The Music of the Stars.

After the strife of the day, There comes in the hush of night, Adown through measured space From eternal spheres of light, A rhythm divinely sweet As if God had touched the bars, And nature thrills and thrills again
With the music of the stars.

After our dreams that were dear Have gone in the twilight mist—Alack through numberless years When hope and love first kissed—In memory we live once more And the song that on earth note mar, At evening fills our souls again
With the music of the stars.

The Master of the Mine.

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN.

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued.

Once on the summit, we rested again, while some of the men went in chase of a moor pony, one of several grazing on the moor by. When
it was scoured, and bridled and bited with a stout rope, I lifted her upon it, and placed the black girl by her side; and thus, still holding her and walking by her side, while the men followed behind like a procession, I conducted her to our cottage, and handed her over to the care of my kind aunt.

Thus God, in a mysterious fashion, had restored to me the being who had been to me for so many years a sweet memory and a delightful vision. I felt strangely happy, yet troubled; unable yet to realize what had taken place. When my aunt had led Madeline to a chamber up-stairs, where she tended her with motherly sympathy and tenderness, I sat in the kitchen, waiting and wondering, like one in a dream.

CHAPTER XIV.

It seemed as if the days of my boy-hood had come back to me. Never since then had I experienced such feelings as now filled my heart, for with her fading they had faded, and during the years of our separation I had passed my time with tolerable tranquillity; but now that she had been so miraculously restored to me, the old fire was rekindled in my soul, and I became another man.

Her very presence in the house that night drove away all thoughts of sleep.

I paced my room with restless footsteps, and when the dawn broke I hurried off to the shore.

What a change had come! The wind had died, the sea was like glass, and the only sound left of the storm was the wreckage which was being cut upon the sands. Early as I was, there were others before me, gazing eagerly seaward, and searching along the cliffs for a prize.

I took a walk round by the mine, and, having made a hasty inspection, I hurried back to the cottage, eagerly hoping, yet half-dreading, to see Madeline. But I was disappointed. My uncle had gone to his work. My aunt was busy, but alone. I looked round the kitchen, and my heart gave a great throb. After all, the events of the past night were real. There, hanging beside the fire, was the cloak—a rich mantle of silk and fur—which had been clinging round Madeline's form when I took her from the wreck.

I inquired eagerly for Madeline.
"Have you seen her, aunt?" I asked.

"Is she well? How does she look?" I suppose there was something peculiar in my manner, for my aunt gazed at me curiously, and said, "Who be she, Hugh? Dost know who she be?"

"Yes," I replied; she is Miss Madeline Graham. She was at school with me long ago. Just before my father died she left, and I have never seen her since."

At that moment the door opened, and the figure of the black woman appeared. In the light of day she looked foreign indeed—a slight, delicate girl, shivering with the cold of our climate. I asked her how her mistress did. She made no answer, but stared vacantly at me; and I then discovered that she knew no language but the one in which she had spoken to Madeline. I looked at my aunt, and she understood—the west herself into the bedroom to see how her guest was getting on.

She was away only a few minutes yet it seemed to me an hour. When she came back, she smiled at my anxious look.

"It be all right, lad, it be all right," she said. "The lady be awn the ward o' her waiting; but she be tired, and will stave in bed to-day. She be a pratty creature, Hugh, and rich, I dare say; for her fingers be covered w' diamond rings."

All that day, overcome by the fatigue through which she had passed, Madeline remained in her chamber; while I, utterly unable to work, hung like a restless spirit about the house.
The next morning she awoke refreshed; and when we three sat at breakfast, she astonished us all by appearing amongst us, fully dressed, and looking bright and well.

Her advent caused a general exclamation; my aunt ran forward to her assistance; my uncle placed our most comfortable chair beside the fire; while I, dumb and powerless, stood in the background doing nothing. Madeline! Could this be Madeline?—the little girl I had dreamed of all these years, whose hands had been covered with my passionate kisses and marked with my tears, and who had even wept a little herself at parting with me; could this be the same?—this glorious creature, with dreamy black eyes, warm brown skin, and glorious black hair! Her form was tall and straight as a willow; she moved like a queen!

As all her own clothes had been lost in the wreck, she wore a dress of my aunt's; over it she had thrown the cloak which she had worn on the wreck, and which was now thoroughly dried. She came forward languidly, leaning on the shoulder of her black attendant, and sank down into a chair, while my uncle had placed for her, while the native began saying and kissing her hands. They spoke together in the foreign tongue; then Madeline raised her eyes and looked quietly around. All this while I had been standing in the background, longing, yet dreading to speak to her; for I saw clearly enough that to her all the past was forgotten; but now, as her eyes swept the room and finally rested with a look of recognition on my face, I felt the hot blood mount to my temples.

"Am I mistaken?" she asked, softly; "did you take me for some other woman?"

Her very presence in the house that wreck?" I bowed my head. In a moment all her languor disappeared, the old fire darted from her eyes, the old flush scuffed her cheeks—she was the Madeline of my childhood once more.

She looked at her hands, with one quick movement pulled off the most valuable of her rings, and held it to ward me.

"Will you not take it?" she said, with a bright smile. "You saved my life."

Her whole manner was that of a lady speaking to an inferior. Under my excitement I hardly noticed it.
Scarcely knowing what I did, I sprang forward and took the ring; then, eagerly kissing her hand, I placed it again upon her finger.

"Madeline," I said, "don't you know me? Madeline—Miss Graham?"

"She looked at me more critically, and shook her head.

"Have you forgotten Munster's?" I said, "and Hugh Trelawney?"

If I expected a wild outburst of pleasure at the mention of my own name, I was quickly disappointed.
She only smiled; and, with her eyes fixed upon vacancy as if she was reviewing the past, said, "Munster's? Hugh Trelawney?"

Oh, yes; of course I remember now!
Hugh Trelawney was the nicest of Munster boys, and we were friends; but," she added, fixing her eyes anxiously upon me, surely you are not that boy?"

"Yes," I replied, "I am Hugh Trelawney!"

Her eyes opened wider, she glanced from me to my uncle and aunt, then round the kitchen, then she was silent.

I felt that some explanation was due to her, and I gave it. I told her of my father's death—of the kindness of my uncle and aunt; and of my subsequent life at St. Gurlott's.

"St. Gurlott's?" she said. "Is this St. Gurlott's in Cornwall?"

I answered in the affirmative.

"Then I have an aunt living in a place of that name," she continued.
"Perhaps you may know her; her name is Redruth."

"Lard a mussy! wha, that be our master's mother!" broke in my aunt.
But I added,

"Are you sure it's the same, Miss Graham? This Mrs Redruth has a son who owns the mine."

"Yes, I know—my cousin George!" she answered; while my heart misgave me at the familiar manner in which she mentioned the name. "Oh, it must be the same," she continued, enthusiastically; "and to think I should be shipwrecked here, of all places in the world! Mr Trelawney, are they far away? Would it be possible to let them know that I am here?"

"It will be quite possible. Shall I take a message?"

"Will you be so kind? Perhaps if you tell her the story and show her this," she continued, drawing a quaint signet ring from her finger, "my aunt will come to me. This was my dear father's ring, and she knew it well, for he always wore it—and he had it on even when he died!"

I took the ring from her hand and started off on my mission.

The events of the last few hours had made me a changed being. I began to wonder if it was all real; whether I had really seen Madeline, and whether the one real romance of my life had been ruthlessly swept away. It was clear to me now that she thought little of the past, and cared for it even less. While I had been living upon the memory of those dear days, she had let other events obliterate it entirely from her mind. Well, it was clear I must do the same. I must deliver her up to the custody of her relations as coldly as if she were a stranger who had casually been cast in my path for a day.

Having made my decision, I became calmer, and walked with a steady step up to Redruth House. I inquired for the young master; learned that he had left for London two days before. I asked for the mistress, and she saw me.
She listened to my story quietly enough; when I showed her the ring, her white face flushed, her hand trembled, and her eyes filled with tears.

"It is my brother's, my poor brother's," she said, more to herself than to me; then she added, "My niece is at your cottage, you say?"

"Yes, Madame."

"Tell her I will come to her at once."

I left the house and, instead of returning to the cottage, walked straight down to the mine. Where was the use of my returning to Madeline; to stand by and see that grim and stony-hearted woman bring to her queasily eyes the light of happiness, to her lips the cry of joy, which the sight of my face had failed to do? No; such a sight might have roused all that was bad in my nature. I was better away.

All day I worked with a fierce persistence which alarmed me. I looked at myself in my mining suit, then recalled Madeline as I had seen her that morning—with her soft hands sparkling with gems, and the black servant crouching at her feet—and realized more than ever the distance that divided us from one another.

She was the mistress, born to command; I the servant, whose business it was to obey.

I returned home in the evening, and found the cottage much the same as it had always been. Madeline was gone.

"She be up at Redruth House, Hugh," said my aunt. "The awd missus came and took her away, and right glad she was to go, poor lass!"

She showed me a five-pound note which Madeline had given her, borrowing it from her aunt to do so. She put the note into an old work-box where most of her treasures were kept, and set about getting the tea, imagining that the romance of last night's wreck had ended.

CHAPTER XV.

For some days after that, I saw nothing whatever of Madeline; indeed, so close was she kept in the great house that she might never have existed at all. I began to think that she had taken her departure from Cornwall; but I was wrong. One day, the seventh from that on which the life-boat had brought Madeline to shore, I made a minute inspection of the mine, which every day grew more dangerous, and came up from my work covered with filth from head to foot. I had passed the last ladder, and stood on terra firma, at the mouth of the mine, dazzled by the quick transformation from pitch darkness to broad daylight, when my ears were struck by the sound of a voice which passed like sudden music through my frame. I rubbed my eyes and looked about me, and there, not far from where I stood, was my old sweetheart. She was dressed now in an elegant costume of gray, which fitted her to perfection; a little hat with long plumes was on her head, and her face, looking lovelier than ever, glowed and sparkled in the light; with her rich brown skin and sparkling black eyes, her erect carriage, graceful tread, she looked like some Eastern Princess! She was walking toward the spot where I stood; George Redruth was beside her; while behind followed the black girl, Anita, her dark eyes fixed upon her mistress. This sudden encounter had so unnerved me that, for a moment, it deprived me of the power both of speech and motion.

Quickly recovering myself, however, I was about to move away, and so avoid embarrassment, when the master's voice arrested me.

"Trelawney," he said; "one moment." I paused.

"Yes, sir."

"Miss Graham wishes to go down the mine. I tell her it is impossible.
What do you say? Is it fit for a lady?"

I was about to reply when Madeline interposed.

"Don't worry about it, George," she said; "I've abandoned the idea." Then, stepping up to me, she held forth her little gloved hand. I bowed over it, but did not take it, giving as an excuse that I was not fit to approach her.

"I daresay you were in quite as forlorn a condition the other morning when you snatched me from the wreck," she said; "yet you did not hesitate then, when your own life was in peril. Mr Trelawney, take my hand."

I did as she requested, I clasped the little hand in both of mine and raised it respectfully to my lips. In doing so I caught a glimpse of George Redruth's face; it was black as (the pit mouth.

"Now, my dear Madeline," he said, impatiently, "shall we go back?"

But Madeline was not ready, or perhaps she was too imperious to be so ordered by her cousin. She had abandoned all intention of descending the mine; but she was nevertheless anxious to inspect the outside of it.

"But you can go," she said. "Mr Trelawney will escort me."

"Nonsense!" returned her cousin.
"Trelawney has got his work to attend to. I will stay."

And he did stay for fully two hours; at the end of which time she allowed him to take her away.

Three other days passed without a sign from her; then I encountered her again. It was in the evening, when I was walking home. This time she was alone; except for the servant, who walked at a respectful distance behind her. She came up to me unreservedly, and again held forth her hand.

Having shaken hands with her, I paused, not very well knowing what to do; when she helped me.

"I came to walk back with you," she said. "Do you mind?"

"I mind?" I repeated in amazement. "You forget, Miss Graham, I is an honor for me to walk beside you."

She gave a little impatient toss of her head, and we walked on together.
For some time not a word was spoken, but I felt that she was watching me keenly. Presently she said,

"Do you know what I have been doing, Mr Trelawney?"

"No."

"I have been trying to find in you one trace of the boy I know, years ago, at Munster's—and I have failed."

"I don't understand."

"No? Well, I will explain. The boy I knew was kind to me; frank, open-hearted, generous. You are somewhat unfriendly; reserved, harsh, and, if I may say so, churlish. Why are you so changed?"

"I am not changed, Miss Graham; or, if I am, it is but with the tide of fortune, which has ebbed and not flowed with me since we met before.
When we were at Munster's I believed we were equals, but now—"

"Yes; now—"

"You are Miss Madeline Graham; I am the overseer of your cousin's mine."

"Then you wish us to remain as strangers?"

"I think it would be better."

"Ah! you are crueler than I thought; if you will not accept my friendship for the sake of the old days when we were boys and girls together, you will at least have some pity upon me. I am lonely and among strangers here. You seem like an old friend. If you will suffer me to talk to you sometimes it will make my stay here more pleasant."

Her pleading won the day, and we became friends. I never went to Redruth House, and she never came to the cottage. I never sought her, but quite innocently and frankly she sought me. We often met on the moor when, after my long day's work, I was making my way home, and I could not regard these meetings as purely accidental on her part.
She was always accompanied by the black girl, until one evening, when she appeared alone.

CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., OCT. 27, 1899.

Editorial Notes.

Cruel war is now raging in South Africa. Newspaper reports chronicle brilliant successes for British arms, but severe losses of life have been met with by both sides.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. are making extensive arrangements for the meeting of the provincial union which takes place in this town on Nov. 6-8.

The custom of jumping on and off moving trains at and about the railway station, though a dangerous one, is one that is altogether too common.

Nova Scotia's contribution to the Canadian contingent left Halifax on Wednesday for Quebec, en route for the battle fields of South Africa. It comprises 140 officers and men, ten of whom are from this county.

Attention is directed to the change in the date of the public meeting to discuss the town building project from the 6th of November to the 13th.

For some time past there has been altogether too much roadway apparatus on our streets and around our public places during the evening.

The international yacht race, after a great many unsuccessful attempts, was finished on Friday last, the Columbia winning in three straight trials.

In 1833 gold was discovered in the Truro vein, and in 1884 the value of the gold production was about $50,000.

Road's English Tonic Powder for horses and cattle. The largest package and the best article in the market.

Will Be Expelled From College.

The Faculty of the University of New Brunswick, have decided upon the expulsion of five students, on account of their treatment of the Freshmen on the night of the ladies' reception to that class.

Upper Dike Village and Vicinity. Farmers have pretty well finished their harvesting and are feeling well satisfied with the results of their summer's work.

On Friday evening last a crokinole party was held at the home of Mr and Mrs Everett Kinsman, Centreville, when a most enjoyable time was spent.

A Crokinole Club is being organized by a number of the ladies and gentlemen of this place. It will meet on Monday evenings at the homes of the members.

The new parsonage in Berwick completed some weeks ago, and occupied by the pastor and his family, was formally dedicated on Thursday evening of last week.

The Provincial Normal School opened on Wednesday of last week with the largest attendance for years. The largest attendance was 189. The "A," "B" and "D" classes that come in at this period already number 134, with more to arrive on Monday.

Lewisport, a few miles from Sheet Harbor, owing to the starting of the pig factory, has had a mushroom growth. Twelve months ago it had no existence and received its name from the enterprising owner of the factory.

Lord Strathcona has telegraphed that the Imperial war office wants two thousand tons of Canadian hay delivered at Capetown before Christmas.

RHEUMATISM CURED.

I feel it to be a duty as well as a pleasure to say what OZONE has done for me. I had suffered intensely for seventeen years by Acute Rheumatism.

Nova Scotia Sabbath School Association.

The fifteenth annual convention of the Nova Scotia Sunday school association was held in Springhill, Tuesday to Thursday, October 10-12.

The principal new business done was the endorsement by the convention of a proposal of the executive committee that a summer school be held next summer for Sunday school teachers and workers.

The convention was invited to meet next year at Dartmouth. Invitation accepted with thanks.

The following officers were elected: President—E. L. Thorne, Dartmouth. 1st Vice-president—George A. MacDonald, Halifax.

The Provincial Exhibition. The statement of admission to the Nova Scotia Provincial Exhibition is as follows: Admission through terminals at main entrance: Adults, 35,814; children, 5,903.
