Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party, I would like to suggest that, first, Paris was not built in one day. Bill C-62 introduced by the Minister is a first step, a first response to the Abella Report, and the fact that she is urging Government bodies to increase the number of jobs for women, the handicapped, members of visible minorities and natives is already a first step. And the fact also that we are recommending companies bidding for Government contracts over $200,000 to implement such programs, those companies will be penalized because they no longer will be able to to business with the Government if we find out they made no effort to implement the programs. They are expected to sign agreements, and they should implement the new programs provided for in Bill C-62.

Looking at the past 15 years, we see that the Liberals have been quite willing to appoint royal commissions of enquiry and the like, but they never implemented legislation of that sort. So this is a start, and we are committed as a Government to pursue our action in favour of employment equity for all Canadians.

Mr. Rossi: What good have you done?

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, in this particular Bill there is a heavy penalty imposed for not reporting but there is no penalty imposed for not doing anything. Does the Hon. Member not think that the Bill would be strengthened considerably if some kind of monitoring besides reporting were put in place and if some kind of penalty for not taking action was put in place?

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, it was suggested earlier by a number of opposition members that it would be much better if a committee could monitor the situation. But there are already organizations which operate in the area of human rights and which could to that job effectively, because they need not receive grievances before setting in motion enforcement mechanisms. Why, then, create new committees with overlapping authorities? I feel, personally, that we should use what we have now at our disposal, and perhaps reconsider the situation later on.

Mr. Rossi: That does not answer the question.

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member agree that where voluntary programs have been tried, particularly in the United States, Germany and other jurisdictions, they simply have not worked, which is why those jurisdictions have reverted to contract compliance programs? Also, will she agree that those programs have proven that the incidents of employment for disabled individuals, natives and women have, in fact, increased? I suspect that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) actually recognized that fact when he told disabled organizations on August 14, 1985 that he agreed to compulsory affirmative action programs along the lines of two proposals which were made in Obstacles, a report of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped which had representatives from all sides of the House who unanimously supported the recommendations in the report.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: As I said earlier in my remarks, Mr. Speaker, we should not, when the time comes of implementing positive action, hire women simply for the sake of hiring women, but because they are equally qualified women. The same can be said for the handicapped. They should be fully qualified, and the same is true for any other category of people.

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member not agree that the only requirement there should be with respect to hiring someone who happens to be disabled, handicapped or a person from a visible minority should be on the basis of bona fides, that is, requirements of the job, and not whether the individual is disabled, happens to be a woman or a native Canadian? Surely the bona fides are that the person is capable of doing the job, which is exactly what we are talking about when we argue against the Bill which is before us. That is the major weakness in the Bill. After all the debate which has taken place over the years—certainly since I came here in 1980—with respect to the need for affirmative action programs for the Government to totally ignore that in this particular Bill shows a real lack of awareness. It shows that the Government has not been listening to the groups which have made representations to this House over the years.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, we must implement Bill C-62. We are going to require the many companies doing business with the Government to fill in forms providing us with full details about their plan, the same will apply to any other group within the Government. Then, as soon as the report is available around June 1988, we could take action if there were evidence that they had made no effort to hire from these categories of people.

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, everyone agrees, except for members of this Government, that that type of program simply does not work. Why is the Government so intent on waiting a year? That is what this Bill calls for. The Bill states that if an employer does not comply with the Government's desires, then the Government will bring in compulsory programs. By implication, the Government is saying in this measure that the damn program would work. Why does the Hon. Member not argue with her Minister to provide a real service to minorities in the country saying that it should be done properly and that employers who will receive contracts paid for by Canadian taxpayers should live and act like good corporate citizens? All they are asking is that the corporations operating in the country act as good corporate citizens.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Before criticizing my hon. friend from the NDP, Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell him this: Wait till we have set this in motion and see the outcome. We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we have heard from Members across the way and from my hon. colleague from Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) and my co-star in a recent show on CBC that the Bill before us is a good beginning. However, it is like a great many beginnings. I must say that the described purpose of Bill C-62 is enough to make your hair stand on end in marvellous enthusiasm. I would like to read the purpose of the Bill which states:

> The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the workplace so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

That is really beautiful. I will say with respect to the emphasis which I intend to place upon my contribution to the debate that the paragraph is interesting in that it at least mentions visible minorities in the same breath as women, the disabled and native groups. I say that because those of us who have been involved in the civil rights movement in this country know that the period of waiting for beginnings has been exceedingly long. In fact, perhaps I might provide Hon. Members with some insight into the rather strong feelings I have with respect to the legislation which is before us when I indicate to the House that my political career began when I was 13 years old. It began when I could not shoot pool in the pool hall in my town and I could not bowl in the bowling alley at which I set pins. As a consequence, I became politically active and joined with others to bring about the changes which make it possible, at least for me, to stand before you as a Member of Parliament. As Lincoln Alexander stands before us as the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario he still says that the battle has not been won.

The battle will not be won if we continue to hear arguments such as those to which I referred earlier in which an alumnus of my own university, the University of Windsor, during his intervention made reference to the numerous experiences he had with discrimination. He knew of a Negro who, in 1944 or thereabouts, was refused a job in Montreal. He knew of some women at the law school who found difficulty getting placement. He knew of employers who would not hire certain groups because they rejected the notion of equality, which I think lies at the foundation of what we hope this country will be some day. That is right and good. No one really expects every individual in this House to have the same appreciation of the experience which has led so many groups to consistently say that there needs to be legislation to ensure that all Canadians, irrespective of sex, race, colour or disability, should have an equal opportunity for jobs and everything else which this country should accord.

This Bill has to be a terrible disappointment to those who participated in the hearings of the parliamentary committee. As Hon. Members will recall the report of the parliamentary committee was entitled Equality Now. We now have legislation before us which talks about equity some day. Bill C-62 provides that beginning in 1988 employers of a certain category, regulated by the federal Government, will have to report on the status of the target groups. That is it. If that is accomplished, perhaps by 1991, 1992 or 1993, we will know that the employers, who are also expected in passing to come up with some ideas on how to approve things, have not done anything. Perhaps in six or seven years after that there will be hearings all over the country in which those people who have asked for real affirmative action now will have to ask again. That is significant because we heard earlier speakers say that this is a beginning. The parliamentary committee talked to minority groups, the disabled, women and natives all across the country, who poured out their souls. They said loud and clear what is needed in terms of ensuring that members of all those groups would have full participation, not only in the workplace, but in every aspect of Canadian society. However, after all of the clear and certain description of what is needed on their part and what is made necessary by their experience and by the record of discrimination reported by the Urban Alliance on Race Relations in Toronto—which is documented by the finding that 70 per cent of black youth in Halifax were unemployed—we find that all of these experiences amount to nothing and we are going to take another shot at some superficial approach which requires nothing more than reporting a situation with no requirement that there be change.

The curious thing about all of this from my perspective, Mr. Speaker, is that the first affirmative action program in this country was probably put in place on a volontary basis back in 1968 with Chrysler Corporation and Bell Telephone and that it worked. In fact, it worked at least in part in negotiations which occurred here in Ottawa with the Public Service Commission and resulted in a very tenuous and tentative affirmative action program for visible minorities. Subsequent to 1967 and 1968, the visible minorities in this country were ignored. The disabled, women and our native people became target groups, and those very groups within this country who designed the first affirmative action program ever implemented in this country were ignored. I say that the Bill at least in that respect must be regarded as indicating some progress. At least there is the recognition that a significant class of people in this country do exist and require some amelioration of their situation. What was asked for by all of these groups, Mr. Speaker? All of these groups have had experience with Human Rights Commissions. Every province has one and even the best of these—which includes Ontario, Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan—have the role of responding to specific complaints. There is no real experience for the approach of looking at systemic discrimination and realizing that this is something which must be corrected or ameliorated. Yet we are now told that the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the national body, in some obscure way, beyond the mere reporting of the statistics with respect to the target groups within employ, will be charged with enforcing the legislation—whatever that means—in response to a situation which is uncovered. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that everyone knows that the Canadian Human Rights Commission cannot do the job with which it is already charged. Therefore we have two factors which operate to create an impossibility. First, we do not have any Human Rights Commissions in Canada which have played the role of, first, testing whether systemic discrimination occurs and then subsequently implementing an affirmative action program. There is virtually no legislation anywhere which assures that possibility.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, were it able to do that, were it empowered with the ability to enforce affirmative action in every case, the staffing is certainly inadequate at the federal level. Therefore what we have before us is legislation which is to provide Statistics Canada with more statistics which will indicate a pattern of employment inequality and that is to the good. That portion is mandatory. However, what we have is a situation created by the Bill in which there will be no requirement whatsoever for any employer, under any conditions, to ensure that a pattern of systemic discrimination or, indeed, any type of discrimination, will be attacked by some response such as a designed affirmative action program. We have no requirement for any mandatory correction of a pattern of systemic discrimination. There is in this legislation no provisions whatsoever by which employers, having submitted stastics, would have made available to them a means by which this pattern might be corrected. In other words, one might expect that if one is going to have a reporting system which might indicate a pattern of discrimination, some body would be empowered to make recommendations to the employer by which the employer would be able to design a means to deal with the situation on his own.

This Bill is a sorry disappointment, Mr. Speaker. Affirmative action was abandoned in favour of employment equity. That indicates the atmosphere surrounding this legislation. The message behind affirmative action was clear. Affirmative action was designed to do some thing about those arrangements, by and large unconscious, not deliberate, by which certain classes of people were excluded not only from employment but from promotion and so on. We have heard that affirmative action is a nasty thing because it involves quotas. But "quotas" is a flag word which is waved most consistently by those who are not only opposed to affirmtive action but opposed to any correction of discriminatory practices which must have existed in the past. Reference is consistently made to the United States where it is said that quota systems have done all kinds of damage, but I know of no situation in which affirmative action has been implemented successfully where a quota system has been imposed. What has been done is to say in response to an anlysis of the distribution of target groups within an employer's workplace, as compared to the situation of the environment in which the employer functions, that there should be some matching of the distribution of those target groups with the local number of members of the target group. Then one arrives at reasonable targets which might be achieved within that context. These targets change. There are no definitive quotas but, by God, it is absurd to say that we are going to improve employment equity or have affirmative action, or anything of the sort, unless we are prepared to say that there are targets which can be reasonably achieved and which must be achieved.

Surely it must be clear that it is an empty exercise to collect data, as this Bill provides, without going any further. There is nothing to indicate what form an affirmative action program will take. There is no reference whatever to what those who spoke to us would have us achieve, and that is a program under which systemic discrimination would be eliminated through the achievement of a target appropriate to a particular employer in particular circumstances. Specifically, an employer would achieve a distribution of employment which has some reasonable relationship to the distribution of the target groups in a community. However, none of that is here.

What has been achieved, Mr. Speaker? More statistics! A new kind of census! We are going to count members of target groups at various levels in a given industry. What happens when those statistics are revealed? What message is being sent to all these minority groups when we bring forward legislation which achieves so precious little? It is time to act. It is time to fulfil the dreams and hopes of those who have been asked over and over again what it is they want and who over and over again have indicated clearly what that is. They want this and every other Government to respond to the situation in which all too many members of minority groups find themselves. They need that support and it is the highest duty of Government to ensure that all of its citizens are treated with equality. A good Bill would have proposed just that. Members of these target groups would be treated with equity, equality and full opportunity on the job. This is fundamental. There is no way anyone can participate without work. To be shut out from a job or promotion without recourse is a terrible thing. To find that somehow you are a second class citizen and that you suffer some disability by virtue of your identity, all without recourse, is a terrible thing. It is also totally unnecessary in modern Canada.

I ask the Government to review and reflect upon the basis on which this legislation was introduced. Let the Government ask whether any minority group has come forward and said it wants legislation which will give it information on how many of a minority group are in this, that or any company. I want to know how many real minority groups have come to this Government and asked for legislation which says that if they are not counted, someone is going to be fined. I have not heard that and I am sure this Government has not heard it. Not from women, the disabled, native people or anyone else. No one has felt a compelling need to know how many of them there are. Undoubtedly it is needed as the basis for achieving employment equity and equality on the job. However, ask yourself the obvious question. Were you in the shoes of a black teenager in Halifax, a native in Saskatchewan, the disabled or women anywhere, whether as a victim of systemic or personal discrimination, would you be satisfied with legislation which tells you how many of you there are?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my colleague's representations on this very important matter. He mentioned natives in Saskatchewan. I want to ask him about the impact in smaller communities and their ability to monitor equality of opportunity, whether it concerns native people, women, youth or visible minorities. As well, what about those groups who can be categorized as a mixture? That is, say, a black woman in a rural community, or a native group. Perhaps the Hon. Member could give us the gist of his experience in this respect and indicate how this Bill does not really deal with that situation.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am not really quite clear on the question being posed. I find it kind of difficult to cast myself in the role of a native black woman who is disabled in Amherstburg. However, I can tell you about Amherstburg. I can tell you about my hometown when I was a boy. I can tell you that until about the late 1960s schools in the county in which I was born were segregated. I can tell you that in the community in which I grew up there was no chance of getting a job at a bank, retail store, restaurant or anywhere else. In a community in which something like 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the population was black, it was nevertheless difficult for a young high school graduate to say, when they were refused an interview, that it was occasioned by the fact that he or she was black. It is certainly true that if you looked at the banks, the retail stores and restaurants you found not one black employed in any of those facilities. This in spite of the fact there are plenty of qualified black people around. You can then see that the count would do you no good. Positive steps had to be taken to correct an obvious situation. It is also obvious that those steps would not be implemented unless there were some reasonable sanctions imposed if they were not.

Whether that answers the question or not, I cannot be sure. However, I can think of any number of instances in which those observations could be made. I have already conceded that it is important to engage in the statistical enumeration of the target groups, but if that is all it is then most of those who have asked for employment equity legislation will say this is beautiful but it does not do a great deal of good.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the Minister said when she introduced this Bill was that the moment it is passed then employment equity will be in place. The Bill says that companies must have their program in place by 1986. They will by that time have developed their plans and methods. They will begin analysing the date by January, 1987, and the reporting of the first full year will be in 1988. Then, possibly, and there is no indication of how long it will take, the Government or the Human Rights Commission will start monitoring that data. It is a good indication that even after this Bill is passed it will be 1988 to 1989 before any development occurs at all. Will the Member indicate what he thinks it is possible to put in place immediately in order that the Bill will have some impact on equal employment?

• (1640)

Mr. McCurdy: It is obvious from what I indicated that the first step in affirmative action is to be able to define the situation and the ways in which the situation should be improved. I think, of course, that there must be provision for mandatory correction in a situation where the data indicate that there has been a pattern of systemic discrimination. That mandatory affirmative action provision must be supplemented as well with some effort on the part of Government, through an agency not created by this Bill, to negotiate with a company or to provide a company with a pattern for affirmative action that is fitted to the particular circumstances of that company, and being provided with the mechanism of affirmative action in light of the situation of a particular employer, to provide certain targets and a timetable that are appropriate to a particular employer, failing the achievement of which, there would be additional sanctions. The consistent request of everyone who has asked for affirmative action has been for the provision of mechanisms to determine whether affirmative action is necessary, a structure of affirmative action, and provision for enforcement of the achievement of targets which are established on the basis of an affirmative action proposal.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my colleague may know that in June the Minister responsible for the Status of Women (Mr. McLean) gushed about the Government's intent to lead the assault on undertraining, underemployment, underpayment, and the exclusion of women and other minorities in the workplace. However, he then said that employment is as yet an innovative concept that will have to be tried and tested. He went on to say that because of this the Government has taken a flexible approach to the initial processes of implementing employment equity consistent with the individual needs and capabilities of the employers involved. Does my hon. friend believe the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, or does he believe that this is simply a means through which the Government is copping out from its responsibility for equality in the workplace?

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to say that the answer to the question is so obvious as not to necessitate an answer, but the fact is that the answer is in the affirmative. The answer has been in the affirmative all too often over the last three or four decades in response to any efforts to solve the problem of discrimination. One can recall that from the earliest attempts to provide for equality in the workplace and to legislate correction of discrimination; that is, the introduction of legislation relating to equality in the workplace in the 1940s, the introduction of legislation dealing with public accommodations in the early 1950s, and the human rights legislation in Ontario in the 1950s and 1960s, there have always been those who said, "Don't go too fast", or "Have flexibility, let's have co-operation, let's have voluntarism".

So this is nothing new and it does not surprise me that the same group which in the past opposed human rights legislation now opposes effective affirmative action. The fact is that the record reveals that affirmative action works. It is not particularly innovative. Canada has the benefit of two decades of experience in the United States which demonstrates that affirmative action works. It is not an experiment. It works and it is about time we got on with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate. The Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State (Mrs. Landry).

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the second reading debate on Bill C-62 respecting employment equity.

I fully agree with the objectives sought through this measure introduced by my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

Mr. Speaker, I hope my New Democratic Party colleagues who have just raised objections against the Bill will listen to what I have to say because I think that, for our Government, this Bill happens to be the way we will honour our commitments towards women, minorities and native people who are all directly affected by this measure.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks will relate mainly to two issues. First I intend to elaborate on the reasons which prompted our Government to introduce the Bill, and those reasons are primarily of a socio-economic nature. Then I will explain how the Bill will be implemented, stressing the Government's decision not to impose quotas and enforcement mechanisms, but rather to proceed by way of a monitoring and data collecting system.

Too many Canadians are still victims of hiring practices which prevail among a fair number of employers. Employment equity is still one of the Government's priorities and falls within our overall social justice policy.

As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, last November's Speech from the Throne signalled our firm commitment towards social justice. The Throne Speech said the following: "... there is some distance between the principle of equality, widely accepted, and its reality, still far short of achievement. It is the duty of Parliament and Government to help ensure that Canadian society travels that distance as quickly as possible."

Our Government has therefore kept several of the promises made last November as concerns social justice. For instance, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the amendment to the Indian Act which forbids any discrimination based on sex; the extension of the eligibility criteria for the spouses' allowance program; and the wider definition of invalidity for income tax purposes which will benefit over 120,000 handicapped Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 must be added to the list of these Government achievements in the field of social justice.

Its purpose is to travel the distance there is now between the principle of equality and its reality. The purpose of this equity employment Bill therefore seems very straightforward to me. We must immediately take concrete action to provide access to employment to all Canadians, without any discrimination.

To the uninitiated, employment equity can appear to be a vague and meaningless phrase. It is therefore important to define it clearly if we are to understand all its implications.

The purpose of employment equity is, first, to get rid of obstacles to employment, to identify and eliminate discriminatory measures and practices, to implement special provisions to correct the effects of past discrimination, to ensure equitable representation of all Canadian men and women, and finally, to promote economic development by making full use of the abilities of all Canadian men and women.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that four target groups have been designated in section 3 of the Bill as groups which should receive special attention, namely women, the native people, the handicapped and visible minorities. This Bill aims at removing the barriers which have prevented these groups from becoming full members of the labour force.

There is no need for long empirical demonstrations to realize that these four groups still suffer from systemic discrimination when they attempt to join the labour market. History shows us that these groups have fought hard to eliminate the obstacles to employment of which they have unfortunately been the victims too often.

● (1650)

A quick retrospective will remind us, for instance, that in 1882, the Toronto Labour Council supported the principle of equal pay for equal work. The fact that married women had to wait until 1955 for employment restrictions to be eliminated in the Federal Public Service says a lot about what we have to rectify. We have indeed done a lot since 1955 to eliminate such obvious barriers to employment. The Government has since then taken action in several areas to allow all Canadian citizens to contribute fully to the economic, political and social development of Canada. The most important protection enjoyed by Canadians is undoubtedly the Charter of rights and freedoms of 1982 which proclaims the equality of each individual, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origine, colour, sex, age or mental or physical disability. These equality rights were added to the many anti-discrimination provisions already existing in federal and provincial legislation on human rights.

I hope you will excuse the long preamble, but I felt it was essential to put the subject into perspective before proceeding with an analysis of the Abella Report. In 1983, a royal commission of inquiry was set up to investigate the most effective, productive and equitable means of eliminating systematic discrimination and promoting employment equity for women, native peoples, handicapped persons and visible minorities.

On November 20, 1984, the Commission chaired by Judge Rosalie Silberman Abella submitted its report: Employment Equity. The conclusions of the Abella Commission make it abundantly clear that the four target groups I just mentioned were subject to various kinds of unfair treatment in the workplace.

The report observed, for instance, that women who worked full time all year in 1982 were earning an average of 65 cents for every dollar earned by men in the same situation, and that female workers in general were earning 55 cents for every dollar earned by men. If we consider that in 1911, women were earning 53 per cent of the salary of their male counterparts, we must admit that the imbalance between the remuneration of men and women is diminishing at an intolerably slow rate.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it was shown that women are restricted to five of the twenty-two major occupational groups, namely secretaries and stenographers, bookkeepers and accounting employees, salespersons, cashiers and waitresses. As you may have guessed, these are the occupational groups with the lowest salaries and where chances of advancement are extremely limited. In addition, most part-time jobs are held by women. In fact, in 1984, women held 71 per cent of all part-time jobs. It is common knowledge that part-time jobs offer less security and benefits than full-time jobs. Even women who manage to get a university degree are not necessarily going to reap the same benefits as their male counterparts. For instance, in 1982, a women with a university degree was earning the equivalent of the salary paid a male high school graduate. Whether they are educated or not, women on the whole are not on an equal footing with men in the labour market.

As for the three remaining target groups, inequities in the work place remain a tragic fact of life. It was proved in the study: Who Gets the Work that visible minorities have tremendous difficulty entering the labour market. For instance, the chances of finding a job are three times better for whites than they are for blacks. These are figures that a responsible Government cannot afford to ignore, Mr. Speaker.

The statistics for handicapped persons who are able to work are hardly more encouraging. According to certain estimates, 50 per cent of handicapped persons who are able to work are unemployed. These people can no longer be ignored by Canadian employers.

Nor can this country afford to do without the contribution of our native community to the Canadian economy. However, with an unemployment rate of over 70 per cent in many communities, native peoples are unfortunately being left out of the economic life of this country. Such a high unemployment level is unacceptable and must be lowered as soon as possible. All Canadians stand to benefit if native people are called upon to make a greater contribution.

The statistics I gave abundantly reflect the current living conditions of women, native people, visible minorities and disabled persons. Those figures are the only motivation our Government needs to take action.

The Abella report recommendations gave rise to many positive reactions and were heartily welcomed by a host of associations interested in promoting employment equity.

The federal Government was quick to react and last March 8, International Women's Day, my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald) tabled the Government's response to the royal commission report. In her statement that day, the Minister said it was imperative to "remove the barriers that restrict the economic future of so many Canadians. Our economic development demands the full participation of all. Give Canadians real opportunities and they will get jobs. Give them jobs and they will create wealth. Generate wealth and there will be economic growth—and growth means more jobs».

This response to the Abella report by the Minister of Employment and Immigration is a positive proof that our Government considers employment equity as one of its current priorities.

The provisions of this Bill reflect the spirit of the recommendations made by Judge Abella to the effect that employers should develop employment equity programs. The purpose of this Bill is to eliminate obstacles to employment and to promote employment equity for the four target groups in public corporations and businesses under Federal jurisdiction which employ over 100 workers. In addition, businesses wishing to obtain contracts of $200,000 or more from the Canadian Government will have to make a commitment to ensure employment equity.

Some will say that the best way to implement such employment equity programs is to impose quotas. This option was not the one given preference by our Government for many reasons. Among those, as noted by Judge Abella, there is the fact that quotas are too often viewed as maximum objectives which there is no need to surpass. Moreover, quotas are often too rigid and do not correspond to the characteristics of certain regional businesses.

Mr. Cassidy: Always excuses!

Mrs. Landry: As pointed out by Judge Abella, quotas are inflexible and arbitrary. In their place, we have prefered flexible measures which take into account in a better way the special needs of each company. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, if this can satisfy my hon. colleague for the NDP, the Canadian Human Rights Commissioner, Mr. Fairweather, heartily agrees with our decision. In his letter, the Commissioner points out that Judge Abella recommends that hiring quotas not be set for employers and emphasizes the need to assess results within the organization of the employer to ensure that employment practices have effectively improved employment opportunities, and he also says that the Commission supports this position.

Mr. Speaker, that is yet another proof that our approach—

Mr. Cassidy: It is not a proof!

Mrs. Landry: —is supported by a great many people who are really very competent, certainly as competent as our hon. friends from the opposition.

Having rejected the quota system, our Government has opted for the development of a data bank system among the employers concerned by this legislation. It has adopted the Abella recommendation calling for employers to collect all relevant information in order to assess the degree of participation of the targeted groups.

Mr. Speaker, I note with pleasure that these provisions of the Bill are consistent with the recommendation made by the Chairman of the Canadian Human Rights Commission who, as everybody knows, has a vast expertise in defending the rights of the individuals.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-62 provides that every employer will have to submit . . . Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to continue this debate at the earlier opportunity.

AUDITOR GENERAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved that Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak for a few moments on Bill C-250. It is a very simple Bill which has had the support of all Parties in the House. In fact, it has been a long time in coming before the House. Back in 1980, when I was first a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, the Committee took an interest in this particular problem and made a recommendation. The aim of the Bill is also very simple. It is to allow the Auditor General to report more often than he reports at present. The present Act requires him to report annually, and the interpretation of "annually" has been once per year. We in the Public Accounts Committee have felt for a long time that the operation of the committee could be improved if we could look at the Auditor General's reports much closer to the time when they are completed.

Back in 1980, the Public Accounts Committee commented upon a report by stating that it would like to have the Auditor General report more often. In one of his later reports, the Auditor General replied that he agreed that there was a necessity for more current reporting by his Department or by his organization. It was on July 18 that the original request was made that the Auditor General should report more often. Again in 1981 and 1983 this kind of request came from the Public Accounts Committee.

However, it was not until May 29, 1984 that the Public Accounts Committee got down to making the request in a form which asked the Government to take some action on it. The Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts to the House of Commons on June 13, 1984, made the following request:

Auditor General Act

Your Committee considered the reporting practices of the Auditor General and, in particular, the timeliness of his annual report to the House of Commons. Your Committee notes that, under the present Auditor General Act, the Auditor General normally may report only annually to the House of Commons. Your Committee favours the reporting of comprehensive and other audits on a completion-date basis. This will enable your Committee to deal with the Auditor General's findings in a timely manner and to exert its remedial influence as soon as possible after the audit is completed. The Auditor General endorses this approach because it provides for greater efficiency and flexibility in his reporting to Parliament.

That was part of the Fifth Report of the Public Accounts Committee under the able chairmanship of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis).

At that time the Hon. Member for Simcoe North attempted to obtain and in fact obtained all-Party support and a promise from the Government at that time that such amendments to the Auditor General Act would come forward. That was in June 1984, and there was a bit of an interruption during the summer. The same requirement has been before the Government and, up until now, it has not taken any action on it. It is hoped by members of the Public Accounts Committee that the Government will take some action. This Bill is brought before the House in the hope that it will start the process of changing the Act so that in the next year the Auditor General may report on a more systematic basis on the completion of each of his audits.

In his 1984 report, the Auditor General made the following statement:

The fiscal year on which I am only now reporting concluded eight months ago. It will be several more months before the Public Accounts Committee . . . will have completed its consideration of this Report. I am anxious to see the whole process speeded up.

If we look at the situation under which the Public Accounts Committee works, it is quite possible that a comprehensive audit of a Department may have been completed a full two years before it comes before the committee. Since the audit sometimes takes two years beyond that point, it means that on occasion the Public Accounts Committee is dealing with material or an audit of something which happened four years before. This Bill will not solve the problem entirely, but it would make the reporting of the Auditor General much more current than it is presently.

I want to stress a couple of points in the few minutes I will take. First, the Public Accounts Committee is a very non-political committee. It is comprised of a group of Members of Parliament who do their best and deal with the operations of Departments. At best, it is a very difficult kind of committee in that it must attempt to find out information as much as possible, sometimes from an unco-operative bureaucracy and even sometimes from an unco-operative administration. Quite often it has found that when it starts exploring areas of concern, the bureaucracy of the Department may have changed once or several times since the beginning of the audit. Consequently, it is very difficult to discover what went on. What this Bill would do is at least give the committee a better chance to find out what went on earlier in the life of the Government and possibly to impact upon those actions in the future. It is valuable to every MP in the House to have a report on the operations of a Department as quickly after that audit has been made as possible. It is valuable to the Government and to the Cabinet because once that information is available the direction of each particular Department can be changed, if indicated. It would even be valuable to a Department because in many cases it is only after the Auditor General's Report, and in some cases only after the Public Accounts Committee has had an opportunity to investigate that report, that corrective action is taken by the Department.

It would also be valuable to the process because if this Parliament got a report, say, every month instead of 12 reports all together at the end of October, there would be a continuous fund of new knowledge about the operation of the Government. That would give all of us in this House a better opportunity.

I do not want to comment on why it has not been brought forward but I hope that this Government will recognize that we need to make this change in the reporting procedures of the Auditor General. I know that the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis), and the Hon. Member for Simcoe North who have all been and are part of the Public Accounts Committee feel, as does my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), that the sooner this kind of corrective action or amendment of the Auditor General Act is made the better it will be for the operation.

I think that if we improve the tools with which this Parliament works as much as we possibly can then we can expect a better job from the Members. That is what this Bill is intended to do.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue on the words of my colleague who presented Bill C-250 today when he said we are all working to improve working conditions in this House. I believe that this parliamentary initiative would indeed be very helpful and I will try in a few moments to explain why I feel so strongly that this Bill should be adopted and proclaimed.

I indeed take pleasure this afternoon in speaking to this debate. Our official spokesperson, of course, is the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). She had to be absent this afternoon and asked me to take her place.

As a former member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and as a former chairman of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee which considers the Estimates of the Auditor General, I am more than pleased to say a few words in regard to Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act. On reading the explanatory notes, the essential purpose of the Bill is to allow the Auditor General to report not only annually but to report at least annually. That change means that he could be empowered to report whenever he felt it appropriate if any situation existed where he wanted to apprise the House, as an agent of Parliament, of a difficult situation or of a situation that he felt we should know about. We must remember that the Auditor General answers to this House directly through his reports and as such is an agent of Parliament and not under the authority of the Government of the day.

I listened closely to the representations being made by my friend, and I must say that I find it appropriate that the Bill before us is being proposed by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), a member of the other Opposition. When I say the other Opposition I distinguish him from the Official Opposition which we all know by tradition in this House chairs the committee on public accounts, and that of course, is the Hon. Member for Trinity. I am very happy see that we have this kind of co-operation, this kind of a very interesting, and I would say a good, change put to us in terms of trying to modify, to change and to improve things around here so that MPs really have a chance to get at the Public Accounts of Canada and the public accounts that they can bring to us every so often.

I am also impressed by the non-partisan nature of the Public Accounts Committee, the strictly review approach that has been traditionally the work of the committee and the seriousness they attach to that review.

In July 1980, my colleague from Prince Albert reminded us, the Public Accounts Committee recommended that the Auditor General use his power more often to make special reports to the House of Commons so that the committee would be better able to examine current issues. That is the key: "current issues". The operative words here are important to us. As Members know, the Auditor General Act as it is interpreted requires the Auditor General to report to the House of Commons annually on or before December 31. Successive Auditors General have met this requirement but we must remember that a report on or before December 31 of any year deals with the Government's fiscal year that ended nine months before that, on March 31. This means that when the House receives the report the Public Accounts Committee starts to examine and consider the items in the report, some of which are already more than a year old. That is a kind of difficult situation for Members of Parliament who like to be perceived to have and would like to have a hold on the issues as they occur.

For a review committee like Public Accounts that takes its mandate seriously, and I know they do because I sat on the committee for several years, and wants its work to be relevant and timely, this is rather like closing the barn door after the horse has left.

No matter how good the intentions of the Auditor General or of the Standing Committee, the once yearly reporting date on or before December 31 severely limits the effectiveness of that committee. It is, to use my horse analogy again, to hobble the committee somewhat by asking it to look at something that has happened sometimes a year or more before.

The committee recommended in July of 1980 that the Auditor General use his power more often to make special reports. When a legal opinion was sought about that power, the opinion came back that the Auditor General Act did not contemplate regular or interval or completion reporting to the House. The opinion was that only once annually, excepting cases of special importance or urgency, would reports be made. In June of 1984, in its Fifth Report tabled in this House, the committee again recommended that the comprehensive and other audits that the Auditor General carries out he reparted on a completion-date basis—I quote the committee's own words:

> Your Committee favours the reporting of comprehensive and other audits on a completion-date basis. This will enable your Committee to deal with the Auditor General's findings in a timely manner and exert its remedial influence as soon as possible after the audit is completed. The Auditor General endorses this approach because it provides for greater efficiency and flexibility in his reporting to Parliament—

• (1720)

The Committee also recommended that the necessary legislative changes to the Auditor General Act be made to permit more times for reporting. In his report to the House for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, the Auditor General himself said the following:

> —I commend this proposed change toward more timely reporting for consideration and action by the new Parliament. I am convinced that it would greatly enhance the usefulness of the information that my office provides to MPs—

The changes to the Auditor General Act proposed by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert this afternoon are simple in wording but vital and far-reaching in effect. They would indeed permit the Auditor General to report to the House at least annually instead of just annually. They provide for other reports as well as an annual one, reports that could be tabled by the Auditor General according to his judgment and initiative. They provide for the Auditor General to report immediately on any matter of pressing importance or urgency if he deems it necessary. It is pretty powerful stuff and stuff with which I agree. I think it is time that we got the Auditor General to do this kind of reporting.

On March 4, 1985, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity, the present Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, outlined in the House the benefits that would accrue from allowing the Auditor General to report to the House on a completion-date basis. I would like to remind Hon. Members of what my colleague said at the time, and this is found at page 2717 of Hansard of March 4, 1985:

> —the advantages of completion-date reporting as against waiting 12 to 18 months to get all the issues together would include the following. The subject matter of each release would be current in that it would have been recently completed and finalized by the Auditor General and his staff. The Public Accounts Committee would be more likely to review the matter thoroughly and enthusiastically because it was current. It would be more likely that a review would increase the effectiveness of the Auditor General's Report. The Public Accounts Committee would be able to plan its work better and the workload of the Auditor General would be distributed on a more even basis throughout the year.

I cannot improve on that. The description provided by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity, covers everything. It means that we as Members of Parliament expect and I think are entitled to receive from the Auditor General timely reports which we can use in our work and this will give us a chance to be accountable to our constituents. I can only commend to the House and the Government Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act, as enthusiastically as possible with the wish that the Bill quickly pass and become law. We should all applaud the Hon. Member for Prince Albert for bringing this important measure forward and I support it wholeheartedly.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is a great privilege for me to be in the House today and speaking on this Bill. First I would like to state that the two opposition Members who have spoken have clearly set forth their positions and I support those positions wholeheartedly. As Opposition Members know and have mentioned, this matter was officially put before the House in June, 1984 by the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee who at that time was a member of this Party and who had extensive training in the field of accounting. That Hon. Member is probably better able to recognize the need and importance of having these changes made to the Act.

Over the last year, we have had an opportunity to look at a number of details regarding the Auditor General's Annual Report. So often we find that the Auditor General has made his study, has returned to the Department which he has studied to tell it of his findings, has given it an opportunity to clean up its act and has then completed his annual report. Because of that, we do not become aware of problems that may exist until a minimum of 18 months after the date the Auditor General has become aware of what is happening. This delay is costing the taxpayers of the country billions of dollars.

I do not support delaying this Bill any longer. I feel strongly that it should be enacted and adopted. It has been brought up in the House enough times and action should now be taken. The taxpayers of the country are our constituents. We must live up to their expectations of us. One of their expectations of us is that we be a responsible Government. The time to review the matter is now, not 18 months from now.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and I along with a number of other Hon. Members had an opportunity to go to Washington in the second week of September. While there, we had the opportunity to meet with representatives of the Comptroller General's office and with the chairman of the committee that runs investigations into the Comptroller General's reports. I think we can learn something from their methods. Not only do representatives of the Comptroller General's office do reports of their own volition, but if they have received a question from any Congressman or Congressional Committee, they must proceed to investigate that which has come to light. In some cases, they find that the spending of a great deal of time is not justified and in those cases they review the situation, get the facts, deal with the situation quickly and then put it aside. I am not suggesting that we should be like the Americans and I do not say that we should be Americans. However, I do say that we should learn something from a system such as theirs, a system which is working.

The Committee should have the opportunity to request of the Auditor General that he commence studies into situations in which we feel the taxpayers are not being well treated. We must change our system so that the Public Accounts Committee deals with matters on an au courant basis as opposed to an ancient history one. I will give an example of this that came to light this year and has come to light many times over the past decades. The Auditor General did a report on Public Accounts and it is interesting to note that what he stated in his report this year has been stated continuously in the reports of the past 20 or 25 years. Nothing has changed. This makes one wonder as a member of the Public Accounts Committee about the purpose of sitting on that Committee. When we make recommendations, they come before the House and nothing happens. The reason nothing happens is very simple. It is because things come before Parliament so long after the fact that the Department involved has an opportunity to get its words together so that by the time the matter comes before the Public Accounts Committee, we can be fooled. There is no meaningfulness in such a report because the Department involved has already received it.

We have discussed the question to which I just referred with the Auditor General. He has agreed that we should be allowed to review his working papers and some of his background information so we can know in greater detail what actually transpired prior to the Department getting a copy of that information and stating its own position. I feel very comfortable at the present time regarding Public Works. I have had a meeting with the Department and I have no new information. However, I am fully aware that changes which will gain control over our expenditure of dollars for Public Works will be made. I believe that if we could obtain an up-to-date accounting with respect to Public Works in another year—not in 18 months but in another year—then we could review it. We could realistically state that, yes, it is on track and it is going the way we intended it to go. At that time we will either accept it or put in more recommendations.

We have had a number of discussions with respect to giving more responsibility to Members of Parliament. I support that move. I would say the place for that to start is within the Public Accounts Committee. That is the place where we trace down where money has not been well spent and, in effect, where it has been wasted. I know that we will have a great deal of support on our side with respect to that matter. For that reason alone a Member of Parliament will be able to come before the House immediately and state: We have to do something about Public Works.

There are other cases which I can use as examples. For instance, there is the case we studied earlier this year with respect to CIDA and a railway which was to be built in Tanzania. We supplied the rails but what we did not investigate was whether or not the Tanzanians could afford to buy the ties. The rails are still sitting and rusting in Tanzania. The railroad has not yet been built—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Sure it is, I have been on it.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I will not refer to someone who has not been recognized and who has not seen the facts. The railway has been partially built. There is still about 107 miles of railway track to be put down. Again, we received the information five years after the fact. How can the Public Accounts Committee be effective if it receives information five years after the fact?

With respect to the question of CIDA, I must say that there were several meetings of the committee. When we were prepared to draft the report with respect to CIDA the Deputy Minister came before us and was extremely open. She is aware that we had some input into a matter which was important to the taxpayers of the country. She is also frightened that she not be under the gun of the Public Accounts Committee.

One of the famous cases with respect to lost money is the case of Canadair. This Government and Members of Parliament had never heard the term "letter of comfort". The Government of the day committed over $1 billion in letters of comfort before the matter ever came before the Public Accounts Committee. This type of process went on for a period of five years. It was shown that the company had made money when in fact it had not. It was not indicated that these letters of comfort were outstanding, which letters were a direct debt of the federal Government.

We say that our national debt is some $200 billion. In fact, our national debt is in excess of $300 billion, when all the Crown corporations and miscellaneous agencies which have debt piled up against them are added in, as well as some of the liabilities which we have not funded for the future. Canadair is a classic example. If the matter had been brought to our attention earlier we could have dealt with it. Hon. Members will recall that when the matter came before the Finance Committee and subsequently the Public Accounts Committee it had to be acted upon. The company had to try to clean up its act. All that was done was remove the debt from Canadair and place it in the Canada Development Investment Corporation. That did not solve the problem. It just made the financial statement look a lot better. In the committee I for one stated that the only option open was to completely write off the $1 billion worth of letters of comfort because it could never be got back. I said that the burden could not be placed on the Canada Development Investment Corporation or on Canadair alone.

I would now like to deal with the cash management of the Government. We were told that discussions with respect to cash management of the Government had been ongoing for three years. We finally got the matter before committee after two and a half years only to find out that the Department of Finance was not carrying out any discussions with the bankers of the country. In effect, we had to put representatives from the Department before us and tell them to establish a date when they would get together to talk about when they could sort out the mess with respect to the lost funds from cash management which had been mishandled over the last many years. If we had had the matter brought up sooner we could have acted upon it sooner. When we finally brought the Canadian bankers before the Deputy Minister of Finance we saw action.

I believe that the Public Accounts Committee should really have the opportunity to request the Auditor General to provide specific reports on his concerns. I do not think we can wait for the Auditor General to bring his concerns to us. I think we have to give some recommendations. After all, it has to be a two-way street. We need those reports as soon as they are complete. We do not want them tied into an annual report which is a large book which we have a hard time covering a year after the fact. If the reports were to come down every month or two we could deal with them on a current basis. That is what the Hon. Member is proposing in his motion. I have spoken to the Auditor General about Clause 3 which deals with subsection 8(1) of the Act which states:

> The Auditor General may make a special report to the House of Commons on any matter of pressing importance or urgency that, in his opinion, should be reported immediately.

I think the wording in the Bill is probably clearer than the section in the Act. However, if Hon. Members read the section carefully I do not think that they will find that the Auditor General has taken full opportunity of what has been provided in the Act. Nevertheless, he is still stuck in that it has to be a matter of urgency; it has to be imminent and dangerous. Because of that I feel we must adopt the Bill. The only thing that we are asking is to place three words in the Act. Those words are "at least annually". That is all we are asking for. I think the Hon. Member will understand that we are both in the same boat with respect to this matter. We have both worked together on the steering committee of the Public Accounts Committee. We have to see a change.

We cannot carry on in this way or we will lose the interest of our members, which is another important factor. Our committee has been very active for the last 12 to 14 months. However, how can we keep the interest of the members when they will receive another batch of reports at the end of this month containing information which is at least 12 to 18 months out of date? We will just start to work on it and then there will be the Christmas break. I feel strongly about not having the proper facilities in place to really discuss the matter when we should be discussing it.

I know of another Member who will bring up a good case in point. I know that he will go into detail with respect to SRTCs. I was a member of the Finance Committee when the Bill dealing with that subject was passed. It came to the Public Accounts Committee and we found out that we had not been told the truth. We were told that the matter had been discussed extensively in the Finance Committee. I looked for my notes from that Finance Committee meeting and I read where I had asked the following question: "What have you done to check out the cost to the taxpayer of this?" There was not an extensive briefing given as was stated. Yet, they had the nerve to come to us at the Public Accounts Committee to tell us that the situation was much worse than we had anticipated. It went before the Senate and Senator Roblin asked how much this was going to cost, and that was for the year before. It was a case where the Auditor General was able to sneak a paragraph into his annual report at the last minute and we were able to get on to it in a much more reasonable time. But we also have to remember that the Auditor General triggered this earlier and advised the Department, which in turn advised the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and he took action a few days after he was sworn into office.

This year, we doubled our working hours. I think by doubling these hours we have accomplished a great deal more. We could triple our working hours and have many more sittings but if we had the information on a current basis, I believe we would not have the trouble we are having today in digging up past history. It is very difficult to develop ancient history on something which is au courant. It is also difficult, because of the way this place works, to try to get the press interested in something, so that the people will become interested, when it is 18 months to 24 months old. I only say that to show that we have to make the people aware of wasted money. We are the protectors of the public purse and public accounts and we cannot do our job through an annual report. It is impossible for us to do a proper job because, as I have stated before, management will mix it up and mix it around so we really do not have all the facts.

As a Member of Parliament for the last six and a half years, I really believe this Bill must be approved. I, for one, left the Public Accounts Committee in 1981 in disgust because I received the same answer to the same question three years in a row, and it was not the truth. I sympathize with the staff of the Department because it was so long before that it happened. However, I feel that to make it a meaningful committee, to bring back the real purpose of public accounts, we must adopt a Bill identical to this Bill and preferably this one, so that we can become a meaningful committee which can do something to protect the public purse. I, therefore, move very strongly on my own that we accept this Bill. I want to salute the Hon. Member who presented this Bill and, fortunately, had it put on the Order Paper because I believe it is something which is very much of interest today. As you probably know, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's report will be coming out in 10 days. I think it is time we adopted the Bill, carried it and got the show on the road so that we can give the Public Accounts Committee a meaningful job to do.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to speak in debate on Bill C-250 which was presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). I am delighted to speak on this Bill because I am also a member of the Public Accounts Committee. As a new member on that committee I certainly would like to have an opportunity to voice some of my concerns. I would like to say that Private Members' Hour is something which is very dear to my heart. It gives us an opportunity to voice our concerns and, in particular, the concerns of our constitutents who often have some very constructive criticisms to make of Government and of the bureaucracy. I think this is an ideal time to communicate some of those ideas, and I hope we can bring some of those constructive criticisms to fruition.

As I mentioned earlier, I am a member of the Public Accounts Committee which truly operates, I believe, in a non-partisan fashion. It is an effective committee but I believe it is the least heard of committee in the House of Commons. I certainly agree with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell), who just reiterated that very point. I am not going to try to give anyone here a lesson in public accounts, but some people have looked at me with a bit of a blank stare—not in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker—but some people who are not familiar with this Committee and they have asked me what a Public Accounts Committee does. Very simply I say we are there to ensure that we get value for the taxpayers' dollars which are spent here in Ottawa and across this country. Our Committee works in conjunction with the Auditor General and we are responsible to this House. What I would like to comment on is the whole question of accountability.

As I mentioned earlier, as have many of my colleagues, the Auditor General reports once a year, which I feel is wrong. I feel the Auditor General should bring matters to the attention of this House on a more regular basis. I was in business before I came to the House of Commons and I can look around this room and see many of my colleagues here today who were also in business so they know what it is all about. Can you just imagine, Mr. Speaker, running a corner service station or a confectionery store and not knowing whether you are in a profit or loss situation until the end of the year? In other words, you never give your books to the accountant and you only find out at the end of the year that you have lost a lot of money and you have not taken any corrective action. Let us think of a corporation which is running a $125 billion operation, as is the Government—and I know much of that includes necessary social services—but it is exactly what we are doing, and we are not allowing the bells and whistles to be blown when they should be blown in order to bring attention to the fact that things may be off the rails at the House of Commons and that the senior bureaucrats should be taking some corrective action.

I believe that this amendment will allow Parliament to bring urgent matters to the attention of Parliamentarians. I suppose some people could argue that the Auditor General does that now, that he works with these various Departments and lets them know through correspondence and meetings that things are not correct in various Departments. However, as I mentioned a little earlier, I believe our constituents want accountability. They elected us—particularly this time around with 211 Members in our Party—because they were so frustrated with the system, with bureaucrats and with Members of Parliament. They wanted to see some change. I cannot think of any other area where we could demonstrate some real change to our constituents right across this country than in allowing them to speak to us and allowing us to speak to the system about changes which have to be made with respect to public dollars which are being mismanaged or are being spent inappropriately.

I would like to cite a few examples, as my colleague did a few moment ago, of things we have observed in the Public Accounts Committee. First, the Public Accounts Committee needs timely information to carry out its responsibilities. I think that has been touched on by a number of Hon. Members. An example is the Department of Public Works which was touched on by the Hon. Member for Ontario. We received the report in February. It was cleared with the Department of Public Works management the previous summer. Therefore, we were dealing with a report which was nine months old and with recommendations which had not been acted upon. It is absolutely inconceivable that this would happen anywhere else in the country. It would not happen to a small business or someone running his or her own household budget. One just cannot operate that way. One must deal with the responsible management and not a new management as so often happens in Government Departments. Senior public servants get promoted, demoted, and transferred to other Departments and I think we should be dealing with the people who were in that Department at the time as quickly as we possibly can. We should be dealing with the current senior officials of the Department.

The second example I would like to cite is the Department of National Defence. The country knew about this because there was a lot of attention given to this particular item by the media. The information in this report was never acted upon and it would never have been acted upon had there not been a public outcry, particularly from the media. Nine months later they begin to act on these concerns. This is almost like my first example and it is totally inadequate and ludicrous. The Auditor General felt, and as a member of that committee I certainly agreed, that some $225 million in operating capital was being used for capital expenditures.

The third example I would like to raise is that of scientific research tax credits. If the Auditor General raises a red flag over something which concerns him, he can report it to the House and the matter can be reviewed. Believe me, this is one example where we needed more than a red flag raised. It came out of the 1983 Budget of the previous Government, and I would think it was brought to the attention of many public servants as well as the Deputy Minister, if not the Minister, in the spring of 1984 that this program was running into very serious difficulties. However, absolutely nothing was done. The Auditor General was aware of the situation but he was not in a position where he could bring it to the attention of the House or the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This tax credit was originally budgeted at $200 million. That is what it was going to cost the Government. I have reason to believe that we are now at the $3 billion mark and climbing. This will probably be one of the most serious examples of mismanagement in the history of the Canadian Government. I say that in as non-partisan a way as I can. I do not like it. My constituents do not like it. No one in Government likes it. However, we allowed it to happen. We allowed it to carry on. The Auditor General's hands are tied. However, had we the opportunity of bringing this to the attention of this House or the committee, changes could have been made. Yes, it still would have cost taxpayers more than $200 million. I am not trying to pretend we would have just stopped at the budgeted figure. However, perhaps it could have been stopped at the $750 million mark, not the $3 billion.

Canadians deserve and demand consistent accountability in the House of Commons. People would like to feel that their Member of Parliament is free to bring mismanagement to the attention of this House. Keep in mind that it is not necessary to live in Ottawa to know that taxpayers' money is being misspent. It can happen anywhere in the country. There are many people who want to raise this with us but they want a response. As the Hon. Member for Ontario pointed out, people want to know that we are doing something about it. They want to know that corrective measures are being taken. I have to admit, as the Hon. Member for Ontario did just a few minutes ago, that when a committee submits its report to the House I sometimes wonder if it is really acted upon. Who is reading these reports? How many of our colleagues are reading them? People in this country have grown skeptical about all levels of Government because there has not been enough attention paid to managing the taxpayers' money efficiently and effectively. They want to see us spend their dollars as if they were our own dollars. That is something which is obviously very difficult for us to communicate to the system here in Ottawa. Therefore, this motion is one of many essential steps required to bring about further accountability in Government. I personally think that if people saw this committee making effective reports to this House and getting responses in turn, they would applaud the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Back in May of 1984 the Auditor General appeared before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. He pointed out that some curent and former members of the committee expressed concern that the annual report of the Auditor General is not available soon enough after the audits are completed, and that the report is too long and contains too many complex audit issues. These concerns have been expressed for at least the last four years. That is exactly what my colleague from Ontario was saying. We are not raising anything new here. The Auditor General also pointed out that this was probably what was behind the committee's recommendation that the Auditor General use his power to make special reports to the committee more often, and this would enable him to examine some of the current issues. He pointed out that to make this possible there was an agreement in 1981 to make some small changes to the Act. These changes were submitted to the Government early in 1982 but they were not proceeded with at that time. How long, Mr. Speaker, are we going to play with this? This is very important and necessary to enable us to come to grips with something which is plaguing this country, a very serious deficit. We not only want to decrease the deficit. I often say that we have to stop the fall and then start decreasing it.

There are literally hundreds and hundreds of people who want to participate with us in our efforts to improve the situation. There has to be proper planning and the necessary mechanisms could very easily be worked out. Some people say that the Government is too sensitive about this issue. Perhaps it will embarrass the Government. Well, I do not think that is the case. These things can be brought to the attention of the committee, and the committee is controlled by the Conservative or Liberal Government of the day. I guess the Hon. Member for Prince Albert would like to think his Party might some day control the committee as well. However, if an issue was too sensitive, then the decision could be made right in the committee itself. Let us give the committee some responsibility. Therefore, I suggest that the details necessary to implementing this motion should be worked out by the committee and presented to the Government for consideration. I am certain that the committee, with the very able representation it has from all parties, can work out an effective recommendation to the Government and I personally would like to see this acted upon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT—REQUEST FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on September 17 I rose to ask the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Beatty) a question about the Young Offenders Act. I specifically asked if he had had time to make a preliminary review of that Act, since we do know of several flaws in it, and also when we would see some action on his part.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Young Offenders Act superseded the Juvenile Delinquents Act of 1908, so legislation has been wanting in this area for some 75 years.

The former Government brought this legislation forward in two parts. As of April 1, 1984 the age was increased from seven to twelve. Children under 12 are now defined as children and cannot be charged with any offence or taken to court. The second half of this legislation came into effect on April 1, 1985 when the age at which a person could be tried in an adult court was increased from 16 to 18.

There are several problems with this new legislation, Mr. Speaker. The maximum sentence for any offence is currently two years unless the offence is one for which an adult would be given a life sentence. In that case, the maximum sentence for a juvenile would be three years. In other words, a 17-year old could commit murder and the maximum sentence would be three years.

Many of the residents of my riding of Don Valley East are quite concerned about this legislation. People who are involved in neighbourhood watch programs and do a large amount of volunteer work have seen some of their efforts set back. The Hillcrest Village Association in my riding recently sent out a bulletin outlining the trend in break and enter problems wherein youths under 12 are being used. Last Saturday I attended a task force on abuse to the elderly at York University which was set up by the Mayor of North York and chaired by Dr. Jerry Cooper. The problems of the Young Offenders Act were touched on at that conference. In early October, I conducted a Rogers Cable show on this topic. I had two guests, Inspector Jim Clark, head of the Youth Bureau of Metro and Carol Appathurai, a researcher with the Central Toronto Youth Services.

The thrust of this legislation is laudible, Mr. Speaker. It is to make youth more responsible for their actions. However, I would like to highlight for you some of the specific problems that have been highlighted by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force. Before doing that, I will give you a couple of statistics.

In the first nine months of 1985 in Metropolitan Toronto the police have investigated and confirmed 1,310 criminal offences by persons under 12 years of age. The exclusion of people under 12 creates concerns about the exploitation of 12-year olds by a knowledgeable criminal element involving the child as a party to the offence, and about the confession of a child who is immune to prosecution claiming responsibility for a crime committed by a person over 12 years of age.

This legislation affords victims the right to be heard in court concerning dispositions with respect to the young offender. However, the legislation denies that right when the child is under 12 years of age. The child cannot be charged with perjury. A person under 12 years apprehended for a crime and taken to a family court judge for a hearing is denied his rights. The hearing deals with the ability of the parents to handle the child rather than with his guilt or innocence.

Section 45 deals with records. I will give you an example of a problem encountered there. A young offender is placed in open custody following an offence for which fingerprints are not recorded. He or she leaves the open custody setting in early morning hours, which is not difficult to do, and is stopped by a police officer a short time later. A CPIC check will not indicate that the offender was sentenced to open custody. The officer releases the offender, who is killed a short time later and an inquest is held.

I have another example, Mr. Speaker. Recently, a 14 year-old female was reported missing by her parents. The parents were on welfare and could not afford a picture of their child. The female had previously been charged under the Young Offenders Act. The police had a photograph of the child. However, the use of such a picture is currently prohibited under the Act.

Let me deal with another couple of areas of concern. One is publication of identity. A child who is sexually abused by a young offender is protected from name publication, but not if the offender is 18 years old. A 12 year-old who commits arson is protected as a young offender, but the child in the other case is not.

In summary, I was very pleased to see that our new Solicitor General, as recently as last week, announced that he will make changes in the law, but that will be after he has heard the concerns of social workers, the police and the provinces. I applaud our Solicitor General for acting in such a swift manner, yet with sensitivity to the problem. Yes, progress has been made but there are some serious flaws in the legislation that need to be corrected for the protection of the child, the parents and society in general.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell), who, earlier in this House, directed a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Beatty) regarding the major weaknesses in the Young Offenders Act, and we recognize that the Member has now further elaborated upon his concerns, let me say at the outset, it should be noted that the Solicitor General fully endorses the philosophy that underlies the Young Offenders Act, namely, its clear acknowledgement that young people are responsible for their illegal behaviour and that society has a fundamental right to protection. The emphasis on these principles has not resulted, however, in the abandonment of the principle that young people have special needs which must be addressed by the juvenile justice system and by society as a whole.

Accordingly, a balance must be achieved in this juvenile justice system which, like the adult system, now recognizes the rights of the accused, the responsibility of the offender, and the protection of the public and, like the previous juvenile justice system, continues to recognize the needs of 12 to 17 year-old adolescents.

It is appreciated that in implementing such important change in the orientation of juvenile justice, difficulties will be encountered and some of these will require legislative change. As the Hon. Member is aware, there has been a public perception that the Young Offenders Act is too lenient in its treatment of young criminals.

Based on this belief that society is not being accorded the protection it requires, criticism has focused on such issues as the exclusion of children under 12 years, the ban on the publication of identity and the inappropriateness of penalties for serious crime. From a provincial-territorial perspective, the concerns tend to focus around matters of an administrative and procedural nature.

In short, some serious concerns with the Young Offenders Act have been advanced and require careful consideration. Regrettably, many of the criticisms and demands for change that have been made are the result of a serious misconception about the nature and implication of the Young Offenders Act for the administration of juvenile justice.

In order that the Solicitor General be sensitized to the legitimate issues arising from the implementation of this new Act, he will be meeting with concerned citizens and professionals active in juvenile justice across the country. In addition, he is looking forward to meeting with provincial and territorial Ministers responsible for juvenile justice at the earliest possible opportunity. The Solicitor General considers these steps to be an essential prerequisite to any change. Having stated this, please be assured that the Solicitor General will then be prepared to respond in a just and equitable manner to those areas which clearly require change.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION—CAPE BRETON—CAPITAL WORKS PROGRAM. (B) REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question I directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) on October 16, 1985. At that time I asked the Minister whether he could share with the House whether or not he would be proceeding quickly on the recommendations contained in the Cape Breton Advisory Committee report. That committee was appointed on the evening of May 23, 1985, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced the closure of the two heavy water plants in his Budget. As a result, tremendous economic hardship has accrued to my constituents and to adjacent constituents. Unemployment in some communities is unfortunately in excess of 50 per cent. The hardships anticipated over the winter months are indeed very devastating.

In part, page 7 of the report reads as follows:

> —the Committee could not ignore the urgency of a situation in which unacceptable numbers of workers, particularly young people, are facing hardship and despair and in which community and family support systems are strained to the limit.
> The Committee believes that immediate public investment in projects that will generate employment in the short term is necessary.

The particular report, which has been filed with the Minister, went on to list a number of projects that could be started immediately. They are readily available—the design work has been done, so to speak—to put people to work in the short term because of the seriousness of the situation.

I might add that some of the projects include the ongoing operations of the Sydney Steel Corporation, which has been seeking funds from the Government for a considerable period of time. However, as yet, it has been unable to make up its mind in that regard or on increased funding for the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

The report went on to indicate:

> The Committee recommends that the Sydney tar ponds be cleaned up as soon as possible, as these toxic areas present a major health and environmental hazard. A clean-up program should be launched in 1986 and would generate approximately 360 person-years of employment over three years.

It has been approximately 149 days since the Government has closed the two heavy water plants. Since that time it has been promising that actions would take place in order to alleviate high unemployment in that area of Canada. Thus far nothing has been done. We have only been given assurances by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. O'Neil), by the junior Minister from Central Nova and of course by the junior Minister from Halifax—

Mr. Forrestall: What do you mean by "junior Minister"?

Mr. Dingwall: They have done nothing.

Mr. Forrestall: That is impertinence.

Mr. Dingwall: I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will have the opportunity to stand in his place and expound upon what projects will be approved forthwith. Unfortunately the Hon. Member opposite who is babbling at this point in time knows very little about the social and economic conditions of that particular area of the province.

Mr. Forrestall: A little more than you do, young man.

Mr. Dingwall: I hope he rises in his place and gives us an exact dollar amount that the Government is proposing to advance in the short term, as advocated by its own Tory committee which it appointed. The social and economic issues in that particular area are such that they are causing grave hardship for thousands upon thousands of Nova Scotians and Canadians. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary, in his wisdom, shares with Members of the House and indeed the public at large what the Government's response will be.

After 149 days people in that area of the country are still awaiting some positive action which has been promised by numerous individuals, whether it be back-benchers from that side of the House who have done very little, or whoever. I hope he rises to the occasion and presents what the plan will be for the short term in creating employment opportunities in that area of Canada which has been dealt such a devastating blow as a result of the insensitive actions of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member has raised the question of Cape Breton and has touched on the excellent list of recommendations put forth by the Cape Breton Advisory Committee concerning the long-term economic development of that region.

The 34 recommenations of the Advisory Committee have already had an impact on the federal Government and on the Government of Nova Scotia. In view of the importance we attach to Cape Breton and its future, I know the Hon. Minister will allow both levels of Government the necessary opportunity to fully assess the recommendations and to determine, in consultation with Cape Bretoners, the implementation of these recommendations.

I would like to take this opportunity to remind the Hon. Member that the federal Government has already devoted much time and effort to developing co-operation with the Government of Nova Scotia and in encouraging Cape Bretoners and others in investing human and financial resources to create both short-term and long-term jobs.

I also wish to bring to the attention of the Members of the House of Commons that the federal Government announced in its May 23 Budget a Cape Breton investment tax credit and, on July 17, a program to "top up" assistance being provided under other federal Government programs. This financial assistance from the federal Government is already benefitting Cape Bretoners.

As an example, the Highland Fisheries Company has been able to undertake the reconstruction and modernization of its facilities. In fact, through the Industrial and Regional Development Program, the federal Government contributed $1.5 million to the Highland Fisheries and thus created 180 jobs. In view of many other federal Government initiatives and incentives, we expect to create and to maintain hundreds of jobs in Cape Breton.

In view of these initiatives taken by the federal Government, and in view of the advice now received by the Cape Breton Advisory Committee, I am confident that concerted actions will be taken by both the federal Government and provincial Government, with the important participation of the private sector, in the development of immediate and long-term viable jobs.

I trust that the Hon. Member joins me in expressing gratitude to the members of the Advisory Committee who devoted long summer hours to the task at hand and in thanking all Cape Bretoners who presented briefs to the Advisory Committee. I know the Hon. Member supports me in thanking such Cape Bretoners involved in Vision, the Worker Co-operative, the Coalition of Association for Learning Disabled, the Cape Breton Labour Council, the Cape Breton Offshore Trade Association and the many other groups, associations and individuals who presented thorough briefs to the Advisory Committee. The determination of such Cape Bretoners sends a strong message to the federal Government that Cape Bretoners enthusiastically view the future and wish a stronger say in the decisions affecting the development of their Island's economy.

The Hon. Member should rejoice in knowing that this Government intends to work with Cape Bretoners to encourage and stimulate economic development and productive, long-term employment.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—WELLAND CANAL BLOCKAGE. (B) CONDITON OF LOCKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, over the last two weeks I have had the occasion to raise with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) a number of questions that specifically deal with the St. Lawrence Seaway's economic viability. The first in that series was a decision last spring by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to dip into the Seaway Authority's assets and remove $30 million from their funds in order to help offset the Government's deficit. We had the historical occasion the next day to have the Minister of Transport before us in the Transport Committee to discuss the implications of the budget on his Department.

After we raised the matter of the $30 million he indicated to us that he appreciated our interventions and that he would, and I am paraphrasing here, take our arguments back to Treasury Board. It was as if, Mr. Speaker, he was saying I agree with you and I will do whatever I can to get that money back.

When I put the question to him two weeks ago he indicated that the Government was studying the matter. I can interpret that as meaning that he has not quite convinced his Cabinet colleagues yet, or that they are just now beginning to take a look at the matter.

We have what can only be called a major disaster on the St. Lawrence Seaway, a disaster that will require a great many dollars to repair both in the short term ad the long term. I am not going to suggest that I know how long it will take to repair it because neither I nor the Government is in a position as yet to make that determination. Nor am I at this time indicating that the Govenrment has any legal liability in the matter. I want to make that perfectly clear. However, it is indicative of the need to keep the Seaway Authority's contingency fund intact.

That fund exists for a number of reasons, including long-term capital renovations and emergency repairs such as the ones required because of the collapse of a part of the walls of Lock 7. It is also used to keep user fees low.

Part of the Seaway's original mandate was to provide for cost recovery. However, there is a danger in letting the Minister of Finance fiddle with the business of the Minister of Transport because I do not think that the Minister of Finance appreciates the value of the Seaway as does the Minister of Transport and his Parliamentary Secretary. They understand how important it is to the national economy that it be viable.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is going to help the national debt if we force Seaway tolls up by 25 per cent or 30 per cent, the figures that were indicated to us by the President of the Seaway Authority, as a result of having the $30 milion fund removed? Will it help the national debt if we make shipping companies or producers less competitive in the world market? Will it help the national debt if we force them to lose contracts, lay people off and in some cases even go out of business? No, it will not help the national debt.

This blind devotion to deficit reduction and cost recovery will force the deficit up, not down. By having fewer companies paying taxes the deficit will rise. By having fewer workers paying taxes the deficit will rise. By having more individuals receiving unemployment insurance or welfare payments because of the lack of employment the deficit will rise. Ironically, the whole cycle will bring about a decline in usage of the Seaway itself. With fewer products moving there will be fewer people to pay the tolls and that will just make things worse. The industry will not stand for it. I for one will not stand for it. I ask the Government to reconsider and re-establish the $30 million fund in the Seaway Authority's budget.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as of 5 o'clock this afternoon Canron Inc. had six stabilizing struts in place and was beginning to install the final six struts. Barring any complications, it is expected that the Seaway Authority will be able to drain the lock sometime Wednesday, October 23, 1985. Once this has been accomplished, an assessment of the damage will be made and Pitts Engineering will begin the repair work.

A contract has also been awarded to Acres International Ltd. to determine the cause of the blow-out. I believe it would be irresponsible on my part and on the part of Hon. Members present to presume upon the findings of the consulting engineers hired to make this determination. Once repairs have been effected, the Seaway will remain open as long as weather permits in order to minimize the effect of this disruption on the users.

My hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus), may rest assured that both the Minister of Transport and the President of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will not hesitate to take whatever action may be deemed necessary to ensure the continued integrity of the Seaway. In fact, the Minister of Transport, in reply to a question put by the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Pietz) today in the House, stated that he has asked the President of the Seaway Authority to conduct a study to determine more accurate ways of identifying potential problem areas, to establish contingencies in the event of a break-down and to improve the over-all operations of the Seaway. These steps are being taken with a view to restoring user confidence both in Canada and abroad.

With respect to the $30 million fund, let me reassure the Hon. Member that the funds necessary to maintain the operation of the seaway will be in place. It makes sense to tap that $30 million fund. I give the Hon. Member that reassurance.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, October 10, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is both with pleasure and with a sense of dismay that one has to speak this morning on this Bill.

An Hon. Member: Is it a pleasurable dismay?

Mr. Langdon: It is a pleasure to be able to convey to the House the sense of sadness one has to feel because this Bill has been brought before the House by the Government.

This Bill represents a story of corporate irresponsibility on the part of a bank but it also represents a story of Government mismanagement with respect to the handling of this entire affair. The level of corporate irresponsibility has become quite clear as the testimony of Mr. Hitchman has proceeded in the Estey inquiry. We find that this former banker, who has had the opportunity to actually dig into the details of this operation, has uncovered an incredible mare's nest. The operation of this bank was simply not acceptable and Mr. Hitchman suggests that that fact could have been easily discerned if somebody had taken the time to investigate the matter with care back in March. His report demonstrates not just the corporate irresponsibility of the bank but the sense of mismanagement which has been demonstrated by the Government in carrying this bail-out procedure forward, beginning in March.

I think we have to speak with sadness about the willingness of the Government to commit what is now $875 million for these two banks despite the lack of detailed information back in March which Mr. Hitchman has said could clearly have been available.

What we have is not just a story of Government mismanagement and corporate irresponsibility. It is also a story which characterizes the misplaced priorities of this Government. As I look at this Bill and the huge sums of money that are going to be spent because of it, I have to think of the farmers of Essex county on whose behalf I had to write to the Farm Credit Corporation and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) this past winter pointing out that the farmers were going to lose their farms because of the lack of special government help for the farm community. The answer we received was, "We cannot afford to help those farmers".

As well, I have to think of a small, struggling company based in my constituency called Diversified Fuel Components which had to try source after source to receive assistance in getting through a difficult financial period. Ultimately this company did get such help, but it received it from the provincial Government, not the federal Government, despite the fact that programs should have been available to help this kind of innovative firm. Yet the answer that that company received in response to request after request I raised on its behalf was that there simply is not enough money available.

I have to think of older workers who are in their late fifties and had worked for companies like Champion Spark Plug which again is situated in my constituency. These workers had been part of an enterprise which, from 1978 to 1984, had been able to get assistance under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. When these workers were laid off this past summer, they made a simple request. Like their counterparts who had received help up until February 1984, they too as older workers wanted to receive help with the very difficult problems faced by older workers who are unemployed. Yet once more, the answer that came back to me from the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) was, "I am sorry, we do not have enough money".

I have to think of the people of Essex-Windsor who want assistance for the Hiatus House which provides assistance to women who are caught up in the transition between marriage and independence. Many women have to leave their family homes and they face great difficulties in doing so. Hiatus House, supported mostly by private charities from the Windsor and Essex county areas, provides help for them to make that transition. Not only for Hiatus House but for transition houses like it across the country, we have requested that help be made available. That was one of the recommendations of our action group report on jobs which we wrote this past winter. Once more, the answer that came back to us was, "We do not have the money for that kind of thing".

I have to think of construction companies within my constituency which requested that the increase in sales tax that would hit those small producers be postponed for a year to permit them to phase it into their contracts, a quite straightforward and reasonable request. Once more the answer came back from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson): "We do not have the money." Thus, we end up with farmers, small business people, older workers, women, and medium-sized construction companies saying to the Government: "Look, here are sensible matters which need just a little bit of money", and the Government comes back with the answer: "No. We do not have that type of financing available."

Then we saw two banks get into trouble, and suddenly $875 million was made available. It is not available for poor individuals, hard pressed widows or desperate credit unions, but, as the statistics made clear, it is available for foreign banks, other Canadian banks, investment dealers, large Canadian corporations and life insurance companies which will receive the majority of the support which this Bill is to provide.

To conclude, I think this is an immoral, irresponsible Bill which reveals far too clearly that the priorities of the Government lie with the rich and the wealthy as opposed to the poor, the weak, the hard pressed—the people who can make a contribution to the future of our economy.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could say that I am pleased to participate in the debate this morning. However, I am not.

For the first time in over 50 years a bank folded in September of this year. Only a few weeks later a second bank found itself in a similar predicament. This is as a result of a Government which, last summer, made campaign speeches across the land saying to the people of Canada: "Vote for us. We are business-like. We can run the country in a business-like manner. We are friends of business and banks which can really associate with us. We can do things more productively". That is what the Tories said last summer. What happened to their business-like manner in running the country? If this is business-like I wonder what type of business those Hon. Members across the way were in before they were elected to the House. I certainly hope they were not running those businesses the way they are running the country because we would be in even deeper trouble if the businesses of the country were run as badly as this Government is run. Of course, the Government says, as did the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall): "It is not our fault. It is the fault of the previous Government". That is what the Minister of State for Finance said in the House. She said: "Blame it on the previous administration. Blame everything on the previous administration".

Mr. Gormley: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: There is one of those generic Tories, Mr. Speaker. He is one of those Members from whom we very seldom hear.

Mr. Gormley: It's better than being a Taiwan Liberal.

Mr. Boudria: Here is someone who very seldom speaks in the House and who is now saying: "Hear, hear".

• (1120)

Let me bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the Hitchman Report which was commissioned on June 25 by the Minister of State for Finance and which was tabled on August 12. Whose fault is it, according to Mr. Hitchman? He does not talk about the National Energy Program or all of those other reasons given by the Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Fennell: He is a Liberal.

Mr. Boudria: An Hon. Member across the way says that His Honour the Judge is a Liberal.

Mr. Foster: Who appointed him?

Mr. Boudria: He was appointed by the Tories. He is a well qualified—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope that no one in this House would speak about the political affiliation of the judiciary, who are well respected gentlemen, whatever their political affiliation before becoming judges.

I do not think we should allow something like that in this Chamber. I would hope that the Hon. Member would stop saying this.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to correct the record. The gentleman to whom reference was made is not a judge. He is an ex-banker with the Bank of Nova Scotia. I was not implying that he had been appointed a judge.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I appreciate what the Hon. Member is saying. It was my understanding that what the Hon. Member had mentioned was the particular individual who is now looking after a judicial inquiry. I would hope that that is not said again.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad you brought the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) into line. He certainly needs it.

I was just going to read from the report of George Hitchman. What does it state as reasons for the failure of the bank? He said that of the 84 loan accounts he reviewed, he found that 28 of those had no financial statements; 11 had financial statements which were over a year old; and 45 had financial statements but some of them lacked sufficient detail in order to assess the loan properly. This is the way in which the banks, which were supervised by the Government, were run. This is the kind of administration we have.

I have an article from The Toronto Star dated October 22 in my hand. The article is entitled, "Expert assails poor records of failed bank". It states in part, and I quote:

Retired banker George Hitchman reiterated his report's conclusions before a federal inquiry that the Edmonton bank's management had engaged in unsound banking practices and kept poor records of the bank's affairs.

I hope that clears up the Minister's erroneous and sometimes misleading comments. She has accused previous administrations of these failures, but these are Tory failures. They are nothing else but Tory failures caused by a bad Government.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that in a very few days there will be additional tax measures which will be implemented as a result of the disastrous Budget of last May 23. We know, of course, that those tax increases will total $2.6 billion. What is interesting is that if one adds the cost of the Gulf fiasco and the cost of the bank bail-outs, one finds that the total comes to just about the identical amount. So the blunders of this Government over the last three months have cost the taxpayers the same amount as the tax increase which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is inflicting or will be inflicting on the people of Canada over the next few months. There is no excuse for this kind of administration.

I would like to read to you, Mr. Speaker, what some of the farmers in my riding think of the priorities of this Government in bailing out banks versus helping out the needy. I would like to read a letter which is signed by Lorraine and Richard Lapointe of Martintown, Ontario, in the riding of Stormont, Dundas, which is temporarily held by a Conservative Member. The letter says:

● (1125)

Dear Mr. Warner:

At a time when your Government is cutting back on Agricultural programs and planning to phase out subsidy payments to dairy farmers, it is disappointing and frustrating to see you so eager to reimburse the depositors of a failed bank.

Investors knew there was a risk involved and were fully aware of the insurance limitations.

NOW TELL US WHY ALL CANADIANS HAVE TO PAY!

A copy of that letter went to the Minister of Finance. I want the record to show that a Member to my right says that these people are my cousins. I am sure Mr. and Mrs. Lapointe of the riding of Stormont-Dundas will take that accusation for what it is worth. If they voted Tory in the past, the Tories just lost two votes. We know they have none to spare and they have lost two more because of partisan remarks such as the Hon. Member just made against the good people of Stormont-Dundas.

This is the situation we are facing in this country. We have a Government which does not want to give any priority to the concerns and problems of the farmer. We have a Government which is failing to live up to the campaign promises it made to the good people of Canada last summer.

[Translation]

I see the Secretary of State agrees with what I just said since he nodded his approval. I invite him to cross the floor and join us. He is starting to see the light, a bit late, perhaps, but it is never too late for a Conservative to let himself be inspired by ideas that make more sense than that party's philosophy, Mr. Speaker.

In any case, it is clear the Government is making a mistake by wanting, to reimburse depositors in this way, that is, without letting the House and the people of Canada know where the money is going to.

[English]

Why can the people of Canada not be told who this money is going to, Mr. Speaker? Finally, how did the Minister of State for Finance decide that certain investors were going to be reimbursed and certain investors were not? In my view, people who deposited in excess of $60,000 in these banks are clearly investors just like anyone else. Why are they reimbursed and the preferred shareholders, for instance, not reimbursed? What is the difference? They are both investors. They have both invested money which is uninsured. One is being assisted and one is not. This is unfair and the Government should really rethink this whole measure in order to improve it.

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is clear today, as it has been for some time, that this debate should end. It has become repetitive and unproductive, and nothing has shown that more than the two opposition speeches delivered today. The NDP has shown today, as it has previously in this debate, that the only new thing it has is the word "New" in its name. In this debate the NDP has dragged into this Chamber every tired-out, used up idea, cliché and trite saying which it has been storing up, saving, cherishing, indeed revering, since the Regina Manifesto. However, they all add up to one thing: That Party is against banks, business and anything which builds up the economy and causes this country to prosper.

Mr. Nystrom: We are against Tories.

Mr. Stackhouse: With a fine disdain for the truth NDP Members seized on one feature of the Bill, the possibility that it will be helping foreign banks. The thought that some of our resources could go to foreign banks has really gripped their imagination. They have implied to the public that that is what the Bill is all about even though the facts show that only 12 per cent of the money involved is going to foreign banks. Where does the other 88 per cent go? This is something that has received no attention from the NDP at all. For example, the compensation of the credit unions will amount to 14 per cent, more than that of the foreign banks. Does the NDP want those credit unions to be bereft as a result of these banks ending their days? The compensation for the provinces and municipalities will total 21 per cent of the funds involved. Does the NDP want the western provinces to be ignored? Would it want those provincial Governments and municipalities to be left behind? I should not want to think that the NDP Members are that indifferent to the well-being of the provinces and municipalities of western Canada and other regions, but that certainly could be inferred from the addresses they have given.

What about the labour unions and the religious organizations? What about the universities? There is a cause. It being National Universities Week this week, the Opposition has reminded us that the Government should be providing more. If the Opposition had its way, we would ignore the needs of universities, religious organizations and labour unions that had money on deposit in these banks.

With regard to the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that they should have stayed out of this debate altogether. They have clearly been part of the problem rather than the solution. Their finance critic, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), for whom I have high regard, made the point in her address early in the debate that no bank has ever failed during a Liberal administration. I had thought that we had a bank failure in the early 1920s during the King administration. However, that is a historical point which may have been passed by. The point which we must focus on is one in more recent history which is familiar even to members of the Liberal caucus, namely, that under their administration the banking system was allowed to expand from 11 institutions to 70, while the staff of the Inspector General of Banks was kept static at eight inspectors. That fact could not be ignored, even by their finance critic, who said:

> I do not know why additional staff was not added to the office of the Inspector General of Banks at a time when, following the revision of the Bank Act, the number of banks in Canada was greatly increased. There was a rather obvious case to be made for increasing the number of inspectors.

It was obvious to everyone but the Liberal Government in office at the time. The Liberals have been part of the problem and now they are trying to be part of the solution.

Mr. Gauthier: Keep going. Read on.

Mr. Stackhouse: During this debate the Liberals may have shown that they may be short of members, but they are never short of gall. That is one thing which they always have in rich quantity. The "fatuous forty" in this debate have marched in day after day and emptied themselves as though the people of Canada had rejected them not only in 1984, but a year later, in September, 1985, have done precisely the same thing again. I note that the Liberals have been feeling much better in the past several weeks. Due to Question Period they were sure that they were on their way back. However, just last week the Gallup poll showed that in September—

Mr. Gauthier: On September 5 Parliament had not resumed.

Mr. Stackhouse: —the public would have supported the Progressive Conservatives by 48 per cent in contrast to 29 per cent for the Liberals.

Mr. Gauthier: Be honest now.

Mr. Nystrom: That's before "Tunagate".

Mr. Gauthier: Coming from you that's not very nice.

Mr. Stackhouse: One could say of this that when all they get is 29, all they can do is yearn and pine. In fact we can go on to say that come '88 they'll still have to wait. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that under the administration of this Government the economy has turned around. The reason for that is that there has been confidence restored in the possibilities for doing business in this country.

Mr. Gauthier: Busted banks, rotten fish.

Mr. Stackhouse: This Bill is itself a confidence builder. It is directed toward that objective because it is a way in which the Government demonstrates its commitment to keep the pledge that was implied, if not articulated, in asking the depositors in these banks to continue depositing.

It should be clear to us all, Mr. Speaker, that business prospers when there is confidence among those doing business, one with another. Indeed, so much of our business today depends upon that kind of mutual trust. An investor has to be amazed at the way in which the securities industry of this country day by day depends upon people being able to rely upon the commitments that one makes to another. Without that reliance the whole thing would collapse. If you found that commitments which were made were not honoured, at the very least you would not do business with that person again.

This is an example in which the Government asked people to leave their money on deposit in two banks that were in trouble. In the interest of the country as a whole, but particularly in the economy of the western region, the Government was trying to assist, stabilize, and help these banks to survive. When that was no longer possible and it became clear that in spite of that assistance those institutions were no longer viable, the Government made the kind of hard decision which Governments sometimes have to make and decided that those banks would have to be allowed to close their doors. Having made that decision, and having earlier made a commitment to those depositors, institutions and individuals alike, it was right that the Government keep its word, articulated and implied, to depositors, who responded to its request and, at considerable risk to themselves, made an impressive effort to keep the banks alive.

That was not a bail-out like the bail-out of Maislin Transport in Montreal under the former administration. No shareholders of this bank were bailed out. Those shareholders had to bear the risk. No Government came to their rescue. The only assistance given by this Bill is to those depositors who put their money at risk and made it possible for those banks to continue operations during the time that they did.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we consider this Bill to be appropriate to the general effort that has been made by the Government to restore business confidence and to renew the economy. I think it will be clear from the passage of this Bill that the business community knows it can count on the word of the Government.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join in this debate because I think that the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) has just displayed his great ignorance of what we are debating here. We are debating a reasoned amendment by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). That amendment reads:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefore:

"this House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denegrating Parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds".

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the very basis of parliamentary democracy and our accountability is the bringing of the Estimates of various Departments of the Government before the House or before a parliamentary committee in order to determine exactly what the expenditures are for. The Government is asking for a blank cheque. It is saying that it will not give any details about who the money is being paid to. Is it to their Tory friends in Alberta? We do not know; maybe it is not. We should know if it is.

Surely it is basic to parliamentary democracy to know who will be receiving the money, whether it is their bank friends in Toronto or California or anyone else. We should be entitled to more detail either from the Estey Commission or the parliamentary committee.

When we get to the committee stage of this Bill I hope we will be able to find out the names of those with the hundreds and thousands of dollars in bad loans. We should also know that information because this whole episode really speaks of a political fix.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made an incredible decision on the spur of the moment to bail out a bank. He made his Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) agree with this decision even when they, in their own incompetence, realized it was a terrible mistake. However, when the Prime Minister made this decision over a weekend, those Ministers did not advise the Prime Minister to have an audit conducted by the senior banks who participated in the bail-out. Those banks were also pressured by the Prime Minister to invest millions of dollars in that bail-out. I suggest this is the worst fiasco in Canadian banking history.

A very interesting article in The Financial Post has the headline, "Never-ending circle of passing the buck". This article outlines how the $1.3 billion worth Canadian Commercial Bank fiasco takes place. First, the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance cannot be faulted because they did not attend the meeting. Although the bankers, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Inspector General of Banks attended the meeting, it is amazing that the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance did not attend that meeting where a decision is made to put up $255 million. Since those Ministers cannot be responsible for such a decision if they did not attend the meeting, that is how the buck is passed in that circumstance.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada stated that he had no direct knowledge of the state of the bank's finances. It is amazing that he would advance hundreds of millions of dollars when he does not bother to check and does not know anything about the state of the finances. He stated, "The Bank of Canada is not involved in monitoring the financial soundness of individual banks and supervising their behaviour". Therefore, the buck is passed again because he is not responsible. Who is in charge if it is not the Governor of the Bank of Canada? What about the Inspector General of Banks, Mr. Kennett? The article states:

No, not his fault either, if you listen to the rumours. He and former Deputy Minister of Finance Mickey Cohen, you see, actually argued against the bail-out.

Therefore, they are not responsible. They are said to have been overruled by the Government Ministers. Of course, they are not responsible because they were not at the meeting. It is a perfect circle of buck-passing.

I believe the responsibility lies with the Prime Minister. Obviously he made the decision and, incredibly, his Ministers knuckled under and agreed to it. However, a three-day audit would have given sufficient warning to these Ministers to advise the Prime Minister that this bail-out was a useless exercise. This view was stated by the consultant at yesterday's hearings.

The Hon. Member for Scarborough West stated that confidence has been restored. However, I would ask him, in what area this confidence has been restored? The $60 million requested by the Government last March will ultimately cost the Government a billion dollars. This certainly did not restore confidence in investors in the Northland Bank because that bank has failed. It has not restored confidence in depositors in the Mercantile Bank because it faced a terrible run on its deposits.

I suggest that the Hon. Member is doing a lot of wishful thinking if he believes confidence has been restored in these areas. Small banks like the Bank of British Columbia as well as the Continental Bank have had to raise interest rates in the face of serious problems. Therefore, rather than renewed confidence in the country we have had the greatest lack of confidence in our banking system in 62 years. Two banks have failed and another bank had such a serious run on its deposits that it had to amalgamate with another bank.

The Government should have investigated the matter and conducted the proper audits rather than acting on the Prime Minister's quick political judgment. The Northland Bank would probably be in business today and the Government would have saved hundreds of millions of dollars. Therefore, I believe the Government should accept our amendment which states that:

this House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating Parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

If we do not accept such an amendment, hundreds of millions of dollars will be spent without any information as to who will receive these moneys and why they are being paid out in this irresponsible way.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us today is a reasoned motion. Rather than paying the $875 million to uninsured depositors in the Northland Bank and Canadian Commercial Bank, the amendment states:

this House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating Parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

This is an extremely important principle. The main reason for the existence of Parliament is to oversee the expenditure of parliamentary funds and to approve taxation measures which the Government, of formerly the Monarch, decided upon or proposed. This is the very essence of why we are here as Members of Parliament. We are looking at a proposal which will pay out some $875 million in a bail-out package to the uninsured depositors of those two banks. If we are to be credible parliamentarians, we should look at the background of the situation to see the legal requirement for the country to make such an expenditure. It does not take very much searching. There is no legal requirement to do that. In fact, that is what the entire Bill is about; it is trying to create the legal framework whereby Parliament and the country will guarantee $875 million to the uninsured depositors of those banks. It is a fundamental change of the laws.

With all deference to the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) who is now out of the Chamber but perhaps is listening, I do not think there were any previous examples of this happening in the country. He cited Maislin trucking in Quebec when the Liberal Government bailed out its shareholders. He said that this case was not like that because we were not bailing out the shareholders of the two banks. If he had understood the situation, or perhaps had been more honest with us, he would have recognized what he was doing by supporting a Bill to bail out shareholders to a total of $875 million in uninsured deposits. This particular Bill makes certain that in essence the shareholders of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank receive another $875 million when the final computations are made as to the worth of the remaining assets of the two banks. It increases the value of those assets because the money held by shareholders in shares will not be reduced to pay off part of the liabilities of uninsured shareholders. It becomes a zero liability against the two banks and therefore leaves far more in the pot for the two bankrupt companies to redistribute to the original shareholders. In fact, it is a bail-out of the shareholders of those two banks in a more indirect way than perhaps the Hon. Member understood. In essence, it puts another $875 million to $900 million into the pool of assets to be redistributed to shareholders.

Who are the people who will benefit from the pay-out? This is the crux of the debate for the last number of days. The list which was presented to us was prepared by the Ministry. It does not tell us who will be the beneficiaries of this $875 million. The Government hides behind a section in the Bank Act and says that that kind of information cannot be made available. However, when one looks at the Acts relating to bankruptcy, those laws require that individuals or corporations that wish to participate in receiving funds from a dismantled company due to bankruptcy must come forward to make public their names and get on the list in order to share in the division of the bankrupt's property. That is not being required in this case, simply because the Government chooses to look at the Bank Act rather than at the Acts relating to bankruptcy.

Whom is it bailing out? We do not know the individuals. We know them by categories. According to the information provided to us, just barely 2 per cent of the money from the $875 million bail-out will find its way into the pockets of individuals. Most of the deposits of individuals are covered by the $60,000 for which all depositors are insured when they put money into a financial institution due to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

One thing that has bothered me about this whole proposal is the blinkers worn by Government Members, including Ministers, when they deal with this particular proposition. They fail to see it as denigrating the roles of Members of Parliament and of Parliament itself by taking away the right to know where money goes. On top of that, they hide behind an analysis of the situation which I think is quite faulty. We know from the facts which have been compiled that the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank both grew very rapidly in the early 1980s. For instance, the Canadian Commercial Bank saw its assets jump to $3.1 billion in fiscal year 1984 from a mere $864 million in 1980. In a matter of four years, it quadrupled its amount of assets. I remind the House that assets in bank terms mean the money lent out to individuals and other corporations. Northland experienced a similar kind of rapid growth. Its 1984 assets totalled $1.1 billion compared with $254 million in 1980. Northland issued four times as much in the way of loans in a period of four years in the early 1980s.

The Government has tried to make much of the National Energy Program as a contributing factor to the failure of the two banks. I am not sure how that computes, whether the Government means that the oil companies felt so confident in the National Energy Program that they rushed out and borrowed a lot of money, or that somehow the National Energy Program worsened the prospects of oil companies and therefore made them go out to borrow money. In any case, I have trouble following the logic. In March, we had the Western Accord which was supposed to correct all the problems existing in the oil industry. The skies were suddenly looking clear again and, if we listen to the Minister of Energy, everything was looking up in the energy business. Yet, that was the time when it was decided that the loans held by these banks were no longer viable, that they were bad loans. Suddenly these energy companies, despite the new times which are supposed to be coming with the Western Accord, will no longer be good. That tells me that somehow the Western Accord had not improved economic conditions in western Canada and, in fact, it was more prudent to fold up these two banks. The Government recognizes that and therefore has gone ahead and done it.

I do not see where the analysis follows the actions of the Government. I think there is a great deal that the Government is not telling us. We have to have further information before Parliament can legitimately pass this Bill.

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join my colleagues in opposing this amendment. I certainly am very pleased to follow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), and to be able to pick up on some of the points he made. We are both from western Canada and I think that there is a western perspective which we must present when speaking of these two banks.

I found it interesting that the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, like many of his NDP colleagues, did not jump up and down and say that we should give money to the credit unions, the unions and the individuals, the very people for whom he supposedly speaks. It seems to me that members of the NDP are trying to make political points on the fact that there are some other banks involved, banks which invested in the two banks that failed. I would like to suggest that ordinary people like ourselves and our constituents invest in banks and buy shares in them. Let us not pretend that banks are almighty corporate beings. They are made up of ordinary people as well. I would like to drive that point home.

I received a letter from a small businessman who had in excess of $100,000 on deposit in one of these banks. He invested not his savings but his cash flow in the bank on a 30-day basis. The collapse of the bank froze his operating capital and he had to lay off his workers. That meant lost jobs. Without additional money, he may not be able to proceed on two committed contracts. This will force him into a breach of contract, a permanent lay-off of workers and possibly a bankruptcy. This businessman is typical of many Canadians who are looking for assistance from Bill C-79. If his business fails, workers in the City of Saskatoon will lose their jobs and it will be because of the Liberals and the NDP Members who are so violently opposing this Bill.

Yesterday I asked this particular contractor if he knew why he had not received his money. He indicated that he did and that he was furious. He was upset with the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) and he has written letters to them to tell them so. I think that is just one example of people who are experiencing difficult times. These people have to pay off their subtrades and their employees and now find themselves in a situation that could very well mean that their small businesses could go under.

The Hon. Member who spoke previously mentioned that big oil companies were making investments back in the days prior to the National Energy Program. I say that the National Energy Program was not a kick in the shins, it was a kick in the teeth. It meant the virtual collapse of the western Canadian economy. It was not just the big oil companies that were making investments. Small businessmen and individuals were making investments as well. You will understand, Mr. Speaker, coming as you do from Edmonton in the Province of Alberta, that people lost their homes, their cars and their businesses and are now trying to make a comeback as a result of the Western Accord and the good news from the Government indicating that it is prepared to set some rules and live by them, without changing them every time it feels that it is the right thing to do.

I would like to inform the House of things that have happened post NEP as a result of the Western Accord and the Atlantic Accord, particularly from a western perspective. A survey was taken by the Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen to which there were 10,000 respondents, and it was just released on Thursday or Friday. It gives us some idea of what is beginning to happen across the country and how different it is from the results of tampering with the economy of western Canada that the Liberal Party did back in the late 1970s and early 1980s. One of the questions asked in the survey was, "What are your current plans for investment in your business in the coming six months?" Nationally, 42 per cent of people at the small business sector said that they intend to increase their level of investment. In Saskatchewan alone, that percentage is 36. For businessmen right across the country, this means that people will be going back to work.

The next question was about working capital including inventory. Nationally, 40 per cent of the 10,000 respondents said that they planned to increase their working capital and inventory. In the Province of Saskatchewan that figure was 34 per cent.

The next question was, "In the past six months, has employment in your firm remained the same, increased or decreased?" Nationally, 34 per cent said that it has increased in the past six months.

Some Hon. Members may feel that I am getting off the subject but I do not think I am. That is what this is all about. Those two western Canadian banks got into some very serious difficulty as a result of the National Energy Program. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) can say that the Liberals had nothing to do with that, but I think that the Liberals must certainly take some share of the blame for this particular problem.

Liberal Members are trying to tell us that two banks collapsed as a result of the outcome of the election held on September 4, 1984. I would like to deal with the year 1980 when the Liberal Government expanded the banking system by almost seven times. A great many people in Canada did not argue with that but some did. However, the key point is that the Liberals forgot to do one thing. They forgot to make adjustments and update the regulatory system of the banks. When Liberal Members point their fingers at the management of the banks—and I am not saying that these banks were perfect—I suggest that they take a look at their own back yards and realize that they should have looked at the regulatory system of the banks. This is where I must salute the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) who has begun this long overdue process.

As the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre just mentioned, there has been much discussion about releasing the names of the depositors. I wonder how the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre would feel if the Bank of Canada made his private financial statements available to the rest of the country. I say that that is private information. In one of the major financial newspapers, the headline for this morning reads, "Estey unlikely to release names of bank depositors," and I say, rightly so. I do not think that kind of information should be made available. Opposition Members know about the categories of depositors, and I think that that is good enough. I do not think we have to deal with the individual names of the small businesses and those individuals who want to keep that information private.

I find it difficult to understand how members of the Liberal Party and the NDP who oppose modification of indexation on the grounds that it will hurt ordinary Canadians can publicly oppose a Bill that will save the livelihoods of thousands of people in every one of our constituencies. Again, I am talking particularly of those in western Canada. People who live in western Canada made investment decisions on the basis of what they knew at the time. At one time there was a buoyant economy in the West because of activity in the energy sector, the engine of growth in western Canada. People who made investment decisions on that basis had every right to believe that the economy would remain buoyant. I think opposition Members have to take a good, hard look at this particular issue from a western perspective and realize that there are thousands of people who are stranded and need assistance. For every day that we delay this Bill, it is costing us more and more in interest.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to be able to speak on the amendment and say how pleased I am with the position taken by the Liberal Party in declining to give second reading to Bill C-79. The principle of this Bill is to permit large but unspecified amounts of public moneys to go to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby denigrating parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

This is a very large sum of money that the Government is proposing to give to the depositors of two western banks.

Mr. Gauthier: Uninsured.

Mr. MacLellan: Depositors over $60,000 are completely uninsured. The Government is speaking of $875 million. I personally believe that the amount that it will cost the Government and the taxpayers of Canada is substantially more than that. How did this situation arise? Why is the Government in this position? Why has so much damage been done to the banking system, to the depositors of these banks and to the taxpayers of this country? Why, when the Government decided to investigate this question in March of 1985 and formed the bail-out group, did this bail-out group rely only on information that the Canadian Commercial Bank itself chose to make available to them? Why would the Government rely on information that the bank in question was choosing to making available?

On March 22, 1985, the officers seconded from the Royal Bank of Canada reported that they could not accurately assess the effectiveness of the support package because they had not had full access to the books. This is incredible.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis) is saying that it is the fault of the previous Liberal Government that the inspection process of the bank is not better than it is today. I agree that it should be tighter. I agree that is should have been done before, but this Government has been in power for over a year and now it is just coming to grips with the question. How long is it going to take it to improve the inspection service in this country? Do banks have to fail before any action is taken? Is this what the Government does, wait for the catastrophes to happen before it puts into place the action that is necessary to correct these situations and, hopefully, to prohibit and to avoid catastrophes such as this? It is incredible.

The inspection process in this country, I agree, leaves a lot to be desired, but the Government's position is that the people who entrusted their funds to, for instance, the Canadian Commercial Bank in good faith on the strength of the Government's assurances should not be penalized. What about the people who were led to believe by these Governments that everything was all right? The bail-out package which was put in place in March encourages a lot of these people to deposit their moneys in these banks. The banks themselves, in order to get these depositors, offered higher interest rates. Financial institutions actually placed funds of people in this country with these banks. How could this have been allowed to happen? What kind of conscience does this Government have to allow and to actually perpetrate this particular situation?

The Government talks about credit unions. Certainly credit unions have been hurt. People have been hurt, but how were they hurt? It was because of the fact that the Government from March of 1985, and I think before, led them down the garden path.

Mr. Gauthier: That is right.

Mr. MacLellan: The Minister says that these people, the international banks, the banking communities, everybody has to be reimbursed, not only the small unsecured creditor, or the individual who did not have the wealth of information that the Government and the international and Canadian banks had. No, everybody has to be secured. The question is, why? Why have we got to go with this complete compensation? Why? When the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) is asked that question, she does not have an answer. Is there an international agreement that the Government has with the United States and other countries that requires investors in banks failing in any country to be completely compensated? Is that the case? If so, the Minister should come clean to the people of Canada and to this House and state that such an arrangement is in place.

For instance, the Canadian Commercial Bank increased its share of the Westland Bank in California from 39 per cent to 100 per cent in March of 1984 in response to a cease and desist order issued against the Westland Bank by the U.S. regulator. If this bank was in difficulty in March of 1985, then it certainly was in some difficulty in March of 1984. Yet it was allowed to further invest in the Westland Bank in California.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East has said that it is because of the National Energy Program. People put money into the National Energy Program; this bank put money into the National Energy Program and because of the National Energy Program the economy in western Canada went downhill, and that is the reason these banks failed. The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East only has to listen to the witnesses at the Estey Commission who said that the reason these banks failed is bad loans and bad management. That is the reason these two banks failed and that is the reason this Government should have been able to spot what was happening to these banks and act in the interests of the people of this country. It should not have allowed these banks to offer higher interest rates and allowed people to invest when it knew what was going to happen. For instance, the Northland Bank on September 1 froze interest rates so people who came in after March did not get any increase in their interest rates—did not get any interest whatsoever after September 1. This is what the Government is saying they are doing to protect the people of this country.

If the Minister of State for Finance and the Government are so interested in protecting the people of the country, doing something for the people of this country with respect to banking, why are they not looking into why the banks are not offering any small business loans to regions of this country who suffer from economic disparity? Why is the Government not looking into the question of why all this money, which is being secured and guaranteed 90 per cent by the Government, is only being offered to regions of this country where the economy is successful? Why is the Government not looking into why banks are not reporting cases of computer fraud and computer crime, the cost of which is in all probability being passed back to the depositors and the people who are dealing with these banks?

It is ludicrous to say that this Government by doing this is acting on behalf of the people of this country. We heard in the May 23 Budget that the reason we were going to have to take all this hard medicine was that we had to do something about the deficit. Any reduction in the deficit has been completely neutralized by the action of this Government since then. What the people of this country have had to forfeit because of the May 23 Budget has not gone back to the individuals. It has gone to the business community in this country.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East said that during the National Energy Program people's businesses failed and people lost their houses. During that period of the recession people's businesses failed and people lost their homes. I can tell the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East and members of the Government that there are still areas in the country where people are losing their homes and where businesses are failing. It is because of the fact that this Government is not looking after these people that this is still happening. It is looking after the people in the large corporations who can help themselves. In the meantime, those who need help are not receiving the attention and the legislation needed to bring them into a position in which what they are going through at the present time can be avoided.

I think what the Government is doing here is wrong. I would ask it to take note of the amendment put forward by the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to a few of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ravis). He referred to the time when the Liberal Government of the day expanded the banking system and, according to him—and I think rightly so—it did not make the appropriate changes in the total banking system to accommodate the expansion. It did not change the rules with respect to monitoring, inspection and so on.

There are two matters which I wish to recall in this regard. One, of course, is that I am sure the Liberals went ahead with that expansion with the support of the Conservative Party at the time, as was often the case when the Liberals changed the banking system. Second, I think it is also true that when interest rates were allowed to float in 1966, according to the theory that competition would provide interest rates at an even lower rate than 6 per cent, it was done with Conservative support over NDP opposition.

It has often been said by the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall)—and I am glad she is in the House—that it was the fault of the Liberals because they did not clean up the inspection service while they had the opportunity. That is true, except for is one thing which has been left out of the Tory explanation, that is to say that in 1979 the Tory Government of the day brought in a draft Bank Act. It never had the opportunity to pass the legislation because the Government fell. However, it had an opportunity to indicate what its intentions would be with respect to the banking system.

The fact of the matter is that the Tory Bank Act of 1979, which did not receive the approval of the House, and the Liberal Bank Act of 1980, which was eventually approved by the House, are not substantially different with respect to those issues and laws which pertain to the case which we have before us. I speak of the failure of these two banks. I think it is a case of political and intellectual dishonesty for the Minister, or anyone else on the other side, to suggest that the Liberals were fundamentally different from the Conservatives in this respect because they had their chance in 1979 to indicate what they would like to do with the banking system. What they indicated was that they were not substantially different from the Liberals in that respect.

The Hon. Member for Saskatoon East also spoke about changing the rules. This, of course, has been a familiar Conservative complaint regarding the Liberals' management of the economy, that is, that the rules ought not to be changed. One sometimes receives the impression that the rules should never be changed, that whatever happens to be the case ought always to be the case no matter what. In any event, it is interesting that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East made this observation because what could be a more significant changing of the rules in our economy than to depart from the principle, which has been established for some time that people with deposits of over $60,000 who are prepared to take those types of risks are, in fact, taking a risk and cannot rely upon the Government to bail them out? What the Government is doing now is fundamentally changing the rules of the banking system and, in doing so, changing people's expectations with respect to an activity that is a favourite focus of the Conservative Party. I am talking here about risk.

How many times have I sat in the House and listened to speech after speech by Conservative Members of Parliament talking about the almost mystical quality of risk-taking? They often say that risk-taking is what makes the economy go round, it is what this country was built upon. We have been told that risk-taking is this and it is that. This is the type of garbage I have had to listen to for years and years. We are now forced to suffer the indignity of seeing the Conservative Party—not the Liberals or the NDP, those anti-free enterprisers, but the Conservative Party—bail out everyone who had more than $60,000 deposited in the Canadian Commercial Bank. Anyone who deals in that amount of bread should know full well that he is taking a risk when he invests it in those banks. I find this to be an incredible irony.

The other thing I would like to say with respect to Conservative rhetoric about the bail-out has to do with the National Energy Program.

Mr. Minaker: You supported it.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member across the way says that we supported the National Energy Program. Actually, if one were to check the record one would see that we voted against the National Energy Program. However, that type of fact does not bother the Conservatives. They have been going around the country for the last four year saying that the NDP supported the National Energy Program when, in fact, we did not. However, the facts do not seem to bother them because they are more wound up in their own mythology than what is really going on in the country. In this case they have been a victim of their own propaganda. For so long they have said that everything that is wrong with the economy in western Canada can be blamed on the National Energy Program. That has blinded them. It has made them unable to see that the problems of the Canadian Commercial Bank were not related to the National Energy Program but may well have been related—in fact, it seems to be obviously the case—to bad management and incompetent judgment with respect to loans. Perhaps it was because the Conservative Government was fresh in office that it had not learned that the world was not the way it thought it was when it sat in opposition—I do not know. However, being victim of its own propaganda and because it has said it so often it cannot believe otherwise. It cannot believe that problems in western Canada might be related to something other than the conspiracy against western Canada which has been going on for years, according to the Conservative Party.

I would like to say a word about that because western Canada is a much more complicated reality politically, socially and economically than what Members on the other side would like us to believe. Western Canada is not the boardrooms in Calgary. Western Canada cannot be easily and uncritically acquainted with the energy sector. Western Canada is a diversified economy. Western Canada is potash, grain, forestry, mining, manufacturing, workers and ordinary people. Western Canada is not just people who sit around worrying about what they will do with more than $60,000. I am sick and tired of having the part of the country from which I come equated with a small financial elite who sit in the boardrooms of Calgary and Edmonton. That is not what western Canada is for me. It is a much more complicated reality, which is why I can rise in my place as a western Canadian and say that no one should fall for this business. We cannot simply let the Conservatives do what they like as long as they label it as being for western Canada. They seem to think that, as long as they say that it is for western Canada, we should be quiet. Whose western Canada is it? It is not my western Canada when the Conservatives use those words.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some remarks on the parliamentary process which is involved in Bill C-79. First, I would like to direct some remarks to the provisions of the Bill itself.

The short title of Bill C-79 is the Financial Institutions Depositors Compensation Act. However, if one really wished to inform the Canadian public one would entitle the Bill: a Bill to restore and continue confidence in the Canadian banking system. That is what the Bill is all about. It is not directed at persons who deposited funds in the banks involved, the Northland Bank or the Canadian Commercial Bank. The real purpose of the Bill is to assure Canadians that financial investors across North America and throughout the world have confidence in the Canadian banking system and that each and every depositor, Canadian or otherwise, knows that when he puts a dollar in a Canadian bank, that dollar is protected.

I would like to ask my friends opposite, the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party, if they would want it any other way. Would they want people to be uncertain about Canadian banking? Would they want Canadians to line up Monday morning to extract their money from our Canadian banks and destroy the economy of this country because they do not have confidence in our system? I think it has been admitted time and time again that there are remidies which might be introduced into the system to protect us from difficulties like this in the future. I believe parliamentarians on all sides would do well to direct their minds to those solutions. But simply to cry over what has happened in the past is to be totally unconstructive both for Canada and for those people in Canada who want to invest in financial institutions.

I would direct the attention of Hon. Members opposite to the real purpose of this legislation. When those Hon. Members stand up in the House of Commons and say that this Bill ought not to be passed, that it ought to be shunted aside on the basis of the amendment which has been proposed, what they are saying to Canadians is, "We will not help you have confidence in our banking system. If you want to put a dollar into a Canadian bank, you take your chances". I do not see how that can be in the interests of Canada or in the interests of Canadian economic development. I do not know who in Canada would consider that to be a proper attitude to take. If we destroy the foundations of our economy, how can we expect our economy to grow and prosper? How can we expect Canadians to benefit?

I would like Hon. Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party to tell us what would happen in Canada if there was no confidence in our banking system.

Mr. Gauthier: We have been saying it for a long time—open Government. Give us the names of those depositors, your friends.

Mr. Gormley: What brought on that outburst?

Mr. Crosby: Another point with respect to this Bill is the parliamentary process which is involved. I suppose, having been in opposition at one point, I would admit that there are circumstances in which prolonged debate of a Bill which is before the House of Commons is justified. I think one circumstance is when the public is not aware of the provisions of the Bill and by prolonging debate, a public information channel is created through which people can become informed. But is there anyone in Canada who does not know about the difficulties of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank? If there are any, I would be very much surprised. Everyone knows what happened.

Mr. Gauthier: That's why we have a judicial inquiry.

Mr. Crosby: Everyone knows about the decision of the Government of Canada to protect the Canadian banking system and to restore confidence in it by dealing with the problems of depositors. That is what the Bill is all about. It is that simple.

With respect to the failure of the Bill to require the depositors to be named or identified, there is a simple answer. The matter is before a commissioner, a person appointed under the Public Inquiries Act, who has all the powers and authority of a judge of the Superior Court. He has the power to summons witnesses and to look at records. That person has already been mentioned today. He is an eminent jurist and a Canadian and I am sure Mr. Justice Estey will make the right decision in the interests of all Canadians.

If one wants to talk about governmental policy in this regard, I have in front of me an extract from the Daily News of Halifax dated October 22, 1985. It talks about the venture capital program in the great Province of Manitoba, which, as we all know, has a New Democratic Government. The headline reads, "Millionaires' interest-free loans". The millionaires in question are receiving interest-free loans from an agency of the Government of the Province of Manitoba. But what is interesting, Mr. Speaker, is that the Business Development Minister, Jerry Storie, has declined to name the firms which actually get the money when the venture capital companies use the funds. I am sure Hon. Members opposite are asking themselves, why is the Business Development Minister of the Province of Manitoba declining to name the firms which will receive the venture capital funds? That is explained by the Minister's assistant who says, and I quote:

> Some investors may not want to be lined with a specific investment. The company for its own reasons may prefer not to be identified publicly.

So when members of the New Democratic Party in the House of Commons speak on the matter of identifying people who are benefiting from Government financial programs, they speak with forked tongues. They have one rule for the Government of Manitoba and another rule for the Government of Canada. But in this case, I have to agree with the Government of Manitoba—perhaps for the last time—because what is important, just as with the banking system itself, is confidence. People will not invest in banks unless they have confidence in the banking system which governs over the banks. People will not invest in enterprises, particularly venture capital enterprises in the Province of Manitoba, unless they have the confidence that the Government of Manitoba will protect the business relations which have developed with the agency of the Government of Manitoba.

I do not need to speak about the members of the Liberal Party because when they were in government their Ministers rose time after time in this House and said that the system of business relations between the Government of Canada and persons who invest in Canada, persons who are interested in building the economy of Canada, depends upon a confidential relationship. I ask Hon. Members from Newfoundland and Nova Scotia to tell me how many times they have heard that phrase in this House. How many times have they heard the Ministers in the Liberal Government stand up and say, "We must have confidence; we cannot open the files of the Government which relate to business transactions and tell everyone what the arrangement was, what the terms and conditions were"? The Liberal Party has defended that position over and over again. And we have the New Democratic Party following exactly the same policy in Manitoba. The only difference is that members of the New Democratic Party in this House of Commons can stand and irresponsibly condemn such a policy because those Hon. Members have never formed the Government of Canada and, of course, we all know they never will. We are talking about nothing in relation to this Bill.

We are talking about smoke. Every Hon. Member of the House of Commons, past, present and future, knows that there has to be confidentiality in some relationships. The Government of Canada has gone further than some people would want to go by leaving it to the Commissioner, the eminent jurist of the Supreme Court of Canada, to render a decision on the point. What more could one ask, Mr. Speaker? I think all we can ask, as supporters of the Government of Canada, is for a fair judgment by the people of Canada.

There has been an honest effort on the part of the Government, through the medium of Bill C-79, to restore the confidence of Canadians and all other investors in the Canadian banking system. That is what this Bill is, pure and simple. There has been an attempt by the Government of Canada to protect the confidential relationship which all Governments should have with people who involve themselves in transactions with Government or government agencies. Those are the two principles upon which this Bill is based. I would defy members of the Opposition to argue seriously with the merits of those two propositions: confidence in the bankins system and the confidence of the people in dealing with the Government of Canada.

Mr. David Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have listened with considerable interest to the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) who, on numerous occasions, has spoken out on issues which are of concern to him and to his region. He has also spoken out on some of those issues which transcend, if you will, regional concern. He uses the phrase, "Everyone knows about the Northland Bank". He uses the term "everyone". But not every Canadian knows who the uninsured depositors of that particular bank are. That is the purpose of this debate and of the amendment which has been put forward by my Leader.

It seems peculiar that members of the Government, who were adamant while in opposition about having access to information, now want to hide pertinent information from the Canadian people. You could argue with great justification that there is a cover-up. Why are they so afraid of producing the names of individuals and corporations who are going to be the recipients of millions of taxpayers' dollars? Why the cover-up? Are there certain individuals associated with those two banks who have strong Tory connections? Is that what it is? Is it because the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada has a particular sum of money deposited in one of those banks? Is that why? Or is there some other reason for which they do not wish to disclose the names? The fact of the matter is that this Government is stonewalling the Canadian people and Parliament on releasing the information we seek. That is why I ask that Members from all political Parties vote unanimously for the amendment put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

The Government has refused to answer the following questions, both in this Chamber and in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Why did the bail-out group not consult the CCB's external auditors? Why did the bail-out group not look at the minutes of the CCB's audit committee? Why did the Government turn down the bank's offer of a full audit of the CCB's books? We know the answer to that question despite the reluctance of the Government Members and the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) to provide the answer. We have concluded that a political decision was made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), and he did so without meaningful consultation with the players involved. It was done at the beginning of a weekend during which the National Economic Conference took place here in Ottawa.

This whole deal stinks. It is absolutely worse than the tuna affair. Millions of taxpayers' dollars are being requested of the Parliament of Canada in order to bail out individuals and corporations, whether domestic or foreign, and we do not know who they are. The Minister of State for Finance has the audacity to stand in this Chamber and say to Members of Parliament and the Canadian people that there "may be" a legal opinion which says that she ought not to release the names. Therefore, the Government is in breach of one of the most fundamental rights of Parliament, the right to know. We have a right to know the names of those individuals and corporations who are going to receive large sums of taxpayers' money.

I will go one step further and charge the Minister of State for Finance with a cover-up in its worst possible form. The Government is breaching the traditions of Parliament and nullifying Parliament's duty to scrutinize every Government expenditure. However, what do we hear day in and day out from the back-benchers opposite? Somehow this is supposed to be a good move for the Canadian people. Why do Members opposite persist in allowing this cover-up to continue? The only conclusion I can reach is that they may have more information than they are giving the House of Commons and the Canadian people.

As well, Mr. Speaker, it is not fair for Members opposite to suggest that Members on this side are in any way against western institutions. That is simply not the case. The simple fact of the matter is that more than $870 million of taxpayers' money is being provided to pay for the utter incompetence of the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I could not support in good conscience the Government on this issue because there are other areas of this country in great need of financial assistance. Whether it be farmers, fishermen or people in the forest industry in British Columbia, or the people of Atlantic Canada, whom this Government has written off completely, the money should be spent there. What about daycare facilities? What about providing assistance to the thousands of municipalities across this country who have come to the Government on bended knee seeking financial assistance for such necessities as water and sewers? Those problems deserve a higher priority than the ego of the Prime Minister of this country.

It is for those reasons that I urge all Members in this Chamber, regardless of political affiliation, to examine the amendment put forward by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and then vote in favour of it. If not, they will be breaching the traditions of this and of previous Parliaments of Canada.

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this Bill now before the House provides Government money to those people whose deposits in these banks in excess of $60,000 were not insured. That is the purpose of the Bill. The hon. gentleman says: "We know that". I want to drive that point home because it means that the Government of Canada is guaranteeing something which was not guaranteed before. That is the point. Well, right is right and wrong is no man's right. The reason I say that is that the Government has programs whereby it guarantees money loaned through the banks. However, when this Government took over we saw those guarantees lifted in the case of some of our primary producers. Where is the rationale for that? The poor fishermen in eastern and western Canada have this year received letters from the banks saying that the federal Government no longer guarantees their loans and therefore the banks are going to take these people to court and seize their possessions. That sounds absolutely atrocious, doesn't it? Let me read for you a letter from a bank manager to a poor Canadian fisherman concerning a loan guaranteed by the federal Government. What does the bank say? It says:

Dear Mr. Elliott,

We advise that the Federal Government is paying no further claims against Fishery Improvement loans advanced between 1977 and 1980. In this regard, we regret to inform you that your loans are now excluded from the Federal Government Guarantee, and as such, the accounts now revert to your sole responsibility.

The bank then lists the outstanding amounts. I have another letter here from a gentleman who says:

Today the sheriff brought a paper from a law firm, from St. Johns. They are going to take legal action. So what will I do?

● (1250)

He says:

Now, a few days ago, the bank manager phoned me. It was concerning this loan. He said if I didn't pay, that they will put the "for sale" sign on my house.

I have another letter which says:

Several years ago one couldn't walk in a bank, at least in this area, without noticing big signs saying something like, "See us for Fisheries Improvement Loans Guaranteed by the Federal Government", etc. So I, like a good many others, fell for it.

I am glad that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) is back in the Chamber. Federal Government guarantees on loans to individuals, poor men and poor women, were lifted this year. Why? I have an official response from the Minister concerned to a constituent in Nova Scotia. He says:

While I recognize the financial difficulties you are currently experiencing, you must understand our role with the Fisheries Improvement Loans Program is that of a guarantor in the event of default by borrowers on loans registered under the Act.

The Bank of Nova Scotia, as a result of its heavy losses, has reached its full entitlement for reimbursement by the federal Government on fisheries improvement loans for the period in which your loan was registered, and therefore we can no longer be responsible for your debt.

The federal Government of this country is turning around and getting out of federal Government guarantees that were given on loans to primary producers in this country. It is backing out. However, the Bill before the Chamber is for the Government to back in. In one case it backs away from the poor man, and in another case it backs in for someone who has quite a bit of money. It backs away from a poor man, and backs in for investors. It backs away from the poor man, and backs in for municipalities and everyone else.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are not even disagreeing with that. We are asking for the names, but the Government will not even do that. Over and above all of that, Mr. Speaker, there is a basic principle involved here. Some Members in this Chamber are very angry about this Bill because of what I mentioned before; that right is right and wrong is no man's right. It is not the right of the Government to bring a Bill into this Chamber which backs in on a certain guarantee while it moves away from guarantees that were given to primary producers in this country.

Primary producers in Quebec, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland are today receiving letters from banks and lawyers saying that they are going to put a sign on their houses because they took out a loan with the bank that was guaranteed by the federal Government but, as the bank manager says in his letter, the federal Government has now backed out of these guarantees. In the summer of 1985 the federal Government is backing out of the guarantees which it provided on the loans that were taken out. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we in this Chamber are debating a Bill to back in on a guarantee to people who had over $60,000 in the bank.

The Minister of State for Finance, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should think twice. If they are going to do this for a certain group of people, they should do it for our poor primary producers as well rather than letting them hang out to dry, letting them lose their property, homes, and everything else and being dragged into court because they took out a loan guaranteed by the federal Government.

The great philosophy of the Government of Canada is to try to cut down on the deficit and to say that there will be no more giveaways. Therefore, why will the Government of Canada not tell us who is getting this $875 million? At the same time, why will it not tell us why it is backing out on its guarantees of bank loans given to primary producers in this country?

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to follow my eloquent colleague and add some more facts to the list. I congratulate him on his excellent address because these messages are going to be carried across the country and the Canadian people will be fully informed of what the Government is up to.

I had a call from an elderly couple here in Ottawa who invested $6,000, a large part of their lifetime savings, in shares in the Canadian Commercial Bank. They did that because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall), and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told them it was a great investment and was secure. They are asking me what will happen to their $6,000. They want to know whether they will get their investment back because, after all, it was this Government which promised them that it was a good investment and they invested $6,000 on the Government's say-so. Now they have lost that part of their life savings. It is not wonder that Canadians are upset.

We have a Bill before us for the amount $875 million to pay off people who made an investment on Tory philosophy. The Tory philosophy is that when you make an investment, you take your risks. When the people on the Government benches were on this side of the House in opposition all we heard was, "Let free enterprise loose, it will do the job". Now that free enterprise has been let loose the Government has encouraged people to invest their money in something that has gone bad. The Government now says that people do not really have to risk their money after all because the Government will bail them out.

Approximately five years ago a Liberal Government passed a Bill to increase the insurance for depositors in banks from $20,000 to $60,000. That is the law today. That is why we have this special Bill before the House. My hon. colleague who spoke before me spoke about the fisheries and about the banks putting peoples' houses up for sale at a time when we are bailing out investors to the tune of $875 million.

Yesterday I had meetings with several municipalities about small craft harbours. There is all kinds of room for investment in the tourist industry. The people who are now sitting on the Government benches promised during the last Parliament that if they were elected they would put all kinds of money into tourism, small business, and the farming community of this country. What are they doing now? They are using the money to bail out their friends. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, there is no money for small craft harbours in this country. The smaller communities are being left out of the picture. I see an Hon. Member from Atlantic Canada pointing to me. Maybe he knows of some money in the Budget down there; I don't know. However, I do know that I was told yesterday that if we wanted money to pay for labour to put a small craft harbour in we would have to apply for labour under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act because there is no money for small craft harbours in Ontario. How many Conservative Members from Ontario are there in the House today who are not supporting our small communities?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Hopkins: I will call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) will have five minutes left when Orders of the Day are called. It being one o'clock I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 22

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST THAT MONTREAL EAST BE DESIGNATED DEPRESSED ZONE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I would like to inform the Members of this House that the survival committee held its second meeting yesterday in Montreal, to save 5,000 jobs that are threatened in Montreal East. I would like to point out that this meeting was attended by people from every social, economic and socio-political sphere. There were Conservative Members from Montreal East, federal Liberal Members, members of municipal councils belonging to the Parti civique and the RCM, provincial Members of the Liberal Party of Quebec and Parti québécois Members, people from union headquarters as well as members of the business world and the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Speaker, I can inform Hon. Members that all these people were unanimous in asking both levels of Government to make Montreal East a designated area, so that it can benefit from the advantages arising from such designation, which include funds to subsidize companies and prevent the shutdown of the Gulf refinery, Canadian Vickers and Bombardier. Furthermore, all parties present were unanimous in supporting the authorities of the City of Montreal and their invitation to the Hyundai company to build a plant in Montreal East and thus ward off this impending disaster.

INCOME TAX ACT

CALL FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the structure, length, complexity and application of the Income Tax Act has virtually destroyed any faith Canadians once had in the equity and fairness of Canada's income tax system.

Wage earners resent the bonanzas and breaks created for and used by large corporations. Farmers and small-business people seethe with frustration at the incentives and giveaways that seem only to go to enterprises large and wealthy enough to hire specialist advisers.

Bright accountants, who could be best employed advising clients on the improvement of their operations and finances, are instead applying their talents to the exploitation of socially counterproductive loopholes which generate substantial tax savings and, therefore, larger fees.

I call upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Mackay) to take his sword to this Gordian knot. All the public relations, training, and procedural improvements introduced by his predecessor, worthy though they are, are only nibbling at the edges of this problem.

Canada needs a fair tax system, one in which the super rich bear more of the burden presently falling on middle-income groups. Canada also needs an Income Tax Act written in terms that small-business people and wage earners can understand.

OUTSTANDING YOUNG FARMERS AND AWARD WINNERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, during the weekend I attended the Outstanding Young Farmers program which is a grassroots project initiated by the Canada Jaycees for the purpose of honouring young farmers who accomplish significant achievements throughout the year. The 1985 outstanding young farmers are: Earl Kidston of Kings County, Nova Scotia; Pierre Carbonneau of Coaticook, Quebec; Owen Legge of Spring Bay, Ontario, Bruce Wood, Campbelleville, Ontario; Harry Lepp of Elm Creek, Manitoba; Garry Stevenson of Melfort, Saskatchewan; Clarence Jensen of Abbots ford, British Columbia, and a Bow River riding farmer, Horst Wiever, of Acme, Alberta.

This is the sixth year of the program. Mr. Gordon Bussey of Airdrie, who won the honour in 1982, and who is a prominent Bow River farmer, extended congratulations on behalf of the alumni. Reuben Hamm, the proprietor of an agriculturally oriented radio station, CHRB in High River, was a most genial chairman and he interspersed the contributions by speakers with film slides of the farms of each of the winners.

These eight Canadians demonstrate the value of the family farm. Too many of these farms are disappearing and we need new programs designed to provide prices for farm produce that will provide a profit and thus keep our young Canadians on the farms. I commend the Canada Jaycees and the supporters of the program, and I am sure every Member of the House will join me in extending our heartiest congratulation to these eight outstanding young farmers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Now it is becoming a congratulatory message.

ABORTION

RECOGNITION OF RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an abomination and a true miscarriage of justice to allow Dr. Mortgentaler and his associates to continue their murder of unborn human beings at their human slaughter house at 85 Harbord Street in Toronto.

The activities of this group have consistently violated Canada's Criminal Code, by performing abortions on demand.

The Attorney General of Ontario has been derelict in his duties by refusing to exercise the powers of his office, not setting bail conditions on the accused and restraining them from further breaking of the law as they are charged pending the result of the Crown appeal of their acquittal on a similar charge.

This can be construed as the Attorney General of Ontario having no objections to Dr. Mortgentaler continuing his daily slaughter of innocent unborn human beings who cannot defend themselves or speak out on their own behalf. Each day of delay in settling this whole question means that more and more unborn babies will have their lives snatched from them. This must stop.

The most positive way in which this whole problem can be rectified is to introduce an amendment to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms that will in fact recognize, once and for all, that unborn babies are indeed persons, indeed human beings in every sense of the meaning of those words, and have the same rights, privileges, and protection under the Charter as other human beings. This action is long overdue and I therefore call upon the Government to initiate positive action in this regard as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

STATUS OF WOMEN

COMMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO CONSERVATIVE PARTY MEMBERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this week the all-Party committee established to ensure federal conformity with Section 15 of the Charter of Rights will table its recommendations. Recent comments made by members of the Conservative Party provide an interesting insight into the Government's feelings for women.

The Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) is quoted this morning as announcing: "I am not anti-woman. How could I be? My mother was a women, and I married a women". He explained his stand against women in combat roles by stating: "Where I come from down my way, we relegate certain positions to women, and others to men. That is not because we are machoistic, it is because we are sea-going people". He then recounted having recently witnessed a United States Coast Guard ship arriving at Halifax harbour skippered " . . . by a pert thing, no more than 30 years old".

May I remind the members of the Government that this is 1985? The comments of the Hon. Members on the opposite side of the House belittle the women of Canada and are a sad indication of the Government's lack of respect for the ever expanding role that women should play in all fields of Canadian society.

SOUTH AFRICA—MANDATORY SANCTIONS ADVOCATED

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the majority of South Africans are engaged in a struggle against racism in which increasing numbers, including children, are sacrificing their lives to prevent the murder of their souls.

They seek the achievement in their own land of a democracy based on the ideals founded on the Magna Carta, the Declaration of the Rights of Man and Citizens, and the American Declaration of Independence. They seek help from those who claim to be the defenders of those ideals of freedom and equality.

Now the Commonwealth has responded to their pleas. How much did they get? "A tiny little bit, a tiny little bit". Such is the measure of Great Britain's, and now the Commonwealth's, commitment to justice.

"It does not amount to a great deal", we are told with a pride that must not be shared by this country or its Government. We must do more than participate in merely symbolic measures or in another contact group destined to increase even more the level of frustration and resentment felt toward the western democracies.

Without the support of increased mandatory sanctions, the lip service of the West may well be replaced by the weapons of the East and the future hostility of black Africa toward the West would then be assured.

THE ECONOMY

LE CARREFOUR DE LA SOUS-TRAITANCE DE L'EST DU QUÉBEC

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, it really took the Carrefour de la sous-traitance de l'Est du Québec to make people finally discover and recognize the true potential of our businesses in the Lower St. Lawrence region.

Last week, during the three-day Carrefour de la sous-traitance at Rivière-du-Loup, we were all able to see for ourselves and make others realize that Eastern Quebec has plenty of resources and entrepreneurship. After attending this fair, I realized that Eastern Quebec is developing a definite taste for business.

As for buyers from large companies, Governments and Government corporations, they were all astonished at the variety and quality of products being offered by Eastern Quebec companies involved in sub-contracting. Both exhibitors and participants agree that the fair has provided a focus for consolidating economic activity in Eastern Quebec.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Canadian Government was right to provide funding for the Carrefour de la sous-traitance de l'Est du Québec held in my riding of Kamouraska-Rivière-du-Loup.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PROSPECTIVE BENEFITS

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss a crucial issue which affects all Canadians.

[Translation]

On September 26, the Prime Minister announced that Canada would be interested in seeing a new trade agreement between Canada and the United States.

[English]

Many Canadians are wary of changing the status quo, but I would like to assure them, and the residents of my home Province of Alberta, that a new trade agreement will improve the economic well-being of all Canadians.

In Alberta, the provincial trade situation with the United States is suffering from instability. Countervailing duties on red meats and petrochemicals are threatened against our products. More than 75 per cent of Albert's petrochemicals are sold abroad, and both the United States and Canada impose tariffs ranging from 10 per cent to 18 per cent.

Alberta exports in 1984 totalled $10.6 billion, which equalled $4,500 per capita. Of this total, $9.3 billion went to the United States, which equalled $4,000 per capita.

I conducted a survey last spring in my own riding of Edmonton South and found that 65 per cent were in favour of freeing up our trade arrangements with our neighbour to the south.

I applaud the Government's initiative. Not to conduct these negotiations would be to shy away from our responsibility to enhance the prosperity of our nation. I can assure not only Albertans but all Canadians that a new trade agreement with the United States will benefit us all.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

WELLAND CANAL BLOCKAGE—EFFECT ON GRAIN EXPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Government's cut-backs in funding to the St. Lawrence Seaway in last May's Budget threaten this vital transportation link between western Canada and the eastern seaboard. Prairie grain producers depend on access to world markets through the St. Lawrence Seaway system.

The recent wall collapse in the Welland Canal, the second major disruption of the Seaway in a year, demonstrates the need to maintain the Seaway properly. This week over 70 ships are trapped in the system. The Government must move quickly to see that the disruption does not affect the delivery of millions of tonnes of grain on its way to customers abroad. The Government must take action to assure our grain customers abroad that Canada continues to be a secure supplier of grain to the world market-place.

The current Welland Canal blockage places hundreds of farmers in financial jeopardy at a time when farm incomes are at a record low. In the May, 1985 Budget, the Government announced that it was taking $30 million away from the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. This action demonstrates the Government's irresponsible attitude toward this vital transportation link.

I call upon the Government to reverse this decision and to take every action necessary to get these grain shipments moving to the world market.

HOUSING

VITALITY OF HOUSING CO-OPERATIVES

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words about the tremendous vitality of the housing co-operatives in my riding of Verdun-Saint-Paul.

Since our Government came to power, a grand total of 208 housing units, spread over twelve projects, have been completed under the Public Housing Assistance Program of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In addition, 151 units were able to benefit under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, also sponsored by the CMHC.

I would like to pay special tribute to the Verdun Community Planning and Housing Service. This non-profit organization originated most of the renovation and new construction projects in my riding and, thanks to the dedication of its members, has made an impressive contribution to the well-being of the people of Verdun. Their efforts and those of all other community agencies—

MEASURES SUGGESTED TO STIMULATE EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, all of Canada commends the excellent energy agreements the Government has concluded—the Western Accord and the Atlantic Accord. There is increased activity on provincial lands in the fields of exploration, development and production, and this means jobs, jobs, jobs.

On behalf of the industry I should like to urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) to give priority to the following areas of concern. First is the elimination of the 25 per cent back-in and all associated provisions. This has amounted to confiscation, and results in disincentives. The Canadian ownership rate, or the COR content, should apply only at the development stage, not at the exploration stage.

Royalties should be lowered or forgone on Canada Lands until pay-out is reached. Due to the extremely high cost of exploration and development, this would result in accelerated growth. Stimulation for activity on the Canada Lands is necessary and should take the form of a tax credit which does not discriminate on the basis of ownership.

I know the Minister is consulting with the provinces and with the industry. I applaud this approach and look forward to hearing the results of her consultations and deliberations.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL REVENUE

GULF TAKEOVER—ROLE OF MINISTER AND ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. At his latest press conference the Prime Minister stated flatly that, in negotiating the tax ruling in favour of the purchase of Gulf Canada, it was handled completely by bureaucrats in the Department of National Revenue. However, the former Deputy Minister of Finance stated categorically that both the Minister of Finance and his Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of tax policy were intimately involved in the deal.

What was the role of the Minister of Finance in negotiating the purchase of Gulf Canada? What was the role of his Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of tax policy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my role is to act as Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): As a former Minister of Finance, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows the role which I play in relation to various matters that are under review. I should say to him that the entire Gulf Canada, Petro-Canada, O&Y transaction was a very wide-ranging one. Obviously I have an interest in those, but this is a matter for Cabinet discussion. He knows very well that those matters are not discussed in the House of Commons.

FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE—CONFLICT OF INTEREST POSSIBILITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The former Deputy Minister of Finance informed the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance of his conflict of interest in connection with the largest real estate corporation in Canada and even in the world. Why, in those circumstances, did the Minister of Finance keep Mr. Cohen as his Deputy Minister? Did he discuss Mr. Cohen's situation with the Prime Minister?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the circumstances described in the question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition occurred at a time when the old conflict of interest guidelines were in force. They are not much different in that narrow respect from the new guidelines which were tabled very recently. However, from the newspaper accounts which I have read of Mr. Cohen's statements, he not only sought compliance with those old guidelines but indeed, if I recall correctly, stated in his press accounts that he sought independent legal advice to that effect and was assured that he was in compliance with the guidelines.

ROLE OF FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER IN PREPARING BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have elevated this question to the Deputy Prime Minister, and I want to direct a question to him. If Mr. Cohen felt it sufficiently vital and if the Minister of Finance felt it sufficiently vital to exclude Mr. Cohen from any negotiations relating to the Gulf Canada purchase, why was Mr. Cohen left in charge of a Budget which was bound to affect all major companies in Canada, including Olympia and York? Why was he not reassigned or relieved of his duties after that conflict of interest had become known to the Minister of Finance and to the Prime Minister?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first, I do not at all accept the premise embedded in the preamble to the question of the right hon. gentleman. Second, I do not at all accept the assumption he has made that there was a conflict of interest.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Cohen says there was.

• (1420)

Mr. Nielsen: I have seen no account where Mr. Cohen has said that there is a conflict of interest. Indeed, I have read in the newspaper accounts quite the contrary, even to the extent where he obtained an independent legal opinion advising him that he was not in any conflict of interest situation.

As to his having reported his job offer, that is quite normal. It undoubtedly had occurred during the time of the right hon. gentleman when he was part of a Government where that was expected conduct. Indeed it was in the guidelines that were in force when the Member opposite was a Minister and that course was followed precisely in this instance, so Mr. Cohen says, in the accounts that I read in this case.

PARTNERSHIP ARRANGEMENT

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): I am tempted to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether there is an informal guideline that senior bureaucrats should excuse themselves to go to the bathroom to avoid discussing conflict issues, as Mr. Cohen allegedly did.

My question is for the Minister of Finance. This tax gift that was subject to the ruling required a very elaborate partnership arrangement to have any chance of obtaining a favourable ruling from the Department of National Revenue. Was the Minister of Finance aware that such a partnership arrangement was required, and did he discuss with anyone the participation of Norcen as a partner in that particular partnership?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if I might be permitted to respond to that question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: A cover-up.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You do not want an answer anyway.

Mr. MacKay: The Member opposite has certainly the knowledge and the background to realize the fallacies in asking a question such as this, and he knows full well that the taxpayer in this case could very well have proceeded with this transaction without asking for any ruling. He had that right. So the question cannot be answered on the floor of the House of Commons. The Member opposite knows that.

PUBLICATION OF TAX RULING

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it appears that Mr. Reichmann is more forthcoming than the Government, certainly than the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, or the Minister of National Revenue. As you know, Mr. Reichmann gave an interview and it is published in The Globe and Mail this morning.

Would the Minister of National Revenue advise Mr. Reichmann that the Government has no objection to his making that ruling public? Would he advise him to that effect so that these unanswered questions can be clarified?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): No, I certainly would not give Mr. Reichmann any advice in respect to a matter such as this. It is not the role of this government Minister to advise a taxpayer on what he should do. To advise a taxpayer to waive the protection of the provisions of confidentiality, which not only affect the particular taxpayer but which could very well affect other taxpayers, would not be a responsible thing to do.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As the Deputy Prime Minister knows Mr. Cohen took a job with Olympia and York in October and the revised guidelines produced by the Government came out in September. Is the Deputy Prime Minister saying to the House that as he understands the guidelines there is no contradiction at all between those guidelines and the position that Mr. Cohen took?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): My recollection could be faulty as to the time at which Mr. Cohen left his employment. I believe it was June. At that time the old guidelines were still in effect. That is what I was saying a moment ago.

With respect to the particular provision which would be applicable to these circumstances, there is not much difference between the provisions of the old guidelines and the new, but I have explained my understanding of the extent to which Mr. Cohen went in order to ensure that he did comply with the guidelines.

JOB OFFER ACCEPTED BY FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is precisely the consistency between the old and the new guidelines that concerns me, also in terms of what the Deputy Prime Minister said. The guidelines, if they are applicable, now say with reference to future employment by people in Mr. Cohen's position that they should not within the period of one year:

(c) give counsel, for the commercial purposes of the recipient of the counsel, concerning the programs or policies of the department with which they were employed—

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this, and it refers to the job that Mr. Cohen took. Would the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that the job that he took is in complete contradiction to what the guidelines prescribed?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): No, I cannot agree with that at all. I have turned up my copy of the guidelines and the requirement is a cooling off period for public office holders of one year before accepting an appointment with a company, "with which he had significant direct official dealings during the last year of his employment—or two years in the case of appointments to directorships", and so on.

I have not spoken to Mr. Cohen but it is my reading of the press account that he indicated that he abstained from any activities relating to Olympia and York, or which might have application to O&Y, during the relevant time period.

I am prepared to accept that. Indeed it was on the basis of that actual account, I understand, that he sought and received the legal opinion which stipulated that he was in compliance with that particular provision of the guidelines.

DUTIES OF NEW JOB

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has quoted actually from subsection (a) of the guidelines, and if that is all we were talking about then he would be absolutely correct. But what I quoted from was subsection (c) which refers to his general duties in new employment, and the kinds of general duties that he has surely are in flat contradiction to what the guidelines prescribe. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister will he look into this with care and seriousness and report back to the House.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I certainly will review the interpretation that the hon. gentleman has put on that particular section of the guidelines. I have already reviewed it once in the light of the circumstances as I know them and I see no problem accepting the description of his activities given by Mr. Cohen as related in newspaper accounts. I can see no problem with the guidelines but I will, as requested, look at it a second time with even greater care than I already have looked at it.

SOUTH AFRICA—COMMONWEALTH ACCORD

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the tragic situation in South Africa which goes from bad to worse, yesterday the Prime Minister of England, Madam Thatcher, said that she had to move a little bit to sign this accord. We are very happy that there was an accord. Virtually at the same moment the Prime Minister of Canada said that Madam Thatcher had moved enormously in order to sign the accord. Whom are Canadians to believe, the "little bit" of the Prime Minister of England or the enormous movement mentioned by the Prime Minister of Canada?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He doesn't believe in the Commonwealth.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): However, Mr. Speaker, one wishes to describe it, from whatever particular vantage point which one might wish to view it, it would seem to me that what we have achieved here is quite a major accomplishment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: What we have achieved through the offices of our Prime Minister and others with whom he worked in the Commonwealth is unanimity on a position with respect to sanctions which sends a very strong signal to the Government of South Africa. I think the unanimity is a remarkable feature of those meetings which might at least be acknowledged in some small way by the hon. gentleman.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Could the Acting Prime Minister inform the House whether the Government intends to set a date soon, after which Canada will break off its relations with South Africa unless it has devised more acceptable policies in connection with apartheid in that country, a suggestion I made to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who told me that the Government might well take this kind of action if there were no movement whatsoever? Does the Government intend to set a deadline for the South African Government or break off relations?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question has been answered in the past by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The situation will be monitored by the Secretary of State and by the Government. That option is open. The Hon. Member will be interested to know that the Prime Minister will be returning to Canada at the end of this week and will be seeking the first opportunity to explain to Hon. Members in the House of Commons the events that took place at the Commonwealth Conference and to provide a report to the House.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED INTERVENTION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada. Yesterday, he confirmed that he personally intervened in the RCMP investigation of allegations of unlawful election expenditures made by his former Cabinet colleague, the Hon. Member for Frontenac.

Does the Solicitor General of Canada not realize that such action may be perceived as an attempt to interfere with the RCMP investigation, for the purpose of exercising political pressure on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my instructions to the RCM Police were to ensure that the investigation was carried out with the highest possible professional standards. I would expect that even the Hon. Member for Burnaby would support that.

Mr. Robinson: One would hope it would not take a phone call from the Solicitor General to make sure that that was done in the first place.

MINISTER'S ACTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, does the Solicitor General not recognize that the minute he picked up the telephone to call the Commissioner of the RCMP regarding an inquiry into one of his former Cabinet colleagues, he compromised the integrity and independence of the office of the Solicitor General in an apparent attempt to take some of the heat off his former Cabinet colleague?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend surely knows better than that. What I did was to draw to the attention of the Commissioner of the RCM Police published reports in the newspapers in which there were allegations of the—

Mr. Deans: Can't he read?

Mr. Beatty: If the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain would get a grip on himself for just a moment—

Mr. Deans: I don't have to.

Mr. Beatty: Perhaps you are incapable of doing so.

Mr. Deans: What I have to do is get you to do your job.

Mr. Beatty: If the Leader of the NDP could get a grip on the House Leader of the NDP—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Beatty: There were printed reports in the press alleging that there was harassment by the RCM Police. I drew those reports to the attention of the Commissioner of the RCM Police and told him that the Government expected that the work of the RCM Police would be done professionally and thoroughly, something which the Commissioner assured me would indeed be done. Surely even the Hon. Member for Burnaby would not argue that there should be any lower standards.

SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST—FATE OF WORKERS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport).

Can the Minister confirm the statements made by the Hon. Member for Gamelin yesterday to the effect that within two to three weeks the Government of Canada will propose that Bombardier management manufacture something other than locomotives at their Montreal East plant? If so, what will it be and does that mean the 400 workers who have been laid off can expect to be rehired in the near future?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): In answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, I did not have an opportunity to talk to the Hon. Member for Gamelin about the meeting he had yesterday, but I will do so as soon as possible.

I think I can repeat what I said to the Hon. Member a couple of weeks ago, namely that Bombardier management are now trying to develop new markets, and an announcement will probably be made in the coming months. I am convinced that Bombardier will remain as dynamic as ever.

BUY CANADIAN POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister ought to monitor her files more closely. Her assistant attended yesterday's meeting and we would have expected him to report to her immediately. My question is direct: Will the Minister intervene and promote a Buy Canadian policy in Montreal East so that companies manufacturing locomotives and related products might be awarded Government contracts through Crown corporations?

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I find it all the more easier to answer the question that we have already implemented a buy-at-home policy. Nearly a year ago we got in touch with Montreal contractors to tell them how they can do business with the federal Government. That is what we call a buy-at-home policy.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF FORMER MINISTER'S ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Does the Deputy Prime Minister consider it to be an appropriate action on the part of the Solicitor General to call the Commissioner of the RCMP to discuss with him a matter which is being investigated by the RCMP during the time the investigation is taking place?

Mr. Fulton: We asked you the question, Erik.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I could certainly—

Mr. Deans: You could say no.

Mr. Beatty: I would be glad to respond to the Hon. Member's question. The Solicitor General is responsible to the House of Commons and the people of Canada for the conduct of the RCMP and its activities. When serious allegations are made that there may be harassment by the RCM Police, I think it is appropriate that the Solicitor General of Canada draw those allegations to the attention of the Commissioner of the RCM Police and indicate to him that he has seen those allegations and hopes the inquiry will be carried out in a professional and competent way. I am satisfied that that is being done and I think the sort of innuendo which the Hon. Member is seeking to cast in this matter does nothing that brings any credit to the RCM Police. Rather, it attempts to hold up for criticism the conduct of the RCM Police. I am satisfied that the inquiry is going well and professionally.

MINISTER'S ACTION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Given that I think we all would believe that the Commissioner of the RCMP can read, is it appropriate for the Solicitor General to call the Commissioner of the RCMP to discuss with him a case that is currently being investigated by the RCMP?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has heard the very reasoned and measured response of the Solicitor General. The Hon. Member does not accept that response, for his own political reasons. He chooses not to accept it. I do accept it and I am sure that the majority of the Members of the House of Commons do as well.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEETING OF MINISTERS—FUNDING OF UNIVERSITY RESEARCH

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. I understand that the Minister met over the weekend at Meech Lake with his counterparts from seven industrial nations and that they discussed initiatives to share technologies in Canada. I am wondering if the Minister can assure the House today, in view of the importance of research and development to Canada, that the Government is funding research and development in Canadian universities so that we can participate in the sharing of technologies.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, this important meeting of international science heads which was not only a first for Canada but for western industrialized leaders, brought evidence that the first priority of most of the nations in the western industrialized world appears to be the active support of university research and the production of first class scientific talent, which is the secret weapon that western industrialized nations will be using to compete in an increasingly technological world. This also must be—

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER CONTACTED THREE POTENTIAL BUYERS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister whether she can now reconcile her remarks with those of the Hon. Member for Duvernay who told the Gulf workers yesterday that his Government did oppose the purchase of the assets of this Montreal East company.

We happen to know that there are three potential buyers of the Montreal East refinery. Can the Minister confirm that she is in contact with the three potential buyers and that her Government will do everything it can to help one of them save the 455 jobs?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, our Government did what the former Liberal Government did not. There has been something in the order of 13 refinery closures in Canada over the last few years, several of which have been in the Montreal area. When the former Government was asked to assist—

Mr. Lapierre: What are you going to do?

Miss Carney: —in this matter, it turned down all requests for assistance. I personally asked Mr. Reichmann to keep the refinery going for a few more months so that there would be an opportunity to assess if there were other buyers or not. We did something that the former Government refused to do.

BANKS AND BANKING

ACTIVITIES OF CANADIAN BANKS IN THE BAHAMAS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We have learned today that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the Bahamas, after a year-long royal commission, has alleged that Canadian banks are involved in financial activities in support of the illegal drug trade in that part of the Caribbean. This calls into question the reputation and integrity of the Canadian banks which represent Canada's most visible and significant presence in the Bahamas and other islands. When the matter was brought to the Minister's attention, what action did he take?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I saw the same article in the paper this morning. We are still trying to track down just how this matter was brought to my attention.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am not aware of the matter having been brought to my attention, nor is my Department.

Mr. Broadbent: Someone in Brian's office!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member has any information apart from what is in the press reports, I would be glad to hear from him.

APPLICATION OF BANK ACT PROVISIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, after the Minister has had a chance to discuss the matter with his aides, then perhaps he could make a statement in the House.

Can the Minister of Finance confirm that it is the same secrecy provisions of the Bank Act, which the Government has used to protect the uninsured depositors during the bail-out of the CCB and the Northland Bank, that are being used to hide the identity of the illegal drug traffickers who have money on deposit with Canadian banks in the Bahamas?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me caution the Hon. Member about how he throws around these loose allegations. He has no basis upon which he can substantiate those allegations.

Mr. Riis: It's called a royal commission.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I say to the Hon. Member that he personally has no basis for this. If he wishes to base the statements he makes in the House on newspaper reports, I suggest he step outside the lobby and make those same allegations.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that the Inspector General of Banks has been aware of similar types of situations over the years which have been brought to his attention. He has met with the banks and has received their assurances that they will take great care in how they manage their affairs in different parts of the world.

ALLEGATIONS IN BAHAMIAN ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is on the same matter but it is directed to the Solicitor General. Have the allegations contained in the Bahamian royal commission report about the Canadian banks being deeply involved in laundering drug trafficking funds been drawn to the attention of the Solicitor General? If so, has there been a response from him or the Canadian Government as yet?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I saw the article in this morning's paper. I have asked my staff for a report on it. On the face of it, it would appear that if there were any infringement on any jurisdiction's legislation it would probably be in the Bahamas as opposed to Canada. However, I have asked for a report from my staff.

CORPORATIONS

TAKEOVER OF MONTREAL EAST COMPANY—ECONOMIC IMPACT

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and in his absence, to the Associate Minister.

The American Marmon group has bought S.K.D. Technologies de Ville d'Anjou in Montreal East in order to close down its only competitor manufacturing suspension systems for trucks and automobiles.

Why is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs allowing competition to be eliminated in this sector, thus leading to the loss of hundreds of jobs in the Montreal area where the industrial base is seriously threatened?

[English]

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to take the question under advisement and bring it to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I am sure he will get back to the Hon. Member in the usual fashion.

SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Does the Minister responsible for Investment Canada intend to allow foreign investors to buy out their Canadian competitors, shut down their factories and thus create unemployment among Canadian workers? What does the Minister intend to do to ensure that the jobs of these 200 workers in Montreal East will not join the long list of thousands of jobs lost in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that the objective of Investment Canada is certainly not to encourage non-Canadians to buy businesses in Canada with a view to closing them down and creating unemployment.

Mr. Ouellet: That is what they are doing.

Mr. Stevens: I would point out to the Hon. Member that jobs have been created in this country at the rate of 25,000 a month. We hope that will continue. With a bit of co-operation from the Official Opposition it might even go up to 30,000.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DROUGHT STRICKEN WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who will know that on August 9 the drought zone for western Canadian farmers was designated. Action for those wheat farmers was delayed pending a report from the Hon. Member for Assiniboia so that Cabinet could decide on what action to take. Since then, we were told on September 23 by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister that the announcement with respect to the action to be taken would be forthcoming in a week or 10 days. On October 2 we were told by the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member, I think, has a question to ask.

Mr. Althouse: I am still on the sentence, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Minister tell us today, since we have been waiting for 10 weeks, what that action will be?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the short answer to that question would be no, I cannot tell the Hon. Member today exactly what the details of that action will be.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since it was the platform of the Minister's Party during the election campaign that it would put agriculture first, and since we have waited 10 weeks, in which time business has been conducted for banks and oil companies, why has the Government changed its policy and why will it not put agriculture first?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would examine the record then he would certainly convince even himself that this Government places a very high priority on the agricultural industry. If he looks at the record, he will see that we have passed more agricultural Bills in the last eight months than the previous Government did in the last eight years.

Mr. Althouse: You have killed Bills; that is all you have done.

Mr. Wise: We have taken over 100 initiatives directly—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN HOUSING STARTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC. Has the Government's fantastically successful low interest rate policy rate had an effect on housing starts?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that the interest rate has had an effect. The seasonally adjusted average increase from September to September is up to 184,000 units.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more.

Mr. Speaker: A set-up has to better disguised than that.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, this is a total increase of 44 per cent in single-family dwelling units.

SOCIAL SECURITY

BILL C-70—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Deputy Prime Minister, I have thousands of names signed by people to a petition protesting the de-indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit. And tomorrow, women representing millions of Canadian mothers will be here on Parliament Hill. Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether his Government is going to announce it will immediately withdraw Bill C-70 which is being contested by millions of Canadian mothers?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Hon. Member after some absence—he was not in the committee. He said he was going to take this to the wall. He has not been doing that. He has been out across the country and he knows he has not been getting the response he has been trying to generate. I say to him that the reason he has not is because people with the lowest incomes know that through the family tax credit they will receive more than they would from the very thing the Hon. Member is suggesting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Additionally, he should remind those people that if we had followed through on what the Liberals did in 1976 with the six and five, the losses would be much greater than anything he says we are doing—

Ms. Mitchell: Why do we have to have losses?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In fact, it is quite the opposite. There will be more for those who are at the lower income level.

Mr. Broadbent: You supported the six and five.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of social injustice is scraping the garbage can with his petty politics.

Could the Minister of National Health and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! I cannot allow comments of this kind. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET QUEBEC MOTHERS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of National Health and Welfare, willing to admit that all the groups that came here to testify do not, contrary to what he has said in the House of Commons, agree with his Bill, and will the Minister have the courage tomorrow to meet with those mothers on Parliament Hill? Will he be brave enough to do that tomorrow?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is odd that the Hon. Member is raising something in committee when he has not been attending the committee.

Mr. Gauthier: Where the hell were you for three weeks? That's a cheap shot.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am saying to the Hon. Member very directly that when he looks at the program he will know that, through the child tax credit, the very people who need it most will be getting the most, and I wish the Hon. Member would start supporting that.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

LUBICON LAKE INDIAN BAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and of the Minister of State for External Affairs, I would like to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. In 1984 the Lubicon Lake Indian Band made a formal complaint to the United Nations against the Canadian Government. In response, the Canadian Government tried to deny that the Lubicon Lake Indians were a people at all but only "a thinly scattered minority group living within the midst of a more numerous population grouping and occupying—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Manly: I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if that considered opinion applies to all Canadian Indian people or only to the Lubicon Lake Indians?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the most appropriate person to respond to that question in a satisfactory fashion would be the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I will draw the question to his attention and see to it he communicates with the Hon. Member immediately upon his return.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the Government's own negotiator has recommended that there be interim financial payments and has laid the responsibility squarely on the federal Government, when is the federal Government going to give justice to the Indian people at Lubicon Lake, acting on its own negotiator's recommendations, instead of trying to slough this problem off, waiting for it to resolve itself?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will not have gone unnoticed by the Hon. member that in 13 months the present Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has travelled more, seen more Indian people in this country—

Mr. Manly: He promised action. We haven't had any.

Mr. Nielsen: —and has spoken to more band councils and other Indian organizations and individuals than any other Minister in the history of the Government of this country.

Mr. Manly: Where is he?

Mr. Nielsen: He is in British Columbia at this very moment pursuing that course. I would think the Hon. Member would want to compliment the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT—INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the Minister knows, November 1 is fast approaching and there is still no replacement for the Petroleum Incentives Program. Is the Minister going to listen to the Province of Nova Scotia and energy groups such as the Canadian Petroleum Association, and provide a replacement for the Petroleum Incentives Program by November 1? Or is the Minister going to allow the offshore and frontier exploration to shut down by 1987?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this Government always listens to the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Premiers of other provinces.

Mr. Broadbent: New Brunswick, right.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Once too often.

Miss Carney: This Government always consults with industry. As the Hon. Member well knows, I have been working on the incentives program for some weeks now. I certainly hope to be able to introduce something which I hope he will support, within the next few weeks.

REQUEST FOR REPLACEMENT

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said last November that her objective was to prevent a lull in exploration. The energy groups are saying, as is the Province of Nova Scotia and other provinces, that unless a replacement is put in place by November 1—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows it is a supplementary question.

Mr. MacLellan: Will the Minister provide a replacement for the Petroleum Incentives Program by November 1?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am certain that the Hon. Member's question will be answered shortly. And I am certain that he will support the initiatives I will be bringing forward.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

ELIMINATION OF QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Yesterday, a Conservative member indicated that he was in favour of eliminating the quota system for the footwear industry in Canada, in spite of the $14 million the Government has just spent to streamline that industry. Could the Minister indicate whether the Government agrees with this Conservative member's position?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member listened attentively yesterday when I gave an answer to the Hon. Member who raised the question, and I am quite sure that when I hear the supplementary question from the Hon. Member, I will have a better understanding of what his thrust was on the first question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, my question asked does the Minister agree with his colleague who raised the subject of elimination of quotas yesterday.

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Hon. Member that a decision will be taken very soon. I will certainly weigh his representation along with the representation from my hon. colleague who has made so many representations on this subject.

INVESTIGATION OF FORMER MINISTER'S ELECTION EXPENSES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. It concerns the RCMP investigation into the former Minister of Communications. Today the Solicitor General told the House of Commons that he called the Commissioner because there were reports of harassment by the RCMP. Yesterday he said: "The Commissioner reads the newspapers as much as I do". I would like to ask the Solicitor General again why he found it necessary to call the Commissioner of the RCMP to advise him, if not to exert either direct or indirect pressure on the Commissioner? And could he also indicate—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a long question.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will try to give a short answer to my hon. friend. It was done for a very good reason. My hon. friend, my colleague from Burnaby, or any other Hon. Member of the House of Commons, could very easily have asked me a question in the House today or yesterday as to whether or not I was aware of the allegations which had been made about the conduct of the RCMP and, if so, whether I had taken any action to ensure that the conduct of the RCM Police was appropriate. What I did was to draw to the attention of the Commissioner of the RCM Police the published reports, and I am satisfied that they are doing their job well and professionally.

● (1500)

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, would the Solicitor General have done the same thing if it was any other Canadian—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Nunziata: —under investigation by the RCMP? Can he also indicate whether he instructed the RCMP to expedite the investigation? First, would he give the same treatment to any other Canadian—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to answer that. The answer is yes. If there were any evidence or allegation of harassment by the RCM Police against any citizen of Canada, I think I have an obligation to ask the Commissioner of the RCMP to be certain that did not take place.

The Hon. Member asked if I had asked that the investigation be expedited. The answer is no. All I have done is to ask the Commissioner to look into the public reports or allegations of harassment and satisfy himself that there was no impropriety.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of two, presented by Hon. Members on Monday, October 21, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petitions presented by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Gottselig) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETITIONS

PROPERTY RIGHTS IN THE CONSTITUTION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition of residents of Canada concerning the lack of a provision for property rights in the Canadian Constitution. The House will know that the Canadian Bill of Rights recognized the principle that individuals have the right to own, use and enjoy property and not have it taken away from them without proper compensation. The petitioners call for that right to be incorporated in our Constitution.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition expressing concern about the deindexation of family allowances. It is from Coquitlam widows helping others and shows that senior citizens are very concerned about Bill C-70. They ask that full indexation be reinstated.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of Cape Breton Island requesting the Government to restore full indexation of the family allowance and child tax credit.

REPAIR AND MAINTENANCE OF VERNON AIRPORT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of 750 residents of Vernon, British Columbia, who are in favour of repairing and maintaining the present Vernon Airport as a Class D airport. They are specifically opposed to any realignment and extension of the airport runway. They call upon Parliament to request the Minister of Transport to review the decision to provide moneys toward the realignment and extension of that runway.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition circulated in the City of Kitchener by an organization called HOPE. The petitioners state that in their opinion the recent federal budget policy to deindex family allowances is clearly an attack on the working poor and the poor alike, and as a result they strongly urge the Government to restore full indexation of family allowances.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great pleasure to present a petition calling upon the federal Government to reverse its decision to deindex family allowances as well as the child tax credit.

[Translation]

In view of the fact that the Government had promised during the election campaign to take steps to reinforce the family unit.

[English]

I also have a petition from the citizens of the riding of Châteauguay who call upon the Government——to maintain such programs as the family allowances and the Child Tax Credit which are a necessity for Canadian families with children.

[English]

They call upon the Government to rescind its decision to cut back the increases in the family allowance as well as in the child tax credit.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of Toronto opposing the increase in taxes such as excise tax, income tax and sales tax, and opposing the cut backs in child benefits, and calling on the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of residents of Toronto calling on the Parliament to ensure that all retired employees shall keep their pension benefits and receive their unemployment insurance benefits without deduction of pension income.

BANNING OF PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin-Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition from several people in my riding who feel that because pornography is a major cause of crime in Canada, it should be totally banned from our country.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT PROGRAMS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of Canadian citizens from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island who beg the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of petitions from citizens in my own riding and other parts of Toronto who state that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by the temporary increases to the child tax credit. Even the poorest families will be worse off as a result. Accordingly, these petitioners call on Parliament to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance.

I have another large number of petitions on the same subject. These petitioners come from all over Ontario and they point out that the accelerating cut-backs in child benefits, reaching $600 million annually by 1990, on top of sales tax changes, excise tax increases and stiff income tax increases, are unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and low-income households. These petitions also call on Parliament to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition signed by leaders of the women's movement in the four northwestern Ontario federal ridings. They believe that children are everyone's responsibility and that all parents should receive government assistance, the value of which is at least as high or higher than present family allowance levels.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present petitions from over 400 residents of Thunder Bay who protest the unfairness of deindexing family allowances while the tax burden on families is being increased. They call upon the House of Commons to re-establish full indexation for the family allowance.

HEALTH

NON-SMOKING CAMPAIGN—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its co-operation and I will not be very long.

Earlier today the Government of Canada, along with most of the provincial and territorial Governments and, most important, various voluntary organizations, launched a non-smoking campaign directed primarily at Canadian youth between the ages of 12 and 19. This national program to reduce smoking is a long-term and comprehensive approach to the reduction of smoking among Canadians. It focuses on both smoking prevention and cessation strategies, with special attention given to high risk groups.

I also want to say, Mr. Speaker, that there are organizations which have been in the lead in this area and have been doing an exemplary job. As I said at the press conference, possibly Government have joined them, rather than the other way around. They have been indicating that smoking and secondary smoke is a major health issue and, of course, the Government of Canada concurs with that. Organizations such as the Canadian Lung Association, the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association and the Canadian Public Health Association had all joined previous to today. I am happy to report that the Canadian Heart Foundation has today agreed to join as well.

I believe this is a collective action, Mr. Speaker. We have proposed an advertising campaign which has been launched. We are using media that will appeal to young people, including rock videos and advertising, which meets head on the issue of others trying to convince young people to take up the habit.

I am sure that Members are aware that approximately 30,000 Canadian deaths per year are directly attributable to smoking and secondary smoking. I am pleased with the co-operation that has been shown by so many. The message will be called "Break Free". I believe that we have to show young people especially that a lifestyle without smoking is acceptable even to their peer groups. We all recognize that that is a major task for us all.

I want to indicate to the House that within the Department of National Health and Welfare we have established a non-smoking policy today. There are some Departments and some government agencies which have already taken this initiative. Within the Department of National Health and Welfare we took a survey of employees asking them various questions relating to the setting up of smoke-free environment in the national capital and specifically in the Department of National Health and Welfare. The majority of employees wish to have a policy which would minimize smoke in the working environment and also accommodate employees who smoke in certain areas outside the immediate working environment. That policy will come into effect on January 1, 1986. I am also pleased to announce that there is agreement between the employees' associations and the Public Service Alliance.

I think that all Canadians recognize that the Government of Canada must be more involved in preventive measures to maintain health. In my mind, there is no single issue which is more directly attributable to a lifestyle habit such as smoking and I commend the program to the House and to Canadians in general. I am pleased that radio stations, television companies and some newspapers have taken initiatives by declaring some of their own offices smoke-free areas as well as by not accepting written advertising from tobacco companies. Those are steps in the right direction. I thank them for their co-operation.

Finally, I would like to thank as well Members opposite for their support of this program. We have much distance to cover, but I believe that because what we have launched today is a co-operative effort it should bear results. I thank the House for its time.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has been a practice, which we have followed for some time here, for Ministers to notify critics and Opposition Party House Leaders of statements and to provide copies in advance of making them. I do not quite understand what is going on here today.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, what the New Democratic Party House Leader (Mr. Deans) has stated is absolutely correct. I will check my information and if it is wrong I will accept the responsibility. I was informed that this had been done in the morning prior to the press conference at 12 o'clock. The reason for that, I tell him quite candidly, was that as we launched the program with the various organizations today across Canada, I wanted to report to the House at first notice. If that has not been done, it was an oversight on my part and no one else's and I apologize.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, just to save the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) from having to investigate, let me tell him that our staff was informed of the press conference and we did receive the text that was used for the press conference. However, I guess there was some miscommunication because we were not told that there was going to be a statement made on the floor of the House. I think that will save the Minister a phone call.

I do not wish to spend much time on the matter, Mr. Speaker. I think most Canadians would agree that the initiative announced today by the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be well received by the Canadian public. I think the Minister would agree with me that probably the one organization in the country that has done the most to promote the idea of smokeless society is the Canadian Lung Association. It was very instrumental in the latter part of the 1960s in focusing public debate in this country on the need to get Canadians off the weed habit, if I can use the colloquial expression.

They have been resoundingly successful, Mr. Speaker. In 1969, approximately 65 per cent of Canadians were smokers and 35 per cent were non-smokers. Today, in some 16 short years, we have totally reversed those numbers and today only one of every three Canadians indulges in the filthy habit.

I do know that there is some degree of concern among the non-smoking public that our younger people are being enticed into smoking by ad campaigns. The steps that have been outlined by the Minister of National Health and Welfare this afternoon will go a long way to focusing the attention of that age group on the need to stop smoking.

Both the Opposition and the Government will have to deal with the contradictory demands in our society with the tobacco growers now indicating that they want to have a marketing board for their product. I await with anticipation the decision of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I applaud the initiatives announced today.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I must advise the Minister that, to the best of my knowledge, my office was not contacted about this initiative at all today. That may very well be because I am the new critic for the New Democratic Party and the message could have been confused between offices. Having said that, we in this Party congratulate the Minister for this initiative, which we support. The health cost to Canadians through smoking will no doubt increase over the years, but we hope that due to this initiative the cost will be reduced.

Without having actually seen the document from which the Minister was reading it is rather difficult for me to respond fully. There are a number of question which I would like to have answered by the Minister, such as what will happen with regard to the tobacco marketing board. It seems to me to be contradictory for the Government to be encouraging individuals not to smoke while at the same time it establishes an institution which could have the opposite effect. Tobacco companies have a shrinking market in Canada for tobacco and cigarettes. I would like to hear the Government's response to the possibility of exporting tobacco to third world countries and, through an aggressive advertising campaign, encouraging smoking there.

We are prepared, Mr. Speaker, to take a positive approach to this serious problem. Perhaps once I see the documentation which the Minister referred to in his statement today we will be in a much better position to give a more comprehensive response than the one I am able to provide today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-252, an Act to amend the House of Commons Act (estimates).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, in a very long and detailed report in 1978, the then Auditor General presented a report concerning the administration of the House of Commons. Subsequent Auditors General have supported that and to my knowledge four Speakers have supported that. The purpose of the Bill is to enshrine those recommendations.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

COLLECTION AND ANALYSIS OF HERRING GULL EGGS

Question No. 395—Mr. Caccia:

1. What are the (a) names (b) titles (c) employee status of the personnel responsible for the collection and analysis of herring gull eggs from the Great Lakes area both at present and prior to the November 13, 1984 budget cuts in the Department of the Environment?

2. Will the Minister of the Environment introduce amendments arising from the current review of the Environmental Contaminants Act and, if so, on what date?

3. To the knowledge of the Government, did the authorities in the United States ban the antibiotic chloramphenicol and, for what reason is it used in Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Environment and National Health and Welfare as follows:

1. See below.

2. Yes. In 1986, upon completion of consultation with other federal government Departments, the provinces, industry, labour and environmental non-government organizations and after cabinet review.

3. In both Canada and the United States, the use of chloramphenicol in humans is permitted with a physician's prescription for certain life threatening diseases. However, the United States has never approved the use of chloramphenicol in food producing animals while in Canada the use of chloramphenicol in food producing animals was banned in July, 1985.

The personnel associated with the collection and analysis of herring gull eggs from the Great Lakes prior to November 13, 1984, and their current status:

SUPERLUX CANADA LTD.

Question No. 431—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983 (f) 1984, what was the total amount of corporate tax paid by Superlux Canada Ltd?

2. In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982 (e) 1983 (f) 1984, what was the total amount received in customs duties on articles imported to Canada by Superlux Canada Ltd?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Section 241 of the Income Tax Act prohibits the release of this information.

2. The total amount received by the Department of National Revenue, Customs and Excise, in customs duties on articles imported to Canada by Superlux Canada Ltd. is as follows:

Year	Customs Duties
Oct.-Dec. 1979	3,202
Jan.-Dec. 1980	29,183
Jan.-Dec. 1981	25,602
Jan.-Dec. 1982	41,282
Jan.-Dec. 1983	20,493
Total	124,366

Note: The above figures are based on the Customs entries submitted by Superlux Canada Ltd. Records of entries for the period January, 1979 to September, 1979 are not available as the Customs Act requires that records be kept for a period of six years.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, prior to one o'clock I was speaking about this Bill, which is a $875 million gift to the friends of the Government of Canada. I also mentioned that there is no money in the Ontario region for small-craft harbours after the Government promised to be of great assistance to the tourist industry in Canada.

Furthermore, at a time when the Government is proposing to pay $875 million to uninsured depositors in these institutions, the farm community and primary producers remain wanting. I recently met with a number of hog producers whose industry is in dire straits in Ontario and other parts of Canada.

It has already been stated today that the House is also considering a Bill to deindex the Child Tax Credit and Family Allowance Programs. The Government promised justice to all during the last election campaign but there is no money to continue the indexation of the Child Tax Credit and Family Allowance Programs to help lower income families.

When one recalls the promise of "jobs, jobs, jobs" during the last election campaign, one can imagine how many jobs $875 million would create if it were used for job creation schemes rather than being doled out to those who took a chance when they invested their money. The Prime Minister

(Mr. Mulroney) has proposed to deindex the Child Tax Credit and Family Allowance Programs despite his promise in the House not to do so. Clearly, the biggest problem facing the Government is its lack of credibility as a result of such statements.

At a time when we are discussing hundreds of millions of dollars in this Bill, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is cutting the security services at small airports in this country, one of which is in my riding. The Government is saving some $27,000 at each of these small airports, which I presume will make up part of the $875 million to be paid to those who took their chances in the free-entreprise system that the Government has espoused.

However, this Bill does not concern free enterprise. When one invests money in a free-enterprise system, one takes a risk, but that is not the case with this legislation.

What has happened with respect to the jobs that were promised by the Government during the last election? The Government is laying off permanent as well as term employees from Department of National Defence bases all across the country. The Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Siddon) stood up today to talk about the Government's promotion of the brains in this country to encourage development. At the same time it is cutting the budget of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited by $170 million. It is one of the best high technology industries in Canada. Some of our most knowledgeable people in this industry have already left for Los Alamos in the United States. This brain drain of the high-tech industry is similar to what happened with the Avro under a Conservative Government. The Hon. Member laughs. He will not be laughing in 20 years when he realizes that we should have continued with the promotion of high technology and research for the development of energy. This country will require more energy in only 20 years.

The cut-backs at Chalk River will result in the lay off of 400 people, not including those in other parts of that industry. I was asked to send a letter to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) to request a meeting between her and representatives of the industry, of labour and of the business community in the area. Although the Government talks about communication and open Government, 2 months and 22 days have elapsed since my request for a meeting, and no answer has come.

The Government brags about creating 100 jobs before Christmas while at the same time laying off 500 people. That is called Tory progress.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I always appreciate your recognition on matters of such importance to the Canadian public. During this debate a number of Members from this side of the House have stated their serious reservations about the Government's conduct in this matter which is so crucial to the Canadian public.

This debate in itself proves the value of Parliament because it is giving time for Canadians to absorb fully and understand the enormity of what has taken place as a result of the incompetent way the Government has handled this matter. There is an increasing anger on the part of Canadians about what has transprired.

During the four or five days I spent in western Canada I was interested to listen to the comments about the so-called bank crisis. There is a growing wave of anger about the way this situation was handled. People do not like to see a Government expediently and conveniently deal with a matter so fundamental to their livelihood on the basis of what were obviously political considerations.

As we know, the banking system has been the central framework in this country for a long time. This is particularly true in the last 10 years, since the amendments to the Bank Act were introduced by previous Liberal Governments. This attempt to give opportunities for smaller banks to emerge and provide a different regime of loans for small businesses in regions of the country was particularly appreciated.

The progress we made in developing that new facet or thrust of the banking system has now been lost. Perhaps it has been irrevocably lost, but it has certainly been lost for a good deal of time. There is a loss of confidence, faith and trust. That loss is mirrored in the same emotions which people now have for the Government of Canada, that loss of confidence, faith and trust. For all the other fumbles, bumbles and stumbles committed by the Government during the last several months, the one which goes to the heart of the matter is its handling of the banking situation.

People are angry about it because they suspect that it is a cover-up. They suspect that too much is being hidden. They suspect that too many people may be benefiting for actions which, in themselves, were foolhardy and reckless to begin with. They wonder why the Government is asking for hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money and is reluctant to come clean on who is to benefit. They wonder why there is such a concerted effort to skirt the issue.

Even with the proclamation of the commission under Mr. Justice Estey, it is clear that many areas of vital public concern relating to the handling of the banking crisis will not be covered by that commission. It goes back to what we saw exemplified time and time again in the handling and management of the Government. Perhaps it is what one would call the mushroom theory of Government—throw unto them those products which are most energetically manufactured by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), keep them in the dark and they will grow. People are becoming a little tired of that. Anger is beginning to devleop. They feel that there was a system of protection for those who legitimately had insured investments.

Why is it that suddenly hundreds of millions of dollars are being provided to categories, not to individuals, corporations or entities? We do not know who is responsible or who in fact will be paid off. I think the Government owes it to Canadians to answer that question. It is essential, if the Government is to come before Parliament asking for extravagant sums of money. We are not talking about trifling sums; we are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars. Surely that, by every canon of parliamentary responsibility, requires a Government to explain itself and to be forthright. It should come before Parliament and explain exactly who is on the receiving end. That is not taking place.

I read with interest a letter which was received in my office just today. It is from a gentleman who lives in my constituency. In fact, he is a former member of the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba with a very distinguished career. It reads:

> I am a director in a small oil company; as you can see by the enclosed copy of our last nine months financial statement we put $6,000 into the Canadian Commercial Bank. You will note the much higher interest rate they were offering than the other banks.

As an aside, I should like to indicate that at the same time Scotiabank was offering 8.25 per cent, Canadian Commercial Bank was offering 10.25 per cent. Its rate was 3 points higher in the same period of time. The letter continues:

> I feel people who go for the highest interest should be prepared to place their capital at risk and, if through greed and poor judgment lose, then so be it.
> By passing the bail-out Bill before the House now, it will only encourage investors to always go for the highest interest rate because the federal Government by this precedent will always bail them out! Don't let them pass it and let the bells ring till an election is called.

That is the voice of one person, a person who has some experience both in business and in Government. He is saying that the Bill has an implication which goes far beyond—and I know that that in itself sounds extravagant—just the hundreds of millions of dollars which will be taken out of the Canadian economy and passed back into the hands of unknown holders. There will also be a precedent set. How can the Government, from this point onward, deny other financial institutions? Does it not begin to give licence to those institutions to say that they can go for the high roll? Could they not play ricochet with Canadian money? If they are lucky and get a good take, they will be very prosperous. However, if they fail, they can always go to the Government to be bailed out because the Government bailed the others out. Why would it be any different? A precedent is being set.

I find it discouraging to look at the statements made by the Minister who presented the Bill and the supporting words of her colleagues on the other side of the House. They do not seem to seize fully the severity and seriousness of what they are doing. They are really setting in motion what lawyers would call a stare decisis which will haunt successive Governments for years to come.

The only way in which the Government could possibly eliminate that founding precedent is to provide us with a clear justification as to why this is such an exceptional case and why this should be given an exceptional judgment. Yet the Government has not been prepared to do that. It has not given the kind of information which Parliament requires in order to make a judgment. We oppose this amendment with sorrow but we also share in the anger of many other Canadians.

This matter weighs heavily upon the minds of many Canadians. It has had a devastating effect on many parts of the economy. It has created a serious sense of dislocation. Many small investors and small business people in the West are disheartened. We hope that it will be treated in a more open, forthright and candid manner by the Government of the day. We hope that Hon. Members on the Government side will listen to these words and recognize that if they proceed in this manner, they will be putting in motion a very important consequence of various kinds of unintended reactions which no one can predict. They will be letting the genie out of the bottle, and I do not know how successive Governments will ever put it back in.

Mr. Tom Hockin (London West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the Bill, not to pose questions, although my comments will—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Under the provisions of Standing Order 36(2), we are in the third phase with 10-minute speeches and no questions or comments. The Hon. Member has been recognized on debate.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us is one of utmost urgency. The Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) spoke about the urgency of moving to some matter about which he was concerned. However, I must say how urgent I feel it is to move to the disposition of this Bill. It is important to relieve the hardship and uncertainty currently being suffered by depositors who feel that the Bill should be passed quickly.

I do not want to prolong the debate, therefore my remarks will be brief. However, I should like to direct them specifically to what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said. He talked about the unfortunate precedent which the Bill may presage. His comments will end up being irrelevant because we will have a totally different regulatory framework for the future. Precedents of a past period will not be relevant into the future because there will be a new regulatory framework. That is what the Minister and the Standing Committee have been working hard to put in place. A new framework, new rules, a strengthened Inspector General of Banks and a strengthened set of regulations will totally exclude any possibility of these kinds of precedents being directly relevant.

Secondly, the previous speaker mentioned the mushroom theory of Government. This Bill really addresses the mushroom theory of banks. What happened was that in 1980, suddenly mushrooming into the Canadian economy, instead of a handful of banks were 70 banks. They were put in a framework that lacked, in my view, the regulatory parameters and the strength in the Inspector General's office to allow these banks to operate with confidence and with effectiveness. It is the mushroom theory of banks with improper regulation that has got us into trouble, not the mushroom theory of Government.

He speaks of loss of confidence and the loss of trust in the Government because of this particular Bill. If western banks are viewed as not being as important as central Canadian banks that would lead to loss of trust and loss of confidence in this country in terms of unfairness.

My riding in London, Ontario is the home of many trust companies and insurance companies. One would think that my constituents would not be interested in the viability of western banks. They are. They believe that, for a united country which is fair to all regions, western banks are important to the fabric of the western economy just as, for example, financial institutions like Canada Trust are vital to the economy of southwestern Ontario. We stepped in and we recognized the importance of that in this legislation.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry also discussed how delicate and how important the banking system is. That is precisely what we are addressing and what we have been addressing for the last few months with the Green Paper on financial institutions, with this legislation and with many other initiatives that this Government has taken in order to strengthen the confidence that people can have in our banking system.

This leads me to my final comment which is that if we follow the advice of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry, and his leader, and reveal the names of all the depositors, what would that do to our banking system internationally? What would that to do our banking system and the confidence that people would feel in it? Confidentiality is the bedrock of the Bank Act and if we are going to change that we do not change it in the middle of some sort of episode like this. That is a matter that would have to be looked at systematically and properly, with proper advice. For the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry to insist that this confidentiality be removed, is to insist on particular action that would diminish confidence and trust in the banking system more than anything else.

It is because of all this that I join with the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) in saying that I as well have every faith in the viability and strength of the banking system in Canada and in its national and international reputation. This Bill, together with the inquiry by Mr. Justice Estey, will help to maintain that, and I commend to the House its speedy passage.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question? The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-79, An Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits.

Upon reading this preamble or title of Bill C-79, some Canadians might be inclined to react by saying: That is a good idea, because if I were involved, I would like the Government to compensate me for the loss savings accumulated over 3, 4, 5, 10, 15 or 20 years.

However, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-79 does not in any way concern average depositors who are covered, up to a maximum of $60,000, by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

I may remind Hon. Members here in the House that $60,000 is quite a lot of money. In fact, the vast majority of Canadians cannot hope to save that much in their entire lifetime. Sixty thousand dollars is a lot of money for most Canadians.

And now, not only does the Government want to compensate these people, something I entirely agree with, but it has introduced Bill C-79 in order to compensate all those depositors with accounts considerably in excess of $60,000. In many cases, we are talking about depositors with accounts worth several hundred thousand dollars. And the Government is saying that we need this legislation to cover these fantastic sums of money in order to maintain confidence in the Canadian banking system!

Mr. Speaker, with respect, I cannot agree with this point of view or this philosophy, which I may say I find absolutely repugnant.

My hon. colleague who spoke previously said it was urgent that the House adopt Bill C-79 as soon as possible. I agree that if one shares his point of view, it is very important to act fast so as few Canadians as possible will realize what is happening to them. It is a shame that the Government would introduce such a Bill to provide assistance to people who are obviously very well off.

Such a program should not be implemented on the basis of simple statements and comments. The financial situation of Canada does not allow it. We cannot do certain things to improve our essential social programs, apparently because the Government cannot afford to do so. Yet, Bill C-79 asks the House to approve a blank cheque which will amount to several hundred million dollars.

My colleague from Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has been fighting in this House for months and weeks to protect the most needy amongst Canadians, those who lack even the basic necessities. Yet, the Government replies: We must tighten our belts, we must reduce our expenditures and it is impossible to do what you are asking. If we ever succeed in reducing the deficit, we might do what you wish, Mr. Malépart.

On the one hand, that is the reply of the Government to the urgent request made by my colleague for Montréal-Sainte-Marie. This is one aspect of this Government's approach.

On the other hand, the Government introduces Bill C-79 which says that, to maintain confidence in the banking system and to maintain our international credibility, we want to be able to pay hundreds of millions of dollars. This is completely odious, Mr. Speaker. These people deliberately chose to make deposits of over $60,000, and people who do so generally have all the facts to make well informed decisions.

If those people decided on reflection to invest over $60,000 because the interest rate paid by these banks was more attractive than those offered by other institutions, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that these people had to accept then and must still accept the consequences of their decision, just as someone who decides to invest on the stock market must accept the consequences of his decision if his investment goes down in value. It seems to me that those who had investments of over $60,000 in this bank should be treated exactly the same way as small and medium-sized businesses whose managers, based on their analyses, decide to make a certain investment, and must then, when they find out several weeks or months later that this was a bad choice, accept the consequences of their decision which will unfortunately lead to a loss. However, the Government prefers to forget its bad decisions. In the case of this bank, the Government would like to use this Bill to compensate fully those who invested, those who took a risk. The Government would like to tell them: It is nothing serious, you will be reimbursed! And what I find rather surprising, is that we can read the following in section 3:

Subject to this Act and the regulations, on application therefor to the Minister by a depositor in the prescribed form and manner, the Minister may make payment to the depositor of an amount equal to so much of the deposit of the depositor held by a financial institution immediately prior to September 2, 1985—

The Government is now saying that it will reimburse not only the capital, but also the interest accrued since September 2, so that the depositor will be scot-free, not having to live with the consequences of his or her decision. Unfortunately, those who will have to foot the bill are the ordinary Canadians who have never had the opportunity to save such astronomically large amounts of money, who can hardly make ends meet, and who do not even dream of saving $60,000 during their lifetime.

This legislation is also odious in another respect. I can see in front of me the Minister who, in Longueuil, promised hog producers $13 million and sheep producers $450,000. These are "peanuts" compared with hundreds of millions of dollars. Yet, the Government keeps saying: «We lack the financial means to help or reimburse you." These hog and sheep producers got into financial difficulties, not because of risks they were taking, but because of bad weather, a busted international market and a great many other other factors which were beyond their control, which is not the case for these depositors who had chosen the type of investment to make and the banking establishment where they were to make it. The Government is now saying to them: "We are going to reimburse you in full, capital and interests." But it says to our sheep producers who really need the $400,000 and some odd dollars and to hog producers who urgently need $13 million: "Be reasonable! You can forget about the money, because we are broke! Period!" I refer again to my friend the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie who is begging for a pittance, a few more dollars in family allowances for Canadian mothers. Although his purpose and intentions are quite commendable, the Government refuses, claiming it has no money. Yet, in front of the same people, the same Government steps forward and states that it is going to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to compensate not the average depositors—and I underline that this is the basic purpose of this bill—but those who had invested in this bank amounts in excess of $60,000. In view of the foregoing, I consider its attitude outright scandalous, and I can understand why PC members are so anxious to expedite matters, for if I were sitting on the benches opposite, I should be damned ashamed to show my face in my riding, knowing that my constituents are aware that I support the idea of compensating these depositors with over $60,000 invested in that bank. At the same time, the Government, in an historically significant gesture, is depriving Canadians of the necessities of life. This is something they are not likely to forgive and forget.

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun-Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I forgot to rise simply because I am not used to listening to such lengthy debates, but still I would like to comment on Bill C-79. I think it is very important, for it does provide us with an opportunity to tell the people exactly what is going on instead of spouting inanities about philosophical views which most Canadians do not even understand.

The purpose of this Bill is to repay people who had deposited more than $60,000 in the two banks, so the question is: just who are those depositors? Are they really people who had bank deposits of $70,000 or $100,000, or are we talking about groups and individuals who were anxious to help the economy of a region or of our country by investing their money? When the two financial institutions found themselves in a tight spot last March, the six major Canadian banks and the Government made a decision, as any company would have done, and said: What should we do? Do we drop the investors? Are we going to ignore a region, prevent it from developing, make it stand still—

Mr. Tardif: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, here we are debating a Bill involving an outlay of $800 million, yet I notice that there are only five Progressive Conservative Members in the House. We do not have a quorum.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member should not reflect upon the attendance of Members in the House.

Mr. Gauthier: It's a quorum call.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: I rise on a point of order concerning the quorum, Mr. Speaker. We lack a quorum!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will count the Members. There are 21 Members in the House and more are arriving. There is a quorum.

[Translation]

Mr. Chartrand: Mr. Speaker, I was talking about people who had decided to help the economy of one of the regions of Canada. I am pleased to have the floor today because people know that I like my region of Quebec very much and work hard for my constituents. But there are other regions in Canada and it is important that we help them and stick together for once.

As I was saying, the people got together last March and realized they had to work and help one another. They decided to leave their money on deposit so the system would get back on an even keel, hoping things would turn out all right. These are the kind of people who can be found in my constituency of Verdun-Saint-Paul, people who have invested some of their savings in pension plans, workers and ordinary Canadians who had and still have confidence in the Government. The question is quite simple: Can we really afford to tell those people: "They made a mistake, and because of this you lose all your money; just stay home, there is nothing left for you". Or should we tell them: "You tried to help, you really tried to stabilize those two banks. We did everything but we will not have the man in the street pay for something which even if it was not a mistake is a situation that would have occurred under any Government.

But there we are. I notice that the Opposition today is constantly criticizing, implying that those people with more than $60,000 are really anonymous people, rich people from abroad, or rich people always trying to put their money in biding. But it may be about time that we tell Canadians, Quebecers, many of whom are wondering: Who are those people actually? Who are those people who invested over $60,000? Well, they are municipalities that need the money to better stabilize their affairs, to do better work, to better invest in their communities.

Look at the City of Verdun again, for instance. Our community is currently going through difficult times. The economy is at a very low ebb, and working capital is hard to get. Are we going to tell the people of Verdun: Now, you have invested. We asked you to keep investing with us. It did not work, so we are dropping you. What does that mean? It means not just a bank failure, but the failure of a whole municipality, which indeed is a serious problem, not just for a few people, but in my area 70,000 people already are affected. This is all one problem.

There is also the question of foreign investments. I think Canada is recognized throughout the world as having so to speak the best banking reputation, as being the safest place. Could we then afford to tell the world: In Canada, it does not matter, you invest your money, but you could lose it just the same.

There are six other banks, six large institutions which at the present moment depend on worldwide confidence. They really need to be able to tell the world: "You know, we respect our commitments; you invest here and help this country forge ahead, develop new infrastructures. We want you to invest, we are not going to tell you one morning: "Oh, you risked everything! Well you have lost everything!" What do you think would happen one month, two months, one year from now? That money would no longer be in Canada. There would no longer be any investments. And what would Canada do? We need foreign funds, we need to have pension funds invested in our banks because they allow various people to carry out important projects in Canada.

Canada is a free country where everyone enjoys freedom of speech. However, we have to rise sooner or later and tell the Members opposite: "You know that when you speak of such things, you are as much involved as we are." If they say that we should be ashamed, I can imagine how they should feel because of their direct attacks against specific people. Again I would like to deal with those who invested in pension funds. You can imagine if they were told overnight that they had lost everything. It would not be just the party in power which would have to pay for that. It would be mostly the Opposition which is trying to make us change our mind saying: "They took a risk and they lost everything, we do not need them." Is that so? This is what we will see.

We Members of this new Government like to become involved. We are not afraid to go forth and tell the people: "Yes, you should invest your money in this country." However, if we lose their confidence, what is the use of working or being a Member of Parliament.

The Canadian people should ask themselves: Has a minority like the one opposite the right to say to the Canadian people: "You took a risk, you lost everything, that is your problem." If I were at home and reading about such things in the newspapers, I can tell you Mr. Speaker, that I would write my representative and tell him: "Stand up in the House and tell them once and for all that the Government is there to help and serve the Canadian people".

They must stop saying that we are trying to change everything, that we are going against the wishes of the people. When we came to power, the Government had many problems to face. We are concerned and we want to improve the Canadian system and I know that the Canadian people are backing us. We have an example today. There were two banks which had problems and all the Canadians are ready to stand behind them and say to the entire world: "We support our country, and our economy, and we will manage to get through". The few dollars that this will cost us, each from our own pockets, I am ready today to put them on the table if they want me to do it. Because as Canadians we are proud, we would not want to lose our reputation. Everywhere in the world, the holder of a Canadian passport gets a royal welcome. And were we to pay heed to what the Members opposite are saying and to go along with them, we would be saying: You lose everything. That's it. Goodbye." You could then imagine, when abroad asking for investments, the answer we would get from those countries, those investors, and the answer we would be getting from those who manage pension funds for large Canadian corporations. What then would we be living on?

In the Verdun area, do you think we do not need that kind of investments? The areas where we lack tremendously ... where that bank money is invested in housing cooperatives, small businesses, because in my area there are no such things as big businesses. But so it is. To sell the idea, I need everybody behind me, both in the Opposition and in the Government. And, for once, we must stick together and tell the Canadian people that what we are doing, the assistance given to those subsidiaries, to those banks, is aimed at keeping our reputation intact. Not only abroad, but at home.

See the kind of publicity we are getting from them ... Let us suppose that all of a sudden, an Opposition Member rises and says: "The Royal Bank has problems". The next day, I can assure you that the Royal Bank would have problems. But this is not true. We should not even listen to their invidious comments because we are trying to help people. We have been elected to serve, to help and to foster the economy.

Mr. Tardif: The rich.

Mr. Chartrand: Again, I hear the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) saying "the rich". He did not understand. Those with $60,000, you know, are not special people. They are people like myself, like a butcher in Verdun, like a blue-collar worker in Verdun having invested his money. You think you can tell him: "You made a mistake, you lose your money!" Mr. Speaker, such people have no place in Parliament. I will always stand up to the rights and the interests of the Canadian people.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 46, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet)—Transport (a) Need to establish "Buy Canadian" policy. (b) Purchase of rolling stock wheels in Canada; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Banks and Banking (a) Minister's letter to shareholder. (b) Position of shareholders; the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart)— Employment (a) Request that Montreal East be designated depressed area. (b) Citizens' committee and union chairmen—Minister's position.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be read the second time and referred to a Legislative Committee; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 7379).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I know that several Members of our party did not feel very happy about taking part in this debate, because it is really incredible, when we see that in a debate that concerns about one billion dollars that will have to be paid by taxpayers to unidentified companies and individuals, that this Government should use closure to prevent further consideration in the House.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that when the Government House Leader moved his so-called closure, announcing the Government's decision not to let debate continue in the House, he actually said that we had already had eight hours of debate and that eight hours was enough.

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker, what about Canadian taxpayers? Do you realize that eight hours of debate represent more than $100 million paid by taxpayers to those unidentified individuals and companies, $100 million for every hour of debate in the House of Commons?

Mr. Speaker, there are only 40 Members on the Liberal side of the House, but we feel we have a duty to ensure that every cent of Government spending, even the billions that are going to be spent on tax shelters for Gulf Canada, even the one billion dollars that will have to be paid to the CCB, we in the Liberal Party believe that Canadians have a right to know here in the House why the Government claims to be acting responsibly from the fiscal point of view while, at the same time, it is giving one billion dollars to unidentified individuals and companies. That same Government is telling families that are less well off, families earning between $10,000 and $15,000 annually, that same Government is telling these people and these families that it cannot afford to increase family allowances or even maintain them at the same level, it does not have enough money to maintain the child tax credit, but it can afford, and this after eight hours of debate, to give one billion dollars to unidentified individuals and companies, both in Canada and abroad, without having given the Members of this House a chance to speak, a right we all have as elected representatives in this House.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, our party has brought an amendment before the House, and that is why our Party, our Leader, we might as well say our president of Public Accounts since he is doing the work of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall), it is our Party that is doing the job, making sure whether the money should or should not be spent, and for whom. As we were able to see, Mr. Speaker, it was the Minister of State (Finance) who said there was no problem. It was her who went so far as to write to the depositors and also to the people who eventually became shareholders.

Miss Nicholson: Shareholders is right.

Ms. Copps: I appreciate the remark of the Hon. Member for Trinity.

Even the shareholders got a letter from the Minister of State (Finance) in July telling them that there was no problem with the Canadian Commercial Bank, that they could rest assured they did not have to worry about their investments. Mr. Speaker, such assurances to the taxpayers, the shareholders and the depositors were given at the same time as the Government was fully aware of the problems experienced by the company, its management problems, and the management problems of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of State (Finance) did not know anything about such management problems in July because she was on holidays. For the first time in 62 years we were witnessing the collapse of a Canadian bank, so where was the Minister of State (Finance)? In Paris, on holidays. Well, Mr. Speaker, one can always make a telephone call, as she said herself in the House. What I want to say on behalf of my Party and ordinary Canadians in my riding is that they are waiting for the Government and the Prime Minister to honour the commitments they made during the election campaign, they want answers from this Government. We are getting complacency, Mr. Speaker, not answers. What we get, Mr. Speaker, is the leader of the Government in the House saying: Eight hours of debate is enough, more than enough, we are fed up with this debate. Well, they are prepared to spend $1 billion of the taxpayers' money, but they think eight hours of debate is enough. Mr. Speaker, do you think that Canadian men and women elected 211 Progressive Conservative Members on September 4, 1984 just to listen to an eight-hour debate on an issue of $1 billion to be paid to nameless individuals, foreign banks and foreign countries, as if eight hours of debate were enough for them? As I said before, Mr. Speaker, with eight hours of debate it works out to over $100 million an hour.

[English]

I wonder if the people of Canada could believe today that this Government which has promised fiscal responsibility and which has ranted and railed against the deficits of the previous Liberal Government, could close off debate after a short space of eight hours? We heard the Government House Leader pronounce that there would be eight hours of debate on this bail-out, that that was enough. That eight hours of debate, Mr. Speaker, represents over $100 million for every hour spent debating this Bill. We in the Liberal Party may be small in numbers but we, along with the New Democratic Party, believe that it is our responsibility to fight the battles of the depositors, the battles of the shareholders and the battles of the taxpayers. The Canadian people listened to the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) when she, from her telephone in Paris last August, made pronouncements on the bank. They listened to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the pseudo-Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tell them the Government did not have the money to pay for family allowances. They were told me do not even have the money to pay for tax credits for families with children, that we do not even have the money to continue the kind of tax benefit package which tells the people of Canada that we support families.

The Canadian people believed that we were going to provide certain incentives which, in no measure, would pay for the cost of raising a family but at least would be some small recognition of that cost. They expected that this Government was going to live up to its promises to families. They did not expect—perhaps they should have—to see what they are seeing now; the bank bail-outs, the Gulf deal, the million dollars tax advantages given to the multinational oil companies. We are seeing for the first time the true blue Tory colour of the Conserative Party.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ran across the country as a "let's pretend Liberal" during the election campaign. He said that universality was a sacred trust. The same Prime Minister said that he was not going to touch the pensions of senior citizens. He said he was not going to deindex family allowances. We heard him last September in the House of Commons promise that he would never deindex family allowances even in an effort to reduce the deficit, but at the same time behind closed doors he makes a cozy deal. At the same time he stands before the people of Canada and talks about his grandiose economic statement. That self-same Prime Minister is meeting with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance to put together a $1 billion bail-out which certainly contributed to the situation which led to the collapse of the first Canadian bank in more than 60 years. Then the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance had the nerve to blame the failure of the Canadian Commercial Bank on the previous Liberal Government. They said it was the National Energy Program. In fact, we know from the internal documents which the Government was reluctant to release, but which it had in its possession when it made comments on a daily basis in the House of Commons blaming the Liberals for the fiasco of the Canadian Commercial Bank, that they knew full well that the full responsibility lay on the head and shoulders of this Prime Minister, this Minister of Finance and this Minister of State for Finance, and we are going to fight them tooth and nail on this billion dollar bail-out.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the comments made in the past few days or few hours, I felt I had to make some observations myself, as the Hon. Member would say.

First, I would like to say that I am quite disappointed at the partisan tone of this debate. In view of the fact that Canadians like ourselves, people with good intentions, made certain investments and went through hours of worry because of the problems faced by these banking institutions, the Members opposite will probably agree with me because of their role in this House that it is important to maintain the credibility of our Canadian banking institutions.

In all honesty, Mr. Speaker, I understand the role of the Opposition. I sat on the other side long enough to know all about it, but I also realize that you have to show a modicum of honesty, and I trust that most of the Members opposite do so.

Naturally, we would have hoped that people would not confuse apples and oranges by speaking about family allowances in relation to this unfortunate development, and the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) is well aware that we did not wish for the problems faced by these banking institutions. The Members opposite should perhaps have the honesty to ask themselves, for instance, when these problems began to surface. We have been here for only about 12 months, and I do not think that anyone can accuse this Government of being responsible for this disaster, because it certainly is a disaster.

In view of the economic situation which was prevalent when we came into power, Mr. Speaker . . . Some may smile, but the Canadian people know that, when we took over the reins of power, the country had a debt of $200 billion, and that this is not the time—

Mr. Gauthier: This has nothing to do with the bank.

Mr. La Salle: This may have nothing to do with the bank, Mr. Speaker, but it is directly related to what we are doing today. If the Members opposite had acted more responsibly when they were in power, we would not be facing these problems today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: That is not true!

Mr. La Salle: Millions of Canadians know this and millions of Canadians decided 12 ou 13 months ago to get rid of the type of Government which was leading our country to the brink of bankruptcy. I think that another month would have pushed us over the edge.

All Canadians know this today. I cannot resist the temptation of making these comments in view of the fact that this debate has been overly partisan and intellectually dishonest toward those—

Mr. Gauthier: What are you now doing yourself?

Mr. La Salle: I am speaking on behalf of all the depositors who were likely to loose a lot of money following the failure of this bank—

Mr. Gauthier: Why do you not name them, Rock?

Mr. La Salle: —including a number of provincial governments and organizations, various municipalities, colleges, hospitals, charitable institutions, churches, ethnic groups, individuals, businesses, Canadian banks, stock brokers, small financial institutions, central credit unions, foreign banks and trade unions, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Not to mention a number of friends of your party—

Mr. La Salle: I have just read the list of the depositors, Mr. Speaker. But Hon. Members opposite do not give a damn about these people. They say that we are compensating the rich on the backs of the poor, when in fact we are ensuring the credibility we need to attract the investment capital we badly need.

In such difficult times now, the small bunch of people opposite who conducted themselves in an irresponsible way when they were in a position to govern this country for so long dare blame us for trying to bail out—

An Hon. Member: Incompetence—

Mr. La Salle: —for trying to bail out . . . Incompetence was the trade mark of the former administration, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: The Conservative failure—

Mr. La Salle: They are blaming us because we are anxious to help these people who, in good faith . . . some Members opposite could be among them; they may not have chosen to invest their money there, but there are some Canadians who did.

However, Mr. Speaker, the more important thing is, and the Canadians must not forget it, that we should try to preserve the credibility of our banks for future investments, and if we refuse to do what we are doing now, and we are not doing it of our own free will—We were not expecting that disaster. It is our duty and our responsibility to maintain the credibility of our banks in order not to frighten away foreign investors, to also reassure Canadians and protect their investments and their contribution by way of an appeal to the private sector to give a new impetus to the economy which has worsened because Members opposite show no respect, Mr. Speaker, for those who now have problems to tackle.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to bankruptcies, I could speak at length, but I do not have enough time. We should remember that in 1968 when I first came here, the Members opposite had a deficit of $15 to $17 billion and now this national debt has reached $200 billion. Each newborn Canadian is now burdened with a mortgage of $15,000 to $16,000 because of the architects of that bankruptcy who are sitting opposite. This is incredible, Mr. Speaker.

And those people dare to try to lecture us on management and administration. I am fed up, Mr. Speaker. On certain days, I can put up with that kind of arguments, but today I could no longer.

And this is the reason why I want to say to all Canadians that we are taking this step for the sake of our future and to provide all the assurance possible to the wealthy who can afford to invest to help the poor. By their underhand practices, they are trying to have us believe that we are against the poor. It is actually for them, Mr. Speaker, that we have to ensure that credibility to recover the wealth squandered by those people opposite and to distribute it more fairly among the needy.

Mr. Speaker, I know that you understand me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is the following one. Mrs. McDougall, seconded by Mr. Hnatyshyn, moves that Bill C-79, an Act respecting the provision of compensation to depositors of Canadian Commercial Bank, CCB Mortgage Investment Corporation and Northland Bank in respect of uninsured deposits, be now read a second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra), seconded by Mr. Gauthier, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

this House declines to give second reading to a Bill, the principle of which is to permit payments of large, but unspecified amounts of public monies to unspecified persons or corporations, thereby substantially denigrating Parliamentary accountability for expenditure of public funds.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been in-depth consultations with the Opposition and I think there might be a disposition to not proceed with a formal vote on the second reading motion but rather to reverse the vote and indicate that those who had voted in favour of the amendment be shown as being opposed to second reading and those who voted in opposition to the amendment be shown as voting in favour of second reading with the exception of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain), the Minister of Labour (Mr. McKnight) and the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga). I will allow equal time for any Opposition Members who would like to be shown as voting in favour of second reading.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, after consultations, I am willing to accept the Minister's proposal. I must say that we would have liked it better if the vote had stood in its original form.

Mr. Deans: It seems perfectly reasonable to me.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am quite willing to go along with this arrangement, Sir, but I would like it to be recorded that I abstained from voting on the main motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that that is the will of the House. May I therefore try to make it easier for the Clerks at the Table and assure that we know who wishes to be added to the vote. The Hon. Minister of Labour, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody and the Hon. Member for Pembina wish to be added. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) will not be recorded on this vote.

The House divided on the motion (Mrs. McDougall) which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, I declare the motion carried. Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to a legislative committee.

Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I will give the House a moment to clear before proceeding.

Order, please. I think I have allowed a fair amount of time for those who wish to hold conversations to go somewhere else to do so. It being after five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

NUCLEAR POWER ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill) moved that Bill C-231, an Act establishing a moratorium on the continued development of nuclear power in Canada for the purpose of establishing a public inquiry into nuclear power that is followed by a national referendum, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to once gain have the opportunity to present a private Members' Bill calling for a moratorium on the development of nuclear power in Canada and calling for a public inquiry to be followed by a national referendum on our nuclear energy future which has so far been imposed upon us undemocratically by the Liberal and now the Conservative Governments. I say that I am happy, but there is a way in which I am unhappy. I would much rather that my original private Members' Bill which I proposed in 1980 had had some effect and that we had gone on to accept its recommendations. That is not the case and so I rise once again to make the case for an inquiry into the entire nuclear fuel cycle in Canada. I do this with the knowledge that when the Progressive Conservative Party came to power in 1979, it held a similar position. At that time, it was about to initiate a parliamentary inquiry as opposed to a public inquiry into the matter but as we all know the Government fell and it never had the opportunity to bring about such an inquiry. The new Conservative Government has been in power for over a year and it seems to have abandoned that particular policy.

Whether we are dealing with a public inquiry or with a parliamentary one, today is one more occasion on which I would like to speak at greater length than I usually can when I have the opportunity to make a statement or ask a question in the House.

First, I am opposed to the investment in the nuclear energy option that Canada has made. Second, this energy path is a path with profound implications and one which has been imposed upon Canadians in an undemocratic way by a technocratic elite without adequate public discussion and with the acquiescence of politicians who have been held captive by the mystique and indeed the tyranny of expertise and the so-called value-free advice they receive from such experts.

One of the few value-free facts that attends a debate on the nuclear issue is the fact that most of the so-called facts are laden with assumptions.What is needed is a real debate about those assumptions and values and not the usual frustrating debate that often occurs with AECL or Ontario Hydro types on the one hand who pretend or worse, actually believe that they are objective while patronizing their opponents as being those who bring only emotional arguments to the table and on the other hand anti-nuclear energy representatives who are trying to move the debate to a more fundamental level. As moral agents, we are all equally able to imagine and choose between human futures. At that level, there is no hiding behind a degree in physics or engineering. Today I want to do a little of that kind of reflection, keeping in mind that we are talking about conflicting world views or paradigms and not a phoney conflict between facts and values.

Let us begin with uranium mining, a sore spot for many Members of the New Democratic Party as it is the one link in the nuclear fuel cycle in which the Party has acted out of line with the view that I am putting forward today. Uranium mining in Canada ought to be stopped for a number of reasons. It is unacceptable because it involves Canada in the nuclear arms race. It is destructive and dangerous to the long-term health of the environment. It often happens in areas that are the traditional homelands of native peoples and the mining is done in such a way as to destroy the viability of the renewable resource economy on which they depend for an economically reliable and healthy lifestyle.

The persistent and not unfounded belief that Canadian uranium is making its way into nuclear bombs and/or freeing up other uranium for nuclear bombs should be cause for national shame. It gives the lie to all the ways in which we Canadians like to think that our hands are clean when it comes to the nuclear arms race. Our hands are not clean; they are dirty. Every time any provincial or federal Government promotes uranium mining as an economic benefit they are guilty of falling into the sin warned against by the biblical warning: What shall it profit a man if he should gain the whole world, but lose his soul? In trying to build economic prosperity on activities such as uranium exports, knowing full well that we are contributing to the proliferation of nuclear weapons, we as a country are selling our souls in a bargain which requires of us increasing measures of oppression, lies and ecological irresponsibility. The alternative vision is to see that an economy based on such moral bankruptcy is no economy at all and to begin now the support of sustainable and ecologically acceptable economic strategies based on renewable resources, renewable sources of energy and fully human development as opposed to the kind of devastating short-lived and short-sighted economic development that has been so prominent in our past.

The CANDU reactor is another aspect of the Canadian nuclear picture which deserves a great deal of attention. A question by me to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Miss Carney) last fall revealed a great deal about the Government's attitude and lack of ability to ask fundamental questions. I asked the Minister if the new Government intended to live up to the Conservative promise in 1979 to initiate a parliamentary inquiry into the whole nuclear fuel cycle. The Minister replied with no hint of embarrassment that the problem with the nuclear industry might only be a marketing one and that she would check with AECL to see if they thought an inquiry was necessary. This was my first strong hint of the purely commercial plane on which the Minister of Energy thinks. It surfaces again with respect to Canadian research into radioactive waste disposal, which I will deal with later.

For now, suffice it to say that it is not just a problem of marketing. The real question is whether we should be marketing nuclear reactors in the first place, not how we could be better at marketing them. This is something that inquiries such as I have asked for could reflect on and, while doing so, it would be nice to reflect on just how the Candu reactor has come to hold such a privileged position in the Canadian technological pantheon. It often seems to me that what has made the incredible subsidization of the nuclear industry possible is the way in which this technological vanity of ours somehow symbolizes for some Canadians our claim to fame in the modern world. This accommodation to the way of the world is something that should be questioned. I would rather our national sense of self-worth was derived from the extent to which, as a country, we were pursuing alternatives to the centralized technological industrial paradigm that is eating away at the future of our planet and the possibilities for a fully human future.

A third aspect of the nuclear fuel cycle which I would like to deal with is the question of radioactive waste disposal. This is a question which has occuppied me in general for some years now; but I have been particularly involved in it through the debate concerning the Underground Research Laboratory at Lac du Bonnet, Manitoba, near Pinawa, going back to May 1980 when I first raised the issue in the House of Commons. At that time I was asking, in co-operation with the Committee of Concerned Citizens in Manitoba, for public hearings into the underground radioactive waste disposal research project which AECL had begun in that area. The Liberal Government of the day refused such hearings and the project went ahead. Since then, the debate about the URL has centred around the question of whether or not the site at Lac du Bonnet should or could ever be considered as a permanent site for disposal of radioactive waste. The NDP Government of Manitoba has said that in its view this is not an option. Unfortunately, no current Government can speak for all future Governments. Even more unfortunately, the current federal Minister of Energy has been unwilling to rule out Lac du Bonnet as a permanent site. Instead, she has created even more anxiety by commenting in a letter to the Town Council of Gimli, who had written her about this issue, about the possible commercial benefits to Canada if we decided to take in the radioactive garbage of the world and dispose of it deep in the Canadian Shield. I have to suppose that this would be part and parcel of the new improved marketing strategy of the Government. We will provide cradle-to-grave services for all our nuclear customers—only Canada will be the grave, the grave for tons and tons of radioactive waste produced elsewhere by our technologies. What a vision! It seems to me that it must take a particular kind of darkness of the mind to see light in such a picture of the future.

Having said that, I want it to be clear that I am not against such research. We have to dispose of what we already have in the best way possible. I am against research which is part of a general approach oriented toward the goal of making the world more likely to produce more such wastes. We should be worried enough about whether we can safely store what we have already produced without asking for more trouble. For this reason, I think that AECL should be stripped of its responsibility for waste disposal and it should be given over to the Department of the Environment and completely separated from AECL, which, in my view and in the view of many people who have paid attention to this issue, is in a conflict of interest that can no longer be tolerated.

In any event, anxiety in Manitoba has been greatly increased of late by the interest taken in the URL in Lac du Bonnet by the U.S. Department of Energy whose interest, I am sure, is more than purely academic or idle curiosity. In fact, it will be able to explore in Manitoba what it has been unable to explore without the co-operation of northern American states which share a similar geography with Manitoba. I know that there are Minnesotans who are concerned about that as well. Manitoba, with no uranium mining and no nuclear power, should be one of the last places to be considered as a site for radioactive waste disposal. Canada—whatever we finally do with our radioactive wastes—should not get into the business of promoting more waste or the importation of it.

Whether in terms of long-term damage to the environment through uranium mining, reactors, radioactive waste, low level radiation, or whatever, or in terms of the sudden and comprehensive destruction of a nuclear war followed by nuclear winter, the nuclear issue raises moral questions of the highest order—questions of inter-generational morality which have been seldom, if ever, raised by previous technologies or available human choices. In pursuing the nuclear option, we are running a risk for the future of our planet that we have no right to take, especially here in Canada where we have the social, economic and political capacity to happily pursue other energy paths, other economic strategies that do not elevate the short-term needs of one generation at the expense of all others to come in the name of a false confidence in our ability to solve all our problems with a technological solution. This false confidence in the technological solution is nothing other than the modern equivalent of the ancient cult of Baal, whereby man sought to manipulate the gods instead of trusting in the promises of God to deliver us from the enemies of life if only we would seek first His kingdom and His justice. The nuclear option is not the only place in modern life where we opt for this kind of unfaithfulness and idolatry. However, for me, and I think for many others as well, it is the central symbol of that idolatry, whether it takes the form of nuclear energy or nuclear weapons. How long we can pursue this idolatrous course without the kind of judgment that those who worship Baal met is not for me to presume. If we do not escape the awful future we are building for ourselves and we do have a nuclear war, it will not be the happy cosmological shoot-out between good and evil which lunatics like Jerry Falwell think it will be. Instead, it will be a judgment on all those who trusted in their horses and chariots instead of justice.

It has been one of the greatest frustrations of my half dozen years here in the House of Commons that I have not been able, along with a handful of others who I know share my concern, to have the nuclear energy question placed higher on the agenda for public discussion and reflection. There has been more debate about nuclear weapons; but even that has not often been enough related to the ways in which the conflict of interest which might precipitate a nuclear war are intimately connected to the false need to protect the way of live which is so well represented by the nuclear energy option—a way of life captive to the domination and exploitation of non-renewable energy resources and a way of life that is ever more captive to corresponding images of national security and the loss of freedom that can flow from the authority of such images.

The nuclear energy option needs to be debated. Canadians are still waiting for an opportunity to say what they think and to reflect together on their common future. I hope that in providing this one small occasion for such a debate, I will have contributed in my own way to that day when we finally wake up to the hidden and, in my view, mistaken assumptions which have made the nuclear industry so sacred in this country.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recognize that it is not proper procedure during Private Members' Hour to ask for the opportunity to put a question. However, I wish to congratulate this Hon. Member for bringing forward what I consider to be a very meaningful issue, and if the Chair would grant me the opportunity—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We must have unanimous consent. Does the House so agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Elzinga: The Hon. Member has asked for a public inquiry with a follow-up, being a referendum, on an issue which is very meaningful to all Canadians. I am curious as to whether his views are consistent on the referendum issue as to whether he would support a referendum for capital punishment?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, when it comes to these issues, I do not think it is purely a question of consistency. I had to face this issue of a referendum in Manitoba when there was debate about whether or not we ought to have a referendum on minority language rights. I took the position at that time, and I take it still, that on certain matters which involve the rights of individuals or groups it is not appropriate to put those kinds of things to a referendum because by the very definition, the majority can take a different view than that of the minority.

There are other questions which are questions which affect everyone equally, for instance, policy questions which affect the common future of everyone. I believe energy choices fall into that category. In those kinds of questions I am not against—in fact I am obviously promoting—the idea of using a referendum as a way of determining what the people think.

Mr. Elzinga: In other words, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is indicating to me that where his views are consistent with the majority, he is willing to have a referendum, but where they are not, he is not willing to have one.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very pejorative interpretation of what I said. I did not say that at all. I have no reason to assume that in all those questions where I would like to see a referendum, that I would be on the majority side. I am saying that there are some questions which ought to be decided by the public and not by a bureaucratic or technocratic elite, which is what has happened with respect to the nuclear question. There are some times when I believe in having referendums but I am also prepared to take my lumps and be on the losing side, if that be the public will.

Mr. Paul Dick (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do think this is an important topic and one which should be debated in a limited way, in any event. It is a matter which brings up a number of issues which have to be addressed over time. I do note, of course, that the Hon. Member passes some kudos on to the Clark Government of 1979 for opening up a public discussion on this matter. At the same time, it should be noted, he voted down that Government. So perhaps he was voting against down on this issue as well as for other reasons. He did not, obviously, want this to go ahead.

Mr. Blaikie: The Government brought itself down.

Mr. Dick: No one is foolish enough to think that. You had a vote. Let's not be stupid.

Mr. Blaikie: Address the issue.

Mr. Dick: Obviously, there is some inconsistency in what he is saying as the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) pointed out.

Mr. Blaikie: Stop crying about 1979.

Mr. Dick: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to shut up for a change.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order.

Mr. Blaikie: Perhaps you would like to talk about the issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope there would be a little more decorum. This is your Private Members' Hour. I would hope that the Hon. Member would be allowed to have his 20 minutes and then we could just carry on.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I listened quite patiently during the speech of the Hon. Member and I believe he raised the subject of the Clark Government and that it raised this subject as a public issue. I believe I can discuss some of the things the Hon. Member raised and if he does not like it, that is too bad, but he should be polite enough to listen to other people.

At the same time as the Hon. Member was talking about some things in the past, I think it would be appropriate to ask him if he does not think in proposing this moratorium he is throwing out the baby with the bath water? Does the Hon. Member want to throw out some of the things our nuclear industry has brought us such as the cobalt treatment which is used for cancer radiation? Does the Hon. Member want to stop the irradiation of food which is being carried out in order to preserve life and make for healthier people in the Third World where there is no refrigeration? Does the Hon. Member want to close down the nuclear isotopes factory in Kanata which produces nuclear medicine? There are a number of things which have been promoted and have been very beneficial not only to Canadians but to other people in the world and these things have come about as a result of nuclear power.

This country has been in the forefront of nuclear technology for 40 years. Nuclear power is one of the most complex technologies of the 20th century. It presents great challenges to policy makers due to the wide ranging technical, health, environmental, political and ethical questions it raises. For that entire 40 years Canada has been pledged to the peaceful use of nuclear technology and I believe we have done a very good job, by and large, on that. I do not want to minimize the fact that there are some problems which have to be dealt with and I have some sympathy with what the Hon. Member has to say, especially in the area of waste management. I am not particularly happy with the dragging of the feet in dealing with that topic. I remember back in the 1970s we were promised that matter would be pretty well solved by the mid-1980s. Here we are in the mid-1980s and now they are talking about the year 2000.

There are points on both sides but I feel to a great extent the benefits we in Canada have received to date outweigh the negatives with which we must deal. There is the negative in the ultimate use of nuclear bombs which has fortunately not taken place to a degree which has wiped out more than two cities and quite a few hundreds of thousands of people, which happened during a state of war many years ago. Hopefully, we in this world have learned something since then.

I would like to talk about the benefits we have received following a Canadian policy of peaceful use of nuclear energy. The Candu reactor is still one of the star performers on the national and international scene. I believe the last time I looked at the figures I saw that six out of the ten most efficient nuclear reactors in the world are the Candu reactors. Candu provides significant benefits to the Canadian economy of which there are many spin-offs. I know there are over 1,000 people employed in my constituency and many more than that in the constituency to the northwest, Renfrew, Nipissing and Pembroke. In 1984, nuclear power generated 12 per cent of Canada's electricity and will contribute about 20 per cent by the early 1990s. I believe it should be pointed out that in Ontario and New Brunswick nuclear energy today provides more than a third of our electricity requirements. Obviously we cannot just close that down. If we did close it down, what are the alternatives? We have dammed virtually all the rivers we can in Ontario. We would have to go to coal which is the only other source.

Mr. Waddell: How about becoming energy efficient?

Mr. Dick: I am sure the Hon. Member will have the chance of opening his mouth at an appropriate time.

Ontario will produce over 60 per cent of its electricity by cost effective nuclear power by the early 1990s. There is no reason to impose a moratorium on nuclear power. It is safe, economical and environmentally benign. The system is working. We can always work to improve it but I do not think we should discard it.

The nuclear power generated in this country has proven safe. We have over 100 reactor years of operation in Canada without a radiation-related fatality. Ontario Hydro statistics show its nuclear workers are safer on the job than when away from work. Nuclear power is economical. Ontario electricity consumers have already saved some $2 billion through using nuclear rather than the only practical alternative, coal. In addition, Canada is saved from having to import almost $1 billion of coal annually from the United States.

A lot of the experts in the field now agree that the disposal of nuclear wastes should provide no problems. In fact the problems have not been solved, obviously to the satisfaction of the Hon. Member who introduced the motion. Nor have they been solved to my satisfaction. I am most anxious for them to get going and work on that problem. I am not willing to listen only to the AECL assessment. However, I believe we have to consider that in Canada we have received an awful lot of benefit from the continuing use of nuclear power. I do not think we have any immediate alternatives. Obviously we cannot get rid of one-third of our power supply in Ontario overnight without considering what we have to replace it with, that is coal. Coal will, on the evidence, produce acid rain which will ruin our lakes, our forests, and cause a great amount of concern for those with environmental sensitivities. We would cause more problems with coal.

Why do we need a commission of inquiry? The nuclear industry is probably the most examined industry in Canada's history. The Ontario Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning has looked into this matter exhaustively. The previous and current Ontario select committees on hydro affairs have done the same. Federal and provincial environmental assessment panels have examined proposals for uranium mining and refinery expansion activities and the Candu reactor on many occasions. Various studies have been commissioned by the federal Government, such as the Canadian Nuclear Industry's Marketing Performance, and a strategy for developing and strengthening the Canadian nuclear industry. There have been nuclear policy review background papers, the Nuclear Industry Review Problems and Prospects, 1981 to the year 2000. They go on and on. None of these inquiries or studies has recommended a moratorium on nuclear power. All have recommended continuing the use of nuclear power where it is economically advantageious to do so. It is also interesting to note that previous inquiries have generated very limited public interest. The Hon. Member indicated in his speech that only a limited handful of people in the House supported his views. I must admit that when he said that it struck me that democracy was truly speaking. He does not claim he could persuade a majority of this House or a majority of Canadians to his view.

The Porter Commission, which sat for many years, developed very little public following or interest. The Ontario select committee hearings had virtually zero public attendance. Church sponsored hearings into nuclear issues held last year in Toronto were given little attention by the public and even less by the press. The previous NDP sponsored debate in this House in February of 1984 on the subject of a nuclear inquiry played to an almost empty House, including the press and public galleries. Why, then, do we need to have another commission of inquiry? Why do we need to have a national referendum? The choice of alternative electricity generating modes is based on complex technical, financial and economic analysis and it would be highly inappropriate to have a decision such as that taken by way of a referendum. Furthermore, under our system of parliamentary democracy, I do not believe referendums should ever be used altough some consider they may be used on occasion. I happen to believe that when you are elected as a Member of Parliament, you are elected to make a decision. If you have not been making good solid decisions over your term in office then the people, in their own way, will decide they do not want your decision-making ability anymore and will throw you out at the next election.

Canada has a nuclear record of which we can be proud. Yes, there can be concerns. Yes, we can always fan embers into flames. However, this is a case where we have to consider all the other options available. We have to consider what has really been done, and not just make inflammatory statements which can be used in a demogogic way. We also have to recognize that the process can be enhanced through the peaceful use of nuclear energy. I do not think we sat back and decided whether we wanted a commission on whether we should use wheels or not. Wheels are also used in warfare and as society moved on we tried to adapt new inventions to peaceful use, at least in the majority of cases. The Candu technology, of which we can be justifiably proud, is one which has received an awful lot of support and accolades from around the world. Candu has been judged to be the most reliable and efficient reactor in the world. The nuclear industry in this country has been supported to a great degree by Governments because of the many beneficial spin-offs which have helped manking. I am thinking of cobalt treatments and the manufacturing of those devices by AECL to be sold to about 60 countries around the world. A process for irradiating food has been developed and it is being used in Third World countries to preserve food in fit condition for human consumption much longer than would otherwise be possible. Then we have nuclear medicine and a number of other uses for nuclear isotopes which are for peaceful purposes and mankind's gain.

Mr. Waddell: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if, considering we allowed a short question to our Member, whether the Hon. Member might permit me to put a short question to him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Do we have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): One short question and one short answer.

Mr. Waddell: In light of the Hon. Member's speech, how does he explain page 113 of the PC campaign handbook in the last election which said that the Conservatives advocated a full public inquiry into the future of nuclear power, and that they opened the nuclear power approval process to the public?

Mr. Dick: We certainly did not say on page 113 that we were going to have a moratorium and we're asking for a referendum. We have not done all the things we promised during the election campaign in the first 11 months, but I can say that we are implementing them at an awfully fast rate and this can be introduced at any time.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I must say that this Bill is the most retrograde piece of legislation I have ever in this House of Commons. The Hon. Member had some very interesting things to say. He quoted from the scripture: "What shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and loses his soul?" Let me say to him that when it comes to energy in Canada the NDP have already lost their soul. It was rather interesting when the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) put the question to him about a national referendum. He wants a national referendum after his great research into the nuclear industry in Canada but he does not want a national referendum on capital punishment. I suppose he would not want a referendum on abortion or the rest of these moral issues, yet he is talking about nuclear energy as a moral issue. An Hon. Member says "job creation", and I am going to come to that.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) talked about the moral issue. Quite often I have heard speakers from his Party talk about how worried they are about the futur of their children and their children's children with regard to atomic energy. Let me suggest to the Member that the scientists, technicians and other people who work at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited or any other related industry also have children and their children will have children. Is he really saying, in a very moral way, to all those top scientists, researchers, labourers and technicians who work in those plants that they do not care for their children or their children's children? You bet they do.

We had up to 2,350 employees working at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited at Chalk River until the axe of the Tory Government fell. Those people are my neighbours. They live in good clean communities. They go to work every day and their health is checked out. There are professional doctors at the plant. They have a biology unit and there are people who take soil samples. I wish the Hon. Member would go into one of these industries once in a while to really find out what they are all about.

Mr. Blaikie: I have been there.

Mr. Hopkins: He talks about the emotional argument of Ontario Hydro and the nuclear industry. What could be more emotional, Mr. Speaker, than the speech he delivered today trying to put fear into the minds of people? I totally agree that the Candu reactor is the safest reactor in the world. He got that little piece in there too relating to the peaceful uses of nuclear energy; not really defining them, but relating them to the atomic bomb. That is where he went wrong. If the Hon. Member and his Party do not have the foresight to support the high technology that we have today in nuclear energy in the future, if they want to destroy that industry, they are inviting Canadians to return to the dark ages. All they need do is look at the oil industry and the gas resources of this country.

The Member is talking about alternate energy, Mr. Speaker. Alternate energy is a very, very small fraction of the energy that this country will need in the future.

Mr. Blaikie: Because of people like you.

Mr. Hopkins: Twenty years from now he will have to live with himself if nuclear energy for peaceful purposes is destroyed in this country because of the kind of argument that we are hearing today.

Let us talk about jobs. If Ontario Hydro had not taken part in the nuclear energy program, one-third of the industries in the Province of Ontario would not have the energy to operate today. We would not have that "golden horseshoe" around Toronto, Oshawa, Hamilton, and Burlington. We would not have the population growth. What does the Member want to do? I always thought that New Democratic Party members were great environmentalists. Does he want to block up every river in this country? Does he want to block up James Bay and flood a large part of northern Ontario? That is one of the alternatives. Yet he says he is concerned about native property and native rights in Canada. He is not concerned about native rights if he is going to try to get enough hydro out of water resources for alternate energy to run this nation because he will not be able to find it. Canadian oil resources will be depleted and we will need something on which to run this country 10 years from now.

I very seriously suggest to the Hon. Member that his children and his children's children are going to ask their grandfather, the former Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill who is here in the House today, where he was when they needed him. We will have to spend billions of dollars importing energy. Since nuclear energy has come into the Province of Ontario it has saved the province in the neighbourhood of $4 billion on the purchase of coal from the United States. That is exported cash. Instead, we are using our own intellectual community, our own health care community, and our own labour resources to develop the Candu reactor which is the safest reactor on the face of the earth today.

The Member wants to represent labour in Canada as a New Democratic Party member. What is he going to say to labour when there is no energy to run the factories? What is he going to say to consumers in any part of Canada that operates a Candu reactor to produce hydroelectric power when their hydro bill increases by 40 per cent? The four Candu reactors at Pickering alone produce more hydroelectric power than it was ever dreamed would be produced by Niagara Falls. If we did not have those four Candu reactors every household in this country would pay 40 per cent more for their energy source.

This has other implications. If the hydro bills of consumers are going to increase 40 per cent because we have not made use of nuclear energy, what will happen to the manufacturing industry in the industrial core of Canada? Imagine how competitive we would be on the world market today if a Bill such as this, which virtually condemns nuclear energy, had been passed? We think we are having trade problems now, but they would be nothing compared to the problems we would have if we did not have cheap nuclear energy from Candu reactors.

I cannot help but feel very sad for people who condemn nuclear energy. They are really condemning the professional community of Canada which works with it. They do not tell us that the cobalt therapy unit for cancer treatment was produced by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. They do not mention that because it is too good an argument. The Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) mentioned medical radio isotopes which have become one of our greatest exports in high technology in this field. We produce many, many of these in Canada and ship them out and it is making money.

I want to conclude by saying that the people of Canada should not take this Bill seriously. The Porter Commission met for months and conducted hearings. While many people appeared before that Commission, there were very few of the public present. Raising fears and killing the Candu reactor, which is one of the finest high-tech and scientific processes, for energy production is like killing the future of this country.

The New Democratic Party can sponsor Bills like this as long as they want but they are condemning high-tech research in this country and condemning Canadians to higher costs of living, higher heating costs and condemning the industrial community in Canada to higher production costs. They will create a total lack of employment for Canadians in many areas of this country.

I suggest that we should follow the positive thinkers in the House and proceed with Atomic Energy of Canada research. We have the professionals who are capable of looking after our health and safety as we progress in this country. Let us not relate the peaceful uses of one of the finest industries in Canada to an atomic bomb. That is a phoney issue he has raised and does not reflect the serious effects which this Bill would have on the Canadian economy as a whole.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on Bill C-231, which concerns nuclear power. The purpose of this Bill is to ask the Parliament of Canada to impose a moratorium on the use of nuclear power in order to proceed with a public inquiry on nuclear power, followed by a referendum.

Mr. Speaker, I intend my contribution to this debate to be constructive, realistic and to have a sense of perspective. It is not surprising that a Bill of this kind should be on the Table of the House today. There is ample justification for such a Bill, because we do not want to repeat past mistakes, especially if we recall that this year marks the 40th anniversary of the first time the atomic bomb was used. People are increasingly concerned about the use of nuclear power, and peace movements and environmentalists are making us listen to their concerns, which is a very good thing.

The general concept is of course a very valid one. However, it is very hard to visualize the logistics or the practical ramifications of such a project. Consulting the people is undoutedly an excellent expression of parliamentary democracy. Given every person a chance to say what they think about a given subject would clearly show that in our political system, there is a very close relationship between the governing and the governed. However, Mr. Speaker, and I am speaking from my experience as mayor and as president of a number of organizations, in this particular case a referendum would be useful on one condition and that is that the subject would have to be simple, clear, and leave no room for any "ifs". The issue of nuclear power is very complex, and in my humble opinion, very few Canadians would be able to evaluate the implications of a decision made simply by checking yes or no on a referendum slip. I would therefore like to take a few moments to elaborate.

Do Canadians realize that nuclear power is used in medical research to fight disease, to detect anomalies and to sterilize laboratory equipment? Do they know there is a process for preserving food by irradiation? Would people be able to consider all aspects of the issue if a referendum were held or even if a moratorium were imposed to give time to examine the question? Electing to stop research and development in the nuclear field would be tantamount to letting ourselves fall behind at the technological level and losing our position in an area where this country has now gained world recognition. Taking the risk of falling behind and losing our headstart is very risky indeed. Are people really well acquainted with the uses of nuclear power? It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that what we know best about nuclear power are its negative aspects. However, most Canadians know full well that our CANDU reactors are still in the forefront of nuclear technology. Mr. Speaker, 12 per cent of Canada's electricity is generated by nuclear power.

In Ontario, 85 per cent of the electricity is generated by nuclear power.

We should all recognize the value of the CANDU technology. Canada has developed a technologically advanced package that compares favourably on the international market. This remarkable achievement is the result of joint efforts by AECL, Ontario Hydro and other organizations. CANDU-produced electricity has an excellent safety, reliability and cost efficient record around the world.

In the summer of 1982, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources released a federal study on nuclear industry. According to the study, long term prospects for Canadian nuclear industry are excellent.

I should like to remind my hon. friend that nuclear power is the cheapest source of electricity in many areas of this country. Is he against progress? Is he more conservative than we think? In spite of the current low demand, CANDU reactors remain interesting both on the Canadian and international markets. They have immediate spinoffs which should not be ignored.

Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd., a Crown corporation, is currently going through a transition period. It has suffered because of a decreased international demand for nuclear reactors which make sales difficult. It remains committed to marketing and development efforts of its main product, the CANDU reactor, to make it competitive with other types of reactors.

In 1984, revenue from supply and services decreased by 25 per cent, going down to $146.3 million, mostly because of the few openings in the nuclear reactor market.

In spite of these problems, the CENARVODA project is going forward and Rumania announced a long-term program to build ten CANDU 600 reactors by the year 2000.

The corporation has signed an agreement in principle with Turkey and is now putting together a comprehensive financing program for the approval of Cabinet. The corporation might also sell other products to Korea, Japan, Yugoslavia and Indonesia, where the AECL has now reached the last stages in its negotiations to supply a nuclear research laboratory.

Mr. Speaker, there is light at the end of the tunnel and we must continue to work together as we strive for it. I am certain that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has no intention of taking away the bread from the workers in this sector.

It is to be hoped that this marketing problem will solve itself in 1985-86.

To support its commitment to more a business-like approach in financial management, the Government has been taking action to improve the administration of public funds. After assessing the role of the AECL in the nuclear field, and especially its research and development activities, the Government has concluded that the CANDU technology has made its mark and is now quite well-known. This is why it decided to reduce the funds allocated to this corporation in its budget of May 1985.

This reduction will take place over the next five years to bring down the amount allocated to the corporation from the present yearly level of about $200 million to $100 million by the end of the decade. However, the Government will continue to emphasize health and safety research programs since these involve the long-term interests of both the Canadian nuclear industry and the users of CANDU technology. The AECL will have to find other potential sources of financing, particularly from major users of the CANDU reactors, such as Ontario Hydro, to compensate for the loss of financing resources for research and development activities brought about by the reduction of the contribution made by the federal Government.

In its budget of May 1985, the Government also announced the closure of two heavy water plants operated by the AECL in Cape Breton Island since the country already has abundant heavy water supplies and there are other sources of production available to meet all foreseeable needs of the Canadian and foreign markets.

The closure of these facilities should save the Government over $100 million a year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT (A) NEED TO ESTABLISH A "BUY CANADIAN" POLICY. (B) PURCHASE OF

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty tonight to remind the House of this Tory Government's failure to establish a "Buy Canadian" policy in Canada in the area of transportation.

Last week I directed a question on this subject to the Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Blais-Grenier), and I see she is in her place tonight to listen and, hopefully, to try and clarify the very vague answers she gave me last week. I wanted to know whether her Government had a "Buy Canadian" policy in the area of transportation.

Her answer was that she was looking at the situation in order to find out whether there was in fact substitution from Canadian production in Montreal to production abroad. What joke!

Mr. Speaker, there is no need for the Minister to look at the situation to realize and understand that many companies in Montreal East which are directly related to transportation are closing down. Bombardier closed down their locomotive plant, because they had no contracts from the Government of Canada.

The CN has laid off 474 employees due to the closing down of its maintenance centre in Montreal, because of the policies of this Conservative Government. The CSW Ironworks have laid off 130 workers, because the contract for 1,000 rolling stock wheels for CP Rail was awarded to a Brazilian company. And the CSF Foundry, the survival of which is directly dependent upon the federal Budget, has had to lay off more than 500 employees.

What more does the Minister need to end her endless studies and take action? All she has to do is open her eyes and see what is going on in her own and in neighbouring Montreal constituencies.

The president of the CSF Foundry Steelworkers Local Union, Mr. Antonio Pennestri, believes the Minister of State (Transport) lacks interest and is showing great indifference to workers' problems.

Let me quote him:

If the Minister fails to move and to award rail car construction contracts, what will become of us?

—this is what Mr. Pennestri is saying. Those words clearly show the concern and the insecurity that company's workers have to face.

As supplementary, I also asked the Minister of State (Transport) whether she would contact the Canadian railways to ensure that they buy rolling stock wheels made in Canada rather than in Brazil. The Minister answered that she was examining this issue to find out exactly how pertinent that matter could be. That was her answer! Ridicule never killed anyone. "How pertinent that matter could be". What does that mean? The workers of the Steelworkers Union do not know what the Minister means. To them, "the pertinent matter" is that under a Liberal Government, they were working, there were contracts for those companies. But now that the Conservatives are in power, there are no contracts and those workers are losing their jobs.

What is quite unbelievable about those 130 people laid off in the CSW Ironworks is that apparently, the contract for 6,000 rolling stock wheels granted to Brazil would save about $100 per wheel to Canadian Pacific. Six thousand wheels at $100 each amounts to about $600,000. Now, due to the Progressive Conservative Government's inaction, those 130 workers who have been laid off will get unemployment insurance for 52 weeks, at about $275 per week, totalling $14,000 for 130 people. It means that the Government of Canada will have to pay out about $1.8 million. Thus, CP will save $600,000 but the Government of Canada will have to pay three times that amount in unemployment insurance benefits.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I find this situation quite ludicrous. The Minister must take action to ensure that from now on, Canadian railways buy their rolling stock in Canada. Otherwise, if the Conservative Government does not act, there will be more unemployed in this area and we will lose a vital sector of our rolling stock industry, which was established at the beginning of the century in the East End of Montreal, where a skilled and adequate labour force is there to do the job provided they get some help from the Government.

I hope that the Minister who has listened to me will finally take on her responsibilities and find some contracts to bring those people back to work as soon as possible.

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his interest—rather sudden, I must admit—in the workers of Montreal East. I will not comment on what might motivate him.

He seems to be blaming me for taking time to study a rather complex file involving such major railway companies as CN and CP. I met with CSW union president Antoine Pennestri who asked me a series of questions. I told him I would have answers to his questions within ten days, and I will have answers to Mr. Pennestri's questions within ten days.

Here is the latest update on this file. In 1984 the Canadian Government placed an order for 2,460 cars, the total amount of new railway cars for 1984 and 1985.

Projected hopper-car requirements are revised in November each year, but the current situation is somewhat special, in the sense that neither CN or CP, I am told, want to make predictions about the number of cars they will need, simply because the volume of rail freight has nosedived this year and railway companies do not expect it to go up again before two years. They are facing drastic cuts in coal, potash and wheat shipping, and their income has decreased accordingly.

In addition, CN and CP are still improving their rolling stock turn-around cycles, so they are making more special arrangements to avoid return trips with empty cars, thus resulting in greater efficiency and a better use of their rolling stock, and consequently a net decrease in the need to acquire new equipment.

With a net decrease in grain production and demand there seems to be no need for the railroads to increase their car capacity. Moreover they can make their own cars, as has been the case with the CN over the last few years. In doing so the CN now competes with production of hopper cars with companies such as CSW since CN can direct and determine its own production according to its needs.

Of course there are exceptions to that situation. In 1984 for example, CN was able to buy cars on a long term lease arrangement. This was very profitable for the company because it did not translate into an annual debt.

However, under that long term lease arrangement, the CN bought 1,600 hopper cars, which after only five years of use were still in top shape and at a unit price of only $20,000, as compared to the market price of $60,000 for new cars. Obviously, nobody would blame the company for trying to lower its deficit and do it in the most effective way possible by optimizing the use of its rolling stock.

On the other hand CP admits buying wheels from the Mafersa company in Brazil. According to CP, and this is something I was not aware of and I am trying to have it further investigated, the tests on those wheels proved very conclusive in view of the fact that according to CP they are of a higher quality and longer-lasting. We are obviously dealing with companies that have to be very competitive on the market place and which must do whatever they possibly can to remain so.

BANKS AND BANKING—MINISTER'S LETTER TO SHAREHOLDER. (B) POSITION OF SHAREHOLDERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, on October 10, I asked two questions of the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) concerning assurances she had given in a letter of August 9 to a worried shareholder of the Canadian Commercial Bank. In that letter she assured the shareholder that the CCB was viable and could be expected to be profitable. If the shareholder had sold his shares at that point he might have received approximately $5 for each one he held. He had originally paid $25 for each one. However, on the basis of the Minister's assurances he held on to his shares and on September 1 the Canadian Commercial Bank closed its doors. This man found he had lost everything. He is not a particularly rich man. The money he had used to buy these shares was part of his retirement planning. He is a farmer who had begun to sell off some of his assets as he tried to relieve himself of some of the hard work of farming in preparation for his retirement.

I also have a letter from a 70-year old man, who is not rich either, who sold his home and was strongly advised that the Canadian Commercial Bank was a good place for him to put his money. He was told it would be a safe investment. He, too, by September 1 had lost everything.

I talked to a widow today who had $5,000 in shares in the Canadian Commercial Bank. This is not a large amount of money to everyone but it is a large amount to her. That money is now gone.

Closure was moved on a Bill which was before the House with respect to reimbursing uninsured depositors. These are depositors who, in any case, will receive up to $60,000 from the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation. A person with more than one account in the bank, perhaps a current account and a registered plan of some type, may receive more than $60,000. The Government is then moving to reimburse them fully for the difference between what the CDIC will pay and the amount of their total deposit.

Apparently, the Government is taking that stand because of statements made between March 25 and September 1, when Government officials made many, many public declarations that the Canadian Commercial Bank was safe, secure, viable and would be profitable in the future. March 25 was the date the Government arranged a bail-out for the bank and injected some $255 million into it. September 1, of course, is the date the bank closed its doors. The Government has, therefore, taken the line that there is some kind of moral obligation created by the statements to pay out all depositors in full. But the Government is not taking the same position with respect to the debenture holders or the preferred shareholders.

My Party takes the position that any moral obligation there may be to pay out uninsured depositors—and perhaps it is a little grandiose to call it a moral obligation—was created by Government incompetence and should not be be binding on the taxpayers of this country. We would not be opposed to setting up some kind of hardship fund for which people could apply, but it seems that some of the shareholders might have just as much claim on a hardship fund as some of the depositors.

The banks who participated in the bail-out on March 25 are also taking the position that if the Government has a moral obligation to depositors, it has the same moral obligation to the banks. We must remember that this is a wholesale bank so the depositors are not, by and large, small individual accounts. The depositors are businesses. And while the breakdown we have been given of categories of deposits shows some individuals, it also shows at least two individuals in for very large amounts—in the nature of $1 million. So we are not generally talking about very poor depositors. We are talking about a lot of commercial paper. And some of the banks are taking the position that the Government by its statements has created an obligation to depositors, therefore there is a similar obligation to the banks who participated in the bail-out.

The banks asked for, as a condition of their bail-out, a letter saying that the bail-out would make the Canadian Commercial Bank viable. They received such a letter dated April 26, signed by the Inspector General of Banks. Between the time of the bail-out and April 26 the banks had been pressuring the Government to do a closer examination of the situation of the Canadian Commercial Bank.

The Bank's original request to have this done on the weekend of March 22-25 was refused. Nothing happened before April 26 when they received the letter saying that the Canadian Commercial Bank was viable. Again, this was a letter clearly based to a large extent on faith. At some point after April 26 a more serious look was taken at the assets of the Canadian Commercial Bank. At the end of June, Mr. Hitchman was appointed and we know the results. Therefore, I would ask the Government to explain what responsibility it is prepared to undertake for its many misleading statements, not only to depositors but to shareholders and to the participants in the bail-out?

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise and answer the question raised by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) concerning our Government's decision not to reimburse ordinary Canadian Commercial Bank and Northland Bank shareholders.

The Members of this noble institution are aware that Bill C-79, which was finally adopted this afternoon, will provide adequate compensation for the regular depositors of the banks that went bankrupt. As the Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall) told the House, the Government feels it would be unfair if the depositors who left their money with the banks, thus contributing to efforts made to keep the two financial institutions on an even keel, were to see their money go up in smoke, whereas others who withdrew their deposits during the summer got all their money back, under quite similar conditions.

Our Government is prepared to compensate the depositors of the institutions that went bankrupt. However it does not intend to extend that support to other categories of investors, that is creditors and ordinary investors, including the debenture holders and shareholders of those banks. Investors should know that debentures and ordinary shares involve a higher inherent risk than simple deposits. Prior rank investors who bought bank debentures did so in the hope of getting higher interest than those granted to ordinary depositors. In return for this higher yield, the holders of those debentures voluntarily assumed part of the risks that come with any commercial undertaking.

Other junior rank investors who bought shares of those banks, in order to participate without limit in the profits of those two institutions, rank equally. They acted in the hope of getting a higher after-tax yield than that given to the depositors of those banks. Shareholders of any private commercial venture, be it a bank or a small business, must be willing to accept the risk of a bankruptcy in compensation for higher gains they would have pocketed if the business had done well.

EMPLOYMENT A) REQUEST THAT MONTREAL EAST BE DESIGNATED DEPRESSED AREA. (B) CITIZENS' COMMITTEE AND UNION CHAIRMEN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, what I have just heard from the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mrs. Blais-Grenier) and from the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) is a shame.

Mr. Speaker, my speech tonight has to do with the incompetence, the lack of understanding, the failure of the Conservative Government, in the face of the 5,000 jobs which will be lost in the East End of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the answer of the Hon. Minister of State (Transport) (Mrs. Blais-Grenier)—usherette and porter; yesterday I had to defend the Minister in committee. I thought there was someone on the Conservative side who was human enough to think of those workers and I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance in waiting, the Hon. Member for LaSalle, stands up for the rich.

Mr. Speaker, my question was put to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). The situation is tragic; 5,000 jobs will be lost by Christmas, which means that 5,000 fathers will not be able to buy Christmas baskets, as the Hon. Member for LaSalle will be, gifts for their children, not mentioning the consequences of this situation in the East End of Montreal ... and I hear inhuman answers from the Minister of State (Transport) and Hon. Member for Rosemont, and from the Hon. Member for LaSalle, Minister of Finance in waiting; they do not understand at all the problem of the unemployed and of the workers, Mr. Speaker.

I would hope that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Hudon) who has a problem of plant closing in his own constituency, will not give an answer as stupid as those we got from the Hon. Minister of State (Transport) and from the Hon. Member for LaSalle, and say: The deficit ... if everyone wants to make money, there will not be any workers left in Quebec and in Canada, and companies will close their doors.

At the rate at which the Conservative Government ... and my answer to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration is the following: Why,—and I hope that, unlike his colleague from LaSalle, he will not read from a text prepared by officials—why is the Government not prepared to declare the East End of Montreal a disaster area and offer the best possible program which would give grants to any firm wanting to modernize and early retirement to all the workers in the East End of Montreal who want to retire. Why was this Government able to find $1 billion when it came to bailing out banking institutions, Mr. Speaker, in order to help a small gang of depositors with $1 million in bank accounts? We have never been told that those depositors were not the fat cats of the Conservative Party in western Canada. Why is his Government not able to find money to save jobs in East End Montreal?

I would like the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to tell me whether his Minister is willing to declare East End Montreal a disaster area and grant it better programs rather than keeping institutions alive. We on the Liberal side are concerned with people. Those are working men and women, Mr. Speaker. And I sincerely hope that, contrary to his two colleagues who spoke earlier, he will reply with his heart, because he has the same problem in his constituency.

• (1835)

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat what my hon. colleague said right at the start when he rose to speak. What we hear is an absolute shame. It is outrageous, Mr. Speaker, and it is true that in my constituency of Beauharnois-Salaberry, I also have similar though slightly different problems, as they relate to the textile industry.

But it took the elections of September 4 for my hon. colleague opposite to find out that East End of Montreal existed.

Mr. Malépart: They were not closing down, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Hudon: No, they were not closing down, Mr. Speaker, but thirteen refineries were shut down in Canada. And how we have all that fuss because one is closing down. History is repeating itself, Mr. Speaker.

During the debate on the de-indexation of Old Age Security pensions, Mr. Speaker, I reminded my hon. colleague of the speeches he made in 1982. It was a shame, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malépart: We won, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hudon: You lost Sir.

Mr. Speaker, isn't it also outrageous that the Hon. Member has just discovered that some people benefit from the indexation of family allowances and yet he knows thousands of people. I am glad to know that they are people with incomes of $25,000 or more, because they are the ones who are going to get it, the ones who will lose. That, Mr. Speaker, is outrageous.

Mr. Speaker, nothing is more easily done than to declare a designated area. Some existing programs deal with the adjustment of workers. Not the former CMAP program, but there is an adjustment program, some kind of assistance. I am referring to the notes submitted by the officials, my hon. colleague—

Mr. Malépart: You see, he has no knowledge of the facts.

Mr. Hudon: I am aware of the conditions, Mr. Speaker. I worked with the manpower adjustment committee and I know how it operates. But it takes a unanimous support and I think that we are getting it from both the federal and provincial Governments, local communities and private institutions. And the federal Government pays up to half of the expenditures to relocate the workers. This is what is happening in my constituency.

Mr. Malépart: They want to move in the West. They want to work.

Mr. Hudon: Well, Sir—

As for the paper and the questions raised by my colleague, the programs are now in effect and they will continue to be implemented as well as the new programs for the development of employment or the whole area of community development and, secondly, the whole area of innovation. This is how we will save the East End of Montreal, and we were aware of the situation before he was, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.38 p.m.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

NEED TO MAINTAIN IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, speak to that all important question which is the footwear industry. At this time, shoe importers are acting on the assumption that quotas will not be extended and are buying millions of pairs of shoes abroad.

As a result, we are now seeing factory shutdowns and the loss of hundreds of jobs, and this will continue in the months to come.

The Government's indifferent and passive attitude is causing irreparable harm to the footwear industry. Not only do we need minimum protection for 50 per cent of the market over a period of five years, but it is imperative and extremely urgent to take a position as soon as possible.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised a quota policy that would protect thousands of jobs. It is up to you to deliver the goods and to keep this promise, otherwise you will have lied once again to the people of this country.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—UNITED STATES PLAN OF ACTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, six months ago when the former Minister of the Environment said that by October she would be able to produce an American plan of action to clean up the chemical dumps on the American side of the Niagara, all Canadians hoped she was right, and even those like myself who were skeptical about the high expectations the Conservative Government had for its new "innocent friend" relationship with the United States hoped she was right. Now we see the fruit of her approach. What action there might be falls short of actually removing from those sites the toxic wastes which are slowly but surely leaching into the drinking water supply of several million Canadians. This is unacceptable.

This omission from the plan is something that we know, not by having seen the plan but by virtue of the remarks of Mr. Lee Thomas at the Ottawa press conference at which he appeared with the Minister last week. What we do not know is what he has actually proposed because the Minister will not make the plan public. I call on the Minister to make it public so that Canadians can know what our neighbour's intentions really are. Are they really serious about stopping poisoning us or not? Perhaps the innocent approach has not worked. Perhaps the Minister should be reminded that those who were admonished to be as innocent as doves were also admonished to be as wise as serpents.

APARTHEID

COMMONWEALTH ACCORD—ROLE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be returning soon from a successful Commonwealth Conference. While the Opposition may wish to play down the Prime Minister's success in bringing well over 40 Commonwealth leaders together in an anti-apartheid agreement, Canadians and the world recognize his valuable statesmanship at the conference.

The Accord which the Prime Minister was instrumental in securing calls on the Pretoria Government to dismantle apartheid, terminate the existing state of emergency, release Nelson Mandela, lift the ban on the African National Congress, and initiate dialogue across lines of colour, politics, and religion with a view to establishing a truly representative Government in South Africa.

The Prime Minister acted as a conciliator and mediator, and enhanced the cause of diplomacy and international co-operation. At the beginning of the conference there was disunity, disagreement, and positions on apartheid which were diametrically opposed to each other. Through the efforts of the Prime Minister there is now unity, co-operation, and a common front of pressure against the oppressive regime in South Africa. This House offers its appreciation to the Prime Minister for his statesmanship and for a job well done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE LATE ALFRED ROULEAU

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, today, I wish to pay tribute to Alfred Rouleau, former president of the Mouvement Desjardins, who died on October 19, 1985.

After founding the Caisse Populaire Notre-Dame du Chemin in 1943, where he was also the administrator, Mr. Rouleau started working for the Mouvement Desjardins in 1949, when he became the managing director and founder of Assurance-Vie Desjardins. His exceptional skills led to his being appointed as the first full-time president of the Mouvement Desjardins in 1972. Meanwhile, he also played a major role in creating the Institut coopératif Desjardins and in purchasing La Sauvegarde and La Fiducie du Québec for the Mouvement Desjardins.

His eminent qualifications as a dynamic manager and builder of great vision were even more apparent during the nine-year period when he was main spokesman for the Mouvement Desjardins. He had an abiding concern for the Mouvement's mission with respect to its members and especially its poorest members, but he also had confidence in the future and embarked on many new projects. Some examples are the Société d'investissement Desjardins, the Crédit industriel Desjardins and the Caisse centrale Desjardins du Québec.

A passionate and popular speaker, and a tireless worker for all kinds of humanist causes, Mr. Rouleau dedicated his whole life to his democratic ideal and to the values of justice, equity, freedom and solidarity. His enthusiasm and commitment were contagious, and it is not surprising that he has been acclaimed as one of the great leaders of his generation in Quebec. He built an empire in Lévis, in the province and across this country—

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I must draw your attention to the Conservative Government's reprehensible manoeuvres directed at people who are fighting against family allowances deindexation.

Mr. Speaker, the hearings of the legislative committee on Bill C-70 were scheduled to last until November 22 this year, but they will be cut short on November 5. Obviously the Government seeks to gag lobby groups by preventing them from appearing or else limiting the time required for drafting their representations.

Worse still, Mr. Speaker, the legislative committee will not even hear evidence from a Pan-Canadian coalition against family allowances deindexation. The coalition is made up of over 80 groups of women, union members, Catholic parents, day care nursery workers, and others. The legislative committee ignores the coalition and would rather not entertain its representations.

It is clear that the Conservative Government was not quite prepared for the kind of flak it got from old age security pension deindexation opponents, and the Tories are now concerned that the family allowances issue might blow up in their face. Well, so they should, for Canadian men and women have no use at all for the Conservative Government's social policies, and elderly Canadians, women and families have spoken against them.

AIR CANADA

FREE TRAVEL BONUS FOR CROSSING STRIKE PICKET LINES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am confident that all Hon. Members are pleased that Air Canada is again serving the people of Canada with union represented workers. It is good to see the regular flight attendants back at work. We are pleased to see that a settlement has also been reached with the support staff of Air Canada.

Labour disputes such as this one inconvenience many people, especially those who respect picket lines and are forced to go out of their way to find other travel arrangements. Some of us, in fact I think many of us in this House, had to go a long way out of our way in order to support Canadian workers while on a legal strike. However, Air Canada has chosen to reward those who crossed picket lines by giving all Aeroplan members who travelled during the strike an additional 3,000-mile bonus toward free travel. In addition, those who crossed the picket lines will receive extra point calculations for trips taken, as thanks for their support. Ironically, even in this issue, people who travelled out of Regina will receive fewer points than those who travelled out of Winnipeg.

My Party and I have and will continue to support a publicly owned national airline such as Air Canada, one of the top ten airlines in the world, as a Crown corporation, and to fight against those who would try to dismantle it. However, we will never hesitate to criticize bad—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

IMPORT QUOTAS—ASSISTANCE REQUIRED

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Earlier this week, Mr. Speaker, I met with the owners and workers of the G. A. Boulet plant located in my riding. The company is one of Canada's largest manufacturer of western boots.

Those people are very worried about what might happen soon with respect to import quotas. They are worried because they fear for their jobs. I share their concern because this company happens to be a major employer in the heart of my riding.

What has me wondering is that when the former Government negotiated footwear import quotas, it deemed advisable not to include western boots worth more than $50 and, as a result, American and foreign producers so flooded the Canadian market that footwear companies such as G. A. Boulet have had a hard time.

Those people are seeking the same market guarantees enjoyed by shoe manufacturers. They have been unfairly treated long enough as it is, and it is incumbent upon our Government to remedy this situation created by the former Government.

I would point out to the Minister for International Trade that the Americans are strong advocates of protectionist policies and that we might take a leaf from their book.

I therefore voice my full support for our own people who have every right to be treated with fairness in this land of equal opportunities. May the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) heed these words of advice.

UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

PROCEEDINGS AT PETROLEUM INQUIRY

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members know of my dedication to the consumer and to small and medium-sized business. Last week the petroleum inquiry reopened. It has been going on for over four years now and has cost everyone over $80 million. I wanted to do some research and took some of the transcripts home to read and study. This is what I found: blank pages, and more blank pages. I found out there were more than 4,000 blank pages in this inquiry.

What I also found out is that lawyers for the big oil companies time and time again turned this public inquiry into a private, secret, in camera inquiry, with the agreement of the commission. These big oil company lawyers did not want any member of the public to see evidence at their unfair trade practices toward independent petroleum marketers.

I urge the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) not to wait for the final report of the petroleum inquiry before tabling his new anti-trust Bill. The big oil companies have controlled the evidence of the petroleum inquiry. Do not let the big oil companies control our political agenda. Bring in a strong law and table it now.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

Today, more than one million Canadian children are living in poverty. More than one million!

My question is about a situation that should be a matter of serious concern to all the Members of this House. The Minister of Finance has just introduced new regressive taxes and above all, he has de-indexed family allowances.

Does the Minister intend to re-instate full indexation of family allowances in order to fight poverty in this country?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me draw the attention of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to the fact that he has only picked one element of the child benefits. He asked if I am going to reindex the family allowance. We have increased the child tax credit significantly. We have reduced the child tax exemption which benefits upper income Canadians and we have just cut back on the growth of the family allowance—

Ms. Copps: Child rip-off.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —but the combination of all of these factors has meant a significant shift in the value of the family benefits to those in lower-income brackets.

Ms. Copps: Not so.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that statement of the Minister of Finance has been challenged by every national social agency. It just does not stand up.

FULL INDEXATION—REQUEST FOR RESTORATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at one school in Toronto 30 per cent of the children are going to school without breakfast because their parents cannot afford to give them three meals a day.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where is David Peterson?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Would the Minister restore full indexation of family allowances which would allow parents to feed their children, and in the case of an individual family it would allow the purchase of one coat and a pair of boots per child in a family which cannot now afford it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not have a monopoly on the sensitivity and the feelings we have for those lower-income Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: Why don't you do something about it?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —who do need—

Ms. Mitchell: Prove it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My point is that we have done a considerable amount in the Budget which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition chooses to ignore.

Ms. Copps: One billion dollars for the banks.

Some Hon. Members: Shush.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East to get out of kindergarten and listen to the answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: One billion dollars for the banks.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What we have done, both in the November statement and in the Budget, is to increase the child tax credit by a significant amount—

Ms. Mitchell: You ought to find out what life is all about.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —increase the exemption for disabled Canadians, which helps 180,000 disabled Canadians, increase the spousal allowance, which helps a considerable number of lower-income Canadians in the 60 years to 64 years bracket—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my final question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. What I am trying to get at here is that there are 75 Canadian cities with food banks. There are 31 food banks in British Columbia alone. The children of this country, one million of them, at the poverty level, should not have to depend on foodbanks for their food. I ask the Minister once again, if he is not going to launch a major attack on poverty, will he at least restore full indexation to the family allowance to protect Canadian families?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have launched an upfront attack on poverty by creating jobs in this country.

Ms. Mitchell: Oh, come on.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We have created 304,000 jobs in first 12 months to August.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That same report draws a very close link between unemployment and poverty. That is how we are attacking poverty, by introducing a Budget, by introducing a statement last fall—

Ms. Mitchell: To starve kids.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —which is creating jobs, which is increasing the confidence of Canadian consumers and Canadian businesses—

Ms. Copps: Talk about children, the children of this country.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —and they are creating those 304,000 jobs. And even the Hon. Member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —knows that in her riding jobs will be created.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

DEINDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Finance.

The Government has always defended deindexation of family allowances as being fair. Today, we know that several hundred thousand single-parent families headed by women are becoming poorer and poorer, and I wish the Minister would inform the House whether he thinks Canadian women do not realize what he is doing by deindexing family allowances.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians are well aware, through the activities of Hon. Members opposite, that we have taken action to limit the growth of family allowances in conjunction with a drop in the child tax exemption, which is a benefit to upper income

Canadians, and a significant increase in the child tax credit. The result of that package—and you cannot look at one element of the package without looking at the other two; you have to look at them all—has been a major shift of benefits from upper income to lower-income Canadians. Anyone who wants to analyse that will agree with the statement I have just made.

BILL C-70—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary was for the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, but in his absence, I will direct it to the Deputy Prime Minister.

We are aware that the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence has now committed his Government to spending millions of dollars on the defence of our country. I would like to know whether the Minister is prepared to ask his Government today to withdraw Bill C-70 and allocate $55 million, over three years, to the family allowances program.

[English]

Ms. Copps: No answers from the Tories on child tax benefits.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the question was addressed to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women who is not in the Chamber at the present time.

Ms. Mitchell: Neither is the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gauthier: Where did you hide him?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If a question was asked, surely it was intended to have an answer. If all the yelling prevents an answer, it leads one to wonder whether the question was asked to get an answer at all.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in answering that question. I do not know of any Government in modern Canadian history which has done more for the women of Canada, and more for the people of Canada in general, regarding job creation. I think the Liberal Party would have killed for the statistics we are producing on the economic front.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF FULL INDEXATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister implied that poor people stood to gain a lot from his Budget. Experts throughout Canada have denied this, saying that his Budget is very unfair to the poor, and that is a fact.

My simple request to the Minister is this: Once the Prime Minister is back, would the Minister suggest to him that the Government ought to maintain full family allowances indexation?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the reality of this Government is that 304,000 jobs have been created in our first 12 months in office. The report which has been referred to here draws a very clear think between poverty and job creation. We are creating jobs. We are attacking the causes of poverty head on. The Hon. Member should be congratulating us for that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Don't hold your breath.

CORPORATE TAX LEVEL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the reality that Canadians know is that we have four million people in general living in poverty, and one million children. That is a disgrace for which the Government has to accept responsibility.

• (1425)

We also learned last Friday that in spite of profits the corporate sector in Canada is paying the smallest share of the total tax burden that it has paid in more than 10 years. Would the Minister show some concern about the poor and a sense of justice, by guaranteeing the people of Canada that he will bring in measures soon that will get the corporations to pay their share of taxes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the basis for the Hon. Member's question. Actions speak louder than words. Let us go back and I will tell you what we have done.

Mr. Broadbent: What you have done for the banks.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In October we cancelled the Scientific Research Tax Credit which had resulted in over a $1 billion tax rip-off for the corporate side. We stopped limited partnerships. I announced carve-outs action this past summer. The Member for Kamloops-Shuswap asked me if I would table in the House the tax expenditure paper so that people could analyse the tax expenditures that corporations were getting. I have provided that information to the Hon.

Member. I am still waiting to hear if the Hon. Member has any specific suggestions what we should do with that tax expenditure paper so that I can take those into account in advance of next Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister has increased taxes for the average family by $1,000 and given the banks over $1 billion. That is his set of priorities and we all know that.

CORPORATIONS' SHARE OF TAXES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): If corporations were paying taxes at the level they were paying in 1975—no more, but no less—we would have $3.5 billion in additional revenue. Would the Minister at least get the corporations to pay that share of taxes and then use that money to remove thousands of families from the poverty level?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the amount of money that has been given to banks. It has not been given to banks. It has been given to Canadians who have deposited money in banks; some of them individuals, some of them small businesses, some of them credit unions and caisses populaires which are representative of what he likes to refer to as ordinary Canadians, right across this country. We had a great deal of concern for them in making that decision.

Mr. Benjamin: You have cake all over your face.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I remind the Hon. Member of the actions that we have taken and the commitment that I have made directly to him that we are continually reviewing the corporate tax structure. I released a paper in the May Budget which sets out a proposal to take some of those tax expenditures away from the corporations so that we can broaden the tax base and address the problem that the Member is referring to in his questions.

REQUEST FOR FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well. As a result of the economic and social policies instituted in the May 23 Budget his Government will create, for the first time in Canadian history, a generation where children will be poorer than their parents. Knowing this, will he now reverse the Budget's direction and restore full indexation to family allowances?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is becoming clear that the members of the Liberal Party who did not attend the committee meetings, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare has said, are suddenly feeling the heat. They are suddenly feeling that they have not addressed this problem.

Ms. Copps: Where's the Minister today?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Now they have to come and make a big display here in the House of Commons. I will repeat to the Hon. Member what I have said in previous answers. What Canadians want is more jobs, and 304,000 have been created in the last 12 months.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Finance not aware that every social council group that testified before the standing committee indicated that his social policy direction is Robin Hood in reverse, that the poor will get poorer and the rich richer? They would like to know why the Government has chosen to break its promise of last summer that it would never take out the burden of deficit reduction on the backs of poor and middle-income Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians do understand results rather than the words of the Hon. Member. The unemployment rate on September 1, 1984, was 11.6 per cent. It is now 10.1 per cent. The youth unemployment rate was 18.3 per cent and it is now down to 16.1 per cent. Interest rates have dropped over 3 percentage points. Housing starts have gone from a level of about 130,000 to about 170,000—

Mr. McKnight: One hundred and eighty-five thousand.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): One hundred and eight-five thousand.

Ms. Copps: one in five children is living in poverty.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

REPRESENTATIONS BY WOMENS' ORGANIZATIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Did he meet today with representatives of the many women's organizations that also represent many thousands of voters, who are demanding the reindexing of the family allowance? What does he say to those women and to Canadian women across the country who are demanding their right to fully indexed family allowance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind Hon. Members that is behind the decision by the Government to reduce—

Mr. Rossi: Did you meet them? Yes or no.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I would ask the Hon. Member to listen to the response. I ask Hon. Members to consider the reason behind the decision to reduce the growth rate of the family allowance. It is the deficit.

The burden of the deficit in this country will fall on those very Canadians, the younger Canadians whom the Hon.

Member seeks to protect. We are very concerned, as are younger Canadians, about the effect of that deficit and the burden that they will bear through high taxes and a reduction in Government programs over the years if we do not take action today. I ask her to take that into account when she considers this matter.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to listen to Canadian women, particularly to women who believe that by deindexing the family allowance he is taking milk out of the mouths of babies.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: It is true.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dick: There is more money going to them.

Mr. Broadbent: Look at the figures.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I know that it is Wednesday.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister can at least listen to what women across Canada are saying. Does he not realize that they are beginning to understand that by deindexing the family allowance and other benefits he is in effect taking money from their children in order to give $1 billion to the banks, not to mention all the oil companies?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am starting to repeat myself because the questions are beginning to be the same. I will not repeat myself totally, but I would remind the Hon. Member that the action concerning the banks was not to help the banks but to help Canadians who have money on deposit in the banks.

Mr. Broadbent: Give us a list.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Give us the list and we will take a look at it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The point I have made in response to previous questions is that what the housewives, for whom she says she is speaking, want the most is a job themselves, or a job for their husbands, or jobs for their children.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Over the past year we have been able to generate the environment to produce 304,000 jobs, to produce a drop in bankruptcies for the first time in about five years, and to increase retail sales by some 13 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, representatives of millions of Canadian mothers came to see the Minister of Finance—and of incompetence and lack of understanding.

Let us just say that not a single Cabinet Minister attended today's Conservative caucus to meet with them.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence. In his Budget the Minister of Finance announced that the Government would reduce family allowances and the child tax credit by $55 million. Would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to reallocate the $56 million wasted to change the colour of military uniforms just so the Minister of Finance might restore full family allowances indexation?

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why they are so feisty over there, particularly in view of the fact that it was this Party that went up 2 per cent in the polls and they who went down.

The Minister of Finance started to provide statistics with respect to the recovery of the economy which suffered so desperately for 20 years under the previous Government. Let me finish by comparing the mortgage rate reduction which has gone from 14.25 per cent under that administration to a low of 11.75 per cent in one year. The chartered bank rate went from 13 per cent a year ago down to 10 per cent now. It is a seven year low in the interest rate.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: The Bank of Canada rate went from 12.38 per cent a year ago to —

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, Charlie Brown Junior who is substituting for our official Charlie Brown makes it quite clear that he does not know a thing. Mothers can hardly be expected to feed statistics to their children.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, the question is directed—

REDISTRIBUTION OF BUDGET CREDITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): I will repeat my supplementary question. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether he is prepared to give back to the Minister of Finance the $56 million he has wasted to change the colour of our military uniforms just so he might restore full family allowances indexation, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this question is being asked very sincerely. I would ask Hon. Members to ask those who are raising this question with them to consider that the debt facing each family today is $26,000. If we do not take action on the national debt, the debt per family will be $54,000 in five years.

I ask Hon. Members to consider the impact of that on take-home pay if that increase is paid for by increased taxes on Canadians. That is why we must do this and why we are going to follow through with our commitment.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INELIGIBILITY OF NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. All of the reports coming from eastern Canada indicate that the fishing season there is very poor and that fishermen will in fact not be able to work the minimum required weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance. Last night we saw the spectacle of fishermen being forced on to the welfare rolls. Will the Minister tell the House what she intends to do specifically about that particular problem?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to tell the Hon. Member and Members of the House that toward the end of last week I met with the Minister of Career Development for Newfoundland, with the President of the Allied Workers and Fishermen's Union and, of course, with my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Justice. We have undertaken to look at ways in which both the federal and provincial Governments can be involved in addressing that very real problem in northeast Newfoundland. I expect to be able to make an announcement in that regard within a few days.

PLIGHT OF FAMILIES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there are already 4 million people living below the poverty line and that 7,000 families in the fishing industry in eastern Canada are very anxious to know specifically what the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a preamble. Is there a question?

Mr. Rodriguez: Why must these fisherpersons wait? The banks did not have to wait, and Gulf did not have to wait.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I was asked by both the Government of Newfoundland, and indeed by the president of the union, to delay any final decision in order that they could provide their input to the solutions which we hope to bring forward. I would simply tell the Hon. Member that the announcement about this is now being worked out. I would be glad to make that information available to him within a few days. I think he will be quite happy with the results.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

INTRODUCTION OF REFORMS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I would like to direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary.

The efficient functioning of the credit market is key to a recovering economy. Despite this, our bankruptcy legislation gives harsh and unfair treatment to unsecured creditors, suppliers of inventory to an insolvent company, and to workers with unpaid wages. When will the Minister present specific legislative proposals for Bankruptcy Act reforms to correct these grave injustices?

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the concern of the Hon. Member for London East on this subject because of his active involvement in business before becoming a Member of Parliament.

Our report from the committee studying the issue of bankruptcy as it pertains to small businesses, accounts receivable, and employees, is to come down in approximately two weeks and legislation will be introduced in the House in the new year. This should have happened years ago under the former Government when bankruptcies were at an all-time high.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the former Communications Minister. I am sure the Solicitor General is aware of the principle in our justice system that says all persons should be treated equally before the law and there should not be any political interference.

By personally intervening in the investigation, the Solicitor General displayed abysmally poor judgment—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Nunziata: —and compromised this principle. In view of the fact that his predecessor—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is now beginning a second preamble. Just a question please.

Mr. Nunziata: In view of the fact that his predecessor was demoted for similar incompetence, will—

Mr. Crosbie: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the Member please come right to his question?

Mr. Nunziata: Will the Solicitor General do the honourable thing and admit here today that he was wrong to call the Commissioner? At the very least, will he admit that there is an appearance of interference?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can say as a former Minister of National Revenue that I certainly would not consider an appointment to that portfolio a demotion. I enjoyed it thoroughly.

The other question which the Hon. Member raised was whether there was a principle of equal justice under the law. Let me respond by saying, yes, there is. It is precisely for that reason the Solicitor General has the obligation, whenever there is an allegation of impropriety on the part of the RCMP or any other police agency, to ensure that the allegation is fully investigated.

It may be the policy of the Liberal Party that when allegations are made a Solicitor General has no responsibility to protect the rights of citizens. That is not my policy, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, we all know why he made the telephone call. It seems that Boy Wonder's image is slightly tarnished.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order.

Mr. Nunziata: Would the Solicitor General advise the House today whether he or any members of his staff communicated either directly or indirectly with the former Communications Minister, specifically with reference to the RCMP Investigation?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): I will not respond in kind to the Hon. Member's assertion, Mr. Speaker. I think Canadians will consider the source when they judge that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I will respond directly to the Hon. Member's question, Mr. Speaker. The answer is no.

Oral Questions

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

INCREASED ROLE OF VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. According to the National Council of Welfare, the number of Canadians living in poverty has increased each year since 1980. This year over four million Canadians are living in poverty and over one million of those are children.

In every province there has been a sharp increase in the number of people getting essentials, such as food—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Orlikow: —and used clothing from voluntary agencies.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have a question, please?

Mr. Keeper: He is asking it.

Mr. Orlikow: Does the Government accept this development of the increasing role of charity as the way in which the needs of the poor will be met in the coming years?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sensitive and concerned about the increase in the level of poverty in Canada, just the same as the Hon. Member is. We, however, have a different approach to solving the problem.

Our primary approach is to set the groundwork so that more and more jobs are created so that people who are living in poverty today will no longer be in that situation because they will have found a job. There is a role to play for the volunteer agencies and for Government social programs.

I should remind the Hon. Member that the social envelope this year, under this Government, is going up by a full $2 billion. It is not that we are neglecting our responsibilities. Far from that, we are increasing our responsibilities.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious with an increase in what the voluntary agencies are doing that the system is not working.

Will the Government consider discussing with its provincial counterparts what is wrong with the system, why we need increased charitable efforts, and what we need to make the system work as it should?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to bring the suggestion to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I do ask the Hon. Member to remember that we are seeing real performance here. Three hundred and four thousand jobs is good performance. The figures to which the Hon. Member was referring were 1984 figures. If he has a look at the 1985 figures, I think he will be pretty happy with what he sees.

Oral Questions

PENITENTIARIES

UNITED STATES PROGRAM TO EMPLOY INMATES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and concerns prison reform.

A few weeks ago, Chief Justice Berger of the United States visited Canada. He talked about how in the U.S. the Americans are creating meaningful, market-oriented jobs and job training programs, rather than having prisoners work on rock piles. Does the Solicitor General see merit in this program and will he be making similar plans for our prisoners?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of talking about this particular proposal with Chief Justice Berger when he was in Canada. He is a very strong advocate of work as a form of rehabilitation. I firmly share his view that the single most important thing we can do to reform inmates is to use their time productively and prepare them for reintroduction into society.

The Correctional Service of Canada has a number of programs which are designed to do that. I think they can be improved upon, however. They can also bring great benefit to society in defraying some of the costs of running our prison system.

MAINTENANCE OF QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The epidemic of factory closings is continuing in Montreal East. Daoust, Lalonde and probably Chaussures La Parisette . . . 260 jobs are being theatened as a result of the Conservative Government's failure to reach a decision. Does the Minister realize that wholesalers are not buying at this time because they do not know whether the Government is going to maintain the quotas? Is the Government going to announce right now what its decision will be and so create a healthy climate in the footwear industry?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated before, that announcement will be made quite soon.

REQUEST THAT QUOTAS BE RETAINED

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Government's inaction has led footwear manufacturers and retailers to form a common front against the elimination of quotas. Is the Minister going to act responsibly and maintain the quota system before the footwear industry becomes another Schefferville?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know certain opposition Members like to dwell on what they think is unfavourable news.

It would be such a tonic to hear them dwell on the favourable news with respect to that fine Province of Quebec where unemployment is actually coming down, contrary to what happened under the former Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

ANTI-SMOKING CAMPAIGN—TOBACCO ADVERTISING COMPANIES' TAX SUBSIDY

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced a $1.5 million anti-smoking program. At the same time he acknowledged that compared to the multi-million dollars the tobacco industry has for advertising the $1.5 million is peanuts.

Could the Minister of Finance advise the House whether he is considering bringing an end to the huge tax subsidies, which the Government gives to the tobacco advertising companies, to make the competition a little fairer?

● (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I make two comments on that suggestion. One is that I have received some complaints from the tobacco companies and the tobacco farmers and producers that the 25-cent-a-pack increase in the tax on cigarettes was excessive, so I think I am going the same way that the Hon. Member has suggested that I go, in opposition to the point of view of the companies. In addition to that, as he knows large corporations are all paying a surtax this year as part of the Budget proposals, to control the size of the Government debt.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, we are more concerned with the health of Canadians than we are with the tobacco companies. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he does not think it to be a complete contradiction, if not hyprocrisy, to say to Canadians that we will give them $1.5 million for an anti-smoking campaign while continuing to give the tobacco advertising companies $45 million of taxpayers' money.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I would have to think back, but I believe that the money raised from the increase in excise tax on tobacco is something like $250 million or $300 million. I think those numbers speak for themselves.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES IN MONTREAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services.

About ten days ago, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau, asked the Minister what the Government intended to do to give workers at Versatile Vickers in Montreal the assurance that the frigates ordered by National Defence would be built in Montreal at the Vickers yards.

The Minister said at the time that he would have to get legal advice before giving us an answer.

My question is quite straightforward. Now that the Minister has had ample time to get legal advice, could he let us in on the secret and inform the House what the Government intends to do to give workers at Vickers the assurance that the contract will be carried out in Montreal as planned?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): The first point that I would like to bring to the Hon. Member's attention is that the jobs in question were never going to come into being until 1988. That was the date that the work on the frigates in the Montreal yard was going to commence. So, whatever happens we have two years' lead time to fill the gap, if indeed there is going to be a gap.

The second point is that the contract involves the Saint John Shipbuilding Company and Versatile Vickers Inc. The Government of Canada has no contract directly with Versatile. Therefore we have very limited room in which to manoeuvre.

Having said all that, we are continuing to investigate and to do everything we can to accommodate this situation.

DETERMINATION OF REGIONAL PRIORITIES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I am not very happy with the Minister's vague reply, and I would like to put a very simple question to him as a supplementary.

Is he informing the House that from now on, the private sector is going to determine regional development priorities in this country? Is that what he was trying to explain?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): No, but what I am saying is that when two parties have made a contract the only two parties that can interfere are one and the other. The Government is not going to inject itself into a contract when it is not entitled to do so.

Ms. Copps: What about the banks?

Mr. McInnes: The Government will endeavour to discuss, to encourage, and to do what it can in any situation, but it will not dictate.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SERVICING OF POLISH FISHING VESSELS AT ESQUIMALT, B.C.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Because of the Minister's interference the Port of Esquimalt and the Province of British Columbia stand to lose a multi-million-dollar contract for routine repairs and servicing of Polish fishing vessels.

I would like to ask why the Minister is deliberately frustrating this deal and allowing Americans to take away this contract and these jobs from British Columbians.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, contrary to the allegations that are being made by the Hon. Member, there is no deliberate frustration of what he refers to as a deal. There are facilities elsewhere in the Province of British Columbia that can care for the needs as they arise, if he is speaking about the same thing that I think he is, which is the naval base at Esquimalt.

SECURITY CONSIDERATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): I would like to ask why the Minister refuses to agree to this deal for security reasons when the Hon. Member for Victoria, who was a former Minister of National Defence, says that he sees no security risk involved and he claims that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in favour of allowing this deal to go through. Why is the Minister of National Defence more paranoid than his colleague?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): I really do not know whether the additional allegations of the Hon. Member with respect to conversations between the Hon. Member for Victoria and the Secretary of State for External Affairs are accurate or merely a product of his own frenzied imagination, but I will certainly consult with both hon. gentlemen on the question.

Oral Questions

CANADA PENSION PLAN

HOMEMAKERS' PENSION INQUIRY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Proposed changes to the Canada Pension Plan, including the introduction of a homemaker's pension, are currently under review and being negotiated between the federal Government and the provinces. Could the Minister give the House an idea of when these negotiations are going to be concluded and when Canadians can really expect a homemaker's pension?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been raised on a couple of occasions recently at federal-provincial Ministers' meetings. The matter is under review. There are no negotiations under way, but consultations to review the options. At this point I have no timetable that I can give the Hon. Member, but I do advise you that things are continuing to be reviewed.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the chronic unemployment situation in Newfoundland and other parts of Atlantic Canada where it exceeds 40 per cent to 50 per cent in some communities, based on the principle of fairness and need, what special measures would the Minister of Finance introduce to protect and enhance economic opportunities in those less fortunate regions of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of things that have been done over the past year: the Atlantic Accord; the assistance to the Fisheries Products International Company; the Cape Breton Island tax credit; the fact that we enhanced equalization payments to all of those provinces earlier this year. That is a pretty positive package that indicates our concern for those in Atlantic Canada who are suffering from higher levels of unemployment than other parts of the country.

MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I would say to the Minister, Mr. Speaker, that that is a lot of concern but not much action. I remind the Minister that communities in northeastern New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and Cape Breton are not impressed with the results to date. Would he not agree to implement the recommendations as advocated by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities for infrastructure moneys so that thousands of jobs can be created in those less fortunate regions of Canada? Will he do that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the thing that puzzles me about this place is why Hon. Members deliberately distort the statements that have just been made by Members. The programs that I just set out in my previous answer amount to millions and millions of dollars that have been spent or will be spent under established programs in that part of the country.

I have said in this House on a previous occasion that I was open to suggestion from the municipalities, and I am still listening to what they have to say.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. The Minister knows that at least one shoe company in southern Ontario has closed a plant and is in the process of dismantling another one unless it gets an answer on the quotas forthwith.

Will the Minister give an undertaking now to bring forward the reply with regard to quotas within the next week?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Member knows full well the tribunal decision on this matter: the fact that no damage was found with respect to most of the footwear industry. This is what we are now working with, and I can assure the Hon. Member we have concern as far as these factories are involved and as far as the industry is concerned, and we will be taking effective steps as soon as possible.

• (1500)

TIMING OF DECISION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is it not possible to recognize that the industry must do its planning for next spring and summer now and that, if it does not do it now, it will lose its customers? With that in mind, how long will it take for the Minister to bring forward the proposal for the extension of the quotas or whatever other program he intends to implement?

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be assured that we share his concern. We realize the need for an early decision, particularly in reference to the fact that planning must be done six to 12 months in advance. That is one of the reasons why we intend to make an early decision.

CLERK OF PETITIONS' REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of two, presented by Hon.

Members on Tuesday, October 22, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

The petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) and the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to advise the House that prior to Question Period, I informed the Opposition House Leaders of the business for the next two days. It is my hope that today we will make progress on the Bill which we are now considering, the Bill dealing with employment equity. Tomorrow it is my intention to call as the first item of business, however, Bill C-80, a Bill respecting the Excise Tax Act, and I would like to designate this coming Friday as the first allotted day in this trimester. I will be making the conventional statement with respect to Business of the House tomorrow at the usual time.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will be luckier this time. It is my privilege to table a petition signed by a number of individuals from the City of Toronto who call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure on behalf of the residents of Rosemont—

Some Hon. Members: Shush!

Ms. Copps: —to present a petition calling upon the Government to back off on its cut-back on family allowances and the deindexation of pensions.

Mr. Crosbie: Sit down.

Ms. Copps: I realize that it hurts Government Members because most of them did not bother to show up at the meeting with the women of Canada but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have here a petition against the federal Budget which was circulated by women who are opposed to the family allowances Budget provisions aimed at lessening the protection against inflation, and they request that those provisions be withdrawn without delay.

[English]

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from Women Against the Federal Budget who state that children are everyone's responsibility. They oppose the Budget proposal to reduce the cost of living protection for family allowances and demand that this proposal be withdrawn.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of individuals from Toronto who state that the deindexation of the universal family allowance is an unfair attack on women and families and who also state that this attack will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that other tax increases in the May Budget will place an unfair burden on low and middle-income earners.

OPPOSITION TO CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN SDI

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by University of Ottawa faculty and students who humbly declare that the American military research program on ballistic missiles is badly defined from a scientific viewpoint, that Canadian Government participation in this program would amount to a de facto endorsement of the arms race, and that Canadian participation in the SDI test program would undermine the international political credibility of Canada.

Consequently they strongly urge the Government of Canada to turn down the invitation to participate in the American SDI research program.

[English]

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of presenting a petition on behalf of a number of people from the fine Province of British Columbia. They make the point that accelerating cut-backs to child benefits on top of sales tax changes and increases, excise tax increases and stiff income tax increases are unfair and place an extraordinary burden on middle and low-income Canadians and they call upon Members of the House of Commons to reinstate the full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many women from Halifax, Nova Scotia, Women Against the Federal Budget, in which they decry and oppose the deindexing of the family allowances proposed in the Budget and call upon the Government to reintroduce full indexation of family allowances.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present another petition signed by many members of the National Federation of Nurses Union from Thompson, Manitoba and Winnipeg in which they call upon the Government to rescind the proposal which would see pension income being considered as earned income for unemployment insurance purposes.

RESTORATION OF FULL INDEXATION TO FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from members of Local 397 of the Office Professional Employees' Union, most of whom are women supporting families, in which they humbly sheweth that the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Speaker: I have to remind the Hon. Member that the rules require one to eschew the reading of a petition.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions from people from the Ottawa Valley and the Prince Albert area which call up the Government to recognize the inequitable and unbearable increased burden on poor families caused by the deindexation of family allowances, and which point out that this seems very unfair in light of the $9 billion that is handed out to oil companies and the $1 billion that was just received by the banks.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present, on behalf of a group of citizens of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, a petition which asks the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to present petitions from over 400 persons resident in the City of Thunder Bay and the Indian reserve at Gull Bay protesting the decision of the Government to deindex the family allowance and to make other changes which represent a loss to even the poorest families in Canada. They pray that the House of Commons will cancel this deindexation and maintain the full indexation of family allowances which are so important to them.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of citizens, principally of the Montreal area, who call upon the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance and to rescind the unfair tax increases.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from Monday, October 21, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Monique Landry (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to resume debate on Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, introduced by my hon. colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

Mr. Speaker, in the first part of my speech, I explained why our Government introduced this legislation, and I subsequently elaborated on the conditions for implementing its provisions. I also explained at that time why our Government had not imposed quotas.

I had started to say that as of 1988, employers affected by this legislation will be obliged to file a report in respect of the immediately preceding calendar year, containing the following information:

First, the industrial sectors in which employees of the employer are employed, the location of the employer and employees, the number of all employees of the employer and the number of persons in designated groups so employed;

Second, the occupational groups of the employer and the degree of representation of persons in designated groups in each occupational group;

Third, the salary ranges of employees and the degree of representation of persons in designated groups in each range and prescribed sub-division thereof; and finally,

The number of employees hired, promoted and terminated and the degree of representation in those numbers of persons in designated groups.

Employers who fail to comply with this obligation will be liable to a fine not exceeding $50,000.

On the basis of the detailed information provided by employers, the Canadian Human Rights Commission will be able to hear complaints it receives and conduct certain inquiries.

Since we wanted this legislation to be as flexible as possible, we decided not to impose enforcement mechanisms.

Mr. Speaker, in the opinion of this Government, setting up an enforcement agency would generate very high administrative costs. Moreover, it will be perceived by many employers as undue interference by the state in their personnel management policies.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that our Government has made a formal commitment to reducing administrative red tape, which more often than not tends to curb productivity.

Instead of an enforcement agency, our Government has opted for the even more redoubtable mechanism of public opinion.

As of June 1, 1988, all employers affected by this legislation will be obliged to file annual reports. The conclusions of these reports will be consolidated by the Department of Employment and Immigration and subsequently tabled in Parliament.

On the basis of the information contained in these annual reports, it will be possible to measure progress in the area of employment equity. The public will be invited to look at the results. Employers who fail to observe the equity principle will be clearly identified, and under the pressure of public opinion, they will be forced to change their personnel management policies so as to provide more jobs for the four groups designated in the Bill.

A number of my opposition colleagues feel that this surveillance mechanism does not go far enough, and that the pressure of public opinion is not strong enough to improve the conditions encountered by women, native peoples, visible minorities and the handicapped on the labour market.

I would remind these critics that public opinion is the most formidable tool we have for changing the behaviour of Canadian employers. Let us not forget the successful campaign organized by Canadian women in 1981 to urge the Government to include women's rights in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that Bill C-62 will affect more than 750,000 employees. In conjunction with other Government programs designed to stimulate labour market participation, Bill C-62 is a giant step forward towards social equity. From now on, the groups concerned by this legislation will be able to take their rightful place in Canadian society.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore urge my hon. colleagues to refer this Bill to the Legislative Committee as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) . . . Oh! Questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse).

[English]

Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse).

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, while I support the Bill and its objectives, I note that in spite of the clear and irenic exposition of the Bill by the Hon. Member there was no reference in her remarks, nor is there reference in the Bill, to a minority which requires recognition and defence, namely, those who are over 50 and who find it difficult if not impossible to obtain employment because of discrimination due to age. As I read this Bill it will not protect women over 50 because of their age however much it may give them protection because of their sex. I hope that when the Bill goes before a legislative committee there might be some recognition given to the significant hazard of age discrimination as it applies to women. I hope it will also be recognized that it applies to men so that the Bill, or other legislation, might be expanded to provide that type of protection.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a moment to echo the concern just expressed by the Hon. Member from Scarborough. One of the more frustrating experiences I have encountered as a Member of Parliament has been the occasions on which older men, those who are 55, 56, or 57, have come into my office and, for one reason or another, have lost their jobs. They may still have children in university. They may still be supporting a family. Very often they have worked at jobs where there has not been any labour organization or trade union. Perhaps they have worked in warehouse work. They have been strong for 30 years and then they have developed a bad back problem or some other physical ailment which prevented them from being able to perform the type of work which they had performed for so many years. They are literally cast on to the scrap-heap of our economy. There is really no opportunity for them to retrain or find other jobs. I have had people in my office who have talked about suicide and who have openly cried about the situation in which they find themselves. I wish to say to the Minister, who happens to be in the House, that this is a desperate situation which a great many men in that particular age bracket who are too old to work, at least in the way in which our economy works, but too young to receive any income support. They are caught in a kind of twilight zone which the Government needs to address.

Miss MacDonald: I agree. Thank you very much.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to rise in my place to participate in the debate on Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity.

It must be said from the outset that I do not think there is a Member in the House who disagrees with the fundamental principle or purpose of what is to be attained by this piece of legislation, or any other legislation which we may be considering in the coming weeks, months and years ahead. I am speaking of the fundamental principle that every Canadian in this country ought to receive equality of opportunity in the workplace. that is not a fancy right. It is not a privilege. It is a basic, human and fundamental right.

The Bill before us has four target groups, namely, women, native people, the disabled and visible minorities. I would like to preface my remarks with respect to the latter group since our critic, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has indicated in broad terms how our Party views this Bill and has left it to a number of individual critics to look at the independent categories or target groups.

One has to look at this Bill, Mr. Speaker, and agree that the principle or purpose is good. Yet the follow through, the action taken to attain that principle, is far from perfect. It moves simply too slowly and is too weak in the ways proposed to attain employment equity for Canadians in all regions of the country. It is weak in the face of some landmark reports which this Parliament has recently received such as the Equality Now report and the Abella Commission report. I quote from the report of the Abella Commission which stated that "a Government genuinely committed to equality in the workplace will use law to accomplish it and therefore give the concept credibility and integrity."

I do not think this piece of legislation gives credibility and integrity to that principle. Underlying the Abella Commission Report are two key focal points or concepts: mandatory and tough equity programs and the enforcement mechanism whereby those equity programs would be carried out. There is an absence in Bill C-62 of both those concepts. As Judge Abella stated in her report, "Unenforceable rights are no more satisfactory than unavailable right", and I think that speaks volumes to this piece of legislation. It is not a mandatory and tough equity program. It is a Bill which qualifies the program, is open-ended and not rigid, and does not set forth criteria with respect to Government Departments, Crown corporations and companies doing business with the Government. It is not a mandatory program. Both the Abella Commission Report and the Equity Now Report suggested in very firm terms that voluntary and open-ended programs have not worked in the past, they have not attained the type of results which we, as a Parliament and as a country, should be aiming for.

I am quite surprised that the Hon. Member who spoke before me suggested that it is in public opinion and in voluntary programs taht we attain the best results. That is false. In certain instances which I will be outlining in my speech later on, public opinion is very lacking. We have to impose some sort of leadership and direction in a mandatory program so that equality in the workplace can in fact become a reality. We cannot leave it to the whims of the people involved. A mandatory program is the only route to go.

There is no enforcement mechanism specifically stated in the Bill. The Minister and Hon. Members on the Government side have mentioned that the Human Rights Commission will be taking a look at enforcing the employment equity legislation. There are two things wrong with that. First, it is not indicated in any firm way in the Bill itself. There is no mention of the Canadian Human Rights Commission in the legislation. It was only indicatetd in passing. It was only dumped on to the commission in an informal and very loose kind of way. Second, and most important, is it fair and is it within the jurisdiction of the Canadian Human Rights Commission to do the kind of watchdog surveillance which this Government is imposing upon it? The Human Rights Commission, as we all know, is trapped for resources with respect to personnel and finances as it is. We all know that the Human Rights Commission is a reactionary body. It reacts on a one-on-one, a case-by-case basis. If we are talking about a national employment equity program which is going to ensure and guarantee that Canadians receive the equality which should be theirs, I feel it would be unfair to expect the commission to undertake this kind of enforcement mechanism.

There is a need for the Human Rights Commission. It is a body which is doing good work. But with respect to a national employment equity program, we need an enforcement body which will be somehow independent, active, full-time, and with enough staff who are qualified and familiar with labour relations, the employment system and human rights issues in general.

With respect to the voluntary nature of the legislation, the Minister in a press release announcing this Bill stated, and I quote:

> The employment practices and policies of federally regulated businesses will go on public record, and these companies will have to answer to the people of Canada if they fail to achieve equity in employment.

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough. If we are to look at public opinion and voluntary action, we also have to look at a number of recent reports from Toronto with respect to the whole question of racism in the workplace. The report entitled "Who Gets the Work?", which was published in January—a study commissioned through federal funding and conducted by the Urban Alliance on Race Relations and the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto—outlined some very serious concerns. It spoke forcefully against letting public opinion and voluntary mechanisms do the job for us. The author of the report said that "while whites were treated courteously, blacks applying for the same jobs were treated rudely, discourteously and with hostility." The report found that "in direct approaches on 36 jobs, white applicants received 27 offers and black applicants only nine." The report concluded "that the most significant amount of discrimination was directed at Indo-Pakistanis who were told that jobs were closed and no longer available in nearly 44 per cent of the cases." The report also indicated that "the black West Indians were told that jobs were closed to them in 36 per cent of the cases".

In the follow-up to that report, in May of 1985, it was found "that only 9 per cent of 200 large companies stated a firm belief in racial equality. Twenty-eight per cent of the employers said they felt non-whites in general do not have the ability to meet job performance criteria compared with whites. Another 13 per cent saw non-whites as threatening, particularly if non-whites gained promotion over whites. Seven per cent expressed outright contempt for non-whites and 3 per cent viewed non-whites as a group to be justifiably exploited for low wages and long work hours."

I am not suggesting that those views reflect the views of all Canadians. But if we are to allow voluntary mechanisms, and the public will, to decide these matters, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, that we will fail. We will fail as a Parliament and as a nation to address and correct some inequality and some wrongs which are happening in the workplace to ordinary Canadians. This Bill has failed to address those concerns in a very real and concrete manner.

There is no mention in the legislation about contract compliance. There is nothing in the legislation which says that any company doing business with this Government must submit to some stringent employment equity measures. Only several months ago, we had a perfect example of this when I repeatedly raised on the floor of the House of Commons instances of outright discrimination which were being encountered by Canadians of Haitian and black backgrounds in the taxi industry, particularly in Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton. That was a perfect example of where this Government could have put its foot down and addressed the issue of equality which should be everyone's right, by sending a clear and strong message to the taxi industry that if it is to do business at our federal airports, then the industry must reflect the equality which should be every Canadian's right. Yet this Government shied away. The former Minister for Multiculturalism, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) shied away from setting this example, which reflects the same philosophy this Bill reflects. That is, we are not doing enough. It would have been easy to have told those cab companies that they are not permitted to do business at our airports unless they clean up their act and provide equality for all their drivers regardless of colour or background. The Government could have done that but it did not.

When we talk about contract compliance, we can look to our neighbours down south. Sometimes we say that we as a nation are much better than they are regarding human rights. Yet it is interesting to note a report submitted by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council which made some very interesting observations about the United States concerning contract compliance. They said that in the U.S. contract compliance legislation exists under Order 11246 which requires that federal contractors and federally-assisted contractors implement affirmative action programs. This applies to contractors with 50 or more employees and contracts valued at $50,000 or more. The program must set significant, measurable and attainable goals for the hiring, training and promotion of minorities and women. The numerical goals and timetables are directed towards increasing the utilization of target group members.

Violation of the contract's equal opportunity clause may result in the cancellation or termination of the contract.

What have been the results? In 1983, the U.S. Department of Labour released the results of a study of some 77,000 factories, offices and work sites representing in excess of 20 millions employees. Between 1974 and 1980 minority employment grew at a rate of 20 per cent among those companies holding federal contracts, compared with only 12 per cent for businesses not bound by contract compliance. In addition, minority workers also posted significantly greater upward mobility where affirmative action was enforced. Finally, large numbers of blacks and Hispanic peoples moved from service and low skilled blue-collar work to skilled production, craft and white-collar jobs.

That is a perfect example of contract compliance being used to improve the economic lot of American citizens who had faced discrimination for a number of years. We could have done the same thing. Yet there is no mention of contract compliance in this Bill. There is no mention of that leadership I was talking about regarding the cab industry. However, that is what the Bill should have been speaking to.

I reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of this Bill is completely welcome in this House. There is not one Member who would disagree with it. However, it is the follow-through and the lack of real teeth in the Bill which lets down the target groups the Government is saying it is trying to help. If we are to increase the equality of these four target groups and other Canadians, as an Hon. Member mentioned previously, we need to have legislation which will not only speak to equality but which will deliver equality.

In a study conducted this year, Mr. Speaker, Canadians from visible minority groups represented only 1.7 per cent of all employees within the federal Public Service. This Bill does not speak to that. There has been some mention of programs being introduced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) but they, too, are statistics gathering, research and study oriented. Yet what Canadians from one coast to the other are calling for are some measures which will deliver equality and tear down that vertical mosaic which still exists and which says that only a select few might be able to make it to the top. Other Canadians, through no fault of their own and not because they are incompetent, have been unable to reach the roof-tops which other Canadians have reached. That is a shame.

We can also look at what other groups are saying about this Bill. The Urban Alliance on Race Relations says "that the focus of the legislation is on data collection rather than hiring and training in a workplace free of discrimination." The Canadian Ethnocultural Council said that "while it is encouraging to see movement towards employment equity, the present Bill appears rather anaemic. It is difficult to envision how a voluntary approach will substantially improve employment opportunities for visible minorities."

Those words, as well as the meetings I have had with a number of groups and individuals, reflect how Canadians at large have accepted this Bill. We have also had a large number of women and disabled and handicapped groups saying the very same thing. Their wish and my wish and the wish of my Party is that the Government listen attentively to these descriptions of the shortcomings of this Bill. The Government has a huge majority and we all know it can push through any Bill it likes on any day of the week. So what we should be concerned about is passing legislation which will do what it is intended to do. In my opinion this Bill does not do that. There should be employment equity for all Canadians. It is not a privilege, it is a right. It is a necessary part of being a Canadian living in a tolerant society. We all know there are people out there who, through no fault of their own, are not being treated with equality in the way that perhaps you and I are. This Bill needs to be improved. It needs amendments. It needs to speak forcefully and boldly to employment equity, and not just go through the motions. We need to have mandatory equity programs in our Civil Service, Crown corporations and those companies doing business with the federal Government. There should be no qualification regarding the number of employees or the amount of business concerned. What difference does it make if you do $100,000 or $2 million of business with the Government of Canada? Equality must transcend the financial and political barriers we see being created in this Bill.

In closing, I would like to caution the Government and the Minister to beef up this Bill with amendments which will ensure that these four target groups, and any others as was suggested earlier, receive the employment equity which is theirs by right as Canadians. I urge the Government to take another look at Bill C-62 because it will not improve the lot of these four target groups quickly enough or well enough.

• (1540)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State (Mrs. Landry).

Mrs. Landry: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to clear up a few points and maybe respond to some of the objections raised by my colleague from York West (Mr. Marchi).

I would like to point out to him that compliance with Bill C-62 will be mandatory, not optional. That being so, the companies will have no choice but to abide by the legislation.

The other point I might clear up has to do with frequent references to the enforcement mechanism and the Abella report. I would like to stress that we fully endorse the Abella report, particularly with respect to the enforcement mechanism. The Abella report mentions four models and we are in favour of the fourth one since it relates to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. In that sense, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we too are endorsing the Abella report recommendations.

The last argument regarding the enforcement mechanism is that the Government has decided not to set up another costly agency, which would only add to the existing bureaucracy. We suggest that the data contained in the reports submitted by the businesses will make it possible for the Human Rights Commission to take legal action. And we believe that this enforcement mechanism will meet adequately the requirements of the Bill.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, in her previous speech the Member said that an enforcement mechanism and a mandatory program would be too cost prohibitive. I think that is what is wrong with this Bill and with the mind-set of the Government. It is putting dollar figures before fundamental human rights in the workplace.

The Member mentions that companies have to report. They do. It mentions that in the Bill. The Government says that each company that does not file a report will be fined up to $50,000. That is great, too, but why not fine the companies if they are not fulfilling the proper equity programs which the Government has not really outlined to start with? If the Government is prepared to fine them for lack of reporting, it seems to me somewhat silly not to fine the companies for failing to attain a certain figure as established by the Government. That is the wrong way of doing things, Mr. Speaker. If you are serious about ensuring that employment equity will be a reality in this country, you must show direction and criteria and you must have some targets. If we are going to lift the four target groups up to an even level, we need to provide direction and targets and be specific.

I, too, Mr. Speaker, am against quotas because in themselves they impose limitations. However, we need more than just words. We need a criterion that companies can follow in order to attain employment equity. It is not good enough to say simply that if you do not file a report you are going to be fined. You should be fined and lose the contract if you do not attain employment equity aside from reporting to the Government with a letter or a report. Any company could submit a nice letter or report, but how can the Government judge whether that is in fact happening when there is not an enforcement agency on a national scale which can assure us that those reports are legitimate and reflect the reality in that company?

Those are the things which the Hon. Member should be addressing in addition to looking simply at what the Bill contains. It contains a number of positive elements, but it moves too slowly, is too weak, and there is no real courage and guts underlying the Bill because it is rather soft.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) who has just spoken. I feel he has made a good speech. I wish, however, to ask him a question, for he seems to be quite familiar with this issue. He seems bent on telling the Government what to do. He seems to be saying to the Government: Go ahead! Give more teeth to the legislation for a number of reason which he has enumerated. My question is quite simply this: As you seem to think that this bill should have more teeth, how long ago, in your opinion, should it have been implemented?

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. I do not pretend to have all the answers or to speak with the authority of anyone else except that of a normal Member of Parliament doing his or her work. I am disappointed that every time a piece of legislation comes up, Hon. Members always look back to what happened five years ago or twenty years ago when the Liberal Government was in power. That argument can be used for the positive things that were done in this country, yet no one does that.

However, I am not prepared to get into that kind of debate, because I do not think it speaks to this Bill. That kind of debate, discussion and rhetoric does not speak to the four target groups; women, natives, the handicapped and visible minorities. When we have a Bill intended specifically for those four target groups, we should focus debate on how we can get a piece of legislation which is going to work through the House of Commons, on how we can improve the piece of legislation to the best of our ability, and how we can further improve the piece of legislation through liaison with the four target groups and other groups that parliamentarians may be meeting with.

That is the kind of discussion that we should be having and that is the kind of discussion that Canadians are expecting from the parliamentarians in this Chamber. That is what I was trying to do. I was trying to look at this piece of legislation rather than looking 20 years in the past. Rather than looking to the past, let us try to envision what will be happening 20 years in the future. Let us ask ourselves where these for target groups will be in five years because of this legislation. If the answer is that they will not be far ahead, we should have the courage and integrity to ensure that employment equity will be insured. However, I honestly do not feel that it will be achieved through this Bill.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Member on his speech about the four target groups and what we should be doing in this country in terms of equity and equality. My question is very simple. Where was the Liberal Party for the last 20 years?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I throw the question back and ask where the Hon. Member was two minutes ago when I was attempting to remove the partisanship with regard to this Bill. I think this is one of those Bills which should transcend the partisan nature which my hon. friend from Saskatchewan injects into the debate.

This Bill needs improving. It needs more teeth. I am prepared to stand in my place and suggest that the Government make those improvements. I am also prepared to say that if the improvements are made in the Bill, when it comes time to vote I would not be a hypocrite, just because I am on the other side, and not vote for it.

We should recognize a good piece of legislation, but we should also be prepared to have the courage to recognize bad legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this bill respecting employment equity, the purpose of which is to ensure equal rights within the labour force, so that nobody can be deprived of employment or promotion opportunities for reasons other than his or her qualifications. It especially aims at correcting the wrongs suffered by women, the natives, the handicapped and the visible minorities.

Employment equity requires not only equal treatment for everybody but also special initiatives and arrangements aimed at specific groups.

[English]

My political credo can be summed up as, "Fair shares for all and special privileges for no one". This Bill on employment equity addressed the first part of that credo "Fair shares for all". Employment constitutes a key area in which the right to equality and the equal benefit of the law must be achieved. Employment is one way for Canadians to become fully contributing, independent members of society. Employment equity is a way of eliminating discrimination against some Canadians in the employment area.

Let me quote from the report of Judge Rosalie Abella on which most of the legislation before us is based. I note that in her words:

> Employment equity is a strategy designed to obliterate the present and the residual effects of discrimination and to open equitably the competition for employment opportunities to those arbitrarily excluded. It requires a special blend of what is necessary, what is fair and what is workable.

I can think of no Minister of the Crown or member of the federal Government better able to bring legislation before this Paliament that combines those three goals—a special blend of what is necessary, what is fair and what is workable—than the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

I want to say much about this Bill. However, to begin on a personal level, I want to say for the record that I have had the pleasure of knowing the Hon. Minister since the 1960s. The discussion we have had on the role of Government and the importance of Canadians realizing their potential and overcoming the obstacles that face them, including the obstacles of discrimination in the workplace, are not new ideas to her. Although the Abella Report provides a great basis for this legislation, this was not an idea that occurred to our Minister for the first time on reading the Abella Report.

The Bill before us now is the outgrowth of a long and serious commitment to seeing that Canadians enjoy their fair share. I want to salute the Minister for bringing this legislation before the House and enabling Canadians to see again that they have a Government in office now that not only is prepared to listen but prepared to act and redress some of the long accumulating inequities in Canadian society.

In the few moments available to me, I want to base my remarks on this legislation in the context of four areas. They are the historical context, the constitutional context, the parliamentary context and the philosophic context.

Let me begin with the historical context. This legislation clearly constitutes a special program to see that women, the handicapped, the visible minorities and native Canadians have greater access to jobs in the Canadian economy. However, it is not the first time that Parliament has seen fit to make a special effort to see that social justice is done and that equity is more than a glib expression, that it becomes a reality.

Let me cite two examples. The first example is the veterans legislation that was enacted at the conclusion of World War II. The purpose of that legislation was to give special advantage, frankly, to the men and women who had gone abroad to fight for and defend this nation and indeed preserve the freedom that we are enjoying in Parliament and across the country today. It was felt that those who had put their lives at risk for our defence and liberty certainly should get more than just a warm handshake on their return to this country. Therefore, special programs were put in place with respect to educational opportunities and housing for veterans.

In slightly more recent times we have seen a special program to redress the imbalance in a country with two major founding cultures. It was a program to redress an imbalance in the federal civil service and to see to it that over a period of approximately a decade Canadians whose first language is French have higher and more important positions in the federal service. Those are two examples of how Parliament has seen fit in the past to move where social justice demanded it.

We now have a third spceial program, and it is the Bill before us today.

Let us turn to the constitutional context. I will simply note in passing that Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the legal equality of all Canadians and prohibits discrimination. Some might suggest that features of this legislation will be discriminatory in their effect. It is important to understand that Section 15(2) of the Charter anticipated that Parliament, on certain occasions, would have to redress historic imbalances and that special programs, such as this employment equity Bill, would be required. For that reason, in adopting the Charter several years ago, Parliament provided express exemptions, stating that programs aimed at ameliorating the conditions of those who had suffered past discrimination would not be unconstitutional under Section 15.

The third area is the parliamentary context. By that I am referring to all the other companion activities and legislation coming through this Chamber as part of the great outpouring of our Government's response to the long developing inequities in Canadian society. While the employment equity Bill is an important piece of legislation, it does not stand alone as the sole response of the Government to these problems. Contemporaneously with this we have passed amendments to the Indian Act, thereby removing over a century of discrimination against Indian women.

In another development a few weeks ago, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie) announced in the House a Charter litigation fund to ensure that Canadians who want and need to challenge existing laws and programs, because they are not constitutional under our new Charter of Rights and Freedoms, would not be precluded from doing so because of a lack of financial ability. Indeed, a few months ago, in the same parliamentary context, Bill C-27 went through Parliament. It was an early initiative of the Hon. Minister of Justice to eliminate a number of the obvious inequities in existing federal statutes in light of the equality provisions of Section 15 of the Charter. Bill C-62 is but a companion piece of legislation in an over-all attempt by the Government to fulfil its commitment to social justice in Canada which was one of the three goals that were enunciated in the Throne Speech as a hallmark of our Government.

That brings me to the fourth context in which I would like to consider this employment equity Bill—the philosophic context. This is the context in which I speak about the merit system or about meritocracy. I believe that the ideal system is the one in which people are hired and promoted on the basis of their merit. You write the job description setting out the bona fide requirements for whatever the task might be, a transportation shipper, a gunner in an aircraft, a lawyer, a bus driver, and then you hire the person most qualified. That is what I call meritocracy.

In a country such as ours, with people from so many different national backgrounds, different religions, walks of life and political belief, you really cannot have any other system. What we want to see is the very best for our country. We want Canada to realize its full potential by having individuals realize their full potential. Let us not see discrimination against anyone. Let us see only hiring of the best. That is the ideal. We must always keep that in mind. Even when special programs are brought in, such as in this Bill, it is not to detract from that ideal but to work closer toward it.

As a Conservative, I believe philosophically that human institutions reflect the human frailties that we ourselves possess and that it is not a perfect world. I accept that the old boy network operates when people are hired and promoted. I remember and take to heart the expression often heard when people are being hired for jobs that it is not what you know but who you know that counts. It is in that context that we see this legislation introduce a concept that can redress and do some fine tuning in the working of meritocracy. It is unquestionably the case that native Canadians, disabled Canadians and visible minorities have not had their fair share of jobs.

I would like now to address some of the specific reasons that I think this is a good Bill and, in many respects, an historic breakthrough. Let us consider first the gathering of data.

I have heard and listened with careful attention to spokesmen for the Opposition Parties being critical of the reporting requirements. I thought I was perhaps hearing comments that could have been made by people who escaped from the Titanic as it was going down who found themselves in a lifeboat and who were criticizing the lifeboat. You have to take it step by step and view the value of what we are doing on its own merit. There can be no question that the compiling of data is fundamental to the evaluation of not only why this legislation should be brought in but of how well it is achieving its goal. When it has achieved its goal, we can revert to the working of the meritocracy system without any of these special programs. Until we have the data lines and the information that can say, yes, a fair share is now being won by those who, in the past received the butt end in Canadian society, a lot of the debate and discussion is more rhetoric than genuine concern for seeing true human progress.

I should note that some of those who have criticized this legislation feel it is not the desire, the will, the interest or the wont of the corporations, the business community, to see special programs that would encourage women, the handicapped or other disadvantaged groups to get a fair share of the jobs.

It was, therefore, revealing to me to have had a number of conversations recently with corporate executives, particularly those responsible for personnel policy, men in their fifties in most cases, who are speaking with a new-found glee, the kind of enthusiasm that comes to a born-again reformer part way through life on discovering that something formerly being opposed was not only positive but did not hurt. By recruiting women, formerly having excluded them, they found far better, more motivated people coming to companies and doing a much better job. I do not want to generalize on the basis of perhaps half a dozen or more conversations, but I put that before the House as a straw in the wind. There is an increasing recognition that things are changing on the part of those who once opposed or just dug in their heels on the basis of stereotypical notions of who should be doing what, where and under what circumstances.

We spoke a year and a few months ago that it was time for a change. That message has gone deep not only with the Government of the country but in the way we are thinking, in the way we can reform and introduce new programs, such as the program contemplated by this employment equity Bill, to see that all Canadians get their fair share.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) has, in the course of his comments in praise of the Government Bill before us, suggested that institutions reflect the imperfections of humanity. This is one of the more interesting dodges that Conservatives use for their own slow action.

Is it not a necessity for institutions to seek to transcend the imperfections of humanity? Is it not the responsibility of Government, recognizing the shortcomings in employment equity that exist, to get on with the task actively and not give us half-baked measures of the sort we are debating in Bill C-62?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's comment and question has two parts to it. One having to do with the speed with which our Government is responding. The second is a more interesting philosophic question. First, on the question of speed, I do not think anybody on this side of the House has to apologize for speed. Has the Hon. Member counted the number of days from the time the Abella Report came out to the time that the legislation came into this House? Compare that with the record of any Government, including provincial Governments and New Democratic Governments, and Members will see that the Progressive Conservative Government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration do not have to apologize to anyone in terms of getting on with social justice. I always love to hear from the New Democrats when it comes to seeing someone other than a New Democrat doing something that is for the good of the people, because they feel that that area is their own private, protected preserve. We Progressive Conservatives are here because the Canadian people know that they can look for us for action, and they are getting it.

Mr. Boyer: The second point in his question had to do with the philosophic nature of human imperfection and whether institutions reflect that or not. I think this is perhaps long going to be a point of discussion between socialists and members of the Progressive Conservative Party. My view is that human nature is flawed, that we are not perfect on this earth and therefore our creations reflect that, be they reports that are written, be it legislation that is introduced, be they speeches given by Members in the House. No matter what we turn to, we can always think later how it might have been better. When I am talking about institutions reflecting human imperfection it is not because I do not think they can be improved. I think that is the continuing struggle that particularly we in politics are engaged in, to pursue that endless quest to find the golden mean. But if the Hon. Member thinks that in one single Bill perfection can be achieved, then I suggest that he remain in the New Democratic caucus. For our part we are going to stay on this side of the House and support the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is bringing in legislation that is a special blend of what is necessary, what is fair and what is workable.

Mr. Nystrom: While my friend is waxing eloquent over there, in his capacity not only as a Member of this House but, I gather, as chairman of the subcommittee on equality, he is talking about the imperfection of institutions and so on and how great this particular Bill is in terms of the four targeted groups. I wonder if he would be prepared to entertain the idea perhaps of recommending to the Government that we extend equality to this institution and perhaps have an equal number of men and women Members of Parliament, have two-member ridings where there must be at least one woman and one man, therefore we would have gender equality in the House of Commons. The Minister said she would come and run in Yorkton-Melville. We would then of course have two very excellent Members from that riding, as she is such a red Tory.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on that. I do not make the suggestion in a frivolous way. Also I know our native people have said many times that perhaps we should look at the possibility of direct elections to the House of Commons of the native people of Canada. They represent such and such a percentage of the population. They are unique people with a distinct and special status in this country. What about the possibility of direct elections so that they could come here and represent native people?

What about those two ideas in terms of promoting equality in this country? I understand, Mr. Speaker, it is a bit of a departure, but second reading is debate on principle.

Mr. Boyer: Nobody is perfect.

Dealing with the two points, I have already explained what I believe very strongly is important in Canada, namely, a system of merit, a meritocracy. I apply that not only to the job market or to other institutions but indeed to this very special institution, our Parliament. I think that those who are elected here should be elected on the basis of their merit, what they stand for, what they are prepared to stand for, their Party's record and what the Party stands for.

I would like to note for the record that, based on merit, we are getting an increasing number of women Members of Parliament in this Chamber. I would hate to see any kind of quota or artifical system introduced in our election procedures that would say that the people who come here are not the 282 who fought the hardest and fought the best and did the best they humanly knew how to, to come here and represent the people. I would not want anyone, including the Hon. Member, to think that he was here simply because he was filling a quota and not because his electors saw him to be eminently qualified to represent them.

As to his second point, it is interesting that one other country has tried that, and I refer to New Zealand, where they have the four Maori seats in their Parliament. In addition to all the other MPs, there are four who are elected to represent the Maori population. That system of course requires voters to register as either Maori or non-Maori voters, and then they have the choice of voting in one of those four Maori constituencies or indeed in the regular constituencies.

What has struck me as being somewhat anomalous in that is that it really gives the Maoris a bit of a special advantage because they know that they are going to get their four Maori seats anyway, so in the other seats they would probably vote for the candidates who would most likely be supporting and advancing the cause of the Maoris. I do not have any problem with that, but I just say that I think it introduces an anomalous feature into the electoral system. There are Maoris being elected in New Zealand through other than the four Maori constituencies, and I think that they are viewing this in New Zealand now as being the historic phase in which they find themselves now and that perhaps the time has come to end that artificial provision in their elections and to revert to a system such as we have here. With regard to the New Zealand experience, I do not know that it would be an improvement here. I certainly can think of native Canadians who have been in this Chamber as well as in the upper House and who are here now and are contributing in a very fine fashion. They are here on their own merit as well.

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member uses the arguement of merit, and of course that is always the argument, between affirmative action and merit. I guess we could go on at great length as to why we need some affirmative action programs. Accepting what he says about merit, is it not so that the Conservative Party has in its constitution for conventions, certainly at different levels, a parity principle whereby a certain number of delegates must be women at a leadership convention or a national convention of the Party must be women. It is certainly the case in our Party. Relating to our national council of the Party, we now have a parity provision whereby there must be an equal number of males and females.

I guess my question is very simply then, if we accept the concept of parity through affirmative action within our Parties: What is the difference when it comes to this institution, in terms of the Hon. Member's argument?

Mr. Boyer: That is a good question. I would add that there is indeed a third dimension within the constitution that you could call affirmative action, special treatment, because there is a requirement that there be a certain number of youth delegates as well. Just before I answer the question let me say that I wonder if the Hon. Member was studying the Progressive Conservative constitution so intently perhaps at one time recently when he was thinking that this Party was doing so well that he would look at the constitution to see what if anything prevented him from joining this Party.

An Hon. Member: Even he is welcome.

Mr. Boyer: We keep a light in the window for everyone.

Mr. Nystrom: I would never get elected.

Mr. Boyer: Strange things happen and strange things happen in terms of Party constitutions as well. I think that, historically, that would have been a strange thing in terms of any Party's constitution. I am glad the Hon. Member raised it because it brings into sharp relief the importance of having, at different stages in our evolution as a country, programs that will help offset the workings of a system that, by any objective criterion, are not really fair to the over-all community. I think that is perhaps the one shared basis of philosophical agreement between socialists and Progressive Conservatives, our overriding concern for the community.

That, of course, goes back to where we both come from, from the 19th century, tracing back our philosophical origins and realizing the overriding concern for the well-being of the community in ensuring that there are no groups, be they women, be they youth, be they visible minorities or any other groups, that are being excluded on the basis of prejudice or discrimination. There is then clearly a role for the Government to step in, as we are doing now in this legislation, just as political Parties have stepped in in terms of those constitutional amendments or provisions that the Hon. Member so properly referred to in this context.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The period for questions and comments is now over. Resuming debate.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate Bill C-62 with a deep sense of disappointment which has been expressed by various groups and many Canadians when they have contemplated this Bill. The Bill is described as an Act respecting employment equity. In Clause 2 of this quite short Bill, the purpose of the Act is stated as follows:

The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

This Bill is part of an historic evolution of the employment practices of this country which calls for the action of Government. The Bill points us to developments which have taken place over the preceding years in opening up employment possibilities for women, and the federal Government has played its part in that, in creating federal and provincial programs to sensitize employers to the potential that exists in persons with disabilities, in creating programs which are designed to open employment possibilities for aboriginal peoples and in opening up employment opportunities for persons who are members of visible minority groups. I am particularly concerned with the last area to which I referred as I am the NDP critic for multiculturalism.

In the case of visible minorities in which I am particularly involved, the last Parliament saw significant developments in the form of a special committee which dealt with the participation of visible minority groups in Canadian society and also saw the Government of the day appoint a commissioner to consider the question of employment possibilities for members of that group as well as for members of the other three groups with which the Act deals. One could take time to explore the ways in which Canadian society has been sensitized somewhat to the problems of members of each of these four groups. Governments have come to recognize that it is necessary to develop legislation to ensure that progress can be made.

It seems to me that the present Conservative Government has now an historic opportunity to ensure that there will be real action taken to achieve equity in employment. I submit that Bill C-62 is a deeply disappointing piece of legislation in its approach to that goal. At best, one would have to say that the Bill is a truncated piece of legislation. At best, it is the first part of what the Government should have put before us.

The Bill could be defended if it were made clear that the Government planned within months to follow through on other actions that are required in order to ensure that there will be real progress made toward equity in employment. However, there has not been any real indication of that.

Since the Bill before us is supposedly complete in itself, we are waiting for the next Government to come in, as reporting will have to take place over several years before problems become clear, and only at that point will the next Government, in its wisdom, spend months deciding what should be done and creating the mechanisms that have been called for. Perhaps I concede too much in suggesting that several years will be required.

I would like to put before the House this afternoon the facts of the situation as they are spotlighted in Canada's largest city, namely, Toronto. Toronto is not an unusual city for these purposes. Its society reflects the nature of Canada in many ways. Employment practices which were found to exist in the City of Toronto as they relate to members of visible minority groups can surely provide us with adequate reason to think that the Government should take strong action.

I am focusing particularly on the report of the Urban Alliance on Racee Relations and the Social Planning Council of Metro Toronto which was published earlier this year under the title No Discrimination Here? This report indicates that a survey of personnel managers of 199 Metro Toronto organizations suggested that employers are doing very little about racial discrimination in that city. The large majority of Toronto employers have no policies to prevent discrimination or promote employment equity. They do not want such policies and claim that they are unneeded. However, the study concludes that race-related policies are indeed needed. Widespread use of informal personnel systems provides ample opportunity for exercising racial bias and unfortunately racial bias is often expressed by key decision-makers.

Some remarkable facts were elicited by the authors of this study in their consideration of how employers discriminate against non-whites in the Toronto labour force. There were in fact significant opportunities for discrimination, particularly in recruitment. There was a high degree of informality in the recruitment systems, and a correlation between the use of these informal practices by the employers and low representation of non-whites can be made.

Eighty-two per cent of the employers studied had no special policies to address race-related employment issues. Those who did have a policy, most commonly depended on a passive approach which was expressed in a statement of compliance with the Ontario Human Rights Commission guidelines. Only 3 per cent of this group of almost 200 organizations had developed systematic affirmative action plans at a time when surely the activities of Human Rights Commissions would have demonstrated the need in Canada for organized action if there is to be a real change in pattern.

Among the evidence of this unfortunate situation that the report put before the Canadian public was the fact that many employers overlooked or discounted the existence of interracial tensions in their workforces. On the one hand, there were complaints from whites in which derogatory race-based generalizations about work habits, hygiene and the like were being made. These were clearly expressions of how people felt in an aesthetic sense. On the other hand, complaints of non-whites focused on racially discriminatory employment decisions and practices ands race-based harassment in the workplace. One of the most remarkable statistics that came out of this study was the evidence that half of those non-whites who complained about these procedures ended up suffering from the fact that they had complained by being disciplined in some way or other. In such circumstances, it is obvious why employers do not want affirmative action guidelines developed.

It is clear that the reporting provision contained in this Bill will not make employers' lives very difficult. They will in fact be able to go on with the imperfections that exist, as the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) suggested a few moments ago, because they are not required to do anything beyond reporting on the situation that exists in their workplaces.

These features of the employment situation facing persons from visible minority groups in the City of Toronto would, I think, be matched across the country as well as would the features of the employment situation facing other target groups with which this legislation purports to deal and for which I would suggest it provides no effective means to ensure that progress will actually be made. I dare say it is no secret to any Member who has looked into the matter by now, and the Conservative Members will make brave speeches in support of the legislation, that various groups which have considered the legislation have found it quite inadequate. The study from which I have been drawing was sponsored by the Urban Alliance on Race Relations. The alliance has made its criticisms quite clear with respect to the equity in employment Bill. There are a number of shortcomings which the Bill fails to address.

First, what is missing in the legislation is a central enforcement and standard-setting agency for all four sectors, that is, Government departments, federally-chartered Crown corporations, contractors who do business with the Government and federally-regulated businesses. In fact, there is a very real possibility that the lack of any central enforcement agency will lead to various organizations or businesses falling under the sway of one or other of several different agencies. Our expectation is that the Canadian Human Rights Commission will have the primary responsibility. However, there is a possibility that other agencies, too, will become involved in this matter. As several agencies become active with various groups of employers, it is quite possible that different standards will develop. All we need is that type of additional inequity to open opportunities for lawyers to involve themselves and for judicial actions to begin which will further encumber the progress which so badly needs to be made in the country.

If there is one central failing in the Bill it is the failure to establish any central mechanism with adequate resources to the task. If there is any fundamental reason for asserting that the Government blew it with respect to this particular Bill and that it in fact spoke brave words but refused to bite the bullet, refusing to rise to the challenge and get on with the job of moving toward equity in employment, it is in the failure to establish an agency which would have the responsibility for ensuring that real progress is made. It is not just a central and independent agency that is required. What is also called for is mandatory programs for the four sectors of employment to which I have already alluded. What is needed are mandatory programs which will ensure that progress is made by the four target groups with which we are concerned. Again, pursuant to this legislation, employers will be required to report. However, the hope that reporting, even publicly, will make any significant difference is an old-fashioned, small "l" liberal hope. I would have thought that the Conservatives, who know about human imperfection, would have seen this through and realized that they had to do much more than just ensure that information came in. Given the imperfection of humanity, what is required of employers if we are to have real employment equity is the establishment of plans, the setting of goals and the establishment of time-frames within which progress has to be made. It is by such means that this Government could have demonstrated that it was really prepared to do something about it and that it was prepared to act in areas in which it states its principles so bravely.

As far as contract compliance is concerned, which is one of the provisions by which Government can affect employment patterns in businesses which hope to sell to Government, what we need is contract compliance for all Government contractors with over 50 employees and $200,000 worth of Government contracts per year, not just undefined commitments as a condition of tendering. That is surely part of the same process of ensuring that enforceable plans are developed and that goals are set. With the figures in place, the possibility exists for the enforcement agency, which is imperative, to ensure that we are really seeing some progress made.

One of the basic principles which should underlie these new contractual arrangements is the provision that equal pay should be the basis for work or should result from work of equal value. There, too, this Bill fails in what has been one of the key concerns of all who are in support of the improvement of the economic position of women in our workforce.

Finally, as one other criticism which the Urban Alliance on Race Relations stated as far as this Bill is concerned, there is not an employment equity program requirement as a condition of all loans, grants and receipts of cost-sharing moneys. These several failings which the alliance raises with respect to a number of specific points were also expressed by the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, a national umbrella organization which is becoming more and more well known in the way in which it brings together various ethnocultural groups in the country and speaks for them nationally.

The Canadian Ethnocultural Council filed an extensive response to issues in equality rights with the subcommittee which was looking into the matter of equality rights over the summer and into the early fall. In its extensive report in commenting on Judge Abella's employment equity report specifically it said that a review of the United States experience with mandatory affirmative action confirmed the commission's view that legislated enforceable requirements are critical to the success of affirmative action programs. It also said that the commission concluded that the enforcement of employment equity requires an agency which is independent and which has a qualified staff familiar with labour relations, employment systems and human rights issues. If that is the requirement, what does this employment equity Bill do? The council suggests that the Bill is rather anaemic and that it does not provide any enforcement component in the area of contract compliance. There is little to ensure the contractor's commitment to equity programs. There is a lack of any enforcement mechanism. There is also an absence of guidelines to promote participation by visible minorities.

Those points underscore what the Urban Alliance on Race Relations said for its part as far as the shortcomings of the Bill are concerned. The fact of the matter is Governments, when they are determined, can make real progress. There can be no doubt in anyone's mind considering the Public Service of Canada that the 1969 passage of the Official Languages Act and the establishment of the Commissioner of Official Languages and a joint committee to oversee the matter led to action. Of course, there can be no doubt that the Government of the day lead by Prime Minister Trudeau was determined to see the institutions of this country become bilingual. As a member of the joint committee I am keenly aware of the shortcomings which still exist in the actual operations of Government and the existence of French as a language of work in Government. For example, in various areas of the country Canadians still find it difficult to be served in the language of their choice. All that after a decade and a half of determined action.

In these other areas legislation dealing with employment equity, pulling its punches the way this one does and failing to establish the mechanisms which are required of various sorts in order to make employment equity a result, can only leave one convinced that this Government is not really serious about the matter. It will talk about the matter but it will not take the action which is required to transform our society. It leaves all of those who watch convinced that society will not change very significantly. Certainly, if it is to change it will only be slowly. As I suggested when I spoke on The Nation's Business last Wednesday morning, it is that conviction held by so many Canadians that in time everything will be fine which I want to challenge. In fact, it requires the real determination of Government. This Government has not in fact followed through in a convincing way in demonstrating that it intends to do something, that it wants society to be changed in accordance with the principles of full involvement. I think we are all involved, including every Conservative Member of Parliament, in the kind of betrayal of principle by a Government which had the challenge in its hands and failed to do anything, which reflects very ill on the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald). Each time the reports came out in Toronto last winter and spring, I wrote to express my very real concern about what Government could do, but the Minister has in fact failed to follow through—and I am sorry she is not in the House to hear me say that—and that is cause for the deepest disappointment and a real sense of betrayal.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any of us in this House of whatever Party would want to deny employment to anyone who is capable of doing the work just because he belongs to a visible minority. I believe we all want to see that every person who is impaired physically or mentally has a job. It has been shown that many of these people can do a worth-while job. I do not believe anyone would want to destroy the life of any person because of the colour of their skin when he or she is capable of doing something. However, there is more than one way to skin a cat. I was rather amazed this afternoon listening to Hon. Members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party opposing this Bill because the legislation is not compulsory. The Hon. Member who just spoke talked about doing something compulsory, that we must tell the employer what he has to do and whom he has to hire. It is not the Canadian way of life for Government to run the businesses of the country. This Government was elected because the people were tired of the Liberal Government trying to run everyone's business and destroying the businesses in that way. Compulsion is not the way of Canadian life. I am happy to see the Hon. Minister bring in a Bill which is not compulsory.

There is another way to do it, the Canadian way, and that is inducement. By inducement we can provide work for those who are in wheelchairs and those who are mentally retarded. I will give you a quick example, Mr. Speaker. There is a school in my home riding of Drumheller because some splendid citizens decided that a number of people who were mentally retarded and some who were physically retarded should not be on welfare. They believed these people could be trained to do things. It would do your heart good, Mr. Speaker, to go to that school and see how these people have made toys and benches. There are some men there of 25 years or 30 years who were formerly on welfare but who are now making a living building things. They showed that they could do it. They were not compelled to do it. It was inducement. I think we can do that throughout this entire country.

Canadian employers are not arrogant. They want to employ those who are handicapped. There has to be some inducement, not compulsion. Would the Hon. Member not agree that the Progressive Conservative way of doing this by inducement is far better than the way of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party of doing it by compulsion?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I wonder how many other of the Hon. Member's colleagues would like to make similar comments because I feel that underscores everything I said about our deep disappointment and betrayed hope. The kind of conviction that the old Canadian way will do it and so on, is going to leave—

Mr. Taylor: The new Canadian way, not the old.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): —one very large proportion of the Canadian population deeply disappointed and convinced that this Government is just making protestations and does not have the guts to follow through. Certainly, where community effort to achieve something exists, it is only to be applauded. I would wonder what kind of employment these people are able to find and what kind of wages they would earn. I trust that they would work their way into jobs which moved them above the poverty line in the Hon. Member's community of Drumheller and I hope very devoutly that occurs. However, I do not believe there is any point in subscribing to the conviction of the good sense of employers as does the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I believe the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore had a much better sense of where humanity is actually at, and that includes a lot of Canadian employers. There is no particular desire in their hearts to have members of visible minority groups in their workforce. In fact, if those persons were in the workforce complaining about discrimination against them in some aspect or other, including promotions, I dare say, the best thing to do is to keep them out of there. In those various cases, to think that voluntary action will solve the problem is naive, or worse.

In terms of the general sense of being able to get somewhere by depending on voluntary action, I did not suggest that the Government should tell employers who to hire. I never suggested anything of the sort in terms of any particular individuals. I do think, as the new Democratic Government in Manitoba has also concluded, that the employment by the Government, and presumably by large employers, should reflect the composition of its workforce. With respect to persons in these four target groups, who probably, in terms of their actual ability to do work, are similar enough to the mainstream white and male population, we can only gain by ensuring that all of those persons are employed. That surely is the basic economic rationale for achieving this social justice policy of employment equity.

The Manitoba Government has carried through something else which is not in this Bill and that is to negotiate arrangements with the provincial Government employees union under which, over a period of time—and it is quite a long period of time, I concede—the employment composition of the Manitoba provincial Government will come to reflect the labour force composition of the province. Therefore, women, aboriginal people, the disabled and visible minority groups will in fact find employment in the Manitoba Government in proportionate numbers to what they exist in the workforce. That kind of provision which was negotiated with the union representing the present employees of the Government of Manitoba—or under the legislation, whatever organization we are dealing with from Government Department to business seeking Government contracts—would ensure that the ability which exists in our society in each of the target areas would in fact find full employment in the Government and an opportunity to exercise there the talents which God gave them. That has to be done, I suggest, by requiring enforceable programs be undertaken by employers and that will ensure they move in that direction.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentions what might happen in Manitoba. We will see what the people think about that shortly. However, I can tell the Hon. Member that in Alberta, inducement was used and provided work for not only women, aboriginal people, handicapped and mentally retarded people from Alberta, but from several provinces. Under the Progressive Conservative Government we are using the policy of inducement. The only thing which destroyed it was the National Energy Program brought in by the Liberals, part of which was supported by the New Democratic Party. If I have to tell an employer who invests his money in his now business who he has to hire, I will move to Moscow. We expect compulsion there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I am sorry, the period for questions and comments is now over, enlightening as it may be.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in connection with Bill C-62, which is an Act respecting employment equity. Unlike the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Epp), I am not disappointed in the least with Bill C-62. In fact, I am very pleased with Bill C-62. Bearing that in mind, and since the Hon. Member seemed to indicate his disappointment when he read Clause 2, the purpose of the Bill, I would just read it myself because I think there is a great deal we can take pleasure from in that clause. It states that:

The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability and, in the fulfilment of that goal, to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada by giving effect to the principle that employment equity means more than treating persons in the same way but also requires special measures and the accommodation of differences.

This Bill impacts on four very particular groups: women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities, and persons who, because of race or colour, are part of a visible minority group. When we reflect on that, it is obvious indeed that this Bill will affect the vast majority of people in this country. In fact, it will affect every family in this country. I fail to see how the Hon. Member can be disappointed by a Bill which is going to have such wide implications for in effect virtually every family of every Member of this House. Certainly this Bill will affect my own family. I very much wish that it had been in place some years ago because it would have had a very beneficial effect on one member of my family in particular. I refer to a first cousin of my father's by the name of Ted. Unfortunately, Ted suffered disabilities at birth which affected and impaired his speech and movements throughout his entire life. However, after Ted left school, and with the assistance of a family friend who happened to be the Chairman of the City of Toronto Board of Education, he got a job as a custodian in a Toronto school. He worked all of his working days until he retired. In that way he was able to support and look after himself. He was able to make a useful and beneficial contribution not only to himself but to society. It is quite clear that he was able to benefit from having that job, and benefit not only himself but his family and the whole of society. If he had not been fortunate enough to have had some assistance in getting that job, undoubtedly he would have been on social assistance during his lifetime and the taxpayers of this country would have had to have helped support him.

This Bill will make sure that sort of situation will not happen in the future. In the past people like my cousin Ted had to rely on some sort of helping hand, perhaps with political assistance of political friends. That sort of thing is not acceptable today, but if we do not have something to take its place we are going to be in great trouble in this country. Fortunately, what has come along for people like my cousin, people like visible minorities, native people and women, is this Bill on employment equity. How is this Bill going to benefit people like my cousin and others in the position referred to in this Bill? The Bill points out in Clause 4 that employers who are governed by the Canada Labour Relations Code are going to have to identify and eliminate all employment practices which present barriers to the employment of people in those four categories. Not only that, they are going to have to institute positive policies and practices to make sure that we eliminate these barriers. The specific policies, goals and time limits are not spelled out in the Bill in black and white. However, Clause 10 does provide for the Minister to issue guidelines to direct employers pertaining to any of these matters. That is, to set out goals, targets and time limits with respect to hiring, promotion, training and pay practices. All of these things can be covered by the guidelines the Minister will be setting out under Clause 3.

These guidelines will no doubt change from time to time. I have heard criticism in this House today and on other occasions from Members of the Opposition who have indicated that we should have in black and white in this Bill those specific guidelines. They should be set out once and for all, for all time, unchangeable and unchanging. However, all of us know that these things to change from time to time. There is no question that if we looked at employment practices at the turn of this century, they would be different from employment practices in the 1930s. Employment practices in the 1930s would be different from those in the 1950s. Employment practices in the 1950s are different from those today. Therefore, there has to be some flexibility in the Bill and some room to make adjustments which will keep the law current. We have to make sure it applies to present day conditions, which conditions are always changing. We have seen, for example, that a lot of civil rights legislation in other countries has not worked because conditions constantly change. If we sat back and did not make any changes we would have problems and we would be justifiably criticized by the Opposition. On the other hand, if we set out in the Act the specifics of these goals, targets and time limits, we would find it necessary to make changes through legislation. You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, how difficult it is to make changes in any legislation once it is enacted by this House.

The second aspect of the Bill, then, is the requirement under Clause 5 for employers to prepare and file reports with the Minister. Those reports will outline, of course, what they had been doing in order to eliminate the barriers of discrimination in employment and what new targets and goals they have set forth, as well as time limits within which they accomplish those targets and goals. Clause 5 sets a date of on or before June 1, 1988, for the first of these reports to be filed. We have heard a lot of criticism from our hon. friends in the Opposition about the fact the date was not set sooner than that. The whole process of setting a target date for commencing the filing of reports is to ensure that we give employers a reasonable opportunity to comply and put their plans and policies in place and then to make sure that they are complying with them. From listening to Opposition members talk, one gets the impression that perhaps they are more interested in prosecuting employers and making sure they are hauled before the courts, made an example of, fined, or perhaps even sent to jail. One gets the impression that they are not really interested in seeing the goal of employment equity achieved. That, of course, is really what the Bill is trying to achieve. It is not trying to punish people. It is trying to ensure that Canadian society moves along and that we do attain employment equity. The date and the goals which are set out in the Bill make a lot of sense to most Canadians, if not to the Opposition.

If the reports referred to in the Bill are not filed in the appropriate manner and at the appropriate time, it is an offence under Clause 6 of the Bill which says:

> An employer who fails to comply with section 5 is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty thousand dollars.

There is that portion of enforcement quite clearly in the Bill which sets out that any employer who fails to report is going to be subject to conviction and to a fine. What is going to happen to the reports themselves seems to be the source of a good deal of criticism by my hon. friends in the Opposition. They have indicated that there is no enforcement mechanism in the Bill whatsoever, that these reports will be filed and that will be the end of it. Of course, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. The Human Rights Commission of Canada is set up to deal with this type of situation. The Human Rights Commission has the ability and authority to either institute proceedings on its own under Section 32.3 of the Human Rights Commission legislation, or to instigate the proceedings on a complaint by any individual who feels that he or she may be aggrieved and that there may be a breach of the intention of this employment equity Bill.

That was the great problem in the past. The average or ordinary citizen has had the ability to lay a complaint and the Commission has had the ability to proceed on its own, but there has not been evidence available on which to prosecute these complaints and proceed with them. Now, through Bill C-62, there will be this information in the form of reports that will be filed by the Minister and will be available to individuals and employers in order to proceed in laying the complaints and getting results because the evidence will be forthcoming.

The whole employment equity Bill applies to a certain segment of jobs in Canada. It applies, in effect, to all of those jobs that are subject to the Canada Labour Code other than those jobs which are included in the federal civil service and federal Crown corporations. In fact, the total number of jobs to which the Canada Labour Code applies is approximately 1 million. About 500,000, of the jobs will be covered by this Act. Of the other 500,000, 250,000 of the jobs are in the federal civil service itself. There are already, as you know, Mr. Speaker, guidelines, targets and time limits in place for employment equity in the federal civil service. I hope that is taking place. We trust that it is coming to pass. However, if it is not, once again the Human Rights Commission has the right to proceed. Under Section 32.3 of the Act it has the power to initiate complaints.

The same is true of the remaining 250,000 jobs which are in federal Crown corporations. There, too, the Government is issuing guidelines, setting targets and setting time limits. Once again failure to follow through on those goals and objectives will be subject to complaints being laid in front of the Human Rights Commission, either by individuals or on the initiative of the Human Rights Commission itself. Therefore, all of the 1 million jobs that are covered by the Canada Labour Code are going to be subject to this employment equity legislation or to very similar guidelines imposed by the Government itself. There is a mandatory enforcement agency in place which will ensure that employment equity, as outlined in this Bill and in those Government rules and regulations is going to be enforced.

That leaves us with the other group of jobs that is not governed by the Canada Labour Code, those that fall under provincial jurisdiction and are governed by provincial labour codes. With regard to those we have to look to the provinces to implement similar legislation to attain employment equity. There is one other area in which the federal Government can and is getting involved, and that is with employers who have 200 employees or more and have contracts with the federal Government for $200,000 or more. Those employers are also going to be subject to the same guidelines, enforcement provisions and mandatory provisions that are in this Act.

All in all, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this Bill and with the companion approaches that the Government is taking to ensure that there will be employment equity in this country. If I am disappointed at all, it is that the Opposition is not whole-heartedly embracing this Bill and passing it as quickly as possible. I am sure that after hearing the points raised by Government speakers this afternoon we will find that at the end of the debate today all Opposition members will join with us in passing second reading of this Bill right away.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, when the time comes to vote on Bill C-62 which we are debating here today, I think it will present a problem for many Members of this House to decide what to do. The purpose of this Bill as indicated in the preamble is very high sounding and the kind of thing that we would all applaud. It says:

The purpose of this Act is to achieve equality in the work place so that no person shall be denied employment opportunities or benefits for reasons unrelated to ability—

In other words, aside from the important question of merit, no one should be denied the opportunity to equal access to a position or a job. Another valuable goal of this legislation is to ameliorate the conditions of disadvantage in employment experienced by women, aboriginal peoples, persons with disabilities and persons who are, because of their race or colour, in a visible minority in Canada. It continues on in the same vein as to its purpose.

I believe that all of us would find great value in the purpose of Bill C-62. Some may say that even though the Bill is not perfect in all its detail, it should be supported because it has some genuine impact on the community. However, the problem arises when one seeks the opinion of those most affected by discrimination. They are most able to know through experience whether such a measure will protect them. That is why I believe we should be hesitant in acting on this legislation. There are those who believe that even though this Bill is inconsequential, it is a slight contribution to our attempt to bring about social justice and, therefore, should be supported. However, there are many organizations interested in employment equity which are denouncing this Bill and saying that it is worse than nothing. Those groups are suggesting that this legislation is so flimsy in its content and ability to achieve moral and legal justice for organizations related to women, the handicapped, native people and visible minorities, that it should be rejected. Such an argument puts a Member of Parliament in a very difficult bind.

It would be unfair and unjust to assume that Members from one side of the House are champions of human rights, equality and social justice. I know that there are individuals from the Conservative benches who have just as much desire to see human rights, justice and equality in the workplace as Members in the opposition. I want to emphasize that it is not acceptable, at this critical moment in our history, to devise a measure that is totally inadequate and only gives lip service to equality. This is not the time to take such action. I hope that Members of the Government as well as the opposition are courageous enough to re-examine this legislation in light of the criticisms made by the visible minority groups, the handicapped groups, native people and women's organization who want to defend their equality rights. We must listen to their concerns.

Those of us who care about human rights have witnessed the long struggle of mankind from the primeval ooze of barbarism and despotism evolve into the faith and democracy in which we live. We are very proud of this country and have seen it evolve over the years through the establishment of commissions to protect the rights of individuals.

Previous Governments have established a sense of equality not only in terms of language but for all cultures so that they may share equally in this land. Governments have passed legislation that effectively deals with human rights, language equality and the role to be played by multicultural groups. After the struggle to bring the Constitution from England we saw the battle that took place in Parliament to establish a Charter of Rights and Freedoms in that Constitution which would guarantee in law the right of equality before the courts.

The constant struggle upward has been based on the fact that Parliament has had the courage to pass strong laws, regulations and rules that set out the values in our society which must be met. These laws came about as a result of Governments appointing commissions such as the Abella Commission and the Committee on the Disabled. That committee produced the Obstacles Report. That report made recommendations on how the handicapped might overcome the obstacles which were placed before them and left standing by society over the centuries. It was made clear that those obstacles must be eliminated because the time has come to ensure that all people who live in this country will be treated equally by their Governments and society. Those who are unfortunate enough to be handicapped—as could happen to anyone at any time—should continue to enjoy equal opportunity. A committee of the House of Commons was established to study how we would ensure that those who are handicapped and those who do not have these rights would indeed have equality of opportunity and access as well as human rights.

The Abella Commission was established to study the matter of equality in the workplace. It heard from handicapped groups and other organizations about equality in the workplace. It heard from companies and Governments throughout the country about how these people were being treated and if they had equal access. That committee also made its report.

It is the fact that these committees made clear and concise recommendations that we can question whether the Government has read those reports and really responded to them, or is this merely lip service in order to find a compromise with various groups? Is the Government dealing with this issue and acting to bring about fairness in the workplace or is it simply introducing this legislation to get it off the political agenda and show that the Government has taken action? I am sure that that is not good enough for the Canadian people and it is certainly not good enough for the people in those four groups we have mentioned.

Women constitute over half of the population of this country. It is not as if we are talking about a small insignificant group which will eventually require attention. Every group is signficant to us in Canada, but certainly when you get a group representing 51 per cent or 52 per cent, it is pretty significant. When you add to the numbers of people involved in that group called women, the native peoples, and you add to that the handicapped and the disabled, then you have a fairly large number of people about whom we are talking. They deserve very serious attention by this Government.

We have worked our way through difficulties throughout these decades. At last we have a report. The Abella Report made it clear what it expected was the sine qua non of an effective policy on this subject. The sine qua non, according to that report, was some kind of teeth, something other than reporting, something other than depending upon public opinion. There has to be in the final analysis a crunch, a bite, a law, a rule, something you can understand and not something that was another step of side-stepping the issue.

It is sad to see the broken promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) which are like a broken record. In fact they are a broken record. Once again these broken promises will impact on those less advantaged in our society. They are the ones who will have to wait for social justice.

I was disappointed to hear one member of the Government praise his Government for bringing about such wonderful steps toward social justice since coming into power. The prime basic tool of this Government to deal with society is a budget but the budget gives to the rich and takes from the poor. That cannot be social justice. Here we see that what is important to this Government is rushing to the rescue of banks and large oil companies. It is not rushing to the rescue with meaningful legislation to those who need it most, those who need jobs, those who want to work who are disabled or who want to have equality of salary. It is not fair to the women who were promised by this Prime Minister in the election campaign that they would get equal pay for work of equal value. The Prime Minister also promised that private companies wanting to do business with the Government would have to produce affirmative action plans before they would be awarded contracts.

What happened to those promises made during the election campaign, Mr. Speaker? What have we got? We read in Bill C-62 that after all this labour, effort, groaning and travail that companies need only declare themselves equal opportunity employers to be among those who are eligible for contracts. They make out their own report card. They are for quite some time the judge and the jury of their own abilities. Companies with more than 100 employees who deal with the Government need only sign a document saying they agree to implement some kind of employment equity plan, and there is no definition of what that plan must be in this Bill, at least as I read it. It could be almost anything. This is incredible. In the light of the Abella Commission, it is a joke. I am not laughing, Mr. Speaker, because the Prime Minister is refusing to guarantee that the handicapped, for example, will have better jobs now through a better employment and equity program. If companies can write out their own tickets, and there is no criteria, it seems there is nothing on which to rely for a long time to come. What is more, these reports do not have to be effective until 1988. It does not guarantee to women equal pay for work of equal value.

On March 3, 1984 the Prime Minister in a speech said:

> We will ask these firms to show us as part of their tendering responsibilities—

Let me emphasize what he said "to show us"—

> —how many women will be hired to fill those contracts. There is nothing alien about that. It is just good sense.

Where is the good sense now, Mr. Speaker? If there is nothing alien about it, why is the Prime Minister alienating those organizations which represent the natives, the handicapped and the women? These organizations are speaking up. If we in the Opposition have to be left to raise our voices on their behalf because the backbenchers in the Tory Party will not do it, then so be it. Let them at least open their eyes and ears to see and hear what these organizations are saying.

Why has the Prime Minister not produced what he promised? The Prime Minister even repeated his promise in Conservative policy papers in the 1984 election campaign during a TV debate, which some of us may remember. He said that private companies doing business with Ottawa will be required to adopt the principle of equal pay for work of equal value. Where is that in this Bill? Where is there equality in the workplace? What an empty thing in a Bill respecting employment equity. Something as fundamental as that promise does not appear.

Under which Minister of the Tory Government does this happen? The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald), who was always a staunch and vocal supporter of rights for women, natives and minorities while in Opposition. Where is her strong voice in this situation now, Mr. Speaker? I am sure she can rationalize and feel that she has done her best. I am sure she has done her best in view of some of the comments we have heard in the debates from some of her colleagues. She probably had some stiff opposition. At the same time, that does not solve the problem for the people who belong to these groups. Instead of submitting action plans as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration promised, companies we are told will be:

> —spot checked to determine if these companies are at least beginning to take such basic steps as making up an inventory of their workforce.

Marnie Clarke, Director General of the Employment and Equity Branch of the Department of Employment and Immigration said that. That is bold action, Mr. Speaker. There are going to be spot checks to see if the companies are making up an inventory of their workforce. What a courageous move. Only after three years will more thorough checks be undertaken. After three years, Mr. Speaker, and what does "more thorough checks" really mean? What kind of assurance does this give women, the natives or handicapped? The answer to that is none, Mr. Speaker because this law is not specific. That is why people like Marnie Clarke can talk the way they do. She is not required to lay down any real rules and regulations that will be clear guidelines of what is expected. She says:

> We would never stop a contract midway. That would only put people out of work.

That sounds like the approach to South Africa. We do not want to put the blacks out of work in South Africa so, therefore, we will not impose any sanctions. We have heard that argument before. We really will not take any steps against these companies because we do not want to stop them midway through a contract. My goodness, no. That might mean people being thrown out of work. What an amazing way to approach this subject.

I would like to point out one other major concern in this Bill. We are told that the legislation will apply only to companies with more than 100 employees. This winds up including about 100 of 25,000 to 30,000 companies doing business with this Government. That is a very small number of organizations to which this law will apply. It is a lot of noise about nothing.

Mr. Redway: I was most interested in the Hon. Member's comments, particularly about the crticism levelled against this Bill by a number of groups representing women, visible minorities, disabled and native people. I have heard those criticisms as well but I also know a good many people who fall into those categories; people who are members of some of those organizations. In speaking with them about this subject they said to me "Look, the Liberal Party was in Government for years and years and we did not see anything like this come about, but in less than 12 months with the Progressive Conservative Government we have seen some really significant action and we are very pleased with that significant action and we feel that in fairness we should be giving this legislation a chance to see how it works. We as members of visible minorities, women's groups, native people and disabled are prepared to give this legislation a chance because we think it is good legislation and we know that the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government that was in power for some 20 years did not do anything of this sort".

I would like to ask the Hon. Member why the Government that he supported and that was in power for some 20 years did not do anything and left it to the current Government to act, just a few months after the Abella Report was tabled? It was tabled in March and the response came in June with the first reading of this Bill. Why, when this Government acted so quickly on the matter of employment equity, was it that his Government did not act in 20 years?

Mr. de Corneille: I thank the Hon. Member for his, I think, sincere question. First of all, when he asks about the record of the past Governments, of which I was proud to be a part, I have recited already in my speech a litany of steps that have been taking place throughout decades to move toward human rights and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. If he had been in the last House he would have realized how hard we had to fight against the dinosaurs of his Party who were trying to obstruct the Charter of Rights and Freedoms from becoming part of the Constitution.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member that if he sticks around until a little later the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) will be making some comments that will, I think, add to that litany and reply to his question in further detail.

What I would like to come back to in the time allotted to me is a point that the Hon. Member brought up relating to how it is that some people who are members of some of these groups that are disadvantaged nonetheless seem to favour this legislation. As I said at the outset of my remarks, many of us are torn as to what to do in terms of voting because, as I said, on the one hand the preamble, the setting out of the purpose, sets forth a very noble purpose. One finds it very heart-rending not to then lend one's support. On the other hand, those organizations that look at this Bill, not the individual members of the group, but those whose business it is in those organizations because they were elected to represent these people, and have studied this, say "This is no good; this is worse than nothing because actually it is toothless and it will give the impression that something is being done when really nothing has been done yet". They are disappointed. I would challenge my hon. friend to please, please seriously look at this and see whether in some way this can be strengthened through amendments, whether this can be looked at in his caucus and explored further in order to give some kind of content to it because these constituent organizations, who are his constituents as well as mine, are saying it is not good enough. They are saying please don't vote for it although they too feel the ultimate purpose is just and desirable.

Mr. Orlikow: I would like to address two short questions to the Hon. Member. First of all, it was suggested by the Conservative Member a few moments ago that he has heard from women, handicapped, native people and people who are part of the visible minorities in this country that they like this legislation. I wonder if the Hon. Member would confirm my understanding that the representations made on behalf of all these organizations representing the women's groups, the natives, the handicapped and the visible minorities all make it very clear that they believe that without mandatory provisions, without targets, that this will not work.

The second question I want to ask the Hon. Member is this. Is it not true that under the former Government there were statements of principle endorsing affirmative action and certain specific Departments targetted but in fact very little was accomplished? The number from these disadvantaged groups who actually found employment was very small because again the Departments were not given a target of specific numbers which they should aim to achieve each year.

Mr. de Corneille: I thank the Hon. Member for his questions. Certainly I can confirm that all of the major groups which I know relating to women, minority groups and the handicapped and native peoples have in fact condemned this as being inadequate and in most cases hope that we will not pass this because it is just a symbolic gesture and in fact will make some people think that something has been done.

Hon. Members may have seen some of the reports that review all of the organizations that have indicated their displeasure with this, and this has appeared in the media. I urge all Members in this House to look at these reports and at the promises made by the Government before it was elected to see what it said it would do and to see if it could improve on this Bill to include those qualifications which these organizations feel are a minimum essential in order to reach a level where they could say that we should support it.

In reference to the second part of the question as to whether the last Government failed to adequately deal with the question of equality, as a member in that organization I want to say that, number one, we were engaged in the very long war of attrition to try to bring about a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. To say that it set back our legislative program a year is putting it mildly. Yet I have to confess that despite the fact that that left us in a very difficult hole in terms of getting through other important legislation which was very urgent, it was not enough reason for me to say that I was satisfied that we did all we should have done. I think if we as Members were prepared as Hon. Members from time to time to admit that we could do better or that we could have done better, it would be better for this House and especially for the people of Canada.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Eglington-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) said he liked legislation with teeth. I believe him. His Party certainly brought in legislation with teeth. For example, the national energy policy. It had teeth. It destroyed, masticated an entire industry in Alberta. It threw hundreds of women, native people, handicapped people and people from other countries out of work. It destroyed the hopes of a province. It was designed to destroy a province. Yes, I can believe that the Hon. Member wants legislation with teeth.

With the Hon. Member's record and the record of his Government which he supported when it brought in the national energy policy, I marvel that he now talks about equality. I wish he had talked about equality before he destroyed an industry in Canada.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak in this debate today in support of Bill C-62. I believe this is a Bill that is progressive in nature and I am very pleased to be part of a Government that has brought forth this progressive legislation.

Employment equity in this country is long overdue. With more and more women and minorities entering the labour force the need for equal employment opportunity has increased rapidly. In the next decade, as many as 70 per cent of all new workers in Canada will be women, native people and people with physical handicaps.

As the birth rate and the number of immigrant workers declines, employers will have to turn to women and other minorities. Canadian businesses simply cannot afford to ignore such a vast pool of talent and ability. As a vice president of a large corporation said, in the decades ahead, any organization that ignores or underestimates the potential of women or overlooks any source of talent for that matter will be making a fatal mistake. No truer words have ever been spoken.

By eliminating barriers to equal opportunity in policy, training programs, pay scales and company practices, employees will be better motivated and more productive. Employment equity will increase productivity, reduce the high job turnover that now exists and eliminate dead-end jobs.

The Bill that is before Parliament today represents a practical and reasonable approach to employment equity. Its purpose is to encourage equality in employment by eliminating barriers to hiring, promotion, salaries and many other areas. All federally regulated companies with over 100 employees and any private firm that tenders on Government contracts worth over $200,000 will be subject to the measures contained in this Bill. Under this criteria, Bill C-62 affects not only all Crown corporations and federal agencies but 500 private government suppliers as well.

Employers will be required to identify and remove barriers to equal employment opportunity. Annual reports providing a detailed breakdown of the labour force by designated groups will also be required. These reports will give a listing of occupations within the employer's business showing where designated group members are represented. They will also show salary ranges, hirings, promotions and terminations of designated group members relative to the employer's total number of employees. Employers who fail to report will be subject to a fine.

We on this side of the House believe that this is the kind of workable approach to employment equity that Canadians want. Forcing companies to maintain quotas or subscribe to unmanageable guidelines in order to comply with Government regulations is not the way to promote employment equity. Instead, the Government must create a positive, constructive atmosphere to change. This cannot be done by enforcing quotas but by setting workable goals and attainable targets.

Business leaders must be awakened to the potential of all participants in the labour force. They need to see that by denying one segment of a society a role in their companies, they are damaging their own economic interests and the economic interests of Canada as a whole. Changes in attitude will take place but they will take place slowly.

In the past decade, many progressive steps have been taken. Let me cite a few. Since 1969, at least as many women as men have entered management positions in the Government. There are four times as many women attending professional schools now than there were in 1971.

A recent survey conducted by the Harvard Business Review found that attitudes toward and about women in businesses have changed dramatically in the past 20 years. In 1965, for example, one-half of the man and women surveyed agreed that women rarely expected or wanted positions of authority. Today, fewer than 10 per cent believe this to be true. In 1961, 61 per cent of the men surveyed believed that the business community would never wholly accept women. Today, that figure stands at 20 per cent. Perhaps the most notable quote that came from this survey came from a woman who said, "The biggest factor in the acceptance of women executives is the simple passage of time and the passing of the old boys in the good old boys network".

Members opposite do not believe that voluntary or non-quota employment equity legislation can work. Let me provide the House with an example of an outstanding affirmative action program for women. A company located in my riding of Scarborough Centre has had an affirmative action program in place for 10 years. In 1975, 10 years ago, Warner-Lambert, a large pharmaceutical and confectionery company in Scarborough employing nearly 2,000 people, initiated a formal affirmative action program for women with the following central objective:

> To assess the current status of women at Warner-Lambert . . . to recommend the most effective ways to remedy any existing negatives found in our policies, practices and attitudes, respecting employment or promotion opportunities for female employees.

This is a program that was set up 10 years ago without legislation. The company established a volunteer committee. The only criteria for joining this committee was an interest and a willingness to serve. The committee examined seven key issues: job access, compensation, employee benefits, the company policy manual, maternity leave, day care and communications. The success of this program has been remarkable. Female representation in management positions has increased by 202 per cent. Women now represent 34 per cent of the company's supervisory management group compared to 18 per cent in 1975. Application forms were redrawn to remove old biases. Annual studies are now done to guarantee fairness of compensation levels. Specific benefit plan clauses which were discriminatory have been removed. The company policy was rewritten and a counselling service for employees who are mothers-to-be was established. Female turnover in this company has been reduced by 20 per cent and recruitment and orientation costs are lower because more vacancies are filled from within.

Warner-Lambert represents a successful, voluntary approach to employment equity. Its program for women was not established as a response to pressure from special interest groups or government regulation but from a sincere desire to better the conditions of its workers and to obtain the maximum input possible from all its employees. This is the type of positive, constructive approach this Government wants to initiate in the private sector. I am proud that this particular company which I have cited is in the riding of Scarborough Centre.

Employment equity will come to Canada. However, it will come not from quotas or restrictive legislation; it will come from the type of enlightened programs such as those at Warner-Lambert and the progressive legislation of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Miss MacDonald).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Employment Equity

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. I think we all join in praising and congratulating any company which voluntarily implements a policy to increase the number of people employed and the responsibility of the positions which they hold from groups which have traditionally not been able to obtain those types of jobs. I wish to ask the Hon. Member whether or not she is aware of the fact that studies conducted by Government and organizations such as the organization respecting the status of women have clearly indicated that despite everything being done the percentage of women who hold executive positions is still very small. Is she aware that even for those who hold executive positions the income they earn is substantially lower by thousands of dollars than that earned by men holding similar positions?

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question. As the Vice-Chairman of the Equality Rights Committee, which will be reporting to the House this week, we had the opportunity to travel across Canada to listen to groups. Of course, the National Action Committee made representation in nearly every city across the country. We heard of the need for opportunities, the need for employment equity and the need to implement the Abella Report. What I believe we have in Canada is an awareness to the point that what we need is not quotas, which I believe the Hon. Member and his Party recommend, but opportunities. We know that in order to achieve equity between men and women we need financial equity. However, in order to achieve financial equity we have to have opportunities. I am speaking of opportunities in the workplace—the opportunities for jobs. The fact that over one million people are unemployed does not help women. What we need is a buoyant economy. That is what will help women.

There are a number of other provisions which need to be put in place. I would like to refer to the need for child care and family care with respect to the question of employment equity and employment opportunities for women. As I understand it, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) will be setting up a task force shortly which will be dealing with the question of child care. The setting up of that task force, along with establishing opportunities, will provide a big boost for women in order to achieve the type of equity which is so long overdue. I have been waiting for it in Scarborough, as have women all across the country. We have been waiting for the federal Government to bring forward some type of legislation. Here we are in 1985, 10 years after Warner-Lambert started its programs, finally at a point at which we are bringing forward this type of legislation which I believe is extremely progressive. I am pleased to support it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests the way to overcome the tremendous difficulties which various minority groups have faced in achieving employment is to have a buoyant economy. I remind the Hon. Member that from 1945 to approximately 1960 we had virtually full employment in the country. However, the target groups including women, handicapped and the visible minorities, did not obtain jobs even though there was full employment.

It seems that the Hon. Member and so many of her colleagues on the Government side have endorsed the idea that we must not have compulsion. They believe that we must do these things through voluntary actions. I wish to remind the Hon. Member that in the 1940s and the 1950s when it became apparent across the country that certain groups were not welcome in certain jobs or in certain hotels and restaurants that the Governments, federal and provincial, brought in legislation with respect to fair employment and fair accommodation practices. In this respect I give credit to the Ontario Conservative Government of the day which brought in the first legislation with respect to fair employment and fair accommodation practices. The Conservative Government of Ontario brought in that legislation because it realized that appealing to the goodwill of those who were discriminating would not work. I ask the Hon. Member why she is now adopting an approach which the Conservative Government of many years ago found did not work. Why is she rejecting that experience and the policies of the Conservative Government of Ontario which it adopted with respect to the concept of voluntary action bringing about real change?

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, it is curious that the Hon. Member would compare 1985 to 1945.

Mr. Orlikow: It is not much different!

Mrs. Browes: It is a completely different situation today. As we will recall, veterans came home from the war in 1945 when there was a completely different type of mentality. Women were so pleased to have the men home that they were willing to give up jobs. The same holds true with respect to the conclusion of the First World War. We obtained the vote in 1917. What happened after that? The war was over and women went back to looking after their children, their homes and so on. It was the same type of situation in 1945. However, in 1985, we find ourselves in a different situation. Since the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in 1971, there has been a real awakening within the country that employment equity is here to stay.

Since the Hon. Member brought up the hotel business, I would like to tell him what the Personnel Director of the Westin Bayshore Hotel in Vancouver who employs 500 people said:

> Affirmative action is not the monster we thought it was going to be . . . Once set up, the program doesn't take much time to operate—

I think voluntary employment equity is exactly what we need. It is a progressive move.

EXCISE TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today amends the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. It seeks to raise substantial new revenues from the commodity tax system. While no Government likes to raise taxes, this Bill clearly reflects the Government's determination to achieve the economic renewal goals of the May 1985 Budget. These measures emphasize the Government's continued commitment to fairness in its approach to policies, programs and people as outlined in the May Budget. These measures, for instance, reflect a number of objectives in the Budget which address the need for greater fairness in our tax system.

Before I address the substance of the Bill, I want to point out to Hon. Members that the principles of this Government's Budget can be seen as the right prescription for the times. For example, witness recent economic indicators, as well as forecasts published by both the Economic Council of Canada and the Royal Bank of Canada.

Since September, 1984—in one year—we have seen the Government's policies restore economic confidence in the country. This Government's policies will see that Canada does indeed become a land of prosperity. We are beginning to see what the dismantling of the National Energy Program can do to our energy sector. Already, exploration activity is beginning to increase and the prospects of long-term domestic supply of energy reserves are improving. Also, the Government's shift in job training strategy from makeshift and make-work projects toward long-term career-oriented skills training will bolster our economy by employing productively more and more Canadians.

This Government's forward-looking policies have already created 305,000 jobs. We look to the expansion of the economy to further reduce unemployment. Today's unemployment level of 10.1 per cent is the lowest it has been in three years—not low enough for this Government. We shall continue to promote policies which create meaningful work for Canadians.

We have seen about 155,000 new housing starts this past year as well. This bodes well for the construction industry. In the past year, interest rates on mortgages have continued to drop. We have seen the interest rate on one-year mortgages fall 2.75 percentage points to 10 per cent; and we have seen the reintroduction of the five-year mortgage. This is, indeed, good news, not just to those engaged in the construction sector but to Canadians everywhere who want to own their own home.

Early this week the Royal Bank of Canada confirmed that economic growth in this country is proceeding at a steady pace, that inflation and interest rates will continue to decline and unemployment will be at its lowest level in years. The Royal Bank says that the Canadian economy is looking better because Canadian businesses are spending more money, producting more goods and employing more people.

Along with certain tax increases in our May Budget, this Budget also introduced a capital gains tax exemption. It is this capital gains tax exemption which is encouraging investment by small and medium-sized business. It is this Government's initiative which is helping to restore optimism, confidence and prosperity in this great country of ours.

I would now like to turn to some of the tax measures we introduced in the May Budget in order to bring the deficit under control and to manage Government more effectively to achieve and sustain the benefits of economic growth which we are just beginning to enjoy. Our policies, to wrestle the deficit and manage the Government better, are part of a comprehensive set of actions designed to deal with a wide range of economic and fiscal needs.

• (1110)

We must manage to control the deficit and administer Government operations more efficiently, if we are to reap the benefits of economic renewal and consolidate those benefits.

We must achieve these goals through a series of comprehensive measures aimed at responding to a broad range of economic and financial needs.

[English]

The Bill should, therefore, be viewed in the context of all of the changes and proposals which were announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in May. As a fiscal initiative, this Bill concentrates heavily on the control of the national debt through a number of revenue-raising measures and reductions in tax expenditures. To achieve more effective Government management, this Bill implements many of the recommendations of the ministerial task force on program review.

To improve tax fairness, the Bill introduces a comprehensive system of assessments, objections and appeals. It provides protection for taxpayers from collection action with respect to amounts in dispute until the issue has been settled by the courts. The decision to increase taxes was taken after much soul-searching and in light of the very serious economic situation in which we find ourselves as a nation.

The national debt, as we have said many times, is unacceptably large and growing at a dramatic rate. The magnitude of the deficit and debt problem poses serious risks to our ability to achieve economic renewal and sustained economic growth. It is only by tough measures to take control of the deficit that the Government of Canada can avoid a financial and economic morass. Uncontrolled increases in the deficit and the debt would not only frustrate efforts to foster further economic growth but would also jeopardize many existing Government programs which provide services to the public.

Inaction, in light of these facts, would be an abdication of responsibility. The hard decisions and dramatic changes reflected in this Bill show that this Government can and will face its responsibilities.

The deficit affects us all and it threatens us all. Deficit control measures must be shared as broadly as possible if results of the magnitude required are to be achieved. Therefore, effective January 1, 1986, all the ad valorem federal sales tax rates will increase by one percentage point. The federal sales tax applies to a broad range of goods purchased by all Canadians and while the impact of this change on individual purchases will be small, the increase will raise federal revenues in 1986 by an estimated $825 million.

This Bill also implements a two cents per litre excise tax which has applied since September 3, 1985, on gasoline, diesel fuel and aviation fuel. This two cent levy will generate $160 million in 1985 and some $930 million in the full year 1986.

In response to the May Budget proposals, Canadians showed that they strongly support deficit reduction and are willing to share in that effort. They are not only willing to participate but have shown their compassion in preferring broad measures to measures which raise anxieties and uncertainties within a financially vulnerable group. Thus, in response to public concern, this Bill contains the provision whereby the broad-based excise tax on gasoline, diesel fuel and aviation fuels will be increased by one cent per litre effective January 1, 1987, to help meet the continuing cost of fully indexing old age pensions. This measure will yield $450 million annually.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, also rationalizes certain elements of the tax system. Prior to the May Budget, for example, the specific per unit excise levies on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products had been adjusted automatically in line with increases in the Consumer Price Index. This Government believes that increases in such excise levies in accordance with a rigid formula are not appropriate. Therefore, the automatic indexation of these levies is being eliminated. Indexation of these levies would have resulted in a 4 per cent increase effective September 1, 1985. In its place, the levies on spirits, beer, and wine are being increased by 2 per cent effective from the budget date.

[Translation]

The slight increase is in response to problems currently being experienced by certain parts of the alcoholic beverage industry. Subsequent increases will be submitted to Parliament from time to time, for consideration.

This Bill also makes it possible to improve the tax base by increasing excise levies on tobacco products. The increase works out to the equivalent of 1 per cent per cigarette, effective from the Budget date. The serious threat to health and the high cost to society of dealing with smoking-related illnesses are reflected in the substantial increases being proposed.

[English]

The over-all impact of the measures affecting alcoholic beverages and tobacco products will be to increase federal revenues by $135 million in 1985 and by $245 million in 1986. This Bill also implements a number of technical amendments. For instance, the Bill repeals the constraints on individuals who produce home-brewed beer for non-commercial use by themselves and their acquaintances. Home brewers of beer will now be treated similarly to persons who produce wine for personal consumption.

This Bill includes measures to improve Government effectiveness through better management in line with the first report of the ministerial task force on program review. In its report tabled with the Budget last May, the task force made a number of comments on the commodity tax system. In particular, the task force made the following observation:

> The number of manufactured goods which have been exempted from federal sales tax or which have enjoyed reduced rates of tax has increased. This, in turn, has led to an erosion of the tax base and the need to impose higher tax rates on those remaining goods which are taxable. These exemptions have also created a complex network of boundary problems and inequities. Exemptions of individual goods have led to pressures to make similar goods, or goods of like class, also exempt from tax. Exemptions have also tended, in the absence of sunset provisions, to outlive the purpose for which they were initially granted.

Action is clearly needed to reverse this process of costly tax subsidies and expenditures that distort the normal functioning of the market-place. Even where benefits accrue to intended recipients, commodity tax exemptions have shown themselves to be very inefficient and costly. Often tax relief can be provided to a specific target group only by providing much broader and more general relief than is really desired. This increases the cost and extends relief to many persons who are in little need of Government assistance.

This Bill contains significant steps to counter the problems identified by the task force. Effective July 1, 1985 a range of goods for which exemption from federal sales tax has been provided will again be subject to tax. Goods affected by these measures include candy and confectionaries, soft drinks, pet food, beauty and health goods and energy conservation material. Changes in the taxation of construction goods manufactured other than at the site of construction are also proposed. These goods will become taxable on their sale price rather than on the cost of materials as has been the case in the past.

Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this is a tough Bill. It raises substantial new revenues by broadening the base of the federal sales tax and increasing the rates of tax. I am sure all Hon. Members recognize that the economic problems facing this country are not easy to solve, and in the Budget the need for economic growth, deficit reduction and job creation were addressed realistically. The measures announced in the Budget should be considered as a whole. The tax increases are balanced with Government expenditure reductions, and the impact of tax increases on the economy are balanced against tax decreases, the freeze on unemployment insurance premiums, the release of existing RHOSP funds into the economy, and major proposals to boost private initiative and productive investment throughout the economy. We faced the reality of deficit reduction and the fact that only strong and sustained policies such as these measures can restore the economic activity which creates satisfying employment for Canadians. This Government has openly asked a wide range of taxpayers to contribute in a fair way. Together, the expenditure cuts and tax changes are an important and fair way of restoring fiscal order to this country.

I said it was a tough Bill but I believe it is also fair. It asks all Canadians to share in the effort to restore the fiscal health of our country. This Bill is an important step in addressing the serious financial deficits we face. Therefore, I ask Hon. Members to give their full support to this Bill and ensure its speedy consideration in this Chamber.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri-Westmount): Mr. Speaker, the Minister certainly toed the Party line this morning when she introduced this Bill for second reading. It is too bad that the Minister has to do the dirty work of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). We now have confirmation in this morning's newspapers of what we suspected, namely, that the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) was against the bail-out of the Canadian Commercial Bank. Apparently she was overruled by the Minister of Finance and, of course, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[Translation]

I ask you, Mr. Speaker. If the Minister brings the same insights to the Bill before the House today, I wonder whether deep down, she might not be opposed to the Bill. It is clear that this Bill is poorly drafted and unfair and that it will probably have a disastrous and totally negative impact on the Canadian economy.

If the Minister continues to present the point of view of the Minister of Finance, she may end up acting as a scapegoat for the Government and the Minister.

[English]

The Minister of State for Finance cannot always count on the revelations before a judicial inquiry to reveal to the Canadian public that she is in fact exercising sound, independent judgment.

[Translation]

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Minister does not support the avalanche of taxes to be levied under this Bill.

[English]

Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? I say it because I am convinced that the Minister is aware that these taxes will have a severe—I repeat, severe—dampening effect on the Canadian economy. They will reduce consumer demand and, as we already know from the most recent reports of Statistics Canada, they will be inflationary.

May I remind the House of the dollar impact of these proposed measures? The numbers I am about to present are based upon an analysis made by the Department of Finance, a document which, you may recall, was leaked on or about the date of the Budget. These taxes are indirect but they will hit hard at Canadian consumers. Looking at the departmental analysis we see that in 1986-87, the total of these taxes will come to something like $2.67 billion. I arrive at that number by totalling the sales tax base broadening, the sales tax rate increase, the tobacco excise tax, the alcohol levy and the energy excise tax. I have deducted the alcohol and tobacco indexation, which is $100 million. I have not deducted the Canadian ownership charge, which will come to approximately $921 million next year, nor the oil export charge. They should not have been deducted as the Government has done in making its presentations because there is no evidence that these reductions will be passed on to consumers at the pump. Indeed, we know that the other sales tax increases can only be borne by consumers.

Again, as we look at the Department's figures, moving to the fiscal year 1990-1991, we see that the total impact will be $4.1 billion. That is only part of the multi-million dollar tax bill which the Minister of Finance handed to us last May.

I would remind the House that the Minister of Finance himself admitted the obvious dampening effect of taxes of this magnitude. During a television interview on March 1, I believe, when questioned about his future Budget, he said that taxes are not the way to go because they will have a dampening effect on the economy. He went on to point out that he thought there was sufficient room on the expenditure side to get at the famous deficit. Apart from this issue of dampening consumer demands and putting inflationary pressure on the economy, there are certain sectors and industries that are especially hard hit by the taxes which the Minister described to us today as being fair.

The Government had almost nine months to prepare that Budget and evaluate the impact that these taxes would have on various sectors of the economy. Canadians, and certainly members of my caucus if not all Members of the House, cannot understand how the Government spent so much time preparing this Budget without accurately estimating the negative impact it would have on various sectors.

As the Minister knows, many groups made representations in preparation for the Budget. However, nearly all of them were stonewalled. Of course, our elderly finally broke down that stone wall last June when the Government finally backed down on deindexing the old age pension. Of course, as a countermeasure, the Government immediately increased the tax on fuel. However, the fact is that most groups have been stonewalled.

I have seen a copy of letters that have been sent from the office of the Minister of Finance. They are typical form letters, with a few modifications to let the individual groups know at least that the Government is aware of their name and address. However, they all contain the same rhetoric which we heard once more this morning from the Minister of State for Finance. It is the old rhetoric about the twin objective of economic renewal and deficit reduction. Of course, the letters inevitably contain one other comment that was also offered to us this morning by the Minister of State for Finance. They all contain words to the effect, "On balance, the Budget was designed to share the burden fairly among Canadians». What a joke.

Of course, the fairness of the Budget is a main issue. I will only touch upon it very briefly because the question of fairness has been and will be spoken to at some length. The unfairness of the Budget is apparent on its face. Today I essentially want to talk about the impact of this Budget in a macro sense. However, I will simply refute the Minister's comments about fairness this morning by reminding her of the deindexing debate on old age pensions and the current deindexing debate on the——family allowances. She is probably aware of the representations made yesterday on Parliament Hill by people who are going to be affected in a very negative way by these recommendations and the impact of the measures contained in the Budget.

● (1130)

I remind her also that she is putting forward a massive sales tax increase. The Minister knows as well as anybody else that a tax increase on many of these items hits the low and middle-income people first and hits them the hardest. Sales taxes are, by definition, regressive. When the Minister comes in here and puts a tax on health care products, products essentially used for the most part by the elderly who have the lowest incomes, she knows she is hitting the elderly in their pocket books. She also knows from the report of the National Welfare Council that we have a lot of Canadians living below the poverty line and they are all consumers of these products. Yet she comes in here with a proposal to increase the tax on these products and has the gall to stand up and say that this is fair. Admit that it is not fair and demonstrate to us that if it is not fair it is in some way justified, economically or otherwise. I suggest it is not only unfair but economically it is dumb.

Without spending much more time on the issue of fairness, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that history will record that this is probably the most unfair Budget ever. Of course, the Prime Minister himself has gone on the record with respect to the gaffe made in terms of the deindexation of old age pensions. I hope to see him on the record a number of times more before the year is out admitting to the gaffes that have been made in the other aspects of this Budget, which are equally unfair.

Enough on the issue of fairness. Is this Budget intelligent? Is this Budget a response to the economic requirements of Canada in 1985 as we look at the economic circumstances? I talked about the over-all dampening effect but I want to refer, as I said a moment ago, to certain specific sectors.

[Translation]

The Minister is probably aware of the fact that hundreds of small- and medium-sized construction companies are going to lose their profit margins altogether, as a result of the 6 per cent tax on construction materials.

The customary fixed price contracts in this sector are going to be a major problem for many of our construction companies.

The Government totally ignored the very practical and, I must say, not very popular suggestion to introduce this tax gradually, allowing for these fixed price contracts and the usual problems in this sector. However, it seems the Minister was not conscious of the challenges and problems in the industry.

[English]

And the tax on fuel—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we already know that according to the Tourism Industry Association of Canada, the 4 per cent increase in the price of gas is expected to cause 900,000 fewer U.S. tourists to come to Canada every year, while the resulting loss to our economy will be $135 million and probably 5,235 jobs.

[English]

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Minister in the pre-Budget analysis should have consulted—perhaps the industry was consulted—but should have taken that into account. This short-term measure with a view to deficit reduction has had probably a more than compensating negative impact in terms of lost revenues and lost jobs.

Let me look at the trucking sector for a moment in particular, again with respect to the tax on fuels. I want to demonstrate, Mr. Speaker, and I want to emphasize that this is one example that I have looked at and that I hope the Minister of State for Finance has looked at. Because the cost of commercial transportation fuel must be passed on to someone else, why did the Minister not measure the full impact of what that would be? Who are those costs going to be passed on to? What is the impact on the competitive position of the Canadian trucking industry? What is the impact on Canadian consumers? Again it appears to me that no homework was done.

Anyone at all familiar with taxation knows that ultimately the buck has to stop somewhere, and when a tax is imposed on a corporation, when a tax is imposed on a trucker, that tax must be passed on in the cost of goods and services or, perhaps, in employees' incomes. It has to be passed on somewhere. Did the Minister of State for Finance or the Minister of Finance take the time to do an analysis of where this tax would actually end up? I suggest they could not have done it. Had they done so, they would never have come forward with this tax on our trucking sector.

The commercial transportation fuel has been exempt from the initial 1.5 cents per litre which was imposed several years ago. Now with this 2 cent increase as of September 1 plus, of course, all the provincial ad valorem taxes, we are likely to see a cost of approximately 3 cents a litre being imposed on the commercial fuel consumption in Canada. For inter-city truckers who carry something like three-quarters of all consumer goods and something like 80 per cent of all food products, this translates into almost 3 cents per mile. It does not end there because the transportation fuel will be hit once more at the end of the year with a 1 cent per litre increase plus the sales tax increase. The 1 cent a litre increase is to make up for the retreat from the deindexation proposal on old age pensions.

What are the pass through implications of a tax of this kind? I cite this as only one example, but it is one with which I am sure the Minister is familiar. First, the carrier who has to pay this tax has no choice. The carrier has to find some way of passing through the entire cost. The carrier's capacity to do that is limited somewhat by the economic clout that that carrier has in the particular sector. Obviously some small carriers will probably not be able to pass on the tax as easily as large shippers.

To the extent that it is passed on, to the extent the carrier is able to go back to the shipper of those goods, of those tomatoes, of those products that go on to the shelves of our stores, les dépanneurs, in the shopping markets, that is where it is going to add up, right in the pocket of the consumer. It makes it a regressive tax of the worst kind affecting, as I say in the case of inter-city trucking, something like 80 per cent of all goods that are shipped.

It is effectively a tax on distance, Mr. Speaker. It is a direct tax on distance. It is the same as a tax on alcohol or on cigarettes, yet we are applying it on distance. With all the regional difficulty we have in the transportation sector and the efforts we must make to ensure that those sectors benefit from comparable costs, imagine imposing a tax of 3 cents per mile on distance that can only be incorporated into the cost of goods that people in outlying regions must pay. It is outrageous and obviously not thought through.

What are the international implications? First, the Minister knows full well that U.S. truckers already enjoy a substantial advantage over their Canadian counterparts. At the present time they enjoy an advantage of something like 7 to 10 cents per fuel gallon vis-à-vis their Canadian competition.

The excise tax which is being imposed by the Minister in Bill C-80 will more than double the disadvantage Canadian truckers already suffer. That, coupled with the other cost factors which are being exacerbated by the policies of the Government, obviously puts Canada's international trucking business very much at risk vis-à-vis its U.S. competition. It is a signal to Canadian carriers that to survive in this market they will be better off with a U.S. base.

What does that mean? What does that imply? It implies lost economic opportunity, lost jobs and an increase in jobs and trucking activities south of the border. I am absolutely astonished if the Government intended to create that kind of competitive hardship for Canadian truckers. We see two things—a direct assault on the pocketbooks of consumers, as is the sales tax by including a fuel tax, and it places the Canadian trucking sector, which is already under siege, in a more disadvantaged position than before.

I hope the Minister is paying attention. I say to her that it is not too late to back down. It is not too late to apply a little economic common sense to the tax measures which have been brought before the House for discussion today.

Let me talk very briefly about another sector. The Minister intends to put a tax on health care products. Apart from the issue of fairness to which I referred earlier—the effect on the elderly and those least able to support the cost of health care products at the present time, never mind having an additional tax applied thereto—there is a much greater economic issue. The Government does not think long term. It is strictly interested in the statistical data for next year and perhaps prior to the next election. Has the Government addressed the issue of long-term increasing health costs? When we look at the statistics, we see that from a level of 5.6 per cent of GNP on health care in Canada in 1960, we have moved to 8.44 per cent in 1982, or $22 billion, and we see that trend continuing. I suggest that the way to get at this trend, to make health costs supportable and to reduce the amount of public sector expenditure on health costs in years ahead, is to have better preventive medicine. Fundamental to that is the ability of Canadians to purchase health care products at a reasonable cost. If anything, the cost should be reduced, not increased. It is an example of short-term thinking, placing long-term issues in serious jeopardy.

I suppose I share the belief of many in the House, many in my own riding and elsewhere, that indeed Canadians are prepared to make some sacrifices to get the deficit under control, to get the fiscal framework well defined and in order. However, when this Minister, who has been directly involved in expenditures which may amount to $2 billion to bail out Canadian banks, comes into the House and says, "Our concern is to get the deficit under control", pardon me if I regard that as somewhat of a joke.

This Minister, her colleague in Finance and her other colleagues in Cabinet are squandering billions of dollars, and they come into the House and ask us to accept a tax on health care products. They ask us to accept taxes which will amount to something like $4 billion out of the hands of consumers by 1990-91. They ask us to accept taxes which will take over $2 billion out of the hands of consumers next year. She is effectively telling us that in 1986-87 consumers should pay for the bank bail-out; that is what she is telling us. There will be no deficit reduction under this Government. We have seen approximately $2 billion there. We have yet to know the full cost of the tax ruling in the Gulf acquisition. We started with number of $1 billion. Some have put it as high as $1.5 billion. An interview was given by one of the principals who said that it might be only half a billion. If we assume that the figure will be $1 billion, we are up to $3 billion.

Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) tells us that we will buy a half billion dollar ice-breaker. That is only the beginning. To come into the House and make a speech telling us that the taxes being imposed upon Canadian consumers are designed to get the finances of the country in order has to be one of the best jokes we have heard in this session. The way the Government is going, I am sure we will hear many more. It is pretty difficult for us to reconcile $3.5 billion of money squandered against tax increases which will have a medium and long-term serious impact upon the Canadian economy, a major impact upon consumers, and a major negative, unfair impact upon those consumers at the low end of the income scale.

We know the Budget is unfair. There will be much more said about that by my colleagues. We know that it is economically unsound. We also know from evidence in every jurisdiction that the best economic stimulus one can have, or the best bang for the buck as economists say, is a sales tax cut. Of course the corollary of that is that the worst thing that can be done for consumer demand in terms of dampening any possible strong economic recovery is a major sales tax increase. That is what we have in Bill C-80. It is economically unsound and unfair in every way.

I suggest that the Minister has good grounds to go back to her colleague, the Minister of Finance, and tell him what she really thinks. I hope the judgment which she apparently brought to bear initially in the Canadian Commercial Bank bail-out will prevail in this case. I hope she will exercise that same good judgment, foresight and sense of fairness to Canadian taxpayers. Had her initial decision been accepted, Canadian taxpayers would not have been called upon to fork out up to $2 billion. Just for the benefit of Hon. Members, I might say that there are something like 10 million to 11 million taxpayers in the country. When we are talking about $2 billion, we are talking about close to $200 on average out of the pockets of every taxpayer. I presume I am including all Members of the House and you, Mr. Speaker.

On behalf of the people of Canada, I say to the Minister that she should exercise that good judgment, go back to the Minister of Finance and tell him that the Bill which she has been asked to sponsor on his behalf is wrong. It is wrong for Canada. It is unfair. It is not the remedy which we need today, in October, 1985.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to say a few words regarding Bill C-80. I remember so vividly in the period leading up to the September election of 1984 that the Conservatives continually talked about the need to simplify the tax system, that it was too complicated and too burdensome. As a matter of fact, the Income Tax Act is a massive document. Referring to the tax experts themselves, I will quote from one of the most recent publications on the news-stands wherein the author said: "A full understanding of the Income Tax Act is impossible. Even for the true tax expert it is impossible".

We have the Excise Tax Act and, when we returned to the House in the fall of 1985, the Government did not say that it was time to simplify that Act. It introduced Bill C-80, which is "only" 125 pages of changes to the Excise Tax Act. We should think about what we are doing for a moment. We are making the income tax system more complicated.

Mr. Blenkarn: Excise tax.

Mr. Riis: We are trying to make the excise tax and the income tax system more complicated, more exact and more precise. We are deleting a few things, adding a few things and adding a few more loopholes. Because of this, we are systematically biasing the tax system of Canada in favour of the sophisticated as opposed to the unsophisticated. We are biasing the tax system in favour of those who can afford to hire tax lawyers or tax accountants. The ordinary Canadian is even now more baffled by what the Government is attempting to do. Let me be clear, Mr. Speaker, because I think this is a very critical point. Bill C-80 makes the tax system of the country even more biased.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) made an interesting speech today when she introduced the Bill. She reminded me of Johnny Carson who tells a few jokes at the beginning of his show before he invites his guests to say something. I thought it was rather humorous when the Minister told the people of Canada that the reason we have to add more taxes on to construction materials, cable television, candies and pet foods, gasoline, beer, cigarettes, cigars and a variety of other goods is that we have to get the deficit down. Let us think about that for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

For the last number of weeks, we have been hearing time and time again of the need for bringing a Bill before Parliament that would provide for $875 million as the first instalment in the bail-out of the uninsured depositors of the failed Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. That is only the first instalment of the bail-out. In the end, it might amount to $1 billion, which is $1,000 million. It might amount to $2 billion in the end. We are not certain yet. We have to bail out depositors who should never be receiving the full amount of money. The Government is going to bail out uninsured depositors, whether they be depositors in the Bank of Shanghai, the Bank of Hong Kong or the Bank of America. We will never know. These depositors are simply going to receive their cheques for $1 million, $2 million or $5 million from the taxpayers of Canada. That is a priority of the Government.

The Gulf deal is going to cost the taxpayers perhaps $1 billion for a major tax boondoggle. That is okay. Presumably it is acceptable. I can go on and on about the unbelievable tax boondoggles that apply to those folks who do not pay any income tax at all year after year. I am not talking about poor people, I am talking about people who have annual incomes in the range of $500,000 but are able to use the tax system to pay nothing year after year. You know, Mr. Speaker, because you are an intelligent man, that if these people do not pay any income tax or their fair share of income tax, who is paying more than their fair share? It is the ordinary Canadian citizen who cannot afford a tax lawyer or a tax accountant to do his or her tax planning.

Ordinary people make perhaps $25,000 per year and pay all of the taxes that are owing. There are no loopholes or tax expenditure exemptions for them. They pay through the nose year after year to make up for those folks who do not pay their fair share.

Mr. Orlikow: How are they going to pay more in excise tax?

Mr. Riis: My friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), reminds me that on top of all of the giveaways and all of the billions of dollars the Government has shovelled out to people who are undeserving of it, we are asking people to pay an extra few cents for their gasoline.

The Minister has said that this measure is equitable because we are asking everyone to pay more sales tax. Poor people, rich people and middle-income people are all going to pay the same. It sounds equitable. However, a single parent with an annual income of $7,000 and an upper-income earner with an annual income of $400,000 will pay exactly the same tax when they go to the corner grocery store to buy some confectionery items. The poorest people of the country will be paying the same amount of tax as the richest people in the country when they purchase their goods. Is this equitable? Is this fair? Is this an honest approach to the tax system? Of course not.

There is something very insidious about Bill C-80. It results in a significant increase in the taxes on transportation fuel. In the coming year, these taxes will total $930 million. Again this tax on transportation fuel will apply to everyone. However, there are some regions of Canada in which the cost of transportation is of much more significance than it is in other regions. Canada is the second largest country in the world. In central Canada, the distances that are travelled are much shorter than those travelled in western Canada or particularly in northern Canada. This means that the tax on fuel is directly biased against western and northern Canada. In those areas, goods have to be transported over vast distances. We all know that when goods including refrigerators, mining equipment and oil rig equipment are transported over great distances, those costs are ultimately passed along to the consumer. This means that people in western and northern Canada will be paying more for their transportation costs and therefore by definition more for the items that are purchased and make up one's cost of living.

This is not a fair Bill. This is not a fair piece of taxation. It is quite the contrary. I do not know if the Minister really made her case when she defended the 7 per cent tax on construction material. Is this not the Party that said that it would be appropriate to take the taxes on construction materials away in order to provide an incentive for the construction industry and particularly the home construction industry of Canada?

When he was in opposition, I remember hearing my friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), rising on occasion after occasion to say that one of the answers to the economic problems of Canada was to encourage the home building sector because that would put a lot of people to work immediately, both directly and indirectly, through all the manufacturing sectors that provide for the housing industry. What does the Government do? It slaps a 7 per cent tax on construction materials. How is that going to assist the housing industry? How is it going to encourage more construction across the country? There may be some way that it will do so, and I would be interested to hear what Hon. Members from the Government side have to say about that.

When we add 7 per cent on to the cost of construction materials, 7 per cent on to the cost of cable and pay television services, 14 per cent on to the cost of alcoholic beverages, 14 per cent on to the cost of tobacco products and 11 per cent on to the cost of other taxable goods, the total package for the coming year will come to about $990 million. That is what it will cost Canadians in extra taxes.

Many people from Kamloops-Shuswap, the riding which I have the honour to represent, have asked me a question. I will raise this question here because I see that the Minister of State for Finance is present and is interested in the comments of Hon. Members. Perhaps I will pass along to her the questions that I have been receiving.

My constituents have told me that they are now struggling to get their businesses back on track, they are struggling to get their small farms or ranches going again or they are simply trying to get their lives together and are struggling to find part-time or temporary employment. They ask how it is that an increase in taxation will help this process. How is it that taking $990 million out of the pockets of Canadians will be of assistance in getting the economy of Kamloops-Shuswap going? It is not clear to me how that will work. As a matter of fact, I do not understand how taking money away from people will assist in generating wealth and economic activity in the regions of Canada.

When one looks at the Bill which is before us one sees two areas which are always hit, that is, tobacco and alcohol. It is a hard area to criticize as a politician. It is difficult for a politician to stand up and say: "We want to reduce the taxes on alcohol and cigarettes". However, I would like to make a case for the tourist industry. If there is one industry in Canada which makes a great deal of sense when one looks at future possibilities in terms of economic development, it is the tourist industry of Canada. We have a magnificent country which people enjoy visiting. I do not think we have even begun to explore the potential for expanding this industry as a leading industry of the future. Currently, the industry employs about 600,000 Canadians, 60 per cent of whom are women employed in about 50,000 businesses. The industry involves a major factor in terms of foreign exchange for the country. Of course, the industry is suffering very seriously as a result of the recession. It suffers because the gas taxes keep rising and a great many of our American friends think twice about visiting the country because of the high costs of transportation, the high costs of accommodation and the high costs of beverages in our beverage rooms. I do not not want to make a big item out of this point; but when we talk to tourist operators we are told that the prices of drinks in lounges keep going up and up as a result of increased taxes. That is not a factor in terms of increasing the tourism industry. It is quite the contrary. It is a factor which makes the development of that industry very difficult indeed.

I wish to speak for a moment or two about the tax system itself. It is a system which is basically an honour system whereby people are expected to be honest and forthright. They fill out their tax returns to the best of their ability. Unfortunately, now that often requires help from outside advisers because those tax forms are so complex. I remember a previous Minister of Finance standing in his place one day and saying that even he could not fill out his tax return any longer because it was simply too complicated. Apparently, he was a simple man, at least that is what he said, and he needed outside help with his tax return. For the ordinary Canadian citizen it is a complex document, one which we all await to with horror now that we are approaching that time of year again. However, it is a system based on honour. It is based on the assumption that people will be honest and that they will clearly indicate their income and expenses, tally up their deductions and decide on the bottom line if they owe the Government more money, if they have paid adequately or if they can expect a return because of an overpayment.

This honour system is based on the assumption that the system is fair. In other words, you can only expect people to be honest if they sense that the system in which they are operating is an honest one that is not biased in favour of one group, region or industry as opposed to another. I want to say clearly that the people of Canada no longer believe that the tax system is fair. I have no hesitation in making that remark. I do not think anyone would dare stand up and say that the tax system of this country is fair. I have tried to make the point that increasing gasoline taxes is a bias against western and northern Canada where distance is such an important factor in the transportation of goods. In a sense it is a tax on distance. Those who happen to live far away from central Canada are being asked to pay more.

Then, we have a sales tax which is regressive. Regardless of whether someone is rich or poor he pays the same amount of money for a loaf of bread, a bottle of milk or whatever the case may be. Now when we buy Pamper cat food for our pets or seeds for our budgies we have to pay more taxes on that, for gosh sakes. I suggest that that is a very desperate bid indeed. The point is that the tax is regressive. It is punitive to the lower income people. Rich people do not mind paying a couple of cents more for a package of birdseed, for a bottle of milk or for a loaf of bread. However, for the poor people of the country it is a major factor.

Mr. Waddell: Look at the recent report which came out.

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend from Vancouver reminds me of a devastating report which was released earlier this week indicating that, indeed, the rich in Canada are getting richer and that the poor are getting poorer and are becoming more numerous. I believe that there is now something in the neighbourhood of four million who are described by Statistics Canada as having an income which places them in the poverty category. That is a sad comment. It is also a sad comment when one considers that families earning more than $50,000 are actually creating 40 per cent of the wealth of the country. That is just a handful of people when one looks at the entire population. It just points to the fact that the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. Bill C-80 will simply add to that process because it is unfair legislation. It is an unfair tax levy.

The point I am trying to make is that our tax system is based on an honour system which assumes that the system is honest and fair to everyone. It assumes that it is equitable. It is not. What it means is that people no longer have faith in the Government. It means that they no longer have faith in the tax system. Therefore, the economy is moving underground. More and more transactions are being conducted with cash or through a barter system. For instance, a lawyer will say: "I will do some of your legal work and since you are a dentist you can do the dental work on my children's teeth". Or a plumber will say: "I will fix the plumbing in your rec room and you can come in and do a bit of masonry for me on my fireplace. We will not mention it and there will be no record of this transaction". As a result, no income tax or business tax is paid, as the case may be. How much of this is taking place in Canada today? Does anyone know of instances of this having taken place? Does anyone know of instances of abuse of the tax system? I suspect there is not a person who does not know of such an instance. This presents a serious challenge to the tax system of the country. It is a serious challenge to the country itself since $30 billion, $40 billion or $50 billion going underground annually also goes untaxed. With this unfair tax system it simply means that the Government has to go after those people who are paying the taxes. We know who they are. They are not the large corporations nor the upper income earners. They are Canada's ordinary tax-paying citizens. More and more the tax system has become biased against the average citizen of the country.

When I look through the Bill I notice that as a result of increased sales taxes effective next year the Government plans to raise $990 million out of the pockets of taxpayers. People will say that that money will be well spent because services will be received for it. The point is that there will not be any additional services because the Government is cutting back on traditional services which the people of the country have come to expect.

The Government even tried to cut back on increases to old age pensions. I remember the day the Government came in and said it was about to bail out two banks and that it was giving tax boondoggles to the big oil companies as part of the Western Accord. I believe that will amount to something in the order of $9 billion over the next five years. The Government gives away these vast amounts of money, billions and billions of dollars, and in doing so it has to collect more taxes. Thus, the Government said that it would hold back on increasing senior citizens' pensions. It took the same stand with respect to increasing family allowances. As a result of a massive public outcry, thank goodness, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) realized he had made a disastrous decision and he forgot about capping the increases on old age pensions to allow pensioners to at least keep up with the cost of living. However, that is not the case with family allowances. The children of Canada will have to pay, if you like, for the giveaways which this Government has made to large oil companies, foreign banks and the like.

Only a 1 per cent increase in the sales tax involves $990 million coming out of the pockets of Canadians. Broadening of the federal sales tax will take another half a billion dollars out of the taxpayers' pockets. Actual tax increases will result in $990 million being paid out of the taxpayers' pockets—basically out of the consumers' pockets, which means that the people living in Kamloops will not have that money to buy some goods or purchase some service. That money will not be circulating time and time again in that community; it will be pulled out down here to Ottawa. I do not see how that move will help small communities across the country, the rural areas or even the large cities. The alcohol and tobacco excise taxes in this coming year will result in $240 million being raised in additional taxes from this sector.

What does it all mean? When one takes into account the sales tax it means that an average household with an income of $15,000 will be paying out $140 more in sales tax. If one's income is in the $20,000 range, it means paying out an extra $282 in taxes. A household which earns $40,000 a year pays about $361 in increased tax burden in the upcoming year. This means that these dollars will not be in circulation in the small communities and regions throughout the country. They will be focused in Ottawa to assist in attempts at deficit reduction, particularly now with the deficit increasing as a result of these massive giveaways.

There is another interesting point with respect to our tax system. There is no question that people do not pay the same tax. Mr. MacEachen, the former Liberal Minister of Finance, brought in a Budget which resulted in a reduction in the rate of tax paid by the upper income earners. He thought that those people in the $200,000 or $300,000 a year income level were paying too much tax, so he dropped the rates down. That lost us hundreds of millions of dollars in uncollected taxes. That is what he left us with.

The new Minister of Finance thought that some people who make money through capital gains should not even be taxed at all. Let the person who is a miner, a logger, a fisherman, an office worker or a teacher be taxed on whatever amount of money he or she makes. If they make $30,000 or $35,000, they should pay a proportionate share of tax, with a minimum amount of loopholes if any. But those people who make money through capital gains should be exempt to a point. That flies directly in the face of the report of the Carter Commission. It looked into the tax system, and at the top of the list of things it said we must do in this country is to recognize that a buck is a buck, that a dollar of income is a dollar of income regardless of how it is earned and that it should be taxed as a dollar. At the top of the list of the Carter Commission was the recommendation that capital gains should be taxed as any other income. When there is no income tax at all up to $500,000 in lifetime capital gains—and we are talking about a very select group of Canadians—then ordinary working Canadians will have to pay, therefore, more tax than they should because someone has to make up the difference.

The Minister of Finance made a speech to the Canadian Tax Foundation on November 28, 1984, wherein he stated, and I quote:

> Our recent figures indicate that the effect of tax incentives has been to reduce the average federal corporate income tax rate from 36 per cent to 15 per cent . . . Particular activities qualify for very high rates of incentives, especially under certain grant programs. When the benefits from special tax incentives are added we are looking, in some cases, at an extraordinary generous level of assistance.

That is nice for the corporate sector. It has had its effective tax rate drop from 36 per cent down to 15 per cent. Was that not a nice gesture, Mr. Speaker? Again, there is a certain group in the business community which is considered as being entitled to a significant drop in the effective tax rate. To the struggling logger or truck driver out there in the regions, this would be interesting news.

The accelerated capital cost allowance allows a business to write off against income depreciation of assets at a faster rate than is actually the case. This cost us back in 1981 about $2 billion. What this does is to give an incentive to a corporation to use capital instead of labour. The Government is saying that because you can write down the cost of your equipment, rather than hire people, you should purchase and install equipment. This incentive should certainly be questioned at the time of the high unemployment we are facing today.

The boondoggle which the previous Government brought in was the scientific research tax credit. That cost us in 1984 about $2 billion, through quick flipping, whereby corporations could sell their research tax credits even though the research was never done. One could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, but it gets depressing after a while. Once we start looking at this tax Act, all we keep finding are pages and pages of tax exemptions for certain kinds of people and for certain kinds of economic activities.

There is one group of people who is almost always excluded from any kind of tax incentive or loophole, and that is the ordinary Canadian. They are not taken into consideration in the tax Act or in legislation such as Bill C-80 when tax changes are made. We cannot say that loud enough, Mr. Speaker, and we have to say it time and time again until the Government starts to accept responsibility and does something in terms of developing a more equitable tax system.

The Minister of Finance had this to say about the tax system, and I quote:

> As we grapple with the technicalities, the subtleties and the complexities of our tax system, we must never lose sight of the citizens it is ultimately meant to serve. That is what our efforts are all about. The real bottom line is people.

What he did not say is which people he is talking about. What he meant was that certain kinds of people were the beneficiaries of all of these subtleties and complexities of our tax system—not the ordinary Canadian, but a very privileged few in our society and within our business community. It is not the struggling small business person who is being rewarded or encouraged or who is receiving incentives through the tax system. The most tragic example of that was a few years ago when both Shell and the Bank of Montreal used the tax system to pay no income tax at all in spite of significantly large profits.

This is the kind of system which we must recognize is in existence and when the Government stands up and tells it is introducing Bill C-80 today in an effort to bring equity and fairness to the tax system, we must recognize that that is absolute balderdash. We cannot have equity and fairness built into a system when we increase the sales tax which, by definition, is regressive and punishes those people who are least able to afford paying taxes at all.

I would be remiss today if I did not raise one important point about tax discounters. It is the time of the year when we start filling out tax forms. A rather insidious practice has developed over the last number of years and it is growing very rapidly as people realize that the tax system is so complex that they cannot fill out their tax form and must have some help. More importantly, the tax discounters thrive on the victims of oppressive economic times, who include the poorest people in society who are eligible for such items as the refundable child tax credit. A single parent, for example, knows that because of the family's low income and the child tax credit, there will be a refund after the income tax form is filed. Single parents are desperately in need of cash because they are inevitably living below the poverty line. They go to the tax discounters who tell them they will give them cash for the privilege of filling out their tax return and sending it away. In other words, the tax discounters make their money helping those people fill out their tax forms, giving them a portion of what they are entitled to and keeping the rest as a fee for their service. That is a terrible situation, Mr. Speaker.

It is hard to believe that a Government which is seriously interested in equity and fairness would permit such a thing to take place. There are many countries which abandoned this type of practice because they realized it preyed upon those least able to afford paying out a portion of their tax refund. Many Hon. Members have pleaded for an end to this practice, especially the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, who has repeatedly in the House asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) when he is going to move to bring in a Bill to prohibit this exploitive practice, and after hearing time and time again from the Liberal administration that it would be getting around to that sometime, he hears the same thing from this Government. In the meantime this practice grows and victimizes more and more people who can ill afford to pay that kind of price to these tax discounters.

In conclusion, Bill C-80 comes at a very inappropriate time. Canadians are struggling to get on their feet and are doing what they can to encourage economic activity in their own communities. They are working very, very hard and, I might say, going to some extraordinary lengths to ensure that economic prosperity returns for them and their families. It is a very delicate and difficult struggle, yet the Government introduces a Bill which will result in hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars being taken from the pockets of those same people. There are increases in sales taxes, gasoline taxes, and confectionery goods taxes. It is a very inappropriate step for the Government to be taking. It is difficult to encourage people to remain optimistic and hopeful when, on the one hand, the Government says we must all sacrifice and then, on the other hand, it brings in a Bill which asks ordinary people to sacrifice even more than they already have.

As for myself and my colleagues in the NDP, we certainly do not support the Bill and we will vote against it. Quite frankly, we have many, many questions about its details. Since this, unfortunately, is an opportunity to talk only about the Bill in principle, we will be looking forward to examining the logic of those clauses which exempt certain kinds of goods from federal sales tax but not others. We will have an opportunity in committee to look at those details, but at this point in time we certainly do not support this Bill.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am both pleased and saddened to participate in this debate on Bill C-80. Saddened, because unfortunately we now have to face the music—the $200 billion deficit which our Liberal predecessors left the country saddled with as a result of their indecent mismanagement. Yet they are the ones who now want us to account for the measures we want to take in an attempt to get Canada back on the right track. Pleased, because I want to support the approach taken in this case by our Minister of State (Finance) (Mrs. McDougall).

What did we say on September 4, 1984? That we would promote national reconciliation, economic renewal and renewed Canadian internationalism. Mr. Speaker, we must not lose sight of the general rules. Practically every time we advocate new propositions, the Liberals especially have so little foresight that they get lost in details without ever dealing with guiding principles or traditional economic precepts. I happen to know they have competent spokesmen in that field, but for some unknown reason they seem to lose their bearings when they become politicians. We had promised to restore a climate of national reconciliation, and the starting point was the Western Accord which led to a significant economic upsurge in that part of the country. I see the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) is in the House, and I am sure she would attest to the economic revival of her region since the Western Accord, in contrast with the days when the Liberals never missed a chance to create a wide gap between the interests of the central Government and those of Western Canada.

And then the agreement with Newfoundland was a historic occasion. The Liberals had been dragging their feet for years and years, but we did settle the issue as we had promised during the election campaign before September 4.

Since we came to office a good many Quebecers have seen the futility of the separatist option and took stock of their Canadian heritage. In that respect we have to wonder today whether the proponents of separatism did not stand to further their cause by playing the game of the Liberal Government. The dust settled after our election and separatism is on the wane.

We had also promised economic renewal. We are now beginning to feel the impact of our politicies in this regard. We have seen 340,000 new jobs being created in the last year. Unemployment and interest rates have gone down. Inflation is under control. Inflation rates of 10, 12 or 13 per cent had serious repercussions on the most disadvantaged in our society and on senior citizens in families with very low incomes. At the time, the Liberals did not want to index the social benefits enjoyed by Canadians. However, we are now beating inflation, with rates of around 4 or 4.5 per cent, which means that the most needy among us can have a nearly constant standard of living. There is also a positive picture in the increase of the gross national product which continues to surprise the experts and to surpass the forecasts of economists.

On September 4, 1984, the Canadian public gave us a very formal official and significant mandate asking us to tighten our belts and reduce our budgetary deficit. There are now 211 representatives of Canadian men and women in this House to fulfil this mandate. At the time, we told the Canadian population that it would not be easy because we had inherited a difficult situation and the building was on fire. This fire had been burning since the Liberals had been in power. They left us a deficit of $200 billion. They had forgotten that the role of a Government is to distribute part of the public resources to the most needy. They modernized somewhat too quickly. They decided to distribute public borrowings, not only to the needy, but also to companies, wealthy people and their friends. We saw crown corporations vote themselves extraordinary amounts for their administrators. There was the unfortunate example of the Canada Post Corporation. This corporation, under Liberal administration, has 17 vice-presidents who each have their own car and chauffeur. It is quite a sight to go to the headquarters of the Canada Post Corporation and to see all those cars with chauffeurs. You would think it is a much more important corporation. This shows the mismanagement of the Liberals and how they were able to accumulate a deficit of $200 billion.

They made excessive investments, created a paper empire and left us with only constraints. The Liberals are gone, but we are faced with expenditures of $105 billion. How is this money spent? We spend $25 billion, or 25c. on each dollar, to pay the interests on the borrowings of the Liberals, some of which were distributed among wealthy Canadians and their own friends.

We also spend $45 billion, or another 45c. out of each dollar if we are speaking about a budget of $105 billion, for social welfare programs. The Liberals are now asking us not to increase the revenues of our Government. These $45 billion allocated to social programs represent 57 per cent of the expenditures of the Canadian Government if we exclude interest charges on the debt. Therefore, 57c. on each dollar, or more than half of our revenues, are spent to help the most needy Canadians, out of a total budget of $105 billion. There therefore remains $35 billion which must be distributed among all the other departments and Government programs.

We inherited a technically disastrous situation as concerns Canadian Armed Forces which need to be modernized. However, we must operate within very restrictive budgetary limits.

What have been the effects of this mismanagement by our predecessors? All Canadian men and women lost whatever incentive they might have had. They could gain nothing by being creative as they were being stifled by Government regulations and constraints. Our entrepreneurs, and about 15 per cent of the labour force in a country should be in this category, lost all incentive during the last decades. They have practically disappeared from this country.

Because of the runaway inflation that prevailed under the Liberal administration, our productivity has decreased, and we can no longer sell our products abroad—except for our natural resources because they were always willing to sell our natural resources abroad—we shut ourselves out from external markets.

What are the solutions to the problems we inherited from Liberals? The first one is for Canadian men and women to tighten their belts, an effort that must be made by each and every one of us in Canada.

We have seen a significant example of this belt-tightening exercise when the Prime Minister decided to have his salary reduced by 15 per cent when he came to power. When all Cabinet Ministers in this Government accepted to have their own salaries reduced by 10 per cent as an effort at national restraint. It can be emphasized, Mr. Speaker, that no such effort was ever made or agreed upon by the Opposition Leader or the Leader of the New Democratic Party. They are asking us to make all those efforts, they get them from the people, but they themselves fail to set the example.

To this day, our solutions have brought about results. We have our 340,000 new jobs. Entrepreneur confidence has returned. We are now in the process, through collective efforts, of reviving an economy that was in a most unhealthy state, a state which the Liberals have brought about and which they would have gladly kept going for a few more years to come.

But under the laws of economics it was impossible to go any further, this country could no longer borrow money. Our people, in such a declining state of affairs, could sustain no additional effort. It was therefore essential to create a new climate, and this is what we did. Our goal is to have balanced budgets from year to year, positive cash flows as between revenues and expenditures. This is one of the only means of putting the economy back on its feet. It is imperative that this country regain confidence, that our citizens wake up, and this is the climate we are providing.

Mr. Speaker, reference had also been made to our international openness, from coast to coast, a new economic impetus, an international outlook.

As recently as the day before yesterday, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to all intents and purposes, won the day at the meeting of member states of the British Commonwealth. Our Prime Minister asserted himself following his first year of public life and assumed the leadership within the Commonwealth, suggesting at that recent meeting concrete steps for helping to settle the crisis experienced in South Africa.

When reference is made to the international involvement of our country, it should also be pointed out that in New York our Prime Minister yesterday delivered before the world powers one of most straightforward and significant message on disarmement.

Our Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) is now trying hard to give Canadian within the next 20 years the best record as far as developing our international trade is concerned, opening up the largest and most powerful market in the world, the American market.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, we must amend our legislation to continue to give Canadian men and women a clear indication that we want to carry out our programs and this legislation is merely aimed at giving them what they asked for on September 4. We are giving them a chance to tighten their belt so that after that short term effort, we will benefit from it thanks to a new economic impetus, the welfare of Canadians and the international prestige of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif).

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat absurd that some hon. members should take this opportunity to make an overview of the situation, without dealing in any way with Bill C-80 which is before us today.

They keep saying that the Liberals are responsible for all the problems Canada is facing today, and that they are responsible for all positive aspects, for low rates of interest and inflation, and so on. The fact that they keep saying that is ample proof that they know nothing about the economy. In fact, all experts unanimously agree that the current situation is the results of steps taken by the previous government.

What I should like to know from the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) is this: You keep saying that on September 4, 1984, you were elected by the Canadian people to tighten our collective belt. If such is the case, how could you allow over $500 million in tax dollars to disappear in the course of the recent purchase of the Gulf Canada assets, or how could you introduce a legislation currently before the House and calling for $800 million to compensate those investors with more than $60,000 in uninsured deposits? How could you give $2.5 billion to the major oil companies under the so-called agreement which you referred to earlier? And now you dare stand up in the House and say: We have been mandated by the Canadian people to tax basic necessities and health products, and all taxpayers across the board will have to pay because of that odious bill. How can you reconcile being so callous with low and middle income taxpayers on the one hand, and so very generous with those who can easily afford it on the other? I should like to hear what the Hon. Member for Lévis has to say about that.

Mr. Fontaine: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) for his question and, by the same token, put one to him.

How do you, Liberals, who made up the previous Government, explain those $15 million you gave to CCM, a company that did not make any profits at all? What about the $2 billion you gave to de Havilland and the $1 billion you gave Canadair? What about Maislin and Massey Ferguson? You Liberals threw $3.2 billion down the drain!

An Hon. Member: Maislin in LaSalle—

Mr. Fontaine: So I think you people should explain. I thank you for your question. You also mentioned a tax matter, and you know perfectly well that was settled by the Department of National Revenue. You mentioned $800,000 . . . Out West, because of your so-called energy policy and the house of cards you set up, people started construction and established companies with very little equity, and because of the economic conditions you created, they got into trouble, and today we have to clean up the mess. So I think you have a lot of explaining to do, not us!

We are here to deal with the problem and that is why today we are asking Canadians . . . Your Leader refused to have you tighten your belts, and so did the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Our Prime Minister tightened his belt, $15,000 worth, 15 per cent of his salary. Tighten your belts first, before you ask us any questions!

Mr. Tardif: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), for a supplementary.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not share the views of the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), but I would like to inform the Hon. Member that the billions invested by the previous administration have created and safeguarded thousands of jobs.

Mrs. Champagne: Ask the people at Maislin!

Mr. Tardif: And if we add up the millions to which he was referring, I think we should remember that this was over twenty years, and the total amount you gave to those rich Canadians is far more than we apparently "wasted", to borrow your expression, in twenty years.

You did it in six months, and worst of all, you did it at the expense of the average taxpayer, at the expense of Canadian men and women who aren't able to tighten their belts.

You don't seem to realize what it means to lose $10 or $15 per month when people have trouble making both ends meet. You are making them pay for your handouts to the rich friends of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Fontaine: I appreciate that the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and I do not see eye to eye, for if he did he would have seen the light and be sitting on this side of the House.

The Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe talks about the peculiarities of Canadians. Are you aware of the fact that all Canadians enjoy the right to vote—be they poor or very poor, rich or very rich—and that they are the ones who gave us 211 out of 282 votes here in the House? They gave us an unmistakable mandate to administer and balance our budget, and that is what we are doing now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I can hardly believe my ears when I listen to a debate between two Quebec Members. The Tories blame the Liberals, and the Liberals blame the Tories. Fortunately the electors of Quebec will have another option on December 2, the NDP of Quebec. I want to say to the Hon. Member that the Liberal Government's National Energy Program was designed to help Quebec consumers. There were problems, but that is the kind of program it was. Here is my question: How much does ordinary gasoline cost?

Mr. Della Noce: The word is "regular".

Mr. Waddell: Regular gas in Lévis.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). First I want to congratulate him for speaking in French, it is commendable.

You refer to the Liberals' energy program and its advantages for the Province of Quebec, but you seem to make a distinction between Quebec and Canada as a whole, yet Quebec is a part of the country. Canada stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The economic fallout of our policy concerning the energy program can be felt throughout Canada. As to the current price of a litre of oil, it is now lower than a year ago by today's cost of living standards.

Mrs. Mailly: A comment, Mr. Speaker. I wish to congratulate my hon. friend. Coming from a Member who was not present in the House in 1979 when we were sitting on the Government side, this is quite a good speech. He obviously fully realizes the kind of economic situation we have inherited from the Liberal administration. I had the pleasure and the unforgettable experience to act as assistant to Mr. Crosbie, the then Minister of Finance, when our party was in power, unfortunately, for a very short period in 1979. I must say Mr. Crosbie would be very much interested in the remarks my hon. colleague has just made, because he has clearly indicated what was wrong. It was that enormous debt which was jeopardizing our country making it impossible for many regions, such as Western Canada, to recover and get out of this mess for which the Liberals, who are liberal to a fault, were responsible.

I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend to an article which appeared yesterday in the Ottawa Citizen, under the headline:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) in the expression of her objective opinion—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I was just quoting from an article—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): The reason I have interrupted the Hon. Member is that the time allocated for questions and comments is over. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-80 now under consideration is completely useless in my opinion and could have been avoided if this Government had taken a different approach. We are told that this Bill was introduced, as the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has just said, because the Canadian public gave his Government, or at least his party, the mandate to make all Canadians tighten their belts. I think that all Canadian men and women were aware of the fact that, after the worst economic crisis ever in Canada and the other industrialized countries in 1981 and 1982, we would have a serious public debt problem.

My first criticism of this Government would be that it did not take this fact into account during the 1984 electoral campaign. Who made promises representing additional expenditures of $20 billion according to the figures of the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie)? Those promises were not made by the Liberals, but by the Conservatives themselves. Who promised during the electoral campaing, for instance, to solve the oil problem and especially to do something for the private retailers who do not work for the big oil companies? It was not the party on this side, but the party opposite. Yet, after criticizing the Petro-Canada problem for so many years, what did they do after coming to power? They invested even more money, allowed Petro-Canada to spend even more, and because of this, a refinery in eastern Montreal will close its doors, 450 jobs will disappear, and in addition, all private gasoline retailers in Quebec will be facing even larger cartels than before.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this Bill could been avoided if the Government had taken a different course of action. I am aware that the public debt is serious. I am aware that 25 per cent of our expenditures, or 25 cents out of each dollar, are used to pay interest charges on the debt. However, if this is so, why not have worked on this angle?

Why is it, for instance, that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), the Minister of State for Finance (Mrs. McDougall) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tell us that we must reduce the deficit? What did they do in the budget? Why do we now have to examine such a piece of legislation? Why will all Canadians have to pay taxes on nonproprietary medicine? Why will Canadians have to pay higher taxes on gasoline? Why will they have to pay taxes on building materials, such as pre-mixed concrete? Why do we have to do this? It is very simple. It is because this Government decided to give money to the multinationals and make the taxpayers pay for it.

It must be emphasized that this is the basic philosophical difference between the Conservatives and my own party.

According to the Conservative philosophy, one should give to the rich and tax medium- and lower-income groups, and keep hoping that within the next 10 or 15 years the rich will be rich enough to spend, and that ultimately they will create jobs for the poor. That, of course, is the story of the horse and the sparrow, as has often been explained. We on this side think that the best way to ensure a distribution of wealth, a more democratic, more liberal way, is to make sure that wealth is distributed more adequately and that the rich pay more, so that we may maintain a better and fairer balance in wealth distribution among all middle-income groups, especially in the less favoured regions, and this involves regional development.

They say they want to tackle the deficit, but what are they doing in the Budget? They did away with the tax on oil multinationals, and this means that by 1990, $8.5 billion will have slipped out of this Government's coffers into those of ten odd oil multinational corporations. I repeat it: $8.5 billion. They decided to do away with the tax on capital gains, and certainly people earning $25,000 and $30,000 a year do not earn enough capital gains to benefit from that deduction offered by the Conservatives. You know something, Mr. Speaker? By 1990, it is nearly $5 billion that will have gone out of the Canadian Government's coffers into those of a mere 4 per cent of Canadian taxpayers who had capital gains over these last years and will now get those tax benefits.

What have we done to that Government? We are told: Middle-income Canadians, tighten your belts! And at the same time, they decide all of a sudden to take close to $1 billion out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers so that the Government may reimburse nameless depositors, individuals or companies, or foreign banks that had deposited more than $60,000 in the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are asked to tighten their belts. Middle-income and lower-income Canadians are asked to pay a higher sales tax. The Government has enough money to forego potential tax revenues of something like $1 billion—some say it is even more—for the benefit of a couple of shareholders in a company that just bought the Canadian assets of Gulf, which may amount to $1 billion in tax expenditures, and then they say it was just an administrative decision. We read in the papers that the former Deputy Minister of Finance clearly stated that his Minister allowed him to keep from discussing the issue because of the possibility he might work with the Reichmanns, and his Minister was kind enough to look after that matter himself. And we are being asked to believe, today, after the tainted tuna affair and the banks affair that those people speak the truth and only the truth and that neither the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), nor the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), nor the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mrs. Carney) knew about that administrative decision which handed out $1 billion to a few shareholders of a big company. And also we are asked to pass legislation which will force Canadians to tighten their belts.

Mr. Speaker, nothing much has been said in the House about another issue which was discussed at the same time as Domtar, in the Eastern Townships, an issue which had my colleagues for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and the member for Granby-Stanstead-Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) working very hard. The Government did not want to give a cent. Finally, funds which were earmarked for other projects under regional agreements already signed were granted to Domtar, that is $60 million. However, at the same time our angelic Minister of Revenue (Mr. MacKay) who used to bawl out against advance rulings, gave one out for the Reichmanns and another one which may have cost $250 million of lost revenues in the case of Algoma Steel and CPR. You should perhaps look into this other matter.

And, billions are given to multinationals either by way of advance rulings for the purchase of Gulf as well as in the case of Algoma and the CPR or in the case of the banks and I maintain that as a result of this Government's incompetence, we are asked to hand out so much money for the banks. And today, the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) and the Minister of State (Finance) had the nerve to come and say, Mr. Speaker, that they have been given the authority to tighten our belts, the belts of people earning $15,000 and $20,000 by increasing the sales tax, by reducing family allowances, by reducing the amount which enables families with average incomes to obtain the child tax credit. And they want us to believe that today, Mr. Speaker.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is a limit to trying to stuff people like suitcases. I think that truth must be clearly stated. If we look at the impact the Bill will have by 1990, it all means that this Government is going to take $16 billion more out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, and I would rather not go on again about the sales tax, which we all know is going to hurt low income families far more, proportionally, than other Canadians. All this is going to add up to $16 billion. And you know what? The special benefits for oil multinationals, which add up to $8.5 billion, capital gains—$5 billion, the Algoma deal—$200 million, plus one billion dollars' worth of "advance ruling" for Reichmann and one billion dollars in the bank fiasco, do you realize that all this adds up to $16 billion? And the sum total of this whole exercise is, that this Government's deficit will not be reduced by a single cent. In fact, it will increase.

To the Hon. Member for Lévis who says that the Government is doing this to bring down the deficit, I say this: It's like trying to water your garden when you turn on the water but you don't open the nozzle. It won't do much for your garden and it won't do much for the deficit. And the worst part is that all these cash payments and foregone revenues benefit exclusively a certain privileged class, and I am referring to the oil multinationals, the big banks and people with deposits of $60,000 and up. The benefits go to the people who buy a company and manage a tax benefit of one billion dollars.

Mr. Speaker, all this money goes into the hands of... I think if I had two more hands, if I could find two extra hands, I could almost show what these people are like.

Unfortunately, 10 or 11 million Canadian taxpayers are probably going to have to pay the bill. And that is the whole philosophy of this Government. They think they can activate the economy by taking money from those who have less—and I am referring to the middle class and those with very low incomes—to give it to the rich.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this economic assumption is wrong, that it will create social problems in Quebec and in Canada, and that it will also create problems for regional development in this country, because in a country like Canada, we cannot expect the market to meet all the needs of our various regions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, according to the latest figures, every day some 19,800 pounds of priority pollutants are discharged into the Niagara River. Of these, 350 pounds are caught by the recently reopened sewer treatment plant in Niagara Falls, New York. The remaining 19,450 pounds flow unchecked into the river and eventually into Lake Ontario, posing a serious long-term threat to public health. While this goes on, here in Ottawa the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) remains silent on the clean-up plan he received from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

On Monday the Minister refused to provide facts about the plan proposed by the United States. From his performance, one has to conclude that the Minister prefers to engage in cheap politics rather than deal with the health of millions of Canadians.

There are important questions which need to be answered. First, does the plan set stiff controls on polluting industries for their toxic discharges? Second, how much money, if any, does the plan provide for the incineration of toxic chemicals buried in the four major dumps on the United States side of the river? Third, will funds be given to municipalities for the construction of facilities intended to catch toxic pollutants as they enter sewage plants? Fourth, what is the implementation timetable? Fifth, which are the agreed upon toxic substances to be brought under control?

I call upon the Minister of the Environment to make the U.S. plan public and to seek input from public interest groups—

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES AND REPAIRING OF DESTROYERS—ADJUDICATION OF CONTRACTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): On June 29, 1983, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government had announced the adjudication of major contracts for the building of six frigates as well as the repairing of destroyers and submarines of the Canadian Navy. It had shared these contracts fairly among the various regions and shipyards in this country.

Now that the rules of the game have been changed, the Conservative Government is shying away from its responsibilities in the area of regional development by not forcing the Versatile Vickers Company to fulfil its contractual obligations.

The contract which had been adjudicated to the St. John company provided for two major subcontractors, namely, Paramax Electronics and Versatile. Why would we have insisted at the time on Paramax relocating in Montreal if three of the six frigates were not to be built in the Montreal area?

The decision to callously take away this contract from the Vickers company in Montreal will affect some 500 senior employees who have between 10 and 15 years of service and who have the necessary advanced technology in the area of ship repair and construction.

We are told that 185 employees are already at least 55 years of age, and if this decision—

Mr. Speaker: I must regretfully interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allocated to him has expired.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—FUTURE OF SOUTH MORESBY AREA

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, the people of British Columbia speak with one voice when they address the management of that delicate balance between the preservation of our environment and the survival of our resource industries. No one wants to see that balance upset. Most recently that voice has been loud and clear on a number of controversial conflict areas, including South Moresby, British Columbia. I am pround to report that the voice of the people is now recognized as the voice of reason.

My colleague, the Hon. Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), has had an opportunity to see firsthand the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands. After touring the area, the Minister spoke of accommodation and compromise.

The provincial Government also realizes the importance of approaching issues as crucial as the South Moresby issue with a view to seeking a compromise. The announcement last week by B.C. Environment Minister Pelton of his study commission is welcomed by those who reject extremism in either the environmental or the industrial communities.

There is a place for both the development of our resource industries and the preservation of our wilderness environment. Our role is to search for that compromise solution, to listen to the voice of reason, and to maintain the delicate balance.

TRADE

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my whole-hearted support of our Government's efforts in seeking a new trade agreement with the United States.

It is only common sense that we should seek to secure and expand our access to the markets of our largest trading partner. Seventy-six per cent of all Canadian exports go to the United States. This represents approximately three million Canadian jobs and almost 30 per cent of our national income.

At present there are 300 protectionist Bills before the United States Congress. Many of these measures would seriously impair various sectors of the Canadian economy.

In its final report the Macdonald Commission indicated:

> It is imperative that Canada reduce both the uncertainty of access to U.S. markets and the adverse effects that might result from any trade-restrictive measurs.

The commission concluded that Canada would "benefit substantially from a new trade agreement with the United States, particularly from access to the expanded unrestricted market and from economies of scale".

Are members of the Opposition really willing to risk the status quo? They should ask a pork farmer in Ontario, or a logger in British Columbia, if he is happy with the status quo.

The Government believes in the ability of Canadians to compete and to succeed. A new trade agreement with our largest trading partner will preserve jobs now and create jobs in the future. Let there be no illusions. These negotiations will be long and difficult, but the bottom line is: if we do not get a good deal, there is going to be no deal.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

EMPLOYMENT

FULL-TIME AND PART-TIME JOB STATISTICS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, unemployment remains the most serious concern of and problem for Canadians. The marginal decline in the unemployment rate to 10.1 per cent glosses over the fact that much of the decline is due to an increase in low-paying, part-time jobs which are replacing unionized, full-time jobs with standard pay and benefits.

The report of Statistics Canada released on October 11 indicated that in September full-time employment decreased by 24,000, with the decline entirely due to lower full-time employment for females, while part-time employment rose by 47,000.

This was confirmed on Monday in a report out of Toronto which appeared in The Globe and Mail. It indicated that job openings for full-timers dropped by 24 per cent. According to the Toronto-based Technical Service Council, total employment in Canada increased in the past year largely because of temporary, part-time, and contract positions. In its report on September 24 the OECD forecast little improvement in unemployment in Canada in 1986.

All these facts indicate that the Budget and the employment policies of the Government are not adequate. It is time for the Government to stop patting itself on the back and to re-examine its employment policies in respect of these serious issues.

APARTHEID

CONDEMNATION BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I stand to applaud the statement of condemnation of South African racist policies which was made before the United Nations yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: It reflected the views, I am sure, of all Parties in the House and of the vast majority of Canadians. Its enthusiastic reception by delegates at the UN reflected not only the power of the statement but the expectations created by it.

Canada has assumed the focus of the expectations for change of the Third World that hopes to see western industrial nations, which have heretofore supported South Africa, now effectively join the battle against that regime. Any failure to live up in full measure to what is expected of this new leadership role could lead not only to immeasurable disillusionment with Canada but to increased cynicism about the West's commitment to the values underlying our democracies.

We have promised a tough stand, and we must take that stand. If in six months South Africa has not responded as demanded, we dare not answer with more words, however eloquent. We must respond with action which goes much further than "a tiny little bit", "a tiny little bit".

THE ECONOMY

IMPACT OF LOW INTEREST RATES

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out how satisfied the people of the Beauce region and the people of all of Canada are as a result of a decrease in interest rates. From now on, it will be less costly to become a property owner. Farmers, fishermen and small businessmen will see their costs decrease and jobs will be created for the unemployed.

Last Thursday, the Bank of Canada rate reached 8.77 per cent, and this means a 3.6 per cent reduction since the election.

The chartered banks' preferred rate has decreased from 1 to 10 per cent, its lowest level in seven years. Consequently, the interest rates provided under the Small Businesses Loans Act, the Farm Improvements Loans Act and the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act will be reduced.

In more specific terms, this will represent an average saving of $1500 per year on a $50,000 loan.

Payments on 5-year mortgage loans have been reduced 2.5 per cent. In the case of a $50,000 mortgage, this means a saving of more than $5000 in the first 5 years and of around $26,000 over a period of 25 years. The people of the Beauce region appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker, since the election, housing starts have increased by 29 per cent, as a result of lower interest rates. It will give rise to the creation of thousands of jobs in the construction, lumber and furniture industries.

We are creating a very favorable climate. Let the media dwell more often on the good news, and this country will be all the better.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

THE FRIENDLY GIANT—LAMENT FOR PROGRAM CANCELLATION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the CBC has done it again. It wins and Canada loses. The Friendly Giant is dying, and the CBC pulled the trigger.

Talk about an arm's-length relationship; the CBC is so far removed from reality that it cannot tell what is worth keeping any more. Just because Friendly is 66 years old and has been on the air for 26 years is absolutely no reason to write him off.

S.O. 22

Do you recall the expression, Mr. Speaker: "If it works, don't fix it"? Well, here we go again.

The last letter I received regarding Friendly from the CBC President was dated September 12, 1985, and read:

—it may surprise you to know that I share your feelings about Friendly. I, too, think it was valuable and worthwhile, and I can appreciate that its cancellation has created considerable concern.

What is wrong with admitting you made a mistake? We did it in June regarding the Old Age Security pension issue.

We are seeing another nail being driven into the Canadian cultural coffin. Friendly will be no more. Rusty and Jerome are being put to pasture and we cannot even offer them a Senate seat. I tried, goodness knows I tried.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT FUND

DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDING

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, all Members of the House should be asking why the Native Economic Development Fund which was set up to assist native business people is distributing its funding so slowly. The whole process is creating frustration among native people awaiting start-up assistance for business ventures and depriving them of their chance to create jobs for the many unemployed native people of Canada.

Why has the NEDP, which is well into its second year of operation and more than one-third of the way through its mandate, distributed less than one-tenth of its funds, only some $20 million of the $345 million allocated?

[Translation]

On May 21st last, the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) told me in this House that requests for financial assistance were efficiently dealt with as they always are.

[English]

If this is so, why are we still hearing reports of delays and applications resting in the Minister's office?

This program must become a priority of the Government if we are to see any improvement in the economic conditions of Canada's native people. I fear that there will be even further delays with the expected major turnover of advisory committee members at the end of this month. There is no excuse for these delays. If the process for reviewing the applications has to be revised, then the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Bissonnette) should do so. Let's get going.

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF PEACE

UNITED NATIONS DECLARATION—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in New York City this afternoon the United Nations is going to declare 1986 the International Year of Peace. In the words of the General Assembly, the objective of this international year will be to make an even greater contribution to promoting international peace and security on the basis of the Charter of the United Nations.

Canada can enter this international year encouraged by the way 1985 has already been a year of victories for peace by Canada. First, the Canadian people and Government set the pace for world relief to Ethiopia. Second, our Ambassador for Disarmament was a key player in gaining renewed support for the non-proliferation treaty. Third, the Government made a courageous decision on the issue of the Strategic Defence Initiative. Fourth, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Nielsen) announced that Canada will join the multinational peacekeeping force in the Sinai. Fifth, Canada hosted the World Conference on Human Rights. Sixth, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has given leadership to the Commonwealth and the world in challenging apartheid in South Africa.

The International Year of Peace will involve not only peace-seeking Governments such as our own. Its appeal is also to churches, clubs, lodges and associations, to open up that vast reservoir of support for peace that exists in all our constituencies and neighbourhoods. International years have already raised world consciousness—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—ESTEY COMMISSION HEARINGS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Every day a little bit of truth about the Government's behaviour regarding the Canadian Commercial Bank affair trickles out. The Estey Commission confirmed that the Prime Minister was directly responsible for the CCB decision. Today we also learned that the Government orchestrated the bail-out knowing that losses were understated. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance defended themselves by saying that they relied on the best available information. Does the best available information mean only the information that the Prime Minister wants to hear?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK BAIL-OUT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in a matter as serious as this one, I must say I am very surprised. The Minister is not deaf, he understood my question quite clearly, but he obviously does not want to answer. I will try with another question, and maybe he will want to answer that one.

In the tuna affair, the Prime Minister informed the House that he had acted "innocently", as though he knew nothing. In the bank affair, it seems the Prime Minister did not want to know the facts.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister, considering the importance of this matter, what kind of documents the Prime Minister had in front of him when he made the decision to bail out the Canadian Commercial Bank.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has been a member of a Cabinet. He knows that that is a question that cannot be answered in the House. All the information that was needed for this decision was presented to the Prime Minister, and that is all I am able to say.

SURVIVAL OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

We were informed in the House on several occasions that $255 million was enough to guarantee the survival of the CCB. Yesterday, before the Estey Commission, it transpired that the Inspector himself from the Office of the Inspector General of Banks had said it would take $120 million more, in other words $375 million. Could the Minister of Finance inform the House why he concealed such important information from the House and why he deceived Parliament and the Canadian people?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are going to be different points of view presented before the Estey Commission from time to time over the course of its hearings. The whole purpose of the Estey Commission is to get these different points of view on the record so that Mr. Justice Estey can make a decision. Once he has made his report available to the public, we can then decide where to proceed from there.

Oral Questions

SHAREHOLDERS AND DEPOSITORS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. As late as August 9 the Minister was encouraging shareholders and depositors to hang in with the Canadian Commercial Bank by saying unequivocally that the Government's actions in March had ensured the long-term viability of the bank. We now find that the Minister knew in July from at least two sources that the bank would not return to profitability. Will the Minister tell the House why, on August 9, she made statements that she must have known were at variance with the facts?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question any number of times in the House. I have indicated to the House more than once that this is exactly the kind of information that is going to come before the Commission within its proper context and all the facts will determine the conclusions.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that is not true either because the question of ministerial responsibility is not before the Estey Commission. That question belongs in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF FIGURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Government has not been open with the House or with the people of Canada from the start. We were told at the time that $255 million would make the bank viable. We now learn that officials advised on March 24—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to ask her question, please.

Miss Nicholson: Will the Minister table in this House documents, and will she make a statement on Motions, dealing with the difference between the two figures of $255 million, which we were told at the time, and another $116 million, which we now learn would have been essential to make the bank viable?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that we have learned that another $116 million was essential. I think that we have learned is that there are a number of figures from the balance sheet and the support package being placed before the Estey inquiry. All those facts will go into the conclusions which the inquiry will reach.

INFORMATION PROVIDED TO MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On March 28 in this House the Minister of State for Finance said the following, and I quote: " . . . a support package in the amount of $255 million would be sufficent to ensure the continuing operation of the Bank." Yesterday we learned from Neville Grant, the man in charge of bank inspections, that on the day before the bail-out decision was announced he had informed the Inspector General of Banks that the CCB was going to lose some $350 million and that a bail-out of that amount would be required for survival. Was the Minister made aware of that information?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will respond to the question in the same way as I responded to the previous question from the Liberal Party. These are questions which are being discussed before the Estey Commission.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Are you going to testify there?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): They are matters of opinion before the Estey Commission.

Mr. Waddell: That is a fact.

Mr. Broadbent: I asked a factual question, not opinion.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is the whole purpose of the Estey Commission. Once it has assessed all the information before it, we can then decide at that stage where we go on the whole matter.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I raised a question with wording I chose with care. It was not a matter of opinion; it was a matter of fact.

INQUIRY CONCERNING MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance who has responsibility over the Inspector General of Banks is simply the following. Was he made aware before the decision was made and before it was announced in this House that the CCB would lose $350 million, that, if there was to be a bail-out, a sum of money up to that amount would be required? That is a factual question which the Minister should answer.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me expand a little bit on my first answer, then.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What the Hon. Member has drawn into the preamble to his question are conclusions which he is drawing from statements that were made before the commission yesterday. I will not comment on the conclusions which the Hon. Member draws. The conclusions which the Government and I are waiting for are those from Mr. Justice Estey. That is the basis upon which I should be commenting.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that is a cop-out if I ever heard one. The Minister was asked a factual question and he should answer a factual question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have another question which pertains to ministerial responsibility. Also, according to very important testimony which was given, the decision to save the bank was made on Saturday, March 23. We now know regarding the $350 million sum that the inspection which led to that sum was not completed until 24 hours later. Is it the Minister's notion of ministerial responsibility to make a decision first and get the facts later?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again I say that the Hon. Member is drawing his own conclusions from statements which are being made in front of the Estey Commission.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): With respect, I would prefer to listen to the conclusions drawn by Mr. Justice Estey—

Mr. Waddell: Are you going to testify?

Mr. Broadbent: Ministerial responsibility is here.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member would listen to the answer, I say that it is more important for us all as Members of Parliament to listen to the conclusions drawn by Mr. Justice Estey, based on the range of testimony which will be presented to him during the course of the inquiry, and not piece-by-piece judgments drawn by the Hon. Member.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the U.S. Trade Secretary William Brock said that Canada must, and I quote: "Put everything on the table in free trade talks . . . including social programs and the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact." On October 2 in the House the Secretary of State for External Affairs said, and I quote: "Canada's social programs are not on the table." Why is the Government allowing President Reagan to dictate the terms of the free trade negotiations to Canada by insisting that everything be placed on the table despite the wishes of Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the last time I looked, Mr. Brock was not the Secretary of International Trade but the Secretary of Labour in the United States. Perhaps the hon. gentleman might want to update his reference library.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Get your amanuensis to fix the question.

Mr. Nielsen: With respect to the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, he was expressing Government policy, the approach of the Government to discussions with the United States, and that is still the approach unaltered.

Mr. Crosbie: Straight from the heart, Jean.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the U.S. Secretary changed departments, but the fact remains, he still is a senior member of the U.S. administration.

INQUIRY WHETHER UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE, MEDICARE, AND PENSIONS WILL BE SUBJECTS OF NEGOTIATION

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Saint-Maurice): I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether unemployment insurance, medicare and pensions will be subjects of negotiation with the United States. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Isn't it time to tell the United States that this country is not for sale and its survival is not negotiable?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the question posed by the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: Obviously, he has not read the statement of the American Ambassador to Canada who said recently in a television interview: "I would like to put these fears with regard to Canada's social programs to rest". The United States is not without a structure of social support of its own . . . and we have no more interest in asking Canadians to determine such matters for us than you do in having us determine them for Canadians."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—ESTEY COMMISSION INQUIRY TESTIMONY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance who will know that at the judicial inquiry the Director of Inspections for the office of the Inspector General of Banks said, under oath, that it would cost $350 million to ensure the continued operation of the bank. Was she aware of that information when she made her recommendation to the House?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, once again we are getting into a situation of trying to judge numbers in this House. The proper context for dealing with all of the balance sheet items—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: What are you here for?

Mr. Cassidy: What's a billion, Barbara?

Mrs. McDougall: The proper context for dealing with this type of information is in the Estey inquiry. That is where the final recommendations will be made.

Mr. Broadbent: You are responsible here.

Mrs. McDougall: That is why we established the commission.

MINISTER'S MARCH STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, what is $100 million in this case?

In the House on March 28 the Minister of State for Finance said that the support package in the amount of $255 million would be sufficient to ensure the continuing operation of the bank. Under oath the individual who is responsible for inspections for the bank—

• (1430)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No.

Mr. Riis: The question is simply this, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister obviously had that information at the time, did she therefore intentionally mislead the House when she said that $255 million was adequate?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Broadbent: She won't answer questions that are in order.

Mr. Speaker: I think I know what the questioner is trying to get at, but I think the Hon. Member also knows that our rules do not allow us to do indirectly what cannot be done directly.

FINANCE

BUDGETARY CUTBACKS—REDUCTION OF DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The situation is serious enough considering that the Government's and the Minister's integrity is at stake.

In the paper tabled last January, the Government stated that no savings would be used to reduce the deficit. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance admitted for the first time that family allowance cuts would be used to bring down the deficit.

My question to the Minister of Finance is this: Will he tell us which of the two misled the people of Canada and Members of this House?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all no one has been misleading the Hon. Member and he will know that if he has been listening to the answers. Second, if the Hon. Member takes a look at the very question he asks, namely, what are the actual expenditures of this Government on social programs, he will find year over year that in fact there is an increase in the social spending of $2 billion.

IMPACT ON FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of National Health was junketing to China with his official agent, he forgot about the answer given by the Minister of Finance yesterday.

I am repeating my question to the Minister of Finance who, for the first time, admitted that reductions in the growth rate . . . could the Minister explain why he could not respect his Government's commitment when he decided to use family allowances to reduce the deficit?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, nothing could be clearer than the answer given by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Spending in the social envelope this year is going up by $2 billion.

Mr. Garneau: That's not the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The deficit is going down this year. Surely, the Hon. Member is capable of adding.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—AUTO PACT INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and refers to the comments made by Cabinet Secretary Brock who is trying to widen the range of items to be discussed in the free trade talks. Will the Government now clearly confirm the words spoken to this House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on September 27 that the Auto Pact would not be renegotiated, despite the fact that this Cabinet Secretary in the Untied States has called for putting that crucial piece of trade legislation on the table?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty at all in confirming the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

CONSEQUENCES OF CHANGE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I put it to the Government—

Mr. Crosbie: Put it to yourself.

Mr. Broadbent: Watch it.

Mr. Langdon: Is the Government aware that the parts sector and the auto manufacturers estimate that over 10,000 jobs would go down the drain if the Auto Pact is changed? Will the Government see to it that the Auto Pact and its safeguards remain a complete and total sacred trust in these negotiations?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): The hon. gentleman obviously prepared his supplementary question before he was aware of how I would answer his first question. That answer still stands.

EMPLOYMENT

CREATION OF JOBS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister continued to boast about creating 300,000 jobs during the past year.

An Hon. Member: So he should.

Mr. Allmand: When is the Minister going to tell Canadians the whole truth about these statistics, that a large percentage of those jobs—over 30 per cent—are low paying part-time jobs and that that trend is growing? That the wages for these jobs are low paying has been confirmed recently by the Canadian Council on Welfare which states there is a growing number of working poor in Canada. When is the Minister going to tell Canadians the truth about those statistics?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe I did acknowledge the fact that 30 per cent of those jobs were part-time jobs, as I think my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, acknowledged the other day. But surely the Hon. Member is not saying that 304,000 new jobs during the course of 12 months is not a good record because I believe those same people to whom he referred are saying that it is a very good record, and are encouraging us to achieve more like it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Minister, and through him, the Government, if he is content with the situation where we are moving at a rapid rate from full-time jobs which are unionized, with standard wages and benefits, to a situation where we are moving to part-time jobs which are low paying, usually not unionized, and without benefits. As the Canadian Council on Welfare showed this week in a report, we are moving toward a situation in which there is a larger number of working poor in this country. Is that what the Minister is satisfied with?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, of course we are not satisfied, and that is the reason why we have introduced the Canadian Jobs Strategy which will benefit some 400,000 people this year. But more to the point, what is important is that we have introduced training allowances for people who are attending on a part-time basis, primarily women and those who are supporters of single-parent families, so that they have a chance to benefit from training for new employment. That is something which was not even contemplated by the former Government.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

IMPORTANCE OF INCREASING CANADIAN PRODUCTION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It is prompted by my meeting earlier this week with the Committee for the Survival of the Textile Industry in Sherbrooke.

Does the Minister know that made-in-Canada textiles account for only 43 per cent of the Canadian consumption of textiles, and would it not be fair that as a minimum, the share of Canadian-sourced textiles, those coming from Canadian producers and industries, represent half the Canadian consumption?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take the Hon. Member's question as a representation. The suggestion of 50 per cent of the Canadian market being reserved for domestic producers has been mentioned by various other people and, as the Hon. Member may or may not know, I am meeting with industry and union representatives, for example, Tom Bell of Dominion Textile Limited, this afternoon, and we will certainly bring matters to what I believe will be a constructive conclusion for the industry very shortly.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN PRODUCTION HAVE 50 PER CENT SHARE OF MARKET

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a supplementary for the same Minister. On behalf of the Mayor of Sherbrooke, of the Municipal Council for the Industry, in Sherbrooke, of the Industrial Board and the workers of Sherbrooke, I ask whether the Government is indeed ready to take the steps needed to guarantee as a minimum a 50 per cent share of the Canadian textile market to Canadian textile workers and manufacturers?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my response to the earlier question, we will take the question as a representation. But, frankly, Mr. Speaker, surely the time has come when opposition Members can start acknowledging some things. For example, according to the Construction Association of Canada, spending on manufacturing is going up 19 per cent between now and next year, and in the year after, 20 per cent.

Mr. Broadbent: What's that got to do with the question?

Mr. Stevens: Canadians are going to have the factories in order that they can get back to work, and unemployment is coming down.

HEALTH

AIDS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INFORMATION PROGRAM

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Canadians have recently received a great deal of conflicting and often misleading information about AIDS. In order to quell the fears of Canadians and to ensure that accurate information on AIDS is available, will the Government initiate a factual awareness program at the local level in order to inform Canadians about this tragic disease?

• (1440)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct, and I think Members of the House generally share her viewpoint. The time available in Question Period does not allow me to get into a full discussion of this issue. However, there has been the appointment of the National Advisory Committee on AIDS, as well as the publication called AIDS in Canada: What You Should Know. Also, there is public information documentation as well as ongoing research. If it is helpful to the House, at the end of Question Period I can table information along these lines.

EDUCATION

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State who, on Monday, announced the federal Government's new educational policy which washes its hands of any responsibility for the amount or direction of funds going to post-secondary education. How will the Government now ensure Canada's economic and cultural future without taking at least some responsibility for adequate funding so that national objectives for post-secondary education can be met?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, what I said this week was that the Federal Government transfers certain amounts to the provinces which, under our confederative system, are responsible for the allocation of these sums. I never said that I would refuse to co-operate with the provinces, and we are indeed co-operating with them, to try and find mechanisms which would allow the universities, colleges, and other institutions to receive the necessary support, naturally. When we transfer $4.5 billion to the provinces, this is already a meaningful involvement, but when we then obtain guarantees from these provinces, whose jurisdiction we must respect, through mechanisms, discussions and support programs, it is quite obvious—

Mr. Speaker: I regret to inform the Minister that he is now making a speech. Supplementary.

ACCOUNTABILITY OF PROVINCES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in addition to cutting $6 billion of anticipated transfer payments, is the Minister saying that his Conservative Government is going to abandon the amendment it passed when in opposition which requires that he see to it that the provinces are held accountable for how they financially support post-secondary education? Or has that now gone by the boards?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, what this Government can promise is that we shall see to it that the amounts transferred under the agreements signed and accepted by your own Government in 1977, namely an unconditional transfer to the provinces, will be paid. The concept of these arrangements is that it is up to the provinces to decide. There have been no cutbacks, as we have repeated many times; the amounts transferred to the provinces will increase. However, once more, we will have the necessary discussion to ensure that the various institutions will receive the money transferred to the provinces.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

ANNOUNCED REOPENING OF WELLAND CANAL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and it concerns the Welland Canal. This morning his officials announced that the Seaway is going to be reopened on November 6. Have those officials determined the cause of the blow-out, and is this going to be a temporary repair of the Seaway wall?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the cause of the failure has not been precisely determined. I can give the Hon. Member no further information as of right now. I will be meeting with Mr. O'Neil, who is returning to Ottawa this afternoon, and he will be giving me a full briefing on the details of the repairs.

REPAIR WORK

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding from Seaway Authority officials that this is going to be a permanent repair. How can the Minister justify permanently repairing the facility when it is not known what caused the problem in the first place? How can we be assured that this repair job will hold, not only for this year but for years to come?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be in a better position to respond to that question perhaps tomorrow.

RED MEAT STABILIZATION PROGRAM INQUIRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Negotiations have been going on since July regarding a tripartite red meat stabilization program. There are reports that the producers and at least four provinces representing the vast majority of beef and hog production are ready to sign an agreement to be phased in over a three-year period. Can the Minister indicate if he is prepared to sign this agreement and when it will come into effect?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in a very important subject. The industry has attempted to make some progress on this program for at least 10 years. It might be of some interest to the Hon. Member to know that this very day Deputy Ministers are meeting here in Ottawa and I would hope that when the meetings are concluded we will have a number of signatures on the agreement. However, there is no question about the fact that we have been prepared to sign, for quite some time.

REQUEST FOR RETROACTIVITY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister indicate whether he is willing to make the program retroactive to the first of the year as requested by Alberta and Ontario?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that the Act allows for this program to be retroactive to January 1, 1985. However, we are one of 10 or 11 parties involved. I am not going to dictate the terms concerning retroactivity. That was one of the problems in the past where certain parties tried to dictate. That is not our task. Our task is to co-operate and consult with our partners equally, and I am sure we can come to some agreement which is acceptable to as many parties that join the plan.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS DEPOSITORS COMPENSATION ACT

REQUEST THAT UNINSURED DEPOSITORS BE CALLED AS COMMITTEE WITNESSES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Chairman of the Legislative Committee concerned with Bill C-79. Since this Bill deals with uninsured depositors, many of whom are charitable and church organizations as well as municipalities, and since many people have questioned their motives, will the Chairman be inviting uninsured depositors as witnesses so they can tell the Committee why they supported the CCB and Northland Banks?

Mr. Blenkarn: That is in order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is in order to ask questions of a committee chairman concerning decisions on matters which the committee has discussed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Which this is.

Mr. Speaker: I might have been willing to allow the question, but that may change my mind.

I think, given the context, I am going to allow the question.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the all-Party steering group of the committee had a meeting this morning and the Chairman was requested to obtain written submissions from Canadians directly affected by the current affairs of the CCB and Northland Banks. Indeed, we hope that some group will come forward to express their concerns and explain why they continued to have faith in the regional banks.

Oral Questions

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POTENTIAL LOSS OF JOBS IN SUDBURY AREA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. At present the Sudbury area is faced with the potential loss of 1,500 jobs at Inco and Falconbridge. This will further exacerbate an unemployment rate which is presently the third highest in Canada. Can the Minister tell this House what she intends to do about this situation?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, I indicated initially that I was not satisfied with the origianl benefits package originally put forward by Inco, and since that time Inco has come back and enriched its benefits package by some 70 per cent. I see that it has extended the date for acceptance of that benefits package to the middle of November, and I am hopeful that there will be sufficient take-up of that benefits package through early retirement, and that it will not be necessary to effect further lay-offs. I am hoping that is what we will see in the Sudbury area.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, at the danger of repeating my question, which I wouldn't want to do—

Mr. Crosbie: Good man.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has answered a question that I did not ask.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, don't ask it again.

Mr. Rodriguez: We are going to lose 1,500 jobs in the Sudbury basin. Can the Minister tell the House specifically whether there is anything that the Minister is thinking about which can be done for those workers and that community?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I have already met with the Ontario Minister of Labour in order that we can jointly explore new ideas for fostering employment opportunities in the Sudbury basin. And as that initiative is developed I would invite the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and, indeed, the Hon. Membr for Sudbury, to join us in those efforts.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET VERSATILE VICKERS EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. Not only does the Government lack of action with regard to the frigate issue threaten the jobs of Vickers workers, but it may very well lead to the shutdown of the Montreal shipyards. I want to ask the Minister if he would be kind enough to spare some time today to meet with the Versatile Vickers workers who are here today and who are anxious to seek solutions likely to prevent the shipyards from closing down?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think I should bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that a short time ago I gave an undertaking that I would secure an appropriate legal opinion concerning our right to intervene. I have now received that, and I have read and reread it seven times with a view to determining whether there was any opportunity for us to do anything legally. I can find none. The reason for that is that the authors of the contact, who sit over there, including the Member for Papineau, failed to protect the interests of the Montreal workers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Hees: Next question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Member have a supplementary question?

[Translation]

DEMAND THAT MINISTER MEET EMPLOYEES PRESENT IN GALLERY

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will have to substantiate his allegations. In the meantime I would ask him to answer a much simpler question: Does he have the nerve and courage to do his job this afternoon and meet with the Vickers workers who want to see him and who are here in the galleries? Yes or no, that is easy enough to answer!

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have also indicated that the Government is very much concerned with this situation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McInnes: I have met with union representatives once and have given my undertaking that I will meet with them immediately following this Question Period to bring them up to date on developments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McInnes: I have today, Mr. Speaker, sent a telegram to the chairman of the board of Vickers because I want to be apprised of its corporate policy with respect not only to the Montreal yard, but all of the Quebec yards.

Mr. Boudria: Did you send it seven times?

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—INFORMATION PROVIDED TO INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I assume that he accepts the doctrine of ministerial responsibility which is the basis of our parliamentary system. I would like to put a factual question to him. Did he know that Mr. Neville Grant told the Inspector General of Banks, on the day before the $225 million bail-out was announced, that the Canadian Commercial Bank was expected to lose $350 million and that a bail-out of that amount was needed? That is a factual question and I would like a factual answer.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer that I have given on two prior occasions in this Question Period still stands.

Mr. Broadbent: You didn't answer.

ESTEY COMMISSION—POSSIBLE APPEARANCE OF MINISTERS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice who complains he does not get any questions. I want to ask him one in his capacity as Attorney General of Canada.

Mr. Nunziata: Remember, he is not as astute as he should be.

Mr. Waddell: Has the Government ruled out the possibility that some of the Ministers will be testifying before the Estey inquiry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for that question. He must have stayed awake last night thinking it up. Mr. Speaker, with the Opposition which we now have in this Parliament, we rule nothing out.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACCIDENT INVOLVING TRUCK CARRYING SODIUM CYANIDE AT YARMOUTH, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment and involves a very serious situation in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, where a truck carrying deadly sodium cyanide has left a road and the RCMP have had to evacuate the residents within a three-mile radius. I understand that officials from Environment Canada are at the scene. Can the Minister inform the House what is taking place there and perhaps of the causes of this particular incident?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, briefly, the accident, which is severe, occurred at 9.30 this morning Nova Scotia time. My Department pressed its top emergency officers into action on the scene. The Nova Scotia Government is the lead Government in this respect, but my own Department is the only one with the equipment and special facilities required to cope with the situation. The Member is correct that evacuations have occurred.

I have just now received the most recent report, having been monitoring the situation all morning. Briefly, the RCMP are on the scene. They have initiated an evacuation of all those residents living within a two-kilometre radius, which radius has been extended to five kilometres in the northern direction to include the village of Wellington. Two schools, two senior citizens' dwellings, and some 2,000 people have been affected. The situation is very much under control. I congratulate the Hon. Member for being on top of it and for his concern.

CAUSE OF ACCIDENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I, too, thank the Minister for his frankness. Due to the seriousness of the situation, would the Minister consult with his colleagues, the Ministers of Transport and National Health and Welfare, and perhaps tomorrow under Statements by Ministers he could give a comprehensive statement with regard to the causes of this particular accident as well as the possible liability of the transfer company.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will consider that suggestion very carefully. In the meantime I can tell him that the cause, to the extent that one can explain it with the little information that is available today, is that apparently an ordinary driver, driving a car on the relevant highway, stopped to look at a deer on the highway and backed up into a truck carrying drums containing the offending cyanide. A collision occurred and the truck left the highway. The cyanide is leaking and because of weather conditions it has become damp, compounding the situation.

YOUTH

GOVERNMENT'S CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Youth. In my conversations with young people across the country I have found a great deal of evidence that they are concerned that parliamentarians hear their viewpoints on all the issues. They are very much concerned, too, that the Government seems not to be listening to them. The Minister of State has been holding fora across the land. When are we going to see the recommendations that she is going to present to the Government as a result of her consultations in these youth fora?

Hon. Andrée Champagne (Minister of State (Youth)): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank my colleague for the question. I have seen that he has met all of 14 young people in Victoria early this week or last week. This very weekend we will be holding our fifth regional forum in Ontario where there will be over 100 young people. Again, it will not only identify the problems that are of concern to them but they will work with us toward solutions.

There will be an important report after the end of the fifth forum and in preparation for a national forum which will be held in 1986.

Mr. Speaker: A very short supplementary question.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, it was not just Victoria. It was Nanaimo, Edmonton, Saskatoon, and a good deal more than 14. Will the Minister of State indicate to the House whether in fact she has made strong representations, as the young people of the country expect, with respect to their concern about the effects on university funding as a result of the transfer payment cuts recommended by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I specifically asked that the Member ask a short supplementary because we have run out of time. I am sorry.

CLERK OF PETITION'S REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petitions, with the exception of four, presented by Hon. Members on Wednesday, October 23, 1985, meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

Certain petitions presented by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. Angus), the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper), the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) do not meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT RESPECTING GOVERNMENT CONTRACT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, during question period, the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. McInnes) said here in the House that I was the author of a contract concluded between the Government of Canada and the St. John company.

I think the Minister was seriously mistaken, and I would ask him to withdraw what he said immediately, because I never was the Minister responsible for Supply and Services Canada.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I think my message was that this Government did not draw up this contract.

Mr. Gauthier: You said Papineau.

Mr. McInnes: It was the Liberal Government that did so, and the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who then was the Minister from Quebec, was very much involved in that contract.

Mr. Speaker: It is clear that this is a dispute as to the facts. However, it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Rossi: Check the "blues".

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, even though the Government House Leader, myself and the NDP House Leader will be having a meeting later this afternoon, which I presume will involve discussions about business of the House, I thought I should ask the Government House Leader formally if he will make a statement on the business of the House today because this is the customary time to do so.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to keep the meeting this afternoon a secret but since it is now public, I will say that its purpose is to discuss business generally and also to discuss various items of mutual interest and concern to the Parties.

I am quite happy to announce the sequence of business. We have now entered into second reading stage of Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. I propose to carry on with that today and, hopefully, we will make progress.

Tomorrow is the first allotted day of this trimester. If, by chance, we do not complete second reading stage of Bill C-80 today, we will continue to deal with it next Monday, Tuesday and into next week. However, I am confident that we will complete second reading stage of this legislation. Therefore, Bill C-62, an Act respecting employment equity, and Bill C-42, an Act to dissolve Canagrex, will be the back-up Bills to Bill C-80.

As usual, I will keep in touch with the Opposition House Leaders and report to the House if there is any change in the order of business that has been announced.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have one question for the Government House Leader which I believe is important for the record. Could he indicate whether it is still the intention of the Government to proceed with the collective bargaining legislation for the House of Commons employees and if the Government intends to proceed with that before the Christmas break?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I take that as a representation by the Hon. Member he wants me to introduce that legislation so it can be passed. On the basis that it is a representation of support from the NDP, I am encouraged to bring it forward at an early date.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO SECOND REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 47(2) I wish to table in both official languages what most Members of the House wanted to see for years. I refer to the final annual report under the Foreign Investment Review Act. That is right, the final report from FIRA.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Stevens: The next report in this area of Canadian and non-Canadian investment will cover the activities of Investment Canada, a much more positive approach.

PRAIRIE GRAIN ADVANCE PAYMENTS—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, anyone who has paid much attention to what has been taking place with respect to the weather in western Canada in the past few months will know there have been some very severe problems. They have ranged from very severe drought over the growing season and grasshopper infestation as a result of that drought and high temperatures in the southern part of the provinces, particularly Saskatchewan and Alberta, to large amounts of rainfall and snow since the middle of August. There have been reports of as much as a foot of snow on occasion in the southern parts of Saskatchewan and Manitoba in particular.

Consequently, the amount of harvesting that has been able to be carried out under normal conditions has been very limited. These conditions are rather abnormal, although not unique. The last time we had such conditions was in 1968 and those of us who have been here longer will know that the last time we experienced such conditions previous to 1968 was in 1951.

However, much has changed since 1968. Not only is there much more drying capacity on the Prairies but it is much more efficient in terms of drying and maintaining the quality of grain that goes into the dryer.

A week ago today I had a meeting with grain industry officials in Winnipeg, which involved the grain companies, the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Grain Commission, the grain transportation agencies and the terminal operators at Vancouver and Thunder Bay, to get an assessment of the situation with regard to the harvest including how much grain is still there, how much has been harvested in a tough and damp state and the extent of our drying capacity on the Prairies.

The preliminary results would indicate that if everyone co-operates and makes the use of the drying capacity we have, it appears that we can dry the crop we have in its present condition.

However, the area in which I believe the Government must show some leadership concerns the fact that about two-thirds of the drying capacity we have for handling this crop in the condition in which it is being harvested is on prairie farms. Therefore, anything that we can do as far as the federal Government is concerned to encourage people to dry grain on the farms will be very worth-while. Hence, I have the pleasure to announce today that the federal Government is making available, under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, a $3,000 cash advance.

Mr. Mayer: This is a $3,000 interest-free cash advance that is available on top of the interest free cash advances available normally. It is available on wheat, oats and barley, and is to be calculated on the basis of $9 a ton for wheat, $11 a ton for barley and $16 a ton for oats. It is a little larger than the discount shown at elevators that one receives for delivering tough and damp grain. I hope it is an incentive for prairie producers to make the best uses they can in terms of working with neighbours and anybody else who can help in making the best use of drying facilities.

The forms are already printed, Mr. Speaker, and are in the mail this afternoon. Farmers will be able to go to the elevators as soon as the forms arrive, which I expect will be in the next day or so, certainly by the beginning of the week, to apply for the cash advances.

In addition to that, I have put in place a reporting system to keep up-to-date information literally available on a daily basis so as to make sure we do everything we can to co-ordinate the drying capacity we have on the Prairies.

I have a couple of other points. First, there was some concern on the Prairies that the amount of propane necessary for drying is not available. On checking into the matter, I am assured that the propane is in production. The problem is one of distribution. I am also informed that as of now there is a 24 delivery period at the most as far as having energy in the form of propane to dry the grain is concerned.

Second, there is another provision under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. If sufficient harvesting has not been completed by November 15, we will look at the situation very closely and make available additional cash advances for unthrashed grain giving producers an opportunity to complete their harvest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we have to be thankful for every blessing, and even small blessings like this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gormley: We are the Government that gets the job done.

An Hon. Member: What did you ever do?

Mr. Foster: The Minister knows full well that essentially what he is providing here is an interest-free loan of $3,000 until the grain is delivered.

The Minister did not bother mentioning that the Canadian Wheat Board estimated this morning that some 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the grain has been harvested. As I understand the provisions of the Act, this interest-free loan will apply only to the drying of grain. For anything that has already been dried on which money has been spent by literally thousands of prairie farmers, no interest-free loan will be available to them.

We must realize that we are talking about a $2 billion to $3 billion disaster on the Prairies because of last summer's drought. This interest-free loan coming at this stage, with only 10 per cent or 15 per cent of the crop left, clearly will be an advantage and helpful to some producers, but it does not address the major problem, namely the drought.

Clearly the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool and other groups, including the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), have called on the Government to make available a $50 per seeded acre acreage payment. When the Progressive Conservatives were in opposition with the support of the provincial Premiers in the summer of 1984, they demanded and received a commitment by the Liberal Government of the day that an acreage payment would be made. People in western Canada want to know when the acreage payment for the drought disaster will be made, which disaster has not only put the prairie farmers in dire straights but is also making communities in the West suffer tremendously. Surely this payment should have been announced in August just as it was in 1984. We are well into October, and we want to hear what the Government is going to do in that regard.

We want to know as well why the Minister is not announcing today the final payment on the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Surely there must be at lest another $100 million or $200 million which is due and payable to the farmers of western Canada. That is what we want to hear. We just do not want to hear about a short-term $3,000 interest-free loan which will benefit some but which will certainly not benefit those farmers who have suffered as a result of the drought last summer. Neither will it benefit those farmers who have already harvested their grain and carried out their drying operations.

We are thankful for small blessings, even if they are extremely small. Some individual producers who still have not been able to harvest their crop will be helped. This measure does not in any way address the major problems facing western Canada today.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board has recognized the need for assistance because of the weather conditions which forced producers to harvest either damp or tough grain.

The $9, $11 and $16 a tonne which the Act allows will be much appreciated by those farmers, particularly those with cash flow problems. The $3,000 maximum is adequate probably for a large number of those who will be doing the drying where most of the tough and damp grain is found.

The Minister is to be congratulated for the early action he has taken. I can only wish his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) felt the same urgency in dealing with drought victims. In other parts of the Prairies, the painful irony over which the Minister exclaims is magnified by his Government's inability to come to grips with the larger and more debilitating disaster of drought.

The producers in the drought area have been waiting since July for Government relief. All they have heard about is the possibility of Government relief, but they have had no assurance and no indication of when or if the relief will come, and if it comes whether it will be enough to be of any value to pay for crop failures.

We are pleased the Minister has taken the action which is allowed him by the Prairie Grain Advance Payment Act and has made the loans for drying grain available.

We hope he will take the same quick action after November 15 for those producers who still have unthrashed grain in the field. Those farmers will have as great a need for the possible one-half payment available to them as do the farmers who have no crop because of drought.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the undersigned residents of my federal riding of Montreal-Bourassa, who now avail themselves of their right to present a grievance common to your petitioners, in the certain assurance that Your Honourable House will therefor provide a remedy and that the Government of Canada will reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from the undersigned residents of the federal riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, who now avail themselves of their right to present a grievance common to your petitioners, in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefor provide a remedy and that the Government of Canada will reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition from the undersigned residents of the federal riding of Laprairie, who now avail themselves of their right to present a grievance common to your petitioners, in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefor provide a remedy and that the Government of Canada will reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition from the undersigned residents of the federal riding of Lac-Saint-Jean, who now avail themselves of their right to present a grievance common to your petitioners, in the certain assurance that your Honourable House will therefor provide a remedy and that the Government of Canada will reinstate full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I think he knows perfectly well that if he has several petitions on the same subject, he may mention that he has petitions from several ridings, name the ridings and table the petitions in the House, but he does not have the right to go through a long list of individual petitions. I think he knows that.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I at least have the right to mention the ridings concerned.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition from residents of the federal riding of Longueuil, who now avail themselves of the same right.

An Hon. Member: There is a Member for Longueuil.

An Hon. Member: Yes, but he doesn't do much.

An Hon. Member: It doesn't look like it.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, that is because the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) doesn't do anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Prud'homme: They asked for it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Prud'homme: There is no Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, but we have one for Gatineau here.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I hope the House realizes it is time for petitions, not politics!

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from residents of the riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie, and there is a Member for that riding. They now avail themselves of their rights, Mr. Speaker, and they ask the Government of Canada to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

PROTECTION OF ENVIRONMENT REQUESTED AGAINST POLLUTION FROM CHIMNEYS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): I wish to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents from Saint-Jean-Chrysostome, Saint-Rédempteur and Charny.

Essentially, this petition calls on the Government to protect their environment which is being polluted intolerably by the emanations from the Société Alex Couture's chimneys.

I conclude by saying that 7,284 residents of the city of Charny have signed a similar petition.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present from my riding of York West. One was collected by Mr. Pio Bertoia and the other one was collected by Mr. Nizio Daneluzzi. Both petitions ask the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation to the family allowance and indicate that this regressive budget measure will take away some $55 million.

I have also received a number of petitions in my office from the ridings of Montreal-Mercier, Saint-Jean, Saint-Michel, Montreal-Sainte-Marie and Rosemont, in the Quebec region, as well as from the riding of Victoria in our great Province of British Columbia and from Saint-Hyacinthe. The petitions from outside my riding also petition the Government to restore full indexation to family allowance benefits.

Mr. Speaker: That, may I say, is the correct procedure.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a petition from the riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka in Ontario, asking the Government to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit, and saying that this budget measure will take away $55 million from family benefits by 1987.

I also have petitions from the ridings of London East and London West.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of a number of residents of the federal riding of Terrebonne, in the province of Quebec, I have the honour to present a petition calling on the Government to reinstate full indexation of the family allowances and Child Tax Credit.

I have another petition from residents of the federal riding of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve calling again on the Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances.

[English]

I also have another petition from the riding of Stormont-Dundas in Ontario, asking the House to restore full indexation to the family allowance and child tax credit, and saying that it will take away $55 million from families by 1987.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have also a petition from the federal riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine, in the province of Quebec, calling on the Government to reinstate full indexation of family allowances and Child Tax Credit, because these cuts will deprive Canadians of $55 million by 1987.

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased also to table a petition from my riding of Richmond-Wolfe in which the petitioners, notably the members of the Cercle des fermières from the municipality and community of Ham-Nord, deplore again the Government's cruel decision to deindex family allowances.

I have here other petitions in which the petitioners strongly object to such discriminatory action against Canadian families. These petitions are from residents of the federal ridings of Victoria, Brampton-Georgetown, Northumberland, in the province of Ontario, as well as Hochelaga-Maisonneuve, Saint-Hyacinthe, and Saint-Jacques, in the province of Quebec. Each of these petitions has been signed by several dozens of constituents who all deplore the de-indexation of family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition which was circulated by the Women Against the Federal Budget. They strongly oppose the deindexation of family allowances and call upon the Government to withdraw this proposal as soon as possible.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PENSION INCOME DEDUCTIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the residents of the towns of Bancroft, Lindsay, Fenelon Falls, Orillia and Woodville, all members of the Lindsay District Labour Council. They call upon the Government to withdraw the proposal which would see pension income being used as earned income for purposes of the Unemployment Insurance Act.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have here several petitions, but I am sure you would not like me to table all of them today, so that all my friends may hear about them.

Mr. Speaker, my first petitions are from my own constituency. To spare you, I am going to table most of those which strongly object to the Government's decision to cut the increase in family allowances and which ask the Prime Minister not to reduce his deficit on the backs of Canadian children.

Mr. Speaker, I have another series of petitions from people who are not my constituents but who insist that they be heard and recorded as being against the Conservative Government's proposed family allowances deindexation. These are residents of Regina West and of the riding of La Prairie who have asked me to convey their objections.

I have another petition from residents of the ridings of Joliette and Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot who are also against the Government's decision.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a petition from the riding of Montmorency-Orléans, and another one from the riding of Calgary East in Alberta.

Tomorrow I will be pleased to present petitions from Gatineau.

• (1530)

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present a petition from the riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic. Hon. Members know that our colleague from Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) was involved in an unfortunate accident. On behalf of all Members, I am sure, we wish her a speedy recovery. I make it my duty to present a petition from her riding.

It is my duty as well to present a petition from my riding of Montreal-Saint-Denis.

I also have the honour to present a petition from the ridings of Longueuil and Rosemont. The petitioners urge the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to restore full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit, wondering as they do why the Government can spare $56 million for new uniforms while being unable to come up with $55 million to maintain full indexation.

I must also present a petition—and I do so with pleasure—from residents of the federal riding of Terrebonne who want to exercise their ancient and unchallenged rights to present a similar grievance.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of a great many residents of Montreal's Hochelaga-Maisonneuve riding who now want to exercise the same right and who also urge the Prime Minister to restore full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member knows our practices. He is a senior Member of the House. I now invite him to finish using the proper procedure.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: It is the same procedure, Mr. Speaker, and as a senior Member I am only listing the petitions, but since there are so many of them the people who are listening to us will eventually wonder if—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I just have one petition to present today from a large number of Canadians who are of the opinion that the family allowance deindexation will not be offset by changes to the child tax credit and that even the poorest families will be worse off by the year 1990 and will fall further and further behind. They are therefore asking the House of Commons and the Government to reinstate full indexation to universal family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases contained in the last Budget.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I too have one petition signed by a number of women who live and work in the East end of Vancouver. They say that in the opinion of the petitioners, the deindexation of the universal family allowance and the massive cut-backs in the public commitment to child benefits are an unfair attack on women and families with children, particularly single-parent mothers, and they pray that the House will reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind the unfair tax increases.

[Translation]

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I also have several petitions from residents of the federal constituencies of Gatineau, Cardigan, Malpèque in Prince Edward Island and Trois-Rivières. I also received petitions from the federal constituencies of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, Montreal-Sainte-Marie, Humboldt-Lake Centre, in Saskatchewan, as well as Victoria-Haliburton, in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, all those petitions humbly ask the House and the Government of Canada to restore full indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit.

Mr. Speaker: I could perhaps indicate that the procedure followed by the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard-Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) is the right one. Very fine. I thank you. The Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria).

ASSISTANCE FOR FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions as well. The first one that I have here is signed by 147 people of Glengarry-Prescott-Russell who are workers in the Canadian footwear industry. This petition asks the Government to continue the import quotas for at least five years in order to protect the jobs in the footwear industry.

I have another similar petition and this one is signed by employees of another factory in my riding, Brown Shoe Company's factory. It is signed by 555 people and the total of the signatures on the two petitions is 702 and these people of my riding want assistance for the people working in the footwear industry.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table a number of petitions. The first one comes from the constituency of Gatineau and has been signed by several dozen people. There are also petitions from the federal constituencies of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, Chicoutimi, Jonquière, Northumberland-Miramichi, in New-Brunswick, Labelle and Kitchener, in Ontario, Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, La Prairie, Longueuil as well as Hochelaga-Maisonneuve.

The people who signed those petitions are all asking the Government to restore full indexation of family allowances and child tax credit.

OFFICIAL RECORD

CORRECTION OF HEADING

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I rose yesterday in this House to speak about the quotas for the shoe industry, and the French version of Hansard had the following title:

La nécessité de réduire les quotas.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that a correction be made as I was asking exactly the opposite. It should read: "La nécessité de reconduire les quotas".

Mr. Speaker: Am I right to think that the Hon. Member is speaking about the title given to his speech by Hansard?

Mr. Tardif: In the preambule to my intervention, Hansard printed the following:

La nécessité de réduire les quotas.

In fact, it is the need to—

Mr. Speaker: No. That is not what I asked. Was this in a question reported by Hansard, or was it in the title of a statement under Standing Order 22 made by the Hon. Member?

Mr. Tardif: It was in the title.

Mr. Speaker: In the title. Thank you. The Hon. Member knows quite well that he has corrected Hansard through the comment he just made. However, I shall also check the title with Hansard.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Kilgour (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 130 and 415.

[Text]

EXEMPT STAFF IN MINISTRY FOR SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 130—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. From April 1, 1984 to September 17, 1984, what was the amount spent in the departmental office of the Minister for Social Development?

2. Were the budgetary guidelines exceeded and, if so, by what amount?

3. For the same period, how many exempt staff, including those on personal services contracts, were employed by the Minister and what were their names, date of appointment and salary?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): 1. $326,288. 2. No.

Name	Date of Appointment	Salary Range
Ablett, Joan	10-09-82	up to $36,729
Hill, Alice	04-07-84	" " 36,729
McCurrach, Mary Ellen	14-05-84	350 per week
Dewit, Antoinetta	12-09-83	up to $36,729
Dickson, Jennifer	25-10-82	" " 36,729
Grauer, Cynthia	10-09-82	" " 36,729
Hearn, Christine	10-09-82	" " 36,729
Parkinson, David	19-09-83	" " 36,729
Hendren, Dove	12-09-83	" " 36,729
Hendrickson, Beverly Anne	01-10-82	" " 36,729
Martin, David	12-09-83	" " 36,729
Sauvé, Pauline	10-09-82	" " 42,850
Scott, Florence	14-05-84	350 per week

There were no personal services contracts during the period of April 1, to September 17, 1984. During that period, the above exempt staff were in the employ of the Minister. It should be noted that most of these employees came with the Minister from his previous portfolio; this explains the employment dates which precede the Minister's appointment to MSSD.

RESTORATION OF THE CITADEL AT HALIFAX, N.S.

Question No. 415—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did the Department of the Environment allocate funds for the restoration of the Halifax Citadel and, if so, in what amount?

2. Were such funds cut and, if so (a) which groups were consulted before a decision was taken (b) was the Minister of State (Tourism) consulted by the Minister of the Environment?

3. (a) Will funds be allocated in 1986 for completing the work (b) how many persons were working on the site before the work was stopped (c) how many persons were laid off following the budget cuts (d) will the Department replace the lost jobs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes. For 1985-86, the tenth year of a $29.4 million restoration program at the Citadel, $5.1 million had been allocated.

2. Yes. Further expenditures were deferred on April 1, 1985. (a) Senior officials of the Department. (b) No.

3. (a) No. However, on May 3, the Minister of the Environment and The Friends of the Citadel Society signed a Memorandum of Intention to cost-share further restoration. The Department of the Environment will contribute funds in accordance with the Memorandum in 1986-87 if the Society raises $500,000 or more. (b) 73 (49 permanent and 24 term). (c) 33 (20 permanent and 13 term). (d) Of the 20 permanent employees who were laid off, 19 have been placed in other positions in Parks Canada; nine term employees were rehired for the 1985 summer season.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, when the debate on Bill C-80 was adjourned for the lunch hour, I was trying to show to this House that the Bill would have been unnecessary if this Government, instead of giving so much money to the multinational corporations, the big corporations, had kept that money in its coffers. It could then have avoided the tax increases in Bill C-80.

On Budget night, I indicated in my comments that what it boiled down to was a shower of taxes.

We can already tell Canadian taxpayers they had better take their umbrellas out, because this Bill is the first in a series. It covers all excise taxes, the tax on drugs, the tax on the sales tax increase, indeed its extension, a whole litany of taxes that were announced in the Budget and which, because of their Government's majority, will become law applying to all Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, this Bill would have been unnecessary because in four or five areas only where the Government has taken action, namely the oil multinationals, the capital gains tax, the $1 billion gift in the Gulf affair to three or four shareholders, and also the problem which resulted from the way the Government assumed its responsibilities in the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank affair.

Because of all that, there are almost $16 billion which over the next few years will come out of, or will not go into the Government's coffers. And only to cover that kind of expenditures, this Bill is forced upon average families, low-income families with its taxes, and we already know what action the Government has taken with respect to family allowances. All that was done to collect revenues in order to give to the rich, to the most affluent in our society.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation will have a serious impact on quite a number of things, as I said, including regional development. We know that in the case of regional development, we can have natural resources, we can have individuals or groups who will step forward, who by developing their sense of responsibilities, their entrepreneurship, will set up businesses, but those businesses in our regions must face very special conditions.

The first, and perhaps the most sensitive is their distance from the markets. Within the context of this legislation, such distances will impose upon those small and medium-sized businesses, and also the larger ones that have settled in our regions, an additional tax burden, to such an extent that the products manufactured in the Gaspé area, in Nova Scotia, in other regions farther away from large consumers' markets such as Toronto and Montreal, we will be burdening those manufacturers, those businesses, with extra costs that will make them less competitive, less able to compete with others located around the larger urban centres.

Mr. Speaker, in the little time I have left, I would simply like to say a few words on the impact of the tax on another sector, that is the tourist industry. We know the tourist industry is an important one. The tax increases, including the one on fuel, will have an impact because it will increase the cost of driving everywhere in Canada. Mention could also be made of the impact of such taxes on the air travelling public, because people do not use cars only. In a bill that covers 120 pages or so, I can tell you that not many Canadians are spared. Everyone is affected, especially the weak because the strong will be able to compensate by using the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption they will be given later; eventually, they will be able to make up for this within a few years. In addition, the reverse deindexing of the income tax tables will hit middle-income Canadians harder than those with a higher income.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close my comments by saying that the economic philosphy of this Government will have extremely negative results. We have been told that a certain number of jobs have been created recently. Mr. Speaker, I had ministerial responsibilities for some time, not at this Government level, but at another, and I have always found that eight or ten months, one year and sometimes longer could elapse between the date when a budget is brought down and the time when its economic effects are really felt. Because, of course, unless a direct subsidy is paid the next day, it takes some time before the whole system is geared up. This is why I find it curious that Hon. Members opposite, after tabling their Budget on May 23 just imagine that—are already bragging about all the marvels which the Canadian economy has brought forth since then. Mr. Speaker, it takes a lot of gall to speak that way.

You certainly remember, Mr. Speaker, that in December I think, interest rates started to go up again. We directed questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). What did he answer then? He answered that it was due to the international forces, to the American policy, that Canada could not isolate itself. This in effect was what he said. Today, mind you, that interest rates are coming down, it is no longer because of the Americans. He goes around bragging, suggesting that they are responsible for that. At one point they will have to decide on which side of their mouth they will be speaking, that when things go wrong but perhaps that is their policy—when things go wrong, then they blame others, but when things are going fine, then they take the credit.

We see that same thing with regard to the inflation side. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) sang a great song, but he knows very well that this was not due to the action of this Government, quite the opposite. This Government's actions led the other way, because a certain increase in the consumer price index was blamed on the Budget's impact.

Mr. Speaker, my time having expired, I will now conclude and I am sorry because I would have a lot more to say. But I can tell you now that my colleagues and I certainly will not support this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the last remark of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) who accused us of patting ourselves on the back because we take full credit for the economic recovery. I would like to refer to an article in yesterday's Citizen, and I quote in English:

[English]

Canadian Economy Beats U.S.—

The Canadian economy moved out of the shadow of its U.S. counterpart this year and will continue to outshine it in terms of expansion both in 1986 and 1987—

The key to this optimism is an expected increase in business investment—

The recovery in business spending is the No. 1 reason why we think the Canadian economy relative to the U.S. economy is going to look better—

And the economic growth should be spread more evenly across the country than has been the case in the last two years, when Quebec and Ontario experienced sharp rebounds from the recession while the western and eastern provinces lagged behind.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it goes to show that the remarks of my colleague about our taking credit—undeservedly, he claims—are irrelevant because we are talking about the year 1986-87, not 1984-85 when it could have been said that we were reaping the benefits of measures implemented before we arrived on the scene.

Secondly, the article stresses the fact that we now have a little more elbow room, which was not the case when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was forced to realize that, his efforts notwithstanding, he could not operate entirely free of the American economy. So it is quite obvious that since we have been administering the country as a Government—except perhaps during the first six months when we had to make do with measures adopted by the previous administration—the way we manage the country has brought positive results with respect to both inflation—for which we can take credit—and the lower unemployment rate.

I would like to ask him a question about something he said in his remarks. I do not recall the exact figure but I think he said our Budget contained an $8.5 billion handout to the oil multinationals. I would like to ask him whether he is referring to the Budget measures which will reduce or eliminate the petroleum and gas revenue tax which, as it happened, created such a mess in western Canada and brought the petroleum industry to a standstill, the very sector on which we were relying to create new jobs.

Then he went on to complain about the reduction in the capital gains tax, so would he be prepared to tell the House that this measure will be phased in over a six-year period, that it will be a boon to small- and medium-sized businesses because, when they are faced with cash flow problems, they will at least be able to take advantage of this measure and make profitable investments?

In addition, could he tell us—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mailly: Listen, you held the floor for twenty minutes, I certainly can . . . I have the right . . . besides he mentioned the fact that—

• (1550)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. I will not prevent the Hon. Member for Gatineau from carrying on the debate, but in all fairness, the 10-minute period of questions and comments becomes a matter of discretion as to what is a comment or a speech. Each time, it is a case in point—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): One moment please, a case in point. I wish to point out that you have asked several questions from the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). There will be three or four minutes left for the anwers. Now, to be fair, that is not long enough for answering all your questions.

Mrs. Mailly: One single question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): So, one single short question. I will allow you to ask it, but—

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your guidance. My last question is as follows: Would the Hon. Member remind the House that when the previous Liberal Government bought Petrofina, the transaction did cost almost $1 billion to the Treasury and the funds were exported to Belgium whereas we allowed by law the Reichmann brothers to purchase Gulf Canada, which will remain Canadian, and this will cost half less in unearned revenue to the Canadian Treasury and, in addition, this will crease jobs in Canada rather than—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau).

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) to tell the people at Gulf in Montreal this is going to create jobs, just when they are fighting tooth and nail to survive and will be laid off on December 31. That is the kind of Christmas present they will get from this Government.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me where I got my figures. I got them from papers prepared by the Department of Finance which indicate that by 1990, eliminating the PGRT is going to cost the Canadian Government nearly $8.5 billion in revenue lost. These are papers I released myself, because the Government did not want to give them to us. Not one Minister has contradicted this.

Regarding the surtax on capital gains, you say that small companies with cash flow problems could invest to benefit from the elimination of this tax, but where are they going to get the money to invest if they have liquidity problems?

Finally, about the economy in general. I was not trying to say that one Government was good in every respect and the other Government bad. That was not what I was trying to do. What I said—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Garneau: You can shout all you like, but what I was trying to say is that when interest rates went up under the present Conservative Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), he said it all depended on the Americans. And what I want to say is that if interest rates go down, they should stick to that line.

As for the Americans, do you know why interest rates went down? They went down because at the international level, they held—

[English]

Do Hon. Members opposite know why interest rates went down? It is because a decision has been taken by a number of countries and because of the value of the U.S. dollar, and the Canadian Government was not even invited to participate in this meeting. Do not tell me now that if the interest rates in Canada are going down it is because of the actions of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). That is completely foolish. You cannot win on both sides.

[Translation]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is obviously technically impossible that the facts to which the Hon. Member for Gatineau was referring when reading that article be the result of the Budget brought down last May 23. It is impossible because an economy takes longer than that to react.

What I am trying to say is that a 4.5 per cent rate of economic growth in 1984 and a real growth in the GNP must produce certain results. As we know, the rate of growth was 3.5 per cent in 1985, but this is simply a continuation of the same tendency.

What we are trying to tell you however, is that, during the next five or six years, you will try to take $16 billion from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, as shown in the forecast up to 1990 which was published by the Department of Finance. You are going to take nearly $16 billion out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers in excise tax alone. Since your party is in power and since you are supposed to believe that individual initiative must be the motor of the economy, what effect do you think the fact of taking away such a considerable purchasing power from the middle classes, which are those who pay the most, at least in total, and the poorer classes, will have on consumer demand?

I also wanted to point out that you are taking away additional growth factors from an economy which had already been on the uprise since 1984 or late 1983. Within two years, you could have boasted of creating more jobs if you had taken a different attitude.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the economic studies published by a department in their own Government—I think it was the Department of Transport—show the unfavourable effects of a massive tax increase on consumer demand and economic growth. The same thing is true of Econometra, which published a document showing the unfavourable effects of such a bill.

That is why I am surprised at the reaction of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). She is repeating certain things, but I do not think that she really knows what is going on. It is incredible that she should say that the capital gains tax exemptions will provide opportunities for small businesses now facing cash flow problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

[English]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, we all make a point of listening to all Hon. Members of the House but I must say that we especially listen to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) as a former Finance Minister in Quebec and as an Hon. Member who makes a lot of good sense. I would like to ask the Hon. Member where he got the figure of $8 billion because I believe that was the most important figure mentioned in his speech. I believe he mentioned $8 billion was a result of the loss of revenue to the federal Government because the Government gave up, as I understand what the Hon. Member said, the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax. I think the Hon. Member used a figure of $8 billion. I wonder if he could give us a more exact figure and tell the House where he got the figure.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, it is very clear. I made that figure public a few days after the Budget. It is from a secret document which was leaked and I had a copy of it. Finally, later on, it was confirmed by the Government and by a senior official in the Department of Finance as a document which had been prepared by the Department. It states that in 1985-86 the Government will lose $124 million; in 1986-87, $920 million and in the last—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order, please. Questions and comments are now over. Debate. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance (Mr. Lanthier).

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this Bill implements budget proposals relating to the federal excise and sales taxes and the excise duty as announced by the Minister of Finance in his Budget of May 23 last, which incidentally followed upon the financial statement and primary adjustment that took place earlier in November.

Our economic recovery, Mr. Speaker, therefore originates both in the financial adjustment of November and in the progressive provisions contained in the last budget.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is indeed not just an income generating instrument. Most of its provisions deal instead with legal matters in order to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of our tax system and clearly define the rights and duties of taxpayers, not to mention the fact that we also made a point to clearly enshrine in this legislation the tax collection process as well as an appeal mechanism for taxpayers. Until now, there has been no provision in the Excise Tax Act to establish the direct assessment of a taxpayer in terms of sales or excise taxes. There was no provision for a possible limited use of an appeal procedure, a so-called independent arbitration procedure, if the taxpayer disagreed with Revenue Canada.

This Bill provides a complete assessment and appeal system which is based on if not directly lifted from the new income tax system. We have included in that system the principle of non-payment of appealed taxes, a provision similar to what is found in the Income Tax Act, namely the basic principle that no Canadian citizen should be condemned until he has been tried.

Appeals can be lodged either through the grievance procedure or the assessment system. The Minister of National Revenue can also refer to the courts any matter arising out of the provisions of the Act. The first appeal procedure provides a three-step process for refund applications. The Minister will then have to consider with all due dispatch the notice of objection and establish whether a refund is payable, and send to the person objecting a notice of decision. Under the present legislation, the Minister shall pay the amount owing and as the case may be, specify on the notice of decision the reasons for rejecting the objection.

The appeals procedure may also be used as a result of a new power given to the Minister of National Revenue to determine the official tax assessments. These assessments will generally be made on the basis of a check of the files and registers of the taxpayer if his overall assessment is limited to the four years of operation prior to the assessment notice. Only in cases of obstruction, fraud and blatant misrepresentations will there be exceptions to that procedure.

Taxpayers will also have the opportunity to discuss in an informal way the conclusions of the auditor with representatives of Revenue Canada before an assessment is made. This is an important step, even in an official appeal mechanism, because experience has shown that many differences can be settled out of court at this preliminary stage. If taxpayers wish to have other informal discussions, they will also have the opportunity to give up the prescription period for assessments on any matter. This mechanism could also be used when an immediate audit would cause specific difficulties to the taxpayer.

The Canadian taxpayer will be able to oppose an assessment he finds unreasonable or a decision on a refund application he finds questionable, by producing a notice of objection within 90 days after receiving the assessment or decision. An independent appeals division already exists at Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise, to advise the Minister on the validity of objections. After that preliminary study, the Minister will have to give a justified notice of appropriate decision.

This Bill will give the Canadian taxpayer the right to be heard by the Minister himself when the latter objects to an assessment or a refund application, and to be clearly informed of the reason why the Minister thinks the objecting taxpayer owes taxes or has no right to a refund. The new mechanism increases the rights of the taxpayer under this new legislation. For example, the Canadian taxpayer can appeal the decision of the Minister within 90 days to the Tariff Board or the Federal Court Trial Division.

The legislation will give the Tariff Board new powers similar to those of the Tax Court of Canada. It will enable the Tariff Board to hear most cases dealing with objections to assessments and it will even permit it to take direct corrective action if necessary.

The new mechanism recommended today will make it possible to refer appeals concerning the decisions of the Tariff Board to the Trial Division of the Federal Court. However, if the Minister appeals a decision of the Tariff Board to the Federal Court and if the amount involved does not exceed $10,000, the Minister will have to pay the expenses incurred by the taxpayer to defend himself in appeal, whatever decision is made. Mr. Speaker, this is a progressive measure because at the present time, the Canadian taxpayer, even the smallest, and even the middle taxpayer since the claim is $10,000, will see his expenses reduced, because court costs will be borne directly by the Minister himself. Appeals brought before the Federal Appeal Court and the Supreme Court of Canada will be subject to the usual proceedings of these courts.

In some instances, the people the most affected by the Minister's decision to assess the taxes due or to reject a refund application are not directly the taxpayers but rather their customers. In fact, the number of tax exemptions will depend on the use of the goods intended by the buyer for his personal purposes. Sellers usually sell goods at an adjusted price to those customers who are entitled to a tax exemption. Subsequently, sellers do not pay the sales tax or even ask for a tax refund if the tax has already been paid.

This legislation recognizes the unique position of the buyer in those particular instances. When the Minister assesses the seller or rejects a refund application on a sale for which the buyer has asked a tax exemption, we are proposing to allow the buyer ot oppose or appeal that decision. Thus, that buyer will be able to make a proper claim for tax purposes and get any refund due. However, those provisions only apply if the seller has yielded his rights to the purchaser or given them up either by prescription or willingly.

This new and equitable system of assessment and reasonable appeal will meet the concerns of many taxpayers who feel disadvantaged and actually follows up the wishes of several task forces from the business community. Its coming introduction is already welcome by all Canadian tax lawyers. However, we are very pleased and we are also waiting for the Opposition Members' congratulations with the fact that the vast majority of Canadian taxpayers will never have to resort to that complex appeal system. We have an excellent indirect tax system and a commendable record of self-assessment of taxpayers and compliance with the existing law.

However, that system is certainly not perfect and some existing provisions require drastic changes for fairness and rationalization purposes. For instance, the present progressive legislation introduces additional changes as regards the refund provisions of the Excise Tax Act.

For several years, the existing Act has allowed taxpayers to claim a sales tax refund over the last four years following the date when the refund becomes payable as far as routine and regular operations are concerned, and within a year for refunds that proceed from a legal or departmental interpretation of existing tax legislation.

This dual system proved difficult and costly to implement, and this indescribable mess of unecessary red tape is a source of confusion for the business community.

The changes brought about in this Bill will replace the old provisions with a new system whereby all similar claims arising from transactions subsequent to May 24, 1985, shall be filed within two years following the transaction whatever the circumstances may be. Refund claims arising from transactions previous to May 24, 1985, will still be processed under the current system.

The Bill now before the House also contains provisions to modify other provisions of the Excise Tax Act. Although the number of taxpayers concerned is low, these significant changes are important as they demonstrate to the Canadian people that their rights are fully protected both against dishonest or shrewd taxpayers and against overzealous public servants in quest of rewards. For example, if a taxpayer requested from a customer the payment of a higher sales tax than is required by law, he would be compelled under this Bill to hand over to the Treasury the amount of tax levied in excess thus precluding the taxpayer from taking undue advantage, as my friends in the legal profession would say, from a situation where he is acting as a collector of a tax that does not exist.

The new legislation also contains measures relating to investigation procedures and enforcement of rulings that are similar to the proposed changes to the Income Tax Act. The authority to seize documents in the course of an audit or inspection will be replaced by a provision allowing such documents to be copied as well as the use of the copies as primary evidence in judicial proceedings. Mr. Speaker, this is a much needed update of a part of our judicial system that had become well-nigh obsolete. It is high time that during a preliminary investigation, business people or a company or industry should not be prevented from attending to their business just because they do not have certain papers which are being kept somewhere or being used as evidence in the courts or have been seized or even impounded.

As a result of another proposal, requests for information addressed by Revenue Canada to a third party regarding transactions of unidentified taxpayers will be subject to the same legal, requirements that have now been included in the Income Tax Act. In other words, Canadian citizens must be protected against all undue interference with their private lives.

Similarly, the administrative provisions of the Excise Act have recently been subjected to a strict and thorough review, and as a result, this legislation will also inject a more reasonable attitude into procedures being used by Government, that faceless monster, in its dealings with the average citizen.

We want it to be easier for Canadian manufacturers to comply with the present legislation. Revenue Canada has therefore been authorized to approve, on a case-by-case basis, the use of non-standard techniques and equipment to measure the alcohol content of spirits for the purpose of determining the excise levies payable. At this point, I may remind the House that there are people who are particularly sensitive to this measure, especially in the riding of LaSalle which has a major distillery and breweries which were hampered by the outmoded measuring procedures imposed by a legalistic bureaucracy.

I join my constituents in welcoming these new measures.

Further changes concern cases where manufacturers may recover the excise tax paid on beer and tobacco products when these are destroyed because they are unfit for human consumption. The changes are not spectacular in themselves but will have a major impact on the general public and especially on the industries directly concerned. What they will not do is stimulate economic renewal or significantly reduce the deficit!

However, the people directly concerned by this legislation are saying that at last they have a Government that is fair and up-to-date. In addition, these changes will consolidate the basis of our national taxation system.

Were there no such determining factors and standardized procedures, the assessment system would not operate efficiently, in other words it would operate haphazardly and inequitably, much like the previous administration did.

Mr. Speaker, we are proud to support the Bill now before the House and to assert that our Government is as much concerned about the scope of the tax system as it is about the taxation process, for at long last we will have a modern, simplified and fair system from which all Canadians will benefit.

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) kept repeating that this Bill is a regular cornucopia of benefits for low and middle income taxpayers.

Shortly before the Hon. Member began his remarks, my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) in his presentation proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that the measure before the House will siphon $15 billion from the pockets of low and middle income Canadians, and that those $15 billion will be handed over to 1,000 to 1,500 businessmen. How can anyone claim, pretend or affirm that this Bill is a godsend for low and middle income Canadian taxpayers?

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, someone objected to my reading a prepared text, but at least it proves that I can read. I doubt whether my colleague opposite even took the time to read the Bill. There are two ways to deal with it.

This morning the Minister dealt mostly with measures related to the Excise Tax Act. Today I chose to talk about the way taxes are collected, which is an important aspect of this Bill. Paying taxes is painful enough as it is, Mr. Speaker, but it is made even worse when businessmen have to cope with red tape which thwarts them at every turn. The way taxes are collected is what irks most people, not whether they are going up or down.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I talked about a modern, fair and simplified tax collection system. If the Members opposite had listened a bit more closely to small businessmen, they would know that the major problem is bureaucratic red tape. It is not the tax itself. This is certainly a burden, but it is necessary. What I wanted to examine more particularly in the comments I addressed to you, Mr. Speaker, was the procedure itself. I believe that it is quite refreshing that, instead of going over the same old song about the just society with which the previous Government tried to con the Canadian population, we, the members of the Progressive Conservative Government, want to establish an equitable society based on natural justice and simplified procedures rather than on the complexities of legalistic considerations. That is the first comment I wanted to make.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I should remind the Members opposite that this Bill contains four elements. First, in agreement with the recommendations of the Nielsen taskforce, the Bill proposes to extend the base of the sales tax, to make the sales tax fairer for businesses, to make it more competitive, so that everyone will be treated equally instead of there being preferential or accidental treatment in certain cases as happened in the past.

Second, the Bill implements some of the strategic plans of the Government to reduce the deficit by increasing certain taxes. Naturally it does!

Third, the Bill fulfils the electoral promises that automatic indexing of the taxes on alcohol and tobacco would be eliminated. The indexing of taxes on alcohol and tobacco—I can see that you are smiling, Mr. Speaker, because I know that there is also a large distillery in your constituency, which means that you were yourself faced with this problem of tax indexing. The taxes have finally been brought back to a reasonable basis as everything will be taxed proportionately. What was the idea of taxing on the basis of one gallon of pure alcohol? This retrograde and certainly regressive formula was tolerated until September 4 of last year. Our consultations with the private sector showed that these changes would be reasonable. We are not afraid to innovate in this field and to say that it is not because the alcohol had been taxed that way since 1921 that we must continue to do the same.

The fourth objective of this Bill was to simplify the assessment and appeal system and make them fair and equitable.

Mr. Speaker, after being in business for a long time, I know that it is unpleasant to have a tax system in which the taxpayer is viewed as a gangster and is treated like a criminal from the start. He was supposed to pay his money and the Government would give him a refund if it felt like it.

What we now want is an arbitration system. Everyone is on the same footing, including the Government in relation to the taxpayer.

If the Opposition has not yet understood the importance of this provision, it has missed a good opportunity to learn something. I would refer the Member opposite to the legislation if they want to see how up-to-date our proposals are.

● (1620)

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, if my colleague for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier) can read, I submit to him he cannot answer without reading from his notes, because he is not giving a straight answer to the question. I understand from his statement, and I am even willing to accept and admit that where paperwork is concerned there may be some slight improvements, this I will recognize, but I must add, Mr. Speaker, and this is the point of my question, when they are using taxes to take additional money from the pockets of people earning between $10,000 and $20,000, whether they do it on pink or blue paper, what hurts is the amount they will be taking, however they go about it.

Somebody in private enterprise who is highly paid, $100,000 or more, perhaps will look at the way it is being assessed, claimed or asked for, but I will remind my colleague for LaSalle that for someone earning $15,000, $16,000 or $17,000, the way it is done has little meaning, what is important is its costs, and how, and so I will come back to the point of my main question: How do you reconcile the fact that you take $15 billion from the pockets of small- and medium-income Canadians and you redistribute that money to a few thousand Canadians who are very well off, and in a position to contribute their share to the situation that now prevails in Canada?

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, the major objective of the last Budget was to put Canadians back to work. That tax balance let us say, that is referred to here, was not the objective. Our objective is not to balance the Budget immediately with an additional tax. We have seen that it certainly will help the Budget, but this is not the measure that will balance the Budget, and to prove that we still have a deficit. The objective is to stop that deficit from growing. Our objective is not to cover the growth of the deficit by collecting more taxes in order to apply that to the deficit; our objective is to put people back to work, and we have succeeded, quite apart from such comments. The decrease in the unemployment rate, the fact that inflation is being controlled, the strength of our dollar, lower interest rates, all that directly results from the assessment made of Government by Canadians on September 4, 1984, a memorable date, and then our response. We did not wait for the Budget date.

The major measures for putting the economy back on course started on September 4, 1984, and were confirmed by our direct actions in November. The Budget came to finalize those measures last November. So, when Members say it is the decline—it takes six months at least before we have a decline, six months for sure, look at those six months which followed November, that decline in interest rates was already beginning to be felt, so was the decline in the unemployment rate. You can rest assured—we were told: Come and see us in a year from now. Well, this is a date for six months from now, Mr. Speaker. At that moment, we will have it both ways; we will have the month of November, which will be in full swing, as well as our Budget measures which already are beginning to show very clear signs, because our recovery fares better than in the United States.

We will not compare with the United States now; we are not putting the blame on the United States anymore; there is no mention of the United States, they are our first clients, but I can assure you that our economy is now sound, Mr. Speaker, and this is due simply to our Budget measures and our measures to reduce that unfortunate deficit we have inherited from you. It is now under control, as I can assure all Canadians.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): The time for questions and comments has now expired.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a package dealing with some of the economic and financial details contained in the Budget proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in May of this year. In the months before the election, the Conservatives promised Canadians that if they were elected they would maintain and indeed improve the services which were provided to Canadians, create tens of thousands of jobs and at the same time cut the deficit of the federal Government which they maintained was higher than we could afford.

Once they were elected they quickly realized that it was impossible to fulfil their promise to provide and improve services while cutting the deficit at the same time unless there was great improvement in economic growth in this country. Instead, we have seen a series of proposals to cut services, including such programs as the old age pension which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised was a sacred trust and would not be reduced. The Government only backed down from cutting back in this area when it saw the unanimous opposition from senior citizens and their families.

Another proposal on which the Government intends to act is the deindexing of the family allowance. It is also proposing cuts in services and programs for such things as forestry, scientific research and national parks. The Government has realized, now that it is in office, that it is not possible to maintain services while cutting the deficit at the same time when there is close to 1.5 million unemployed.

One of the major criticisms made by people such as economists and taxpayers, who are knowledgeable in the field, is that cutting back on the real income of Canadians will limit the opportunity to improve the economy and therefore bring in higher revenues. Arthur Donner, a business consultant and economist, said in a recent article comparing what is happening in Canada with the Government's proposals and what has happened in the United States:

> The Canadian budget, on the contrary, accepts the fiscal restraint goal which Reagan preaches, but does not practice.

Although President Reagan has talked about cutting the deficit, the fact is that in the eight years he will have served as President of the United States the deficit will be double what it was in the 200 years before he took office. When President Reagan took office, the deficit was $1 trillion. It will be $2 trillion when he retires. This is what Arthur Donner said about the Government's proposals:

> —the extensive consumer tax hikes and the program expenditure reductions will do little to improve economic growth in Canada. If anything, the budget will probably slightly retard economic growth.

While the Government is proud that there has been a 3.5 per cent increase in the GNP and that unemployment has gone down slightly, it ignores the fact that the number of people working full time has decreased and the increase in employment is due to people who are working part time, most of whom earn relatively low wages.

If the disposable income of Canadian citizens is reduced they simply will not have the money to purchase the goods and services they require. Yet, the Budget proposals and this Bill which will increase a whole series of excise taxes will reduce the purchasing power of Canadians, particularly low and middle income Canadians who save very little of their income. Many middle and low income Canadians spend most of their disposable income.

This Budget and this excise tax proposal, as part of the over-all budgetary proposal, is to make big savings and to give more income to people in higher income brackets, precisely those who do not spend all their disposable income.

It is our belief that if we want to get the economy moving better than it has moved, you have to increase people's disposable incomes. For 10 years, former Liberal Governments and the present Tory Government have followed austerity policies believing that was necessary in order to keep the deficit down as low as possible. It is our belief the Government deficit is not the problem, that attempts to cut the deficit will worsen unemployment and will increase the deficit.

It is obvious now that the business community, which believed the Government would make massive reductions in the deficit, is realizing that even this Government cannot make those massive reductions in the deficit, and the business community is becoming increasingly dissatisfied with the Government for that reason. I do not have the time to quote, Mr. Speaker, but any number of representatives of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and Chambers of Commerce have called on the Government to reduce the deficit by $5 billion, $6 billion or $7 billion rather than by the smaller amount which has been done.

We believe if we want to deal with the deficit that it is time to look at the whole tax system. We say that tax reform is long overdue. The tax burden on the poor and middle-income earners should be reduced both on the grounds of savings and on the grounds, as I have indicated, of stimulating economic demand. We say that social policy expenditures produce jobs and, therefore, should be recognized for their positive contribution to economic activity. We say the attempted reduction, which this Government is making, will only result in a serious erosion of this country's social fabric and in an increase in unemployment insurance and welfare costs.

Let me give some facts and figures to show the fundamental differences between the thinking of Members of the New Democratic Party and Members of the Government. Having seen how radically we differ on tackling this fundamental budget problem of creating employment, I want to outline where the Budget stimulus did go. It went to the friends of the Government in the business community.

Let me summarize how this was done in the Budget and what happened to those who do not have links to the corporate sector. The big winners in 1986-87 will be the corporations with a tax decrease of $540 million. The wealthy, people with incomes over $50,000 a year, will get a tax decrease of $600 million through the capital gains exemption of $500,000. Oil companies will save $920 million through the phase-out of the Petroleum and Gas Revenue Tax. High-income earners, who can afford to invest in programs such as RRSPs, will gain $1,000 in tax breaks in 1986.

Who are the losers, Mr. Speaker? Individuals who will see tax increases of over $1 billion. Families earning under $40,000 a year will have tax increases of $490 million through changes in the federal income tax system, increasing the amount they will have to pay. Because of the increase in the excise tax on gasoline and oil all users of transportation will see increases of $930 million. This is happening at the same time that we see a continuing and we say a completely unfair decline in corporate taxes, taxes which should be helping to pay for the services Canadians receive.

I remind Members of the news we got a couple of weeks ago that in the purchase of Gulf Canada by Olympia & York, avoidance of close to $1 billion in corporate taxes was made possible. According to information which we now have, that is just one illustration of many cases which have and can occur because of defects in the corporate tax structure.

What we have seen in the last 30 or more years is a dramatic shift in the way in which taxes are collected. In 1950 the balance of income taxes paid to the federal Government was roughly equal between individual and corporate taxes. By 1960, the balance was 58 per cent paid by individuals and only 42 per cent by corporations. By 1970 the balance was 64 per cent paid by individuals and 36 per cent paid by corporations. By 1980 the balance was even greater, 70 per cent of taxes came from individuals and 30 per cent from corporations.

Since 1983 budget forecasts have predicted further shifts in the tax burden toward individuals and away from corporations, in spite of the fact that individual incomes have either been shrinking below the rate of inflation or barely keeping pace, while corporate profits have been rising. This Budget projects that personal incomes will rise by only 19.7 per cent between 1984 and 1986 while corporate profits will grow by over 49 per cent. Taxes on individuals are projected to go up by over $1 billion in 1986 and to drop by over $500 million for corporations.

I think I have proved that while individuals are paying more and more, those better able to pay are paying less and less. We know, for example, for the 1983 tax year that 1,020 people with incomes over $100,000 paid no income tax, an increase of 33 per cent in those who paid no income tax in 1982. There has been no hurry on the part of the Minister of Finance to plug those kinds of loopholes, despite the fact that during the election campaign the Prime Minister agreed those loopholes should be plugged and that all Canadians should pay a fair share of the taxes required to finance the services which the Government provides.

Let me deal for a few moments with the particular Bill before us now, which proposes sharp increases in sales taxes paid by Canadians. The National Council of Welfare in its May 1985 report called "Giving and Taking: The May 1985 Budget and the Poor" said this about the increase in sales tax:

> Sales taxes are regressive, which means they take up a larger proportion of the income of low income consumers. The Budget will add hundreds of dollars in federal sales tax increases for most Canadians. Poor people—welfare recipients, the working poor, low income pensioners—obviously can least afford them. The Canadian Council on Social Development has estimated that sales tax, gasoline, alcohol and cigarette tax hikes will amount to increases of $140 for a $15,000 couple with two children in 1990, $282 for the same couple with $20,000 and $361 for a couple with $40,000.

They also pointed out that for the fourth year in a row, poverty has increased in Canada. The number of men, women and children living on low incomes, has now risen over four million. That is almost 18 per cent of the population. The number of children under 16 years of age living on low incomes has risen steadily each year. It is now estimated to be 1.2 million, or one child in five is poor. Fifty per cent of single-parent families, most of which are headed by women, are living in poverty. That situation is a disgrace in a country as wealthy as Canada. Newspapers from one end of the country to the other have reported in some considerable detail the kinds of situations which exist.

I have talked on other occasions about the City of Winnipeg and the sharp increase in the number of people who depend upon charity and voluntary organizations for food baskets. Let me put on the record just a couple of illustrations from other cities. The following was reported in The Globe and Mail about a week ago:

> In the past few months, the four-year old Edmonton Food Bank, which has served as a model for many similar organizations in Canada and Europe, has provided free food for about 30,000 of the city's 650,000 citizens.

It went on to quote some actual cases. For example, a single 38-year old Edmonton mother of two teenage children earning $585 per month from part-time work in a cafeteria was ineligible for partial assistance from the Alberta Social Services Ministry because she earned more than $549 per month. She has to depend upon charity. She has to go to the Edmonton Food Bank. Also a story in The Toronto Star quoted the head of the Metro Salvation Army, Mr. Bobbitt, as saying:

> Up to 600 new cases a month of people needing food and help, people who have never before been to social agencies—
> At the Scott Mission—traditionally, a soup kitchen for transients—the numbers of families seeking food soared by 33 per cent from 1982 to 1985—

It went on to indicate:

> One small Bloor-Christie area food depot that mostly sees single street drifters and roomers feeds 1,200 people a month and expects to feed 1,500 by winter.

It may come as a shock to the Minister of Finance who told Hon. Members of the House yesterday that the way to help the poor was to find them jobs, that the majority of low-income people and families in Canada already have jobs. Their jobs pay so little that they have to depend upon charity to supplement their income to meet their needs. It is a disgrace. It indicates that the system is breaking down. After all the new programs which have been implemented in the last 30 years, people now have to depend upon charities.

We say that taxing the poor and the sick is not the way of a caring or compassionate Government. That is what the Government is doing, in addition to hurting those least able to fend for themselves, when it presents this Bill. It goes far beyond abstractions about the deficit; it is very real in every day life where each nickel is counted before any purchase is made.

The Government has brought in this Bill. We think it is wrong. It hits people who can least afford to pay the increased costs proposed in it. We intend to vote against it and to oppose it here in the House and outside.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Hon. Member had an opportunity to analyse the Government's statement of financial operations for the period in this fiscal year ending July. If he has, he will note that at the present time, despite a reduction in expenditures in almost every Department, except those Departments involved in the statutory payments of pensions to individuals, payments for post-secondary education or something of that nature, the Government's expenditure or deficit is up by $200 million strictly because of the interest on the public debt. At one point the interest on the public debt was $3 billion in four months. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should continue to borrow more and more money? Is he suggesting that it is good fiscal policy to take 63 cnets out of every $1 spent in taxes and then to borrow the other 37 cents? Would he have us borrow more? Would he have us increase the debt and increase the interest expense? Does he have any definit suggestions as to how we can come to grips with this problem?

Mr. Orlikow: It is my belief—and that belief is shared by many people, economists and other experts in the field of financial administration—that the deficit we face is not caused by overspending. The deficit is caused by the fact that we have, according to official figures, one and a quarter million people who are unemployed. There are probably another 300,000 or 400,000 who are uncounted because they have given up and are not even trying to look for work. If that 1.5 million people were working, they would be earning income and paying income taxes. They would be making purchases for which they are not able to pay now. On these purchases there would be a collection of federal and provincial sales taxes. Instead of being producers and earners contributing to the financial welfare of the country, they are recipients. Instead of paying income tax, which would be a plus in terms of the financial affairs of the Government, they are drawing unemployment insurance. We are paying billions of dollars in unemployment insurance for people not to work. I want to say that I am completely opposed to the cut-backs in the system of unemployment insurance benefits which the Government is implementing. When these people run out of unemployment insurance benefits, they go on welfare. Instead of helping to finance the revenue of the Government of Canada, they are in fact costing the Government of Canada money.

It makes a great deal of sense to us to put people to work, to have 4 per cent unemployment as we had for many years after World War II instead of double-digit unemployment of 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent. In its budgetary papers and economic projections, the Government continues to predict that unemployment will remain at 10 per cent or more for the next few years.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member has not been looking at the current projections of the Economic Council of Canada, for exemple, which indicate that unemployment will continue to fall as long as the policies we are putting forward are carried out. The Hon. Member will know that over 300,000 people joined the workforce as new contributors to our society over the past year. Also he will know that the figures remain horribly wrong and difficult. That is not a result of substantial cut-backs, because there have not been substantial cut-backs.

I ask the Hon. Member to analyse the figures. When we are debating budgetary matters, certainly tax matters, it is important that Hon. Members understand the financial affairs of the Government. In Employment and Immigration alone, the expenditures by the Government for the first four months of the year are up $70 million. That is a substantial increase in helping people to cope with retraining and that kind of thing. We are on that track. Surely the Hon. Member must realize that we cannot forever borrow and borrow and continue to run a budgetary deficit for which it is doubtful we can find the financing to support.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I can agree with the Hon. Member that we cannot go on forever. However, it is not only Governments which are running deficits. The debts of individuals in Canada, because of their ability to buy homes with mortgages and because of their ability to buy appliances on credit, has grown even faster than government deficits. We can take a look at what is happening in the United States.

As I indicated in my speech, in the eight years that President Reagan will have served as President of the United States, the American deficit will have doubled from the amount of debt created in almost 200 years of American history. In Great Britain, the Thatcher Government did exactly what this Government seems to want to do. There is now an unemployment rate of over 13 per cent in Great Britain, the highest percentage of unemployment that has existed there since the Great Depression.

Cutting the deficit by cutting services will not solve the problem. We need to help people who need the help most and we need to get a tax system which collects from the large corporations and high-income earners their fair share of taxes. That is what we are not doing at the present time.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I am literally amazed by the Hon. Member who is a member of the political Party that supported the former Government for 16 years while the deficit went from $17 billion to nearly $200 billion. If that is evidence that spending beyond our capacity to earn and our ability to tax creates prosperity, I would like to know why we inherited an unemployment rate of 11.6 per cent. The answer is that the former policies do not work and cannot work. We have to use more sensible policies and that is what we are doing. I am surprised that the Hon. Member does not recognize that and I am surprised that he does not get rid of his old ideas and support the Government and its policies.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member ought to look at the record of other Governments. He would see that every provincial Government in this country, whether it be Conservative, Liberal, NDP or Social Credit, runs at a substantial deficit. If this Government follows through with its intention to cut back on the increases in post-secondary education, health services and welfare funding and takes the $2 billion which it is proposing to take from the provinces for those shared cost programs, we will see very substantial increases in the deficits of the provincial Governments. Trying to deal with the deficit by cutting back on services and holding the line has not worked either.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Before giving the Hon. Member the floor, I have to take care of a matter of housekeeping.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall that Bill C-80, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to speak in connection with Bill C-80, a Bill to amend the Excise Tax Act. As all Hon. Members and all Canadians know, this is one of a number of Bills which is being presented in order to implement the Budget that was put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on May 23. This particular Bill is one that deals almost exclusively with tax increases. That is no secret to anyone. There are about four different types of tax increases included in the Bill.

The first tax increase included in the Bill broadens the base of federal sales taxes to include a great many more items. It is interesting to note that at the present time, only about 30 per cent of all commodities in Canada are subject to federal sales tax. The Government, in its wisdom, has considered it to be unfair that only 30 per cent of commodities should be subject to federal sales tax so it is increasing that base to cover a great many more items.

The second tax increase contained in the Bill deals with the federal sales tax itself which is to rise by 1 per cent on January 1, 1986. That means that things like construction materials and cable and pay-TV will be subject to something like a 7 per cent federal sales tax. The sales taxes on alcohol and tobacco products will rise to 14 per cent and the taxes on all other items will rise to 11 per cent.

The third area of tax increase included in this Bill deals with the tax on gasoline. On September 3, as we know, gasoline prices increased by two cents per litre. That was as a result of the tax increase announced in the Budget and being implemented by this particular Bill. On January 1, 1987, not 1986, there will be a further one-cent increase per litre in the price of gasoline as a result of the provisions of this Bill.

Finally, there will be an end under this Bill to the automatic indexing in the increase in taxes on alcohol and tobacco. The increase will be limited to 2 per cent over-all on alcohol and 25 cents per package of 25 cigarettes. This is one of those Bills which is not always welcome to Members of the House and it is certainly one that is not exactly viewed with wild glee and enthusiasm by the people of Canada. None of us like tax increases but all of us are realistic. Certainly Canadians are as realistic as any people in the world.

Canadians realize that we have problems in this country. They realize that we have unique problems at this time which include not only an enormous deficit but high unemployment as well. Somehow we have to deal with both of those issues at the same time. That is really what the Budget of May 23 was all about. It was an effort to put people back to work and create jobs while at the same time try to keep the deficit under control and not let it climb sky high. That, then, is what this Bill is all about. It is one part of the budget legislation package which tries to do those two things. They seem to be very opposite and not to have any relation to one another.

Hon. Members will recall that in September of 1984 when the Government took office unemployment was running at about 11 per cent. I suppose it is down somewhat from that figure right across the country. However, it is down in some places more than it is in others. In my constituency in Metropolitan Toronto unemployment is down to 8 per cent or 9 per cent. However, in other parts of the country it is up substantially above that. It is in the 15 per cent to 20 per cent range in British Columbia, Alberta, Quebec and Newfoundland. So there was a substantial problem which had to be dealt with when the Government came to office in respect of unemployment. That is what the Budget was agreed to do, as was the Western Accord and the Atlantic Accord.

These measures were geared to try to create some jobs in order to put people back to work and to do what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) referred to when he spoke about putting people back to work to generate some tax dollars to help pay down the deficit. That cannot be done by waving a magic wand. It cannot be done by just wishing or dreaming. Something positive has to be done. The Government did something positive when it introduced the Western Accord and the Atlantic Accord. Those were measures geared to help the areas which were experiencing extreme unemployment.

In the Budget of May 23 there were measures dealing with pension funds which can now be used for investment in small business. Measures such as training programs were introduced, as was the capital gains tax exemption measure, which is a measure members of the Opposition deride. However, all of those measures, along with the two accords, were aimed at creating jobs. Frankly, that is what they have been doing. We have seen evidence of that over the last year. We can see it in the statistics which come out each month. We see that there are more and more jobs which have been created. We know that that is something in the order of 304,000 new jobs which have been created in the last year since September 4.

At the same time as trying to deal with the unemployment problem, the Budget was also aimed at trying to deal with the problem of the deficit. Hon. Members know as well as I that this year we will have an annual deficit of something in the order of $35 billion. Canada has an accumulated deficit of something in the order of $200 billion—an enormous amount of money. This year, 1985, the Government has tried to restrain its own expenditures as much as it possibly can. However, it started off with a $100 billion deficit left by the former Government. Against that amount there was only approximately $65 billion coming in as revenues from all sources, so there was a deficit of something in the order of $35 billion in the last year of the former Government. We are continuing on with a similar situation this year, in spite of the restraints in expenditures, and because certain measures are indexed and must increase, such as Old Age Security payments and the guaranteed income supplement. Those programs are indexed to the rate of inflation and have to increase whether the Government wants to increase them or not. Thus, Government expenditures continue to climb.

The measures contained in the Bill which is before us will assist to keep the deficit situation somewhat under control. They will not solve the problem. No one suggests we will eliminate the deficit altogether; but these moves will help to retard the growth in the deficit. In fact, if we add all these increased revenues up, that is, the increase in the sales tax base and the sales tax itself, the increase with respect to the gasoline tax and the taxes on alcohol and tobacco, there will be something in the order of $2.5 billion in extra revenues in 1986. That amount should grow to approximately $3 billion in 1987. That remains just a small part of the $35 billion annual deficit.

No one wants to pay extra taxes and everyone would be very happy not to have to do it. However, Canadians are realistic. They realize that if they earn $70 a week they cannot go out and spend $105 a week, unless they go and borrow the difference. If they go and borrow the money then they will have to pay interest so that next week their expenditures will have to increase. There is no way around the situation, whether the Opposition wants to face the facts or not. If they do not face the facts then they are not facing the facts of life in this country. The people of Canada face those facts. They know and understand those sorts of problems.

Members of the Opposition have referred to three or four concerns which they have. They feel that there are great problems with the Budget and with this Bill. For one thing they have said that they feel the whole tax system is inequitable and that this Bill adds to that inequity. As I have said, that is only one part of the Budget. There are other parts which help to make the whole tax system a lot more equitable. There is the minimum tax which is about to be introduced shortly. There is to be a surtax on large income earners. People who earn more than $40,000 a year will have to pay a surtax this year and for several years into the future. The same applies to large corporations. There is a surtax on large corporations. There is a surtax on banks. We are eliminating various tax shelters with respect to yachts, recreation vehicles and hotels. We are also eliminating income splitting. All of this will help to make the tax system more fair. Certainly, the Budget deals with those concerns.

There was another concern expressed by the Opposition having to do with the dampening effects on the economy which this Bill would have. That, too, is not correct, and we have heard that from the Opposition before. We heard it after the November 8 economic statement. We heard the Opposition say that these moves would eliminate 50,000 jobs in the country. After the Budget was tabled we heard the Opposition saying it would eliminate thousands and thousands of jobs. What has happened? From September 4 of last year until now there has been a growth in jobs to the tune of 304,000.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: In addition to that, interest rates have fallen by 3 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: The Gross National Product has increased by 4.19 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: All of this in spite of the gloom and doom which is being preached by the Opposition, something which they have preached since the first day this session of Parliament convened last November. These results indicate that the Budget as a total package is on the right track. It will reduce unemployment and help to get the deficit under control.

My friends in the Opposition have also referred to the question of the money being spent to rescue the banks. They have expressed grave concerns about money being spent to rescue these banks. It is certainly true that some of that money will go to corporations and other banks. However, a great deal of it will go to pension funds and credit unions. There are thousands of people in the country who are dependent upon those pension funds for their pensions and there are thousands more who depend upon their savings which they have deposited in credit unions. The credit unions and pension funds do not have the option of sheltering themselves under a $60,000 insurance limit. They have millions of dollars to invest and they have to place it somewhere. Obviously, that amount will be over the $60,000 limit. The people who have their money in those funds do not have any control over where the money is placed. However, they will certainly be affected if they lose their money. That will impact on their pensions and those who have savings in credit unions. All these moves indicate that the Government is doing a good job in trying to help people in the country and in trying to help solve all of the problems.

In conclusion I would like to reiterate that this Bill is not one which will be overwhelmingly popular with people. However, the people of Canada are realistic. Notwithstanding the fact that they understand this Bill will increase the tax load on them, they know that we have to do this if we are to solve the two major problems of the country. First, we must put people back to work. Second, we must get our deficit under control.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

SUGGESTED REBROADCASTING OF HOUSE OF COMMONS PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of recommending to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the feasibility of rebroadcasting the daily proceedings of the House of Commons in toto during the evening hours.

He said: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for supporting my motion, something for which I am most grateful to him. It is very important for the House to understand the meaning of this motion, to wit, that the Government and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should consider the advisability of rebroadcasting during the evenings hours the daily proceedings of the House of Commons. I want to make it clear that the House does not intend, in my view, to issue instructions or orders to the CBC, but is simply asking it to cooperate with the Government of Canada in that feasibility study for the ultimate purpose of rebroadcasting during the evening hours the daily proceedings of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, it was on February 10, 1977, that the House of Commons decided to broadcast its daily proceedings, so that on October 17 of that year, a number of communities started watching these proceedings on their television sets.

[English]

The first community to receive the televised proceedings of the House of Commons was the City of Ottawa, and after that the City of Toronto. By the end of one year, there were 80 cable operators throughout this country televising the proceedings of the House of Commons so that the people of Canada could in fact see what was going on in the House of Commons and understand how this country is directed.

There are now 450 different cable operators across the country who are televising the proceedings of the House of Commons. In the constituency which I represent the town of Rockland is now able to see the proceedings in the House of Commons live every day and I am told by my constituents that they are quite pleased that this service is now available to them. I could be partisan and say that they are not pleased in seeing the Government, but they are pleased to see the House of Commons in action. However, this is not a partisan motion and I will skip that portion at this time.

Something of which we should all be aware is that although the proceedings of the House of Commons are watched by approximately 100,000 people every week, there is a much larger number of people who watch the repeat of Question Period at six o'clock p.m. or 6.15 o'clock p.m. every day and an even larger number of people, for instance, who live in the Province of Ontario, watch the rebroadcast of Question Period at 11.15 o'clock p.m. on TV Ontario.

A very interesting statistic has come to my attention. The audience watching Question Period and the proceedings of the House of Commons is largely composed of senior citizens according to a study conducted by the Library of Parliament. This is, of course, very understandable because at the time of day when Parliament is in session, most people are out working in order to earn a living and, of course, cannot be at home to watch the televised proceedings.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we know also that the rating in the afternoon is approximately 10 per cent for adult viewers and that in the evening, depending on the hour, it varies between 30 or 40 per cent, which means that we could, by rebroadcasting the daily proceedings of the House of Commons during the evening hours, make it possible for a much greater number of Canadians to watch Parliament at work.

[English]

When the House begins the day at 11 o'clock a.m., it is 12.30 o'clock in Newfoundland and eight o'clock a.m. in Vancouver. Of course, at those times of the day very few people are home to watch the televised proceedings of the House of Commons. If we were to repeat the televised proceedings of the House of Commons in the evening, commencing at a time somewhere around 6.30 o'clock p.m. Ottawa time—which would be eight o'clock p.m. in Newfoundland and 3.30 o'clock p.m. in Vancouver—needless to say the number of people who could view the televised proceedings of the House of Commons would be far greater. Another interesting fact which has been noted in some reports is the fact that if the House proceedings were televised in a retransmission at a later time in the day, the proceedings could be indexed. In other words, it could be known at the beginning what topics were discussed that day because of the fact that it would be a retransmission. The second time around, the people doing such an index could have put together a list of topics which were discussed in the House on that particular day. This would be most convenient for students and other groups who could then use the information in their activities. It would also, of course, be most beneficial for Canadians who are interested in a specific issue. We all recognize that it is very difficult for us to inform the public as to any particular issue being deliberated in the House of Commons on any particular day. This problem is caused in part by the fact that the House agenda is often changed at the last minute by the Government House Leader—most times, of course, with the agreement of the Opposition House Leaders—but the agenda is not always fixed. Therefore it is very difficult for us to inform our constituents of what issues will be debated in the House on a particular day.

I want to allow a large number of Hon. Members, if possible, to speak on this issue, so I will make my remarks rather brief. I just want to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, an article written by Pierre Ménard in the Canadian Parliamentary Review, Autumn 1985 edition, entitled "Parliament and Television". I would just like to quote one paragraph in the article, which states as follows:

> Many different topics and issues are covered every sitting day, each with its own interested public. The spontaneous nature of the live proceedings makes it difficult to predict when a particular issue is to come up. Few interest groups and individuals can monitor proceedings all day long to determine what is said on a subject of special concern to them.

I indicated that earlier in my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

> Once the House has adjourned for the day, however, an accurate viewer guide to the replay becomes available. If 20 topics are raised one day, 20 publics can be advised when to tune in for debate on their own areas of concern. Canadians would, first of all, be home to watch and secondly, they would have prior knowledge as to what subjects were coming up and at what specific time. Viewers could record portions of special interest to them.
> Teachers who use the Parliamentary Network as a teaching aid could do so much more effectively. More schools might begin to use such a valuable resource. Though Parliament Hill is one of the best known sights in Canada, far less is known of the process that takes place inside.

● (1720)

I therefore ask, Mr. Speaker, that Members from all political parties represented in the House support the motion which I have moved today, calling on the House to show again in the evening the broadcasting of the daily proceedings of the House of Commons, which already cost a significant amount, something like $3 million a year and, for a pittance more, and some even argue that the costs would be almost the same, to make it available for a greater number of Canadians, who would then have the opportunity to watch Hon. Members defending their interests.

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to offer some thoughts on the matter before us today, particularly because the broadcasting of parliamentary business makes such a positive contribution to the Canadian political process, indeed to Canadian identity. However, while any attempt to improve television coverage of parliamentary proceedings is certainly worth while, I have some doubts about the motion before us. The motion proposes that the Government should consider the advisability of recommending to the CBC the feasibility of rebroadcasting the daily proceedings of the House of Commons. It might be helpful to outline how the CBC provides national distribution of its parliamentary service and the role it plays in doing so.

The House of Commons broadcast service, which comes under your direct responsibility, Mr. Speaker, as you well know, provides the video and audio signals to any broadcaster who wishes to distribute them. The CBC is licensed by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission to carry on a network operation for the distribution of these proceedings. The CBC's parliamentary television network takes the signals, packages them and uplinks them for satellite distribution to cable companies across Canada in both official languages. Cable operators may then receive and carry the service at their own discretion. The CBC does not have an exclusive licence to distribute these proceedings, but it is the only national distributor at this time. In doing so, it provides a valuable service to Canadians and contributes immeasurably to fulfilling the objectives set out for the CBC in the Broadcasting Act.

The fundamental questions raised by this motion are: Do Canadians want the additional service? Would they watch it if they had it? I believe that before we advise the Government to extend this service it would make sense to ask Canadians if they want it. Broadcasting parliamentary procedures at present costs Canadians $2.5 million to $3 million per year. Most of us would agree that money spent on familiarizing Canadians with their Government is money well spent. Broadcasting Parliament's procedures give Canadians an opportunity to better understand their Government and how it operates. As today's article in The Gazette notes, these broadcasts reach literally thousands if not millions of people across Canada and the continent. For the past eight years this service has served an important function in educating and informing Canadians on their Government. However, before we undertake an extension of the service, I believe we must be absolutely certain that it is wanted. As elected representatives we must ensure that tax dollars are spent wisely and with the public interest in mind. This holds true for the CBC as it does for other Crown corporations. Let me point to an example which illustrates the need for proper management of tax dollars consistent with the wishes of Canadians.

As many Members may be aware, the CBC is planning to build a new broadcast centre in Metropolitan Toronto. When plans for the new building were prepared CBC officials selected a site in downtown Toronto and proceeded to estimate construction costs. In March of this year the City of Scarborough made a proposal to the CBC for construction of this centre in Scarborough which could save Canadian taxpayers over $90 million. The CBC resisted this proposal and has continued to insist that the centre must be located in downtown Toronto. Fortunately, the persistent efforts of members of Scarborough Council, Scarborough Development officials and Members of Parliament from Scarborough have focused public attention on this issue and called into question the selection of this downtown site. I raise this question to point out to Members the importance of analysing motions like this which ask the Government to extend services which Canadians may not want and cannot afford.

Before we extend this service perhaps we should better inform Canadians of the existing service which is available. I am sure Members from all sides are continually informing their constituents as to when parliamentary proceedings are broadcast in their area. The simple fact is that many Canadians are not even aware that they can watch these proceedings. Many of those who do want to tune in are forced to purchase a converter to do so. With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), I think the motion itself is not the ideal mechanism for tendering our suggestion for enhancing television coverage of the House of Commons. Still, there is no reason why we as parliamentarians cannot approach the proper forum in the proper manner to present our suggestions for enhancing either the signal provided by the House of Commons broadcasting service, or the CBC's own parliamentary television network which packages and distributes that signal. That opportunity will occur when we discuss the recommendations made by the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons. Indeed, in its report that committee suggested that the distribution of the House of Commons broadcast service might be improved, and mentioned that one idea might be to repeat the proceedings at a time when the potential audience is larger.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while I support the objective behind the motion, I cannot agree with the mechanism it seems to propose for reaching that objective and I cannot, therefore, offer my support for the motion. Furthermore, the appropriate procedure will be available shortly when the Government and Opposition Parties discuss the special committee's recommendations on the broadcast service, and that discussion will generate additional ideas for consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate and to congratulate my colleague from Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) on his motion to re-broadcast the proceedings of the House after the end of the day's sitting and thus make it possible for more Canadians to see and hear the proceedings for themselves and realize how important the parliamentary process is to our daily lives. It is a positive and constructive proposal, because it would allow a greater number of Canadians to see the Parliament of Canada at work and watch their elected representatives discussing important questions in the House.

I also think it is constructive, because the motion is not asking the Government to do all this right away. It is asking the Government to consider the feasibility of such a proposal, and I am thinking for instance of the cost of such a project. I am told the cost will be minimal. I have been informed that one person would be able to take care of rebroadcasting, because Channel 16, which is used for broadcasting and redistribution of the signal, is the channel that announces in the evening: See you tomorrow, when Parliament sits again and we will have the necessary information for you.

I think it would be positive and constructive to consider the feasibility of this proposal, in order to find out what the real cost would be and whether more than one person would be needed. I think it is probably positive as far as cost is concerned because I think we may find to our surprise that the proposal would not be all that costly or a drag on the Budget, and I think it could also be constructive in that more Canadians would know what is going on.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) spoke to us about the time when we started broadcasting the proceedings of the House. I was there, and when I look around in the House, I feel a little older than the average Member because I was here in February 1977, when the decision was made, and I was also here in October 1977, when we started broadcasting the debates of the House of Commons. I must admit that at the time, the lights and atmosphere and all that made everything a bit strange for many of us and many Members and Ministers at the time felt that the decision had been a bit hasty and that we might have quite a few problems.

I must say today how pleased I am to note that this idea of broadcasting the proceedings of this House has enabled Canadians to be better informed about parliamentary activities, more especially, Government activities, the motions discussed and the general items related to our proceedings. Mr. Speaker, I for one think it is important to extend the broadcast of parliamentary debates if only for the average worker who is not at home in the daytime and cannot watch television. A construction worker or an office employee cannot watch television unless they have a special interest.

I wanted to deal with this because in my constituency of Ottawa-Vanier—I will be a little more parochial—there are many public servants who are highly interested in parliamentary activities, because this is part of their daily life. They work for the Government, they know what is going on and would like very much to watch and hear our parliamentary debates. It is not always easy to do so in the daytime, but in the evening they would appreciate hearing from the Minister concerning a projet in which they are closely involved or the Member of the Opposition making a positive criticism of private Members' initiatives. Therefore, to allow a more extensive understanding and perhaps to inform Canadians, I think that the motion of the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell has a positive thrust.

Before coming in today, I figured out that I have made some 120 interventions, speeches, or whatever, since November last. I have spoken about various matters and I am well aware that people in my constituency watch our proceedings. Those who tell us their opinions and their views are generally retired people who say: "I will tell my son or my daughter to watch what goes on in the House of Commons because it is important and I think that he or she will be interested."

It would therefore be very nice for us to be able to tell them: "The proceedings of the House of Commons will be retransmitted this evening at 7 or 7:30 and you will be able to see the Minister, the Prime Minister or the Members of Parliament speak about the bill which is of concern to you.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude by congratulating the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell on his initiative. I think that we could go even further and include the committees. I think that we could talk about broadcasting the committee proceedings. I think that in line with the new Standing Orders and the Parliamentary Reform, we will have to find a system whereby the Canadian public will be able to watch on their TV set these proceedings. I think also that the idea of widening the Canadian audience has some merit.

As to what this initiative could cost, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we should try for the time being to assess it in dollars and cents. I think it would be worthwhile, as suggested by the Hon. Member, that we consider the possibility of rebroadcasting our proceedings for the benefit of the people who want to watch them.

I feel that a pilot-project in the area of the national capital could be useful, and I know a great many people in my riding who would like to take part in such an experiment. A pilot-project would not cost much, but might help achieve the Hon. Member's purpose. As I said, we could also consider extending this idea to committees.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate again the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell. I think his is a positive and constructive initiative.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us this evening is basically to consider the desirability of rebroadcasting House proceedings. The motion, naturally, is framed in a much more wishy-washy, shilly-shallying fashion as is our wont here in the House. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of recommending to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the feasibility of rebroadcasting the daily proceedings of the House of Commons in toto during the evening hours.

Translated, that means that it is a good idea to repeat the broadcasting of House proceedings in the evening. Of course, there are many pros and cons on this issue, but I think, on balance, it is a good idea. We know that roughly 100,000 people watch the proceedings as they are currently broadcast across the country. I have no doubt that there are many more people who would like to watch them but are simply not available during the daytime hours. For some people perhaps it is the only commercial-free broadcasting available, so there are many incentives for watching apart from an interest in parliamentary affairs.

People are entitled to know what is going on in Parliament. People are politically interested and if they want to be involved, naturally it is extremely helpful for them to see what Parliament is debating. Any measure which will make this more possible is positive. Canada is an enormous country and it is very rare for people to come to Ottawa. We would welcome having more people, more school children and more citizens groups coming to see us and meet with us directly. However, that simply is not feasible for large numbers of people so we have to depend very much on the message of Parliament getting out over the airwaves. In so far as this would increase access to our parliamentary debates, it is a highly desirable idea. Certainly the more that people watch Parliament, the more we might expect Parliamentarians to respond to criticisms which I, and I dare say other Members of Parliament, receive from people who are already watching the proceedings and who are rather disturbed at the air of frivolity which often prevails in the House. If increasing the hours of exposure and the telling of the truth, as it really is, to the people of Canada would result in a more serious atmosphere and a more considered deliberation, that would be a very good thing. If the boys' club atmosphere—I am not being sexist but simply accurate—with the "boys will be boys" attitude that largely contributes to the low atmosphere of the House with the catcalling and so on that often happens could be improved as a result of more people watching, I am very much in favour of it.

There are some legal questions involved because this is not our channel but the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's. It may not want to proceed along these lines. There is also the question of whether the time should be used to show committee hearings which is an issue which will be considered. Perhaps there will be some competition between the House itself and committee hearings. Certainly important matters are discussed at committee and it would be advisable to televise committee hearings as well. Therefore, it will be necessary to provide a balance of what is shown on the channel.

We must also address the issue of how we make use of scarce channel space and ask what use we should make of this available exposure. The CBC wants a second channel for regular programming of a somewhat different nature that it may control entirely. However, until it can include women in programming on an equal basis with men I would not want the CBC to have another channel on which it can treat women as second-class citizens.

If anyone is entitled to spare channel space in our broadcasting system it is the women of Canada. While the private networks do not do enough to cover women's issues and events, the CBC, which is funded with our money, is the worst offender. I have already given statistics with respect to the dire under-representation of women. For instance, only 5 per cent of experts appearing on CBC shows are women. I suggest that women should be given more consideration which considering the good use of this second channel. However, this would not be a progressive move because I believe all Members of the House would prefer to see women and men treated equally on CBC's main channel. They should be equal members in broadcasting as they are equal members in Canadian society.

Women have had to lobby a very unsympathetic palaeoanderthal male management at the CBC. The President of the Corporation recently used the parliamentary channel to put forward his case about what he would like to do with this channel. If he would use this parliamentary channel to tout the CBC, I wonder if he should not be according the women of Canada the same opportunity to put forward their case for the use of what available broadcasting space exists on the airwaves, satellite and cable.

I regret that we are unable to deal with a number of other important broadcasting questions which I am sure are of concern to those dealing with this more immediate question and narrow interest. A number of these very urgent matters include Canadian content which is grossly inadequate in its availability to the private networks and the CBC. A high priority would be to obtain a commitment from private broadcasting to commission and broadcast Canadian programming. In my opinion, a high priority would be to eliminate or phase down commercials on the CBC, particularly with respect to drama programs so that we may have high quality public broadcasting.

Another matter of concern to Members of the House is the treatment of employees within the Corporation and indeed throughout the broadcasting system. With respect to the CBC, I receive many complaints from female employees who are discriminated against as well as male employees who do not have the full opportunity to use their talents. For example, their proposals for cost-cutting efficiency measures are not treated seriously by CBC management. These are issues which we may deal with in a broader broadcasting context.

Let me mention one particular matter which was brought to my attention. It concerns a very serious complaint about private broadcasting which was raised by NABET this summer. There are a number of employees in Newfoundland who are on strike for a first contract. There is a notion that broadcasting is an important and glamorous indsutry which treats its employees well. While it is an important industry, CHUM station in Newfoundland has the lowest media wages in Canada. The average wages for employees there is $11,700 which is below the poverty line for a family in that area. This shameful treatment of people in that industry not only requires attention by the broadcasting industry, but in labour legislation and other areas that are not the subject before us today.

I believe the motion before us today is very sensible and I generally support it. Before we make any proposals to increase services, we should have an idea of the costs. I suspect that the additional costs of repeat broadcasts would be very minimal because they are already being borne for the existing videotaping of the proceedings. However, we would have to consider those costs as well.

I think the more important problem involves the available space and how it should be used. Since the motion before us proposes that these matters be considered, I would support it and ask for the consideration of these matters in the hope that a wise decision will be made to increase the exposure of the House and provide Canadians with a greater opportunity to see what is happening here as we try to resolve the practical problems before us in a reasonable fashion.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in rising to address this motion by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), I want to go on record as favouring the greatest possible exposure of Parliament's daily proceedings by the people who sent us here. This is a very important matter for debate, not only for Your Honour and for those of us who sit in the House of Commons, but for the countless thousands, indeed tens of thousands of Canadians who are watching the proceedings of Parliament at this very moment across six time zones in this country alone. Yes, you and I are being watched by approximately 100,000 Canadians right now. Heaven knows how many viewers we have beyond our borders through the miracle of satellite delivery.

One point that I want to make is that you are the custodian of the parliamentary TV service as long as the House of Commons is sitting. These cameras belong to us. They are an integral part of our proceedings. Therefore, through you, I would like to say to the people of British Columbia and the Yukon: If you are picking us up at this moment, it is the middle of the afternoon. They are waiting for the kids to come home from school or waiting for the next appointment in the office or possibly waiting for the next soap opera.

In Newfoundland and Labrador, where the time is now approaching 7.20 p.m., you probably had dinner and are waiting like everyone else for what will be a very crucial game in the World Series.

[Translation]

If you are struggling through traffic on your way home, here, in central Canada, at this time of night, 5.50 p.m., forget it . . . You are not listening to us at the moment.

If you are safely home, or unfortunately still at work, or else in hospital or in a retirement home and that you are watching us or listening to us, you are among the tens of thousands of Canadians who are addicted to this television service.

• (1750)

The point I am trying to make and I think other Members have already drawn it to the attention of the House is that there are convenient and highly inconvenient times for addicts of the CBC parliamentary network to watch their elected representatives in action. There is also a demonstrable need for the enhancement of coverage of proceedings in this House of Commons, especially when—and I say this to my colleagues—a much larger audience might be able to tune in.

One of my long time friends and one of yours, Mr. Speaker, as you view this debate is Mr. John Warren, the host of the English language parliamentary broadcasts.

[Translation]

I am sorry, I have never met the host of the CBC French service, Mr. Gilles de Lalonde, but on behalf of all French Canadians, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate him for his commentary and his rapport with the viewers of this service.

[English]

Both of these gentlemen directly and indirectly have pointed out to me that more than 100 letters are received each week by the CBC on this parliamentary service. Among those letters are letters from places like Franklin College, Franklin, Indiana; Albany, New York; Portland, Oregon; Sir Thomas Moore Comprehensive School in Hamilton, the University of Saskatchewan and dozens and dozens of others all seeking information to demonstrate the interest and the use that is being made of our parliamentary service for international educational purposes. In other words, we are at this moment a reasonably hot item and one clearly in demand by people across Canada and beyond our borders.

I must say that while I have the utmost admiration for and confidence in the CBC parliamentary television network, I am expressing a certain personal desire to see the House of Commons service extended, but I must caution you, Sir, and those who are looking in that I have no authority as an individual Member of Parliament or a Parliamentary Secretary to initiate any moves or recommendations on my own. What I think is the useful aspect of the debate raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell is that we are putting this issue into the open before the Corporation for its consideration and before other members of the Government apparatus to achieve the full potential of this unique broadcast vehicle. That tremendous potential, that increasing public awareness of parliament among viewers across the country makes imperative, in my view, the need to consider ways of making use of the down time of the parliamentary service.

I am a little hesitant about providing full support for the motion we are debating today. The principle of bringing Parliament to the people via television, as I have said and as other Members have said, is sound. We have debated many ways of putting that principle into practice on a number of occasions, both in committees and here in the House. However, the question at the time when the TV and radio broadcasting committee was deliberating the implementation of broadcasting in the House was how do we indeed commit that principle to practice. The motion before us raises a similar question.

Now that we have a service and now that there seems to be widespread agreement in this House that efforts ought to be made to enhance the service, what is the best way to increase an understanding of parliamentary procedures and traditions through the parliamentary broadcasting service?

As you are no doubt aware, Mr. Speaker, many suggestions have been put forward over the last few years for enhancing the television coverage of Parliament. Many of these suggestions involve expanding the House of Commons service, that is, the feed provided by the House to the CBC and other broadcasters to provide regular coverage of standing committee meetings. The Government is in favour of a couple of key recommendations made by the special committee on the reform of the House of Commons with respect to televising committee proceedings and will undertake consultations with Opposition Parties to seek an agreement on implementation.

The special committee specifically recommends that:

> Fuller use be made of the parliamentary service.

The Government supports this recommendation in principle and the Government House Leader, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has stated here in the House that he will consult with all Parties on its implementation. For its part, the CBC has confirmed its interest in enhancing the coverage provided by its parliamentary television network.

My sources in the Corporation tell me that the CBC is getting so much mail requesting brochures on the parliamentary system that it has run out of them. The word is that the CBC is gently requesting viewers to ease up on letters asking for brochures.

Nothing is final yet on the matter. There are no doubt many more suggestions to be made during the upcoming discussions. This debate is part of those suggestions. That is why I commend the Hon. Member's initiative in bringing this matter before the House of Commons for discussion. However, I think it is reasonable to assume that an expansion in the television coverage of Parliament by the House of Commons service, by the CBC or by both is not very far off.

The motion does not recognize your office, Mr. Speaker, as the proper authority for the House of Commons television service. As we are well aware, any modification is the Speaker's responsibility, and the motion does not explicitly refer to your role.

While I realize that the way the CBC uses the feed provided by the House of Commons service is its own decision, I would think it would be your office or the television and radio broadcast committee which ought to offer any suggestions to the CBC about modifying the way the Corporation's parliamentary television network packages or distributes that feed. Perhaps the motion presumes this, but it does not say so explicitly. For that reason, I am reluctant to support it.

I think if we believe in an arms length relationship with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, it would not be in this way that we should be laying hands on the CBC and telling the CBC how to use its service. It is within your jurisdiction, Sir, through appropriate consultations that this might be done.

As a participating addict and admirer of the CBC parliamentary television network, I want to see something done about a system which sits there unused except when the House of Commons is in session. There are decisions which have to be made in conjunction with the McGrath Committee on Reform of the House of Commons; in conjunction with the Minister of Communications; in conjunction with the Special Task Force on Broadcasting, and in conjunction with you, the viewer, if I may say through you, Mr. Speaker. As individual Members of Parliament, we should be hearing from the people who really admire this service and who want to see it expanded, enhanced and extended.

We have ways of making use of this hugely expensive electronic instrument of Parliament. We MPs own and operate all the broadcasting facilities within these buildings. We must, in my view, take advantage of those installations and decide how we wish to put the parliamentary television network—

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to be able to discuss here in the House the motion presented by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, which says:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of recommending to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the feasibility of rebroadcasting the daily proceedings of the House of Commons in toto during the evening hours.

I understand and share in my colleague's desire to make the noble institution we represent better known to the public. In that regard, television is the perfect media to make Canadians familiar with the works of Parliament.

I confess, Mr. Speaker, that the motion puzzles me somewhat, because the action it calls for would, in my opinion, create an emabarrassing precedent if it were fully implemented.

Our colleague wants the Government to consider recommending to the CBC that changes be made in the services it provides, a matter which comes under CBC internal management. Under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, the CBC is a proprietary corporation and as such is solely responsible for internal management and day-to-day administration.

It is therefore up to the CBC to decide which programs are to be aired, and were the Government to act as suggested by the Hon. Member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) it would run the risk of opening a debate on the autonomy of the corporation. Such a debate would undoubtedly cloud the issue, for our main objective is to make viewers even more interested and convince Canadians that they ought to take a more active role in the political process of their country.

I believe that to really grasp the question at issue, the role played by the CBC in providing this service has to be further explained. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the broadcasting of parliamentary proceedings comes directly under your jurisdiction. CBC has obtained from the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission a licence to establish a French and English parliamentary television networks broadcasting every day the House is sitting a direct coverage of its proceedings.

This coverage is supplemented with explanatory comments provided by CBC's own announcers. Those programs are then conveyed by satellite to the affiliated Canadian cable companies.

Statistics show that in early 1985, parliamentary broadcasts were shown by 188 cable companies. These cable operators could reach 66 per cent of Canadian homes and were effectively received by 50 per cent of all households.

Those figures, Mr. Speaker, show the popularity of this service and encourage us to do even better.

The question at issue now, Mr. Speaker, is this: what are the best ways to attain our goal which is, and I will remind you of it, to make Canadian people more aware of parliamentary life?

This question leads me to discuss the mechanism proposed in the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Prescott-Glengarry-Russell, that is rebroadcasting the daily proceedings of the House of Commons in toto during the evening hours.

As you know, the Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons, chaired by the Hon. Member from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), has devoted a chapter, Chapter 9 of the report released last June, to the question of televising the House.

What makes the value of any debate is the relevance and variety of suggestions made. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because the motion before us calls for a definite action, the chosing of a mode of rebroadcasting.

I would not want anyone to believe that I am trying to downgrade that solution. Rebroadcasting during the evening hours would certainly give a larger proportion of the population the opportunity to watch the proceedings. At the present time, Question Period is the most popular part of the broadcast. Given the fact that it is already rebroadcasted at the end of the daily proceedings of the House, I wonder, and reasonably so I believe, if rebroadcasting in toto is the best or only means of improving that service. Would it not be better to increase the variety of parliamentary activities being broadcasted, as suggested by the report?

The Committee recommends, for instance, that Committee proceedings be televised as well. This report, Mr. Speaker, contains proposals that would make the committees much more dynamic. Televising committee meetings would give Canadians a chance to familiarize themselves with this other important aspect of parliamentary life.

Also, the Committee mentions that the broadcast network is not as dynamic or imaginative as it could be. Would rebroadcasting of the proceedings change anything in this regard?

Could it be that better explanations of House proceedings, the broadcasting of conferences, some phone-in programs on public affairs, as the Committee suggests, would make Canadians more interested in the political life?

Would it be a good solution for the future future of our network to take for a model the American network C-Span, which televises 24 hours a day the congressmen's proceedings and those of the House and Senate committees? We would then televise the House and the Senate committees meetings and have public affairs programs.

Should we open the network to programs produced outside of Parliament, namely reports on seminars and conferences.

You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that cable distributors play an equally important part in the provision of this service.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Charest): Order. The time allotted for Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 46 deemed to have been moved.

COPYRIGHT—INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION. (B) ARTS FUNDING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the question I would like to address this evening relates to copyright. There has been a report of the subcommittee on copyright revision which included a charter of rights for creators. In my opinion, it is an excellent document. It contains 137 recommendations and almost all of them are very good.

Artists have waited a very long time to have greater recognition of their economic and moral rights of copyright. Of course, even a very good set of recommendations is not going to have any impact until legislation is prepared and brought forward. We had an indication from the Government that we could expect legislation in February. I very much hope that it will be put before us in February because this is a matter of very great importance to artists.

Artists have been patient long enough. Many of them live below the poverty line. I do not wish to exaggerate the impact that new rights of copyright will have on their incomes but certainly it will have a positive impact. It is about time that artists got this additional support.

Some of the changes proposed are housekeeping changes because this Act has not been revised in any significant way in more than 60 years. There is some recognition of new rights and these are important new rights. They include the exhibition right, a new right in choreography, full rights in musical compositions, a right to edition, new recognition of performers' rights, a new category of audio-visual works and the right to computer input. there is also the recommendation regarding a right to rental which will mean new income for people who are losing money through lost royalties to rental. There is the recommendation of payment for public use by other means not through copyright. That is certainly a recommendation we hope will not only be accepted but better funded and put into action promptly.

• (1810)

We proposed a clarification and an extension of moral rights. The work is to a large extent the expression of the personality of its author. The present Act does not protect these rights. Furthermore, in the French text, it is rather a privilege than a right.

Consequently, the Sub-committee recommends that the new Act fully recognize that moral rights are as important as economic rights. All the recourse provided for violations of an economic right should be applicable to violations of a moral right. It can be stressed here that a large increase in available sentences in courts for violations, fines up to one million dollars, instead of the present fines of approximately $200, has been recommended.

[English]

The principle of compulsory licensing was reviewed by the committee, an obnoxious principle and one which we have managed to avoid with some small exceptions. There is one exception with which I am not entirely in agreement. We have almost entirely gotten rid of this notion.

One important part of our work was to close the loopholes with respect to the exceptions, which meant that artists became involuntary donors of their time. It is quite proper for artists to give of their time for charitable purposes, but surely this should be on a voluntary basis and they should receive a tax receipt for it, as do other Canadians. Artists groups persuasively argued against these exemptions. We went along with them with the sole exception of the case of the production of materials for the handicapped. We were certainly in agreement with the principle that access has to be provided. We also agreed that there should be some payment, although it would be a very trivial one. We expect that public agencies which support this work should make up for those payments and that artists should not have to be involuntary donors of their time. We are certainly in favour of handicapped persons having prompt access to materials under copyright.

[Translation]

I did not agree with the majority report in three areas. As far as employers' and employees' rights are concerned, I am on the side of employees. The majority report favours the employers. With regard to home recordings, I have a different proposal to make, which is better, I think. It is obvious that home recordings deprive their creators of income from copyright. Instead of buying a cassette or a record, people make recordings. A tax on tapes, cassettes and VCRs can be directed to creators, not to collective management companies. This is a way to compensate the artists for lost income caused by this new technology of home recording. Unfortunately, if we proceed through copyright, most revenues, up to 90 per cent, will be exported abroad, mainly to the United States. The problem of export of revenues is the reason why I object to the recognition of the right to broadcast.

A certain form of recognition is fair and necessary. Yet, it would be irresponsible to give new rights resulting in enormous losses of scarce revenues.

[English]

Canadians might wonder why a resident of Windsor should have to pay for local rebroadcasting rights for which the Detroit citizen does not have to pay. Because the American corporations ABC, NBC, CBS and the Hollywood majors have asked for it, that is no reason why we should be making Canadians pay for something their neighbours across the border do not have to pay for.

• (1815)

Finally, I would like to point out that we have to look at the costs in copyright. We want to see new rights but when we have had $100 million in reduced budgets for the Arts community, I would be very reluctant to see a new exportation of scarce resources outside the country. One of my questions is can we have a firm guarantee that there will be a restoration of these cuts before we contemplate more exporting of these scarce resources to the United States?

A copyright is a means to an end. We must consider the needs of the whole cultural community. We must consider funding to the CBC, Canada Council and so on, and deal with the copyright question in that broader context.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it seems like old home week talking about copyright revision with the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), to whom I would like to pay public tribute for the very significant contribution she made to the subcommittee on the revision of copyright. Even though she did agree with the majority of the recommendations, she did not agree with every Hon. Member of the Committee on certain points. Both of us worked long and hard on the copyright committee. It was a formidable challenge to, in effect, rewirte the "Bible" on copyright and change a law which is more than 60 years old. Indeed, it is downright ancient.

The Hon. Member has raised two questions. The first question concerns the time at which the legislation will be introduced. I can assure the Hon. Member that legislation is now being prepared and will be introduced as soon as possible. As the Hon. Member knows, the subcommittee worked for 10 months on copyright revision. We heard 111 witnesses, considered over 300 written submissions and attended many lively meetings over the summer months to discuss the many different issues. After all this work, all members of the subcommittee share the Hon. Member's concern that legislation be introduced quickly. As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications, I am hopeful that the Bill will be drafted so that it can soon be enacted into law. I am told that some drafting work is already under way and I will continue to urge that it be completed with dispatch.

The Hon. Member's second question associates the cut-backs in arts funding with the subcommittee recommendations aimed at providing new copyright protection for creators. With respect, one has nothing to do with the other. The cut-backs in arts funding was part of a broad Government policy to reduce expenditures. The arts, like other groups, were required to bear a portion of that burden. On the other hand, the subcommittee recommendations to provide new copyright protection would benefit the arts community. In fact, I am informed that the reaction of creators to the report has been most favourable.

The outflow of royalties problem to which the Hon. Member refers, and which was part of her minority report, is not at all what it may appear to be. There are three reasons for this. First, much of the new copyright protection recommended by the subcommittee would be reciprocal. Canadians would have to receive protection abroad before non-Canadians would be protected in Canada. Protection abroad would create an inflow of royalties which would help offset any outflow.

Second, the Hon. Member has shared in the subcommittee's recommendations to provide some new protection which will cause an outflow. Yet others she has not agreed to. I do not see this as being particularly consistent. Although the Hon. Member has reasons for her position, other Hon. Members of the subcommittee did not agree with that reasoning. The majority has consistently recommended that creators be protected when their works are being used without their consent or without payment.

Finally, the subcommittee is convinced that protection for creative work, which is so justly deserved, should not be denied to Canadian creators because it would cause an outflow of royalties. It has been repeatedly pointed out by witnesses that it only takes a few—and I think probably more than a few—Brian Adams and Margaret Atwoods to turn the negative outflow into a positive inflow. Copyright protection is essential to ensure that Canadian creators can continue their work.

I am proud of the subcommittee's hard work and long hours on our new charter of rights for creators. I repeat to my hon. friend that I want to see legislation before this House based on all of our 137 recommendations at the earliest possible moment.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—UNITED STATES CLEAN-UP PLAN. (B) CONTENTS OF PLAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, you may recall that last October the Niagara River Toxic Committee filed its report with the Canadian and American Governments. The Canadian Government has not yet responded to the findings of that committee which contained some alarming results. For example, some 3,000 pounds of priority pollutants, that is, acids, metals, PCBs, pesticides, et cetera, end up in the Niagara River daily. Over the winter Environment Canada carried out further studies and raised that estimate to some 19,800 pounds. Yet the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) still does not respond to the earlier report or the new data.

The Minister met with the head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in Washington in May and returned to Canada saying, as recorded in Hansard on p. 4765:

—that planning for the Niagara River clean-up is being accelerated.

Remember the word "clean-up".

On October 17 a plan was presented by the EPA to the Minister of the Environment here in Ottawa. Canadians have not seen that plan. In fact, the Minister told the press that he did not know if we could get to see it at all. That is rather curious considering that the EPA in Washington considers this plan to be a public working document. Therefore, the question arises, why will the Minister not come clean with Canadians and tell us what is in the plan? Why should we order a copy from the EPA south of the border? Why is the matter shrouded as a big secret?

There are important questions on the minds of everyone concerned with this matter. The health and drinking water of some 6 million people, 4.5 million of them Canadians, is at stake. Does the plan set stiff controls on the polluting industries when they discharge toxic substances? How much money, if any, does the plan provide for the excavation and incineration of the toxic chemicals buried in the sites? Are funds envisaged by the EPA for municipalities on the U.S. side to catch the toxic pollutants as they enter the sewage plants? What is the timetable for implementation so that municipalities will know how long they can rely on present water supplies and whether they will have to turn to alternatives? It is also important to know the agreed upon toxic substances which should be brought under control other than phosphorus.

These are the reasons why we call on the Minister to make this plan known. It is hard to understand why the plan is public south of the border and not north of the border. Canadians have the right to know. It is important that this matter be managed properly and so far the Minister has not done his homework. He has contradicted himself in and outside this House on the matter of the plan. He is urging the Opposition to study the plan before making statements, but then outside the House he says to the press that he does not know whether he will release the plan. He has mismanaged this very serious issue.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will answer these questions, and perhaps do the job that the Minister has not done so far by coming clean with Canadians and providing knowledge on these major points. To facilitate his task I will summarize the points for him. They are: a timetable, the money attached to it by the Environmental Protection Agency in Washington, and the details as to whether they will proceed with the excavation and incineration at the land-fill sites. There are, as you know, 61 sites on the U.S. side of the river.

Time does not permit me to go over the names of the companies and municipalities that are the most significant contributors of priority pollutants, but among them are the Buffalo Sewer Authority Waterworks Treatment Plant, the Niagara Falls New York Waterworks Treatment Plant, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, the Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation in New York, Atlas Steels in Ontario, Olin Corporation in New York, Spaulding Fibre Company in New York State, the Town of Tonawanda Waterworks Treatment Plant in New York, the Town of Amherst Waterworks Treatment Plant in New York, and the Donner-Hanna Coke Joint Venture, also in the State of New York.

We want to have answers because, as I mentioned, this is becoming a very serious health matter in the long term. It can still be managed, but it needs prompt action on the part of the Government. The report I am referring to came out in October, 1984. One year has gone by. Why does the Government not reply to the content of this report? Why is it now taking an open stance to let Canadians, provincial Governments, and municipalities know where the matter stands at the present time?

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in response to the questions posed and the clarification asked for by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), I want to agree entirely with him about the serious nature of this problem and to indicate that the Government is fully aware, as are many Canadians, of the serious threat that this situation poses to millions of Canadians and Americans. In fact, it has been a progressive threat over the last number of years and it is high time that constructive action is undertaken and completed by governments on both sides of the border.

The facts, some of which have been elucidated by the Member for Davenport, are well known, they are established. We know that there are 61 dump sites on the American side and 5 on the Canadian side. Eighty-nine per cent of the contribution to the waste in the river is by the Americans and 11 per cent is by Canadians. Those things are established and we have no argument with that.

The Member has asked several specific questions and I would like to respond to those as well as I can in the time I have available. He asked why the report has not been released. I can tell him that the report on one document, the Niagara River Toxic Commission document, is in fact prepared for release. Our position has always been that we wanted to get the response of the Government of Ontario and the Government of the United States before releasing our report. We have been ready to release that report for some time now and it will be out, probably within the next week or two.

Mr. Caccia: You are blaming it on the Government of Ontario now, is that what you are saying?

Mr. Gurbin: Not at all. I indicated that our position was and has been that we would hold our official response until such time as we receive the official responses of the Government of Ontario and the Government of the United States.

With regard to the second report, the action plan that was presented by Mr. Thomas to the Minister last week, it has been identified by the Minister. I do not think there was any conflict of confusion in his response. In fact, I think it was quite capably handled. We are considering this as a working document. If the Member wants to write to Washington for a report and it is released, that is his prerogative. Our position is that this is a working document. We have organized a meeting for November 8 between the principal parties which are Canada, the United States, the State of New York and the Government of Ontario. At that time all parties will sit down to work on this document and initiate the changes that we feel appropriate.

The Member also asked—

Mr. Caccia: It is public knowledge south of the border.

Mr. Gurbin: If the Hon. Member wants me to answer the question in the time I have available, he will have to listen rather than interrupt.

With respect to money, I can tell the Member that at least $1 billion so far has been spent by the Americans. I presume that he is concerned about the Americans. While Mr. Thomas was in Canada he stated privately and publicly that hundreds of millions of dollars in additional funds will be required and available when necessary. The exact amount is not the issue. The issue is to take real action to clean up the river. The bottom line is to eliminate the pollutants that are causing the problems. We have admitted that this will require a large amount of money. The Americans have admitted that as well and they are prepared to pay those amounts.

The Hon. Member has indicated that he is unhappy about a number of steps taken by the Government and the Minister. The plan we have received is not final. We have an opportunity to make it as complete and precise as possible in regard to the important matters before us. We are encouraged by our progress so far, although we realize more work needs to be done. The Americans will readily admit that as well.

The Hon. Member for Davenport might be encouraged by a comment from his leader in Ontario who indicates that although different technical approaches can be taken, he was encouraged by the vigour shown my Mr. Thomas and is confident that progress can be made.

CORPORATIONS—TAKEOVER OF MONTREAL EAST COMPANY—(A) ECONOMIC IMPACT. (B) SITUATION IN MONTREAL EAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the closing down of S.Q.D. Technologie de Ville d'Anjou, in the riding of Saint-Léonard-Anjou, and the fact that on November 23, 250 jobs will be lost, adding to the already long list of jobs lost in Montreal East, which is getting longer every day, Mr. Speaker.

In my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) last Tuesday, I mentioned that this operation is rather strange since the only competitor in Quebec manufacturing suspension systems for trucks and automobiles has been taken over with a specific view to closing it down. And I asked the Minister how we allow competition to be eliminated in this and all other sectors? This is a very dangerous process indeed, Mr. Speaker, and we are moving towards a monopoly system which, of course, goes against our free enterprise system.

I want to know why the Minister did not take action. Does he intend to do anything and could we act before November 23 to prevent the loss of those 250 jobs which would create a very unfortunate situation in an area where poverty is ever-increasing?

My supplementary was also directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) and concerned the fact that aside from competition, Mr. Speaker, that company is being taken over by a group of foreign investors. I was wondering whether we could have prevented that transaction if the Foreign Investment Review Agency were still in force . . . and now, nothing can be done through Investment Canada. As a matter of fact, I did ask the Minister of Industrial Regional Development to do something about it. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, he told me that the mandate of Investment Canada was not to allow foreigners to take over plants in order to close them down. But that did happen, so I am asking him if this is government policy. Is the Minister going to do something about this? Could these 200 jobs possibly be saved? I am expecting a positive answer tonight, not for my own sake, but for those 200 jobs in Ville d'Anjou which are so important for the people of that community.

Mr. Bill Domm (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Canada Post): Mr.

Speaker, first let me provide some background information. The Marmon group of companies will be puchasing the assets of the Montreal automotive spring plant of SKD Technologies Inc. after it closes in November. Marmon is not purchasing SKD Technologies Inc. I understand that there was no potential purchaser of the spring plant as an operating company. The Marmon group plans to move the plant machinery to its new plant in Cambridge, Ontario, which will create new employment for scores of people. I would also note that the Marmon group already operates two spring plants in Montreal and that there are ten other manufacturers of automotive springs in Canada. In other words, Marmon is not acquiring its only competitor.

Mr. Gagliano: In Quebec?

Mr. Domm: Within the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Director of Investigation and Research who administers the Combines Investigation Act has reviewed this acquisition and concluded that it did not give him reason to believe that a violation of the merger section of the Act would occur. In other words, the Government is not allowing competition to be eliminated in this sector.

Let me talk about jobs for a moment. This Government is actively promoting the creation of jobs. As the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Stevens) assured the Hon. Member the other day, the objective of Investment Canada is the creation of new jobs in Canada through foreign investment. It is not to encourage non-Canadians to buy businesses in Canada with a view to closing them and creating unemployment.

I can only stress the statement of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion when he pointed out to the Hon. Member that jobs have been created at a rate of 25,000 a month. With the co-operation of the Hon. Members of the Opposition, we will strive to increase that rate in the days and months that lie ahead.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY IF CERTAIN BUDGETARY CUTBACKS WILL SERVE TO REDUCE DEFICIT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal-Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on October 23, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) officially announced that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Conservative Government had misled Canadians when the Government tabled its consultation paper on child and elderly benefits, a paper that was tabled in January by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and which says clearly on page 6, and I quote: "Any savings which may result from program changes will not be applied to a reduction of the deficit."

Mr. Speaker, on October 23, 1985, in answer to a question, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated the following, as reported in Hansard of that day, and I quote: "The reason behind the decision to reduce the growth rate of the family allowance is the deficit, Mr. Speaker."

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that despite thousands of signatures expressing the support of people from all Conservative ridings, despite the demonstration held by mothers with children on Parliament Hill, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and all Conservative Members would rather take $22 from every mother with two children and spend it on changing the colour of our military uniforms.

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of social injustice, with the co-operation and support of all female Progressive Conservative Members, would rather take away—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COSTA RICA—ARREST OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Wayne McCannon, a Canadian citizen from British Columbia, is being held in Costa Rica on bail awaiting extradition to Guatemala within the next few days. The reason for his arrest is that he stopped payment on a cheque to a hotel in Guatemala City where he had arranged accommodation for a number of travellers. When the hotel's standards were found to be completely unacceptable, he stopped payment on a cheque to cover the costs of the accommodation, but agreed to meet with representatives of the hotel in neighbouring Costa Rica to arrange a satisfactory settlement. When he arrived in Costa Rica, he was arrested and thrown into jail for 120 days. He is presently out on bail under constant surveillance and forced to remain in Costa Rica.

He soon will be extradited to Guatemala where he, and others, believe he will face certain death once confined in a Guatemalan jail. All this is over a disputed cheque for $8,500.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to intervene with the utmost haste to assist this Canadian citizen who will face the harshest of repercussions if action is not taken immediately.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR REGIONAL EQUITY IN RECRUITMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, one of the most sought after careers for young men and women, especially in western and northern Canada, is in joining the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. However, the RCMP recruiting policy, which seems to be a hangover from the previous regime, deliberately discriminates against English-speaking Canadians and, as a consequence, against westerners and northerners.

Most members of the Force are stationed in the contract provinces, and surely there ought to be a rough relationship between the number of members serving in a particular province or territory and the number of recruits being accepted from that jurisdiction. This is manifestly not the case.

In the Northwest Territories where the RCMP are held in such high esteem, there has not been a single recruit accepted for over five years despite a "G" Division strength of about 280 members. Employment equity seems to be a very popular concept these days, so let us change the present policy and have geographical equity in the hiring practices of the RCMP.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

NATURAL SCIENCES AND ENGINEERING RESEARCH COUNCIL'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has a stated objective of increasing Canadian effort in research and development. Innovative technology is one of the focal points for the Government's trust to create jobs and to remain competitive in the technological world of tomorrow.

In order to achieve this goal, extended funding must be channelled into advanced research and training for scientists and engineers. The Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, our country's major research funding body, calls in its second five-year plan for a $1.4 billion increase to meet the critical need for improved research infrastructure and to increase the universities' capacity to produce adequate numbers of highly trained scientists and engineers. Without such action, Canada will fall further behind competing nations, and the economic consequences will be far reaching.

The Government must give careful consideration to the NSERC recommendations. Desirability of adopting the plan appears to be unquestionable. There is an urgent need for an immediate and sustained action to provide the stability necessary for the effective management of the Council's programs.

This investment should be viewed as a long-term investment into national effort to revitalize the economy and as a means of laying the foundation for our future achievements in science and technology. I strongly urge the Government to approve NSERC's second five-year plan.

SMALL BUSINESS

COURAGE AND TENACITY OF CANADIAN ENTREPRENEURS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard-Anjou): Mr. Speaker, during National Small Business Week, I would like to talk about the courage and perseverance of our Canadian business people. In fair weather or foul, they are always there, and thanks to them, millions of Canadians have jobs today. The Conservative Government consulted with business people at the beginning of its mandate, but after one year, no concrete and direct action has been taken by the Government. This is what the situation looks like:

Business people, their families and associates may not take advantage of tax shelters created by registered retirement savings plans to invest in their own businesses; $500,000 in capital gains tax exemption for everyone over five years, with no attempt to channel investment of these gains to small—and medium-sized businesses; not a word about the Federal Business Development Bank; the Small Businesses Loans Act has been amended to tighten up access and make it less flexible.

The Progressive Conservative Government's only positive action has been to adopt legislation simplifying tax measures applying to small businesses, something which had already been proposed in the Lalonde Budget. In a survey, the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses indicated that 57 per cent of its members did not intend to invest in new businesses. This lack of confidence is caused by the attitude of the Minister of State (Small Businesses) (Mr. Bissonnette) and the lack of leadership shown by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

"MADE IN U.S.A." PEACE TOWER REPLICAS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, there have been discussions in our country about free trade, unemployment rates, and so on. Well, an interesting thing happened this morning. My constituency assistant, Michele Bellin, from Yorkton, came down to Ottawa. She wanted to buy a little gift for her husband Dale before she went back. She went to the House of Commons gift shop to buy something which is really Canadian and symbolizes the House of Commons. She picked up a little tie tack with a symbol of the House of Commons' Peace Tower. She thought that was a great symbol of Canada, made in this country. It happens that she picked up a box, it is a little blue box, sort of a Tory blue colour, and she looked inside the box and saw: "Made in the U.S.A.".

I think that is really symbolic of what is wrong with much of this country. Here is a symbol of the House of Commons, a symbol of this country, sold in the House of Commons' gift shop, yet it is made in the United States.

I think the time has come when we should get our act together, at least here in the House of Commons.

THE ECONOMY

FUTURE OUTLOOK

Mr. Fernand Ladouceur (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, every indicator points to sustained economic growth in Canada over the coming years, as evidenced by the findings of the twenty-second Economic Council of Canada annual review and the Royal Bank of Canada forecasts.

Mr. Speaker, our Government was committed to put Canadians back to work and pave the way for strong economic growth spurred by, among other factors, declining interest rates, lower unemployment levels, renewed confidence and a smaller deficit. On the basis of the Royal Bank's forecasts, our economy should expand by 3 per cent in 1986 and 3.4 per cent in 1987. The unemployment rate is expected to go down from an average of 11.1 per cent in 1985 to 10.3 per cent in 1986 and 9.8 per cent in 1987, while inflation should remain stable at about 4 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, that is the promising outlook for all Canadian men and women who put their faith in the Government's future challenges to our society, the driving force behind the current flood of major investments by private industry.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXCELLENT WORK OF PRIME MINISTER AT COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE AND UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Today, Mr. Speaker, I want to say on behalf of all Quebecers and all Canadians how proud we are of the outstanding performance of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the Commonwealth meeting and before the United Nations.

After only one year as the head of Government, our Prime Minister stood out among statesmen as a result of his dynamic stand at the Commonwealth conference where he prevented a break-up and created a consensus leading to a compromise readily endorsed by all participants.

In a similar vein, the Prime Minister of Canada made a strong disarmament appeal to the major powers before the United Nations General Assembly in New York City. Representatives of all countries unanimously expressed their satisfaction, gratitude and solidarity to the head of the Canadian Government.

Once again Canada has shown it fully deserves international credibility.

He did all of us proud, Members of Parliament as well as Canadian men and women.

THE MINISTRY

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, this is the second in a continuing sequel concerning the astuteness of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Crosbie). In a Canadian Press Report of Monday, October 21, the Minister of Justice is quoted as having said that he had not been politically astute when he said that the Prime Minister's staff were not politically astute. It was very astute of the Minister of Justice to say that he had not been astute when he accused the Prime Minister's staff of not being astute. This implied that Brian the Wonderful, who appointed his staff to start with, had not been astute himself. I do not know, but we can speculate, and I would suggest to all Conservative Cabinet Ministers not to speculate out loud, as to whether the staff of the Prime Minister's Office is astute.

The question now facing Canadians is which Tory is less astute, the one with the staff which is not astute, the one who appointed them, or the Cabinet Minister who was not astute enough to keep his mouth shut in the first place. Tune in at the same time next week, Mr. Speaker, for more in the continuing astuteness of the Minister of Justice. This has been a Crosbie production.

BANKS AND BANKING

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK—MINISTER'S MEETING WITH BANK OFFICIAL

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. On August 9, the same day that the Minister wrote to a shareholder expressing confidence in the long-term viability of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Minister of Finance was meeting in Toronto with the Chief Executive Officer of that bank who told him that the bank's capital would be depleted by year end. Did the Minister of Finance inform the Minister of State of this meeting before her letter was sent?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have said, time after time, in response to questions about this poor preferred shareholder and his letter of August 9, that all the facts will come forth in the inquiry, and I am looking forward to the Hon. Member getting those facts.

Miss Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, truth and accuracy in this House do matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said one thing in a letter, and apparently something else happened at the same time. The Minister of State, who opposed the bail-out, has been defending it. When will the Minister of Finance take up his responsibilities and tell us what happened at that meeting?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Which meeting is the Hon. Member referring to?

Miss Nicholson: The meeting on August 9 with the Inspector General of Banks and the Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Commercial Bank who stated that, in view of the loan losses, the bank's capital would be depleted at year end.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was on holiday on August 9.

Mr. Nunziata: You, too?

Mr. Foster: You mean you were out to lunch.

FISHERIES

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS—REPORTED FORECLOSURES BY BANKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister in his current capacity as the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Fishermen on both coasts supposedly had fisheries improvement loans guaranteed by the federal Government under federal legislation. If the Minister is on top of the situation he will know that fishermen on both coasts are now being foreclosed upon by major chartered banks on the grounds, according to the banks, that the loans are not guaranteed and that the fund did not cover specific loans, loan by loan. Gear is being seized and equipment is being taken from the fishermen. What is the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans going to do about this?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I heard the same rumours that the right hon. gentleman heard this morning and I have caused immediate inquiries to be made in the Department. Until I know whether there is a problem, there is not much that I can do about answering his specific question. If there is a problem, I will certainly do something about it.

PASSAGE OF AMENDING LEGISLATION IN JUNE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): They are not rumours, Mr. Speaker. We have copies of letters from hundreds of fishermen on both coasts and copies of letters from the banks. At the same time as the Fisheries Improvement Loan Act was before Parliament for revision in June the Government had apparently secretly informed the banks that the funds had expired and that loans would no longer be guaranteed. At the same time the fishermen of the country, on both the British Columbia and Atlantic coasts, were under the impression that the loans would continue to be guaranteed. Would the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans clarify what the situation was in June? Was Parliament misled when that legislation was before the House?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I told the right hon. gentleman that I had caused immediate inquiries to be made. I have the initial results of those inquiries now. He will be pleased to know that the advice I have received from officials is that the Government is not taking any collection action. The Government has reached the limit to which it guarantees loans for the period 1977-80. I am informed that this limit is set by a formula. Once the limit is reached and the cost guarantee ceases to be in effect, it is up to the banks to take what action they see fit.

FUND REPLENISHMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The point is that the banks are foreclosing on the fishermen and the banks were telling the fishermen that those loans were guaranteed at the time when the fund had already been exhausted. The Government was telling the banks but not the fishermen.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister introduce a Bill immediately to replenish the fund, as should have been done in June when the legislation was before the House and when loans were still being granted to fishermen under the guise of their being guaranteed?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has reached certain conclusions which may or may not prove to be the fact. If they are the fact, then we will consider his very worth-while suggestion.

HEALTH

REPORT ON PRIVATIZATION OF HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday Canadians learned the details of the report commissioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the privatization of Canada's health care system. Will the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House whether or not the Government agrees with the findings of this study, namely, that the Canadian health care system is sound and that privatization would pose a threat to the system?

If the Government does not agree with that, does that explain why it refused to release the report and only did so when forced to do so under the provisions of the Access to Information Act?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Members knows, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here. It is a matter falling within his jurisdiction. I will take notice of the question and see to it that the Minister of Health contacts the Hon. Member.

TASK FORCE CHAIRMAN

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister knows, he has commissioned a study into the whole health care system. Will he tell us how any findings as a result of this task force could be believed when it is being chaired by a Mr. Garry Chatfield, who is the president of Hospital Management and Development Ltd., a component of the Extendicare Corporation, who obviously has a vested interest in this plan?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, these study teams have been working over the past year on a whole range of programs, over a thousand of them government-wide. Other members of this particular private sector and public sector study team include Mr. Dennis Kealey of Health Services Directorate of Health and Welfare Canada; Dr. Bryce Taylor of Sports Administration Certificate Program from York University; the Assistant Deputy Minister of the Policy Development Division of the Department of Hospitals and Medical Care in Edmonton, Alberta; Mr. Hearn, the Deputy Minister of Health of Newfoundland, and I could go on. There is a good public sector/private sector mix there, a mode that we have been following throughout the program review process.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when an individual from Extendicare is in a high position such as this, there is a definite conflict of interest. I want to say to the Deputy Prime Minister that over the last several years there have been numerous studies into Canada's health care system and each one has indicated that the health care system is fine. How many reports does the Government need before it finally finds one that supports its medieval view that the health care system should be privatized?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will reflect on his own words for a moment, he will know that he is very unfair in levelling that accusation. This particular study team is involved in a study of government programs applying to health, education, and sports.

There have been other study teams that have also looked at programs having a relevancy not only to health but to every government Department. That is a management exercise. None of the recommendations that come back from that study team is government policy. They are the flow of opinions from a mixed private sector/public sector study team who are looking into the whole, broad range of programs in Government.

FISHERIES

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS—GOVERNMENT GUARANTEES

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this question of the fishery improvement loans is not a new question to the Government of Canada. In July the then Minister of Fisheries wrote to a fishermen. He named the bank and said:

"The Bank . . . as a result of its heavy losses, has reached its full entitlement for reimbursement by the federal Government on fisheries improvement loans for the period in which your loan was registered and, therefore, we can no longer be responsible for your debt."

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it the policy of the Government to back in and give guarantees to people with lots of money in the bank, but to back away from a written guarantee given to a primary producer?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman may not yet have noticed, but that kind of process was changed on September 4 last year.

APPOINTMENT OF NEW MINISTER

Mr. George Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in a letter from a fisherman to me, the fisherman wrote:

The bank manager advises me they too were unaware of any such limitation—

By the Government of Canada. He continued:

Maybe if you could contact the Minister of Fisheries as soon as possible something could be done right away.

I am contacting not the Minister of Fisheries but the Acting Minister of Fisheries. In his position as Deputy Prime Minister, when will we see a Minister of Fisheries so that I can respond to my constituents?

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Deputy Prime Minister and Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Minister of Fisheries I have had no difficulty in dealing with problems that have been forwarded to me by Members of this House, and others. I am rather surprised that the Hon. Member has not performed his responsibilities and forwarded that particular problem to me. I now have notice of it and I will deal with it.

With respect to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, he knows, or should know, that that has to do with a Prime Ministerial prerogative. When announcements are to be made, they will be made known in due course.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—CONGRESSIONAL PROTECTIONIST MEASURES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Before the United States concluded a free trade agreement with Israel, it required that all unfair trade practice laws between the two countries would remain in effect.

Since the Gibbons Bill obviously aimed at the Canadian lumber export industry has now passed the subcommittee stage in the U.S. House, why is the American Government stalling with the required 60 days' notice to Congress before trade negotiations can begin, while protectionist measures snowball against Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no stalling by the United States administration. A very clear commitment on the part of the United States administration was given by the President to the Prime Minister at Québec that if there is a major assault upon Canadian interests, as would be the case with the lumber question, there will be a veto.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that if there is a two-thirds majority the presidential veto can be overridden.

Why is our Government refusing to lay out firm preconditions for trade negotiations while the United States proceeds with actions that will cripple our exports before negotiations even begin?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know, if he wants to be true to the truth, that the passage of the Gibbons Bill yesterday was by a much smaller majority than had been expected, and is not veto proof, to respond to the question raised by the Hon. Member.

The question on lumber imports was raised personally last night by the Prime Minister with President Reagan. I will be discussing the question again with Secretary Schultz on Monday when we meet in Calgary. We intend to take every action that is open to us to protect the Canadian lumber industry. One of the reasons we want to take a look at the possibility of a trading arrangement with the United States is precisely to protect the security and the jobs of those 60,000 Canadians in the lumber industry whose jobs are threatened now because the present system does not work well enough.

NATIONAL REVENUE

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—COLLECTION OF BACK TAXES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber-Port au Port-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the fishery industry is in big trouble because we have a Minister who is Acting Minister of everything and master of nothing.

• (1130)

The Government recognized the disastrous condition of the Newfoundland fishery a few weeks ago by participating in a $105 million bail-out of the biggest company in that business in Newfoundland, Fishery Products International. This morning the Minister of National Revenue introduced a brand new, completely different approach to fishermen.

I ask the Minister of National Revenue, rather than the Master of Nothing, why is it that the Government of Canada instituted a policy today to lift the ceiling on the collection of back taxes from fishermen through the garnishee of wages, above the reasonable, human, and sensitive 25 per cent established by the previous administration? How can it do that at a time when the Government has to put 105 million bucks into saving that company?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that my hon. friend opposite gives me an opportunity to dispel a very erroneous impression which apparently has been created in the media and in other sources. He knows, as do all other Newfoundland MPs who were extensively consulted, as were the union and other interested persons in his province, that this action, this administrative change by the Department of National Revenue, was designed to promote equity and the ability to pay rather than emphasize the concept of garnishee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Supplementary question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to know that the two individuals who consulted Newfoundland MPs did not really consult us; they came and told us, and we told them that they were crazy. One is retiring from the Newfoundland Civil Service this month, and the other is retiring from the federal Public Service in a few weeks. They have sense enough to run from a disastrous, insensitive, stupid policy—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I ask the Hon. Member to ask his question, please?

Mr. Tobin: In light of the disaster which we have had this year, in light of the fact that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has no help for fishermen this year, in light of the fact that that company requires $105 million, where—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Tobin: They are only the fishermen of Newfoundland!

ABILITY TO PAY TAXES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Revenue. How can he claim that they have the ability to pay when he will be taking over 25 per cent of the income of some of those fishing families? How can they possibly have the ability to pay?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that my friend opposite would have known better than to ask such a fallacious question. He indicated that we would take more than 25 per cent of the income of fishermen. That is not necessarily true, at all. The fishermen of Newfoundland were put in a certain category by the former Liberal Minister of Revenue. I am sure he did it with all best intentions. All Members from that province were consulted, as were other people.

Mr. Tobin: But we did not agree.

Mr. MacKay: I assure the House and my hon. friend opposite that I will personally, as will my Department, exercise great sensitivity to the problems of Newfoundland fishermen who are, as are other fishermen—

Mr. Tobin: You are out of the fat and into the fire, Elmer.

Mr. MacKay: —caught in an unfortunate position because of the cyclical nature of their profession.

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF FISHERMEN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Revenue is not known for treating Canadians with compassion. How can fishermen feel confident when the ceiling which protected them has been removed? Right now they have no protection. How can the Minister expect those fishermen to feel very confident with that kind of response?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member has forgotten that it was our Government which brought in the Taxpayers' Bill of Rights and brought in a whole new approach to treating taxpayers with equity and consulting with them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Again I repeat for the Hon. Member and the House that there will be no insensitive or Draconian action taken. The fishermen of Newfoundland will be put on the same basis as all other fishermen. Their ability to pay and their personal circumstances will be carefully examined. If there are any instances of unfairness or Draconian measures, I invite the Hon. Member and other Members to let me know, because we will not put up with it.

MARITIME FARMERS COUNCIL—FEED COST EQUALIZATION PROPOSAL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the feed cost equalization program requested by the Maritime Farmers Council. As the Minister knows, it is an important agricultural and regional development initiative. The request was made of the Minister over a year ago. Would he indicate to the House why farmers in the maritime provinces have to wait so long before any action is taken on a resquest which will affect the lives of farmers and producers in the maritime region? Why this inordinate delay?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the Hon. Member's question and his interest in the subject. I have received numerous representations from Atlantic Canada agri-food organizations. I can only assure him that I fully understand and appreciate the difficulty in which they find themselves. I want to assure him that the program and the suggestions they have made are actively under consideration.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT DECISION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I say with sincerity to the Minister that that was not an answer. Farmers in the maritime provinces have been waiting since February of this year for an answer. Last March the Minister promised that he would get back to them soon, and in the subsequent months he has not provided an answer. Would he pleased tell the House and farmers in the maritime provinces when they can expect an affirmative answer to a very important regional development issue in those provinces? Why this delay?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. member would take the time to check the record he would see that the agricultural industry, not only in Atlantic Canada but across the country, was totally and completely ignored by the previous Government.

Mr. Dingwall: Don't mislead the House.

Mr. Wise: I want the Hon. Member to take the time to check the record.

Mr. Dingwall: It was your own Members.

Mr. Wise: The record will show that we have not ignored the agricultural industry anywhere in Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ADMISSION OF CANADIAN REPAIR TECHNICIANS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The United States has closed its borders to personnel of Canadian companies who install or service products sold by Canadian companies in the U.S. after August 29, 1985. This problem is of great concern to high-technology companies in my riding, and to all manufacturers. Can the Minister tell the House what progress the Government is making in having this impediment removed?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the United States Department of Justice is appealing the decision of a California District Court which dealt with the matter only in so far as applications before August 28 were concerned. I understand that that appeal will be heard sometime within the next several days.

In addition to those U.S. court processes, our Ambassador in Washington has raised the matter on several occasions with a range of Ministers in the Government of the United States. It is my intention to raise the matter with Secretary Shultz when I meet with him in Calgary on Monday.

PRAIRIE FARMERS' DROUGHT LOSSES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He has been the Minister of Agriculture and his Government has been in power now for more than a year, yet farmers in the southern Prairies have been awaiting an answer to their problems with drought and grasshoppers since August, when the Hon. Member for Assiniboia was put in charge of recommendations to the Prime Minister in order to speed up the process.

Since the Minister of Agriculture said that the delays in taking action were somehow related to the wet weather which followed the drought, could he tell us how that improves the financial prospects of farmers in the drought zone? Or was he intimating that the Hon. Member for Assiniboia had been given extra instructions to come up with a payment program for farmers who suffered losses due to extremely bad weather?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain whether I fully understand what information the Hon. Member is seeking. As one who understands some of the problems associated with the agricultural industry, he might have more appreciation for the difficulties we have encountered, for the very reasons which we mentioned. However, I can assure him that we are much closer to a final decision in respect of Phase II. At the same time as reaching a decision on that phase, we are attempting to build into that aspect of the program more long-term, permanent measures to cope with recurring disastrous situations.

ROLE OF PROVINCES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, has the fact that the provinces have not declared the area a disaster area in any way inhibited the Government from taking action? Or are the allegations circulating out in the country simply allegations and in fact have nothing to do with the slow reaction time of the Government? Does the Minister need the provinces to declare it a disaster area before he can act?

• (1140)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member added that last comment because it makes it much simpler for me to answer. The answer would be no.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION—UNITED STATES CLEAN-UP PLAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It has to do with the clean-up plan for the Niagara River presented by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to him. It is a plan that could affect the health of Canadians for generations to come. The Minister makes confusing and conflicting statements inside and outside the House of Commons. Municipalities are becoming nervous and so are non-government groups.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Question, question.

Mr. Caccia: The public wants to know how toxic pollutants will be disposed of, when the clean-up will start, and what kind of funds have been allocated by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. Will the Minister answer these questions today in the House?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who posed the question has been making a big point inside and outside the House to the effect that I refuse to release what is a U.S. document which was given to me, in confidence, for my contribution before it is finalized and released by the U.S. Government. It is not my document to release. Having said that, I can reassure him and, through him, the people on whose behalf he purports to be asking the question, that my officials will be linking arms with those of the Governments of Ontario, New York State and the U.S. at a meeting on November 8 to discuss the working document with a view to finalizing it for an early release to the public. The document will be released by the U.S. Government, not by the Canadian Government, because it is not our document.

TOXIC CHEMICAL DUMP SITES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): It may not be our document but it affects the health of 4.5 million Canadians and the Minister had better learn to give some immediacy to this important matter. I cannot believe that he would take such a detached, cool, and indifferent attitude. He has to give leadership and to tell this House, for instance, whether on November 8—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order, order.

Mr. Caccia: You shut up over there.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Shameful. Look at Turner smiling.

An Hon. Member: Go ahead. Go ahead.

Mr. Caccia: —he would defend the long-term interests of Canadians in health and water by demanding the incineration of toxic chemicals in the dump sites along the Niagara River. Will he do that?

An Hon. Member: Yes or no?

Mr. Crosbie: Time you woke up, Caccia. Where were you all these years?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, no one on this side of the House needs to take a back seat to the Hon. Member in the moral outrage that we feel toward those who pollute our rivers from which Canadians derive their drinking water. He accuses me of bringing coolness to the debate. I suggest to him that he might be well advised to bring an element of coolness to the debate himself because, if he did so, he would recognize that this Government has done more in 12 months of being in office—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: —than the previous Government did in 12 years.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You never answered the question.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

MORATORIUM ON FORECLOSURES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Rock bottom crop prices and high interest rates were going to force the Farm Credit Corporation to close down 670 farms this fall, so the Minister moved to put a moratorium on FCC foreclosures. But my question to the Minister is this: what will this moratorium lead to, how long will it last, and will he extend it to non-FCC loans as well?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the recognition and, I gather, the support for my decision in the early part of September to place a moratorium on FCC foreclosures. I indicated at the time that it would be in place indefinitely and I also indicated that at the same time we instructed a study of the role and mandate of the Farm Credit Corporation. This is the first time that such a study has been done for the last 25 years. I now have those recommendations, they are being evaluated, and I would expect in the not too distant future we will be making some decisions with respect to appropriate further measures that might well be taken to help alleviate this very, very difficult situation in which many Canadian farmers find themselves.

REVIEW BOARDS INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous urgency about this problem. I have thousands of signatures here that demonstrate the concern. There are perhaps 50,000 farmers who, according to FCC figures, are facing severe financial distress.

Will the Minister act now on the results of the Grey-Bruce study and establish a system of judicial review boards with power to hear cases and implement settlements to help these 50,000 farmers? Otherwise they will be chased off the land and we will lose the agricultural production that is so crucial to the future of the country.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is no question about the fact, and I have said it in this House and across the country and to the many agri-food organizations that I meet day in and day out, that it certainly is a recognition of this Government that the financial situation in the primary sector of the agricultural industry is indeed a very difficult one, perhaps one of the toughest we have been through in the last 50 years.

I do think the Hon. Member's figure of some 50,000 farmers who are facing immediate foreclosure or bankruptcy is somewhat exaggerated. As I indicated to him, we still have in place across the country the Farm Credit review boards. They are acting in a voluntary capacity and they are doing an excellent job. One of the recommendations that I am looking at is something in the nature of what the Hon. Member is suggesting.

SHIPBUILDING

PRODUCTION OF EQUIPMENT FOR FRIGATES—JOB CREATION IN MONTREAL

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

In this morning's Le Devoir, we read the following headline: "Paramax Inc. ahead of schedule in production of equipment for Canadian frigates". The company will employ 500 hi-tech workers. The impact on the employment rate is expected to be very positive in the Montreal area.

Could the Minister inform the House whether his department intends to take steps to accelerate the process of getting these jobs for the people of Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Good morning.

Mr. Nunziata: Sorry we woke you up.

Mr. Stevens: Good morning. Mr. Speaker, those are the kinds of positive questions that the Canadian public wants to hear more of.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: In the meantime could someone tell him what he was asked?

Mr. Stevens: I think that the fact that Paramax are opening up this new research facility in Montreal and giving work to 500 people in that area is something that should be commended. The fact that they are using $11 million of their own money with respect to this development, I think speaks that much more in favour of the project. In short, instead of the doom and gloom that pour out of that other side, this is Canada in action. Jobs for Canadians!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Quebec dairy producers are very concerned, because they are still waiting for the long-term dairy policy they have been promised any number of times. In fact, a decision was to be announced on August 1. It is now October 25, and your Department has yet to announce its dairy policy.

Could the Minister inform the House what the reasons are behind the delay in announcing the Government's intentions in this respect.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the Hon. Member's question and also his observation with reference to a delay. I want to assure him that there certainly has not been a delay, there is no question about that. No commitment was made to make any announcement on the long-term dairy policy—

Mr. Nunziata: Yes, there was. You promised a committee.

Mr. Wise: —on August 1. They are confused; they don't understand it. What was required and what we did on August 1 was announce a price increase. There was no commitment to announce a long-term dairy policy then, or on September 1, September 15, or November 1.

• (1150)

The Hon. Member should know that I appointed two very capable individuals to carry out a study and to consult with everyone in the industry. I will be receiving the report of the two individuals, Mr. Everett Biggs and Mr. Benoît Lavigne, since they have consulted widely across the country with all sectors of the industry.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wise: I will be receiving that report—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wise: I will be receiving that report in perhaps about two weeks' time. I am sure Hon. Members will recognize that I will need another two or three weeks to study the ramifications of the report—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We thank the Minister for his answer.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. Could the Minister make a firm commitment before the House that the dairy policy will be a long-term one and that it will not include any cutbacks whatsoever, as you promised time and time again during the last election campaign?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the dairy farmers of Canada have been asking for a long-term dairy policy for the past eight years. The previous Government refused to give it to them. However, we will be—

Mr. Foster: What are you going to give them?

Mr. Wise: I cannot give any deadline. I am always reluctant to do that. I want to go through the proper course of action. I want to take the time to consult with all people in the industry. It is obvious that we are nearing completion of that process. In good faith, I would expect that I would be in a position—I hope I will be in a position—prior to the end of the year to announce what the long-term dairy policy will be.

PETRO-CANADA

AUDITING CONTRACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Last week I raised with her colleague, the Minister of Finance, the question of why the PetroCan contract for auditing its books had been suddenly switched by an Order in Council to a Chicago-run company called Arthur Andersen & Co., which is the largest auditing firm in the world. I have a list in my hand of the names of 20 partners of the Arthur Andersen firm who have given at least $1,000 each to the Conservative Party in the last year.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nystrom: Will the Minister tell the house whether or not the real reason for switching this contract to a Chicago run company is because at least 20 partners of that company threw at least $1,000 each into the Conservative Party? Is this the real reason why they got the contract?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in that case can the Mihnister tell the House and explain to the House why, to the best of my knowledge, none of the other eight big auditing companies in the country were asked for a formal proposition or a formal bid on that particular contract? Why was there not any tender? Is not the real reason that these people threw money into the Conservative Party?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that we reject out of hand his sleazy suggestion that political contributions were a factor in this matter. As the Hon. Member well knows, firms of chartered accountants give money to all sorts of Parties, just as his Party receives contributions from labour interests.

Mr. Deans: We don't give them contracts.

Miss Carney: I can add, as the Hon. Member should know, Section 141(i) of the amended Financial Administration Act sets out that the Governor in Council and the appropriate Minister, after consulting with the board of directors of a Crown corporation, make the recommendation. Petro-Canada's board of directors reviewed a number of firms, including the firm of Arthur Andersen which has offices in a number of Canadian cities such as Toronto, Ottawa, and Calgary, and recommended Arthur Andersen & Co. The incumbent, Peat Marwick Mitchell & Co., have had that account for 10 years.

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PERMIT VICKERS TO BID UNDER MULTISHIP-SIX PROGRAM

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Supply and Services.

When the Vickers workers left Parliament Hill yesterday they were disappointed because the Minister had not given them any assurance that the Government would intervene to prevent lay-offs.

The Montreal shipyards do not even have the option of tendering under the Multiship-six program because department officials claim that Montreal icing conditions prevent Vickers from undertaking repair work in wintertime.

I want to ask the Minister whether he would be prepared to reverse the decision of his officials and allow Vickers to submit tenders under the Multiship-six program, keeping in mind the fact that Vickers has been doing year-round repair work for the past ten years.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I was at the meeting referred to by the Hon. Member. I received the very distinct impression that the workers, after being apprised of all the elements, were very satisfied on my undertaking to do everything we could to accommodate their situation. Specifically, with respect to the question, there has been no change in policy precluding the Montreal shipyards from bidding on the multiple ship contracts. The only prohibition is that if the work is to be done during the winter, and if the Seaway is frozen, then the ships will not be able to get there. If the work is to be done in the summer, then they have the option to bid on that work.

REQUEST FOR PROMPT DECISIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is having second thoughts, and well he might, can he assure us that the Government will step in before workers are laid off, which means in the immediate future? Lay-off notices will be issued as early as at the end of the year and, unless something is done before next March, none of the 500 shipyards workers will have a job.

Will the decisions be made in time? That is what I want to ask the Minister.

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the Government is reviewing all potential alternatives to accommodate the situation which is a matter of concern to us and everyone in the east end of Montreal. I gave an undertaking that I would keep the workers apprised. We are meeting with the Chairman of Vickers within the next two weeks. I undertook to report back to the workers, and I will do that.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

IMPORTANCE OF SAVING JOBS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Mr. Speaker, the committees to safeguard jobs in Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu and Valleyfield submitted a petition with 40,000 signatures to the Minister yesterday, but were not informed by the Minister when he intends to announce measures to protect the textile industry and the jobs affected in these two towns.

Has the Minister received the final report of the Textile and Clothing Commission on the subject, and when does the Government intend to announce its new policy to save jobs in Canada's textile industry?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the Hon. Member asked a similar question yesterday when I informed him that I was to meet yesterday afternoon with representatives from the group, including union leaders, management personnel, and mayors of towns. I did meet with them. I think that we had a meaningful discussion at which time they gave us their viewpoints. I think they understand the difficulty. This is the decision of a private company. I did meet with Tom Bell of Dominion Textile. We have discussed the over-all health of the industry. I want to assure the Hon. Member and the House that the Government certainly intends to come out with a policy which will ensure that there will be a viable textile and clothing industry in Canada.

INQUIRY WHEN NEW POLICY WILL BE ANNOUNCED

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister aware of the fact that 800 employees, whose jobs are at stake and who are affected by the shutdowns announced by Domtex in Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu and Valleyfield, that these employees feel as though they were being held hostage by the company, which may be intending to leave Canada, and are there going to be any changes in our textile policy? How much longer is the Government going to penalize these employees, whose jobs are at stake, and when exactly are you going to announce your new policy for the textile industry?

[English]

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member says that we were aware, of course we were aware. We were aware long before he started to show an interest in this question. He is simply playing catch-up and trying to make a few political points on something which, frankly, is a serious situation. We are working with industry and union leaders to ensure that there is a proper solution which will overcome some of the unemployment which is developing in the industry.

APARTHEID

COMMONWEALTH COMMUNIQUÉ

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to welcome the Minister back from the Commonwealth Heads of Government Conference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Does the Minister feel that the compromise communiqué issued concerning sanctions against South Africa is a strong enough signal from the Commonwealth to break down immediately apartheid in South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member who has taken a consistent interest in this question. I think that the consensus achieved at Nassau at the Commonwealth Conference was particularly remarkable, given the divisions which existed prior to the convening of that meeting. I think it maintained the steady pressure against apartheid which Canada wants to see maintained. I should say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe all Canadians can take pride in the pivotal and essential role which was played in achieving that consensus by the Prime Minister of Canada.

SITUATION IN POTATO INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that the potato farmers in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are facing the worst year in their history due to the service charge and inspection fees which were imposed by the Government, and due as well to prices which are running at half of the production costs.

Is the Minister willing to make a commitment today to institute a potato purchase program under the Agricultural Products Act to assist these producers? And is he willing to withdraw the inspection fees which he has imposed this year for the first time in history?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the observations of the Hon. Member with respect to the increased inspection fees are somewhat exaggerated because the Hon. Member will know that I personally negotiated with just about all of the commodity groups and we reached mutually satisfactory increase levels. Of course, these increases will be phased in gradually, as they should be.

I know the Hon. Member does not exaggerate the very tight situation he describes in the potato industry, not only in the Atlantic area but elsewhere across the country, and we do have existing programs, the stabilization program, which I can consider. We also have the purchase program under the Agricultural Products Board. I am quite prepared to consider both of those options, but, of course, with a word of caution that we have extremely limited financial resources.

INCORRECT DESIGNATION OF MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have a notice of a point of order from the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, in my question today I referred to a meeting on August 9. The details of the meeting are in a document filed before the Estey Commission. From the context, I had assumed it was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It now appears that it must have been another Minister. OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICY AND PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO SECOND REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CONCORDANCE OF THE TWO VERSIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order, further to the tabling yesterday by the Deputy Prime Minister of the Government Response to the Second Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages Policy and Programs.

I wish to inform the House and the Chair that after carefully reading the French and English versions, I would like to point out to the Chair that the Response does not read the same in French as it does in English.

I simply want to bring to the Government's attention that the French text contains a reference to a federal-provincial conference that we do not find in the English text. Various programs are mentioned, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know whether it is a poor translation or whether someone edited the document, but I would like to ask the Secretary of State or someone else to read both the English and French versions very carefully so that we will know which is the official and which the unofficial version.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Secretary of State, on the same point of order.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that we will check the contents and make sure both texts are in agreement.

PETITIONS

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES AND CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a few petitions this morning.

A group of constituents from the ridings of Edmonton-Strathcona and Edmonton North have asked me to present a petition on their behalf, stating that in its latest Budget, the Government decided to reduce indexation of family allowances and the child tax credit, that this measure provides assistance that is indispensable to families with children, and that therefore the federal Government should change its decision.

I also have a similar petition from the riding of Etobicoke-Lakeshore, in Ontario.

I have one from the electoral riding of Langelier in Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

Still in the same vein, another one from the riding of Bellechasse, also in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from the Quebec riding of Montreal-Sainte-Marie.

This one comes from the riding of Rosemont, Mr. Speaker, and the electors of that region are also asking for the same thing in their petition.

Mr. Speaker, I have this petition from the federal electoral riding of Shefford.

And then this one from the electoral riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot whereby the petitioners are asking for the same thing, Mr. Speaker, a reversal of the Government's decision concerning family allowances.

There is one from the federal riding of Rimouski in Quebec.

One from the riding of Westmorland-Kent, which is very ably represented in the House, as you would know, Mr. Speaker.

One from Quebec's federal riding of Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot. I wonder whether there is a Member to represent that riding. There must be one.

One from the electoral riding of Gatineau, Mr. Speaker. Again the petitioners of that riding express a similar wish.

And this one from the federal riding of Rosemont.

A petition from the riding of Hochelaga-Maisonneuve in Quebec.

I also have a petition from the riding of Quebec East.

Mr. Speaker, this one comes from the riding of Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic in Quebec.

On their behalf, all those people from various ridings have asked me to present these petitions concerning family allowances.

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I too have a number of petitions from the Province of Quebec, namely, the ridings of Drummond, Shefford, Saint-Michel-Ahuntsic, Montréal-Sainte-Marie, Rosemont, Joliette, Rimouski and Richelieu. These petitions and the petitioners who signed them are urging and praying that the Government, and particularly the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), will maintain the promise made during the last federal election campaign, namely, the sacred trust which would protect the full indexation of family allowances because it is a regressive measure which takes away some $55 million from the families who can least afford it.

WATER SUPPLY SYSTEM IN NEWFOUNDLAND COMMUNITIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many residents of the communities of Grand Falls, Windsor and Bishop's Falls in central Newfoundland. These communities have a very serious health problem with their water supply system. They are calling upon Parliament to encourage the Government of Canada to come up with a solution to this very serious health problem in the water supply system as soon as possible.

FULL INDEXATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from the part of southern Ontario in which I grew up, around Welland and Dunnville, Ontario. It is from senior citizens who are joining with others across this country to ask that the Government reinstate full indexation of the universal family allowance, as it did with pensions, and rescind unfair tax increases which are hurting families.

• (1210)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition from a group of Quebec City women with whom I met earlier this week. These women decry the injustice of ever dimishing family allowances through deindexation, and they ask for the restoration of full indexation and the repeal of unfair tax increases.

Mr. Speaker, I also have two petitions from my constituents of Ottawa Centre—

[English]

They are asking, since children are everyone's responsibility, that all parents receive Government assistance. They also strongly oppose the budget proposals to reduce the cost of living protection for family allowances and demand that this proposal be withdrawn as soon as possible.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of constituents of mine, along with other residents of Winnipeg, who call upon the Government to withdraw the deindexation of family allowances. They point out that this will not only cost the poorest Canadian families, but also middle-income Canadians.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition signed by a large number of residents of the beautifyl City of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. They call upon the Government and the House of Commons to reinstate full indexation of universal family allowances and rescind unfair tax increases.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and pleasure to present a petition signed by many residents of the City of Toronto who complain that the Government has broken its promise by reducing the family allowance through deindexation, and they request this Parliament to ensure that the Government will restore full indexation of the family allowance and also cancel its plans for other taxes that hurt low-income people.

PARITY PRICES FOR AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition signed by more than 1,000 people. They stress, first, the urgency of the farm crisis, the great financial squeeze affecting many farmers, and they argue for hearings across this country on the principle of parity pricing through the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

This is signed by people from right across Essex county, as well as from the following towns and communities across Ontario: Simcoe, Lucknow, Wingham, Mount Hope, Durham, Goderich, Kincardine, Chatham, Brantford, Forest, New Liskeard, Thedford, Cayuga, Chesley, Port Elgin, Arkona, Blenheim, parts of Middlesex County, Ailsa Craig, Petrolia, Wiarton and Owen Sound. They all stress the urgency of this crisis which requires a response.

EFFECTS OF U.S. LEGISLATION ON FOREST INDUSTRY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition signed by a large proportion of the residents of Hudson and Sioux Lookout, Ontario, in my riding. These communities are heavily dependent upon the forest industry. They call upon the Government to get going and take some action to dissuade the United States Congress from passing into law the Gibbon's natural resources subsidy Bill which would indeed cost thousands of jobs in Canada's great forest industry.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. F. Oberle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 421.

[Text]

INCREASE OF ADMISSION FEES

Question No. 421—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Did the government increase admission fees to national parks by 300 per cent and, if so (a) what tourist groups or associations were consulted before the decision was announced (b) by what amount?

2. How many persons visited national parks in New Brunswick in (i) 1983 (ii) 1984?

3. Will the government change its decision to the increased fees and, if not, for what reason?

Supply

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. No. The annual admission fee for national parks has not been increased. However, in most national parks the other types of admission fees such as daily and chartered bus have been increased by 200 per cent. (a) N/A; (b) N/A.

2. (i) 1,214,687; (ii) 1,220,958.

3. A complete review of all national parks fees across Canada to assess their impact and suitability given the particular circumstances of each park is presently underway.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have had a series of questions on the Order Paper, some dating back as far as last March, concerning the cost of that singing duet in Quebec City referred to as the Shamrock Summit. Is the Government so terribly ashamed of that fiasco that it does not wish to answer these questions? If that is not the case, will the Parliamentary Secretary undertake to answer those questions at the next sitting day of the House of Commons?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Parliamentary Secretary normally responsible for answering these questions is especially sensitive to those profound questions the Hon. Member places on the Order Paper. I am prepared to read out the record of the Government in this area, but I am reluctant to do so because today is an Opposition Day and I understand that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has an urgent farm speech to make. I would not wish to take up the time of the House to report that in this Thirty-second Parliament—I can go on if you wish, but I can tell the Hon. Member that his intervention will be brought to the attention of the responsible Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 63—PLIGHT OF AGRICULTURAL COMMUNITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House regrets that the Government has refused to recognize the serious crisis facing the farm family in Canada and condemns the Government for its inadequate response to the problems of Canadian farmers, including a severe cost-price squeeze and debt burden, fierce predatory international competition and natural disasters, which have combined to place Canada's agricultural community in jeopardy.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we are bringing this motion to the attention of the House and the people of Canada because we are concerned with the crisis affecting Canadian agriculture and the family farm. This crisis has been rendered even more serious over the past few months because of natural disasters, particularly in western Canada. We want to draw this to the attention of the Government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), as well as the Canadian people, in order to heighten the consciousness of the average Canadian concerning the precariousness of the position of the average Canadian farm family today. We want to show what this situation means for the country as a whole if we do not do something about it in the short term, immediately, as well as over the long term.

Over the summer and autumn I had the opportunity of travelling to many rural constituencies in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and particularly in Ontario and Nova Scotia. Three or four weeks ago I was in southern Saskatchewan speaking to the people who lived in that area of the province where the drought has been most severe. On the morning of September 23, I met with the mayors, reeves and councillors of all municipal organizations within 50 or 60 miles of the Town of Assiniboia. I was later in Laflèche, Gravelbourg and, of course, later that evening in Moose Jaw. The next morning in Regina I presented on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, a 10-point program which we forwarded to the Minister, as well as bringing it to the attention of the Canadian people, concerning what needed to be done to meet a very grave problem. Because of this growing crisis I have also asked the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), this Party's agricultural critic, to head a task force made up of three other Liberal Members who will call upon the expertise across western Canada this autumn, and then move into Atlantic Canada, Ontario and Quebec early in the spring, to meet with farm families, producer groups and provincial organizations in order to get firsthand the feeling of these people who live on and derive their livelihood from the land, regarding the response they want from this Parliament and demand from the Minister of Agriculture.

I can say quite frankly to the Minister that the farmers are not impressed with what the federal Government is doing; nor are they very happy with what their provincial Governments are doing. I am now talking particularly about western Canada. The mayors, reeves and councillors whom I met in Assiniboia were disillusioned and disgusted with the response they were receiving from their provincial and federal counterparts. They are concerned that attention is not being paid to their problems by the people of Canada of Canada through their Government.

I know it is true that the Conservative Government fulfilled a few of the pledges it made to the Canadian farmer during the election. The most important commitment that it fulfilled, the capital gains tax exemption, affects the transmission of farm land from one owner to another. That may be helpful to farmers who want to get out of farming, but it is certainly not helpful to farmers who want to stay in farming and live on the land, and it is certainly not helpful to the young men and women who have no forbears who had lived on the land and who want to make farming their career.

Western farmers, particularly in the southern parts of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, have now faced a second consecutive year of drought. More than that, the farms have been ravaged by grasshoppers. I would like to try to focus the attention of the country on the situation and, hopefully, to elicit a response from the Minister that will go some way to meeting the crisis. As I said in Regina, the Minister can take the credit for the 10-point program which we outlined there because it has gone beyond the political manoeuvers which are sometimes played in the House of Commons.

The problem, of course, runs deeper than drought and the vagaries of the weather. Some farmers in Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba have now suffered five or six successive crop failures, but the general crisis affects farmers from coast ot coast. It goes far beyond the so-called marginal farmer or the farmer who may be a bad manager. It touches many farmers who should be strong, viable operators but who now find themselves up against the wall, largely through no fault of their own. Some studies suggest that as many as one-third of our farmers are now in serious financial difficulty. Speaking in human and social terms, what is even more important is the fundamental unit of Canadian agriculture which has given a great deal of stability to this country since the time of the homesteader. The Canadian family farm is in deep, deep trouble.

The impact does not stop at the farm gate. The rural municipalities of western Canada are dependent upon the farm community and are in trouble as well. Their tax bases are eroding. Equipment dealers, car dealers and suppliers are in trouble. The situation is contagious, it is escalating, and it needs and immediate response from the Government.

There is also a human problem. Emotional stress is being placed on farmers. They are used to the usual problems of the weather and the vagaries of the international markets and have understood that it is a life that demands independence, integrity and self-reliance. The average farmer can take that, but he cannot take the combination of problems that is making it absolutely impossible to stay on the land. It is provoking problems with self-confidence, the family, and the ability of the farmer to persuade his children to take over the farm and carry it on as a family livelihood.

There are four factors to the problem. I mentioned the weather first. We have had a drought in southern Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba for two successive years. We have had the grasshoppers. The Government says that it has been studying the problems, but it should have taken action months ago to come to grips with it. Yesterday the Minister of State responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) invoked the provisions of the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act to give interest-free loans of up to $3,000. That is a good piece of legislation and it was proper for the Minister to invoke the provision which was designed for years like these. However, in terms of the current crisis it is an almost meaningless gesture. Producers in the North who have wet grain will suffer financially because of the reduced quality of that grain. What may have been a number one crop a month ago will end up as "utility". Producers in the south, victims of the drought, are still waiting. It was not helpful when the Canadian Government remitted its share of support for cattle producers in Saskatchewan only to have the Government of Saskatchewan pocket the money instead of giving it directly to the farmers. The farmers feel outraged by the whole performance.

In addition to the natural disasters, the farmer faces a serious cost price squeeze. Prices for his products have been going down. With the advance payment on August 1, initial grain prices were reduced. Commodity prices have not kept pace with the input costs of fertilizer and fuel. In the Prince Albert Charter presented by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) during the last election the Government promised to reduce the price of farm fuel by 20 cents per gallon. When one considers the rebates that are going to expire, the increase in the price of gasoline which occurred September 1 and the next increase which will take place January 1, one sees that instead of getting a reduction of 20 cents per gallon on the price of gasoline, the farmer will pay an increase of 23 cents per gallon. For the average Saskatchewan farmer that will mean an additional fuel bill of $700 per year. He cannot take that right now. Things are bad enough without adding that increase to his input costs.

The Prime Minister talked a lot about agriculture during the election campaign, but he has not said much about it since and he has not paid much attention to the problem.

[Translation]

Obviously the Government did not do anything to help farmers cope with soaring production costs and decreasing income. Quite the contrary! The Government made matters worse by raising taxes on farm fuel and lowering wheat prices.

And then the third problem: farmers are faced with massive indebtedness. Particularly during the years 1980, 1981 and 1982 the Government and the banks convinced them that they should expand their acreage and buy more machinery. Well they did expand their acreage and buy more machinery, but then interest rates went up and eventually the value of their land fell so that they are now in a situation such that their loan security is worth very little indeed.

The number of farm bankruptcies has skyrocketed in recent years and land values are slumping. We are running the risk of losing a whole generation of young farmers and, should that ever happen, there will be no turning back. Where are the agri-bonds promised by the Government? What about lower interest loans?

[English]

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Government has not fulfilled its commitment in terms of long-term financing vehicles for the farmer. It is true that the Minister placed a moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures. That saved a few farmers in the short term by preventing immediate foreclosures. However, interest keeps piling up on top of the principal and the equity of the farmer keeps shrinking.

The fourth problem faced by farmers is the predatory pricing and the fierce international competition for our major grains. The Minister knows that some of our former best customers are now our competitors. The Minister knows that we do not yet have a renewal of the International Grains Agreement. The Minister knows that the United States Department of Agriculture is throwing tonnes of grain on international markets in order to try to solve its own problems. This dumping of surplus grains onto international markets is affecting world grain prices.

Speaking of the United States, the Canadian farmer wonders what the Government is talking about when it says it intends to move toward a free trade agreement with the United States. The Canadian farmer wants to know what that will do to marketing boards, subsidies and the Canadian Wheat Board. We know that the Americans have never liked the Canadian Wheat Board and the way in which we have successfully centralized and orchestrated our international marketing. Farmers in western Canada know that the initial payments for grain made by the Canadian Wheat Board are considered to be subsidies and subject to countervail by the United States. Canadian farmers want to know if they are on the table in these negotiations, but the Canadian Government will not tell us. It is keeping its hand very close. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) told Canadians in Nova Scotia that we should not show our poker hand while we are negotiating. I have told the Minister for International Trade that we are all on the same side and we do not want to see the Government's hand, but we want to know what the game is, as do Canadian farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1230)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am saying to the Minister quite categorically that we do not believe that Canadian agriculture ought to be part of a free trade arrangement across the board. Not only will it not work, it will make the farmers of this country absolutely vulnerable to that type of competition.

On September 24 in Regina, I outlined a program which I believe will go a long way toward alleviating the crisis of the family farm. Some of the action to solve the crisis will cost some money, but compared to the huge human cost that is at stake, I believe it is money worth spending.

I do not believe that the average Canadian living in a large city or even a small town understands the depth and gravity of this crisis. I do not believe that the people of Toronto, Vancouver, Montreal or Halifax understand what is happening out there and if this debate can contribute to heightening the consciousness of Canadians generally about the real problem on the farm, then I think it is useful.

Unless something is done, the family farm as we know it will disappear. Despite harsh weather and a shorter growing season combined with the problem of remoteness from markets, the efficiency of our Canadian farmers and the Canadian farm family has enabled us to compete successfully with every other country in the world, including the United States.

Agriculture has become the most productive industry in this country. Our farmers are able to compete world-wide against state-owned operations in the Soviet Union and corporate farms elsewhere, and this is because the motivation, solidity, morale and cohesion of the Canadian family farm has made it the most productive element in world agriculture. That is what is at stake here.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool predicts that Saskatchewan farmers will earn less than an average of $5,000 each this year. Farm income in Saskatchewan will be down 33 per cent from last year, not even taking into account the full impact of the drought and difficulty in harvesting because of the rain and snow in northern Saskatchewan. The Minister is aware that grain inventories are at their lowest level in 30 years, prices are down and quotas are low. It is estimated that the combination of the drought, poor crops and difficulty of harvesting as a result of the rain and snow will cost western farmers about $2 billion this year. Western grain stabilization and crop insurance are good programs but not nearly enough to meet this current situation.

The Government and the Minister must face the crisis caused by the drought which has forced many farms to turn to welfare and food banks for assistance. I know that the Minister is listening carefully, but what we are dealing with here is not just an economic problem. We are dealing with a human problem and a way of life.

I urge the Govenrment to devise some short-term measures. We have proposed an acreage payment of $50 per seeded acre. It has a maximum because it is pro-rated to the amount taken off in harvest and because of the seeded aspect of the program. We have asked the Government to review its taxation of fuel and remove the excise tax from fuel for the purposes of the family farm. We believe the Government should create an agency for moratoriums and rescheduling farm debts, not with the power to write off debt but to reschedule it.

We have asked the federal Government to work with the provinces toward a joint disaster fund operation that is able to respond more quickly than it does now. We suggest that the Government review the problem of soil erosion, hydrology and irrigation. The Government should consider the possibility of immediate negotiations with the provinces to set up an agricultural relief disaster fund.

The Government should review the Income Tax Act. Currently, farmers are forced to sell off much of their herd due to what is happening, yet the definition of "herd" under the Income Tax Act is not flexible enough to allow that to be done without immediate recapture of depreciation. The Minister knows what I am talking about.

These are steps which can be taken in the short term, but in the long term the Minister must review the whole infrastructure of agriculture. If the Government does not respond soon, we will have a different kind of country because the rural communities will be different.

The Minister is now dealing with the hopes, the morale, the stability and efficiency of those in Canada who moved across the Prairies and those frontiers with the courage and resiliency of the homesteaders that have given this country a special character. That is the essence of this debate. It is not simply about "a sector of our economy". It is about a fundamental way of life. The Minister ought to recognize that. He ought to get out there personally and talk to the farmers the way I have talked to the farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He has talked to farmers far more than you have. He is always out there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have made it my business to educate myself about the problems of Canadian farmers.

An Hon. Member: You should have done that a couple of years ago.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In fact, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is part of the problem. He commissioned a study in his Department. The bureaucrats in the Department of Finance have never really understood agriculture in this country. He produced a booklet in which the Canadian farmers were ridiculed from coast to coast, saying that the Canadian farmers are the most prosperous group in our country—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is a total distortion.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is exactly what the document says. I say to the Minister of Agriculture that he should bring the Minister of Finance out there with him because he needs the education more than any other Member in the House. I am delighted that he intervened because I want to tell the Minister of Agriculture that he needs help in dealing with that Minister and his officials because they really do not understand the problem. They have always rejected preferential rates for the farmer in terms of subsidy. They really do not understand the Farm Credit Corporation and if the Minister needs some help, we on this side of the House will be glad to help him educate the Minister of Finance who really does not understand the issue.

Until the Minister of Finance intervened we were having a reasonable dialogue and conversation. I can see that the Minister of Agriculture was agreeing with most of what I was saying and that he understood the problem. This issue goes beyond the type of political tomfoolery of the Minister of Finance. I am glad that he is here to listen because he needs to be educated more than anyone else in the House of Commons.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I must compliment the Leader of the Opposition on his defence of the prairie farmer. However, I want him to comment on his reference to preferential rates because neither the Minister nor the Government can be blamed for the loss of those preferential rates. The blame for the loss of those preferential rates must be laid at the door of the Liberal Party.

Will he tell us if his Party would return to a preferential statutory rate for the movement of grain in western Canada?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What statutory rate is he talking about? Is it the transportation rate or the credit rate?

Mr. Hovdebo: I am talking about the preferential rate for the movement of grain, the Crow rate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Of course, that Crow rate, under the terms of the legislation, is up for review and I understand that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski) is considering it carefully. He has to reconcile divergent interests in the country. I think that question ought to be put to him.

Mr. Oberle: Does the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition have any indication of what a $50 an acre payment would cost the federal Treasury? Does he intend to have the provinces share in such a program on the customary fifty-fifty basis? If that is the case, I applaud the right hon. gentleman for the initiative he has taken and the attention he has paid to the issue, which is as grave as he describes it. It is a serious matter of concern to all of us. He did not get into the Peace River country of British Columbia. I suppose he assumes I am looking after that.

Mr. Gauthier: Give him an hour.

Mr. Oberle: I would like to know from the right hon. gentleman whether he had any opportunity to use his channels through the provincial Government in British Columbia to ascertain whether the province would come to an agreement on an acreage payment, similar to the agreement reached on cattle and the initiatives taken by the Government in that area.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that I have been up in his country, which I enjoy. I have been there twice in the last 12 months, but I have always missed him. I apologize because he was welcome at the very successful meetings we have had because he would have added a little colour to those meetings.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Although I have known the Premier of British Columbia for over 30 years, I doubt whether my pipeline to him is as clear and well flushed as the Hon. Member's.

Mr. Oberle: That is debatable.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if this were an open-ended program, the maximum cost would be somewhere around half a billion dollars. The program I have proposed is not open-ended.

As I said during the course of my remarks, the pay-outs would be restricted to a maximum number of seeded areas. This avoids the problem of farmers with large farms getting huge amounts of money. It is also pro-rated to the crop harvested. The amount, I believe, would be a reasonable amount against the huge dimensions of the problem I have described.

Every major farm organization in western Canada supports the idea of acreage payments. Under the former Government, my Government, there is a precedent in the payments we have made to the producers in northeast Saskatchewan as a result of flooding. The Minister has a precedent there if he wishes.

As to the level of sharing, I suggested in Regina that it be two-thirds federal and one-third provincial. We want to make sure that that two-thirds really gets to the farmer. When the Government of Canada advanced payments to the cattle producers in Saskatchewan, they did not get to the cattle producer at all. The Province of Saskatchewan through its Treasurer pocketed the money.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, farming is still a big business and is a business, not just another way of life as this Government is treating it. Historically speaking, agriculture has been and still is one of the key staple parts of the Canadian economy. Liberal Governments, contrary to answers given in Question Period today, have done a great deal in subsidizing Canadian agriculture and helping that sector out when in need.

Could the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) expand a little more on the income tax policies and relief that he would extend to the farm community? Second, could he expand on the immediate policies he has in mind for financial assistance? Third, if he were Prime Minister, would he buckle under the European Economic Community in the same way the Government and its Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has today instead of supporting the farm community in Canada?

If he has any time after that, will the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition elaborate in his intelligent way on the hog and beef producer markets and the helpful hints and policies he has for them today? The Government obviously needs help badly.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, it is a relief to get an intelligent comment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In response to the pork issue, despite this new partnership which the Government of Canada is envisaging with the United States in terms of trade, our pork producers are being hit by the Americans who are using their Department of Health in a phoney way and crippling our pork industry.

On the matter of taxation—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): What would you do about it, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It would not take much to do better.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Member wants to know about amendments to the Income Tax Act. What we are talking about here is a sell-off of cattle. Ranchers are now being forced to sell off large portions of their herds as a result of feed shortages and the high feed costs resulting from the drought.

The way the Income Tax Act and the definition of a herd is currently framed it would provoke premature recapture of depreciation, and the producer is taxed on the extraordinary income received from the sale, the result being that, having to pay the tax, he is unable to buy a replacement herd. We suggest the Income Tax Act be amended to set up an escrow fund giving the farmer a prolonged period of time in order to re-establish the herd without calling into play the recapture provisions of the Income Tax Act.

The Hon. Member put to me the question of what I would do about European beef. The new Canadian federal Government has just opened the doors to European beef and thrown our western producers—

Mr. King: How much did you allow in?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The current federal Government has quadrupled the imports from Europe. That is what has happened.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment on the speech by the right hon. gentleman and then I would like to ask a question.

Ms. Copps: Hey, Mr. Speaker. No questions and comments.

Mr. King: I do not disagree with his analysis of the problems in agriculture: I just think it is rather cynical to bring them up at this time when he is Leader of the Opposition. The condition existed when he was in the other capacity as Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. King: This is not a new phenomenon. It is a situation that has existed. How can the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) account for a situation that existed in the Okanagan for two years with the knowledge of the former Minister of Agriculture? The fruit growers of the Okanagan were asking for stabilization payments, to which they were entitled. They were refused by the Government of the day, led by the hon. gentleman. It was not until a change in Government and the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) came to the Okanagan that the stabilization payment was granted, and that was after two years of stonewalling by the Liberal administration.

Why was there no favourable response to the concerns of the farmers in British Columbia in the Okanagan Valley with respect to action instituted by his Government against their organization and which has since been resolved amicably? If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to have any credibility, he should at least explain why his Government did not act when it had the opportunity to protect the farmers whom I represent in the Okanagan Valley.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Unfortunately the time allotted for questions and comments has terminated. Resuming debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member just put some questions to my Leader. With unanimous consent, I think he has the right to answer the questions to try to put this matter in perspective. I think we overstepped the 10 minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to answer the Hon. Member's questions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1250)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the situation which the Hon. Member is attempting to describe. The Minister of Agriculture should do anything he can to widen that stabilization net. He is trying to obtain the consent of the provinces to do it now. We expect him to take a little more initiative. When we are talking about stabilization, we ought to cross a couple of mountain ranges as well and look at stabilization for the sugar-beet industry in southern Alberta. I can tell the Hon. Member that we never blew $1 billion on a bank, money which could have well gone to Canadian farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments, and I know I have about 20 minutes in which to do so. I did not utilize an opportunity to put questions to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) so that other Hon. Members could question him. However, I want to do something which perhaps I do not always do. It might or might not be appropriate to do so on this particular occasion. I want to thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for bringing this matter to the floor of the House of Commons and for the tone and rationale of many of his statements. Of course, I completely and totally reject any detrimental or negative reference to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He was completely and totally inaccurate in that respect, and he knows it. I wanted to set the record straight.

I am glad the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition utilized at least a small portion of his time this summer to travel the country, to get to the grass roots level and to visit particularly the drought area in western Canada. He should not believe that he was the only person there. In the last four months or five months, I have made a half dozen trips to western Canada and indeed to other parts of the country. I had the opportunity to visit the drought area with many of my colleagues, particularly with the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) who led the task force. In any event, I recognize the tone of his remarks today. Certainly his comments have improved compared with the position and the tack which he took the last time we discussed the matter in the House. I recognize the tone, the tack and the approach which he used on this occasion.

However, I think it is important to set the record straight. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition indicated that the Government had fulfilled a few of its election campaign commitments. That is very misleading, and I utilize this opportunity to remind him that when we went to the country, we made 16 very clear commitments to the agri-food industry. To this point in time we have fulfilled 13 of those 16 commitments.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not our calculation.

Mr. Wise: I think that is a pretty good record. It will stand the test of time. When campaign commitments are made, normally the are made for the mandate of a Government, that is, at least for four years. We are only into our thirteenth month, and I believe our record is good. Also he indicated that there had been some delay and that we had neglected our responsibilities with regard to the drought in western Canada. That is completely inaccurate. A year ago we were quick off the mark, shortly after being sworn into office. I travelled to western Canada with a number of my cabinet colleagues. We provided a $16 million drought payment at that time. Subsequent to that, within weeks, we delivered another $13 million or $15 million to deal with excess water in western Canada.

Unfortunately the drought recurred this year, and again we accepted our responsibilities. We appointed a working committee. I went out there, I walked the area and I visited the area. As the Leader of the Opposition will know, we have delivered some $48 million on phase one of that program. That is not neglect; that is acceptance of responsibility.

We will be coming forward with phase two. We are a Government which believes in consultation with our provincial colleagues. We do not want to act unilaterally. We also believe in consultation with the industry people. This is the process through which we are going now to satisfy ourselves that whatever is available in phase two will meet with the general approval of the provinces and the general acceptance of producers. There is no delay at all. We just want to be satisfied that whatever we bring forward will be in the best interest of western farmers.

Also the Leader of the Opposition touched upon the need for some ongoing, existing mechanism or plan between the federal Government and the provinces to take care of disastrous situations. I agree with him on that. We are doing everything possible. At the time of the announcement of phase two, we hope to be in a position at least to signal what we think should be done. I am not talking out of school in respect of what can be and should be done. We all know the importance of the crop insurance program. It has done an excellent job over the years, but it has to be changed, perhaps not drastically. It must be enhanced, changed and revised. Provision must be built into that crop insurance program which will provide an option for individuals in high-risk areas. It is not only true in western Canada, but in northern Ontario and elsewhere in the country, that the existing system does not allow for an option to buy additional coverage. Until such time as revisions have been made to the crop insurance program to include those options, we will always be faced with ad hoc payments.

I see that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is present in the Chamber. I do not know what is his schedule this afternoon, so I will raise this matter with him how. It appears that the Opposition Party is attempting to lay all the blame on the doorstep of the Government. I think the message which he wanted to send across the country was that he was divorcing himself and the previous Government from any blame for the situation in which we find ourselves now. I do not think he will be very successful in doing that, to be perfectly honest. Most of the difficulties which we are experiencing today did not happen in the last 13 months. Rather, they began to happen as a result of developments in the early 1970s when we were not in office. Some of the messages of so-called experts impacted very detrimentally upon Canadian agriculture and other industries in the last three years of four years. Unfortunately they will be with us for time to come. During that period of time many of the studies with regard to what Governments, banks and industry people should be doing in the next decade—and I am taking it back to 1970—indicated that as far as the agri-food industry was concerned there was every indication that there would be a great deal of stability in interest rates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrup the Hon. Minister, but it being one o'clock p.m., I do not leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Minister of Agriculture had the floor.

Mr. Wise: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we broke at one o'clock I think I had covered some of the areas and some of the questions raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and had tried to correct the record and describe the factual situations. I dealt with the election campaign commitments and dealt, I think quite adequately, with this Government's very positive, prompt and responsible handling of the western Canadian drought situation.

When we broke at one o'clock I was making some comments that would again set the record straight with reference to the impression that, intentionally or otherwise, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was attempting to leave, to lay all the blame for the difficulties that we have in the agri-food industry at this particular time totally and completely on the doorstep of this Government, when in fact that is not the case. I think we have acted responsibly for the last 13 months. We have passed more agricultural legislation in this House in the last eight months that we were sitting than the previous Government did in the previous eight years. We have taken well over 100 initiatives totalling nearly $2 billion. They are on the public record for people to examine, and no doubt other speakers on both sides of the House will utilize that list to make some further comments.

I want to make the observation that back in the early 1970s—and I need not remind the House that we were not in government at that time—the experts in the agri-food industry were meeting here in Canada, in North America and other locations throughout the world. They were doing some predictions and some crystal ball gazing as to what the future of the agri-food industry would be.

Collectively they came to the conclusion, looking ahead into the late 1970s and through the 1980s and perhaps beyond, that certain situations were going to exist. Collectively they came to the conclusion that interest rates would remain stable, and of course they were wrong. They indicated that energy prices would remain stable, and they were wrong again. They indicated that in-farm input costs would remain stable, and time has indicated of course that they were wrong in that observation as well. They indicated that during the late 1970s and on through the 1980s farm commodity prices would reach an all-time high. We all know that commodity prices have seldom, if ever, been much lower than they are at the moment. They also indicated that, as far as the North American and the international supply of food commodities was concerned, we would be going through probably a decade or a decade and a half of commodity and food shortages. Indeed, they have been wrong on that count as well because we are going through a time here in Canada and throughout the North American continent and in some of the major food producing countries of the world when we are not in a decade of shortages but rather in a decade of surpluses. Although we have certain market mechanisms which do help to establish better commodity prices, it is still difficult. Most are dealt with on the supply and demand principle.

So previous Governments were involved in these observations and they were involved in supporting these conclusions. They were also involved, particularly the federal Government, and there are many examples with respect to that. I do not have anything against my predecessor. I have known him for a long time. However, if there is any question in anyone's mind and they want to go back and read his speeches they will see that in those speeches he indicated these would be great times, that input costs would remain stable and that commodity prices would be high. On behalf of the Government he was urging people to increase investment and to expand production. He said that there would be great things in store for those people who did.

I want to make those observations because part of the recommendation was supported quite enthusiastically—not quietly but quite openly and publicly—during that period of time with respect to what conditions would be like during the late 1970s and 1980s. Unfortunately, some very inaccurate and unfortunate messages were sent out to the agri-food industry by the previous Government during that period of time. This has resulted in some very serious situations for a large number of Canadian farmers.

Another comment made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was quite unfair. If he knew the facts he probably would not have made the comment. He made some reference to the action the Government has taken with respect to imports of heavily subsidized EEC beef. I was rather startled by his comment. I believe he said that we were responsible for tripling or quadrupling EEC beef imports into the country, or something of that nature. That is just not the case. I would like to take the hon. gentleman back and remind him that his Government did nothing, and he was Prime Minister at the time when, in fact, no action whatsoever was taken. As a result of no action being taken, beef imports from the EEC countries flowed into Canada to the extent of some 50 million pounds. The year prior there was about 13 million pounds imported into the country, while two years prior to that time the level of imports was at about one million pounds. If there was any irresponsibility it certainly was not on the part of this Government but rather on the part of the previous Government during a time in which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Prime Minister of the country. No action was taken at all, and that is a fact.

We indicated that if we were elected we would invoke meat import legislation. We were elected and we invoked that legislation. We invoked it on December 21, a year ago, and negotiated a settlement with the EEC so that this year a maximum of 23 million pounds of heavily subsidized beef will be imported into the country. That is an amount less than half of what was shipped into the country last year. That is not a case of turning our backs on the beef industry but rather of accepting our responsibilities and providing some leadership and some control on these imports.

I have seen other comments, not by the Leader of the Official Opposition, but comments reported in the farm press across the country to the effect that beef, in excess of some 300 million pounds, will be imported into the country. That is complete nonsense and it is completely inaccurate. We said that we would invoke the law and we did. We negotiated a settlement with the EEC with respect to 23 million pounds as compared to 50 million pounds last year. Had we not invoked the law and had we followed the course of action set down by the previous Government, instead of allowing 23 million pounds of EEC beef into the country, in view of the huge amounts in storage in those countries, the import levels could have reached 80 million, 90 million, or perhaps even 100 million pounds this year.

Not only did the previous Government not take any action but it did not provide any help or assistance to the Canadian beef industry. As a consequence, it went through an anti-dumping course and, unfortunately, it was not successful. We have assisted the Canadian beef industry this year and, in fact, within the last few days the anti-dumping group have decided that the Canadian cattlemen do have a case and that the investigation will go forward. I wish to set the record straight in that regard as well.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, you are indicating that I should bring my remarks to a close. I have not started to use any of my prepared text and I am prepared not to. However, there are two or three other areas upon which I would like to touch. One would be with respect to the bilateral trade agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Minister to conclude his speech?

Mr. Foster: Just for a couple of minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed that the Minister shall have a few more minutes.

Mr. Wise: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to express my appreciation to my colleagues. I do not want to misuse the additional time which has been given me. However, I do think it is important for me to touch on at least two other subjects, although I might not spend a great deal of time with respect to one because it was raised by a member of the Opposition earlier today during Question Period. I was asked a question with respect to the long-term dairy policy, and perhaps I will leave the matter there. I would like to remind Hon. Members to check Hansard with regard to my answer given to the Hon. Member who is present in the House today.

The other subject I wish to touch upon is a subject of great interest both in the House and across the country with respect to the interest that the agricultural industry has concerning the possible upcoming talks and possible upcoming negotiations with respect to the comprehensive trade negotiations between the two countries. We know the sensitivity which exists with respect to this issue.

I believe our first reaction is to draw back and perhaps to take the position that we should not have agriculture on the table if, indeed, we ever sit around a table. We have not reached that stage yet. We must recognize the fact that about 50 per cent of total farm income comes from export sales. If one looks at the agricultural trade between the two countries one will see that last year we exported to the U.S. somewhere in the vicinity of $2 billion worth of agricultural goods. I think it is absolutely important that we do not turn our backs on an opportunity but, rather, we should attempt to utilize an opportunity to secure access to that very important market.

For example, Hon. Members know of the problems we have had with respect to the hog industry between Canada and the U.S. which took place last year. If we did not have access to the U.S. market the Canadian hog industry would probably shrink by about one-third. I do not think we can afford that. Although I have not prepared an accurate calculation on this subject, I believe that if we did not have access to the U.S. market with respect to the movement of beef cattle in the country the Canadian beef industry would probably shrink by about one-half or two-thirds.

So I believe it is absolutely essential in the long run. We should remove the emotion from the issue and look at it from an economic point of view as an opportunity to achieve access to that market. I really do not think we have any choice but to try to negotiate a square deal, a better deal, for Canadian agriculture.

What I think we should also try to achieve is some agreement whereby we could remove some of these border irritants which we have encountered day in and day out with a wide variety of commodity groups. When we examine the mechanism which exists on this side of the border as compared to that which exists on the south side of the border, we end up the loser every time. We have to agree on some type of formula, program or mechanism we can put in place on both sides of the border because we are always going to be under pressure to use it from time to time and there will be legitimate reasons for doing so in the short-term interests of our own producers. I believe that that aspect of the discussions and negotiations is important for that reason alone.

I know there is a great deal of sensitivity about the matter, and I share that feeling, but I am also satisfied that we are going to have ample input, along with the industry and the provinces, and the mechanisms which will be in place will ensure that adequate consultation will take place. Unless someone knows something at this point of time that I do not, I believe we have only signalled our intent. I know there is an intent on behalf of the President of the United States to do likewise. However, I do not believe an official decision has been taken on behalf of the United States with reference to continuation of the talks and possible negotiations.

I will conclude my remarks at this time by saying that I appreciate the Opposition providing us with an opportunity to talk about some of the very serious problems which exist in the industry today. Again, I would like to compliment the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for the tone he set in his remarks. I am sorry I do not have the time to talk about some of the many things we have accomplished in the last 13 months, but I am sure that will be done by others of my colleagues who will participate in the debate today. I welcome this opportunity to set the record straight on a number of comments made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and I appreciated the opportunity, I believe for the first time, to just say a word or two about the bilateral trade negotiations which may take place between the two countries as they relate to the agri-food industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Minister, when I asked you before lunch, during Oral Question Period, why no dairy policy had been announced on August 1 or during the first week of August, you pointed out that there never had been any commitment to that effect, and now I am getting out the proceedings of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, where I was present when you made that commitment.

That being said, you made a brief reference to the question of the dairy policy. Perhaps you will allow me to draw a parallel with another question you dealt with, namely pork production.

You will probably remember that during the last election campaign, the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) formally promised $13 million, putting his signature on a cheque, a payment pork producers were fully entitled to receive.

The Government decided not to pay this amount, giving as an excuse the threat of retaliation by the Americans and that it might be prejudicial to our market in the United States.

This brings me to the following question, since I am drawing a parallel between the situation in the pork industry and our dairy producers. According to your reasoning and your way of thinking, can we expect radical cutbacks in the Government's dairy policy, considering the fact that you seem to be in favour of a more open agricultural policy vis-à-vis the United States, and also considering what you did about the $13 million for pork producers?

[English]

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes some mention of the exchange we had during Question Period and refers to the August 1 date. That date is the date which in previous years was set by the existing Government. At that time it made the announcement of what could be in place for the next 12 months. It has been done continuously on an ad hoc basis for about the last 10 years. The dairy farmers of Canada and the dairy industry want a long-term dairy policy. The Hon. Member knows that. The industry made that representation to the previous Government year in and year out and received no action. The August 1 date was always the time in which the announcement was made of what the policy would be for the next 12 months. We do not want to follow that course of action. We want to be in a position as soon as possible to deliver the 14th of the 16 election campaign commitments we made. We said we would deliver, not on an ad hoc basis or on a 12-month by 12-month basis, but we will signal the dairy farmers of Canada and the dairy industry that there will be a long-term dairy policy—"long-term" meaning five years. We want to say to them that this is what the policy is going to be and it will be in place for five years.

We made an announcement on August 16. We were a couple of weeks late because there were some sort of technical problems involved which I think most people understand, but we accepted our responsibilities. We are carrying on in the same way, using the same formula, and we made the announcement on August 16—which should have been made, admittedly, on August 1—and in addition to that, I have appointed Everett Biggs and Benoit Lavigne who have consulted widely across the country. They have talked to all the provinces because the provinces are involved in the national plan. They talked to all the supervisory bodies because they are part of the plan, and to all the milk marketing boards in the provinces because they are signatories to the plan as well. We have to talk to all the people in the industry and to the Canadian consumers. This long, lengthy but necessary process has been completed and, as I indicated to the Hon. Member, I expect to receive that report within a couple of weeks. I hope to have a further couple of weeks at least—and I think the Hon. Member would agree that I need a couple of weeks—to assess the recommendations. Having assessed the recommendations, I will then make recommendations to Cabinet. I told the Hon. Member during Question Period that I thought a reasonable timetable would be a date prior to the first of the year.

There is not going to be any price increase in any case during that period of time so no one will suffer or be hurt by any increase at all. What we want to do is to deliver the long-term dairy policy.

I am surprised that the Hon. Member would bring up the question again—particularly in view of events which have taken place since August, 1984. What he has said certainly justifies the action we took. We were advising caution throughout September and November when the Hon. Member was putting pressure on us to send more money out. Sure, we can put $13 million into Quebec, but if we make a payment to one province, we have to pay them all under that program. It would have meant another payment from the federal Government of about $30 million, not $13 million. Had we paid that, then the U.S. countervailing duty on us would have been obviously much higher.

• (1430)

Mr. Benjamin: They put it on anyway.

Mr. Wise: Yes, you are right. However, how was it put on? It was not just ad hoc. There again we are losing under their system, but the calculation was made by the U.S. International Trade Commission based on the amount of stabilization and subsidy payments which flow from two levels of Government to the industry.

I appreciate the interest the Hon. Member has in dairy policy, but I am somewhat surprised that he would raise that old question again.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Minister talked about the new trade discussions with the U.S. This is one of the first times we have had an opportunity to discuss this with him.

Has he had discussions with the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Kelleher) as to the process of the negotiations over agriculture? Will the total package of agricultural products from either side of the border be placed on the table? It is extremely important that we look at the total agricultural package on either side. They have consistently had a trade surplus with us because of our inability to produce certain fruits and vegetables. They are also a bigger market, which makes it important for the whole package to be placed on the table. When we get into commodity-by-commodity negotiations we are always at a disadvantage at a ratio of about 11 to one, which is also the relative ratio of the two economies. Will he point out that the U.S. already has far and away the largest advantage in trade and that we should begin our negotiations there rather than on the old system of commodity-by-commodity where we always end up losing?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I want to be perfectly frank, open and honest in the discussions regarding the bilateral trade negotiations as they relate to the agricultural industry, both here in the House and across the country. However, I ask the Hon. Member to appreciate my difficulty at this point because the major spokesmen for the Government will be the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Kelleher). However, if you examine my earlier remarks, you will see that I said I was satisfied with the mechanism and the process. If these talks take place, there will be ample opportunity for consultation with input from the provinces and industry. I do not think I can say much more than that at this point in time.

I indicated that we get into problems from time to time in talking in generalities regarding the agricultural industry. A lot of people across the country think they can make certain statements which will apply to every commodity in the agricultural industry. That could not be farther from the truth. There is as much difference between some food commodities as there is between food commodities and a car or truck. Therefore, we must be cautious and ensure that all of these factors are taken into consideration. The Hon. Member mentioned the difference in scale and he is absolutely correct. We must never lose sight of the fact that the U.S. producer has many advantages, too many to list here. In fact, it would perhaps be an interesting subject for some debate someday in this House. However, it is obvious that they can take 10 per cent of their production and displace 100 per cent of our market. We can take 100 per cent of our production and displace only 10 per cent of theirs.

Mr. Benjamin: That has always been the case. We have always known that.

Mr. Wise: That is right. The other thing we should be aware of as well is that there are always many fingers pointed in this direction saying that we subsidize our agricultural commodities highly. I think what the Hon. Member was getting at was that if you take all their programs into consideration, and I have seen studies which have been examined and cross-examined and still stand up, that one might well conclude their financial support to their industry could run as high as 30 per cent compared to ours at about 12 per cent. These are the things we have to be very, very much aware of and never lose sight of. This Government is interested in making a better deal for Canadian agriculture by ensuring access to that huge market and eliminating some of these border irritants which exist and which are extremely disruptive, particularly to this industry.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. Debates on agricultural issues raised by the Opposition happen only about two times a year and this is the first opposition debate on the Order Paper this fall.

I would like to begin by making a very brief comment on the Minister's presentation which produced a lot of the information we have normally been used to getting from the Minister. We heard one admission which I think is new and which I hope is taken notice of by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and some other Cabinet Ministers as well. The Minister said, I think for the first time in this House at least, that the main problem in agriculture is not that of finding ways of supplying markets, it is that we are in a period of market surpluses. He pointed out that this is a world-wide phenomenon, something we in this Party have recognized for some time. However, he took the opportunity to apply a little political rhetoric to the Official Opposition in saying that it had not recognized it yet. To be fair, if it has not, it is because that recognition has only come slowly through the farm sector. The policy our Party has put forward over the past number of years has taken account of that, and I will get to that a bit later.

If we go back to the last election campaign, which was only 16 or 18 months ago, we saw the Ministers' Leader, now the Prime Minister, tell us in Prince Albert that if he was elected, western Canadians could look forward to increasing their export markets by 30 per cent. When the press turned to the Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) who was at that time chief adviser to the then Leader of the Opposition and is now the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, they found he was only slightly more conservative, if I can use that word. He said he thought perhaps 25 per cent in the first year would be more reasonable. Well, reality is beginning to set in and at last the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has pointed out with some accuracy that the reality is that there are world market surpluses for agricultural products.

Our former chief customer for wheat, Great Britain, is now one of our competitors. Through the European Economic Community it is now a net exporter of wheat. India, which used to be considered a basket case as far as the production of food is concerned, has had the ability for the last two or three years to export. It is reported to have about a million tonnes of wheat for export this year. While China has over a billion mouths to feed, it has become self-sufficient, even in grains. It is not exporting this year, but could do so if it chose to. It chooses, instead, to build up a surplus at home. The only major market left for Canadian wheat is the Pacific side of Russia, the only place that does not produce enough wheat internally to provide for its own food needs. They find it cheaper and more efficient to buy the grain they require from our ports in Prince Rupert and Vancouver and transport it by water to Vladivostok. That is about the only export market that still exists for Canadian grains at the moment. That has changed the whole equation that we use when considering the marketing of grains.

The Minister mentioned that we are used to exporting about 50 per cent of our production and consuming the other 50 per cent at home. The new reality is that we consume 60 per cent domestically and find outside markets for 40 per cent. Having reached that point, I reiterate the policy on agriculture that the NDP has worked out over the past decade, that is, that perhaps it is time to concentrate on the domestic market while continuing to work very hard on the other markets. Perhaps we should look at the domestic market with more hardheaded business sense in an attempt to utilize it to meet the income requirements of farmers in a better way than we have been doing.

We have basically been permitting the world market, which is a very cut-throat situation to begin with, to set the price levels. We then back off with the transportation costs and arrive at a domestic price that Canadian consumers will pay. As a result of the transportation differential, it is usually less than the foreign price. Through this method of pricing, Canadian consumers have been getting an extremely good deal.

There are only a few commodities on which the pricing situation has been reversed. Parliament has given farmers in the dairy and feather industries the authority to establish domestic prices that are fair to consumers as well as to farmers. Under those pricing arrangements, which they file each year with the National Farm Products Marketing Council, they have the right to recover a fair return on their investment equivalent to the national average industrial wage. This is fair and allows the producers of those commodities the hope of surviving in the current economic times. Producers who are paid world market prices, accepting the fluctuations which go with that situation, now have virtually no demand for their products and are facing great financial hardships.

One of the best financial assessments of the Government's first year in office was written in a very succinct fashion by one of the Government's own agencies, the Farm Credit Corporation. In the Farm Credit Corporation's quick business analysis of the Government's first year in office it points out that farm asset values declined by 12 per cent in the past year, outstanding farm debt increased by an additional two per cent, and gross farm sales declined by 5 per cent. This does not sound like a growing agricultural sector. It does not sound like the Government has been doing very much to improve the situation.

In fact, if you do similar analyses for previous years, you will see that there was only a 5 per cent or 6 per cent decline in farm asset values in 1984 and that debt increased at about the same level, but that farm sales had at least increased a little bit. While I will admit that the problem has built up over time, the Government, with all the best intentions in the world, has been unable to stop the rapid decline in the fortunes of Canadian farmers despite all the attention it says it has paid to agriculture.

When looking at the long list of things which the Minister says he has done for agriculture I find some very creative accounting.

Mr. Benjamin: You mean cooking the books.

Mr. Althouse: Yes, what my friend, the Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), says is probably true. The Government says that it has given almost $2 billion worth of aid to agriculture in its first year in office. The numbers are all here. One of the bigger aid packages is $520 million paid through the Canadian crop insurance scheme which has been in place for years. That money would have been paid regardless of which Government was in power or whether any Government was in power. An interim payment of $450 million through the Western Grain Stabilization Act was made. Payments of about that amount will be made again this year. Without government interference they would have been made this November rather than last May and June, but the amount would have been the same. The change in the legislation expedited the payments but did not change the amount. That money would have been pumped into the pockets of Canadian farmers regardless of which Government had been in power or, indeed, whether any Government had been in power. If we had been in the midst of an election, that money would still have been automatically paid out.

I hasten to add that both of those programs are paid for, at least in part, with the money of farmers. One-third of the funds paid out through the Grain Stabilization Act are raised through premiums paid by farmers. Fifty per cent of the money paid out in crop insurance is raised through farmers' premiums. Included on the Minister's list is the announcement of the final payments on the three Wheat Board grains. There is no Government money involved in that. It is simply a matter of finalizing the annual sales, closing the books, and paying the surplus back to the farmers who produced the grain. Those are the kinds of things included on this great list.

However, the production of great lists will do nothing to attack the real problem. Again, I must congratulate the Minister for finally recognizing that we are faced with a market of surpluses. Apparently, his officials have not recognized this because the White Paper which he presented to the Ministers of Agriculture in St. John's, I believe, followed the opinion that there are may hungry people to be fed and a world market to be filled. His officials have not yet come to the conclusion arrived at by the Minister.

In the time I have remaining I would like to outline how I believe we could deal with the reality of this market of surpluses. I believe that we should give priority to the remaining 60 per cent of the domestic market which should be ours to fill first. Farmers should be allowed to structure marketing institutions that will take advantage of local domestic markets and let them set prices in those markets which will give the farmer full cost recovery. Since the weather, disease and other factors make it very difficult for farmers to produce the precise amount of commodity to fit the market, the surplus amount of product should be sold in international competition through powerful marketing agencies like the Canadian Wheat Board. These agencies would act wholly in the interest of the original producers of the product and return any surplus funds from the market, pro-rated to the original producer of the goods so that the full benefit of that marketing and sales activity will accrue to the local community and to the farmers who produced the commodity. This is the only way to face up the current farm crisis and ensure that agricultural development can take place and continue in this country. One only needs to look across the border to see that the farm crisis there is even worse than in this country.

Mr. Wise: So is their financial situation.

Mr. Althouse: Their financial situation is worse than that being faced by Canadian farmers because their marketing situation has not been as carefully monitored. Furthermore, I believe the main reason for that difference lies in those institutions which I just mentioned. The marketing ability of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian Dairy Commission to act on behalf of farmers in obtaining fair prices, as well as the ability of various chicken and egg boards in this country, have made it possible for at least some farmers to maintain something close to production costs, viability and parity with the rest of the country. Without such institutions and the recognition which the Minister is now prepared to make, there is no ability for Canadian farmers to survive in the current economic climate.

Canada has a relatively large agricultural sector given the size of its economy and therefore it does not feel disposed to make the kind of subsidy payments to keep agriculture viable as we normally see in the European Economic Community, the United States and other industrialized countries like Japan. Our small population means that we can produce a consistent surplus of commodities. Our tax base is relatively small compared with that of those countries with large numbers of very wealthy people. Therefore, we should allow the farmers to look after themselves, as our agriculture policy suggests. They should be given the marketing power they require in the form of marketing institutions like the Wheat Board and the Dairy Commission and they should be allowed to adjust to the reality of the market-place both domestically and internationally.

I attempted to provide such an opportunity earlier in this session of Parliament when the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act was broadened to permit tobacco growers to do just that. At that time I moved an amendment that would have permitted all producers of fruits, vegetables, grains and livestock to have the same privileges. However, the Government intervened and refused to allow that to happen. I regret that it took such action because I believe that self-help for farmers is the only way they will have a chance to survive in this very difficult economic climate. It is the only solution that will allow farmers to obtain the income they need to remain viable.

In closing, I am pleased that we had this opportunity to discuss agriculture this afternoon. I urge the Government to face up to the new analyses that the Minister has offered us today which is a radical departure from the position of his Party and his Government. I hope he has some luck and success in selling his arguments to his Cabinet colleagues, particularly in persuading the Member for Assiniboia and the Prime Minister who were convinced some 16 or 18 months ago that the agricultural industry was viable and that it would only require harder work in order to sell the products that would solve the problems of Canadian farmers.

At least the Minister has recognized that that is not the case. I hope he will confirm that by introducing the necessary amendments to the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act so that other producers in this country besides those in the chicken, egg and dairy industries will also enjoy self-reliance.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks earlier today, following the initial speech by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I took what might be considered an unusual step and utilized the opportunity to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition for the tone of his speech. I think it is only proper and appropriate, after listening to the agriculture spokesperson for the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), that I also utilize this opportunity to extend, on behalf of the Agriculture Ministry as well, the same complimentary remarks about the manner in which he has made his presentation in the House today.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I thought that the Minister would perhaps go into a longer dissertation.

I was very interested in the comments of the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). He made a number of observations about the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). I was especially fascinated by the comments of the Minister of Agriculture when he agreed completely with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and rejected the suggestions made by the Leader of the Official Opposition.

This surprises me because I believe that 90 per cent of the problem experienced by the Minister of Agriculture is in obtaining recognition, support and assistance from the Minister of Finance. The document entitled Taxation Issues in Agriculture which was before the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee earlier this year clearly put the Government's position on the line. According to the view of the Minister of Finance in his White Paper, farmers earn twice as much as other Canadians, only pay a quarter as much in income tax and other taxes, and are eight times as well off as other Canadians. I am sure that that comment by the Minister of Finance has been rejected by all farmers. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture might want to choose his words more carefully.

Along with the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre I was interested in the comments of the Minister of Agriculture with regard to free trade. He seems to be supporting the concept that, yes, our marketing boards are important in Canada whether in the dairy industry, the feather industry or with regard to the Wheat Board but the Minister is not prepared to take them off the table in the free trade negotiations. I understand his thinking in that regard, but I reject it completely. It seems to me that if you are going to enter into negotiations with the United States, you cannot go in naively and say "Well, we will put everything on the table and there will be no problems."

Mr. Benjamin: That is what the Liberals did.

Mr. Foster: It appears that you have to think that the American system of marketing and assistance to agriculture is better. I reject that. I think our system in many of those administered commodities is much better. Even if we wanted to go to the American system I do not think that we have treasuries rich enough here to support a system like that.

I would be interested in the thoughts of the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre, although he has pretty well set them out on the table already. To be prepared to adopt the American system of subsidies and surpluses and the American system of agriculture would be something quite impossible for our Government to take on even if it were as good which, in my opinion, it is not.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can give full justification in the time I have to the complexities of the question posed.

Mr. Benjamin: What was the question?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Althouse: If we are going to our trade talks with the United States with child-like wide-open eyes thinking that this would be a way of maintaining free trade in agricultural goods, we are probably fooling ourselves to no end. There has not been true and absolute free trade in many agricultural goods, certainly in my lifetime.

In my reading and understanding of economic history, that has been the case with only a few commodities at any one time. In reality, most of the large developed countries have internal agricultural policies which serve to protect supplies. They make certain they come very close to being self-sufficient in food, a situation brought about, in part, because of European experience with war. Countries like to be as self-sufficient as possible in the event of a blockage during war. That policy came from the last century and with two major wars in this century, countries feel it is still a good policy and they pursue it. Similarly do the Japanese. They try to produce as much within Japan, regardless of cost, as possible. That has not necessarily been the reason for the U.S. producing the kind of agricultural output it has. The U.S.A. happens to be a relatively new economy situated in a very good agricultural area, in terms of land base, climate, technology and the training the population has. Americans are able to produce very well. They have at the same time used extra funds from their industrial base to assist agriculture in farm and rural life in a way that is subsidized at least three times per capita as in Canada. American farmers will not give up their far greater subsidies. Therefore, when we go into negotiations, we have to go in with our eyes wide open. We have to realize the U.S. is a much bigger country. Our negotiating position and economic clout is only about one-tenth of the U.S.

As long as we go on recognizing those things, we may come back with some honour and ability to survive as farmers in Canada. If Government negotiators ignore that, Canada's farmers will be very ill-served indeed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for my colleague. I did not get a chance to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) so I will attempt to ask him indirectly; first, on the experience of Canadian livestock producers in particular, but others as well. On a number of occasions in the last two or three decades we thought we had understandings or agreements on the amount of cattle, hogs, calves and dressed beef that we could send to the United States. As soon as the Americans started hurting, they closed the border. That has happened on three or four occasions since 1970.

Will the Hon. Member comment on the fact that unless we have a specific commodity, volume and price agreement that that situation will continue to happen? If we think we can blast our way into a market R.B. Bennett style we are deluding ourselves that the American livestock producer will hold still for that.

Second, my colleague commented on the matter of free trade. He said that we are trying to keep all of our eggs in one basket when we could be negotiating deals with countries such as Mexico and those in Central America. We could provide them with pure-bred cattle, breeding and red meats in exchange for their fruit and vegetable production rather than relying on the high cost imports from the United States in the middle of winter.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief because I notice you are getting a little edgy about the time. I do not have all of the instances of times when our relatively free trade agreement with the United States on red meat went awry. Probably the most noticeable ones had to do with our free trade hog component of the red meat understanding. In 1976 we were not producing all of the hogs required in Canada and we were not meeting our own domestic consumption. At one point for a year in that period in the middle 1970s, 14 per cent of our pork had to come from the United States.

As far as the Americans were concerned, we were a very small market. This past year the shoe switched to the other foot, so to speak. We were exporting relatively heavy exports of pork to the United States. We got to the point where Canadian pork made up about 2 per cent of the American market. The Americans moved very quickly with a countervail and cut us off. They have much faster, better and more efficient mechanisms for cutting off trade than we have.

• (1510)

As to the second question about trade agreements which tend to tie us to one country "à la R. B. Bennett", as the Hon. Member said, there are some parallels. R. B. Bennett wanted a similar agreement with the British in the 1930s. The British did not seem to be very interested, but he kept pursuing it pretty well throughout his mandate. The Government has decided that the object of its affection will be Ronald Reagan and the Americans. Ronald Reagan may be willing, but the American Congress does not seem to be terribly willing. As the Minister explained, we will probably see Canada going to these discussions, if they in fact amount to something. However, rather than tying ourselves to a firm bilateral agreement with exclusivity clauses, we would be much better off going the GATT route, keeping our options open and selling to a wide range of countries. We know from past experience that countries which appear to be good markets dry up. For example, the British seemed to be the main market of the 1930s, and they buy virtually no agricultural products from us now. In fact, they have become our competitors. Tying ourselves to one market is not the answer; keeping our options open is much better.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) reads as follows:

That this House regrets that the Government has refused to recognize the serious crisis facing the farm family in Canada and condemns the Government for its inadequate response to the problems of Canadian farmers, including a severe cost-price squeeze and debt burden, fierce predatory international competition and natural disasters, which have combined to place Canada's agricultural community in jeopardy.

He placed this motion before the House on our first Opposition Day because we are very concerned with the serious crisis facing Canadian agriculture.

We only have to look at the most recent report of the Farm Credit Corporation which suggested that 23 per cent of Canadian farmers are in serious financial difficulty. That is a frightening statistic. We only have about 170,000 farmers, and some 39,000 or 23 per cent of them are in serious financial difficulty. Another 11 per cent are in moderate to severe financial difficulty. If we look at that group of 39,000 farmers, we see that they spend an average of 10 years to 12 years in agriculture. They are really our youngest farmers, but they are also our most technologically advanced. They are our most efficient producers and our most productive farmers and, according to the statistics of the FCC, produce about half the food in Canada. They have a debt burden of something like $17 billion. The possibility of these young farmers losing their farms is frightening, disturbing and concerning. Will they be unable to survive? Will they be unable to have the opportunity to live a good life on the farm and to make a tremendous contribution to our country and to our export sales in years to come? Also it is very disturbing, as we look at the agricultural economies of Canada and of the world, to see the prices of commodities, the price prospects for grain and the prospects for cash crops. For example, we see farmers in southwestern Ontario growing soybeans and corn. They will not even get back their cost of production unless the Government provides stabilization. If we look at the long-term prospects for red meat, hogs and pork, it is a very disturbing situation which requires the resolve and determination of every Member of the House of Commons, especially those in the Government. It has to be placed on a higher plane of commitment or given a higher priority.

If we look at the international climate for farm commodity prices and at what is going on in the world at large, we see large trading blocs like the United States with huge, massive surpluses. They are able to commit $2 billion worth of grain for a bonus program. They are able to demand and receive a larger share of world markets. We want to know whether the Government is prepared to hang with our farmers and see them survive in the fierce, predatory international climate of commodity pricing.

If we look at the EEC, several years ago it was a customer for 25 million tons of wheat. Today it markets about that much on the world scene and subsidizes sales abroad. To round out the fierce competition in international trade, we have only to look at the 23.5 million pounds of EEC beef, subsidized up to 48 cents per pound, which is coming into Canada this year, or at the hog countervail by the United States of 5.3 cents per pound which will be harmful to our hog producers. We should compare those aspects with the almost blasé, laissez-faire, easy-going attitude of the Government that it will consider it, that it is sympathetic, but that it has not got around to making any decision or taking any action. These are the things which concern us in the Opposition and concern farmers right across the country.

Another reason for the motion being before the House at the present time is that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is a man of his word. In September, he had an opportunity to visit the drought areas of southern Saskatchewan, to meet with community leaders there and to view the devastation due to the drought. In July, I had an opportunity to visit some farms in that area, to talk with many producers and to see the devastation as well. I saw hundreds of acres with no crops. After having an opportunity to meet with community leaders and producers, my Leader suggested to the Government a number of worth-while initiatives which it could take. Although the Minister spoke eloquently this afternoon, we are concerned that he was unable to respond to many of the recommendations of our Leader. Since I was in Saskatchewan, in the prairie areas, since the Leader of the Opposition was there and made these recommendations, people want to know whether the Government will respond to these suggestions. I will mention some of them in detail in a few moments.

I think this is instructive because the people know of the 338 promises that were made by the Government and of the dozens and dozens that have been broken or have not been responded to since the election of over a year ago. They have seen the House of Commons spend a great deal of time this fall debating a bail-out of $1 billion or $2 billion for banks because of the carelessness of the Government in dealing with that issue last March. They have seen PetroCan spending $1 billion to set up additional gas stations. They have seen a billion dollar tax ruling to benefit one big industrial family in Toronto. What they want to know is why can the Government not respond to this industry, which is critical to Canada, not only in terms of those several hundred farmers but to the entire economy and to the rural life of our country.

In the recommendations which were made by the Leader of the Opposition he recommended that there be immediate action on an acreage payment for drought. He suggested $50 per seeded acre, which has been recommended by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. He recommended an income tax adjustment related to farmers who have to sell off their herd and want to be able to go back into the industry without having their revenues destroyed by income tax. He recommended a permanent long-term disaster relief mechanism in conjunction with the provinces. He recommended a debt review agency to reschedule debt and also provide long-term preferential interest rates for farmers. A sales tax exemption for farm fuels was promised by the Government in the last election campaign. It instituted a program last November in the economic statement but most of that elimination of excise tax was removed between May 1, when the exemption to the petroleum compensation charge was lifted because that charge was removed, and September 1 when a new excise tax of 9 cents a gallon or 2 cents a litre was imposed.

The Leader of the Opposition recommended that there be a public inquiry into the cost of chemicals and pesticides about which there was a great deal of concern. The Senate has done some work on that but there is a need for an impartial inquiry in that regard.

The Minister did respond to the question of what will happen to our marketing agencies and our support programs with free trade. I still have not seen an ironclad commitment that these will not be bargained away and I do not suppose that we are going to get such a commitment. Of course that adds to the uncertainty and concern that Canadian agriculture feels today.

I think in the debt crisis there is a very great concern in areas all the way across the country but particularly in areas like the Bruce Peninsula where hundreds of farmers have lost their farms in the last couple of years. The Government promised an agri-bond program. An agri-bond program was recommended by the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee, a program which would assist the farmers to—

Mr. Dick: What year?

Mr. Foster: In 1985. It was chaired by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Dick: It was also recommended when you people were in Government but you did not do anything about it.

Mr. Foster: It was an excellent recommendation with the majority of the people on that committee from the Government side providing a write-down of interest to 8 per cent, up to $300,000, which was a five-year program. There was no response. I think that the Minister is very glib, very reassuring in what he has to say. However, when one reads the Budget one sees that there is only input cost increases and while there was a provision generally available to all Canadians and to farmers for capital gains exemption which helps farmers get out of farming, it does not help them stay in farming. There were increased input costs through the sales tax, through an excise tax, through removal of exemption of the petroleum compensation charge, and when one reads all the solid evidence, the Estimates, the Budget, these documents that show where decisions are made by the Government. There is no decision to give additional support or encouragement to agriculture. There is no decision on Section 38 because the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee studied that matter and put down a recommendation. In the Estimates the Farm Credit Corporation budget was reduced by almost $400 million this year. The estimates of the Department of Agriculture—

Mr. Wise: Increased.

Mr. Foster: There will be $50 million removed from it. As well, the Department of Agriculture will be deindexed and that will cost another $10 million to $15 million. We do not even know where that $50 million and $15 million is going to come from. Is it going to come out of the dairy program? Is it going to come out of agricultural support programs? Is it going to come out of transportation or is it going to come out of research? There is a pretty firm commitment by the Government to greater research in agriculture and yet there appears to be no certainty or commitment by the Minister yet where he is going to remove that $50 million.

I was impressed with the Government's support to the oil industry. There was a reduction in taxes within three or four years of $2.4 billion and an increase in the value of reserve by $800 million. I was not impressed that there was that kind of commitment to agriculture. I am sure the Minister wants, and I hope that he will get, that kind of commitment from the Government because I think we are going to go through a very difficult time for the next couple of years. I think that Canadians want to see agriculture get the kind of commitment which other sectors of the economy, notably the petroleum industry, received in that Budget.

The Minister after his review placed a moratorium on 670 Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures which are in the pipeline now. There will probably be more by December 1 because that is when most of the payments come due. I am interested to know whether the Minister will be adopting a program like the agri-bond program recommended in the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee Reports to assist a good portion of the young farmers who are facing serious financial difficulty.

I was reassured as much as is possible by the Minister's words today that the potato industry is going to get his support and that there will be a potato purchasing program put in place under the Agricultural Products Act, because we have literally hundreds of producers in the Maritimes especially, although much of the industry is suffering in Manitoba and other places as well. These producers receive something in the order of 2.5 cents a pound, which is slightly less or more, perhaps, than half the cost of production. They can surely not survive indefinitely. I have recommended to him that he remove the inspection fee or place a moratorium on it, at least for this year or, perhaps, even indefinitely, which would be a more popular move. I am told that a person operating a 600-acre farm will pay inspection fees in the order of $6,000.

• (1530)

Mr. Wise: That is inaccurate.

Mr. Foster: That seems like a great deal of expense for an industry in which one receives about half of one's production costs.

While the Minister has soothing words, I think the industry is looking for decisions and actions. I suppose it is unfortunate from the Government's point of view that many of these actions will cost money. However, when one looks at the depth of the problem from the farmer's viewpoint, when one looks at the impact on rural Canada and the long-term interests with respect to Canada both domestically and internationally, I think the type of commitment which was given to other sectors of the economy should be given to the agricultural sector. We are certainly looking at an emergency debt situation and crisis in the short run. We are looking at a cost-price squeeze which the Government can help in certain ways over a longer period of time. We are looking at a fierce situation in terms of the international market. We want to see the Government respond in a positive way to the recommendations made by the Leader of the Official Opposition a few weeks ago and those which he repeated here in the House today, as well as the recommendations coming forward from agricultural groups in the country. This industry is just too important to be receiving only soothing words. It requires a total commitment by the Government and the people of the country at large so that we can see it survive and prosper as a family farm type of industry and not be changed to the type of industry which we see in the United States and some other countries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of observations and questions to ask of the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). The Hon. Member speaks about soothing words. He should be an expert on soothing words since during the time his Party was in power that was all it delivered to the agriculture industry.

I would ask Hon. Members to consider the farm finance situation. If the Hon. Member examines the record he will recognize that there was only one single action taken by the previous Government to address that problem. I am speaking of the special farm assistance legislation which lowered interest rates by 4 percentage points on a very selective basis to about 2,100 clients of the FCC. When my Party assumed office we moved interest rate conversion legislation which lowered interest rates across the board to all FCC clients who held loans and mortgages with interest rates at 16.75 per cent. We brought them all down 4 percentage points to the benefit of 5,600 clients. That was an $80 million commitment to the agricultural industry. That is not an action which fills the definition of soothing words. That is an action in terms of dollars.

In addition to the introduction of the interest rate conversion measure we put into place appeal boards across the country. We also introduced the shared risk mortgage program and, in addition, we lowered interest rates five times. Interest rates are now at the lowest point they have ever been in the FCC since 1979. Those are not simply soothing words but actions which have required the expenditure of dollars.

During the same period of time the previous Government saw interest rates increase by about nine percentage points to 20 per cent or 24 per cent. That is what happened when no action whatsoever was taken by the previous Government. Those were extremely devastating events which took place and which seriously impact the agricultural industry today.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member whether he realizes that for every percentage point increase in the general interest rate in the country there is a cost to the Canadian farmer of $140 million. Has the Hon. Member not observed that since my Party has taken office there has been a three percentage point decline in general interest rates in the country? Does he not know that for each percentage point of decrease there is a saving of $140 million to the Canadian farmer? During the time the previous Government held office, and because it took no action and allowed interest rates to increase from 10 per cent to 24 per cent, there was a direct cost to Canadian farmers to the tune of $1.4 billion. What did the Hon. Member's Government do? It had nothing but soothing words. We have taken action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, that was a beautiful intervention by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise).

Mr. Wise: It was fact.

Mr. Foster: He knows that the reason he was able to carry out that flip with respect to interest rates was because the previous Liberal Government had left $600 million worth of funds in the Farm Credit portfolio. Rather than costing his Government $80 million, which, of course, is a total canard, it really cost nothing. All the Government had to do was exchange one level of interest rate for another.

I would point out to the Minister that there were some 5,600 farmers who were eligible for that program. They had to sign an incredible document stating that they were on the way to the poor-house and they were going broke. If they did not sign the document they would not receive anything. If the Minister would come clean he would admit that there were 6,800 farmers holding farm mortgages at 13.5 per cent or 14 per cent who at the same time received nothing. I think we have to take what he says with a grain of salt.

If we look at the Tory promises we will see that they promised that the Government would allow the Farm Credit Corporation to offer agri-bonds to farmers in order to have access to reasonably priced funds. The Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs held hearings on this matter at which people from across the country were heard. The committee recommended an agri-bond program with an 8 per cent interest rate up to $300,000 in order to write down all the high interest rate loans for a period of five years. I did not see any action in the Government's Budget in that regard. As a matter of fact, if one looks at the Estimates for the Department of Agriculture with respect to the Farm Credit Corporation one will see that the Estimates decrease from $494 million to $90 million. That is not something which took place last fall; it is something which took place in February when the Estimates came down. If we look at the budget of the Department of Agriculture we will see that it has been cut by $50 million. We see that increases over the next several years will be restrained due to the deindexation of departmental budgets which will just cost more money.

I would say that the difficulties are growing greater and that the number of farmers in serious financial difficulty has increased by some 5 per cent from last summer to this. That is from about 33,000 farmers to 39,000 farmers. The Departmental estimates of the Farm Credit Corporation suggest that those accounts which were past due at August 1 have increased to $236 million. Last year it was $165 million. It is estimated that by January 1,1986, the number of farmers who will not be able to make their payments to the Farm Credit Corporation will increase and overdue payments will amount to $300 million. That is an increase of $190 million from last year.

We hear the Minister talking, but we do not see very much action. There was not very much action in the Budget or in the Estimates. Last July 10 the Minister put out a statement that he was going to put in place a pre-arbitration tribunal system attached to the Bankruptcy Act. Since then there have just been studies. I put a motion before the House calling upon the Government to implement some action in that regard. Many groups like the National Farmers Union and others are recommending some action.

There was a Bill in the House of Commons in June, 1984, before the election campaign. It was not a case where the Government had to go and find a new Bill, it just had to come forward with the legislation which was already there.

A question was put to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Côté) this week. He replied that the committee was still studying the issue and that we may get a Bill in January or later on. It is very indefinite when there is going to be some action taken. We can compare this inaction with the promises which were made in the election campaign. Promise No. 14 was that the Government would allocate the necessary funding to assist producers in refinancing their loans at current prevailing interest rates. But where are the 6,800 farmers who were left last January with interest rates at over 13.5 per cent? Their loans were not financed down to 9 per cent or 10 per cent. What happened to the recommendation which was made by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs? The majority of Members on that committee were Government Members. They knew what needed to be done. But there has really been no action taken by the Government on that recommendation made by their own private Members.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). In listening to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) and to the Hon. Member for Algoma, I was reminded of a story of the farmer who was on a train. When he went to the washroom there was a sign above the toilet which said: "Do not flush in town". The farmer said: "Oh, sure, do it to the farmers again".

A year and a half ago the Conservatives were making the same kind of speech the Hon. Member for Algoma made today. As year and a half ago members of the Liberal Party were making the same kind of speeches the Conservatives are making today. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Algoma, with all of his complaints, if he can assure us, on behalf of the Liberal Party, that it has now changed its mind and will admit that it was wrong. Who was it that got rid of the Crow rate and increased costs for producers in western Canada, with the supine acquiescence of the Tories? Who was it that abandoned thousands of miles of branch lines and increased the cost for producers? Who was it that sat quietly by while the United States colsed the borders on us on cattle, hogs and number of other commodities? Who was it that started the user-pay principle which hurt agricultural producers all over this country? Who was it that tried to get rid of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act? This all resulted in falling agricultural prices and falling farm net income. Can the Hon. Member now say that his Party has now changed its mind and admits it was wrong, and that the Tories were right in what they said while the Liberals were in power? Can he just tell us that?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who is a long time friend and member of the most illustrious class of 1968, obviously dreams of the possibility of his Party being able to be the Government of this country but he is not likely to see that happen. I want to assure the Hon. Member that if the Government would adopt some of the recommendations made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition which were put to the Government today, it would prove it recognized, for instance, the seriousness of the western drought situation which occurred this past summer. If the Government would implement an acreage payment system at $50 per seeded acre, in co-operation with the provincial Governments, that would be very beneficial to western agriculture.

Someone on the Government side made the suggestion to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that this is going to be a very expensive program, and, yes, it could be, but we should look at the magnitude of the situation which has occurred in western Canada. It is estimated that there was at least $2 billion in lost profits because of the drought alone. The damp, wet harvest also reduced grain production and will reduce the value of crops. In those cases, that kind of a payment, I am sure the Hon. member for Regina West would appreciate, would be very useful.

There should be a permanent disaster relief mechanism in place to assist in the kind of disaster which has happened to the farmers this year. There needs to be long-term action on water storage, water conservation and irrigation which will put on a firm basis the agricultural industry in western Canada. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Regina West would certainly want to applaud and support in any way possible those and other recommendations of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate today for a number of reasons. Of course, the first reason has to be that agriculture is a very fundamental part of the economy of my constituency. It provides a livelihood and opportunity for many people in my area. In fact, it is a major influence on all of us in Canada. The second reason I wanted to speak in the debate today is because of the motion which is before us. I would just like to read the motion, if I may:

That this House regrets that the Government has refused to recognize the serious crisis facing the farm family in Canada and condemns the Government for its inadequate response to the problems of Canadian farmers, including a severe cost-price squeeze and debt burden, fierce predatory international competition and natural disasters, which have combined to place Canada's agricultural community in jeopardy.

That is quite a motion, Mr. Speaker, but I will tell you what really makes it incredible. It is the Party which has put this motion before the House. I was elected to Parliament in 1980 so I was able to watch the previous administration and perceive how it dealt with agricultural concerns, problems and frustrations. Today those same people put forward a motion condemning our Government for not paying attention to these problems and not acting upon them. All one has to do is look at the two records to see that the people who are doing the criticizing today really have no grounds, basis or reason for putting forward any of that criticism. I can remember sitting in this House and watching the Minister with the green hat making all sorts of statements, all sorts of flowery speeches, but not once that I can recall did he really respond to the gut needs of people in the Peace River country. I remember questioning him about problems we had in Peace River, whether it was drought or some other weather condition, and his response was: Check it out with the province. He was not interested. Yet these very same people turn around and have the audacity to put forward this kind of motion. In spite of that I have to say that I have found this debate quite interesting and the speeches information and thoughtful. That is a real compliment to Members of this House and in many ways to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). He set the tone.

I want to talk for a few moments now about this new Government. It is important that I talk about it from the viewpoint of a western Canadian, particularly as the Member of Parliament representing the Peace country. This new Government has meant many significant things to us. The first thing which comes to mind is that for the first time in a long time we feel we are represented at the Cabinet table. Time and time again in the past our concerns, worries and frustrations were never heard. Why? Because the Liberals did not have anyone from western Canada to stand up and speak for us. That is not the case today. We have several Members from western Canada sitting at that Cabinet table demonstrating concern about the problems we are faced with in western Canada. At the same time they very much influence the direction Canada is taking. I could not help but notice an article in Quorum which I thought really spoke to this fact. Some of you may remember Mordecai Richler's statement regarding the City of Edmonton. Western Canadians were very offended by what one Member said because what they felt was happening was now that the Liberals are in Opposition they are free to come forward with all sorts of platitudes and nice statements but when they were in Government they totally ignored us. The title of the article was: "Shame on Sheila". It said, among other things:

If she feels compelled to apologize to us, why doesn't she express her profound regret for her Party's unabashed attempt to loot Alberta with the National Energy Policy?

That is the kind of thing which has made western Canadians furious. We find it particularly offensive when Liberals come forward with this kind of motion today criticizing a Government which is looking at the problems facing our farmers and is already taking action and considering further action.

I now want to talk briefly about the Ministers who deal with agriculture in this Government. The first thing we have to remember is that those Ministers were handed one heck of a mess in the shape of our agricultural economy. It has suffered from neglect, severe weather conditions, and all sorts of other things. Of course, the biggest thing it suffered from was the inaction of the previous Government. What I found really impressive was that the Minister of Agriculture listens. That is important. In my first four or five years in this House when I sat on the Opposition side I never felt that the Minister of Agriculture listened to me, let alone my constituents. However, the new Minister of Agriculture is listening and responding, and anyone who wants to seriously sit down and look at it will know that the Minister has listened and his track record bears that out. Another Minister is the Minister of Transport (Mr. Mazankowski). His work affects the commodity and agricultural industries and, again, I find that he is a listener. We have a serious problem in our area with the number of places which do not have rail service. As a result, some of our farmers are trucking their products 50, 60 or 120 miles to the rail head. I have had a hearing with the Minister of Transport about this issue an I am confident we will have a program which will show the Minister is interested and concerned about this problem. I am confident that in the next little while we are going to see some action.

The third Minister I want to mention is, of course, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer). Several times since the election I have had to go to him with problems which in some cases were unique to the Peace country, and in other cases not necessarily so. However, what really impressed me is that each time he was aware of the problem, understood it, and immediately sat down with me and tried to work out some kind of solution to meet the real needs of farmers in that region. Those three men have really been of great assistance and help to us and I think their actions give the lie to the motion which has been put before the House today.

I want to pause for a few moments now and talk about the drought in the Peace country this spring. During the summer, as soon as the House adjourned, I immediately started to travel throughout my riding. I went to as many of the agricultural areas and communities as I possibly could. I averaged some three or four meetings a day with farmers. It became very obvious that we were facing a crisis in that part of the world. Conditions were spotty; some parts of the region had reasonable crops, others had none at all. Often enough those divisions ran right down a fence line or quarter line. It was a very serious problem. What was even more frightening was that for parts of my region this is the third and fourth year that they have suffered some sort of weather problem. Whether it be drought, rain or snow, something has always prevented farmers in my area from harvesting good crops. I have to admit that, after travelling around my riding, I ended with somewhat the same kind of feeling which many of my farmers had, one of panic and desperation because the situation was so serious. What I found impressive, though, was that when I got on the phone to the Minister of Agriculture and said we have a problem out here, it was not long before we saw him out there personally looking at the problem our farmers were facing. He was out looking at the farms, the crops, looking at what the grasshoppers and drought had done. He was there and he was concerned. What did he do when he got back? The first thing he did was to ask the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson) to form a task force to have a good look at the problem. I have had the privilege of working very closely with that Hon. Member because I was later asked to join that same task force. I can tell you that he went out there, looked at the problem, studied it, listened to the farmers, taken what he heard and put it together in a package which can be worked with, and that is the kind of message which was delivered to the Minister of Agriculture. The approach has been very tenacious and sensitive. That is important because so many of our farmers have felt for so long that they have not had a sympathetic ear here in Ottawa. They have not had someone who understood the problem or cared about them. The Hon. Member for Assiniboia is a farmer himself, he talked to these people, listened to their concerns, and I think that in itself gave a number of our farmers some confidence.

As the house knows, one of the first things to come out of that task force was the announcement dealing with help for our cattle producers. Of course, that help has been significant. Now, of course, we have had a slightly different problem come up and that is why I want to talk for a few moments now about the harvest. I have to admit that it has been kind of a frustrating experience for me this year to be talking in the spring and summer about a drought and then do a complete turn and start talking about snow and rain and cold conditions. However, that is what has happened in the Peace country. We have gone from one extreme to the other. What little bit of crop we had cannot now be harvested. We are faced with a situation where farmers cannot harvest the crop that does exist. That creates problems for not only our farmers, it also makes it very difficult for the task force to get a handle on the extent of the damage. When I am asked what kind of crops we ended up with in the Peace Country I cannot say. How can you give figures when the crop cannot be harvested because of the snow and rain? We have some very serious problems. My confidence comes from watching the Minister of Agriculture over the last year. I know that he is listening and that we will not be ignored. The task force has been doing its work and I am very confident in the announcement that I know will be forthcoming in the near future. It will respond to the needs of farmers. It will consider the conditions they are faced with and it will not be the hollow rhetoric that we got before from the Minister with the green hat and some of his colleagues.

I want to touch on the record of my Government because it has certainly made agriculture a priority. Agriculture has become an important priority on the table of the Government. We are trying to solve a number of the very serious problems that exist today. I would first like to discuss briefly the abolition of the capital gains tax. This morning in the opening of his remarks the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) seemed to pooh-pooh that. He said it is great if you are getting out of agriculture but it does not do much good for the people who want to stay on the farm. However, as I understand it, the average age of farmers in Canada now is 55. In other words, there are a large number of farmers who want to retire and sell much of their farms to the younger generation. Therefore, this is a very significant program because it will allow those individuals the opportunity to retire and put some money in their savings accounts to provide for retirement, which opportunity was not available to them until now. For the Leader of the Opposition to pooh-pooh that provision shows that he has obviously not been paying attention to the real concerns of farmers.

The other action that I think is important is the removal of the federal sales tax on farm fuels. I would have been in favour of not having that last tax apply, as I think many people would have been. However, the fact is that we were able to carry out our election promise of rebating that tax. As a result, farmers in my riding today are not paying the full federal sales tax on farm fuels. That is important because every bit of assistance that we can provide is significant.

The actions of the Farm Credit Corporation are demonstrative of the differences between the two Governments. Prior to the last election I received a phone call from a farmer who was stuck with a 16.75 per cent interest rate on a loan. He was desperate because that loan was getting him in real trouble. The interest was depleting his operating capital. As a result, he was in a very difficult situation. He called me and I phoned the then Minister of Agriculture, the one with the green hat, and expressed the problem to him and asked for some assistance. Even at election time, when I thought the Liberal Minister would have been sensitive, all I got was a deaf ear. I must say that I was able to phone that farmer a little while later and say that the new Government had listened to him and we could now get the interest rate down. That farmer is a happy man. That is the kind of thing that the Minister of Agriculture has done. The shared-risk mortgage program is extremely important because that shared risk means that farmers now have some assurance that they will not be hit with the high interest rates they were nailed with by the previous administration.

There is also the moratorium. The other day I had one of my best days this year when I was able to call one of the farmers in my riding who was going to be foreclosed by the FCC. I was able to tell him that the Minister had called a moratorium, that I had checked into it and that it applied to him. That man is now trying to put his farming business back together and I think that he will succeed because the Government listened and recognized his problems. In spite of what the previous Liberal Government did, that farmer now has a second chance. We do have a track record, Mr. Speaker, which I think demonstrates that we are indeed interested in agriculture, indeed concerned about farmers, and are indeed going to meet the needs that they have today.

The way in which we have expanded the appeal process for farmers through the Farm Finance Review Board is of benefit to them. The Western Grain Stabilization Act is a favourite of mine as well. I remember a short while ago when the Liberals made an amendment to allow one payment. The funds were finally delivered right around election time. This Government has amended the Act to allow those payments to be made at any time. Since this Government has come into power there have been payments made in the spring and the fall that have really been of benefit to farmers. There are many things on the Government's record that demonstrate its interest, concern and action.

The other day I happened to look at a list of some of the things that the Minister of Agriculture has done. In fact, I have it with me here today. I found it interesting that he has had 122 accomplishments in the short period of time that he has been in Government. Dividing that by the number of months that he has been the Minister of Agriculture, we find that he has made a major decision which positively affects our farmers on an average of 10 times per month. If we consider that there is an average of 20 working days in each month, we find that every second day the Minister of Agriculture has made a major announcement which very much affects our farmers. After all of that we face the type of motion made by the Liberals who did none of those positive things in all the years they were in power.

I see that I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude my remarks very quickly. I would like to spend the rest of the afternoon just reading from the list of accomplishments of the Government. I could go on for two on for two or three hours doing that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cooper: The future of agriculture is very tenuous at this point, Mr. Speaker. It is a difficult situation which we on this side are certainly not ignoring. We are not saying that in the first year in which we have been in Government we have been able to solve those problems. We are not saying that we have accomplished everything we wanted to do. We are saying that we are listening to input from farmers so that we can act on it. The Government has done a lot, Mr. Speaker. As a Member representing an agricultural community, I am proud of the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Transport and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board because in the short time that those gentlemen have been in Government they have done so much more than the Liberals ever did. I think that they deserve to be applauded rather than criticized through a phoney motion such as the one which is before us today.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has done an admirable job of apple-polishing with his Minister, but I do not think he will convince anyone that the Government has any great commitment to agriculture. Since the Government did not put any money into the Farm Credit Corporation to lower interest rates, since it cut the budget of the Department of Agriculture by $50 million and deindexed it so that it will lose another $15 million a year, one really has to take what the Hon. Member said with a grain of salt. He told us how wonderful it is to be able to go to the Ministers of Agriculture and Transport, but he is really not getting very much. That is the problem. He speaks of the soothing noises and so on. He talked about one farmer who had, I think, a 14.5 per cent interest rate on a loan who had it reduced to 12.75 per cent. If that farmer is in the cash crop or red meat industry, can he really cope with a 12.75 per cent interest rate on a loan? As I pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the reason he was able to do the flip on loans above 14 per cent down to 12.75 per cent was that the previous Liberal Government had some $575 million in the FCC budget so that flip could take place.

I would like to see him do it today because the Department of Agriculture reduced the Farm Credit Corporation's estimates from $494 million last year to some $90 million this year. If the farmer in the Hon. Member's constituency had a 13.5 per cent or 14 per cent loan he would not have been able to offer that. He certainly cannot offer it today and the only reason he was able to get that assistance in the previous fiscal year was that the Liberal Government provided a large enough estimate to make such a flip possible.

I was interested to hear the Member say that the former Minister of Agriculture had no interest in agriculture. I have heard much criticism from the Tory Members about Eugene Whelan but I have never heard anyone, any place say that Eugene Whelan was not interested in agriculture. I think that no one worked harder, as a Member of Parliament from 1962 to 1984 or was more committed to the interests of agriculture in this country than the Hon. Eugene Whelan. I believe everyone on all sides of the House would agree with that.

The Hon. Member talked about the Farm Finances Review Board. The Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) is here today and he was very instrumental in appointing the chairman of the pilot project. I certainly want to commend the people from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and other commodity groups who took part in that project. I know some of them and I am aware of the great amount of effort they put into that pilot project.

However, after talking to people who served on the Farm Finance Review Committee, I was disturbed to hear them say that the main problem was that the Farm Credit Corporation was not willing to write down any of their loans to farmers. They said that they were stymied without the Minister's support. Although the Minister is supportive to the extent of providing some funding to set it up, he certainly was not willing to make the commitment to change the policy or regulations of the FCC to make it work.

Although the Minister has imposed a moratorium on FCC loan foreclosures, I have not seen anything that has taken place in that regard, apart from his announcement in early July that he would set up a pre-foreclosure arbiration procedure. The Minister is conducting another review of the Farm Credit Corporation policies. A rather extensive review was conducted last February and March in which we made recommendations about the farm debt crisis. Members from all sides in that committee worked very hard to recommend a series of assistance measures for farmers facing foreclosure or bankruptcy. We waited all spring for the Budget—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Hon. Member has used about eight of the ten minutes in which I would have a chance to respond to his comment. The implication of what he said is how can the Government do anything if it has not put in more money.

If the Member will consider what we have done he will see that we are getting much more for our money than his Government ever did. Who was it that was able to cut interest rates on farm credit loans? Who was able to abolish the capital gains? Who established the shared risk mortgage? Who has contributed to the Canadian economy in such a way that we have seen interest rates decrease to record lows today? We have been able to get the bang for the buck. The Minister of Agriculture and the Government have succeeded in making the best possible use of our resources. We should be proud of that record.

The Hon. Member talked about the former Minister of Agriculture and said he worked very hard. I will not deny that. I do not know what his work habits were and he may well have worked very hard. However, I think he must be measured by what he accomplished. From the point of view of what I saw him do for the Peace country, he may as well have saved his time and not bothered coming to work because it did not accomplish anything. If the Hon. Member was honest, he would admit that he is doing nothing more than nit-picking the Government because even he must be impressed with the record of our accomplishments.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is remarkable to hear a speech like that given by an Hon. Member from the Peace River country. Perhaps it makes the case for exchange visits throughut our country. I could certainly lead the Hon. Member into the pleasant countryside of Essex County and introduce him to a few poeple who would do nothing but nit-pick about the record of the Government.

This past summer we had a meeting in Essex County to look at the record of the Government for its first year and specifically at the Budget which had been brought down by the Government in May. That hall was filled with farmers who had voted Conservative and had in fact elected the first Conservative Member of Parliament from Essex County—the Essex-Kent constituency—in 25 years. There was one word stated in that hall to describe the Budget. That word was "betrayal". Those people did not whisper that word, they did not simply speak it, they shouted it. They felt that they had been betrayed on virtually every topic which led them to vote Conservative that previous September. Whether it was gas tax, support for the Department of Agriculture, whether it was a serious moratorium on farm credit, new sources of finance through agri-bonds or all those things that had led them to vote Conservative, their judgment was betrayal.

These were not people who had voted for me. They were not people to whom I felt I must listen with the special sympathy that one saves for people who were your original supporters, these were people who voted Conservative because, frankly, they believed the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I must say that they no longer believe him. They believed in a Conservative Government. I must say that they no longer believe it. They believed in the Conservative promises and that, above all, they believe no longer.

They expressed a sense of urgency which can be heard across the country. It is a sense of urgency to which the kind of partisan pot shots across the floor of the House this afternoon do not give justice. It is an urgency that cuts across partly lines and escapes partisan debate. It is an urgency that looks at the very real statistics and an urgency that sees around us in rural constituencies the human cost and the human loss, not just the kinds of losses involved if people have to accept lower wages or have their pensions decreased, but losses that represent farms slipping out of the hands of families who have held them for generations, farms which represented something very central to the whole life of people. How can one possibly bring that urgency to the House of Commons late on a Friday afternoon? Partly one can talk about the statistics and how gloomy they are.

The Farm Credit Corporation has just produced a paper which indicates that farm asset values have declined in this past year, a single year, by 12 per cent. The same Farm Credit Corporation paper demonstrates that no less than 34 per cent of Canada's farmers are facing financial stress. The analysis, to continue quoting from this paper, suggests that in Canada as well as in the United States the farm finance situation has become worse over the past 18 months. It says that this deterioration will likely continue, given current forecasts of farm prices and high international stocks of grain and livestock.

The Farm Credit Corporation itself says that payments in arrears have climbed by almost 50 per cent in the 1984-85 fiscal year up to $160 million. Let us take a look at the value of farm land, which has been the one saving grace for most farm families. We have heard farm families say, "We have a tough time making a go of it because of cash flows each year, but, my goodness, we are accumulating an asset that is growing in value." This past year farm land right across Canada has dropped in value. In Alberta, the province about which the last speaker spoke with tremendous praise for Government policy, farm prices are down by 5 per cent to 10 per cent. In southern Saskatchewan, prices have fallen 30 per cent to 35 per cent in drought-stricken areas. British Columbia has a 5 per cent to 10 per cent decrease. Even in parts of Ontario which started to see a small increase in farm prices in the early part of the year, the situation has reversed and the price of farm land is once again well below what it was at the start of the year. These decreases have taken place at a time when the general economic circumstances of the country have been getting better. The Conservatives have brought this fact before us this afternoon suggesting that it does them credit. However, it is just the reverse in the farm community, Mr. Speaker. The economy has been getting better. Interest rates in general have gone down by three percentage points. Yet, despite the fact that things in general are getting better, the situation in the farm community is getting worse. That demonstrates as clearly as you could possibly want this Government's failure to do what needs to be done in the farm sector.

If we were facing a situation of desperation in the rest of the economy and the farm sector was getting its lumps too, the Minister could rise and say "I have a tough situation to face", but things have been getting significantly better regarding outside circumstances which the Minister cannot control while the situation on the farm has gotten worse.

I shall not fall into the trap of saying that this is all the fault of 13 months of Conservative Government because this is a crisis situation which has been building up since 1981-1982. It owes as much to the past failures of the Liberal Government that came before—

Mr. Della Noce: Right.

Mr. Langdon: —as to the failures of this Government. This Government was elected on promises to change and on promises to improve. It was elected on specific promises to deal directly with the farm credit crisis.

This morning I asked the Minister about the farm credit crisis. I asked him whether he was prepared to do something about other than FCC loans. I asked him whether he would put a moratorium on them. I asked him whether he was prepared to put in place a system of judicial review of the debt situation of farmers. The Minister to his credit replied with some quite positive responses to those suggestions. He told me, and I hope I quote reasonably correctly, that action would be forthcoming of the kind I have been arguing for over the past 13 months since my election, but the Minister has been in office for 13 months. The farm crisis situation existed when he reached his office. It has got worse over the period that he has been in power, and he has no excuse when he gets up today and says action is forthcoming. Action should have taken place already.

We should have in place, at the very least, the kind of thing which the Conservative Governmention Saskatchewan has put into effect, a moratorium on farm debt and a system of review of each farm situation where debt looks likely to kick farmers off the land. At the very least, that should have been put into effect.

In May the report came from the Grey Bruce study. It very clearly recommended action at once to set up farm debt review boards. Again, I have talked personally to the Minister about this. He has expressed his sympathy, and he has expressed how favourably inclined he is to do something in this area, but he has not done it. I do not think it is because he does not want to. I think it is because his Government has priorities that are not people priorities. His Government has shown that on a weekend back in March it would move to help the Canadian Commercial Bank. In a week it moved to get $875 million into the hands of depositors of the Northland Bank and the CCB .Farmers carry the can in this Government as they have in virtually every Government since Confederation.

It was not fair in the last Government. It is not fair in the present Government. I ask back-benchers in this regime to join with us in the kind of push which we are continually making to make the Government listen to the promises enunciated by the Prime Minister before the election; to work with us to make the Government at least as sensitive to the plight of farmers as the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan; to work with us to make the Minister's voice heard more powerfully against those representatives of Bay Street like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and against those representatives of big business who frankly do not care about the small family farm; to fight with us in an attempt to get the Government to put into real priority what it put into verbal rhetoric when it sought the votes of farmers. If the Government does not act, constituencies and townships in all of Ontario that voted Conservative overwhelmingly just 13 months ago, will soon see hitting their territory the rural revolt which is so evident in my constituency. Within the last month and a half the National Farmers Union in Essex County has exploded into new life. Over 400 family members have signed up within the last 60 days. That thrust is sweeping across Ontario.

The petition which I presented to the House this morning was organized by that group of concerned farmers in Essex County. They have reached out across the Province of Ontario to all the cities, towns and communities that I enunciated when I presented my petition. They signed up thousands of people to protest the betrayal which the Government is seen as bringing to the rual parts of Ontario.

There is a threefold message that farmers are bringing to us. First, judicial debt review boards must be established to protect Canadian farmers. Second, they require urgent moves to try to get parity pricing for farm products. This is not something which is easy to do. It will require careful analysis. The House unanimously presented a Bill to the Standing Committee on Agriculture last April to explore that idea, and the Bill has sat there; nothing further has happened on it. The farmers in my county and the farmers with whom they talk right across Ontario are fed up. They want action and to be able to express their commitment to better prices for farm production. They do not want charity. They want fairness in the prices they receive. Finally, they want the trade strategy which the Government is trying to pursue with the United States to be turned into a trade strategy to protect Canadian farmers rather than leave them open to unfair competition from the United States. They feel—and I think they are absolutely right in saying it—that throwing ourselves completely open to the United States, with farm support levels there being much higher than here in Canada, will leave the Canadian farmer once more the victim of economic policy instead of its beneficiary. They want a trade strategy which gives us a fair shake in U.S. markets and gives us a chance to sell our products there without, each time we make a little progress, seeing that market swept away by unfair trade institutions in the United States.

I finish my remarks with a warning. The Opposition will continue to move motions asking for urgent action. However, if the Government fails to provide such action, it will reap its reward in the next election with a disastrous loss of constituencies right across Ontario, right across western Canada and I believe right across Quebec. We expect that the fight being made in the House of Commons on behalf of Canadian farmers will lead to us being the spokespeople for farmers after the next election. We will be the people fighting for fairness for them. We will be the people fighting against the betrayal not only of the present Government but of the past Liberal Government, a betrayal which is badly hurting the future of our farm community.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to express my views on the motion presented by our Leader.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I shall, if I may, take advantage of this opportunity to correct the question I put to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), where I said that he stated before the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs that the dairy policy would be released at the beginning of August. This should have been the Committee on Agriculture.

I shall now get back to the motion before the House. Mr. Speaker, it is truly amazing that every time a question is debated in this Chamber, no matter what the subject is or what opinion is being expressed or what the debate is about, we hear endlessly repeated: Listen, interest rates have dropped sharply, thanks to our efforts and our energetic policies. Inflation has stabilized, thanks to the measures we introduced.

And when the debate focusses on less joyous aspects and on very serious problems and situations, the blame and the responsibility are supposed to lie with the previous administration.

Yesterday, in this very same Chamber, we heard someone who, I think, is a real expert, inform us that it takes at least two years after the Budget is brought down before it can have any effect on unemployment or interest rates. This means that the present Government which has been in power for only thirteen months and which keeps saying, which keeps setting itself up as the initiator of all that is good and blaming us for what goes wrong—

I was surprised to hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) say earlier: Listen, after thirteen months in power, we have kept and acted on twelve promises out of fourteen. In his assessment, only two promises had not been kept.

● (1640)

A little later, his colleague mentioned that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had 122 achievements to his credit, and all that in thirteen months. That is what this Government and its Ministers are telling us, that is what they would have us believe, Mr. Speaker. To me, all this is absolutely apalling and light-years removed from reality. To make my point, and to do so as eloquently and as incisively as possible, I would like to make use of what I feel best represents the interests of farmers, and especially in Quebec. I am, of course, referring to La terre de chez nous, which in its August 22 edition happened to publish an article under the heading: "The conservatives: A balance sheet", in three columns with three sub-headings: "What they promised, what they say they did, and what the UPA has to say about it". I will have an opportunity to get back to this later on and people will realize that the achievements are a lot less spectacular than Hon. Members on the other side would have us believe, at least as far as Quebec is concerned.

The best way to illustrate rapidly the current agricultural situation in Quebec is to quote or read a series of headlines. I will spare you the details, but as a rule the articles are faithfully summed up in headlines, the kind of newspaper headlines we saw last summer and during the month of September, still current fare, as a matter of fact. They go like this: "Industrial milk industry in full crisis", "Milk producers fed up with cutbacks", and "Bill C-25 rejected in Quebec". Yet we are told the Bill was rushed right through in late June, that it is just the kind of measure we need, a measure which has won unanimous praise and which will have a positive impact on the agrifood sector.

After reading and discussing it with the people who are directly concerned in Quebec one can see why they consider this measure, this initiative as being a classic insult to the Quebec farming community. Here are more: "Milk producers warn Wise he might find summer's end rather warm and stormy"—referring of course to the dairy policy—"Centralized system to be operational by September 17", "Pork Producers' Federation to sue federal Government", "Ottawa and systematic hypocrisy", "Most centralizing federal legislation ever", "Minister Garon decries Ottawa's future plans for Canadian agriculture"—he is Quebec's Minister of Agriculture—"Ottawa fails to keep promise", "New dairy policy announcement delayed until November".

This afternoon the Minister told us there is no way he can unveil it before early next year.

There are Members of Parliament from Quebec in this House, but unfortunately, very few of them are here this afternoon to take part it the discussion on the major issue of agriculture. "Quebec not invited to take part in the discussions", "Quebec farmers claim they have been betrayed", "Quebec farmers will have a tough year", "Quebec more worried than ever about the Canadian agricultural policy", "The UPA up in arms", "What an injustice—The producers appeal to the Prime Minister", "Dairy producers want more support from Ottawa for the price of industrial milk", "An abundance of subsidies for Western farmers and nothing at all for Quebec", and finally, "Producers are angry". All these titles have appeared in the most popular and best-known newspaper, one which is read by thousands of Quebec farmers. That is what the people involved, those who live with this problem, think about your achievements after 13 months in power.

One after the other, the major concerns and the main commitments made by the party opposite have gone by the wayside. Each time I have had the opportunity to speak about agriculture in this House, I have always referred to the solemn commitment made by someone whom I believed responsible, the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). He promised that pork producers would receive $13 million and sheep farmers $450,000 but after waiting for months, these producers finally learned that they would never receive this money.

This was a major concern for Quebec farm producers. Another issue which was just as important was the dairy policy, about which the Members opposite said: We shall give you what you want, namely a long-term dairy policy without any cutbacks, and we shall guarantee that production costs are accounted for more reasonably and more equitably. We are now at the end of October and we are still waiting for this policy.

There was also the issue of the Farm Credit Corporation, about which all kinds of proposals and suggestions had been made. There was a reference a little while ago to bonds and to the fact that the farmers should have benefits and rates that would allow them to look at the future with some optimism. What has been done in this regard? The rates went down a few points, which benefited a few hundred farmers and producers.

There was also some concern about Bill C-155, through which the previous Government had agreed that the payments would be made to the railroads. I am speaking about the Crow's Nest rates. Once again, Members of this Government travelled throughout Quebec and used every forum available to say that this would not be changed and that the status quo would be maintained. Yet, a report has now been tabled which recommends not only that the payments not be made to the railroads, but that they be made to the farmers and producers directly. What is even more surprising is that, contrary to the previous report in which Mr. Gilson said that the money should be paid over a certain period, the most recent report, the Hall report, says that the subsidy should be paid directly to the wheat growers. This would result in absolutely incredible losses for Eastern producers, especially those in Quebec. And this is what your Government has accomplished. I am trying to be as fair and as objective as possible, in order to try and identify, among the 12 commitments referred to earlier by the Minister and the 122 apparent achievements mentioned by his colleague, something that could have been of benefit to, or could have had spinoffs for Quebec. Unfortunately, I do not see anything. I can identify practically nothing.

The Progressive Conservatives tell us, when faced with the facts, and by the way I would remind you that these are not my facts, not political facts gathered by Alain Tardif, Member of Parliament for Richmond-Wolfe. They are the facts as stated by the chief mouthpiece of all those involved in the agri-food sector in Quebec, all those who speak on behalf of those producers, that is La terre de chez nous. What are we told with respect to the results of 13 months of Government? We were told on September 4: "We have been given a clear mandate by the people of Canada." On September 4, Canadians told us: "We trust you, go ahead!" And they give a rough interpretation of that mandate. They even suggested earlier this week that such a mandate gave them the power on the one hand to liberally distribute billions of dollars to a few multinationals and on the other hand to take that money from the pockets of small-and medium-income consumers, small-and medium-income Canadians, small-and medium-income taxpayers.

Those facts that you are spreading around, that you keep repeating, they also are true in the case of the agri-food sector. And to return to what I was referring to, the article in La terre de chez nous of August 22nd, I quote the following:

Conservatives—an assessment. What they promised.

To my knowledge, your party's official spokesman in Quebec, was the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle). And what I am quoting is actually the full and word-for-word text of the commitments made by Mr. LaSalle at that time, at a meeting held in Longueuil on August 22nd, before a gathering of over 300 people.

Mr. La Salle said, and I quote:

In order to live, one has to eat, and we have realized that.

Mr. La Salle promised that his party would only establish a stabization insurance program after getting Quebec's agreement. I do not have to answer that question, you know as well as I do. You passed that legislation, relying on your vast majority, although all those concerned in Quebec, without exception, would have absolutely nothing to do with that most incredible Bill.

The Hon. Member for Joliette made commitments, as I said, concerning the $13 million. He also made formal commitments regarding a number of measures, namely the long-term dairy policy. And they summarize the commitments made by the Hon. Member for Joliette, what they say they did, and to make an assessment, here is what they say, with reference to the month of August, and I quote:

Early in the month, in the Beauce area, on the occasion of the opening of the 17th Regional Exhibition, Conservative MP Gilles Bernier issued a release entitled "No sooner said than done". The Progressive Conservative Government is fulfilling its commitments to farmers.

Now the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) has spoken in exactly the same terms as the Minister a few moments ago and he said that 14 out of 16 commitments had been implemented in connection with a series of lesser measures. This has enabled me to learn a number of things. However, I will tell you what the UPA thinks of those lesser measures disclosed by the Hon. Member for Beauce and I will quote Mr. Proulx, the director primary responsible for the UPA:

Among the things done by the Tories, the important ones are the real stakes, where the future of agriculture will be determined. They can very well give us 200 trinklets, but if you are unable to—

• (1650)

—what difference does it make? This is what Mr. Proulx is saying after this Government has been in power for a year.

Mr. Proulx says: "Trinklets, that is what you have given us. And what does farming in Quebec need? Concrete responses to serious problems.

Considering that my time is running out, I would like to point out immediately that problems dealing with farming in Quebec have not only remained unsettled but have been dragging on and unfortunately we do not see any possibility of solving them. That is for the past. But I am also concerned about the future, for it looks just as bad. During his remarks, the Minister indicated that he was considering with much interest the possible opening up of our market, adding that free trade between Canada and the United States was an interesting concept, given the fact that we export for several dozens of million dollars of goods to the United States.

The Minister is taking for granted that the elimination of trade barriers between Canada and the United States would open new markets for our farm exports. I find his attitude both disturbing and dangerous. And as evidence of this danger which is hanging over our heads, I should like to use the example of the hog production which the Minister of Agriculture himself used a few months ago. He then said: Listen, we cannot give you the $13 million, because if we did, we would face reprisals from the United States. Then, the dairy policy which is the envy of some 10, 20, or 30 countries throughout the world is subsidized.

On the basis of an argument such as the one put forward by the Minister of Agriculture, I am afraid that the announcement of the dairy policy which the Government was supposed to make last August and which has been postponed until early next year will include cuts in the subsidies currently being paid to dairy producers, because the Government feels that these cuts are necessary if we want to be able to export our farm production to the U.S. markets which it is so interested in and which are huge indeed.

Yet, I can tell you, based on consultations which I have had with people that are knowledgeable in this field, that abolishing trade barriers would be extremely risky, and the experts I met last summer told me that we would soon witness the failures of several thousands small businesses involved in egg, hog and milk production. I can hardly believe that this is the road the Minister of Agriculture is tempted to follow.

To conclude, let me tell you this: You have been elected with a very clear mandate. Deliver the goods as promised to those who trusted you and who are now expecting results, and rightly so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif). He really outlined in graphic detail the impact of the Government's lack of determination and commitment on agriculture, especially with respect to his home province, Quebec. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for a couple of clarifications.

In listening to the Hon. Member I thought I heard him mention that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. La Salle) actually signed a cheque for $13 million to the hog producers of Quebec and then reneged. Can the Hon. Member tell me if that is the case or not?

Yesterday in the House the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said that Ministers of Agriculture of four producing provinces, I believe, and he were considering a red meat stabilization program with respect to hogs and beef. I am interested to know what the impact would be on agriculture in Quebec if that province were not able to participate in the program.

Will the Hon. Member comment on the $50 million cutback in the budget of the Department of Agriculture if those funds are to be taken out of the dairy subsidy? What impact would that have on the Province of Quebec?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe for a quick answer.

Mr. Tardif: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I should like the House to know that my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) also wanted to take part in this debate, but will be unable to rise because it is already very late. I now come to the question.

The major concern or one of the major concerns was that, in the short term, hog producers wanted to get the $13 million they were entitled to in view of the very bad marked situation. Indeed, they had been deprived of that amount by the previous administration, and on that side of the House a firm, irrevocable and unequivocal commitment had been made to pay that amount of $13 million; Mr. La Salle went as faras putting his signature on a symbolic check which has never been honoured, and the producers are still waiting for those $13 million.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 5 o'clock p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that proceedings on the motion are expired in accordance with Standing Order 63(11).

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned.
