The West Has Many Tales To Telliof the Late Patrick J. On one occasion, a number of years ago, when Southern Alberta was more of a ranching country than it is today, cattle "rustlers" or thieves were numerous along the border, and the Mounted Police of the Macleod District decided to clean them out. A dozen or more persons, some caught red-handed, some of whose guilt there was little doubt, though positive proof was lacking, and others merely sus-pected, were arrested and brought to Macleod for trial. The prosecutor was Mr. M. Mackenzie, now Provincial Tressurer of Alberts, while the de-tance in the case of most of the prig.

fence, in the case of most of the pris-oners, was in the hands of the late P. J. Nolan, the widely-known Caloners, was in the hands of the late P. J. Nolan, the widely-known Calgary lawyer.

"Paddy" fought valiantly for his clients, but the evidence against them was overwhelming. One by one, eight of them, men and women, were convicted and sentenced to terms in the Stoney Mountain Penitentiary, some for stealing cattle, others for perluy. Two more, defended by another lawyer, were placed on trial and quickly convicted. "Paddy" was in court, and when the judge paused before passing sentence, he asked leave to speak. "Is your lordship sware," he asked, "that you can obtain better terms from the railroad and save money for the country if you can make up a party of ten for the little Manitoba town?"

It was in the same court that Mr. Nolan asked that the witnesses of the opposing side be excluded during examination. Among the witnesses was a very small man, clerk to the opposing counsel. He had taken an important part in preparing the case, and his exploited withdow here he is the description.

ing counsel. He had taken an important part in preparing the case, and his principal wished to have his assistance. He therefore asked the judge to allow his clerk to remain. The judge referred the matter to Mr. Nolan. "Paddy" had the clerk stand up. For a moment his eyes traveled from the head to the feet of the little man and back again. Then he turned to the bench.

man and back again. Then he turned to the bench.

"My lord," he said, "it is a well-known maxim that the law takes no notice of small things. The young man may remain."

A story of Mr. Nolan's prowess at the Bar is told in Edmonton. It seems that one of the parties to a horse trade had become dissatisfied with his bargain, and sought through the courts to recover the horse he had bartered away. "Paddy" was engaged as counsel for the defence. The chief witness for the plaintiff was a "horse doctor" who went into the witness box and swore that the animal the plaintiff had received was suffering from all manner of diseases and had little if any value.

"Paddy" cross-questioned carefully on the symptoms of the various diseases which the witness had mentioned. Then he suggested a disease himself, drawling out a formidable Greek word, "Leptosporangium."

Yee, the witness knew it perfectly self, drawling out a formidable Greek word, "Lephosporangium."

Yee, the witness knew it perfectly, and he proceeded to describe the symptoms with great circumstantiality. He made it out a dreadful disease, contagious, deadly to man and beast. "Paddy" led him on and on suggesting symptoms and having the witness accept or reject them. At length, when the "horse doctor" was quite hopelessly lost in the mase he had himself created at the lawyer's bidding, "Paddy" draggel him forth, a discrediated witness, explaining to the court that the horrible malady which had been described to them with such detail was a harmless, common fern. A mean of anguish burst from Jan's lips, and he held his face close down against Kazan's head and sobbed new like a chifd, while Kazan rubbed his bot muzzle against his cheek and his muscles hardened in a last desire to give battle to whatever was giving his master grief. It was a long fime before Jan lifted his face from the shaggy head, and when he did he knew that the last of all leve, of all companionship, of all that bound him to flesh and blood in his louely world, was gone. Kazan was dord.

From the sledge he took a blanket and wrapped Kazan in it and carried him a hundred yards back from the trail. With bowed head he came behind his four dogs into God's House. Half an hour later he turned back into the wilderness with his supplies. It was dark when he returned to where he had left Kazan. He piaced him upon the sledge, and the four huskles whined as they drugged on their burden, from which the smell of death came to them. They stopped in the four of the stop of the seen forests hexman the lake, and Jan

It was dark when he came to the nar-row plain that lay between him and the river. The sky was brilliant with stars when he slowly climbed the big barren ridge at the foot of which was his home. At the summit he stopped and seated trimself on the edge of a rock, with nothing but a thousand miles of space between him and the pale glow of the northern lights. For the first time it came upon him that this was home-that the forest and the silence and the little cabin hidden under the spruce tops below beld a deeper meaning for him than a few hours before, when Kazan was a leaping, living comrade at his side. Kazan was dead. Down there he would bury him. And he had loved Kazan. He knew now as he clutched his hands to his aching breast, that he would have fought for Kazan—giv-en up his life for him—as he would have done for a brother. Hot tears blinded Jan's eyes, and he covered his face with his hands, and sobbed as he had sobbed years before, when in the southern wilderness word came o him that Melisse was dying.

"Melisse-Melisse"— He monned her name aloud, and stared through the hot ilm in his eyes away into the north, nim in his eyes away into the north, sobbing to her, calling to her in his grief, and looking through that thousand miles of starilt space as though from out of the sweet face would come to him once more. And as he ralled there seemed to come to him from out of that space a sound, so sweet and low and tender that his heart stood will, and he stood will. eart stood still, and he stood up straight and stretched his arms up to heaven, for Jan Thoreau knew that it was the sound of a violin that came to him from out of the north-that Metisse, an infinity away, had heard his call, his prayer, and was playing for him and Kazani And suddenly as he listened his arms fell to his sides, and there shot into his syes all of the concentrated light of the stars, for the music came nearer and nearer and still nearer to him, un ill be caught Kasan in his arms and ran with him down the side of the mountain. Some one was in his cabin—living hands were playing! After all, if ing hands were playing! After all, it was not the spirit of Melisse that had come to him in the hour of his deepest grief, and a sob rose in his throat. He went on, step by step, and at the door he stopped again, wondering if he was mad, if the spirits of the forest were taunting him still, if—if— One step more— The great God, he heard it now—the up and down in the starlit edge of the forest, and Iowaka was looking at him.

"And now what do you think of your Jean de Gravois?" cried Jean for the bundredth time at least. "Now what do you think of him, my beautiful one?" And he caught Iowaka's head in his arms for the hundredth time, too, and kissed her until she pushed him away. "Was it not right for me to break my oath to the Blessed Virgin and tell Mellsse why Jan Thoreau had gone mad? Was it not right, I say? Call the boys around to watch the proceedings and get the gutter-snipe circle to gather and hot with derision; it is so very funny! Then, too, how uproarfously comical is the idea of an aged man actually having to use a walking-stick to lend support to his steps, and when Professor Leacock calls attention to the fact, what inextinguishable laughter necessarily follows! But what shall we say, or how shall we laugh in order to do justice to the wit, when he compares the same aged gentleman to a small creature of the chase? Words and cachinnation both fail us. And then the very idea of a man being old is so truly humorous anyhow!

TY COBB SUSPENDED.

DETROIT, July 16.—As a result of his dispute with Umpire Hildebrand during the Philadelphia-Detroit game Monday, Ty Cobb has been suspended. The dispute between player and umpire occurred in the inith inning. Baker, the Athletics third baseman, hit a liner to short centre field. Cobb raced in and apparently caught the ball a few inches from the ground, but Hildebrand ruled that the fielder had "Trapped" it. Cobb was so insistent that the umpire ordered him from the game.

YESTERDAY'S LEAGUE GAMES.

New York took its eighth straight game from Cincinnati, 4 to 2. Mathewson deleated, the Reds with seventy pitched bails, tying his own record. Rudolph pitched a fine game for Boston until the eleventh inning, but he blew up then and Pittsburg batted hard and won.

Pitcher Ed Walsh returned to the game, the first time since June 28, when he was forced out of the pastime on account of illness, and Chicago won from Boston, 2 to 1, after ten hard fought innings. Plank was unhittable when Detroit had men within scoring distance, and Philadelphia won, 7 to 0.

Toronto is having revenge on Montreal and the latter is steadily going down hill.

The Northern Yacht Club, North Sydney, has named an entry for the Coronation Cup, held by Scrapper II, to be sailed for at Baddeck July 26-28, thus making a fourth starter for this trophy. The others are besides the two mentioned: Shirley, Sydney, and Gem, Halifax. The Zephyr, which is at present at Glace Bay, where it is on the stocks receiving an overhauling, measures 44 feet overall, 29 waterline, and will spread about a thousand feet of sanvas. She has displacement of 28 tons and good rating. The boat will be skippered by Yorke Barrington, who will have as crew "Jim" Wilkie and "Billy" Robertson. R. A. committee will meet again on Thursday evening, July 24.

Last night's baseball match between the Red Sox and St. Peter's was called at the end of the 4th innings on account of darkness, when the score was 13-11 in St. Peter's favor. Early in the game the Red Sox got a big lead, but later the players were away off in fielding, which allowed a number of runs. Levy opened up on the mound for the Red Sox and did fairly well until the 4th, when he was replaced by D. R. Patterson, Levy going behind the bat. Synott caught Levy, and with practice would make a good backstop, his throwing being gold. Therney occupied the mound for St. Peter's and pitched his usual game. William Martin did some great work running the bases. The game will be replayed at a future date.

Natal Day will not be tag day in Dartmouth, as has been suggested, but the taggers will be around on a Saturday afternoon, the date of which has not been decided.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM BERGS

Penned Gloucester men of Labrador Schooner Quonnopowet flees by narrow channel.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., July 14.—One of the most remarkable escapes in the annals of the fisheries was related yesterday by Lapt. Daniel McDonald and the crew of Capi. Daniel McDonald and the crew of the schooner Quonnopower, of this port. The schooner left here June 9 on a fresh halbut voyage and proceeded to latitude 58, where halbut proved scarce. Captain McDonald sailed as far north as Northern Labrador, about 300 miles from the entrance of Hudson Bay. The vessel arrived July 2 and immediately set the trawls. Halbut were plentiful and 20,000 pounds were secured in one day. Up to that time comparatively no ice had been seen. At midnight of July 2, however, the watch reported an enormous leeberg coming down on the vessel. All hands aprang on deck and manned the windlass to get the schooner out of the way.

The big berg crept down on them releptilessly, and the end of the berg struck the cable, breaking it short off. The vessel then drifted down on another big berg, where she grounded. A part of the cable was thrown over a pinnacle of jee as a mooring.

As far as the eye could reach the ice-field came closing in from all sides. There were bergs of all sizes, some as small as a small house, others covering several acres amain noise, others covering several acres at their base.

To the fact that the vessel is fitted with an auxiliary engine and that one of the bergs was fissured the crew owe their lives. Through this slender avenue of open water the vessel was headed under power. When going through this fissure she grounded three times, one of the propeller blades was ripped off and the other two bent.

peller blades was ripped off and the other two bent.

Ahead was seen a series of lagoons. By hoisting the foresail and mainsail the crew managed to sail through this sinuous passage, and in about 10 hours got to wind ward of the ice field.

All the fishing gear and 250 fathoms of cable had been destroyed and the total damage was about $2000.

Capt. McDonald says he has been jammed two days in the ice, but never had such a close call as this.

WORSE THAN INCINERATOR W. P. Buckley had something to say about Maitland St.—Condition to be remedied.—
The Board of Control in session. The Board of Control dealt to-day with

The Board of Control dealt to-day with a matter that has occupied the attention of the Boards of Health and Works for several years, and that is the rear of Gottlogen and Maitland Streets and Falkland Street.

W. P. Buckley addressed the Board in a most vigorous style. He stated that filthrom Gottingen Street houses ran back to the rear of Maitland Street and also affected the yards in the rear of Gottingen Street houses ran Falkland Street houses as Falkland Street houses. As far as Falkland Street houses, he can be stated that although the incluerator might be offensive, the conditions existing in the vicinity named were even worse. It was a menace to the health of citizens in the vicinity.

Controller Hoben stated that he had gone up there this morning and the matter.

a menace to the health of citizens in the vicinity.

Controller Hoben stated that he had gone up there this morning and the matter would likely be attended to in the near future by the Board of Works. Mr. Buckley questioned the meaning of the word "likely." He remarked that four women had voted for the controller and that was the reason he delayed the matter. Deputy Mayor Powell stated that no one had a right to attack a member of the Board and he would not permit it.

Mr. Buckley stated that for five years the Board of Works had been film flaming the property owners on Maitland St. Controller Hoben stated that he had never been on the Board of Works or the Board of Health and only yesterday he received information about the matter and immediately commenced action. The attack was most unwarranted and he had never asked any women on Maitland St. to vote for him. He spent practically all his time on civic matters and he has no power to order, work done. The matter would be taken up at to night's Health Board meeting and some action would likely be taken.

Mr. Buckley stated that the City officials must be shutting their eyes to what the Tram Co. was doing. They had a couple of catch-pits in the centre of their tracks on Gottingen St., and these were too high, and consequently Falkland St. became the overland sewer.

Controller O'Connor stated that last svening he visited the rear of a house on Gottingen St., and the was unable to eat his supper, It should be remedied immediately.

The Board decided to have the filth cleaged up this afternoon, and to notify all property. Omas Rrister addressed the Board in reference to his property on Gottingen St. tase they must connect with the Gottingen St. sewer within a fortnight or the city would not permit the whole property being built on on account of the city's intention to widen the street, and therefore 23 feet of the property was set down on the official city plan. The city was willing to pay so under the street, and therefore 23 feet of the property bur Mr.

widen the street, and therefore 2s reet of the property was set down on the official city plan. The city was willing to pay so much a foot for the property but Mr. Brister stated he needed all the ground. Referred to the Engineer and Controller Hoben. Chief of Police Rudland and Controller Harris reported fixing the price for motor tax loabs at $2 per hour for a 5 passencer.

Harris reported fixing the price for motor taxf cabs at $2 per hour for a 5 passenger car and $2.50 for a 7 passenger car. L. Sweet, a taxf cab owner, stated that that amount would no more than pay expenses. It was shown that in St. John the price was $1.50 an hour, and at Montreal and Toronto, $3.

The Board decided to fix and $3.50 an hour, pro tem. rd decided to fix the price at $3 BEFORE THE STIPENDIARY.

In the police court to-day a young man admitted "borrowing" a horse and team from a livery stable. He was remanded a week for sentence.

MOST ATTRACTIVE GROCERY. U. S. AMBASSADOR TO MEXICO To proceed to Washington immediately, for a conference.

WASHINGTON, July 16.—President Wilbon to-day, after an early conference with Scoretary Bryan were the latest aspect of the Mexican situation presented by the inquiries of toreign powers as to the attitude of the United States, ordered Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, at Mexico Olity, to proceed to Washington immediately for a conference.

Ambassador Wilson will hurry north on either the battleship Michigan or Louisians from Vera Cruz if any delay would be entailed by waiting for a commercial steamer. Officials here believe that the almost total interruption of raliroad traffic between Mexico city and the United States will force the Ambassador to make his trip by water. He is not expected here before July 23 at the earliest.
It is believed in official and diplomatic circles that an important announcement of the attitude of the United States in the pending situation will follow the Ambassador's conference with the President and Secretary Bryan.

The President's action to-day following closely the unofficial announcement that some of the foreign power's which have already recognized the Herrat Government were pressing for some indications of the United States Government's attitude towards the continued disorders in Mexico, leads to that belief. mediately, for a conference. We call special attention this evening to an advertisement of Dillon Bros, one of the oldest groceries houses in Halifax. It was re-organized under the above name was re-organized under the above name in 1870 and is now a household name.

The firm's place of business is the large four-story brick and granite building at 76 to 80 Sackville St., corner of Albemarle.

The interior is one of the finest appointed and cleanest grocery stores in the city, being equipped with the most up-to-date silent salesman glass cases, fancy block enamelied bins for holding bulk goods especially made and imported from Philadelphia. These bins are made to insure cleanliness and preserve the quality of the goods. The store in general is so arranged that shelf goods show to great advantage and the four large show windows, which are always tastefully arranged, contain different lines of staple and fancy groceries, as well as fruits, vege-tables, etc. Cleanliness has always been the motto of this firm. All orders are put up in the order department separate from hoxes lying on the floor gathering dir. From this department the goods are delivered by separate entrance to the delivery waggons thus avoiding breakage and assuring prompt delivery. In addition to the town deliveries, they have two specials, one for the N. W. Arm, Jollymore Village, etc., and one for Dartmouth, both daily.

The Arm team leaves the store at 2.30 n. m. and the one for Dartmouth a little in 1870 and is now a household name.

The Widower's Quest. His quest for a suitable mother for his little daughter leads a widower to call upon quite a variety of girls. Several times he nearly caught in the matrimonial net they spread for him, but thought of the child saves him. Finally he succeeds in his search and selects the candidate put forward by his daughter. Her choice proves to be a wise one and the lady turns out to be the best mother and wife in the world. Such is the story of "The Widower's Quest," a Vitagraph photoplay to be shown at the Orpheus to-day. The quality of the pictures shown at this theatre is known to be always good, and this one is by no means an exception to the rule. It is one of the most pleasing that has been seen for a long while. AN UNIQUE AND VALUABLE EX-HIBITION.

Dr. William Windsor, President of the Boston College of Vitosophy, whose course of lectures on Phrenology is an nounced for several nights at Masonic Hall, carries with him a carload of extraordinary curiosities, which will be placed on free exhibition at Masonic Hall during the entire term of the doctor's visit to Halifax. The exhibition will consist of a number of oil paintings of heroic size, illustrating the resemblances of men and omen to various types of animals, fruits and minerals, a magnificent brain chart showing the location of the various mensnowing the toestion of the various mental faculties and types of temperament and development, indications of talents and deficiencies, etc. This collection of paintings is supplemented with a wonderful collection of skulls of various types of animals and human beings, all of which illustrate some great truth in human science. Here are found skulls of various men renowned for their good and evil deeds, and the sclence of phrenology explains why these deeds were committed by these men and what may be expected of other men having similarly shaped heads. The collection contains some very fine specimens of natural history, including an exceptionally fine specimen of the

SOUTH BANS AS EVERS OME EFFORTS OF BRITISH M.P.

IN THE REALM OF VERSE.

estminster is Scarcely a Source of Inspiration to Bards Bet Some Very Clever Squibs Have Emanated From the Legislators-Sir Georg Trevelyan, Mr. Warton and Lord

There is little in the atmosphere of the British House of Commons to inspire the Muse of Poetry. But Westminster has had its poets as well as its wits; and their efforts, if not inspired, have often been amusing. Forty years and more have gone sime Sir George Trevelyan wrote his diverting "Fragment after the Manner of an old Athenian Comedy." The scene is laid in Berkeley Square, where congregate a number of ladies, to whom Lady Matilda speaks:—

I think we've just enough to form And, as for Speaker, I have seldom More proper person than our friend Selina. Gay: But where's the wig?
Leady Matilda: She's got one Another witty rhymester, still well remembered, was Mr. Warton, who, when Mr. Pickering Phipps, a brewer, and member for South Northamptonshire, broke his leg while going down on his knees in family prayer, broke the weare there.

lips, Wrestled with Satan, Pickering These amusing, if not very reverent ines, Mr. Childers promptly capped with the following:

In Pickering Phipp's case discern A lesson it were well to learn; 'Tis not enough our prayers to say, For we must watch as well as pray. It was Mr. Warton, too, who wrote these lines on the "Three F's." of which so much was heard in debates on an early Irish Land Bill:— Frand to steal what's not their own; Forced to keep all they can bone; Folly sees no crime thus shown;

Frand and Force and Folly. In his callow days, as member of Parliament, Lord John Manners thus ruminated in verse:—

I thought of sinners' awful doom,
My fiesh began to creep;
I wished myself again at home,
I wished I were asleep. Which drew this rejoinder from Palm-

For once with Johnny I agree— But still I do not weep— For when he stays from home speak, I'm glad to drop asleep!

On one occasion, however, the "honors" were with the poetical Lord John; for when Bright, in a spirit of banter and ridicule, quoted the well-known couplet:— Let wealth and commerce, laws and learning die, But leave us still our old nobility— But leave us still our old nobility—the young aristocrat retorted: "I would sooner be the foolish young man who wrote those lines than the malignant old man who quoted them."

But the "poet" whose Muse has been the most constant joy to our legislators was Sir Wilfrid Lawson, genial wit and apostle of temperance, who penned reams of humorous verse during his long Parliamentary career.
It was Sir Wilfrid who wrote the following epitaph on a feeble member of the other House:—

Stay, traveler, for there lies below The noble Duke of So-and-so; Obedient to the Heavenly Will, His son makes laws for England still! When Mr. C. H. Wilson, M.P. for West Hull, sbstained from having a house party for Doncaster races ow-ing to the evils of betting, Sir Wilfrid wrote to him:—

bet, But Wilson and Lawson will deal with them yet. And happier days will be begun When Bung and the Bookmaker scut-tle and run.

Allowed To Die. The problem of the hunger strike, which has again been discussed in the British House, was not unknown in the seventeenth century. Then, however, it was allowed to solve itself.

John Evelyn in 1656 found martyrs to their beliefs in Ipswich, and entered the fight and its sequel in his diary.

It was Robert Louis Stevenson who paid this tribute to J. M. Barrie in a letter, written to Henry James in 1892. This was when the modest author and dramatist had several books to his credit, and some time after he had been "discovered" by Sir William Robertson Nicoll, editor of The British Weekly, who, having been attracted by the articles Barrie was writing for the Edinburgh Evening Despatch, commissioned him to contribute to The British Weekly, under the pen-name of "Gavin Ogilvy."

Barrie wrote twelve columns a week for a salary of £2 15s. 4d. He had asked three pounds a week. "H'm!" said the senior proprietor; "that will be twelve pounds a month." "Barrie was a spendthrift in generosity," says Mr. H. G. Hibbert, who was sub-editor in charge of The Journal at the time, "but he never forgave this ingenious reduction of a suggested three pounds per week to an actual two pounds fifteen and fourpence."

week to an actual two pounds fifteen and fourpence."

According to Mr. Hibbert, the new baronet's first play was written on approval for Minnie Paimer, and was called "Polly's Dilemms," and his first bit of fiction was published in Bow Bells-"twenty thousand words of succulent sentiment for which he got three guineas." A striking contrast to the hundreds of thousands of pounds which he has since made out of his books and plays. "The Little Minister," in its dramatic form alohe, is said to have dramatic form alohe, is said to have brought him in a fortune of £50,000, and no doubt the ever-green "Feter Pan" has far exceeded that amount. As a schoolboy Barrie displayed his fondness for drama and hiterature. At Dumfries Academy he started a journal, wrote little plays, and took a prominent part in the cast, elways undertaking a female character. And when at Nottingham he would, on the slightest provocation give an imitation of Irving as Romeo and Modipska as Juliet.

But then, as now, he was very shy and very reserved.

Sir James was the second of ten children, and has made his mother, "Margaret Ogilvy," a living character in his stories. "All that I am my mother made me," he says, and many incidents occurred in the little cottage at Kirriemuir ("Thrums") where he was born which illustrates, the great bond of affection which united mother and son.

On the few occasions he has appeared at public gatherings, Sir James has been sparing of his eloquence. At a dinner given at the Authors' Club to Mr. P. F. Warner, Barrie remarked that he had only seen Mr. Warner batting twice. "The first time he made one; the second time he was not so successful." Widening Cunard Street. Inder authority Chapter 70. Use of Earguards.

The earguards usually worn by Lieut. Wodehouse, captain of the English rugby team, recall the story told in connection with the two young ladies who for the first time saw a footballer wearing them.

"Whatever is he wearing those funny flaps over his ears for?" one of them wanted to know.

The other hadn't a ghost of an idea, but as she desired to convey the impression that she knew all about it, she reguled at once, "Oh, that's so that he won't hear what the others say when he kicks them." A Remarkable Drive.

The old edge, "early to bed, early to rise," has never appealed to Mr. Balfour, and unlike most Sectamen, he is a late riser. When the late Lord Lothian succeeded Mr. Balfour at the Scotch Office, he was surprised to come across a bill which had been sent in for the supply of breakfast crockery. On investigating the matter he found that Mr. Balfour came down to his office at the latest possible hour, and had his breakfast served to him as he transacted business. june24 Siew tl july27 inc Delicateness Dept At COURTNEY'S.

AFRICA'S HORRIBLE SNAKES.

Which Keep Traders and Natives Everlastingly on Anxious Seat.
Whether Australia, India or Africa is the worst place in the world for poisonous snakes, the last-named is quite bad enough. In equatorial East Africa one must always scrutinize the ground cantiously before spreading a blanket for a seat or bed, and the natives have acquired a remarkable keenness of vision in detecting deadly reptiles, which usually resemble the vegetation of their haunts. On the other hand, the non-venomous kinds are often most conspicuous, as, Everlastingly on Anxious Seat. the other hand, the non-venomous kinds are often most conspicuous, as, for instance, the naru, which has a white skin, marked with blood-red stripes, being the only known example of a white snake.

The poisonous ones occur in trees and shrubbery as well as on the ground, and there is a black one which lurks in holes in trees and in anthills, where it kills many negro honey-gatherers. Another is a mottled gray, and it accounts for the death of large numbers of cattle and goats. A trader not long ago found one seven feet long ensconced in the hollow base of an elephant tusk in his warchouse, and thought it worth while to pull the whole place to pieces to make sure there were no others like it in the immediate viccinity.

others like it in the immediate vicinity.

The infamous and widespread puffadder has a way of creeping for warmth into the blankets of sleeping men. An elephant hunter relates that one rainy, chilly night in German East Africa he had wrapped himself in his blankets and was falling asleep when he realized that a snake had crept into his bed and between his legs. In this horrible predicament, where his slightest movement probably meant his death, he kept his wits about him, and, explaining the situation to his men, bade them very carefully lift away the covering. This they did, disclosing a large puff-adder. The men then gently placed their hands under his shoulders and, with a quick, strong heave, dragged him out of danger.

a quick, strong heave, dragged him out of danger.

A small black-and-white cobra is much dreaded because it leaps from the tall grass at men or animals passing. Still more difficult to guard against are certain large greenish snakes which lie in wait on the branches of trees overhanging a path and strike downward; they are almost invisible in the foliage.

Science Among Savages.

Whilst lecturing on atoms at the Royal Institution, London, Sir Joseph Thomson alluded to an extraordinary method for obtaining firs that was practiced by at least two savage tribes—a method in which compressed air was used.

Sir Joseph had just been explaining how intense cold could be produced by suddenly expanding air, and how equally intense heat could be caused by compressing it. "It is one of the most extraordinary things in connection with the habits of savage races," he continued, "that at least two tribes use this method to get fire. It is an extremely difficult problem to know how ever they got hold of the idea. I am quite sure they did not obtain it from lectures on physics; so it must have come from some kind of practical experience."

must have come from some sind of practical experience."

Even with special apparatus it was not easy to accomplish the feat in a laboratory. One could easily understand how men had discovered that stand how men had discovered that branches rubbing together sometimes caught fire. This would give the idea of rubbing sticks together, but so highly complex an operation as mak-ing fire by compressing air could hardly have been copied from any natural absorptions.

The only thing he could think of was that these tribes must have been accustoned to shoot their arrows from blow pipes. If one of these wooden tubes got obstructed, it was conceivable that vigorous efforts to dislodge the obstruction would cause the blow pipe, or some part of it, to take fire.

Mr. Ernest Wild, K.C., of London, Eng., when addressing a meeting of the Metropolitan Nursing Association had a couple of amusing incidents to had a couple of amusing incidents to relate.

One concerned a nurse who being summoned to a house heard loud shrieks of pain as she entered, and noticed a strong smell of vinegar. Dashing upstairs she found a policoman in bed with pneumonia. His wife had concocted a brew of boiling vinegar and linseed, and was lading the mixture straight out of the pot on to the unfortunate invalid's chest. The pneumonia was cured long enough before the burns.

In another case a woman suffered from blood poisoning in the face, and when asked how it happened, confessed she had "a few words" with another woman, who bit her. She went to another woman, who advised her to apply a dead mole to the wound. She could not find a dead mole, so she applied a dead rat!

she applied a dead rat!

Not Much of a Gentleman. The geniality of the Duke of Portland often has amusing results. He is in the habit of chatting with the attendants and gillies on his Scotch estates, and on one occasion he asked a gillie who had attended a certain noble guest what he thought of that sentleman. noble guest what he thought of that gentleman.

"Weel, sir," was the reply, "he's very weel as a shot, an' a good hand at sa'mon, but he's nairrow."

"How's that? I always thought he was very liberal!" said his grace.

"Och! weel, it's just this way," replied the man. "The ither day when he shot a stag he asked me if I wad tak a dram, an' I said 'Yes.' He began poorin' oot the whisky into the cup, an' by way o' being genteel, I says 'Stop!'—an', dash it, he stopped. Aye, he's rale nairrow."

The "Dead Man's Handle." It would be impossible on the London (Eng.) "Tube" railways for a train to proceed unchecked owing to the driver fainting, as has just happened in Paris. The so-called "dead man's handle" would automatically out off the current directly the motorman let go of the controller.
