confident that the business community which deals regularly with Customs matters will find this Bill clearer than its predecessor, more understandable and easier to comply with in all respects. Simplification paves the way for streamlining of operations. I believe the simplified approach embodied in this Bill is in line with this Government's commitment to the streamlining of government operations and to reducing, to the degree possible, the paperwork burden on those who must do business with the Government.

This Bill will provide the Department of National Revenue with the legislative flexibility to modify procedures to deal with changes in modern business, transportation and communications practices. In addition, Mr. Speaker, the new Bill makes specific provision that most regulations enacted pursuant to the Customs Act must be published a minimum of 60 days in advance of their coming into force. Exceptions will be regulations such as those dealing with the setting of fees, those which make no substantive change to an existing regulation. This will provide a final opportunity for those who may wish to comment on proposed regulations to do so. Further, Bill C-59 provides for ongoing parliamentary review of the operation of the Act and a comprehensive review of its operation within five years of its passage.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we have before us for consideration today a very important and long overdue piece of legislation. This new Customs Act will, I am certain, commend itself to the public at large and in particular to the thousands of Canadian businesses whose activities must comply with Customs law. The new Act will enable the Department of National Revenue to carry out its responsibilities more efficiently and effectively, and it will help ensure that all Customs revenues due to the Government and to the people of Canada are collected in a fair and equitable manner.

I feel that all Members of the House, and in particular the members of the committee which will study this Bill will want to give it careful scrutiny. I welcome this and will personally review any comments and recommendations that may emerge from their deliberations. I will be co-operative in an attempt to accomodate any good initiatives to improve the nature and scope of what we are trying to accomplish. Indeed, I look forward to working with the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) in this regard. At the same time, I hope the House will see fit to expedite passage of this legislation as quickly as possible. It is a much needed statute and it will serve the interests of the country well if we enact it into law after proper deliberation at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I think the Bill introduced by the Minister should have a fairly rapid passage through this Chamber. After all, most of the Bill was suggested by the previous Liberal Government and, as you know, anything suggested by the previous Liberal Government has to be good so far as regulations are concerned. There are some minor changes and I would like to speak briefly to those changes.

In introducing the Bill the Minister, certainly in his former capacity, had some input with regard to the changes made to the Bill proposed by the previous Government. Perhaps I could deal with a couple of those. As he stated, the Bill is certainly long overdue. The law relating to Customs in Canada was, I believe, made up of two main factors. Number one was the present legislation on the books which Customs officers had to follow. The other were the customs of Customs. Some of these customs of Customs dated prior to Confederation. So certainly we need a new Customs Act. As the Minister said, this Bill eliminates certain provisions of the existing law which are contrary to the Charter of Rights. Two clauses of the Bill eliminate the Writs of Assistance which were in effect continuous search warrants. In other words, the Customs officers were really under no obligation to go back to a judge for another search warrant, they could simply continue under these Writs of Assistance. Clauses 111 and 112 of this Bill will correct that fault in the existing legislation.

As the Minister stated as well, this Bill eliminates the necessity of paying immediately the import duties on any article imported into Canada. In other words, if someone were importing toothbrushes at the rate of 100 this week and 100 next week, he had to pay as the items crossed the border. This Bill will eliminate that and enable businessmen to make arrangements with Customs to pay weekly or monthly.

There is a new provision in this Bill which I would like to have come into effect in all government Departments. When the Government of Canada owes a Canadian citizen money, it does not pay interest, but if a citizen owes the Government money, he must pay interest. There is a clause in this Bill which eliminates that inequity.

The Minister referred to the parliamentary committee which will review and up-date this Bill every five years. That is good. The interpretation of the Acts under which customs was operative said that a Customs officer had the right to seize whatever was not declared. In other words, if you stretched it, as some interpretations by the courts did, if someone drove his car into the United States and then returned, the Customs officer could legally seize his car and even his underwear if he wanted to. Under the law he could seize anything the person had. That is eliminated in this Bill and it was included in the Bill introduced by the previous administration. It also clears up the Access to Information Act.

There is another clause in the Bill which warrants some discussion. Clause 99 of this Bill enables the Customs officer to open mail. I am sure that some groups will take objection to this clause. However, when the purpose of this clause is examined, I am not sure whether one could realistically take exception to it. When the Post Office Act came into existence in 1982 it defined a "letter". By government regulation in 1983 a letter was defined as anything under 500 grams, which is about a pound. Under the Customs Act which was in existence at that time, Customs officials were not allowed to seize or open any package under 500 grams, which was the definition of a letter.

This led to complications. One heard of cases of drugs and other illegal material being brought across the border into Canada. Before crossing the border people would mail the illegal material in packages of less than 500 grams which could not be seized or opened without their permission. They would then pick them up when they got into Canada. Upon examining the records of Canadian Customs one would find that that has been a prevalent concern of the Customs Department.

Clause 99(2) reads:

> An officer may not open or cause to be opened any imported mail that weighs thirty grams or less unless the person to whom it is addressed consents or the person who sent it has completed and attached to the mail a label in accordance with article 116 of the Detailed Regulations of the Universal Postal Convention.

Clause 99(3) reads:

> An officer may cause imported mail that weighs thirty grams or less to be opened in his presence by the person to whom it is addressed or a person authorized by that person.

I, quite frankly, do not like any intrusion into the privacy of the mail by the Customs Department. Prior to this Act being passed, a Customs officer could only seize and open packages weighing over 500 grams. With the passing of this Act he will be able to seize and open packages weighing over 30 grams. I checked to find out what 30 grams is in relation to a letter. Thirty grams is an ordinary envelope and seven sheets of ordinary paper. If the Customs Department has reason to believe that a package weighing over 30 grams contains material which should not be entering the country, it has the power to open it.

Due to the movement of drugs and other material into the country, I believe that this particular clause is necessary. However, I would caution anyone who is writing a letter of over seven pages that perhaps they should break it into two letters so that the Customs officials would not be allowed to open it. I do not know what amount of drugs one could bring in in a letter of less than 30 grams. The terms "nickle", "dime", and "quarter", or something are used. That is supposed to be a gram or two grams. I do not know if they can flatten it out to make a gram, but they would certainly not make much money if they had to reduce the size of each package to less than 30 grams.

I hope the Minister will be prepared to provide us with any information that we require on Clause 99, which is the only questionable clause in the Bill. I believe that the Minister should be prepared to provide any information that anyone requires concerning this aspect. Again, this is essentially a Bill that was proposed by the previous Liberal administration and therefore I hope the House will give its speedy passage.

• (1600)

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly to Bill C-59, an Act respecting customs. I understand that the debate will be short. When one is the third speaker on a Bill such as this, which does not have much ideological input, one does not have much left to say after the Minister introduces the Bill and the spokesperson from the Official Opposition covers most of the points to be made. There is not much disagreement among the Parties concerning this Bill.

It closely resembles Bill C-6 that was tabled by the previous Liberal Government in January, 1984. On June 25, 1985, the former Minister of National Revenue tabled Bill C-59 for first reading. According to the Minister's press release, the purpose of the Bill is to overhaul completely Canada's 118-year-old Customs Act.

Today, we have a new Minister of National Revenue and I want to congratulate him on his new portfolio. I look forward to working with him. Unfortunately, in the past Revenue Canada has been a Department whose Ministers were either on the way up or on the way down. I believe that its importance has not been recognized and I hope the Government will not follow past practice. I hope the Minister, whom I know on a personal level to be of good judgment, will continue some of the reforms undertaken by the previous Minister in the Department of National Revenue. It is an important Department which the Government should not neglect. We have seen how it has become a graveyard for some Ministers under the previous Liberal administration.

Let me return to the Act. The usual practice has been to amend the Customs Act periodically in response to specific situations. Bill C-59 seeks to address and remove a number of archaic provisions and redundancies while introducing measures which will bring the administration of the Act into a more contemporary vogue. For example, Bill C-59 will codify procedures for the reporting of persons, goods and conveyances crossing Canada's borders to four sections as opposed to the present 30 sections. Provision has also been made, which is an improvement on the Liberal Bill, for the payment of any interest on duties paid and later refunded. Notwithstanding the need for improvements, some questions remain and hopefully will be raised in the legislative committee.

The impact that the Customs and Excise Branch of the Department of National Revenue has upon not only the movement of individuals and goods but also upon the federal Treasury is worth noting. Collections from these sections have been as follows: In 1982-83, $17.3 billion in total, of which $4.4 billion was collected from the importation of goods. In 1983-84, $16.6 billion in total was collected from Customs and Excise, of which $5.2 billion was collected from the importation of goods. In 1984-85, $18 billion in total was collected, of which $5 billion was collected from the importation of goods. The total revenue collected by the Customs and Excise Branch constitutes approximately 25 per cent of federal revenues.

The Customs Branch is concerned primarily with the processing of goods and individuals across Canada's international boundaries. The point at which Customs officers are present include 114 border crossing points along the Canada-U.S. border, 17 international airports, and 176 other airports and points of entry. Customs officers are responsible for the enforcement in whole or in part of some 60 different Acts which include everything from the Aeronautics Act to the Fertilizers Act to the Visiting Forces Act.

A briefing document itemized the objectives of the Customs Branch in their order of importance under three headings: First, to ensure the collection of duties; second, to control the movement of people and goods; and third, to protect Canadian industry from real or potential injury caused by actual or contemplated import of dumped or subsidized goods and other forms of unfair competition. Customs Branch has allocated some 7,201 person years. It is this section that is the most visible of the Customs Branch.

In November, 1983, an evaluation study was undertaken in the Department. Let me quote from that study:

> A new breed of Inspector is being hired, who on average is better educated, better trained, has higher job expectations and different attitudes—The new recruit is believed to be more "enforcement oriented" and is having significant and unmeasured influence on the inspection role.

I put that on the record because despite all of the rules, regulations and safeguards that may exist, it comes down to the fact that the individual judgment of officers surely is most important. The study goes on to conclude that no matter how well intentioned entry laws may be, compliance with them is, in the final analysis, directly proportionate to the Department's capacity to enforce them. In other words, we must not only be concerned with the ability of the individual Customs officer to enforce the rules and regulations, but with also his judgment and character because that will determine what experience the public will have with those officers.

For instance, we know that officers in the Taxation Branch of the Department of National Revenue had a variety of discretionary powers which they abused. This has also occurred in the Customs and Excise Branch. I had such a case this spring. A young American family was moving to Canada to establish a small business in Ontario. All of their immigration papers were in order and the husband had come to Canada to establish the business. The wife was driving from the United States with her child and their personal belongings. Upon entry to Canada, they were needlessly hassled by the Canadian Customs. The officer in charge decided to exercise all his powers—which he legally had—to the maximum and detained her at some length. She claimed that he was quite rude to her, inconvenienced her and caused the whole episode to be a bitter experience.

When we acted on her behalf after hearing he complaints eventually some money was refunded to her and the former Minister reluctantly admitted that the officier at that border crossing was somewhat over-zealous. However, he pointed out that the officer in charge did in fact have all those powers.

It is important that we not only concern ourselves with the rules and regulations governing the Department but with the training and type of individuals who are recruited.

I believe that Canadians expect their Customs officers to be civil and reasonable so that people will have a pleasant experience at the border. While I have had some unpleasant experiences going into the United States, I have never had an unpleasant experience at the Canadian border. I believe that 99 per cent of the people crossing into Canada do not have any ill intentions and therefore should have a pleasant experience at the border. That depends largely on the type of men and women who are our Customs officers.

It is important that the new recruits not be enforcement oriented per se but oriented more to serving the public. If they are enforcement oriented, this will result in many of the same unfortunate situations in which Revenue Canada officials found themselves a few short years ago. They became overzealous and started to view the general public in a paranoid manner and unpleasant experiences resulted.

The report also pointed out:

—the Department has yet to clearly articulate its policy on what "reasonable" means in terms of enforcement.

These observations are disturbing, given that the Customs Branch is part of the National Revenue Department which was plagued by the misguided leadership of senior management and by the complete inaction of the Minister at that time, resulting in enforcement practices by taxation officials which were nothing less than outright harassment.

What the 1983 report states quite clearly is that without a firm signal from those at the most senior levels of the Department beginning with the Minister, excesses would well occur. Unfortunately, the Conservative Government has seen fit to use the Department of National Revenue in much the same way the Liberals did, as a punishment for error-prone and incompetent Ministers. I do say that with some hesitation.

As I mentioned before, I know the Minister who is now in charge of the Department was Minister of Housing in the Clark administration when I was elected for the first time. I was the critic and I had a fairly good relationship with him. In fact, I found it unfortunate that the Clark Government was defeated because the Minister and I were working on a new idea which would have seen an imaginative approach to home insulation. We were talking about a joint project in Halifax and in Regina. Let me say to the former Prime Minister that I was not one of those who threw papers up in the air in jubilation when his Government went down to defeat.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Neither was I.

Mr. de Jong: I am sure the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) remembered the evening very well. I do hope that the Conservative Government will not follow the previous practices of the Liberal Government of using the Revenue Department as a Department to appoint Ministers in on their way up or on their way down.

Another thing of concern to me is not addressed in this new Customs Act. It is a practice which continues to be applied on occasion, namely, the punitive manner by a Government in areas where firm policy positions have not been taken. For example, in May, 1982, the Customs Act and Customs officers were used in a campaign to harass and interfere with the importation of Japanese automobiles into Canada. At the time, the federal Government had not managed to negotiate an arrangement with the Japanese with respect to voluntary quotas. Thus Customs officers were sent aboard vessels on the West Coast to inspect all manners of licences to crews, et cetera, generally, to follow a policy of harassment. Automobiles were held for various reasons in the harbour areas for extended periods of time. For those individuals whose business it was to transport those automobiles, serious economic hardships were brought to bear because the federal Government was unable to act.

Unfortunately, there is nothing in this Bill that will prevent the present Government from behaving in the same manner as did the Liberal regime considering its notorious indecisiveness on important issues.

I hope the present Government will not use this Bill as an instrument to harass trade because of being unable to make the decision. I hope it will not use the Customs department to stall and play for time.

In the case of the Liberals and their harassment in 1982 on the importation of Japanese automobiles, the people who suffered were the small car dealers across the country.

We can look at some of the clauses. I am sure that in the legislative committee we will get into some of them in more detail and with most of them we will not have much problem. Again, one notes that a lot of power given to the individual customs officers are really arbitrary powers.

For example, Clause 98 provides officers with the authority to search individuals "on reasonable grounds" that a contravention of the Act has occurred, yet no real definition of reasonable grounds is given.

Clause 99, which the spokesperson for the Liberal Party pointed out, creates some concern for me as well.

Most private mail is more than 30 grams. A person living somewhere else in the world writing a long letter to a relative living in Canada might include in that letter a family snapshot, and pretty soon you find the letter weighs more than 30 grams. That this should be subject to inspection by a Customs officer is, to my mind, not a good practice. I understand that in the contemporary world of drug smuggling drugs can be smuggled through private mail. I am not certain whether 30 grams is a proper cut-off level or not. I am certain that you cannot ship too much heroin or cocaine when the restriction is a weight in grams. I understand 30 grams of heroin or cocaine still gets a good dollar on the street. Instead of selling one envelope containing 100 grams of an illicit substance, a drug smuggler could send three or four envelopes weighing less than 30 grams. What about our liberties, Mr. Speaker? I am sure private mail is one of the most important of our civil liberties. The price we are paying to forgo that civil liberty in the interests of dealing with a major problem—and drug smuggling is a major problem—is perhaps too high, and what we are buying is not that effective anyway. We might end up in a situation with fewer civil liberties and no effective measure in terms of controlling the flow of drugs.

Clause 110 could be used in an arbitrary manner. It provides the authority to officers to seize any goods, conveyances and to seize anything which the officer believes will afford evidence in respect of a contravention. Again the clause can be used in an arbitrary manner. As we have found with Revenue Canada, the important part is how the regulations get enforced. That depends upon the type of men and women one attracts. It depends upon the type of leadership which the Minister and the senior officials of the Department give to their employees.

Clause 113 is one that I do not quite understand, but I am sure we can get a further explanation. It is a limitation upon the period in which seizures can be made, which has now been extended from three to six years. We would like more of a detailed explanation concerning this clause in committee.

● (1620)

In summation, there are not many things with which we have difficulty in this clause. We congratulate the new Minister for shepherding in a piece of legislation which has not been updated for a hundred and some years. I think it is a good sign; he is off on a good mark, I would suggest, in modernizing this piece of legislation. It is as good a place as any to start with that Department. We wish him well in his new job, and I look forward to dealing in more detail with this Bill once it gets into committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Mr. MacKay, seconded by Mr. de Cotret, moves that Bill C-59, an Act respecting Customs, be read the second time and be referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE AND SECURITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security Act and certain other Acts in relation thereto, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among House Leaders, and this is a Bill on which there is an agreement that we will deal with it through all stages today so that it can go to the other place to provide it with some matters to consider next week when that august Chamber reconvenes. As a result of my consultations, I think there is a disposition to accept the following motion and pass it without debate:

That, notwihstanding any Standing Order or other Order of the House, when Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security Act is called, the House shall consider the Bill at the second reading stage and not later than the end of the time provided for Government Orders this day, the Bill shall be referred to a Committee of the Whole, read a third time and passed.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to speak on behalf of our Party on this particular Bill. I did not know that there was an agreement to pass it through all stages immediately. However, after looking at it and seeing the very minor changes which are contemplated in it, I can understand there being such an agreement. I am sure we would all consent to its passage as quickly as possible so that we can get on to other things which are of concern to Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Is the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) rising on a point of order?

Ms. Jewett: No, Mr. Speaker. I understood that we could each say a few words.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There will be a debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): As the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) just indicated, this Bill concerns some amendments which guarantee that the intent of Parliament is respected with regard to the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

Just to remind the House very briefly, the creation of this institute was a stellar, and an outstanding example of co-operation among all the Parties of the House, respected and supported by public opinion in the country, to establish in Canada along the lines of institutes established and operating effectively elsewhere in the world a Canadian institute for international peace and security. There was particular attention paid during the debate a year ago in June to ensure that the institute would have independence from Government and indeed independence from Parliament. The amendments today are designed to ensure that the intention of Parliament is in fact respected, because at about the same time that Parliament adopted this Bill establishing this institute, there were some amendments to the Financial Administration Act which inadvertently could compromise the independence that all Parties wanted to see attached to the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. Certainly a compromise of that independence is not a desire of the Government and, I feel confident, it is not the desire of any Party in this House.

So that the House may know the details of what is involved, there are portions of the Financial Administration Act which in effect require Crown corporations or agencies of the Government, including inadvertently this institute, to be subject to certain directions of the Government in Council. Under Section 96(1) of the Financial Administration Act, seven Crown corporations have been excluded from those provisions. Those organizations are the Bank of Canada, Canada Council, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Canadian Film Development Corporation, Canadian Wheat Board, International Development Research Centre and the National Arts Centre Corporation. In effect, what is proposed in these amendments today is that the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security be added to that list and be made the eighth Crown corporation exempt from that kind of control, which I think is desired by all Hon. Members of the House. I will be tabling in Parliament next week the first report of the institute. I do not want to anticipate its contents or take a great deal of time in the House now, but I think it is appropriate to take this occasion to make the point that it is never easy to build an institution which can earn the respect of a demanding community and, indeed, which can establish international credentials and credibility. I think it is fair to say that the conduct of the board of the institute in its first year and the determination of all Members of the House to guarantee its independence mean that the institute is well along the road to achieving both the kind of influence and the kind of independence which all of us sought. Of course it is involved in the issuance of grants. So far, around $250,000 have been issued by the institute in grants for research or public education activity. It is working extensively with voluntary organizations interested in issues of peace and security in the country. I am advised that every three months some 50 or more applications are received by the institute for support. In October of this year it will be organizing a major conference on challenges to deterrents. In addition to those formal activities, it is gradually and effectively establishing its own standing as a respected institute operating internationally. It has been in consultation with the well-known Stockholm International Peace Institute about the possibility of some joint projects. There have been conversations with representatives of the Peace Institute recently established by the Congress of the United States and with representatives of various eastern European countries.

In addition to the changes guaranteeing the independence of the institute, there are also some minor changes. One has to do with the adequacy of the French in the title and in the description of the institute.

[Translation]

This is a matter on which Alberta Francophones like me would rather not voice an immediate opinion. However, it seems that according to all the advice we had from experts in the field, it would be useful to change certain terms in the official title of the Institute.

[English]

In fact, the board has requested that the French title be changed to L'Institut canadien pour la paix et la sécurité internationales, which replaces the earlier phrasing L'Institut canadien pour la paix et la sécurité mondiales. There will be a consequent change to the Access to Information Act and to the Public Service Superannuation Act arising from the change of the name in French. There will also be, I should advise the House, a change in the arrangement regarding travel and living expenses for directors of the institute. Expenses need not be fixed by the Governor in Council but will instead be such reasonable travel and living expenses incurred by each director while absent from his or her ordinary place of residence in the performance of duties as fixed by the Board. Given the world-wide nature of an institute of this kind, that seems to me to be a sensible change which was requested by the Board and one with which the Government is in agreement.

Finally, I believe I am speaking on behalf of many and perhaps all Members of the House when I say that while we are determined that the institute itself be able to operate with absolute independence from the Government and indeed from Members of Parliament, it is dealing with issues which are at the heart and focus of our own attention and indeed the most urgent and important issues that any of us in public life can address. The seeking of independence from Parliament for the institute is not an indication of a lack of interest on the part of Parliamentarians. Quite the contrary; it is a recognition that on issues of this kind, if we want in fact to rise above the kinds of partisan considerations that sometimes properly and naturally engulf this House, there must be the certainty that there is an agency in Canada able to look at these questions and offer advice and observations without the suspicion that it is the instrument of a Party, a faction or a particular perspective. That was the earnest desire of all Members of the House when the institute was established. That will be given final realization with the adoption of the amendments that are proposed today.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order! In order to keep the proceedings in line with parliamentary procedure, I am just going to read the motion now before the House:

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead), seconded by Mr. Andre, moves that Bill C-69, an Act to amend the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security Act and certain other Acts in relation thereto, be now read the second time and, with unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

[English]

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity to say a few words about the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security. I agree with the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who has said that the amendments before us today are largely housekeeping amendments. Like him, my British Columbia French is not quite good enough to determine the total significance of changing the French word "mondiales" to "internationales" and indeed I really have been challenged on that matter. I think I have come to understand the reason for it and so I thank the drafters of it for giving me an opportunity to work out the subtle distinctions between the two words.

The second minor amendment to which the Minister has referred is perhaps not quite so minor. It gives the Board rather than the Governor in Council authority to determine matters like the amount of expense account money members of the Board receive when they travel.

The third matter is of course more significant. It was never the intention of anyone in the House when we drew up the appendix outlining the amounts of money that would go to the institute over the first five years that that would in any way be tampered with or changed. Indeed, in my experience in Parliament, it has been quite rare to have a five-year projection of the amount of money that a body would receive. As the Minister has pointed out and as we all felt very strongly a year ago June when this Bill was passed and the institute was being created, it is absolutely essential that the institute be independent of Government both in terms of the membership of the institute board and its financial support. The final amendment which will relieve the institute from certain provisions of the Financial Administration Act was our intention all the time. To that extent, the amendment tidies up something that was always intended.

I believe all Parties in the House can take great pleasure in the fact that the way in which members of the board of the institute are appointed makes it extremely difficult to make appointments on narrow political or patronage grounds. Perhaps I will take advantage of this opportunity to say to the Minister that there are a few other institutes like the Ocean Institute to which he might give some thought in order to encourage this kind of a process for the appointment of members of the board. While the appointments may in fact be good appointments, there is not the same assurance that the Minister insisted most strongly on having for this particular institute.

In the case of the Ocean Institute and other research institutes, we are not provided quite the same assurance as we are for this one that there will not in fact be patronage appointments. Since this matter has been drawn to our attention again because this is the first time we have amended this Act and also because the first report of the institute will be tabled next week, perhaps this is a good time for the Minister to give some thought to extending this procedure for appointing board members to other institutes.

Earlier today the Minister suggested quite rightly that my colleague, the brilliant expert on matters of the North, might give him advice when looking at the question of northern sovereignty in committee. Perhaps he might now be good enough to suggest that I would be one of his advisers when revamping the way in which boards of comparable institutes are appointed.

We all look forward to seeing the first report of the institute. Most of us who were concerned with the creation of the institute have been following its activities and speaking to members of the board during the course of the past year. We have some idea of what the board has been doing. I am sure all of us thought at one time that there might be real problems for the board, not because of narrow political differences or matters of that kind but rather because of quite sharp ideological differences as the board was deliberately made fairly representative of the broad spectrum of opinion on international security and peace issues. Obviously the Members of the board have been engaged in very lively discussions among themselves, but everything that I have heard indicates that those differences, such as they are, have been muted because they have all had a very common interest in the development of a first-class research capacity within the Canadian public, the Canadian universities and the board itself to deal with many of the issues relating to international peace and security. They have also had a common concern about the public education side of the board's activities. Research and public education and the granting of research contracts have been things upon which there has been a very broad measure of agreement after very lively discussions among board members.

Unquestionably, the leadership of both the chairman of the board and the executive director have been important in that respect.

Another concern some of us had at the time the board was being set up was that it might render the activities of the Ottawa-based Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament unnecessary. It was felt at that time that the institute would somehow be getting into the area of activities already engaged in by the Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament. This has not taken place, nor do I see it likely to happen in the future. The centre has been doing a good job indeed on what one might call the day-to-day issues of peace and security, arms control and disarmament, and it has been issuing an excellent bulletin. As the Minister is aware, it has been giving excellent briefs with respect to the whole question of participation in SDI research as well. Through its bulletin, it has been keeping Canadians informed with respect to the debates taking place in the House of Commons and what transpired in the special joint committee this summer. The arms control centre has also been pretty active. However, as far as I can see, it has not been engaging in the type of broad-based research and public education activity that the institute we have been discussing today has been engaged in. That has been a plus as well. In a period of one year and a half, Canada has gone from almost zero in all fields relating to arms control and disarmament to having two very important and active, yet quite distinct, groups engaged in these matters. It seems to me there is no reason for concern with respect to the situation changing. The two bodies will continue to play an important role.

I am pleased to note that the conference which the Institute on International Peace and Security will be having in Ottawa will be with respect to the challenges to deterrents. With fairly substantial changes in American and possibly Soviet strategic doctrine, the whole question of the challenges to deterrents is of extremely grave importance right now. It is also significant at this time since the United Nations is about to embark upon a study of the doctrine of deterrents. It is a real first for Canada to have a Canadian institute playing a significant role in the examination and re-examination of the doctrine of deterrents and the challenges to that doctrine. It is very exciting indeed.

As I have said, a year and a half ago, apart from the work that was done in an isolated fashion in different universities, we had barely anything going on with respect to these matters. We now have a strong Institute on International Peace and Security researching in depth a number of important issues. We also have a companion Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament working more on the day-to-day issues.

It has been a pleasure to recall the discussions and sometimes arguments which we had when the institute was being created a year ago this June. It is also a pleasure to recall some of the differences which we reconciled and some of the amendments we put forward with respect to the proposed legislation at that time. With respect to those amendments, I might say that the Liberal Government of the day wanted to see those amendments put in place. It is good to recollect that out of those debates and discussions in committee and in the House of Commons we saw emerge a strong, independent and independently financed Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to the House and to the Minister for my absence. I am sure it is not the Minister's fault, but no one had advised me that the Bill was going to be considered in the House. I was attending my party's committee meeting, discussing similar issues, when all of a sudden I saw the friendly face of the Secretary for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). So I said: What is going on? And here I am, with another opportunity to speak to the House. I do not have many comments to make on the Bill, since I think these are mainly technical amendments that are justified. We should not, at this stage, criticize the substance of the Bill. On the contrary, speedy passage of the Bill is to be recommended. However, Mr. Speaker, since we so seldom have an opportunity in the House to raise certain issues, I think that when we have a Bill like this one, we should take advantage of that opportunity.

In recent months I twice had a chance to travel across the country, first as chairman of my party's task force on the Government's participation or non-participation in the United States Strategic Defense Initiative research program. I was really impressed, over the past four months, by the keen interest shown by Canadians, and especially by groups that took the trouble to prepare briefs—mostly opposing the plan—on the subject. The quality of these briefs was excellent, and Saturday I was delighted to announce I was happy with the Government's decision not to take part in the program referred to as "Star Wars".

There are those who object to this description. However, I would like to take this opportunity, without malice, I may add, to make it clear to the Minister that I would not like to find out that I had been had and the public as well, because I hope the Government is not letting in the back door what it says it will not let in the front door. I know that is certainly not the intention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I believe that Canadians are opposed, and the matter is related to disarmament and peace. The basic reasons why groups came to talk to us to voice their opposition to Canada's participation in President Reagan's strategic defense initiative are all part of the debate for which the Institute was created, and it was created largely to make it possible for Canadians to be well informed about what is going on both on the international and national scene with respect to the contribution of the Canadian Government and the Canadian people to peace and especially to disarmament, one of the great concerns of youth at this time.

I would therefore invite the Minister to clarify, if he can, the Government's position on this issue because the answer I was given yesterday by my hon. friend, the Associate Minister for National Defence (Mr. Andre), who has just made an appearance in the House, because, as I was saying, his answer created a great deal of confusion among observers when he said that the Government intended to give grants to any person who was involved in the Star Wars program, on the same basis as they are given to entrepreneurs or universities or industries that are engaged in research or development of the usual U.S. programs under the defence production sharing agreement.

I would point out to the Government that the American administration has made a firm decision to create a special group within the Government to show clearly that the star wars program is a special program and that a specific directorate will award all related contracts. It will therefore be very easy for the Government to find out, should a Canadian university or a Canadian company be working on the star wars project, that it is not a program like the one that is covered under other previous agreements. It is a new program of the American Government. I am convinced that Canadians do not want the Government to give grants to companies doing research for the star wars program.

I acted in very good faith on Saturday when I applauded the decision of the Government to not participate. I hope it is clear that we will not be using the granting functions of the different departments of the Government to help the people who participate in this program. I said that if someone wanted to do something in his basement there was not much policing I could do but because I thought of it in terms of the global strategy of peace in the world I felt that the "no" of the Government was a positive contribution. Now, only 72 hours after that decision, I begin to wonder what happened on Saturday. If it is a "yes" in the guise of a "no" I do not think that the Government will go through that very easily. We spent a lot of time in the spring and summer in committee gathering the views of Canadians. Of course, there were some surveys which said that perhaps the majority of Canadians were in favour, but it was always on one point. It was always on the point that if we were to be involved in SDI, it was in order to create thousands and thousands of jobs. I remember in front of the committee the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) asked that question of the witnesses many times very precisely, and I did the same thing as well. We asked how many jobs would be created and the only group which gave us the figures said it was something like 500 jobs.

Therefore, there was a qualification in the minds of the people because of the jobs. We took the view that jobs were irrelevant because there were matters in international policies which involve more than jobs. I remember when I was on the other side of the House the Leader of the Opposition at that time, the Minister of today, was always very quick on his feet to ask us, "Are you respecting the non-proliferation treaties? This Government has not signed this treaty so you should not get involved in selling it a Candu reactor", for example. We agreed at that time with the Leader of the Opposition that it was not a matter of jobs because to sell a Candu reactor to India or Pakistan would have involved a lot of jobs. It was unanimous in this House that we should not do this because they did not sign the non-proliferation treaty. I think it was a valid and good consideration and Canadians never reproached the Government of the day for having principles in these matters and standing firm in refusing to sell Candu reactors to countries which did not want to sign this treaty. We lost jobs. We are still losing jobs. When we do not permit de Havilland to sell planes to countries like Libya, we could lose jobs, but there are some standards which must be met.

I just want to tell the Government, as friendly as I can, not to spoil a good announcement which was made on Saturday by trying to be sneaky. I do not think that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) will be the one who will do that. I urge him to make sure that the Canadian position in Canada and abroad will be very clear on that point, that we are not part of star wars or SDI development because it is a very important development. When this decision was made by President Reagan, and I want to use this forum today to talk about that, it was a unilateral decision. It was made with no consultation with the NATO countries. Every country was taken by surprise. When the problem came into the House, there was unanimity. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was the then Leader of the Opposition and he rose and spoke on behalf of his Party to say that we should not be part of SDI. It was the same with the New Democratic Party. I know that the Right Hon. Minister does not like to change his mind.

He does not like to be forced to change his mind, so I appeal to him to remain consistent. He was right two years ago and I thought he was right on Saturday—I know he was right. I am afraid that some of his colleagues will try to do—now that the big political decision has been made officially—by the back door what the Minister said on Saturday was not to be done. This is one of the rare occasions when we have a Bill like this before us. I do not want to abuse the rules of the House of Commons—

Ms. Jewett: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Hon. Member is abusing the House. He does not know anything about the Bill obviously, so he is taking this occasion to talk about an extremely important matter on which I tried to get an emergency debate today. I was not successful but we will have a debate, I was assured by the Speaker, as a result of the first report of the joint committee. I really do think, therefore, that it is not the occasion—

Mr. Axworthy: Oh?

Ms. Jewett: I am sorry, I really do think that the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, which is the subject of this debate today, deserves more respect than the Hon. Member is giving to it by absolutely ignoring it. Therefore, he is totally out of order.

Mr. Chrétien: I have finished, anyway, but I would like to say—

[Translation]

On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to say—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would make the same point of order as the one just raised by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). I would remind Your Honour that on page 2 of the Bill one can read, under the heading "Role", namely the role to be played by the Institute, and I quote:

> The role of the Institute is to increase the knowledge and understanding of questions related to international peace and security from a Canadian standpoint, particularly with respect to arms limitation, disarmament, defence and resolution of conflicts, and:

If that is not precisely what my colleague is doing—giving his viewpoint on disarmament issues to enlighten the public—I am wondering what it is!

I would therefore ask Your Honour to put an end to those interruptions and let my colleague complete his remarks.

Mr. Chrétien: If Mr. Speaker does not intend to intervene, I will continue my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien).

Mr. Chrétien: It is therefore my view that the point of order was not well taken, and I think I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat it, that I have no intention . . . I believe this is a good piece of legislation. We established that institute, and when it was set up we tried to find a formula that would have its operations as far removed from partisanship as possible. There were amendments suggested from various quarters, and this is a completely non-partisan institute that is playing a positive role.

My party's task force on the problems I am discussing was given an opportunity to hear Mr. Pearson, the Executive Director of the institute, who submitted a very good brief. In my view, this is a very worthwhile institute.

However, I took the opportunity to caution the Minister, and I appreciated that opportunity. But now some doubts are arising, 72 hours later. I do not appreciate being tricked. There is an attempt at having Canadians believe we are not getting involved in the star wars, but then they are going to use taxpayers' money to finance programs that will do exactly what the Government said they would not do. We are fundamentally opposed to the star wars program. This is a unilateral program without consultation, a destabilizing program that could result in a global catastrophe. I therefore felt, Mr. Speaker, that this was a good opportunity to warn the Minister, and I tell him that if they are trying to do through the back door what the Canadian people will not have them do through the front door, sparks are going to fly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat unprepared also because I had no idea we were going to deal with this small Bill. But especially for the benefit of our new colleagues in the House, I think we should try to evoke the circumstances under which that Institute was set up in 1984.

You will recall . . . because, as I said, we have been caught unprepared, I am still looking for a quote by the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the former Prime Minister of Canada, who dealt with this issue the day Parliament adjourned on June 29, 1984. I am glad changes have been made so that the English title is again consistent with the French title.

The Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence which I chaired had made a very long and exhaustive study of this issue which resulted in the creation of this very important Institute. We had decided at the time that its name would be as it is today. A number of things must have happened in the meantime, for Parliament adjourned, as you know, and the correction could not be made.

I am glad to report that witnesses from across Canada appeared before the Committee on which sat my honourable friend the NDP critic from British Columbia who was one of the most active women on the Committee.

I must add that it was also a painful experience which prompted our then Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, to exclaim: "At long last, we have the Institute!". We have had to navigate a lot to obtain this Institute before the end of the session. In spite of that, I must say, and a number of my honourable friends will remember that we were pressed for time, because a few Members . . .I like to recall these historical events. This way, at least, young Canadians who are coming of age will know about the workings of politics.

Although they were in favour of the Institute, a number of Members made every effort to delay its study, knowing that if the Institute was not set up by the end of June, it would never become reality. That is why I want the new chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to know that these things can happen and that sometimes, although a bill introduced in the House may be quite good, there are people who will try indirectly . . . I must say that those who tried to kill the Institute sat on the side of the Opposition at the time and are now with the majority. The Institute was created nonetheless.

I want to take this opportunity to say that, when we were looking for someone to lead the Institute, the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party and myself suggested a few names. The name I had suggested from the beginning and which was rejected by everyone before being finally chosen was that of the son of the Right Hon. Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, under whose leadership I was first elected. I am talking about Geoffrey Pearson, a great Canadian and former ambassador to the Soviet Union, who has now been chosen to head the Institute.

I hope that the Institute, which will now be called in French Institut canadien pour la paix et la sécurité internationales, as it should have been from the start, will have no hesitation in using the independence which Parliament wished it to have. I know that, in this regard, I have the support of those who want the Institute to keep its independence and to carry out its research without regard to the political effects of its findings in Canada. That is the first aim of the Institute, and Parliament and all three political parties clearly wished that it would have the independence required when it was created. I know that there are difficult problems to be examined in various parts of the world. Since the creation of the Institute, we have had this issue of the SDI. I understand that there are negotiations going on to my left, but I do not want to lose the thread of my comments. Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate it if you would ask them to hold their conference outside. Mr. Minister, if you please—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): If I may call you back to order . . .

Mr. Prud'homme: Even if I was not advised of this debate, I have to follow some logical reasoning.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Yes . . . the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Chrétien) and the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Prud'homme: As I was saying, first of all, we are glad that the Institute has now an appropriate name and we are going to support the proposal of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). Second, we want to emphasize that this Institute was created as an autonomous body by Parliament and I hope that. Third, we wish Geoffrey Pearson, who will have to see to it that these studies are carried out properly, all the courage he will need to examine the real current issues. Among these, there is of course the issue of the so called Star Wars Project. I also hope that he will not hesitate to make the first step occasionally, as studies can be initiated either at the request of the Government or on the Institute's own initiative.

Well, I hope that the institute will enjoy that independence; I can never be too insistent that we should go forward even with respect to the most controversial issues, especially those involving world peace or international peace with which Canada is not necessarily concerned as opposed to other parts of the world, whether in the Middle East, in Asia or in Latin America. We are looking forward to the results of some of the first studies. We will read them carefully and support them. I will support them because I know that if a group is given the necessary independence to carry on beyond political considerations, it can only publish excellent reports that will enlighten Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I will not proceed any further but I would like to thank you for having recognized me even if I had just learned that we were going to consider the matter. Nevertheless, I was anxious to take part in this debate, because when I was chairman of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, and that was up to the very last day and practically the very last second of the previous Parliament, we had to struggle against what everyone thought were practically insurmountable odds.

I wish to thank the Members who were sitting on the committee at that time. I would like to mention the official critic for external affairs of the New Democratic Party (Ms. Jewett) who played her role as she always does. It was thanks to her co-operation and that of several Members of the new majority. I could refer to them specifically . . . On some future occasion I would like to elaborate on the work done by those Members who gave us their genuine support and who believed in what we wanted to do at the time. To be perfectly honest, no single party can take the credit and claim that it was thanks to the New Democrate or thanks to the Liberals that things got done.

There were Progressive Conservatives who had the wisdom and the intelligence to understand what this Institute would be able to do, and there were also those who were not very enthusiastic and who tried to delay consideration so the Institute would never become a reality.

That is what I wanted to say, first of all for the record, and second, when we have further occasions to consider international affairs, and I hope there will be many, I would like to have a chance to pay tribute to those Members of the new majority who were in the Opposition at the time and who also made an outstanding contribution to the creation of this Institute, which today has become a reality and will undertake studies, as I said earlier, on behalf of Canada, keep us better informed on major international problems and help us act responsibly when we are apprised of the conclusions of these studies. In any case, we will all act according to our own lights and act responsibly, even if the conclusions arrived at by some Members may be highly unpopular.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

[English]

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I too, would like to offer some comments on this very important institution we are debating this afternoon. I think there is a certain flow in the history of events of this country where certain institutions all of a sudden take on special meaning and significance for the Canadian public. I can recall that over a year and a half ago, when we were still in Government, we were discussing the kinds of initiatives which could be taken to give further force and direction to the issue of arms control. The necessity for the establishment of a centre which would co-ordinate a number of important research projects was considered to be of the highest priority. I think the wisdom of that step was demonstrated to me very actively during this past summer when I was part of the special joint House and Senate committee which was looking at the star wars issue. I had the experience of observing the concern, care and interest of a large representation of Canadians which was expressed before that committee. I saw the necessity to have an outlet in this country for those cares and concerns.

• (1710)

We do not talk about peace and arms control in this country in much detail. However, I am reminded of the testimony of representatives of a group called Educators for Social Responsibility which is basically a group of high school teachers from across Canada who are interested in the issues of arms control and disarmament. We asked them where and how young people in high schools could discuss the vital issue of peace and they said that that did not take place in the schools because most teachers are afraid to bring forward such controversial topics as arms control in the classroom.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, it is shocking that in the schools of this country it is difficult for teachers who are interested and involved to provide the forum in which young people can discuss an issue so vital to themselves and their futures. When we probed a little deeper we found that that intimidation was by school boards, administration, parents, and the community. It is considered to be a topic which is too sensitive to handle. It is considered to be a political topic and, of course, we neutralize our schools and do not want them to talk about politics. However, there are too many strong feelings on both sides. One teacher who was part of the delegation said that if he spoke in his classroom about the issues of peace and arms control, people would say he say a "pinko" and not a good hardliner like he is supposed to be. That is a more respectable position to take. The testimony of the educators was that on issues which are essential to survival and to the future there is a paucity of information, a lack of opportunity for discussion, and a lack of opportunity for people going through our school system to become aware and informed about them through good material and programs.

My caucus colleague from Saint-Denis said he hopes there will be lots of studies. We do need studies. There are many experts in the country and studies will certainly help Parliamentarians, bureaucrats, strategists, and the Armed Forces. God knows we can all use some help in coming to grips with these issues. I think this House has paid too little attention to them. I hope that the institute will not just do studies for the Ottawa crowd and expert analyses for the policy makers. I hope that the institute will undertake a more populist approach and use the resources which are given to it to disseminate information across the country into the schools, community clubs, and churches, and make it respectable to talk about peace in this country on a learned, informed basis. With that kind of underlying foundation of well-developed opinion and judgment we may ultimately get better foreign policies and results. I think it is essential that Parliamentarians have the opportunity to put forward what we think the agenda of the institute should be. Parliamentarians should learn from our experiences.

Ms. Jewett: They will do their own agenda.

Mr. Axworthy: I find that a highly elitist point of view, which is perhaps typical of the NDP—

Ms. Jewett: I want them to be independent.

Mr. Axworthy: —that they will set their own agenda and that Members of Parliament are forbidden to offer opinions and to express their heartfelt hopes and aspirations for this institute. After all, it was Parliament that established it. The previous Government put it in place and Members of Parliament voted for it, but now it is being taken over by the in-house crowd so that they can all get together. That is not what should take place. I think it would be a serious mistake if the Peace Institute became a little green house factory—

Ms. Jewett: You don't know anything about it.

Mr. Axworthy: —for people to do their own inside studies. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Member that I know an awful lot more about it than she does because I was in the Cabinet that put this into place and decided, so don't tell me that I don't know anything about it.

Ms. Jewett: You didn't even know about cruise missile testing when you were in the Cabinet. You didn't know anything when you were in the Cabinet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, this is very unseemly.

Mr. Axworthy: It is very unseemly, but it is also very important. I know the Conservative Members are not particularly interested in this Bill because it is not of their own creation and they are houseworking on something that is very important, but let us talk about what we are saying is an important priority. I know the Member for New Westminster (Ms. Jewett) is not interested in a populist approach to these issues. That is too bad because her and her cosy club of friends would not want to share with the public at large. I think that that kind of elitism has been part of the problem with the making of foreign policy in this country. Part of the difficulty has been that it has been an insiders' club. It has been too much contained within the boundaries of this city and is considered to be an exclusive preserve of those who have acquired the aura and majesty of being "foreign policy experts" like the Member for New Westminster pretends to be.

At this point in time this institute can do something much more dramatic and profound for Canadians. There are thousands of Canadians who want the information. I recall when the Educators for Special Responsibility brought a small document they had prepared before task force committee hearings. It was a very simple document which made a comparison between the various arms levels of the Soviet Union and the NATO alliance. It compared the number of ships, missiles, submarines, guns, and tanks. One of the important things about it is that it obviously disputed the kind of phobia which is too common and current in this country among people who say that there is some kind of a red menace hiding out there and that there is a great missile, tank, or airplane gap. The paper provided basic information to show where there is parity and equilibrium in the arms area. It also pointed out the potential for use.

When Members of Parliament go to high schools in their ridings and talk to students they will find that that is the kind of information they would like to have. If that information were shared with students we would be able to develop a public outlook which would give foreign policy the momentum which it desperately needs.

In the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on star wars on Saturday he missed the whole point. He said he is not going to get into the program but he did not understand why Canadians were opposed to it. They are opposed to it because they want this country to become a major peace seeker. They want this country to say a definitive no to star wars and to undertake other initiatives in the arms control area. They want to stop the new generation of arms development which star wars represents, a switch from a deterrent philosophy to a defence philosophy, which will bring the militarization of North America into place. They understand that. The Peace Institute now has the opportunity to provide the glaring light of good information and judgment that can be widely shared by all Canadians. That is why I feel it is important that we try to provide that kind of suggestion in this Parliament. I hope the Peace Institute or someone out there might be listening.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE ACT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada) moved that Bill C-65, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and other Acts in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to a legislative commitee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to open the debate on second reading of Bill C-65, the Bill to amend the RCMP Act. The Bill is the result of a long review within the RCMP and among other Government Departments in which procedures for handling public complaints, internal discipline and grievance procedures within the RCMP were thoroughly examined. My friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), was commenting to me before we began discussion of this Bill that this is the seventh effort that has been made for a Bill similar to this to be introduced in the House of Commons in the hope of getting it passed. I can certainly indicate that the process of review and study which has taken place over the years has been extensive and exhaustive.

Among other things, the proposed legislation will firmly entrench the rights of members of the Force with respect to matters like internal discipline and grievances, including the right to be represented by counsel at internal hearings within the Force. As important as this is, the Bill also ensures an equitable and independent process for dealing with complaints made by the public against members of the Force.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, many of the proposals contained in this Bill are based on the recommendations made by the Commission of Inquiry on public complaints, internal discipline and grievance procedures within the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Commission was chaired by Judge René Marin of the Ontario County and District Courts.

[English]

I had the pleasure in my previous incarnation as the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation of working with Judge Marin who is currently Chairman of Canada Post Corporation, and in that capacity developed a very deep regard for his ability and his dedication to public service. It is perhaps ironic that the first Bill I would bring forward in my new capacity would be a Bill which had its root in the Marin Commission which produced its report on January 16, 1976. The report's recommendations are characterized by a remedial approach which seeks to ensure that the rights of citizens and members of the Force are clearly respected. Its findings and recommendations included measures relating to public complaints, internal discipline and grievance procedures.

When the Government received the Marin Report, it set up an interdepartmental committee of officials to co-ordinate and review implementation of recommendations. The interdepartmental committee concluded that a modernization of the RCMP Act and regulations was needed to reflect current times and changes in the Force's management. A significant concern of the committee was to maintain a balance between the needs and interests of the public and members of the RCMP, and the responsibilities of those charged with the management and continued effectiveness of the Force. Of the 135 total recommendations, 122 were accepted in whole or in part. Bill C-65 is the product of this process of fundamental reappraisal. The Bill addresses the essential themes of the Marin Commission in a number of innovative and effective ways.

The proposed RCMP Act set out in Bill C-65 is in eight parts. Let me briefly provide the House with an overview of the essential elements of each of these with the hope that the clearer understanding of these proposals can be achieved.

One of the most important proposed amendments to the RCMP Act is the manner in which it provides for the handling of public complaints against RCMP members. Bill C-65 proposes the creation of a Public Complaints Commission, an independent and impartial authority, which would be outside the structure of the RCMP. The major proponent for the establishment of such a body, I am pleased to say, has been Force management itself. The provinces also view public complaints as an extremely important issue. This is especially true for the eight provinces and two territories that contract for the use of the Force to provide policing services. As judicial decisions have ruled that the provinces cannot conduct investigations into the administration and management of the Force for constitutional reasons, the Public Complaints Commission becomes an avenue for ensuring that complaints are adequately investigated, that members of the Force whose behaviour has been found unacceptable are disciplined.

The Public Complaints Commission would consist of a chairman, a vice-chairman, a member for each contracting province and not more than three other members, all to be appointed by the Governor in Council. The fact of provincial representation means that the commission will be a truly national body. Members of the commission for contract provinces and territories will be empanelled to review complaints against the conduct of members of the RCMP providing provincial or municipal policing services under contract.

Let me digress briefly to say that in earlier versions of the Bill, concerns were expressed by the contracting provinces, suggesting that they should have the authority through provincial police commissions to locally investigate complaints addressed by residents of that province against members of the RCMP acting in their capacity as a contracting Force. Obviously, the Government recognizes the need to ensure that there is indeed provincial input where there are complaints relating to the Force's provincial activity. At the same time, the Force is a national Force. It is important for us to ensure that national standards are followed and that a member of the Force who is operating in British Columbia is treated in the same way as a member of the Force would be if he were operating in Saskatchewan or New Brunswick.

What the Government hopes to do with this provision is to ensure that we integrate the concerns of the provinces, that the provinces have a right to be heard when complaints are raised but also that national standards are met as well. What this provision will ensure is where a complaint is raised, the nominee of the provincial Government will be able to be present. He may well be the only member of the complaints commission who sits at the hearing. I think this is a measure that will help to reconcile the various concerns that we find arising in our federal system.

[Translation]

In addition, the Bill describes the procedure to be followed with respect to public complaints. Any citizen, whether or not he is involved under what constitutes the complaint, will be able to file a complaint directly with the board, a member of the RCMP or the provincial authority concerned. Normally, complaints will lead to an investigation by the RCMP. However, if in the opinion of its chairman a public hearing is in the public interest, the Commission may hold a public hearing to inquire into the complaint whether or not the RCMP has investigated it. The mandate of the Commission is to make recommendations to the Solicitor General and to the Commissioner.

[English]

I see the establishment of the public complaints commission an an amendment of paramount importance. It is a contemporary response to a need for objective, open and fair handling of complaints against RCMP members in a manner which will command public confidence.

What I view as the other most significant amendment is the creation of an external review committee. It will be made up of five members appointed by the Governor in Council. This committee, in an unprecedented way, will guarantee the rights of RCMP members themselves and will ensure to Parliament and to Canadians at large that individual members of the Force are dealt with fairly. This review authority will be external to the RCMP, independent of it, and will be able to look into certain grievance decisions, formal disciplinary sanctions and discharge or demotions.

[Translation]

After a review of the file, with a hearing if necessary, the Commission will submit its recommendations to the RCMP Commissioner. The Commission will be empowered to call and swear in witnesses and to take testimonies under oath. In cases where a hearing is required, the Commission will be authorized to travel and set its own practice and proceeding rules.

The Commission will submit its annual report to me so it can be presented to Parliament.

[English]

I believe that such an external review committee is an invaluable mechanism for ensuring to the Commissioner an impartial review of all issues. Such a committee is extremely important because its proceedings and recommendations will be open to scrutiny.

Part III of the Bill outlines the procedures for the handling and deciding of grievances for RCMP members, by which any member may grieve any act or omission in the administration of the affairs of the Force if no other process of redress exists.

What the Bill seeks to do in this area is to guarantee by statute an equitable grievance procedure. By these proposals, members will have an inalienable right to a hearing for any inequities they perceive to apply to them. To ensure full and informed grievances are presented, a member will be given complete access to the process without fear of reprisal, including all necessary policy documentation and the assistance of a representative for the preparation of any grievance. The Governor in Council prescribes certain types or classes of grievances which may be submitted by any member to the review committee after having exhausted the various appeal levels determined by the Commissioner.

Historically, a disciplinary process has always existed within the RCMP. The unprecedented addition to this process to be made by Part IV, of Bill C-65 is the definition in statute of what is expected of Force members in a set of standards of conduct. These standards are also intended to ensure full public confidence in the administration of the Force.

[Translation]

Along with these standards, a Code of Conduct will be implemented in the regulations. Any contravention to the Code by a member of the RCMP will be the object of an investigation and will be dealt with in the manner prescribed in the Bill. The Code of Conduct is not included in the Bill but it will be in the regulations so that the RCMP will be able to adjust to the verious circumstances by requesting if need be, that amendments be made to the regulations. A contravention to the Code of Conduct may be treated formally or informally, depending on its seriousness.

[English]

Minor contraventions of the code of conduct will be dealt with informally, by minor sanctions, including recommendations for special training, professional counselling or direction to work under close supervision, or reprimand. Appeal procedures will be available for the more severe of these disciplinary actions.

Formal discipline, for more serious breaches of the code of conduct, will be dealt with in a formalized disciplinary hearing. Hearings will be presided over by an appointed adjudication board of three officers, one of whom will be legally trained. Hearings will take place with a number of judicial safeguards to guarantee due process.

There will be occasions when it will be necessary to deal with a member who may no longer be considered suitable to continue to perform his duties. The Bill would enshrine in law a formal and open process to be applied in deciding on unsuitability, the one ground being repeated failure to perform the required duties. Again, the member in question has the right to know fully the particulars for recommending his discharge or demotion, the right to be represented, and in such cases, the right to have a discharge and demotion board set up to decide the issue. The remaining sections of the Bill provide for matters of constitution and organization and miscellaneous provisions.

I might disgress just briefly, Mr. Speaker, to give an assurance to the House, and particularly to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby who served with me on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I noted in reviewing the Bill that there were provisions made for the Governor in Council to make regulations which would flesh out the provisions included in the Bill. We believe those provisions are necessary.

As the Hon. Member knows, there is a long-standing concern that members of the Standing Joint Committee have about the so-called magic formula, where the Government in previous years has taken the position that unless the phrase "by order" is included in that particular section, the regulations that result from that might not be deemed to be statutory instruments, might not be required to be published, might not be required to be made available to the standing joint committee.

I give the House the assurance today that the Government will itself propose in committee, in any instance where we are seeking to give authority to the Governor in Council, to make regulations that the so-called magic formula will be inserted there as well to protect the the rights of Parliament and the rights of the public.

Let me conclude. I am satisfied that the proposed revisions to the RCMP Act have been thoroughly examined and the necessity for the implementation of these provisions has been well established. The recommendations of the Marin Commission are substantially implemented in this Act and considerable time and effort has been invested in developing revisions that will support and further the work of the RCMP and adequately preserve the delicate balance between the protection of the rights of the public and the individual members of the RCMP.

I have appreciated the discussions that I have had with my colleagues opposite and the interests they have taken in the provisions of the Bill. I know members of the Force, members of the public and certainly members of the contracting provinces as well will appreciate any co-operation that can be given by the House in speedy passage of this Bill. I undertake, again, voluntarily at this point, that the Government will listen with an open mind, to a legislative committee, to technical proposals that are made by colleagues to improve the Bill should some come up. We welcome input from Members on all sides of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by congratulating the Minister for his recent appointment as the new Solicitor General of Canada. I am sure he will serve the position well. I am also certain that as long as he does not hold any private meetings at any hotels in town he will survive.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Bill C-65 is an extremely important piece of legislation. I would like to indicate at the outset that the Official Opposition supports the Bill in principle. A number of concerns might be raised with respect to the complaints procedure outlined in the particular Bill. Specifically, there are six concerns or issues which I feel ought to be addressed at committee stage. Indeed, we look forward to a very thorough investigation of the Bill at that stage.

● (1740)

The first concern or issue at which one ought to look is the definition of a complaint provided in the proposed legislation. The Marin Commission provided a more expanded definition of exactly what is a complaint. I will have more to say on the six points which I will raise at this time.

The second concern is with respect to the model of the complaints commission which was adopted by the Government. The Marin Commission recommended a police ombudsman, a single individual, to deal with complaints against the RCMP. Certain individuals have proposed other models, and I should like to discuss some of them today as well.

The third issue at which one ought to look is the powers of the public complaints commission. As the Minister indicated, the commission has the authority under the proposed legislation to make recommendations to the Commissioner and to the Minister. The commission does not have the authority to make final decisions, nor does it have any authority to conduct its own independent investigation. The Act provides that the RCMP will continue to conduct investigations into complaints by members of the public. Some would argue that the commission or the complaints procedure should provide for independent investigation of police complaints.

The fourth issue which ought to be addressed at committee stage is the size of the commission. As I indicated, the Marin Commission recommended that there be a police ombudsman, a single individual.

The legislation provides for a commission consisting of 12 individuals. As the Minister pointed out, four of those individuals would be appointed by Order in Council by the federal Government. The other eight would also be appointed by the federal Government in consultation with the eight contracting provices. It is also important to determine whether it is economical and appropriate to have such a large commission, whether indeed it is necessary to have 12 members. As the Minister indicated, there appeared to be a need or desire on the part of the contracting provinces to have some input into a complaints system or commission. I suppose the reason for the commission being so large is to accommodate the concerns of the various contracting provinces to ensure that they have some input.

The fifth concern which ought to be considered is the powers of the commission to hold in camera meetings. The legislation provides that under certain circumstances the commission could decide to hold in camera meetings. I should like to discuss that point later in my comments.

The sixth issue which I feel ought to be considered is the right of the Commissioner to refuse or to terminate an investigation. One could argue that too much power is vested in the Commissioner to deal with complaints against the force.

As I indicated at the outset, Bill C-65 is an important piece of legislation. It is virtually identical to other legislation which was introduced by the previous administration. The public has waited a long time for this particular piece of legislation with respect to the formal complaints procedure. Members of the force have waited a long period of time for that aspect of Bill C-65 which deals with internal grievance and discipline procedures. In my view the Bill will go a long way toward improving morale in what I consider to be the finest police force anywhere in the world.

I am not sure whether Hon. Members have stopped to think about it, but Canada is one of the few countries in the world, if not the only country, where a police force is identified as a national symbol. That says a lot about this country where we cherish above all else, peace, order and good Government. However, it says even more about the RCMP, its history, its record and its vital contribution to Canadian nationhood. The many tales of heroism and the quiet devotion to duty by individual RCMP officers form some of the most colourful stories in our history. As a nation, we owe them a great debt of gratitude, more perhaps than many of us appreciate on a daily basis. Of course the responsibilities of the RCMP have mushroomed since Sir John A. Macdonald decided in 1873 that a police force was necessary to keep law and order in the Canadian west.

Today the RCMP works to prevent, detect and investigate offences against federal statutes. Its members enforce laws, prevent and detect crimes, investigate offences, and maintain law and order in the provinces, territories and municipalities under contract. They work to improve police-community relations. They maintain internal security. They provide investigative and protective services to other federal Departments and agencies. Finally, they assist, upon request, all Canadian law enforcement agencies by providing specialized police training, forensic laboratory identification and information services.

Like any other organization which has seen fairly rapid expansion, as is the case with the RCMP, the RCMP has had its share of organizational and administration difficulties. Some of its problems were dealt with by the Macdonald Commission which recommended that the national security component of the RCMP be split from the force and delegated to a separate civilian agency. Other problems were examined by Judge René Marin in his commission of inquiry relating to public complaints, internal discipline and grievance procedures within the RCMP.

As the Minister indicated, the report was commissioned in 1974 and it was released in early 1976. However, unfortunately it has taken a great deal of time to reach the floor of the House of Commons for debate. There is little doubt that the Bill has been on the legislative backburner for far too long. The first Bill, Bill C-19, based on the Marin report was introduced in 1978 during the third session of the thirtieth Parliament by the Hon. Jean-Jacques Blais, Solicitor General. It was followed subsequently by another Bill, Bill C-50, also introduced by Mr. Blais in the fourth session of Parliament.

Another Bill, Bill C-69, based on the Marin report was introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), in the first session of the thirty-second Parliament. The same Bill was reintroduced during the second session of the thirty-second Parliament as Bill C-13, which was virtually identical to the Bill before us today. With time running out for the thirty-second Parliament, Bill C-13 was introduced in the Senate. Although it was debated and considered in committee, it died on the Order Paper. Essentially the measure which we are considering is a Liberal piece of legislation.

While we are supportive of the objectives of this legislation, we on this side of the House would also like to see it pass in the best form possible. I think we can and should approach this Bill in a spirit of non-partisanship.

As we know, and as the Minister indicated, the Bill has two main objectives. It proposes the establishment of a public complaints commission, and it also seeks to update the internal discipline and grievance procedures within the force.

The public complaints commission is intended as an external and independent authority composed of a permanent chairman and up to 12 members, as I indicated earlier.

Under the legislation any member of the public, whether or not he or she is affected by the subject matter of the complaint, will be able to file a complaint with the commission, with any member of the RCMP or with the provincial agency responsible for the receipt and investigation of public complaints against the police. The Bill also circumscribes the commission's authority in so far as they are limited to making recommendations to the Commissioner of the RCMP. The Bill also provides for the complainant and the Minister to receive a report on the outcome of the complaints.

● (1750)

As I indicated, I think we should approach this Bill in a spirit of non-partisanship. After all, what we are attempting to do is to find the proper administrative mechanics to deal with the problems before us. As such, there are a number of suggestions I would like to offer. In my view, for instance, the section dealing with the definition of a public complaint is rather restrictive. Part VII of the Bill, Section 45.35(1) states the following:

> Any member of the public having a complaint concerning the conduct of any member or other person appointed or employed under the authority of this Act may, whether or not he is affected by the subject matter of the complaint, make the complaint—

The operatives words are in Subsection (1) which states, "the conduct of any member or other person appointed or employed under the authority of this Act".

As I indicated earlier, the Marin Commission offered a much broader definition which I think is the sort of approach we should be taking in this particular Bill. After all, members of the public have to be assured that if they do have a complaint, they are not going to be tripped up in the process by an overly restrictive definition of what constitutes a complaint.

The Marin Commission offers a more expanded definition of a public complaint. The report reads:

> —any communication received from a member of the public, either orally or in writing, which criticizes the behaviour of a member of the force or alleges the failure of the force itself to meet public expectations.

The commission suggested that complaints received by the force could be divided into two categories: first, complaints alleging specific injury or abuse by a member or members of the force; and second, complaints of a more general nature such as matters of police service or the operational policies of the force.

The manner in which the legislation is presently worded, for instance, precludes a person from complaining to the force if he or she feels that certain RCMP policies or administrations are not effective or appropriate. If a person lives in a remote community and feels that the force has allocated insufficient resources to police that particular area, then that person, under the proposed legislation, is not entitled to complain. The question of high-speed chases has attracted considerable attention lately as well. This Bill would not allow someone to complain about RCMP procedures in that respect.

Obviously there is a balance that must be reached if the interests of the general public and the interests of the force are to be respected. The last thing any of us would want to see is a system which encourages complaints for the sake of complaints. Having said that, however, we must make sure that if legitimate complaints do exists, they are considered and dealt with.

One of the problems the Marin Commission discovered was that many people are reluctant to bring their complaints to the attention of the force. Among the reasons given to the commission were that the person involved did not know how to bring the complaint to the attention of the force and that some felt that a complaint would do no good since the force would simply cover it up. Others felt that retaliation in some form by the force would follow the lodging of a complaint. As well, some people who sought the advice of friends were discouraged from filing a complaint.

I think our object in connection with this aspect of the legislation must be to make the procedures as open as possible. I think that that is the only way one can instil public confidence in this type of a system.

Another issue that I would like to raise in connection with this Bill is the proposal in the complaint mechanism to have the force investigate itself. For example, we see in Section 45.36(4) that any complaint which is not disposed of informally is to be investigated by the force subject to Section 45.38. This Section states:

> The Commissioner may make rules governing the procedures to be followed by the force in notifying persons under this Part and in investigating, disposing of or otherwise dealing with complaints under this Part.

It would seem to me that this tends to give quite a bit of authority to the Commissioner. I do not doubt for a moment that the Commissioner would be totally circumspect in discharging this duty if it is given to him. However, in my view we must be concerned about the public's perception of the police investigating themselves.

As many Members may know, Professor Allan Grant of Osgoode Hall Law School, a former professor of mine, has done considerable work in the area of the control of police behaviour. Professor Grant is a former police officer and is renowned throughout the world for his expertise in this particular area. He has developed a number of models involving the external and internal functions of investigation, adjudication and discipline. My own predisposition is toward an independent investigation with external adjudication and discipline. It would seem to me that this would make the process meet the twin tests of Caesar's wife which are to be not merely above reproach but also appearing to be above reproach. In fact, I have a number of questions regarding some of the details of this Bill which I am looking forward to raising in committee.

In connection with the need for independence, the Marin Commission offered as a recommendation the establishment of the office of police ombudsman. From the point of view of independence, I am attracted to that recommendation. As I indicated earlier, the fact that a 12-member commission is recommended in this legislation might cause some concern. It is my understanding that the reason the legislation was drafted in this manner was to placate the provinces which wanted some representation on any body set up to deal with complaints. I think we should take a hard look at this justification to determine whether or not it is cost effective and in the public interest. After all, if we can get the job done with a minimum of resources, I think that Hon. Members opposite would agree that we should opt for this route.

I think there is a lot to commend the office of the ombudsman. First, the ombudsman derives his authority from and is answerable to Parliament. Second, he has powers to investigate all administrative but not legislative decisions. Finally, he has the power to criticize administrative decisions and recommend change. He does not have the authority, however, to reverse administrative decisions or to mete out discipline.

There are many other aspects of the public complaints commission about which I am concerned, but I note that time is running short. Another concern that was raised by a number of members of my caucus was the fact that a time limit was not put on dealing with a particular complaint. The legislation provides that a complainant is to be notified of the status of a particular complaint after 45 days, I believe, and to be advised of the status every month thereafter. However, there is no time limit with respect to how long it should take to investigate completely a complaint that is issued by a member of the public. As the old maxim states, justice delayed is justice denied. I am sure that an advisable and appropriate change to this legislation could result in a time limit being put on the investigation and disposition of a complaint made by a member of the public.

I would now like to deal for a few moments with the other major section of the Bill which contains provisions for revised discipline and grievance procedures and which formalizes rights for members of the force in these matters. I note that the time has expired for today and I look forward to continuing my remarks in the morning.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE ACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, September 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-65, an Act to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and other Acts in consequence thereof be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during my comments with respect to Bill C-65, I addressed the part of the Bill that deals with the Public Complaints Commission. I raised a number of questions that I thought should be addressed at the committee stage. First, with respect to the definition of a complaint, I asked whether the definition provided in Bill C-65 was sufficient or whether we as parliamentarians should opt for a more expanded definition of a complaint such as that definition which was adopted by the Marin Commission. I also raised the question of whether or not the model that is proposed in Bill C-65 for the Public Complaints Commission is the model that is the most acceptable. Hon. Members will know that there are a number of other models that were addressed in the Marin Commission. The Marin Commission recommended a police ombudsman to look into the entire question of public complaints. That Commission suggested a one-person commission to deal with complaints.

Professor Allan Grant of Osgoode Hall Law School, a world expert on police complaint procedures, developed five other possible models for public complaints. Arthur Maloney suggested a further model. The committee will have to see whether or not the model that has been suggested in this particular piece of legislation is the best model possible in the circumstances to deal with complaints against the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Another issue I raised yesterday during my comments was the question of the powers given to this particular commission. As Hon. Members know, under the proposed legislation this commission consisting of 12 individuals has the authority or power simply to recommend to the Minister and the Commissioner of the RCMP a certain resolution to a particular complaint. The commission will not have any investigatory power of its own but simply the power to review decisions that have been made by the Commissioner. That is another issue at which we ought to look in committee.

As well, we should discuss whether or not it is appropriate to have a commission consisting of 12 individuals. As I indicated, the Marin Report suggested one person. The proposed legislation provides for a 12-member commission. Hon. Members will have to determine whether or not it is economical and appropriate to create a bureaucracy consisting of 12 individuals and indeed whether or not it is necessary to have 12 full-time individuals dealing with public complaints.

Another issue that concerns me is the question of the powers of the commission to hold in camera meetings. The committee will have to decide whether or not that power should be given to the commission and, if so, under what circumstances the Public Complaints Commission should have the authority to hold in camera hearings. We will have to determine whether it is in the public interest to have all hearings held by the commission held in public or whether there is a public interest to be served in holding certain hearings in camera.

Another issue that was of concern to the Opposition was the right of the Commissioner to refuse or terminate an investigation. Should the Commissioner of the RCMP be given the authority to deem a particular complaint frivolous or vexatious and thereby not pursue the complaint? It is provided in the proposed legislation that a complainant can go directly to the Public Complaints Commission to lodge a complaint. However, those complainants who decide to lodge their complaints initially with the RCMP will be faced with the possibility of having the RCMP decide not to investigate for whatever reason.

The committee will have to decide if it is in the public interest to give the Commissioner of the RCMP the authority to decide that a complaint is frivolous. It will have to decide if that responsibility should not rest with an independent body. Is there a concern that if that authority is given to the Commissioner and to the RCMP the public will question the independence of the complaints procedure? There are those who argue that the mere fact that the RCMP will do the initial investigation would, in and of itself, suggest that there may be a bias in the investigation of a particular complaint made by a member of the public. The issue of whether or not the RCMP should have the authority to decide to investigate a complaint will have to be addressed.

For the remainder of my time, I would like to deal with the other major section of Bill C-65 which contains provisions for revised discipline and grievance procedures and which formalizes rights for members of the force in these matters. These provisions include the establishment of a right to counsel. Prior to this point in time, members of the force who were subject to disciplinary action and who were involved in an investigation, either for criminal activity or for a breach of the code of conduct, did not have the entrenched right of representation by counsel. The legislation before us gives the RCMP officer who is under review the right to a lawyer. That is a tremendous step forward.

Members of the Opposition look forward to hearing from members of the force with respect to the whole aspect of Bill C-65 which deals with the internal discipline and grievance procedures, which have been long awaited by members of the force. Indeed, the Opposition is looking forward to the input from members of the force to hear what their views are with respect to the proposed legislation.

As Hon. Members know, Bill C-65 will create an external review committee composed of a chairman and four members appointed by the federal Cabinet to review grievances, serious discipline cases and orders for discharge or demotion. The committee will have the authority to make recommendations to the Commissioner who retains the authority to make the final decision. There are those who argue that this review committee should have the final authority to decide upon a particular grievance. There are others who argue that if that is allowed, then two separate reins of command will be established and the functioning of the RCMP and discipline within the force will be jeopardized as a result of giving a body outside of the RCMP the authority to make the final determination with respect to a grievance which has been filed. The committee which will be established under this legislation, like the complaints commission, will report annually to Parliament as opposed to the Solicitor General. That is a visible and appropriate provision in the Bill.

In June of 1984, a group known as the Association of 17 Divisions appeared before the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs on Bill C-13 to respond on behalf of RCMP members. As I indicated yesterday, Bill C-13 was a Bill almost identical to the Bill which is before us today. That Bill was introduced by the previous Liberal administration. The Association of 17 Divisions appeared before the Senate committee and raised some interesting points which, in my view, should be considered and acted upon.

With respect to the issue of the suspension of a member from the force, Clause 13.1 of the proposed legislation gives the Commissioner of the RCMP considerable power. For instance, he can suspend without pay an officer who has contravened or is suspected of contravening the RCMP code of conduct, any Act of Parliament or any legislature. It would seem that in the case of a member who is simply suspected of having contravened the code of conduct, or any other law, that person should be presumed innocent until proven guilty by due process of law. That, of course, is guaranteed under the Constitution Act but not under Bill C-65. I think it would be an advisable amendment to the Act to provide that the Commissioner have the authority to suspend a member but to suspend that member with pay until a final determination is made with respect to the particular complaint against that officer.

Suspension from duty without pay also presupposes guilt and constitutes immediate punishment before due process has been completed. Whether rightly or wrongly, it is also perceived as exerting extreme pressure on a member of the force to resign, perhaps. It should be noted that suspension from duty with pay, pending completion of an investigation for an alleged offence, is considered an acceptable administrative practice. As a matter of fact, it was one of the recommendations of the Marin Commission. I should also add, Mr. Speaker, that one of the problems associated with suspension without pay is that the member of the RCMP who is suspensed is prohibited by current RCMP regulations from obtaining other employment. For example, a member who is suspended without pay can demonstrate how this power could cause untold personal trauma as well as much income loss.

In June of 1982, a member of the RCMP was arrested for an alleged offence under the Narcotic Control Act. Based upon preliminary information, the Commissioner had reason to believe that this member had committed a serious offence. In the Commissioner's judgment, the circumstances were so serious and extreme that he ordered the member suspended without pay notwithstanding that basic and fundamental principle of our justice system that one is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

When the Commissioner's legal authority was questioned in this particular case, the suspension was changed and the individual officer in question was suspended with pay. The officer was charged under the Narcotic Control Act. However, these charges were subsequently withdrawn by the Crown since the Crown was of the opinion that there was no evidence to warrant a prosecution.

In these particular circumstances, Mr. Speaker, one should ensure that these officers are not suspended without pay. It is not difficult to assume that if the Commissioner had possessed the authority to suspend this particular officer without pay, he could have been suspended without pay for the two-year period which was involved from the moment this person was suspected of contravening the Narcotic Control Act to that point in time when the charges were withdrawn.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there are situations which might arise in which a member of the force is alleged to have committed a serious criminal offence or has seriously contravened the code of conduct. In cases where the continued service of a member of the force cannot be tolerated, that person can be processed for a discharge on an urgent basis. In my view, at least, this section on suspension should be changed to allow the Commissioner to suspend the officer from duty with pay until the final disposition of that particular grievance.

In Part II of the Bill there is a section relating to eligibility to sit on the RCMP External Review Committee. As the Bill reads now, no member of the force is eligible to be appointed. Representations by the RCMP Association of 17 Divisions which represents members of the force were made to the effect that no one who has ever been a member of the RCMP should be appointed to this particular committee. I think this is a reasonable suggestion which could enhance the fairness and objectivity of the committee.

Another recommendation made by the association was that the decision under the grievance procedure be rendered within a six-month period. This would appear to be a worth-while recommendation as well. It does place some demands on the review committee but these demands would not be either onerous or unreasonable. I think it would be abundantly equitable and fair to ensure that an RCMP officer's grievance is dealt with as expeditiously as possible. The association also recommended that where a decision is not rendered within six months, the decision be deemed to be in favour of the grieving member. That, in my view, would certainly provide an incentive to encourage swift decision-making by the RCMP and by the review committee.

Another aspect of this legislation which appears to be wanting is Subsection 33(4) which deals with the types of grievances which are referable to the committee. It says that the Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing the types of grievances to be referred to the committee. In my view, Mr. Speaker, it would be advisable if the grievances were spelled out explicitly rather than by way of regulation. That would serve to make the whole process more definite and add some certainty.

To conclude, I wish to reiterate that the Official Opposition supports this Bill in principle. We believe it should be dealt with on a non-partisan basis. The legislation has been on the back burner for far too long. Both the public and members of the force have been waiting for it. The sooner we deal with this Bill in committee, the sooner it becomes law, the better as far as the public is concerned. We look forward to a thorough debate of this Bill in committee. We will be raising the questions I have raised in my submissions and, hopefully, with the support of all Parties, we will make this a better piece of legislation. Thank you for the opportunity I had to speak on Bill C-65.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on Bill C-65, an Act which is long overdue. In fact, the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) indicated yesterday that this is the seventh attempt, since the report of the Marin Commission was issued in 1976, which successive Governments have made to deal with the important concerns set out in Bill C-65. I might say as well that, although the Solicitor General was not able to be present for the debate today, I do want to convey to him my best wishes on his appointment. This is the first Bill he has brought before the House in his capacity as Solicitor General and I know his reputation for fairness and integrity will serve him well in that very important position. I have had the privilege of working closely with the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe over the past six years as a member of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, and I know that members of that committee, indeed all Members of this House, would agree with me in saying that we welcome the appointment of that Hon. Member to this very important position.

In turning to the provisions of Bill C-65, I am not going to repeat all of the concerns raised in the context of committee study of this Bill and predecessor Bills. However, I do want to note that the essential purpose of the Bill is one which we in this Party welcome. Indeed, the purpose of the Bill is threefold. First, to establish a public complaints commission for the RCMP to ensure there is a forum for the adjudication of complaints about wrongdoing within the RCMP. Second, to establish an external review committee to review grievances by members of the force. In many ways the present grievance procedure is something out of the Dark Ages. It denies fundamental justice and fair play to members of the force. Finally, the external review committee would have the power to deal with serious discipline cases and provide for orders relating to discharge and demotion.

In a very general sense the Bill is based on the recommendations of the Marin Commission established in 1974 and which reported in 1976. However, there are a number of fundamental differences between the recommendations of that commission and those of the Government in Bill C-65. In most cases, I submit, the proposals of the commission are better than those of the Government and I will deal with the specifics when I come to those particular areas.

The last time this Bill or its predecessor in the last Parliament, Bill C-13, was given consideration was when the subject matter of Bill C-13, which, as my friend from York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) pointed out, is virtually identical to that of Bill C-65, was discussed last spring when it was before the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs. That committee received an order of reference to study the subject matter of the Bill. None of the predecessor Bills were debated in the House. They were tabled for first reading, but this is the first time there has ever been a debate in this House on amendments to the RCMP Act.

The Senate committee heard from a number of witnesses. In addition to the Solicitor General and representatives of his Ministry it heard from the Attorney General of British Columbia, Mr. Brian Smith, counsel for the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, Alan Borovoy, and representatives of the Associations of 17 Divisions. I will have more to say about the very fine work that is being done by the association in a few moments. The committee heard as well from members of the Divisional Staff Relations Representative Program, the Div. Rep. Program as it is known within the force. The Senate committee also received written representations from a number of Attorneys General and other officials.

The study by the Senate committee focused on three or four specific areas; the public complaints procedure, discipline, discharge and demotion, and the procedure for dealing with grievances within the RCMP. In my initial remarks I would like to deal with the question of the public complaints procedure. Before doing that, however, I will note that the existing procedures in the provinces for dealing with complaints about improper conduct and wrongdoing on the part of members of the RCMP and of other police forces within their jurisdictions are very inadequate. The Supreme Court of Canada recently ruled in the Putman decision, which originated in the Province of Alberta, that provincial Government had no power whatsoever to impinge on the internal management of the RCMP. Those provincial Governments which attempted to bring RCMP members employed under contract with the province within the scope of their police complaint and discipline legislation, were denied the right to do so. That left a hiatus in the law because, on the one hand, the provinces had no power to deal with the complaints of the public and, on the other, at this point, there is no complaints procedure of any substance directly under the jurisdiction of the RCMP itself.

Constitutionally there are serious problems with respect to this question, but, as well, there are serious concerns with respect to the existing powers of provincial police commissions to review complaints by the public. The Attorney General of British Columbia argued that he wanted the provincial Government and the provincial police commission to have control over the complaints procedure. If that were implemented, many of us would argue that that procedure is very defective. In fact, in an annual report submitted about three or four years ago to the Government of British Columbia the former ombudsman of that province said, "Sometimes I wonder if the appeal procedure provided for in the Police Act was designed to discourage complaints". Indeed, that has, unfortunately, been the experience of too many complainants under the B.C. police procedure.

I am very pleased to be able to report to the House that the enlightened administration in the Attorney General's Department in the Province of Manitoba, under an NDP administration, has brought forward model legislation in the important area of complaints procedure for the police in that province as well as with regard to grievance and consideration of discharge and demotion. That legislation could well serve as a model to the federal Government. I certainly intend to bring the provisions of that Bill to the attention of the legislative committee which will be studying this particular Bill.

I suggest that we call witnesses from the Police Commission of the Province of Manitoba to indicate to the committee what their experience has been with that excellent legislation.

● (1130)

As well, the City of Toronto had a specific provision for a complaints procedure. I know that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie) would be familiar with that. It is a procedure which, again, has been strongly commended by those who are active in this field since it does provide for independent investigation and an independent review process. I believe that the provincial legislation which authorized that independent complaints procedure in Toronto expired at the end of 1974. However, it certainly is another model which we will want to examine closely in determining what improvements might be made to this federal legislation which does fall short in a number of important aspects that I will deal with shortly.

In terms of the public complaints procedure, I have indicated that through the appearance before the Senate committee of the Attorney General of British Columbia and by way of written submission from Attorneys General from a number of other provinces, Attorneys General have expressed serious concern that in view of the fact that they pay the bill and that in eight of the ten provinces the RCMP is the contract police force, they should have a far greater role to play in the process of review of complaints by the public.

I do not concur in the suggestion of those who state that there should be no national standard and no national complaints procedure. I believe that the RCMP is a national police force and that the standards which are applicable should be national standards. However, I do believe that a number of representations made by provincial Attorneys General should be given very serious and careful consideration. Rather than delegating powers from the federal Government to the provincial Government to deal with complaints, they recommend the involvement of the provincial nominees or appointees in that process. I am pleased to note that this Bill, unlike the predecessor Bill, does make provision for consultation with the provinces on the appointment of eight of the 12 members of the Public Complaints Commission. Of course, that reflects the eight provinces which contract with the federal Government for the services of the RCMP. That is an important appointment process and I know it will be welcomed by provincial Attorneys General.

There are other possible improvements to the process. Yesterday in his remarks to the House the Solicitor General indicated that when dealing with a complaint from a particular province, the provincial nominee from that province would have the right to sit and adjudicate on that complaint, in some cases as the sole adjudicator. I do not read this Bill that way and would want to consider carefully whether that should be the case. For example, when a complaint comes from Alberta, should it be the Alberta nominee on that Public Complaints Commission, at least at the first instance, who hears that particular complaint? It may very well be that there will be a final review by the full commission but it would help to facilitate uniform standards within provinces if complaints from particular provinces were dealt with initially by the nominee from that province.

In other circumstances—particularly dealing with very serious complaints—it may very well be that the entire commission or a sub-committee of the Commission that comprises not only provincial nominees but federal nominees would want to look into those complaints.

Another important recommendation being made is that where a complaint is made directly to the commissioner or to the Public Complaints Commission, the Attorney General of the province within which that complaint is initiated should be informed of the complaints. Currently, a serious complaint can be made to the commission or indeed to the Commissioner of the RCMP. That complaint will not be forwarded automatically to the provincial Attorney General. I suggest that provincial Attorneys General have the right to know when there are complaints about the functioning of the force within their particular jurisdiction. That is a concern which was raised by the Attorney General of Saskatchewan as well as the Attorney General of Newfoundland and I suspect others would share that concern.

Finally, in dealing with the general concerns of the provincial Attorneys General, I note the suggestion that has been made by the Attorney General of the Province of Saskatchewan, Gary Lane, with respect to the ultimate powers of the Public Complaints Commission. He suggests that it is just not good enough that the commission should consider complaints, have findings and make those recommendations to the Minister, which then would be forwarded to the Commissioner of the RCMP who can then completely ignore those recommendations. If this process is to have any integrity at all, particularly in the eyes of the public, I would suggest that the representation of the Attorney General of Saskatchewan and many others on this point should be carefully taken into consideration and indeed adopted. It is that the commission's findings with respect to whether or not there has been misconduct by a member of the RCMP should in fact be final and binding. It should not be up to the Commissioner to ignore those findings after a study. The Attorney General of Saskatchewan goes on to say that if in fact as a result of such a finding there is a recommendation for discipline, the disciplinary consequences must flow. Once again, it is not good enough that there should be a finding of wrongdoing which is then turned over to the Commissioner of the RCMP who can proceed to ignore the recommendation made with respect to discipline. Obviously, there can be some discretion left in the hands of the Commissioner with respect to the nature or degree of punishment, but it is not good enough to suggest that he can simply ignore those recommendations with impunity.

In summary, those were the concerns raised by the Attorneys General with respect to the predecessor Bill, Bill C-13. There are two other fundamental concerns with respect to this public complaints process. Before dealing with those concerns which relate to who will investigate complaints and who will make the final decision, let me raise one further issue with respect to the appointments process to this Public Complaints Commission. It is essential that Parliament itself play a role in that appointments process. As early as 1976, the Marin Commission Report recommended that the external agencies—which were recommended by Marin—report not to a Minister but directly to Parliament. I suggest that not only is it essential that these committees report to Parliament, where the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs can consider them and in fact make recommendations for legislative change if necessary, but that Parliament should be involved as well in the process of appointment to both of these commissions.

The report of the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons is before the House. That is an outstanding committee which has done a great service to this Parliament in making recommendations for change to the process of appointments by Government. I would urge the Government to ensure that Parliament plays a role when appointments are to be made to the Public Complaints Commission and the External Review Commission. Furthermore, whatever process is envisaged for reviewing federal government appointments, that process should apply to appointments to these commissions as well. Not only would Parliament be involved in the appointment of these commissions, it would also be involved subsequently when the commissions would submit their annual reports to Parliament. I think that the involvement of those of us who are elected representatives, representing all parts of this country, is very important in terms of the integrity of this process.

I mentioned that there are two very serious concerns, both with this Bill and the predecessor legislation, in the area of the investigation of public complaints. The first concern is that as the Bill is now drafted, the investigation of any complaints against the RCMP will not be made by an independent investigator or investigators who are on the staff of the Public Complaints Commission but in fact will be made by the people who are being investigated. The Bill provides that public complaints about the RCMP shall be investigated by the RCMP. I do not think that is good enough. I do not think that is an appropriate means of dealing with the concerns of individual Canadians or groups of Canadians with respect to possible wrongdoing by the RCMP. My friend, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) referred yesterday to the very positive perception with which the RCMP is regarded in Canada. He is absolutely right about that. It is essential where there is a possibility of wrongdoing, either institutionally or on the part of an individual member, that complaints about wrongdoing should not be investigated by the force that is itself subject to a complaint, but should be in investigated independently.

I mentioned that the counsel for the Canadian Civil Liberties Association appeared before the Senate committee studying this Bill. He pointed out that if we leave it up to the RCMP to investigate the RCMP, there are at least three serious concerns.

First, in a number of cases people will simply just not be prepared to make a complaint. Even though it is quite possible that the RCMP would fully investigate, the perception on the part of many members of the public would be that if there is not an outside investigation, they will not bother complaining. People who have legitimate complaints will simply not make them because they feel they do not want an internal review process.

Second, there must be a complete investigation made without any possibility of extraneous considerations. The general counsel, Mr. Borovoy, pointed out that the commission would not be in a position to perceive any defects or gaps in the material presented to it or in the manner in which the investigation was carried out. As he said:

—unless you are talking about glaring inadequacies in the investigation, it would virtually take clairvoyance to spot defects in the investigation from reading an investigation report. It will not be good enough and the commission is virtually dependent on the investigation that is done by the R.C.M.P.

The third major area of concern with respect to an internal investigation of complaints is that such an internal investigation is vulnerable to the suspicion that there may be internal or inter-departmental jealousies or that the considerations of public relations may prevail over the interests of objective fact-finding.

That is a well founded concern, and another reason for rejecting the proposal in this Bill that there should be internal investigation. Rather than a form of internal investigation, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association recommended that the Public Complaints Commission should have an investigative capacity similar to that employed by the metropolitan Toronto police complaints commissioner who can independently inquire into and investigate the allegations of a complaint without relying upon someone within the police force to investigate a complaint about the police force. In addition, that investigator can have full access to all police records and premises. He can appoint persons to assist him in his investigations and can apply to a Justice of the Peace for a search warrant to assist in the investigations.

There are similar powers and the Manitoba legislation, to which I referred earlier.

The Association of 17 Divisions made a representation as well with respect to the process of investigation of public complaints. It suggested that the rules which govern such investigation should be enumerated in statutory form. I am not sure that they have to be enumerated in statutory form, but they should be clearly set out in regulations. Those regulations should be subject to review by the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments.

I was very pleased yesterday to note that the Minister had given a commitment that all regulations and all regulation-making powers in this Bill will ensure that there is a review by that important standing committee, and that the so-called magic formula will be used to remove any doubt about the possibility for review by that committee on regulations which are promulgated pursuant to this Act.

The first area of concern, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the public complaints process, is the question of internal investigation, but there is a second very fundamental area of concern, namely, who makes the final decision. After there has been an investigation, who will make the decision if it is found that a complaint is well founded? Who will make the decision as to whether or not there will be any form of disciplinary action or a change in policy and procedure? In the Bill, as it is presently worded, it is the Commissioner of the RCMP himself who makes that decision. I suggest that that process undermines the public confidence that justice is being done and, more important, that justice is seen to be done. I do not think we can overlook the history in this area as well.

The report of the McDonald Commission documented not only clear instances of individual abuses, illegality, breach of the law, but it went so far as to talk about institutional contempt for the law. Yet, despite the documentation of this wrongdoing, of this illegality, to this day there has not been a single disciplinary action taken against any member of the RCMP who was involved in that wrongdoing or illegality.

This nation is founded on the principle of the rule of law. That principle requires all of us, be we Members of Parliament, police, or ordinary Canadians, to be subject to the same law. I suggest that the failure on the part of the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Crosbie) to prosecute where there was evidence of wrongdoing, and in this context the failure of the Commissioner of the RCMP to take disciplinary action where such action was clearly warranted, undermines that fundamental respect for the rule of law which is so important in Canada.

The McDonald Commission documented a whole series of wrongdoings, whether illegal mail-opening, illegal access to government records, income tax files and other government records, illegal access to medical records, kidnappings, post office and barn burning. The list went on and on. What this Bill would condone is a process whereby if individuals who were wronged by actions of the RCMP, similar to those unfortunate reprehensible actions, made complaints, went to the public complaints Commissioner tomorrow and that commission reviewed the evidence, came to the conclusion, as did the McDonald commission that the complaints were well founded, the commission would have no power to do anything about it. What the commission would then do would be to turn the matter over to the Commissioner of the RCMP. They would say, "Here you are, Mr. Commissioner. We believe the law was broken. We believe there was misconduct and we believe there should be discipline". The Commissioner of the RCMP can say, "Thank you very much, but forget it. I do not intend to implement your recommendation". That is precisely what this Commissioner did when he received evidence of wrongdoing previously. He was asked to review evidence for the possibility of disciplinary action. He reviewed the evidence and said, "Forget it. There will be no disciplinary action whatsover".

I know constituents of all Members of Parliament, including our distinguished Speaker, share the concerns that the rule of law must be obeyed. I hope he will share the concern that this Bill undermines this fundamental principle. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has pointed out, in some cases those who were involved in this wrongdoing, far from being disciplined, were promoted. Once again, that is unacceptable.

I would strongly urge the Government to reconsider this provision and to provide, as the Attorney General for Saskatchewan, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and others have recommended, that the final decision with respect to discipline be in the hands not of the Commissioner of the RCMP but of the Public Complaints Commission itself.

I refer as well in this context to a letter which was written by Clay Ruby, a very distinguished and outstanding Canadian lawyer who, in referring to the previous Bill, said the Government's Bill:

> —leaves the final decision on a complaint by a member of the public against a member of the RCMP to be decided by the RCMP itself. The independent commission of inquiry can be ignored by the RCMP. Based on their track record of ignoring ministerial directives, the law of the land, the Criminal Code and standards of ordinary decency, this does not give one much room for hopeful expectations.

> When will politicians understand that the public is no longer prepared to accept that it is proper, fair or just for a police force to investigate itself and make decisions about what disciplinary action to follow from its own misdeeds?

I think Mr. Ruby puts it very well, and I wholly support the concerns which he raised.

My final point in this particular area concerns the nature of complaints which can be investigated by the Public Complaints Commission. My colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), touched on this issue yesterday. Before the previous Government got cold feet on this question, it introduced Bill C-19 in 1978. Both in that Bill and in the report of the Marin Commission there was a recommendation that the Public Complaints Commission should have the power not only to investigate individual complaints by members of the pubic with respect to individual acts of wrongdoing, but a broader power to investigate matters of general concern, allegations of general wrongdoing or questions about RCMP policy. That was the strong recommendation of the Marin Commission in 1976, and it was contained in a predecessor Bill. As it stands now, the Bill would allow a complaint only with respect to the conduct of any member or other person appointed or employed under the authority of the Act. I suggest that that is far too narrow. If there is a concern on the part of a man or woman anywhere in Canada with respect to RCMP policies or administrative matters, he or she should have the right to bring that concern before the Public Complaints Commission.

The next major area in the Bill is the one which deals with discipline and demotion. The major representations made in this area were those made by the Association of 17 Divisions. I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words about that association. I believe that its 2,500 or 2,700 members are very well represented, and I believe that its fundamental objective, which is to accord collective bargaining rights to members of the RCMP, is one that the House should in fact support. This Bill does not remove the impediments in the Public Service Staff Relations Act to the right to full and free collective bargaining on the part of members of the RCMP. The history of the response of senior officers within the RCMP, indeed the Commissioner, to the Association of 17 Divisions is not a particularly happy one. As far back as 1980, the Commissioner of the RCMP sent out a directive indicating the position of the force with respect to that association—"do not recognize it either positively or negatively".

The RCMP is the only major police force in North America which does not have the right to collective bargaining. I emphasize that we are not talking about the right to strike. The Association of 17 Divisions made very clear that it was not seeking the right to strike. Surely we should recognize in this day and age the right of members of the RCMP, under the provisions of the Charter of Rights which accord freedom of information, to collective bargaining on issues of concern to those members, issues of concern such as pay and working conditions. The fundamental right to full and free collective bargaining continues to be denied to members of the force. In effect there is a staff relations representative system, but that so-called Div. Rep system has not worked well at all. It is perceived by many to be too closely aligned to management within the RCMP. The reality is that one divisional representative under the present scheme has to speak for some 800 to 1,000 constables, NCOs and certain civilian personnel. Quite simply, he cannot deal with the many complaints about transfers and so on with which a union such as the Association of 17 Divisions could deal.

I should like to note a couple of the successes of the Association of 17 Divisions. It was thanks to the work of that association in a court case in British Columbia, the Husted case, that members of the RCMP who were up on internal disciplinary proceedings within the RCMP were given the right to counsel. It was not until the association intervened that they got that basic right to counsel. In fact, after that, a superintendent in Vancouver went on to say that a ruling may have been won with respect to two officers but that in all fairness the accused should not get the benefits of counsel which had previously been denied to others. I do not think we should pursue that logic too far. Unfortunately it is a mentality which is a little too prevalent within the RCMP hierarchy.

The second major victory of the association was with respect to pay. The previous Government brought forward a pay package which was to take effect four months after the expiry of the previous pay package. Members of the RCMP right across Canada voiced their outrage or their sense of betrayal that the previous Government was prepared to allow three months to go by without any form of pay increase whatsoever. It was only when that association intervened very forcefully right across the country that the previous Government backed down on the decision to deny retroactive pay to members of the force. It left a bitter taste in the mouths of many members. Unfortunately it demonstrates that without full bargaining rights that kind of thing could happen tomorrow, that members of the force are still at the whim of the Government. The association speaks with a voice which should be heeded by the Government and the committee which will study the Bill.

The provisions with respect to discipline contain a number of areas which we will want to consider closely in the course of this debate. For example, an informal disciplinary action can be taken against a member, that is, a recommendation for transfer can be imposed without recourse by management to the elaborate hearing and adjudication procedures set out in the Bill. Obviously a recommendation for transfer can constitute a punitive action which is in some cases greater than an actual breach of discipline. A member could be required to sell his home, incurring substantial financial loss.

The Hon. Member for York South-Weston spoke of a number of concerns yesterday, for example, the concern that under the provisions for discharge and demotion there were procedural inadequacies. Also there is a concern that under the grievance procedure the Commissioner is the final and binding authority, subject to review under the Federal Court Act. Both the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and the Association of 17 Divisions are of the strong view that if a grievance deals with dismissal, suspension, financial penalty or questions of basic policy, it should be subject to review, if not by the external review committee, then certainly by the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

I am pleased to note that the concern with respect to the membership of the external review committee is one which the committee will be addressing. The previous Bill provided that there had to be three members in the internal review process, and this Bill goes on to provide that one of those members should have legal training. That is a good recommendation. However, we agree as well that no member of the force, or person who has ever served on the force, should be entitled to be a member of this external review committee in order that it be seen to be completely independent. I also support the provision for a time limit with respect to decisions on grievances as was suggested by the Association of 17 Divisions.

The protection against possible future incrimination with respect to statements made in the course of investigations should apply to pre-existing criminal charges or disciplinary proceedings. As the Bill now stands, it does not do so. I suggest that that is a serious flaw in the Bill which may very well run counter to the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The question of whether or not compelled testimony can be used in future disciplinary proceedings is one which was raised as well in the course of the Senate Committee hearings and is one with which the legislative committee will want to deal carefully. As well, I have noted the question of pay and allowances. I believe that in the absence of some form of collective bargaining—and I believe there should be full collective bargaining for members of the force—there should be a formula incorporated into regulations to ensure that the RCMP do not fall behind other police forces in Canada with respect to pay and benefits.

I emphasize that we do recognize that this Bill does constitute a significant step forward. The present provisions for dealing with public complaints, grievances and discipline are inadequate. However, I hope the Government will be prepared to heed the representations which have been made by the Civil Liberties Association, the Association of 17 Divisions, Attorneys General and other concerned Canadians and give this Bill the teeth that are lacking in it so far. More important, I hope that it will give this process the integrity and appearance of integrity and independence which is so important in this essential area.

SEEDS ACT
CANADA GRAIN ACT

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-64, and Act to amend the Seeds Act and the Canada Grain Act be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendments with respect to the Seeds Act contained in this Bill which was introduced in the House of Commons today, Bill C-64, are obviously long overdue. I welcome this opportunity to outline them to my colleagues in the House and I welcome the opportunity to discuss them in brief form.

The Bill will benefit Canada's important seed growing industry and will further enhance the country's already enviable reputation as a reliable supplier of quality grain. It will help to ensure that farmers get what they pay for and that the owners of seed varieties are in a fair competitive position.

A great deal has happened in the seed growing industry since the last time any major amendments were made to the Seeds Act in this House back in 1959. The industry has doubled in size during the past eight years both in terms of acreage and of authorized establishments. It generates about $350 million in sales annually including domestic and export markets.

Perhaps the most significant change in recent years has been the trend toward privatization of variety ownership. It is a healthy trend and certainly one in keeping with the Government's main thrust and policies. We must continue to support this trend if we are to maintain a quality seed growing industry and a good reputation with our export customers.

This Bill proposes several amendments to the Seeds Act, the most important ones dealing with matters arising out of the privatization trend. Before going into detail, I would like to point out that extensive consultations have been held with all provincial Governments and with all major associations whose members will be affected by this Bill. These groups include the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, the board of which contains representatives from every provincial Government; the Canadian Seed Trade Association; SeCan; and the Canadian Horticultural Council. Our recommendations are well known, well understood and indeed widely accepted.

The most significant provision in the Bill is one to establish more specific regulations for the advertising of seed varieties. I understand that my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), may have some concerns with reference to this particular amendment to the Bill. As he knows, this is a Bill which we are not moving through the House in all stages today. It will simply be moved from here to the Standing Committee on Agriculture. I know that that is the appropriate place for discussions of that kind to take place. I know from experience that this Government has utilized that opportunity and made that committee work. Indeed, we have accepted amendments at committee stage before and it might well be the case that, upon evidence submitted by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin, we can clarify or resolve this concern that has been expressed to me.

For some years now, the seed associations have been expressing concern about distorted or even false advertising of so-called varieties. Their interest is understandable because the owners of pedigreed seed have worked hard to acquire registration and deserve protection against those who use variety names to advertise unlicensed seed. In addition, farmers should not have to worry about whether the seeds they are buying are in fact as advertised. This Bill will halt false or distorted advertising practices by providing for the disclosure of certain information when seed is advertised and by prohibiting the use of variety names when seed is not pedigreed.

Tied to this are provisions in the Bill to raise significantly the penalty for violating the Act. The maximum penalty will be raised from $2,000 to some $25,000. This new level is a more effective deterrent and I believe more accurately reflects the seriousness with which we regard violations under this Act. We also intend, through the Act, to extend the time period for instituting procedures by way of summary conviction. This will allow more time for proper investigation of complaints and for the initiation of legal proceedings.

The House will note the provision in the Bill of a registration system for crop varieties to replace the present system of prescription. The current administrative procedure which has been in effect since the last amendment in 1959 requires a ministerial order process, and that makes it nearly impossible to keep our list of varieties amended on a day-to-day basis. The proposed registration system will provide for daily amendments to the registry of varieties.

I would also like to highlight a new bonding provision in this Bill. My Department finds that it is frequently necessary to impose bonding requirements on seeds imported into this country and it is a measure by which we ensure that imported seeds meet our requirements. Currently the Government enforces these bonding provisions through the Customs Act which creates some administrative difficulties in my Department. This Bill will provide bonding authority under the Seeds Act.

The remaining provisions of the Bill are relatively minor but are necessary measures for the tightening and updating of the Seeds Act. I will outline them briefly this morning for the benefit of my colleagues.

A provision to modify the definition of the term "sell" in the Act allows for the coverage of contractual agreements. This is recognition of the fact contractual agreements often occur between seed growers and seed companies.

• (1210)

Another provision in the Bill clarifies the role of the Canadian Seed Growers Association in the Act. Members of the House may know that this fine organization has formal responsibility under the Act for the certification of all seed stocks in Canada, except potato and tree seeds.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks, the provisions contained in this Bill have been required for some time and, therefore, I am anxious to see it passed. I hope all Members of the House will agree that we ought to take every step necessary to protect our fine international reputation as producers of high quality grain. By improving the process for registering seed varieties and by ensuring that farmers are buying legitimate varieties, this Bill will enhance our country's image and build our trade position.

Quality control has been the key to our success in the past and this Bill will help to maintain our high standards. The Food Production and Inspection Branch of my Department is actively involved in quality control through the provision of independent reports on pedigreed seed production.

I am proud too, of the role my Department plays in the development of new seed varieties. Wheat varieties developed by Agriculture Canada account for 90 per cent of Canada's total wheat acreage. I can assure the House that this Government is committed to continued research because we recognize its importance in fostering greater efficiency and improved production. The federal Government, the provinces, seed growers, the suppliers and producers are all partners in the same game. In our common pursuit of quality, we are continually improving crop varieties. That is good business.

Discussions which began back in 1977 with seed associations and provincial Governments have finally culminated in the introduction of this Bill. The industry supports it and I am sure Members of this House will want to do so as well.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Party I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-64, which proposes amendments, in part, to the Seeds Act. We know that while the Bill is an important one it is really a housekeeping Bill and one which wil not raise a major controversy in the House today. I am sure we will not hear the bells ringing for the rest of the afternoon over a major disagreement on the issues at hand as they pertain to the Bill.

However, there are concerns in the agricultural areas which I wish to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, knowing the great interest you have in this subject. The fact is that we seem to be spending a great deal of time discussing agricultural Bills, which is fine; but I really wonder why it is that this Bill was felt by the Government of Canada to be the most urgent as opposed to so many of the other fundamental and important agricultural issues which face our nation at this time. Perhaps in his response the Minister will tell us why it is that we are not dealing today with red meat stabilization legislation or the effects of countervailling duties on our agricultural industry. Perhaps the Minister will tell us why we are not dealing with the fuel tax, since that is the issue the farmers of my constituency want us to talk about. Of course, they feel that the Seeds Act is important. However, if I were to conduct a poll today of the agricultural constituents in my riding and ask them: Since we can deal with only one agricultural Bill today in the House of Commons, do you think we should provide emergency financial assistance to farmers or adopt modifications to the Seeds Act? I am sure that the constituents I represent would feel that the priorities should be somewhat different from those enunciated this morning by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). Since the Minister is here today in the House, I am sure he will undoubtedly use the opportunity to announce other interesting and productive measures for the agricultural industry of Canada. Of course, he is with us and he will have the floor later. I know that being interested in the agricultural industry the way he is he will use that opportunity to maximum benefit. The people of Canada and the farming sector in particular will rejoice.

Mr. Henderson: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Boudria: As the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) has so eloquently put it, I will not hold my breath. Well, we won't. Not because we have doubts as to the good faith of the Minister but because we know that his boss, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), does not have agriculture as one of his major priorities. We know that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have made several commitments, which is a euphemism for campaign promises. They made several commitments to the people of Canada and to the farmers of this country. There was a commitment with respect to modifications to Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, with which I am sure you are familiar, Mr. Speaker. What happened to the doubling of those provisions as proposed by the Finance Committee? We did not hear mention of it in the Budget of the Minister of Finance. No doubt it was simply an oversight on his part. However, if the Minister of Finance can make a change in the Budget to take something away from it, which he did recently, I am sure that he could put something back into it such as assistance for farmers. I know that in his response the Minister will say that, of course, financial assistance has been provided through our enhanced capital gains provisions. That is all very nice, Mr. Speaker. It makes it easier and more attractive for a farmer to get out of the business than it does to stay in it. That is fine if one wishes to retire; but if one wishes to continue farming, then it provides no assistance whatsoever.

I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais), who is whispering in the Minister's ear right now, is telling him how the pork producers of Quebec need assistance. I wish to tell the Parliamentary Secretary that I agree with him when he tells the Minister that because the pork producers of my riding also need assistance. I thank him for his agreement with me. I am reasonably confident that together we will succeed in twisting the arm of the Minister in obtaining assistance. Perhaps all of us could muster up enough arm-twisting strength to twist the arm of the boss of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Finance, who really holds the purse-strings and who, in fact, has the clout which, unfortunately, so many of his Cabinet colleagues do not seem to have.

Perhaps we can also ask the Minister to describe to us another related issue. I am referring to what is happening with the promised dairy policy. It was promised many times. Dates were even promised and then broken.

I see that I have touched a tender nerve, Mr. Speaker, since the Minister is rising to his feet.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the Hon. Member made some reference to the conversation which was taking place between myself and my Parliamentary Secretary, and since he suggested we were talking about hogs, I would like to point out that he is, basically, wrong again. We were just feeling sorry for his constituents.

● (1220)

Mr. Boudria: I was hoping, Mr. Speaker, that at least the Minister of Agriculture was listening to my remarks and was interested in agriculture. I am sorry I gave him that kind of credit and I apologized for having told him that he knew what he was doing. I was wrong. He does not know what he is doing so I apologize to you, Mr. Speaker, profusely for giving the man a compliment which he undoubtedly does not deserve. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I was wrong when I said that he knew about agriculture and was interested in the issue surrounding that industry. Evidently he is not when he thinks that it is not important that we address issues like the massive increases in gasoline prices.

An Hon. Member: They are lower.

Mr. Boudria: Those increases in gasoline prices have a devastating effect on the agricultural industry.

An Hon. Member: They are lower.

Mr. Boudria: But the Minister is not addressing that and he just admitted that that is not what he was talking about to his Parliamentary Secretary, either. Undoubtedly, they are not concerned about those issues. If they were concerned, surely that is what they would have been talking about. And the Minister just admitted that they were not.

There is a well-known chicken producer, Mr. Speaker, whom I know would be interested in that issue, sitting right across from me, namely, the Minsiter of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette), who would be interested in those issues.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I believe Members are not supposed to refer to either the presence or absence of a specific Member in the House.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: I am sure you will want to correct the government Deputy Whip, Mr. Speaker, who should know that although one is not supposed to mention the absence of a Member, what I was referring to is the fact that all Members were present. Surely, Mr. Speaker, you will agree that we all are in this Chamber this morning. That would straighten out that Hon. Member and put her back in order. I am sure you will, the minute you have a chance, Mr. Speaker, correct her and familiarize her with parliamentary procedure in this House. Once she has been here for a little while, perhaps she will be more familiar with it. But although she is here today, perhaps her attendance is irregular, and that is why she is not familiar with procedure. But as she is here now I cannot refer to her absence.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, this is all quite hilarious, but I think we should realize that the issue is a serious one, and I think the Hon. Member should stop joking and perhaps settle down to the subject at hand.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: If the Hon. Member thinks that the subject is serious, Mr. Speaker, perhaps she should stop interrupting those who know something about agriculture—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: —leaving it up to those who do to speak on the issues. Perhaps that would solve the problem. The Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne), I am sure, would be concerned with these issues and she should perhaps treat them more seriously as well. She would know that these issues are very important both in the province she represents and elsewhere.

I am not trying to downgrade the Bill which is in front of us today, but with the economic difficulties suffered in the constituency I represent and other farming constituencies across Canada, one cannot help but wonder if this is not just an act of presence on the part of the Minister to introduce every three or four weeks a token Bill which does not deal with the difficulties of the farming sector and with the vicious attacks perpetrated on that industry by the Minister of Finance in his disastrous Budget, which does not deal with the cut-backs in the economic statement of last November 8 and with the $50 million cuts proposed in the Deputy Prime Minister's so-called review—

Mr. Gauthier: A slashing exercise.

Mr. Boudria: —which is really, of course, a slashing exercise, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) so aptly put it. That is what is wrong. There has not been a meaningful effort on the part of the Government of Canada to deal with agriculture. Every now and then there is a token Bill presented on issues which may or may not be important. We see token Bills introduced which deal with housekeeping issues Bills or which were introduced by the previous Government and which died on the Order Paper. Those kinds of Bills are the ones we see introduced by the Government instead of providing the assistance which it chose to promise to the Canadian people last July and August.

I hope that in the response delivered by the Minister of Agriculture or more probably now by his Parliamentary Secretary, those issues will be addressed and that we will hear statements as to the farm debt crisis, the dairy policy and the drought aid for the West. What is going to happen with the fuel tax? Are there going to be rebates? Has the Minister made representations to the Minister of Finance on behalf of the farmers? Where are we with the red meat stabilization plan at this point in terms of negotiation with various groups? What about bankruptcy legislation and all the other issues with which we should be dealing? That is what I want as well as my colleagues in our Party, and I am sure all Hon. Members of this House want the Minister of Agriculture to address these issues with or without the introduction of the new Seeds Act.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some trepidation in this debate because one of the main things this Bill does is to insert a word into an existing Bill. That word is "quality". So if we are going to have you, Mr. Speaker, interpret the happenings in this House as being out of order unless we are behaving in that manner, I will feel quite insecure about rising. But I have at least had the example of the two previous speakers and I do not feel quite so put upon at the moment because it appears that the order and method of carrying on debate in this House has changed very little as the result of the insertion of the word "quality" into the debate of the day.

That, I think, stresses very much what is happening with these amendments to the Seeds Act, Mr. Speaker. Who can object to the word "quality" being inserted into the Seeds Act?

We now have an Act respecting the testing, inspection, quality and sale of seeds. This is something which seed-growers have requested for some time. They have found themselves somewhat at a loss when looking at advertisements in the farm press or the general press to see seeds being advertised which do not meet the standards of the impression given in the advertisements. Advertisements for seeds which should not carry the designation "registered" have been appearing. No. 1 seed shows up quite regularly. This Act, as I interpret it, the last clause, at least, would require that advertisements of seeds which are not on the variety list would, have to be shown if they were given a designation, to be of the lowest quality for that particular kind of seed whether it be fescue seed or brome grass seed, wheat or whatever. So this does change in a very substantial way the method whereby seed is traded in the farming communities.

Whether the penalties and implementation being proposed here will make the new designations any more enforceable than were the old designations remains to be seen and I will come to that again a little later in my remarks because I have some concerns about the way we are apparently unable to regulate the laws which exist as they apply to seeds in this country. I am going to spend a few moments talking about the semi-dwarf wheat fiasco we went through late last winter and early spring. In the meantime, I would just like to continue with the evaluation and assessment of the words presented to us in this Bill which, other than what I have mentioned to this point, make very few changes.

There is a change to the penalties levied against those found guilty of an offence under the Act. Such offence must be prosecuted within two years of the alleged offence having taken place. In certain circumstances that could be extended to three years. A fairly major change is that the fines have been increased for offences under this Act. Formerly, the maximum fine was $500. That has now been increased to $25,000. The Minister is obviously attempting to bring the penalties up to date and I think this better reflects both the potential harm which can occur if the seed being sold is not what it is purported to be and the necessity for a deterrent for those who may have engaged in shady practices in the past. I suppose it is also in part a reflection of the inflation which has occurred since the last changes to the Seeds Act. I note, however, that the maximum jail penalty has not been changed, it is still two years. For clarification the Minister and the Government felt obliged to say that anyone not paying the fine does not automatically receive a jail sentence. So there have been some changes other than simply paying lip service to the fact that "quality" will now be part of the Act.

As well, there have been some slight changes to the definition of "sell". Previous to this Bill the Act gave only a short description of what selling seed was. That definition has been broadened to include "agree to sell or keep, transit, send, convey, deliver for sale or agree to exchange". All of those categories are now within the ambit of the Act and, hopefully, will make possible better control over the advertising and marketing of seed products in this country.

The move to present the Canadian Seed Growers Association with some more responsibilities and powers is, I think, acceptable to most farmers. The exact extent of those powers and responsibilities is still not fully understood by all sides, but I think the committee is the place to investigate that further and I am prepared to pursue that when we get to committee.

There are some questions which have not been answered by these proposed amendments to the Act which I think are pertinent. I would have preferred that the Minister address these questions along with these amendments and I am sorry that he chose to introduce fairly limited amendments, thereby avoiding some of the larger issues surrounding the production and sale of seeds. In reinserting the issue of quality into the Act the Government is just bringing it up to date with what the seed growers have been trying to achieve over a number of years. They have always attempted to produce high quality seeds and maintain the highest possible standards for registration and grading. However, that raises some very pertinent questions given the cut-backs announced in the Budget last spring. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, cut-backs were announced in the area of the monitoring of seeds, establishing seed laboratories to test for germination and purity and to do quality control work. It seems a little ludicrous to insert the word "quality" into the system at the same time as the money which is used to maintain the system is being reduced. How are we going to maintain this quality that the Minister so proudly includes in the new title of his Act if the money and laboratories and personnel charged with maintaining that quality have been reduced? This question was not referred to by the Minister but I think he will have to give answers to the members of the committee when the Bill gets to that stage. How can grass seed producers in the Peace River area be certain of getting adequate tests on time if they have to rely on the private sector to build up gradually the expertise and equipment when they know that the process takes three or four years? How is the quality of a specific seed going to be maintained during a period of cut-backs when the procedures are not available quickly and consistently? It does not help a seed producer very much if he has to wait months for a purity or germination test. If he has a bunch of product waiting to be cleaned and there is some doubt about whether the germination or purity standards will be met, then he is going to be reluctant to go to the extra expense of cleaning it, bagging it and putting on the various tags and seals. Before they do that they have to clean a small sample and send it away to have these various tests done to see whether the binful from the field is of a quality that would warrant this being done. These kinds of questions have not been answered by the simple step of putting the word "quality" into the Act.

As well, I was a little unhappy that the Minister did not address the question of how we handle the unlicensed semi-dwarf wheats which are being grown in this country. They were never licensed to be grown here; they were imported illegally, on the surface at least. While the Minister had the Act open I would have thought he would attempt to do away with the shortcomings in the law which have permitted the illegal importation of varieties which are not visibly different from the higher quality wheat that we grow in this country.

Canadian wheat is of the highest standard in the world. We make sales because of that reputation. We make sales to countries which are self-sufficient in wheat but need a stronger wheat to mix with their domestic varieties because theirs will not produce a good, consistent loaf of bread. Our reputation has kept Canadian wheat selling in world markets when the rest of the wheat-producing countries have found their granaries to be full before the new crop is harvested. Europe and the United States are sitting on huge surpluses, but we have been able to dispose of our wheat, in large part, because of the extremely good quality which we have maintained for that exportable product.

American plant breeders have not tried to produce these lower quality unlicensed semi-dwarf wheats in a way which will make them visibly different from our high quality bread wheats. Canadian plant breeders have a consistent and long-standing policy of ensuring that higher yielding but lower quality wheat is visibly different than higher quality wheats. We have licensed the semi-dwarf wheats which have higher yields than our hard red spring wheats which are of a higher quality, but one can see the difference because some of the kernels are of a lighter or white colour.

The Americans have been producing varieties that cannot be licensed in Canada because they are visually indistinguishable from our high quality wheat. Farmers have been bringing this wheat across our big undefended border. It is apparently very simple for them to bring it across. There is no provision in the Seed Act or in the Canada Grains Act to inspect or stop those grains which will be affected. Although the Minister has the Act open, he is not making any such proposals. Instead, the Minister of State for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) decided, almost on his own, but apparently with the approval of the Government, to change very effectively our whole quality system of wheat and grain production by sending a message to the farmers that it is okay to grow these unlicensed varieties. That is not acceptable in a parliamentary system. In the legal sense it is a very questionable process, but, what is more important for the farmers on the land, it puts our whole export potential in jeopardy.

About 80 per cent of the grains produced in western Canada are exported and a big portion of those grains consists of wheat. I pointed out earlier in my remarks that the sale of that wheat depends on the customer's understanding of the very high standard which we have. For the Minister to change those standards in a very derogatory was is a terrible thing for Canada's farmers. It is not maintaining the high quality that Canadian farmers expect and are used to. It denigrates the effort that we are trying to make through the Seeds Act to reintroduce quality.

The Minister should study this Act and consider ways to introduce quality into the export of wheat from this country. While preparing legislation which would include quality he should have kept the question of unlicensed semi-dwarf wheat in mind, addressed it in a realistic way, and presented proposals to the House of Commons so that the people of Canada would have a chance to comment on it. The Minister has abrogated his responsibilities. He has decided to work around the law and tell the farmers that it is all right to grow an unlicensed wheat which has never had the sanction of Canadian quality standards. You may think that this is a small thing and that it will all work out in the end, that the grain handling system will figure out a way to look after the problem, but how can it do so in a realistic way?

Consider the elevator agent who is the first in line receiving grain when it comes to market. A farmer can come in with a fine looking load of wheat and not say what variety it is. The elevator agent looks at it and says that it looks like a No. 1. The farmer has decided not to say anything even though he knows it is an unlicensed semi-dwarf wheat. Who can stop it? Chemical and baking tests will be made at the terminal elevator and that truckload may be caught there, but by that stage no one will know who delivered that grain. The elevator company which attempted to move it through the terminal system will be penalized because that grain will not be worth as much as was paid for it. They will have to find a market for that product now identified as being inferior. But what was there, in the initial stages, to keep that producer from accepting a higher price and higher grade on the understanding that it was high quality wheat? I submit there is nothing.

Given the current economic pressure that farmers are under—

Mr. Wise: Farmers are honest.

Mr. Althouse: The Minister says that farmers are honest. I agree with that but that is the point I am getting to now.

Mr. Wise: You are saying that they are not.

Mr. Althouse: I am saying that, given the economic pressure that farmers are under now, if they have the opportunity of getting an extra 60 cents a bushel by saying nothing, most of them are going to slough the honesty question aside and say nothing.

Mr. Wise: Are you saying we should remove the right for them to grow semi-dwarf?

Mr. Althouse: I am saying that the Minister should be looking at—

Mr. Wise: If so, what would be the economic impact?

Mr. Althouse: The economic impact that the Minister raises would not be very large. He has licence HY-320, which is virtually as good as the ones that you cannot distinguish. HY-320 has white wheats in it. You can tell visually that it is a lower quality wheat because of the colour constraints. The market for those lower quality wheats can be met by HY-320. HY-320 does have a higher yield than the higher quality but higher priced regular wheats. There is no constraint in that case since HY-320 has been licensed, is legitimate and visibly distinguishable for farmers. However, to persist in permitting the illegal and unlicensed varieties which have never been sanctioned by the seed trade, the Department of Agriculture or the grains people in this country smacks of ineptitude. I believe the Government should have taken a much harder line on this issue and been much more honest with the farmers of the country with respect to the economic impact.

Many false figures were published last spring which indicated that there might be 20 per cent or 30 per cent of the wheats seeded to these particular unlicensed varieties. The Minister decided to be lenient with the farmers. The first figures that were released toward the end of the crop year and the beginning of the next crop year claimed that 20 per cent of farmers produced unlicensed wheats. However, when the figures were recalculated it was discovered that rather than 20 per cent, it was one-twentieth or 5 per cent rather than one-fifth. There was some expert juggling among some of those who supply information which I believe has created the kind of response given by the Minister.

I believe the ministries were misinformed as to the extent of the unlicensed varieties that were going to be seeded. I think they could have been much more firm and said that they do not sanction the seeding of these varieties because of the great impact not only this year but next year and the following year. Even if we tried to eliminate those varieties tomorrow, now that they have been expanded to such an extent in this crop year they will be coming through the system for years to come. They can be stored in granaries until they are no longer scrutinized. They can be blended with other higher quality grains which will make them very difficult to find. I believe we have left a bad mark on the reputation of Canada as a supplier of high quality wheat.

I admire the Minister for attempting to increase the quality standards of the Canada Seeds Act but I wish that, while he was trying to increase the quality of Canada seeds, he had addressed more directly and properly the problem of unlicensed semi-dwarf wheats that have been coming into this country illegally from the United States and elsewhere. It has become a blot against our reputation as a supplier of high quality red baking wheats in the world.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity this morning to take part in the debate on this legislation and express my support for Bill C-64, which will soon be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture, where we hope to hear from the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), who tends to rattle off what he has to say in two and a half minutes here in the House but is never around to discuss the substance of a particular topic. Unfortunately, he is much too busy to attend committees of the House. That is too bad, because committees are often ideal for discussing legislation and making improvements, in this case, for the benefit of the Canadian public and the Canadian farm producers he is always referring to.

Mr. Speaker, in a number of ways this Bill is particularly significant for the seed industry here in Canada.

[English]

Pedigreed seed is the vehicle for transmitting the benefits of plant breeding research to the producer. That is why it is so important to guarantee that the farmer actually receives the product he assumes he is buying.

[Translation]

Under the present system in this country, it is very important, and has been for years, to safeguard the interests for the public and our producers.

The commercial seed industry, Mr. Speaker, generates $315 million in sales annually in this country alone, and forms the basis for Canada's grain industry, which exports surpluses with over $4 billion annually, while Canadian seed grain exports also represent some $50 million per year.

[English]

Without question, seeds are the single most important farm input. Without the proper seed planted at the right time, the impact of all other farm inputs—pesticides and fertilizers, for example—would be greatly diminished.

The last major changes to the Seeds Act were made in 1959 and a great deal has occurred in the seed growing industry since then. The legislation before us today has been in the works for several years, since 1977 as a matter of fact, and I commend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) for taking the initiative to finally bring it forward. I think it is very important.

The Government of Canada has been involved in the regulation and control of seed varieties for the past 80 years. When our involvement began in 1905, the main objective was to control the sale of low vitality seeds, or seeds containing harmful weeds. In subsequent years, as the seed industry developped, the Act was amended to include a grading system for seed quality, a licensing system for crop varieties and labelling requirments that help the buyer to identify quality seeds.

[Translation]

Since major amendments were made to the Bill in 1959—

[English]

—the seed growing industry has undergone a number of important changes. It has grown dramatically and, as the Minister pointed out in his remarks, there has been increasing involvement by the private sector in plant breeding and ownership.

One of the key elements of this Bill is that it will provide greater authority under the Seeds Act to protect against false advertising and to strengthen the seed licensing system. This is an especially important initiative in view of the Minister's stated intention to bring forward plant breeders' rights legislation in the near future.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Seeds Act being examined today will ensure that further privatization can proceed. In this way, there will be proper regulation and control of the quality and sale of seeds in this country. By making the—

FISHERIES

RECOMMENDATION TO ENLARGE HERRING QUOTA

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, herring stocks have proved to be plentiful this fall in northwestern New Brunswick.

In fact the quota allowed by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) was caught within five days. Reaching the quota in so little time does show that herring stocks in the gulf are huge.

The fishing industry is now asking that the quota be raised so that fishing might continue. The industry has been unable to meet the market demand and is afraid of losing its foreign markets if it cannot fill its orders.

Given the high unemployment rate in the fishing communities of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, I urge the Minister to raise the quota immediately.

Undoubtedly the Minister is aware of the fact that this fish quota allocated to all New Brunswick fishermen has been caught only by fishermen from the northeast region.

Unfortunately the fishermen from the southeast region did not have an opportunity to take part in fishing because herring stocks had not yet reached the strait of Northumberland.

I would therefore urge the Minister to allocate a separate quota to fishermen of the southeast region so that, in the future, southeastern New Brunswick fishermen will be sure to take part in herring fishing.

LABOUR

RECOMMENDATION TO POSTPONE DATE FOR CLOSURE OF GULF REFINERY IN EAST MONTREAL

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to speak in my capacity as chairperson of the special committee established to make a study concerning the Eastern Montreal Gulf refinery located in my riding; this committee was struck by the Quebec caucus.

Considering the situation of the workers, Mr. Speaker, I would therefore ask the House and the Minister responsible to open discussions immediately with the owners of the Eastern Montreal Gulf refinery with a view to putting off any action and delaying the shutdown of the refinery until May 1986. Mr. Speaker, we hope that such a delay will enable prospective buyers to make their move and that our Government will find a solution.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF WINNIPEG LAY-OFFS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who watch television have been unable to avoid the slick ads appearing almost every day telling us what a great company CPR is, how it is involved in every aspect of Canadian life, how eager it is to serve the needs of the Canadian people, and how its employees are all part of one big family who just love to work for the C.P.R. Those ads would make hundreds of CPR employees laugh if recent decisions of the CPR were not having such adverse effects on them.

CPR has announced lay-offs in its Weston shops in Winnipeg, affecting some employees who have worked for the CPR for almost 30 years. Similarly thousands of CPR employees have been laid off from one end of Canada to the other in recent years.

CPR employees remember the promises made by the former Liberal Transport Minister who, along with the CPR and the CNR, assured the people of Canada that if only Parliament passed the legislation, which they brought forward wiping out the Crow rate agreement, thousands of new jobs would be provided.

In the same vein, when the new diesel shop was opened in Winnipeg by the CPR the former Minister assured people that 200 to 300 jobs would be created. Those of us who questioned the extravagant claims of the then Government and the railways were laughed at. Unfortunately, the concerns we expressed were only too true. In fact we were not tough enough in our criticisms.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF FOOTWEAR IMPORTS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Once again, Mr. Speaker, I am bringing to the Government's attention the plight of the Canadian footwear industry which is desperately trying to stay in business in the face of unfair competition from off shore countries.

The Canadian footwear industry has been constant in its endeavours to secure a realistic limit on imports of footwear from other countries. It is not asking for the moon. It is not asking that imports be eliminated. What it is asking could not be more fair. It is that the Government limit imports to 50 per cent of the domestic market. The removal of footwear quotas would sound the death knell for the industry as well as cause the loss of 20,000 jobs.

Not only would the removal of the quotas result in lost jobs, but there would be the added burden on UIC and welfare, not to mention lost taxes at all levels of Government.

The extension of quotas on footwear imports for five years at 50 per cent of the Canadian market would create at least 6,000 new jobs, a positive shot in the arm for our economy. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Government to address itself to this problem in a positive way.

AGRICULTURE

RECOMMENDATION THAT ONTARIO BE DECLARED BRUCELLOSIS FREE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, earlier this year, Quebec was declared brucellosis free. Although this is very good news and Quebec farmers are pleased, Ontario unfortunately was not so designated, which has created a major problem between Eastern Ontario and Quebec, especially in connection with the livestock trade.

In fact, today it is harder for a livestock trader in my riding to sell to Quebec than to the United States.

Since Ontario has had no cases of brucellosis for more than a year, I would urge the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to have Ontario declared brucellosis free immediately. Further delay will cause inconvenience and mean additional expenses for farmers and livestock traders in my riding and throughout Eastern Ontario.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8 ICEBREAKER—SUPPORT SOUGHT FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA SHIPYARDS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, all Members applauded the announcement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) on Tuesday asserting Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic and that part of this affirmation would be the construction of a Polar 8 icebreaker which could provide a continuous Canadian presence in our Arctic waters.

Today I would like to state the interests of British Columbia shipbuilders in the construction of this half a billion dollar vessel. As we well know, British Columbia shipyards, in their expertise and experience in the building of major icebrakers, are second in the world, second only to Finland, and have recently formed a consortium to bid, internationally, for building such icebreakers.

Let me say as well, and I am sure my Quebec colleagues, upon reflection, would have to agree, that if the construction of this icebreaker takes place in British Columbia, shared between North Vancouver and Victoria, substantial economic benefits will still accrue to central Canada, particularly to Quebec, which will supply much of the materials and components.

However, to construct the icebreaker in British Columbia would enable the West to share in these substantial benefits. So I urge my colleagues, given comparable costs, that in the interest of fairness for all Canadians, and to enable all parts of the country to benefit from this major project, they should to support a proposal from British Columbia shipbuilders to lead this project of such significance to Canada's sovereignty in the Arctic.

FORESTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE—THREAT TO LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the forest industry in Canada faces a crisis as a result of the failure of the Mulroney Government to inform consumers and users of wood products in the United States properly about the implications of the Gibbons Bill now before the U.S. Congress.

This protectionist legislation, now supported by three-quarters of Congress, is likely to move forward in a matter of weeks. Within the Bill is a removal rights clause which will effectively change the rules of the game and allow the United States to place tariff walls and countervailing duties against our forest products.

Forestry is Canada's largest industry and largest source of balance of trade. One Canadian in ten relies on forestry for employment.

The Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) gutted Canada's strong position at a meeting with the Congressional subcommittee on trade in Vancouver a month ago and has compounded this with further written criticism to Congress this week.

Surely with the United States moves on hogs and fish the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has awakened to the economic guillotine raised by the Gibbons Bill. I trust he will be making a statement in this House on actions he is taking to remedy the U.S. proposal and to prepare a survival plan for the 300 forest based communities that are at risk should the Gibbons Bill become law.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BRITISH COLUMBIA FOREST FIRE-FIGHTERS—EXTENSION OF COVERAGE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, during the summer recess of the House, Kootenay West was hit very hard by forest fires. Other ridings were similarly affected, although not all as severely as mine. As a result of this long hot summer, over 10,000 people were temporarily employed by the Province of B.C. to combat these fires. They worked hard and long and, at times, in serious danger. However, they were the unfortunate victims of a provision in the Unemployment Insurance Act which denied UIC coverage to temporary provincial governemnt employees working in a disaster situation.

In the remarkably short period of less than 30 days, the Cabinet responded to my urgent request that the UIC Act be amended to provide UIC coverage to forest fire-fighters.

• (1410)

There are those critics who suggest that to provide this UIC coverage to fire-fighters is to invite arson by those who would seek to generate their own employment by starting a forest fire. To my knowledge there were only two cases of arson involved in all the hundreds of forest fires this summer in British Columbia. I have more faith in my fellow Canadians than to believe that the change in the Act invites arson. Therefore, at this time I should like to express my appreciation, and the appreciation of fire-fighters to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), the then Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty), and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser)—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY

RECOMMENDATION TO INCREASE FUNDS FOR LOW-INCOME FAMILIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Canadian families are increasingly at a loss to understand the attitude of the Prime Minister and Conservative Members. Most of them wonder why families with children should give up $56 million in family assistance programs, when the Government has no trouble finding one billion to help people with deposits in excess of $60,000 in a bank that is in difficulty.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Conservative Members realize that low-income families, . . . even if the child tax credit is increased during this particular time and I am referring to the back-to-school season, most spouses need the family allowance cheque every month to buy school supplies and to pay for their children's recreation and extracurricular activities, so that children of poor families do not feel left out when they compare notes with children from families with average incomes.

Mr. Speaker, in the first year, that is 1986, the result of the Government's decision will be to reduce the family allowance by $22. Hon. Members here may think $22 is not much over one year, but most of these families need this money for their children.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore urge all Members of this House to ask the Prime Minister to establish a policy on the family, not by reducing spending on improving the quality of life but by increasing amounts available for improving the quality of life of families with children.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

CONDUCT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, among the many justifiable expectations the Canadian people have of their Members of Parliament is that we shall be competent, conscientious and courteous in the manner in which we conduct ourselves as their elected representatives. It is an unfortunate though largely unavoidable fact that many Canadians can only judge whether or not their expectations are being met by what they see during Question Period.

During this past spring and summer I received more negative comments concerning the conduct of Members during Question Period than on any other issue or topic. Indeed, the general consensus of opinion was that the cynical laughter, the pejorative mutterings, and the overt and often entirely irrelevant one-upmanship were more in keeping with immature school children still wrestling with their developing egos, than with competent representatives consciously grappling with weighty matters of state.

It is of utmost importance that we remember who we are, where we are, and why we are here. Therefore I call upon all Hon. Members, myself included, to conduct ourselves in a manner becoming our privileges and responsibilities as Members of Parliament. I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to exercise the full weight of your authority to deal quickly and firmly with any Members violating the letter and spirit of the rules of the House, so that Canadians can be justifiably proud of their institution and their representatives.

AGRICULTURE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE—LEVY ON HOG EXPORTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, for years Canada and the United States have had virtual free trade in red meats. Imports by Canada of U.S. pork have at times amounted to between 14 per cent and 15 per cent of our pork consumption. While Canadian producers perceived the imports as reducing their price and market opportunities, they did not move to stop them even though subsidized corn was used in their production.

Now the situation is reversed and Canadian hog producers are stunned and confused by the signals being sent by the Americans who, when faced with less than 3 per cent of their market being filled by Canadian pork, moved quickly to file a countervail of 5.5 cents per pound against Canadian products. After spending several millions of dollars fighting the levy, Canadian pork producers succeeded in getting a partial lifting of the countervail on processed products, but it is still in effect on live hogs.

United States pork prices have not been changed by the levy. Canadian producers have suffered a general price decline of 5 cents or 6 cents per pound. If our two countries are serious about furthering free trade, then both countries must be involved in solving these trade disputes. Leaving that power with the International Trade Commission of the United States Department of Commerce does not provide any appearance of fair dealing on sensitive issues involving producers in the two countries. Such powers have to be shifted to a bilateral body if the current laudable efforts toward open and honest trade are to be continued. Failure to establish such an international body makes further free trade talks pointless until we can make the existing agreements work.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—REQUEST FOR LIST OF DEPOSITORS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Government will be proposing a Bill to reimburse depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank to the tune of about $1 billion. These depositors were persuaded to invest or leave their money with the bank because they were misled by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance. Yet the Minister, yesterday, refused me and Parliament the list of depositors at all relevant dates.

Before the Prime Minister brings in a Bill to rescue those depositors, would he guarantee and undertake to give us a full list of depositors in the Bank at all relevant dates?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have been asking from the beginning for a parliamentary committee to examine all the facts that the law allows. As soon as that committee is up and working, all the relevant information which we think Canadians should have, and which the Opposition thinks Canadians should have, will be available to the Canadian people.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Parliament sitting, as a whole, is larger than any committee, and the question is perfectly relevant here on the floor of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DELAY IN APPOINTING EXPERT INVESTIGATOR

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct one more question to the Minister of Finance.

Why did the Government wait until July to ask George Hitchman to evaluate the assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank? Why did it commit tens of thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money before knowing the facts?

Why did it wait three months before retaining the services of a professional expert to evaluate the Bank?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already explained to the House that we took appropriate steps through the spring and in the summer to protect taxpayers and the integrity of the banking system in the country. In the 16 years that that Party sitting over there was in office, it never made one single move, not one, to change the supervisory structure of the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: And no banks collapsed, either.

Mrs. McDougall: They brought in, through three former Finance Ministers sitting over there, revisions to the Bank Act. There was the trust company event in 1982 and 58 new foreign banks, and they never made one move, one move, to help protect those institutions and Canadian depositors.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE RESIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance do not seem to understand. Here is what happened. In March there had been no evaluation of the assets of the bank. The bail-out was brought before Parliament. No monitoring was done. Finally, in July, four months later, an analysis was ordered to be undertaken by George Hitchman, and it was only upon receiving that report that the Government knew where it stood.

A third of the loans of that bank in March were sour; that is why the assets were not valid. The banks were sucked in; Parliament was conned; pension funds were destroyed; and schoolboards and municipalities were left holding the bag. I ask the Minister of Finance whether in the circumstances the only honourable course for him is to resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is getting a little carried away with his own rhetoric. What I would suggest to him is that if he has all this information—and some of the statements which he just made are patently false—let's get the matter into committee where the complex questions surrounding—

An Hon. Member: Do it here.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I hear the Hon. Member saying: "Do it here". Mr. Speaker, you know, I know, and I think Hon. Members know that this matter is an extremely complex one. They are asking for long lists of depositors, which amount to thousands of people.

Mr. Ouellet: Table them.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We are saying that that should be the subject matter of a committee review and a subsequent report.

CONFIRMATION OF BANK'S ASSETS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. On March 25 the Minister said that the Canadian Commercial Bank bail-out was based in part on an on-site assessment of assets. We now learn that the $255 million price tag was provided by the bank itself and that there was no confirmation of bank assets until mid-August. Will the Minister tell the House why she waited so long to confirm the bank's figures?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Inspector General was looking at the bank during the spring. We were monitoring the funding side. We were attempting to get directors for the bank. We took consistent steps throughout the spring, something that that Party never did, for its supervisors.

BANK'S VIABILITY—MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the same Minister. Depositors were encouraged to keep their money in the bank by the Minister's statements. Why did the Minister keep saying that the bank was viable when she really did not know or have evidence to support that?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, based on the information that we had, that bank was viable at that time. When we were faced with a situation of the bank not being viable, rather than waffling and not dealing with the issue like the former Government, we did deal with it and we did take the necessary action.

NORTHLAND BANK—ACTIONS OF ROYAL BANK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. When the Minister of State first found out that the Royal Bank was raiding customers of the struggling Northland Bank, what did she do about it?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I spoke with the president of the Royal Bank of Canada today. He has assured me that that story is categorically wrong and he will be issuing a press release which will indicate exactly what his instructions were to his bank.

WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS BY ROYAL BANK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the same bank, when the Minister found out that the Royal Bank, the biggest bank in Canada and the largest private participant in the Canadian Commercial bail-out package, was withdrawing deposits from the CCB in May and June, what action did she take at that time?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Royal Bank went into great detail in committee this morning about exactly what happened with deposits. He was perfectly open with that committee. That indicates just why we have to get back into committee.

Oral Questions

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, the explanation was made that deposits were in fact withdrawn. What did the Minister, who is responsible for this fiasco, do when she found out that that bank was making those withdrawals? Did she inform the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance has absolutely no power to make a bank keep its deposits in a certain place, and the Minister has no such power over any other Canadian for that matter. Public information was made available after the parliamentary committee reported at the end of May. The funding side was not the problem, it was the asset side as the Hon. Member well knows.

ALLEGED DISCUSSIONS BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Finance has had some time, will he confirm that members of his staff or members of the staff of the Minister of State for Finance spoke to people in the financial community other than bankers about the circumstances of the Canadian Commercial Bank during the critical period last summer prior to the announcement of the Minister on September 1?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered this question. This will be the third time that I have answered it. I have asked my staff if these allegations are true. I am advised by my staff that there is no basis for what the Hon. Member suggests right now. They did not speak to anyone in the financial community to in any way give inside information on which people could make decisions.

REQUEST FOR TELEPHONE AND TRAVEL LOGS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is telling us that no one in either of those offices spoke to any member of the financial community about the circumstances of that bank during the summer. In that event will the Minister table, as requested by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, all relevant information with respect to telephone logs and travels of those staff members during the summer months so that this cloud—and I assure the Minister that it is a serious matter—can be lifted from the entire Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr Speaker, there is only one cloud, and that is the cloud that the Hon. Member is trying to take from over his head and put over mine. If he has any information whatsoever, he should not make statements of innuendo. He should not smear other people who might be caught under this umbrella. He should make a specific statement here on the floor of the House of Commons, a statement with which I will deal.

Mr. Gauthier: Table the documents.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Until the Hon. Member and the Leader of the Opposition make specific statements of fact, I will not respond to them.

Ms. Copps: Table the document.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WITHDRAWALS MADE BY ROYAL BANK

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance who knows that if she did not have the specific power to get involved with the banks, she could have sought that power either by discussing it with the cabinet or, if necessary, by seeking legislation. Therefore I would repeat the question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap. When the Minister learned that the Royal Bank, a senior partner in the rescue effort, was withdrawing its deposits and therefore undermining the rescue effort, what did she do?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, during the spring we were watching very carefully the funding in the bank and we determined that the Bank of Canada was replacing that funding. We had a growing concern around what was happening with the bank and we examined the asset side of the bank, and that is where the real problems turned out to be.

WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS BY CERTAIN BANKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, he said that if one of the chartered banks had helped to undermine the rescue plan for the Canadian Commercial Bank, it would be dealt with with the utmost severity.

Could the Prime Minister explain to the House why, since the Royal Bank did exactly that by withdrawing its deposits, no steps were taken at the time to deal with the utmost severity with the Royal Bank of Canada?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said that we presumed that all of the Canadian banks that involved themselves in this initiative did so in good faith and the effort was designed to try to help a fledgling institution that was in difficulty. We sat here while the Leader of the Opposition smeared the leaders of the banks of Canada and all bankers, without naming anyone. We sat here while members of the NDP arbitrarily and unfairly accused bankers who have no less rights than any other Canadian citizens.

Let us move this matter to committee. Let us stop the pejorative allusion and the unfair smears. Let the matter go to committee. Let everyone be heard so that fair value judgements can be made without the McCarthyism and unfair smears that we are hearing from Members of the Opposition and the NDP.

FISHERIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE—RULING BY U.S. TRADE COMMISSION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. Yesterday we heard news of a very disturbing ruling made by the International Trade Commission in the United States, a ruling that puts in jeopardy the East Coast fishery in this country, a billion dollar industry. What is even more disturbing is the suggestion that over 58 basic domestic programs of this country, such as the unemployment insurance scheme and the small craft harbours scheme, are in fact considered to be unfair trade practices. What immediate action will the Minister take to protect our fishing export industry? Does he intend to denounce immediately the notion that these vital domestic programs of the Government are considered unfair trade practices by the United States?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. gentleman that we are aware of the ruling. We are very concerned about it. We, as a Government, will be doing everything we can to protect our fisheries. However, I would point out to him that it was a ruling as to injury. As yet they have not made any ruling, and will not for several months, as to whether or not there were subsidies involved and whether or not countervail is possible to them.

I wish to state categorically to the House that this Government has no intention whatsoever to give up the types of programs that we have in place to assist our citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BILATERAL DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that the Government intends to take action. I hope it is quicker than the Minister suggests because the preliminary decision will be made by October 29 and not several months hence. I hope that he would speed up his machinery somewhat and improve his timetable.

Considering the intention of the Government as announced by the Prime Minister to bring forward a plan to commence negotiations with the United States within a matter of days, will the Minister, or the Government, announce a set of guidelines, as recommended by the parliamentary committee this summer, which will clearly state that it is non-negotiable to have any of our domestic programs considered as bargaining tools in any trade agreement with the United States?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the hon. gentleman that we are already taking action. We have already made representations. We are already working with the industry in assisting them prepare their case. I think we will just have to wait and see what is said in the statement when the Government makes its announcement as to whether or not it will be going ahead with trade negotiations with the United States—and that decision has not as yet been announced or made.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—WITHDRAWALS MADE BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. When the Minister became aware that the major chartered banks, the major private partners in the rescue attempt, were pulling out, what did she do?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am not willing to come into the House and ask for legislative powers to force anybody to keep deposits in any institution, whether it is my widowed mother or a banker. I am not about to do that. I do not have legislative power to ask people to keep deposits in any institution.

INQUIRY OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Considering that the major partners in the bail-out were withdrawing their money and that there were millions of dollars of public money at stake, what did the Prime Minister do, if and when he was informed by the Minister of State for Finance, or the Minister of Finance, that the major partners in the rescue were pulling out? Considering that hundreds of millions of dollars of public money were at stake, what did the hon. gentleman do?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two points. First, the support package which was put together by the Minister of State for Finance and myself involving the banks, two other Governments besides ourselves, plus the CDIC, stayed in place. There was no withdrawal of any of those funds. That stayed in place as a basis for trying to save this young bank.

The second point I wish to make, and I wish to be very clear on it, is that the problem of solvency of the Canadian Commercial Bank was not on the liability side, it was on the loan side. There were just too many bad loans which had built up over the years based on, in part, bad management decisions and, in part, the weak economy in western Canada, which was directly linked to the National Energy Program. Those were the reasons that led to the insolvency of the bank.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

HYUNDAI MOTOR COMPANY—LOCATION OF ASSEMBLY PLANT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It concerns the Hyundai Motor Company of Korea. As the Minister knows, the people of British Columbia, Quebec, Nova Scotia and Ontario are all bidding to have the assembly plant located in their particular province. Will the Minister indicate to the House what community he and his Department are supporting with respect to the location of this plant, indirectly, secretly, or otherwise?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I missed the first part of the Hon. Member's question. I believe he is referring to the Hyundai Motor Company of Korea car plant. Is that correct?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Stevens: The Government of Canada, as it does with respect to other car plants coming into Canada, explains the relative programs which are available across the country and in the regions of Canada with respect to the building of such plants. However, the Government stays neutral as to where the plant might eventually be situated. In particular, the Government feels that that must be a decision of the company which, naturally, wants to have a viable enterprise.

In the case of Hyundai let me be clear that that company prefers the Province of Quebec at the present time. Some 40 per cent of its sales to date have been in the Province of Quebec. The company believes that Quebec might very well be a good home for its plant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my Supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I am rather surprised at the Minister's statement because it puts him in breach of the legal mandate of his Department, which states, in part, that his responsibiities are, and I quote:

—to promote economic development in those regions of Canada in which opportunities for productive employment are exceptionally inadequate.

Is the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion saying no to the poor regions of the country or will he continue what he has been doing for the last 12 months, that is, pork-barrelling his own riding?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister pointed out yesterday, certain members of the Opposition ask questions but do not listen to the answers. I clearly stated that we point out to various companies the relative program advantages across the country, be they provincial or regional. This includes the IRDP tier system and the available programs in the various provinces. However, it is their final choice as to whether they choose the Province of Quebec, the Maritimes, or B.C.

In the case of the Hyundai of Korea car plant, their representatives are saying that their preferred area would be the Province of Quebec. I welcome that decision on the part of those living in Quebec and all of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps this could go on somewhere else some other time.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADING REGULATIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is clear from yesterday's decision that Canadian fishing communities have now joined lumber producers, hog farmers and steel workers as the latest victims of trade blocks in the United States. My question on this matter is for the Prime Minister. How can the Prime Minister continue to promote a freer trade deal with the United States when these sectors where we are supposed to have free trade, such as fish, pork and lumber are the very sectors in which trade barriers are being put in place against our producers and against their jobs? Will the Prime Minister personally contact President Reagan to protest these moves?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is because we are trying to make sure that in the future these types of impediments do not exist, and that Canadian fish products, timber products in British Columbia, steel manufacturers in Sault Ste Marie and in Sydney, Nova Scotia, and codfish, raspberries, strawberries, and iron ore have secure access to the United States market that we are considering these types of programs. We would hope that that kind of protectionism ceases to exist because we believe that fair trade and enhanced trade mean jobs for Canadians, and that is what we are committed to and trying to create.

● (1440)

DURATION OF TALKS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister if he is aware that both the special joint committee this summer and the Macdonald Royal Commission report indicated it would take at least two years for such trade enhancement talks to reach an agreement. Is he therefore saying to Canadian producers like these fishermen that they must wait two years for urgent action on the part of the Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker. We would assume that we would be able—as we have been able in the past—to eliminate these irritants, to the extent humanly possible, as they arise, as an indication of the kinds of ongoing and more durable relationships which can exist between our two countries.

We have addressed some in the past. For example, I remember one just about this time last year, September 17 or September 18, which could have cost between 3,000 and 5,000 jobs in the steel market in Ontario and Nova Scotia, which was a protectionist measure.

Ms. Copps: It's still a problem.

Mr. Mulroney: It is substantially less of a problem today than it was then because we were able to intervene and eliminate that irritant and save 3,000 to 5,000 jobs in Canada. That is what we are going to continue to do while we engage in ongoing negotiations—if that is the determination of the Government—with the United States of America, which is our friend and ally and our great trading partner.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROCLAMATION OF AMENDMENT DEALING WITH IMPAIRED DRIVING

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. As the Minister is aware, on June 20, 1985, Bill C-18, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, received Royal Assent. Could the Minister please inform this House how soon he will be proclaiming the section which deals with impaired driving?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we intend to proclaim the major amendments which the House passed with respect to Bill C-18 as soon as possible. The only cause for delay is that a number of the provinces are asking us to postpone proclaiming the legislation in order to give them time to implement the sections and to speak to the various police forces, the correctional services, and the courts. I will be informing them, however, that the legislation will be proclaimed at the very latest on December 2 of this year so that it will be in full force and effect for the next holidy season. I hope that all Hon. Members of the House will agree that this should be done and that we cannot afford to wait any longer.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

ESTABLISHMENT OF FOREIGN COMPANIES IN CANADA

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. First of all, I would like to congratulate the Hyundai company on preferring Quebec, and I would go even further to express the hope that it will prefer Bromont, Mr. Speaker. However, the Minister is aware that there is also the matter of Toyota and Suzuki. What I want to know is who is telling the truth in this Government. The Minister says that he is taking a strictly hands-off approach, his Minister of State tells us that he is sending all kinds of letters and that the Government favours Quebec, while the Prime Minister says that they have a moral obligation to intervene. It is a regular circus on that side of the House.

Could the Minister inform the House who is speaking for the Government in the automobile plant issue?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am constantly amazed at how the Opposition reacts to good news.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The fact is that when I met with Mr. Toyota, the chairman of the Toyota Motor Company, he confirmed that it is planning a $300 million plant for Canada. It has received letters from seven of our provinces inviting the company to be established in those provinces. Those submissions are being considered and before this year is out it will have come to a decision as to the province in which it will situate its plant.

Suzuki and General Motors are conducting a feasibility study with a view to establishing a plant in Canada. It will perhaps be the largest of all three of the plants, but to date the feasibility study is continuing. They are particularly anxious to make sure that they will have a happy labour relationship wherever they establish in Canada, and that is what they hope to determine this month.

GOVERNMENT POSITION CONCERNING QUEBEC

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister did not answer the question. What I want to know is, since he says in English they are not and his colleagues are saying in French that they are intervening in favour of Quebec, what I want to know is what the Government's policy is. Are they intervening, yes or no?

EMPLOYMENT

INCO—PROJECTED LAY-OFFS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Minister talked tough in the House and outside the House.

Mr. Crosbie: So did you.

Mr. Rodriguez: Will the Minister give a guarantee to the workers at Inco and to the community of Sudbury that there will be no job losses at the Inco operation?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what I said yesterday was that I thought that Inco was not fulfilling its corporate responsibilities. What I would do today is to say that all Hon. Members of this House, including myself as Minsiter of Employment and Immigration and the Hon. Member as the Member of Parliament for Nickel Belt, should join in urging Inco to fulfil those responsibilities and to urge as well all the other Hon. Members of his Party to do likewise.

Mr. Deans: After we have urged them, what then?

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT JOBS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is fairly obvious that the Minister does not care about the people of the Sudbury Basin.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: She does not care about the workers. Yesterday she promised the possibility of legislation to force the company to recognize its responsibility to the community. Will the Minister give us a time? Will she tell us when she will introduce legislation to protect the jobs in the Sudbury Basin? Stop the rhetoric and put up some action.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, how quickly the Hon. Member changes his tune. Yesterday he was saying it was the fault of the unemployment insurance and I said to him at that time that the company had already determined that a substantial number of employees would take early retirement knowing the provisions. What they were speaking about was additional lay-offs and he accepted the premise that there should be those additional lay-offs. That is the difference between us. He accepted that premise without argument and I do not accept it without argument.

COINAGE

PROPOSED DOLLAR COIN

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. I would like to ask the Minister if any final decision has been made with respect to the use of a $1 coin. And has consideration been given to requesting any comment from the individual consumer on its use and acceptability?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this particular matter was the subject of a hearing before an all-Party committee and its particular report, which is rather voluminous, is now being studied. There are questions of utility, cost, and timing. A report will be made to the Cabinet with appropriate recommendations we hope in the very near future. We are still open to briefs and representations. In particular, the Consumers Association of Canada has been invited to comment.

AIR CANADA

LANGUAGE REQUIREMENTS—TRAVELLERS' SAFETY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who must know that Air Canada regulations section 356 provides that, for service and safety purposes, a bilingual flight attendant must be on duty at all times to serve passengers in both official languages.

However, it would appear that this section of the regulations has been disregarded ever since the flight attendants went on strike.

Does the Minister intend to make representations to Air Canada and make sure that the linguistic and safety provisions will be respected at all times so that the traveling public may use Air Canada aircraft without difficulty?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this allegation, as well as others, is being investigated. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the alleged infractions presented to me by CALFAA are being examined by Transport Canada. Twenty-eight have been examined and have proven to show no safety fault. Another 43 are currently being considered and I will be glad to report to the Hon. Member on the specific point he has raised today.

[Translation]

CONSEQUENCES OF LABOUR DISPUTE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In answer to a question I asked him earlier this week the Minister told me that negotiations were progressing. Well, it would seem that negotiations were suspended last night and that, in the past few days, two incidents have paralyzed services in Montreal.

Does the Minister understand that he is dutybound to step in before the situation gets out of hand, or has he asked the Minister of Labour to intervene directly and personally in the dispute?

[English]

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has said, the talks between Air Canada and the Canadian Airline Flight Attendants' Association recessed yesterday at the request of the union. The union will be consulting with its membership, I am sure, for further direction. Hopefully both parties will be able to resume direct negotiations rather than having them imposed by this Minister or any other Minister in the House.

MONITORING OF CABIN CREWS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday the Minister of Transport told this House he had some 200 inspectors monitoring safety standards of replacement flight attendants on Air Canada. But his own assistant stated clearly in the media that there are only eight inspectors actually monitoring cabin crews for all airlines, let alone Air Canada.

The Minister asked CALFAA to provide him with information which his inspectors should be getting, and which I sent over to him the day before yesterday. I would like to know if the Minister had word of any of these infractions before CALFAA provided these documents to us and, if so, what action did he take? Did his inspectors report any of these to him? If so, what action did he take? Will he put more—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that is enough for the first question.

Mr. Benjamin: —cabin crew inspectors in place at this time?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the eight specialist passenger safety inspectors, Transport Canada has deployed a total of 79 air carrier inspectors, 185 engineers and technical inspectors, and Transport Canada senior officials who frequently fly are also monitoring the safety operations of Air Canada. I would like to report to the Hon. Member that we are informed that only one major violation has been reported.

As to the other part of the question, as near as I can inform myself, I was not advised of any infractions other than the one referred to earlier. As I indicated, the alleged infractions are being examined by my officials. So far 28 reports have proven to have no safety fault, and the remaining 43 are still under investigation.

RECRUITMENT OF REPLACEMENTS FOR STRIKING FLIGHT ATTENDANTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, may I return to the Minister of Labour? Since I know he works hard at being a neutral factor in labour disputes, would he tell the House whether or not he has spoken to the Minister of Employment and Immigration about the recruiting of amateur and unqualified flight attendants, which is strike breaking and which compromises the neutrality of the Minister of Labour and his Department in these negotiations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Benjamin: I asked him the question.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member does not want me to answer.

I would like to make clear to him that my Department's policy in this regard is to remain neutral. We continue to accept requests from companies where there is a labour dispute, as we continue to accept requests from people seeking jobs. But in all of those cases we notify the individual, both in writing and orally, that there is a labour dispute in progress. We make no recommendation as to what that individual should do because to do otherwise would be to abandon the neutral position we maintain.

PLACEMENT OF LEGAL BUSINESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of International Trade admitted that he had discussions with Sam Wakim about taking on the Export Development Corporation's legal business. I want to ask the Minister when that meeting took place and which law firm Mr. Wakim was working with at that time.

Mr. Crosbie: Order paper.

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I advised the Hon. Member and the House yesterday, Mr. Wakim and a number of lawyers came to see me, as has happened to all Cabinet Ministers including the Hon. Member when he was a Minister, and discussed with me, as they all do, the possibility of doing government work.

MEETING WITH MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, that was what the Minister said yesterday but I would like to ask him today, and I repeat the question, when the meeting took place and which law firm Mr. Wakim was working for? Bearing in mind that the EDC had set down criteria that the law firm doing the work should have that expertise and have an office in Ottawa, was Mr. Wakim in a position to even be considered for the work of the EDC?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I point out that the law firm appointed to do the legal work for EDC was appointed by the EDC. It was the firm of Weir and Foulds, an excellent law firm.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We know that. The question is when?

Mr. Kelleher: That is who is doing the work for them, not Mr. Sam Wakim.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare takes pride in himself for feeling priority should be given to those in greatest need. Will he confirm that budget measures applying to family allowances and child tax credits mean that poor families with an income of only $10,000 will lose money under his program by 1990? Is this his plan for helping those most in need?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member looks at the program put forward by the Minister of Finance in the Budget she will know that the tax credit helps exactly those families she has identified. The Government has also said that as the economy improves we would like to do more in this area, and that of course remains an option.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question. He knows that social policy groups have documented that poor families will lose under his program by 1990.

Since he is so determined to undermine universality, either by deindexation or by supporting the Macdonald guaranteed poverty proposals, did he mean yesterday that he really cares about the importance of families? If so, why is he allowing the Government to reduce the amount of money going to families by some $600 million by 1990? What is this going to do for families?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this Government is not reducing or changing universality. It was the Hon. Member who said on television that she would be willing to tax pensions at a higher rate than those not getting pensions. What this Government is doing—

Ms. Mitchell: What about the Macdonald Commission?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): She does not like to be reminded of what she said, but I intend to do that.

Under the Budget the very families she identifies will get more in a more progressive manner, one which social agencies generally approve. As the economy improves we will do more for families. She should get her head out of the sand and stop being so antediluvian.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) what the business of the House will be under Government Orders for the coming week.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in this new part of the session I welcome the traditional question from my colleague, the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray). We have made good and constructive progress in terms of legislation this week. I am grateful to both opposition Parties for the progress that we are making.

At the present time we are considering second reading of Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Seeds Act and Canada Grain Act. When this debate is concluded, which it may be later this afternoon, I anticipate that we will then have an opportunity to consider the provisions of Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, and Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prison and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code for the balance of today and tomorrow.

I anticipate that certain items of legislation will be introduced for first reading before next week. It is my expectation that we will start on Monday dealing with a Bill that I anticipate will be forthcoming, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act. There are other pieces of legislation which we may be able to deal with during the course of next week, including a Bill relating to redistribution. The basis of that legislation was considered last June by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I will continue to consult with my colleagues, the House Leaders of each of the Parties, to give maximum notice with respect to legislation. I hope that we will, as we did last year, operate in a spirit of co-operation and accomplishment.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, recognizing the necessity for preparation time, I was wondering whether the Government House Leader might consider having those Ministers, who intend to introduce legislation for first reading today or tomorrow, communicate with their counterparts in each of the two Parties today and give them at least an outline of the content of the legislation they intend to introduce in order that my colleagues would have an opportunity, on Saturday and Sunday, to prepare themselves for the debate on Monday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I will certainly do that, Mr. Speaker. In fact I fully expect to be able to table the Bill with respect to the Family Allowances Act amendments tomorrow in Routine Proceedings. Being an experienced parliamentarian, the Hon. Member will know that the Bill will put in place, legislatively, the provisions of the Budget of last May. With regard to the other Bill to which I alluded, but which has not yet been introduced, think that the Hon. Member, who will probably be the spokesperson for his Party on that, is aware of the essential basis of that legislation. There will be some refinements with respect to redistribution. I will table that Bill at the earliest possible date and will be glad to discuss with him and with my colleague, the House Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray), the provisions of that legislation at any time.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) bootlegged in the Ways and Means motion on a point of order. Would he tell the House whether he is looking for concurrence of that Ways and Means motion before we proceed to the Family Allowance Bill?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have a long history of being against bootlegging, either in the House or outside the House, so I do not understand the premise of the question. Having said that, I will make it a point to give advance notice to the distinguished Whip of the Official Opposition before I make any move in connection with the Ways and Means motion to which he refers.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on the question of the deposition of the Bill on Family Allowances, am I to understand from the Government House Leader that we will have the Bill tomorrow? It will be deposed in the House tomorrow so that we can examine it on the weekend prior to the commencement of debate on Monday?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member will look at the Order Paper she will be aware of the fact that I gave notice yesterday. The purpose of that was to enable me to bring it forward before the weekend if at all humanly possible.

PETITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by approximately 74 members of the Millwrights and Machine Erectors Local 1151, which covers most of northwestern Ontario. They are calling upon the Government to change the Unemployment Insurance Commission regulations to allow them once again to use pension moneys, vacation moneys, and severance pay as savings as opposed to earnings insofar as the unemployment insurance regulations apply.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition from citizens of Hamilton humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that retiring employees keep their pension benefits and receive unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of pension income.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many members of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation which calls upon Parliament to withdraw the proposal with regard to unemployment insurance which would require pension benefits to be calculated for unemployment insurance purposes.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from many people in British Columbia asking that the Government ensure that all retired employees keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefit without deduction of pension income.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that question No. 392 will be answered today. I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

HIRING OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AGENTS

Question No. 392—Mr. Allmand:

Since September 4, 1984, were 700 unemployment insurance agents hired to more closely monitor the unemployment insurance system and, if so (a) what is the salary range of each individual (b) what is the regional breakdown of these employees (c) what kind of training did they undertake (d) what is their job description?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No. (a), (b), (c) and (d) Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could take it under notice that we would appreciate very much if he would give us the percentage of questions that the Government has answered as of today. It is usual for the Government to account for the question that it answers. We have noticed that fewer and fewer questions are being answered. There was one today and one yesterday. I just wondered if he could give us the percentage of questions that have been answered as of today?

Mr. Speaker: I will allow the answer but it is not normal to allow that either as a statement or as a question. However, this time I will allow it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member checks Hansard he will find that two questions were answered yesterday rather than one. Without checking the figures, I assure him that it is substantial.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SEEDS ACT
CANADA GRAIN ACT

MESURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wise that Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Seeds Act and the Canada Grain Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at the specific request of my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I have decided to continue where I left off. I felt I could not leave any loose ends, especially since the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) is in the House. I am delighted with this unique opportunity to see the Hon. Member taking part and listening to the debate in the House. I shall nevertheless be brief, Mr. Speaker, since the time of the House is a precious commodity and we have already established some agreement on the Bill and its consequences.

Mr. Speaker, just before the House took recess this morning, I was saying that the new legislation will provide for more satisfactory regulation and control of the quality and sale of seeds in this country, by improving our system and making it more flexible. I think now we can say we have guarantees, as far as that is possible against the introduction of inferior varieties that are not adapted to our climate, and that for the years to come.

I want to proceed quickly with another important aspect, and I am referring to the increased penalties provided under the legislation. If we refer to page 4a of the Bill, we see that far more severe penalties are now provided under the proposed legislation and that persons who contravene its provisions will be severely punished. I feel this adds a guarantee of a certain degree of security to the present legislation.

I see that my comments command the sustained attention of the Opposition as usual, when we are talking about serious matters, Mr. Speaker. They must be having a hard time deciding who is going to be the new Opposition critic for agriculture. There seems to be a lot of enthusiasm for the job.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would also like to comment on the work done by representatives of the Canadian Seed Growers Association whom I was able to meet several times and who must feel very uncomfortable when they hear what Opposition Members in the House have to say, because there is a vast difference between what they say and the interests of the Canadian associations. The sustained interest shown by this association over the past years has made it possible for the Government to introduce and improve legislation, with the result that if the passage of this Bill is expedited, we shall have legislation that will be truly beneficial to our Canadian producers.

Mr. Gauthier: A comment, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) made two factual errors in the course of his remarks. First he said that the Bill would be referred to a standing committee. The House adopted a resolution under which the Bill will be referred to a legislative committee. That is one correction and I am sure he will agree with me on that and that there is no problem.

Second, he said in his remarks that the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) is a Member who does not attend Committee of Agriculture meetings and who is not often in the House. I think that as Party Whip and one who ought to know the answer I will inform him, even though the Member for Bellechasse does not seem to know.

The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell—one must not forget the three ridings, that is very important—is the official Liberal spokesman and critic with respect to Supply and Services. On top of that he is vice-chairman of the caucus committee. He is the Ontario Liberal caucus vice-president. But with respect to parliamentary business, House attendance, if the Hon. Member wants to see his file I can give it to him because I look after the files, and his record is as good as anyone else's.

The Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is among those who regularly attend House and committee proceedings. He sits regularly on three committees and, in my opinion, it is unfair on the part of the Hon. Member for Bellechasse to impute to a hard-working colleague motives as vile and as ridiculous as saying that he is not here and what have you—

Mr. Blais: He is never here, Mr. Speaker! Considering the experience of my colleague the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I am surprised that the Member for Ottawa-Vanier would use a language . . . I would dare say as ridiculous and inappropriate, to use his own words.

Mr. Speaker, far from me to point out the absence of the Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). On the contrary! But everytime he speaks in the House a few minutes after he is gone. He raises questions and then out he goes, so no one can give him an answer.

Still I am pleased to have been brought up to date with respect to the curriculum vitae of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. Mr. Speaker, he will need all the experience he can get after the next election if he wants to be hired somewhere because there is no assurance he will be able to come back to the House of Commons.

Mr. Rossi: And that goes for you too!

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a comment to make about the Hon. Member's statement. Without bragging, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) that after the so-called Conservative Party sweep I happened to be the Opposition Member who was elected with the largest majority in Canada. I am sure he cannot claim a similar achievement, much less so after the next election.

Mr. Rossi: How true! How true!

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the debate on Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Seeds Act and the Canada Grain Act. Because this Bill was introduced on short notice, it was difficult to prepare for this debate and be briefed on the Bill. However, the Minister stated that this is a technical Bill which should be beneficial to groups involved in the production, marketing, distribution and maintenance of seeds. Of course, this is an important topic, especially in a highly developed and technologically advanced country like Canada. When this Bill goes to the legislative committee—the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) does not seem to realize that we have established a legislative committee to look after Bills in the future—I hope we will be able to study it in greater detail.

It appears from a quick review of the Bill that the Government, apart from clarifying definitions of such words as "to sell" and "grade", seems to have taken unto itself a great deal of power by regulation.

For instance, Clause 4 of the Bill gives the Governor in Council vast new powers relating to information, registration of seeds, and specifying terms and conditions under which seeds can be registered.

• (1520)

It also prescribes procedures for review of cases involving the refusal, suspension or cancellation of registration of seeds. In Clause 4(h.5) of the Bill it gives the Governor in Council the power by regulation in:

determining the cases in which and the conditions, including provision of a bond, under which seeds shall, for the purposes of this Act, be transported and stored on importation.

There is a great deal of concern in the agricultural community with the powers the Minister already has by regulation for the inspection of crops, especially with the decision made last November 8, a day which has become known in the agricultural community as black Thursday. The Government imposed an unprecedented $32 million worth of inspection charges on Canadian agriculture.

I have in my hand a letter from the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture denouncing those charges which have been imposed on agricultural production. These charges have come at a time when agricultural producers right across the nation are feeling disposessed by this Government. They are declaring bankruptcy and the incidents of foreclosure are in record numbers. In the first two months of this fiscal year, the Farm Credit Corporation reported foreclosures were taking place 87 per cent more rapidly than last year, which works out to about 11 foreclosures a week.

Pressures are great on the producers and commodity prices are low. For instance, I am told the price of potatoes to the producers in Prince Edward Island and in New Brunswick are running at 2 cents a pound or a little over that while production costs are well above 4 cents a pound. How the Government can be imposing new inspection charges at this time is puzzling. These charges amount to 3 cents a pound—that is for the average 600 acre potato farm in Prince Edward Island—or $3,600 per farm. It is a massive increase for something which historically has been paid for by the Department of Agriculture on the understanding that the Government has a certain responsibility for quality, grading and inspection of crops in order to protect the quality, the sizing and the trade aspects of agricultural commodities.

The Government is claiming more regulatory powers in this Bill. We wonder whether this is just another phase of increasing these fees. In a letter, a copy of which was sent to me by the Secretary Manager of the Nova Scotia Federation of Agriculture, he speaks about inspection licence and fees regarding field crops. He points out that the new aspect to this issue is the requirement for a mandatory licensing for all shipments crossing provincial boundaries, for which a $500 annual licence fee will be required, and a 3 cent per hundredweight inspection fee. Prior to June, 1984, shippers of fresh products on a small scale individual farm basis have been exempt from licence fee which then was only $25. We see the licence fee going up from $25 to $500. No actual inspection of the product is conducted nor is it planned that such an inspection service should be provided. I inquired of the program officer in Moncton as to whether one licence by a commodity group or a maritime association such as like the Maritime Strawberry Council could accommodate the requirement of the regulation, and was told that it would not. Each individual shipper must be licensed whether selling his own product or someone else's product. I pointed out that this regulation effectively put small producers with sales of $1,000 a year out of business. Therefore, it would be in the best interests of Nova Scotia producers to protest the manner in which the inspection fees are being applied. A $500 annual licence fee for which no service is provided, thus effectively putting fresh dairy and vegetable producers out of business runs contrary to Nova Scotia federal agreements and a host of other goals for our crop community groups.

We can see that those fees which were imposed last fall, besides being unfair and unjust could hardly have been imposed at a worse time for so many commodity groups in Canada. They were just not imposed for horticultural products but only for meat inspection, hogs, beef and so on. It was done without very much concern for the current difficult time we are in. That $32 million in service charges was combined with drastic cuts in many other areas and was supplemented later in the Budget with another $50 million cut, about which everyone in the agricultural community is holding his breath because people do not know where the other shoe will drop, whether there will be more service charges, a cut in the dairy subsidy, a cut in transportation or research. I hope the Minister when we get him before the committee will be able to clarify that point.

We do have new regulatory powers. We will want to know exactly how the Government plans to use those in the weeks ahead, if and when this legislation is passed by the committee and by the whole House. The Government seems to have imposed Draconian penalties under this Bill. The summary conviction penalty now of $500 for a minor infraction of the Seeds Act would seem to be adequate. That $500 penalty is to be increased to $25,000. I know we cannot ask questions in the House today at second reading as to why that amount is being increased, but surely a $25,000 fine is a very severe penalty for a minor infraction under this Act? As well, when a proceeding commences in a court on conviction on indictment, Clause 7 of the Bill reads:

(b) on conviction on indictment, to a fine in the discretion of the court or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or to both.

A five year penalty for an infraction of this Act seems a very severe penalty. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister, whoever is carrying this Bill in the committee, will be able to explain why we would want to incarcerate somebody for five years for an infraction of the Seeds Act. I hope that that can be clarified for the members of the committee.

There is another aspect of the Bill about which I wonder whether it is in contravention of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Under Section 7 there are very broad powers regarding seizure. It seems to me that this Bill would give an inspector the right to seizure under Section 7. I am wondering whether that procedure can be exercised without the benefit of a search warrant. Surely an inspector cannot make seizures without the proper authority of a search warrant as is required by that section of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Yesterday we discussed in the House amendments which would do away with writs of assistance in drug legislation.

The concern of the House—and it is certainly that of Hon. Members on this side—is that although this Bill is probably necessary to improve the operation of the Seeds Act, why has the Government not come forward with substantive legislation? I am not aware of massive problems in the areas of licensing and the regulation of seeds. Obviously this legislation will enhance those processes. However, why has the Government not dealt with many other problems which are facing the Canadian agricultural community today? Why has there been no decision on drought assistance for the agricultural community in western Canada? The Hon. Member for Assiniboia, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson), has been thrashing around on this issue for two or three months. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said that he could not make a decision because that Parliamentary Secretary has been unable to make a report. Also he said that he hoped a report would be forthcoming in a few weeks.

I find it difficult to understand how the Government of Saskatchewan was able to make a decision in late July that it would pay a wintering benefit of some $60 per head of cattle, yet it took the Government of Canada and the committee it established another three or four weeks to decide to provide $30 per head for wintering and drought assistance. That announcement was made with a grand flourish and, lo and behold, we found that the Premier of Saskatchewan reached out and grabbed that $30 per head or $16 million and took it unto himself. The result is that farmers are no better off. It was a beautiful song and dance show. It was almost like the "sham on the rocks" in Quebec City. After the federal announcement, livestock producers ended up with the same $60 per head. As a matter of fact, they probably thought something would be forthcoming from the federal Government, but they ended up with nothing. The provincial Government effectively set the policy for assistance to the livestock industry back in late July. Why has it taken the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister so long to reach a decision about assistance or to make a recommendation to the Government in favour of assistance to grain producers?

I had an opportunity in late July to visit areas in southwestern Saskatchewan and to see the burnt crops. There will be no crop or very little crop this year. The Government brings in technical legislation when it should bring in substantive decisions and solutions. If it is beneficial, desirable and necessary for the Government to make known to livestock producers in southern Saskatchewan and Alberta how much will be available for this coming winter to keep their basic herds intact, surely it is equally valuable for grain producers. Although a seeds Bill is important and valuable, it seems to me that we should be talking about assistance to the wheat and grain growers of western Canada. In early August the wheat pool indicated that a program involving some $50 per acre or $500 million was needed. I had hoped the committee on the government side which is studying this matter sat down with the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other agricultural groups in Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Peace River country to get on with reaching a decision. When I asked the Minister about it in the House this week, he said that it would be another two or three weeks.

The situation is really desperate. Many of us have had a chance to visit those areas. We have seen the clips on television of farmers lining up at welfare offices looking for assistance. We have seen the statistics of the Farm Credit Corporation which indicate that in the first two or three months of this fiscal year that some 35 per cent or 40 per cent of foreclosures were on farm property. As a matter of fact, all foreclosures and bankruptcies are running at a rate of some 87 per cent or some 11 per week. Although we are glad to see this Bill before the House today, we would like to see substantive legislation and programs to rescue agricultural producers from the desperate situation in which they find themselves today.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a couple of comments about some of the suggestions and accusations which were made by the Hon. Member, particularly those relating to the drought. There is no question that the drought is a very serious situation and that it is very frustrating for farmers. It has gone on for a number of years in some of the serious drought areas and has involved a number of acres.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and that task force on drought have responded quickly. We felt that the main consideration had to be the livestock area. The Government supported the recommendations of the task force. We moved, and some $48 million is being paid right now—and many farmers have received their cheques—in terms of feed assistance for their herds. We felt that this was most important and we moved on phase one. The Hon. Member raised what we call phase two relating to crops and grain production. Surely he must understand that the crop reports have to come in. We are not only dealing with southern Saskatchewan. We are also dealing with Alberta, the Peace River and into British Columbia. I have recently checked with some Hon. Members from Alberta and they indicated that the crops in that area were less than 5 per cent harvested. It is impossible to get results from the crop insurance people. As well, in terms of what the Government has done, I am sure the Hon. Member is well aware that the federal Government does pay 50 per cent of the crop insurance premiums. In addition to that, last year the Government paid into the drought areas some $250 million. It is estimated that this year, the dollar value will probably go beyond $250 million. We have responded very positively. It is a downright shame that the Opposition has tried to capitalize on a very serious drought situation in order to make political headway. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that they are not going to do this on the backs of western Canadian farmers.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that he has responded. The Premier of Saskatchewan responded about two or three weeks before he did. The province essentially set the rate and the Government of Caanda simply offered half of the help. That is history now.

It is rather interesting that the Parliamentary Secretary has indicated that he made a report. If I heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) correctly yesterday, he said that he could not really make a decision because he was waiting for a report from the Parliamentary Secretary. It seems to me that they should get their stories straight so that they are both saying the same thing.

Dealing with the task force, the Parliamentary Secretary has said that it really cannot make a decision until all of the crop reports are in. There are many areas in western Canada where there are effectively no crops. I visited Assiniboia and southern Saskatchewan almost two months ago and there was no crop at that time. Things certainly have not improved since. As a matter of fact, getting the crop off is the problem. I believe we are talking about a question of confidence. We should ask if the Government is going to provide the assistance that is necessary.

In 1984 when the Liberal Party was in Government, there was a demand by all Members of the Tory Party who were sitting on this side of the House that the Government commit itself to crops that were destroyed in northeastern Saskatchewan. The Hon. Member who represents that area is in the House today. It was demanded that the Government make a commitment and the then Prime Minister, the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), did make a commitment of $20 per acre. The Tories only paid half of that when they came into power.

For opposition Members to be asking when the Government is going to make a commitment to western agriculture at a time when the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has been demanding a commitment for the last three or four weeks is certainly not too soon. I am disappointed that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson), who obviously wields a great deal of power not only in his caucus but in the councils of the Government, was not able to say that the Government will make a decision within a week. If the Parliamentary Secretary makes a further comment today, I hope he will be able to make a commitment as to when the Government will help the grain producers of western Canada.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to have you in the chair today to listen to a very important debate on agriculture. I am sure this debate is of grave importance to members of your constituency. Many of us in the West raise bird seed and I am sure many of your constituents, Mr. Speaker, feed canaries, budgies and so forth. I am pleased that you are here to listen to this debate.

Obviously the Member who just spoke was caught without his notes on the Seeds Act so he quickly grabbed some notes on the drought and decided to make a little speech on drought assistance. His argument dealt with who responded first. That is a typical Liberal argument. Liberal Members are not really sure what to do. There is no point in consulting so they just respond first and take credit for action on behalf of farmers. It does not really matter if they help the farmers or not. It is only important for them to get a press release out. That is the way the former Minister of Agriculture acted so often, unlike this Minister who has acted through legislation. Members of Parliament were busy last year and are already busy again dealing with issues that are important to agriculture.

During the previous Government, we often waited patiently for Mr. Whelan to come forward with legislation. The only times we debated agriculture were when we had an Opposition Day and opposition Members raised issues that were important to agriculture.

The question of who responded first is not important in my mind. The Parliamentary Secretary has done an excellent job on behalf of western farmers in being on the scene. He has discussed with them the difficulties that they face and has asked the farmers and organizations about the best possible way to respond to this year's drought. As he adequately explained, there was a need to act quickly as far as livestock producers were concerned because green feed had to be cut and farmers had to know whether or not they could afford to purchase green feed for their livestock this year. That action has been taken and $48 million has been allocated by the federal Government. As well, monies have been allocated by the provincial Governments to respond to this very serious drought situation.

Now we are facing a serious problem for the cereal and oilseed crop farmers as well. The task force is making recommendations to the Minister for action in that area. We have made the commitment to assist the western Canadian farmers regarding the drought and we will. At the same time, the payments have gone out under the Western Grain Stabilization Act because of amendments that were made in this House. Crop insurance has been adjusted so that payments and adjustments can be made quickly. The Government has acted in a number of other areas of legislation that has been brought before this House. I find the arguments made by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) to be pretty weak.

Not so many years ago, I sat in the spot of the Hon. Member for Algoma. It was much easier to criticize than to defend. The Hon. Member visited the drought areas. I would ask him if he made observations, decided on possible solutions and mailed those solutions to the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson). I see his head shaking in the negative. Therefore, we have not heard his suggestions as to how that assistance might be offered. We have only heard criticism. At any rate, I know that suggestions we will hear will be adequate and the farmers will be pleased with the assistance that will be offered in the next few weeks.

I wish to make some comments on the Seeds Act. The Seeds Act is very important to farmers across the country. Canada can be proud of the legislation that has allowed proper research to take place into the various varieties of seeds that have been offered to Canadian farmers. The legislation has put before us a system of which we can be proud, a system that takes seeds from the research centres and puts them in the hands of farmers so that farmers can take that progeny and expand on it so that it can be made available very quickly to ordinary commercial seed growers or farmers. That is something of which we have to be very proud. That Act was brought in, I believe, back in 1905. It was written with such thought at the time that few amendments have had to be made up to this point in time. A minor amendment was made in 1977. As the Minister has stated, we are now attempting to adjust the Seeds Act in a mainly technical manner to ensure that it will be more beneficial to farmers than it is at the present time.

I have no argument with most of the sections of the Act. However, I do have an argument with one in particular. I wish to raise that matter in my short address to the House this afternoon. I approve of the amendments which are being proposed to many of the sections which have to do with the importation of seeds, the bonding of importers and the seizure of improper seeds coming into the country. The penalties which were originally brought in in 1905 are outdated at this time. They need to be adjusted so that farmers will take them more seriously. The status of the Canadian Seed Growers Association is also dealt with in this legislation.

However, as is often the case when departments draft Bills of this type, it is possible for them to put into the legislation powers with which I have some concern and with which many legislators would have concern, if they were to give it some deep thought. We were warned of the possibility of changes to the manner in which farmers may be able to advertise seeds in this country because the legislation which is before us now has been talked about for some years. Those of us who represent grain-growing areas have consulted with our seed growers and with commercial farmers as to whether or not they have had any difficulties with the legislation. I sent out hundreds of letters in my constituency to farmers who produce grain and seed asking for their comments. Most of them commented in favour of the legislation with the exception of one section.

That section has to do with Clause 4(2) of the Bill wherein a number of powers are being added by regulation. The one that is of most concern is that with respect to the advertising of seeds. Under the present legislation, it is only possible for a registered seed grower to use the term "registered seed" or "certified seed". Usage of those terms signifies that the grower has a licence to take progeny from the agricultural research stations or scientists at universities who produce such seed, expand it and make it available in true variety to farmers. However, in the past, under the Act, farmers who have purchased registered seed have been allowed to grow that seed and advertise it as commercial seed grown from registered seed. For example, Johnson barley which is purchased as registered Johnson barley is grown on a commercial farm and then offered for sale in advertisement as commercial seed grown from registered Johnson barley. Many seed growers have stated that there is the possibility that a farmer looking in a newspaper without proper scrutiny will think that he is buying true variety. That is generally not the case since most commercial farms are not as cautious as they should be with respect to ensuring that the fields they plant of this true variety are free of other varieties. Thus, I can see the reasoning for putting forward such an amendment. However, I believe the point has been carried too far.

The reason I believe it has been carried too far is that the legislation now states that no farmer shall be able to advertise a variety of crop for sale but that he will only be able to advertise, for example, barley for sale, oats for sale or wheat for sale. I can imagine if I were a farmer that I would want to purchase not registered seed from a registered seed grower but a commercial seed, perhaps because my crop froze last year, I do not have the seed available and I need to purchase seed for my whole farm. Registered seed generally sells at $1 to $3 a bushel above commercial seed. To buy seed for hundreds or even thousands of acres can be extremely expensive if only registered seed is bought. Thus, many farmers who make a practice of buying commercial seed are not concerned about it being 100 per cent true to variety. They are concerned about getting as true a seed as possible in the ground in the spring. Therefore, they buy from neighbouring farms a variety which they believe is close to true and has a good germination factor. It is important that we continue to allow commercial seed growers to advertise the variety name. I hope I can convince the Minister and the officials when we meet in committee that we should not allow commercial seed growers to use the term "grown from registered seed" or "grown from certified seed", but that they can continue to use the variety name.

The point I am making is a very narrow but important one. It is important to many farmers. I speak from the experience of western Canada; however, I am sure the case can be made across the country. I believe, then, that there will be adequate distinction between certified seed or registered seed and seed which is grown on a commercial farm. That would make it much easier, in the early spring, when most farmers are looking for seed for their farms, to go down the advertising columns in search of seed. For example, if I am looking for Johnson barley for my farm I will be able to see whom I have to call to inquire about the seed because it will be listed as Johnson barley. I will also know that it is not registered or certified and that it is not intended to be totally true to variety and that there may be some possibility of wheat seeds present in the sample.

I hope to bring this issue with some vigour and backing by my constituents to the legislative committee so that we can receive an indication from the Minister and his officials as to why he feels it improper to continue to use the variety name. I hope that we will hear not only from the registered seed growers but from the commercial farmers as well with respect to the difficulties this suggested amendment will cause. Perhaps we can come to a compromise amendment which will be of assistance to farmers when they are attempting to purchase seed in the spring.

You will find, Mr. Speaker, that there are many times more commercial growers in Canada than registered seed growers. They do produce a relatively good sample for farmers and over the last century many, many farmers in Canada have utilized the commercial seed grower and have received good results from that seed. I also commend the registered seed growers who have served this country well. They are very diligent in their practice of providing adequate and true seed for farmers. They have abided very well, in large, by the act over the last number of years. Therefore, I support the Bill with the exception of that section. I intend to raise it in committee. I am pleased that we are dealing with this very important Bill in such a proper and concise manner today.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) because he really tried to lead the House to believe that the Government was taking very substantive action with regard to agriculture. I was amazed because it seems to me that we essentially have had a tremendous stall on any number of issues facing agriculture. The Bill today, although it is important in a technical sense and beneficial to the registered seed growers and to the commerce of that whole industry, is surely not as important as the other issues facing agriculture in Canada today, such as the drought in western Canada.

The Hon. Member asked what the Liberals would do. Last year we made a commitment in the Mackenzie area of north-eastern Saskatchewan of some $20 per acre. Perhaps it should now be $25 and the provincial Government should match it. However, when we were in power we made that kind fo commitment late in July. It is now getting into the middle of September and the Government still has not made any commitment for the grain industry even though it is facing a desperate situation.

I would like to read briefly in a report from a newspaper article in which the Saskatchewan wheat pool calls for $.5 billion program in drought aid. The proposal would involve payments up to $50 an acre to farmers in the most severely affected areas. Mr. Avery Sahl, the vice-president of the Saskatchewan pool said that even $50 an acre will barely be enough to help the most drastically affected to survive, particularly producers who spent thousands of dollars fighting grasshoppers this summer. Mr. Sahl is also a member of the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee. He said that 30,700 Saskatchewan farms have been affected by the drought in varying degrees.

I think the most important part of the article is Mr. Sahl's comment with regard to farm families because the drought is one thing with the loss of crops and so on but the impact on the families is equally important. He went on to say, and I quote:

> Some farm families are literally destitute in our part of the province, ... Others are not far behind, and the communities which rely on agriculture are severely strained.
> In a major portion of the province, the whole rural economy is bordering on collapse.

Therefore I believe that urging the Government to make a decision and take action now is not out of line. I am sure that sentiment is echoed by every western producer who wants to see the Government take action.

The Hon. Member says that the Government is bringing forward a lot of substantial legislation. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) published a paper in January and gave his views of Canadian agriculture. He put out a white paper on taxation issues in agriculture and said essentially in that paper that farmers were well off, they made twice as much money as the average Canadian and paid a quarter as much tax. I question and I believe every farmer in this country questions whether that is not really the philosophy of the Government. I am not speaking about the backbenchers because the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) was a very active Member on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. He made some very worth-while recommendations and suggestions to the committee. However, what happened to them? With respect to the farm debt crisis, which is certainly worse than in the 1930s, no action has been taken, even though the farm debt crisis has exacerbated. The number of farmers in serious financial difficulty has risen from 17 per cent or 19 per cent last year—depending on how you calculate—to 20 per cent of the farmers in Canada today. For the Hon. Member to suggest the Government is bringing forward momentous decisions is really not true because those decisions are not there for the farm debt crisis. Certainly no decision has been made on the red meat stabilization plan. One of the decisions which was made in the Budget was to assist farmers to get out of farming. Another decision was to impose a nine cent a gallon excise tax on fuel. That was a major campaign commitment just a little over a year ago when the Conservative Party were on the hustings. Within nine months of taking that tax off fuel, they imposed a tax of nine cents a gallon which in the West is being called the harvest tax. On June 1, they removed the exemption on the petroleum compensation charge which was another six cents or seven cents a gallon. In the last three months, therefore, the Government has really imposed some 15 cents or 16 cents a gallon fuel tax. A year from January it will be imposing another four cents a litre or 18 cents a gallon of new tax. Surely that is not the kind of dramatic action about which the Hon. Member spoke because it just exacerbates the situation and imposes that much more hardship because of the increase in farm input costs.

The Hon. Member says the Government is taking action in bringing forward legislation. We have not seen a decision on the dairy policy or on the farm debt crisis. We have a debate going on between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) as to whether they are going to put in place a prebankruptcy or preforeclosure arbitration procedure. We know the Budget of the Department of Agriculture is going to be cut by some $50 million but we do not know what that is going to affect. We have seen worse kinds of difficulties with trade issues in this past 12 months than farmers have faced in many years. We are supposed to have a new era in our relationship with the United States and other countries but all we see is something like a thousand carcasses of EEC subsidized beef being dumped into our Canadian market. We see a countervail on hogs going to the United States of 5.3 cents a pound. I would like to believe the Hon. Member. I know he is a dedicated and committed Member, one who has worked very effectively in the committee on farm legislation, but I really do not see this dramatic and effective legislation coming forward which he talked about when he spoke this afternoon.

• (1610)

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has a selective memory, and that is allowed when you are in opposition. Perhaps it is typical. He ought to make it clear that the reason they acted so quickly in July of last year was because there was an election on and it became very important to offer quickly a supposed solution to the drought situation. We have acted quickly, as I said in my speech, with the $48 million allotment for cattle, and we will act, after full consultation, for the grain farmers in western Canada. He knows and I know that in the committee we dealt with the financial paper and we pointed out many of the errors. We made recommendations which I think are adequate and proper for farming, and some have been acted on. The Red Meat Stabilization Bill was passed and it will be used by farmers.

As his Party's agriculture critic the Hon. Member has been very busy this year. The reason for that is that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has been very busy in acting for farmers across this country. I hope the Hon. Member continues to be very busy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over.

Resuming debate? Question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Mr. Epp (for Mr. Wise), seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-64, an Act to amend the Seeds Act and the Canada Grain Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

PAROLE ACT AND PENITENTIARY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada) moved that Bill C-67, an Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

PAROLE ACT, PENITENTIARY ACT, PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT, AND CRIMINAL CODE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada) moved that Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, because of other business I was not able to be here in the House this morning when the House was completing debate on Bill C-65. However, my colleague from Burnaby was kind enough to come over and tell me that when he spoke this morning on Bill C-65 he was virtually bubbling over with generous comments about my appointment as Solicitor General. I want to thank him for those kind comments. While he is in such a good mood I thought it would be timely for me to call debate on Bill C-67 and Bill C-68 in the hope that that spirit of enthusiasm and goodwill and all-Party agreement which has characterized our relationship to date will continue throughout the course of the day and that in the course of the next 45 minutes we will see these two measures adopted.

Mr. Robinson: Don't push your luck.

Mr. Beatty: My colleague issues a minor caution. I thank him again for his kind comments this morning.

I am pleased at this point to open the debate on second reading of Bill C-67 and Bill C-68, and I want to deal with each of them in turn. At the heart of Bill C-67 are important amendments to the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act which will effect changes to the correctional program and conditional release known as mandatory supervision. Provisions in the Bill will tighten some of the features of that program for penitentiary inmates who pose a high risk of violence. These changes are clearly required and they have long been advocated by police, victims' organizations, and many concerned private and professional groups and individuals. At the same time the Bill contains balancing provisions which will ensure that inmates who are considered good risks while under supervision in the community will be considered by the National Parole Board at the earliest possible point in their sentence.

In its first Speech from the Throne the Government expressed its intention to respond to public concerns with regard to our system of criminal justice. We promised to correct defects in that system to ensure the best protection of the public from criminal acts which can be devised. Bill C-67 is not the total answer to that promise but it is a very important beginning. It contains measures which were urgently required and could be introduced quickly while awaiting the outcome of broader policy reviews currently under way in my Ministry and in the Department of Justice.

Perhaps the most pressing matter dealt with by this Bill is that aspect of the existing law which compels the automatic release of penitentiary inmates on mandatory supervision as a result of earned remission. The law now allows an inmate to earn the remission of up to one-third of his sentence through good conduct. An inmate who has earned all of his earned remission must by law now be released after serving two-thirds of his sentence. The last third is served in the community under mandatory supervision. Such a release must be granted even if there is a consensus among correctional and parole officials that he poses an imminent risk of violence to the community. Situations such as this have occurred in the past, too often with tragic results. We on this side of the House find it abhorrent that this situation shoud be allowed to continue. That is why a mechanism was provided in this Bill to give the National Parole Board the authority to prevent releases in certain cases.

The schedule to the Bill identifies a group of offences which, by their nature, involve violent conduct. Inmates serving a sentence for one of those offences will no longer be unconditionally entitled to release on mandatory supervision. Their earned remission will be used to calculate a presumptive release date but they will be liable to have their release on mandatory supervision denied if certain other conditions are met.

I would digress here to say that where the Government enumerates lists of offences like this, there is certainly room for debate and discussion about the list, whether the number of offences it lists is too long or too short, and we are prepared to listen with an open mind when this matter goes to committee. However, we feel it is important that the House give guidance to the parole service for some of those offence where it is clear that an individual has been involved in violence in the past, where there is a potential for violence in the future, to ensure that before potentially violent criminals are released back into society the NPB has an opportunity to review those cases. Correctional officials will examine these cases, Mr. Speaker, when the presumptive release data draws near. They will determine if, in addition, serious harm, which is defined in the Bill, or death, was caused to another person in the commission of the offence. If this criterion is also met, it will then be decided if there appears to be reasonable grounds to believe that another offence causing serious harm or death would be committed while under mandatory supervision if that person were released. Should such grounds appear to exist the case will be referred to the National Parole Board. This is a mechanism to trigger a review by the NPB to ensure the rights of ordinary, innocent, law-abiding Canadians, their right to be free from violence, are respected. The Board will review background and other information that is material to the case, including the assessment of experts where necessary. A hearing will be held at which the inmate will be able to make representations on his own behalf. Procedural safeguards will be provided throughout this process so that the inmate is aware of the information being considered by the Board, is able to present his own case and be assisted at the hearing, and is aware of the reasons for the decision that is ultimately taken by the Board.

Time limits are prescribed in the Bill and others will be contained in the regulations. These will ensure that, barring exceptional circumstances, the process will allow enough time before the presumed release date for the inmate to apply for a re-examination of the decision by a different panel of Parole Board members, and to apply to the Federal Court for a review if he feels that he is not being treated fairly.

Following its review and hearing the Board will decide if there are reasonable grounds to believe that the inmate would commit an act of violence while under mandatory supervision. If so, the Board will be empowered to order that the inmate not be so released and remain in the penitentiary until the expiry of the full sentence or until the detention order is lifted. Lifting the order would reinstate the balance of the mandatory supervision period. Should the Board decide that it would only be safe to release an inmate under strict conditions, it would be able to require such conditions to be met before allowing the release to take place. These conditions could include residence in a community-based residential facility operated under a private or public auspices, including low security penitentiary facilities usually referred to as community correction centres.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these measures will enable us to fill a gap by providing the correctional system with the possibility of singling out potentially dangerous inmates and preventing their release on parole, or of releasing them under mandatory supervision under very strict conditions.

[English]

They will do so while fully protecting the rights of inmates not to be treated arbitrarily or capriciously where their liberty is at stake. While it would be vain to hope that all potentially dangerous inmates can be identified, or that all violence by released inmates can be prevented, these measures will ensure that we are able to effectively intervene when there are reasonable grounds to anticipate violent conduct during the sentence that it is our responsibility to administer. Although the number of such cases may be few, the additional protection this will offer to the public will be significant.

I think it is appropriate for me to digress briefly at this point to say that I am new to my responsibilities and am looking forward to having a chance to learn more about them as I go along. I am not a lawyer, as was mentioned at the time I was appointed. I am new to the criminal justice system. I hope that on behalf of the people of Canada I will be able to bring a fresh perspective to the criminal justice system. Most importantly, I hope to be able to represent some of the concerns that are felt by ordinary Canadians with regard to violent crime. What is significant to me, Mr. Speaker, and to the people that each of us in the House of Commons represents, is that in a democracy like ours the most basic liberty that we have is the freedom from violent crime. The most basic responsibility that each of us has as a member of this House is to speak up on behalf of innocent Canadians, people who are guilty of no crimes, people whose lives or safety could be placed in danger if we were not to act.

It is always essential in any measures which are taken in the field of correctional institutions or penal law that there be checks and balances put in place to ensure the basic civil liberties of all people in the system. We believe that these measures in no way derogate from that responsibility, but we believe as well that it is essential to never forget that our most basic responsibility is to assure innocent people the freedom from violent crime. As long as I am Solicitor General of Canada that will remain my highest priority. I make that undertaking to the people who we represent.

The second major feature of this Bill also applies to those inmates identified by the first criterion I have mentioned, that is, conviction for one of the offences contained in the schedule to the Bill. Inmates falling into this category who are not found to pose an imminent risk of violence, and who are released on mandatory supervision, will be given only one chance to succeed. If that first release is revoked for any reason, be it a new offence or breach of a condition, they will not be released on mandatory supervision again during that sentence.

At the present time inmates who have their mandatory supervision revoked begin to earn remission again as soon as they are readmitted to penitentiary. They may, therefore, sometimes be released more than once during the same sentence leading to what has been termed the "revolving door syndrome". It is difficult to justify the risk of giving inmates, who have committed violent crimes and then demonstrated an inability to successfully readjust to the responsibilities of the free community, more than one such opportunity.

We accept that society at large must take risks and that our goal must be the rehabilitation of people convicted of offences under the law. However, we also have the responsibility to provide for the protection of the public at large. Having given that opportunity to someone who has been convicted of a serious offence, the onus is then on him or her to prove worthy of the trust which society has vested in them.

The foregoing elements of the Bill are designed to deal more effectively with inmates who are judged to pose an exceptional danger to the public. The third major component is, on the other hand, aimed at those who are considered to be exceptionally good risks. The Bill will require the Parole Board to review and grant a hearing in person to every inmate earlier in his sentence than at present. This will not alter existing limits on parole eligibility in any way. It will only require that the Parole Board grant a full review and hearing in every case when the first eligibility date is reached. This will occur, in most cases, after one-sixth of the sentence is served, rather than one-third as is now the case. By these means the best risks can be identified and granted some form of conditional release as early as possible consistent with public protection. Even those who are not considered ready for release will be given guidance early in their sentence as to what is expected of them so that if they choose, they can begin to work toward the objectives that will lead to their eventual conditional release.

I believe that taken together these measures form a balanced package that should lead to a more rational correctional system that directs scarce resources to where they are most needed, namely the more secure and more costly environment of the penitentiary for those who pose a high risk of violence, and supervised community based programs for those who pose a low risk of violence and a higher likelihood of a successful return to the community and to a law-abiding lifestyle.

The balancing and rationalizing character of this Bill is very important to avoid unacceptable human and monetary costs while protecting the safety of the public and the rights of offenders. It was astonishing to me to discover, upon becoming Solicitor General, that today it costs on average over $40,000 a year for every inmate maintained in a penitentiary whereas it costs just over $4,000 to supervise one parolee in the community. Moreover, many argue that the longer one spends in prison the more difficult is his eventual transition back to the community.

On both grounds, correctional and fiscal, it makes good sense to discriminate as effectively as possible. The good risks who stand the best chance of a successful return to society should be placed in community programs as early as possible with all the support and supervision that they require. The high risks who are potentially dangerous should, on the other hand, be kept in secure custody as long as they are under sentence. These measures will help us to do so more effectively than is the case at present.

Some critics of the correctional system have advocated the simple abolition of mandatory supervision because of its purported failure. The huge costs of such a proposal and the relative success of the program make it clear that this would not be a justifiable option at this time. Abolition of mandatory supervision or, in other words, the elimination of release due to earned remission, would effectively increase by one-third the sentence length of all inmates serving a definite term and not release on full parole. Such a categorical approach would punish the deserving along with the undeserving. About 3,000 inmates would be affected each year, half of whom now complete mandatory supervision successfully. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it could lead to the construction of as many as six new penitentiaries at a capital cost of about $50 million each in addition to millions of dollars in annual operating expenses.

Those who would argue that this is a justifiable cost in view of the protection that it offers often do not recognize that of the 50 per cent who have their mandatory supervision revoked, about half or 25 per cent of the total have committed no new offence, but have simply broken a condition. In these cases the revocation is a preventative measure taken by the Parole Board to avoid the commission of a crime as the end result of deteriorating adjustment of the parolee. Indeed, of the total number of inmates released on mandatory supervision, 25 per cent commit a new offence while still under sentence but only 2.7 per cent commit an offence involving violence and another 3.3 per cent commit robbery; for a total of 6.6 per cent of the total if we lump these two categories together.

The costs and the inequities involved in such a categorical approach outweigh the benefits and has therefore been rejected. In my view, the measures contained in Bill C-67 make such better sense since they are aimed at identifying those inmates from whom society clearly requires protection, and in providing mechanisms for protection from them for as long as legally possible while not interfering with the majority who give no indication of posing an exceptionally high risk.

[Translation]

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think that the measures I have just outlined will enable us to correct some of the most obvious and criticized deficiencies of the present system of parole under mandatory supervision. Yet they will not in any way curtail the rights of inmates, no more than they will unfairly penalize those inmates who are obviously not prone to violence.

They will offer Canadians better protection against delinquents who can rightfully be expected to resort to violence, yet without having to dramatically increase expenditure as would be the case if we were to apply such measures indiscriminately to all inmates.

[English]

I believe that it is a fair, rational and balanced package that I am eager to have reviewed in committee. I would also indicate today, as I did yesterday with Bill C-65, that there are provisions in the Bill which provide for the Governor in Council to make regulations. In those instances where that provision is included in the Bill, I will see to it that the Government moves a motion to insert the magic formula of "by order" to ensure those regulations are considered to be statutory instruments, are published and are made available to the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. I have already received certain constructive representations from interested members of the public and professional groups and welcome similar observations from Members of the House on whom I urge speedy passage of this much needed Bill.

Looking back on my own responsibilities as Minister of National Revenue and the measures which the Government took in terms of bringing down a declaration of rights for taxpayers for Canadians for the first time and measures we took to build into the Income Tax Act provisions to ensure that innocent people are treated with decency and respect, I think it demonstrates the commitment of the Government and perhaps all Members of Parliament to ensure that innocent people have their rights fully respected. We hope to continue that philosophy throughout my tenure as Solicitor General, to ensure that the rights of the accused are properly protected, that we recognize that they do have rights and those people who are incarcerated in penal institutions are fully respected as well.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), is in the House. I watched with interest on Sunday as he and his colleagues were leaving Mont St. Marie where they were having a meeting. The news media indicated that his Party would begin to reopen a theme that it used during the course of the last election campaign—speaking up for ordinary people. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is for ordinary people that all of us on both sides of the House must speak. I say in particular that I believe that the ordinary person is honest, that he is law abiding and innocent and he deserves to have his rights fully protected by the Government.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to interrupt but I really believe it is important that the Hon. Minister include women in his terminology. Perhaps he would say "he and she".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member knows that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Beatty: Members on this side of the House respect the rights of both men and women and recognize that both men and women are honest and law abiding. It is precisely for honest men and honest women that we are bringing in this legislation. We believe that the most basic right that any Canadian has—and it is nowhere more evident than in violence against women—is to be protected from violent crime. Our obligation on both sides of the House in speaking up for ordinary Canadians is to see that honest, law abiding people have their rights respected and are protected from violent crime. It is for that reason that I believe the provisions of Bill C-67 deserve the support of members of all sides of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, allow me now to speak to Bill C-68 entitled an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prison and Reformatories Act and the Criminal Code.

Unlike the provisions of Bill C-67, these are housekeeping amendments designed to clarify the calculation and administration of sentences, and to facilitate the operations of the Correctional Service of Canada, the National Parole Board and the provincial correctional institutions.

[English]

The last significant amendments to the Parole Act, Penitentiary Act and Prisons and Reformatories Act were made in 1977. Oversights made at that time, changing circumstances and concerns that have arisen with experience require amendments to clarify, consolidate and correct the statutes.

Some of the amendments proposed in Bill C-68 have appeared with more substantive amendments in previous Bills which were not adopted by Parliament. Many of the amendments reflect longstanding concerns of provincial Governments which we are pleased to be able to rectify. All of the amendments are designed to correct oversights and deficiencies in the correctional law statutes, and contribute to the efficient, orderly and fair operation of federal and provincial correctional programs.

I would like to highlight for the House examples of the type of amendments which we are proposing under each Act. First, I refer to the Parole Act, which provides for the calculation of sentences for inmates in federal penitentiaries, as well as for the release of these inmates on parole or under mandatory supervision. Since its proclamation in 1959, the Parole Act has been subjected to periodic amendments, largely initiated in response to immediate pressures and events. The Board has grown from five decision-makers to close to 100 permanent and temporary members; from a centralized establishment in Ottawa to one stretching from Vancouver to Moncton; from the provision of parole reviews on paper, to hearings providing an array of procedural safeguards; from almost no judicial scrutiny, to a heavy caseload of litigation. In many cases, correctional authorities are attempting to cope with the current situation with an inadequate and out of date framework of legislation and regulations. The amendments to the Parole act contained in Bill C-68 do not attempt to address long-term problems, problems which are now undergoing comprehensive review. Rather, these amendments address urgent and long delayed matters of technical but nonetheless significant concern.

Of primary concern with respect to the Parole Act which Bill C-68 addresses is that of ensuring that sentences of inmates confined in federal penitentiaries are calculated so as to accurately reflect the intent of the judge who sentenced the offender. Section 14 of the Parole Act was originally enacted to facilitate the administration of sentences by correctional authorities. The section attempts to achieve that purpose by deeming different terms of imprisonment which were imposed either at the same sittings of court or at separate occasions, and for which there would normally be different parole eligibility dates and release dates, to constitute one single sentence for which there is only one parole eligibility date and one release date. I emphasize that the deeming provision does not modify the duration of the sentences imposed by the courts.

Mr. Robinson: Explain.

Mr. Beatty: I was hoping that my hon. friend would ask me to explain because I have done my homework on that. The concern we are trying to address with this particular provision arose from an instance where an individual received two separate sentences for two separate offences. As a result of a provision in the law which was a technicality, the courts found that this individual, between the completion of his incarceration for his first sentence and incarceration for his second sentence, was allowed out on parole in the meantime. It was a provision which, on its face, made very little sense. Although it is not a problem which has cropped up regularly throughout Canada, we felt it was something that should be addressed to ensure that we would not have the anomaly of an individual being released as a result of a technicality in the law in between the serving of two prison sentences for offences which had already taken place, already been tried by the courts and for which he had already been sentenced to prison. Can I give my hon. friend any further elaboration?

Mr. Robinson: No.

Mr. Beatty: That may exhaust my knowledge of it, anyway.

The single sentence it creates begins on the earliest day on which any of those sentences commenced and ends on the final day of the last to expire.

Although there is no doubt that Section 14 has been of great assistance in the administration of the majority of sentences, as I have already stated, its present wording suffers from certain shortcomings which limit its application and prevent correctional authorities from giving the full and proper effect of sentences imposed by the courts.

• (1640)

For example, under the present Section 14, situations have arisen where a judge has sentenced an offender to a substantial term of imprisonment only to find that the offender is immediately eligible for, or indeed is released on, parole due to the effect of combining the new sentence with the old. Such anomalous results are a source of great concern both to the public and to correctional authorities, and appropriate amendments are contained in Bill C-68 to correct these unintended effects in sentence calculation.

Now we get to the really meaty elements of the Bill. I know my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby will be anxious to follow this with fascination.

Other amendments to the Parole Act will not so much correct oversights as they will simply eliminate redundancies and obsolete provisions. For example, the definition of "magistrate" will be deleted. The substantive section to which it related was repealed by previous legislation. Similarly, portions of the Penitentiary Act will be transferred to the Parole Act, so that all matters pertaining to the jurisdiction of the National Parole Board will be found under one statute.

Some of the amendments will facilitate the day to day operations of the National Parole Board by clarifying certain sections of the Parole Act. For example, amendments to Section 3 of the Act will clarify the authority of the Executive Committee of the Board to vote on parole hearings or reviews. Other amendments will provide specific regulation-making authority for certain matters, instead of the current statutory structure which provides only a general "basket clause" to authorize the enactment of regulations. This can, at times, leave in doubt the authority to enact certain regulations.

The second group of amendments in Bill C-68 pertain to the Penitentiary Act, the Act which provides for the administration of federal penitentiaries. Again, these amendments do not embody substantive changes in policy, but rather attempt to correct some long-standing technical problems.

I know that my colleague from Burnaby has long been vexed by the question of the name of the Canadian Penitentiary Service. For that reason, we will be changing that name to the Correctional Service of Canada. This will reflect in statute the amalgamation of the Canadian Penitentiary Service and the National Parole Service. This amalgamation took place eight years ago. This long overdue amendment for which the Hon. Member has fought long and hard will permit the official use of the designation "Correctional Service of Canada", which has been used in practice since 1977.

Similarly, another amendment will designate all officers and employees of Correctional Service Canada as "members" of the service. The 1960 Penitentiary Act referred to the two former categories of employees of the service, however, the basis for this distinction has completely disappeared with time. Confusion has resulted in the continued reference to the two categories in the Act, which this amendment will now resolve.

A related amendment will restrict the designation of peace officer status to only those members of the service so designated by the Commissioner of Corrections. Under the current legislation, all officers of the service are automatically designated as peace officers. Such a sweeping provision in our view, is unnecessary and in some cases counter-productive for those members of the service engaged in rehabilitation, rather than strictly custodial functions.

While amendments such as these are designed to facilitate the operation of the Correctional Service of Canada, other amendments will have a more direct impact on inmates in assisting their reintegration into society. For example, a section will be added to the Act to enable an offender who has been released on parole or under mandatory supervision to be lodged, temporarily and at his or her own request, in a penitentiary. This provision is considered desirable primarily during times when an offender may be experiencing difficulty while on conditional release. This would provide the offender with a short period of relief when the stress of returning to society may be compelling him or her to less constructive options for coping.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-68 features several amendments to the Prisons and Reformatories Act. This federal legislation deals with questions of administration of sentences to be served by inmates of provincial correctional institutions. There are close ties between federal and provincial jurisdictions with respect to the implementation of correctional programs and I am pleased about the excellent spirit of cooperation between the provincial Governments at the operational level when there is interaction between the institutions and the probation and parole programs.

As well, we share a number of common endeavours with the provinces and we work in close cooperation with them in such fields as crime prevention and assistance services to victims of criminal acts.

[English]

In this light, Bill C-68 contains amendments to the Prisons and Reformatories Act to deal with a variety of provincial requests, some of which have been outstanding for many years. In the coming months, suggestions for additional amendments to the Act will also be considered. Throughout these activities we will seek to reduce to a minimum any unnecessary involvement in provincial corrections while seeking mutually beneficial joint action.

As one example of the amendments proposed by Bill C-68 in this regard, provincial correctional authorities have requested a clarification in statute of the status of inmates while they are temporarily outside the correctional institution. This would include, for example, inmates on work details outside the institution or inmates who require emergency medical treatment at a hospital. In consequence, we are proposing a new section in the Act which would clarify that such inmates are in custody for the purposes of this Act and any other Act of Parliament.

Some of the amendments to this statute deal more with terminology. For example, the use of terms "rules" and "regulations" will be made consistent throughout the Act. The repeal of obsolete provisions relating to the forfeiture of statutory remission will reflect previous changes made to the Act as long ago as 1978.

An amendment to Section 10 of the Act will change the terminology of the section to accord with the terminology and age provisions of the Young Offenders Act. The provisions for holding young persons separately from adults in provincial institutions will also be made consistent with the Young Offenders Act.

Fourth, one amendment will be made to the Criminal Code in consequence of the amendment to the Penitentiary Act respecting the limited designation of certain members as peace officers.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that these proposed amendments embody a number of long-needed clarifications and corrections to the statutes in question. Their timely passage through this House will facilitate the fair and efficient administration of the federal and provincial correctional systems.

These two Bills represent an important beginning in the Government's efforts to rationalize and modernize correctional programs. They deal with some of the most pressing and apparent problems. I am confident they will lead to a more efficient system and more secure environment for all Canadians.

I thank my colleagues for their attentiveness during my remarks. I look forward to listening to theirs and also to receiving suggestions from them and from interested Canadians at the committee stage.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on debate of these two Bills that have been grouped, Bill C-67 and Bill C-68. I intend in the course of my remarks on these Bills to address initially the question of the underlying objectives set out by the Minister in these Bills. I intend to focus, I might say, on Bill C-67. While a number of the subjects addressed by the Minister in his learned discourse on Bill C-68 were obviously of vital concern, I believe the issues raised by Bill C-67 are so fundamental and so important in the criminal justice system that I intend to focus my remarks on Bill C-67.

I will briefly go through the background objectives of Bill C-67, Mr. Speaker. I propose then to examine the history of mandatory supervision, what it was that lead to mandatory supervision, how it has worked in practice and briefly touch upon some of the studies that have been done in terms of the effectiveness of mandatory supervision, and mention concerns that have been raised by the community and by prisoners. I will then turn to the changes proposed by the Minister to the system of mandatory supervision. In fact, there are two major areas of change dealing with what has been called the revolving door syndrome, and as well institutionalizing a system of what has been called gating.

I intend to deal with what we in this Party believe to be some very serious problems with the Minister's proposals in these areas. I intend to set out in some detail our concerns with respect to their proposals. Finally, in the time remaining, I hope to be able to discuss alternatives which we in the New Democratic Party have for dealing with what is a very legitimate and real concern on the part of the community with respect to violence, in particular to the victims of crime who are too often overlooked in our system of criminal justice.

As I said, the purpose of this Bill is set out, and was clearly set out by the Minister, to address the concern of the community respecting the revolving door syndrome, that is the syndrome whereby prisoners who are on mandatory supervision may have their mandatory supervision revoked, be returned to prison, serve a period of time, come out, have their mandatory supervision revoked, go back and so on. The first objective of the Bill is to put an end to that and to provide, where mandatory supervision is revoked, that there will be no further remission of sentence. The second and very important objective of the Bill is the provision which in effect would grant a sweeping new power to the National Parole Board to designate certain individuals, at the time they become eligible for mandatory supervision, as individuals who should be denied their liberty, denied mandatory supervision and held, in effect, until the remainder of their term.

I suppose one could ask what is objectionable about those provisions or what we feel is harmful about provisions which, on their face, appear to be in accord with the concerns of the community. It will be my submission that far from responding in a real way to the concerns of the community, the Bill really provides an illusion of security and an illusion of safety to the community when in fact precisely the opposite will be the effect. I am not only speaking on my own behalf and on behalf of members of my caucus. However, I think it is fair to say that it is virtually the unanimous view of those who are active in the criminal justice system and the correctional service, barring, I might say, the police. I believe it is only the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police which advocated these sweeping measures. All others, particularly those involved in after-care, including the John Howard Society, the Canadian Association for the Prevention of Crime, the Elizabeth Fry Society and so on, have condemned this approach.

Why have they condemned it? They have condemned it because instead of reducing the level of violent crime in our communities, the approach which is being taken by the Government will in fact increase that level and will increase the danger to those innocent men and women about whom the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) spoke earlier. The proposals will result in a dramatic increase in the population of our federal prison system at a time when that system is already seriously overcrowded. Not only will that overcrowding lead to significantly increased tension in the prison system, which makes it more difficult for prison guards and results in increased violence, both prisoner to prisoner and also with respect to those who work in the institutions, but it will lead to a significant increase in cost to Canadian taxpayers. I would have thought that the Government would have looked more closely at this proposal before recommending to Parliament a scheme which will dramatically increase the cost to Canadians of operating the federal penitentiary system. My friend, the Solicitor General, has already pointed out that it costs some $40,000 per year to incarcerate a prisoner in that federal system. Indeed, it costs about $120,000 to build a new prison cell. One must contrast that to a cost of some $3,000 or $3,500 per year for after-care out in the community.

I have mentioned the concerns with respect to an increase in danger to our community, an increase in violent crime, the problem of overcrowding and the problem of a greatly increased budget for prisons. As well I would note that this proposal will result in reducing the good behaviour incentive for prisoners within the federal prison system. In effect it cuts back substantially on earned remission. The reality is that there will be an air of insecurity within the institutions. It is for that reason that prison wardens recommended against the kind of proposal which is being put forward by the Solicitor General to Parliament. The views of prison wardens in this area, those who are on the front lines, so to speak, should be given very careful consideration. Certainly they should be invited to appear before the legislative committee which will study this matter.

Finally, this Bill will do a profound injustice to prisoners and to those who are serving sentences in the community. While it is often unpopular to speak of injustices to that community, we must bear in mind the remarks of Windston Churchill many decades ago when he said in effect that the mark of civilization in a community was not how it treated the elite in its society or those in positions of privilege, but how it treated the poor, the downtrodden sand, in particular, how it treated prisoners.

In light of the concerns which I have outlined, I want to examine the proposals of the Government. There are two major thrusts to the Bill. First, it would allow the National Parole Board to refuse mandatory supervision to certain serious offenders who are perceived as a threat to the community. As it stands now, the granting of mandatory supervision is automatic as long as a prisoner has displayed good behaviour during his or her term of imprisonment. At the end of two thirds of the sentence, the granting of mandatory supervision is automatic. This Bill would remove that feature and allow the National Parole Board to attempt to predict future behaviour and to attempt to predict violence.

In seeking this new power from Parliament, the Government and the Solicitor General should bring forward some evidence to back up their suggestion that it is possible to predict violence. In the absence of such evidence, in the absence of evidence indicating that a national parole board or a quasi-judicial body can in fact look at an individual prisoner and say on the basis of observing his or her record that it is in a position to predict violence, of course the Government's argument falls down. I suggest to the Solicitor General that no study, not just in Canada but anywhere else in the world, has shown that it is possible to predict violence in this manner. On this subject the former Liberal Solicitor General commissioned a very exhaustive study of mandatory supervision. A report was prepared and submitted to the Government in November 1980 by a committee which was chaired by Joan Nuffield. That report clearly recommended against any measures which would involve an attempt to predict violence. After an exhaustive review of the evidence and research studies, the report found that there was no basis to the suggestion that that could in fact be done.

There is a more fundamental and a more basic concern than the one to which I have just referred. This Bill overlooks the fact that while those who are predicted as possibly being violent can be held behind bars, they will not be held indefinitely. In fact, in many cases they will be released at the end of their sentences, more bitter and more antagonistic, not having been dealt with in terms of the threat which they pose. They will not be released in a gradual manner with some sort of assistance, but they will be released directly from prison, in some cases directly from maximum security prisons on to the street. That is a threat to our communities which is far greater than the existing system.

I intend in my remarks tomorrow, because I believe it is five o'clock, to continue by addressing some of our very serious concerns with respect to this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed with the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ABORTION PROCEDURES

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake) moved that Bill C-226, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to rise today on behalf of many of my constituents of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake in northwestern Saskatchewan and many of my friends across Canada to address the issue of abortion in Canadian society. This issue has had an impact on many Canadians and has been a painfully divisive and often controversial subject. Abortion has divided emotions and opinions. It has pitted often extreme points of view against one another. Beyond this, abortion has resulted in at least 65,000 human beings not being born every year in Canada and the latest figures place the estimate at close to 80,000 abortions per year. In other words, every week, 1,500 unborn children are aborted in Canada.

Regardless of one's view, abortion profoundly affects lives, the lives of living Canadians and the lives of those who one day will live. It is one of the most important and compelling struggles facing all of us.

Abortion is a medical, ethical, legal and theological issue touching all facets of human existence. Above all, abortion is a political issue that must be addressed by politicians in this Parliament. It is my hope that in this Private Members' Hour, politicians can address this matter in a non-partisan, constructive fashion. It is for this reason that I have proposed Bill C-226 for discussion.

What does this Bill propose? Presently, under Section 251(4) abortion is illegal except in cases where the life or health of a woman may be endangered or may likely be endangered. Bill C-226 proposes to amend the legislation to remove the words "or health" from this particular provision. As a result, this would make abortion less available than it presently is. I hope that in this hour, we may have a discussion on this issue and that I may be able to say why I feel the Criminal Code should be amended to make abortion less available.

The legal background of abortion in Canada predates Confederation itself. In 1803 in what was later to become the Criminal Code, the law that governs Canada today, a prohibition on abortion existed. This traced its roots back to England in the year 1603 when British law originally codified centuries of convention, convention that had established that abortion was illegal, wrong and that society should not accept abortion as an alternative.

Section 251 of Canada's Criminal Code has remained essentially the same for all of these years. It remained the same until the year 1969. In that year, Canadian law was amended to add three subsections to Section 251 of the Criminal Code. The subsections allowed certain immunities from the illegal nature of abortion. Abortion was still illegal following the amendments of 1969 but it was permissible if it was performed in an accredited hospital by an accredited doctor with the approval of a therapeutic abortion committee if that committee has approved an abortion certificate. The certificate was to be approved because it would be proven to the therapeutic abortion committee that the mother's life or health was endangered or likely to be endangered.

Bill C-226 proposes to address the Section of this law that deals with the endangerment of health. What constitutes the meaning of health? Most of us would interpret a literal meaning of health to be a sense of physical well-being. If physical health were the interpretation, it would clearly specify the acceptability or non-acceptability of abortion. However, health has been interpreted in many different ways.

The Health and Welfare Committee of this Parliament, when it studied the amendments to the abortion legislation in 1969, began hearings into the suggested changes in 1967. Obviously I was not a Member of this House then but I have found that on March 13, 1968, the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare made its report to Parliament. At that time, there was concern expressed about the meaning of the word "health". A partial transcript of the Committee Report reads as follows:

> There has been a great deal of concern over the definition of health in the proposed amendments and in the Committee's interim report . . . the Committee feels that a simple amendment to the proposed legislation should establish that a clear and direct serious threat to the mother's health must be present.

The fear of the committee at that time, a fear that was later borne out by Canadian legal and medical history, was that the word "health" could be interpreted in the same way as the World Health Organization interprets it. The WHO definition of health reads:

> Health is a state of complete physical, mental and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity.

Health by that definition became a rather ambiguous description of what many of us would take to be physical health. In defining such a large parameter including areas of social well-being, the health provision made abortion more available. If health was well-being and if that well-being could be demonstrably proven to be threatened to a therapeutic abortion committee, an abortion would be granted by that committee.

The Badgley Commission dealt with the question of therapeutic abortion committees. In testimony before the Badgley Commission, it was shown that up to 80 per cent of abortions were being approved for reasons other than physical health. Obviously this ambiguous meaning has come to allow an unacceptably high number of abortions per year.

Just how many abortions take place in Canada and just how many take place because of this ambiguous term "health"? It is obviously difficult to assess in a statistical way how many are allowed through the interpretation of health, but I think we can look at the over-all statistics. The Badgley Commission, using a system of averaging and survey, reported that before 1969, fewer than 10,000 abortions were performed per year in Canada. Since the amendments of 1969 and the inclusion of this controversial word "health", according to the 1982 census, there were 66,400 abortions performed that year. That is down slightly from the late and mid-1970s but on average, in excess of 65,000 abortions are performed per year. In some circles, it is estimated that if one takes into account the entire number of therapeutic abortions now being performed this year in Canadian hospitals, the number could indeed approach 80,000. In other words, every day that Canadians go to work, almost 400 pregnancies are ended.

Was this the intention of politicians back in 1969? The then Minister of Justice, now the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), is by all accounts, a very honourable man. The Prime Minister of the day was well regarded by Members of this House. Surely it could not have been the intention of the Leader of the Official Opposition who was the Minister of Justice at the time to allow, by an ambiguity, a law that would allow abortions to increase six and sevenfold, a law that in a sense became a loophole.

Both in committee and in debate on the floor of the House of Commons, many politicians thought that by defining life or health, they were being called upon to legalize a few hundred abortions that were being performed anyway. Many of these politicians considered that there were serious medical reasons and by putting the words "or health" in the particular legislation that they were simply making valid what had gone on for some time.

Also, we should take into account the context of the times. In the intervening years between 1967 and 1969, the argument, when one debated abortion, was largely women's rights competing against the rights of an undifferentiated mass of cells. That was the argument that was often heard in those times. Later on, I think we will see that both the terms of the argument and the magnitude and importance of that argument has changed somewhat in the intervening years.

In 1969, did politicians have insight? Did politicians envisage that by amending that particular legislation they would, in a sense, be opening that door to this number of abortions? Recently, a distinguished colleague from this House, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who was here in 1969, addressed a meeting here in Ottawa. In that address the hon. gentleman, when speaking about 1969, said, and I quote:

> Are we prepared to recognize that our laws must accord intrinsic worth and equal value to the life of every human being regardless of its stage of development or condition?

He went on on to say:

> I believe that all Members agonized over this question. In the collective wisdom of the House, a law was passed. It is not perfect, and it has not worked perfectly. No one is totally satisfied with it.

The issue of abortion, as will be touched on doubtlessly by other speakers, often involves very separate but inter-related issues. I would like to deal briefly with three of them. The first is the viability of the foetus; or, when does life begin? The second issue is freedom of choice. The third issue is: Every child a wanted child. This is what I call the theory of wantedness.

With respect to the viability of the foetus, the perception and the reality of this question has probably changed most dramatically since the years 1967 to 1969 through the advent of medical and scientific research. One recalls the words of Bernard Nathenson, an American doctor who was one of the founders of the National Abortion Rights Action League of New York, who has since become an outspoken critic of abortion, after being a leading physician at the leading edge and performing a number of abortions. Dr. Nathenson spoke of what became the turning point for him. It was what is called the study of foetology. In foetology, physicians are able to perform surgery and do comprehensive medical work on a child who is still a foetus, who is legally not born, who is within the womb of its mother. Dr. Nathenson has recounted, often stirringly, about the large hospital where he performed abortions where, on one floor, physicians at the leading adge of foetology were doing research and treatment on children within the wombs of their mothers, while on the floor below Dr. Nathenson and his colleagues were performing abortions on foetuses who were at the same age of foetal development.

If we look at one single year, 30 babies in Canada were relieved of hydrocephalic pressure on the skull, a build-up of water at the base of the brain. This surgery is performed within the uterus, within the womb of the mother. We can look at something which has gone on for many years, that is, the practice of inter-uterine blood transfusions.

With respect to the point of when does life begin, we must look at the advances in genetics and the advances in work on the beginning of life itself. We see that there are separate chromosome and gene patterns. Based on a preponderance of medical evidence, it is clear that the question of viability, or the question of life, is no longer such a large and looming question as it was in 1969.

Another point I would like to deal with is the freedom of choice. If we think of life as really a collection of choices, with some moderation of restraint or constraint upon us, obviously, all of us in life would like to be free to make choices. The oldest example of this is the English jurist who spoke once about the right of free movement and the right to swing one's arm. One had an unfettered right to swing one's arm; but that right ended at the precise point where the next fellow's nose began. The question of rights and freedom of choice presupposes that the right of one person shall not adversely affect the condition of others. That is a presupposition to any freedom of movement or freedom of choice. Obviously, if we accept that there is a question of life, then surely the right of one person to exercise a choice infringes upon the life of another.

The third point which I wish to touch upon briefly, given the well intentioned nature of this argument, is the theory of wantedness. A well respected group in Canada has as its motto on birth control and planning "Every child a wanted child". That, indeed, is well intentioned. However, the theory wantedness becomes profoundly disturbing when we look at it in the context of: What about the unwanted? Many people in society have not wanted women; and we see the hard work and the many miles ahead on getting true equality for women. We see the exploitive nature of wife battering, of pornography, of abuse against women, because some people do not believe they "want women" to the same extent as they may want others. In post-colonial America, people did not want blacks and that justified slavery. In a Europe of 45 years ago, Nazis did not want Jewish people. That was used as a justification for genocide. So I caution Hon. Members against the theory of wantedness.

If we remove from the Criminal Code Section 251, the section on health, and we leave only the endangerment of life as admissible grounds for abortion, is this acceptable? I believe it is acceptable because the endangerment of life is directly related to the question of physical health. If one's physical health is endangered to the extent that it would endanger a life, then abortion, in my opinion, should be allowed. In this respect, to simply leave the endangerment of life encompasses the original interpretation and meaning of physical health and, obviously, protecting the life of an adult person. If a law can be used to remove a healthy living foetus from a physically life-endangered woman, then medical attempts can be made to save both persons as independent persons. In the case of the foetus which does not survive, then it is, yes, an exercising of rights, but the right to life of a physically endangered adult.

The present abortion law is in need of clarification, definition and substance. In the debate today I think I can say on behalf of all Members of the House from all political Parties that we have philosophical differences. Many Members agree with my amendment. Some suggest an even more restrictive amendment to the present abortion laws. On the other hand, many of my colleagues do not agree with my amendment. They would suggest that abortion be made completely legal. It has not been my intention to further polarize public opinion, or opinion within this Chamber. Further, I do not want to inflame the emotions or temperaments of those who sit in Parliament. However, it is clear we must address this issue.

I ask today that Members think very carefully and thoroughly, not so much about the specifics of this Bill but the adequacy of our present abortion legislation. If this Bill is talked out, which in the parlance of Parliament means that by the end of this hour someone will still speak and, thus, relegate this Bill to the bottom of the Order Paper—and I hope that someone would not be from my own political Party, but I know that it may well in fact happen—then this matter will not likely be heard again in this Parliament. I ask all Members, in conscience, to think carefully about the decision to talk out this Bill. I ask that this Bill be referred to the House of Commons Parliamentary Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. And if an Hon. Member believes that the Bill does not go far enough or should go further, it is in the forum of that committee that there will be an opportunity to examine and thoroughly study the existing legislation and this important issue.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while opinions are certainly divergent and points of view differing, only Members of Parliament can address this most vital issue. By inaction we do a service to no one. By upholding the status quo, we allow an unacceptably high number of abortions to continue to be conducted every single day in this country. Failure to address this issue amounts to standing mute while lives are ruined. Let all Hon. Members of Parliament remember this.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am happy for the opportunity to speak on the motion which has been put forward by my most distinguished colleague. As he may remember, I spoke some months ago in March of this year on a motion not similar but which did deal with the matter of abortion. As I said at that time I did not believe that Private Members' Hour was the appropriate forum in which to discuss a matter which is so difficult and upon which there is a divergence of opinion within the Canadian community. I would suggest to my colleague, therefore, that while this issue is of great importance to the Canadian public, this particular time is not the appropriate time for its discussion.

I would urge my colleagues again to remember that no matter what their views on this issue of abortion, whether they hold to the view of enlarging the scope to enable women to have greater choice or whether they would wish to restrict, as my hon. colleague is suggesting, the right of women to an abortion, we as parliamentarians have a greater responsibility to ensure that there are appropriate educational and counselling facilities for the women of this country. We must put the emphasis on the prevention of unwanted pregnancies rather than having to deal with the situation once it occurs.

I believe my colleagues on all sides of the House would join with me in the belief that this issue has not been addressed fully and adequately. I know from my own experience, as I mentioned back in March, that there are many young people in our society today who do not fully understand the implications of sexuality and of pregnancy. They find themselves in the situation of being pregnant where it would be extremely difficult for them to go through with the pregnancy and, of course, they wish an abortion. I feel if we had greater emphasis on education within the schools, homes and other social institutions of this society and supported the community groups who focus on this need, we would be a lot further ahead.

I would have to speak today against the motion of my dear friend and colleague. I know we agree in many different areas but this, as he said himself, is an area that even within our own Party there are many different points of view. I guess I would disagree with my hon. friend on several points. First, with respect to the justice of the issue itself and, second, on the mood of Canadians with respect to this issue. First, my colleague is suggesting amendments to the Criminal Code which would delete the right of women to have an abortion if it would endanger their health and therefore restrict the rights of women to have an abortion to only those circumstances where there would be an endangerment to life itself. My mind goes back to situations which happened some time ago, before the liberalization of the law as it now stands and I believe that would indeed be a retrogressive step. From my own personal point of view, I would want to see in the future further changes made and that ultimately we could come to a situation where the issue of abortion is removed from the Criminal Code entirely because in my view the issue of whether to continue with a pregnancy or not is the right of the woman in consultation with her physician or others who may be able to provide her with advice and counselling. Ultimately it should be the woman herself who should make that decision. To further restrict what we have now in legislation seems to me to be a dreadful disservice to the women of this country.

I am sure Hon. Members are all aware of the kinds of cases in past history of women seeking abortions and not being able to have them under proper facilities and being subjected to the kitchen tables. I am sure we all remember the tragedies, the maiming and the deaths which resulted under that system. Surely, none of us want to go back to the antiquated system we used to have.

The issue of abortion is not only a woman's issue because I find that both men and women across the country are increasingly coming to support the right of women to make a decision on this issue. I am sure that many of my colleagues read the poll which was reported in June of this year in The Globe and Mail. It indicated that 53 per cent of those Canadians surveyed agreed that every woman who wants an abortion should be able to have one. An even larger majority thought the Government should ensure that there are abortion facilities in areas where hospitals do not currently perform abortions. In fact, that has been an issue raised in the Committee of Equality Rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which I had the honour to sit on. Our present legislation does not meet the criteria of Section 15 of the Charter of Rights because it does not provide equal accessibility to women throughout the country. I think the results of this survey of Canadians support the view that women should have accessibility to facilities in hospitals or in appropriate clinics in order to obtain safe abortions.

There are other interesting comments from this survey as well. When we look at the breakdown of the people who responded to the survey, it is interesting to note that among those with post-high school education, 62 per cent supported the freedom of choice position. That seems, in my opinion, to indicate that as people have the opportunity to become more familiar and more understanding of the issues involved, they are prepared to support the freedom of choice position. People in higher income groups and those living in larger communities tended to be more supportive of choice as well. I think that is understandable, knowing the make-up of Canada and the attitude of Canadians on this issue. The age group which is most likely to be personally affected by abortion, that is, women of 18 to 29 years, were also the most in favour. That is indicative that the women who are most affected by this issue understand and recognize that there should be freedom of choice. Fifty-eight per cent of those in that age group agreed with freedom of choice as compared with only 41 per cent of respondents over 60 years of age.

There was a further question as to when a woman should be able to obtain a legal abortion. Of those surveyed, 78 per cent thought it should be possible if the abortion had been approved by a therapeutic abortion committee, 87 per cent approved if the woman's health was in danger and 93 per cent approved if the woman's life was in danger. I believe one can see from that 87 per cent of those surveyed—and this was a poll taken right across the country—that a woman should be able to have an abortion if her health was in danger. Therefore I do not think the proposal my dear friend is putting forward is consistent with the general attitude of Canadians.

Finally, in this particular report there was something which I found very interesting and perhaps some of my colleagues are not aware of it. Religious differences on access to abortion were not as great as might be expected. Some 60 per cent of Protestants and 57 per cent of Catholics surveyed favoured increased access to abortion facilities. While more Protestants agreed that a woman should be able to obtain an abortion when she wanted one, a high percentage of Catholics, 57 per cent, also took this position. I think that indicates that this is not an issue divided purely on religious lines and we can take heart from that.

Recognizing the concerns in the community my friend represents, and the concerns of many Canadians that there should be some change in the law regarding abortions, I have to say to the Hon. Member that, while he is certainly not alone, there is a big difference in attitude about the changes that should be proposed. He proposes further restrictions. I, and I hope many of my colleagues, see it as being a time to give full consideration to broadening the kinds of facilities in which abortions can be performed. We should work with the provinces on that. As well, we should work to ultimately remove from the Criminal Code the issue of abortion to enable women to make that kind of choice themselves.

To come back to the point I made earlier, a one-hour debate in Private Members' Hour is not sufficient to hear all the views so sincerely held by my colleagues. I am sure that at some future time we will have the opportunity to express our views on this most vital issue. I would like to thank my colleague for bringing this matter to the House today, but I do not propose to support his motion and I ask for the support of my colleagues for the position I have taken.

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-226 introduced by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley). The right to life is one of the basic premises of our society and I share my hon. colleague's views, as I am sure all Hon. Members do, that protection for the unborn is of the utmost importance. This simple statement is of crucial significance, particularly to the abortion debate. It is becoming increasingly apparent that there is a significant decrease in concern for the sanctity of life around the world.

Respect for life has undergone a tragic change in recent years. It has gone from "sacred" status down to "important". In society today it is more and more widely held that life should be protected but only until some other "important" consideration comes along. The obvious examples of this today are the increasing popularity of concepts like euthanasia and abortion on demand. Some people today say it is all right to have an abortion if you have an important reason. This kind of excuse has been broadened to include the most trifling inconvenience. Obviously when people say life is sacred, they mean completely different things.

The point of this Bill, which I wholeheartedly support, is that most Canadians believe life is sacred. Unless this belief is reflected in legislation, we will be guilty of raising a generation which has no conception of lasting values. They will have been sacrified for expedience and convenience. Society's laws are always a reflection of the moral norms which anchor our society. The abortion rights' movement has reversed this relationship. By putting something into law they can restructure our values. By legalizing abortion on demand they can create a new morality for our society. Whenever society believes it can create its own morality, it is in trouble. The most obvious result of this self-reliance is irresponsibility to any sense of value altogether. History has shown us that rebellion, disorder and confusion inevitably follow. We must focus today on responsibility, not on rights.

This excellent piece of legislation will have the opposite effect. It will restore the legal framework of our society to a state consistent with the values which have formed the bedrock of not only our society but every society which comes to mind. This legislation confers respect on the most important moral law by giving meaning to the expression we all uphold, that of the sanctity of life. It seems ironic that in a day and age when we are spending billions of dollars to save lives through medical research, we are at the same time permitting the murder of thousands and thousands of unborn infants.

I would like to conclude by once again thanking the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake for sponsoring this excellent and timely piece of legislation. I hope Members of this House will take the opportunity they have to make this most significant improvement to our Criminal Code by giving their support for this Bill and allowing it to go to committee.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise and debate this issue in the House, even though it may be for the hundredth time that I or Members of the NDP have spoken on a motion from a Member from one of the other parties which is basically an anti-choice motion. However, I still feel it is worth it. We are a Parliament which reasons and it is worth continuing to talk in favour of choice on abortion.

It seems to me that the sentiment which very often motivates people to introduce Bills such as this is not dissimilar from the sentiment which motivates us to vigorously support choice. We both feel we are upholding certain broad principles and I guess the disagreement comes as to who is most faithfully upholding those principles. For example, we are all agreed that we do our best to represent our constituents and their views in this House, and that is a principle of representative democracy. As the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) has just indicated by citing the very thorough polling which has been done on this matter, a large majority of Canadians favour choice. Indeed, they would like to see Section 251 removed entirely from the Criminal Code so that the termination of a pregnancy is a matter for the woman and her doctor to decide. On the specific item that the Hon. Member is trying to remove from the present Section 251, namely that a woman could no longer secure a therapeutic abortion if her health was endangered, 87 per cent of those polled said that they thought health should continue to be a criterion for therapeutic abortion. I do not suppose that we all know exactly what our constituents think about this matter, but if 87 per cent of the people in Canada would be opposed to the motion that the Hon. Member brings forward today, then I think it would be right to argue that the principle upon which he and I agree, namely, that we want to be good representatives of our constituents, would be best carried out by keeping health in Section 251. It is interesting that there is no significant statistical distinction between the wishes of Catholic and Protestant men and women on this matter. Sixty per cent of protestants and 57 per cent of Catholics want to have the continuation of important grounds for enabling a woman to secure a therapeutic abortion.

Another matter upon which I think most Members would agree is that we are also elected to protect the fundamental rights and freedoms of all Canadians regardless of religious belief, race, colour, sex, and, I would hope, sexual orientation. In order to protect those fundamental rights and freedoms we cannot impose upon one group in society the moral values and beliefs of another. I am sure that the Hon. Member, who has left now, if he were here—

Mr. Gormley: I am still here.

Ms. Jewett: I am sorry, I will look at him then. I am sure that he would say he would agree that we must not allow one group in society to impose its moral values and beliefs on another. However, when it comes to defining more precisely what they mean by that, I would say that he, and others like him, are imposing upon myself, and others like me, a certain set of moral values and beliefs. They are, in the course of doing so, robbing me, and others like myself, of my fundamental rights and freedoms, including the freedom of choice.

In fact, if we look at the current law on abortion, Section 251, we see that it in itself is an attempt to legislate morality. It is an attempt to tell one group of people, women, what values and beliefs they must adhere to on the matter of choice, and to limit their choice in a rather narrow way, which the Hon. Member now wants to limit even more on the matter of abortion. In the process it violates the fundamental right of many women in Canada to equality before and under the law, and the right to the equal protection and benefit of the law without discrimination as is defined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Some Members may remember the very hard battle fought by women to win this provision.

As Norma Scarborough of the Canadian Abortion Rights Action League pointed out to the parliamentary Committee on Equality Rights in June of this year:

> Our law discriminates by limiting a woman's right to control her fertility. A man suffers no such restrictions on his reproductive choice . . . Further, the law treats a medical procedure that pertains only to women in a way it treats no other medical procedure. Any man is free to decide on medical treatment in consultation with his physician, but a pregnant woman has no such freedom in making the abortion decision.

We have often pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that since 1971 the Canadian Medical Association has urged the Government to repeal Section 251 so that abortion will be a decision between a woman and her doctor. Since 1971 we in the New Democratic Party have been calling for the same, as have individual members of the Liberal and Conservative Parties, but unfortunately it has only been a minority in each of those Parties. We feel that decisions about the moral question of abortions are as much a fundamental right of individual women as the moral or religious beliefs of anyone else in our society.

It has been particularly good today to listen again to the Hon. Member for Capilano. Often in these debates over the past many years there have been no women speaking other than those in this Party. It has been refreshing to hear another woman speak in favour of choice on abortion. I remember one debate we had a few years ago in which all the speakers except one were men. I listened to the whole debate and began to get the feeling—although I do not ordinarily feel particularly feminist on this issue—that men were regulating something in the lives of all women that was not up to them to regulate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) on a point of order.

Mr. Gormley: I very much do not want to interrupt the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), so I will endeavour to deal with this quickly. I noticed that in the printing of my Bill there is an indication reference that the Bill is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. At the end of June there were changes to the orders dealing with legislative committees. As a matter of a technicality, I would like the reprinting of the Bill to indicate that it should be referred to a legislative committee. Would it be possible, Mr. Speaker, to have the consent of the House to agree to that? Then we could continue where we left off with the Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for the Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) points out that he does not want to interrupt his colleague, but he is obviously not doing a very good job of that. He seeks the unanimous consent of the House to amend the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Ms. Mitchell: No.

Ms. Jewett: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): There is not unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

● (1750)

Ms. Jewett: Mr. Speaker, before the point of order raised by my friend, I was speaking about listening to these debates over the years and the feeling one had as a woman that men were trying to run and control an issue relating to women and their reproductive rights and that they really were not entitled to do so. I feel similar grief when I see a film like The Silent Scream which claims to depict the reactions of a foetus to abortion. I cannot help but feel that this is nothing more than shocking and alarmist propaganda which is very damaging to our ability to make informed, intelligent and reasonable decisions on this issue. As has been pointed out by people more qualified than I, the film is medically very inaccurate. Furthermore, it grossly misrepresents the work of organizations like the Planned Parenthood Federation.

If there is one thing that we want to do, it is to prevent unwanted pregnancies by assuring that women, particularly young women today, do not in fact become pregnant if they and their partner do not wish to have a child. Therefore, the Government should contribute a great deal more financial support to organizations such as Planned Parenthood of Canada. However, in the last two years of the Liberal Government there were cuts to Planned Parenthood and very recently the present Government cut 12.5 per cent from the budget of Planned Parenthood. The money was given to another organization that promotes only one method of birth control, namely the so-called natural method, when Planned Parenthood has been doing effective research and counselling of a variety of methods of available birth control for a number of years. Unfortunately, I am sure many Conservative members do not realize that the Government, at the same time, has decimated the budget of the Montreal-based Canadian Committee on Fertility Research from $110,000 to $30,000. That is the budget of an organization which is conducting very critical research on health risks associated with various birth control methods, including the pill and intra-uterine devices. It is learning from experience in other provinces and the experience of a variety of women throughout the country on what is the best method of birth control for certain types of women, including those who live in certain regions of the country as well as what may be the least effective types of brith control for those groups of women. If we want to ensure that there are fewer abortions in our society, surely one of the most important ways to accomplish this is to make more effective birth control possible.

With respect to the sexual education of young people, I was particularly affected by the March 4 speech given by the Hon. Member for Capilano. I keep referring to her because I have never had someone else on the right side of the issue. On March 4, as reported at page 2715 of Hansard, she said:

> We must make those kinds of fundamental changes—that she has been talking about—

> —in assisting young Canadians to become more responsible, to have a greater understanding and to have access to information and services. We should put the emphasis on the prevention of unwanted pregnancies rather than on having to deal with the growing number of abortions, many of which are related to the socio-economic conditions of the women involved who have not had access to appropriate information. Perhaps they have been reluctant to have access to that information.

> I think birth control information should be more publicly accessible to young women rather than in under the table discussions with girlfriends.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, I decided to speak about this Bill to amend the Criminal Code in relation with abortion because I do not agree with the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley) about changing the present wording of the law to remove the words "or health". I can assure you, because, being a devout Christian and Roman Catholic, I have always been consistent in opposing abortion, but I do not agree that the words "or health" should be deleted.

I have always been in favour of abortion when the life or health of the mother is endangered, especially when a therapeutic abortion committee has examined her case. The mother's health means both her mental and her physical health. If a woman has a depression because she is pregnant and already has other children at home and life is not easy for her, or if her pregnancy brings on a depression for any other reason and she decides to commit suicide, it will not solve anything. In addition, if her physical health is so affected that she can no longer look after her other children or her husband and cannot meet all her other obligations, and if a therapeutic abortion committee has examined her case and decided that the physical health of this woman could be affected, we have to believe that the doctors are acting like responsible people. The wording of this section should therefore remain as it is.

I believe that the family unit is important. When the mother can no longer function properly because her pregnancy makes her sick, I believe that she should be able to decide—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry, but the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—(A) IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE CARS—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) STATEMENT OF UNITED STATES OFFICIAL

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take part in the adjournment debate and to consider more specifically a question I put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) a while ago regarding the future of the automobile industry in Canada and Japanese car imports.

Mr. Speaker, the day I asked my question, there were a lot of developments. And I think the announcement made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) today is very reassuring. I would like to join all Members of this House in congratulating the Hyundai company, which not only has confidence in Canada but, from what the Minister told us, decided on its own to consider locating in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, at the present time the Lavalin group, for instance, is proceeding with studies to determine the best location for the company. I have a few suggestions to make.

I see the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand), and I am sure she will agree with me when I sing the praises of the City of Bromont which is located in her riding but provides jobs for both her riding and mine.

Mr. Speaker, you may know that demographically speaking, the City of Bromont has a population that is growing at a slightly faster rate than Quebec as a whole. The Bromont region, which, of course, includes Granby, Cowansville, and Waterloo, has great potential for Hyundai because it has a young population with more people under 25 and fewer people over 35, compared to the rest of Quebec. The population has a varied linguistic background, a large percentage of university graduates and a highly skilled labour force.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, as far as industrial considerations are concerned, Hyundai would do well to consider the City of Bromont, because the region has had the benefit of prudent and enterprising municipal authorities who, by creating industrial parks and promoting their availability, have been able to attract over 250 businesses and generate nearly 17,000 jobs in industry.

The area has a very diversified industrial makeup with industries representing most of the major sectors, with particular emphasis on high technology sectors. I do not think it is necessary to refer to them by name since Hon. Members know of them and they would only be jealous.

As far as recreation and quality of life are concerned, I am sure that future Hyundai employees will find happiness and tranquility in the Eastern Townships.

I am therefore pleased with today's announcement, Mr. Speaker, and I dare hope that our wishes will be fulfilled. I must say, however, that I am disappointed with the attitude of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion who washes his hands of the other matters just as he did of the Hyundai matter. A Toyota plant is coming and I know that the Hon. Member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) has put together a group to attract it and I support her in her efforts. I hope that she will tell the Parliamentary Secretary, among others, to intervene on behalf of the Eastern Townships, as we have some 12,000 unemployed who are on welfare and anxious to work for the Toyota firm, Mr. Speaker. We are also interested in a Suzuki plant. Of course, there is the Bombardier company who operates already in the city of Valcourt and which has made a name for itself in the building of jeeps, military trucks, and which was awarded a great many contracts under the Liberal Government. It has acquired much expertise and trained a pool of skilled workers and is itself eager to start one day a car manufacturing company of its own. Mr. Speaker, I do not claim that we will some day resemble the South-Western Ontario area, but I am convinced that if there is a political will and if the various authorities consider objectively—I repeat, objectively—the conditions which exist in the Eastern Townships, they will immediately realize that it would be the perfect site for such a plant.

Over the next few weeks and months, I think that we will make a point of keeping an eye on the situation as it develops, because the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is not particularly keen on our region. As you know, we have had the Domtar experience, and if the past is any indication of the future, we know that we should not rely too much on him. I urge therefore my Quebec colleagues to be vigilant. This past Summer, I reminded some of them that it was their duty to work on the automobile plant issue and I see my friend the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) who woke up and precisely sought for his riding what I am seeking for mine, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary will have no choice but to stand up and confirm that I am entirely right.

Mrs. Monique Bernatchez Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to thank my colleague for Shefford (Mr.

Lapierre) for his fine statement on conditions in his constituency. I think it would be advisable in his case as in the case of all Quebec members whose constituencies are ready to welcome major investments, especially where the automotive industry is concerned, to commend their situation to the company involved since it will be making the investments.

The Minister has already answered the question in the House today and I hope that my colleague has already made his representations, that his file has already reached Toyota because we all know that very soon the company will be making a decision based on an analysis of the various proposals.

We should also take in consideration the fact that other sites in Quebec as well as in many other areas have been proposed and the Minister has said that he let the company know about all possible locations in Canada and I think it would be the best way to help us in Quebec by letting the company know about these locations. It is precisely what my colleague for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) has done as many others and I hope that he will be as successful with Toyota as he is with us.

INDUSTRY—MITEL CORPORATION—BRITISH TELECOM TAKEOVER PROPOSAL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I am almost tempted to say something about the great automobile City of Windsor and its super offer to Toyota. It would give magnificant possibilities to the many unemployed in my constituency. However, that is not the question before us this evening.

My question concerns Mitel. Of course it may seem a little out of date to be returning to a question which was raised on May 15. However, interestingly enough, the question is even more striking now than it was at the time. At that point the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) was asked whether he would meet urgently with Mitel management to urge them to accept an 18 per cent takeover bid from British Telecom instead of the 51 per cent takeover which they wished to accept.

If that 18 per cent had been accepted, this would have given Mitel the cash which it required to do what was necessary to restore its financial viability by reducing its debt load. The basic problem of Mitel is a very significant debt load which has to be paid off and is responsible for the significant losses which the company continues to experience.

Originally our problem with the suggested takeover was that British Telecom was far too much influenced by and subject to the pressures of British legislation and British Government ownership. Second, we felt that this helped to contribute to the likely shift of employment from here in Canada to the United Kingdom and third, that as a follow-through from this job loss, there was also the potential that research and development would shift from Canada to Britain as the ownership and control by British Telecom came into place. Frankly, we also felt that Mitel was one of the important high-tech players in our economy and that it was important for our economic future for Government to support the role of high-tech industry.

Interestingly enough, the last two months of recess of the House have shown in dramatic fashion that the concerns we raised about Mitel were absolutely justified. We have seen that the Mitel takeover in Britain has been referred to the Monopolies Commission of that country. The Monopolies Commission in Britain has very significant powers. It has flexibility and a capacity to set conditions on takeovers, a capacity which is far beyond anything we have in the Canadian economy. While it is quite unlikely that the British Monopolies Commission will refuse to permit British Telecom to make any purchase of Mitel shares, it is quite likely that the Monopolies Commission will put in place severe conditions on the takeover.

Some of the conditions that are most likely to be put into effect come from the fact that the companies concerned in Britain are the potential competitors to Mitel for British Telecom business. They are particularly concerned that Mitel would be given preferential treatment as a supplier to British Telecom. That, incidentally, was the point used by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion to defend his support of the Mitel takeover.

It is quite likely that, because of the concern of these British companies, one of the conditions which the British Monopolies Commission will impose will be that Mitel will not be able to have a preferential position with respect to purchases made by British Telecom of telephone equipment. We are likely to lose that potential advantage. A likely additional condition that could be imposed by the British Monopolies Commission will be the authorization of a percentage of takeover lower than 51 per cent.

The second major development in the Mitel saga has been the recent announcement by the company that 440 jobs will be cut from its operations in Canada. Some of these jobs are in fact being shifted to other operations in Canada, but some are being transferred, as we predicted, to the U.K.

• (1815)

That brings me to a set of questions, Mr. Speaker. First, where was government leadership in trying to make Mitel a continuing high-tech leader in this country? Did the Government explore other private sector options? Dit it have discussions with Mitel to offer government help? Finally, why did the Government not take the advice we offered in May to have Mitel adopt an 18 per cent share offer from British Telecom which would have avoided the subsequent problems with the British Monopolies Commission, leaving Mitel and its employees very much hanging in limbo?

We have asked these questions. We hope the Government will finally give us some answers to them.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Bernatchez Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, following the Hon. Member's request last May, the Minister did in fact meet with the President of Mitel to find out where the company was headed.

At the time, Mr. Matthews informed the Minister that British Telecom was seeking to acquire control over the company, following common practice by taking an unconditional option on the purchase of 18.5 per cent of Mitel common shares. This percentage constitutes the maximum allowed under the regulations of the stock exchange and is meant to protect British Telecom from speculation on Mitel shares, pending decisions by the shareholders, the regulatory agencies and the courts. If the proposal is not accepted, British Telecom will have to decide whether or not to lift its option. Since the option on 18.5 per cent of the shares is unconditional, Mitel management might not be able to influence British Telecom's decision. Investment by the latter in Mitel would inject $320 million of fresh equity into the company, which it urgently needs to finance future expansion.

Mitel has needs that are common among hi-tech companies, in that it requires rapid access to capital as the company develops. During the last two years, it was able to maintain a remarkable rate of growth in sales, but on the whole, its financial results have been meagre. This poor performance has closed the doors to the financial markets to which its competitors have access and has severely taxed the resources of management which had to find alternative solutions.

Mitel recently launched a new type of automatic switcher, the SX 2000, developed in this country by Canadians with federal assistance, which will be one of Mitel's main products in the future. It will not be offered on the traditional markets, and to ensure its success, the company must dispose of the funds required to set up new distribution channels. If as a result of Government regulation, Mitel is prevented from getting access to financial markets, there is a possibility that Canada will not enjoy any of the financial benefits.

Mitel has shown it is capable of developing and manufacturing, in Canada, products that can be sold on the international market. The international telecommunications market is highly regulated and protected, and the fact that Mitel was able to overcome these obstacles demonstrates its strong competitive position.

Canadian businesses must have access to the most sophisticated communications techniques available to remain competitive, and Canadians who design and produce this technology should not be discriminated against in their own country.

In its report entitled Telecommunications in Canada, Part III, The Impact of Vertical Integration on Equipment Industry, tabled on January 7, 1983, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission recommends that Bell be more receptive to innovations developed in Canada by businesses other than its own subsidiaries.

I would also like to come back to what the Hon. Member said about the transfer or loss of jobs at Mitel. The decision made by Mitel to transfer part of its production is an attempt to improve its operational effectiveness and profit-making position. For the last two years, this company has suffered losses. It has indicated that it is facing excess capacity. By transfering production and employees from Kanata to Renfrew, it would be in a better position to compete.

Estimates by the company itself clearly indicate that the number of jobs lost is, will be significantly lower than the one mentioned by the Hon. Member, and this decision will allow at least some Mitel employees to keep their jobs.

THE BUDGET—IMPACT ON AGRICULTURE. (B) EXCISE TAX

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on June 26 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) if he would be willing to consider giving an exemption to farmers from the two cents a litre, nine cents a gallon, excise tax which he imposed in his Budget of May 23. In his response he was very evasive. He suggested that in fact the price of gasoline was going down for farmers. That was highly prophetic because when he spoke in the House and ate his humble pie, due to the old age pension reversal of the Government two days later, he in fact added another cent per litre or four and a half cents a gallon.

The reason I asked that question, Mr. Speaker, was that in the election campaign a year ago the Government made a clear statement that second on their list of agricultural commitments was a reduction in the price of farm fuel by 20 cents a gallon by removing the nine cents a gallon federal sales tax and by not collecting the current excise tax. It is my understanding that the Government is still collecting that original excise tax although it is being refunded.

Last November in fact the Government removed the excise tax on gasoline and gave an exemption to the petroleum compensation charge. That amounted to 4.8 cents per litre of gasoline for primary producers. However, on the first of June the Government moved to world price for gasoline and the exemption for farmers of 1.8 cents per litre was, of course, cancelled. However, the price of gasoline did not go down so that exemption was not available. In fact, the price of gasoline to farmers went up by 1.8 cents a litre on June 1. On September 3 the Government increased the excise tax on gasoline by 2 cents a litre, 9 cents a gallon. If we add the two together, the increase in price on June 1 and September 3, the primary producers end up paying 3.8 cents per litre additional or some $130 million on an annualized basis.

The Government clearly made a committee in the election campaign that it would take away the excise tax and reduce the price of farm fuels. I would hope that the Parliamentary Secretary, a distinguished Member of Parliament who I know has the best interests of agriculture at heart, will want to come clean and indicate that the Government is prepared to keep its election campaign promises and will remove that excise tax. It clearly is unfair. It is being imposed at a time when western Canada, all parts of Canada, are facing severe stress in agricultural commodities, such as the prices for hogs, beef and grain. On top of that, there are drought conditions in the west which are absolutely devastating.

I mentioned earlier that the Minister of Finance was going to impose an additional cent per litre on January 1, 1987. Of course, the other three cents per litre runs out on December 31, 1986. So during the next 16 months, combined with the last three months, we will see an increase in fuel prices for farmers of at least 31 cents or 32 cents per gallon, which is totally and completely contrary to what was promised during the election campaign.

There is a very serious situation in agriculture today. Bankruptcies and foreclosures are rising dramatically. World commodity prices for beef, hogs, and grain are dropping. In view of this, I hope the Government will decide to keep its campaign promise and reduce the two cents per litre or nine cents per gallon excise tax on farm fuels which it imposed just last week.

Everything I have said applies, of course, to the forestry, fishing and mining industries. There was a campaign promise that the excise tax would be removed, yet the Budget indicated that the tax is going to go up at a time when fuel prices should be going down. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary is able to tell us that the Government is prepared to keep its promise and remove the excise tax.

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is a constant surprise to see the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) persist with that kind of questions. His is a consummate adeptness to behold the straw in his brother's eye, while not seeing the beam in his own. Knowing what they did in the past and our experience with the price of gasoline, they defeated the former Government of the Right Hon. Joe Clark in 1979, on a mere increase of 18 cents per gallon, only to impudently raise it afterwards by more than a $1.

And now they want to split hairs about that increase, all the while forgetting, whether willingly or not, my feeling is it is unwillingly, all this Government has done for farm producers over this last year. More has been done in twelve months than in twenty years, because for once we have moved in the interests of farm producers, something which had not been done for years.

[English]

Let me first of all state the Government is fully aware of and sympathetic to the extreme hardship being experienced in certain areas of agriculture. The drought and the grasshopper infestation in areas of western Canada are creating particularly severe problems for farmers. The Government is very concerned about the immediate problem facing farmers as well as the longer term challenges facing this vitally important component of the Canadian economy.

[Translation]

We are fully aware, Mr. Speaker, of all the problems now facing farm producers. We have reduced the cost of gasoline and removed taxes. These measures will come into force on December 1st, 1985.

[English]

The Petroleum Fuel Tax rebate reduced the price of farm fuels by 21.6 cents per gallon. When added to the rebate of the excise tax the effective saving to farmers was 28 cents per gallon.

[Translation]

It must be kept in mind that all these efforts have been made during the year. We are going to do more. We have fulfilled almost all our election commitments, Mr. Speaker. My colleague from Algoma (Mr. Foster) knows this very well for he is monitoring activities in committee and in here. He is aware of our work, and it is my view that this Government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has met its obligations to Canadian farm producers, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

NATIONAL PARKS

CALL FOR CREATION OF QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS PARK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the House the situation in South Moresby in the Queen Charlotte Islands. I had the opportunity last week, along with my wife and other friends, including Bill Reid, the famous Haida artist, to sail for six days around the South Moresby parts of the Queen Charlottes visiting the traditional Haida sites, seeing the most magnificient primeval forest on the face of the globe, which is really an environmental treasure. There is limitless aquaculture, among the richest in the world. It is nesting grounds for hundreds of varieties of birds.

This, of course, is the traditional home of the Haida nation.

For over 4,000 to 6,000 years they have lived there and built up a unique culture and tradition, and depended upon the resources of the islands and the sea for their livelihood. That is all threatened, of course, by prospective off shore drilling. It is also threatened by indiscriminate logging, particularly on Lyell Island and, potentially, some of the rest of South Moresby. If this continue indiscriminately, the country will lose a priceless heritage.

I wish to suggest to the new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), and congratulate him upon his appointment, that he, buttressed by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Crombie), negotiate with the Province of British Columbia for a national park, recognizing the traditional rights of the Haida people in such negotiations and making an accommodation with the logging industry so that selective logging can still take place in other parts of the islands.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CONSTRUCTION OF LOCK ON RIVIÈRE DES PRAIRIES

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, the Rivière des Prairies was savagely closed in 1929. Since then many representations have been made by the Association pour l'aménagement de la rivière des Prairies to open the river to boating through what is called a lock.

Last June 12, I had a special meeting with representatives of the association and seven other departments involved. This organization has been fighting for many years to have a lock built across the Rivière des Prairies and it deserves much better attention. For Parks Canada, nothing seems to be too positive, yet they adamantly refuse because they have no direct interest. Closed for 56 years, this navigation channel has not been the source of development which is going on elsewhere.

Things do change, Mr. Speaker. On March 14, 1985, Quebec Government Minister Brassard announced a $4.5 million contribution to finance the Rivière des Prairies lock. We also have the support of the neighbouring communities, but we are still waiting for the federal Government.

The Trent-Severs Canal has 45 locks, many of which have been rebuilt, repaired or twinned by the Government and Parks Canada, no less. Since then, a dam is the only thing that has been built across the Rivière des Prairies. The residents of Duvernay and Laval have made several official requests to the Liberal Government but they have yet to hear a favourable response.

Mr. Speaker, those people are full-fledged citizens, they have always paid their taxes and they rightfully expect their fair share of funding. In short, our aim is to re-open this waterway in the interest of the people of Laval and Montreal because the river—

WOMEN

SEXUAL VIOLENCE STATISTICS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the annual Take Back the Night Marches being held across the country this weekend and next weekend serve to highlight the pervasive problem of violence in our society. Studies indicate that 83 per cent of women have experienced sexual violence and that violence of this kind is on the increase. Indeed, the statistics are chillingly familiar. One woman in ten is beaten by her husband or mate, and a rape is committed every half hour in this country. According to Pierre-Marc Johnson, the Quebec Justice Minister, some 256,000 in that province alone are chronically beaten.

Unfortunately the Conservative Government to date has done little to respond to the plight of Canadian women. As part of its election platform, the Tories promised to increase funding to sexual assault centres which provide essential counselling and support services for the victims of sexual violence. To date we have seen no action taken on this promise. In fact the Tories have indicated their intention to cut transfer payments to the provinces. Rather than providing greater support to sexual assault centres, this may have the effect of a reduction in funding for transition houses and other shelters for battered women. Nor has the Government seen fit to provide adequate funds for research on batterers. Given the documented increase of violence against women at all levels of our society, this oversight is inexcusable.

We call upon the Government to take urgent action on this serious problem.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING

NEED TO ENSURE SURVIVAL OF DOMINION TEXTILE

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the situation now prevailing in the Canadian textile and clothing industry, and voice the concerns of employees in the industry, business people, mayors and chambers of commerce in the Valleyfield area and the population in general.

Not long ago, Canada's biggest textile manufacturer, Dominion Textiles in Montreal, announced it was closing its plants in Saint-Jean and Valleyfield, thus adding to a long list of shutdowns and jobs lost in the textile sector.

Mr. Speaker, Dominion Textiles maintains it had no choice but to proceed with these shutdowns, considering the dramatic increase in clothing imports in Canada since 1979.

Despite an ambitious program, the industry has been unable to compete with foreign imports, especially from countries with low labour costs.

We have no reason to believe that the industry alone will be able to improve its competitive position in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I want to ask the Minister responsible for these issues to immediately take steps to ensure the survival of an industry that employs more than 170,000 people in Canada, 90,000 of whom work in Quebec.

Finally, I want to ask the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to provide for a long-term textile and clothing policy. Such a policy would ensure that Canadian manufacturers have a share of the domestic market, thus guaranteeing the industry's viability in this country.

Mr. Speaker, the future does not look promising.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired.

FINANCE

HEALTH PRODUCTS TAXATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I was going to use this opportunity to register my objection and the objection of my Party to the move by the federal Government to deindex family allowances. However, I have just been handed a letter from a Chairman of one of the Conservative caucuses which I felt deserved reading into the record.

Dear Ms. Copps:

Thank you so much for your letter of September 3rd, 1985 on the subject of tax on health products.

By now you will have undoubtedly heard that a sympathetic and compassionate Conservative government has not only undertaken not to impose any such new taxation but also to remove taxes imposed on health products by the former heartless and contemptible Liberal government.

Please, when you rise in your place, to bestow thanks and appreciation upon the Minister of Finance try to control your understandable emotions of gratitude and affection towards the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and Conservatives in general since ladies ought to appear seemly at all times.

The letter is signed by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). I thought this matter deserved attention in the House, particularly in light of the fact that the statements in this letter are absolutely false.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, recently the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) stated that the Government wants to bring forward initiatives which will enhance both the Government's position relative to the family but, more important, show that the family is the cornerstone of society.

It is ironic that while he extols the virtues of the family in theory, in practice his Government is reducing the indexation on family allowances, is reducing the eligibility and indexation for the child tax credit, is cutting transfer payments to the provinces for family health and education, and is chopping funds for planned parenthood.

I am tired of this Minister's platitudes about helping those most in need while the government Budget widens the gap between rich and poor, subsidizes failing banks, and attacks universal family allowances. Social policy groups have shown that lower and middle groups will be the losers by 1990 as a result of this Government's Budget. Families will lose $600 million in family benefits by 1990.

• (1110)

I call upon all people who care about families, especially those who won the fight for universal pensions, to reactivate this fight now on behalf of Canada's children. Universal family allowances must not be decreased by a reduced indexation.

FORESTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE—STATEMENT MADE BY NDP MEMBER

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in this House, while discussing the controversial Gibbons Bill now before the U.S. Congress, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) stated that our Government was not doing enough to prevent this legislation. And I quote from Hansard at page 6539:

Surely . . . the Prime Minister . . . has awakened to the economic guillotine raised by the Gibbons Bill.

I travelled with the Hon. Member for Skeena to Washington this summer to discuss the issue of countervailing duties against our softwood lumber products with a group of American Congressmen. Our Government invited the Hon. Member for Skeena to take part in even further discussions with Congressman Gibbons in Vancouver last month.

The Hon. Member knows that we are very much aware of the inherent dangers in protectionist legislation south of the forty-ninth parallel, but when he talks of "waking up" to the issues, perhaps he should counsel his own Party and, while he is at it, the Liberal Party as well.

Those Hon. Members have to learn that they cannot continue to talk out of both sides of their mouths when it comes to the Americans. There is a iplace for valid criticism but you cannot attack the United States on the one hand, abusing, demeaning, and insulting it, while on the other hand you are pleading with it to buy our B.C. lumber. These people are our friends and our greatest market-place. They have no friends in the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party. What the opposition Parties have to wake up to, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that, when you talk out of both sides of your mouth, people stop listening.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—SIZE OF RAILWAY ORDER

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, over the summer the people of northeastern Nova Scotia, who are already hard hit by the Government's Budget, received yet another economic blow. Canadian National Railways, the biggest customer of the idle Sydney Steel Corporation, announced in July that it had decided to purchase almost 30,000 tonnes of rails from foreign suppliers.

CN officials also confirmed at that time that its purchase of rail from Sydney Steel for the coming year would be down significantly, indeed, that it would actually be less than one-third of the tonnage which CN purchased from Sysco last year. All of this occurred despite the promise of the Conservative Member of Parliament for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) that CN would purchase rail exclusively from Sysco.

While Rome burns, the Government and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) continue to fiddle. At the time of the announcement the Minister even admitted that he was completely unaware of CN's decision to buy rail from foreign sources. Over the last year we have continually been told that the federal and provincial Governments were very close to reaching a cost-sharing agreement on the second and final phase of the modernization program at Sydney Steel. The replacement of Sysco's outdated hearth with a new basic oxygen furnace is desperately needed.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia ought to come together forthwith to give a clear, firm, positive commitment with respect to the modernization of Sydney Steel and they must stop their deception and deceiving tactics, not only for the sake of the steel workers in Sydney, Nova Scotia, but for all Nova Scotians—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

INTER-PROVINCIAL TRADE

ONTARIO BRICKS BANNED IN QUEBEC

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, at a time when we find the Conservative Government expounding the merits of free trade with the United States, I think it would be well for it to look at something which has happened only a short distance from Parliament Hill.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

REPRESENTATION IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, on Monday we learned that Canadians from visible minority communities represent only 1.7 per cent of all employees within the federal Public Service. The under-representation of visible minorities within the federal Public Service was not a well concealed secret. Monday's findings, however, clearly demonstrate the alarming degree of this imbalance, especially when one considers that the presence of visible minorities within the Canadian labour force is estimated at 4 per cent.

In response, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) announced a number of measures. While they are no doubt a beginning, they largely focus on data collection and monitoring rather than on immediate hiring and training and a workplace free of discrimination.

• (1115)

If the Government is to encourage other levels of government and the private sector to pursue employment equity successfully, then bold and decisive action should be the order of the day. In June of last year the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) declared: "I believe there is no obligation more compelling and no duty more irresistible than to ensure our minorities live at all times in conditions of fairness and justice." It would be highly appropriate for the Conservative Government to recall those words, for Canadians are anxiously waiting for these statements to be translated quickly into reality. Surely the time for platitudes is over.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—AUTHORIZATON OF BAIL-OUT PACKAGE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance have created a financial nightmare. It is absolutely sickening to think that two Cabinet Ministers could have been so grossly irresponsible with the taxpayers' hard-earned money. Therefore, why did the Prime Minister authorize the bail-out package when it must have been obvious that the Minister of Finance did not have the foggiest notion of what the true assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank were in March? The Minister was flying by the seat of his pants. Why did the Government and the Minister brazenly pretend that they knew what was going on when they hadn't a clue?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose there is one way to find out whether my right hon. friend is telling the truth or is whistling in the graveyard. And that is to do what is provided for by the rules of this House, namely, that a matter of this complexity be analyzed in a fair and above-board manner by a committee of this House so that appropriate value judgments can be made.

There can be no doubt but that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance, when confronted with a difficult situation, consulted the appropriate officers of the Government of Canada and brought forward a recommendation. This was then discussed with the Opposition and received, as I recollect, the benediction of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Broadbent: Right!

Mr. Mulroney: We recognized, and I think everybody in Canada recognized, that it was in the interests of all to attempt to save that fledgling institution in western Canada. It was done in good faith, and it clearly did not work out. Well then, if there is responsibility or blame to be apportioned, there is a fair and honourable way of doing it, that is, through a dispassionate and objective analysis in a parliamentary committee. We have been recommending this for some days and I hope my right hon. friend will agreed that is the fair way to do it.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DID NOT CONVINCE MAJOR BANKS TO LEAVE DEPOSITS UNTOUCHED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of State (Finance). The Liberal Party went along with the assurances given by the Prime Minister and his Ministers that the arrangements made for the Bank in March were worthwhile. They were not. Why did the Minister of State (Finance) not try to persuade the big banks to leave their deposits with the Canadian Commercial Bank? Was it because she was unable to provide the arguments that would convince them? Why did she give Parliament the impression that she had actually set up a rescue plan with the CCB, although no sensible arrangement based on fact existed?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have explained to this House that we went to the Canadian people with the best information we had available in a situation where there were depositors and borrowers in the western economy at risk. I would be very interested in knowing, based on that information, if the Opposition would have supported us if we had shut the bank down at that time.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have just a short question for the Minister of State for Finance. What does it feel like being responsible jointly with the Minister of Finance for the biggest bank fiasco in Canadian history?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1120)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I stand here and say that I am a very proud associate of the Minister of Finance of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: You also said that the banks were safe.

Mrs. McDougall: I can also say that I am very proud of the actions that we have taken to enhance the supervisory capability in this country, which is something that his Government never did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Think how proud she will be when they do something right.

ROLE OF CHARTERED BANKS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. On Friday, March 22, the Government brought together representatives of the major banks and urged them to contribute millions of dollars to rescue the Canadian Commercial Bank. Will the Minister confirm that these banks, when presented with a segment of the CCB's loan portfolio—a segment identified by CCB management rather than by Government regulators—asked for examination of the entire CCB portfolio and offered to provide enough people to do the work over the weekend, and that their offer was refused?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the discussions that were carried on were between the bank and our officials. The package that came together did so out of mutual agreement. I cannot comment on a discussion to which I was not a party.

EXPENDITURE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. What possible justification can the Government have had for expending millions of dollars of taxpayers' money, not only without security, but without any information other than that provided by the organization asking for the money?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the management of the bank came to us and presented us with a problem which they had identified, and they made available to us the best information that they could at that time. We presented that same information—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: How did you verify it?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, we based our support package on our discussion with the banks which, at the end of the day and the end of the negotiations, were prepared to participate in the system. I do not know what went on behind closed doors. We had no reason to challenge the figures that were presented by the bank—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: —based on the information that was available to us at that time.

Mr. Cassidy: Incompetence, that's what it is.

Mrs. McDougall: As the Hon. Member knows, we moved on behalf of the depositors and borrowers of that bank. That is something which we felt responsible for in the failing economy which that Government created.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They laugh at western bankruptcies.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, that is like saying that the fire department has no reason to challenge the word of an arsonist.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to understand the Minister's position as she has explained it this week. She has given two reasons for the fiasco at the Canadian Commercial Bank. One is that there was a confidence problem related to the level of deposits. The second explanation she has given is the bad debt position.

If the problem was one of bad debts, why in heaven's name did the Government not take the three days which were necessary in March to have a comprehensive assessment of the debt position of the bank done? Or, if the problem was one of deposits and the withdrawal of money after the bail-out took place, why did the Government not insist that the chartered banks, which were part of the deal, accept their moral responsibility by keeping their money in the bank? In either case, will the Minister admit that there was a monumental goof on the part of the Government with the taxpayers' money?

• (1125)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has had that question answered many number of times—

Mr. Broadbent: No. Not at all.

Mrs. McDougall: —and this is exactly why we have been asking to put it into the committee. I went before the Standing Committee on Monday, at my request. I talked to it for about three hours around the situation in the bank. At the end of that three hours I said I was prepared to go back at any time.

We have been attempting—

Mr. Deans: Why don't you answer the question?

Mrs. McDougall: —to have a reasonable and rational discussion about every aspect of what has happened in this bank, and I am asking you today to agree to this committee discussion so that we can carry on a rational conversation about this.

Mr. Broadbent: The questions that the committee can deal with are important. They concern a lot of technical information. However, the issue at stake here in this Parliament of Canada is the willingness of the Government of Canada to accept ministerial responsibility. That is what we are talking about today.

MINISTERIAL DECISIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister, and I will ask it carefully. The Minister has given two reasons for the Government becoming involved in this fiasco. The first was that the fiasco was a byproduct of the banks withdrawing money after the original bail-out took place. She shifted ground yesterday and said no, the real reason for the problem was the assets of the bank.

Will he not admit that, in either instance, it was ministerial decisions that were involved? If it was an asset problem originally, why did the Government not take the time to do the three-day assessment to look at those assets, instead of putting millions of dollars of taxpayers' money at risk? If it was a withdrawal of money in recent months, why did the Prime Minister not phone the heads of the banks and tell them to leave their deposits there?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, he has asked a number of questions and I will try to deal with the fundamental one. What transpired was that the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance, for both of whom I have the highest regard and great confidence, were confronted with a very serious problem. Nobody likes it. Canada has a strong banking system and nobody likes to be confronted with a problem of this nature.

The problem was that a relatively small financial institution based in western Canada ran into a serious problem of liquidity. It came to Ottawa and to the chartered banks. All of the appropriate officials were consulted.

Mr. Deans: No.

Mr. Mulroney: I am trying to provide an answer. The appropriate officials were consulted and a package was put together in co-operation with the chartered banks pursuant to the best advice that was available.

The alternative at that time was to say no, that we would allow a western Canadian institution to fail without any help from the Parliament of Canada. We were not going to do that and we did not do that. I think it is a tribute to the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance that what they did was to come forward to Parliament and say that it was a serious matter and present the serious types of packages that were designed in a way which we believed would save this institution. We received the benediction of the Official Opposition—

An Hon. Member: On your assurances.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: And that was the best assurance that anyone can give.

Mr. Speaker: Both the questions and the answers should be shorter, please.

Mr. Broadbent: I simply say to the Prime Minister that if he had taken three more days last March he might have saved the taxpayers of Canada a billion dollars. That is what he ought to have done.

WITHDRAWALS MADE BY CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The purpose of my question to the Prime Minister is to find out who is really going to pay for all of this, and who benefits. The banks withdrew some $386 million since March, which they will obviously keep. Yesterday we learned, incredibly, that they will be paid back their original $60 million which we thought was going to be at risk.

• (1130)

We thought that was going to be at risk, which means that the banks—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that the taxpayers are going to pay about $1 billion and that the banks are getting all their money back, when is the Prime Minister going to stand up for the taxpayers of Canada instead of the bankers of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated, and I think it is consistent with Canadian traditions, that first we hear the evidence before we hang anybody. All we are saying is in a complex—

Mr. Deans: Why didn't you get the evidence before?

Mr. Mulroney: I ask the Hon. Member if the bankers are all presumed to be criminals, why do you have your money in the banks? The New Democrats have their money in the bank.

Mr. Deans: You are at fault.

Mr. Mulroney: Presumably these are honest people entitled to the benefit of the doubt. I have said this and I will repeat it, the matter ought to go to committee for a fair hearing—

Mr. Deans: You ought to accept responsibility.

Mr. Mulroney: —so that full light can be cast upon all transactions. If there has been anything improper, that will come out. If there has been anything illegal, we will instantly prosecute. We are here to defend Canadians and that is what we are going to do.

Mr. Deans: Yes, six months later.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Finance). Last March, the House was informed that an injection of $255 million would save this Bank. This was stated very clearly by the Minister. We were also informed that the banks had taken part in a full evaluation of the assets and that they had helped to establish that the 255 million would save the Bank. However, yesterday we were informed by the bankers themselves that this was not the case and that the Minister's statements on the subject were not very accurate.

The Calgary Herald reports that the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sure the Hon. Member has a question.

Mr. Garneau: Indeed I do. My question is quite simple: Why did the Minister mislead the House?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I take that accusation very seriously. I have never deliberately misled this House, as the Hon. Member knows. We were faced with a situation in March where western depositors and western borrowers were going to face a real problem. We had two choices. One was to close down the institution based on the information we had, and the other was to look after the depositors and the borrowers of that institution based on the information we had. We chose to look after the borrowers and to look after the depositors.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF LOAN MADE TO NOVA SCOTIA PROMOTER

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister had a duty to protect the borrowers, as she just said, does she think it fair that after the Government of Canada invested $255 million in this Bank, the Bank's management should grant loans bearing 30 per cent interest to a developer in Nova Scotia? Does the Minister really think she is protecting taxpayers' money by letting this kind of thing happen?

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: That is why it should go to committee.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we began with the problem in March in which we put money into an institution that we felt was well worth the effort of trying to give it a future.

An Hon. Member: Risking our money.

Mrs. McDougall: We continued to monitor that situation. We continued to watch what was happening in that bank. When we discovered that another decision had to be taken, we took that decision, based on the problems on the asset side of the balance sheet.

CHARTERED BANKS' RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. We now know that the banks were depositors in March at the time of the bail-out. We now know that the banks throughout the summer withdrew substantial sums of money, over $300 million, money which was replaced by the Bank of Canada—by the taxpayers of Canada—and we now know the banks are having whatever is left that belonged to them covered by the taxpayers through the Government's actions. Not once, not twice, but three times a bail-out.

I ask the Prime Minister why did the Government permit the banks to transfer their responsibilities to the Canadian taxpayers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is referring to the support package and the way it appeared in today's press, but the legislation that we will be presenting next week will not include funds to be paid to the banks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: I am not really quite sure where the NDP got that idea.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): From you.

Mrs. McDougall: They never got it from me. The position will be, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to take a minute on this, if I could have the attention of the House, to explain, because the position in the support package—

Mr. Ouellet: Statement.

Mrs. McDougall: —the position of the support package in non-technical language—

An Hon. Member: Go back to school.

Mrs. McDougall: Do you want the answer?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I will give the Minister a little bit longer. She may be verging on what should properly be a statement. However, go ahead.

Mrs. McDougall: I am trying to respond to the question around the ranking of banks, Mr. Speaker. The ranking is that the banks in the support package rank with depositors when assets are liquidated in the event of a winding-up. Our legislation will be presented showing that we are taking over the uninsured deposits and become the uninsured depositor, which ranks equally with the banks when the assets are liquidated. There will be no funds asked of Parliament for the banks. I am not sure where Hon. Members over there got that idea.

USE OF TAXPAYERS' MONEY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is relatively simple and it is for the Prime Minister. Given what we now know about the amounts of money taken by the banks from the Canadian Commercial Bank over the summer, and given that we now know that the Bank of Canada, using taxpayers dollars, put the money back that was taken out, is the Prime Minister prepared to stand up and tell the people of Canada, the taxpayers, why their taxes will have to be raised in order to cover up the incompetency of the Government's actions last March?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let us understand it. Is the Member for Hamilton Mountain, on behalf of the NDP, telling the people of Canada that last March, faced with an important matter involving western Canada, the Government of Canada, which has pumped, for example, hundreds of millions of dollars into Canadair in Montreal, should have said no to western Canada? Is that what the Hon. Member is saying? Because that is not the position of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I will tell you what you should have done.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are anti-west.

Mr. Deans: You should have looked into it.

Mr. Mulroney: That is what they are saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Deans: You had time to look into it.

Mr. Mulroney: You are going to have to answer for the position you have taken.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gauthier: Is this civility?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Next?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Here is the Ontario leadership of the NDP.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the more serious the subject, perhaps that we ought to pay greater attention to try to deal with it calmly. The Hon. Member for Algoma.

AGRICULTURE

BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we have seen a great example of the Prime Minister's civility this morning.

My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In his absence, perhaps I might put it to the Prime Minister. He knows that the agricultural industry, especially the red meat sector, is facing one of its most desperate periods in history, and especially the red meat industry as a result of the low prices caused by the American countervail and the millions of pounds of EEC subsidized beef being brought into the country.

On August 29 the Minister of Agriculture met with the hog and beef producers and made a commitment to bring a stabilization program before Cabinet this week. Did the Minister of Agriculture keep his promise? Did he bring a stablization program to assist this industry before Cabinet this week? Was the Cabinet able to deal with it—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. That is two or three questions.

● (1140)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could respond on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture. He is seized with this particular issue at the present time. He has brought it before Cabinet, and it is currently being considered.

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it seems that a matter like providing $1 billion to a busted bank, when in the end we only have a busted bank, can be decided on in a weekend. However, this matter has been going on for several weeks—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member had a very long preamble to his first question. Does he have a question immediately, please?

Mr. Foster: Is the Minister aware that by delaying this decision, it further balkanizes the agricultural market of the country, that we are pitting one province against another in stabilization programs, and that we are really bringing on countervail duties by the United States and other countries?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture is very deeply concerned about continued balkanization. He is trying very desperately to work together with the provinces to reach an agreement so that we can have a national stabilization program which will be effective all across the country.

With respect to the earlier part of the Hon. Member's question, may I just remind him that the Government has unleashed $1.2 billion worth of money to the agricultural industry since it took office.

An Hon. Member: It also unleashed Barbara McDougall.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—WITHDRAWALS BY CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the events surrounding the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the events of last March. He just told the House that in March it was a liquidity problem as far as the Government saw it. Could he, therefore, explain why it was, when it became evident very soon thereafter that the chartered banks and other banks were withdrawing hundreds of millions of dollars from that bank, that he and the Government did not get on the phone and make the bankers who had participated in the rescue effort keep their funds in rather than contribute to the liquidity problems of the CCB?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first the question was: Do you assist, do you attempt to assist, or do you turn them down and say no. We felt that it was worth while trying to save that financial institution. Some time later in the course of events, which has been described and responded to by both Ministers in the House, changes arose that clearly resulted in—and it can only be qualified with an understatement—a regrettable situation. We want all the facts out. We have nothing to hide. We want all the facts out. Even if there is blame to be apportioned, we want the genesis of this to be examined as well—what gave rise to that economic situation in western Canada which caused such damage to these kinds of brand new institutions.

I invite my hon. friend to accept the reference of this matter to committee so that all these questions can be fairly put and fairly answered, so that Canadian people can make up their minds.

[Translation]

WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question since I failed to elicit a response from the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

If it was a cash flow problem in March, why did the Government not do anything to prevent the chartered banks and the other banks from withdrawing deposits of hundreds of millions of dollars, that is the liquid assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank during the months of March, April, May and June? Why did you not take action and insist that they assume their share of responsibility, which would have been to keep the bank solvent?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already said that it is indeed the kind of value judgement which a parliamentary committee would make in an enlightened and reasonable manner, if that was warranted by the situation. As I said, the bottom line is if anyone has misled Parliament, if someone is guilty of any wrongdoing, we will take full legal action. I would suggest however, and I think you will agree with me, that the appropriate forum to make such recommendations is a parliamentary committee appointed to shed light on the whole issue. We have absolutely nothing to hide. We want to make that quite clear to all Canadians and we do urge Opposition Members to endorse the immediate creation of a parliamentary committee.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

EXTRADITION OF ALLEGED AMERICAN CRIMINALS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A great many Canadians are most concerned about the continued presence in our country of Charles Ng and Joseph Kindler, two Americans who have allegedly committed very serious crimes in the United States. Are they to be extradited and, if so, when will they be extradited to the United States?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice perhaps I could respond on his behalf. As the Hon. Member will know, this is a matter which is before the courts at the present time and it would be inappropriate, as a consequence, for the Government to comment. I will bring the concerns of the Hon. Member to the attention of the Hon. Minister. I know that he is certainly aware of the concerns of many Members in the House on the subject.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

DRUG TAX EXEMPTIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Last May his Government introduced certain illness taxes on over-the-counter drups. When the political heat was on in August, certain drugs were exempted. How did the Government arrive at the drugs which were exempted?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the decision that was arrived at was very sensitive to the fact that there were some people who were more affected than others and, after consultation with them, the Minister was in a position to say that there were things to which he would like to have a sensitivity.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF KALL DRUG TAXES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Again I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. Does the Minister not have a sensitivity to cancer, glaucoma, Parkinson's disease and heart disease? These are some of the treatment drugs which were not included in his exemptions. Will he not state in the House today that the time has come to remove illness taxes, once and for all, for all Canadians who need over-the-counter drugs?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member asked that question. As she has identified in the House, the Minister of Finance removed the taxes not only on some of the items which would have been covered under the Budget in May, but in fact he removed taxes of the Liberal Government which had been in effect since 1968. For instance, it had taxes on such things as sugar testers or glucose monitors for people who suffer from diabetes. Those have been removed as well.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member that she should be careful when she talks about illness taxes. However, the Minister has even gone further. We are having further consultations with groups such as the ones she mentioned to see whether or not other steps should be taken. Not only have we gone further than the Budget of May, we have even removed taxes which they imposed in 1968. They saw no moral issue at that time but sure do now that they are in opposition.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In an attempt to sort all the factors concerning CCB, we come upon some conflicting statements. The Prime Minister stated that liquidity was the problem and that the Government had to act in order to protect all depositors in western Canada. Now we hear that the reason the Government had to pull the plug on CCB was the extent of the non-performing loan portfolio. Could the Prime Minister explain the difference and the reasoning behind the difficulties of CCB as the Government sees them?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all I can indicate to my hon. friend is something which I know he understands. Given the complexity of this kind of situation, the only forum in which it can be properly discussed with maturity and fairness, where cross-examination can take place, where proper depositions and witnesses can be heard, is a parliamentary committee. We have been suggesting that, in fairness, so that reputations are not unfairly tarnished, that the truth comes out, and that it be done in a spirit of openness. We have absolutely nothing to hide. We want all the facts out so that Canadian people can make an appropriate judgment.

POSITION OF CHARTERED BANKS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker considering that Bill Mulholland, Chairman of the Bank of Montreal, told us in the Finance Committee last night that all the bankers or experts in that room, when the package was being considered, told the Government that its information was insufficient or suspect, why did the Government decide to proceed and risk $1 billion of Canadian taxpayers' money?

• (1150)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have never, ever denied that it would have been nice to be able to spend the weeks involved in looking at the balance sheets. I am a balance sheet analyst. I know how long it takes to perform this task. If they felt that they had inadequate information at that time, they were free not to participate but the decision had to be made in a way that looked after those depositors and borrowers. The risk that we were prepared to take, and that they were prepared to take, was that this institution could succeed. We were on the side of the people involved in this bank as depositors and borrowers as it was an important western Canadian financial institution, something to which this Member should be sympathetic.

AGRICULTURE

FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—PLIGHT OF FARMERS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Agriculture. As has been pointed out by a previous question, the agricultural community in Canada is experiencing extreme hardship, particularly in the East due to the inequities in the Feed Freight Assistance Program. Can the Minister advise the House what the Government intends to do to assist farmers in the East address this very serious problem concerning the Feed Freight Assistance Program?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of Agriculture is looking at this particular issue and I will certainly draw the Hon. Member's representations to his attention next week.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PLACEMENT OF LEGAL BUSINESS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade and concerns the Sam Wakim affair. When the Minister evaded a straightforward question that I asked him yesterday on a matter directly within his personal knowledge, he gave the impression that he was trying to hide something. I will ask him again. When did the Minister have that meeting with Sam Wakim? What firm was Mr. Wakim representing at the time? Who was it who initiated that meeting?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I have nothing to hide. Late last fall a number of lawyers, including Mr. Wakim approached me to discuss the possibility of performing legal services for EDC. We felt that other firms should have that opportunity and so we asked EDC to explore that possibility. EDC advised us that it was prepared to explore that possibility if three criteria were met. I told the Hon. Member of those three criteria. I passed that information on to Mr. Wakim and others. It was available to anyone else who wanted it. EDC, not I, set the criteria, determined whether or not those criteria were met, and retained Weir and Foulds.

The last point I would like to emphasize right now is that I could not and did not any time give assurances to Mr. Wakim or anyone else regarding EDC's legal services.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister who must surely see that the questions I asked were not even addressed in the answer given by the Minister. The Prime Minister made several long statements today advocating the use of a parliamentary committee to review matters and has established a patronage review committee. In the spirit of that committee, I would ask that the matter of the appointment of his friend Sam Wakim to do important work which could be worth $1 million per year, work that affects Canada's external trade and image, be referred to that committee.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been reading lately of a good lawyer friend of mine, a classmate, who apparently did business with the Government, and this has caused us some concern. I am of course referring to a good friend of mine, Raynold Langlois, son of Liberal Senator Langlois, who got $368,000 from the Government last year and who was a classmate of mine. I never complained about Raynold Langlois getting that business. I never complain about any Liberal lawyers getting $400,000 or $500,000 worth of business. I never try to sully their reputations. It was printed yesterday that my old pal, Raynold Langlois, received $368,000—

Mr. Ouellet: My old pal?

Mr. Mulroney: He is also a friend of the Hon. Member for Papineau. We all went to law school together. He has done amazingly well. He has not been harmed by his membership in the Liberal Party. Why do Liberal Members not talk about that every once in a while rather than trying to savage people's reputations?

HOUSING

SOCIAL HOUSING PROGRAMS—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour who is responsible for housing, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister confirm to the House that in the Minister's negotiations to hand over delivery of social housing programs to the provinces he has decided to divert federal taxes to provincial shelter allowance schemes and to require that poor people pay 30 per cent of their income for rent-geared-to-income housing, or in some cases 35 per cent, rather the the present 25 per cent?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I will take notice of that question and ensure that the Minister gets back to the Hon. Member at the earliest possible date with the detailed answers that have been requested today.

ELIGIBILITY FOR SOCIAL HOUSING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, while that request is being conveyed to the Minister of Labour responsible for housing, I would ask that the House Leader also ask him to confirm that it is his intention to disenfranchise childless couples and childless singles from eligibility for rent-geared-to-income housing.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, without accepting for a moment the premise of the question, the answer to the Hon. Member's first question applies to the second as well.

Oral Questions

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will have the weekend to reflect. I believe that the evidence that has come before the House, the country and the committee during the week, has revealed a shameful incompetence on the part of two Ministers, and incompetence costing the country about $1 billion. I believe that the Prime Minister will recognize that some heads should roll. I am not talking about officials, I am talking about Ministers because under parliamentary government there is ministerial responsibility. Will the Prime Minister, during the weekend, hold the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance to account and ask for their resignations?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand the role of the Opposition and the important responsiblities that the Leader of the Opposition must assume in a parliamentary democracy. I have had the honour of serving in that position myself and I believe I understand the imperatives of the job.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers to the question of shameful incompetence. He is entitled to that opinion in regard to the Minister of Finance, in regard to myself, or in regard to anyone else. I would be surprised if it were otherwise. However, that is not a view that is sustained by any evidence whatsoever. It is not a view that has been tested, as it always must be, in the fairness that prevails in the parliamentary tradition, and that is why I have been pointing out respectfully to my right hon. friend the danger of the smears in which he has been involved. They are not in keeping with his character or his reputation and not in keeping at all with the honourable reputation he has established in this House.

I would say something to my right hon. friend that I think he already knows. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance are two extremely impressive, loyal, and honourable public servants. If there are any attacks against their reputations, I would ask my right hon. friend to make those attacks in a precise way. However, he ought to have no objection whatsoever to agreeing immediately to the creation of a parliamentary committee so that on Monday morning we can begin the objective analysis that will allow Canadians to make the appropriate judgments.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

PROTECTION OF OFFSHORE OIL RIG WORKERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is it the intention of the Government to implement the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Ocean Ranger dealing with search and rescue and, specifically, does the Government intend to acquire helicopters with the range and hovering capability to protect our offshore workers, as recommended by the commission, in time for winter drilling?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has long displayed intense interest in the improvement of search and rescue facilities, particularly in Atlantic Canada. I can tell the Hon. Member that of the 66 recommendations which came forward in the first report, 55 of them have either been implemented or are on their way to being implemented. Of the 70 in the second report, some 50 have been implemented or are on their way to being implemented.

The report of the royal commission to which the Hon. Member refers was received by me on behalf of the Government on June 28. As he knows, being as familiar as he is with the rules of the House, the Government has 120 days to respond. At least, that is the target. We should know the answer to the specific question he poses when we come forward with our response to that report.

APARTHEID

STATEMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the House about apartheid and about what Canada can do to end a repugnant racist system. I am guided by two realities: first, that Canadians are offended by, and abhor, the practice of institutionalized racism by a society which claims to share our values; and, second, that Canada's influence is limited but real, and our challenge is to take practical steps which help to end apartheid.

Expressing our outrage is part of our duty and those Canadians citizens who join in peaceful protest and demonstration help to show the South African Government how deeply the people of this country are offended by their racist practices.

It is also part of our duty to make clear to South Africa that Canada is prepared to invoke total sanctions if there is no change. As a general principle, we believe that diplomatic and economic relations should exist even though Governments might disagree. Indeed, if we had accepted six months ago the advice of some groups that we break all diplomatic and commercial relations with South Africa, we would be in no position today to act individually or in concert with other nations to add to the pressure being felt by the South African Government.

We fully recognize, however, that Canada has a responsibility to provide both moral and practical leadership. The Government of South Africa should have no doubt that we will invoke full sanctions unless there is tangible movement away from apartheid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will be reviewing today the actions Canada has taken, announcing new initiatives and asking the House to consider avenues of influence which we, our fellow citizens and our friends in the world can pursue. However, first, I think it helpful to indicate some of the changes we seek to bring on those norms of behaviour we expect of all civilized countries, changes which would prove that South Africa is moving away from apartheid.

[Translation]

The changes we are seeking include first of all, establishing common citizenship, which means the same political rights, including voting rights, for all and eliminating the different classes of citizens.

Second, abolishing the laws by which South Africans are classified according to colour or race. Third, freedom for all South Africans to live, travel and work without being subject to arbitrary constraints.

Fourth, independence for Namibia in accordance with United Nations Resolution 435. This would be a major indication that South Africa is willing to accept its neighbours and live on peaceful terms with them. However, the most important points are those I am about to announce now.

First, liberation of political prisoners—the liberation of the leaders of the African National Congress and the United Democratic Front who were forced to resist the apartheid system.

Second, the establishing of a process of consultation and negotiation with the true leaders of those who are referred to as Indians, blacks and coloureds. In other words, such consultations cannot be restricted to the leaders of the Homelands.

[English]

Finally, the initiation of a process of reform based on consent, not imposition or coercion. Such a process would clearly lead to representative institutions which include blacks. These are key steps, for it is not Canada's or any other country's consent or support which is crucial to this process. It is the consent and support of South Africans of every race and colour which counts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What we are witnessing in South Africa, rather than change, is a deepening crisis. Demonstrations, strikes and acts of resistance against an injust system continue. They continue to be met with violence, arbitrary arrest and detention—measures of repression and control rather than conciliation.

We condemn the detention of the leaders of the United Democratic Front—Professor Farouk Meer, and others. We are shocked by the detention of Allan Boesak, the President of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, who a short while ago visited Canada and spoke to us not of revolution or violence, but of justice, equality and reconciliation. We deplore the heartlessness of a Government which keeps behind bars the now seriously ill Nelson Mandela.

We call on the South African Government to release all those whose offence is simply to oppose apartheid.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We add the names of Tutu and Boesak to that of Mandela among those who should be invited for dialogue, not rebuffed, relegated to silence, or dismissed with concept.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It would be tragic if history were to repeat itself and the UDF were to be cast in the role of ANC as something to be stopped, repressed, rendered illegal.

Bishop Tutu can no doubt bear his rebuff from President Botha. Both Nelson Mandela and Allan Boesak may bear their imprisonment. But can South Africa bear the result? It is clear that one more community in South Africa, the business community, is beginning to have its doubts. Their confidence shaken, business and investors within and outside South Africa have fostered a wave of disinvestment—without the prompting of Governments, but surely reflecting both the events on the ground in South Africa and the signals many Governments have sent. If some South African entrepreneurs have, for too long, lent support to apartheid, the consequence of their movement now cannot be overstated.

Canada's contribution to bringing about those new realities, recognized by South African businessmen, has been significant. Our policy, through several administrations, has been one of consistent opposition to apartheid.

More recently, at Baie Comeau on July 6, I issued a statement of policy on behalf of the Government of Canada. Basing ourselves not on our own righteousness, but on our common humanity, we introduced 10 steps, including certain economic sanctions, to strengthen our opposition to apartheid, and two measures to foster peaceful change.

We ended the Program for Export Market Development and the global insurance policies written by the Export Development Corporation in so far as they applied to South Africa. That lived up to the pledges of the former Government and stopped all official support for trade and investment in South Africa. These two trade measures sent very distinct signals.

We broadened and tightened application of the United Nations arms embargo so as to include a broader range of high-technology items, including computers. We have been the only Government to announce the abrogation of our Double Taxation Agreements.

[Translation]

We have drawn the attention of Canadians to the resolution of the Security Council prohibiting the sale of the krugerrand. We were not disappointed in our hopes that the people selling these gold coins in Canada would get the message, since sales have practically ceased altogether.

We have drafted policies on sports events, official meetings and co-operation. We have made it known that the custom processing of Namibian uranium would come to an end upon expiry of current contracts, at whatever cost.

We have announced the appointment to our embassy in South Africa of an officer responsible for labour issues, in order to maintain direct contacts with those South African workers who support reform. The officer will be selected in consultation with the Canadian Labour Congress.

We have more than tripled funds earmarked for the education and training of blacks, which means we will be able to provide 40 bursaries during the present financial year. We are delighted with the Canadian labour movement's decision to support the training of blacks in South Africa, and we shall welcome any initiative or contribution from other sources.

[English]

But that has not been all. Other levels of Government have also sent strong signals. A number of provinces have seen this as a special case and have shown by their actions that Canadians in all parts of our country abhor apartheid. In addition, private Canadian companies have voluntarily announced that they will no longer purchase South African products. Canadian labour has consistently spoken out against apartheid, and now some Canadian unions have refused to unload a ship carrying South African steel. Universities are debating disinvestment of their South African holdings. This issue has, in a dramatic manner, affected Canadians as a people, and South Africans who condone apartheid should know that they offend not just the Government of Canada, but our people and our values.

In focusing that anger, in applying steady pressure for change, we must have the best information and judgments we can get on how to use our influence most effectively. We will work closely with our friends. The distinguished African leader, the Chairman of the Front Line States, President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania, has been invited by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to pay an official visit to Canada which will take place from September 24 to September 26. The Secretary General of the Commonwealth will visit Canada in early October. We will seek their advice and that of other leaders opposed to apartheid, particularly in the Commonwealth and among the front line states. We expect the meeting of the heads of government of the Commonwealth in mid-October to provide an opportunity for common action against apartheid.

We are taking a number of further measures as the Government of Canada as part of our continuing pressure against apartheid. First, as I believe the House knows, I am meeting with a number of representatives of Canadian business and finance in order to examine areas of co-operative action against apartheid because I believe that there is a very real possibility that where Governments may not have influence on some levels of the business community and the bureaucracy in South Africa, Canadians active in business could well have the influence which could add to what Governments, Parliament and public officials are trying to do.

The first meeting took place on September 9. The others will follow shortly, on September 17 and September 20.

Second, the Canadian Government is introducing a voluntary ban on loans to the Government of South Africa and all of its agencies. We are asking all Canadian banks to apply such a ban and we have reason to believe that they will do so. Some have already acted on their own and we welcome that. The ban will not affect any outstanding credits nor prevent loans that would clearly be to the benefit of blacks.

Third, I am announcing the appointment of Mr. Albert Hart as administrator of the Canadian code of conduct for the employment practices of Canadian companies operating in South Africa. Mr. Hart has had a distinguished career as a public servant in Canada including appointment and service as High Commissioner to Ghana. Mr. Hart will take up his duties shortly and will be in touch with the companies concerned. We are today issuing a standard reporting format for the annual public reports which have been requested by the Government under the code of conduct.

Fourth, the Canadian Government will apply a voluntary ban on the sale of crude oil and refined products to South Africa. To this end, we are asking Canadian companies not to enter into any contracts for the sale and export of these goods to South Africa. Our sales in this area have been limited in the past. This measure is being taken now to ensure that Canada does not become an alternative source of supply in the future.

Fifth, we are bringing in an embargo on air transport between Canada and South Africa. It will cover both cargo and passenger flights. As we have no bilateral air agreement, neither country's airlines have obtained traffic rights from the other country for scheduled international services. Direct air transport between the two countries has, in consequence, been limited to occasional charters. The effect of this measure is therefore to stop those charter flights and to rule out reciprocal air service at least until the process of dismantling of apartheid is well engaged.

Sixth, a register has been opened for the voluntary measures which Canadian provinces and municipalities, as well as private institutions, organizations and firms have taken against apartheid. Thousands of Canadians have acted quietly on their own in protest and we encourage others to do so. Individuals and institutions which wish to do so are invited to register their actions by writing to me and indicating what they have done. The list of measures will have an exemplary impact and will be conveyed to the Secretary General of the United Nations in the expectation and with the recommandation that other nations might follow suit so that there will develop a world wide register of the actions of individuals who abhor apartheid.

Seventh, in view of the increasing number of arrests of non-violent opponents of apartheid, I am today announcing that an additional $1 million will be allocated on humanitarian grounds to assist the families of political prisoners and detainees in South Africa. These funds will be channelled through organizations such as the International Defence and Air Fund for Southern Africa and Canadian groups which are actively supporting the victims of apartheid.

In the prevailing circumstances, we must proceed with prudence and determination so that the words we say and the actions we take, alone or in concert with other countries, will help end injustice and violence. There have been some hopeful signs in recent days regarding the pass laws and common citizenship. We do not know whether the reforms hinted at will be realized but we certainly wish to encourage movement in that direction, and encourage the efforts of those South African business people who have long supported reform and who have now taken the initiative to encourage dialogue with the true representatives of blacks in South Africa.

The days and weeks ahead will be marked on our side by a continued search for steps which may help to bring justice to South Africa and greater harmony to the region. For Canada that search will centre on consultations with our partners in Africa and elsewhere in the world, but particularly on the Commonwealth. Nor, of course, do we exclude talks with South Africa if the door remains open and we can influence events.

Seven of South Africa's close neighbours are Commonwealth countries and an eighth, Namibia, has been invited to join. Their people are closely linked. Their economies are deeply dependent on one another. Their security and their standing cannot be separated. There can be no peace in the region while South Africa remains at odds with its Commonwealth neighbours and while they live in fear of it. Apartheid is a Commonwealth problem. The question is not whether the Commonwealth has a role; by force of circumstance it must be concerned and involved. More than that, the Commonwealth has traditions and historic ties with South Africa which have prepared it to play a reconciling part if the Government of South Africa opens the door to it.

Despite the sharp differences which have divided Governments, the people of the Commonwealth and the people of South Africa are from the same traditions. There is a disposition to be hopeful and to seek reconciliation among South Africa's neighbours. What we must know is whether it will be reciprocated.

Another forum whose unanimous resolutions have consistently been ignored by the South African Government is the United Nations. At the imminent General Assembly, as it has in the past, Canada will encourage upon the world community the sort of concerted action which should leave South Africa with no doubts about the repugnance of its policies. As the world speaks, the unusual phenomenon of growing pressure on the South African Government from within that country will be given an opportunity to bear fruit. Our actions today, those taken by other Governments, and those actions which will be taken, will collectively keep the pressure on. If the Government of South Africa remains unbending to that pressure, then Canada will be left with no recourse other than to end our relations absolutely.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise in the House this morning to take part in this debate, but first I wish to congratulate the Minister on his presentation.

[English]

I think this statement is welcomed by this House and I—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: If there is a subject we should try to be very united on, it is the issue of apartheid in South Africa. We in this land know it is possible to overcome differences. We have come a long way down that road. Therefore, we should have absolutely no reservations about trying to make a positive contribution to make sure that every human being is equal around the globe. The situation in South Africa is a very good example of discrimination and domination which has to be strongly rejected. I am very glad that the Minister has come forward with this statement this morning because we need a comprehensive statement on this situation.

This past summer it appeared to be difficult for the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to find common ground on this issue and I am happy to see that there now seems to be one position which is acceptable to everyone in your party and I am very pleased with that. The speech and all the remarks before the inauguration of sanctions were very good. But I think there is a big gap between the rhetoric and the reality. I wish the Minister had been able to get up in this House and say that by, for example, January 1, 1986, we will sever our relations with South Africa if it does not act accordingly. This is because in analysing the situation in South Africa we realize that the moderates there are moving. It is not only on one side. The business community is now taking some positive steps to put pressure on the administration there and I think that economic sanctions are the answer. Some people feel that Canada has played a small part in the economy of South Africa. But, on the other hand, if every nation moves strongly and rapidly, the Government of South Africa will have no choice but to move. That is why I think the speech, the rhetoric, is very good but I am a bit disappointed that the Minister could not impose sanctions or give orders to certain people in Canada, many of whom we can give orders to, not to do business with South Africa. Of course, many of the banks have already stated their position that they will not lend South Africa any more money. But the problem is that we have to create a strong impression and thus my difficulty is with the actions of the Government. I think it might be seen by some as effective as mandatory sanctions; I agree with the Minister on that. But we see the debate in the United States where the President made a statement on apartheid which included somewhat less than the expected sanctions proposed in the Senate which is dominated by the Republicans. We saw what the EEC did this week. They put in place mandatory sanctions against South Africa.

So I feel the action is somewhat weak, but I do not want to be partisan and difficult about it. I just hope this will work. But we have to make clear that my such and such a date we will impose mandatory sanctions against South Africa in every field. I am glad to see that the Minister is even threatening to sever our relations with South Africa because that is what I wish we would do, to be very clear if thiings do not change very dramatically. Sometimes, when we are trying to find our way, we give a very confusing image of Canada, as happened this past summer. Our ambassador was recalled but the explanation given was that it was not quite a normal recall but that he was just recalled for consultation. I should have been made very clear that we had recalled him to give him new instructions or even to keep him here. But we did not do that. We waffled. We waffled as well between the statement of the Minister and that of the Prime Minister. Now it seems that there is cohesion in the Government and I think we are happy to support that.

The Speech is perfect but the action is weak. I hope the Minister will take the opportunity when it arises to set the date and say precisely what the action will be. Of course, one might argue that it will not have a big effect because the economic relations between Canada and South Africa are limited to something like $400 million in trade. That will not kill them. But if all nations of the world do the same thing we will succeed and there will be more justice in that country. There are political prisoners there just because they have expressed a political view. I am glad they have been named and the Minister is offering some help for their families and so on. We welcome that. But we have to keep the pressure on and encourage a dialogue between the moderates and the Government in South Africa to start soon.

There is a solution to these problems. Of course, some people are preoccupied with the fact that some of their privileges will disappear. But what is important is to give all the fundamental rights to the black people and I know and you know that when they are equal and first-class citizens of that land they will want the country to progress. I think humanity will be better off for that. So we welcome this move by the Minister in the sense that it shows cohesion in the Government against apartheid.

I think the action could have been stronger, and I hope it will not be seen that we are waffling somewhat. It would have been easy to say that these sanctions have to be followed rather than making them voluntary. The result may not have been different, but the speech would have been stronger and more influential. We have made some progress in that businesses and citizens have decided to use the peaceful tools they have of putting economic pressure on the business community. If the nations of the world were to do that from the other side, progress would be made. It is a step in the right direction. We must be as united as possible in that policy in Canada because, even though we are small and humble, we have had some experience of that nature in this land. We have proved that there is much generosity in human beings. This world problem presents an occasion to display that generosity. I welcome the statement and I hope that the Minister will tell South Africa exactly what we will do on January 1, 1986 if they do not move. I hope he will keep pressure on the Government to ensure that political prisoners will be freed as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

By doing so, Mr. Speaker, we could have made our contribution, because Canada is a country that could play an important role, considering the fact that as a country, we have shown it is possible to accommodate the differences that exist within a nation, and while giving all citizens a chance to be equal and to keep their differences, their cultures and their language, to accept people of a different colour as equals and invite them to share in the benefits and responsibilities of Canadian citizenship.

Mr. Speaker, if they want to do the same thing in South Africa, I am confident that blacks and Asians and whites can live together, with a measure of good will, while respecting each others differences, and join in building a society that is truly worthy of the modern world.

[English]

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we, too, welcome the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) today. I am very pleased that he is continuing to influence and develop the Government's South Africa policy. The development has been slow, contradictory, and not enough but I, and I am sure many others, welcome the Minister's efforts.

For decades we in this Party have called for an end to the apartheid regime in South Africa. We have called for active Canadian and international efforts to end apartheid and bring about majority rule in that country. We urged the previous Liberal Governments to end Canada's de facto support for the regime in Pretoria through government assisted exports and traditional "quiet diplomacy". Despite continuing racism, repression and murder, and the ever-mounting international pressure for the isolation of South Africa, the Liberals did not act. Although the Hon. Minister says they would act today, they did not act over 20 years.

Once again, recent events in South Africa have caused widespread shock and revulsion in the international community and in Canada. Since the killings at Uitenhage on the 25th anniversary of the Sharpeville massacre, it has been a bloody year for South Africans. The unacceptable use of repression, force and murder by the state has been met in South African by resistance and abroad by revulsion and shock. No Government which must rely on such savage methods can make a claim to legitimacy among nations or support from its own people.

As Nelson Mandela said more than two decades ago, "Naked force and violence is the weapon openly used by the South African Government to beat down the struggles of the African people and to suppress their aspirations". What more evidence do we need than that only last night, more than two decades later, seven more blacks were killed. The brutal use of violence by a police state will ultimately lead to the defeat of those who employ such violence.

As the Minister has pointed out, the apartheid regime of South Africa now sits condemned, as it should have long ago, by international public opinion, by the family of nations, and by the inevitable course of history. The world and the majority of people in South Africa demand an end to apartheid. It is an unreformable evil that changes to citizenship regulations and pass laws will not correct. It is founded on racism and enforced by violence. Its "reform" will come only through the establishment of majority rule.

New efforts and energies must be directed to the struggle for liberation and human decency in South Africa. While the Minister's statement is most welcome, it does not sufficiently represent the kind of new efforts which must be undertaken by Canada and other countries. In his statement the Minister said that in focusing our anger and applying steady pressure for change we must have the best information and judgments we can get on how to use our influence most effectively.

Nelson Mandela, in prison for 20 years or more, says that Governments must impose full economic sanctions. That is his judgment. The judgment of Desmond Tutu is the same. Seventy-three to 77 per cent of the black African population has said the same. That is their judgment on how to use our influence most effectively. In fact, other Canadians have taken as many, and sometimes more, initiatives until now than has the federal Government. Seven provincial Governments have established some economic sanctions by banning South African liquor sales. In fact, the Premier of Quebec has charged that the federal Government has lobbied the provinces not to take such actions. Trade unions in Canada have called for economic sanctions and the labour movement has refused to handle South African cargo at Vancouver. Petro-Canada has banned its latest sulphur shipment to South Africa, once again running ahead of External Affairs which has asked "to be kept up to date" on such initiatives. Even the Conservative Party leader in Manitoba has called for Canada to sever all economic relations with South Africa.

The Government has an obligation to undertake efforts and initiatives at least equal to those being undertaken by the people of Canada. In our view the Government should initiate a program of staged economic sanctions to be implemented within specific time limits in the absence of the dismantling of apartheid and concrete moves toward majority rule. As I have noted, South African blacks themselves are calling for such sanctions.

Canada should also actively promote at the United Nations broader international trade sanctions. There should be a tough mandatory rather than voluntary code of conduct, for Canadian business now operating in South Africa, and a government ban on any further Canadian investment in that country.

I welcome the Minister's call for the release of all political prisoners and detainees, especially ANC and UDF leaders. I urge him to consider Canadian financial assistance to the legal defence of such prisoners and the granting of charitable tax status for Canadian-based organizations providing such legal support. The Minister might also now consider something which the previous Government refused to do, namely matching funds raised in Canada by the Canadian Aid for South African Refugees Organization through CIDA. We have asked for this for a number of years. However, it has never been granted.

Perhaps the Minister would consider providing matching funds to aid South African refugees as we have matching funds in other parts of the world to aid refugees.

Next, Canada must firmly renounce the illegal South African occupation of Namibia, in defiance of the United Nations and the work of the Western Contact Group. If Canada is to remain a member of that group it must work more rigorously for speedy South African withdrawal and a settlement that will include the active participation of SWAPO.

Finally, Canada must undertake special development assistance and support for states neighbouring South Africa to end their vulnerability to South African attack and their dependence on the South African economy.

Change will come to South Africa. It will either continue to be bloody and revolutionary, brought about by continued state repression and violence, or it will be peaceful orderly change through the speedy dismantling of apartheid and the establishment of majority rule.

The further measures announced by the Minister today, while most welcome, are largely voluntary. Canada can act now. Only by taking the lead in the community of nations in the imposition of economic sanctions—staged economic sanctions as we have said—within publicly stated time limits can other nations be influenced to take similar actions and can fundamental change become hopefully a reality in South Africa.

PAROLE ACT, PENITENTIARY ACT, PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES ACT, AND CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURES TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, September 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Beatty that Bill C-67, and Act to amend the Parole Act and the Penitentiary Act, and Bill C-68, an Act to amend the Parole Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act, and the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to resume debate on this very important piece of legislation. At the conclusion of my remarks yesterday, I was raising the serious concern that this Bill, far from promoting public safety, will in fact have the opposite effect. I say that for a number of reasons. I know that my time is limited, but in the remaining time I certainly hope to be able to talk about some of the alternatives that we in the New Democratic Party feel are of significance and importance in this area.

I wish to turn to some of the specific concerns with Bill C-67, particularly when contrasted with some of the other similar Bills which have been before the House in the past. First, in dealing with the provisions which would close the so-called revolving door, I suggest the Bill has a rather bizarre provision which would, in fact, have a serious adverse impact on the community and on prisoners. What is stated in the Bill is that those prisoners who are initially convicted of crimes of violence, assault or homicide will not be eligible for remission on their mandatory supervision after one revocation. In other words, if there is any form of forfeiture of their mandatory supervision after they are out, they lose any opportunity for further earned remission. Not only will that add to overcrowding, it will cause serious problems within institutions because there are no incentives whatsoever for the prisoner to be of good behaviour. The one possible incentive which now exists is the possibility of earned remission, and that will be removed.

In addition, there is a glaring inconsistency in this Bill. I would ask Members of the House to consider the following situation. An inmate who is originally imprisoned for a non-violent crime, for example, a fraud, is released from prison after two-thirds of his sentence has been served, because of his good behaviour, and is out on mandatory supervision. He is out on mandatory supervision for a couple of months and commits a serious crime of violence. Under the terms of this Bill, that prisoner would be returned to prison, having his mandatory supervision revoked, but would then be eligible for earned remission once he is back in. However, another prisoner, who was originally imprisoned for a crime of violence, in the same situation, is released after two-thirds of his sentence has been served, is out on the street and then has his mandatory supervision revoked, not because he commits a new crime but because he moves, is drunk or in breach of one of the other conditions, for example, he incurs a debt he is not supposed to incur. That individual will be hauled back into prison and forced to serve the remainder of his time in prison without any opportunity for earned remission.

What kind of ludicrous set-up is it when there are two individuals, both of whom are out on mandatory supervision, one of whom commits a serious crime of violence and is eligible for earned remission, and the individual whose mandatory supervision is revoked because he breaches a term or condition of mandatory supervision has the prison doors slammed shut until the end of his sentence? That is what this Bill does. It is just one of the many flaws in the Bill.

I wish to deal with another concern respecting this part of the Bill as well, that is to say, mandatory supervision can be revoked for any breach of any term or condition which is set out under the provisions of the Bill. That does not just mean a future criminal offence. That can mean a breach of any of the conditions. Even the previous Government recognized that it was wrong to suggest that an individual, whose mandatory supervision is revoked for breach of a condition which is not a criminal offence, should be subject to loss of any future earned remission. That was wrong and that would be destructive of the environment within prisons, let alone to the question of fairness to the individual involved.

I would like to give one example of what that can lead to. A young man named Henry MacDonald, who was 30 years old, was released in September of 1980 on mandatory supervision. He had served two thirds of his sentence. One month later, however, the parole board revoked his release because he refused to live where he was told to live. He was told to live in London, Ontario and he left there and went home to his family in Brantford, Ontario. His family and even the local police said that he was causing no trouble whatsoever but he was in breach of that condition. So he was picked up and put back into prison in Millhaven Institution, the most violent maximum security institution in Canada. And that was done because he moved back with his family. On November 24, 1980, he was found stabbed to death in his cell.

This Bill will promote that kind of violence in our prison system and ultimately this Bill will promote increased violence in our communities. Serious questions have been raised with respect to the efficacy of the mandatory supervision program itself. This program, which was initially implemented in 1970 in fact has been shown to have virtually no impact whatsoever on the rate of recidivism of individuals who are subject to mandatory supervision. If one takes an individual who is on parole and another individual who is subject to mandatory supervision, the rate of involvement in future crime may be somewhat higher for the individual on mandatory supervision, but that is not surprising given the fact that it is the best risks who are originally given parole. If one takes two other groups of individuals, one group released after serving two thirds of their sentence and then serving the remainder without any form of mandatory supervision, and the second group who are released and are required to serve the remainder of their sentences under mandatory supervision, one finds there is no effect whatsoever on recidivism.

It has been argued by many that compulsory parole supervision in the community has no effect on the likelihood of an offender's reconviction. In fact, it causes serious problems. Really it is a form of surveillance, not a form of assistance and rehabilitation.

There are other problems with this Bill. I mentioned this bizarre provision whereby there is a double standard relating to the individual who is eligible for mandatory remission, on the one hand, and one who is not eligible for it, on the other hand, based solely on the offence for which they were originally incarcerated. But one of the most serious concerns I have about this Bill is the test which is applied to determine whether or not an individual will in effect be gated. As I indicated yesterday, it has been shown to be virtually impossible to predict future violence. But under the terms of this Bill, the test is so broad and so sweeping that virtually anyone could be gated without any form of judicial review whatsoever. Let us bear in mind the fact, Mr. Speaker, that it is the same body which is determining that individual's eligibility for release that has previously been denying him that release all along the way. So we have the National Parole Board which is saying, "No, we are not going to grant you day parole. No, we are not going to grant you full parole", all the way along. Now it is suddenly given an opportunity, after two thirds of the sentence has been served, to keep that person in. Do you think it is not going to take advantage of that, Mr. Speaker? Of course, it will. And on what grounds? Because of the possibility that he may be dangerous in the community, and that is decided without any real certainty or statistical basis for showing that we can predict that kind of violent behaviour.

At least, Mr. Speaker, in two other previous Bills, the criteria were more tightly drawn. In fact, I believe they related to the dangerous offender criteria in the Criminal Code. As it stands now, this new Bill would be directed not at inmates who have committed a serious personal injury offence as defined in the dangerous offender provisions of the Code, but it would be directed at a whole series of other offences which are going to be mentioned in a new schedule to the Parole Act. There will be 14 different offences. So it broadens the net very substantially.

With respect to the provision on the so-called "revolving door" syndrome; in that particular case, those individuals, having has their mandatory supervision revoked, will not even be eligible for discretionary parole in the future. The door will be permanently shut. So the criteria are far too broad.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I would note that under the previous Bill there was a requirement that psychiatric evidence be heard. One would have thought that it would be pretty essential in dealing with the possibility of future violence. Under this Bill, there is not even a requirement that there be any evidence heard from psychiatrists.

As well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number other concerns. I mentioned that the criteria are very broad. Effectively, the Board will now have to be satisfied of the likelihood of the commission of an offence causing death or serious harm and the guidelines can be established by the Governor in Council. I mentioned as well, Mr. Speaker, the fact that an individual who is detained pursuant to this provision, who is gated pursuant to this provision and is ordered to be detained in penitentiary, will not be eligible for parole. So if he is not eligible for parole, Mr. Speaker, then the fact is that another element of fairness in the procedure is denied to the prisoner. The final area I would like to touch on is that there is no sunset clause whatsoever in the gating provisions which are put forward by this Minister.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have serious concerns both with respect to the revolving door element of this Bill and with respect to the so-called gating provisions. What are the alternatives? I believe it is incumbent upon those of us who argue that this approach is the wrong approach to provide alternatives. I intend to do that in the few minutes which remain. First, I will note that in 1977, a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs issued a unanimous report to this House. The most important recommendation which was made was that we have to start to recognize that far too many Canadians who are convicted of crimes are imprisoned. Prisons should be used as a last resort and should be used only in those circumstances in which there is no other meaningful alternative and where the individual does pose a genuine threat to the community. The sentences in Canada are far too long in many cases. We are not looking at alternatives to imprisonment. Not only that, but we must go back even before that time, because if we are serious about reducing the level of crime in our communities and if we are serious about reducing prison population in Canada, we have to start looking at the prevention of crime. It is not good enough for us to focus slavishly on crime itself and on prisons. It is about time we in this country became serious about looking at the causes of crime and ways of preventing crime.

Many studies have been done—and we do not need any more studies—showing the kinds of action which should be taken to prevent crime, whether that be community-based alternatives, a recognition that in too many cases poverty and crime are inextricably linked, or a recognition of the fact that programs to deal with abuse, sexual abuse and other forms of violence against young people, are completely lacking in our society. These young people who have themselves been involved in this kind of abuse get involved in violent crime. What about programs for detection of learning disabilities? One estimate indicates as many as 80 per cent of the prison population have learning disabilities. What are we doing to try and prevent those individuals from being involved in crime at an early age? Nothing, absolutely nothing. We have to look at far more effective allocation of our resources to deal with young people in conflict with the law. As it stands now, in too many cases we ignore the concerns of young people. If we as a community made more effort to deal with young people in conflict with the law, hopefully that would result in less crime at later stages.

For those who are incarcerated we have to recognize there are programs which can and should be used for rehabilitation. One program which was strongly recommended by the subcommittee and ignored by the previous Government and this Government is that of work. Is it such a revolutionary thing to suggest that prisoners in Canadian prisons should be working? That was one of the essential recommendations of the subcommittee report. Let us put prisoners to work, meaningful work, within the system. Not only will that assist us in rehabilitation, it will cut down significantly on the cost of prisons. This Government is concerned about the deficit, as we all are, so I would have thought that it would want to look at that recommendation for a national prison industry's corporation. But no, what does it do? It brings in a Bill which will increase the cost of our prison system and add to the overcrowding.

What about those prisoners in the system? I mentioned the importance of work. There are far too many in the system who are not working. For those who may be sex offenders, instead of dealing with meaningful programs to try and rehabilitate those individuals, what is this Government doing? It is cutting funds for programs for sex offenders in the federal prison system. The sex offender treatment program in Campbell River, British Columbia, was treating 12 people. It was very cost effective and reduced the likelihood of further offences. What happened to that program? It was axed by the Government. Therefore, when this Government talks about the safety of our communities on the one hand and on the other eliminates programs which seek to rehabilitate sex offenders, it is speaking out of both sides of its mouth and we in this Party reject that kind of approach. I have mentioned the problems of overcrowding in our prison system. I have mentioned the problems of arbitrary actions which give rise to frustration. These are things such as involuntary transfers, plucking an individual from one prison in the middle of the night and taking him to another prison. This adds to the tension, frustration, overcrowding, double bunking and so on.

In concluding my remarks, the point I want to make on this important Bill is that it is not the answer. The Government is conning Canadians in suggesting that by taking this approach it will in any way reduce the level of violent crime in our communities. In fact, if this approach is adopted the opposite will be the effect. We have to get that message out very clearly. Sure, the chiefs of police are anxious to have this Bill adopted but we have to take a broader approach, one which reflects the concerns of our communities for their safety. We have to recognize our concerns about basic rights within the prison community as well. It is for that reason we in the NDP reject this approach, and it is for that reason that my colleagues and I will be opposing this Bill and urging the Government to come to its senses and take meaningful steps to prevent crime. We have to introduce meaningful programs for rehabilitation within our prison system. Most important of all, we have to ensure that steps are taken to provide alternative to imprisonment so that our human warehouses, the prisons of today, will not cost us that much money and a program which has failed miserably will no longer burden Canadian citizens.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to advise the House that pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) Private Members' business will start today at 4.39 p.m.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this particular debate dealing with Bill C-67. I would like to indicate at the outset that we in the Liberal Party support this Bill. It is, for all intents and purposes, identical to that Bill which was introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) and former Solicitor General. Unlike the NDP, we in the Liberal Party are concerned first and foremost with innocent law-abiding Canadians. We have to ensure that the utmost protection is afforded to those in our society who live according to the rule of law. I want to cite a few examples to indicate why we in the Liberal Party support this Bill. A year ago last July an individual released on mandatory supervision after serving 14 years for rape went out into the community and killed four people in Brandon, Manitoba. The corrections people had no choice, that individual had to be released. I would like to ask whether the lives of those four individuals could have been saved if this Bill had been law at that time? There are other examples where individuals released on mandatory supervision have gone out and committed some very serious crimes. Another example, one I am sure Hon. Members will recall, was last year when a Woodstock man, once again released on mandatory supervision, killed a police officer in the Montreal area and then killed a student. I ask again whether the lives of those two individuals could have been saved had this legislation been in place?

My friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) indicates that this Bill will do a profound injustice to prisoners and those who are serving sentences in the community. The NDP have often claimed that they support the ordinary Canadian. Listening to the Hon. Member, one has to ask who the NDP is representing given their position on this particular Bill. Are they concerned about the safety of the public or are they advocates for the inmates? We, too, in the Liberal Party are concerned about rehabilitation. We are concerned about those who are serving sentences in our prisons. However, our primary concern is the safety of those citizens who live their lives according to the rule of law. This Bill is necessary and important. There are those of us in the Liberal Opposition who believe that other steps have to be taken to ensure the utmost safety for our citizens and I was pleased to hear the Minister indicate that his Department and the Department of Justice are continuing to monitor the situation and continuing to think of new proposals to ensure the utmost protection for society.

Now, what is mandatory supervision? The Minister and the Hon. Member for Burnaby explained what it was. However, I suspect that a lot of Canadians do not understand what it really means. I have to admit, as a lawyer and as a new Member of Parliament, I really did not know the distinction between mandatory supervision and parole. Parole, in my view, is far more successful than mandatory supervision. As Hon. Members know, most inmates become eligible for full parole after serving one-third of their sentences. An exception are those who are serving life sentences. Inmates are eligible for day parole after serving one-sixth of their sentence. The National Parole Board considers each individual case, the crime the individual committed, and the prisoner's behaviour while serving his sentence, and determines whether an inmate can be released without being a threat to the lives of innocent people. For the most part our parole system is good because the Parole Board has discretion. It decides whether or not to release a particular inmate. Statistics indicate that 74 per cent of parolees are successful and that only a small percentage of those released on parole are eventually returned to institutions.

What is the case with mandatory supervision? In 1970 the concept of mandatory supervision was introduced. Prior to that time there existed statutory remission through which the sentence of an inmate was reduced by operation of law. Under statutory remission an individual would serve his time in jail and then have no period of supervision in the community. Once the inmate had served his sentence he was thrown out into the community. It was widely thought that that was not fair to society or to the inmate. It was thought to be necessary to have some form of supervision, so we experimented with mandatory supervision. Under mandatory supervision inmates accumulate remission which is known as earned remission. For every month they serve in a federal penitentiary they get 15 days off for good behaviour. That resulted in the elimination of one-third of the inmate's sentence. The problem is that that inmate would automatically be released, notwithstanding the crimes he had committed or the threat he may present to the community. The authorities had no option other than to release that individual into the community.

We have heard horror stories about individuals who were released on mandatory supervision. I referred to the case of the individual in Brandon, Manitoba who killed four individuals, and to the man from Woodstock. These are the worst of the worst criminals. Those model inmates who have shown a sincere desire to rehabilitate themselves and have shown that they can live a law-abiding life are eligible for day parole after serving one-sixth of their sentence and for full parole after serving one-third of their sentence. The model inmates become eligible for parole. Those who are released on mandatory supervision are the inmates for which the authorities have refused parole. The authorities have concluded that these inmates should not be released, but because of mandatory supervision they were forced to release them. Attempts were made to reincarcerate some of these individuals and we had the problem of gating which was an attempt to reincarcerate those inmates who posed a very serious threat to the community. It became apparent over a period of time that mandatory supervision was not working.

I would like to cite some statistics which would corroborate that contention. The Solicitor General's Department undertook a study of mandatory supervision. The study is entitled Mandatory Supervision: A Discussion Paper. It is a report of the Committee on Mandatory Supervision which was released and tabled in early 1981. The statistics relating to inmates who were released on mandatory supervision between January 1975 and December 1979 are somewhat shocking. In that period of time individuals who were released on mandatory supervision committed 52 homicides, 31 murders, and 21 offences of manslaughter. Does the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the rest of the New Democratic Party think that if this Bill had been in force some of these lives could have been saved? It will be argued that crime is inevitable and that if these individuals were not kept incarcerated there would be no way to stop them from committing murders and other offences.

In that same period of time statistics show that inmates released on parole committed nine murders and nine offences of manslaughter. There were no cases of attempted murder by those released on parole while there were 11 such offences committed by individuals released on mandatory supervision. Ten individuals released on parole were convicted of rape while 25 inmates released under mandatory supervision were convicted of that crime. The list goes on. Four individuals released under the parole system were convicted of sexual assault while 23 individuals released under mandatory supervision were convicted of that crime. Seventeen individuals released under parole were convicted of assault while 153 released under mandatory supervision were convicted of that crime. With regard to kidnapping the figures are 6 versus 15 and with regard to robberies they are 127 versus 394. Mr. Speaker, res ipsa loquitur, the facts speak for themselves.

This is a good Bill, Mr. Speaker, and the Liberal Party intends to support it, but we also recognize that it is only a first step and that other action must be taken to ensure that society is safe. When a convicted individual is given a sentence the public believes that that individual will serve that sentence. However if an individual is convicted of a serious crime and given a sentence of 12 years, we know that that individual will not necessarily serve that period of time. Under today's sentences, the individual will serve anywhere from one-third to the full warrant when the sentence has expired. Indeed, very few individuals serve their full sentences today. It is true that this Bill may result in certain inmates being kept in for their full warrant. Our concern with respect to this legislation is that there must be a period of supervision in the community. We simply cannot release an inmate outright after serving a lengthy prison term. It is not fair to the community and it is not fair to the individual. There must be a transition period. My friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby laughs. I listened to the alternatives that he presented and I, on behalf of the Liberal Party, would like to make some suggestions.

He is suggesting that as part of that sentence there be a period of supervision during the duration of that sentence. If I understand the comments made by the Hon. Member, his Party supports the existing provisions with respect to mandatory supervision notwithstanding the statistics which clearly indicate that the concept is a failure to a certain degree.

I will ask the committee to consider the possibility of reforming the sentencing procedure in Canada to include, at the end of a period of incarceration, a period of supervision required by law. For example, with respect to someone sentenced for a 12-year prison term and who is not released because that person is a threat to society, according to the legislation there would be a period of perhaps one to three years of supervision where the authorities can continue to exercise some control over the individual to ensure that that individual is able to begin living a normal life. That is an option that should be considered. Other options and alternatives should also be considered.

The previous Liberal administration was concerned about sentencing in Canada. I am sure Hon. Members will agree that a great percentage of Canadians believe that sentences are far too lenient. During this Parliament, Bill C-18 provided for stiffer penalties with respect to drunk driving. That Bill too was introduced by the previous Liberal administration but died without becoming law. All Hon. Members, including those representing the New Democratic Party, supported that legislation because of the belief that Canadians wanted more severe penalties with respect to drunk drivers.

The previous administration was concerned about sentencing over-all in Canada with respect to the commission of criminal offences. Therefore, the previous administration established a commission—originally known as the Sinclair Commission—now known as the Archambault Commission. It is reviewing the whole sentencing procedure in Canada in order to determine whether sentences are appropriate in the circumstances for the various offences. It is determining what criteria and what principles ought to be used in sentencing.

We, as parliamentarians, have a duty to take into consideration the public view with respect to crime and sentencing. In some ways, the results of that commission will have to reflect a concern by the public that sentencing is too lenient.

The Liberal Party is also concerned about the population in our prisons. However, our paramount concern is the safety of the public. We believe that we must become more strict with violent offenders, those who commit offences against the persons by assault, rape, murder and manslaughter. It is with those individuals that we must become more severe and if it means spending more money to keep these individuals incarcerated when they pose a serious threat, so be it. We cannot put a value on human life. It is not possible to put a value on the lives of the four individuals who were murdered in Brandon, Manitoba by the inmate who was released on mandatory supervision. We cannot put a price on the 52 individuals who were killed by those released on mandatory supervision between 1975 and 1979. It is costly to keep people incarcerated and it is also costly to keep the public safe. If it comes to a question of spending more money or releasing violent offenders, we believe in spending the extra money to ensure the safety of our citizens.

Some people who are incarcerated should not be in prison. They are those who commit offences against property. One could argue that they should not be in our prisons and that sentences for those particular crimes whould be reduced and other methods of punishing these people should be used. Such punishment could include community service orders where these individuals could pay society back for their crime by working in the community or contributing in some other way to the community. We believe that other methods of punishment should be used for those individuals while maintaining the concept of deterrence and recognizing its importance in order to deter like minded people from committing similar crimes.

While we applaud the Government for looking for other ways to penalize those who breach the Criminal Code of Canada, we are concerned about the violent offenders. That is why we believe Bill C-67, while not the final step, is a tremendous step forward to ensure the safety of our citizenry.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby seems to be living in a cloud. He apparently suggests a utopia when talking about eliminating crime. While we can do much in an attempt to reduce the level of crime, my hon. friend seems to believe that by waving a magic wand or by using some magic potion, crime can be eliminated. However, we must accept the reality that crime in Canada will continue.

We are very fortunate in this country with respect to the level of crime and the safety of our citizens. One need only look south of the 49th parallel to realize how fortunate we are concerning crime. Our record of being one of the safest countries in the world is one of which we can be proud. How many people in the world can walk freely in their major urban areas without fear of being assaulted in any way? When we walk in downtown Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver, it is reassuring to have a certain degree of confidence in our police force and a confidence that we are safe. However, that is not the case in Detroit, New York and many other major cities not only in the United States but throughout the world.

We should count our blessings that we do have a very safe country. However, that does not mean that we can stop there. We can make it safer by ensuring that those individuals who show a clear risk of violent conduct and pose that threat to society will be kept incarcerated.

As the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) indicated, it costs approximately $40,000 a year to keep an inmate in a federal institution. It costs over $100,000 to construct one new prison cell. Although it is costly, I repeat that the money is well spent when ensuring the safety of the public.

• (1530)

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will give the National Parole Board discretion that it did not have with respect to mandatory supervision. In many ways the National Parole Board will have the discretion it has under the parole system. I would like to reiterate that those candidates eligible for mandatory supervision are not model prisoners or those serving time for property offences. We are talking about the rapists, those who have committed serious assaults and we are talking about federal, not provincial inmates. All inmates in federal penitentiaries are serving at least a two-year sentence. These are the most serious offenders. The less serious offenders are dealt with in provincial institutions. Any inmate serving less than two years serves the sentence in a provincial institution.

This Bill will give discretion to the National Parole Board and it will establish criteria and procedures to retain in custody until warrant expiry, or place under strict residential conditions those inmates considered to pose a clear risk of violent conduct beyond a release date that would have been established by earned remission.

I took the liberty of calling some of those who adjudicate these particular cases from the National Parole Board. I took the liberty to call other experts in the field to ask their opinion with respect to this legislation. The overwhelming majority of those to whom I spoke considered this Bill a step forward and considered any move to give the National Parole Board more discretion as a positive step toward creating a safer society.

Mr. Robinson: Name names.

Mr. Nunziata: I will indeed name names at committee.

Mr. Robinson: Why not now?

Mr. Nunziata: I look forward to that in-depth discussion of this legislation at the legislative committee. Yes, I want to hear from those who have presented arguments to the Hon. Member for Burnaby, those who were able to convince the Member for Burnaby of the New Democratic Party to challenge this Bill because of their concern with inmates and prisoner rights.

We in the Liberal Party want to hear those people. We would simply ask the NDP and the Hon. Member for Burnaby to speak to the families of those who have suffered because of a crime committed by individuals released on mandatory supervision. I would like the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the NDP to get rid of the blinders and to look at the full scope of the situation and to listen to the police for a change.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member name a single group with whom he has consulted in the criminal justice community that supports this Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, if I could just finish that train of thought—

Mr. Robinson: Come on, John.

Mr. Nunziata: I would ask the NDP to keep an open mind. Its Members are far too often closed-minded when it comes to representing the ordinary Canadians who they so often say they represent.

Mr. Robinson: One group, John. One group.

Mr. Nunziata: We will listen to those groups. Yes, I have spoken to Claire Culhane and I have spoken to inmates. As the critic for the Solicitor General in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, I have listened to inmates and I have spoken to them. I have also spoken to victims. As a lawyer I have acted for victims. I have been concerned with the level of violent crime. I commit myself and my Party to doing everything we possibly can to make our society safer. When we look at this Bill, we do not say that it will do a profound injustice to prisoners, but we in the Liberal Party say that if Members do not pass this Bill, and if they do not support it, they will be doing a profound injustice to the people they represent as parliamentarians. Members will be doing a profound injustice to the thousands and millions of Canadians who live a law-abiding life. I ask the Hon. Member and the NDP, who are they representing? Are they representing their constituents, or are they representing a very narrow interest group, as they so often do?

Getting back to the legislation, Mr. Speaker, it will allow inmates convicted of violent offences specified by the criteria one chance for release on mandatory supervision. As I indicated earlier, this will eliminate the revolving door syndrome. It is fair to give an inmate one chance. First, that inmate has to convince the National Parole Board that he or she ought to be released because the individual is not a threat to society. After having convinced the Parole Board of that, if the inmate breaches a condition of supervision or commits a further offence and is convicted of a further offence, then surely no one can argue that the individual be given another chance. That aspect of the Bill is a very substantial step forward.

The Bill would also establish procedural safeguards and criteria that would limit the application of the measures to only the most dangerous offenders. I am sure Hon. Members have reviewed the legislation and realized the offenders that we are dealing with in this legislation are offenders who are serving time in jail for manslaughter, attempted murder, causing bodily harm with intent, assault with a weapon or causing bodily harm, aggravated assault, assaulting a police officer, sexual assault, including rape, et cetera. These are the individuals serving more than two years. They are the ones who have to be watched and who will be looked at. This legislation does not deal with those individuals serving time in federal penitentiaries for offences against property, for example. I think it is only reasonable we look at those who have committed serious offences to determine, using certain criteria, whether there is any likelihood or risk that they might go out into society and commit another serious offence. I think that is only reasonable, Mr. Speaker.

The Parole Board will first look at those individuals who have been denied parole. It will then make a determination whether reasonable grounds exist to conclude whether a person is likely to commit, prior to the expiry of his or her sentence, a violent crime that will result in harm. There are those who would argue the standard is not high enough, that reasonable grounds give the National Parole Board too much discretion. There are those who would argue that the standard is too low and that there should be a stricter standard as to when certain individuals should be kept in custody under a detention order.

There are those who argue that the onus should be on an inmate to show to the authorities, the National Parole Board, that they are likely candidates to be released and that they are not a threat to society. Under the legislation, it is up to the National Parole Board. There is a presumption that an individual after having committed a serious crime will be release after serving two-thirds of the sentence. There is a presumption in the law as it reads that that individual is to be released and the onus is on the National Parole Board or the authorities to apply the criteria and determine whether the individual should be kept in custody. Indeed, there are those people who argue that the onus should be on the accused and that the presumption should be that all inmates serve their full sentences because under the Criminal Code, if one commits a particular crime, one can be sentenced up to a particular time in prison. There are those people who argue that a 12-year sentence means a 12-year sentence and that in some ways our federal statutes conflict. The Criminal Code indicates, for example, that one is to serve 12 years, yet other legislation indicates that if one earns a remission, then the 12-year sentence is no longer a 12-year sentence but an 8-year one. The proposed legislation will give that discretion to the National Parole Board.

The legislation goes on to indicate that even if an inmate does not meet the criteria with respect to the offences listed in the schedule to the Bill and if the Commissioner of Corrections has reasonable grounds to believe that the inmate is likely to commit, prior to the expiry of the sentence, a violent crime which will result in violent harm, he may refer the case to the Chairman of the National Parole Board for a detention hearing. This particular provision might cause some concern. It provides that those who are not serving sentences for crimes against a person may be subjected to a detention hearing before the National Parole Board. There are also those people who have suggested that perhaps in those cases the person should not be detained.

There are safeguards with respect to the legislation. For example, the Parole Act will be amended to entitle all inmates to an annual review of a detention order. It does not mean that once the National Parole Board makes a decision with respect to a particular inmate that that is the end of the case and the inmate is required to serve his or her full sentence. An inmate who is refused release on mandatory supervision will have the legal right to have his or her case reconsidered every year. If there is a material change in circumstances and the particular individual is able to show to the National Parole Board and to the authorities that he or she does not pose a risk to society, the particular inmate may be permitted a release in the future. We consider this to be a good provision.

The legislation also provides that three members of the board must be present when a detention hearing is held. We consider that to be a good feature as well. Three responsible individuals would be reviewing a particular case as opposed to a single individual, and that provides the system with a degree of more fairness. The National Parole Board is not only given the discretion to release a particular inmate, but it could also attach conditions to a particular release. That is also a good feature of the legislation. We need to have confidence that members of the National Parole Board will act reasonably and according to the best interests of society first and the particular inmate second.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby indicated in his submission that the legislation in some way will increase violent crime. I was somewhat surprised when I heard him indicate that that was the position of the New Democratic Party. He called upon the Official Opposition to provide the names of groups which have spoken to our Party. I note that my time is coming to an end, but in conclusion I would like to challenge the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the New Democratic Party to provide facts with respect to their submission that more violence will occur. If the NDP took the time to read the report published by the Department of the Solicitor General, they may arrive at a different conclusion. I reiterate that the Official Opposition supports the Bill in principle. We welcome a full and complete discussion of it when it is before the legislative committee. We invite all interested groups and parties to appear before the legislative committee to put forward their submissions. If we approach the Bill in a reasonable way, I am sure Canadians can rest assured that we have done everything we possibly can as parliamentarians to ensure the safety of law-abiding citizens.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this Bill. I do not think I can let the remarks of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata) just go by without passing comment. I think they were almost too intellectually dishonest and at times demonstrated a dangerous diversion from the principles of British and Canadian common law. His proposal for those who were sentenced by the courts to serve their full sentences and to have the Canadian penitentiary system, the police and courts tack on surveillance in the communities afterward is a very dangerous proposal which is not operative anywhere in the western world. Perhaps the Hon. Member might want to name a few police states where it occurs, but I am certainly unaware of any precedent or anyone associated with the criminal justice system who has ever proposed or supported such an intellectually dishonest and naive proposal.

I came to this House having been elected as a Member of Parliament from being a corrections officer. I have some relevant experience to lay before the House in relation to these proposals. I have had discussions with almost all my colleagues in the field, whether they be jail guards, national parole officers, probation officers in the provinces, prosecutors or police, regarding this kind of proposal for more than a decade. I must say that this approach is tragically narrow and will prove to be both dangerous and expensive. I will demonstrate in my remarks this afternoon the reason for that. I hope those Members of Cabinet who are here will pass on my views to the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) in the hopes that he will change the approach in this Bill.

As was demonstrated by the previous speaker, there is a real need for the House to inform itself fully of the penal and parole system in Canada before tinkering with it. For the Liberal Party to put up someone today who admitted before speaking that he did not even know what mandatory supervision was, demonstrates the lack of depth in that Party and why, for more than a decade, the very activities which he quoted were occurring. Whether it was the tragic murders in Brandon, Manitoba or elsewhere, that Government never responded to such activities in any meaningful way within the system of corrections that exists in Canada today. We have one of the highest rates of incarceration in the western world and, by a long shot, one of the most expensive.

I think we should deal with facts. Some very excellent evidence was given by the Canadian Criminal Lawyers' Association before the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs of the Senate less than two years ago. I should like to refer to the evidence of two very knowledgeable persons in this field, Mr. David Cole and Professor Allan Manson of Queen's University. Speaking about the basic parameters contained in the Bill, I should like to quote from Mr. Cole's evidence:

> It is our respectful submission that it is dangerous to tinker with one element of an integrated system because to do so creates new tensions, exacerbates pressures and raises unforeseen problems elsewhere in the system.
> It is our submission that any response to violent offenders and recidivists which expects to be ameliorative must flow from a full and open inquiry which will permit Parliament to generate an appropriate systematic response based on a clear understanding and accurate perceptions.

● (1550)

Much like the Bill on prostitution with which we dealt on Monday, we are seeing the House charging down the road dealing with a very sensitive public issue. No one in this House wants a corrections or court system operating in which Parliament knowingly allows dangerous offenders to become involved in unpredictable activities in our communities. To a certain extent, this Bill will allow that to happen and I will demonstrate that.

Very much like the prostitution Bill with which we dealt on Monday, this Bill deals with a symptom of a very serious and chronic sociological disease that is systemic not only in our society but in every society that has existed since we began to organize ourselves some 4,000 or 5,000 years ago. This is a very complex issue and what is being proposed in the Bill before us today is tantamount to amputating a limb when a bone is broken and in fact requires a cast.

We can debate this afternoon and in committee ad nauseam the intentions of incarceration, punishment and the removal of freedom from men and women who are placed in institutions in order to protect society or whatever. However, we must understand that all inmates eventually return to live among us. This Bill and, I believe, the remarks of the previous speaker, demonstrate an incredible naivety about what actually happens, particularly within the maximum security institutions of this country. To claim that keeping someone who is serving a 10-year sentence incarcerated for the full 10 years makes him somehow safer when going back into the community than does releasing him after seven years with some kind of professional supervision from a parole officer and a federal system is incredibly naive. I predict that this will create a hot box situation.

I have spoken to jail guards, wardens and national parole officers. From having worked within the system, I have some understanding of what it means when we begin to hot box which is to say to tell an inmate that he is not getting out until the very last day. There is then no opportunity for any give and take within the institution. There is no reason for an inmate to do what a guard asks or to follow the rules of the institution.

When an inmates is released early and is under mandatory supervision, there are certain things that I as a professional in the field can do for him. For instance, if he is not supposed to be in a beer parlour, I could go into the beer parlour to find him and send him back. If he did not keep his job, was not turning up on time, was not making restitution or family payments or was not doing a whole host of other things, there was some kind of control over that under a caring albeit professional system. At least the people coming out of institutions knew that there was some supervision there.

It is naive of the previous speaker and the Solicitor General to be moving this Bill forward. Many Canadians will agree that if someone is given a 10-year sentence, he should serve a 10-year sentence. However, we as a Parliament must have some kind of responsibility to integrate the concepts of the penal system and the parole system with the court system because if not, individuals will be more dangerous when they come out the other end.

As the committee will discover, there have been very few studies made around the world to see whether or not there has been a dramatic increase in homicides or crimes of that sort after parole because those things are incredibly difficult to predict. The National Parole Board is aware that it will be forced to make all kinds of subjective decisions based upon things like an argument with a guard or an inmate flipping his dinner on the floor. It will have to make all kinds of subjective evaluations related to whether or not that individual will be dangerous if returned to the community.

We are not taking the kind of approach that we should be taking to ensure to the maximum potential the safety of the community. I spent a great many nights worrying about people who were on mandatory supervision and were not where they were supposed to be. I would go to incredible lengths to try to locate them before taking the ultimate step of placing them back in an institution. That opportunity will no longer exist. We are talking about the most dangerous group of individuals within our society, individuals who will be touched by this legislation.

I plead with Members of the House to slow down and apply logic to this matter. We should not even ask to have a whole bunch of studies done. We should think it through. Is it safe to tell someone who has taken another person's life that he will have to serve every day of his sentence and will then be booted out the door of a security institution? Is it safe to have that individual who has been locked up night and day, 24 hours a day, for 10 years put back on the street without having any kind of an integrated return to the community? Sheer logic tells us that that is not the case. If there is not some kind of professional surveillance, there will be failures for worse than the four homicides quoted by the Hon. Member of the Liberal Party. The House must be very careful in condoning this type of approach.

It may be easy for Members to say that we passed a piece of legislation indicating that people will serve all of their time, but I have looked at the statistics, Mr. Speaker. For a very short period of time, a number of people who have been dangerous in the past will be backlogged within the penitentiary system in Canada, but a few years down the road, a heck of a lot more than would ordinarly be going onto the streets at one time will be put on the streets of Canada. Then we will see the blip on the screen. I think Canadians will be shocked to find that this Parliament on this day did not deal in a more decent way with the situation. When it comes to correctional law, today really is Friday the 13th.

There are two key issues at which we must look with great care because they are the key components outside of the expansion of the National Parole Board and a number of other rather superficial issues dealt with in this Bill. There are two revolving-door syndrome and gating. Members have touched upon these matters, but I think it is important to remind ourselves of what has become known within legal circles as the revolving-door syndrome. This is when prisoners on mandatory supervision have their supervision revoked and are then returned to prison, and after serving more time, they again come out on mandatory supervision, a supervision which is again revoked. Dealing with that seems to be the first objective of this Bill and I think it is worth putting on the record a paragraph from the evaluation of this proposal done by the Library of Parliament. I quote from Part II:

> Inmates of federal penitentiaries earn remission of sentence under s.24 of the Penitentiary Act. (Remission is applicable to all sentences except those for which there is a minimum time which must be served before eligibility for release, e.g. murder.)
> For every month of sentence (or portion thereof) during which "he has applied himself industriously . . . to the program of the penitentiary in which he is imprisoned", an inmate is entitled to 15 days remission of sentence (or a fraction thereof, where time served is less than a month). If an inmate earns all possible remission he or she becomes eligible for release after having served two-thirds of his or her sentence. (Most inmates "earn" all possible remission, because it is virtually vested, subject to removal for bad behaviour, on the commencement of sentence.) Before 1970, an inmate who was released as a result of remission left the institution free and clear of supervision, and the possibility of having to return to serve the balance of his or her sentence. In that year, however, the mandatory supervision programme was introduced.
> Inmates released by reason of remission were to be subjected to the same type of supervision as paroled inmates; and, accordingly, were also to be subject to revocation of release because of misbehaviour while under mandatory supervision. Section 15 of the Parole Act governs mandatory supervision; and subjection (2) (inmates who are conditionally released by reason of a decision of the National Parole Board, usually after having served one-third of their sentence) thereof direct that those provisions of the Act dealing with suspension and revocation of parole to mandatory supervision as if it were a parole release.

The second point which needs to be clarified for those Canadians who want to focus their attention on an issue that is important in society is the matter of gating. That gives vast powers to the National Parole Board to designate that certain individuals be denied mandatory supervision until their sentence is complete. On that matter, I quote again from the Library of Parliament study which has the following to say:

> On the basis of s.16, inmates deemed dangerous would be nominally released, but would have that release suspended and revoked as they reached the prison gate—hence the appellation "gating". Thus, there would be a technical release, which it was thought would enable the Board to use s.16.
> Gating was immediately challenged in court. In various courts, there was some division as to whether this use of s.16 was appropriate. The issue was resolved on May 17, 1983 when the Supreme Court of Canada upheld the view of two courts of appeal that s.16 could only be used when there is a genuine release of the inmate, and that it could only be invoked to re-commit the inmate based on post-release conduct. In effect, an inmate had to be given a chance "on the street" before his release could be terminated for misconduct.

● (1600)

Having dealt with the two key components, I think we have to look carefully at what type of image the new Government is attempting to create out there. There is no doubt that there is a real mood among many Canadians who have friends, family or someone who has been victimized by someone either on parole or mandatory supervision. I think it is responsible of the Government to respond; however, not to respond in a way which will create a more dangerous situation in the near future. It creates an image of law and order for many Canadians which, in fact, is just not the case. A government which will keep those convicted for every day of their sentence given by a court creates the image of safety. That is an illusion because, in fact, it increases the likelihood of dangerous behaviour from someone who is kept without any possibility of an early release.

The hot box in the prison system is something we have to look at. I hope the committee will do this because we are all too well aware in this House that it costs, on average, $40,000 a year to keep an inmate on the inside in this country. We are all too well aware that it costs in excess of an eighth of a million dollars for every cell constructed. Community supervision by a probation or parole officer costs between $3,000 and $5,000 a year. This cost varies from province to province.

The parole service evolved to assist in the transition of inmates back into the community. For those paroled after having served roughly one-third of their sentence, or for those on mandatory supervision after having served roughly two-thirds of their sentence, it provided an opportunity for them to deal with someone, whether it was by phone, coming into an office or dealing on the job site. This person could assist. I think many Members forget that if someone has been incarcerated for five, ten or more years, the simplest things often become the most complicated. I am speaking of setting up bank accounts, turning up regularly to work, buying new clothes, things that are simple. When the released inmate runs into something that is difficult he often tends to be very short fused if, for example, he has been told on the job site that he needs to get a different type of boot, or something of that nature. Often he thinks he is being picked on. Without some type of bouncing board, released inmates tend to veer off into unusual behavioural patterns. The Hon. Member for Burnaby has pointed this out. He is one of the few people in the House who has done more in working toward real legislation which would have a real potential benefit to the safety of communities than anyone else in the House. The Hon. Member comes from a community where there are a substantial number of inmates because they are actually housed there. There are few Members in this House who are more aware of the need for good, accurate and penetrating legislation which really deals with the problem rather than this type of illusory legislaiton which is designed for hot lines and mail-outs. It is not designed to deal with the problem.

Rumours are also rife now in the national parole service that the next move is to privatize parole. This is something which has been done in the United States and which has not been very successful. If this is to be the trade mark of corrections moves by the new Government, I will not doubt for a moment that we will see the privatization of parole, in part, with the argument that the dangerous inmates are now being dealt with inside the prisons as opposed to on the street because they are serving full sentences. It will probably be argued also that measures such as the dangerous offenders provisions of the Criminal Code are getting them out of the way.

We heard the Liberal Member quoting statistics related to parole and mandatory supervision demonstrating, once again, a preposterous naivety of who it is within each of those components and what the background of the whole issue is. I would like to hear from the Minister in this respect. I am sorry to say that he is not in attendance, although I am pleased to see the former Solicitor General here, who I think has a real interest in this issue. I would like to hear him list who in this country among wardens, guards, parole officers, judges, criminologists, sociologists or community resource groups endorse this approach. The role of institutions for male and female offenders must change. When society, through Parliament, determines that a person should be removed for two or more years from society for the committing of an offence, society should also know that this House is running a sound corrections and rehabilitation operation. That is just not happening. In fact, many of those avenues will be precluded if this Bill is passed unamended. I am confident that for a majority of those incarcerated we can operate secure facilities based on user-pay, as was touched on by the Hon. Member for Burnaby. Why should we pay $40,000 per inmate per year, plus all court costs, family costs and restitution? We should be moving toward a system of reduced institutional violence by designing the operations to be productive, where inmates are involved to as high a degree as possible in producing the goods and capital costs of their own incarceration, restitution, court costs, and so on. Certainly, the prevention of crime, as touched on by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, is a crucial area we have to look at because the tendency in many provinces, certainly in British Columbia, is to cut back on those people who have all types of studies demonstrating that their work has prevented many people with learning disabilities, and so on, from getting into a life of crime.

I would like to finish by saying that the distinction of the historic role of parole in this country is an error of extreme proportions. My final example is that of a convicted killer serving 10 years with no mandatory supervision and no parole. The proposal being put forward by the Liberal Party is that that person should be dropped into society. I would tend to agree more with the new Solicitor General who does not propose the Liberal Draconian proposal which is without any court order, any kind of legal process, that people be placed under surveillance after the fact. Anyone who believes what the Liberal Member had to say is dreaming in Technicolor. We need changes to this Bill in the interests of Canadian public safety.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? The Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party who just spoke accuses the Liberal Party of intellectual dishonesty. I would submit that in his submissions he confirmed that the NDP has mastered the art of intellectual dishonesty. He indicated that we are dealing with, and I quote, "the most dangerous group". He admits that we are dealing with the most dangerous group. The legislation before us deals with the most dangerous group of inmates. What it provides is that this group will be kept incarcerated for the safety of the public. What the NDP is advocating is that the most dangerous group of criminals ought to be released on to the streets to commit other crimes. That is what the NDP is suggesting. Members of that Party are suggesting these people should be released. I am pleased that the previous speaker indicated his bias at the outset of his remarks. As a previous corrections officer, it only stands to reason that he does not want the most dangerous group in prison because it is a difficult group with which to deal. It is understandable why corrections people do not want these people in jail. They want to send them out on to the streets because they cannot deal with them.

The Hon. Member indicated that Canada has the highest rate of incarceration. That may well be the truth; but I suggest to him that Canada has one of the highest, if not the highest, rate of safety when it comes to crime and criminal offenders. As far as the Liberal Party is concerned, we would opt for a higher rate of incarceration for the highest rate of safety for our citizens.

The Hon. Member also misinterpreted—and I would suggest intentionally—the alternative which I suggested some people were arguing. I did not suggest that without legal authority there should be some supervision of inmates at the expiry of their sentence. Of course, you cannot do that. That is silly. You cannot do it under the existing legislation. If we provide the necessary legislation, you are darn right we can do it. We can provide for a sentence of incarceration up to a particular period of time, say 12 years, and then provide in the Criminal Code of Canada a period of supervision after that.

The Hon. Member also indicated that parole officers, corrections people, judges and so on, did not support this legislation, but I ask him if his constituents support this legislation? Has he canvassed his constituents to determine how they feel with respect to this legislation? I suspect, Mr. Speaker, that the previous speaker for the New Democratic Party and, indeed, the New Democratic Party itself, do not really care about what their constituents feel about this legislation. They are influenced by a very narrow interest group in society rather than with society as a whole.

I am somewhat concerned about the intellectual dishonesty of the New Democratic Party. However, I am grateful that the intellectual dishonesty which it has mastered will not in any way preclude the passing of this particular piece of legislation which we all consider to be a tremendous step forward.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, anyone who reads those remarks will know that the Hon. Member who just spoke does not have a logical mind, to say the very least. What he is now proposing is that we now provide another act to tack parole on again. The sheer illogic of his remarks I believe were clear to everyone in the House today.

To say that because I was a correctional officer, therefore people who work in the penitentiary system do not want those inmates inside the jails, but want them back out on the streets, is ridiculous. In fact I was a parole officer and in fact worked on the streets, Mr. Speaker. I really do not think those kinds of poorly thought out, illogical and disturbing remarks require a response of any kind.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment briefly and then I would like to ask my distinguished colleague a question. First, I just wanted to note, Mr. Speaker, that we are talking about policy in the criminal justice area. I would suggest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), that he has indicated that if his constituents feel strongly on this particular matter, he has an obligation to parrot their concerns in the House. I seem to recall that that same Hon. Member has spoken out, to his credit, against capital punishment. I wonder how it is that on the one hand he can suggest that he listens to his constituents on this matter, but in the next breath, Mr. Speaker, he says he disregards them with respect to another matter in the criminal justice area. He cannot have it both ways.

I would like to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), to perhaps comment for a moment or two, based upon his lengthy experience in the criminal justice area, about the effect within the present system of denying any hope of release, of taking away any possibility of earned remission. What effect will that have on the prison population, both from the perspective of prisoners and, equally important, from the perspective of those who work in that system?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to respond to that question because I believe it is one of the most important things which we in this House and in committee are going to look at. I hope that the committee takes the time to hear submissions from wardens, guards and from groups associated with prisoners both on the inside and on the outside because it is going to "hot box" those institutions. That is a fairly common terminology for what occurs within the prison population when there are people who have nothing to gain by good behaviour. They have everything to gain in terms of control within the elements of the prison population by being what we could call "bad actors". If we had someone serving a 10, 15 or 20-year sentence who does not stand to gain any remission time, no matter what he does, then, if a guard asks him to do the simplest of tasks, there is going to be no co-operation. Over time, this kind of legislation can tend to turn the internal operations, particularly of maximum security institutions, into an absolutely impossible situation.

I took the opportunity a few years ago when I was in Mexico to go into some of what we would describe here in Canada as "user pay" maximum security institutions. It appears pretty Draconian when one walks in. There are machine guns everywhere. One feels if they make the wrong move they are going to "get it". I am sure that is how they operate in the periphery of those institutions. However, it is intriguing when one gets inside. Other than for maximum security, dangerous individuals who are kept in what we would call here "solitary confinement", the majority of the inmates are in fact at work producitively providing the capital and operational costs for those institutions. I think we should look more carefully at that kind of operation where the inmates make hammocks, shoes, are growing all their food and making the clothing for the guards and themselves. They are making all kinds of goods which are sold in the market-place in Mexico. The majority of the actual costs in some of the states in Mexico for the operation of their institutions is covered by work done by the inmates. The costs which are actually paid out are the costs for some parts of the construction of the physical plant and the costs of the guards so that they avoid at least some possibilities of corruption. Here in Canada, Mr. Speaker, to use this kind of "hot boxing" legislation is going to drive some of the best people out of the national parole service. They are already leaving. It is going to drive some of the best guards out of the system and we will be left with what is known in the vernacular with inmates as the "knuckle draggers". We will be left with a very unpredictable situation—something I do not believe Canadians want to see—and that is the armed forces having to move in to circle the circumference of all kinds of medium, minimum and maximum security institutions.

I feel this is a piece of legislation which can be modified to achieve the real concerns of the Canadian public. To move forward with such a narrowly worded Bill, particularly on parole and mandatory supservision provisions on gating and the revolving door syndrome, is very wrong. I hope that Parliament will respectfully study this Bill much more carefully.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Certainly at the outset, I want you to know that I do not share the pessimism of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and I find it very difficult to understand the statement made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), when he said that crime would be increased by exercising greater control of the dangerous criminal.

It seems to me that it would be the exact opposite. That is one of the reasons I appreciate the support of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mr. Nunziata), on this Bill. We think it is a good Bill. It is one which the Canadian public are requesting.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, does not seem to understand that at the present time many of the penitentiaries are now getting into agricultural projects; for instance, Bowden and the one in Prince Albert. They are starting to produce their own vegetables, dairy products and their own beef so that they will become self-sufficient and will not be an increasing burden on society generally. Perhaps we can cut down that $40,000 per year per person cost. I agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South-Weston, when he said that many of our people do not necessarily need to be in prison because of the fact that they are not dangerous. I believe that in that case, those who are convicted can pay their penalty to society by community projects. Therefore, they would not necessarily be a burden on society generally. That is why I am pleased to speak in favour of the passage of Bill C-67 and Bill C-68. Both are directed to bringing about necessary improvements to our system of criminal justice.

One of the major issues in our society today is to adequately protect from criminal activities the innocent person. There are far too many people who are frightened about their well-being because criminal activity is increasing in our society. There may be various reasons for this but, nevertheless, we have to accept it as fact. I am sure we can all agree that crime is a terrible thing. One way or another every Canadian is affected during his lifetime by criminal acts. Many become victims of crime and we all must bear the growing cost of police, courts and correctional programs. While it seems that crime may never be completely eliminated in a free society, it should never be tolerated. Canadians must be offered the best possible protection from crime at a cost we can afford. Therefore, the Government is committed to making our system of criminal justice as effective as possible rather than simply expanding its parameters and costs. The Bills now before the House are part of this process.

Those who have advocated the abolition of mandatory supervision with apparent disregard for the cost of such a move make a very erroneous assumption. They contend that the program is based on leniency but nothing could be further from the truth. In Canada, as in virtually all western nations, inmates have been allowed to earn remission of their sentence for over a century. Good time, as it is often called, has been a part of our system since 1868. For most of that time inmates were simply released when the remission date was reached as though it was the actual end of the sentence. In 1970, mandatory supervision was introduced. From then on every penitentiary inmate who was not paroled earlier was subject to the control and direction of a parole supervisor after being released due to remission. These additional conditions applied to approximately 70 per cent of released inmates who formerly went out free and clear.

It is important to emphasize that half of those who have their mandatory supervision revoked and are returned to penitentiary may not have committed a new crime. They are returned because their parole supervisors believe their behaviour indicates a risk of re-offending and this preventive step is in order. Before mandatory supervision existed they would have gone on to commit the crime before being apprehended. On the other hand, many of those who do not commit a new offence do not do so because their positive re-adjustment to community life has been assisted by their supervisor. Ultimately, the vast majority of inmates will return to the community, whether it is on full parole, mandatory supervision or simply because their sentence has expired. The best long term protection that can be offered in these cases is their successful return to a law-abiding lifestyle. For most this is far more likely with a gradual re-entry during which assistance and control is provided. The extra surveillance provided by this period also makes it more likely that developing problems will be foreseen and preventive action taken.

With experience, however, two major defects have become apparent with this program. Even where the need for preventive action is clear before release, we are compelled to release inmates on mandatory supervision when the release date arrives. Secondly, even where inmates demonstrate their inability to profit from mandatory supervision and it is revoked, they continue to earn remission in penitentiary and we are compelled to release them again, sometimes repeatedly, until they reach the end of their sentence. I am very happy to say that Bill C-67 will correct these defects where inmates who have committed crimes of violence are concerned. I hasten to point out, Mr. Speaker, that some will say that this Bill will abolish earned remission. That is not the case. Inmates will continue to earn remission as before as long as they behave. However, earned remission has never meant the shortening of the sentence imposed by the court. What this Bill does is remove the automatic right to release as a result of having earned remission. It creates in its stead a presumptive release subject to review by the National Parole Board. The Board is empowered by this Bill to withhold this release only if it can determine after a fair and exhaustive process that the inmate is likely to commit a violent act while under supervision. This becomes a case of reverse onus.

Because the inmate has earned remission and therefore been given a presumed release date, he will be released until it can be determined that he or she will be a danger to society. I would argue that this retains the impact of earned remission which some feel is important to maintain institutional order, but removes the most illogical part of the present arrangement, the automatic nature of the release without the exercise of any judgment. The corrective measures being proposed will by no means end violence perpetrated by former inmates. Unfortunately, the behavioural sciences are not yet at a point where human behaviour can accurately be predicted, but they do allow us to intervene in those cases where there is good cause to perceive a threat to the public. This will provide an additional measure of protection in a responsible and cost effective fashion.

I would now like to turn briefly to the difficult question of predicting violence. The Hon. Member for Burnaby has pointed out that no study anywhere has shown it is possible to predict violence. He has also stated that studies carried out in the Department of the Solicitor General have recommended against the use of methods of prediction in relation to violent crime and he is absolutely right. It is exactly for these reasons that we have moved away from the prediction of violence to the assessment of risk. A small number of inmates have so many characteristics pointing to violent behaviour that in our opinion it is more acceptable that a few inmates suffer some loss of freedom rather than letting the public carry the risk of an extremely violent or fatal crime. We agree that science cannot help us out of this problem but the lack of scientific certainty does not eliminate the fact that Parliament has a responsibility to decide who is going to be protected, the inmates or the public. This is a very important point in this Bill. This proposed legislation does not protect the public at any price, nor does it protect the inmate at any price; it represents a balanced protection of both sides.

In order to fully understand the critical point of balance, I have to explain that what you have in front of you will not stand alone. We are now developing carefully formulated regulations which clearly outline what kind of inmates will be detained until the expiry of their sentence. The regulations will also contain all the procedures to safeguard the inmates' rights in this respect. The criteria will be so stringent that there will be little danger of abuse by the National Parole Board. We are far from lending the Parole Board any sweeping powers. If anything, the Parole Board's discretion in this area will be more limited than in any other. The people we want to keep in prison are those serving a sentence for a crime of violence which has caused death or serious harm to the victim. In addition, we will require a persistent pattern of violence in the offender's past or clinical assessments which conclude there is an imminent risk of highly violent behaviour if the offender is released. Finally, the new regulations will allow us to prevent automatic release when we know that the inmate is planning a murder or a crime causing serious harm. It is these three groups of violent people that we are talking about and none other. I am convinced that the small number of offenders that we have in mind are not going to add to our overcrowding problem, nor will this legislation create institutional unrest. The inmates will know how few will be affected.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, if we can keep some of those people who are not dangerous to society out of prisons and let them pay their penalty through community projects, we will move in a direction which will be to the benefit of society generally. Even if the application will be narrow, the increase in public protection will be substantial. We count on our colleagues in all Parties to give their best advice during committee work in order to obtain the best possible protection for all Canadians and the highest degree of fairness to inmates.

This Bill is far above political manoeuvering. It is too important to play politics with because we are talking about the protection of the public and the well-being of those who have been convicted. I am pleased to say that we have already received expressions of support for these measures from a number of community groups and individuals, including an organization of victims of crime. This support is very welcome since we are increasingly aware of the needs of victims and the importance of the views of groups such as this. Victims have long been the silent and forgotten participant in the criminal justice system, but those days are at an end. The Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) has recently helped fund several conferences of victims' groups and such efforts will continue so that the interests of victims will be more clearly expressed and listened to.

We are equally concerned about potential victims, Mr. Speaker. With the leadership and assistance of the Ministry of the Solicitor General, a number of crime prevention and crime awareness initiatives have been undertaken around the country with demonstrably positive results. These initiatives will continue.

We are also concerned that those charged with the onerous duty of dealing with convicted offenders on a day-to-day basis be given the tools they need to do the job. Bill C-68 is a modest beginning to modernize the correctional law an eliminate technical obstacles to understandable and efficient correctional programs. The amendments contained in this Bill will help modernize and streamline legislation bearing on both federal and provincial correctional systems and will be welcomed by correctional workers in both jurisdictions.

In view of the positive and needed features of both of these Bills, I recommend their speedy passage to members of the House. In the few minutes remaining for debate today, I hope that Members will see fit to give this Bill second reading in order that it can go to committee have we will have the opportunity to question witnesses who are interested in better control of criminals.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the previous speaker to comment on a point which he, the Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) touched on. Under the present system some people are released who may commit violent crimes and, in fact, some of them have done so. Under the proposed system those people would be kept in for the full term of their sentence. If we begin this system in the fall of 1985 an inmate with two or three years yet to serve will be held back for that period of time. As the previous speaker said, society will be protected from him for that time, but eventually he will get out. In fact, he will be released at the same time as a number of other people. There will be an extra surge of people being released at the same time and they will be no less violent than they may be now. If they would be inclined to commit violent crimes if released on mandatory supervision now, they will be so inclined then.

Will the Hon. Member explain why he thinks they will be less violent when released at that time? Even if he does not agree that there would be a surge because of the change in timing, he cannot deny that there would be the same potential for violence after release. If anything, that potential will be increased by the frustration of denial, perhaps even in a person who was not previously considered potentially violent. Why does the Hon. Member believe that society will be protected against violent people who will go directly out on to the streets?

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, the correctional system is working toward the rehabilitation of people who are going back into society. These people must be prepared, but one of the real problems in our society today is that as a result of mandatory supervision people are released against the wishes of the Parole Board. The Board knows full well that those individuals will return to a life of crime since they have not learned the discipline which is required of individuals in order to stay out of the correctional system. Therefore, this will give the Parole Board an opportunity to exercise control over those people who, it is felt, cannot return to society for a definite period of time. That is why this Bill will give more security to society generally.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 4.39 o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE

ADVISABILITY OF GRANTING RIGHT TO POLITICAL PARTICIPATION

The House resumed from Monday, April 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cassidy:

That the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates be empowered to study the question of granting to federal public employees the full political participation enjoyed by other Canadians and, that the Committee report its findings to the House no later than June 28, 1985.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I started this speech on Monday, April 15, 1985 and at that time had an opportunity to do nothing more than introduce the subject. I appreciate the opportunity to resume the discussion. I appreciate that the motion may appear to be stale-dated, but I understand that it is going to be up-dated after I am finished. I suggest the debate can continue on the theory of whether or not this goes to a committee, without worrying at this time about the date "June 30, 1985".

• (1640)

My remarks mainly concern the implications of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the time honoured tradition of impartiality in the Public Service. As the House knows, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees freedom of expression, freedom of association, the right to vote and the right to be qualified for membership not only in the House of Commons but in a legislative assembly of one of the provinces or territories. This right is guaranteed to everyone, including employees of the Public Service of Canada.

I believe we are all aware that if there are to be any limitations to these rights and freedoms, it must be demonstrated that they are reasonable limits that are justifiable in a free and democratic society in which we live.

Historically, our Public Service at all levels has operated on a non-political and impartial basis within the Canadian political and administrative context. Merit was the wole determinate of whether or not one is employed or advances. This concept has certainly evolved in recent decades and we are now at the point where there is a tradition of non-political bias and non-partisanship within the Public Service.

In the interests of an impartial, efficient and professional Public Service, there have been restraints placed on the capacity of public servants to take an active part in the public partisan politics and to express themselves publicly on matters of government concern. The Chair will know that the Supreme Court of Canada has presently reserved its decision on the appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal in Fraser versus Public Service Staff Relations Board. This appeal, brought by a former public servant, addresses exactly what participation is allowed and whether it impairs his or her ability to carry out their duties.

Partisan political activity of public servants is dealt with in Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. It states that no employee shall engage in, work for, on behalf of or against a political party or a candidate for election. It permits public servants to attend political meetings, make contributions to a candidate or political party. Public servants can also seek nomination as a candidate for election if they receive a clearance or leave of absence from the Public Service Commission. When the charter was proclaimed, it brought into question the nature and the application of any restraints on the rights of public servants to freedom of speech and freedom of association with respect to political activities. We were all aware that when the Charter was implemented it would give rise to a challenge to the traditional view, as it should, of the rights of public servants. That is the challenge we are concerned with now. Not only is the House of Commons dealing with this issue, the provinces and the territories are considering it from different perspectives. The first is to balance the ability of a person to have that freedom of association with the need to ensure that we maintain a Public Service that can serve in a neutral and impartial manner. Therefore, we must examine the restrictions that exist and make sure that we can justify them in our society.

Our democratic system is designed to serve people in their best interests. Therefore, no matter what political party is in power, we need a Public Service which can administer the programs of the Government of the day in a professional and neutral manner. We need a Public Service that can provide impartial advice and information to whatever political party is in power.

The question that this raises is one of perception. If we allow the Public Service to participate in the political activity—

Mr. Boudria: What do you mean "if"?

Mr. Lewis: All right. I will substitute "when" for "if". However, when picking on semantics, let us not lose sight of the principle which I believe the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party, the Member from the NDP and certainly our Party want to respect. That is the principle of perception—the reality and perception of a neutral Public Service. There is an old saying in our business that in politics, the perception is the reality. We have to be as worried about the perception as the reality because very quickly that perception becomes the reality. I am sure my hon. friend would agree with that.

Our Government does not want—either by perception or action—to be seen as doing anything which undermines that tradition in which the Public Service should be seen to be neutral. We would not want to bring into question in any way the neutrality or the suggestion that advancement in the Public Service in any way depends upon which Party a public servant may be connected with.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you backing away from your election promise?

Mr. Lewis: I say to the Hon. Member from the NDP that we are not backing away from any election promise.

Mr. Boudria: It sure sounds like it.

Mr. Lewis: There is a difference. When we make an election promise, we know that we will get elected and keep that promise. The NDP has always been able to promise the world, knowing full well that not enough Canadians support their philosophies to put them in office. That is the difference. Do you wish to continue heckling or continue debate? The advantage of the House is that when you speak, my friend, I will have a chance to heckle.

Mr. Boudria: "You" is the speaker.

Mr. Lewis: You may say "he is the speaker" but not "You is the speaker". I don't know where you took your grammer.

Mr. Boudria: We always address ourselves to the Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: But I never heckle the Speaker. You may heckle the Speaker, but I never heckle the Speaker. I always treat him with great respect. This is not Queen's Park, my friend. We work on a different plane. Once you have been here for awhile and appreciate that, you will be able to participate fully. I notice that you have not participated much this week.

In any event, in keeping with the traditions and demands that we have political neutrality, we set up some protections for public servants with which I believe we all agree.

I am not talking about tangible protections but such things as protection from unwarranted dismissal. Great improvements have been made in the Public Service Commission to ensure that there is no harrassment in any way because of one's opinions. There is also protection from what is called capricious career decisions and a guarantee that advancement is based on merit, which is a guarantee that is fundamental to this debate. These guarantees give public servants protection that they can serve without any concerns that their job might be based on political partisanship. We are very serious about maintaining those guarantees, just as we are serious about maintaining the perception of neutrality.

• (1650)

I want to close by saying that the public perception is justs as important as the realization that public servants act in an impartial and neutral manner. I can tell the House that the matter which is the subject of this motion is the subject of active debate by the Government and is being considered. We treat our election promises very seriously and we do not in any way back down from them. We would not wish to back down from any promise or suggestion made during an election campaign. As the Member who defected from the provincial Liberal Party well knows, as Mr. Peterson well knows, we are not abolishing Ontario hospital premiums and we are not able to buy beer and liquor in corner grocery stores because things do not happen overnight. This matter is under active consideration. For that reason when my friend with whom I have had some consultation rises to amend the motion, he will find that myself, as a private Member, will be in support of the motion to change the date from June 30, 1985, to June 30, 1986, so that more people can be heard.

I know the Liberal Party has suppressed rights for public servants for the last 16 years and it has not given them any opportunity to enter these debates, having ruled out consideration of this matter on a serious basis, but I do hope the Liberals will go along with this amendment about to be proposed so we can have a proper debate. The one Member from the Liberal Party who is here may or may not be disposed to give his assent. I hope as a sort of break from the past and from character he could elevate his thinking and, in a sort of magnanimous gesture of perhaps seeing the light, see his way clear after consultation with the rest of his colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to take part in this debate on the resolution by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). At the outset, I want to compliment him for the resolution and for the many years he has fought for the political rights of public servants, both at the provincial level in Ontario and at the national level in this House. It is to his credit and also to the credit of many other Hon. Members in this place and in provincial legislatures across the country who have fought for that principle.

I want to say to my friend, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), yes, I will move a minor amendment to the resolution at the closing of my remarks. There have been discussions and I understand all three Parties are disposed to accepting the amendment because it is purely a matter of detail in terms of the House dealing with the resolution.

It has got to the point where, at the federal level and in the case of a few of the provinces that the people of Canada, the Constitution and the Charter of Rights are now way ahead of this House of Commons. Political right is always supposed to have been a right. That is exactly what it means and that means a right is indivisible.

I will endeavour to be very non-partisan in this kind of a debate because it has been obvious for the last several years that all three political Parties, and Members in this Chamber from all Parties, support the security of the political rights of members of the public service and employees of federal Crown corporations.

I must say that under the first Premier of a democratic socialist Government on this continent in 1945, among the first half a dozen things it did as a new Government in my province was to enshrine in the statutes of that province not only a provincial Bill of Rights, but the rights of the public civil servants and the Crown corporations to organize, to join a union, to have collective bargaining rights and to have full political rights. That was in 1945 and I am proud of that. I am sure my colleagues in the other Parties will understand and forgive or appreciate my pride in that. Subsequent to that, I think at least four other provinces of other political Parties adopted similar or the same kinds of provisions in their jurisdictions. There is no longer any point in arguing as between political Parties or on a partisan basis about the necessity to make certain that federal public servants and Crown corporation employees have and may exercise at their discretion their political rights. It is an academic discussion now with the Charter of Rights in place.

I need only to quote the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was Leader of the Opposition—I accept his word and I believe the Hon. Member for Simcoe North and that is why I say it is no longer a partisan issue—who said:

> We believe that this matter should be addressed by an all-party parliamentary committee in consultation with public service organizations—

That is exactly the purport of the resolution by my colleague, the Member for Ottawa Centre. To continue with the quote:

> We believe the situation can be quickly resolved.

The then Leader of the Opposition went on to say that restrictions on public service political activity:

> —are unnecessary and may not be justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

It is no longer a case of may not. They are not any longer justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This Parliament, and whoever happens to be governing, is now faced with the certainty that if an individual public civil servant or Crown corporation employee or their organization takes the Government or the Public Service Commission to court—and all they have to do is wave the directive sent out almost annually about political activity to all public service employees—the Government of the day and the Parliament of Canada will lose.

Mr. Dick: Read Clause 1.

Mr. Benjamin: There will be some who may say after I sit down that "well, this matter is now before the courts; and this matter is now part of the collective bargaining process between the Government of Canada and the Public Service Commission". On this issue there is no bargaining. The fundamental rights of citizens and the matter of who employs them—and that includes political rights—are not negotiable. I submit that there are no limitations to political rights. I appreciate that 99 per cent of the time senior public servants who are appointed by Order in Council will not exercise their political rights because of their positions. However, that decision should be the decision of the senior public servant involved.

• (1700)

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North talked about political neutrality. He referred to the promise of his Party prior to entering the election dealing with the political rights of public servants. I believe him. I accept it. I agree that my hon. friends and colleagues in the Conservative Party are sincere in that promise. However, I wonder whether the Hon. Member, who is Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, has any updated information on the initiatives taken by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) to implement the promise made by his political Party regarding political rights.

Mention was made of the British Public Service. We all have to admit that it is much more professional than ours. Their public servants at the middle and senior levels make it a practice to be fully informed on the political policies of each Party. Whenever one of them takes power, senior public servants, deputy ministers and what not are able to approach the new Ministers to tell them about the policies and to give them several options on how to go about dealing with them. In that manner they act in a neutral fashion, but that does not gainsay that they have not exercised their political rights in their hours off duty.

The same applies here in Canada. A public servant, or for that matter an employee of a private corporation, may exercise his political rights in his own home, on his own property or in his own hours off duty. In fact, I had this experience as an employee of Canadian Pacific. I am sure Hon. Members understand that there is no particular love lost between CPR and the New Democratic Party. However, in my years of employment with that corporation, I carried out my duties in my hours on duty and after, when off duty, I went out and opposed its policies. I spoke on public platforms and was a candidate. I always received a leave of absence and always returned to my job. Perhaps the voters were too smart; I lost the first two times I ran! I always returned to my job. There was no harassment. The same applies to public servants.

We had better move fast on this because if we do not the courts will be ahead of us. We all know that. It is now academic in terms of the arguments which take place in this Chamber. The resolution of my colleague and my Private Member's Bill, which was debated in 1981 and again in 1984, apply to the same matter. I urge the House to adopt this resolution so that the committee can begin to study it. I am quite prepared to withdraw my Bill from the Order Paper, and the Government House Leader can include an Order referring the subject matter of my Bill to the same committee which will deal with the resolution of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. This means that the waterfront would be covered this fall and early winter. Then we could return to the Chamber for an all-Party or unanimous approval of the matter of political rights for a certain segment of our society. We are on very shaky and loose ground when we deny a fundamental right to one group while other groups have it.

In conclusion, I should like to move the following amendment, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse):

That the motion be amended by deleting the year "1985" and inserting the year "1986".

I do that to bring the Order Paper up to date. It is merely a detail; it changes one number from a five to a six. If the House approves the resolution and it is referred to the appropriate committee, members of that committee will have until the end of June next year to examine this matter in consultation with concerned public servants, their organizations, Members of the Government and members of the Public Service Commission, and then report back to the House with draft legislation or recommendations or whatever. I think they can accomplish that well in advance of the end of June, 1986. In any event, I understand from the discussions I have had that the amendment is acceptable and will not require any debate.

In closing, I urge my colleagues on all sides of the House to keep in mind that all of us have some responsibility to catch up to what is now the law of the land. Everyone knows that federal public servants and Crown corporation employees must have political rights. I hope this matter will receive quick passage and be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the amendment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it my understanding from the Chair that this amendment requires unanimous consent to be placed on the floor?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, it is not.

Mr. Lewis: We will now debate the motion as amended? It was my understanding from discussions with the Table earlier that this freshened the list. I would like to be sure of that at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now be debating the amendment, and that means the list will start over again.

Mr. Benjamin: We will be debating the motion as amended.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to participate in this debate this afternoon not only as a former public servant but, more important, as a servant or employee of the House.

This issue is a very important one for people who are called upon or choose to pursue occupations wherein they work for the Government of Canada, an agency of the Government or a Crown corporation. Of course this issue has been raised many times over the past number of years. I should like to draw the attention of the House to Chapter 11 of the so-called d'Avignon Report which is better known as the Report of the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and Merit Principles. That particular chapter refers to political participation. I must say that during the election campaign many public servants lobbied me to find out whether I agreed with the recommendations contained in that particular report. I must say that having been in the situation myself as an employee of this House in an administrative capacity, a capacity in which I was not called upon to work on a direct basis with members of various political Parties, I wished many times that I could have participated more fully in the political process. Obviously, as I am sure you have guessed by now, Mr. Speaker, I still did participate. Otherwise I would never have become not only a municipal councillor but a provincial Member as well as a federal Member if I had not commenced some kind of political activity while I was a member of the staff of the House of Commons.

• (1710)

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the regulations that apply to public servants generally do not necessarily apply in all cases to the staff of the House of Commons. At least they did not when I worked here. There was some leeway given to me or rather some things were tolerated regarding the political activities in which I engaged as carefully as I could at the time.

In speaking to many friends who work in the Public Service, I find there are many things which public servants wonder about in relation to their rights. They wonder just what they are permitted to do at the present time as a federal public servant. Is it permitted for a public servant to erect a political sign on their lawn at the present time?

Mr. Benjamin: It should be.

Mr. Boudria: Of course it should be, as the Hon. Member has said, and no one is disagreeing with that. However, at present there is a tremendous amount of fear felt by some public servants. In the case of a couple, one of whom works for the Public Service and one of whom does not, I suppose the case could always be made that the sign belongs to the individual spouse who does not work for the Public Service. People who live alone or people who live together but both happen to be public servants have more difficulty at the present time.

What about public servants knocking on doors? Are they or are they not permitted to knock on doors for a political candidate at this time? That question has been raised by various people. There have been various interpretations of the issue. People are really unsure about where they stand. When people are unsure, particularly in an era of high unemployment, they do not take a chance. People do not take a chance because they do not want to be fired and lose their jobs. That is the sad case of public servants at the present time.

Undoubtedly, the laws must be clarified. Individuals have to be given their rights. In so doing, it must be explained in a very clear way just what it is that they are permitted to do. For instance, the British system is composed of what is known as tiers. There is a certain category of individuals on which there are no restrictions, another category on which there are restrictions that can be removed by request and, as I understand it, another category of public servants who are prohibited from participating in the political process in a similar way that all public servants in Canada are prohibited. The three-category system in Britain may not be perfect, but it is certainly a long way away from what we have now.

Perhaps I could mention a specific example. What political implication could there possibly be and what prohibition should there be for someone who works as a truck driver for the Department of Supply and Services knocking on doors for a political candidate in the evenings? Obviously there is no political implication in that case. That should be properly recognized.

I would like to refer to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). The Hon. Member indicated that it was his Party that had promised during the election campaign to find a solution to this particular problem and to lift restrictions from public servants in this country. A letter from the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the then Leader of the Opposition, was sent to Mr. Jack Donegani of the PIPs group of public servants in which he said that the PC Party believes that the present restrictions on political activities are unnecessary and likely not justifiable under the terms of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. While the rights of some senior public servants must be restricted in order to prevent conflict of interest, we feel that this issue could be addressed without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.

It has been over a year since the Government was elected. That was one of the promises that was made along with a number of others. I have here my little booklet which I have shown to you upon occasion, Mr. Speaker. This booklet is entitled 338 Tory Promises. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North said that the promises could not all be kept in the first year. I agree with him, but I have calculated that at the present rate, it will take until the year 2026 before all the promises are delivered.

Mr. Gurbin: We'll be in Government that long.

Mr. Boudria: I would venture to say, notwithstanding the fact that the Government cannot deliver everything on the first day, that it could at least accelerate the process somewhat and attempt to deliver on the promises that were made to the people of Canada. I am sure the Hon. Member for Simcoe North will recognize that and I am sure he will do his best to ensure that the Prime Minister lives up to the campaign promises that were made.

It would be my hope that Conservative Members from the Ottawa area including the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) would jolt the Prime Minister into doing something about this issue. I hope that things will not again be arranged in such a way so that this particular issue falls at the bottom of the Order Paper only to return four, five or six months hence for another one hour of debate.

By now, I think all political Parties have had a chance to air their views on this subject. We can have a more complete debate in committee. I think now is the time to move on by bringing this debate out of the House and into committee so that the people will see that the Government has somewhat of an intention of going ahead with its promises.

I would like to indicate to the Government that if, by the end of this day, this matter does not go to a Parliamentary Committee, I can only assume that this is another one of the promises that if not broken will at least be delayed intentionally for a very, very long time. Members of the Conservative Party should remember this. They should speak briefly on the Bill and allow it to proceed. They should demonstrate whatever—

Mr. Benjamin: It is not a Bill.

Mr. Boudria: They should speak on the resolution, then, so that the issue can go ahead to a parliamentary committee.

In conclusion, I urge all Members of the House to support this initiative on the part of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). It is an initiative that was supported by our Party when the matter was debated on April 15 and one in which the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has also participated extensively over the years. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate him as well as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre for bringing these issues forward on different occasions. I hope that the Government will demonstrate its good faith, and for the moment, I will assume that it has some good faith.

• (1720)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that the motion to amend the resolution to make it refer to 1986 was accepted by the House. Under the circumstances, I believe that since the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) has previously spoken in this debate that he would not have the right to speak again. I would not want to think that he is trying to talk this resolution out and, therefore, I felt I should bring that point to your attention, Mr. Speaker. In fact, we can dispose of this matter if he is the only member on the Government side who still wishes to speak.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The amendment has not been adopted. We are debating the amendment now.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Because of discussions held among all Parties, may I request, Sir, that you put the question. I think you will find that there is unanimous consent for the amendment to pass. We can then debate the resolution as amended.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton has the floor on debate on the amendment.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to rise to speak once again on this matter which has come up on a number of occasions. I believe the amendment—

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the point has been made by my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) that the hon. gentleman has already spoken on this resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I understood the first point of order put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), he asked the Chair to put the question in order to see if there would be unanimous consent to have the amendment adopted. I gather there is not unanimous consent since the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) wants to speak on the amendment.

Mr. Dick: I think the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) is quite familiar with the procedure in speaking to amendments. In fact, I have seen the New Democratic Party use that procedure as a means of filibuster for days and days and weeks and weeks on end.

The essence of allowing a review by the Government and a report back by the Government between September 1985 and June 1986 with respect to whether or not public servants should have full political rights is an important issue. I have no difficulty with the general thrust. I spoke on the issue when it was put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West, I believe, back in the fall. On that occasion I believe the Hon. Member was extremely pleased. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) came into the Chamber during Private Members' Hour. As the Hon. Member for Regina West pointed out, in his 17 years of being in this place it was the first time he had seen a Prime Minister come in and sit through a debate during Private Members' Hour. It can be noted that he picked the debate on full political rights to public servants as the debate to which he wished to listen.

Mr. Benjamin: I got a nice note from him, too.

Mr. Dick: I know you did. I know that the Prime Minister is serious in the commitment he made during the campaign. Although the previous speaker indicated he believed political promises or commitments would not be implemented, I believe I can honestly say that we have implemented more political commitments than the federal Liberal Party ever did. What I can say is that we have not had the temerity to stand up, as did one of the senior people in the provincial Liberal Party and say, as Robert Nixon did—he just left and abandoned it—"We will not be able to fill our political promises now." That is what he said at the first opportunity he had when he was addressing some of the issues after he became Treasurer. We have not said that. We believe we will be able to fill our political promises during the four or five years of our mandate. I think this is one which will be carried out.

It is important to note that there have been some detailed discussions on a number of matters going on with the public service unions. Those matters have not been concluded. We hope they will be concluded prior to June 30, 1986, However, they were somewhat delayed after some initial announcements last April dealing with master contracts and about four different topics dealing with pensions and so on. At that time, they said one of the items which was on the table but not yet being discussed was the issue which is a substantive part of the motion before us; that is to say, public servants have full rights.

This is, by and large, a non-partisan issue, as long as it is dealt with prior to the next election.

Mr. Benjamin: That long?

Mr. Dick: It will not have much of a meaningful effect as long as it is done before the next election.

I would like to see them given the full opportunity of defining the ramifications of this point within the negotiations. For example, in the United Kingdom, which I had the opportunity to visit earlier this year, I asked how they defined the situation. They have broken the Public Service in the United Kingdom into three tiers.

Mr. Boudria: Only three tiers?

Mr. Dick: Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) is always barking. We hear him so frequently. He is like a mad terrier. I guess he does not like to hear other people's thoughts. He likes to hear only his own voice. So be it.

As I was trying to say, in England they have broken the Public Service into three tiers. The first tier has absolute full political rights. The second tier, which is more or less the middle-management tier, has limited political rights but more political rights than what we have in Canada under the present legislation. The top tier, which includes deputy ministers, assistant deputy ministers and associate deputy ministers, does not have political rights.

I think it only appropriate for the discussions to continue with the various public service unions in order to define the ramifications. Hopefully, in the next few months they will get over their discussions on master contracts. Hopefully, they will have dealt with the discussions on indexation of pensions and how they should be indexed. I hope they will move on to these two topics which are on the table but which have not yet received full discussion. I feel confident that they, in their wisdom, might come up with a solution which will be acceptable to all parties.

The Hon. Member for Regina West has indicated that the courts will decide this matter for us. It may well be that there will be a decision in the Fraser case which will decide the issue by and large. However, there are some things, such as Section 1 of the Charter of Rights, which allow for certain limitations. I think the court will have to make a decision on whether or not this is a reasonable limitation. Indeed, if the court was so well convinced right off the cuff that it was just, it would not have reserved its decision. It would have announced its decision from the bench on the occasion of the adjournement of the hearing. However, it has reserved because there are a few more matters to deal with other than the granting carte blanche to everybody of free political rights, whether they be a Deputy Minister or a unionized person who is a clerk.

Having said that, it would be helpful to see whether the Government, as the employer, and the unions on behalf of the employees, can perhaps appropriately define this issue. I suggest we have limited time in which we can deal with the issue. If they fail to address the matter within the next year, then I imagine this will become a bit of a hot potato. I imagine the matter will be spoken to by various people with some meaning, dedication and conviction.

• (1730)

Mr. Cassidy: It's a long time away.

Mr. Dick: Well, we don't seem to be having a federal election tomorrow.

Mr. Boudria: A provincial election, too.

Mr. Dick: They promised you are not going to have a provincial election for two years. So I don't see any election to worry about.

Mr. Lewis: You made a deal.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, but surely there's more than one province in this country.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) has the floor.

Mr. Dick: The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell likes to hear his own voice. The Liberal Party of this country was in power for 16 years and could have done this. They did not do it. And that Liberal Member from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell tries to bark and yell and scream his way along; all he is a whiner in this House. He whines every day, interrupts every Hon. Member, always. It would be a lot better if he were more appreciative and sat back and listened to other people for a change. If he wants to seek the floor he can seek the floor and stand up and speak for his allotted time. Until then, maybe he should learn to shut up.

I think this is a very sensitive issue; it is a partisan issue. When we were in opposition we called for full political rights. During the election campaign we called for full political rights. I feel very strongly about it because I was a public servant who was fired from his job because I sought a political nomination back in 1972. I felt that I was improperly disenfranchised. I should say that I was not disenfranchised because I insisted on exercising my franchise, but I felt afterwards that I was improperly fired from my job as a public servant because I took the action I thought was appropriate.

No doubt there are people on all sides of the House who feel very strongly about this issue. I just caution all Hon. Members, that rather than using rhetoric to inflame the issue, give the Government proper time. There was a delay in the negotiations from April on because one of the largest public sector unions had an election in June and there was some difference of opinion leading up to that election as to what they had agreed to in April. I believe that has been resolved and the union is now back bargaining with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) on behalf of the Government as the employer. I believe they will be moving on this. If they do not resolve it, then I believe it will become a hot political issue, and it should become so. I am hoping they will resolve this. I do not believe the courts are going to rule ahead of us, but if they do, so be it. The next federal election is about three and a half to four years away. The next provincial election is—

Mr. Benjamin: May we quote you on that?

Mr. Dick: And we intend to implement our promises during the period of time we have.

As to the next provincial election, we have been promised by the bed mates, the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party in the Province of Ontario, that there is not going to be one for two years. There may be other areas which are interested in this. I live in Ontario. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell who is squawking over there could have addressed this issue during his speech a few minutes ago. He decided not to. I think we have to keep calm about it because it is an emotional topic for many people. It can be inflamed so easily by rhetoric, with everything being put off track. I just hope that does not happen.

If it is apparent towards the end of the Government's term in office that we have failed to come through with it, then I believe we are open for every attack in the world. In the meantime, I hope we will try to let the employers and employees work out in an amicable fashion the demarcation lines, where exactly this should begin, and the extent and how far up the scale within the Public Service they should go for full political rights. I believe they should go very far up the scale. I do have problems, perhaps, with Deputy Ministers, Assistant Deputy Ministers, and so on, but I feel this is open for negotiation.

I want to thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to make this contribution. I must admit that I do not agree with the date the Government set to report back, June of 1986.

Mr. Benjamin: No, no, the committee.

Mr. Dick: Because it may be completed in September of 1986 or at some other stage. I just do not think we need a time limit. I do think that if we have not produced before going into an election campaign. It should then become an issue which we will have to defend. However, we can defend something we have promised to do.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin). I agree it is time to stop debating this issue. Everyone agrees that our public servants should have the same political rights as their fellow citizens.

We have also discussed at length the whole complexity of the kind of solution we should seek. I agree with my hon. friend from Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) that we should not set a deadline, since negotiations are being held. On the other hand, I do not think we should leave it up in the air. I feel we should really consider some way of, for instance, having the issue brought before a committee of the House, while making it quite clear when the proposal is made to do so, that the process should not prejudice the negotiations taking place between the unions and Treasury Board. This is not a frivolous matter, it is indeed a very serious one, because I am particularly interested in the depoliticizing of public servants and of the public service.

I have been in Parliament for only a year, Mr. Speaker, and I have already had some experience, unfortunately, of the far too politicized state of our public service. In projects that were really necessary and that were supposed to contribute to the development of certain industrial sectors and regions, some public service employees, who were used to working with certain people in the community, seem to want to retain a certain decision-making power that is not really theirs. So it is extremely urgent to depoliticize the public service.

As far as the merit principle is concerned, every week I get calls or letters from public service employees in my riding who write: Mrs. Mailly, I was a CR-2, or I was a CR-3, I could have had a promotion, I had a very good performance appraisal report, but someone else was appointed who was slipped into the system. There is favoritism within the public service, a situation that probably started at one time as a result of political pressure and which today has become firmly rooted in the public service.

I think this is very bad for the rights of employees and for a public service that claims to serve the public. Mr. Speaker, I say let us stop looking at all the angles of this subject, let negotiations between the unions and the Treasury Board proceed, but please, let us not wait another year to solve this problem! I think that the date suggested by my hon. friend from Regina West is not soon enough.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired. Therefore, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.39 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on second reading of an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973. In the Budget of May 23, 1985, the Government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), announced its intention to restructure the federal child benefit system to provide greater assistance to families with lower incomes while at the same time moving to bring our national debt under control. This Bill represents a first step toward meeting those dual objectives.

The major proposal contained in this Bill will modify the current method of indexing family and special allowances. Effective January, 1986, these benefits will be indexed only for the annual increase in the cost of living greater than 3 per cent. Any increase in inflation above 3 per cent will be fully compensated. I should also stress that, as is currently the case, no payment will be reduced if the rate of inflation drops from one year to the next. Thus, the principle of indexation will be maintained. Family allowances will continue to be protected by partial indexation should higher inflation occur. As well, Mr. Speaker, universality under that proposal is not affected.

Many of those concerned about the problem of the debt and the deficit advised a more drastic course of action. Indeed, there are those who advocated that government spending be reduced through the elimination of some of our social programs, and that includes family allowances.

Recently, the Macdonald Commission Report has advocated that current family benefits be eliminated above a certain income level as part of a guaranteed annual income proposal. The Government has chosen instead to maintain the principles of universality and indexation and to introduce a modification to the method of adjusting those benefits. In addition—and I cannot emphasize this enough—this represents a change to only one of the several components which make up the federal child benefit system. Over the next three years, the Government will be increasing the support currently provided to low income families through a gradual restructuring of benefits delivered through the tax system.

On second reading of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, I believe all of us in the House who have looked at the deficit, at Canada's economic status and at our public accounts, feel that it is important that the Government show a clear initiative in its approach to deficit restructuring. It is regrettable that this issue was not taken more seriously at an earlier date. The reason I say that is because one cannot separate, I would suggest, social programs and benefits from economic reality. I am sure Hon. Members opposite, as well as Hon. Members on this side of the House, do not endorse a system where today the servicing of the debt on an annualized basis is equal to the costs of services provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare. At the present time, the servicing of the debt on an annualized basis is approximately $26 billion. That is the budget for the Department of National Health and Welfare and of course, as Hon. Members know, it is the largest single budgetary item of any Department.

To put it in as succinct a term as I can, Mr. Speaker, the servicing of the debt today on an annual basis is equal to the federal Government's share of health care, of all old age pensions, of guaranteed income supplements for those Canadians who are below a certain income level, the spouses' allowance, the widows' allowance, the family allowance, welfare, social assistance for those who are most needy, medical research, and the list goes on. I believe Hon. Members realize that at any point in time Governments, regardless of their partisan stripe, like to see increases in social benefits. I do as well. But I also know that in order to maintain and improve those benefits, the deficit cannot be ignored by those of us who work in the social affairs field.

I want to serve notice to Hon. Members as well, that while this Bill amends the family allowances Act, although our legislative process does not allow for it, the follow-up legislation to improve child tax credit benefits are included in a Bill which the Minister of Finance will bring in. So while I am restricted to the Family Allowances Bill today, I remind Hon. Members of the total family benefits package when I am addressing this issue.

As Hon. Members know, the current child benefits system today is so irrationally structured that it actually provides greater after tax benefits to families with children and with an income of $30,000 than it does to a family with the same number of children and an income of $10,000. The revised system which we are proposing, and which will be in place by the end of 1989, will provide its maximum benefits to families with children and incomes of less than $25,000. Beyond that income level benefits will gradually diminish; but all families with children will continue to receive benefits not available to families without children with the same income.

• (1110)

While these groups have differed over mechanisms to reach such a structure, the initial level of benefits and the income level where benefits should begin to be reduced, all serious analysts of the current system have recommended reform based on the principles I have espoused. There must be more equity built into the system. At this point, I wish to thank the members of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs who also put forward a model. While we can argue models, I think the principles embodied are generally accepted from those in the social affairs field.

Such a system would also be markedly more progressive than the current one in the sense that a much larger portion of total benefits will flow to low income families with children while a smaller portion of total benefits will flow to upper income families with children. At the same time, as I have already stated, the universal character of the family allowances benefit is maintained.

Members opposite may wish to argue that the scheduled maximum benefit levels in the new system should be higher so that the number of winners compared to the current system would be increased. I wish to assure them that those levels will be reviewed on an ongoing basis and if fiscal conditions permit they may be increased in future Budgets.

I also want to remind the House that this is not the first time that limits have been placed on full indexing of the family allowance in conjunction with other changes to the child benefits system. When the child tax credit was introduced in 1979, the monthly family allowance was scheduled to increase from $25.68 per child to $27.99 per child. Instead, it was reduced to $20 per child. In 1983 and 1984, indexing of family allowances was limited to 6 per cent and 5 per cent by the so-called six and five program. Without that program, family allowances would have gone up from $26.91 per child per month in 1982 to $31.92 per child per month in 1984. Instead, the 1984 family allowance was $29.95 per child per month, almost $2 lower per month per child. To compensate, the child tax credit paid in 1983 and in 1984 was higher than it normally would have been before the restructure.

Further, it is also not the first time that less than full consumer price indexing has been applied as a restraint measure. In 1976, when the family allowance was scheduled to rise by 11.2 per cent, which was the inflation rate annualized at that time, from $22.08 per child per month to $24.55 per child per month, the Government of the day froze the level at the previous year's level. That is cost of living minus 11.2 per cent, not cost of living minus 3 per cent. There was no offsetting benefit increase in any other program in the child benefit system and the savings were fully applied to deficit reduction. I am sure my critic opposite in the Liberal Party remembers that period of time and the position taken.

I also suggest to the House that this restructuring is valid during a period of low inflation when inflation trends over the past number of years have been relatively stable. I think it is the right time, from that perspective as well, to make the adjustment. In fact, just looking back to 1976, if full indexing to the Consumer Price Index had been applied without interruption from 1974, the monthly family allowance cheque this year per child would be $51.83 instead of the current level of $31.27. That would be a difference of $20.56 per month, per child. I put these figures forward to convey to the House and the public that there have been changes along these lines before, much more dramatic, as I will point out later on, than anything we are suggesting in the Budget and in this Bill today. I say to the House and to every Canadian that there will not be a reduction in current levels, as was the case previously, but there will in fact be an increase. It will be less, however, than the CPI, namely 3 per cent less.

• (1115)

Given current levels of inflation this Bill will mean that the increase in family allowance benefits in 1986 will be 94 cents a month less per child than it would have been had the current system remained in place. I compare that 94 cents to the $20.56 which I am sure has not escaped the notice of the House. The comparable impact of the freeze in family allowances in 1976, to put it on a year-by-year basis because I think that is more accurate and more fair, in 1976 would have been $4.99 per month in 1985 dollars. To carry this argument even further, that would mean that in one year our model family with two dependants would have a total reduction of $22.72 for the entire year. What I am saying to Members is that we have to keep things in perspective. In addition we have the child tax credit for those in the lower income brackets which will be supplemented in further legislation. I point all this out not in a partisan manner but simply on the basis that it has been done before. I have no doubt that Members opposite will oppose this Bill, if their public announcements are to be believed, but I say to them that while it is their responsibility and obligation to oppose, they should do so in the light of history and oppose it in the light of what they did in the past.

Mr. Frith: In the context of your Budget.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): They should oppose it in light of the deficit and in light of the arguments they made previously.

As is obvious from the points that I believe have been made today, Mr. Speaker, there is considerable precedent for what is being proposed in this Bill. I would now like to describe briefly the minor amendments to the family allowances program which are also included in the Bill and which I hope find acceptance with Members opposite. While these amendments are considered minor because they will not result in significant changes to the program, I believe they are none the less important because they serve to improve the equity and administration of the program on a day-by-day basis.

For example, one of the proposals would provide the Minister of National Health and Welfare with the discretionary authority to remedy the consequences of erroneous advice given or administrative error made by departmental officials. I know from years of experience in opposition that we were always suspicious about giving a Minister discretionary powers.

Mr. Rossi: You admit it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): However, I think as Members look at this proposal they will see it is to the benefit not of the Minister but of those who have suffered either from bad advice or clerical error. Given the substantial number of applicants and beneficiaries under the family allowances program, it is understandable that errors which result in a person or agency being denied an allowance may be made from time to time. While the Act does allow for retroactive payment of benefits of up to one year, cases may occur in which a loss of benefits extends beyond this retroactive period. If this amendment is approved, as I hope it will be, remedial action to rectify the consequences of erroneous advice or administrative error will be possible where it is demonstrated that a loss of benefit entitlement has occurred as a direct result of such errors.

● (1120)

Another proposal in the Bill would provide the Minister of National Health and Welfare with discretionary authority to remit or forgive an overpayment of family allowances under certain circumstances. Currently, in cases where it is determined that an overpayment of allowances has been made, the administration has no alternative under the terms of the Act but to proceed with the recovery of the overpayment, even though it might be excessively costly relative to the amount owed or take an unreasonable length of time to do so.

This amendment would give the Minister discretionary authority to remit benefit overpayments under these circumstances, as well as where the recovery of an overpayment would cause the debtor undue hardship or where the overpayment arose as a direct result of administrative error or erroneous advice on the part of a departmental official. I should say tangentially, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment would bring the Family Allowances Act in line with some other Acts relating to benefits paid under certain social programs.

One final amendment that has been included would authorize the Minister, where necessary, for the purposes of the Family Allowances Act, to issue a certificate declaring that a child is presumed to be dead. Unfortunately, we all know of tragic circumstances where a child disappears and there is sufficient evidence to presume that the child is dead. When this happens, the necessary benefit adjustments cannot be made until after a death certificate has been issued, sometimes many years after the child's disappearance. The proposed amendment would authorize the Minister, where the circumstances of the disappearance warrant it, to issue a certificate declaring that the child is presumed to be dead for the purposes of the Act and stating the date on which the death is presumed to have occurred. This will help families in terms of estate planning and so forth.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe this Bill merits the support of the House. It is part of a restructuring of the child benefits system which will ensure that the benefits given to families with children are distributed on a fairer and more rational basis. It will help improve the grave fiscal situation which faces us as a nation, and it will make the day-to-day administration of the Family Allowances Act more humane and flexible. Therefore, I move that this Bill be given second reading and referred to the appropriate committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, at the commencement of my remarks this morning I would like to indicate that the title of this Bill should be changed to "An Act to reflect Broken Promises and Lost Opportunities on behalf of the Conservative Government". I am glad to see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is going to remain in his seat and I trust that the members of his caucus will do the same in order that I can take them for a waltz down memory lane to remind them of some of the promises that the leading spokesman for their Party made during the months leading up to the election last September 4.

In November, 1983, the leading spokesman for that Party, the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), said, "If the Tories do monkey with the family allowance they would be able to do so only in their first year of power, and only if the public wanted to make more sacrifices". Three months later the present Minister of Justice said, "You have to be tough, mean, and nasty and do all kinds of unpleasant things. That's why I am not going to outline what they would do now, that's for a Government to do". How prophetic and truthful! He is one of one of the few spokesmen from the government front benches who told the truth before the election.

● (1125)

Let me remind Members opposite of some campaign promises made during the summer of the election of 1984. In August, 1984, their leader said:

> Yes, I can give you the assurance that no social programs at all, affecting anyone in need shall be touched by a Progressive Conservative government. I can give you that without hesitation.

Mr. McDermid: Anyone in need, the operative words.

Mr. Frith: The Member opposite mentions the words "anyone in need". I am leading up to that in my premise. If he pays as much attention to the end of my speech as he did to my initial remarks, I will show him how people in need with family incomes of $9,000 a year will lose purchasing power as a result of his Conservative Budget. I will not even mention the Prime Minister's statement about sacred trust which he made a year ago. Let us consider the period immediately following the election of the Conservative Government. Last November 9, the Minister of Finance stated:

> We feel there is a real opportunity here to put a greater degree of focus on those who need it most and still leave some money on the table that can be used for either deficit reduction or application in other ways to make a stronger economy.

Ten days later, in another interview, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that social benefits taxed back from the rich would be given to the needy if the federal government decides to end universality. The money would absolutely not be used to reduce the deficit.

What the Prime Minister said only 10 months ago is totally at loggerheads with what happened six months later in the budget of May 23.

What did the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) say at that time? In December, 1984, he rallied behind the Prime Minister's suggestion that the Government reduce social benefits for high income Canadians to help channel more to the poor. All of these promises contain the premise that if any of those benefits to our middle income or other sectors of our Canadian economy will be reduced, they will be channelled to those who need them the most.

In that same interview to UPC on December 14 last year, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said:

> None of the saved benefits would reduce the deficit and there will be no means test.

I agree that there are no means tests, but when he suggests that as a result of the May 23 Budget the benefits would not be used to reduce the deficit, the facts belie the case.

Let me remind Members opposite of the other remarks they made about deindexation. For instance:

> Deindexing is a scheme to guarantee that you will pay higher federal income taxes year after year after year.

They said:

> Deindexing would take away the protection you now have against inflation.

I will reveal who made these quotes later. They went on to say that deindexing would impose the greatest economic hardship on people living on low income and would mean higher and higher taxes for all on any income at all. They said that taxes would increase as inflation continues to spiral upward.

They also went on to point out that deindexing would raise a lot of money. I will point out the truth of that fact as I analyse the budget numbers.

They also said:

> Indexing was our idea in the first place. And we are determined that you should continue to receive this fundamental protection against inflation. But we need your help and it is time for all Canadians to speak up.

This was not taken from an advertisement run by the Liberal Party of Canada. It is contained in a message from the Progressive Conservative Party of Canda, published midway through the last mandate.

Let me put some of these promises in the context of what I want to say this morning. I noticed that the Minister of National Health and Welfare selectively quoted from the MacDonald Commission Report.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No. I didn't quote from it at all.

Mr. Frith: I will check, but I thought that he referred to the MacDonald Commission.

However, my remarks this morning will take into consideration some of the recommendations made by the MacDonald Commission and other national organizations that report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and with advice about what the Government's social policy should be.

• (1130)

The McDonald Report contends that Canada's total level of spending on social programs, which, in 1981, was in the lower one-third of countries belonging to the Organization for Co-operation and Development, should at least be maintained. The commission also declared that it does not fear for the future sustainability of our income transfer programs. Nor does it believe that short-time budgetary problems should be solved through cut-backs in this area, something totally opposite to the thrust of the social and economic policy of the Wilson Budget of May 23.

Let me talk a little bit about the Budget. I notice that the Minister of National Health and Welfare chose only to address those matters specifically within the realm of Bill C-70, but I think the general thrust of the budget measures should be taken into account. Once again, opposition Members of this Parliament will have to rise to defend average and low-income Canadians. We went through a similar debate in June with respect to deindexation of senior citizens pensions. I must say I am proud that we helped to lead the fight to reverse the Government's thrust in that area, and I give credit to the Government for its common sense in listening to senior citizens. I hope the Government listens equally well to those average income and low-income Canadians, and reverses the measures placed before us in Bill C-70.

Let us look at the proposals in the Budget and what effect they will have on total family income. This summer we have heard from women's groups and national organizations that represent poverty groups, the National Council on Social Development and the National Council on Welfare, all of which state that this Government's social policy is perverse and totally opposite to what is required to give poor people a reasonable good standard of living.

This Government has chosen to introduce capital gains exemptions for the rich in our society. I have no quarrel with some of the other recommendations, for example, limits on registered retirement savings plans. But the Government has chosen not only to deindex family benefits but to deindex personal exemptions. This means that every family by 1990 whether earning $9,000, $35,000 or $80,000 a year will lose purchasing power. That is the reality. This is the Budget in which the multinationals will get significant taxbreaks. If we were worried about the size of the federal deficit, why is it that we have cut-backs in social programs yet allow these kinds of rip-offs to occur that add to the size of the federal deficit?

That is the question at the heart of the debate today, Mr. Speaker. Bill C-70 is another example of broken Tory promises. Let me give a short outline. Both Mulroney and Epp promised that any savings in social spending would go back into the social policy envelope, not on deficit reduction.

An Hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Frith: Instead, savings will go into deficit reduction. What effect will a $1 billion bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank do to Wilson's deficit reduction plan?

An Hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Frith: It is very simple to me. The Minister of Finance is quite capable of finding $1 billion to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank while sticking by his decision to cut back in areas of the social envelope.

What did we get specifically in this Budget? We ended up with an erosion in family benefits, meaning less benefits by 1990 to low and middle-income Canadians. The Budget will increase consumer and gasoline taxes. The Budget will impose taxes on health goods. We had a Budget that attempted to deindex senior citizens' security pensions, but was withdrawn under fierce opposition. We have a Budget that will deindex personal income tax exemption. These changes will hit lower income Canadians the hardest. All low-income Canadians will have to pay income tax and lose a proportion of their family allowance gain while the richest Canadians will benefit from the capital gains exemption.

I will give numbers from an analysis done by an independent board of advisers to the Minister of National health and Welfare. These numbers cannot be disputed because they were accepted by the Finance Minister in questions put to him in the House of Commons last June. The analysis shows that the Government's direction in social policy is completely at odds with policy directions recommended by all national organizations advising Government.

I find it perverse that a Government wanting to stimulate the Canadian economy and get growth at the same rate as that south of the border would choose to bring in a Budget eroding the spending power of lower and middle-income Canadians. This Budget will make the poor poorer and the rich richer, yet the Government expects Canadians to have the political will to follow its general thrust. This Budget has broad fiscal overtones completely opposed to those in the United States.

We have many Conservatives pointing to the economic recovery program south of the border. Great growth has occurred in the United States in the last four years. At the same time, great growth in the deficit has occurred. If one wants to analyse it, one could say, in a reverse, despite the fact that President Reagan would never admit it—I do not think he would even understand—that he has been more of a follower of Keynes economic theory than any United States President since Roosevelt.

In order to achieve growth the Americans granted average income Americans tax cuts and increased taxes for big corporations. That was the general over-all fiscal policy of the United States Government in the last four years, completely opposite to what was brought in here in the May 23 Budget.

Let me outline numbers and give specifics. We had a decrease in purchasing power to average and low-income Canadians. We have had income tax increases and corporate tax cuts. Specifically, families with two children and an income of $20,000 a year will lose over $900 in spending power by 1990, through eroded child benefits, increased consumptive taxes and increased income taxes.

Talking about perverse social logic, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the Budget on May 23, three-quarters of a million Canadians who are presently above Stats-Canada's poverty line will fall below that poverty line by 1990. In addition, let us take another area of thrust with respect to young families. In the Budget of May 23, the Minister removed the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, a tool used by young people, 75 per cent of whom are between the ages of 20 and 28. No longer can young families put aside money toward buying a home through the RHOSP.

Let us examine some of the fundamental philosophy behind the introduction of family allowances by previous Governments. First, it was recognized that the family allowance is a tangible recognition that all parents make a contribution to society by raising children who are future citizens and members of the labour force. It is an especially significant program for women. That is why women's groups defend the family allowance so vigorously. Even for more affluent families it is often the only independent source of income for women in cases where husbands refuse to provide their wives and their children with income.

Let us take a look at the importance to single parent mother-lead families of family allowances. Family benefits have an important role in supplementing incomes for poor families. It also compensates for the fact that the wage system does not make adjustments for the extra responsibility of large families. That was at the heart of the philosophy behind the introduction of family benefits in previous years. Needless to say, family benefits stimulate the economy by putting purchasing power into the hands of low and middle-income Canadians. That ends my review of the over-all general thrust of the Conservative Budget of May 23, 1985.

I should now like to focus for a moment on some of the specifics as a result of the changes in Bill C-70. It is indicated that the family allowance will be deindexed from 1986 onward. The child tax credit will be raised to $454 per child in 1986, rising to $489 in 1987 and peaking at $524 in 1988. The Minister of National Health and Welfare refused to recognize in his opening remarks that beginning in 1989 the child tax credit would be deindexed along with the other proposals. As a result of the deindexation of the child tax credit, even those who will receive an initial benefit from the program change, those who are the poorest of the poor, will receive that increased benefit only from 1986 to 1989. In 1989 and beyond, even a family, God forbid, living on $9,000 per year will lose benefits under the program. What kind of perverse social policy are the back-benchers of the Conservative Party supporting? That is the effect of that one item.

In addition, the Minister of National Health and Welfare conveniently overlooked, in terms of the recommendations made by his own standing committee, the turning point or the point at which middle income Canadians begin to lose benefits. The effect of Bill C-70 is that the turnover point will be lowered from $26,333 today to $23,500 tomorrow, and then it will even be partially deindexed. Even the definition of Statistics Canada of medium family income is $34,500. In effect the Government is suggesting through this Bill that families at $26,000 per year should lose benefits. It is incredible that the Government would consider that the average Inco worker in Sudbury, the average steelworker in Hamilton or the average worker in Thunder Bay should begin to lose benefits under the family benefits package. That tells me everything about 14 years of Tory think-tanks on social policy. A combination of all these changes will cause lower and middle-income Canadian families to be hit the hardest.

Let us take a look at the effects on Canadian families. By 1990, including the changes to personal income taxes and to the family benefits package, a two-earner, two-child family earning $15,000 per year will lose $1,879 in purchasing power as a result of the Bill. A family earning $80,000, or almost six times the amount which I just mentioned, will only lose $1,125. Therefore, low-income families will lose $755 more per year than high-income families, and middle-income families will lose three times as much as high-income earners. What kind of perverse logic leads a Government to bring in such a Bill? At the same time, the capital gains exemption and pension deductions mainly benefit high-income earners. As a result of the capital gains exemption, those with incomes of over $100,000 per year will receive more than $600 million in tax benefits, while changes to the Child Tax Credit and the child tax exemption will save the Government only $155 million. If we take the Minister of National Health and Welfare at his word when he indicates that he is worried about the size of the federal deficit, how can he, in defending the rights of low and middle-income earners, sit around a Cabinet table which brings in a Budget to make the rich richer and the poor poorer? It is beyond belief.

As I stated earlier, the savings of the Government will go toward deficit reduction. It will not go back into the social policy envelope, as was recommended by every national advisory group. This Government prided itself in consultation. It said that the reason for the 10-month delay in the introduction of the Budget was to ensure proper consultation with all groups in society. Every one of those groups recommended the total opposite to what was brought in. What was the point of the charade of consultation if the advice given was not taken?

What do groups at arms length from Government have to say about the over-all thrust of the Conservative Budget and this Bill in particular? The Canadian Council on Social Development, funded by the federal Government, has been giving advice to the Government of the nation for years. It indicated that the Budget would decrease the buying power of a typical family with two children by more than $1,000 in 1990. It went on to point out that the poor, middle-income earners and the elderly would lose more as a percentage of income in real terms. Let us note, in particular, the economic thrust and direction of the Budget.

Instead of confusing everyone by using figures such as $4.50 per month and by talking about individuals, I should like to talk about what happens to the percentage of disposable income of Canadians as a result of the budgetary measures of May 23. A family earning a gross income of $10,000 will lose 4 per cent of disposable income by 1990, whereas a family earning $20,000 will lose 4.5 per cent of disposable income. However, the family earning $50,000 will gain .7 per cent. As a result of this budget exercise, a family earning $10,000 per year will lose 4 per cent of disposable income and a family earning $50,000 per year will gain almost 1 per cent.

How can the Conservatives rise in the House of Commons and tell us that the Budget will help to redirect savings toward those who need them the most when it goes totally opposite to the direction intended? If that is the case, the least they can do is bring in a Bill which reverses the direction of May 23. As a result of deindexation, by 1990 the Government will gain $4.5 billion. It managed to give to the multinationals $2 billion worth of tax credits as a result of the changes to the National Energy Program. At a time when it proposes to take away $2 billion by 1990 from health and post-secondary education, it gives away $1.5 billion on capital gains exemption. That will be the cost to the federal Treasury. The effect of the Budget on the social and economic sectors of the economy will be totally opposite to that put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If one looks at the deficit reduction and at where the moneys for that deficit reduction will come from through tax increases and expenditure cuts, primarily it will be achieved—and this is no surprise—in the social sectors. As a matter of fact, collectively the deindexation of income tax, the removal of the federal tax deduction and the changes to the child benefits system will account for almost $5.5 billion of that cut. If we look at the over-all thrust of the Budget, the big gains will be made in the area of corporate income tax, by multinational oil companies, and in the area of transfers to other corporations. The lack of logic of the Government in bringing in this Budget is incredible. The National Council on Welfare indicated that the recommendations in Bill C-70 and in the Budget would hurt many low-income families and individuals in all age groups. It went on to indicate that their losses would amount to hundreds of dollars per year and would grow larger as time went on. In addition, it went on to explain how proposed changes to the personal income tax system would increase the tax bill of lower and middle-income Canadians and would actually lighten the tax burden of many upper-income taxpayers. It pointed out that a two-earner couple supporting two children on $15,000 per year would pay $135 more in federal and provincial income taxes next year, that the same size of family with a combined income of $35,000 would pay a $192 increase in taxes, but that an $80,000 per year family would actually enjoy a tax saving of $650 per year.

• (1150)

So what hypocrisy it is to stand and tell me, as a Conservative Government, that the thrust of your Government is to try to get more money into the hands of those who need it most!

All other families, Mr. Speaker, including many below the poverty line, will lose child benefits from 1986 onward if the Budget's proposals are implemented. I cannot stress enough the hypocrisy of this Government in these recommendations.

What did the Canadian Council on Children and Youth have to say about this Budget, Mr. Speaker? In pre-Budget consultations with the Government, here is what it recommended: preserve the universality of the family allowances and as a tax benefit—the Government listened to it—eliminate the child tax exemption partially; raise the child tax credit for low-income families partially; raise the threshold at which child tax credit is recaptured. To the last one the Government did not listen at all. Here is what the Government ended up doing. It deindexed the family allowances. It reduced the child tax exemption by 34 per cent over three years and subject to deindexation. It increased the child tax credit by 140 over three years but chose to deindex it after 1988, which means even the poorest of the poor will lose under this proposal beginning in 1990. It indicated that middle-income families will be the hardest hit and bear the brunt of these changes.

I just want to talk a bit about what we believe, as the Liberal Party, should be the principles inherent as a guide to the creation of a new child benefit system.

First, we believe that universality of family allowances should be maintained; second, low-income earners should receive more than those in the upper-income brackets; and higher benefits should be paid to lower-income families. That is a policy direction that we believe in. We believe that indexation should be maintained and that family benefits should be adjusted to reflect changes in the cost of living.

Last but not least, and most important, the sharing of the cost of these universal programs should be borne and shared by all taxpayers, corporate and individuals, through a fair taxation system. That is inherent in this. In addition, Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Conservative Government is not taking the recommendations of the OECD surveys, or the Macdonald Report which raised this issue previously, that the percentage of dollars of the federal Budget that is going towards, those areas that are reflected in social policy envelopes should be increased.

I want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, as well, that the Liberal Party over the next weeks and months ahead will be launching an operation called Operation Justice. I do not know if the Minister of National Health and Welfare remembers that we launched a similar program in June to convince the Government about the unfairness of the plan to deindex senior citizens pensions.

We are asking, Mr. Speaker, all the senior citizens groups in this country to help to get the people's opposition to this plan to change family benefits read into the record and brought back forcefully to every one of the MPs as they go home to their own ridings.

I point out as well that the middle class is especially hard hit by the Budget in this Operation Justice and requests help from not only the groups that represent the poor in our society, but from Members of Parliament, the Conservative Members of Parliament, who have an obligation, to bring forward the viewpoints of middle-income and low-income Canadians to the floor of the House of Commons and not sit back and clap like seals as the Government brings in a program that is going to devastate low and middle-income Canadians.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I want to move the following motion as follows:

That the main motion be amended deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting therefor:

Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I understood that I would speak, first of all, to the Member's motion that was just put forward, and then speak to Bill C-70.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am recognizing the Hon. Member to speak. She will have 40 minutes to speak under Standing Order 36(2). While I look at the motion, the Hon. Member can have her 40 minutes.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise really with a feeling of sadness to speak to Bill C-70 because, jsut as we feel that the Budget had such a sad impact on families and pensioners in our country, this Bill certainly symbolizes once again how this Government really is prepared to conduct an attack on children and families as well as to allow an erosion of our universal programs. Canadians have seen the erosion of social programs such as the family allowance which is a social contract with them establishing rights for children, regardless of income.

I think we all recall, Mr. Speaker, last spring when pensioners across this country rose up in indignation and anger to demand their right to have fully indexed pensions. They, of course, mobilized considerable support across the country. Many of us went out to work with them in this very important endeavour and, as a result, they were able to convince the Government that it had made a mistake. Pensioners convinced the Government politically; I'm not sure, when I see this Bill, that they convinced it morally that it had made a mistake when it proposed to deindex a universal social program.

As a result of the campaign we know now, it is history, that the Government was forced to back down and to admit that it was wrong. After a protracted attack from both opposition parties, but particularly from the NDP Party, senior groups and their supporters across this country, the decision was reversed. Fully indexed old age pensions were retained as a universal right. I disagree profoundly with the Minister and I think we need to stress very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that to deindex old age pensions or family allowances is to play around with the whole concept of universality and to erode that concept. That is what we are doing to family allowances through Bill C-70.

Mr. Speaker, the polls show that this Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was left with a legacy of mistrust and skepticism as a result of his broken promises, and what he proposed to do to senior citizens.

Now we have Bill C-70, a Bill which in effect will do the same thing to families and children. It will reduce the indexation on family allowance by 3 per cent and is repeating the same cynical and senseless attack on a universal social program, a program which Canadians have long seen as a social right. The same principles and objections apply to the reduced indexation on family allowances as apply to old age pensions, so therefore the Government should be listening to people and applying the same kinds of changes in policy as were applied to pensions in the spring. They promised, as we know, Mr. Speaker, to keep universality sacrosanct, that it was a sacred trust, and then they have broken their promises once again. This time, of course, the attack is on families and children. I cannot help but think that it is much easier to attack children than it is to attack old age pensioners. Children do not vote; their parents are busy working and the children grow up very quickly. The amount of money expended for the Family Allowances Program is not as large as that expended for the Old Age Security Program. Therefore, that is another reason why I think it would have been sensible and morally responsible of the Minister to have changed this intention that was reflected in the Budget and to have refused to deindex family allowances.

The Government continues its practice of saying one thing and doing another. This Minister of National Health and Welfare is the epitome of this. He really symbolizes this to the greatest extent of anyone in the Government, except perhaps for the Prime Minister. On repeated occasions, and again last week in the House, he has said that he has a very strong commitment to the importance of the family. I just want to quote what he said on September 11 in a response to a question from one of the opposition Members. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has recognized the importance that both the Government and Canadian society place on the family unit. I think many of us in this House and in society generally feel that that concept had to be strengthened, that there were certain trends in society that were possibly reducing the importance of the family.

● (1200)

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker:

> This Government wants to bring forward initiatives that will enhance both the Government's position relative to the family, but more important, show that the family is the cornerstone of society.

The Minister is saying that the family is so important while he is introducing Bill C-70, a Bill which attacks all families, not only one segment of society. He is attacking a universal program and he has the gall to put forward in his patronizing manner the point that he cares about families, that they are the basis of his social policy and that he is particularly concerned about those in greatest need. I cannot help but conclude, and I believe most Canadians would conclude, that just as the Government's policy with pensioners was hypocritical, the same can be said about the family allowance policy.

As I said, the Minister has repeated that the Government is concerned with helping those in greatest need. That is just phoney rhetoric. The facts show that the Conservative Budget represents an attack on the poorest families in our society while rich families continue to benefit. I will elaborate on this further later in my remarks.

The reduction to the family allowance which this Bill implements is only one of the ways in which the Government is undermining families and children. Added to the erosion of family allowances in the lowering of the income limit to be eligible for the child tax credit. The token increase in the child tax credit over whith the Minister tends to gloat does not even cover the increased sales taxes that those same poor families will be forced to pay. The sales taxes on gas, energy products, health products and comforts contained in the last Budget will cost the average family over $1,000 in buying power by 1990 according to the Canadian Council on Social Development.

I would like to point out to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) that he is the Minister who is responsible for health. He has supported taxes on essential drugs and medications for patients suffering from arthritis, cancer, glaucoma and heart disease. This again is the way that he is treating those in greatest need and those in our society who are suffering. In contrast to that, we know how the Government treats the banks and the oil companies.

The Minister, who seems to be amused by this particular approach, has taken the initiative to reduce other services to families. He has cut services to Planned Parenthood at the very time when we need these services to be enlarged across the country, particularly in order to help young adolescents, a group among whom there is a very high incidence of pregnancy. There are cuts in social housing. Rents are going up to 30 per cent of income and responsibility for social housing will apparently be turned over to the provinces. We in British Columbia know what that will do to families.

As well, the Government has decreased transfer payments to provinces for health care and education services by $2 billion. This will also have a tremendous impact on families and will hurt families in which the breadwinner is unemployed, poor families and marginal families in which the breadwinner is struggling to find a job, take training or maintain the health of the family.

Some months ago, the Minister asked for consultation. Then he assigned the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare to the task of looking at some of the consultation papers and briefs that had been presented by witnesses. As the Hon. Member who just spoke will confirm, we spent weeks and weeks doing this. Both the recommendations of witnesses and the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare were in effect ignored by the Minister. It is obvious that his motivation and that of the Government was to cut family benefits in order to save money rather than to reform benefits in a very progressive way.

In his Blue Paper to the Standing Committee, the Minister stated that savings from the changes to family benefits would not be aimed at reducing the deficit. Yet today, if I understood him correctly, he admitted in his opening remarks that that was one of the objectives of this program.

Most witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs advocated full indexation of family allowances and the maintaining of universal family programs which recognize all of Canada's children. They also supported the position, which we advocated very strongly, that all citizens of Canada should contribute to the cost of programs for Canada's children as they are a resource that belongs to all of us, not only to the parents who are raising individual children. Most witnesses therefore asked for full indexation of family allowances and wanted a removal of the regressive child tax exemption, a tax provision that progressively helps those with higher incomes and does not help in the slightest poor families that pay no taxes. They also wanted to see a significant increase in the child tax credit. Our Party called for an increase of 80 per cent in the child tax credit if the child tax exemption could be removed and other tax reforms instituted to cover this. This measure would be targeted particularly to lower income people but should also affect families with average incomes, families that have higher expenses than families without children.

The witnesses urged that all monies should go to increased family benefits and not go toward other social programs or the deficit. They urged particularly that there not be a transfer of any savings to the provinces. The Minister has completely ignored almost all of these recommendations. He has taken a completely different tack. Instead of being a reform, this legislation is a token juggling around which adds up to a very negative change as it affects most families.

In addition to reducing indexation on both the family allowance and the child tax credit, the Government has agreed to cut the child tax exemption after several years, but the exemption will only be cut partially. It will not be removed as was advocated by most witnesses. It will go down to about the same level as the family allowance. The child tax credit will have only a token increase of $70 this year, but more than that amount of money will be required by families to pay the increased sales taxes. The income level at which families will be eligible for the child tax credit has also been reduced. Families that earn over $23,500 per year will quickly be phased out of eligibility for the child tax credit.

Over-all, we have a situation in which wealthier families retain tax exemptions for children, the poor have only token increases in the child tax credit along with heavier expenses as a result of the Budget, and middle-income families, as usual, will pay the most taxes and reap the least benefits in proportion to the taxes paid. However, let us take a look at who really benefits as a result of changes and modifications to the family benefits.

Despite the promise not to take monies out of the family benefits to pay for the deficit, the Government will save approximately $130 million in 1986 and up to $600 million by 1990 while families will lose this amount of money in direct family benefits. If this is not a contradiction of the original philosophy that the Minister, in his patronizing manner, was espousing, I do not know what is. I wish he would own up to that. This is the way the Minister of National Health and Welfare is treating families, families which, as he says, are the foundation of our society. This is the way he helps families that are most in need.

The Canadian Council on Social Development did an analysis of the impact of a 3 per cent reduction in indexation of family allowances combined with the other changes to family benefits which the Budget will implement. It definitely refutes the Minister's claim that he is helping families in the greatest need. The CCSD concludes that all families will be the losers of family benefits by the years 1990-91. Even the very poorest family, that is, a single parent with two children who earns under $10,000 a year, will lose under these revisions. By 1990, this family will receive $25 less per year than it receives now, while the Minister extols the fact that he is giving more to the poor. The CCSD says that that is not true, that its facts show he will be giving less. Families in the $20,000 income range will lose $191 in family benefits. Those earning $30,000, which is still a modest income for a family with two children, will have family benefits reduced by $191. Clearly, the Budget did not redistribute benefits from the rich to poor families at all. In fact, what this Government has done is to take money out of family benefits altogether. As I have just said, this must have been the motive. I think the Minister admitted to that today, even though in his position papers he stated this was not to be the objective. The Government has definitely been taking money out of the program to help with the deficit. This also applies to the provinces which will save money off the backs of families. According to the CCSD, $135 million will be withdrawn from family benefits by 1986; by 1990-91, some $600 million will be lost to Canada's children. As I have said, the provincial and federal Treasuries will be the beneficiaries of this money.

The New Democratic Party is not the only group to criticize the 3 per cent reduction in family allowance which Bill C-70 proposes to implement. Most social policy groups and women's groups across Canada have been highly critical and they are becoming very disillusioned. Most of these groups made a sincere attempt to present positive, realistic alternatives which would not cost the Government a great deal of money but, instead, would realign existing moneys. The six groups which now form part of the Social Policy Reform Group, which is a coalition of social reform groups, tried to present alternatives in a sincere and constructive manner. These groups are now disillusioned by the tack the Minister has taken. The Executive Director of the Canadian Council on Social Development had this to say with respect to the matter:

Changes to child benefits affect the very programs that help the neediest Canadians.

This is what the National Council on Welfare had to say:

Changes in the Budget to deindex those benefits, coupled with increases to personal income taxes, will result in more hardship to the poor, who will eventually lose more than the rich.

The Director of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, Sylvia Gold, said:

The economic security of women with children at home is threatened by deindexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. We strenuously object to this chipping away of family benefits; these cuts may not seem major to high income people, but they will have a serious effect on families with moderate and low incomes.

I wish to tell Hon. Members that I have contact with many women's groups across the country. They strongly oppose any reduction to family allowance benefits. This is an attack on their children and an attack on them. It is an attack which is not to be tolerated. I hope they will be able to get their message across loud and clear to the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with respect to how damaging this policy is. It is a policy which is a continuation of a process which the Liberals started. I agree with what the Minister had to say in his outline of the Liberal history. However, I do not know how he can justify his comments when, on the one hand, he criticizes the Liberals and, on the other hand, he says that his Government is bad, too—just not quite as bad. I think the Minister is worse because he is continuing the erosion and not reversing it. It is hurting families and children across our land.

The purpose and effects of Bill C-70 are far more significant than just the 3 per cent reduction in family allowance. Perhaps this will not be noticed by a great many people, particularly fairly comfortable families. However, I can tell Hon. Members it will be noticed by families which are budgeting hard and simply do not have money in their budgets or their pockets to cover food and rent. What this move represents is an attack on the whole concept of the universal family program which was designed by our forefathers to help in the rearing of Canada's children and which was designed to recognize all of Canada's children.

As I have said, the Liberals began the process of reducing the amount of family allowance. They are to blame. I challenge the member of the Liberal Party who just spoke to be more honest in his self-appraisal. The Liberals refused to make a truly effective program with a more progressive tax system to go along with it which would have targeted benefits of a universal program to those in low income groups. Instead, they reduced the family allowance. They added a selective program, the child tax credit, for low income families and they changed the tax system so that, in fact, higher income earners received more benefits and more exemptions. The implementation of selective programs allowed them to ignore the need for tax reform. They further eroded the universal family allowance by imposing six and five restrictions on indexation in 1984. This was the beginning of the precedent which helps to justify the measures being taken by the Conservative Government with respect to Bill C-70. It is unethical and damaging. In my view, it is abominable.

I wish to reiterate what I have said many times in the House on different occasions. I think it is important to repeat it. Why is it important to maintain a fully indexed universal family allowance? The universal family allowance recognizes the value which society places on child rearing. It is not just an amount of money; it is recognition of the fact that children belong to us all. They are the next generation; they are a human resource. Parents who take on the sometimes difficult and costly job of rearing children should be recognized.

The universal family allowance program contributes to parenting and to the costs of child rearing. I greatly admire the contribution made by the women of this country and I hope that, increasingly, fathers can be included in the realm of child rearing full-time.

Mr. McDermid: That is a sexist statement.

Ms. Mitchell: It is not a sexist remark at all, Mr. Speaker. I hope more fathers will take time off to help in the rearing of their children full-time when it is suited to the families. Parenting should be a shared responsibility.

The fact is that family allowances are paid for by all taxpayers. This is the means by which those of us who do not have children contribute to the next generation.

The family allowance is paid to the main parenting person, which could be the father. However, because of circumstances, it is usually the mother. As has already been stated, for many women this is the only cheque they receive in their own names. This morning I was on the red eye special in order to be on time for this momentous meeting of the House. I had the opportunity of speaking to two men on the plane. I was interested in one gentleman who is an accountant who told me that he thought the family allowance was great. He asked me why it went to his wife when he is the one who has to pay the taxes on it. I asked him if his wife had any form of income, and he told me that she did not. He soon realized that the family allowance cheque was the only income his wife had in her name, even though he had a considerable income. He also realized that the funds went to his children in the form of clothing allowances. He thinks it is very much needed. He did not want to give up the family allowance even though he himself is in fairly comfortable circumstances. He recounted to me the struggles he had in his student years and how the money was needed even more at that time. It is really small recognition for the many long hours, love and stress which go into parenting. Some mothers who are working use the money to help pay for the cost of child care. We need more help for child care in the country. Parents on average incomes use it to help buy costly winter coats and clothing and to help cover schooling costs and other activities which help their children to grow up and mature with a broad range of interests.

• (1220)

Poor mothers and poor families, of course, are the most desperate. I want to tell those Hon. Members who are heckling across the way that I hope they have talked to some mothers who are on welfare these days, because in my riding, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is no laughing matter. Mothers have a welfare cheque which lasts about two weeks, if they are lucky, and that is with absolutely no comforts of any kind. It is just basic food, rent and transportation. By the third week they are down at food banks trying to get money. They are desperate for their family allowance cheque which immediately goes for either rent or food. By the fourth week some of them are out soliciting on the streets because they cannot afford to feed their families. That is how bad it is. And we are taking the indexation off their family allowance cheque as well as providing insulting kinds of increases to the child tax credit which should have been much higher.

Another thing which I believe is important about the family allowances is that the cheque comes on a monthly basis. Low income families also very much appreciate the fact that the child tax credit is an additional bonus on an annual basis. They like it as a larger amount, according to the national anti-poverty group, because it is the only way they can pay for certain larger household items. We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that poor families and families on welfare have no access to credit whatsoever and have to pay top prices for all their consumer goods.

I would like to say as well, Mr. Speaker, that it is important that the family allowance and old age pensions remain universal programs because they are paid out to everyone as a right. There is no stigma and no need for a huge bureaucracy to deal with individual cases through a means test. It is declared on income tax forms and partially recovered from those on higher incomes. The family allowance is especially important because it is one of the few benefits which go to middle income earners who carry the greatest tax burden to pay for our social programs.

These programs are also important politically. I would urge the Minister to think of that as well because he is going to get lots of backlash from the middle class in Canada—it has started already—who realize that they are the ones who are paying more the costs of all of the items in the Budget as well as the deficit and they, in turn, are going to have their one small benefit, the family allowance, made smaller by reduced indexation. So a very important political factor is involved in maintaining support for our universal social programs.

A fully indexed family allowance is a basic component of our Canadian social policy. Parents feel that this is their social right to which they are contributing by raising Canada's children. And they are right. It is a social contract we have with families just as we have with old age pensioners. This is the same principle as that of the universal old age pensions. We are very proud of our social security system in Canada which Hon. Members of our Party fought for and pressured the Liberals to bring in in the early 1930s. We are proud of our medicare, our hospitalization plan, our public educational system and our Unemployment Insurance Act, just as we are proud of universal family allowances and old age security. These are programs which this Government seems intent to erode, and this Minister, particularly, has no conscience about deindexing. This kind of partial deindexation now is just the first step, Mr. Speaker. There is no question in my mind that it is a first step which will eventually lead to the erosion of our social net if we do not protest and stop it now.

I must deplore the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is advocating a 3 per cent deindexation while he says over and over again—he said it again today—that he supports universality. I am sick and tired of those platitudes. He says he supports universality and this is not in any way eroding our universal family program. That is ridiculous. It is eroding it. It is reducing the amount of money which will go into the pockets of low income families and every year it will be reduced even more. If that is not reducing universality, I do not know what is.

The Minister's lack of support for universality, I might say, is also reflected in statements he made in reaction to the Macdonald Commission Report, which recently advocated a guaranteed annual income, which really should be called "a guaranteed poverty income", because that is exactly what it is. I do not have time to go into this today, Mr. Speaker, but I hope we will debate this report at another time.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare, according to The Citizen of September 7, hinted he may be prepared to reopen the debate on the universality of social programs after carefully considering the recommendation of the Macdonald Commission. That report, as I understand it, does away with universal programs and offers a guaranteed income, which would be guaranteed poverty because it is a fraction of what the minimum poverty rate is in Canada. I feel that that is a pretty shocking kind of statement and I wish the Minister would elaborate on what he meant by saying he would be inclined to support the Macdonald Commission proposals. The decision to deindex family allowances really must be seen in the context not only of broader family benefits—and that is what I have been trying to do today—but also in the context of the need for social policy reform generally. We need real reforms of social policy as it affects families. This kind of piecemeal approach which chips away at its benefits is really detrimental.

Changes in social policy must address the changing needs of today's families with children. I believe we have to look at the whole concept of families today. Families have changed so much and our social policy is not adapting to the different circumstances. Canadians have long recognized that incomes from the market-place failed to take into account the extra responsibilities shouldered by parents. Through tax provisions and family allowances we have taken steps to ensure that families with children do not have to endure a significantly lower standard of living than their childless counterparts. Changing demographics and work patterns make these concerns even more pressing today. I mentioned the number of teenage mothers in society today, and I think the Minister should be not only providing them with adequate incomes but should be trying to prevent, through support for family planning, that very real problem.

Social policy should also address the growing needs of the poor who now number 4.5 million Canadians. This includes 1.5 million children. While one in every six Canadians lives in poverty, the figure for children under 16 is one in five. There are a million and a half people unemployed, according to the figures we had last spring and, certainly in my province, I would be very surprised if that figure has fallen from that. Real family incomes are falling. Salaries still trail inflation rates. Most unions, I believe, would agree with that because of what they have lost over the last few years. Soup kitchens and winter clothing drives are becoming the norm across Canada. Recently, a report of the Anglican Church of Canada, accused both the federal and provincial Governments of shirking their responsibilities by relying on churches and volunteer organizations to feed, clothe and shelter the needy. What we need are sound social policies.

I feel that the kind of trivial remarks which are being made by Hon. Members opposite are really doing a disservice to both churches and poor people, Mr. Speaker.

As the author of the report of the Anglican Church of Canada said:

> The State's failure to provide an adequate social support system has widened the gap between the poor and the privileged, plunging the country into another depression.

The number of poor people rose by 1,100 a day in 1982 and 1983. So we must think of social policy reform, Mr. Speaker, in the context of over-all tax reform. The two are tightly entwined. This is why we regret that the Conservatives refused to talk about tax reforms. We wanted major reforms in the tax system so that we could be more generous, particularly in increasing the child tax credit and maintaining fully indexed family allowances. We proposed several ways of gaining extra income: A return to the pre-1982 marginal tax rates which would have brought in $1.7 billion more and which the Liberals foolhardedly left in the coffers under MacEachen's Budget; the imposition of a 20 per cent minimum tax on Canadians with incomes of $50,000 per year or more. The Prime Minister promised to do something about this we have seen no action. Once again we get words and platitudes but no action.

• (1230)

I want to conclude by saying that we call on Canadians across this land, from all walks of life, to tell this Government that they stand for fully indexed family allowances. It is not simply family allowances by themselves. It is really a basic family benefit program which should be reformed to be of much greater benefit to middle and low income Canadians. I call on those people to begin the fight for reindexation of family allowances just as they fought for reindexation of old age pensions. It is the same principle, the same fight, and I know in my heart from talking to seniors across the land that they care just as much about children as they care about their retired friends who were facing deindexation of their pensions. It is not good enough for the Conservative Government to say the Liberals did it so we can do it too. Surely that is immoral. Fully indexed family allowances are essential if we are to maintain universality as a basic social policy for families. Pensioners understand that. To reduce family allowances by 3 per cent through deindexation is to erode universality. The Minister is shaking his head. Social policy groups which appeared before our committee have said this and they reiterated it when they opposed the steps he has taken. If this country can afford to subsidize banks and oil companies and increase defence expenditures by billions of dollars, surely we can afford to keep full indexation for family allowances. This Party intends to fight this move as strongly as it can and we will have many speakers before we let this Bill go to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before we carry on with the debate, I would like to say that the Chair has no problem with the motion of the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). The motion is in order.

Resuming debate?

Mr. Frith: They do not want to speak on their own Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, it is rather surprising the Progressive Conservatives should have adopted as their strategy not to speak to a Bill that is so important to all Canadian families. Usually, when an important Bill is tabled in the House, once the Minister has made its introductory speech he is followed by the Official Opposition, the third party and then by a Government Member speaking in support of the Bill tabled by the Minister. Today, it seems no one could be found on the Government side who had the courage to support and defend the Government's policy. I think I know why.

I know why, because since September 4 last year and especially since this Government was sworn in, we have been faced with a series of contradictions and policy changes that have made things very confusing for us on the Opposition side, and now on the Government side, it stands to reason Members are afraid to rise and support this Bill because they do not know whether they should support what was said in the Progressive Conservative Party's pre-election advertising, the statements made by the Minister of Finance last November or the contents of the Throne Speech, or whether they should support the position taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare before the Bill was tabled. In fact, Progressive Conservative Members do not know their Government's position. Faced with these serious contradictions, they thought the best they could do was to say nothing. However, Mr. Speaker, that will not prevent us on this side of the House from reminding Canadians what the real impact will be of Bill C-70 on Canadian families.

We want consideration of this Bill to be postponed, to give all Canadians a chance to find out exactly what Bill C-70 will do and to make their views known to this Government, and I am sure that as soon as the Canadian people have had time to speak to their elected representatives, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will want to withdraw the Bill without further ado.

Mr. Speaker, thinking back to the months that preceded the 1984 election campaign, I remember advertisements that appeared in this country's English and French newspapers, taking a stand against de-indexation. These advertisements, which were paid for by the Progressive Conservative Party, by the present Government, said for instance that the Progressive Conservative Party was against de-indexation of old age security pensions and family allowances. Subsequently, during the election campaign, we heard those famous words spoken by the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party that our social programs were "a sacred trust" that would not be tampered with. Later, Mr. Speaker, in this Government's first official document, the Throne Speech, where the Prime Minister, through the Governor General, announced his Government's intentions, we find that the Government was going to set a priority on strengthening the Canadian family and increasing assistance to families with children.

Mr. Speaker, after all the statements made by Government Members before and after the election, we had a right to expect this Government to introduce a family policy that would increase family benefits and help families in need or on very low incomes and who have children. However, in spite of all the statements and announcements by the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, they are doing the exact opposite, and the net result of this Bill is that the rich will be richer and the poor will be poorer.

Why introduce a Bill that is so hard on families, at this stage in our country's history? When we look at statistics on demographic trends in this country, we see that the birth rate is falling and that the demographic "pyramid" reflects a definite aging of our population. If only to establish a consistent population policy, I think an entirely different approach was necessary. Aside from the very genuine needs of medium- and low-income families, and looking in purely demographic terms, what this country needs, as the Throne Speech seemed to indicate, is a family policy, a policy to increase the birth rate. What we have here is a policy that is going to have the exact opposite effect on Canadian families, and especially on those with medium or low incomes.

Mr. Speaker, given the thrust of the section and looking at this Bill in the wider context of budgetary policy, we come to the conclusion that Bill C-70 constitutes an insidious and direct attack against middle and low income families. Indeed, an appropriate review of this measure has to be done within the context of the Budget as a whole. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced his Budget last May he made public a number of tables in an attempt to demonstrate—and on many occasions I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) resort to that argument—that families would stand to benefit since the child tax credit would be increased. That is completely false! I am sure that when the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) next meets with his constituents he will go to the trouble of telling them that it may be true that the child tax credit will go up. But I hope he will also tell them that the $50 federal tax exemption will disappear and that, through partial deindexation of income tax, the over-all tax load of middle and low income families will increase. The net result of all this for families in the Gaspé region as well as those in Lac-Saint-Jean, Montreal, Quebec City, and in fact anywhere in Canada, is that they will be directly affected not only by Bill C-70 but by other Budget measures as well which will boost their basic taxes, raise the sales tax and impose new levies on items which had never been taxed before such as medications that people could obtain without prescription. Mr. Speaker, even leaving aside the whole question of the sales tax, I am sure the Hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) will also want to tell his constituents that his Government is about to take hundreds of dollars from families earning as little as $15,000 a year. Right from the beginning the basic theory of this Government was that the bank president was the one to hit because he earns a lot of money. The idea was to take money from the bank president and give it to the needy. Well, Mr. Speaker, now we know how they operate: they can find $1 billion for the bank that collapsed, but they cannot spare a nickel for family allowances. I hope the Hon. Member for Bellechasse will tell everybody that people who earn $80,000 or more a year will not suffer from this measure, quite the contrary, but that the hardest hit will be individuals and families with incomes ranging from $15,000 to $20,000, and there are lots of those in his riding. I hope he will tell them that, beginning in 1990, the child tax credit will be applicable to families with an income of $23,000, not $26,000 as is the case now. Keeping in mind the fact that inflation, although it has gone down, is still hovering at about 3 or 4 per cent, it means that hundreds and hundreds of families will no longer be eligible for the child tax credit. That will be the impact of Bill C-70, that is what we are against and that, Mr. Speaker, is why we ask that consideration of and vote on this Bill be delayed for six months.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, low income families will be hard hit. For instance, in the case of a family with two children where the husband and wife both work for relatively low wages, say $15,000 a year, there is no way one can conclude that the man and woman in the same family who earn $15,000 all told are "knee deep in clover", as the saying goes in the Beauce area. That family, Mr. Speaker, the husband and wife who both work, have two children and earn $15,000 between the two of them, stands to lose $1,844 under this new policy. What does it mean for a family earning $35,000 where the husband and wife both work? Let us say she gets about $15,000 as a secretary and her husband, in technology or some other similar occupation, is paid $20,000. Here again, these are not particularly high wages. These people stand to lose $3,452 annually, if we consider the impact of the child tax credit, changes in exemptions for dependent children and the partial de-indexation of income tax, because after all, Mr. Speaker, what counts is how much money working men and women have left to spend, because if the Government takes with one hand and takes with the other as well—of course they will say they have added to the benefits for family allowances—the purchasing power of a family is going to be restricted, and what the figures show us is that a couple where both man and wife work, with two dependent children, stands to lose $3,452 under this Bill, plus the impact of the Budget on our income tax.

However, if we look at a working couple earning a total of $80,000 per year, we are getting into a higher bracket. Do you know that this couple is going to lose only $1,125, while a couple earning $35,000 will lose $3,400 and the couple earning $15,000 will lose $1,879? This means the real impact of the Bill before the House, together with other budget considerations, will be that the couple whose two salaries total $15,000, with two children, will lose $1,879 per year of their annual income, while a working couple earning a total of $80,000 will lose only $1,125.

I think it is outrageous we should be talking about people losing money, even if they are people who earn $80,000, because throughout the debate prior to the Budget, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) were saying that reforms in social programs would not be aimed at reducing the deficit but that the Government would try to take from the rich to give to the poor. And that is not the case! Everyone is losing money, the couple earning $15,000, the couple earning $35,000 and the couple earning $80,000. Furthermore, the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare gave the House information that does not tally with the contents of the Budget, because in the Budget and the Budget documents, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) informed the House that as a result of its new family allowance policy, the government would be able to save $40 million.

Mr. Speaker, the terms I should use to describe this situation are unparliamentary, and you know why I cannot use them, but everyone knows what I mean.

For instance, when we see that single-parent families, and I am thinking of the woman, the secretary earning $15,000 a year who has two dependent children, who stands to lose $1,844. Mr. Speaker, has this Government no compassion? Are they telling us that our society... The Prime Minister said that the Government was bankrupt, that they had no more money, so they had to make spending cuts, and in line with Conservative philosophy, the first area to feel those cuts is social programs.

It seems to me someone—it seems to me you, Mr. Speaker, could explain why they do not have the money to pay family allowances but did manage to find $8 billion to spend between now and 1990 on the oil multinationals, whose cash flow per barrel of crude has increased considerably. They had the money to do that. Someone will have to explain why there is no money to help a woman who is the sole breadwinner, with two dependent children, and why by the time this program is implemented, she will be losing $1,800 per year, and why the Minister of Finance was able to find one billion dollars to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank. Someone will have to explain to me and to the Canadian taxpayer why, by the time the program is implemented, a woman with two children and earning $15,000 per year will be losing $1,800, while the Government can afford to spend one half billion dollars on an icebreaker.

To me, the approach taken by the Progressive Conservative Government is socially unjust and economically unacceptable. It is not true that we are living in a society which cannot afford to look after needy families. And I would suggest that, in 1985, a couple with two dependent children and who earns $15,000 a year could hardly be considered a multimillionnaire family. They have a hard time paying for rent, hydro and food, yet the Government will take $1,879 more from them over the coming years. I fail to understand the logic of this Government. Above all, I do not understand why. Why, particularly after the commitments made by this Government to the Canadian people, after the unequivocal remarks of this Prime Minister who kept repeating throughout the election campaign: Social programs are a sacred trust!

We have seen what this Government did about old age security pensions. And I am saying today that if we look at this Bill in the wider context of other Budget measures we find that it is an unacceptable proposal, a socially unfair Bill, a Bill whose impact will be just as devastating as that of partial deindexation of old age security pensions. I would even say that this Bill will propably have harsher consequences because, in the mid and long terms, it will undermine the very fabric of the Canadian family and affect the demographic evolution of this nation. So much so that, in my judgment, we should not take measures which will make it harder still for people or parents with children to make ends meet. Quite the contrary, we should promote or implement a genuine family policy to help couples who have children and who, from now on, will practically be treated like other couples with similar incomes who, for personal reasons, have decided not to have children.

It goes without saying that, from a tax standpoint, doing away with the exemption for dependent children is a sound proposition. That view is shared by a good many social affairs experts. Some of my colleagues and I have had discussions on that subject in the past, but I have always been concerned by one very specific consideration—why? Deindexing family allowances will reduce their impact, just as reducing child tax exemptions will, but as a result our society will soon end up with a situation where a couple earning $35,000 a year is not eligible for Child Tax Credit, while a next door couple earning exactly the same income, but with three or four dependent children, will be treated exactly the same.

This is not what I call a family policy. If we want to solve the problem and eliminate the undesirable effect which the dependent child tax exemptions is creating for high income families, let us not reduce the basic family allowances by deindexing them! Because, in the end... I should gladly support a Government decision to completly eliminate the dependent child tax exemption, providing it increases proportionally the basic allowances, so that a family earning $35,000, as most Canadian families do, may at least have access to an additional income to compensate the fact that it must support dependent children. As it now stands, the Government is reducing on both counts by lowering the Child Tax Credit to $23,000. Which means that when the Act comes into force, a married couple with dependent children earning $24,000 or $25,000 will be treated practically the same as a childless couple with the same income.

In my opinion, the policy which this Conservative Government has chosen to follow is not at all consistent with the promises it made when it was in the Opposition, and it is even contrary to what it has promised since coming to power. On the economic level, Mr. Speaker, 95 per cent of these transfers made to low and middle income people are spent on consumer goods; I suggest, therefore, that this Bill is bad because it will reduce the total consumer spending of Canadians.

Because I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, I shall conclude by saying that just as the Budget did, Bill C-70 will make the rich richer and the poor poorer, which seems to be this Government's objective.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: That is right. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask a question from the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

I heard his speech and I want to know how ordinary people could have confidence in his position and that of his party. When his party was sitting on the other side, they had the same policy as the government is advocating today. The Liberal Government deindexed the allowances as did the Progressive Conservatives. Is it possible for the Hon. Member to explain how we can have faith in his position today?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, Canadians can have faith in what I said today for a couple of reasons. In the first place, when considering my record as Minister of Finance in another jurisdiction and the position of the government to which I belonged on family allowances, I had decided as a representative of the government not to tax them, because we thought it would be fairer not to give with one hand and take back with the other—

I should like to add also that on several occasions Members of the New Democratic Party have asked that rather insidious question expecting to draw from it some sort of political prestige, but the Member who has just spoken should indicate that this policy was developed under certain circumstances when inflation had reached 12 and 13 per cent and the Government had asked all Canadians, workers, businesses and those who belonged to various segments of the economy to do their share. It had then been decided that for a given period well delineated in the legislation indexation would be limited to 6 and 5 per cent. As evidence that such a policy was well advised, even if it entailed sacrifices for a short period of time, we had the inflation rate which had then reached 11 and 12 per cent brought down to the point that now it is reduced to about 4 per cent. Those policies as a whole were successful and beneficial to Canadian families.

This is why I say to the Hon. Member who asked the question that he should not confuse apples and oranges. Governments must react to difficult situations, and I could give as an example the French Socialist Government, with which the Hon. Member will probably agree as he shares many aspects of its political phisolophy. The French Government had to respond to certain situations in France, to take some action and to implement policies that more conservative Governments throughout the world would have found it difficult to follow. Particular situations must therefore be faced. In my opinion, when the Hon. Member and his colleagues in the New Democratic Party ask such a question, it should be placed in its true context so that the people who listen to us will not be misled.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Another question. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo).

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the position taken by the Hon. Member's party. Let us assume that the Government capitulates, backs off from its 3 per cent and retains full indexing. Does the Hon. Member and his Party consider that the movement from family allowances to tax credit is an acceptable direction for social programs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I believe the Hon. Member will have a couple of minutes to answer that after Question Period.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I shall answer very quickly that the child tax credit was implemented by a Liberal Government. I do not see why this would be opposed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TRADE

SHOE MANUFACTURER'S REQUEST FOR FIVE-YEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, the textile and footwear industries are responsible for over 2,000 jobs in the constituency of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, and many thousands more across Canada. With only a few weeks left in the present quota allocation and total indecision on the part of the Government of Canada, the footwear industry is in a deep climate of uncertainty. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) over the weekend indicated in an interview that Canadians needed to become more competitive on an international basis. This was the second such attack by the Prime Minister on the workers and the industry. One cannot help but wonder which side he is on.

If the Prime Minister wants us to believe that he is on the side of Canadian workers and industry, let him show us proof by adopting a policy, such as that advocated by the Canadian Shoe Manufacturers Association, of import quotas for five years, and of better policing of imports. This Association has not asked for the moon, Mr. Speaker. Its position is balanced and worthy of consideration. It is my hope that the Canadian Government will afford this industry the much-needed protection that it so richly deserves.

MINES AND MINING

REINTRODUCTION OF NATIONAL MINE RESCUE COMPETITION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, throughout Canada thousands of miners volunteer their time and effort to train for the onerous tasks involved in rescuing their fellows in case of a mining disaster.

Mine rescue teams hone their skills to a high level of competition, the highlight of which is a national competition where top teams from each region compete to decide the national winners.

For several years the National Mine Rescue Competition was held in abeyance, but this year it was reintroduced. It was held last weekend in Glace Bay where the Lingan Phelan Colliery team, ably captained by Mr. Shelly Gouthro, proved its merit by becoming the over-all national champions.

Eight provinces and territories were represented but, unfortunately, Ontario and Quebec were absent. In order to make this a truly national event, our two largest provinces should participate.

Hopefully at the Mines Ministers' conference being held today in Charlottetown it will be decided that a national mine rescue competition will be held on an annual basis and that all mining provinces and territories will take part in this important event.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCE PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is following in the tradition of Liberal Governments by reducing the indexation on family allowances. In doing so, the Government is attacking children and families. The Conservatives also are continuing their obvious intention to erode universal social programs, which Canadians consider are a social right.

Canada's children belong to all of us. They are our next generation. They are a rich resource which we must nurture and cherish. We do not want them to grow up into a two-class society of rich and poor. We want to show we care for all children and recognize the responsibility and the costs of parenting. Let us continue to fight for fully indexed family allowances.

I call on all Canadians who care about families to show they care. Write to your Member of Parliament and to your Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Start petitions. Talk to your neighbours. Talk to the media. Organize and start a national campaign. Show you care for Canada's kids.

PETRO-CANADA

ACQUISITION OF GULF SERVICE STATIONS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in Saskatchewan there is concern over Petro-Canada's purchase of Gulf service stations. Although the acquisition made it possible for a private sector Canadian company to buy Gulf Canada from an American corporation, there is, nonetheless, an understandable concern about the federal Government expanding its role in gas retailing.

It is the time to look at the future of Petro-Canada. Selling Petro-Canada in its entirety is not a realistic alternative. There is an acknowledged need for some degree of government involvement in the oil industry, but the Government should not be competing against small, privately-owned and operated gas stations. Is it the job of your Government to sell gas?

I compliment the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) on her difficult and obviously successful endeavour of making Petro-Canada more financially accountable and responsible. However, I have two concerns. In order that popular well-managed neighbourhood Gulf stations not be closed down with the Petro-Canada acquisition, I ask that the Minister consider all available alternatives, including leaving the Gulf signs in place.

Second, as Petro-Canada enhances its financial position I ask that the Minister privatize Petro-Canada's retail gas operations and offer shares to the Canadian public as soon as possible.

SPORTS

WORLD CUP SOCCER TOURNAMENT—CANADA'S QUALIFYING WIN

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, this weekend in St. John's, Newfoundland, Canada's national soccer team defeated the team from Honduras and qualified for the World Cup soccer tournament. I am sure Members on all sides of this House would want to join me in applauding our players and national team coach.

This triumph marks the very first time that Canada has qualified for the 24-nation World Cup, which will take place in Mexico in 1986. For the past 28 years the Canadian soccer team has been working toward this aim. With this impressive victory, a new chapter in the history of Canadian soccer has been opened.

The national team's victory was first and foremost a team effort. All Canadians can be justifiably proud of the skill, the dedication, and the poise displayed by all our players in the international sports arena. Their perseverance and hard work will be an inspiration to our younger athletes engaged in all facets of sports.

It is fitting that we take a brief time out from cheering on the Toronto Blue Jays in their march toward the World Series, to recognize the valiant efforts of our national soccer team in their quest for the World Cup.

Mr. Speaker: Let me remind Members, for the record, that messages of congratulation are specifically out of order under Statements. I think, however, the Hon. Member's sentiments were probably shared by others.

TRADE

RELATIONS WITH SOUTH KOREA

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, during a recent visit to South Korea I came to understand that this nation, which is undergoing a remarkable industrial development, is bound to become still more important as one of Canada's economic partners over the coming years. The most striking example of this is the forthcoming establishment of a Hyundai plant in this country. The Hon. Sinclair Stevens did a tremendous job in helping to achieve such a significant agreement, and I can assure this House that all the people I have met in Korea have a very high regard for the Minister and our Prime Minister.

I am especially proud of having been able to personally put forward Quebec's case as a construction site. Although that province, which represents a major part of the Canadian market, has the human and technological resources needed, it never had its share of the manufacturing sector. The close co-operation afforded by the Quebec Government in this instance must also be stressed. It reflects the new atmosphere of reconciliation which proves to be beneficial to all provinces. My only regret is that the plant could not be located in my beautiful constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul, since the required space was not available. However, I urge the people in my constituency, and especially young people, to apply for jobs whenever the Hyundai Corporation starts hiring, and certainly their applications will be considered.

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO HAMILTON JUDGE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I received the following letter on September 9 last. It reads:

Dear Mr. Deans:

On August 11th, at 11.00 I was requested to appear before Judge Gerrie for an "interview" with regard to receiving a Canadian Citizenship.

Although I found Ms. Gerrie's attitude to be aggressive right from the beginning of the "interview", things seemed to be going reasonably well until I couldn't think of the Premier of Ontario's name. Ms. Gerrie immediately started on a tirade of people who come to this country and don't read newspapers or watch television—who have no interest in who's running this country or what they stand for. I told Ms. Gerrie that, since I was not a Canadian citizen, I did not have the right to vote in elections, and was not into "Politics" per se. She asked who my Member of Parliament was and I said Ian Deans. She said how did I know that Ian Deans was my Member of Parliament since I wasn't "into politics". I told her that my husband has always voted N.D.P. and when I vote, I would be voting the same way. This started an unnecessary (as far as I was concerned) lecture on how she was a single mother, and she certainly would not vote N.D.P. just because someone told her to (I presume this "someone" was my husband).

From this point on the "interview" went downhill very quickly.

Ms. Gerrie suggested that maybe I should apply for citizenship in one of the communist countries because if that's all the interest I have in politics I might as well not have any say in what's happening in the country I live in. She also suggested that I should go back to Britain, which has a Socialist Government, and is the same thing as communism. I was under the impression that my political beliefs were none of anyone's business and did not realize that you had to vote Conservative to become a Canadian citizen.

In closing, I would like to say that this was the most degrading—

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow).

THE ARTS

OPENING OF CALGARY PERFORMING ARTS CENTRE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, Saturday was a very special day in Calgary. It marked the gala opening of a magnificent and most spectacular performing arts centre. This centre will provide world class facilities in the city for three resident cultural companies, The Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra, Theatre Calgary, and Alberta Theatre Projects.

S.O. 22

Throughout history every surviving culture has recognized the arts as a necessary component of life. Calgary is a growing city and therefore realized the vital need to build for the future of its performing arts community.

• (1410)

The new Centre for Performing Arts represents the dedication and efforts of many, including hundreds of volunteeers, the staff and performers, the three levels of government, funding, the media and, above all, the exuberant spirit and faith of the citizens and businesses of Calgary.

On behalf of all of us, I wish to say: "Well done; all the best in the future".

Mr. Speaker: Again I repeat, just for the future, that messages of congratulation are specifically out of order under the provisions of Standing Order 22.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

FUTURE OF PRENTICE-HALL COMPANY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, you can be assured that I am not here to congratulate the Government. In the interests of the entire issue of Canadian culture and the sovereignty of our country, about which we heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speak so eloquently on CTC last night, the future of one of Canada's leading publishing companies, Prentice-Hall, can be decided by the Government within the next week. A prominent publisher of established Canadian writers and new literary talent, Prentice-Hall, was recently sold to the American conglomerate, Gulf and Western.

Under Section 15 of the Investment Canada Act, the Government can review foreign investments related to Canada's cultural heritage and national identity. Canadians from every corner of the country believe that the potential sale of this company to an American multinational corporation will have disastrous effects upon the Canadian cultural identity.

I call upon the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to ensure Canadian control of our publishing industry. I implore the Minister and the Prime Minister to veto the sale of Prentice-Hall Canada to American interests. I ask them to assist Canadian companies in purchasing an important contributor to Canada's literary tradition. Let them put their money where their mouth is and ensure the sovereignty of Canada's publishing industry.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NEED TO COMPLETE AUTOROUTES IN THE OUTAOUAIS AND LAURENTIANS

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the constituency of Argenteuil-Papineau which I have the honour to represent in the House of Commons has unique economic development potential because of its geographic location, its infrastructures for industry, trade and tourism, and, most important, because of the development foreseen for the Mirabel airport within the next few years.

However, Mr. Speaker, we do not have an adequate road system. It is somewhat ironical to note that the largest airport in the world is isolated because Highway 13, linking Montreal, Dorval and Mirabel, is not yet finished and Highway 50, linking Ottawa and Mirabel via Papineauville and Lachute, is also incomplete. Mr. Speaker, three socioeconomic conferences, namely those of the Papineau, Argenteuil and Mirabel regional municipalities, are now under way and the first priority at these meetings is the completion of Highways 13 and 50.

Mr. Speaker, the economic participants in my own riding and in neighbouring constituencies have been asking the provincial and federal Governments to complete these highways for 20 years.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) has assured me that the federal Government would cooperate if the Quebec Government were to develop a five-year plan.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my constituents and the various economic participants in the Outaouais and the Laurentians to put pressure on the provincial representatives of their respective regions so that these highways will be completed within the next five years.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REPORTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CENTRALIZED POLLING SYSTEM

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the "say one thing but do another" style of government continues to roll along. No sooner had the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) boasted that he uses polls less than any other Prime Minister then we learned that the Government has developed a new polling system. The Government will now conduct a massive in-depth poll on a monthly basis. The results will be so secret that even Cabinet Ministers will not be able to know them. Only the Prime Minister and his few henchmen will be able to see the results from which they will plot their strategies.

Of course the taxpayers will foot the bill.

Apparently the former Liberal Government considered a similar centralized polling scheme, but even those old professionals at the trough thought that it was a little too much for the public to stomach. Not this Government, though. It sweetly smiles and says one thing, and the next day it does the exact opposite. George Orwell's doublespeak is alive and well with a Government that will do anything to keep itself in power.

I just hope the Prime Minister will learn from his private polls that Canadians are tired of Governments which manipulate and mislead. Canadians want an honest Government with a clear idea of what it is doing and where it wants the country to go.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

MINISTER'S MEETING WITH CHARTERED BANKS' SENIOR OFFICERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Did the Minister have a secret meeting last Wednesday evening with the senior officers or chief executive officers of our major chartered banks? We have been asking him daily in the House of Commons about his meetings with bankers. Why didn't he mention it to us? Would he give us the substance of the meeting? Why was it called? What was the topic of conversation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the meeting was not a secret one. I have regular meetings with the chairmen of the six largest banks to keep in touch with various ongoing occurrences in the banking system and in the economy of Canada. In fact, this meeting was called back in June. I said to them that I would like to have this meeting prior to the World Bank meetings which will take place later this month and early next month. I wanted to hear from them what, in particular, they felt I should be recommending, or what message they felt that I should be taking to these World Bank meetings in relation to the over-all problem of international debt and the role which the International Monetary Fund should play.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear that the Minister is still meeting with our bankers, because we had the impression he had been trying to turn over the whole issue to his colleague, the Minister of State (Finance).

If the Minister of Finance really wants a parliamentary committee to examine this fiasco, will he let this committee do its work under reasonable conditions?

Will he recommend to the Government House Leader that the proceedings be televised? Will he make sure that all necessary witnesses will be available, including himself, his colleague, the Minister of State (Finance), and the Governor of the Bank of Canada? Will he allow the committee to have some kind of assistance, either economic or legal, in doing its work? Can he give the House the assurance that the committee's terms of reference will be broad enough to encompass all lines of questioning required to find out exactly what happened?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since the question relates to discussions which are now taking place among the House Leaders, perhaps I would be permitted to answer it. The Leader of the Opposition knows that the terms of reference which I tabled last Wednesday are as broad as one might expect with respect to the ability of parliamentarians to examine every facet, including all events leading up to the statement made by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance over Labour Day weekend.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition will also know—and I think this will be confirmed by further discussions with the House Leaders—that there is very wide power in terms of the summoning of witnesses and the calling for papers. There is now provision under our new rules to provide the committees with the required support staff to carry out the responsibilities directed to them by the House. As the Leader of the Opposition knows, these matters are under discussion in a very positive way among the House Leaders. We are trying to develop an understanding of the ability of Members so that we can have this matter resolved and referred to a committee today, if not tomorrow.

REPORT SUBMITTED BY FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the terms of reference of Parliament authorizing the committee to investigate this fiasco are as wide as the rhetoric of the Minister, perhaps we have a deal.

I have a third question which I will direct to the Minister of Finance. In February, apparently the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco submitted a report to our Inspector General of Banks outlining the precarious situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank. Why is it that the American banking authorities were far closer to the situation than our own Minister of Finance?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the report which was made to the Inspector General of Banks last February, as I understand it, referred only to the U.S. operations of the bank. It was clearly stamped the property of that regulatory authority. There was nothing in that report, I understand, which in any way reflected upon our own ability in dealing with the domestic situation in those banks.

APPOINTMENT OF CURATOR

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Could the Minister confirm that when the major banks were called together on the weekend of March 22 to arrange a bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Minister had in fact already signed an order appointing a curator to the CCB effective Monday, March 25?

● (1420)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that there was a fair amount of legal work that had to be done leading up to the possible closure of that bank on that Monday. Late Sunday evening we did not know what the conclusions of the discussions with the chartered banks would be. The legal counsel for the Department of Finance asked if I would complete all the legal work required for the possible closing of the bank, to be kept in escrow pending the resolution of the discussions.

The simple answer is, yes, I did, as part of a simple legal matter to get the technical legal work behind us in the event that the bank was not going to open on the Monday morning.

GOVERNMENT DECISION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. Why not have proceeded with the step of leaving the bank under curatorship while a detailed examination of the assets were made? Why did the Government proceed to make its decision on the basis of little or no information?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask Hon. Members to cast their minds back to what was happening in the financial world at the middle of March.

We had just gone through a very heavy exchange crisis and the Canadian dollar was under a good deal of pressure. Around that same time a number of savings and loans institutions in the State of Ohio closed their doors, and did not open up for, I believe, a week. That simple act of their not opening their doors resulted in a significant drop in the exchange value of the Canadian dollar.

We also had advice from the chartered banks themselves which were worried about the impact on a number of credit unions of the Canadian Commercial Bank not opening. If the Hon. Member will think back again she will remember that the Province of Alberta had given some financial assistance to the credit unions in Alberta, so there was concern about the ripple effect in the Alberta economy in particular.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the seriousness of the matter but it has become too long, I am sorry. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I wanted to give the answer to a very important question.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS FOR PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the terms of reference for the proposed committee to look into the banking fiasco that we have been talking about in the House.

Specifically, will the Minister or the House Leader give us assurances that the three following documents would be made available to the committee if it is established?

The first is the September, 1984, report on the Canadian Commercial Bank prepared by the Inspector General of Banks.

The second is the report done by the San Francisco Reserve Board, which was prepared in February of 1985.

The third is the Auditor's report on the Canadian Commercial Bank prepared last winter.

Will those documents be tabled in the House with specific reference to be considered by the committee? Is the Government prepared to guarantee that?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion on which either the Leader of the New Democratic Party or his House Leader has raised the question of these particular documents, as far as I am concerned. Without getting involved in the details of the negotiations that are being carried on now, our work is to determine whether or not we can get the matter referred to committee. We are, of course, as I have indicated publicly and privately, quite prepared to have a full and complete hearing in the Finance Committee on this issue.

If the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party wants to give specific requests to his House Leader he can bring them to me at 3.15 where we are going to convene, right across the hall, and I will take them under advisement.

POSITION OF CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we are not playing games with this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: They are obviously sensitive. We asked for these reports because they have been denied before.

If we want a serious study instead of some kind of whitewash we want to see the documents, that is all.

I have another question for the Minister on another matter. The question concerns a contradiction between what the Minister said to the House on Friday and what Mr. Mulholland, Chairman of the Bank of Montreal, said on Thursday about the $60 million that Mr. Mulholland believes the banks are going to get back from the Government.

The question is as follows: Since the Minister said in the House on Friday that Mr. Mulholland was wrong, I today checked with some banking sources. I thought—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This preamble has become too long. Is there a question, please?

Mr. Broadbent: It is a very important matter of information for the House. Considering that the banking sources have confirmed as well as clarified their view that they are entitled to the $60 million—they stand by that—will the Minister please explain to the House why she believes that the people of Canada are not going to have to cough up the $60 million?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that there is this dispute about this with the bankers. Certainly our best legal advice is exactly what I said on Friday, that the banks in the support package ranked with uninsured depositors or with depositors in the event of any windup and the legislation that we will present to the House replaces uninsured depositors with the Government of Canada and therefore the banks will rank equally with us in the liquidation of assets. That is the legal interpretation that I have been given.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE BAIL-OUT AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, obviously last March the Minister was given some pretty bad advice too, so she should look into it. All I will tell the Minister is that the bankers' lawyers are saying something different. I would like to ask the Minister, considering it is the taxpayers of Canada who are going to have to cough up the money, will she today table all the documents pertaining to the agreement that the Government of Canada entered into with the banks last March so that finally in this House we can begin to get to the bottom of this fiasco?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicate to the House that I am prepared to make every piece of information available to the committee that I am legally entitled to put before the committee.

In terms of that contract, Mr. Speaker, that is a contract and it would require the concurrence of every signatory to the agreement in order to take it to committee. I am seeking that concurrence from the interested parties.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE CONCERNING LIQUIDATION OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK AND NORTHLAND BANK

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, on September 1 of this year, the Minister of Finance announced that it was legally necessary to ask the courts to proceed with liquidation of the two banks. I am of course referring to the CCB and the Northland Bank.

Could the Minister inform the House and the Canadian people whether such a request was made to the courts and if so, whether authorization has been given to proceed with liquidation?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): My understanding is that the liquidation is proceeding in the case of the Canadian Commercial Bank, and in the case of the Northland Bank the curator is still acting as a curator while the Northland Bank attempts a renegotiation or a restructuring.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR NAME OF LIQUIDATOR

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

First, could the Minister inform the House who was appointed curator? Second, will depositors with deposits of $60,000 or less at the Canadian Commercial Bank be reimbursed and when will such payments commence?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the curator at the Canadian Commercial Bank is the firm of Price Waterhouse. My understanding is that payments on insured deposits can be made almost immediately in that case.

• (1430)

COMMITTEE'S ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Finance. Is the Minister of State aware that the September, 1984, report on the CCB prepared for the Minister by the Inspector General and the San Francisco Reserve Board Report given to the Inspector General in February, 1985, were previously requested by members of this Party but we were refused access to the documents? Can she now tell us once and for all if she will guarantee the tabling of those documents in advance of the committee being set up in order that we can be sure that actual documentation necessary to conduct the inquiry will in fact be before the committee?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that I am making my best efforts to ensure that every document that I can legally present to the committee will be presented to the committee, at which time they can be discussed without innuendo or hyperbole.

PRODUCTION OF LISTS OF DEPOSITORS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. Is it the position of the Minister of Finance that the agreement signed with the provinces and the chartered banks in March, 1985, and the list of depositors who were depositors of the bank prior to the bail-out package or between the time of the bail-out package and the dissolution decision may legally be provided to the committee? Will he undertake to table them in the House of Commons now in order that the committee can have the appropriate information necessary to conduct its inquiry?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this question has been answered before. However, I will answer it again. There is some real question as to the ability of the Government to provide that information under the terms of the Bank Act. We are looking to see if there are ways that we can do this. However, at this point in time I would have to say that the legal advice that we have is that Section 251, I believe, of the Bank Act must stand, and we are not able to provide that information under the terms of the Bank Act.

Mr. Broadbent: Why have a committee? What's it going to do?

Mr. Cassidy: Pay a billion dollars to unnamed depositors?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As I said a minute ago, we are trying to find ways to provide that information to the House. However, at this point in time I am not able to say that we can.

AIRPORTS

OWNERSHIP AND RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the future operation of federal airports. The Minister of Transport will know that under the objectives outlined in Structure 90, the reorganization plan for his Department, a decision has been taken to transfer ownership and responsibility where possible of federal airports to municipal and provincial Governments. Is the Minister prepared to table in the House of Commons a list of airports across Canada that have been designated by the Minister for transfer to municipal or provincial Governments or other agencies? That information is vital to many communities across the land.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, no such decision has been taken.

DISCUSSIONS WITH MUNICIPAL OFFICIALS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, if no such decision has been taken, the Minister ought to start today by explaining why officials of his Department and the Deputy Prime Minister's ministerial review office have already met, at least in the case of St. John's, Newfoundland, and also in the case of the Northwest Territories, with municipal officials proposing the transfer of federal airports and why those meetings have taken place in literally dozens of communities across the country. Will the Minister clarify his statement? A decision has been taken and we are asking for a list of airports to be affected. I am told that it is possible that 70 airports will be affected.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is surprising that it has taken so long for the Hon. Member to catch up to what is going on in the country.

Mr. Gauthier: You're pretty sleazy, you know.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, I am not sleazy at all. This matter was first raised in the Budget Speech of May 23 and the Hon. Member is just dealing with the subject now. The fact is that no decision has been made and discussions are taking place with respect to the prospect of trying to establish a new airport structure which will reduce costs and provide good, effective service in all parts of the country.

TRADE

CANADIAN LUMBER PRODUCTS—ACCESS TO UNITED STATES MARKETS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who, I am sure, is no doubt fully aware that three-quarters of the U.S. Congress now support the Gibbons Bill, a Bill which will restrict the free and open access of Canadian forest products to the United States. Since the U.S. Congress has the constitutional jurisdiction to implement such law regardless of the views of President Reagan, I would ask the Minister if he has set his mind to an accelerated means of informing consumers in the United States, who have a qualitative and economic preference for our product because of the higher cost of forest products in the United States, of this should the Gibbons Bill become law later this fall.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member raises a point of importance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We have been pursuing the question of the implications for the timber industry in Canada of the Gibbons Bill and of other pressures in the United States Congress. We have been in touch with administration officials on several levels. I share the Hon. Member's view that it is now time for us to begin to address a larger American audience on this question, but I would say to the Hon. Member that I think it would be helpful if that effort, which is in the interests of all Canadians were shared by all the Members in all the Parties in this House.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO UNITED STATES AMBASSADOR

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that Liberal Members are a little noisy about this matter. They did not even turn up at the meetings on this matter in Vancouver.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Mr. Niles, the new Ambassador for the United States, suggested in his Senate confirmation hearings that American loggers should be permitted into British Columbia to cut down Canadian trees and haul them to U.S. sawmills—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please. With great respect, this is another preamble. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs share the view of Ambassador Niles and the White House that American loggers should be allowed into Canada to log?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of having American loggers coming to Canada to log. I have not had an opportunity to read everything that Ambassador Niles said in his confirmation hearings but obviously it would stand to reason that he might say some things with which the Government of Canada would disagree.

Mr. Speaker: May I take this moment to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in our gallery today of a delegation from the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China led by their delegation Chairman, Mr. Wang Renzhong.

TOURISM

TOURIST INDUSTRY IN THE OUTAOUAIS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for tourism.

In view of the recent Cabinet shuffle, I should like to ask the new Minister whether he intends to continue the work undertaken by his predecessor, work of great import for the riding of Gatineau. In addition, would he tell the House what steps he intends to take to promote tourism in the Outaouais region?

[English]

Hon. Jack Murta (Minister of State (Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the Hon. Member for Gatineau that I am in the process of completing the last of the tourism consultations this week and by that time will have talked to all the provincial and territorial Governments. I will be chairing a major conference in October and at that time 350 members of the tourism industry from across Canada will be here in Ottawa. As well, there will be a Federal-Provincial Ministers' Conference on Tourism in November. We are doing this because we believe that the future of tourism is a major economic growth factor for this country and will help in job creation.

FINANCE

FARM FUEL TAX

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Last week the Minister announced certain exemptions to the sales taxes imposed in the May 23 Budget. I wonder if the Minister of Finance is willing to exempt farmers and primary producers from the nine cents per gallon excise tax on farm fuels that he imposed on them on September 1. The imposition of this tax comes at a time of very great heardship for farmers across the country. I wonder if the Minister would consider giving an exemption to these producers.

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the position of the farmers. I think that my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, has indicated a number of steps which we have taken to address the problems, particularly with respect to the beef farmers in western Canada. However, I should remind the Hon. Member that in the fall we exempted the farmers, fishermen, and other primary producers from an increase in the sales tax, as well as previous tax that was levied on fuels. Thus, they have been given some exemptions. Unfortunately, at this time that is as far as we can go.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that one of the exemptions, the seven cents a gallon of the petroleum compensation charge which was provided last fall, was lifted on June 1. On top of that, the Minister will be imposing another $11 million tax on farm fuels effective January 1. Why is the Minister deepening the farm debt crisis by imposing this tax, especially a tax from which the Government promised to exempt farmers during the election campaign?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that, pursuant to our election commitment, we did exempt the farmers from the fuel tax back in November. In addition to that, we provided for a reduction in the interest costs to farmers who are borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation from 16.25 per cent to 12.75 per cent. We are mindful of the predicament that the farming community is in and we are doing as much as we can to meet the problem.

TRADE

FREE TRADE ARRANGEMENTS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister for International Trade.

Is the Minister aware of the concern of Canadian manufacturers about the decision of the United States to deny entry to technicians required to repair Canadian equipment in the United States?

How can we establish free trade with the Americans if they continue to put up such non-tariff barriers on our manufactured goods, therefore on our exports?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that I am indeed aware of the problem. It stems from a decision of the California Supreme Court. As soon as we became aware of it, we had our embassy in Washington contact the Acting Solicitor General in the United States to urge him with all speed to launch an appeal of the decision. We agree on it completely. We are making representations at the highest level to see that this matter is speedily rectified.

IMPACT ON TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that that appeal process may take a matter of months. In the meantime Canadian exports are in fact threatened because of the decision of the American authorities. How can we enter into a free trade agreement with the Americans when they are indicating, in this instance and others, that they are not prepared to play fair by the existing rules?

Hon. James Kelleher (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I am not aware that it will take several months. I do not know how long it will take.

Second, it had nothing to do with the administration or Congress. It results from a court decision.

Third, it points out the need for us to enter into an agreement with the United States so that we do not have these type of problems in the future.

FINANCE

INTRODUCTION OF MINIMUM TAX

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He will recall that in order to achieve a greater degree of fairness in the tax system the Budget promised a minimum tax. It outlined three different options regarding that tax. Can the Minister tell us what form that tax will take and whether a decision has been made on those options? Can he also tell us when legislation will be introduced regarding them, bearing in mind that the minimum tax is to come into effect on January 1, 1986?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate the Government's commitment to bring in a minimum tax effective January 1, 1986. We agree that it is important for the whole sense of equity and fairness in the tax system that there be a minimum tax put in place.

Since the release of the minimum tax discussion paper with the Budget, we have been consulting with members of the legal and accounting professions to decide upon the best of the three options which have been put forward. I hope that in the not too distant future I will be able to make a statement about the direction in which we are headed.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING FORMATION OF CERTAIN PRIVATE COMPANIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and relates to an article published in Saturday's Globe and Mail, namely that some of the Prime Minister's senior political advisers would have received preferential treatment in setting up private companies, something which most public employees cannot do. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House whether the Treasury Board or the Prime Minister has indeed endorsed such practice?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I am not familiar with the specifics of the vague question which has been put to me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: As I understood the question, it related to employees in the Prime Minister's office having employment outside of the Prime Minister's office.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Nielsen: If that is not the gist of the question, then perhaps the Hon. Member would not mind being a little more specific.

COMPANY SHAREHOLDINGS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, a numbers game is being played by the Prime Minister's office. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us if it is normal practice for employees of the Government to be allowed to own private companies withdrawing funds from the federal Government and enjoying tax breaks thereby? Or, is it a way for members of the Prime Minister's staff, such as Mr. Van Dusen, Mr. MacAdam, and Mr. McMillan, who have established these numbered companies, to get around conflict of interest guidelines? Is it a scheme to avoid taxes or a scheme to get around the conflict of interest guidelines?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, now that the Hon. Member has been specific, the answer to his question is that neither is true at all. I think there was one numbered company mentioned—

Mr. Gauthier: Three.

Mr. Nielsen: —in the article, which apparently has a number out of place, which is a technical problem and which does not in any way disturb the validity of the contract. If there are any, they certainly do not affect the conflict of interest guidelines. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that if he has any personal questions to put to the shareholders of those companies that he might do so on a personal basis.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—VIABILITY ASSESSMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. We were previously made aware that, last March, the Bank of Montreal had offered to do an assessment of the viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank which the Government turned down. Will the Minister confirm that not only the Bank of Montreal but all of the other chartered banks offered to do such an assessment before the Government committed taxpayers' money? Will the Minister explain to the House why the Government refused to accept that offer?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that at the time the package was being designed there were representatives of some of the chartered banks in the CCB, both in Edmonton and Los Angeles.

REPORTED OFFER BY CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister would try to answer my question now. Will she confirm that, last March, before the Government prepared its package, not only the Bank of Montreal but all the other chartered banks offered to do an assessment of the economic viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Government refused them that sensible decision and insisted they meet and make an agreement on that weekend? Will the Government confirm that and, in so doing, will the Minister explain to the people of Canada why she took a $1 billion risk with the taxpayers' money without even receiving a proper assessment of the viability of the bank?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the House that there were some bankers in looking at the bank. I have also indicated to the House that it is in the best interests not only of the taxpayers of the country but of the depositors of those banks, and the depositors of all our financial institutions, as well as the borrowers, to get the full story on everything that happened. Time after time I have indicated that I am fully prepared to give those answers.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF CONTRACT AWARDS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the conflict of interest and nepotism guideline announcement of last week.

The Prime Minister has provided a review process for only a certain category of appointments, namely, those made by Order in Council. Will the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that a reform respecting the awarding of contracts and other types of appointments is also necessary so that the incidents concerning Messrs. Wakim, Nantel, and Atkins, and the case referred to by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, are not allowed to continue, in order that we do not have the same Tory hacks, flacks and bagmen continuing to snout at the trough?

● (1450)

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the Hon. Member will be taken into consideration and given every attention that it deserves. We certainly would not want to go so far as to cause any embarrassment to the Party which used to be on this side of the House.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Deputy Prime Minister that the last intervention seems to have been useful because some guidelines did come about as a result of the questioning by the opposition.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): The Prime Minister has indicated in his guidelines that relatives of Cabinet Ministers will—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Boudria: —will no longer be appointed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. No preamble, please. Just a question now.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Who hired you, and why?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Boudria: A large number of voters did.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Question, please.

Mr. Boudria: Why are there no provisions in the guidelines for the removal of relatives who have been awarded contracts since September 4, 1984? And why, in particular, is Mr. Peter Clark allowed to retain his appointment when the Prime Minister has stated in the guidelines that such appointments are wrong and should not occur in the future? Why again that loophole in the guidelines? Is it intentional?

Some Hon. Members: Let Joe answer that.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would be the first one to give credit where credit is due but how can I do that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —when the work has been under way since last September 18, as the Hon. Member should know if he studies the history of the matter.

With respect to the appointment referred to by the Hon. Member, he will know that the Prime Minister has announced as part of that package that the entire range of all appointments which have been made are going to be subject to a review by the parliamentary process to see how it works.

Mr. Boudria: Oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I know there is a myopic view on the other side with respect to these appointments, but that is what the Prime Minister said, if the Hon. Member had been listening.

Mr. Boudria: Oh, no.

Mr. Nielsen: It is quite a departure from past procedures—

An Hon. Member: From what they did.

Mr. Nielsen: —certainly, from what those Hon. Members did when they were in office. All of those appointments will be open, subject to review by Hon. Members such as himself, and I wish him well in his work.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who I am sure is aware that much of the world expects Canada to exhibit leadership in the fight against apartheid but who, on Friday, showed that we talked loudly but carried only a toothpick.

The loud voices heard by our Prime Minister were evidently the voices of Buthelesi, Botha, Bata and Bay Street. But to his credit, the Secretary of State for External Affairs did indicate that—

Mr. Speaker: With great respect, is there now a question, please?

Mr. McCurdy: Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House in very specific terms what criteria he intends to apply to establish that tangible movement away from apartheid has occurred?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it was precisely to establish some kind of criteria which could be judged objectively that, in my statement in the House last Friday, I set forth some of the principles which we would want to see observed by the Government of South Africa. I will not reiterate them here. They are on the record of Hansard. But very key among them, of course, is the restoration of equal political rights, including the right to vote.

DEADLINE INQUIRY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, will the Government indicate to South Africa, and to this House, what deadline is to be applied in evaluating whether progress has in fact occurred?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of deadlines was raised on Friday in response to the statement I made on this matter. It is a question we will look at. I frankly believed that it would be more helpful in achieving progress to have deadlines involving several countries. It may well be that that is one of the matters which will be considered when the Commonwealth Heads of Government meet in Nassau in mid-October.

Certainly our view is that it is important for Canada to use its influence with other countries, and particularly through the Commonwealth, to try to achieve change in South Africa and bring an end to apartheid.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

TRANSPORTATION OF PCBs THROUGH OTTAWA

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the House has noticed that the Hon. Member for Oshawa has crossed the floor today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): My question is specifically addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence. It concerns the transportation of PCBs this evening from the Rockcliffe Military Base to the Uplands Military Base, both of which are in my riding. Can the Minister assure the mayor of the City of Gloucester and the residents of my riding that every possible procedure and precaution have been taken to ensure that these dangerous goods are transported safely this evening?

An Hon. Member: You were told that before.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the goods in question which are being moved this evening are being moved under the provisions of the federal-provincial regulations with respect to the transportation and storage of dangerous goods. Throughout the entire planning of the move from one federal property to another federal property, within the City of Ottawa, the Departments of Public Works and Engineering, as well as the Gloucester police, have been fully consulted.

Ms. Copps: But no neighbours.

Mr. Nielsen: With their co-operation I am sure that the move will be accomplished without any danger to the people and the surrounding environment.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PROJECTED INCO LAY-OFFS—EFFECT OF PENSION PAYMENTS ON ELIGIBILITY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the planned workforce reduction at the Sudbury Inco plant. Would the Minister not agree that, in addition to Inco's financial problems, his Government's policy of grabbing severance payments and pension payments from our jobless is not only discriminatory and unfair but is adding to the problems facing Sudbury and other communities?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the statement put forward by the Hon. Member is one we have looked at. He has heard the Minister of Finance and other Ministers. I would bring to the Hon. Member's attention that, with respect to the pension as it applies to unemployment insurance, action was taken by this Government some four months ago to make taxation effects less harsh.

EARLY RETIREMENT CONSEQUENCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister not agree to commit himself and his Government to reverse that discriminatory practice so that younger workers can maintain their jobs in our communities and the older workers can take the retirement packages because it is fundamentally working against the original purpose intended by the Government?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the concern of the Hon. Member in this matter and it is shared by this side of the House. As to the impact of an early retirement, the Hon. Member is aware that under my direction a very well regarded and respected former member of the Ontario Legislature, a former Minister of Labour, is presently consulting with other jurisdictions, with the provinces and with other businesses with respect to a more beneficial and wide ranging retirement package which can be put in place for those workers who are permanently unemployed.

ALLEGED TREATMENT OF NEW BRUNSWICK INDIANS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I wonder if the Solicitor General would be prepared to confirm that officers of the RCMP in New Brunswick, along with provincial and federal fisheries officers, have been involved in extensive operations against native people in that province? Would the Minister confirm that those operations involved processes of entrapment and the use of alcohol and money in attempts to induce native people on their own reserves to sell fish illegally? And would the Minister be in a position to acknowledge that officers in the RCMP, along with federal fisheries officers, were involved?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know he wrote to me, I believe last week, making some very serious allegations. I immediately asked for a report. As soon as I receive that report I will gladly get back to the Hon. Member.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I move that the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, presented to the House on Friday, June 28, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, Mr. Speaker, not at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: I must recognize the mover of the motion unless the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Hnatyshyn) wishes to rise—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is fine.

Mr. Speaker: —on a point of order.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry is a landmark report. The committee unanimously agreed to support a proposal put forward by all the mayors of Vancouver Island. The proposal is a proper and important matter for consideration by this House at the earliest possible time because Vancouver Island has been devastated by the recent recession. The forest industry on the island has undergone some very serious deterioration and it is my hope that the Government would support the proposal put forward by the standing committee.

The riding of the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg), who has been supportive of this proposal, is the best example of the effect the recession, as well as poor forestry practices and general neglect, has had on the island. A number of years ago the community of Port Alberni boasted the highest per capital income in Canada. Some of the best employment in this country was in the forest industry in Port Alberni. As time went by and the resource was neglected, as the forest industry failed to keep pace with technological improvements and failed to exploit international markets and essentially turned a blind eye along with everyone else to the resource base in the area, those jobs began to disappear. I understand that about 2,000 jobs have now been lost in that area out of a work force of approximately 6,000 people. As one of the Government's spokesman on this particular Bill, it would be my hope that the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni will stand in his place today and support this motion to endorse the mayors' proposal.

The constituency that I represent covers about one-half of Vancouver Island. If a line were drawn across the centre of the Island we would be looking at one-half the total area of the island. Within the riding of Comox-Powell River there is an enormous dependence on the forest industry. Over the years we have seen a tremendous downgrading of the operations of that industry. Communities such as Courtenay, Campbell River, and many other small communities now require, regrettably, the presence of soup kitchens. This kind of operation was developed in response to the erosion of the employment base on the island, particularly the collapse of the forest industry and the forest resource. The mayors of Vancouver Island are asking the federal Government to recognize that it has an obligation to the people of Vancouver Island to assist in restructuring the resource. The federal Government has a responsibility for job creation. It has a responsibility to protect the resource from which it derives a large amount of income and sales taxes. The federal Government has been a tremendous beneficiary of the wealth generated from that resource but it has unfortunately failed to fulfil its responsibilities to the communities there in restoring the forest base. In my opinion and that of my colleagues on the committee, the mayors' proposal would mean only a modest contribution in order to bring about the improvement in the forest base which would restore the resource to help bring employment on the island back up to its previous level. It would provide people with the opportunity to earn decent wages in a very meaningful activity which would produce wealth in the short term and improve the resource for the long term.

It is important that the federal Government and the Province of British Columbia have concluded an Economic Regional Development Agreement through which $300 million will be spent for reforestation. Unfortunately, no significant amount of that investment will be spent on Vancouver Island but, instead, will be spent in other areas. The other important aspect of the ERDA agreement is that professional organizations within the forest industry, such as forest research organizations and the School of Forestry at UBC, are of the opinion that this amount of money is infinitesimally small considering the task of regenerating the resource within British Columbia and particularly on Vancouver Island. The amount of $600 million is required. It would be a serious error to use the ERDA funds, which have already been earmarked for important priority projects. When this committee forwarded its unanimous recommendation its opinion was that the federal Government should be involved in separately funding the proposal of the mayors of Vancouver Island. I urge my colleagues in the House of Commons to support this motion, to concur in the report of the standing committee, and to urge the federal Government to make funds available which are supplementary to the $300 million allocated for reforestation in the ERDA agreement.

The impact of the collapse of the forest industry has been extremely serious on Vancouver Island. There is not a community on that island which has not experienced an enormous negative effect due to the loss of employment created by the downsizing of the forest industry. The Macdonald Commission said that forestry was a sunset industry in Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth. The forest industry has a long and viable future based on a sustained yield resource. In perpetuity this country can derive its wealth from the forest industry. It would be a serous mistake for the Government to ignore that. We have stood by and watched that resource being depleted without any concern for reforestation or preservation of the resource on a sustained yield basis.

It is important to note that forestry, in a depressed region such as Vancouver Island, is the quickest and most effective way of developing income and employment. It is extremely important that the Government realize that many of the long-term projects which have been conceived for that area may produce employment and economic development in five to ten years. However, an investment of the magnitude proposed by the mayors of Vancouver Island would almost instantaneously create substantial employment and substantial improvements to local economies on that island. To my knowledge, and that of many others, there is no more effective a mechanism for the quick generation of employment in a severely depressed area. There is no more worth-while an investment of federal tax dollars than in the regeneration of a resource which, with sustained yield management, on-going reforestation, and intelligent forest management practices, will yield perpetual wealth and employment and a strong economic base for the people of Vancouver Island in the future.

The reason for debating this issue in the House today is that this was proposed about a year ago. Mayors of Vancouver Island have been coming to Ottawa to visit Cabinet Ministers and talk to Conservative Members of Parliament. Everyone agrees that this is a great idea and they all support it. However, in spite of their election promises and individual commitments, no one on that side of the House is willing to make the move by writing the cheque for the amount of money required to fund this proposal.

It is critical that before the House adjourns this afternoon we vote on the issue of contributing a substantial amount of money on an on-going basis to the forest proposals of Vancouver Island. This concept is endorsed by the federal caucus of the New Democratic Party in Ottawa, the provincial New Democratic MLAs, and even by the Social Credit Party which usually has trouble seeing common sense in any issue. The Liberal Party has also endorsed this proposal as has the Conservative Party in Ottawa. Therefore, it is absolutely incumbent upon the federal Government to produce the funds very quickly to begin the process of revitalizing the economy of Vancouver Island.

The official unemployment rate on Vancouver Island is 15 per cent which is among the highest in the country. However, the real unemployment rate on Vancouver Island is much higher. Many people realize that there are no jobs available and that there is no purpose in going to the employment office to apply for work. In many communities the actual unemployment rate exceeds 25 per cent. This applies not only to Vancouver Island, but to the sunshine coast, the Gibsons area and the Sechelt area, a population of approximately 12,000 people who have experienced a severe economic recession. They have seen the forest industry, once the prime generator of wealth in that area, collapse.

The Mayor of Powell River has been attempting diligently to develop a program which would mesh with the Vancouver Island municipalities. Powell River is a member of the Association of Vancouver Island Municipalities which has backed this proposal. It is important that that regional district be included in the proposal of Vancouver mayors for funding for forestry.

I see that the Member for Nanaimo-Alberni is now in the House. I am certain that he will be rising to speak in support of this proposal as the communities of his riding are dependent on forestry. MacMillan Bloedel, the single large employer in Powell River, a region of approximately 20,000 people suddenly laid off 500 people. Once you have lost your job in the major operation in such an isolated area you can usually no longer afford to live in the community. Housing costs, transportation costs and the cost of food and other necessities in that community are very high. When a major employer lays off 500 people in such a community, no one will purchase homes there. Housing prices tumble, unemployment is persistent and chronic. Those who have lost their jobs are essentially trapped in that community, cursed with the prospect of long-term, chronic unemployment. Not only does this cause problems within the community, the local economy will implode in many respects. As a result of those 500 lay-offs, many local businesses will not survive, with the result of even further employment losses and a continued imploding of the economy. I would compare the effects on Powell River to those suffered by Port Alberni over the years with the down-sizing of the forest industry there.

Among the many other proposals to improve the economy of Vancouver Island, the federal Government should seriously consider the tourist promotion that accompanies Expo '86. The people of Vancouver Island fear that they will not be able to share in the benefits from the money which the federal and provincial governments are putting into Expo '86 that will attract people to Vancouver and the area. It is estimated that some 13 million people wil be attracted, but they will certainly not go to the communities of North Vancouver Island.

Approximately 80,000 people live in that area. Unfortunately, rather than attracting tourists to that area, Expo '86 will attract many people from Vancouver Island—those who are employed and can do so—and each family will remove hundreds of dollars from those island communities to spend in Vancouver. In fact, the local economy of those communities on Vancouver Island will suffer because of the investment in Expo '86.

While Vancouver and the major metropolitan areas will benefit, I suggest there will be a net loss on Vancouver Island as a result of the federal and provincial tax moneys spent and the enormous volume of money removed from the island. I belive that by the winter of 1986 there will be a shortage of cash on Vancouver Island and a reduction in spending in those communities as well as a general deterioration of the economy for some time.

If the federal Government will make such a large investment in Vancouver, I believe that investment will be seen as having a net negative effect on Vancouver Island and, coupled with the already depressed economy, it is incumbent upon the Government in the name of equity and fairness to make an investment on Vancouver Island to improve that economy.

Clearly, if the federal Government is interested in creating employment on Vancouver Island, stimulating the local economy to restore small businesses and rehiring those young people who are trapped and essentially without hope, an improved forest industry, reforestation and silviculture programs are the most effective and efficient way of doing so. In the face of those difficulties, I expect that the Government would be prepared to support such an initiative. These communities are simply asking for an annual investment of $22.5 million. I see that you are signalling me to resume my place.

Finally, I urge my colleagues in the Conservative Party to support this effort. It is an enormously exciting proposal which they should support today.

Mr. Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of the House of Commons for approximately 12 months. Many times I have observed the distress of opposition Members when issues have been raised in the House or papers have been presented to the House only on several hours' or a day's notice. I was quite distressed this afternoon to find that this issue, which is near and dear to my heart, has arisen basically out of the blue when I am on my death bed with a temperature of 102 degrees. However, I have rushed here to speak on this issue because it is so important to my riding. I say that somewhat tongue in cheek because I am far from dead on this issue.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell (Mr. Skelly) for suddenly raising this issue and showing sudden interest in the Vancouver Island mayors' proposal in their strategy for survival.

I believe it is important to review the history of this strategy for survival. My office was contacted last fall, when this was initially proposed by the Mayor of North Cowichan and his colleague, the Hon. Graham Bruce. We were able to arrange transportation for the Mayor and his committee to Ottawa. As you know, Mr. Speaker, being a former Member of Parliament yourself—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Schellenberg: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, an existing Member of Parliament who finds his duties somewhat stretched in other areas.

Mr. Speaker: I am perfectly willing to attribute that to the 102 degree temperature.

Mr. Schellenberg: I am sure that you are aware of the work involved in making sure that the doors in Ottawa are opened to delegations from ridings and ensuring that these people have access to the corridors of power in Ottawa.

On many occasions opposition Members were unable to do so and your humble servant was able to arrange these contacts between Members and Ministers, especially the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew). A meeting at my office was arranged so that this kind of proposal could receive the attention it deserves.

Next, several times I attempted to raise this issue at the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, but it was delayed by opposition Members who believed that the fisheries Bill at the time was of paramount importance. Therefore, I am rather surprised to see these sudden born again foresters in the opposition Party who are determined to have this issue go through the House today.

Let us consider what the Government has done for forestry since the election in 1984, because I believe it provides an important background when studying this issue. During the election campaign we promised that there would be a Minister of Forests.

That is an important first step in giving Canada's number one employer the attention it deserves. Second, there is the agreement to which I was very proud to contribute. It is the Economic Regional Development Agreement for British Columbia, involving some $575 million, $300 million of which went directly into reforestation programs in British Columbia. That is five or six times more than what the previous Government deigned to give the Province of British Columbia on forestry, but I believe it shows the new kind of emphasis that our Government is giving this particular aspect of the Canadian economy.

Another specific incident which perhaps demonstrates our Government's emphasis on the forest industry happened at the time when the central Vancouver Island area was faced with the loss of some 250 Employment Bridging Assistance Program jobs.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss Macdonald) met with individuals whom we brought to Ottawa from my riding and rescued those jobs with some $1.2 million being put back into the program. This occurred some two months after the province had withdrawn its support for that program.

With respect to the countervailing duties argument, there is a growing protectionist and isolationist sentiment in the United States that is threatening our British Columbia forest industry. Our Government is not ignoring this issue.

• (1530)

This summer we sent an all-Party delegation to Washington, D.C. to discuss the issue with the American Senators and Congressmen. On August 2, in Vancouver, B.C., we met the Minister of Trade, the Forestry Minister, Members of Parliament including Opposition Members and Stan Gibbons, the Congressman who is pushing this Bill through the U.S. Congress. Those discussions continue, which shows the emphasis our Government is putting on the forestry issue.

I must take exception to the comments last week of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). He said that our Government is not paying this issue the attention it deserves. As I stated in the House on Friday, it is time that the New Democratic Party learned who its friends are. Valid criticism is warranted, of course. But the U.S. Government is our friend. The United States of America is our greatest market-place. We need the Americans for our B.C. forest products. You certainly cannot go around deriding the American Government on the one hand and asking it on the other to buy B.C. forest products. That is talking out of both sides of your mouth. If you keep on doing that, people stop listening.

I think our new Progressive Conservative Government is giving the forest industry in Canada the attention it deserves, and will continue to do so as our mandates over the next 20 to 25 years progress.

I was interested in a comment made by the Members for Comox-Powell River during his speech. He said that it is the obligation of the federal Government to spend money on the resource. This is true. It is also the obligation of the forestry industry to spend money on the resource and to reforest whenever possible. It is not 100 per cent the obligation of the Government of Canada to spend money on the forest resource. One has to remember that.

Let us deal specifically with the Strategy for Survival from the Vancouver Island mayors. It is my hope this program will progress and that it will be funded in part by the Government of Canada. I know the Ministers involved, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of State for Forestry are very supportive of that program.

In travelling through the riding this summer I found there was one aspect of the program that was of concern to the unemployed foresters. It is not simply a UIC top-up program. I am sure my colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River will agree that if this program is to progress, there has to be an opportunity for those foresters who have fallen off the UIC program on to the welfare rolls to take part in it also. I hope that is a vital part of the Vancouver Island mayors Strategy for Survival.

For the record, if I may, Mr. Speaker, let me read the immediate response of the Minister of Immigration to our committee's motion of late June. She said that it was an ambitious plan which would require significant financial commitment over a very long period, well into the next century. She said: "Clearly, we are not in a position to support the entire scope of the proposal. However, it is possible we may be able to help through training or retraining mechanisms in support of the development of the workforce. I have recommended that the mayors of Vancouver Island work with my regional officials, who have been involved with the forest investment steering team, to discuss possible ways in which the requirements associated with the proposed activities under the strategy for survival might be met through support under the Canadian jobs strategy."

The Minister of Immigration and the Minister of Forestry have been paying the attention this motion deserves. In fact, they have been paying it a great deal of attention. Finally, before I get to 103 degrees, Mr. Speaker, let me underline one statement in the motion that came from our Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. It reads:

> Your committee recommends that the Government consider the advisability of funding this proposal.

Our Government must look into the viability of funding this proposal, and that is what we are doing. I talked to the office of the Minister of Employment and Immigration this morning. The project is very much alive and will be coming through in the fall. Let me say that that is through the initiatives of the Members of Parliament on the Government and on the Opposition side, not one or the other.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, there are some slight inaccuracies in the Hon. Member's speech. I do not wish in any way to criticize what has been put forward. I know the Member has supported both components of the motion which asks the Government to fund this project and which will be the subject of the support motion today.

The Hon. Member was phoned last week and told that this matter was very much on our minds and that there was an opportunity to move concurrence in it. We notified other Members of Parliament from Vancouver Island hoping to get their support and comment on the record.

Because of the rules of the House today, I think it would be important that we recognize that we would have to allow this motion to be put to a decision of the House prior to five o'clock before talking the matter out. Let me ask the Member two things. First, has he verbally had a commitment from the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) to fund this proposal? I understood the Member to say that the Minister would be annoucing this fall that the program would be funded, in part. Second, do his colleagues intend to co-operate with us and allow the House to bring this matter to a decision before five o'clock rather thank talking it out?

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, let me say to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), that he is to a certain extent putting words in my mouth. I did not say right away this fall that the funding would be coming forward. I said that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) look on this proposal very favourably. In my telephone conversations with their ministries it is apparent that they are very much on top of the issue. An answer will be forthcoming within the weeks and months to come. If you can put your ear to the railway and listen for what is coming, I anticipate that it will be a favourable response and I will be quite happy when that happens, as the Hon. Member well knows.

Mr. Skelly: And the second part of my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I did not catch it.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the other thing is the importance of bringing this motion, a motion which received unanimous support from members of the committee. Is it the intention of the Hon. Member's colleagues to allow this matter to come to a decision this afternoon by not talking the motion out and allowing the Government to have some guidance on this very important issue?

Mr. Schellenberg: I cannot speak for the Government House Leader (Mr. Hnatyshyn) as to what the proposal or plan is for this afternoon. All I know is that I was in my office 20 minutes ago. Then I was madly writing a speech as I came over to the House. I am not sure what is happening this afternoon as far as the remainder of the debate is concerned. I am quite certain that the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) will have a few more words to say on this issue before any action is taken.

Mr. Fulton: I would very much like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) who says that on the issue of the Gibbons Bill I have been talking out of both sides of my mouth. I would like some clarification from him.

It is his Government that has not responded to the initiative taken by Ambassador Niles who, before the Senate confirmation hearings, said that it was his view in terms of his idea and that of the White House for free trade that U.S. loggers be allowed into British Columbia to cut British Columbia trees and to take them back to a United States sawmill.

Does the Hon. Member think that it is responsible for Members of the Opposition not to raise the matter in the House? Does he not think we should try to make it clear to the United States that that is not something that at least I, as a British Columbian, support? The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni as a Government Member might think it is a good idea.

In terms of the Gibbons legislation, there is no question in my mind that that legislation is moving forward very quickly. I do not think the Government side has taken it in any way seriously enough. The industry and the workers in Canada take it seriously. I would like to hear from the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni whether he thinks it is appropriate to raise the profile of that issue to get the Government moving, in the same way that we in the NDP are trying to get the Government to move on the Strategy for Survival, something about which his Party has made lots of promises but has done nothing.

There are three questions. If the Hon. Member thinks that is out of both sides of my mouth, let me say I am looking forward to hearing from him.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, I think, rose legitimately to make a comment on a comment that he felt had been made about himself. I find it difficult now to allow a question about a matter that was not the subject of the report nor of the speech made by the Member. In theory, we are dealing with questions. Questions at this point should be relevant to the matters raised.

Mr. Fulton: He raised the Gibbons Bill.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Member rose to rebut, as is his right under comments. I do not think the question, frankly, is in order. As the Members musts know, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) does have the right of rebuttal. I shall be pleased to give it to him.

Mr. Schellenberg: It will be a very short rebuttal, Mr. Speaker. There is a lot of political footwork going on here. Let me say that I do not support the proposal from the new American ambassador. I would not expect my Government to place too much credence in the comment of an American citizen, just as I would not expect the American Government to place too much credence in some of the anti-American comments from some Canadians.

• (1540)

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place today as forestry critic for the Liberal Party to indicate our support for the efforts and proposals of the mayors of Vancouver Island. Indeed, as some of my colleagues indicated a few moments ago when I was out of the House, I did not realize that this matter was coming before the House today. A motion was moved, adopted and unanimously approved in committee supporting the efforts of those mayors. That proposal is important because it provides the area of Vancouver Island, or that part of British Columbia, with an opportunity to stimulate the economy and because it provides an opportunity to stimulate the economy and because it provides an opportunity for employment for people in that part of the country. More important, the proposal of the mayors of Vancouver Island can be a real pilot project. It can be the map or the new course which charts the way to renewal of our forestry industry. It deals in a tangible way with much of the unemployment affecting rural parts of the nation from coast to coast. As the forestry critic for the Liberal Party and as a Member of Parliament from the riding of Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe which was a sizeable forestry industry, with two mills and a good chunk of the population working in that industry, I support the proposal of the mayors of Vancouver Island.

I have some concern with those who suggest that the Government of Canada has to be careful not to provide direct assistance to the proposal of the mayors if it will be seen as a subsidy by the American administration and therefore seen as evidence or more reason to move on the threat of countervailing tariffs in the softwood lumber industry. I have real concern that that kind of argument can be made in the House or that we as Canadians have to be careful not to assist our unemployed, or not to rejuvenate our single greatest resource, because we may offend the Americans and give them a case for bringing in a countervailing tariff against that industry. Such a suggestion is tantamount to saying that domestic policy in Canada will be set by an administration south of the border. Such a statement is tantamount to saying that the unemployment in Canada will have to wait until those south of the border are less nervous about the success of our industry in their market-place. Such a statement is tantamount to saying that Canada should neglect its forest resource by allowing continuing over-cutting and an insufficient restocking of forest lands until our friends south of the border are no longer nervous, until the congressional elections are over.

In a sovereign nation which is governed by a democratic institution and operates under a parliamentary democracy, we should not allow ourlelves to make policy on the basis of what is acceptable to an administration south of the border. Surely we are not telling those people who make a living from the forestry resource that we know they need help, we know they are in trouble, we know that their circumstances are desperate, but they should not bother us right now because Uncle Sam is looking over our shoulder. Our forestry industry is greater in terms of the balance of trade than agriculture, mining, oil, gas and the fishery combined.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: That is true, that is a fact. Surely we are not saying that that resource should be put on hold until a new Shamrock Summit can be held and we can sing the same song again as far as trade is concerned.

The mayors of Vancouver Island have done what perhaps Governments at every level have failed to do. They have had the courage, wisdom and initiative not to complain about their plight but to make a concrete proposal to put people back to work to ensure the basis of the economy of their region and to reinvest in our greatest resource, the forestry sector.

Currently we are cutting 700,000 hectares more of forest land per year than we are planting. Every year we are falling behind by 700,000 hectares. Of course this does not take into account great forest fire years like this year in the Provinces of British Columbia where hundreds of thousands of hectares of forest land were lost. Also there are hundreds of thousands of hectares which have been clear cut and where replanting has not been done.

One of the dilemmas of the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) is that he does not have any direct jurisdiction. Jurisdiction in the forestry sector is exclusively that of the provinces. The Minister of State for Forestry has a difficult time. He does not have a stick and he does not have a carrot. He can only express his concern. He can only say that there is a disaster in the making and that if we continue going the way in which we have been going, we will cut off our nose to spite our face. He can only make projections that Canada will lose its place in the international market-place in this industry if we do not act now. However, he cannot act now because the forestry sector is the exclusive jurisdiction of provincial Governments. There is only one thing he can do. He can provide the dollars. If the provincial Governments cannot find it within themselves to make forestry a priority, he can provide the dollars to third parties like the mayors of Vancouver Island. He can provide the dollars for a project which would, as we would say in Newfoundland, chart a new course and fasten a new sail for an industry which is in deep trouble.

The real tragedy of the Canadian forestry industry, even though it is the single most important industry, is that Canadians only know about the forestry what they see on television and hear from Smokey the Bear. The forestry industry takes place out of sight and away from major urban centres. Most Canadians have no idea what is going on in that industry. They drive down the highways and see an endless skyline of trees and they say: "There are lots of trees; Canada has an endless supply of trees; everywhere we look there are forests". They cannot see that beyond the highways and beyond the lands lying in front of them and over the bluff are thousands of hectares of clear-cut forest lands which have not been replanted. They cannot see the trees lying broken and uncollected. They cannot see the stumps rotting in the ground with nothing to replace them. They cannot see the thousands of miles of wilderness land, where animals once roamed and were king, where trees once grew and rivers flowed, dead and dormant. They cannot see the problems of the forestry industry in Canada, the so-called land of great forests and wilderness, the so-called recipient of God's great gift of the forest. Unless we intervene dramatically, the industry will remain in trouble.

If common sense prevails in Parliament and if non-partisanship can rear its rare head, we will support this motion of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, in the interest of seeing trees planted which will not even be ripe for harvest for 40 years or perhaps when many of us are no longer on the face of the earth. We should all support this motion. We should ensure that before five o'clock it passes by way of vote. In fact, we will do it right away. We will support the efforts of the Conservative Member from Vancouver Island who wants to see some assistance for his region. Members of Parliament like myself from areas suffering 30 per cent unemployment are prepared to see a substantial amount of money going to an area with a much better employment picture because it is a pilot project which will show our areas the way. I hope we can move concurrence in this motion today. I hope we can come to a quick vote and that our commitment to future generations will prevail over our short-term partisan political considerations.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest the comments of the Hon. Member with respect to countervailing tariffs and his concern about what position we might find ourselves in. His suggestion that we might be backing off from sovereignty is what brought me to ask this question.

I just ask the Hon. Member, in view of the statements made by this Government last week with respect to participation in SDI, which was quite firm on just exactly what we intend to do in terms of support for things which we do not control, and in view of this government's statement on the far north and our sovereignty there which far outstripped any of the weak, mollycoddling statements of the previous Liberal administration, which never had the guts to determine baselines and stake out a position for Canada in the far north, and in view of the fact that the previous administration talked about building an icebreaker for 16 years and never did a darn thing about it, which could have helped us establish sovereignty there, in view of the actions taken this week, would not the Hon. Member agree that we have far outstripped anything that the previous administration did if not in the four years of office, in the last 17 years?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a shameful thing when a young Member of Parliament, from an area of high unemployment puts aside his partisanship to stand in his place this day to support the efforts of the good Members from British Columbia and all sides of the House and makes a call that we put aside our petty differences to stand in solidarity with the mayors of Vancouver Island to be confronted with such a childish and foolish question, Mr. Speaker. I shall attempt to answer it. I shall attempt.

When I was in high school we had a fellow named Johnny in the class. Johnny was one of these guys who would always talk into a great fight. Johnny would always tell Fred, "Fred, if you keep talking that way I am going to meet you after school and we will have it out". This is what the Government did with the American administration. Johnny would show up after school at 4.15, knowing that the bus that Fred rode left at 4.10. That is what the government's action reminded me of this summer.

After the ship had gone through the Arctic, after it had split the ice asunder and sailed the flag straight through, not even asking permission, the Government, like Johnny, showed up. After the barn door had been left open and the horses were gone, it rolled up its sleeves, exposed its knuckles and said, "by God, we are standing tough for Canada".

It always amazes that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) claims "We did not have a peashooter or a canoe up north. The previous Liberal Government did not leave us with even a peashooter or a canoe".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not really know what Johnny and Fred have to do with this. I wish you both would get back to the relevancy of this Bill, please.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by saying this. On the question of severeignty, if the previous administration did not have a peashooter or canoe, it strikes me as strange that for 16 years with the power of its argument and its pride in Canada, no nation dared go through that Arctic. This administration was in power one summer and the Americans said "We will blow through the Arctic waters of our poor cousin to the North." That is the reality.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for the very generous position he is taking as critic responsible for his Party on this matter. It started out with very strong non-partisan support of a motion to which we all agree.

Certainly the issues that have been exchanged by the two Hon. Members, one from the Conservative Party and one from the Liberal Party, are important critical issues but I am wondering if we can maintain the kind of non-partisan, general support for this motion and move quickly to a vote since we seem to be in support of it.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased with this opportunity to address the problems of the forestry industry, since two thirds of the economy of my riding and the general area depends on that industry and its products. The issue is a very important one to us. We do not happen to be in British Columbia, but just the same, the forestry industry in Eastern Canada is very important to us. In fact, the largest municipalities in my riding were created thanks to the forestry industry. The Municipality of Gatineau owes its existence to CIP, and the City of Buckingham to Maclaren, and the same applies to Thurso. This issue is therefore important to us.

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, I was among those who asked for a Department of Forestry, not just to have one more Minister but because this sector is vital to my region and to the entire country. In fact, I hope the Department will set up its offices in our region so that at last our eastern forests, the forests of Central Canada and especially our hardwood forests which are seriously threatened, will have a spokesperson with an interest in their future.

What major issues would the Department have to deal with right away? Any one would agree that reforestation should be at the top of the list. Fortunately, one of the new Department's first steps was to sign a federal-provincial agreement with Quebec and the other provinces to set up a forest conservation, renewal and reforestation program.

In my riding, these are very real concerns because of the present crisis in the forestry industry. Because plants must go farther and farther afield to get their raw materials, their wood supply has become increasingly expensive. Some of the smaller sawmills, for instance, have been forced to close because the cost of wood has become so prohibitive they can no longer continue to operate and compete with the US and especially with new markets in the southern hemisphere where forests mature more rapidly because of the warmer climate. I therefore hope that thanks to this agreement between the federal Government and the provinces, we will be able to ensure the reforestation of our forests and the wood supply our plants require.

In my riding, the Maclaren Company, for instance, a family operation that now belongs to a large corporation, has finally established its own nursery in our region. Mr. Speaker, that tree nursery is using new seeding and growing methods and they also have new training programs for youths because it is a sector where many of them can find employment.

• (1600)

I therefore hope that we will maintain our efforts in an attempt to reach a federal-provincial agreement under which we might consider the possibility of joint university training, the kind of program enabling young Canadians to spend a few months working for a paper company or in a tree nursery and then perhaps go on to complete their course in a university during the other months of the year. A great many of those young people come from very poor families in our region and simply cannot afford to quit working to take university courses, but they can see for themselves that the preliminary or technical elementary level does not offer employment prospects and good pay in a highly competitive world. It is therefore a matter of renewing supply, renewing training and forestry technique.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, we do have a lot of ground to cover in terms of staff training. I am quite pleased to hear that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) has been successful in reaching an agreement with her provincial colleague with respect to vocational training and that they are both looking at ways of providing the kind of industrial training which will not cut into the traditional provincial field of education.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it is very imperative that we get on with such on-the-job training. In my riding, for example, the large CIP company wants to replace one of its machine by a new one which can compete with developing countries, especially southern countries which, as I pointed out, can indeed find new and cheaper supplies. To do that the company will have to retrain a great many of its employees who work in the paper mill.

So, Mr. Speaker, we must put the emphasis on staff training on the job, and that is why I am pleased that the new programs of our Minister of Employment and Immigration will enable us to do just that in the near future.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, there is another question which is even more relevant than the first two, however important these may be, and it is the question of diversifying our forest products. In the course of discussions at our Outaouais socio-economic summit we found out that a silvichemistry centre in the Outaouais would be a good example for the rest of the province and provide advantages and new markets which are unavailable right now. That is why I am very glad to see that all participants at the socio-economic summit and all spokesmen for the steering committee who come from every community in the region and from various quarters have agreed to give top priority to a silvichemistry centre.

What does silvichemistry mean to us? It means that we can use the discards of a paper mill, it even means that we can develop new methods, new clean energy sources for our cities, our homes and our institutions.

Mr. Speaker, this even means discovering new drugs, which might surprise some people, but residues from pulp and paper plants can be used to make drugs to fight respiratory ailments such as those which are resistant to antibiotics.

Mr. Speaker, we therefore have a whole new industry in forest resources.

To achieve these results, we need the cooperation of all levels of Government. We also have to set our priorities.

When we want to provide assistance to a plant or a sawmill in our region or constituency, we might find that somewhere else in Canada, in another province, there is a surplus of the same product or raw material.

Mr. Speaker, being a national Government, we face the dilemma of developing the regions, especially if they are dependent on forest resources, while governing the country responsibly by guaranteeing that jobs will not be moved from one part of the country to another. The forest industry provides a perfect example of this dilemma.

I have myself occasionally requested subsidies to help sawmills or small paper plants and been told: If we help your region, we shall create unemployment in British Columbia or New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker, we can obviously not implement a forestry policy without devising a new approach to regional development. This is why I am very happy that our party is seriously considering a new regional development policy and that our Quebec caucus, for instance, of which I am a member, has created a sub-committee which will focus on a new approach to regional development, especially in sectors such as the forest industry, which are threatened by supply imbalances throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, we have discussed a regional development fund under which regional priorities could be identified without harming the national policy which must be implemented.

When discussing the forest industry in the perspective adopted by the Hon. Member, who has moved a very specific motion, we have to remember that, while he emphasizes the importance of a solution, if the Government does not approach the planning of national policies seriously, it could create as many problems in the rest of the country as it would solve in his own region.

It is therefore not because of some reluctancy or lack of courage on our part that we want to examine seriously a national forestry policy with a regional development orientation, but because our country is made up of different regions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues from British Columbia, who must naturally deal urgently with their own problems, not to forget that our country is made up of regions, that its diversity is also its strength, but that this diversity creates rather special problems when we are trying to develop a national policy in any given area.

Mr. Speaker, I would therefore ask them not to try to be too controversial in this area because thousands of jobs are involved, the future of our country depends on it and the forest industry remains one of the major sectors of our economy.

I would also ask them to cooperate with us in trying to find new markets for this traditional Canadian industry. I am thinking also of the remote sensing system which we have finally adopted in this country. Mr. Speaker, this system makes it possible for us to carry out an inventory of our forests through satellite slewing, so that instead of being satisfied with a rough survey made on site, we can now have a global picture of our forests, we can supervise their growth and health, as well as plan their development and protection.

Mr. Speaker, I call on my colleagues to closely cooperate in the area of forestry, because a great many jobs depend upon it and also, somewhat, the pride of our country.

FISHERIES AND FORESTRY

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Skelly that the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, presented to the House on Friday, June 28, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who just sat down gave an interesting presentation on the necessity of taking a look at forests from a national perspective. In terms of the Government's approach to regions which have severely depressed economies and resource bases, and since each region of the country is extremely different, when an appropriate plan for a region is developed that has the two benefits of ensuring a rapid increase in the health of the local economy and employment, as well as making a significant contribution to the forest resource base, which has been supported by the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew), the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) and Members of the Conservative Party, I wonder if the previous speaker would support projects such as this?

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer this question. What I meant to say in my remarks is that we can only deal with one issue at a time. The reason why not everybody is anxious to support immediately the Hon. Member's plan of action is precisely because there are many other issues we want to deal with concerning the forest industry. When I said that we need a national forestry policy, I said also that we need a policy on regional development. I suggested that we must try and find a method which would enable us to develop a national policy on forestry while dealing with the various regions he referred to; he was right when he said that regional differences create a great many problems for our national legislators. But with a policy of regional development, we could have, for instance, a regional development fund to look into the potential and problems of the forest industry in each region; this way, we would address both problems.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate with respect to the motion for concurrence which is before us. The recommendation which we are dealing with here, which is the Vancouver Island mayors' proposal, Strategy for Survival, is an important one. Many people on Vancouver Island, and in British Columbia, will read this afternoon's proceedings. It is important that as they read it they understand what the procedure being followed here is. That is to say, the Govenment has an opportunity this afternoon, before five o'clock, to allow the motion for concurrence to come to a vote. If the matter does not come to a vote, then it is put on to Government Orders where it can remained buried for months and months, as happened with one of our previous motions concerning CN twin tracking. We need to come to the brass tacks of the issue, since it is clear that Conservative, Liberal and New Democratic Party members who sit on the committee voted in favour of the Vancouver Island mayors' proposal. It is a very well put together and researched proposal. It could well act as a planning model which could be applied to other areas of British Columbia, to those areas of the prairies provinces with a forest base and to Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes. It really is a national application. With a few changes it could, in fact, be applied in the Northwest Territories and Yukon.

Government Members, and everyone else, particularly Members from Vancouver Island, cannot continue to send the signal to everyone on Vancouver Island that the cash is about to flow, as the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) makes it seem, while months and months and more months and months are allowed to go by. We have to bite the bullet with respect to this issue. Members of the House should know exactly what the forest investment proposal is for Vancouver Island. It is an investment of $22,350,000 per year in an ongoing Vancouver Island Forest Improvement Program which will create 1,116 permanent productive jobs directly in the forest and a further 500 jobs in indirect employment. Part of the intent of this measure is to attrack back into the forest sector younger workers, with the remaining jobs going to small businesses in the Vancouver Island area. As we have seen in some areas of British Columbia, the average age in some of the plywood plants is now above age 40. Younger workers do not seem to be finding their way into these traditional type jobs.

The Vancouver Island mayors' proposal is important to this House. I think Hon. Members should tread with care so as not to force this issue to five o'clock just to have it placed on the Order Paper. We should be able to vote on it. Conservative Members of Parliament who sit on the committee agree with me in this respect. They know the problem is in Cabinet with respect to the release of money to British Columbia. It is not a matter of some of the B.C. Tories not being interested in the proposal and supportive of it. It is a matter of breaking the dollars loose from Treasury Board and getting them out to the project. I am sure many Conservative Members would like to see the matter come to a vote this afternoon. I see a great many nodding heads across the floor so I know that, in fact, is the case.

What the implementation of the proposal would do is affect the level of annual investment at the time of harvest, which would be about 45 years down the road. It would increase harvestable volumes by 33 per cent, or 9.5 million cubic metres. It would increase the total value of the harvest by 55 per cent, or $655 million. That is a pretty good investment for the number of dollars we are talking about putting in. Implementation of the measure will increase employment by 33 per cent, or 38,000 jobs. It will increase revenues to Government. I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), if he is listening, would like to know there is a way in Canada by which revenues can be increased to Government by some 33 per cent, or $79.5 million per year. These revenues will generate, at net present value, a real 6 per cent discount rate of between $4,000 and $6,000 per hectare, depending on the project and site quality, with treatment costs bearing between $200 and $460 per hectare. That is a very nominal investment for a major return.

I have made it clear that members of the committee in a very non-partisan way brought this matter forward in the interests of a part of Canada which is suffering a real decline in one of our primary resource industries. I want to make it clear that we have to let this issue come to a vote today. I do not think that people on Vancouver Island who read the speeches given this afternoon and who suddenly see the matter come to an end at five o'clock when the Speaker announces Private Members' Hour should understand anything other than the fact that the Government talked the issue out in order to put it back on hold.

I would like to tell Hon. Members of some of the problems we are seeing in the forest industry in this country. It is our largest industry and our largest source of balance of trade payments. The B.C.-Ottawa federal forestry ERDA for $300 million for reforestation has just been put into place. It sounds like a great deal of money but, as Les Reid, who holds an independent chair at the University of British Columbia's forestry school pointed out, we should be spending $300 million per year just to deal with the NSR, whereas Jack Walters, a professor of forestry at UBC pointed out, we should be spending $600 million per year if we really intend to deal with the backlog and the NSR in British Columbia. Let me point out that Sweden gets four times the wealth out of an acre of forest than British Columbia—and that is for comparable acreage—while British Columbia has half the trees in Canada and produces less than half the value in dollars.

Vancouver Island, Mr. Speaker, has a base of over three million hectares. Productivity capacity on even the average growing sites on Vancouver Island are at least four times better than the Canadian average. On Vancouver Island the general levels of unemployment are approaching 15 per cent and in many of the communities, as our witnesses from Vancouver Island pointed out to us, the largest source of dollars in some of those Vancouver Island communities are unemployment insurance, Canada Works and welfare. What kind of a legacy is being left in these declining moments of the forest industry in this country?

In British Columbia one person in five is employed as a result of forest industry activities. One job in the forest industry supports two indirect jobs and one job in logging supports 3.6 jobs in conversion plants, 9.2 jobs in indirect services and 12.8 jobs in total. These statistics might sound bland but they are the underlying foundation of some very sound and careful planning and evaluation which has been done by the Vancouver Island mayors in bringing this proposal before Parliament with the hope, of course, of getting not only federal support but provincial support as well.

The legacy for this country is a bad one at the federal level. For a decade and a half under former Prime Minister Trudeau, less than five cents out of every dollar brought in directly and indirectly through taxation by the forest sector actually went back into any kind of research and development or helped Canada's largest industry. That is less than five cents out of the dollar. There are some industries in this country, Mr. Speaker, which receive very close to a dollar back for every dollar they produce for our economy. The forest sector has been bled heavily by the federal Government and I hope that the new Government will look carefully at the fact that it still has yet to increase what goes back into the forest sector beyond that five cents out of every dollar.

One article which I took considerable interest in was written by the dean of forestry at the University of British Columbia, Robert Kennedy, who pointed out a number of things in an article called "Timber-r-r", and I quote:

> Forestry is Canada's largest industry, directly employing almost 300,000 people and indirectly responsible for the jobs of another 500,000. One in ten Canadian workers depends on the $23 billion forest industry for a living.
> British Columbia in particular is dependent on its trees. Twenty per cent of British Columbians are directly or indirectly employed by the forest industry.

He goes on to say:

> In the past 20 years Canada's share of the world forest products market has dropped from over 30 per cent to under 20 per cent.

That is a decline of some 50 per cent.

> Brazil and other tropical countries can produce pulp logs in five to 10 years, compared to 25 to 50 years in Canada. The Scandinavian countries have been practising intensive forest management for 80 years, and now produce three to four times as much wood as Canada per productive unit of forest.

That is three to four times as much, Mr. Speaker. What the Vancouver Island mayors are talking about is mobilizing some of the technologies we have now which are really quite simple. We are talking about conifer release, doing proper thinning, having proper nurseries in place, a proper return on what is called "not satisfactorily restrocked land", and back to full productivity by getting rid of the weeds. There are a lot of things which can be done, many of which are labour intensive, which is good. It gets a lot of people back to work. It is also very good in terms of investment, as I pointed out. For a very small investment we get a massive multibillion dollar return.

The article continues, and I quote:

Kennedy feels we must practise intensive forestry—controlling vegetation, spacing new seedlings properly, pruning, thinning and fertilizing them. If this is done just on B.C.'s good and medium forest sites—25 per cent of the forest land—a substantial gain in forest production will result.

"Practising intensive forestry, you can double the yield of the forest in 45 to 50 years", says Dean Kennedy.

That goes along exactly with what Vancouver Island mayors are saying. There are very few sectors in this country where if you put that small an investment in, you can get that kind of return. I think this House should be looking more carefully at how we can make responsible investments.

I was glad to see the new Government getting rid of the non-productive heavy water plants. I do not believe any Canadians, including people who work there, really felt that the taxpayers of Canada should be putting out over $100 million a year for a product which had no use in Canada. We had no export market for it, yet we made it year after year because a senior Liberal happened to hold the seat. There was no reason for us to continue down that road. We have to start putting money into the productive sectors of the economy where we can put people back to work, get communities back on their feet and generate some revenue, not just for our generation but for a few generations down the road.

I would like to quote Don Whiteley, Sun Business reporter, in his recent article headed "Forest Disaster Looms in 15 Years". He is reporting on Sten Nilsson's report which came out earlier this year. In fact, we dealt with it in our committee. Mr. Whitely said the following, and I quote:

The annual volume of timber available in B.C., now about 75 million cubic metres, will decline to 67 million cubic metres under favorable conditions. Even with productivity improvements, that will mean a five- to 10-per-cent decline in pulp and a five-per-cent drop in lumber. The timber volume could dip as low as 44 million cubic metres, with catastrophic results.

Most plywood plants in B.C. will close by the year 2000 as a result of substitution of other products such as waferboard, which will be produced elsewhere.

A switch from bulk commodity products to greater value-added products is necessary and will help, but distance from markets sharply limits that opportunity, and the industry will be in difficulty regardless.

The industry needs to invest $35 billion by the year 2000 in reforestation and modernization, but "cannot generate sufficient capital... This is perhaps the most serious component in the picture of the B.C. forest industry—it can do little to solve its problems."

When we read a report which is written by an internationally respected economist who tells us these things, we have to realize that the money must come from somewhere during this crucial period. I do not believe we should let the industry off the hook. It has been negligent in many of the sites it has operated on for many years. I will be demonstrating that with some statistics in a moment. However, during this crucial period, while we have so many people on Vancouver Island, Prince Rupert, Terrace, Queen Charlotte, Smithers, over to Prince George, down through the Chilcotin, who are concerned, we must try to get this pilot project off the ground so we can apply similar kinds of projects in our own communities. Those same mayors of Vancouver Island have visited my communities and we have similar kinds of pilot projects going. There are a lot of people prepared to go in and work at almost any kind of job which would be proposed.

Mr. Whiteley goes on to say the following in his article:

The amount of timber available to the industry, the report concludes, will be seriously affected even if there is a strong improvement in the economy.

"About five to 15 per cent of the volume is still too expensive to cut, "Nilsson claims. "By 2000, 30 to 40 per cent of the available wood will be too expensive to use due to longer transportation distances, lower wood quality, increased development costs and smaller logs."

There it is in a nutshell, Mr. Speaker. We do not have a lot of options here. The House has to move. We have an industry where less than five cents out of a dollar is being returned to it. We do not find that anywhere else. We do not find it in high tech, agriculture, energy, shipbuilding, textiles, shoes or anything else. There is no other industry in this country which is bled to fiercely by the federal and provincial Governments as the forest sector.

The legacy we are now left with we must deal with. The Vancouver Island mayors have recognized this and all Hon. Members of this House have to recognize it. The summary of the forest and range resource analysis of 1984, produced by the Government of British Columbia, said the following:

—the high-value end of the supply is being depleted... relaxed utilization standards have aggravated this problem by allowing larger areas to be cut to attain the same timber volume... the long established trend to take the best first has been accelerated. This leaves the lower quality wood to be harvested when the price of forest products increase or when new technology allows cheaper logging and manufacturing.

• (1630)

It goes on to say regarding replanting and silviculture in B.C.:

—the area planted and the number of seedlings planted has almost doubled in the 5 years in B.C.

—between 1979 and 1984 the number of seedlings planted increased from 58 million to 108 million. However, the report states that about 160 million seedlings need to be planted annually.

"Site preparation, brushing, weeding, and present planting levels are insufficient to sustain current levels of annual allowable cut"

Once again we have it in a nutshell. The forest management practices in British Columbia are, to use environmental terms, culpably criminal. Report after report points out that they are harvesting at a rate far faster than it is being regrown naturally or through the little bit of intensive silviculture there is in that province. The Government of British Columbia, in concert with the federal Government, is taking us down a road to disaster. Look at any serious writer who has written in the last couple of years about what is happening in British Columbia and they all say the same thing: You are over-harvesting. The NSR in the province is larger than the province of Prince Edward Island. That is how big the backlog of sites going the other way is. They are being taken over by weeds, non-commercial species, or they are not growing anything. It is a very serious national problem which we have to deal with in this House.

The summary goes on to say:

—the Ministry's focus presumably was on planting, brushing, and weeding. The report states that "other intensive sivilcultural activites decreased as priorities were shifted to meet increased planting targets".

We see it time after time in the report. The Government is taking the wrong approach. The industry is taking the wrong approach. They are exploiting capital, technology and engineering when we should be revamping our own industry in this country. The report goes on:

—In total NSR land has increased from 1.9 million hectares to 3.6 million hectares (an 85 per cent increase) between 1979 and 1984.

We find that to be very true on Vancouver Island. It continues:

After factoring (i.e. estimating how much of that might actually be stocked upon field inspection), the report states that NSR land has increased from 1.0 million hectares to 1.6 million (a 50 per cent increase in five years).

That is a phenomenal increase, Mr. Speaker. At the same time Ottawa is dribbling out five cents on the dollar and British Columbia is putting almost nothing back into the industry. We should have a national forest act, something I know the Minister responsible supports, and he should be a full member of Cabinet as well as being on the P and P Committee. The Prime Minister should be living up to what he promised in the campaign. British Columbians and people across Canada have recognized that the industry and many provinces have been remiss in this field and we need some federal leadership. I do not think it is wrong, under the Constitution or anything else, for us to be demonstrating that kind of leadership at the federal level. Look at the scientific expertise we can draw on by having Members from all regions of the country and universities and so on in order to get some sound industrial and resource based development going. The report goes on:

—Focusing only on good and medium site land within that total, it has increased from 0.8 million hectares to 1.2 million (a 42 per cent increase in five years). After factoring, the amount of good and medium site NSR land increased from 0.6 million to 0.7 million hectares (a 14 per cent increase).

—Looking at NSR by Forest Region, the most dramatic increase is in the Prince George Forest Region: An increase from 292,400 hectares of good and medium site NSR land in 1979 to 632,700 hectares in 1984 (i.e. an increase of 116 per cent!).

A book was recently written called Cut and Run by Mr. Swift. There is certainly no doubt about that in some areas of British Columbia; the companies, with the full endorsation of Victoria, are going in, cutting the trees down, using them here and exporting them, but they are not doing any kind of serious replanting. When you see an increase in NSR land by 116 per cent, you really know something is wrong.

In the minute that I have left, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate what is going on here this afternoon. We have a motion for concurrence. This House has the opportunity in the next 25 minutes to take a vote on this matter. I am quite confident that my colleagues from the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will rally support on that side to see that this is passed because it is a Cabinet problem. The Prime Minister and the Cabinet do not want to spend that money in British Columbia. I think we in this House have a responsibility, as British Columbians, Quebecers, Newfoundlanders, even as Yukoners, to get together every once in a while and vote some money for a region which has been so crippled by bad management policies of Government and industry so that this region can have a chance to make a good investment for once. There is a 33 per cent rate of return. You do not get that from the Northland Bank or the Canadian Commercial Bank or the Bank of Mulholland. I think it is about time we started making the kind of resource based investments in silviculture for our young people and start getting this country growing again. So let's get a vote before five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): What we will be getting is questions and comments.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question which has arisen out of the Hon. Member's allegations. It is fair to say that many Members in this House have an interest in forestry matters. As a matter of fact, Simcoe County was the forestry capital of the world in 1982. That is a revolving honour which, as the Hon. Member well knows, moves around the country to indicate the importance of forestry. That particular award came about because of the reforestation projects undertaken in the 1920s by a Conservative Government in Ontario.

The Hon. Member's allegation is that Government Members are talking out this motion. That is a very serious allegation and I suggest it may not be deliberately misleading but it is as close to being so as a person can come without doing so. The Hon. Member should know that the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) is not in Ottawa at this moment. He is elsewhere on Government business. If he had been given an opportunity to consider this matter, I am sure it would have been given serious consideration.

I think we should turn ourselves to the right of every Member to participate in debate and be aware of debate. I have had an opportunity to read the proceedings of the committee. The NDP Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) will know that his colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly), took part in those deliberations. The only question I have for the Hon. Member is: Did he give his colleague, who has an interest in this matter, notice of this debate so that he would have a fair opportunity to participate?

Mr. Fulton: I am glad to have an opportunity to respond to that. As my colleague from Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) pointed out, he gave the Coservative Members, at least some of them, a week's notice that he intended to proceed with this.

Some Hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands is on his way here.

Some Hon. Members: Name them.

Mr. Dick: None of us.

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River can name those Members, I am sure.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

Mr. Fulton: He is on his way here, I understand, from Vancouver Island—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: —where he is dealing with this issue.

Mr. Lewis: You did not give him notice either.

Mr. Fulton: It takes him a while to get here.

As to the Minister, I know for a fact that he supports this and I am sure he would very much like to see it come to a vote so he could see how some of his colleagues would vote on it. It is an important issue.

As to the Hon. Member's reference to being deliberately misleading, we will find out at five o'clock whether or not there is a Government Member, perhaps he himself, on his feet filibustering to make sure this cannot come to a vote so that British Columbia can get the money it needs to get the forest industry on its feet.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I have heard several times about this notice given to Members concerning this debate. I am from Vancouver Island and I happen to be here to replace a colleague who had to go to a meeting. Therefore, it was purely by accident that I found out about this debate this afternoon.

Mr. McDermid: You are a bunch of phoneys over there.

Mr. Fulton: It is interesting to hear the baying from the other side of the House because on the matter of Arctic sovereignty, I happened to get notice of that, as did our entire Party, less than 24 hours before it occurred in the House, and less than two hours before the statement was made we were given the notes. My colleague has indicated that some Conservative Members have been aware for more than a week that this was coming forward. We will find out at five o'clock whether the Conservatives want to bring this matter to a vote and ensure that British Columbia gets the money.

• (1640)

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, let us clearly understand that the Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) was phoned and notified that this debate was forthcoming, as was the Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Crofton) and the Member for Nanaimo Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg).

The second important point is that the Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) was, to my recollection, the seconder of this motion. He is a tremendous supporter of the project. However, we are losing sight of the key point here which is that this is an incredibly good proposal. It is supported by Conservative Members so Government Members should not be criticizing it at this point. Their colleagues support it, realizing its value. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) support this proposal. Everyone who has examined and understands this proposal accepts it in principle. After listening to the Mayors' proposal and examining the documentation the Committee unanimously supported this. There is no element of controversy before the House, but rather, a sound, solid proposal which would boost the economy of British Columbia and enhance the resource base that is supportive of the whole country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, we have checked with the three Members mentioned by the Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) and they did not receive phone calls. I think that is dirty pool. I am the chairman of that committee and I would have thought that the Hon. Member would have the courtesy to at least give the chairman a call in order that we could ensure that the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) was in the House thereby enabling us to have a much better debate. We have, therefore, lost a certain amount of confidence in that particular Member.

I would like to direct a question to the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Would the Member care to comment on the issue that is now quite dominant in British Columbia, that of logging South Moresby Island or perhaps making that area into a park. South Moresby is in the riding of the Member for Skeena and this is an issue that everyone from British Columbia is faced with. Will he gave us his views on the issue?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would love to spend a good part of the afternoon dealing with the very complex issue of the South Moresby proposal. Since the Vancouver Island mayor's proposal is before us this afternoon and the steering committee of the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry will be meeting tomorrow morning, I would be glad to go into some detail with the Member, who I know has a sincere interest in what is happening with regard to South Moresby. However, we have respects to pay to the mayors of Vancouver Island who have spent a lot of time preparing their proposal, which is very sound. I would like to know whether there is anyone on the Government side who objects to it. If not, I would hope that within the next 16 minutes we will have a vote so that we can tell the Vancouver Island mayors whether their proposal is still being considered by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of discussion this afternoon with regard to who phoned whom. I would like to reiterate what my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) said. My office did not receive a telephone call on this. All of that aside, the issue is why this is being debated today in the House of Commons. If we had known in advance that we would be having this debate we would have been able to have the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) here in order that he could discuss an issue which I know is near and dear to his heart. We would then be much closer to approval than we are at this time.

I am reminded of the committee meeting when the mayors appeared before us. The NDP Opposition made this motion before even hearing the testimony of the mayors of Vancouver Island. Political fancy footwork is great, but I think it is jeopardizing the possibility of a vote on this motion and I do not think it is fair to the mayors of Vancouver Island. I think we should consider this motion seriously. I am in favour of it and would like to move concurrence right now but there are a few more people who want to speak on this subject. However, I suggest that the phone system of the Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) be examined because it certainly was not working over the past few days.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just said that there are a few other Members who wish to speak in this debate. In other words, this will obviously not come to a vote because there will be government Members speaking on the motion. I would just like to take 30 seconds to point out that this motion was passed unanimously by a standing committee of the House of Commons, which committee is made up of Conservative, Liberal, and NDP members. It was unanimously endorsed and called the sixth report. It was voted on and agreed to by Members from all sides of the House. What does it matter who made phone calls? Why would you need to phone Members to talk about something that has been agreed to by a standing committee of the House of Commons? Why do we need more discussion when this has been adequately dealt with in the standing committee?

Why would a Member of the House of Commons disagree with the way in which this motion is put? It says, "Your committee recommends that the Government consider the advisability of funding this proposal". Who would be against a motion like that, Mr. Speaker? No one should be against such a motion.

With those few remarks, and with only 12 minutes left on the clock until five o'clock, I am going to sit down. The position of the Liberal Party was stated in committee and we stand by the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry. This is a marvelous opportunity to have, on Vancouver Island, an experiment in silvicultural methods that does not involve the use of chemicals as a forest managment tool. It is a marvelous opportunity to put hundred and hundreds of people to work without using chemicals to regenerate the forest industry. Surely no one disagrees with this motion which was passed unanimously in the standing committee made up of representatives of all members of this House from each political party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Let's have a vote.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), speaking on behalf of his Party, inform the House whether he received a phone call in advance informing him that this debate was coming up today?

Mr. Baker: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not receive a phone call. Furthermore, I should not expect to receive a phone call informing me of something that had already been reported to the House in the sixth report. I should not have to receive a phone call to concur in a recommendation to the Government by a standing committee of the House of Commons representing all political parties. Of course I did not receive a phone call. If I had received a phone call I would have thought the Hon. Member was crazy to phone me to ask me to concur in something in which I had already concurred in the standing committee.

Mr. Dick: Has the Hon. Member talked to the forestry critic in his Party to learn whether that Member received a phone call?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Where are you, in a courtroom?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that question warrants an answer. The hon. gentleman is trying to keep me on my feet for the next 10 minutes to use up time so that we cannot have a vote. Therefore, I will not answer any more questions from the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Debate.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, today we have seen a lack of confidence in the House. The manner in which this important matter was brought up today shows the unwillingness of the NDP to play by the rules and procedures that have been set up in the House. Earlier today in a House Leaders meeting, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party asked for a pledge from our House Leader that there be no surprises. However, his Party has turned around today with their own surprise, playing dirty pool, without phoning those who they say they phoned.

In other words, it appears that they cannot be believed. They have brought in a subject that was set down to be dealt with on the twenty-eight. Rather than saying when they would raise the issue, they have introduced it at a time when the Minister responsible for this subject is away.

I can tell you right now that if they want to play those kinds of games and that sort of politics, they will not get an answer. There will not be a vote today. We will talk until our Minister is back because the Minister also wants to speak on this matter. It is dirty tricks like this which confuse this place, cause wasted time and interruption. The New Democratic Party is simply playing politics and using this federal chamber to push New Democratic views in an attempt to win the next provincial election. It is the same trick as they are using in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): It is his brother who is the Leader.

Mr. Dick: They do the same thing in Saskatchewan. If that Party had taken this matter seriously, it would have consulted with us. However, they refused to do so.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order for clarification. This matter has been on the Order Paper for over three months. Every Member of the House has received it in their office. They knew full well that this debate could come up on any day, at any time. The Hon. Member is not helping the Vancouver mayors at all with his remarks.

Mr. Dick: If that Member and the New Democratic Party were serious, they would have consulted with us. We always consult in the House and we would have ensured that this matter came forward. Instead, they brought on a debate on a day when we were dealing with Family Allowances within the Budget. Now, they are postponing this debate in an attempt to do something else which they knew would not proceed because the Minister is away.

Why did you wait for three months? Two of those months were holidays. Then you waited for a day when the Minister is not here. Rather than being decent in this place, the New Democratic Party refuses to consult. They come to the House Leaders meetings to beg us to consult with them all of the time because they do not want to be surprised. In the meantime, they want to play politics and waste the time of the House. It is unforgiveable that they only want to play politics. The time for that is during the election campaign. Why waste the time of the House? The Hon. Member, smiling behind his hand, thinks they are going to help their colleagues in British Columbia. Quite frankly, he is not even serious or he would have thought of other people first.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That expulsion of wind over there is not conductive to the kind of non-partisan debate we have had this afternoon about the merits of the project. It has been on the Order Paper for three months—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Obviously that is not a point of order.

Mr. Dick: That is typical of the NDP, trying to use a phoney point of order to get back into the debate when the member has already had an opportunity to speak. He does not care about the rules and what is going on.

Certainly, this is an innocuous resolution. It has been accepted unanimously by all parties and does not commit anyone to anything. I am simply trying to say that if his Party had the decency, the manners and a modicum of courtesy here they would probably accomplish much more for Canadians as a result of our working together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: No one disagrees with the sixth report. We have supported it in committee where we have the great majority of Members. However, we are waiting for the return of the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew), who is responsible for this matter. It is only a recommendation. It states that the committee recommends that the Government consider the advisability—there are two weasel words if I ever saw them.

An Hon. Member: You supported it.

Mr. Dick: I was not on the committee and I do not pretend to speak for people when I was not there. It recommends that the Government consider the advisability of funding this proposal. I did not sit on the committee, but I am surprised that it was not more strongly worded. I am surprised that the NDP believe all they can do is support a recommendation that is not very strongly worded. Let us assume that the Government accepts the proposal that it might consider whether or not it was advisable to take certain action. The next stage recommends that if the Government accepts to consider the proposal, only then would the Government consider the recommendation that it use funds outside of the ERDA agreement which the Government signed with the province. It is the largest ERDA agreement that has ever been signed between British Columbia and the federal Government. The Liberals were not able to sign such an agreement and their kissing cousins, the NDP, were never able to encourage the Liberals to sign one. The Progressive Conservative Government signed it because we are concerned about forestry and people. We want to restore the economy in that province. We are not accomplishing this through tricks or by surprise.

We are doing it through consultation with the province and various people in an attempt to arrive at an all encompassing proposal and agreement that will benefit that area. According to this recommendation, the money could come from the ERDA Agreement or from outside. It is simply recommending that it might be from outside. While no one can disagree with the report, we will not adopt this tactic and accept the manner in which the NDP is trying to—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): One minute and twelve seconds to go.

Mr. Dick: The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) wants to speak up. He represents an automotive city in southern Ontario. I suppose the Hon. Member for Brant knows much about the forest industry.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You better believe it.

Mr. Dick: You probably do not even have a sawmill in your riding, unless you saw up used cars. However, since he is a member of the NDP, he just wants to add to the confusion.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You are confusing Brantford for Brampton. Go back to your geography. We do not make cars.

Mr. Dick: I know where you are from. Do you think you are from Brampton? I know that you come from Brantford. You do not know your geography. I never mentioned Brampton. Perhaps he wants to move there.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): We do not make cars in Brantford.

Mr. Dick: Maybe he has given up on Brantford. If the New Democratic Party and the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River really wanted to benefit fellow British Columbians they would know that there is agreement between parties when dealing with any matters in the House. We agree on times and if a spokesman is not available, the debate is postponed in order to accommodate that party.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being 5 o'clock, the House will now proceed with the consideration of Private Members Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope that as soon as the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) is back in the House, we will resume this debate on concurrence.

HEALTH

ADVISABILITY OF INTRODUCING LEGISLATION RESPECTING RIGHTS OF PATIENTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should introduce legislation to ensure, that in communication between physician and patient, a basic human right should include the right of the patient to know one's own state of health and the content of medicines and remedies acquired in drugstores by way of prescriptions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in developing this motion this afternoon, I would like to illustrate the relationship between the individual who buys a prescription over the counter in a drugstore, the patient and the physician. This is a very complex subject and the time available will not do it justice. The subject is of profound importance to each of us.

When we need a prescription, we want to know and we should know what the prescription contains. That knowledge is such that should be available in detail. In addition, we should know what the side effects are of a particular medicine and what are the counter indications. For instance, when one is taking one drug, and another is prescribed, we should know the effect of it on your well-being, when and how often to take the medication and last, but no least, the purpose of the medication. This right to know does not exist at the present. A patient in his or her relations with the druggist would be much better served if he or she were to have access to complete information and be fully aware of the contents, the effects and the purpose of the medication. Let me repeat that I am talking here of prescription drugs sold over the counter. Drugs that are bought off the shelf have that information. Information, however, is often poorly written, sometimes unclear and often in small print causing difficulties, particularly for our senior citizens.

When it comes to the purchase over the counter of prescription drugs, a lot of work needs to be done. In Canada we have a SIM program, supplementary information medication but it is not mandatory. This program was initiated, I believe in 1981 by the then Minister of National Health and Welfare. The specifics of a medication are explained in detail on a card. It seems the public is little aware of the existence of this supplementary information medication system. The province of British Columbia, however, has a similar system, but for the rest of Canada, it can be safely said that the onus to obtain information about the content of a drug rests with the consumer. The consumer must ask the druggist. The druggist may be very busy, but he will provide the information. What about cases when the druggist provides information that is at conflict with the information given by the physician? Because the onus is presently on the consumer to obtain this information, it is perhaps fair to say that the information is volatile when given in a verbal manner and in competition with other demands imposed on the druggist. Therefore, it is important that this type of information not be left to the consumer but become a mandatory exercise. That is why I put this motion on the Order Paper.

We should also ensure that the supplementary information medication system, to which I referred a moment ago, cover all types of prescriptions and provide the fullest information that can be made available at any given time to the consuming public. When we buy corn flakes, the contents are listed on the package. However, when we buy a prescription drug, we do not know what we are getting unless we make a specific request. The information exists somewhere. Why not make this information automatically available to the consumer? After all a person's health is most important.

It seems to me that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) have an important joint responsibility to protect the Canadian consumer who purchases a drug over the counter.

I will conclude this part of my remarks by saying that there are many jurisdictions that require this information be given in a manner readily understood, printed and not left to memory, resulting in a more satisfactory relationship between the consumer of the over the counter prescription and those who provide it.

In the time available to me, I will move on with the other half of the motion before this House, namely the right of the patient to know one's own state of health. I have here a copy of the Code of Ethics published in 1984 by the Canadian Medical Association. I have read the code. It contains a guide to the ethical behaviour of physicians, the responsibilities to the patient, the responsibilities to the profession and the responsibilities to society. It is an excellent booklet, but I was unable to find in it any reference to the right of the patient to know. Why is that? All I have been able to discover in a brief search in an attempt to answer that question was the doctrine of informed consent. I have been told that the Canadian courts are still labouring to qualify the doctrine of informed consent and that the English courts have rejected that doctrine. In Canada it would appear that the expression "informed consent" ought to be replaced with the expression "informed decision-making" or "informed choice" on the part of the patient. Why is that? I submit that it is because it is important that physicians and other health professionals not be induced to believe that they may or should use information simply for the purpose of persuading patients to agree to treatments or to medical goals which professionals have determined to be in the best interest of patients.

As Bernard Dickens wrote in an excellent study on this matter, "the true role of medical information is to serve the autonomy of the patient, permitting the patient to exercise choices which accord to the patient's wishes". Therefore, the patient is enabled to govern himself or herself. At times, as you have probably experienced, Mr. Speaker, the wish of the patient may be in conflict with his or her apparent interest. The two do not always overlap. It is quite true that most people wish that their best interest be served, but when conflict arises between the wish of the patient and the interest of the patient, then I submit that in a free society the patient should be enabled to govern himself or herself by what he or she wishes. Therefore the function of the physician possessing professional or highly specialized knowledge is to provide information which the patient would then consider in order to exercise his or her choice. That is what you would want to do, Mr. Speaker. In doing that, you may decide to proceed in a manner in which your interest and your wish coincide. However, there are many times in certain instances where you may decide to proceed according to your wishes and it may be considered by those surrounding you, including your physician, not to be in your interest. That decision ultimately has to be left in the hands of the patient and, in order to make that decision, the patient has to be informed.

I view of all these considerations and the observations which I have made, it would follow that the right to know of the patient and the imperative necessity of rewriting the code should be discussed in an informed debate of this kind. Of course this will not happen overnight and it will not happen without resistance. However, we know that some physicians will be supportive of the right to know on the part of the patient. In a society which is increasingly so capable and so advanced in its ability to store and distribute information, some physicians will understand that this type of ultimate service of providing information to the patient is not only incumbent upon modern day physicians but is also possible.

Therefore it is important to engage the House in this debate. I will be very interested in hearing the views of my colleagues on all side of the House. I stressed a few moments ago the rights of the consumer when it comes to the purchase of drugs over the counter. Again I stress that there is an important political role to be played in this instance on the part of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Evidently he would have to give leadership and ensure that we in Canada develop the necessary understanding—politicians, professional people and the public at large—of the profound importance in everyone's life of having the right to full information on the state of one's health, which is the most precious, important and lasting gift given to us as individuals. I leave these points with the House and look forward to what might be a very enlightening debate.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for placing this motion on the Order Paper and for giving the House an opportunity to examine, even in a very limited way during Private Members' Hour, a subject which is of some concern to many Canadians.

The motion before the House contains two parts. One is that an individual should have the right to know the state of one's health and the other is that an individual should and ought to know the content of any medicines and remedies acquired in drugstores by way of prescription. Both those items are so self-evident that I will not take up too much time of the House debating them. If one visits a medical practitioner, it seems to me that one is entitled to know the exact state of one's health. That is self-evident as well. That is the case with medicines and remedies, particularly prescription drugs. Over the years we have known of numerous cases, thalidomide being one of the worst, I would think, where drugs were prescribed and had a serious adverse effect not only on mothers but also on children. Of course there have been other cases over the years. Everyone who is asked to consume a drug or chemical that alters the state of their being should have the right to know its effect on their health and even on the health of their offspring.

• (1720)

It is for all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I think that this motion should properly be referred to the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs Committee of the House so that further discussion can take place. I know full well, as does the Hon. Member for Davenport, and other Hon. Members that much of the legislation dealing with prescription drugs falls under provincial authority.

However, since many provincial Governments do not seem to be concerning themselves with this, it seems only right and proper that a body such as a standing committee of the House of Commons should make itself available to hear witnesses and to hear concerns not only from individual Canadians but from the health services as well.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased on behalf of the people of Ottawa-Carleton to speak to the motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), a man who also speaks with conviction as he has done again today.

Former Bill C-43, Schedule II, (Section 2) was introduced to extend existing laws of Canada that:

> Protect the privacy of individuals with respect to personal information about themselves held by a government institution and provide individuals with a right of access to such information.

The Privacy Act under subsection 12(1) provides that:

> —every individual who is a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident within the meaning of the Immigration Act, 1976, has a right to and shall, on request, be given access to
>
> (a) any personal information about the individual contained in a personal information bank; and
> (b) any other personal information about the individual under the control of a government institution with respect to which the individual is able to provide sufficiently specific information on the location of the information as to render it reasonably retrievable by the government institution.

Special consideration is given to medical records in the Privacy Act where in subsection 28 it is stated that:

> —the head of a government institution may refuse to disclose any personal information requested under subsection 12(1) that relates to the physical or mental health of the individual who requested it where the examination of the information by the individual would be contrary to the best interests of the individual.

The Act deals with collection, retention and disposal of personal information, protection of personal information banks, publication of a personal information index, access to personal information, exemptions, receipt and investigation of complaints, review of exempt banks, review of compliance, reports to Parliament, review by the Federal Court, the Office of the Privacy Commissioner and offences.

Administrative directives of Departments cover the application of the Act and deal with delegation of authority, roles and responsabilities, procedures, complaints and appeals. The scope of the Act, Mr. Speaker, and its implementation, indicate that this is the appropriate instrument to complement in the federal sphere provincial statutes and ethical guidelines and directives of medical organizations. There would appear, therefore, to be no need nor indeed constitutional right to enact new federal legislation to ensure patients of access to knowledge about the state of their health. I am certain that provincial codes of medical ethics and professional conduct are sufficient to allow medical practitioners to keep their patients properly informed about the state of their health.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government is fully implementing the law and its primary concern is to protect individual rights. Ministers can refuse to hand over all or any part of a medical file when they consider that imparting the information would be detrimental to the patient.

The following paragraphs deal especially with the enforcement of the Protection of Privacy Act by the Department of National Health and Welfare as far as its records are concerned.

To be in a better position to decide whether access to any part of or to a whole medical file should be allowed, the Minister can ask the advice of a duly qualified physician. If he so wishes, the Minister may ask the applicant to examine the file before a duly qualified physician who can explain the information to be found in it. The right to peruse a file extends to all documents it includes whatever their origin unless the patient has been denied access.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, on receipt of a request for access to a medical record under the provisions of the Privacy Act managers must seek an opinion as to the presence on the record of any information likely not to be in the patient's best interest. It is the patient's interests and not that of the Department or practitioner that is considered. This opinion may be sought from a duly qualified medical practitioner on staff or from a currently licensed medical practitioner in private practice who also knows the patient.

It is important to emphasize that when withholding of personal information in medical records is being considered, applicants may have the information examined by a practitioner of his or her own choice, providing that the institution is satisfied that the practitioner chosen is qualified to determine whether or not disclosure could be contrary to the applicant's best interests.

The practitioner may advise that the record be released in its entirety, that it be released to the pyisician of the patient's choice for explanation to him or her, that it be made available for the patient to inspect at his or her convenience with a physician at hand to explain it to him or her, or that part or all of the record be withheld in the patient's best interests.

If the advice is to release the record, the manager will either release the record, authorize the privately practising physician to release the record to the patient or return it to the manager for release, ask the patient for the name of his family doctor and if his qualifications are acceptable release the record to him with the suggestion that he explain the record to the patient if he considers it inadvisable to show it, or ask the patient to inspect the record at a time and place convenient for him or her. There seems to be in this particular instance ample opportunity to explore one's own records.

If the advice is to withhold all or part of the record the manager prepares the documents for release with any suggested exempt words or sentences blanked out and in their place the words "withheld by ministerial decision under Section 28 of the Privacy Act". The manager can then send the request, the documents and the reasons for denial of access provided by the medical practitioner to the departmental privacy co-ordinator for preparation of a letter for the Minister's signature explaining the denied items and notifying the applicant of his or her rights of complaint and appeal.

● (1730)

The process described in the foregoing indicates the seriousness and indeed thoughtfulness with which the Government views its responsibilities to individuals requesting access to personal medical information under the Act. There are, of course, safeguards to protect an individual against harm which might result from the release of information. Although separate data is not available for medical records, experience indicates that there are few situations over-all in which it is necessary to withhold information requested by patients.

It can be concluded that within the jurisdiction assigned to the federal Government under the Constitution, the Privacy Act meets the need for personal access to one's own medical records and no extension of the Act or new legislation is required for this purpose. The Act complements well the ethical and other legislative considerations which influence the practice of medicine which is primarily within provincial jurisdiction. In any case, as I indicated earlier—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one might also observe that communication between the patient and his physician is based on continued relations, mutual respect and interpersonal discussions which can be submitted to a statutory control as in the case of records.

Mr. Speaker, it should be usually expected that access to relevant medical data is the basis of patient-physician relations. Many other opportunities are available to the patient, among others that of selecting another physician.

[English]

I will terminate my comments at this point. I would underline again that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is obviously a man of significant compassion who wants to see done that which is best for patients and the people not only of his riding but of other parts of Canada. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the chance to speak briefly to this particular motion.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) on moving a motion with such a broad social impact.

However, as my colleague said a few minutes ago, communications between physician and patient belong to an area of the practice of medicine that comes under provincial jurisdiction. The provinces have delegated responsibility for regulating the practice of medicine to the provincial colleges of physicians and surgeons or their equivalent, directed by a secretary general. The colleges decide whether a physician is entitled to practise medicine and issue a certificate to that end. They provide guidelines on issues such as patient-physician communications and provide advice to patients. Thus, physicians are advised of their obligations and patients of their rights.

All provincial colleges of physicians and surgeons and all Governments recognize the patient's right to know his state of health. The increased concern of the public in general and special interest groups in particular has brought about a gradual change in public views on patient-physician communications and the scope of such communications. These views have been incorporated in the Code of Ethics and Professional Conduct. The Code of Ethics of the Canadian Medical Association has been adopted by nine provincial colleges of physicians and surgeons, and the tenth Code, that of Quebec, contains similar clauses in its rules on medical practice. The Code of Ethnics of the Canadian Medical Association was recently revised to reflect a change to a more active view of patient-physician relations and the responsibilities of both parties.

The most recent Code of the Canadian Medical Association which goes back to December 1984, prescribes under the heading of Rights of the Patient, that a physician shall:

> first, recognize that his knowledge is limited and if necessary, recommend that the patient have recourse to other sources of advice and medical services;
>
> second, respect the right of the patient to choose his own physician and decide whether or not to take the advice given (even after choosing a physician, the patient has the right to ask him to consult other physicians of his choice);
> third, respect any confidences received from the patient or a colleague and refrain from disclosing such information without the patient's permission, unless he is obliged under law to do otherwise; when acting on behalf of a third party, he shall ensure that the patient understands his legal responsibility with regard to that third party before proceeding with the examination; and he shall recommend only those diagnostic measures deemed necessary to help him treat the patient and administer to the patient the treatment he believes will be conductive to his well-being (he also has a duty to communicate his observation to the patient and to inform him of his recommendations).

He should supply the patient, with all the information requested by him in order that he may receive any benefit he may be entitled to.

Finally, he should, try and soothe the anxiety of the relatives and work with them in the interest of the patient.

Although the imparting of information to patients by physicians mainly comes under provincial jurisdiction, the Privacy Act provides access to medical information in Federal Government files. This concerns people like natives, Canadian Forces' personnel, war veterans and penitentiary inmates who are looked after partly or totally by the Federal Government. Also, people who have applied for disability pensions under the Canada Pension Plan.

The right to be made aware of one's health status has many facets. There is namely the basic right to know, whatever the reason or qualification. The need to know in order to take steps, make decisions concerning medical care, legal procedures or one's own lifestyle for instance. The right to know what personal data are kept in the various data banks. One of the main requirements imposed upon physicians by provincial colleges of physicians is that they promptly make information available to a third party, where requested by the patient, in order to ensure continuous care, security or the financial arrangements needed. Under the Ontario Health Disciplines Act, Regulation 448 of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario provides that failure to make available within a reasonable period of time and without reason a report or certificate requested by a patient or his authorized agent concerning a medical examination or care provided is a professional offence. Patients may lodge complaints with the College against physicians who do not comply with that requirement. The College will conduct an investigation and take the required disciplinary action. In Ontario, reports of disciplinary action taken by the College are published each year and distributed to all medical doctors. The limits of acceptable medical conduct is thereby clearly defined, and doctors can amend their behaviour therefrom.

The standard in doctor-patient relations has evolved, from an attitude that could be considered paternalistic to the modern concept of a tacit mutual contract. The latter concept implies that both parties have obligations, and the patient needs sufficient information to make an enlightened decision.

Even though in some cases, by court order for instance, copies of medical files can be obtained, a physician is generally under no obligation to make the complete file available to a patient or his agent. Pertinent information is generally sufficient, such as results of examinations performed and care provided. A doctor may however give a patient a copy of his file, if he so wishes. Medical files are more or less considered as notes, and therefore the property of the physician rather than of the patient.

Nobody really expects a physician to warn a patient about all the risks inherent in a treatment, only the most obvious and the most serious. However the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that a physician must warn the patient about the least significant risks involved if the patient wants to know. The physician is guilty of negligence if he fails to do so and if the treatment produces after-effects about which the patient had sought information.

The decision rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada in 1980 in the cases Lepp versus Hopp and Reible versus Hughes was unequivocal: the patient is entitled to be given information on the state of his health and on the after-effects of a treatment or intervention and the physician is dutybound to provide them. He must give enough information so that the patient can make a sound decision with respect to his treatment. A physician can of course use his own judgment to decide just how much information he should give, but he cannot refuse to give additional information should the patient so request.

In certain cases, for instance in the regulations under the Privacy Act and the regulations of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Manitoba, safeguards are provided to protect individuals from such information in their file as might be cruel or harmful if it were communicated to them. Here is how Privacy Act Section 28 reads:

> The head of a government institution may refuse to disclose any personal information requested under subsection 12(1) that relates to the physical or mental health of the individual who requested it where the examination of the information by the individual would be contrary to the best interests of the individual.

The Manitoba regulations provide that the information given to a patient must contain all the relevant information that he ought to know.

I should like to emphasize the progress made over the past few years which makes it possible for patients to acquaint themselves with personal information contained in their hospital files. The guidelines vary from province to province depending on their respective policies.

The right of access of an individual to information concerning him or her has made remarkable progress. This is true of both medical and general information. These changes stem from a better education of the public, an evolution of attitudes and perceptions, new codes of ethics, as well as new regulations and legislations. Improvements will certainly continue as society is making new progress. In the secrecy of a patient-physician relationship, the patient should expect that his right to know, to ask for and obtain information is respected. It seems that this issue is being dealt with through new legislative guidelines and code of ethics standards. Open discussions and mutual respect are more likely to favour a realization of this objective then a Federal amendment to the Criminal Code.

The practice of medicine, with which the Hon. Member's motion seems to be concerned about, is a provincial responsibility. It is now subject to provincial legislation. This legislation is complemented by the Privacy Act, former Bill C-43, which provides that > —every individual who is a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident within the meaning of the Immigration Act, 1976, has a right to and shall, on request, be given access to

> (a) any personal information about the individual contained in a personal information bank; and
> (b) any other personal information about the individual under the control of a government institution with respect to which the individual is able to provide sufficiently specific information on the location of the information as to render it reasonably retrievable by the government institution.

Mr. Speaker, the present system would appear to be fair and equitable. It promotes co-operation, not repression, and provides for a complaints process to settle any problems that might arise.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by addressing the Hon. Member's first point, that is, the right of the patient to know his or her own state of health. It is the position of this Government that, with certain constraints, each Canadian is entitled to information on his or her state of health.

The situation now in this country is, of course, very complex when we start looking into this area. In Canada, the laws governing records such as these cannot be found in any one single place. There are no health records Acts in Canada either at the provincial or federal level. Instead, there are provisions within literally dozens of Acts with respect to patient health records, regulations and, of course, numerous court decisions which are directly involved. Reference has been made to provincial hospital Acts, hospital by-laws, nursing home Acts, public health Acts, occupational health and safety Acts, and even the Narcotic Control Act and regulations made under these various Acts. There have been relatively few court decisions regarding patient records in Canada, at least when compared to the United States, where governmental agencies, both at the federal and state level, have a great number of background cases upon which they can draw. The result of this, of course, is that in Canada the practice of compiling, storing, protecting and ultimately destroying patient health records is largely left in the hands of those who are responsible for gathering it, including government agencies operating various Canadian health insurance programs and other situations.

The primary purpose for collecting and maintaining patient health records is to enable health personnel to treat and care for the patient, in order to reach valid judgments concerning the diagnosis, prognosis and cause of the illness. It also provides a method of ensuring communications between the many different persons involved in the case of a single individual, even within a single institution.

It has been the view of this Government that patients should normally have access to information on their own state of health. However, in most health care institutions, patients do not have physical access to their records and almost certainly would be refused access if they were to ask for it. The argument in support of this position is the generally recognized fact that the patient record comprises a series of entries which serve as a form of communication among various personnel in an institution and as a reminder to those who made those entries. The record is not intended to be a medium of communication from health personnel to the patient. In other words, it is a fairly technical communication. They are usually written in a manner which transmits technical information between specially trained personnel. The entries may, in fact, not be understandable by patients or may be entirely misleading to the untrained individual. For example, routine tests which are undertaken to eliminate the possibility of certain disagnoses within a different diagnostic spectrum may be mistakenly understood by the patient as a form of suspicion or a particular condition, for example, a form of cancer, a venereal disease, or some other disease of that nature.

The points notwithstanding, it is our view that the patient is still entitled to review his or her medical records on the most up-to-date documents that are available in the hospital. We also believe that the patient should receive professional medical assistance, if requested, to enable him or her to interpret the kind of technical information that is contained in the records. I make reference to the use of professional assistance to obviate any misinterpretation which could alarm a patient or interfere with an optimistic approach to treatment and thereby in many cases do more harm than good. This is certainly the case when we are dealing with emotional illness and psychiatric disorders.

We support the right of a patient to this information because his or her treatment, by law, is really solely at the discretion of the patient. Once in possession of this information, the patient will be in a much stronger position to determine whether he or she wants to consent to treatment or to its continuation. I do not need to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that health care is a provincial jurisdiction and that comment thas been made several times today during the debate, and that any changes in federal jurisdiction must be cognizant of provincial responsibilities. At the present time there appears to be no provincial consensus on this issue or on the issue of the right of the patient to view his or her medical records.

A number of provinces, though, have passed legislation giving patients a limited right of access to their treatment records. For example, according to the Alberta Hospital Act a patient does not have a right to his records. The Act is permissive rather than mandatory in its consideration. The law in Alberta allows, but does not require, a hospital board or employee, the provincial Minister of Health, someone authorized by him, or a physician to divulgue patient information. The patient who is denied such information may appeal this decision in a court. The Alberta legislation actually favours the release of information but it places the onus of showing why it should be released on the person who is seeking that sort of information.

The Province of Saskatchewan has a different view. It permits the release of hospital records but has not established an appeal of the procedure to the courts. It does, however, state that the records shall be disclosed upon a court order.

Ontario has a similar regulation for its hospitals, as does the Province of Prince Edward Island. The Hospitals Act of Nova Scotia is similar to the Alberta legislation but allows a refusal on the grounds that "it would not be in the best interests of the patient to make available that information". An appeal can then be made to a county court judge.

Quebec, under its act respecting health services and social services, provides patients access to the records in what are known as "establishments" under the Act. These are defined as local community service centres, a hospital centre, a functional rehabilitation centre, a social service centre or a reception centre. A person refused may, under Quebec law, apply to the courts.

In all provinces, special attention is paid to mental health legislation which governs the psychiatric institutions as distinct from the general or public hospitals. There are, of course, obvious reasons for this distinction.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, some Canadian jurisdictions do not have specific legislative provisions or regulations governing patient access to records. Some do, but even those have provisions for only some types of institutions or health care providers and not others. It seems logical and just that Canadians throughout the country should have equal rights with respect to this particular matter. It is equally obvious that uniformity in this respect will require extensive consultation with the provinces, with health associations and with various people involved in the medical industry. Serious consideration must be given to needs, benefits and, of course, risks, because there are a great number of risks involved in the kind of subject we are discussing today.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my attention to the question of the rights of Canadians to know the contents of medicines and remedies which are acquired in any store by way of prescription. This is the second element of the Hon. Member's motion which is before us today. The Government supports the right of mentally competent individuals to know the nature of their drugs. The need to know is greater today, of course, than it has ever been. The fact that modern prescription drugs are far more effective and potent than anything available in the past leads us to expect great benefits when they are prescribed for us, and, of course we expect an instant cure and healing.

No one can argue about the magnificent efficacy of drugs such as poliomyelitis vaccines. We are all aware of the tremendous improvement in cure aids which have accrued to mankind as a result of many of the modern antibiotics. Canadians can never forget the outstanding success of insulin in the treatment of diabetes. We are constantly reminded of significant improvements in the drug control of cardiovascular diseases such as high blood pressure, angina pectoris and the prevention of strokes and heart attacks. These are the good stories, Mr. Speaker. They tell of the beneficial effects of drugs but, unfortunately, as we all know, drugs have a bad side to many of their actions.

Our tendency to emphasize the expected benefits of drug therapy tends to conceal the high incidence of adverse reactions which occur with many drugs. There are in fact no drugs which provide benefits without incurring some risks. We believe that before a patient agrees to take a drug, he or she should be fully advised of the expected benefits of the therapy as well as the possible toxicities of the medicine. We are too well aware of the stories often heard of patients complaining that they would never have taken one drug or another if they had been told beforehand of its toxic effects. Every one of us has stories and illustrations to demonstrate that. It is the position of this Government, Mr. Speaker, that each patient should be informed of both the beneficial and detrimental effects of a drug before he or she agrees to take it. A well informed Canadian is the best person to decide his or her own drug regimen. I wonder how many Canadians would be dependent on Valium today if they had been told 10 years ago that the continual consumption of this mind-dulling chemical could result in the addiction which has become a bit of a problem for our society.

To this point, Mr. Speaker, I have been discussing only the active ingredients in a drug. I would like now to direct my attention to the so-called "inactive" or "non-medicinal" components in the tablet or liquid. These chemicals are added, as we all know, to assist in the formulation of the product. Without them, tablets would rapidly fall apart, drugs would disintegrate and liquids would taste badly—and my experience with them has been they taste badly anyway. However, these ingredients are necessary to the successful formulation of a product suitable for human consumption. In some circumstances it is these non-medicinal ingredients which are the culprits responsible for toxic effects. Some of these ingredients can induce an allergic type reaction while others can trigger highly undesirable disfunctions of various bodily organs. This very fact creates a problem for the treating physician who is generally not aware of the non-medicinal ingredient of drugs and who may, unwittingly, prescribe an upsetting medication for persons who are sensitive or allergic to a specific chemical substance contained within it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. I recognize the Government whip on a point of order.

HEALTH

ADVISABILITY OF INTRODUCING LEGISLATION RESPECTING RIGHTS OF PATIENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should introduce legislation to ensure, that in communication between physician and patient, a basic human right should include the right of the patient to know one's own state of health and the content of medicines and remedies acquired in drugstores by way of prescriptions.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am always pleased to sit down when my whip stands up.

I was talking just before I sat down about the ingredients in medicines which are not part of the drugs themselves and, therefore, do not show up very often. At this time there is no listing of these non-medicinal ingredients in Canadian drugs. We find, therefore, essentially what happens is that the doctor, as I mentioned, prescribes a drug and may not know some of the implications of what he is doing. This situation is not acceptable to the Government and we are happy to know that professionals from the Health Protection Branch are discussing the situation with representatives of the pharmaceutical industry. It is my information that the industry is responsive to suggestions for a change and the day may not be too long away when both the active and inactive ingredients will be listed on the drug bottles and the information will be provided to our health professions.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

MULTICULTURALISM—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—RACE RELATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to review a question I asked the then Minister of State for Multiculturalism on May 16, 1985. The question was twofold. It concerned the conference between the federal Minister of Multiculturalism and his provincial counterparts. I asked the question because Canadians, in particular, minority communities across this land, were anxious to know what this conference would develop.

We on this side were certainly pleased to see this first-ever meeting take place. However, this Government and that Minister created great expectations over this meeting. Every time I and other Members of this House rose to ask a question concerning his Ministry, his response was to wait until the conference; wait until May 14 when, for the first time, we will be sitting down around one table and making the decisions which have to be made. Well, we waited until May 14. We waited until May 15. Then, on May 16, the question was asked: Waht were the conclusions?

At the end of that two day conference in Winnipeg, a two-page communiqué was issued. It was absolutely devoid of any results. There was no mention of the crucial issue flowing from the Abella Report, no mention of the recommendations in the Equality Now! report, or heritage languages, education, human rights, federal-provincial multiculturalism Acts, the Japanese-Canadian redress issue or, last but certainly not least, racism. There was absolutely nothing in that communiqué to tell Canadians clearly and forcefully what those Ministers discussed and what occurred at that meeting. Therefore, I take this opportunity today and I hope the Hon. Member responding for the Government will be able to tell this House and Canadians what has resulted from that meeting on May 14.

The second part of my question was very specific and related to racism. At a press conference following this meeting the then Minister of State for Multiculturalism stated: "Racism really falls outside of our jurisdiction". Mr. Speaker, much to my great surprise these words were uttered following this conference by the then Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It is completely unacceptable for that Minsiter to suggest that fighting racism does not fall within his jurisdiction. First, racism knows no boundaries. It knows no jurisdiction. Secondly, it is the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, beyond any other Minister, who has to fight racism because most of his mandate deals with race relations.

A third criticism aimed at this conference was that it was a closed-door two-day seminar. The communities the conference was supposed to be addressing were not permitted to submit recommendations an agenda, or appear before the Ministers to make their representations. Are we, the Canadian people, the House of Commons, going to be allowed to know what happened behind those closed doors?

• (1805)

If it is the philosophy of the Government that there would be better results if the meeting were held behind closed doors, there is an onus upon it to tell minority groups and all Canadian people what in fact transpired at that conference. Can the Parliamentary Secretary or any other Member clarify what the Minister meant when he said that racism does not fall within his jurisdiction? I see that my time has expired, Mr.

Speaker, and I look forward to hearing the response of the Government.

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer the question of my colleague from York West (Mr. Marchi). I think that the steps taken by the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Jelinek) since we came into office prove beyond a doubt that our Government assumes its responsibilities and is glad to promote this country's cultural heritage.

Among the main objectives of the Minister of State (Multiculturalism), one is to maintain and especially promote equal opportunity for all Canadians, certainly with respect to racism and racial discrimination. The Government fully endorses the basic principle whereby cultural and racial diversity is not only acceptable but advantageous as well. That is why we have been actively promoting the notion of multiculturalism.

This notion entails two major parts, one cultural, the other social. On the one hand, we assume our cultural diversity and heritage. On the other hand, on the social level, we strive for equality among Canadians. While doing so, we must keep in mind those who, because they belong to racial minorities, are faced with various obstacles.

Mr. Speaker, our Government has done a lot to promote progress. It has taken steps to achieve its objective of equality of opportunities for all Canadians. The House of Commons has established a Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. The Federal Government's multiculturalism branch has been raised to the rank of sector.

This Government has undertaken to implement all proposals concerning equity in employment for all visible minorities which ranks, therefore, among the targets, together with women, natives and the handicaped.

The Minister of State soon will make available for wide distribution the United Nations' Action Program for the second Decade in the fight against racism and racial discrimination, in order to better inform Canadians of the various issues at hand.

In view of the tremendous influence of the written and electronic press, he intends to intensify his efforts to encourage the media into establishing voluntary guidelines on the fair representation of visible minorities.

Further, a long-term priority will be the monitoring of the implementation of the recommendations to be found in Equality Now!, which studies many issues raised by the United Nations' Action Program. As we know, a number of these issues span many jurisdictions.

As the Federal Minister responsible for implementing the recommendations in the report, the Minister of State is working with his federal colleagues and having them help him implement those recommendations that come under his jurisdiction. He is also hoping to have the co-operation of his counterparts from the provincial and territory Governments whose mandate covers some of the issues raised in the report.

This Government is committed, as is also the responsibility of the Minister of State (Multiculturalism), to ensure there is no barrier to the full participation of every citizen in the political, social and economic life of this country.

FINANCE—DRUG TAX EXEMPTIONS. (B) REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF ALL DRUG TAXES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have had an opportunity to challenge the Government for a particular political stance which it has adopted over the past year and which is becoming increasingly embarrassing to the Government. I speak of its penchant to blame current Government problems on past Liberal excesses. The billion dollar boo-boo of the bankruptcy of the Canadian Commercial Bank is, according to this Government, the fault of the past Liberal Government.

The illness tax which was imposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his first Budget this May gave us our first chance to see the true Tory colours, the ice-blue blood of the Government. It imposed a 10 per cent tax on hundreds, if not thousands, of drugs that are used on a daily basis by Canadians for illnessess as varied as arthritis, cancer, Parkinson's disease, and heart disease.

• (1810)

Last August when the political heat was on, the Government agreed, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), that perhaps it was wrong to impose an illness tax on sufferers of diabetes. When this Party exposed the fact that not only was it taxing diabetics but also taxing those patients with emphysema who needed oxygen, a statement was quickly issued to the effect that certain drugs would be exempted before the House resumed its sitting so that the opposition could not point to the blood and illness tax imposed by the Government.

Therefore, for the public that does not have an opportunity to examine the record of the Government on a daily basis, it seemed as though the problem had been solved. Unfortunately, particularly for those poor people and those families who have to fight illness through over-the-counter medical supplies, the fact is that the Government has left a tax on literally hundreds, if not thousands of drugs.

Let me cite just a few of them for the record so that Canadians will understand that for the first time in our history, the Government has imposed a tax on Pilocarpine which is used by the sufferers of glocoma. It relieves pressure on the eye and if not used blindness results. It is also imposing a tax on Oxsoralen which is used in the fight against skin cancer. Not only is it used for this purpose, it is also considered as an orphan drug, a drug that is not profitable for companies to produce but is produced because of the net benefit to the small number of users who are able to take advantage of it. This is a drug upon which even the drug companies are not benefitting but the Government has seen fit to impose a 10 per cent illness tax. Other examples include Bentylol used in ulcer medication to stop contractions of the stomach and Trihexyphenidyl which is used for the treatment of Parkinson disease.

Most Canadians do not understand the nomenclature of these drugs, but when they are suffering from arthritis and have to consume copious amounts of aspirin on a daily basis merely to relieve themselves from pain and carry on a normal living they do not expect that kind of expenditure to be taxed by the Government.

Furthermore, when the Government says it will reduce the deficit on the backs of the sick people, that illustrates the kind of mentality which is beginning to become clear to Canadians. That is also a simple economic fallacy.

What about the 10 per cent increase on things like dog food for people who have guide dogs which they use to survive? There are 600 people across the country who need their guide dogs to survive.

If 1 per cent of those people who are now taking over-the-counter drugs decide to go to prescription drugs, since they would be potentially covered under a provincial or private plan, the total amount of savings allegedly derived from tthis particular Budget cutback would be wiped out in one fell swoop.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare will stand up and say that taxes have been imposed by the former Liberal Government. In an examination of literally over 2,000 drugs which are now being taxed as a direct result of this initiative in the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in May of this year, the Government was able to find four diagnostic tools—not drugs—which had been taxed under a previous tax measure dating back to 1968. It was with this information that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had the gall to stand in his place and suggest that the Government had not only exempted certain taxes imposed by their Government but also had freed up the system from the high taxation measures of the previous Liberal Government.

The kind of double-speak that is apparent in the Canadian Commercial Bank collapse, the kind of double-speak that is apparent in the Minister of National Health and Welfare's response to my direct questions, will not be accepted by the Canadian people.

• (1815)

Do the Canadian people believe that this Government should tax medication being used in cancer treatment, arthritis, Parkinson's disease, and glaucoma? With the literally thousands of dollars in tax imposed as a direct result of the Wilson Budget, this Government is saying it will fight the deficit on the backs of the sick, the poor, the blind and the elderly. I think it is the kind of political motivation that has shown to Canadians for the first time where this Government's heart really is.

I ask the Government, through the Prime Minister, who refused to answer this question in the House, as well as the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to revoke once and for all this tax which, for the first time in Canadian history, is going to make a profit out of people's illness and potential life-threatening devices.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a certain amount of interest to the Hon. Member's attempt to diffuse the attack which she knows is hurting her Party. It hurt the Liberal Party in a devastating way on September 4, 1984. I am speaking of the problem which the Liberal Party left Canada, namely, the horrendous deficit.

I do not care how any Member of this House slices it, we are now running a deficit of $34 billion a year. The total deficit on an accumulated basis is in the neighbourhood of $200 billion. That deficit was built up from 1974 when the current Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Finance Minister and it accumulated under succeeding Liberal administrations. There is no question about it. The deficit for which we are paying, and if anyone can find some other way to pay for it other than taxing I would be glad to know, was built up by the Liberal Party of Canada.

Suddenly in September of 1984, the Liberals wanted to walk away from the 10, 15 and 17 years of deficit. I know the Hon. Member comes to this House from another forum. It may not have perhaps become clear to her how devastating $25 billion of interest payment is when you try to balance the books. The Hon. Member will know that most of the drugs which are available only on prescription continue to enjoy relief, provided they are properly identified in the schedules attached to the Food and Drugs Act. The Hon. Member will know that all drugs provided to hospital patients are completely exempt. She will also know that we did review the matter and announced on September 6, I believe, after consultation with the industry that certain drugs and equipment would be entitled to relief. Many of these, and some, as the Hon. Member points out, were—

Ms. Copps: Four out of 2,500.

Mr. Lewis: All right, four. The principle is the same. You can expand, slice and divide drugs. As the saying goes, figures sometimes lie and liars sometimes figure. I can always make a case like that. I know the Hon. Member is playing partisan politics with the health of Canadians.

Let me make this very clear. If we did not have the deficit left by the Liberal Party we would not be paying $25 billion in interest on it and we could do a lot more for Canadians, not only through social measures but in job retraining. We wish we did not have the debt, but no matter how much the Hon. Member dislikes it, the Liberal Party of Canada left it for us to deal with. We do not like having to deal with it this way, but we are doing the best we can.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, September 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be now read a second time and referred to a Legislative Committee, and the amendment of Mr. Frith (page 6625).

Mr. Pierre Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the various Members speaking for the Opposition, as they commented on the amendment to the Bill now before the House.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I express my support for this legislation which was introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and is aimed above all, and I think it is important to emphasize that this morning, at restructuring social benefit programs for Canadian families.

Mr. Speaker, by introducing this legislation, the Government has shown it takes its responsibilities seriously by providing a long-term perspective for our social programs, for the greater benefit of Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I always find it rather surprising that the same Opposition Members who have been very vociferous in this debate on social programs were on the Government benches for 20 years, during which they increased this country's debt in a way that was absolutely outrageous, without any consideration for the future and future generations. That we must not forget. Opposition Members keep telling us that enough has been said about the past and that all that is history. I disagree. We are going to talk about the past and they may be sure we will go on talking about it for some time.

During the debate last June on partial de-indexation of pensions, a number of Opposition Members were most inconsistent in their reactions, when they grossly exaggerated the impact of a sound and legitimate program that was presented to Canadian citizens, and in doing so, they completely distorted the debate and destroyed any hope of considering the issue in an objective and realistic manner.

Mr. Speaker, strangely enough, those very same Members who were previously on the Government side took the liberty of capping indexation of family allowances during the last ten years they were in power. If indexation had been maintained over the years, the family allowance would be $20 more than it is now. They never mention that. There are some things they would rather forget. We will get back to that later. The same people who prevented this $20 increase are complaining today about a reduction worth all of 94 cents. They are dramatizing and making a terrific fuss. The same people . . . Mr. Speaker, I think I should repeat that it is easier for them to see the mote in their neighbour's eye than the beam in their own. That is quite obvious today.

An Hon. Member: We cannot see you behind your beam!

Mr. Blais: There are a lot of beams over there. There are quite a few, and we are going to try and remove them one by one. That will teach them to open their eyes, to see not just what suits them but also what does not. We are going to throw some light on the social and economic state of affairs here in Canada. Canadian citizens ought to know what really happened in the past and what is happening now in Canada.

If we could have had full indexation during the last ten years, perhaps that would have been a lesser evil. However, those same Liberal politicians governed this country so badly that we are now practically mired in debt, and today, they are talking about . . . I am thinking of one term, for instance, that has been quoted repeatedly in recent months. I am referring to the term universality. We had to maintain universality. Universality of what, may I ask, Mr. Speaker? The kind of universality we inherited from the previous government meant that all the provinces were opposed to the federal Government. Universality meant the deficit that affected every Canadian citizen. There was the universal concern among all Canadians and all this lasted until we were able to replace that government and Canadians told them loud and clear, in no uncertain terms, what they thought of their Government and the 20 years it was in power before we took over last September.

The Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) said yesterday, and I listened carefully to each and every speaker, that we were a Government of promises. Yes, that is true. We promised to establish a new climate of confidence in this country. And we have. Let them stop their false alarms and the panic button techniques they have been using during the past few months. The people we all meet every weekend are not as upset and concerned as the Opposition would have us believe. We promised to re-establish an open and sincere dialogue with the provinces and to settle a host of problems that were pending and that had started to fester because of the arrogant attitude of the Government at the time.

• (1110)

We also promised to assume our responsibilities and come to grips with the suffocating deficit left us by the previous deserted—not to say routed—Government. In less than a year we managed to bring interest rates back to the lowest level in eight years, an inflation rate of barely 4 per cent whereas they kept it at 12 per cent for years.

An Hon. Member: Keep a straight face when you say that!

Mr. Blais: They conveniently forget those years, Mr. Speaker, and now that inflation stands at less than 4 per cent Canadians are looking to the future with confidence, especially with respect to the social affairs sector with which we are concerned today. Like most of my Government colleagues I have been visiting my riding every weekend for the last year. It gives us an opportunity to meet with youths, middle-aged people and heads of families who all have one thing in common, namely their concern about the future, the future of our country, the future of our youths. Simply to score political points, Mr. Speaker, no one has the right to upset everything and confuse people here in Canada while forgetting our future and that of our children. In fact the central issue of this debate today is our future. The Government of the day must face up to its responsibilities to ensure that elderly Canadians, our families and our youths do have a secure future. There is one thing those young people do not understand and they never fail to mention it to me: How could we possibly have been so blind, how is it that the previous Government was so inconsistent and irresponsible in the many decision it took over the years without even realizing or knowing where it was leading us? The one thing they do understand is that we are spending $25 billion a year simply to pay interests on the orgy of expenditures of the Members opposite over *the last twenty years. That is as much money as we spend on social affairs in Canada. They often get a chuckle out of the fact that additional taxes will have to be levied on corporate income, for this has already been announced in the Budget; a minimum tax will be imposed on high incomes. They know that, and so they should in my opinion. But we are responsible people, we have taken over and we will try to solve the problem. Our Government is steering a new course, Mr. Speaker, for we want to set some order in Government interventions in all endeavours, be they in the economic or social sector. Business circles and high income individuals—and this is one of our commitments which is sometimes not taken seriously—will have to do their share through additional corporate taxes already announced in the Budget. They know a minimum tax will be payable on high incomes, and I should think that Opposition Members of the New Democratic Party ought to be particularly pleased about that, considering they have been asking for that since God knows when. Here we are responding favourably to one of their requests, yet they are not delighted. Come on now! What will they talk about? What will they beef about next? That, Mr. Speaker, is reality, those are facts and they ought to be honest enough to admit it.

Notwithstanding what the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith) may have said yesterday, our American friends and neighbours are quite worried about their soaring expenditures and the ever worsening deficit problem. Mr. Speaker, the coming months and years will prove that the Canadian Government showed the way to the western world by coming to grips with its deficit and attempting to find a long term solution to this problem. As much in Sudbury as anywhere else, Canadians are fully aware of the fact that our Government has taken very little time to put 300,000 people back to work by creating new jobs in co-operation with the private sector which has regained full confidence in the economy and the Government. Indeed what we have restored among Canadians is much more a matter of attitude, of mentality, of confidence. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to set our social policy on the right track, because the previous Government did not know where it was heading and could only come up with band-aid and haphazard policies. They could not see very far into the future. That is what we did by revamping the whole sector.

Yesterday the Hon. Member for Sudbury said something about hypocrisy, yet the people in his own Government were the ones who stood in the way of full indexation of family allowances, with the result that the recipients are now deprived of $20. They are getting $20 less than they would have had it been maintained. Certainly he has forgotten all about that. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) has no recollection of it, he was not here. It is my understanding he was living in other climates. I do not know whether those were more favourable climates, but I have some doubts. Had he been happy, maybe he would not have looked for a change.

Mr. Boudria: You will find yourself in the unemployment insurance climate come the next election.

Mr. Blais: My dear Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, please keep a close watch on your curriculum vitae, as I told you last week. You will have enough of a hard time adding a page to it if you care to look for a job comes the next election, because you will see what Canadians will do with the forty-odd Liberal members who are still around in Canada.

I was mentioning, Mr. Speaker, the $20 reduction in family allowances which they were responsible for. They never mention that, only the 94 cents involved in this legislation. And with respect to de-indexation, they have completely forgotten the years when, because of their policy, we had 11 to 12 per cent inflation rates, but then they limited indexation to 5 and 6 per cent. They do not want to be reminded of that, Mr. Speaker. Those are the facts. What does all that mean? They deprived Canadians of 6 per cent indexing. Does that ring a bell? But we are seeking here an overall balancing of all our social measures. This also they forget. This is a sheer hypocrisy. Rather than refer to our hypocrisy, let them look at theirs.

Turning to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), the last member we heard last night, he enthusiastically attacked banks and multinational corporations, of which he was a president for some years. He too has a short memory. And a shorter memory still, when he forgets that hardly ten years ago, he himself, then a Minister of Finance in another jurisdiction, had serious doubts about the universality of social programs. I remembered that when I saw his candid face in the papers, recently. His picture was in the press in 1975, when he was Minister of Finance and universality was not that important. Now he stands up in this House, banging on his desk, and insisting he will fight for the universality of social programs, and any change will have to be made over his dead body. What a short memory he too has, Mr. Speaker. And anyway, people had the opportunity to assess his administration when he was there. A year later we saw how his Government and his policies, both social and economic, were emphatically thrown out by the people in Quebec. He has no business coming here today and singing another tune.

When our friends opposite refer to maintaining the same social benefits for families, they no doubt forget that the major social benefit that does or should exist in our society is having a job. We believe that people would rather have a job. My colleague for Laval-des-Rapides estimated that in 1990, people with income in the $10,000 to $20,000 range will have lost approximately 4 per cent. But we as a Government want people in 1990 to have jobs, we want people to be back at work rather than to sit down waiting for social benefits to come. What Canadians want is employment. People will then be assessing our approach to social measures using standards other than social benefits for the unemployed.

As I often say, Mr. Speaker, there are people who sometimes fight over assumptions. There is a guy who used to live not far from my home. He used to say: I would rather have 5 per cent of something than 50 per cent of nothing. We sometimes suspect, when Opposition members discuss or advocate positions, that what they are proposing are measures they "forsee" and not too clearly at that. They are saying that in 1990 matters will be just as they were in their times, we will still be in inextricable economic difficulties. But such will not be the case, Mr. Speaker. Within 12 months, we have put 300,000 people back to work. They are people with jobs, who are happy, who have families, who provide for them, who do not think first in terms of social measures to protect them, about the social security net, but who rather think about their work, about their jobs, about supporting their children and about our finding jobs for their children also.

Mr. Speaker, that is what our Government is working at. There are none so deaf as those who do not want to hear. And for weeks we have seen the Liberal members opposite shed crocodile tears. They keep referring to senior citizens, families and young people. What have you done for them during the past 20 years if not getting them forever deeper into debt?

Mr. Speaker, the most inexperienced among economists and among social workers would agree that a viable balance must be restored between those two values: healthy economic conditions and an adequate social welfare system commensurate with our needs and with the financial capacities of Canadians which are not to be forgotten either.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) mentioned the quality of life of women at home. She also mentioned that she had asked the views of Canadian women who felt they were affected by those pieces of legislation. I think that her consultations did not extend farther than the opposition's lobby. Canadians generally are a lot more concerned about the direction taken by our country and the community at large. What is the purpose of the community as far as the quality of life of Canadians is concerned? What are we going to do for Canadians? This is what people are concerned about and not the 94 cents which have been mentioned repeatedly for weeks.

Mr. Speaker, I caution the Hon. Members opposite. If they intend to get on a horse and act like Don Quixote and travel around the country trying to smash down windmills, they can be sure that we will not let them do so. We will take the necessary steps to explain clearly the information circulated on that legislation and make sure that the opposition will not launch a witch hunt. You can be sure of that.

When the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) rose yesterday, he was uneasy at the beginning and wasted 10 minutes before he started to say something. He was worrying about the absence of speakers on the Government side. Well, I can tell you that this morning he has nothing to worry about. We let them speak yesterday because we wanted to see what they had to say.

And all they did was spend about half an hour telling us that they did not know what to say, and then, for the rest of the day, they spoke about a forestry Bill, or rather the report from the Standing Committee on forestry. This is a filibuster type tactic to delay the proceedings of the House.

Mr. Speaker, they tell us that they seriously want to have a debate and defend the interests of Canadians. They will never accept this proposal.

Mr. Speaker, you can be sure that, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides was saying yesterday, we are knee-deep in clover to use an expression from the Beauce area. I have not been in clover up to my knees in a long time. I feel rather like I am on a golf course. Last September 4, I had the impression that I was on a golf course. The hay was mown a long time ago! We are just beginning to have a good crop, and you can be certain, Mr. Speaker, that we shall defend the interests of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member explain the basic difference between the de-indexing of family allowances brought about by the Liberal Government, which he has just criticized, and the proposed de-indexing of family allowances under Bill C-70 now before the House of Commons? What is in fact the difference, or is there no difference between a Liberal Government and a Conservative Government? They are both willing to let families and children suffer by de-indexing family benefits; they take away the bread and the milk from the mouths of little children.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has only to take a pencil and a piece of paper. The difference is easy to figure out: $20 minus 94 cents is $19.06.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member missed the intent of the last question. If I am not mistaken, I think he was asking why the Conservative Government is deindexing family allowance if it believes the Liberals should not have done so.

His Government agreed that it was wrong to deindex old age pensions. Senior citizens and their supporters across the country said it was wrong because it was eroding universal old age pensions. They have worked for those pensions, deserve them and must have them. The consensus in the country was great and so his Government backed down.

If it was wrong about old age pensions, why is it not also wrong in doing exactly the same thing to children, families and women who receive that family allowance cheque? Why does he feel the Government is justified in doing it to children through family allowances when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admitted that the Government was wrong and backed down from partially deindexing old age pensions? Now it is going to do it to children's allowances. The approach does not make any sense.

• (1125)

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, that is quite simple. The previous Liberal Government had no strategy and did not know where it was going. They did not provide full indexation.

Mr. Cassidy: It is the same with the Conservatives.

Mr. Blais: We now have a strategy, and if you took the trouble of reading the papers you were sent, you would know that this measure fits in a policy framework. De-indexing is not an appropriate term because the allowances will still be indexed. We have not removed indexation, but simply restricted it. As for you, you have always had a Santa Claus philosophy. You never think about how all those programs will be paid for. This never enters your mind; you do not worry about it. I can understand it because you have never been and never will be in power. You will therefore never have to concern yourselves with this.

Mr. Cassidy: Do you support this policy?

Mr. Blais: A responsible Government, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to answer . . . I understand that the truth might scare some people, but they have never been in power and never will be. Canadians clearly know this and they tell them so at each election. Their party does not understand, but it does not matter.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to—

Mr. Cassidy: He is certainly not Santa Claus!

Mr. Blais: Indeed, you speak about Santa Claus because you do not care who will pay. For you, as long as the expenditure is there, it is not important to know who will pay. For our part, we are trying to develop a program that will include tax credits based on family income.

Mr. Cassidy: Incredible!

Mr. Blais: We shall take action to increase family income. Listen—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If the Hon. Member has another supplementary question, I will allow it. But please let us not have the exchange. Let the Hon. Member answer and then I will recognize other Hon. Members.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, they do not want an answer. It is quite obvious. What I want to say, and it is quite clear, is that we have tried to develop a program to meet the needs of Canadian families, and we shall put these Canadian families back to work gradually as we have been doing since last fall. You do not like it and I can understand. If I had had to watch the Liberals at work for 20 years, I would find it difficult to be optimistic myself. That is a fact. For our part on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, and for the large group of us on the other side also, we are optimistic and we know that we shall put people back to work and help the economy recover. This is how we shall be able to get out of this economic crisis.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to excite the Hon. Member. I must say I agree with him. I think there has to be a sense of responsibility.

What I am curious to know is, if it is true that as a nation we cannot afford to index family allowances fully, where then will we get the $1 billion to pay off the people who have lost money in the Canadian Commercial Bank fiasco?

• (1130)

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that this is not the question period.

Mr. Robichaud: Ah, but it is!

Mr. Riis: It is a difficult question, is it not?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cassidy: Be serious.

Mr. Blais: Alright, you are going to get it! It takes a long time but you are going to get it.

Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that this is not the oral question period. At 2:15 p.m., the Hon. Member may redirect his question concerning the Canadian Commercial Bank problem to the right person. In my opinion, I think—

Mr. Cassidy: That is your opinion!

Mr. Blais: —that this is not a long-term situation but rather a punctual problem that had to be dealt with for the benefit of all Canadians. It is on this basis that the Government took action, and I would not want to pirate as they do, because again they do not want to hear the answers. We told them that we would set up a committee to study the whole situation. But no, they don't want that, they want to get answers right now this very afternoon. They want to have the list of all depositors, all shareholders and all deposits and withdrawals for the past seven or eight years. They will not follow the normal procedure. We told them that we were going to set up a special committee to deal with this matter, somewhere else where they can ask all their questions.

Mr. Deans: Why don't you answer the question?

Mr. Blais: That is not what they want. They only want to make political gains at the expense of the Government, but they will not succeed, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, they spoke about forestry; today, they speak about the Canadian Commercial Bank. It has nothing to do with the Bill which is before us today, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). Question or comment.

Mr. Boudria: It is a question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Hon. Member, if I can only get his attention . . . I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us, if I understood correctly what he replied a while ago to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) . . . I think I heard him say that the need to cut family allowances stemmed from the financial streamlining program he referred to. Would he not agree that if such is the case, the Prime Minister of Canada did not tell the truth when he stated that the money saved through the pension cuts would never be used to pay for expenditures or reduce the debt of our country?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, again a narrow-minded question, as usual; we do not know where it begins or where it ends.

Mr. Boudria: Say that you do not know!

Mr. Blais: Let me speak!

Mr. Speaker, I never said nor intended to say that our Right Hon. Prime Minister could have lied. I suggest they have been going too far for the past few months with all their innuendoes. It is absolutely out of the question! What our Government has always tried to do, Mr. Speaker, which should be self-evident—but they refuse to see or hear it—is to restructure for Canadians a social program which is fair and balanced. It has never been intended, and I think this has been clearly indicated, that poor people and low income families should pay for this restructuration.

The funds now available in the social sector should stay in the social sector, as it has been intended all along, Mr. Speaker, and we do not plan to change that; but we must spend $25 billion a year because of their spending spree, as much as we spend for the social programs. That is what is jeopardizing our budget and destroying the Canadian economy. If I were they, I should be extremely embarrassed, I would never raise this issue and I would hope the Canadian public would forget about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allocated for questions and comments has expired. Debate. The Hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, to continue the debate on this subject, the main issue is that this Government has decided to de-index the value of family allowances down to 3 per cent each year, starting in 1986. This means that in 1986, they are going to take 94 cents or a dollar away from the children of poor families, per month, and then $2 and $3 and $4 and so on.

In fact, the Progressive Conservative Government has decided to continue the policies of the Liberal Government. This means that it does not respect the principle of universality on which the family allowance program was based and has been for 40 years.

Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat familiar with these problems because in the forties, my father, as an adviser to the Government, was involved in setting up the welfare programs after World War II. The House will recall it was a Liberal Government at the time that was apprehensive about the people's support for the CCF, the predecessor of the New Democratic Party, because we on our side were pushing for the establishment of a social security program that would cover everyone. We wanted a program that would be universal and cover all Canadians, and not just those who were in greatest need, because we knew from the Depression, that means tests were not satisfactory, tended to set people against each other, and practically guaranteed that social security programs would not be adequate for those who were living in poverty.

Mr. Speaker, since that time and for many years we have maintained the principle of universality, but as the Minister said yesterday in his introduction to the debate, during the last ten years, the cuts imposed by the Liberal Government have had the effect of reducing family allowances by $20 a month. At the beginning of the 70s, family allowances were worth about $20 per child, and now, with full indexation, the program could have been worth about $51 per month today. It was not the Conservatives but the Liberals who imposed reductions, cuts and de-indexation. More recently, it was the 6 and 5 program that reduced the monthly value of family allowances by about 10 per cent. In 1979, they reduced the increase in value of family allowances from 11 per cent to zero. The Liberals created a precedent, and now the Conservative Government is following suit. Now it is not just for one or two years. They intend to make it permanent. Some vague promises have been made about what could be done in the future, but basically, it is clear that the Conservative Government is very sympathetic to a further reduction in the value of family allowances and of all kinds of benefits aimed at the families of this country.

Mr. Speaker, after what was said by the Member who spoke previously, I wonder how he could possibly . . . he referred to Santa Claus. He said that we, the New Democratic Party, believed in Santa Claus. I do believe in Santa Claus, and I hope he does too, because this is very important to children. I wonder how in the present situation, we could possibly mistake the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) for the Government's Santa Claus. So Santa Claus has now become very strict; he feels he has to take nickels and dimes from small kids, particularly those from poor families, he takes money away from them!

Now then, I do not know whether he is aware of what the rest of the Government is doing, but if we consider the budgetary policy of the Government, what with deindexation of family allowances as announced in the Budget, we can see that rich people, those who have clout, the very small percentage of people who make capital gains, we can see that those are the very people who receive from the same Government that takes food away from small children.

And then we have the Government's own Mrs. Santa Claus—the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) from Toronto—who is just as severe as Santa Claus, who also takes small change from kids and then turns around and hands out billions of dollars to companies, institutions and banks which had deposits in the Canadian Commercial Bank.

So here we are wondering how could that Minister, Mrs. Santa Claus, hand out $1 billion to bankers over a weekend while at the same time the Minister of National Health and Welfare takes money away from children, $103 million a year for starters and all the way up to $600 million a year by 1990.

Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to the fact that the Government is trying to convince us that it has to take money away from children to balance the books. Yet at the same time it gives money to bankers, quite oblivious to its own argument that bank presidents should not really get family allowances because they can do without them. I should think they do not need any money, they just got $1 billion from the Minister of State (Finance). The Government gives with one hand and takes with the other, but it takes from the poor, from low income families and gives it all to the rich.

[English]

I should like to draw to the attention of the House some of the figures in terms of poverty among families, the purpose of a universal program of family allowances, the very real dangers in the dismantling of unversality under the Government and the disparity which occurs when a Government is prepared to give $1 billion to bankers in one weekend at the same time as it is prepared to take away $130 million this coming year and up to $600 million in 1990 from the mouths of children and of families, most often families with very modest incomes.

The National Council on Welfare has made a very serious study on the impact of the 1985 Budget on families at different levels of income. It has cumulated the impact over the course of the next five years, until 1990. No matter how we compare it, families with low incomes and children consistently lose more than families with high incomes and children. The middle class gets hit, too. I think what is most unconscionable is the fact that if you consider a family earning $80,000, because of the increase in the Budget in the exemption for Registered Retirement Savings Plans, because of the fact that capital gains up to $500,000 are now going to be totally exempt from tax, the $80,000 a year family comes out much better off, relatively speaking, than the $15,000 a year family.

Let us look at the figures. In 1990 the total loss, because of the Budget, to a family earning $15,000 a year will be $1,879. The total loss to the $80,000 a year family will be $1,125.

That is really progressive fiscal policy. You take more from the people who have low incomes, perhaps because there are so many of them, and you take less from people earning $80,000 a year who surely in our society are able to make a larger rather than a smaller contribution.

Mr. Speaker, consider a one-earner couple with two children and compare family earnings. Believe me, where people can afford to have one income it is usually a very big income, but the loss to a one-earner family with an income is $15,000 a year is going to be $2,422 by 1990. The extremely modest and brief increase in the total child package in 1986 and 1987 will be nowhere near enough to compensate for the other tax losses that that family will suffer. So they lose $2,422.

In the name of tax equity, what has the Government done for the family with one earner earning $80,000 a year? They are obviously so badly off that they need to be looked after. And they will come out, after five years, Mr. Speaker, $5,622 ahead. They in fact get lower taxes over the next five years, while the family who is trying to scrape by on $15,000 a year loses the equivalent of $500 a year over the next five years.

Last night I was knocking on some doors in my riding of Ottawa Centre. I talked to a number of people and said; "What is on your mind?" They said to me: "The family allowance, it just ain't fair." They said to me: "Look, it was not fair to deindex the old age pension for senior citizens and no more is it fair to deindex the family allowance for families."

I think they understood something which the Hon. Members on the government side do not understand and that is the reason we brought in family allowances originally and the reasons as well why we in our Party have always advocated that this be a universal program rather than a program which is only directed to people on very modest incomes.

One of the reasons why it is a universal program is, very simply, this. If you take two families, one with a couple of kids and the other childless, and their income is the same, I do not think that it takes a lot of reflection to realize that it costs more to pay the living expenses of the family with kids. Kids eat. They require bedrooms, a place to sleep, clothing, more housing is required. It costs money to go to the dentist; we don't have dental care in most parts of Canada. They need toys and entertainment. It costs money to take them to McDonald's or places like that.

Mr. Mayer: How about Wendy's?

Mr. Cassidy: Or Wendy's—those expenses are not expenses which accrue to the childless family. They may choose to use some of their disposable income on a nephew or a niece or the children of friends but they are not required to do so. One of the reasons that we have a universal child allowance program in Canada is precisely the fact that there are inequities within income groups in a sense that people with kids, who are carrying out a responsibility on behalf of us all, have greater expenses than people who do not have kids. That seems to me to be entirely fair. The Government does not recognize that, however.

I also have real questions about the very specious argument that was put forward by the Hon. Minister yesterday in introducing this particular piece of legislation. The Minister maintained, as have other members of the Government on a number of occasions, that we have to do something about social spending because social spending on the programs for which he is responsible is now equivalent to the interest on the national debt. Therefore, he said, we have to start do cut it. I think that that is a blinkered point of view which is extraordinarily unfair to people who are needy in our society or to people carrying out such socially valuable functions as, in fact, raising the kids who are going to be the next generation and who, among other things, will be paying the pensions for the MPs on that side of the House when they finally come to retire from the House of Commons one or two years from now—or six years from now.

Mr. Boudria: They won't be here that long.

Mr. Cassidy: If we wanted to look at why we have interest on the national debt, why not look at the fact that we have between $30 billion and $50 billion in tax expenditures every year in the Budget of the Government of Canada? These are hidden expenditures, they do not appear in the Estimates when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stands up before the House of Commons to deliver his Budget. Yet nonetheless whether it is depreciation allowances, whether it is accelerated cost incentives, whether it is R and D, whether it is incentives of some kind for investments in movies or oil drilling or something like that, these are real losses to the Treasury. The most recent, Mr. Speaker, and I think the most unconscionable, is the decision which the Government has put forward in the Budget that it is going to exempt from tax entirely the first $500,000 of capital gains. So someone who works a lifetime, as some of the people in my riding do, to earn half a million dollars and is taxed year after year is going to be paying for Parliament, paying for defence, paying for social programs, paying for economic programs, not just for himself or herself, but on behalf of the coupon-clipper who is making half a million dollars of capital gains and is not having to pay any tax at all.

I would suggest that it is about time we started to look at things in that perspective rather than try to whip up into a frenzy that kind of welfare bum psychology where people say it is wrong to be giving social spending payments or to be redistributing income to people because they are poor, because they are raising children, because they are old and have contributed to our society over the course of their productive lifetime.

I think it is wrong. The Government learned a lesson, it seemed to me, last June when the senior citizens of this country stood up unanimously and said they will not put up with it. I recall the embarrassment of this Minister, Mr.

Speaker, when he got up in the House of Commons and said that all kinds of groups were telling him that they have to do this in order to make their contribution to the deficit. I was one, Mr. Speaker, who said, "Name one group of senior citizens who support the deindexation proposals". The Minister had to retire in disarray because he could not name a single group. Shortly after that, Mr. Speaker, the senior citizens' groups came here to the House of Commons to talk to us directly and to make that point.

We have a responsibility here. Many of the Members of the House of Commons have kids; I have three. The kids of this country are not in a position to organize as senior citizens can. For one thing, they are only age three, age five or age seven and some of them are in diapers. I met some of them last night and I am afraid that however cogent their comments on the deindexation of family allowances were, I had difficulty in translating what they said, as they gurgled and cooed, into words that would be understood here. So we have to speak as parliamentarians on behalf of this future generation. I am speaking on behalf of the kids in my riding and on behalf of children across this country when I say that Canada was not wrong 40 years ago when we established the family allowance program. That was something that was universally admired around the world when we made it a cornerstone of our family policy in this country. It was right then and it continues to be right today. We are doing things to the child tax credit and things like that that focus some assistance particularly on the neediest families. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) said yesterday it is important that we preserve the universality because if we ever get to a situation where the majority of families in this country feel that they are simply paying for benefits that are going to a minority who are on modest incomes or who are poor, that is a recipe for social schism, for social divisiveness and it is a recipe eventually for a situation where the benefits will be cut back and eventually will be lost. That I would regret very very seriously.

• (1150)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize, for the benefit of Hon. Members and of all those who are watching this debate, that in our society one family out of five is now living in poverty. Poverty is on the increase in our society. Real-term family income has been decreasing these past four or five years. This is especially so with respect to young families, that is people under 25 with a family.

Mr. Speaker, looking at the situation of children, we find there is a larger proportion of children living in poverty than there are people generally. Actually, some 20 per cent of our children live in poverty!

In my Province of Ontario, where people receiving social welfare benefits are concerned, we find that 43 per cent of all the people who are on social welfare, those getting benefits from the Canada Assistance Plan in the Province of Ontario, are children. There you have real poverty in our population.

Mr. Speaker, the Government then will say that with the $23,000 income bracket, we will start reducing benefits to families from the whole package that has been proposed, and they justify taking away $130 million from family allowances in 1986, and up to $600 million in 1990.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize for the benefit of Conservative members that, quite possibly, one might survive with a $23,000-a-year salary in the constituency of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), but in Eastern Canada's major cities this is just below the poverty line.

Mr. Speaker, in my constituency, the cost of renting a family home or paying a mortgage on it is $600 to $900 a month. For a two-bedroom apartment, a minimum for a family with two children, the cost is $500 to $700 a month; failing that one has to go and live in a slum, or else slums are being rehabilitated thanks to the changes in the mortgage market.

Then Mr. Speaker, you have the cost of clothes and food for the children. There is also dental care and all the other expenses. Even with a $1,000 montly income, one is supposed to contribute to a pension fund, the Canada Pension Fund, unemployment insurance, workers' compensation, and so on and so forth. Income tax deductions may reduce income by $1,500 a month. After that the rent has to be paid, some $100 a week must be spent on food and other expenses. I believe that parents should go out and have someone look after the children because they are entitled to some leisure time, but they still must pay for a babysitter. They may also take holidays once in a while. Social agencies cannot give all that to children!

Mr. Speaker, as never in the past families are experiencing serious problems. If we had a really constructive policy concerning the family, as our community would grow richer, we would have more funds earmarked for families to provide a compensation for its highly significant role among us. Rather than acting in such a manner, we are reducing them!

Mr. Speaker, since the time allotted to me has come to an end, I will say once again that the New Democratic Party is opposing such measures.

The six-month hoist proposed by the Liberals is certainly something but it is not adequate because they themselves cut family allowances in the past.

We oppose the measure and we say: "Let us maintain the indexation of family allowances since the Government has now agreed to maintain the old age security pensions for our senior citizens."

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. friend if he feels that in imposing this reduction in indexation on family allowances the Government is particularly attacking women in the home. This is something about which we have a particular concern. We are concerned about children and about families as well. However, I would like to have my hon. friend speak to that particular issue.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend for her question. What she says is absolutely true. In the first place, for families, where the mother is at home with the kids, the family allowance cheque is the only independent source of revenue that that head of family, the mother, will receive.

In the second place, we are talking about one child in five living in poor families. Let us be blunt about it. Many of those children live in mother-led families. It is a tragedy in our society; but, today, 49 per cent of mother-led families are poor. When family allowance is cut back, even if it starts at only 95 cents a month per child, it is women who are being hit and it is women who are forced to live on their own raising kids on their own. It seems to me that a Government which made such promises as those which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made during the course of the election campaign with respect to the concerns the Conservatives had about the status of women in our society, would, in fact, be doing everything possible to maintain and improve the income status of women as opposed to cutting income, as is proposed by the deindexation.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Given the penetrating observations on the tax system and the failure of the Government to take prompt action, and the decision to act without warning on an important part of our child benefit system, I wonder what comment the Hon. Member would have with respect to the social philosophy of the Government which this move reflects. The Government has a readiness to allow those who have the good fortune to achieve high incomes and comfortable lives to do so through capital gains measures and profits in that area, which is just one prime example of the way in which the system operates. Noting particularly what the Hon. Member had to say in response to the question by my hon. friend from Vancouver East with respect to the impact of these changes on families headed by women, what sort of a social philosophy does this move actually express on the part of our Conservative Government in building wealth and increasing poverty in the country?

Mr. Cassidy: I do not quote scriptures, Mr. Speaker. However, if I may reply in terms which may sound somewhat scriptural: To him or her that hath shall be given, and to him or her that hath not shall be taken away. That is the social philosophy that is reflected in this Government's Budget as a whole. The measure which is before us is one which particularly takes away from many of the poorest families in our society who are performing such a vital role in terms of raising children. Put in specific terms, that 94 cents means one litre of milk being taken away from each kid in 1986 per month, two litres in 1987, three litres in 1988 and a litre per week in 1990. That is what is being taken away.

What is being done on the other side? I mentioned some figures with respect to the amounts coming into the hands of families who are rich. It amounts to the equivalent of $300 or $400 per year, which is going into the pockets of families who are rich. In some cases, it is much more than that. That seems to me to be totally and entirely perverse.

I wish to remind Hon. Members of the fact that under the Liberal administration over the course of the last 30 or 40 years, despite the occasionally constructive efforts the Liberals made to redistribute income, the distribution of income in our society remains as unjust today as it was in 1945 or 1950. The bottom 20 per cent of families, in terms of incomes, receive 6 per cent of incomes, while the top 20 per cent of families in our society receive 40 per cent of incomes. Thus, the families at the top are receiving six or seven times the amount of real resources per annum as compared to the families at the bottom. The Conservative Government's response to that situation has been to implement the capital gains exemption and other measures which place more resources into the pockets of those families at the top while taking them away from families at the bottom.

Finally, I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, and my hon. colleagues opposite, that the defence put forward by the Government which is to say, "We have put money in the pockets of people with low incomes", is totally specious. For two years there was an increase of perhaps $100 per annum for families who are the very poorest, that is, $1 or $2 a week. By the time one takes into account anticipated inflation, and so on, these poor families will be worse off. In the meantime, money is being taken out of the payments for support of our family policy, which should be a cornerstone of social policy in general, in order to be applied to the deficit or to set up a little kitty so that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) can bail out more banks over the course of the next two years or three years.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my hon. colleagues if he agrees with the Minister who says that this deindexing of family allowance is not an attack on universality. I have challenged him many, many times in relation to old age pensions and also in relation to family allowances for reducing the amount of the benefit, in this case to children, every month. In effect he is eroding the total universal program. At the same time, his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that universality is sacrosanct, a sacred trust. But in effect, with that Party's practice, policies and legislation it is deindexing and this means it is eroding a universal program.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would say that my colleagues opposite in the House of Commons are in fact supporting a flimflam artist. The Prime Minister states that universality is a sacred trust. While he states that, by sleight of hand, the Government through its Ministers, is taking away universality. I had an opportunity to see quite an amazing demonstration by a Canadian magician in this city on Sunday night. He is in fact a master of sleight of hand and is matched only by the Government. If after a few years the value of the family allowance is half of what it was before, Mr. Speaker, because of deindexation, then in fact universality is only half of what it was before. That, I am afraid, is the policy of the Government.

I entirely agree with my colleague. The Minister is dead wrong when he says he is respecting universality. He is not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated. We shall resume debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be able to say, as we traditionnally do when we address this House, that I am happy to take part in this debate today.

Unfortunately, the purpose of this legislation is such that the only thing to say is that we are sad to have to take part in such a debate because this Government is attacking Canadian families.

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservatives have betrayed the Canadian people. You know as well as I do that they are not keeping the promises made last year.

[English]

I have here, Mr. Speaker, the compilation of Tory campaign promises. There are 338 of them. There are no less than 26 promises involving the enhancement of social programs.

Over the last year or so, we have seen this Government, time and time again, attack the social policies and programs established by previous Liberal Governments. Last fall there was an annoucement or a leak, that the Government was going to cut universality and we all know that with the debates which ensued in the House of Commons, led by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), we finally convinced the Tories to drop that scheme. Only a few months later we see the Budget document of the Government, and what do we see? Universality has been attacked again on two fronts. Not only has the Government attacked the senior citizen's pensions but it has attacked families as well.

Disraeli once said, "a Conservative Government is an organized hypocrisy". We know why he said that, Mr. Speaker. Of course, it is the truth. The Prime Minister of this country promised the people that universality was a sacred trust. Let me outline to you, Mr. Speaker, some of the effects of the decision of the Government to deindex family allowances, to change the income tax provisions and to allow capital gains exemption for those who are better off in our society. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) spoke a while ago about the effect this would have on some families.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to add that, in view of the tax exemptions granted to the wealthiest members of our society and the savings made possible for some of them, the impact of this Bill is even more serious than other have said.

For instance, by 1990, a family with four people and a yearly income of $10,000 will have lost $396. A family of four with an income of $30,000 a year will have lost $1,089 in 1990, and a family of four with an income of $30,000 a year is far from wealthy.

Let us now look at the opposite situation. A family with an income of $50,000 a year will get $279 more. In other words, while the poorest will have less, those with higher incomes will have more. Mr. Speaker, a family with an income of $100,000 a year will be better off by $2,054, and a family of four with an income of $200,000 a year will gain $4,519.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask this House: where is the social justice of a program which will give $4,519 more to people earning $200,000 a year while taking away $396 from the poorest members of our society? I would like to challenge the Conservative Members, especially those who spoke about the programs of their party in glowing terms and who criticized the Opposition because it succeeded in reinstating old age pensions and forced the Government to withdraw a senseless policy.

Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that the popularity of the Progressive Conservative party is going down, and seriously so. The Secretary of State, who sits opposite me in this House, is aware of this and he is probably quite alarmed by this situation because his seat is in danger. One day, when he receives unemployment insurance after his next electoral defeat, he may be happy that the Members of the Liberal party tried to preserve the family allowances of needy families.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on what I said earlier to the effect that Conservatives have betrayed the Canadian people. I invite the Secretary of State to listen closely because, if I read slowly enough, even he will be able to understand, Mr. Speaker.

Could he reply to the following question which the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on December 20, 1984: is it the Government's policy or intention to reduce progressively over a number of years, the tax exemption for Canadian families with dependent children? To this question, the Right Hon. Prime Minister had replied that no, it was not the Government's intention. May we conclude that the Prime Minister either misled the House or that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was not present in the House at the time and, therefore, was not aware of the Prime Minister's instruction? Which of the two assumptions is the right one? The Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) who is also a member of the Cabinet should know and could perhaps advise us accordingly in a little while. Did the Prime Minister tell the truth, or is it that the Minister of Finance was not aware of his boss' instruction? Which one? And I invite the Secretary of State to develop this point in a little while and advise us accordingly.

The Prime Minister's own Aunt Jeanne knows, Mr. Speaker. She publicly indicated what she thought of the Prime Minister. She felt that he did not always tell the truth.

And the Minister of State for Youth (Mrs. Champagne), who sits on the other side, responsible as she is for all young Canadians, will undoubtedly rise in the House and make a speech on this issue, because it is her responsibility to protect our young people, a responsibility she did not assume too streneously since her election last year; but encouraged by Members of the Opposition, she will certainly rise and stand up from now on. At least, I hope so, but I am not holding my breath, I can assure you.

Mr. Speaker, let us recall what happened in the Old Age Security Pension matter. The Government goofed when it chose a policy which did not make sense. Canadians quickly realized that, the Opposition defended the interest of the Canadian people in this House and the Government had to back down. Then, having backed down, the Government denied that the Opposition was right. It even denied that the Canadian people were right. Today, we heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) tell us the Government changed their minds simply because they were tired of hearing the Canadian people complain, or something to that effect. They were right and they should never have backed down. They should not have done so, and this came about because of heated opposition debates, or whatever, according to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. In my view, the Parliamentary Secretary should rather address matters about which he may know a bit more, because it was clear from his remarks that, first, he did not know what he was talking about, or, second, maybe he should seriously consider firing the person who wrote that speech for him. But anyway, he had not done his homework, or at least the senior citizens in his constituency certainly do not share his view.

And I am also certain that the constituents in Roberval too are quite happy to have their pensions. And if the Secretary of State thinks otherwise, maybe he can rise later and say the Government was wrong about giving senior citizens their money back, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture has just implied in this House.

Mr. Speaker, those same Tory members now suggest that the money should not be given back to the families, that they do not need it, that this is not necessary and that since the cut in their view is not that significant—although it is as I said—there is no need to give them back that money. How is it that the Government has enough funds to compensate those people who had savings in the Canadian Commercial Bank, savings of over $60,000 a year? How is it that they have money for that? How is it that they do not find any when the time comes to help those who are most in need?

• (1210)

[English]

Over $1 billion of taxpayers' money, Mr. Speaker, will go into the Canadian Commercial Bank in an attempt to bail this Government out of the financial fiasco it got itself into. What would it cost to restore family allowances? Some $55 million. That is what this Government is saving. Do you know how much it will cost to dress our military in different coloured uniforms so the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) can tell them apart? Some $56 million. I am sure if I were to ask anyone in the military if he would give up his new uniform so that needy children can have family allowances, he would, of course, agree to give it up. Perhaps we could buy some other form of identification such as little name tags so that the Minister can tell them apart. That would cost far less. It seems that everyone else can tell the military apart, but the Minister requires that they have different coloured uniforms at a cost of $56 million.

It is a strange set of priorities, Mr. Speaker. Only a Conservative Government could think that this is the best way to spend taxpayers' dollars. That kind of logic escapes everyone else, but it seems to make sense to a Tory. Take from the poor and give to the rich, that is the Tory policy. It has been expressed very clearly in this House today by some Tory Members, and no doubt before this debate is over it will have been expressed again. If there is a Tory Member in this House who does not subscribe to that policy, why does he or she not stand up and speak in favour of restoring family allowances? But no, instead they spend their time telling us about the merits of the capital gains exemption. That exemption will not help families who have nothing on which to make a capital gain. In order to use the exemption you have to have made a capital gain; how does that help the poor, I ask Hon. Members across the way? Obviously it does not do one bit of good for the poor people in our society.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about universality. On December 20, 1984, the Prime Minister stated in this House, and I quote:

> We will defend and enhance the integrity and the positive benefits which come from a universal social program.

Where is this commitment of the Prime Minister today, Mr. Speaker? Is the Prime Minister in this House to defend the position he explained last December 20? I have not yet heard him, Mr. Speaker. If he speaks the truth, and we all know that we cannot say in this House that the Prime Minister is telling anything but the truth, if he speaks the truth, and I hope he does, he will certainly be here later on to repeat what he said on December 20 and tell his Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to withdraw this budgetary measure. If not, Mr. Speaker, I shall let you and the Prime Minister's Aunt Jeanne and all the others make up your own minds. For my part, I shall draw my own conclusion even if I cannot express it in the exact terms that I would like to use in this House.

Mr. Speaker, the universality of social programs will be eroded by the lack of adequate protection against cost of living increases. These increases will come about. Whether the inflation rate is low or high, it will certainly exceed 3 per cent. We all know it, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, I would like to call to your attention an open letter sent to the Prime Minister of Canada. This letter was published in several newspapers this morning, in La Presse of Montreal among others. It bears the signatures of hundreds of people from various organizations, the Executive Vice-President of the Canadian Labour Congress and many others. Here is a quotation from that letter, Mr. Speaker:

> On this, the first anniversary of the swearing-in of the federal Progressive Conservative Government, the undersigned participants in the National Economic Conference of March 25, 1985 wish to express serious reservations about your Government's economic and social priorities.

Well, if some Conservative Members think that their priorities are good, how come they are the only ones who think so? Mr. Speaker, why is it that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance here in the House automatically assume that the applause from Progressive Conservative Members reflect approval by Canadians for the measures they want to implement?

An Hon. Member: Because there are 211 of them!

Mr. Boudria: The Member on the other side just said because there are 211 of them, Mr. Speaker. That is Conservative logic for you. Because there are 211 of them in the House they think it is all right to break their promises. Such is the opinion of a Progressive Conservative. There are 211 of them in the House and according to them, Mr. Speaker, they have every right to forget everything they said to the Canadian people last year. That is the mentality of a Progressive Conservative.

Still according to the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, there are 211 of them in the House so there is no need to worry about and look after the poor, let us look after the rich and after ourselves. Such is the Conservative mentality, Mr. Speaker, and that is the reason why my colleagues and I are not interested in supporting this Bill which would jeopardize the universal character of our social programs and would, in our opinion, have dire consequences for all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway).

• (1220)

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I am most interested in the comments of the Member with regard to this particular piece of legislation. I know he is aware that this legislation is only one part of a total package affecting family benefits. That package includes not only changes and modifications to family allowances, but also reduction of the child tax exemption under the Income Tax Act and increases in the child tax credits. The net effect, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, is that the benefits for low and more moderate income families increase under this legislation, and the benefits for children in higher income families decrease. In fact, as the Minister has pointed out, the existing benefits for a family earning $30,000 a year are much greater than for a family earning $10,000 a year. The total effect of the Government's proposal will be to improve the benefits for lower income families.

I know that the Member is compassionate and that he wants to improve benefits for lower and more moderate income families. I know also that he is a very realistic Member and that he realizes that we are faced with an enormous deficit which has not been created within the last year but rather over the last 20 years of administration. I heard the Hon. Member and many of his colleagues criticize the package which has been put forth by the Government. However, I have not yet heard from the Hon. Member's Party, nor from the other opposition Party, an official program which they would present to the House which would increase the benefits for lower income people while, at the same time, taking into account our enormous deficit. It would be easy to improve benefits for everyone and add to the deficit, but I am sure that the Hon. Member's Party has something specific in mind. In fact, during the last few days of summer we heard that they would be putting forth their specific policy, and I would love to hear from the Hon. Member what that policy is.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether I would be given a chance to respond to the question. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the deficit. I am concerned about the $56 million which was wasted to change the colour of the uniforms of the Armed Forces. I am concerned about the squandering of money to buy limousines for Cabinet Ministers and about the hundreds of thousands of dollars spent to redecorate Cabinet Ministers' offices. I am concerned about the hundreds of thousands, and even millions, of dollars wasted on jet travel to carry these people all over the world. I am concerned about that Mickey Mouse of the House of Commons, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), who was flying all over the place. I am very concerned about the 1,200 political patronage appointments of the Prime Minister. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about that kind of government waste and I thank the Hon. Member for bringing it to my attention.

If the Hon. Member's concern about the deficit is so great, why did his Party and his Leader not campaign in the last election on the theme, "Vote for me and I'll cut your cheque"? That is what they stand for now. Would it not have been more honest for that Party to state that during the last election? It may have been more honest, but perhaps it would not have obtained the same results. Maybe that is the reason why the Conservatives promised one thing and delivered another.

The Member has asked me what the net effect of the whole package was, and I thank him for bringing that to my attention as well. The National Council on Welfare has brought to our attention that a family of four with only one person working earning $15,000 would lose $2,422 by 1990, whereas a family of four earning a salary of $80,000 would gain $6,287. A study done by the Liberal Party has determined that, taking into consideration the capital gains exemption, which only rich families take advantage of, a family of four earning $200,000 would be almost $5,000 richer under the budgetary provisions announced by the Government and supported by the Hon. Member who asked me the question.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I am still waiting to hear the positive policies that the Hon. Member's Party, specifically and officially, is putting forward as an alternative to this policy, which will add to and improve the lot of low income people of this country, at the same time taking the deficit into account.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see that the Conservative Party is so bankrupt of ideas that it wants the Opposition to draw up its Budget. It is very constructive on the part of the Member to ask the Opposition to write the Budget, but I do not intend to do that. The Conservatives are in power and we will let them write the Budget. When they do an improper job I will stand up in my place, as will my colleagues, to point out that it is not in the best interest of Canadians. During the budget debates we outlined very clearly why it is wrong and where it needs to be corrected. It is now up to them to do their job.

• (1230)

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out to the previous questioner that the NDP did in fact put forward 11 proposals for reducing the deficit to the Government during the debate on the deindexation of the old age security benefits. One of those proposals would have reverted the income tax structure back to 1980 and the marginal tax levels for high-income earners that the Liberals changed in 1980 to allow high-income earners to get away with murder in terms of the level of income tax they paid. Would the Hon. Member who just spoke not agree that if the present Government would revert to that marginal rate structure which was in effect at that time it would go a long way to reducing the deficit and indeed continue the protection of disposable income that many women rely upon when they receive that family allowance cheque?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, there are many ways to reduce the deficit. I am glad to see that the NDP seems to be concerned with that as well. Usually it is not a favourite topic for them but I am glad to see that new-found concern on the part of the NDP.

There are many ways in which this could be done. Of course, taxing the rich is certainly one way. Cutting down on wasteful expenditures by the Government, such as the ones I illustrated in the House on several occasions, is certainly another way. There is the present structure of the office staff of Cabinet Ministers as well as other examples of Government waste. Creating employment and returning people to work will create more revenue for the Government, rather than cutting jobs as the Conservatives have since they were sworn into office.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time for questions and comments has now expired. Debate.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

[English]

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter into the debate on Bill C-70, An Act to amend the Family Allowances Act. I am pleased that this Act will provide much more funds to the poorest families because we said during the election campaign that we would be assisting those who need assistance more. Today, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is proposing an additional $52 million to be allotted for day care in Canada and is waiting for a committee report before that is implemented.

It is also interesting to note that we spend $60 billion a year on social programs in this country. When we are spending $60 billion in social benefits, I do not believe that people are not being looked after in this country. The amount to be spent under Canada Assistance Program for 1984-85 is $4 billion and, with a projected increase to 1989-90, it is $8.5 billion. In the 13 years that I have been in the House of Commons, I have never been approached by my constituents or anyone from Winnipeg asking the Government to feed their children or saying that they wanted to be totally dependent on the Government bringing up their families. I have been approached by many of them who said that they do not need this family allowance but never by people who need more. My office assists any family in my riding who is having financial difficulties, whether it needs that assistance from the province, the city or federally. I do not agree with the NDP or the Liberals that every Canadian must be totally dependent on the Government to feed and look after him. I believe Canadians are far more responsible than that.

Many programs to assist people exist already. For instance, this is a document entitled Federal Provincial Territorial Inventory of Programs of Assistance to Youth. The size of this document shows what we are doing to help people in this country. People are not destitute, broke or starving. The statements I hear from the Liberal party and especially the NDP in the House are an insult to the intelligence of Canadians.

It is interesting to hear the Grit hypocrites talk about their concern for social programs and people. They try to portray themselves as the guardians of social policy in this country when, between 1974 and 1975 and 1984 and 1985, the Liberals reduced federal spending on social programs from 50 per cent to 43 per cent. Under the guile of their 6 and 5 restraint program, the Liberals reduced indexation to 6 per cent and 5 per cent while inflation was running at 11.5 per cent and 7.1 per cent, a de facto deindexation of 7.6 per cent over two years. I do not hear any Liberals raising that fact in the debate.

Let us review some of the statements the Leader of the Liberal Party made about the deficit during the election campaign. In Quebec City he said, "We must find more efficient ways of delivering our social services". That is what we are doing. He said, "We must find ways of limiting a duplication of provincial and federal services". That is what we are doing. "We must find ways of establishing a more efficient public administration". That is what we are doing. I suggest that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), stands alone in his statements because the rest of the Liberal party totally opposes those views.

Let us review his record. As the former Minister of Finance, he is the one responsible for creating so many poor in this country. On May 6, 1972, he told Canadians:

> The bare fact of the matter is that we cannot do everything at once. We simply don't have the resources.

We realize that it is impossible to give increasing amounts of hand-outs. He went on to say:

> There are limits to the scope of fiscal policy. There are limits to stimulus and readjustment.

He certainly differs from the other 39 members of his caucus.

In his final Budget address on June 23, 1975, he told Canadians:

> The portion of the national income spent by governments on goods, services and transfer payments, and financed by taxation, has now risen to levels previously reached only during the Second World War.

He was going to reduce the size of the deficit by $15 billion when the other 39 members of his caucus would do the opposite and provide even more money. Approximately 90 per cent of the questions we hear during Question Period from the NDP and the Liberals call on the Government to give everyone more money. I do not understand how this two-pronged thrust can work. The reason the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition created so many poor people during his term as Finance Minister is that the total number of people on the Government payroll during his tenure rose by 68,000, even after taking into account a 9,000 person decrease in the size of the Armed Forces. During his term as Finance Minister, spending on a national accounts basis grew by 102 per cent, from $18.1 billion to $36.8 billion. Furthermore, we cannot account for that increase. I would not want him to look after my piggy bank, let alone the finances of this country. This is what the Auditor General said about the Leader of the Opposition when he was Minister of Finance:

> I am deeply concerned that Parliament—and indeed the Government—has lost, or is close to losing, effective control of the public purse.

Our Government will not have a record like that. For example, during his term as Minister of Finance, public debt charges doubled from $2 billion to $4 billion. We cannot spend more money on people because they have increased even more since then. During his term as Minister of Finance, utilities, materials and supply costs rose by 55 per cent from $347 million to $537 million.

That Government displayed no fiscal responsibility at all and there has never been a more irresponsible Minister of Finance in Canadian history.

It is the Liberals who increased the number of poor in our country. When the Right Hon. member for Vancouver Quadra was appointed Minister of Finance in January, 1972, the unemployment rate was 6 per cent. When he left in September, 1975, the unemployment rate was 6.9 per cent. During his tenure as Minister of Finance, total unemployment rose by 164,000. The unemployment rate in that period for youth between the ages of 15 and 24 climbed from 10.5 per cent to 13 per cent. The number of youth unemployed climbed by 109,000.

• (1240)

On and on the horror stories go of the magicians, the Liberals, who know everything. They have an answer for everything. How did we end up in a mess like this with such brilliance, with people who know everything? They have an answer for everything so how did it ever happen?

Since we have taken over, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian economy is on the upswing and with that upswing there will be more money for more social benefits. The Canadian economy did exceptionally well in the second quarter of 1985. The GNP was up 4.1 per cent in real terms at annual rates. The increase included gains in consumer spending and business development.

Consumer spending is up, indicating that the average citizen has more money to spend. People are not all poor and starving. Since the election, 284,000 new jobs have been created. It is not just the number of new jobs that have been created, but the number of jobs that were saved by the Conservatives taking over the Government. I am sure that number must be up around 300,000 or 400,000. If that outfit, the Liberals, had been re-elected and had continued the same policies, we would have had more debt and more unemployment.

Interest rates are coming down and business confidence is rising. That is important. The business community and the investment community had absolutely no confidence in the Liberal Government. They have confidence in us. Corporate executives have stated that 53 per cent plan to increase capital expenditures over the next six months. Recent statistics found that business investment intentions for 1985 are up 12 per cent over last year's level. New capital spending will help to modernize Canadian industry, create international competitors and jobs. There is now confidence in this country.

Consumer spending is rising. Retail sales climbed by 8 per cent in nine months. That is not bad news, Mr. Speaker, that is good news. Price stability has returned. The low inflation rate is being maintained and bankruptcies are declining. Oil and gas drilling activity is rising. Alberta is now becoming a thriving province once again and hundreds and thousands are finding work in the industry field. Manufacturing orders have risen by 10 per cent since September 1984. How about the fact that the Canadian economy is outperforming the American economy?

I do not very often praise a Liberal, but I have to give some credit to the Ontario Minister responsible for senior citizens. He made a very good observation this week. Ron Van Horne said that nearly 80 per cent of seniors, aged 65 or older, live on their own, leading productive and useful lives. That shatters the myth and the statements made by the NDP that every single senior citizen in Canada is suffering, is destitute, broke, hard-up and starving. Those are most insulting comments.

Ms. Mitchell: Who ever said that?

Mr. McKenzie: The majority of senior citizens have provided for their retirement. Just look at the bus loads of senior citizens who come here, who are enjoying life. They are not here because they are broke. Many are able to maintain two homes, one in the southern United States and one here. The other 20 per cent who are less fortunate, have financial difficulties or health problems are looked after in a most generous manner.

Let me give you another example that all our senior citizens are not broke, hard-up and impoverished, Mr. Speaker. Of the senior citizens between the ages of 65 and 69 in Canada, 576,415 are paying $866 million in income tax. That clearly indicates we have senior citizens who are not broke. Here is another interesting figure, Mr. Speaker of senior citizens over the age of 70, 876,000 are paying $1.151 million in taxes. When people pay taxes like that, they must have a lot of income and are very comfortable. Many have prepared on their own for retirement, and as I said, the others less fortunate will certainly be looked after.

There are a total of 238 programs to assist senior citizens and these progrsms will be maintained.

I have just listened to the comments about the Canadian Commercial Bank. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pointed out the main reason for the bank's collapse, namely, the National Energy Program. In the Alberta Report for September 16, 1985, it was reported that a University of Calgary economist, Warren Blackman agrees and adds that Canada is in effect punishing the banks for the mistakes of the previous Liberal Government. He said:

> If those damn idiots in Ottawa had left us alone in 1980—

He is referring to the Grits and the NDP.

> —the economy of Alberta would be okay.

The banks, says Dr. Blackman, have suffered not because of mismanagement or fraud. He went on to say:

> During the energy and construction boom, capital was short in Alberta and those banks formed to supply the demand. It was a rational move. There was an opportunity there and they grabbed it. They couldn't foresee the disaster coming. Nobody could. It wasn't the banks' fault they ran into trouble, it was the fault of Ottawa's National Energy Program.

That program was supported by the Grits and the NDP. We told them that this would happen, and if anybody wants to challenge me on that, let them read the debates of the day. We gave detailed information about how disastrous that stupid National Energy Program would be. The Grits and the NDP created all kinds of poverty in Alberta. They are responsible for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: It is true that the pricing stalemate had far-reaching effects in Alberta. Close to 150 drilling rigs left the province at the time, 30 per cent of the energy service sector had to close up shop and thousands of workers lost their jobs, just to list a few things caused by the Grits and the NDP. It was forecast that Canada as a whole would suffer many long-term downturns due to the National Energy Program, and it was estimated that the National Energy Program would result in a loss of over $3.5 billion in industry investment by 1981. We not only lost all that, we lost taxes. We would have had a lot more money to hand out to everyone if that stupid program had never been implemented. Each dollar spent in Canada by the oil industry generated $1.70 in further economic activity. That is something New Democrats would never understand. It was estimated that the National Energy Program would reduce Canadian economic output by $9.5 billion, equal to 3 per cent of the gross national product at a time when it was doubtful that the GNP would grow by more than 1.5 per cent. Studies at that time showed that each job created in the industry resulted in more than three more jobs in the economy. About 60,000 jobs were lost as a result of the National Energy Program. The Grits and the NDP are responsible for creating a lot of poor people in this country.

I have a page here listing businesses in eastern Canada, Quebec, Ontario and Alberta that all suffered and had to lay off people because of the National Energy Program. The NDP was not worried about that when it was helping to create poor and unemployed people.

It is interesting to see what we have to pay as a result of the sins of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he was the Finance Minister, a pattern he started then. If you sent $3,000 to Ottawa today as payment of income tax, at least $2,400 is needed to pay interest charges on money the federal Government borrowed in previous years. I think we are pretty lucky we can still spend $60 billion a year on social programs with the mess that was created by the Grit-NDP coalition.

Over the past three years, the national debt has grown 75 per cent. In that same period of time our economy has only grown 25 per cent. We have reached the point where the federal Government is forced to borrow over $20 billion per year just to meet the interest on past debts. To put it another way: whereas it took one in eight tax dollars to cover the interest on our debt 10 years ago, it takes more than one in three tax dollars to pay the interest on today's debt. Interest costs on the debt now equal almost 80 per cent of the personal income tax collected by the Government. The debt has grown so large that the level of the deficit is highly dependent upon interest rates. A one percentage point change in interest rates has a $1 billion impact on the deficit. I think we are doing remarkably well with what we have inherited. I can assure the House that no children will be starving and that no senior citizens will be suffering. The Conservative Government will look after them. They do not have anything to worry about.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the speeches we are hearing this week remind me of the ones we heard before the House adjourned for the summer. At the time we were considering de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions, and the same Member who just spoke and in fact all Conservative Members were agreed in saying that the elderly had no objection to these cuts. Today, they are doing exactly the same thing. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has to admit to Canadians that he was mistaken, and with him all his Conservative colleagues.

When the Conservative Member—this is my question, Mr. Speaker—who just spoke blamed the Opposition and said that it was necessary to reduce the deficit and cut social programs, he should blame his Prime Minister and his Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). In the blue paper, it was his Prime Minister and his Minister of National Health and Welfare who said that the purpose of restructuring family income assistance programs was not to reduce the deficit but to help families on medium and low incomes. They were not cutting $15 million and $14 million in order to reduce the deficit.

Will the Hon. Member who just spoke have the courage to blame his Prime Minister for misleading Canadians when he held his consultations?

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I would never follow anyone I coul'd not trust. He is a man who has taken on the greatest challenge in the world—to take over from a Liberal administration. He has pointed out that no one will suffer; they will be looked after. We will make increased improvements in social benefits whenever we can.

Today, as one example, senior citizens are receiving more benefits from the Conservative Government than they have ever received in the history of Canada. Just to give another example of people we have helped, all low-income, qualifying widowed persons aged 60 years to 64 years will be able to collect the spousal allowance regardless of the age at which their spouse dies. Approximately 85,000 widowed persons will benefit at an estimated cost of $190 million in fiscal year 1985-86. Another example of our social conscience and how we are helping people would be the additional $22 million contributed toward the pensions of veterans, providing veterans and their families with increased benefits. Included is the payment of an attendant's allowance, an exceptional incapacity allowance and a disability pension at the married rate for a full year following the death of the pensioners.

We have made many improvements since assuming office; many people have been added to the rolls. We have some excellent Veterans Affairs programs which were started under the Liberal administration, for example, going into the homes of veterans to assist them in removing snow, cutting grass and so on. We have expanded on those programs. We are assisting thousands and thousands of more veterans in the own homes. No one will starve, suffer or whatever. The figures in terms of the GNP increase indicate that more people are employed, that more revenue will be coming in and that there will be more more benefits. The Hon. Member can wave his blue book all he wants. I am glad to see that it is blue, Tory blue.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I listened with interest to his speech this morning. My question involves representation and who speaks for the different citizens of Canada. I look on the government benches and see the highest percentage of women ever elected to a Canadian Government and the highest percentage of women in Cabinet, the highest percentage of farmers and rural people and, with all due respect, none larger of corporate individuals. I have a great deal of concern for getting to the crux of the debate—exactly who will be affected and who is speaking for those to be affected. In the opinion of the Hon. Member, for whom are the NDP and the Liberal Party speaking? Are they speaking with such vociferous intent and participating in strongly worded debate because there is a legitimate concern on their part, or does the Hon. Member have other opinions on why they are speaking and for whom they are speaking?

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I really do not for whom they are speaking. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that they are speaking with a forked tongue. I have statistics in my possession on how the New Democratic Party in Manitoba has affected the hospitals there with one of the cruelest provisions I have ever seen. It introduced a payroll tax, an idiotic tax. Firms cannot hire people because of the tax; small businesses are faced with this payroll tax. It is affecting hospitals. I do not understand why members of the New Democratic Party are not rising and condemning the NDP Government of Manitoba. It should remove this cruel, ridiculous payroll tax. They are always making comments about the capital gains proposal. The Hon. Member who directed his question to me is from the Province of Saskatchewan which has many farmers. Capital gains was included because of requests from farmers in western Canada, not millionaires or billionaires. It was included in recognition of the major contribution of farmers to Canada's economic life. A full exemption will be available immediately for capital gains realized on the sale of farm property. By encouraging Canadians to invest in small and large businesses, this measure helps public and private corporations to attract new equity and thereby accelerate their return to a healthy financial position. There is nothing wrong with that. Smaller businesses will be assisted in raising capital to pursue new ideas and directions and to reduce costly debt.

As well, it will help to raise capital for research and development and it will help farmers. I do not see anything wrong with that. It is interesting to note that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business conducted a survey on the feelings about the capital gains tax which indicated that 89.6 per cent of small businesses were in favour of it, not bankers or people on Bay Street. Members of the NDP and the Liberal Party are totally wrong in their criticism of the capital gains tax proposal. We are helping thousands of farmers and fishermen. They are grateful that we brought in this provision.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to which the Hon. Member may wish to respond. He said something a few moments ago about always following someone he fully trusted, namely, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). However, earlier in his speech he referred to the expenditures on social programs totalling $60 billion, which very nicely gave the lie to something the Prime Minister of Canada asserted a few days ago when he declared that the interest payments on the national debt amounted to the same total spent on social programs. I am glad the Hon. Member set the record straight in such a forceful way and indicated that the Prime Minister was participating in flimflam. I should give the Hon. Member 30 seconds in which to respond to my thanks for his telling us where the truth actually lies.

Mr. McKenzie: The Prime Minister was stating federal figures. The $60 billion which I indicated includes provincial and municipal; it was the global figure for Canada. The Prime Minister was just talking about the federal one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FISHERIES

FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER LICENCES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the issue of factory freezer trawler licences must be resolved by the Ministry of Fisheries and the Government of Canada. The granting of a licence would represent a major policy change for the federal Government and actually would be a violation of a written agreement between the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada when the restructuring of the fishery took place some time ago.

The Governments of the four Atlantic Provinces have been consulted by the Minister, and the unions have been consulted. No decision has been made. This has prompted the Premier of Newfoundland to organize petitions in his own province in opposition to such a move by the Government of Canada.

The question should be asked, to cause a Tory premier to organize petitions in his own province, is that the new co-operative federalism that the Government announced some time ago?

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

FRENCH NUCLEAR WEAPONS TESTS IN SOUTH PACIFIC

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians concerned about world peace must condemn the French Government's plan to test nuclear weapons in the South Pacific.

These tests can serve no purpose except to pander to an out-of-date illusion of Gaullist grandeur, the pretence that France is a super power to be compared with the United States and Russia. On the negative side the tests provide further pretext for future American and Russian testing and thus contribute to the growing destabilization of world affairs.

In spite of French assurances about their safety, the tests could result in radioactive seepage into the ocean, and they threaten the health of people who live in the area. We have already seen the evidence of deformed births and degenerative disease as a result of earlier tests in the South Pacific.

When the French Government tests nuclear weapons in the South Pacific, and defends it with a false doctrine of sovereignty, it betrays a colonialist attitude which has no place in the 1980s.

France should respect the treaty now signed by nine of the 13 South Pacific nations declaring their region to be a nuclear-free zone, and banning the manufacture, stationing or testing of nuclear weapons in that area.

With other Canadians I call on the Government of France to abandon its plan for the current series of nuclear tests and I urge the Government of Canada to join other Pacific nations in protesting these tests which are not worthy of civilized nations.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ILLEGAL TAX DISCOUNTERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, there is a move on foot to abolish tax discounting or to make it impossible for the legitimate businesses to continue to operate. The Tax Rebate Discounting Act was passed in 1978 by the House of Commons and the legislation provided for a maximum discount rate of 15 per cent, which included tax preparation fees and all other expenses of the discounter. Tax discounting has been with us for more than 40 years but until the late 1970s it grew in an unregulated and generally in a disreputable fashion.

Today some 380,000 Canadian taxpayers use the services of tax discounters, compared to 6,000 in 1979. Criticism of the discounters is generally, if not wholly, against the illegal discounters. By and large, the large majority of tax rebate discounters are honest, upright citizens who offer their services to those who want to use them voluntarily. Those who are found guilty of cheating and stealing their clients' money should be given the maximum penalty contained in the law and prohibited from practising the trade.

The genuine discounters are providing seasonal employment and helping low-income taxpayers, including treaty Indians and many parents with large families who need cash at the time and who cannot wait weeks to get the money from the Department.

We don't throw out a crate of eggs because two or three of them are bad. Let's keep the good discounters and throw out the rotten ones.

TRADE

ESTABLISHMENT OF AUTOMOBILE PLANTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Like most Quebec Members in this House and the Quebec population as a whole, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to hear that the Hyundai corporation, from Korea, is planning to build a car assembly plant in the province of Quebec. If we consider also that the Toyota and Suzuki corporations have clearly indicated their intention to invest in Canada, this is clear evidence that foreign investors have renewed confidence in the Canadian economy since our party came to power.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, the only car assembly plant in Quebec is the one operated by General Motors in Sainte-Thérèse. With the arrival of the Hyundai corporation, there will be two car manufacturing companies in Quebec. That is a good start, but it is definitely not enough. That is why I urge the Toyota and Suzuki corporations which are planning to set up plants in Canada to come to Quebec; this province could not otherwise hope to become a major car manufacturing centre.

I therefore urge all my Quebec colleagues, as well as the provincial Government, to multiply their representations in order to convince these corporations to establish their operations in Quebec.

We have in Quebec both the human and technical resources to meet the needs of these companies. If this wish came true, Mr. Speaker, all Quebec regions and especially the great riding of Témiscamingue which I have the honour to represent in the House would benefit.

FISHERIES

EAST COAST HERRING CATCH—INCREASED QUOTA SOUGHT

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, inshore fishermen on the East Coast are battling the Conservative bureaucracy once again. The herring fishery closed in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island last week because the quota was caught. Knowing the waters are teeming with herring, the fishermen asked for an increase in quota. The Minister said no to the New Brunswick fishermen. Prince Edward Island fishermen are still waiting for an answer.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand that answer. It comes at a time when the herring are schooling in the Northumberland Strait and the markets are strong. Herring is the toughest fishery at which to make a decent living. Why not let the fishermen catch the herring while they are in the waters? The herring will be gone within a week.

Increasing the quota would help the plant workers as well. They desperately need the jobs the extra quota would provide. Unemployment is a way of life in that area. The herring fishery on the East Coast is in a desperate situation, so desperate that New Brunswick fishermen are ignoring the closure. They have been fishing illegally since last weekend. I don't support them, but the Government is seizing the catches and selling them to the processors who are writing cheques to the Receiver General. What does the Government intend to do with the profit? Give it to the needy fishermen or use it to pay off the federal deficit? Why did the Minister not have the foresight to predict that this would happen? Where was he this summer when he should have been consulting with fishermen? What was he doing—fishing salmon in B.C.?

It is time for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) to listen to fishermen and to pay attention to their concerns. The Government promised to maintain the inshore fishery, but fishermen on the East Coast can see throught that promise.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—INVASION OF ANGOLA—CALL FOR MANDATORY SANCTIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, last Friday amid great fanfare the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) announced a series of largely voluntary sanctions purportedly designed to send a message to the South African Government that Canada wants a change in apartheid and in the status of Namibia. The leaders of blacks within South Africa, Namibia, and the front line states had asked for mandatory sanctions since they realized that voluntary sanctions were not enough. Once again they were proven right because today we have South Africa's answer to our gentle prodding. It has once again invaded Angola with the military might supplied by the West.

Yesterday's actions by South Africa should not be a surprise to the Canadian Government in light of the type of measures which were announced. These include a ban on air travel that does not exist, a voluntary ban on bank loans that are no longer being made, and a voluntary embargo on oil exports that are largely insignificant anyway.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs promised tougher sanctions if things did not improve. Clearly matters have worsened. It is time for tough economic sanctions and leadership in the Commonwealth.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT GENERAL E. L. M. BURNS

TRIBUTE TO DISTINGUISHED CANADIAN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay respect to a great Canadian who died on Friday, September 6.

Lieutenant General E. L. M. Burns, a distinguished soldier, engineer and diplomat, will long be remembered for his unselfish contribution to the Government of Canada.

General Burns graduated from the Royal Military College of Canada, was commissioned in the Royal Canadian Engineers in 1915 and won the Military Cross in World War I.

During peace time he experimented in the field of air photo surveys and served as president of the Canadian Institue of Surveying in 1936-1937.

General Burns commanded the first Canadian Corps during operations in the Liri Valley in 1944.

Following the Second World War he became involved in the movement toward peacekeeping and disarmament with the Department of External Affairs.

• (1410)

General Burns was loaned from the Department to the UN in 1954 and was appointed Chief of Staff of the United Nations Truce Supervision Organization. In the ensuing years he played a role in the Suez crisis, the Sinai, and was named Special Adviser to the Government of Canada on Disarmament.

General Burns was awarded the Pearson Peace Medal in 1981 in recognition of this brave Canadian's dedication. On behalf of all men and women who believe personal sacrifice is the route to world peace, General Burns will be missed by all Canadians.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—EFFECT OF NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the comments and accusations of the Opposition regarding the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

As an Albertan, and as the Member for the constituency in which the bank operated, I cannot believe the Liberals could stand up in this House with a clear conscience and criticize us for attempting to help a fledgling financial institution which, in reality, failed due to the National Energy Program.

The Canadian Commercial Bank existed for western Canadians—of that I am proud. The bank, as well as many other institutions in the West, could never have foreseen the devastating effects of the NEP. The bank rose out of a growing economic infrastructure—until the Liberals chopped it down. Such a small institution could never protect itself against the National Energy Program, which was a steamroller of economic ruin in Alberta.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what would the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) have said if we allowed the bank to fail without making a valiant effort to save it? He probably would have said that the Government was forgetting about the West. Well, we did not forget about the West. It is simply hard to compete against the crushing policies of the previous Liberal Government.

We will not apologize for helping an Alberta institution. I am proud to say we did what we could. I am also proud to sit in the same Chamber as the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HUMAN RIGHTS

ALLEGED SEXUAL HARASSMENT AT STELCO PLANT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the House today a case of sexual harassment at the Stelco plant.

Bonita Clark is a 32-year old engineer who works there. On several occasions, she has been subjected to sexual harassment at work and she has lodged a formal complaint to the Ontario Labor Relations Board, but her case does not seem to be unique.

Indeed, this complaint about sexual harassment is not the first one. And the Stelco company is building up a very bad record as far as women are concerned.

In 1979, five women working at Stelco also lodged complaints. Apparently, the Stelco Company is reluctantly hiring women hoping that they will voluntarily leave their job. Stelco is so reluctant to hire women that it has refused to provide them with washrooms.

After the 1979 complaints, Stelco has hired from 15 to 200 women, but there are less than 20 left today.

In Quebec, there is the Déméritas competition for the most sexist publicity. If companies such as Stelco go on discriminating against women, I can assure them that I will personally launch a publicity campaign which the manager of the company will surely not appreciate.

NATIONAL PARKS

MAINTENANCE OF BALANCE ADVOCATED

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, wilderness beauty is one of Canada's greatest assets. Our National Parks system is a proud testament of our commitment to the preservation of our wilderness treasures.

Forestry is Canada's most important industry in terms of trade, revenue, and employment. In British Columbia forestry is our lifeblood. When we talk of adding significant new areas of forested land to our parkland reserve—areas such as B.C.'s South Moresby, Meares Island, and the Stein River Basin—we cannot upset the delicate balance that must exist between the preservation of our environment and the preservation of our livelihoods.

There is a price to pay for everything, Mr. Speaker. Yet there is also a benefit to enjoy. Let us not look at any issue without looking at both sides of it first. Our pristine environment is our greatest asset, and our resource industries drive our economy and provide our jobs. This delicate and vital balance must be maintained.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK COLLAPSE—REPORT FROM UNITED STATES REGULATORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the Canadian Commercial Bank. Can the Minister confirm that the February 20 report from the United States regulators included warning of cease and desist order against Westlands Bank, California, which is wholly-owned by the Canadian Commercial Bank?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that this document is from the Government's regulatory authorities in the United States. I have no authority to release its contents. I can assure the Hon. Member, however, that in the strongest possible terms we have requested its release to our committee.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO CALIFORNIA BANK

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister confirm that between February 21 and March 14 the Canadian Commercial Bank transferred millions of dollars to its California bank in exchange for dubious loan assets?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, at this stage I can confirm no such thing. We are asking to have the matter put before a committee where all these matters can be explored. We have been discussing this all week.

ROLE OF UNITED STATES FEDERAL RESERVE BANK IN BANK COLLAPSE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, according to information sources in Canada and in the U.S., the report by the Federal Reserve Bank on the Westslands Bank, dated February 20, contained a veritable ultimatum for the Canadian Commercial Bank. Could the Minister confirm to the House that this ultimatum contained three options: first, increasing the equity of the Canadian Commercial Bank in the Westlands Bank; second, selling the American branch, and third, transferring performing Canadian loans to the American branch so that the Canadian bank would be left with only non-performing loans? Could the Minister confirm those points?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm no such thing until we get the matter before a committee where we can look at the entire sequence of events.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister confirm to the House that this information was available to her at the time she proposed a $255 million bail-out to the House? Was the Minister aware of the ultimatum at the time she proposed the bail-out to the Parliament of this country?

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, again, I have indicated time after time that I am prepared to release this document with the permission of the U.S. authorities. It will then become a matter of record for a committee to discuss in that context. We have put that in the strongest possible terms.

SECURITY OF DEPOSITS—OFFICIALS' DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, as more and more information comes before us, it is obvious that we are facing a billion dollar con job. My question is for the Minister of Finance.

This morning we learned that senior officials in his Ministry, along with senior officials in the Bank of Canada, had been discussing throughout the summer with officials of one of the major depositors of the Canadian Commercial Bank the security of its deposit. The same senior officials were giving the depositor assurances that its deposit would be safe. Was the Minister aware that his officials were giving these assurances on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I cannot confirm the facts which the Hon. Member has just indicated. Discussions were carried on as a result of a report which came to us in August. Those are the discussions which led to the final closure of the bank.

CANADIAN CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this morning in the Finance Committee the officers of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society indicated that during the months of May and July their senior officials were in touch with senior officials of the Minister and of the Central Bank. At that time, they indicated that they were encouraged to maintain their deposits in the bank and were given assurances that their deposits would be safe. My question for the Minister of Finance, and not the Minister of State for Finance, is this. Were his officials giving these assurances with his full knowledge and support?

• (1420)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any discussions between the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society and the Bank of Canada. There were discussions around the Green Paper with the Canadian Co-operative Society and those were the only conversations I ever had with it, and I am sure it would confirm that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, you can hardly see the Minister's lips move as he is speaking. A question I have to put is who is in charge here? We have his Ministers making assurances to major depositors that their deposit would be safe throughout the summer.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. We have the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance making the commitment for a $1 billion bail-out using taxpayers' money. How big a mistake does a Minister have to make, $1 billion, $5 billion, $10 billion, before the Prime Minister asks for that Minister's resignation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at my hon. friend because he is usually noted for his fairness in this House. There has been no evidence of any mistake, wilful or otherwise, by either Minister. What we have offered—and I think what any reasonable Hon. Member of the House would accept—is that the matter be referred to committee so that objective assessments can be made, so that evidence can be adduced and proper value judgments be made, so we can cease the insinuations and the cheap shots. That does no credit to my hon. friend—

Mr. Blaikie: You ought to know about cheap shots.

Mr. Mulroney: —and I think he knows that.

MINISTERIAL DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. When the Inspector General advised the Minister of State for Finance of the crisis at the Canadian Commerical Bank, would she confirm to the House that she herself was reluctant and had reservations about the bail-out and took the matter to the Minister of Finance for a decision?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it would be very unusual if I did not discuss such a matter with the Minister of Finance. As to what happened at the time, we had a number of discussions around the importance of what would happen to the system, what the systemic effect would be internationally and domestically, if this bank were to be allowed to fail.

Ms. Copps: You let it fail now.

Oral Questions

RESPONSIBILITY FOR BAIL-OUT DECISION

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, my question is then directed to the Minister of Finance. Would the Minister confirm to the House that when the matter was brought to his attention, he, too, was reluctant to make a decision and that in fact the decision to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank was made by the Prime Minister himself on March 22 while at the National Economic Summit?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me ask the Hon. Member to cast his mind back to the matters which were going on at that time. We had just had the Ohio Savings and Loan Banks close their doors. That resulted in a substantial drop in the value of the United States dollar. We had the Alberta Government giving financial support to a number of its credit unions. We had a number of weeks during which the Canadian dollar was under severe pressure.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Those were the matters which were taken into account at the time of that decision. The decision was a decision by the Government to proceed—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —with an attempt to save a bank which was very important to the western economy, very important to the people, whether they be farmers, oil people or individual Canadians who had their money on deposit and who were also borrowing money from that bank. That is why we took that decision as a Government.

SECRECY PROVISIONS OF BANK ACT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Having had an opportunity to review the secrecy provisions of the Bank Act, Section 251, I believe the Prime Minister would agree that at the time that was drafted no one would have considered or thought that there might be the necessity to bail out a bank to the extent of almost $1 billion.

Does the Prime Minister not think it reasonable and fair that the House of Commons should pass legislation which will exempt this particular transaction from the secrecy provisions of the Bank Act and guarantee that the taxpayers of Canada, who will have to foot the bill for the cost of the bail out, know who receives the money which they are asked to pay?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is an incredible question.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the person who is responsible for administering the Bank Act, may I say that the intent of that section is very clear and, if we make an exception in this case for the depositors of this Bank, then how can we stand up here and say that the depositors' information in any bank in Canada from here on in is going to be secure from public knowledge?

IDENTIFICATION OF DEPOSITORS RECEIVING REFUNDS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, let me then ask the Prime Minister if I may, is it not reasonable to think that those who wish to receive the benefit of the bail-out should in advance have to waive the provision of secrecy and allow that it be known to the Canadian taxpayers who it is that they, the taxpayers, are being asked to bail out? Is it not reasonable to say to those who might take advantage of the bail-out that in order to receive the money you must apply for it and must be willing to let it be known who you are?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the depositors of this country deserve better treatment than this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: The next thing I know, he will be asking—

Mr. Deans: What about the taxpayers?

Mrs. McDougall: As the Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party well knows, we have indicated that we will give categories within the committee—

Mr. Deans: That's a different question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, it isn't.

Mrs. McDougall: The depositors of this country need to know that their concerns with their financial institutions—

Mr. Riis: Write a blank cheque.

Mrs. McDougall: —are private no matter what happens to that institution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: It's in the public domain. It's our money that's going there.

GOVERNMENT DECISION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Will he confirm to the House that on March 22 when he presided over the National Economic Summit, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance took up with him the serious condition and potential bankruptcy of the Canadian Commercial Bank and that he told them that on no account did he want a bankruptcy and that he wanted the bank bailed out?

The Prime Minister did not know the facts, he did not care, politics came first and he did not want to be responsible for the first bankruptcy of a Canadian bank in 60 years. Why did he not say—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance: "Why talk to me now, Mike, Barbara—"

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "—can't you see I'm busy—"

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "—give me the facts and I'll make a decision later"?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Foster: Yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Thank you, John.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It is nice to know that Hon. Members are on a first name basis, but perhaps somewhere else.

Mr. Mulroney: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the fantasy described by my right hon. friend never transpired. What did take place in the normal course of business was a recommendation which came forward from the officials of the Government of Canada, and from their advisers, in regard to a problem which had arisen in respect to a young and very fledgling financial institution in western Canada. The pros and cons were discussed. The Canadians banks had been involed. The officials throughout the Government had been consulted and it was their considered view that this support package would sustain that bank in western Canada.

I indicated—which was not inconsistent with the views others held—that given the terrible damage which had been done to western Canada by the National Energy Program and the problems it had gone through—

Mr. Chrétien: What about the bank in the United States, in California?

Mr. Mulroney: —this institution deserved no less support than others. And we supported it that day and I am delighted to see that the Liberal Opposition supported it as well. That is what transpired. I think that any further questions could properly be addressed by a committee of the House.

REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows full well that the Liberal Opposition supported this bail-out package on the basis of assurances from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance that the deal would make the bank viable. It is now clear that the Minister of Finance did not know the facts, the Minister of State for Finance did not know the facts, and now the Prime Minister has admitted that he did not know the facts.

Will the Prime Minister instruct his House Leader in the negotiations among the House Leaders to open up the entire documentation we have been asking for in this House for over a week, the list of deposits, all the relevant documents, including the bail-out arrangements? Will the Prime Minister give an undertaking, a personal undertaking, that the Minister of Finance will appear before the committee, as well as the Minister of State for Finance, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Inspector General of Banks—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Will he give that undertaking?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I am startled when I see the Member from Shawinigan applauding the Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I am taken aback, I am sorry.

The Leader of the Opposition makes statements like: "The Prime Minister didn't know the facts".

Some Hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Mulroney: The Prime Minister knew all of the facts available at the time.

Mr. Gauthier: You should come to committee.

Mr. Mulroney: With the possible exception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, no one can know the future with certainty.

Ms. Copps: That is sacrilegious.

Mr. Mulroney: All we knew was that there was a problem.

Mr. Chrétien: That is not what you said during the election.

Mr. Mulroney: There was a serious problem and it was dealt with seriously. We felt that institution in western Canada deserved a chance to become viable. We thought, based on the best advice available to us, that it would become viable. There was no attempt to do anything other than place our trust and faith—

Mr. Chrétien: Your judgment.

Mr. Mulroney: —not only in the information we received but in the capacity of that institution to survive, given the package of support provided. If the Liberals are opposed to helping in western Canada or elsewhere let them stand up and say so. We believe in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: It is your judgment we fault.

Mr. de Jong: California, that is where the problem started.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, with regard to any data, information, or people who my right hon. friend or others feel should come before the committee, we will be there, we will provide all the answers required and we will be forthcoming, because it is in everyone's interest to get at all of the truth so we can make the appropriate value judgments.

TRANSFER OF BANK'S ASSETS TO CALIFORNIA SUBSIDIARY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister have authorized the bail-out if he had known, as we now know, that between the time the CCB received a cease and desist order from the Federal Reserve Bank in San Francisco and the time it came before the Inspector General of Banks on March 14, it had transferred all of its good assets and good loans down to the California subsidiary? The California subsidiary is still prospering; it is the Canadian parent in western Canada which is now bankrupt.

Mr. Gauthier: How do you explain that?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is the question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did you know about it?

Mr. Dick: Nice statement.

Mr. McDermid: What is the question, John?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we have already indicated that we have requested from the federal regulatory authorities in the United States that we have this document with their permission to present to the committee where we want a full and frank discussion of everything which has happened leading up to March 22, and everything which has happened leading up to September 1. We have made that commitment both publicly and privately.

TRADE

UNITED STATES' RESTRICTIONS ON CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have just returned from British Columbia and discussions with lumber worker leaders there. I want to report to the Prime Minister their opposition to his naive idea that a comprehensive trade deal would solve the back-door protectionist moves against us by the U.S.

The question they asked me to put to the Prime Minister is whether he will insist as a condition, before we enter any free trade negotiations with the U.S., that they drop their new non-tariff restrictions aimed at these Canadian producers. Otherwise we negotiate under blackmail conditions.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think we have made known very clearly the position of the Government of Canada regarding the prospective problems facing the British Columbia forest products industry. We have made that abundantly clear and we think it has registered appropriately in Washington.

With regard to the commercial discussions we may or may not be having with the United States, they would be largely and essentially designed to create jobs and provide British Columbians with greater opportunities. God knows, British Columbia needs that kind of help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONDITIONS ATTACHING TO FREE TRADE DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister.

We must be very clear about this question. Once again: Before discussions on free trade are held with the United States, will the Prime Minister insist that the Americans eliminate the new non-tariff barriers facing Canadian producers in the lumber, fisheries and pork sectors?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I assume that if we negotiate, we will start from scratch. We will start with an open mind, without any preconditions, with the exception of the national items I already mentioned, that is, sovereignty and independence and so on.

But generally speaking, if we negotiate, we will wait and see what the other party has to offer, and vice versa.

SPACE WEAPONRY

UNITED STATES STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. First I would like to say that I applauded my Leader because I know that if he had been Prime Minister he would not have been dragging along a $1 billion fiasco like the present Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mayer: It would be $5 billion.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You got that right from the book.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have an important question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. This morning, we read something in the newspapers about the Department of External Affairs that contradicts the statement made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister two weeks ago and which we applauded, to the effect that there would be no intergovernmental relations with the United States as far as the star wars project is concerned. Is it true that the Government intends to let Government agencies financed by the state, such as the National Research Council, become directly involved in the star wars project, as the spokesman for External Affairs said yesterday in Kitchener, Ontario?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has made the position of the Government abundantly clear, no matter how many doors the Hon. Member wants to open—

Ms. Copps: Just the back door.

Mr. Nielsen: —on the different sides of his many-faceted mind. The position of the Government is that it is not the intention of the Government to participate in the SDI research on a Government-to-Government basis with the U.S. Private enterprises, as they always have been in this country, are free to make their own decisions as the opportunities might arise, if indeed they do arise.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, is the Deputy Prime Minister replying clearly? Yesterday a statement was made by an official of the Ministry of International Trade that federal agencies will be participating in SDI and helping the private sector to participate. Will the Deputy Prime Minister make it clear to the nation that there will be no financial involvement by the Canadian Government in this project with the American authorities?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that the question is hypothetical. When and if circumstances—well, the hon. gentleman is showing me a newspaper clipping or whatever, which I have not read. If circumstances arise in the future which come anywhere near resembling what his worst fears, as I interpret them, might be, then I am sure that decisions will be made at whatever level, private sector, Government agency or Government, which are required. The decision-making process is in place and will be used.

TRADE

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Recently, several of his Ministers have indicated that all economic sectors will be considered in the discussions on free trade with the United States. Yesterday, his Press Secretary said that the Government had no real idea about the results of these negotiations. Is it the position of this Government that no sector of our economy is safe and that all of them are negociable within the discussions on free trade with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that I have already indicated on several occasions sectors of our economy which are not negotiable as far as we are concerned. I believe that I was quite clear in this regard. Our objective is very simple. It is to create jobs. There are about two million jobs in Canada and Quebec which depend directly on an increased access to the American market. It is essential for us to develop this access to create jobs in this country.

This is our objective and I hope that it is also that of all the Members of this House of Commons.

SECTORAL TRADE INQUIRY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's press attaché says that there are no fixed ideas, but the Prime Minister says that there are certain sectors which are reserved. Which industries are in fact off the table? Is the Government prepared to protect agriculture, to keep the Auto Pact out of the discussions, and to ensure that the cultural industries are not given up in terms of protection because of a free trade agreement with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if we decide to initiate these kinds of negotiations, we would obviously be poor negotiators indeed if, before we sat down, we disposed of all the cards which we may or may not hold as a nation. There are cards that will never be disposed for or touched. These deal with our national sovereignty, our independence, and our cultural integrity, along the lines of the decisions that the Government made on SDI and on Arctic sovereignty last week.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PRISON INMATE'S TRANSFER

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Over the past week-end, and until yesterday, the Montreal Urban Community has experienced the longest hostage taking in its history. It involved Réjean Mathurin, a man sentenced to life for two murders, less than two years ago, and considered very dangerous. He was detained at the Leclerc Institution before he escaped.

Will the Minister tell the House whether he intends to order an investigation in order to find out why that man was, at a very early stage of his imprisonment, transferred from a maximum security penitentiary with concrete external walls, to a medium security penitentiary with external wire fences?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is long enough.

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is yes. Immediately upon the occurrence of an incident like this the Correctional Service would initiate an internal investigation. That is under way at the present time and we expect to have the results within a couple of weeks.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—BUDGET PROVISIONS

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the last several months the Government introduced several budgetary changes, including changes in family allowances, which will result in middle class families in Canada paying $3,500 more in taxes while rich families will have their taxes increased by only $1,125. Why has the Government chosen to fight the battle of deficit reduction on the backs of low and middle-income Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing how short memories are in this place. I remind the Hon. Member that family allowances were not indexed at all prior to 1973. In 1976 the indexation was suspended for a full year.

Ms. Copps: John Turner intoduced indexation.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Hold on just a minute now. On January 1, when the Hon. Member from Bay Street was the Finance Minister—

Ms. Copps: You're the Hon. Member from Bay Street.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: He wasn't referring to you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Minister knows full well that such a reference is not appropriate.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): On January 1, 1979, the family allowance was reduced by 20 per cent and then was cut back to six and five during 1983.

The point that I am making is that there is no one more holier than thou than the Member opposite, and people are starting to see through it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): On many occasions the previous Government took action against family benefits. We have chosen to reduce the rate of increase of the family allowance, but at the same time we have significantly increased the child tax credit so that those who need it most will get the most.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET QUEBEC FAMILIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary on the same subject. We saw the Minister of Finance do the same crazy thing to senior citizens, for which he was forced later to apologize.

My question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister is this: The groups representing Quebec families want to know if you are ready and willing to meet them to change your—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Order! I would like to hear you ask a question.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

I know he pretends he is not listening because he does not want to answer. His advisors told him not to.

Mr. Prime Minister, the groups representing Quebec families have called on me to ask you today if you would be ready to meet them in order to change your family allowance system? They do not want to lose the $55 million you want to take away from them.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I met Quebec families in the constituency of Manicouagan yesterday. They were very proud of the 284,000 new jobs created in 11 months by this Government, of the fact that interest rates have gone down by 2.75 per cent, that the inflation rate is at its lowest since 1971, that investor confidence has increased by 12 per cent and that the number of construction projects has gone up by 26 per cent.

I think Quebec families want to meet with us in order to congratulate us for quite a remarkable first year in office.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

MODERNIZATION OF PULP AND PAPER PLANT AT DESBIENS—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

This morning, the leader of our party met the representatives of the unionized workers of the pulp and paper plant in Desbiens, in the area of Lac-Saint-Jean, province of Quebec, and he was told that the Secretary of State had indicated that the $4.6 million federal contribution which the Minister had announced last May for the modernization of the Desbiens plant would only be available until October 10.

My question is this: Considering that the Lavalin Corporation has withdrawn from this project, could the Minister extend this deadline beyond October 10 and, if so, until when?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct in indicating that on May 10 we made an offer of a 20 per cent assistance package with respect to almost $23 million of total financing for the plant to which he referred. We have extended our offer until October 10. We have not received a request for a further extension, but if we receive such a request we will naturally give it very early and, presumably, favourable consideration.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF FEASIBILITY STUDY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The union wanted to know which feasibility study has now been accepted by the Government, the $24 million one, from St-Raymond, or the $50 million one from the Lavalin company which has withdrawn from the project?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, our figure was that of $23 million. That is the figure which we assume to be the correct estimate of the total cost. Being Conservatives, we always like to take the lower figure.

Oral Questions

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General and it is with regard to the Young Offenders Act. There are many flaws in that Act, especially in the provisions which came into effect on April 1 of this year. Assuming that he has had a chance to make a preliminary review of that legislation, what would he highlight as the main weaknesses and when will we see some action on this legislation?

• (1450)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in response to a question last week from one of the Hon. Member's colleagues, I fully share the philosophy that underlines the Young Offenders legislation, namely, that young offenders should be treated not on a case, welfare model but rather by holding them accountable for their actions.

There have been a number of concerns expressed about the application of the Young Offenders Act, including the issue of what is done in the case where a young offender is found not guilty by reason of insanity and what is done with the records. There is the issue of whether or not police are allowed to disclose the identity of young offenders who may be loose and dangerous, as well as the adequancy of some provincial legislation for dealing with young people under the age of 12. Certainly I will want to review all of these issues and solicit input from the Hon. Member and others.

AIRPORTS

SECURITY MEASURES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport why the very special security measures announced on June 25th by the Prime Minister following the Air India tragedy have not yet been implemented at the Toronto airport? And how is it that a CBC reporter could so easily make light of the entire security system put in place by his department in Toronto?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, I am not at all happy about this incident. Indeed, I am very disturbed. The fact of the matter is that earlier this year we initiated a complete audit and review of Canada's security systems with respect to the procedures, the adequacy and the vulnerability. We have beefed up our security system, particularly with respect to international traffic, and particularly with respect to sabotage which is a part of a new era in which we now live.

However, the fact that there was an unattended door which literally broke the security shield disturbs me very much and I can assure the Hon. Member that it will be dealt with.

I should also point out to him the need, perhaps, for the last point detection system that we are working on, and the need for improved facilities and more manpower, which means dollars, of course.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, are air travellers more secure now than before? Are we now going to believe what the Minister is saying? Is he more credible than when he made his statement on June 25? How much additional money has he received from the Minister of Finance to ensure security at airports?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that the security system is only as effective as its weakest link. Obviously, there is a weak link here. Furthermore, we have detected some points of vulnerability which we are addressing. Some of the audits have been completed, some recommendations are being implemented, and others are ongoing. A comprehensive review was initiated by the Prime Minister. That report is to be in our hands some time in the middle of October.

All of these matters are being considered and I repeat that it points out the need for a complete re-evaluation of our system, our facilities, our manpower, and the need for more resources to do the job properly.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

PRENTICE-HALL COMPANY TAKEOVER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Investment Canada. He will know that the publishing community and Canadians generally involved in cultural awareness are extremely concerned about the prospect of a takeover of a major Canadian publishing firm, Prentice-Hall, by American interests, Gulf and Western. Will the Minister assure the House that cultural industries will indeed be exempt from American takeovers and that this takeover of Prentice-Hall publishing in particular will not be permitted?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is well aware that the Gulf and Western deal to which she refers is an indirect acquisition. It is not a direct acquisition of Prentice-Hall which is already owned outside Canada.

This matter is before us. The Prentice-Hall people have indicated that they would like some time to weigh the communications policy that my colleague, the Minister of Communications, made public some time ago. They will try to comply with that policy as far as Canadian ownership is concerned. Of course, we have facilitated their deliberations by giving them extended time.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Communications. In July the Minister announced a firm policy stating that the publishing industry would be developed in Canada. Obviously, if this policy is to have any meaning, this takeover would not be permitted.

Would the Minister explain how this policy could be anything more than a pious hope if it is not respected in particular cases? This particular case has been a matter of concern to the community. There has been a great deal of lobbying on it for months, without any answers. The publishing community wants an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For a supplementary question, it is quite long.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, a certain number of cases are now under review in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and there have been frequent, continous and warm consultations with my colleague. It rests with him to advise the companies involved of the government's decisions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF CHILDREN IN BRAZIL

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil-Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Last night I was deeply distressed by the Radio-Canada news report on the fate of 35 million Brazilian children, and I would imagine that all Hon. Members were distressed as well. Mr. Speaker, Canada does not condone apartheid in South Africa, and in the past it did not condone oppression and injustice in the world. Can the Minister tell me what measures he intends to implement to force the Brazilian Government to look after the 35 million innocent children who have been abandoned by their Government and their families?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State on External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I greatly appreciate the question raised by the Hon. Member. This program continues to shed light on a situation which has shocked all Canadians. I have asked CIDA and my Department whether Canada can do anything more. We already have a very active program under the aegis of CIDA to help the Brazilian Government.

In the final analysis I must emphasize that the situation depicted on television last night is an internal situation. Still, if there is anything Canada can do to help, we are prepared to do so.

AIRPORTS

OWNERSHIP AND RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday he misled the House—perhaps inadvertently—when he denied that an exercise is under way to divest the federal Government of responsibility and ownership of federal airports across Canada.

Would he now confirm that in fact a Mr. John Fisher, an employee of the Deputy Prime Minister's ministerial task force, has already held discussions regarding divestiture of federal airports in Regina, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Whitehorse, Yellowknife, Fredericton, Saint John, Charlottetown, and St. John's, Newfoundland? If the Minister is still not able to answer the question, I suggest he refer the matter to the Deputy Prime Minister who obviously is running the Transport shop?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did not think that I misled the House or denied that such an exercise was going on. As I indicated to the Hon. Member, the Budget papers of May 23 indicated that the Government would pursue the developments of a new management structure for the federal airport system in Canada. Options would be presented for consideration this year to provide for a self-sustaining system, incorporating the principle of cross-subsidization for the smaller airports. It is within that context that options are being developed by my Department and these options will be presented to Cabinet later this year for consideration. That is precisely what I said yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: A short supplementary question.

Mr. Tobin: Yesterday I asked for a list of airports that may possibly be affected. The Minister denied there was any such plan.

SAFETY FACTOR

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about safety. Does the Minister agree with a statement with respect to safety, authored by the Deputy Prime Minister in a confidential "Structure 90" document? It reads: "Users, carriers and the general public must gradually assume a greater role in ensuring their own safety". Is that the attitude that resulted in Radio-Canada making a mockery of your new safety instructions in Toronto?

• (1500)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member, this House and the people of Canada that safety is the number one priority in any initiatives to be undertaken.

Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 47(1), I would like to table, in both official languages, the first annual report of the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, which should be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 47(4).

PETITIONS

SALES TAX ON DRUGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of 6,130 citizens of Winnipeg, most of them senior citizens, who urge the Government to remove the immoral and unjust sales tax on thousands of over the counter drugs, surgical supplies and health care products. These citizens of Winnipeg implore the Government to remove the sales tax from all cancer treatments, heart medication and drugs for a host of other illnesses.

CLOSING DATE OF GULF REFINERY PLANT

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition from workers of the Gulf Canada refinery, in my riding of Montreal-Mercier.

Mr. Speaker, the 8,000 petitioners are workers of the Gulf refinery, as well as residents of the Montreal region.

We urge the Government of Canada to do its utmost to postpone the closing of the Gulf refinery to save 450 jobs and protect the petro-chemical industry.

Mr. Speaker, may I add that the workers of that refinery are supported by the whole Quebec caucus.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can tell that some of the bootlegging habits are spreading throughout the Chamber. However, are there further petitions?

RENT INCREASES

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale-High Park): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present to the House a petition on behalf of the residents of Vilnius Manor, a Toronto Lithuanian senior citizens residence located in my constituency.

The residents are being asked by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to absorb rent increases from 5 per cent to 8 per cent even while the ceiling on rent increases in the Province of Ontario is 4 per cent. The petitioners request the House to urge the Minister responsible for the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation to provide relief from the increasingly high rental costs.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 385, 397, 419 and 423.

[Text]

HIRING OF SPECIAL CONSTABLES

Question No. 385—Mr. Gauthier:

Did the Royal Canadian Mounted Police recently hire 300 security agents and, if so, what language criteria were used in their hiring?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): The RCMP has not hired any security agents in the recent past. There is presently a recruiting program under way, however, to hire 201 Special Constables who will be employed as Static Guards in the National Capital Region. This employment opportunity has been publicized in major newspapers across Canada, and proficiency in both official languages was identified as a definite asset, as was related military or security experience. To date, in excess of 17,000 individuals have indicated an interest in these positions. As a large number of candidates possess both the additional qualifications of language proficiency and related experience, processing of applications has begun with this group.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

Question No. 397—Mr. Garneau:

Since its inception, how many person-years were allocated to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and what was and what is, at the present time, the proportion of French-speaking employees?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): The Canadian Security Intelligence Service is not subjected to person-year control. Treasury Board controls the funding available to the Service, placing a limitation on the amount provided for salaries and wages. The salaries and wages limitation is included in the over-all budgetary figure for the Service which is approved annually by Parliament.

Immediately prior to the establishment of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, 29 per cent of the employee population was comprised of employees whose first official language was French. By June 1, 1985 this figure has been reduced to 25 per cent as a consequence of the decision of a number of French-speaking members of the RCMP who elected to remain with the Force on transition. Efforts continue by the Service to attract French-speaking candidates, with success evident in appointments made at all levels of the Service.

RENOUS PRISON, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 419—Mr. Robichaud:

1. What is the total number of positions to be filled at the Renous prison and was the idea of building a special wing for dangerous criminals abandoned and, if so (a) how many jobs will be lost (b) what would have been the average salary at the prison in 1985 (c) in view of the multiplier effect, how many indirect jobs will be lost in (i) New Brunswick (ii) the Miramichi area due to the cancellation of the project?

2. How many unilingual (a) francophone (b) anglophone postions will there be in (i) management (ii) security services (iii) inmate services (psychologists, recreationists, etc.) and, in each case, what is its description?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): 1. The number of positions to be filled at the Atlantic Institution is 271. The plan to build a Special Handling Unit was abandoned. (a) There will be 80 fewer jobs as a consequence; (b) the average salary at the Atlantic Institution will remain approximately $33,000; (c) it is estimated that approximately 66 indirect jobs will be lost: (i) 15, (ii) 51.

2. (a) There are no unilingual "French essential" positions identified as of August 1, 1985. (b) The linguistic profile of the following positions is termed "English essential": (i) Management:—Assistant Warden, Industries (GL-C01)

Preventive security officers are responsible for gathering and analysing security-related information, ensuring reliability of staff and screening institutional visitors.

The security group comprises the largest category of employees in the institution.

(iii) Inmate services: one officer (ED-EST) and one support staff member (CR) in Education and Training.

OPERATING COSTS OF AIR CANADA

Question No. 423—Mr. Robichaud:

1. How much will the operating costs of Air Canada increase in 1985 following the 1 per cent increase in the federal sales tax on gasoline in October, 1984, following another 1 per cent increase of the federal sales tax in January, 1986, and following another increase of two cents a litre next September?

3. Will the Corporation cut passenger services and, if so, which ones?

4. Will the Corporation change its number of flights in 1985 and, if so (a) how many (b) will they be new or cancelled destinations?

2. A 1.7 per cent fare increase was introduced on February 1, 1985 to recover fuel price increases including October 1, 1984 federal sales tax on gasoline and the November 10, 1984 petroleum compensation charge increase.

3 and 4. The corporation is constantly reviewing its schedule patterns and continually makes adjustments based on multiple factors such as consumer demand, competition, as well as operating costs.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Frith (p. 6625).

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Parry Sound—no, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). The Hon. Member will know my problem.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for the backhanded acknowledgement that this "Parry" is indeed sound, but the riding is Kenora-Rainy River.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parry: I was following the course of this debate to this point with considerable interest and trying to examine for myself what was happening in the House and how the debate was proceeding. I was glad this morning that the Government side was not going to content itself with just the bald statements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) in relation to the planned reduction of family allowances, both as a component of government spending and as a component of family budgets in Canada.

I was glad to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) and the Member from Winnipeg South rising in what I took to be somewhat stage-managed efforts to defend the Government's position. It struck me in listening to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, along with speakers from this Party and from the Official Opposition, that what we were looking at was an excellent portrayal of the disparate motives within the Progressive Conservative Party, undoubtedly around the Cabinet table and within the government caucus.

On the one hand we heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare defending the reduction of family allowance payments as being a marginal adjustment, something that did not compromise the principle of universality, something that was, in fact, a little tinkering with the works that was not going to have any effect at all on the budgets of ordinary Canadians. On the other hand, and by contrast, we had the Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) expounding what I believe is a tradition within the Progressive Conservative Party that is not going to lie down, a tradition which says that social payments are some form of wastage in the economy, a tradition which decries and denigrates social payments as some form of charity. For example, there was a reference to $60 billion of social expenditures by the Government. This reference did not enable Members of this House, listeners or readers outside of this House to understand the relative significance in budgetary and national account terms. It was merely a reference to global figures, and, by implication, a reference to the generosity which this represented, presumably to the more productive classes of Canadians as opposed to those he sees as unproductive classes.

I would like to tell the Government and point out to the Progressive Conservative Party that until that sort of thinking is eliminated, there may be those Canadians who will elect them but they will be short of Canadians who will trust them.

It seems to me the Government was rightly nervous in allowing its Members to speak to this debate. Some credit is deserved. The Government has decided to grasp the nettle of what sentiments might come out from some of the wilder fringes of that caucus. On the one hand we have the preoccupation with the deficit, and there is legitimate concern with the deficit, and on the other hand we have an ideological viewpoint which views social expenditures as some form of subsidy, some form of scrap thrown to the poor people in order to buy their silence and their compliance.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could we ask Government Members, if they are going to hold meetings—it sounds like a tea party—to leave the House. This is a very important issue that my colleague is debating.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the Member's point, as I am sure Hon. Members do. May I simply say that the advice should be taken by all Members of the House at all times.

Mr. Parry: As one who is occasionally guilty of the conduct complained of, I was not going to complain myself, Mr. Speaker. I do not doubt the Government side has very important matters it would like to resolve before Ministers escape to the relative safety of their ministerial offices. Of course I know, as a practising politician, that the practice of talking over one another is useful. However, when it reaches the ear of the Speaker it seems to be meaningless chatter, although I do not doubt the relevance and indeed the importance of what was being said.

• (1510)

I should like to return to the theme which has been taken up by speakers in this Party and in the Official Opposition. I would ask Government Members why they are not questioning the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), their Cabinet and their Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as to the status of the election promises which were made by the Progressive Conservative Party. Of course those election promises said nothing about reducing family allowances in the context of the over-all social spending envelope. Those promises, however, had much to say about maintaining indexation. To use an outworn phrase which will never leave the consciousness of Canadians, those promises had much to say about the sacred trust which our social programs imposed and should impose on every Member of the House.

The nature of the Bill is simply the adjustment of the family allowances. All Hon. Members, in speaking to it, have chosen to discuss it in a wider context. I have no hesitation in following that precedent. While we have heard from the Government side that apparently every evil which has afflicted the country over the past decade can be traced to the National Energy Program, we have also heard some contexts that are eminently sensible as an analysis of what the Government is trying to do with the family allowance reductions. It is worth pointing out in the House the removal of indexation in the sense that indexation is now to be dropped by three percentage points and that only the incremental inflation above 3 per cent will be counted in the recalculation of family allowances. Even though that form of indexation provides for an increase every year in the family allowance payments, it does not, in and of itself, give a share of the increase in Canada's wealth and Canada's means to the people who are the main beneficiaries of family allowances, namely, the poorest of the poor. Because indexation merely links an increase in payments to the value of money, it does not take into account increases in our Gross National Product. It does not take into account policy directions or the possibility that we, as Canadians, would like to see some of the increase in our national wealth also shared with people who are undertaking—and let us never forget that—a very serious responsibility not only on their own behalf but on behalf of all. There are those people who will benefit from the fact that the Government has not reintroduced the marginal tax rates which the previous Liberal Government discarded in a pay-off to its wealthier supporters. There are the people who will benefit from the lifetime capital gains bonanza or exemption. There are the people who will benefit from the removal of the limit on RRSP contributions, and the people who will undoubtedly benefit from the tax breaks which the Government will introduce in the future. They will be raising their children in the same society as those people who will be losing because of the Government's regressive behaviour in terms of family allowances.

One thing has always struck me about Canada since I came here 15 years ago. It did have and still has today strong elements of feeling about being one society. Canada is mercifully free of the classism and elitism of the society which I left to come here. I believe that that organic picture of society to which we as Canadians largely, although not totally, subscribe by our actions is a philosophy, an impression and a credo that the Government should be doing everything to reinforce and nothing, in my opinion, to denigrate. With the family allowance being reduced and with the compensating increase for a period of only two years in the child tax credit, we should look at the message which those changes are sending to Canadians. We should look at the fact that over a 5-year span there will be no families which gain from the proposals of the Government. We should consider the message which is being sent to families, particularly poorer families, by those type of adjustments. We should consider the impression of Canadians when they are confronted with those calculations and understand that by the year 1990 all those who are parenting will be losers from this package of measures. They will very likely see, as I see, the measures introduced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare as being a niggardly tinkering with our social support network. We should consider what the reduced exemptions for children will do to the income tax system. We should consider the impression in the minds of the parents of Canada when they juxtapose the Government's reduction in the effective increase in the family allowance with a statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that Canada has an acute shortage of rich people. We should consider what will be the impression of the average family when it realizes that the family allowance reduction will reduce its over-all budget and income.

Some Members of the House have spoken of the reduction in the increase in family allowances as an attack on families. To others that may sound like rhetoric. However, I believe that it contains a very important element of truth and significance. After all, it is never reality which governs the reactions, behaviour and beliefs of people in this country or in any other country; it is always the perception of what is happening. The Government is sending a clear message by these reductions to the people of Canada, particularly to the poorest families, that so far as it is concerned child rearing, parenting and the development and growth of families are less a concern this year than they were last year. They will be even less a concern in 1990 than they are this year, and they will be an ever-diminishing concern of the Government from now on.

We should also consider what will happen if the average Canadian family relates family allowance receipts to its budget and the cost of raising children. The family allowance, the child tax credit and the child tax exemption, even combined, are only an insignificant portion of the cost of child rearing. One of the experiences, I am told, which European Governments are coming upon is that the birth rate is continuing to decline. The belief is that this is largely because of the financial burden which potential parents or married couples perceive when they look at the cost of raising children and how it will affect their family budget, and when they consider the very nominal recognition of the tax system and social payments provided by their countries.

Also I think we should look, in particular, at the position of the working poor. They are the people for whom family allowance is perhaps the most significant part of their budget, not in the sense of its being the largest part of their budget nor even in the sense of its being a larger part of the budget for them. These people will find that their incomes are not geared by another form of social support for the effects of inflation. These are the people who will in fact suffer most from the deindexing of family allowance payments.

The Government has chosen in its attack on the deficit to look really at just one side of the ledger. If there was ever a fault of which I thought the Tories would not be guilty it was failing to appreciate that there are indeed two sides to the national accounts; that there is an income side and an expenditure side. I think the fact that the Government has not brought in or reintroduced progressive tax rates, the fact that the Government has telegraphed reductions in taxes, exemptions, loopholes to the wealthy taxpayers of the country is as clear an indication as could be given of the fact that the Government is concentrating on expenditure reduction as the means of deficit reduction and is not looking at instituting in Canada the sort of fair tax system which would be both more productive in absolute terms and would provide a fairer sharing than exists today of the costs of providing benefits to our people.

Others have spoken and at some length on the principle of universality once espoused by the Prime Minister as a sacred trust. I believe that these reductions in family allowances that are predicated are indeed an erosion, a reduction of the principle of universality. That principle is important not only for philosophical but for pragmatic reasons. It is only when all can see some benefit from the system of social payments in this country that we will have the support of everybody in continuing to provide and co-operate in the mechanisms that provide those social assistance payments.

I am glad to hear my friends in the Liberal Party on side in this matter because when I heard their announcement of a so-called Operation Injustice a couple of days ago my first reaction was: Spare us! We have had the six and five program, that was Operation Injustice. Don't inflict that upon us again! But if the Liberal Party is prepared to go through the country and, ignoring its own history in this matter, help to bring the Opposition toward reduction in family allowances into this House, then I say, more power to them. I know that they will be pushing the same line and the same philosophy that the New Democratic Party is pushing and has always pushed.

I am glad to say that the psychology of charity has been almost eliminated from the social payments system in this country. I am glad to say that we can see ourselves as providers and as beneficiaries. I am concerned about the effect particularly on single-parent families, particularly on the poorest of the poor, that these reductions will have. I am glad to join my colleagues in the New Democratic Party and in the Opposition in voicing our opposition to those reductions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Parry). As I listened to him, a question arose in my mind. I was thinking about his own riding where he has a very high percentage of Indian communities, in fact I think one of the highest number of Indian communities of any riding in Canada. As the Hon. Member has pointed out many times, there is also a very high level of unemployment in those communities. I wonder if he could share with the House his feelings about what the deindexing of family allowances will do to Indian families and Indian communities. How is that going to affect them?

Mr. Parry: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) for his question because, as he correctly observes, my constituency does contain the largest number of reserve communities of any constituency in Canada and I believe also the highest number of treaty Indian people of any constituency in Canada. The impact, quite frankly, in some communities where unemployment can run as high as 85 per cent in the winter time and can persist above the 50 per cent level all year, will be quite significant.

I have heard Members from the government side decry and deride this Party's opposition to these reductions on the ground that they are not really going to affect anybody. I can say with great certainty that there are people who are going to be affected, particularly when we look at the continuing cumulative effect of those reductions.

We know, considering the effect of inflation, that it will be 1988 before the real value of assistance payments to the poorest of the poor drops below what it is today. Simply because we are talking about a consequence that is three years down the line rather than an immediate consequence, I believe, does not give us the right to treat it any less seriously. The fact is that if it is in the Government's plans and prescriptions and programs that those people will function on a reduced income three years from today then we should discuss it with exactly the same weight as if it were to happen tomorrow.

Particularly for those women who are the heads of single-parent families with large numbers of children, they are certainly going to notice the difference in their family allowance cheque, particularly if the payments through the Canada Assistance Plan are not increased to make up for the reductions that they will experience. It will have a significant effect and I would call upon the Government to look at the effect upon the actual real life budgets of the poorest of the poor before this measure goes forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) has a question or a comment?

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I also would like to ask my colleague a question. I know that he has a background in accounting and is particularly well informed on taxation. He also is involved somewhat in our own proposals before the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare regarding what the New Democratic Party would do to bring more money into the Government coffers that could be used to increase family benefits, particularly the child tax credit and also to retain full indexation and to have a surplus for job-creation.

I wonder if he would comment a bit on the tax reform that The thinks is needed in order to increase benefits for families.

Mr. Parry: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I recall the proposal that was put forward by the New Democratic Party to the Standing Committee consisted of an increase of 80 per cent in the child tax credit. There was also the suggestion made by our Party that the child tax credit should be paid in segments rather than in one big lump as it is at the moment.

The point that the New Democratic Party is trying to make about the tax system is that it cannot be viewed as something that is divorced from the benefit system because, of course, the taxes pay for the benefits. Therefore if the Government was looking to reduce the deficit it should be looking at that income side of the ledger and it should be looking at the effective rates of taxation that are paid by Canadian taxpayers which, of course, go to fund, among so many other things, the benefits which we are debating today.

It was the belief of the New Democratic Party that the Government could pay for an 80 per cent increase in the child tax credit very comfortably by eliminating the capital gains exemption and by reinstating the marginal tax rates which had been abolished in the 1981 Budget.

• (1530)

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. In addressing the family allowance question, the Government is attempting to leave the impression that by reducing family allowances and by increasing the child tax credit that it is, in fact, helping the poorest of the poor most and, therefore, this move is just. Can the Hon. Member comment on the Government's actions in this regard? What is the impact on poor people as a result of the policy changes which have been brought about through this package?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, there is, in fact, an increase in assistance to the poorest of the poor, an increase in real terms as well as current dollar terms, for the first three years in which the Government's changes will be implemented, if they are passed. However, from 1989 onward, assuming a 4.5 per cent inflation rate, the poorest of the poor will see the real value of their benefits under the family allowance child tax and child tax exemption programs reduce in real terms. That is my point when I say that simply because something is happening three years from today instead of today there is no reason to treat it less seriously.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Hon. Member. It relates to the performance by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the House today. We heard him chortle about how the unemployment rate is improving in his own home town and how the people of Canada are pleased with his report card. Today it is one year since the Conservative Government has come to power. In that one year it has managed to begin the dismantling of family and social programs which have been established across the country for decades. Does the Hon. Member believe what the Prime Minister said in the House today with respect to his so-called A performance? Or, in fact, does he agree with an open letter which was written to the Prime Minister of Canada by, I think, 54 groups and organizations which participated in the Government's so-called economic forum and who have now suggested that the Government is bankrupt of ideas when it comes to jobs, social programs, taxation and the role of Government? Who is telling the truth? Is it the Prime Minister and his A rating, or is it the organizations across Canada who, today, in major newspapers across the country have accorded his performance an F?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, the answers are, indeed, easy. The answer to the first question is no, I do not believe the Prime Minister. The answer to the second question is yes, I would certainly agree and endorse the opinion of the participants in the economic conference. Further, I would say that a gratuitous invocation of the Blessed Virgin Mary does not enhance anyone's credibility.

Ms. Copps: Can the Hon. Member prefer any explanation as to why we do not hear from the Progressive Conservative Members with respect to this very important issue?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now expired. On debate, the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to say that your presence of mind is extraordinary.

Mr. Speaker, some mornings when everything goes wrong, we say to ourselves that we should have stayed in bed.

I think that Canadians, when they look back to what happened on September 4 last year, are saying that is exactly what they should have done on that particular morning.

However, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people are not to blame for the results we see today. Canadians have been misled by some very alluring election promises. It is like La Fontaine's fable about the Crow and the Fox, where the fox, after buttering up the crow, grabbed the cheese, exclaiming: "My dear fellow, you might as well learn that flatterers live off those who listen to them." The cheese, was a small price to pay for experience. The crow, embarrassed and ashamed, swore "never again".

Mr. Speaker, like La Fontaine's sly fox, the Conservative Party played on people's emotions and gained their confidence. Subsequently, it changed its position and is now refusing to give voters what it promised them.

Mr. Speaker, I do not like taking part in this kind of debate and I think it is very unfortunate that we are having one. We had a debate last spring on de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions and we thought at the time that the Government had finally gotten the message.

An Hon. Member: The Conservatives are slow learners!

Mr. Robichaud: Unfortunately, they did not get the message.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should remind the Progressive Conservative Party, which has now formed the Government, what it promised us last year. I am not referring to election promises, because we know they have all been forgotten and that the Government has no intention of meeting those commitments.

I am speaking about a statement made on December 14, 1984, when the Right Hon. Prime Minister said to the press: "The federal Government has no intention of reducing family allowances for middle-income Canadians."

At the same time, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) dutifully stated that his role as Minsiter was to give signals and take initiatives to reinforce the role of the family and make it more meaningful in today's society.

Mr. Speaker, I would be the first to rejoice and to congratulate the Minister if he were to propose measures which favour the family. But we have to ask ourselves some questions.

By de-indexing family allowances, is the Minister strengthening the role of the family and the purchasing power of low and middle-income Canadians?

By de-indexing the child tax credit from 1990, is the Government guaranteeing the economic future of low and middle-income families and giving them opportunities to provide a decent education for their children?

By reducing the tax exemption for children from 1987, by forcing families to pay more taxes, and finally, by increasing the federal sales tax and oil taxes, is the Government reinforcing the economic power of families and making them more meaningful in our society? Mr. Speaker, there is only one answer to these questions: No, of course not!

The decision of the Government to take all these initiatives will only make low- and middle-income families poorer. This is obvious. By making cutbacks in all the programs aimed at families, the Government is reducing the income of these families and making life more difficult and much more expensive for them.

Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about abstract matters, but about harsh realities our families will have to face throughout the country and especially in New Brunswick.

• (1540)

Even though the Budget suggests that, with those changes, assistance to lower-income families will be increased, it is a fact that a good number of lower-income families and all middle-income families with children will get less than they are now receiving under the current system. For instance, in the area of family allowances, a family now gets $375 a year per child; in 1986, it will get less because of the family allowances being de-indexed, and so forth in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

What must be understood in the Government proposals is that there is a long-term loss for families, despite the increase in the income tax child credit proposed for 1986, 1987 and 1988. However, concerning the income tax child credit, as early as 1990, that also will be de-indexed. Moreover, the other Budget proposals will in effect wipe out any benefit derived from the tax credit increase. Actually, in the next four years family benefits will rise slightly because of the increase in the income tax child credit. But starting in 1990, benefits will decrease and they will go on decreasing over the following years. This is because in 1990 the income tax child credit also will be de-indexed, just as family allowances are now. That is to say that the increase in those benefits will correspond to the increase in the inflation rate over and above 3 per cent.

If all things were to remain as they are now, the benefit increase would be 4 per cent rather than 1 per cent. Therefore, even if there is an increase, it will be slight and will not match the current inflation rate or cost of living increase.

This is not all. The Government has other proposals that are extremely unfavourable to families. Indeed, from 1986 on fewer families will be receiving the maximum income tax child credit.

The income ceiling which makes it possible for a family to receive the maximum Child Tax Credit is presently $26,330. But the Government proposes to lower this ceiling to $23,500. Therefore, all families whose income is between $23,000 and $26,000 will no longer be eligible to the Child Tax Credit.

Moreover, because the average salary will increase from year to year, more and more families will earn over $23,500 and get only reduced benefits. What is more, the personal income tax will increase in 1986.

Because of the generous proposals of the Tory Government . . . I have still 10 minutes left, Mr. Speaker? Thank you. I thought a while ago that you were going to cut me short.

Because of the generous proposals of the Tory Government, the low- and middle-income family will loose its federal exemption beginning in 1986. Also, basic personal exemptions will be reduced, because they will be indexed from now only by the inflation rate exceeding 3 per cent instead of being fully indexed to the cost of living. The taxable income of the low-income family is therefore higher. So the Child Tax Credit will decrease, while the Income Tax and the Sales Tax will both increase.

In short, the future is far from being encouraging for low- and middle-income families.

Because of the budgetary measures, the poor families will get poorer and the rich families will definitely get richer.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister introduced this Bill, he asked us to understand it and to consider it in the light of the deficit, the national debt, and the Government's need to limit its expenditures. But if we take into account the great many families it is likely to affect, we should consider it in the light of the $2 billion granted to the oil multinationals, in the light of the exemption of capital gain taxes which benefit high income families, and in the light of the increased tax deduction resulting from greater RRSP investments. Low-income families do not benefit from these programs. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, the poor will have to pay for what the rich no longer pay. It does not make sense and, above all, it is unfair! Is that the way the Government means to help those who need it most?

Mr. Speaker, the Government is taking steps which are both stringent and unfair. The Progressive Conservative Government wants to increase the burden of disadvantaged families. Yet, according to the 1981 census, 13 per cent of Canadian families live below the poverty line. In my own province of New Brunswick, the 16.2 per cent of the families living below the poverty line will be severely affected by the family allowance cuts. For all these families, Government money represents a major part of their income and helps them survive and make ends meet. As you know, Mr. Speaker, poverty unfortunately still exists in Canada. Perhaps you do not, but your neighbours know what it is to be poor and to live on a very small income. It is a situation nobody would wish to live or to impose on anybody else.

Nobody is proud to be poor or to admit being poor. Nobody lives on a small income out of choice or willingly. Life is not easy for everybody. All Canadians are not born in an affluent region or to a family who is well-off financially. Many Canadians live in isolated regions where the education system is limited to the primary and secondary levels and where employment is only seasonal. Mr. Speaker, seasonal employment means that a person will work up to 10 or 12 weeks during the summer months to become eligible to Unemployment Insurance benefits during the winter months. Which means that these families live on an extremely low income. If you work for 10 or 12 weeks on a salary of $400 and you live on Unemployment Insurance benefits the rest of the year, you do not earn all together more than $14,000.

But if you are not so lucky and earn only $250 a week over the first twelve weeks you will simply end up with a little over $12,000 a year. That is what it is like to be poor, to have limited means. One can pinpoint a poor family when attending parent-teacher meetings, or again at the first meeting before school opens when parents are told: You will have to buy running shoes for your children, gym suits, dictionaries, various items the young need to attend school. And you can read their expression, those people are all sad because they have to make a choice as to what they can or cannot afford to buy for their children. It is unfortunate because not only will those children not have what others enjoy at school but they will not be able to participate in various activities such as minor hockey or figure skating. They are indeed pushed aside and that is what really hurts, to realize that one is not as well off as the others.

Mr. Speaker, all Hon. Members have to listen to their constituents to appreciate the fact that many of them have needs and that something has to be done about it.

Far from improving the living conditions of our constituents, the constituents of all the Members here, this Bill will make matters worse. It simply does not make sense, Mr. Speaker.

That is why I cannot let the Government have free reins. As we did last spring, we have to stop it or else the future of this country will be hopelessly jeopardized.

Mr. Speaker, I am giving this Government a very serious warning on behalf of the people of New Brunswick. I urge you to reconsider your position and not to reduce family allowances.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I most sincerely hope the Government will change its mind and do so before the people are forced to protest and demonstrate vigourously as they have shown they can during the debate on old age security pensions deindexation. The people of New Brunswick, both men and women, then joined forces with all other Canadians to tell the Government that it was being unfair. If need be, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to help them launch the same kind of demonstration to prove to this Conservative Government that this Bill is unfair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question. First, I would like to congratulate my colleague for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. Robichaud) on his excellent speech this afternoon.

I would also like to ask him two questions. Does he believe that the Government has its priorities right when it spends $56 million to buy new, different colour uniforms for the Armed Forces instead of spending $55 million to preserve family allowances for Canadians? Second, could he tell us why, in his opinion, the Conservative Members are participating so little, if at all, in the debate on such an important matter?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, naturally, the questions of my Hon. colleague are not that difficult to answer. In fact, the priorities of this Government are completely upside down, because it thinks it is absolutely impossible to find any money to help the less privileged, such as low-income families.

This is ridiculous, especially when billions of dollars, or $1,000 million, can be found to help businesses which are already well-off, such as the multinationals. To come back to the question asked by my colleague, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that $500 million were found to build an icebreaker to preserve Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. I am quite in favour of protecting our territory, but it is strange that so much money could be found to build an icebreaker, and it is even stranger that all this was brought about by the actions of our great friends south of our border.

As for the non-participation of Government Members in this debate, the Minister himself did not have that many good things to say when he introduced his Bill yesterday. When it should have been the turn of Government Members to speak, they had absolutely nothing to say. They simply skipped their turn. I understood this morning why Government Members did not speak to this Bill yesterday. It is simply because they had nothing to say. The Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) was content this morning with commenting on what had been said the day before without adding anything new. He only commented on the speeches made the day before.

Mr. Speaker, in reply to the second question, I would say that Conservatives simply have nothing to add and cannot defend the position of the Minister as reflected in this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, so as not to disappoint the Hon. Member and his colleagues, I thought we should have some participation by government Members. I already participated in the debate and comments previously, but I want to put a question to the Hon. Member.

He is well aware, of course, that this particular measure before the House is only part of a package regarding family benefits. The other parts of the package include not only the family allowance but also the child tax credit and the child tax exemption under the Income Tax Act. All of those make up the total family benefit package. As the Hon. Member knows, the net effect of all of those and the changes being proposed will increase the benefits for those low income families which the Hon. Member spoke about so eloquently and actually decrease benefits for the high income families.

I would be interested in knowing from the Hon. Member what the official Liberal Party policies are with respect to all three parts of the family benefit package, taking into account the question of the deficit and our difficulty with the $35 billion deficit funding. What are the specific and offiical policies of the Liberal Party to deal with all of those matters and still benefit the low income people that he and I are both concerned about?

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, a package is proposed to us, but only one piece at a time.

And that, to my mind, is not quite honest because they say: "See, this one is not that bad but we have another one coming which will repair what we are doing wrong at present." Indeed, they are trying to sell it to us; they are slyly trying to sell it to the people with fine words suggesting that what we are now doing will not hurt them too much, because there will be something else.

When my colleague asks me what the position of our party is concerning the deficit, I say that we have only one position and it is that the deficit or the debt cannot be reduced at the expense of the most needy. There are other ways of doing it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is over.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp (Provencher) that Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Frith (p. 6625).

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today on the first anniversary of the swearing in of the new Government to join in the debate on second reading of Bill C-70, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, and the subsequent amendment. The Bill would provide for inflation protection for family allowance payments when the Consumer Price Index exceeds 3 per cent. It is unfortunate that the Opposition has chosen the strategy that it has. Rather than join a reasonable and necessary debate on this important subject, they have chosen to introduce an amendment to delay second reading for six months. This tells the people of Canada that the Liberals have put the issue on the backburner, that they refuse to participate in the debate, and that they are interested in nothing but political gain in a campaign of fear and misinformation. Of course, as always, they are eagerly joined in such a strategy by the NDP.

I now know that the Opposition Parties do not understand the simple fact that has been stated quite clearly by my fellow Manitoban, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) which cannot be ignored in any debate on any social program. That simple fact is that social programs and benefits cannot be separated from economic realities. There is at last a Government in Ottawa that understands this. The healthier the national economy, the stronger the social benefit system.

As we continue to undo the economic damage inflicted on Canada by the former Liberal Government, we must ensure that a greater proportion of benefits go to those in our society who are in the greatest need. In just one year we have started Canada's economy on the road to recovery. There are now 284,000 more Canadians working than there were a year ago. Unemployment is still at a level that is unacceptable, but it is a step in the right direction. Inflation is steady and low for the first time in many years. Over the past three years the federal debt grew at a rate of almost 25 per cent, which is almost three times the rate of growth of the GNP. With the current fiscal plan, debt growth should slow to 17.7 per cent this year and 14.6 per cent in 1986-87. Housing starts have increased to an annual rate of 155,000 units, up 24 per cent from the previous two quarters. And we have only just begun.

I suggest that there is not a Member in this House who does not know that we must provide more for the less fortunate Canadians. We are now attempting to do that in concert with a healthy economic recovery, and not with our heads in the sand alongside the Opposition Parties. Bill C-70 is a good start toward improving the social safety net in Canada. At the same time we must consider the further measures planned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to address the plight of low-income Canadians. Bill C-70 cannot be considered in isolation.

I refer the House briefly to page 43 of the Budget papers. I wish to refer to a few of the planned changes because they are so important to the debate on Bill C-70 and the amendment thereto. Beginning in the taxation year 1986 the child tax credit, payable in the spring of 1987, will be increased by $70 per child, from $384 to $454. In the taxation year 1987 the child tax credit, which will be payable in the spring of 1988, will be increased by a further $35 to a total of $489. At the same time the child tax exemption will be reduced to $560 per child under age 18 at the end of the year. This makes the system much more progressive. For the taxation year 1988 the child tax credit will be increased a further $35 to a total of $524 per child under 18. At the same time the child tax exemption will be reduced to $470 per child under age 18 at the end of the year.

As you can clearly see, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-70 is just the first step in a series of changes that the Government is planning in response to the need for more benefits going to those most in need in Canadian society. The Government is looking to the future. We want to ensure the long-term health of our family benefit system, unlike the Liberals and NDP whose sole interest is short-term political gain at the expense of the very system they profess to be protecting. A delay of six months for second reading as proposed by the Opposition delays the beginning of changes to the system that are intended to improve the fairness of our family benefits system, and to ensure that maximum benefits go to families with children and with incomes of less than $25,000 per year. I keep hearing criticism from the Opposition on our proposal to introduce a capital gains exemption for individuals. They say that this is a proposal for the rich, but that is absolutely untrue. Among the number of Canadians who will benefit from this proposal are the farmers, the small businessmen, and the small town professionals who have worked hard and paid taxes to support our social benefits system.

"Private initiative" and "hard work" are not dirty words. People who have worked hard on family farms and in family businesses have been asking why they should work hard and take risks if the Government only penalizes them, as the former Liberal Government did. As a new Government we are going to reward hard work because we know that without these people we would soon have no social benefit system whatsoever. We have seen what the NDP Government in Manitoba thinks of small business and individual initiative. They slap on a special employment tax every time a business hires a new employee. That is some incentive; a tax on job creation.

I am also disturbed, Mr. Speaker, by a statement from the NDP spokesperson, the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). In response to Bill C-70 she said that "it is easier to attack children than it is to attack old age pensioners". Can you imagine a statement such as this from an NDP Member of Parliament? It is truly incredible. New Democratic Party Members, who feel no remorse at all in supporting the death of thousands of unborn Canadian children, are telling us that we are attacking children with Bill C-70. Obviously the concern for children expressed by the NDP does not include the ultimate protection, that is, the right to be born. That subject deserves separate debate, but it does point out the serious contradiction in Opposition arguments.

My wife and three children are the most important part of my life and I have been fortunate enough to be able to provide for them. However, in my 13 years of work in the health care field, I have seen many families much less fortunate than mine. My family would not hesitate to give up part of the increase in the family allowance so that others in greater need would receive more.

In this debate we have also heard criticism from the Opposition Liberals on our recent changes to the devastating National Energy Program. Such statements prove their total lack of understanding with regard to western Canada. We were treated as a colony by the Liberals for so long that they have forgotten what they did to us. I would like to give a small piece of advice to the Liberals. If they ever hope to be credible in western Canada, they had better talk to westerners in order that they can understand that the Western Accord restores to the west what the Liberals took away with the National Energy Program. The Liberal spokesman, the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith), say that he is, "convinced that grandparents are concerned about what is happening to their grandchildren". I agree totally, but not because I want to enlist seniors in a fight against Bill C-70, but because seniors have a lot of experience and common sense and they worry about the future of their grandchildren. They can see through the cheap politics of the opposition and will join us in a long-term solution and a return to fairness in Canadian society and its social system.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize that Bill C-70 is only a first step in improving Canada's existing benefits system. When considered with plans to increase child tax credit payments, to make the child tax exemption more progressive within the tax system and to improve the system even more as the economy improves, I know that Canadians will support Bill C-70.

The effects of Bill C-70 will be twofold: first, the benefits to families will be distributed more fairly; second, there will be recognition of economic realities by all Canadian families. The Government supports the family and we are working to assure the future of family benefits. Everything cannot be done at once. As conditions improve and as the May 23 Budget continues to improve the Canadian economy, the family benefits package will be further improved. Therefore, I urge the House to defeat the amendment and pass second reading of Bill C-70 so it may be referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I was interested to hear the Hon. Member say that the Government was committed to social policy with regard to families that would make more resources available for those who need it most. Is he aware that while the changes do benefit the poorest of the poor in the first three years, after those first three years even the poorest of the poor will lose money according to the proposal which his Government has introduced? How does he justify that with his contention that the changes in social policy the Government is introducing will in fact help the poor?

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I stated several times that this is the first step in a long-term plan and we are not looking for a short-term political gain. Without proper economic management in our country there will be no social benefit package at all. These measures will proceed step by step and we believe that with our priority being economic recovery in Canada, economic justice and an improved social benefit package will follow.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member with great interest. I believe he said that Bill C-70 would improve benefits to families. How could a measure that cuts benefits be deemed to improve them in any way, shape or form? I must say that this is logic that most of us have some difficulty understanding. Could he elaborate on that for the benefit of Hon. Members?

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member listened attentively to my speech. I did not see him in his seat so I assume he was watching the television in the lobby. My answer would be the same as that given to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). We must also take deficit reduction into consideration. While it would be desirable to consider a social benefits package in isolation, it is not possible to do so as a Government. We inherited a tremendous deficit and we are trying to redistribute that package as it exists in order to put more money into the hands of the less fortunate. I believe we have begun that process.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the House of Commons that he would not use social service cut-backs to reduce the deficit. The Hon. Member stands in his place to say that his Government is taking this action to reduce the deficit. Canadians should be made aware of the fact that a family of four earning $15,000—disregarding the millionaires whom the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) like to refer to—will lose almost $2,000 as a result of tax changes and cut-backs in family allowances between now and 1990. How can the Hon. Member suggest that a family of four earning $15,000 should face a cut-back of almost $2,000 to pay for the deficit which is a direct result of his Budget measures?

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that the Government is looking at long-term policy rather than short-term political gain. Perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware of the tremendous debt that was left by her former Government. As finances improve and the situation permits, the social benefit package will be increased according to our policy, which is to look after those in greatest need.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate my corner colleague from the southeast Conservative caucus, the Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. White), for his excellent presentation.

He illustrated some key economic indicators, some of which were also given by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) this morning. However, let me add other economic indicators which he neglected to include in his remarks but which are quite relevant in the over-all context of this subject. First, interest rates have dropped 2.75 per cent since last September. Car and truck sales, depending upon the area, have risen 20 per cent to 25 per cent. Investment spending intentions are up in this country by 17 per cent to 20 per cent. These indicators mean an increasing number of jobs. Members opposite should recognize that the Government is creating more jobs in this country. I know that it makes them very nervous to read those statistics because they do not like to see success.

The stability of our dollar is very strong. These positive signs are seen today, on the first anniversary of the swearing in of our Cabinet and the new Government of Canada. These indicators will provide confidence and a positive strength upon which we can build in this country.

My colleague put the debate into perspective when he said that we are not touching the concept of universality as a result of this Bill. No payments will be cancelled. No payments will be reduced. We are lowering the level of increase for next year.

Does the Hon. Member agree that the vast majority of Canadians believe that we must lower our losses in this country because we cannot continue to live beyond our means? Does he think that we in this country can continue to live beyond our means?

Mr. White: I thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), for his question. He is correct that there were several positive economic indicators that I failed to mention in my presentation. However, if I had mentioned them all, I would have been here for hours.

As a western Canadian, I can say that there is a very positive attitude in the West. After being ignored for so long, we finally see a Government that is representative nationally and is dealing with national problems in a responsible manner.

The Hon. Member is quite right when he says that universality will be untouched by this proposal. It is not the first time that indexation has been modified. Similar steps were taken in 1976, 1979 and 1982. My constituents and other Canadians are beginning to realize the seriousness of our debt and, as he mentioned, they realize that we cannot continue to live beyond our means.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary and a comment for my colleague who, as I know, is a man of his word and a man of honour.

What I do not understand about the Conservative members and about my colleague is that they talk of reducing the deficit at the expense of children, at the expense of families with children.

I would therefore ask him: Does my colleague who just spoke now know—and I would like to remind him of a promise to be found in a Government document, the blue paper dated January 1985—that none of the savings achieved through program changes will be used for reducing the deficit?

This is a commitment made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Government!

Then I would like the Hon. Member to tell me on his word, and he is an honest man, if he accepts to reduce by $55 million the funds earmarked for helping families with children, whether he agrees that $56 million be spent just for changing the colour of uniforms in the Canadian Forces rather than letting the families have the money to help them raise their children, improve their living conditions? Does he personally accept that the Prime Minister mislead the people by saying: "We are honest, it is not for reducing the deficit, it is for making improvements!" when all Conservative members say the $55 million are indeed for reducing the deficit?

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. He mentions that we want to decrease the deficit at the expense of children. That is a perfect example of what I said about using the politics of fear and misinformation.

I am quite familiar with the Blue Paper because I was on the subcommittee that wrote it. We have a Government that is looking at the long term. We, along with all straight-thinking, responsible, commonsense Canadians, realize that without proper control of our deficit, we will not have any social benefit package. We are looking at the long term, not what may be on television tonight or next week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I would like to recognize the next speaker for debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this crucial debate in the House of Commons. It is at least as crucial as the debate we had in the last session concerning pensions. We must examine very closely what the Government is proposing in the legislation before us. What is the purpose of the legislation and its effect? What exactly does it mean for Canadians?

First, it means there will be fewer dollars in mothers' pockets for the care of children. For a Government that speaks of having a strong economy in the future and for a Government that wants wise investment to take place in Canada, this is a short-sighted policy. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Dauphin-Swan River (Mr. White) said that the Government had a long view of events in Canada, that it was looking to the future and not just at today. If we are looking to the future and if we have a long-term view of social policy and of wealth creation in Canada, we should remind ourselves that one of the keys to that is human resources. Economists around the world are coming to that realization today. They have recognized that the creation of wealth is based on human resources and not simply on capital resources.

If this Government were looking at the long term, it would consider the impact of reducing family allowances as they affect investment in the development of our human resources. Our children, the children of every family in Canada, are the human resources of the future. They are the ones who will create the wealth. Adequate family allowances are an investment in those children and in the future of the Canadian economy but this Government is taking away dollars that would be invested through the measure before us.

This measure will put fewer dollars in the wallets of Canadian families for their children, and it is done by deindexing family allowances. Granted the deindexation is partial, but it is real, Mr. Speaker. If family allowances were to remain as they are today, families would receive an increase in their family allowance as the cost of living goes up. This is automatic, and the purchasing power of family allowances would be maintained. This does not mean families would be getting grand increases but by continuing indexation, the purchasing power is maintained rather than eroded. This measure will take money out of the pockets of ordinary Canadian families, contrary to the assertions of my colleague on my right—I might say on the far right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On the left.

Mr. Keeper: Ideologically on the right. It is entertaining to hear some of my colleagues in the Conservative Party claiming to be on the left—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are on the right.

Mr. Keeper: —considering their attitude toward social policy and dollars for families and for children.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Centre of the road.

Mr. Keeper: The purpose of the family allowance is to help mothers meet their children's needs.

We might ask ourselves whether there are any real needs of this sort to be met in the community. By way of illustration, let us consider nutrition. If a young child is to perform well in school, that child must have a balanced diet. Many children simply will not have that without adequate family allowances. A couple of weeks ago I was in Winnipeg and toured soup kitchens in my constituency. I talked to people preparing meals for those who have no other source of nutrition. Children have been seen on the streets of Winnipeg visiting the welfare agencies and the agencies which give out food because they do not have adequate food at home.

There are some very real needs of children that must be met. Family allowances are an attempt by the Canadian Government to meet those needs. It is not only in terms of having adequate food to eat that family allowances play a significant role, but they also have an impact with regard to human dignity and pride. Schools have just opened. Children like to have new clothes and new crayons to go to school. I was speaking to some workers in social service agencies in Winnipeg and they described how parents like to go out and buy new clothes for their children so a child can feel good on the first day of school because everyone is expected to have new clothes. These workers knew that because parents were buying new clothes they would be running out of welfare money used for food before the end of the month. There is a very real human need in terms of families who are on the lower end of the income scale. To these people family allowances are crucial. The family allowance is the foundation to our very existence. It is a symbol of hope. It is important for the Government to realize that when it cuts dollars from family allowances, the Government is taking money away from people who have some very real needs.

The family allowances perform another role having to do with the equality of women in our society. The family allowance is a cheque that goes in the name of the mother to assist her meet her children's needs. It recognizes the contribution a mother makes to the care of the children. It recognizes the value of her work.

More and more men these days are considering and taking up the option of full-time child care. It is to be applauded, but it is still a rare exception and the family allowance continues to be a way for the Canadian Government to recognize the value of the unpaid work of women in our society. It is a way that we as a society can acknowledge the importance of the time and energy which primarily women put into the care of children.

Not only does the action proposed by the Government take away dollars from families but it is a direct attack on the principle of universality in social programs. This is not the first time the Government has attacked universality. When it issued its economic statement early in its mandate, it raised questions about universality. Also it issued a policy paper and raised the same questions. However, more important, it attempted in its last Budget to deindex old age pensions partially. One would have thought that the Government would have learned from experience that an attack on the universality of social programs is a very risky undertaking because people realize the fundamental importance of universality.

It is important that social programs respect the dignity of all citizens and remove the negative stigma from receiving social assistance. When social programs are based upon income or need alone, people are required to prove that they are poor before they are eligible for social assistance. We know that society looks down upon those who are poor. Quite naturally people feel a sense of shame when they have to get down on their knees, so to speak, before the representative of a social agency to obtain an application for financial assistance. We are saying that the dignity of each person must be respected. Therefore, we are prepared to give social assistance to all citizens so that they know that they are receiving assistance as a matter of right, not because they are on the bottom rung of the social ladder. In order to respect human dignity in the application of social programs, those programs have to be matched up with a fair tax system. If we have to raise revenues in order to continue such programs, we require a fair tax system so that people feel that it is only right and just to pay taxes because everyone else is carrying an equal share of the burden. In this regard, the Government is off the track. Rather than promote a fairer tax system in its recent Budget, it in fact made the system even more unfair. The best example of this would be the fact that as a result of the recent Budget, the average Canadian family will have to pay an increase of some $500 in taxes. At the same time the Government gave a write-off to upper-income Canadians of $500,000 under the capital gains proposal. Anyone with a great deal of capital will not have to pay taxes on the increase in the value of that capital. Those people with a great deal of wealth received a tax break while average Canadians were hit over the head with a significant tax increase.

The Government goes in the direction of attacking the universality of social programs and seeks to use selective social measures. It undermines the fairness of the tax system and its capacity to produce revenue. As a result, it finds itself in a corner with no alternative but to attack the universality of social programs.

Canadians value the universality of social programs. They demonstrated this when they beat back the attempts of the Government to attack the universality of pensions. We must match universality with a fair tax system and with an equitable economic policy. Rather than having as its objective the trickle down approach to economics, the Government should have employment for all as its major objective. The policy of the Government is to provide tax breaks for business and for upper-income Canadians in order to make it more "attractive" to invest. The assumption is that if there are fewer taxes on investment, there will be more investment, which automatically leads to more employment. Recently experience has demonstrated that that is false, that in fact the economy does not work that way. Over the last 20 years the burden of taxation on corporations relative to the burden of taxation on individuals has dropped significantly while its progressive nature has caused regression. As a result of this tax regime and the Government's economic policies, we have seen an increase in unemployment. The policy of the Government to make it more and more attractive economically for investors by lightening the taxation burden on them does not lead to the kind of economic growth which provides employment and therefore results in an equitable economic circumstance.

Along with universal social programs we need equity in economic policy. The primary objective of that economic policy must be to put all Canadians to work. We must co-ordinate all instruments at the disposal of the Government in order to reach that objective.

I want to examine briefly the performance of the Government since its election, particularly as it affects universality. Prior to and during the last election campaign, the Government described universality as a sacred trust. This so-called sacred trust has been torn to shreds. The one thing which stands out in the minds of most Canadians today is that they can no longer trust the Government. Leading up to the election the Government made every effort to gain the confidence of Canadians, and the results of that election indicate that it obviously achieved this. However, since that time the Government has been rapidly losing the confidence of Canadians on the basis of its performance. On the one hand it promised to respect universality in social programs. On the other hand, as soon as it assumed office, it began a concerted attack on the universality of social programs. If there is one characteristic of this Government which stands out in the minds of ordinary Canadians, it is the fact that its performance is at variance with its promises. Therefore Canadians trust the Government less and less. While that has not yet been translated into large numbers in Gallup polls, that will come about. When Canadians lose confidence in their Government, there is no way that it can continue to hope for high levels of support in Gallup polls or in whatever other instrument exists for measuring the confidence of people in their Government.

In my remaining minute I should like to point out that the measure before us today should be withdrawn. It should be withdrawn because it takes out of the pockets of ordinary families across this country dollars which are necessary in order for children to have their basic human needs met. It should be withdrawn because it is a direct attack on the principle of universality. It should be withdrawn in order to sustain public confidence in the Government. The Government has lost and continues to lose the trust of Canadians by continuing this kind of action. We on this side of the House call upon this Government to withdraw the measure before this House, to respect its promises and to actually look for ways of improving social policy as it affects children rather than undermining them.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have always considered the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) to be a person who is very reasonable and very wise in his comments and I am very surprised to hear some of the comments that he is making today. One statement he made was that there was an increase in unemployment during this past year. I know the Hon. Member is well aware that employment is up almost 300,000 from a year ago. Another comment he made was that this measure attacked universality and I know that the Hon. Member knows that there is no such attack on universality in this measure or any other measure that is currently before the House. The Government proposes in this measure to maintain family allowances exactly as they are now and to increase them on a modified index basis.

The one thing however that really astounded me was the implication, Mr. Speaker, that the less advantaged in the system should not get some increased benefits. There was an implication in those comments on universality that those with low incomes should not have their benefits increased. At the present time under the current arrangements the Hon. Member will know that a family earning $30,000 a year under the total family benefit package which includes family allowances, the child tax credit and the child tax deduction in the income tax gets more benefits under that than a family earning only $10,000 a year.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not want that situation to remain. Surely he wants to correct that situation and surely he wants to support the government package, and this is only one part of the government package, which will improve the benefits for low-income families and reduce them for those at the high end of the income scale.

Mr. Keeper: I want to thank the Hon. Member first of all for his description of me as being both reasonable and wise. I was hoping that that part of his comments would continue a little longer.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A slip of the tongue.

Mr. Keeper: I am sure he was speaking sincerely, Mr. Speaker.

One of the questions that the Hon. Member raises is with regard to the impact of these measures on low-income Canadians. He suggested that somehow I was against an increase in those benefits for low-income Canadians. He should examine the impact of the proposal before the House.

In the short term, over the next three years there will be some marginal increase for the lowest income Canadians with regard to the whole package that is before us. After that three-year period even the lowest income Canadian will lose dollars. The over-all impact of this program is to take dollars away from families who have children. The Hon. Member suggests that there is no attack in this package on universality. Has he thought about the fact that when you undermine the purchasing power of a universal social program, that that is an attack on universality?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No.

Mr. Keeper: When you reduce the purchasing power of the family allowance, the family allowance being a universal social program, is that not an attack on universality?

The Government has described its measures as just because while it reduces the purchasing power of the family allowance, at the same time it made some marginal increase in the child tax credit for people at the lower end of the income scale. That in itself is a choice in social policy instruments. It is indicating that it prefers to go the selective route rather than the universal route. I pointed out already that even though it helped the lowest income person in the short-term, in the long run all Canadians lose money, even the ones at the bottom of the economic ladder.

He talks about unemployment and says over the last year there has been an increase in employment. We must give some credit where credit is due. There has been a marginal increase in the number of jobs available. However, I must point this out that a large part of that increase has been in part-time employment rather than in full-time employment and the over-all trend continues, which is unemployment at about the 10 per cent level. There are 1.3 million people unemployed in this country. Until the Government can make a real dent in that unemployment rate it does not deserve any real credit. The Hon. Member must recognize that unemployment in this country is a serious problem that demands the top priority of government economic policy, which is the contention that I put forward, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney)—Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), excuse me.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Ottawa West, Ottawa-Carleton, Mr. Speaker. It is a magnificent city no matter where we come from.

A short question. It is very easy to maintain the status quo, is it not?

Mr. Nystrom: It is Conservative.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): But it takes courage to effect change and it takes courage to make tough decisions when you are running a country. We are prepared and we are obviously making some tough decisions.

Mr. Nystrom: Radical.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We are making them in the best interests of all the people of this country.

Let me ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), whether he agrees that if former successive Liberal administrations had not lived beyond their means and spent us into financial oblivion that we would not have to be taking these tough financial decisions today? Yes or no?

Mr. Keeper: I must say that it puzzles me why the Hon. Member, as part of the Government, wants to take tough decisions when it affects families and family allowances but fails to take the same tough attitude when he is dealing with the banks or when he is dealing with people who earn a capital gain in this country. Why, Mr. Speaker, can the Hon. Member not be fair and tough across the board rather than just be tough when he is dealing with children?

The Hon. Member says that they are having to pick on children now because the Liberals wasted our wealth over the last 14 years or so. Just because the Liberals wasted the national wealth does not mean that the Conservatives have to follow that policy by bailing out the banks, by bailing out the oil industry and by giving a capital gains to the wealthiest people in this country rather than trying to maintain social policy as it affects children in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for my friend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

During the election, the Right Hon. Prime Minister made a good many election promises. He often referred to our social programs and so forth as a sacred trust. He never mentioned any proposal to de-index family allowances.

Why in your view did the Prime Minister break his election promises? Why did he fail to keep that sacred trust, thus deluding the Canadian people, and perhaps still more important, Canada's children?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, truly, I do not know why the Government made a promise before coming to power, and broke it after being elected. I do not know why, but I am sure that before being elected they made a commitment to protect the principle of universality of our social programs. Now, as a Government, they attack the principle of university. I am certain that ordinary Canadians are aware of those attitudes and actions of the Government, that they are losing faith in that Government.

Mr. Speaker, I do hope that the Government will change its attitudes toward Canadians, because it is important that the Canadian Government have a good social policy that will help families in this country.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that today is one year to the day that the Conservative Government was swept into power, its Ministers appointed, its pledges made, its Throne Speech tabled and the promises were out there for the Canadian people to judge. They have spent the last year judging those promises, one of which, in the mellifluous tones of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), was as follows:

> As the women of Canada know, there is some distance between the principle of equality, widely accepted, and its reality, still far short of achievement. It is the duty of Parliament and government to help ensure that Canadian society travels that distance as quickly as possible. This will sometimes require the exercise of your power, and it will always need the power of your example.
> Economic equality is the vehicle through which women will come to full partnership and participation with men—

The Prime Minister went on in his mellifluous tones, that deep voice, to say:

> My government has as a high priority measures to support and strengthen the Canadian family, which is the cornerstone of our society.

If we hearken back to that time, Mr. Speaker, we can remember the words of the Prime Minister, the words of his first speech to this House, when he promised that his highest priorities would be to the women of this country and to the strengthening of the families of this country.

The last time I looked, the women of the country and the children of the country were looking to the Prime Minister and to the Government for leadership on economic issues. In fact, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding his promises, notwithstanding the very bold statements of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who said:

[Translation]

It is my role as Minister of National Health and Welfare to give the signals and take the initiatives which will strengthen the role of the family and make it more meaningful in our society.

Mr. Speaker, there are still not many of us women in the House of Commons, and there are not many of us either in the Government or in the Opposition, but I can assure you that there are thousands of women from poor and middle-income families in Canada who were waiting for this Government to keep its promise as concerns universality, especially for family allowances.

[English]

There are few women in this House, Mr. Speaker, too few on all sides of the House; but there are literally millions of women out there represented through myriad organizations which have looked to this Government to keep its promises on the issue of universality. They believed the Prime Minsiter when he stated in those oh-so-believable tones, "Universality is a sacred trust", just as the senior citizens believed the Prime Minisiter when he stated in Sherbrooke that senior citizens' pensions would not be touched. Yet, we see not only the Prime Minister but the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall)—all government representatives—standing in their places trying to justify to the Canadian people that these cut-backs on family allowances and on families who can least afford to pay can be justified in our fight against the deficit.

The Prime Minister did not talk about the deficit in the last federal campaign. In fact, the Prime Minister promised this House that he would not repay the deficit on the backs of our senior citizens, our children and our families. However, the canadian people are asking themselves why this Government cannot find the money when it comes to a 3 per cent indexing of family allowances and when it comes to a 10 per cent tax on drugs—drugs which people in this country need to survive. I am talking about the over 2,000 drugs which are still taxed under the heinous illness provisions which were introduced in the Budget. People are still looking to the Government and to the Prime Minister to keep his word. Unfortunately, on this, the anniversary of the coming to power of the Prime Minister, as well as his cabinet Ministers, all we can say from this side of the House on behalf of the women of Canada is that the people have been betrayed. This Government has misled and duped the Canadian people. Member after Member on the government side of the House will stand up and say: "We cannot afford it. It was all the fault of those nasty Liberals." Unfortunately, that argument does not hold much water when we see that the Government has $1 billion to bail out the banks because of the ineptitude of not only the Minister of State for Finance and, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), but the Prime Minister himself, who made the decision to bail out those banks to the tune of $1 billion of taxpayers' money. This Government has the nerve to tell the people of Canada: "We cannot afford to pay our families earning $15,000 a year."

There is another particularly sloppy or ridiculous provision in the Bill before us. Since I know my time is short today and that I will be continuing tomorrow, I would like to point out for those Government Members who doubtless have not had a chance to read the legislation that not only has the Minister of National Health and Welfare decided to implement cut-backs with respect to family allowances, which will hit out at families earning $15,000, $20,00 and $25,000 a year, but in a particularly curious clause which he has bootlegged into the Bill, he has suggested that he now be given the right to determine when a child is presumed dead. I refer to Clause 5 which amends Section 15.1 of the Act, in which the Minister of National Health and Welfare is now suggesting that contrary to the formal legal procedure, which would have meant courts declaring presumption of death after a seven-year period, the Minister is suggesting that he be given that right and responsibility. Only the Conservative Government could have the arrogance to not only include a Bill which will give it the right to issue a certificate for presumption of death, but this same Minister has determined that he will be able to re-determine the life of the child after the certificate has been issued. If the Minister feels the child is dead, he can issue a presumption of death certificate specifying the date. If the date is wrong, he is empowering himself further to choose a second date of death. If, by some happenstance, it is determined that, in fact, the child is alive, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is empowering himself with the powers of Lazarus. He will be able to issue a certificate to the effect that the issuance of the presumption of death certificate was incorrect. This is carrying governmental caveat a little too far. I suggest to the Minister that before he attempts to bootleg in a whole new section in the Bill which was intended to deal specifically with budgetary matters, he should determine that organizations such as Justice for Children and Child Find Ontario Incorporated be given an opportunity to comment on what is a clear departure from present legal precedence and that it will not be accepted by this Party.

I hope that the Minister has a chance to respond to that point. I know that I will be continuing my remarks tomorrow. I look forward to a clarification from the Minister with respect to Lazarus.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT ACT, 1985

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario) moved that Bill C-240, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to present this Bill in the House. I have conducted three surveys of my constituency and have found that between 85 per cent and 87 per cent of my constituents are in favour of the restoration of capital punishment. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding there are approximately 5,000 police officers from Metropolitan Toronto and Durham, and their wives. I have been to the funerals of police officers from my riding. I have had hit home to me emotionally the trauma those families are under.

I would like to refer to one case of a young man in his twenties who pleaded with me before the 1979 election to take a stand on this issue. He told me all the reasons he was nervous about being a police officer. I went to his funeral. He died for the same reasons he told me he feared.

I call upon the House to reinstate capital punishment as an alternative to be available in cases of high treason and first degree murder. There is a certain provision in this Bill which states:

> No person shall be convicted of first-degree murder upon the evidence of only one witness, unless the evidence of that witness is corroborated in a particular material by evidence that implicates the accused.

To be perfectly clear, I wish to stress the fact that this Bill would allow the sentence of the death penalty as an alternative only in cases where proof is 100 per cent verifiable. What we are trying to avoid here is evidence which may not be factual, which may be construed as being a fact but as not being accurate.

I would like to explain why the Criminal Code of Canada should be amended to reinstate capital punishment. A free but orderly society is dependent upon the entrenchment of well-known and established standards for acceptable behaviour. Capital punishment is an affirmation by the community that it views murder with abhorrence. It is this statement of revulsion, echoed in subtle ways from many directions during an entire lifetime, which helps dissuade the potential murderer from his act.

Restoration of the death penality will be a clear indicator that society is prepared to defend itself against mass murderers, serial murderers and murderers who carry out particularly vicious and deliberately cold-blooded or sadistic killings. Capital punishment underlines, as nothing else can, that murder is a serious business. Abolitionists ask if the return of the death penalty will make Canada a better place. I suggest that if we continue along as we are going, taking good care of our murderers, we will subsequently extend an invitation to murderers from certain states below the border to make Canada their place of hiding.

I have also been very involved, Mr. Speaker, with victims of violence. In this connection, I feel we look after our murderers far better than we look after the victims and the families of victims. This invitation we are putting forward will surely be accepted, as in the case of Mr. Ng, as a recent editorial in The Globe and Mail pointed out. If we do not do something, we will attract those kinds of people to Canada and will have no jurisdiction to remove them. Does Canada wish to become a haven for the worst of U.S. society? Will that make Canada a better place? Most certainly not, Mr. Speaker.

Public opinion polls, and I have mentioned my own, have shown that since the 1970s an overwhelming majority of Canadians, at least 70 per cent, are in favour of reinstating capital punishment. Following the will of the people is what democracy is all about. Rehabilitation has become the ideal toward which we strive to the point at which retribution is in fact ignored. While I appreciate that rehabilitation is appropriate in many cases, Mr. Speaker, I believe that there are some crimes for which retribution must not be ignored. There are some acts, some crimes so terrible, so outrageous to public sensitivity that only the ultimate penalty will satisfy the need for rectification of the assault upon society.

I would like to address two of the major arguments used by abolitionists against capital punishment. They say that mistakes can be made. That is the one thing in framing this Bill that we were particularly careful about. Mistakes should not be made. The abolitionists state that people have wrongfully received the death penalty in Canada. This is not fact. They referred to Donald Marshall. He was charged on second degree murder so he was never subject to capital punishment.

The abolitionists also state that capital punishment is not a deterrent. Social scientists are actually divided on this issue. We could have a debate in this House for days, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think we could ever prove it one way or the other. The fact is that we will never know for certain how much of a deterrent capital punishment is or is not simply because we have no way in which to gather statistics on murders that never happened. The fact that the threat of capital punishment has not prevented some murders does not mean that it has not stopped others from happening.

I believe that it is our responsibility to take every precaution available to protect the lives of those who would become the innocent victims. Again, I speak on behalf of the victims who have been abused and who have not been taken care of. Hopefully, I will be presenting a Bill in this House on behalf of innocent victims.

In the case of premeditated murder, surely it can be assumed that the possible consequences of the Act are considered. It is also probable that the threat of the death penalty would discourage professional criminals for whom a stint in jail is an occupational hazard. Further, and in that connection, we have reviewed the situation of mandatory supervision. In my own riding there have been murders committed by people out on mandatory supervision where the police force was not advised that those people had been realeased from jail. It is reasonable to assume that in seeking to avoid arrest, a criminal would be less likely to shoot a police officer if the result would be capital punishment. Common sense indicates that capital punishment must have some deterrent effect for the majority of human beings.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the morality in our society is in a sad state. Young people are committing crimes which they did not commit 30 years ago. I believe we have to deal with the most severe criminals first and that there should be a ripple effect down to the minor criminal who starts off on the streets. I have talked to policemen whose lives are frustrated by minor criminal offences. They do not want to put these people in jail but there are no laws to help those people to be rehabilitated. We have a serious problem in Canada and it is getting worse. All one has to do is look at the insurance statistics to find out how bad it is. The morality in our society is in a sad state and I feel that by so dealing with the most severe criminals, perhaps it might have an effect on the behaviour of some Canadians.

As I mentioned earlier, if a potential murderer has been conditioned mentally by the existence of the most extreme form of punishment to be aware of the very serious consequences of his crime, he may avoid the criminal act. He may just realize that it is not worth it. By reserving this drastic punishment for the most serious crime, the law would foster a special abhorrence of murder in the minds of the public and this in itself would be expected to have some deterrent effect.

Allow me to reiterate, Mr. Speaker. Capital punishment does deter by fear of execution but that is not the only way. It also signals the revulsion of the community toward the crime and trains society to naturally abhore the crime.

• (1710)

We also hear other arguments, Mr. Speaker, that society has failed murderers in some way. Perhaps so. However, what are the chances of rehabilitating someone who fires a shotgun at point blank range into the face of an innocent victim? The officer I mentioned, the one who's funeral I went to, that is precisely what happened to him. I believe society has failed to entrench the utmost abhorrence for the most drastic offences as a fundamental principle of its foundation. Put another way, I ask if we have not failed the innocent victims? The young people, police officers and prison wardens, have we looked after them properly?

We also hear, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of Canadians are uninformed on the issue and incapable of making a reasoned judgment. That is why the statistics are so out of line, it is claimed. Some have used this argument to avoid the wishes of those it concerns. As I said before, I represent a large population of police officers in my riding. The reason is that many Metropolitan Toronto policemen live in my riding because they do not want to work where they live.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, statistics show that between 1961 and 1981, the Canadian homicide rate rose by 116 per cent. This figure is usually given from the date of abolition in 1976. I am giving it to the House from the date when capital punishment was last imposed in Canada.

I would like to point out that some pretty crude methods of capital punishment have been used in the past. Better methods have been developed and that is why I suggested the use of a drug which has been proven by use in the United States and is administered by needle. It is humane and certainly not a crude method as we have faced in the past.

To go back to the statistics, I fully admit that the correlation does not imply causation and, therefore, we cannot say with certainty that the abolition of the death penalty has led to the increase in the homicide rate. The principle remains that we as a society must reaffirm our belief that life is sacred and the taking of a life with not be done cheaply, without retribution. I stand before you in this House today on behalf of my constituents and many other Canadians who have written to me from across Canada, including many police officers and prison wardens, and ask that this Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to be given due consideration as it reflects the will of the people. I believe our Party is committed to bringing forward a Bill of this kind. I only ask that some of the thought which has gone into this Bill be brought to the attention of the committee. I realize we will have our opportunity but I have a responsibility to a large constituency of approximately 150,000 people, as well as a responsibility to the police officers who protect these people. I am certain that the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) is working to develop the Bill and bring it forward. I started my Bill as soon as the House reconvened in September, 1984, and I have now had my opportunity to bring it forward. I repeat that I would really appreciate the opportunity of having this Bill referred to the standing committee where it can be thoroughly studied and reviewed.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable regret and chagrin that I participate in this particular debate. At the outset I would like to state my position and state it clearly for the record. My constituents are well aware of the fact that I do not support capital punishment and that, as a parliamentarian, I intend to use every means conceivable to stop any effort by any Member of this House or the Government to restore capital punishment. I am opposed to capital punishment for a number of reasons. First and foremost, I am opposed because of my moral conviction and my attitude toward human life. In my view human life is sacred and regardless of how miserable a human life may be, regardless of what criminal act an individual commits, it is my firm belief that no person other than the Creator, no person and no state, should take the life of an individual.

Hon. Members are aware of my position with respect to abortion. I have stated in this House my unequivocal opposition to abortion because of the fact that human life is sacred and because I do not believe that any state should take the life of an individual. There are those Members opposite and others who might suggest that I should be representing my constituents. I freely admit that a large majority of my constituents are in favour of capital punishment. There is no question about that and I am sure it is the same for all Members of this House. However, I do not feel bound by the views of my constituents on this particular issue and if I offend some because of the position I take, I apologize to them. However, I would like to quote Edmund Burke, speaking to the electors of Bristol on November 3, 1774. He said: "Your representative owes you not his industry only but his judgment and he betrays instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion." I am exercising my judgment, Mr. Speaker, and my commitment and belief in the position I take on this issue.

In 1976, when Parliament abolished capital punishment, we as a nation became civilized; we as a nation became moral; we as a nation said to our people and to the people of the world that it is wrong, barbaric and grotesque to take the life of another human being. That debate took place nine years ago and, yes, there have been those who have clamoured for the return of the death penalty over the past nine years. To its credit, Parliament has resisted and I am sure Hon. Members in this House who were present in 1976 will recall that debate and how close the vote was. It carried by a six or seven or eight vote margin. It was a difficult time for Members of Parliament. It was a difficult debate which went on for 95 or 96 hours. To its credit, this Parliament abolished capital punishment and it was thought at the time that it was abolished once and for all. However, much to the chagrin of not only Canadians, but the world, Canada is now reconsidering the issue. The Government has committed itself to a free vote. During the last election campaign it promised that it would have a debate in the House of Commons. To his credit, and that of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and others, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is opposed to it. I ask why in God's name we should be debating this issue again here today. What is the justification?

● (1720)

In an explanatory note in this Bill it is indicated that:

The purpose of this Bill is to restore the death penalty for first degree murder and high treason, while substituting a more humane mode of execution for hanging.

What is humane about taking another life? There is no humane mode of killing another human being. It is easy, I suppose, for some Members to argue for the death penalty. I suggest that some are reading the polls and playing politics.

Mr. Crosby: Not you.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member opposite says, not I. Indeed, not I. I am standing here speaking before this House and to my constituents, notwithstanding that my constituents, and the overwhelming majority of Canadians, are in favour of capital punishment. If political defeat is the result of the position I take on capital punishment, so be it, because I, as an individual, am not prepared to compromise some very basic principles. I cannot compromise my soul because of any public opinion poll. There are those who are looking at the polls and those polls are dictating how they should vote on this particular matter. I ask those Members who look at the polls to sit back and search their souls and ask themselves whether they truly believe that the state should take another life. Hon. Members opposite nod and say yes. That is their right and prerogative. They can do it. They can call for capital punishment, but I simply ask those who are not as committed as the Hon. Member who has proposed this Bill and have not come to a definite conclusion with respect to this particular issue, to look at the facts and search their souls because this is an important issue. It is not important simply because Canadians say it is important, but because it deals with human life. It will undoubtedly be the most important decision that we parliamentarians make during this Parliament.

Why capital punishment? The Hon. Member has given some reasons. He has indicated that a great number of Canadians support capital punishment, but it is my respectful submission that a great many Canadians, including those in my constituency of York South-Weston, perhaps do not understand the ramifications and fully comprehend the fact that capital punishment is not a deterrent. Study after study has concluded that capital punishment is not a deterrent.

Before I get into the statistics to substantiate my submission that it is not a deterrent, I would like to quote a passage from an essay called "A Hanging" written by George Orwell in 1931 and set in Burma. I think it comes closer than anything else I have ever read in conveying what it means to execute, to kill, to murder a human being. Orwell writes:

It was about forty yards to the gallows. I watched the bare brown back of the prisoner marching in front of me. He walked clumsily with his bound arms, but quite steadily, with that bobbing gait of the Indian who never straightens his knees. At each step his muscles slid neatly into place, the lock of hair on his scalp danced up and down, his feet printed themselves on the wet gravel. And once, in spite of the men who gripped him by each shoulder, he stepped slightly aside to avoid a puddle on the path. It is curious, but till that moment I had never realized what it means to destroy a healthy, conscious man. When I saw the prisoner step aside to avoid the puddle, I saw the mystery, the unspeakable wrongness, of cutting a life short when it is in full tide. This man was not dying, he was alive just as we were alive. All the organs of his body were working—bowels digesting food, skin renewing itself, nails growing, tissues forming—all toiling away in solemn foolery. His nails would still be growing when he stood on the drop, when he was falling through the air with a tenth of a second to live. His eyes saw the yellow gravel and the grey walls, and his brain still remembered, foresaw, reasoned—reasoned even about puddles. He and we were a party of men walking together, seeing, hearing, feeling, understanding the same world; and in two minutes, with a sudden snap, one of us would be gone—one mind less, one world less.

We have to ask ourselves what conceivable purpose capital punishment will serve. It is not a deterrent as I will try to show in my submission. It is an attempt by some to extract their pound of flesh, to extract their vengeance. It is simply state-sanctioned vengeance, retribution. Our criminal justice system simply cannot be based on vengeance and retribution; an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. We are beyond that. That is barbaric, that is history, that is the mark of an uncivilized nation and of uncivilized people. We have gone beyond that. There must be some real justification for our criminal justice system. If Members opposite and others could prove to me and others that capital punishment is a deterrent, then I would suggest they might be standing on firmer ground. However, they cannot do that. Even Chief Ed Lunney of the Edmonton police force concedes the studies that say capital punishment is not a deterrent.

Canadian and American statistics show that capital punishment is not a deterrent. In 1975, the year before Parliament repealed the death sentence, there were 701 homicides, including murder, manslaughter and infanticide. In 1983, seven years after abolition, there were 682 homicides. The more important statistic is the rate of homicides per 100,000 population. In 1975, again, the year before capital punishment was abolished, Canada's homicide rate was 3.09 per 100,000. By 1983, it had fallen to 2.74. Is that evidence of capital punishment being a deterrent?

• (1730)

Those who argue that capital punishment is necessary to protect policemen are also without supporting evidence. In the five years before abolition, 19 policemen in Canada were murdered, compared to 18 in the five years after abolition. These are the facts.

If we look south of the border, again there are statistics that clearly indicate that capital punishment is not a deterrent. At present there are 38 states in the United States that have capital punishment on the books. Among western countries, only Ireland, Liechtenstein and 38 states of the United States retain capital punishment for the crime of murder. Britain abolished capital punishment in 1965. Since then, the British Parliament has reconsidered the question and, to the credit of British parliamentarians, they again said no to capital punishment. In 1981 the French Government abolished capital punishment. Now we in Canada, in this haven of safety—if I may say so—are considering bringing back capital punishment. It is a black mark on our country and it will be a dark day if this country ever decides to reinstate capital punishment.

Let me return to the statistics. As I said, in the United States, 38 states have the death penalty. The homicide rate in the United States is 8.3 compared to our figure of 2.7 homicides per 100,000 citizens. Where would Hon. Members rather live—in the United States or Canada? We have a safer country, even though we do not have the death penalty. Our rate is 2.74 compared to 8.3.

The Americans have not been reluctant to carry out executions since the Supreme Court of the United States decided that capital punishment was not cruel and unusual punishment. Three thousand nine hundred people have been executed in the United States since 1930. Some of those were Canadians.

One of the most interesting facts about capital punishment in the United States is that those states that have sentenced the most people to death and have actually carried out the most executions tend to be the states that have the worst murder records. Most of the worst rates are concentrated in the southern states where nearly two-thirds of all death row prisoners are held. Figures from the Federal Bureau of Investigation for 1983 show Louisiana and Texas tied for the worst homicide rate in the country—14.2 for every 100,000 people. Both states have a death penalty and both use it. It is not a deterrent in those two states. Texas ranks third in the nation in the number of people executed since the FBI began collecting national statistics in 1930, with 298 executions. There were 367 executions in Georgia and 329 in New York.

The statistics go on and on. I would be pleased to share these statistics with Hon. Members and indeed anyone—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I am sorry but the period of 20 minutes is now over. Resuming debate.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we are considering a Bill that proposes to reintroduce capital punishment for the offence of treason and first degree murder. I am certainly very sympathetic to the views of the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill and who expressed his very deep concern about the loss of life of one police officer in particular. I think we are all very sympathetic to the situation of police officers and prison officers who are the ones who risk their lives on our behalf and are amongst those arguing for a reintroduction of the death penalty.

However sympathetic I am with the intention of the Hon. Member and indeed of the police associations and correctional associations which advocate the return of capital punishment, I cannot be at all sympathetic with their concrete proposal that the reintroduction of the death penalty will give any additional safety to police officers, prison officers or any citizens as they go about their business.

It simply is not a fact that the death penalty deters. There has been abundant evidence about this in many studies. The United Nations has produced evidence of many countries over many years that have abolished capital punishment, reintroduced it and then changed the circumstances. It does not seem to be the case that capital punishment is any general deterrent against the offence of murder or any particular deterrent for those who must work with convicted persons or deal with them as police officers.

The death penalty was abolished in Canada and the murder rate actually declined after its abolition. One might even argue that citizens would be at greater risk with the reintroduction of the death penalty since its abolition has had some success. In any event, we are not a highly violent society. I believe that comparisons to the United States and the influence from the United States where the death penalty has been reintroduced give a very false picture.

Our murder rate is less than half that in the United States; fortunately, we are not nearly as violent a society here. Therefore, we should not be influenced by the much greater sense of panic and desperation felt by people in the United States in coping with the crime problems there.

If deterrent is not a logical argument in favour of capital punishment—which it really is not—what other reasons have been offered for the reintroduction of capital punishment? A number have been given, including the principle, "Eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth and life for a life". It is the idea that retribution is an honourable, proper and indeed just requirement. It is the argument that capital punishment is a religious principle and that there are reasons from our own religion to justify the reintroduction of capital punishment. Indeed, surveys tell us that people who hold a religious faith are more likely to be in favour of capital punishment than those who do not hold a religious faith. To one who does hold a religious faith, I find this a very shocking and disturbing fact. However, it is interesting to note that the churches themselves are becoming very active in the debate on capital punishment and coming out very strongly against the restoration of capital punishment as a matter of principle.

Let me cite some material prepared by the Interchurch Taskforce on Responsible Alternatives to the Death Penalty, produced by the Canadian Council of Churches which represents a very important cross-section of the churches in Canada. Let me quote from what they call "The Religious Viewpoint':

The continued abolition of capital punishment is officially supported by Catholic, Protestant and Jewish bodies, as well as by many organizations concerned with the justice system in Canada. Some Christians claim that the death penalty is needed to uphold the sanctity of human life: they rely on the Old Testament warrant, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed,—But Christ's teaching stresses mercy and reconciliation. When they brought him the woman taken in adultery (then a capital crime), Christ did not deny the penalty under the law but only said, "He that is without sin, let him cast the first stone.'

That is a pretty clear teaching. The Viewpoint goes on:

Those who have experienced God's forgiving love must act on God's promise of power to redeem broken situations and people.—How can adding another broken body balance the scales of justice?

How, indeed? There is no way that capital punishment restores a life that has been taken and there is no abstract way in which this loss of life can be set aright by the taking of another life.

Let me quote again:

Violence as public policy only adds to the cycle of violence, vengeance, and destruction. We should never give up on a fellow human being. To love someone who has murdered is a demanding test of our faith. Since God "desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he may turn from his wickedness and live", we should follow the divine example.

That is a very radical teaching, and perhaps it is one too radical for the Parliament of Canada. It is one on which I think all Christian people should reflect very seriously when they want to use the notion of divine retribution as a justification for the human penalty of capital punishment.

Let me quote also from the statement by the Archbishops and Bishops of the Anglican Church of Canada, which is my own denomination. This is a very strong statement against capital punishment. It reads:

We urge our people and Members of Parliament that they consider seriously the implications of re-introducing the death penalty and not give in to a hasty response—These implications include such things as: the impossibility of reversing the hanging where there has been a miscarriage of justice—

We do know that there are miscarriages of justice. It continues:

—the ignoring of evidence concerning the ineffectiveness of the death penalty as a deterrent—

I think that has been aptly demonstrated. It continues:

—a belief that the murderer is beyond being changed by God's grace to be a creative member of society.

We are convinced that it is in the best interests of Canadian society as a whole that capital punishment not be re-introduced, but that as Christians we need to seek alternatives that recognize the infinite worth of the individual before God.

Mere incarceration without rehabilitation will not change the murderer. Reform of our correctional systems needs to become a priority of our Government.

I think that is putting it in a very whole context as to what the principles are and what our responsibilities ought to be. Let me make it very clear when I have been citing some Christian authorities on this I do not wish to suggest that the Old Testament examples should be taken, as they are very often used, as an unequivocal demand for human retribution as a consequence of breaking the law.

In the Old Testament times capital punishment was certainly permitted and required for a very large number of offences, but there was still a very important array of conditions that limited the use of capital punishment. The standard of proof required for conviction amounted to certainty. It was required that there be more than two adult male witnesses, a much more severe requirement for evidence than in any of our laws or what is in the Bill before us today.

Further, the Mosaic law had, as the penalty for perjury, execution itself, a very severe punishment for anyone who would give false evidence to convict a person, a much stronger provision against perjury to ensure that any evidence given in a murder case would be correct evidence. In difficult cases, the verdict was deferred to judicial experts who had to go to a different venue to reconsider the matter. In short, a very important number of conditions that would considerably have qualified the imposition of capital punishment in any case. Therefore, when people simply quote all the available opportunities for the use of capital punishment in the Old Testament, they must consider that the possibility of their being used would have been very, very severely constrained. How many instances would there really be of multiple witnesses, eye witnesses, adult males who gave evidence in the proper fashion and all of the proceedings were correctly gone through?

There are other examples one can site. Quoting from the Book of Deuteronomy:

To me belong vengeance and recompense.

And from Leviticus:

You shall not take vengeance.

There are all kinds of instances that we are told it is not necessary or proper for human persons to exact human vengeance. The first murderer appearing in the Old Testament, Cain, was not executed. His life was protected. So much for a very bloodthirsty rendition of the Old Testament as a good justification for the reinstatement of capital punishment.

Let us examine some of the provisos that have been proposed in the Bill before us today. It is the Hon. Member's intention that there be very selective use and careful measures taken. He referred to 100 per cent reliability. I would respectfully suggest that it is not possible to have 100 per cent reliability. His Bill said there would have to be more than one witness or if one witness, that there be corroborating material evidence. I do not quite know what he means by this witness. Is it going to be an actual eye witness to the murder? I wonder how many cases would be covered. We also know about eye witnesses. There have been instances of mistakes being made even with eye witnesses. It seems unlikely, but it has happened. We have instances of people being hanged or otherwise executed who have been subsequently found not to have committed the murder in question.

There is even the matter of having material corroborating evidence, and I think of a recent British case where there was a handful of hair in the victim's hand. Many years later it was found it could not have been hair from the convicted person because new scientific tests had been developed which made that identification possible. At the time of the trial, the material evidence was extremely convincing that the person convicted was the murderer. It sounds all very good in theory to talk about material corroborating evidence and eye witnesses, but we do know that mistakes will be made and there is no way of having an absolutely safe system.

I want to get a little more broadly into the issue of violence. I suggest that capital punishment is not going to help deter the offence of murder or treason. We do have too much violence in our society, even if our society is not as violent as that in the United States and in many other countries. Naturally we could all like to see a reduction in violence.

I wonder why we are focusing so much on murder and not spending our time more constructively in looking at other causes of violence and other measures which this Parliament could be taking. I refer to the issue of violent pornography on which we have had an enormous amount of stalling. Proposals have been made. I have been active in the struggle over a number of years. This Parliament is very slow to act. Here is an opportunity where we could change the context, change the reality in which people do commit murder. We have all kinds of practical things we could do about such things as husbands who beat their wives and children. There are far more things to be done by way of prevention, such as counselling services, group discussions, all kinds of practical measures to develop a spirit of co-operation and non-violent solutions to problems. It would be far more useful for us to be discussing these measures which possibly could have some practical impact and could actually reduce the level of violence in society.

• (1750)

Far more people are killed unnecessarily by other means. For example, roughly 5,000 people per year are killed in traffic accidents, and roughly half of these deaths is the responsibility of drunk drivers. That is far more than the murder rate. However, practical measures to reduce the number of drunk drivers and practical measures to enforce the laws in a stricter fashion are shunted aside; they do not seem to be so important. Also a large number of people die in industrial accidents as a result of negligence. People debate whether it is criminal negligence or non-criminal negligence, but it certainly is very wrong. They are violent, preventable deaths. They occur in much larger numbers than murder by one person in a deliberate fashion of another. Also there are large numbers of deaths of people as a result of exposure to low levels of radiation. This is not dramatic; it happens over time. It is not someone shooting or knifing someone else, yet the number of deaths caused in this fashion is very much greater. Also I could refer to the number of fires and deaths which are caused inadvertently by people who are careless smokers. Again the number is very large and many of these instances are preventable.

I do not think we as a society are helpless or that we have to accept a large number of unfortunate but "nothing can be done about it" deaths. We could be acting constructively to reduce many other forms of violence in society.

In conclusion, I suggest that capital punishment is a false solution to a problem. We are spending our time debating capital punishment, a relatively modest problem within the context of the world and within the context of other preventable causes of death in society. We are taking time away from much more practical activity which could be socially much more beneficial.

Mr. Barry Moore (Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle): I would like to comment today on Bill C-240 sponsored by the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Many of us have had an opportunity to speak to this topic during discussions in the House on the reinstatement of provisions relating to capital punishment. The problem is a very complex one. It raises questions about our personal convictions and philosophy, our concepts of justice and of what constitutes fair and equitable punishment for certain crimes.

However, although it may be difficult to avoid getting involved in philosophical considerations, nevertheless, it may be useful to aim for a more objective assessment of the issue.

Mr. Speaker, there are several subjects that can provide the neutral terrain favourable to the kind of discussion we wish to undertake. Some of these have already been suggested by a number of my colleagues in this House. Today, I would like to talk about international conventions.

At the international level, there has been for several years a growing concern for humanizing penal justice. The United Nations, for instance, has been making a sustained effort to obtain fair treatment for prisoners and inmates and to prevent abuse in the penitentiary system. As an example of these efforts I would like to quote certain provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights: everyone has the right to be presumed innocent "until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence", or for instance, "no one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment."

Mr. Speaker, there is also the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, whose aim is to ensure recognition, respect and protection of our fundamental rights and dignity, and especially of persons who are deprived of their freedom. Finally, I would like to mention other international agreements such as the Declaration on the Protection of All Persons Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and the Draft Resolution prepared by the Committee on the Prevention of Crime and Treatment of Offenders, which concerns guarantees for the protection of the rights of a person subject to the death penalty, both aimed at protecting the rights and dignity of prisoners and persons who have been convicted.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that in Canada as in other countries, our national law takes precedence. Thus, draft legislation that would not be in line with internationally recognized aims would not as a result become illegal. However, by signing international conventions or agreements, Canada has expressed its willingness to apply these principles and to consider them when preparing and implementing its own legislation. For instance, when interpreting our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, we could draw on the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Furthermore, the purpose of the ratification by Canada of an international convention or covenant is to make their provisions binding on the federal and provincial governments vis-à-vis other signatory countries. Canada, for instance, ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and any contravention by Canada of the provisions of this covenant would be perceived as a violation of its international obligations.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, Canada is bound by these international conventions and agreements, at least to a certain extent. We must take them into account in our legislation. And so, when we are discussing the reinstatement of capital punishment, we must take into consideration the various agreements to which we have given our support in the past. Unfortunately, the Bill before the House today does not entirely conform to these agreements and conventions.

The first point I want to make in analyzing Bill C-240 concerns procedural guarantees. In other words, the procedural rules that are to protect the rights of the accused.

Mr. Speaker, international agreements put a great deal of emphasis on the right of everyone to adequate representation before the courts. By adequate representation we mean the right to have the necessary time to prepare a good defence as well as the right to be represented by an attorney of one's own choice. A lot has also been said about the right to appeal to a higher court in cases where a sentence has been handed down. In the case of a death sentence, the latest international position which Canada is committed to consider as a result of the Sixth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders provides that the appeal is automatic and mandatory. In cases where the accused is punishable by death, international agreements contain provisions concerning the burden of proof. A draft resolution of the Committee on the Prevention of Crime and the Prevention of Criminality, which Canada has endorsed, recommends that the death sentence be carried out, and I quote:

"only when there is absolutely no doubt whatsoever that the person accused of a crime is guilty, on the basis of clear and convincing evidence which does not leave room for any other interpretation of the facts."

Finally, still with respect to procedural guarantees, the international agreements also emphasize clemency and commutation of sentence. Certain people acknowledge that any person sentenced to death has the right to ask for commutation or to petition for mercy on his or her own behalf.

Does Bill C-240 contain all the guarantees I have just mentioned? For starters, Mr. Speaker, this Bill does not have any provision concerning adequate representation for the accused before the courts. Although this principle is spelt out in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, not only does it need to be stressed but as well the participation of an attorney in the defence of any person accused of a crime punishable by death ought to be made mandatory. In such a case the seriousness of the punishment fully warrants the provision of clearly expressed guarantees just so there will be no doubt that the accused has the best defence available.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been made.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT. (B) APPOINTMENT OF CANADA ENVOY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity today to follow up on a question I asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) shortly after his Shamrock Summit meeting with President Reagan in March.

You will recall that at that time when the Prime Minister became so famous for his rendition of When Irish Eyes are Smiling that I suggested in the House that if we did not see more action on acid rain than we had coming out of the Shamrock Summit, at the same time next year we could all join the Prime Minister in a chorus of Raindrops Keep Falling on my Head, referring of course to the continuing problem of acid rain. I might also suggest that another appropriate tune for what has been going on over so many years with respect to acid rain would be the song that was a hit a number of years ago called Killing Me Softly With His Song.

What is happening here and what is happening to our lakes in Canada has everything to do with the quiet way in which the life in many of our lakes and streams is being extinguished over the course of time by the continuing inaction on the part of Governments with respect to acid rain. I think the new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said it very well a couple of days ago, that politicians have essentially been asleep at the switch.

I think it is fair to say also that not all politicians have been asleep at the switch and there have been voices at the political as well as at the scientific level over the years which have called upon Governments to recognize that this was a problem, and to act, and that those voices have gone largely unheeded. Now it appears that indeed attention may be paid to them, and that is a good sign.

What has happened since I asked that question on March 19? A number of things have happened. Here in the House we have formed a special committee on acid rain on which I have the honour to serve as the New Democratic Party Member. That committee recently had the opportunity to meet in the Muskoka area with the two special envoys on acid rain, the former Premier of Ontario, Mr. William Davis, who is the special envoy of the Prime Minister and Mr. Drew Lewis, the special envoy of President Reagan with respect to acid rain. We had the opportunity to meet with those two gentleman in Muskoka for a couple of hours to discuss their work and the ways in which we might co-operate on the problem of acid rain and I must say, as one who was initially cynical and remains to a degree cynical about the envoy process I was nevertheless encouraged by what Mr. Lewis had to say about the direction he thought his report would be going and about the kind of advice he might be giving to the President with respect to acid rain. I was particularly encouraged that there did not seem to be any debate any longer, at least in Mr. Lewis's own mind, about there being a problem and about the need for action. If that could become an incontestable political fact in in the United States, that would be a victory for us and I hope that sort of thing will be forthcoming.

With respect to the Canadian envoy, Mr. Davis, my over-all impression was that he was far too relaxed about the subject and not as intense or as passionate about the need for action as I would like to have seen. That may be a question of style, it is too early to judge, and I hope that the former Premier will prove me wrong when he makes his report.

I am, however, concerned about reports which came out the day after the special committee met with Mr. Lewis and Mr. Davis, reports having to do with the budget which Mr. Davis received for his acid rain work. There was a report to the effect that the over-all cost of Mr. Davis' appointment would be in the neighbourhood of $500,000 and that, quite understandably, a great deal of that money would have to do with travel and accommodation. However, a great deal was also going toward his own personal staff, which is handling not just work pursuant to his responsibilities as Special Envoy for Acid Rain, but also his own personal business having to do with the variety of corporations on whose boards he serves. I am concerned about this.

I know that the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain is also concerned about it because they do not want to see the whole issue of acid rain dragged down to the level of those arguments which go on about the nature of political patronage in this country. They certainly do not want Mr. Davis to be seen as a patronage appointment. I want to register their concern and my concern to the Government, and through the Government to Mr. Davis, that when he brings down his report, in every way possible it should be of a quality which will justify the money spent, so that we will know when it comes down that some of the concerns I have expressed before, and which others have expessed, about Mr. Davis' appointment will be proven wrong. We would be glad to be wrong on this matter, Mr. Speker. I just hope that the Government is taking every step now to ensure, with respect to the report on Mr. Davis' budget, that the money being spent in the name of acid rain is, in fact, being spent on that very issue.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), I think the Hon. Member ended with a somewhat regrettable tone. I will deal with that in a moment. For now, I would like to come to the substance of his representations.

It has been a long time, indeed, since he first asked the question and a great many events have taken place in the interim. I appreciate his mentioning the fact that our current Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has indicated the high priorities acid rain has with this Government. I think this has been done with honesty in terms of how actions have not been taken over a long period of time by governments and politicians in the past in spite of the fact that there are some who have had a keen sense of awareness of the problem.

The issue boils down to identifying for the record several points which I believe are important. First, in February of 1985 a commitment between the federal Government and the provincial Governments for the apportionment of deposition in each area of Canada was gained so that our desired level of 20 kilograms per hectare per year could be reached. We then followed that up with a number of specific actions, including the sub-committee reinstatement and actual funds which were put toward the cost of control in Canada and so on. We have been doing this work in Canada. In fact, we have been seen to be doing our homework.

We were left with the serious problem which has been in existence ever since 1979 when the first memorandum of intent was signed with the United States. We have had, in fact, an impasse which could not be overcome. That impasse had to be dealt with in some way. I think that we were fortunate to have been able to provide a break, if you like, in what seemed to be a firm boundary which had been drawn around the issue from Canada's point of view and from the point of view of the United States. Through the appointments of Mr. Lewis and Mr. Davis, I think we have a serious opportunity to see that impasse broken down. I know the Hon. Member was pleased, as were we, to see that Mr. Lewis was thinking seriously of making specific recommendations, not only in terms of abatement control now, but in terms of dealing with the whole issue on a long-term basis so that we can accomplish the entire chore which we set out to accomplish.

I have to take some exception to the allusions which have been made, not only in the newspaper article, but also here in the House of Commons, insofar as Mr. Davis is concerned. We in Canada had at the time that Mr. Davis was appointed a need for someone of his stature, his experience and, in fact, someone in whom the United States would have confidence, to carry the ball for us at that level. Mr. Davis happened to be available. I cannot account directly, Mr. Speaker, for the proportion of finances Mr. Davis has used and where they fall in terms of travel, office expenses and so on. I would have to challenge the Hon. Member to tell me if he has never had his secretary make a personal call for him. I believe the Canadian public should know—and in most ways do know—that not only is the job itself so serious and important that the actual amount spent by the envoys is very small indeed in comparison, but that both Mr. Lewis and Mr. Davis are working for $1 dollar a year. I do not know how many Members of Parliament would do that.

• (1810)

There are things which have to go on in the meantime. Life goes on for people who are dedicating themselves; to the extent of energy and effort which both Mr. Lewis and Mr. Davis have put into this effort. If there were calls made on behalf of Mr. Davis for the scheduling of other things, I really wonder whether the Hon. Member thinks that that is a serious affront to the sense of propriety we would all like to have. Unless the Hon. Member and other members of the press want to continue to try to raise the issue from this point of view, I do not believe it in any way jeopardizes the respect which the Americans will have for the efforts of Mr. Davis and the respect which we all should have for the contribution he is making on behalf of Canada in trying to come to firm grips with the acid rain problem.

SHIPBUILDING—HALIFAX INDUSTRIES LIMITED. (B) GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, on June 27 I pressed the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) to take action to ensure that the Canadian shipbuilding industry might again experience prosperity. The immediate focus of my question was the threat of bankruptcy facing Halifax Industries Limited, a matter about which some action was eventually taken. However, I noted the plight of the shipbuilding industry generally.

This is an industry which is in distress and which is baffled by the failure of the Government to act on promises made during the last election campaign to create a more viable and prosperous Canadian shipbuilding industry. The Minister said that he did not plan to let months and months pass before doing something. Today it is 10 days short of three months since he gave that response and we are still awaiting his announcement of measures to create a prosperous shipbuilding industry.

The last days have produced mixed signals for the industry. Ontario shipyard operators and workers, who appreciate the recent decision of the Department of National Defence to allow them to share in refitting work on Canada's aging naval vessels, are distressed to think that the Department may change its mind on this issue. In my own riding, Port Arthur shipbuilding, which is primarily involved in repair work, is one of the yards very concerned about the possibility of the Department going back on that recent decision.

The Government's decision last week to order the construction of the Polar Class 8 icebreaker for year-round service in the Arctic, on the other hand, will create a significant amount of work, possibly in more than one yard. However, the decision was in response to Canadian sovereignty considerations rather than reflective of any developing industrial strategy, or at least there has been no evidence to suggest that it was not primarily those sovereignty considerations which guided the Government.

I would suggest that as the Government continues to consider this matter and, hopefully, comes to an early decision, the possibility that an industrial strategy might be initiated by Government construction is a subject which should be immediately before the Ministers involved. The Canadian patrol frigate program for our navy, the construction of icebreakers of various sorts, the construction of ferries for CN Marine in particular, provide examples of construction which the Government directly or through corporations can carry on. By doing that on a reasonable schedule the Government could ensure that yards are kept at work and that technical capacity in the form of computer assisted design and manufacturing is built into our yards. By keeping the yards at work we could ensure that we have the necessary shipbuilding capacity for the future.

• (1815)

I would suggest that an important part of that approach needs to be the ship construction for Maritime Command. As we realize more and more the state of our navy, it becomes obvious there are many vessels to replace. That can certainly be a part of such a program.

However, the shipbuilders are anxious that their business not be based solely on Government orders. I quite appreciate their desire for a large volume of commercial construction. I point particularly to that as an area where the Government needs to be far more active. There are a variety of areas in which such construction will be needed. There are the inland fleets, particularly on the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes.

Offshore we have the fishing fleets and offshore drilling and supply, all of which is work that should be carried on by vessels constructed in Canada. Beyond that there is the larger question of whether or not Canadians should begin again the development of a deepsea shipping fleet. Having those vessels built in Canada would mean more work for our shipyards.

Now, I do not think I need to make arguments this afternoon about the economic value of such a program as one contemplates the decline in Government revenues which has been experienced and the cost of such programs as unemployment insurance. We have to consider carefully the way in which employment has fallen off in shipbuilding over the past 10 years, so one can appreciate the economic necessity for these things. However, I do not think I need to make those arguments at any length in the very few moments that I have because the Progressive Conservative Party in years past has recognized that.

The 1979 program of the Party called for the gradual development of a Canadian deepsea fleet. It called for the development of tax policies to permit pre-tax dollars to be spent on vessel replacement and to make available low interest loans to Canadian shipbuilders. It called for the restriction of Canadian waters, after 1985, north of 60, to Canadian designed and constructed vessels for all extraction and shipment of Canada's Arctic resources. On several other points they clearly recognize the needs of the industry. In 1984, the Party program again called for a number of actions designed to create a prosperous industry.

The shocking and quite incredible fact is that on this day, one year after the Government was sworn in, with a fiscal and economic statement delivered and a Budget passed, there has not been any action. It is not surprising that a Government Member was compelled to say to his constituents that the impact of the federal Budget on the shipbuilding industry in Canada was disastrous, to say the least. It is not surprising that the President of the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repair Association should say that the P.C. record in recent years as far as shipbuilding goes is perfidious. These are incredibly strong words, but the sad fact is that the Liberals during the 1980s ran the industry towards disaster. However, a year has passed and there has yet been no clear cut plan laid out and no evidence that this Conservative Government intends to change direction and move the industry towards the viability and prosperity that it promised the people of Canada last summer.

Mrs. Monique Bernatchez-Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like in the first place to comment on the Hon. Member's contributions on the subject of a policy on changes in Canadian shipyards. To take up his question, yes, there is a study underway, as the Minister stated in the House last Spring, a study of the overall question, and as soon as there are discussions to be had with members in this House and announcements to be made, I am sure the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) will be pleased to so advise the House.

However, I would like to comment on the example put forth by the Hon. Member to introduce his question, namely the Halifax shipyards.

• (1820)

[English]

I would like to remind him of what happened under this special project. On September 12, the Minister of Development for Nova Scotia announced that a group of prominent Halifax businessmen had purchased HIL. The consortium, led by a former President of St. John's Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Ltd. will take over management of HIL as of October 1985 and will become its owners as of January 1, 1986. The consortium will assume the provincial government's liability and invest an additional $1 million in capital.

Through various industry assistance programs the federal Government has injected some $49.6 million into the company since 1980. In addition, the contracts related to the three Coast Guard vessels currently being worked on at HIL have been renegotiated to permit the yard to complete this work. The three existing federal Government contracts will be completed at HIL, thereby providing continuing employment at approximately current levels for some months.

AGRICULTURE—WESTERN DROUGHT—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE. (B) REQUEST FOR DIRECT PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on September 10, I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) when he was going to make financial assistance available to the farmers in western Canada who have lost so much through the drought this year. For the last couple of weeks we have been debating a billion dollar disaster caused by this Government in the Canadian Commercial Bank. However, Mr. Speaker, there is an even bigger disaster in western Canada, the drought which has affected millions of acres of land at an estimated cost of $3 billion. In Saskatchewan alone over 30,000 farms were affected by this drought. Over 14 million acres of farmland have been devastated.

After prodding by the provincial government, the federal Government moved to provide assistance to the livestock industry, but it is still procrastinating on a decision with regard to the grain sector. The situation is desperate. There have been many meetings at which hundreds and hundreds of people have pleaded with the federal Government to take action. Fourteen hundred people attended a meeting in Bengough; 200 farm women attended another meeting there. At a meeting in Swift Current 500 people petitioned the Premier of Saskatchewan who was unwilling to meet the people who are facing this disaster. Other meetings were held in Ponteix, Kayville, and Climax where people called upon the Government for action. However, there is no action forthcoming.

This is a disaster of biblical proportions, Mr. Speaker, and the Government should be moving on it. Instead, we see procrastination by the Minister of Agriculture who says that he has a committee which is working on this problem, but he cannot get around to making a recommendation for action. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool is calling for action. They have identified this as one of the most serious climatic disasters in the history of the province and are calling on the Government to provide a massive $500 million dollar drought aid package.

• (1825)

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), with what appeared to be only a weekend's notice, were able to commit $1 billion to the Canadian Commercial Bank depositors. Surely after five to seven weeks, the Government can make a commitment to the farmers in Saskatchewan, Alberta and other area of the West that have been devastated by this disaster. If that decision is not made, the situation will continue and farmers will be driven to welfare and uncertainty. I want to emphasize the urgency of this matter. The Government should stop procrastinating. It is also important that the Government make the payment directly to the farmers.

With respect to assistance for livestock producers, the province announced a program, saying that it would go to Ottawa to obtain more assistance. The federal Government, with a flourish, announced its program and indicated that the one program was supplementary to the other. In fact, the province grabbed the federal assistance so that the individual livestock producers ended up with nothing more than the provincial help. The Government should act soon and I hope that whatever form that assistance takes it will make the payment directly to the farmer so that the viability of this industry can be preserved. It is a matter of national urgency.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the question put by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). I am sure he knows that we have spent the summer attending many meetings in the areas he has mentioned which have been devastated by drought. I want to assure him and the House that the Government has taken this issue very seriously.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) went to the Prairies and met the farmers in several areas, along with the Agriculture Ministers of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Subsequent to that meeting, the Government responded quickly with respect to livestock in Phase 1 of the task force report. This amounted to some $48 million to the farmers to maintain their livestock herds.

The Hon. Member specifically mentioned the cost-sharing arrangement. He certainly should know that the arrangements between the province and the federal Government was cost sharing and the federal Government's commitment was $30 per head to the livestock producers. He must also understand that these agreements must be with all of the provinces on a fair basis and on a cost sharing arrangement.

With regard to Phase 2, any special assistance will be in addition to the crop insurance payments to Prairie producers, which are expected to total $500 million this year. The committee is now hard at work reviewing assistance requirements for crop damage. The full damage has not yet been assessed and, of course, it cannot be fully assessed until the crops are in. It would be irresponsible of the Government to prematurely put in place an assistance program for crop damage that may or may not be adequate to respond to the need. However, I can assure this House, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, that the committee will be in a position to make suggestions to the Minister just as soon as all the facts are on the table. I can also give the assurance that this Government will act quickly and responsibly once those recommendations have been received.

• (1830)

I also want to assure this House and the farmers of western Canada that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been very concerned and asked me to report on a daily basis to him as to the seriousness of the drought. I am sure the farmers are very thankful for the type of consideration that has been given by this Government. I know in speaking to many of the livestock producers that they have been very pleased with the response which this Government has given.

INDUSTRY

NEED FOR RENEWAL OF QUOTAS ON IMPORTATION OF SHOES

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, since current footwear quotas are about to expire, it has become imperative for the Government to renew import quotas so as to ensure that Canadian manufacturers will corner 50 per cent of the market over the next five years.

As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister made that commitment in Sherbrooke during the election campaign.

For a number of reasons quotas in the footwear industry are an absolute necessity. Among other things they guarantee 20,000 jobs equitably shared by Ontario and Quebec. They protect the interests of consumers, ensure the survival of the regional economy and might create many new jobs.

Last week Parliament Hill was the site of a gathering of a good many businessmen, employees and union leaders, here to convey to us a very clear message: We want to remain in operation, we want to keep our jobs, we need five-year quotas and 50 per cent of the market.

Do not let them down and deliver the goods as you promised during the election campaign by implementing quotas to guarantee 50 per cent of the market for the next five years.

MANITOBA CATTLE PRODUCERS—NEED FOR PROVINCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, as Members of this House know, many western Canadian farmers were hit very hard this summer by a combination of drought and grasshoppers. The impact has been particularly severe in the cattle industry because it is often not eligible for financial assistance from crop insurance programs. Consequently, the federal Government promptly announced on August 14 that $48 million would be offered to cattle producers provided that the respective provincial Governments were prepared to participate on an equal cost-sharing basis.

Although most Manitoba farmers have benefited from substantially more rainfall than that enjoyed by their western neighbours, there are small but significant areas in the southwest where the volume of hay production is even lower than last year's. Consequently, the federal Government has allocated approximately $1 million to assist those Manitoba cattle producers, most of whom reside in my own constituency. Unfortunately, the NDP Government of Manitoba has so far failed to respond to that offer. As a result, cattle producers in my area are faced with the prospect of being denied what is rightfully theirs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to implore my NDP colleagues in the House from the Province of Manitoba to add their voices to mine in order to persuade the Government of Manitoba to redress this wrong. That Government must not be allowed to play politics on the backs of Manitoba cattle producers.

RELEASE OF CANNED TUNA PRODUCTS FOR SALE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, many observers have expressed concern about the blissful ignorance of science among politicians in this technological age. As a scientist, I could not have imagined a more deliberately intentional or dangerous demonstration of that ignorance than the action of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) in releasing one million cans of tainted tuna against the advice of a host of technical advisers. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should just fire all of his regulatory scientists, close down the Food and Drug Directorate, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, the Department of Agriculture and, for good measure, the Science Council. For they all give scientific and not political advice. Think of the savings to the Canadian taxpayer if the Prime Minister just put that Star-Kist technician, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in charge.

I wonder if there is anyone in the Government who understands that scientifically based food inspections are to protect people and must be independent, precisely because lawyer-politicians judge by politics and not on the basis of scientific criteria or safety. Angry consumers in Ottawa Centre have provided cans of tuna for the Prime Minister's consumption.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

AUXILIARY AGREEMENT ON TOURISM SIGNED WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to recall two events that reflect very significantly the new role this Government intends to play in the area of federal-provincial relations.

On December 14, 1984, our Government and the Government of Quebec agreed to sign a regional economic development agreement that was to be the prelude to a new climate of national reconciliation. Subsequent to this agreement, on January 16, 1985, the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Murta) signed a subsidiary agreement on tourism with the Quebec Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the pleasure of attending a press conference where the Minister of State for Tourism and his provincial counterpart announced two major contributions to the tourist industry in the riding of Labelle, one at Mont Saint-Sauveur in Saint-Sauveur and one at Chantecler in Sainte-Adèle. These two contributions, which support initiatives by the private sector, reflect the importance of tourism in our region's economy. In concrete terms, it means that more than $6 million will be contributed by both governments and more than 240 jobs will be created, while existing jobs will be maintained.

INVESTMENT CANADA

CALL FOR REVIEW OF MERGER OF ALLIED AND SIGNAL CORPORATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the replacement of the Foreign Investment Review Agency by Investment Canada was intended, so we were told, to encourage new foreign investment in our country. It was surely not intended that it would oversee the outflow of foreign capital already in Canada. Yet that is exactly what will happen if the proposed merger of two American companies goes through. The $5 billion U.S. merger of Allield Corporation of Morristown, New Jersey, and Signal Corporation of LaJolla, California, which will effectively give control to Allied, includes a rather clever little reverse deal involving the Canadian subsidiaries of the two companies.

This deal would lead to $458 million of investment capital flowing out of Canada, and entail a loss to Canada of $69 million in federal taxes. These two companies have agreed that, prior to the consummation of their deal, Signal Corporation's Canadian subsidiaries will buy out certain of Allied's Canadian subsidiaries for $330 million U.S., in cash or promissory notes. They have further annnounced that any proceeds from the Canadian transaction would be used to retire the indebtedness of Allied Corporation in the U.S. The net effect of this gentleman's agreement is that Signal's Canadian subsidiaries will end up paying money to Allied Corporation in the U.S., which would then use that money to reduce the cost of taking over Signal Corporation itself.

I urge that both the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Beatty) review the details surrounding this shuffle immediately and see to it that under the loose rules of the—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON ACID RAIN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring attention to a very important international event taking place in my riding as I speak. Over 600 learned men and women from 17 countries are attending the Muskoka acid rain conference from September 15 to September 20. They have assembled to address this important environmental issue from the scientific perspective on behalf of mankind.

The Government's new Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) opened the conference on a very positive note by admitting the politicians of the world are lagging dangerously behind in environmental affairs. He noted the need for positive action within the year, and there is no doubt in my mind that this will come to pass in Canada.

International symposia such as the one held in Muskoka are crucial in the movement toward acid rain abatement. We must learn conclusively whether acid precipitation is indeed affecting human health. When the results are in, we must move swiftly to ensure future generations are not stricken because of our mistakes and shortsightedness. This is the third such conference ever held, and the first held in Canada. Let us be the first to pick up the torch and run headlong into the future toward a cleaner environment.

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—EFFECT OF MINISTER'S RULING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Fraser) has not only endangered the health of Canadians by overruling his own scientific staff on the sale of tuna that was deemed unfit for human consumption, but has endangered our national and international reputation as a producer of superb quality fish products for the Canadian and world market. With one of the largest and highest quality salmon packs in Canadian history sitting ready for sale on the B.C. coast, the Mulroney Government has placed the marketing of the product at risk. Our international competitors will now move at great speed to displace our products, be they tuna, salmon, herring, cod, crab, lobster, clams, or any other. The possibility of contaminated or unfit products is the strongest reason for any country or consumer not to buy up a product.

Regardless of the political deals surrounding the Star-Kist horror story, the Mulroney Government has failed the interests of the Canadian public and has now likely damaged our multibillion dollar fishing industry. All tuna related to this matter should be promptly removed from sale in Canada, the Minister canned as unfit for Canadian consumption, and a major program put in place to secure the trust of our markets and the value of our products at home and abroad.

SHIPBUILDING

NEED TO RETAIN FRIGATE CONTRACT IN MONTREAL

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, the workers at Versatile Vickers will fight "to the death" to prevent construction of two Canadian navy frigates from being transferred from Montral to Lauzon near Quebec City, because otherwise, according to them, the shipyard on Notre-Dame Street is doomed. All the refineries in Montreal East are along Notre-Dame Street as well, and they cannot be closed down either, anymore than the shipyards, otherwise Montreal East will be shut down entirely. We must keep the frigate contract in Montreal. This contract was awarded to Vickers in Montreal in 1983. If the contract is transferred, this means that Montreal East will be losing 650 jobs for four years.

I would urge my hon. friend, the Member for Hochelaga-Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers), to keep working with the employees' union at Vickers to have the work divided fairly between the shipyards. Montreal East, with an unemployment rate of 19.5 per cent, deserves a fair chance.

Mr. Speaker, the workers can count on my full co-operation and support.

EMPLOYMENT

PROVINCES' CRITICISM OF FEDERAL POLICIES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the only people congratulating the Government on its employment policies are the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Conservative caucus. Yesterday, the provincial Ministers of Education issued a statement criticizing the Government's job strategies. The province are concerned about the reduction in funds for job creation from $2.2 billion in 1984 to $2.1 billion in 1985 and to $1.9 billion in 1986, and also with the duplication of these programs by provincial programs.

Last week the Canadian Association of Mayors and Municipalities asked Canadian Governments to set up a $12 billion fund to renew municipal infrastructure, which would create 60,000 jobs directly and 300,000 jobs indirectly. So far there has been no response. On Monday of this week a number of groups which attended the Government's Economic Summit, including 35 labour leaders and 20 social and religious organizations, said that the Government's employment practices rely too much on the private sector to create the jobs required.

The Prime Minister and the Minister take great pleasure in announcing that the unemployment rate has declined to 10.3 per cent. Who in their right mind can be content with a 10.3 per cent unemployment rate? Before the recession in 1982 the rate was 7.5 per cent, and that should be the minimum goal for the Government. We call on the Government—

NEW YORK YANKEES—POOR SINGING, POOR PLAYING, POOR GEORGE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I address an open letter to Mr. George Steinbrenner, owner of the New York Yankees:

Dear George,

I, too, am proud of the longest undefended border in the world and I consider the U.S. our greatest friend and ally, even when it comes to baseball. But as the eyes of the sporting world focused on our remarkable Toronto Blue Jays, especially during the recent four game series in New York, I became quite angry with our friends in the Big Apple.

As I tuned into the game last Saturday night along with hundreds of thousands of other Canadians, I heard the words and the music of our national anthem being butchered by some misguided singer. Strike one, George!

That didn't bother me too seriously since many Canadians don't know our anthem either, but last Sunday, before a live national TV audience, a different singer finished off the wound from Saturday night with the coup de grâce. He blew it as well. Strike two, George!

We have a great marketing job to do and will have that chance during the upcoming World Series. You can butcher our anthem, but you can't beat our Blue Jays. Go get 'em, Bobby Cox.

Love,

Barry

FISHERIES

SALE OF CANNED TUNA—MINISTER'S RULING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, nothing is more important to Canadians than the health of our families and our children, and nothing is more important to our fisheries than a world-wide reputation for good quality and performance.

The Minister of Fisheries overruled his own inspectors, his own health experts, and an independent review board, and allowed rotten tuna from the Star-Kist fish packing plant in St. Andrews, New Brunswick, to be sold to Canadians. Why is the Minister of Fisheries playing with the health of Canadians in this way? Why is he risking the world-wide reputation of our fisheries industry? Why did he allow the sale of one million tins of rancid and decomposing tuna to Canadian consumers? Give us the reason for this.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): First, Mr. Speaker, the allegations by the right hon. gentleman of course are not true. He suggested that health is an important matter, as well as reputation. Through you, Mr. Speaker, may I advise the House that at no time, under any circumstances, was there any suggestion, or any finding, or any allegation, or accusation that there was any threat to health with respect to a certain tuna product from a certain plant in New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TUNA UNFIT FOR CONSUMPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, David MacDonald, the co-ordinator of Canadian relief operations in Ethiopia, refused, and rightly so, a shipment of rotting tuna destined for Ethiopia. Why is the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans letting Canadians buy and eat tuna he quite rightly decided not to ship to famine-stricken populations? Does the health of Canadian families mean nothing to the Minister? Is he going to have this spoiled tuna taken off supermarket shelves immediately?

[English]

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat that there was and is not any health threat from any tuna that has been or is being manufactured or produced in Canada. I want that clearly understood.

It is entirely irresponsible for Members of Parliament to proceed with those allegations, in spite of the fact that their mentor is Eric Malling of the CBC.

I am sure that the Right Hon. Member would want to know that in determining this matter I obtained two independent reports; one from the Research Productivity Council in New Brunswick—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Hatfield's hacks.

Mr. Fraser: Then I set up an independent panel that was appointed by this Department. That independent panel's report approved the sale of the product outside Canada.

REQUEST THAT PRODUCT BE REMOVED FROM STORES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, apparently the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has advised Canadians to open the tins first before eating them—but I want to say to the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Good idea.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let me tell the Minister to get that rotten tuna off Canadian shelves. You knuckled under to Premier Hatfield. You put politics before health in this country. Do something about it.

● (1420)

Hon. John A. Fraser (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Right Hon. Member knows that it is best to open the tin before eating the contents. But what the Right Hon. Member does not know is that it is best to think before opening your mouth.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: The Right Hon. Member knows full well that there is not a tittle of evidence anywhere that any of this product is a threat or a danger to the health of Canadians. I would hope that the Right Hon. Member and other Hon. Members here would accept my word on this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fraser: If you do not accept my word, then take the word of my own scientists from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans who tested the product in laboratories, and the word of the two independent panels. Both reports make it quite clear that there is no question of danger to health from these products whatsoever.
