The Reafons and the Principles

BYTHE AUTHOR OF Confderations on the Meafures carrying on with Refpect to the Britib Colonies in North-America.

An Englifh Whig can never be fo unjuft to his Country and to right Reafon, as not to be of opinion ; that in all civil Commotions, which Side foever is the wrongtul Aggreffor, is accountable for all the evil Confequences.

> Lord Molefworth's Prefac: to Franco-Galia.

In one and the fame Nation, when the fundamental Principles of their Union are fuppofed to be invaded . . . . . the only Tribunal to which the Complainants can appeal is that of the God of Battles, the only Procets by which the Appeal can ke carried on is that of a civil and intefthe War.

THE writer was not aware to what a length his work would run; until it had been fome time in the prefs. He prefumes however to publifh it; now that it is printed. The pubiic will no doubt find the proper remedy for its bulk by being no more troulled with it'; than they pleafe. Some very material altorations have happened in our Amerioan affairs ; fince that it was firft in the printer's hands. Certain accounts are come of the Provincials having made themfelves. mafters of Fort St. John's, Chamblee and Montreal in Canada and of their approach ing or befieging Quebec. Our people likewife appeat to häve burnt fonte places and to have attempted moreon the fea-coaft. Thefe things affect the fubject before us and efpecially with refpect to the terms of peace and of accommodation. The Reader is therefore defired to make in his mind allowance for this change of circumftances.

A  FURTHER EXAMINATION.

THE writer of the following papers has before troubled the public concerning our prefent civil contention : neither his words nor they of wifer than him were then heard; our affairs are from being at thofe times bad become now much worfe: thefe increafing difficulties do but too well warrant an individual to offer once more his humble fentiments on the fubject: the counfels of thofe at the helm have hitherto not been fo fuccefsful as to preclude all other from being propofed. Let us a little look back upon our hiftory. We and our colonies of North-America were lately in the utmoft harmony and tranquillity: the fame ftate might have continued, if that our minifters could have been conB tented tented with it : they began to trouble it about the tea: that circumftance gave rife to fome diftafts and difturbances: thefe were pretended to require the fending of Ships and of troops, the overturning of charters, the ftopping up of ports and the taking away the inqueit of blood in the country, where they happened. Fleets and armies are not always the beft peacemakers nor oppreffion the fureft cure for diflatisfaction. Thefe means much increafed the mifchief. Our minifters thereupon repeated and heighitened their remedies. We fent more men of war and more regiments having found fuch very ill effects from thofe, which went before: we ftrived to farve the people there by preventing their procuring provifions, which proved but an unlucky manner of reconciling them to us; we forbad them their trade and their fifheries; by which means we drew from their leaders to ourfelves the difcontents arifing from the reftraints upon their commerce : We contrived to make the conteft a common caufe and quarrel of all our colonies, whereby we exceedingly weakened ourfelves and ftrengthened to the greateft degree the league againft us ; if any application cation came from them or from any of the firft men of our country on their behalf we anfwered it with rejection, left they fhould flacken or fufpend their operations from any hopes and expectations of peace. We have by this very extraordinary conduct brought on an open, an avowed, a declared civil war with thirteen colonies of that continent united and combined together againft us. We have fown the feed, we have nurfed, have watered, have raifed and reared the plant; the tree is now come to its maturity, we find it to bear bitter fruit naufeous to the palate and noxious to the health; we pretend to complain of the owners of the foil ; but the whole nation both at home and abroad muft fwallow down the poifonous produce, that our political quacks may have the profit and the benefit of adminiftring it. This is the American fcene. The fame minifters have fown the dragon's teeth in our fettlements of the Eaft-Indies and are dooming to famine and to diftrefs our illands of the Weft ; Ireland is difcontented and impoverifhed; Spain is armed; France is Arengthening and recovering; the nation at home is defponding of its condition and finking under its B 2 burthens, burthens. We are in the mean time not to confider which way we came into thefe perplexities and difficulties; we are not to return and to retreat by treading our fteps backwards; we are to go on becaufe we have got fo far ; our having begun at firft with folly and with madnefs is an unanfwer ble reafon for our proceeding with fury and with defperation.

[ 4 ]

All the old and the mutual ties, the union, the conjunction between GreatBritain and our ancient North-America are now cut, fevered and diffolved: acts of parliament, acts of affembly, orders of council, charters are between us become only a dead letter and wafte paper: the authority of the mother-country on the one hand and the duty of our colonies on the other are totally and abfolutely cancelled: our protection is changed into war and into wafte towards them and their dependence into refiftance and into a return of hoftility towards us: The dominion of Great-Britain over rich and vaft territories fo lately her own extends now no further than our cannon can command: we have parted with our prodigious poffeffions on that continent only for the hopes and the proipect of conquering quering them again; they are in future ali to be recovered by the dint of the fword and the puhn of the pike; the next relation or conditions between us muft be juft, as the chance of arms fhall decide and determine ; but what ought moft nearly to concern us, we have parted with a people who have for ages paft been to us moft cordial, as countrymen; moft affectionate, as friends; moft faithful, as allies; moft dutiful, as defcendants and dependants; and, what fome may value above all, moft profitable and moft beneficial, as inhabitants of our provinces. All confiderations of intereft difcarded out of the queftion, can any man but be moved with the reflection of our ingratitude and our infenfibility towards this community, who have certainly deferved after a very different manner at our hands? If ftatefmen and minifters muft be made of ftuff fit for fuch meafures; God grant to me and to mine an humble life, in which we may preferve fome remains and fenfations of humanity!

Let us however banifh all thefe foolifh feelings of the human breaft; let us leave the mean fubject of morality to cafuifts or to philofophers; let us confider our prefent proceedings in the light only of policy and of ambition, the fuperior objects of the great and the fublime firits, with whom we are going to reafon and to argue. We are told by thofe the beft informed, that this country contains three millions of fouls. All due allowances therefore made for flaves or for any others not to be taken into our account, there will on that number remain not fo few as four hündred thoufand fighting or fenciblemen. Their popular forms of government fuffer, and enable them to arm all thefe: they are now in fact availing themfelves of that advantage; they are turning their whole country and continent into foldiery. We were before told what might be expected on this head: it gained then no credit: we fhail now bid fair to believe our own eyes. Thefe are circumftances, which majorities cannot at the command of a minifter confirm or over-rule, as they pleafe. Here is at our outfet fome fmall impediment in the way: four hundred thoufand are a great many throats to cut of men able, ready and willing to defend themfelves. Thefe fame people are likewife maftirs upon the fpot and of every thing there.

[ 8 ]

[ 9 ]

there. Their towns, their houfes and their other buildings provide them with barracks; their wives and their children ferve them for futlers; their herds and their flocks furnif their provifion : They are affifted with all there things and the conteft is for them. Their defertions muft be almoft, as if trees were to defert their forefts, they having in like mianner been by the hand of nature planted and rooted, where they are. They are free and they fight to be free. Their governments partake of the principles, which magnified Greece and Rome and which made their citizens the firft foldiers ever known in the world. They will both in council and in action be conducted by the beft and the ableft men; which their continent contains and will fupply for the purpofe. Their country is one general and natural fortrefs, the defence of which its natives well underfand. Should they with all thefe advantages ftand in need of help from abroad, they will not fail to find it; as furely, as that we have the moft potent: nations upon the globe for conftant and for inveterate rivals whether with regard to Europe, to Africa, to Alid or to this very America; I fay, as furely; as that B 4 France

France ever poffeffed Canada or Louifiana or that Spain ever held or claimed Florida. I am forry to ank, whether there is not on their fide another affiftance befides not yet mentioned; which is the juftice of their caufe and its influence on the affairs of men. The anceftors of thefe people led by the general protection of Providence left formerly their native homes to avoid tyranny, cruelty and perfecution: they placed themfeives in thefe wilds and thefe waftes, which their defcendants now enjoy and winhabit: their innocerice, their defire of good order and of peace guarded and preferved them : their temperance, their frugality, their induftry procured them plenty, property and various forts of poffeffions. Is not it to be expected, that the fame benevolent and all-protecting Power will extend his hand and his fhield over them in this (as they think) juftorjufteft of caufus and in a contention not. of ambition, not of oppreffion, not of rapacioufnefs on their part, but a due defence of therebleffings and thefe benefits thus defervedly acquired or conferred upon them; I donot prefume to fignify by any immediate miracles or any fpecial interpofition, but by the means of thofe moft excellent, thofe moft wife, thofe univerfal laws, which perpetually preferve and maintain the happinefs and the harmony of the whole world?

So much for the party to be conquered, let us next confider the conquerors. The force now voted and fpoken of as deftined for that purpofe is twenty-five thoufand men upon paper; twenty-five thoufand men for all America including the WeftIndia Iflands, the two Floridas, Canada and Nova-Scotia and taking credit for the troops now at Bofton and elfewhere of that country to make a part of them after efcaping Warhington, the winter and all other chances. Such is the prefent apparent project and eftimate. This body is however not yet collected: It is to be recruited from all countries and all quarters and much the greater part is then to fail more than three thoufand miles to the fcene of action. Does any one imagine, that North-America will ever fee twenty thoufand of thefe men at a time? Whoever does is right fit to make a minifter of ftate in a country, that I know. There twenty thoufand paper men however, what a prodigious power are they againft four hundred hundred thoufand already and actually upon the fpot! We were laft year in conteft with Maffachufets-bay only: we fent againft them between four and five thoufand men. It need nc' now be defcribed how thefe were confined, immured and half ftarved in the town of Bofton by the fuperior forces of that one fingle colony. Twenty thoufand men are neverthelefs to dowonders againft thirteen colonies, which is lefs than fixteeri hundred againft each. What a wife and a deep policy and how much to be depended upon for the fubduing of America? Will any Alexander of ours have much occafion to weep for another world or even another quarter of one to conquer? Forty thoufand men, half Europeans and half Americans, directed by counfels very unlike ours of thefe days were employed at land in the late conqueft of Canada. But what was that province? The incomparable act of Parliameat lately planned and pafled for its regulation informs us, that it confifted at its reduction of fixty-five thoufand French inhabitants, not to attribute however too much to that authority, but to talke them atone hundred thoufand, (which is as many as they were or more) one hundred thoufand inhabitants, men, women and children made up in no fmall meafure of priefts and weakened with monafteries, what comparifon or proportion do that number and ftrength bear to the millions occupying our thirteen colonies and affording above four hundred thoufand men for their defence? How long did neverthelefs their fmall militia without the aid of France prevented by a ftrong fleet from affifting them baffle all our efforts and our endeavours? May the fhades of Braddock and of Abercrombie and of others reft in peace for me; who do not defire to difturb them again on this fubject! Thefe twenty thoufand men upon paper are then to be fed from England and from our fleet, to be lodged and to be covered, as they can ; to be recruited and to be reinforced at three thoufand miles diftance; to be in conftant danger of their undoing by every little defeat or adverfity; to contend with a new and a difficult climate, men fighting for a few pence a day, inlifted in fervice for life, victims of the lanh and of other military torments and liable on the other fide to be inftead of thefe things tempted with lands and with liberty. I may appeal to experience, for how much our former armies there have on thefe accounts been weakened by death, difeafe and defertion. The extenfive kingdom of France may invade the liberty of a fmall neighbouring Ifland inhabited by a barbarous people having no government, no union, no regular means of refiftance, although the oppreffors are there faid to be fometimes fick of their work: Spain might with its guns, its horfes and its dogs make havoc among the poor and the helplefs natives of Mexico and of Peru; but it never was and it may by the bleffing of God perhaps never be known, that a nation or an army of flaves fubdued a free people fairly and properly prepared for their defence. This is inconfiftent with the whole hiftory of the world : the eminent conquefts and acquifitions among mankind, the rife and the ruin of empires have ever proceeded in a contrary courfe. With regard to the Government or the Adminiftration by whofe counfels this attempt is to be guided and conducted, I fhall only obferve; that it is the fame, which has in fo fhort a face brought us out of our paft into our prefent ftate; which has planned aind has executed and whofe prudence and whofe policy we have fo amply experienced in the American meafures of thefe times. Having taken notice of the caufe againft us, I ought tr make with it fome comparifon of our own; but to fpill the blood, to fpoil and to plunder, to lay wafte with fire and with fword the habitations of a people, from whom we have received almoft unfpeakable profit and benefit, who gave to us a rich and a great country planted and improved at the cort and the hazard of themfelves, who never entertained towards us a thought or a meaning of mifchief, who, when our own fquabbles or impatience or ambition and not their defires hurried us into war, have fo often combated under our banners and contributed to our expences; is, I fay, furely a fervice, at which the heart of every humane man in our army muft turn and revolt. All mankind will condemn us and our minifters and will compaffionate our oppreffed countrymen : the hand of God and of man is on every part to be expected againft us. With fuch difadvantages as to the means, with fuch circumftances as to the caufe, order muft be inverted and diftraction muft govern the world; rivers muft run backwards; right mult become wrong and wrong become right ; itrength muft be weaknefs and weaknefs beftrength; juftice and oppreffion, humanity and tyranny had need to change their nature with each other, before that our admini, ftration can in the prefent conteft conquer or prevail over our colonies. The allcommanding, univerfal influence has for the performance ( ${ }^{\text {h }}$ his purpofes no occalon to call fire from Heaven, monfters from the deep or famine from the earth; every creature, every event, every caufe, every effect and with the reft the follies and the vices, the actions and the paffions of men are conftantly executing his will and his laws nor is there among all the means of wrecking the wrath and the vengeance of Heaven againft an unfortunate nation deftined to deftruction perhaps any one worfe or furer than a weak and a corrupt government.

Our navy however rides triumphant; we make acts of parliament at land and we execute them upon the ocean according to our pleafure, I fhall not content myfelf with anfwering to this, that our fleet cannot fail over the continent nor our flips bombard woods and fwamps; as experience may by this time have convinced us, if reafon was before infufficient for that end; but I defire to touch on this fubject a new* ftring, which has hitherto been hardly founded. Is it fuppofed impoffible, that we may be molefted even upon that element, where we believe ourfelves fo much mafters? The ftates of Barbary have no commerce or poffeflions abroad ; they are therefore invulnerable in thofe refpects. They keep fhips of war and no other; by which means they make more prifoners from thofe on whom they prey, than thefe do in return from them. They are at land on their own ground the ftrongeft. Thefe particulars enable that people to impore a tribute upon every maritime power of Eu-. rope, Great-Britain not excepted; a tribute exacted of all by force and paid by all againft their inclinations. We all of us term them piratical ftates, but none treat them as fuch, which we fhould undoubtedly do, if we durft. The ports of the Americans being thut up and their trade prohibited; they will with refpect to us be under the fame or on their fide more advantageous circumftances: why will it then not be in their power to act likewife

[^0]likewife the fame part towards us ? They have creeks and bays which our veffels will not be able to vifit : we may pronounce them pirates or rebels or what we pleafe ; they will hold themfelves for independent ftates and will proceed as fuch: we may threaten them with the laws of our land and they will anfwer with thofe of reprifal. Our minifters have in a very fhort time brought us out of the moft profound peace into the worft of civil wars; it is to be hoped, that they will not for their next ftep make this a war without quarter; which feems one of the very few means left them for adding to its mifchief and its malignity. I don't mean, that I depend on the mercy or the compaffion of fome men; but the number of captives will probably be in that care againft us and the outcry on their blood too ftrong at home to be withftood. The Spaniards and the Portuguefe went that way to work with the Dutch; until that thefe made them to repent of their proceedings: they threw in return and in retaliation over-board into the fea hip's companies of their enemies at once in the Eaft-Indies. God forbid, that we fhould ever read or hear fuch horrid relations between Great-Britain and her colonies; the very fuppofition of which is fufficient to make the blood of any Englifhman to run backward or his hair to fland upright. How long did private perfons unavowed and unaffifted by any public ftate carry on in the Weft-Indies a buccaneering war againft the Spaniards and how feverely did thefe feel the effects of it? Have not we by forbidding the American feamen their peaceable commerce and fifheries driven them, as it were, purpofely and by force into privateers? How many thoufands of them are there by fuch means at this moment ready, earneft, eager, watching and almoft under a neceffity to embrace any employment and opportunity of that fort, which may arife or offer themfelves: I will not now inquire, whether they will want the affiftance of Britifh feamen; whether no part of thefe may join in plundering our merchants under American colours ; what ports and in what parts of the world will probably be open to them; whether the Eafl-India Company may not one day have reafon to repent and to rue their fhare of thefe mifchiefs. Does any one doubt but that a powerful refiftance to Great-Britain and a more than equal C contention contention with her will foon give thefe ftates a confequence and a countenance among nations? W - it long before that our Commonwealth of England, as it was called, acquired a confideration with the powers and the empires of Europe? Did not fuccefs and advantage carry in a very fhort time the Dutch in their conteft with Spain far beyond what they thought of or hoped for themfelves in the beginning? How might fome minifters ftart and ftare were they to be told, that North-America may poffibly become fuperior by fea to Great-Britain ; before that they fhall in the name of Great-Britain, have by land or by any other means conquered NorthAmerica; fuperior by fea to Great-Britain (if our ifland fhall continue united) or to England, if the two parts of it fhall by our future misfortuncs and through thefe m:ferable meafures be once more feparated; I fay, North-America now not miftrefs of one fhip of war in the world and GreatBritain queen at this time of the ocean and the ftrongeft maritime nation, that has hitherto appeared among mankind. What a comparifon and how ftrange a difproportion! But how many moft material events have already fallen out very differently from the opinions and the e pectations of thofe, who have conde:ted our counfels? What prodigies and miracles in mifchief have by them been performed within the fmall compafs of two years! Have they not loft, revolted, thrown away all our ancient North-America in lefs than that time? This prodigious naval power of ours now moft juftly making fuch an impreffion on our minds, who knows, whether it may long fubfift under our prefent proceedings and how little do fome men feem to confider from whence it has arifen and whereon it refts? I will not now enter into that field; it is a very wide one : it may comprehend not only certain late acts of parliament relating to the Newfoundland, the Labrador and to other fifheries, but likewife many more diftant circumftances and perhaps the whole circle of the minifterial fyftem. Should any one be on this head inclined to impeach the writer of prefumption or of extravagance; I fhall only anfwer. that there does not appear more caufe, more reafon to expect fuccefs from the prefent wild attempts and projects of fuch a conqueft; than thefe give ground and foundation to apprehend, that the C 2 other other probability or poffibility may by their neans be brought about and take place not to-day or to-morrow, but within fome moderate diftance of time nor can I but obferve that the plain and the proper method to prevent or to avoid both" thefe extiemities mult be by an immediate accommodation and peace.

We wii however ranfack the earth on this occation rather than to be frufrated of our ends and if we cannot for our purpofe furnifh fufficient forces from home we will hire them from abroad or we will confide to foreigners our domeftic defence, while we facrifice our own people beyond the Atlantic. Does then any one imagine, that our colonies will not find luring this conteft as many and as confiderable refources in their favour, as our minifters are mafters of to turn and to employ againft them? Is the progrefs of thefe unhappy broils probable to be more on our fide, than the beginning of them has been; at which moment our attempt might have bern expected to make fome imprefion, if it ever hould? A few thoufands of men were fent and went at firfor ons errand, as if there had been little more to do than to difperfe a tumult in the ftreets. They were cooped up and befieged in Bofton one whole year for their pains. Thefe not humbling America to our minds, we multiplicd them to their prefent complement, which it was not doubted would do the bufinefs. We have not however made much more way by that means: the provincials poured down and encamped thereupon their numbers in proportion. Our troops marched one day about a dozen miles into the country and were well pleared to come home with better fpeed, than they went out. We have in two campaigns fo far proceeded towards the conqueft of America. The Provincials now befiege our people with about eighteen thoufand men in their lines; they keep nearly as many more cantoned in the fame colony and within call; they are faid to have in all not lefs than one hundred and fifty thoufand armed and muitered: they can and they will have more, if they want : thefe however feem fully fufficient to face, to confine, to controu! any power likely to be formed and to be brought againft them on our part ; they will neverthelefs not burthen unneceflarily their country, but will be called forth into the field and into action, C 3 accordingly

accordingly as the occafion and the ftrength of their enemies fhall require. Is not it evident to every one that the further we have hitherto proceeded in this affair, our object is but the more removed and the more diftant from us; that our provinces (I don't know, whether it is permitted me to term them the thirteen united provinces, but it may not be long, before that bigger and better thari the writer will ftile them by that title; unlefs that we fhall without delay take proper methods and very different from thofe hitherto purfued to prevent it) but, I fay, is it not moft evident, that they have improved and have fortified themfelves in their defence much fafter and more effectually, than we have gained and have advanced upon them in our attack ? Even Georgia fpurns at us and has jcined our enemies, while we are become proud of the friendfhip and the attachment of Nova-Scotia; whom we do ourfelves in a manner nourifh and maintain. America is now in the middle of a long and a frong winter. This is a time and a feafon of advantage given to the natives by Providence: what events it may produce, no one yet knows; but paft experience will explain to us, how how it is probable, that they may employ the opportunity and whether it is to be expected, that they will be well prepared and ftrengthened by the Spring. Are we fure, that even their ports and their coafts upon the fea will be always fo open and fo expofed to us, as they have hitherto been? Thefe are in themfelves certainly very ferious confiderations; is it however lawful for the adminiftration to introduce at will foreign forces into Gibraltar and Port-Mahon? Can the King of Great-Britain give and grant thefe im+ portant poffeffions to Hanover and make them part and parcel of that electorate? They were purchafed at a prodigious expence of the blood and the treafure of this country and were the only prizes of a very victorious war pretended at leaft to have been carried on in fupport of the proteftant fucceffion and re they after all not the public property of the nation, but the private patrimony of the prince? In what light muft the people and the fubject be looked upon, if that could be the cafe? A queftion of the like nature is faid to have on the occafion of a certain letter in the time of King George the Firft been determined on the national fide. If therefore fuch a prepofterous power is clearly and undoubtedly beyond the jurifdiction of the crown; does not it of neceffity follow, that neither can his Majefty's minifters take thefe fortreffes out of the hands of our nation and deliver them into thofe of the other? I fpeak this with refpect to that electorate remaining under the dominion of our King; but fuppofe, that the Emperor of Germany or the King of Pruffia fhould in a fit of ill-humour or of ambition feize upon Hanover; who would then have Gibraltar and Port-Mahon, if they were garrifoned from thence? Would not he, who commanded the country, who was matter of the wives and the families, of the eftates and the concerns, of thofe, who had the cuftody of them? It may be obferved, that there will inotwithftanding this introduction of ftrangers remain for the prefent at leait rather more Britons than Germans. But whoever is without the confent and the conctrrence of our legiflature intitled to fend thither one company of fuch troops, muft likewife be fo to do the fame by more; no bounds or particular number of men or of regiments can in that refpect be pointed out and pre-. fcribed.

foribed. A greater proportion may more abfolutely deftroy, but a leffer will weaken our fecurity. It is an utter abfurdity and almoft bordering upon ridicule to fay; that the King is obliged to preferic to Great-Britain the right, but that his minifters may at their pleafure part with to another people the poffeflion of thofe places. If we cannot be lawfully deprived of the pofts themfelves, fo neither can we of the means neceffary to hold and to retain them : thefe two circumftances are in the prefent cafe and of their own nature infeparably connected and united. There is alfo a report of twenty thoufand Ruffians defigned for America itfelf: that will be a prodigy indeed! Are then fome of thefe to be raifed in the neighbourhood of Kamchatfka within three days fail of the eaftern coaft of America, to march over Ruffia and along-fide of Afia, to fail through Europe, to pais by Africa and at length to land again on the oppofite and the moft diftant part of America and to wage war there, as it were, with their antipodes; with a people againft whom they have fo little caufe or pretence of quarrel; that perhaps hardly ever did a native of thefe newly-planted territories fet his foot in the vaft empire of Mufcovy or a Ruffian vifit thefe weftern regions of the world, until that now being urged and inftigated by a Britifh adminiftration they fhall have gone thither on this moft unjuft and moft inhuman errand. How are they to be there recruited, affifted and fupported with a good part of the globe between them and their own nation? Murt they not melt away like fnow in the fun, whofe place is no more feen or fupplied? Is this then the manner, in which our minifters make their conquefts? Muft heaven and earth be thus moved againft a people, who were within thefe three years in perfect fubmiffion and obedience to us? In fubmiffion and in obedience do I fay? who were united to us by the moft cordial friendihip, affection and attachment. How muft the creft fink and the pride and the honour be humbled of Great-Britain in that moiment, when we fhall be feen under the neceffity to employ Ruffian troops arid Ruffian armies for the fubduing to us our own provinces; we who have for many years paft been the firft and the foremoft to meddle in every idle fquabble, which could arife in any part of Europe and between whatfoever nations? Muft not we from that time become obfequious flaves of the court and the Emprefs of Peterfburgh ? Will our peace fubfift, but at their pleafure? Muft not our navies and our armies be at their devotion, if any fuch fhall remain to us? If we have an intereft there, why is not it employed to promote our trade and our commerce or will it not be very fufficiently wanted for that end? What ftar reigns, that we muft turn to our ruin and our deftruction, even our few benefits and advantages? Will Ruffia itfelf make fuch a return to our nation, as to facrifice our country to the paffions of our court? Fortune and France are however faid to have faved us from this infatuation, when our own prudence and difcretion would not have done it; France that fignifies herfelf to be fo friendly and fo peaceable, that would not for the world have a finger in thefe mifchiefs, that fome men feem to think would hardly accept again of Canada; if it was offered to her. Let that report however be better or worfe founded, as it may; let any fuch circumftances happen fooner: or later, (for happen undoubtedly they will and probably at fome conjuncture chofen chofen by our enemies, if that thefe things proceed) Should we however fend Englifh, Scotch, Irifh, Dutch, Canadians, Indians, Hanoverians, Heffians, Rufians, and as many more nations to wafte from ene end to the other with fire and with fword and with the worft horrors and havoc of war that whole continent fo lately our own, of what bencfit would all this be to Great-Britain? We had lately a monopoly of the commerce of the Americans; we have already obliged them to lay it open to all nations; we are now fighting to force an exclufion againft ourfelves; we are endeavouring to drive them into fome new patronage and protection; this is the only poffible end of our pains, thould we by all thefe ftrange means make upon them much more impreflion, than there is the leaft appearance or probability of our being able to do. Is the poor wretch chained and confined to his cell upon clean ftraw in Bedlam poffefled with more madnefs, than are thefe our own moft extravagant fchemes and projects, meafures and mifchiefs? This is however not all, that I have to fay on the fubject. There is in the way another obftacle, an other impediment, more fatal, more difficult, ficult, more unfurmountable; than even any thing before mentioned, if that is eaffily pofitible. All thefe expenfive plans, thefe violent and fuiced efforts will only ferve to haften the independence of the provinces and our own undoing. It is not by the downright dint of arms and the decifion of many bloody battles, but by a failure of our revenue; that the prefent conteft will probably come to its conclufion. Twenty thourand men may make more wafte and fooil in our provinces, than ten and thirty, than twenty; but no numbers will be equal to the conquett of that great, united continent; which we are capable to provide and to pay. Our minifters will want Hanoverian, Heflian and Ruffian finances, as well as the forces of thofe nations; for they feem already to be very nearly arrived to the extremity of thofe of Great-Britain. Let us for an inftant confider the fate of our revenue, if that the height, the horror and the confufion of thefe affairs will allow us leifure and patience. The public accounts run from one Lady-day to another. There were at Lady-day laft due from the Sinking Fund about nine hundred thoufand pounds, with which were difcharged eight eight hundred and eighty thoufand in three per cent annuities. This fum fhould rather have been ufed to reduce the debt of the navy, which was increafed fix hundred and fifty thoufand pounds or upwards within thefe three years and which amounted at Chriftmas laft to above eighteen hundred thoufand; but we were proud of appearing to pay off our principal. Let us however not criticife too itrictly this circumflance. We are in no great danger of running again into the fame error. This looks like the laft inflance of the kind. We have now in twelve years of peace paid off according to the utmont pretenfions on that head and before thefe late expences, as much as we incurred in nine months of the laft war. And here we may in all appearance make up and clofe that whole account. No man now borin may probably ever fee fuch another fum difcharged of the Britifh national debt: this feems to have been the feal on the fubject. Thus however was concluded the account of the Sinking Fund ending at Lady-day 1775. We then took for the fervice of the current year upon the credit of that fund, upon its future growing produce fupp ofed to arife.

[ 3r.]

between Lady-day laft and Lady-day 1776 two millions wanting one hundred thoufand pounds. That with the taxes of the land and the malt were our ways and means for this year. But what were thefe things in the hands of minifters bent on campaigns and conquefts? They fpent laft fummer fuch prodigious fums for the public good; as made it in order to procure more money for the fame purpofe neceffary to affeinble the parliament earlier this winter, than was perhaps ever before known in our annals. That body accordingly met and paffed without delay the land tax at four fhillings in the pound. It is not the cuftom of adminiftration to ftay for the flow and the quarterly produce of this tax ; but the Bank immediately advances at a certain intereft money to the whole amount and takes is again, as it comes in by degrees. The wants, the debts and the demands were ready before. Thus is now in the year one thoufand feven hundred and feventy-five, that high and heavy tax at its full extent of four fhillings mortgaged, fpent and gone, as far as Lady-day feventeen hundred and feventy-feven inclufive. Never was fuch an anticipation hitherto known oi attenpted; but he is a poor minifter; who does not improve on thofe that went before him. We have now probably approaching anotise mot expentive year, likely far to out-go even the laft in extravagance. There remains to anfwer all only the malt tax affording t.uree quarters of a million and this poor hackneyed horfe the Sinking Fund encumbered with nineteen hundred thoufand pounds before poken of and futtering by the defalcation to be expected from the actual condition of our aftairs and of which no man yet knows the extent. Thus fands in grofs the ftate of the revenue at this day, all explanatory accounts and papers being denied. Some fervices may and no doubt will be run behind; means may poflibly be found for anticipating yet further the Sinking Fund; thefe things however wiil have an ead : they cannot laft long. Our next ftep muft be to borrow ; but how to make that practicable may puzzle all the wifion even of our prefent minifters. How great a contumon of our infinite funds now lubfifing may be then expect ed! What will be our figure, when we appear aguin before the face of all Europe akneg in the olf ftrain for more millions upon millions at intereft? Our moft enormous incumbrance already incurred with out the leaft appearance of being ever paid off, our actual and moft critical fituation brought on wantonly and perfifted in obftinately, the evident danger of the very fountain of our revenue drying up and failing will then all operate and have their full force and effect. The going to market again for money is the particular circumftance, which our adminiftration had from the beginning efpecial caufe to fear and to avoid. What fhall I fay, that our fate forces us or that we run with our eyes open upon the rock, where we cannot but be wrecked ? There is no other ftage beyond this of borrowing, but a ftoppage in paying the intereft of our public debt or in plain Erglifh a national bankruptcy. The whole frame of our government will in that day fhake to its very foundation. I do not pretend now to go to the bottom of this fubject: more has in another place been faid upon it. (See Confiderations, &c. page 96.) I proteft however, that I do not write down thefe words upon my paper without being not only fhocked for the fake of the public, but likewife utterly amazed at the madnefs of our minifters; fully fatisfied and confident in my own mind, as I am; that they are according to their prefent courfe going hreadlong upon that point and in all appearance without the seaft queftion, feruple, confideration or hefitation in themfelves; when they had at the beginning no temptation or provocation towards it ; when they might perfectly well have ftopped in their progrefs and ever might at this moment poffibly do fo yet, if they truly and fincerel, defired and endeavoured it: I fay perhaps might yet do it; although the time and the opportunity permitted to us by Providence for that purpofe appear to be now drawing to a very fhort period. However unconcerned fome men may be about their country, have they no thought for themfelves? Should our public funds buift like an immenfe bomb, will not the fplinters ftrike thofe, who ftand the neareft? What muft in fuch a conjuncture be the cafe and the ftate of a firft minifter? It may perhaps be replied; I will then refign my place and will fay, that the repeal of the ftampact made the mifchief or that it proceeded from fome long-concerted fcheme of the colonies; men may perhars be even then found

But is fuch language, the idle prattle of a parcel of children playing about kingdoms and empires or the ferious difcourfe of perfons, who have undertaken to conduct the fate and on whofe every motion, action, meafure deperds the happinefs or the mifery of many millions of mankind? Can this great empire tumble without crufhing in its ruin thofe whofe poft, whofe province and whofe duty it is to prop and to fupport it; but who do on the contrary by their mifconduct and thei: mifmanagement bring it down? Ruin will however not reft there. It has pleafed the Almighty Governor of the vorld in his tranfcendent wifdom to connect the concerns of the wife and the weak, of the provident and the defperate. It behoves for his own fake and his own fafety every man to concur according to his power in the prefervation of his country: he will otherwife infallibly find himfelf involved in its fate. This cannot in our cafe be compafled but by the moft prudent and the moft difcreet means: we had not been, where we now are, if that wildnefs and madnefs would have wrought it. This Ruffian meafure is on the contrary the meer, the hopelefs impulfe of refentment and of rage, of difappointment and of defpair: it can poffibly contribute to no end, but that of our own undoing.

There is however one affiftance, of which it would be unreafonable to refufe the full force to thofe, who have provided and procured it. It is to be hoped, that the addrefles will be preferved containing the fincere and the difinterefted proffers of many lives and fortunes on this occafion. Men now fo forward will no doubt in cafe of exigency be perfectly ready to perform their words: they will at leaft offer themfelves for the firft facrifice; if any public misfortunes fhall follow in confequence of their arvice and their defires. Have they then well onfidered; whether it is wife to caf combuftibles on a fire, which al. ready threatens to confume the whole Britith empire? Counfels and profeffions refpesting a point of this extreme moment can furcly never be meant to gain only a littic temporary court favour and then to be without further reflection forgotten or given to the wind? But however that may be; let their authors well beware, that thefe things do not bring in time to come moft ferious mifchiefs on them and on theirs; that they never haunt them in their fleep and in their beds, unlefs their hearts fhall be fteeled and be hardened againtt every poffible calamity of their country: Are they fure, that it will be long before they fhall have reafon to repent with tears of blood the meafures; which they are now perhaps, but idly and wantonly recommending?

We have likewife been told ; that military difcipline is irrefiftible and that the Americans neither have nor can have on account of their equality among themfelves any fuch thing. The matter of fact furnifhes us here with the moft proper reply. This point however having on the prefent occafion been much vaunted and fpoken of and the writer being one, who profeffes himfelf as yet to learn any fingle circumftance wherein fervitude is fuperior to freedom, he defires to offer foime obfervations on the fubject. I cannot perfwade myfelf to believe, that true, D 3 real real, proper military difcipline confifts in blows and in ftripes, in tyrannical laws and cruel executions, in the pride of the officer and the abjectnefs of the foldier or that it is not equally compatible with liberty, as with flavery or much more fo. The art of war has in fact ever flourifhed moft in free ftates. When the clear and the autheritic accounts of hiftorians begin on that fubject, Greece excelled in it; whofe liberty vill not be difputed : that people being reduced: fubdued by one another, it paffed to $\mathrm{N}_{1}$.cedonia, a bordering of in a larger fenfe another Grecian nation, gos verned by Kings, but not defpotically: their two celebrated leaders Philip and Alexander were captains general of Greece: the army was compofed of a mixture of Macedonian and of Grecian troops, with which the latter performed his great exploits and fubjected Ægypt, Afia and India. This ftate however foon funk into abfolute fervitude. The military art then fet up its ftandard in Rome, equally famous for its freedom and for its moft extenfive empire acquired by conqueft. The Roman legions were enrolled in the city; their generals and their chief officers were chofen by the people: their armies were often formed and led in a hort time againf the enemy. The ftory of Scipio is well known, who prepared and who difciplined his troops in Sicily one fummer, who carried them over into Africa and gained. there great victories the fame year and who overcame Hannibal and conquered Carthage the next. The Roman commanders had after the difbanding of their armies the firt and the nobleft boons ever: conferred among men to ank of their foldiers in the capacity of citizens. When this miftrefs and pride of the world felt the fate of all human inftitutions and was, enflaved in her turn, her martial fame followed her freedom: conquett and fuccefs in war were transferred to divers barbarous people far inferior to the Romans: in other refpects, but fuperior by their liberty. In thefe latter times and fince the fettlement of Europe by thofe northern nations the inhabitants of no particular fpot appear to have had on this head any very remarkable and commanding pre-eminence above the reft of mankind. The Englifh have however been much diftinguifhed for their civil conftitution, in which a part is preferved to the public and the community; that thefe are in almoft every other country deprived of. The influence of this freedom has accordingly been found and felt in our military affairs. We have had many bloody contefts and battles with a neighbouring nation more practifed and more experienced in arms than ourfelves; but whofe pulle is fuppofed not to have beat fo high for liberty nor whofe form of government afforded them the fame thare of it. The effects correfponded to their caufe. No people have within a certain number of centuries perhaps gained in the field greater or more fignal victories than have our own on thofe occafions; witnefs with many others Creffy; Poiticis, Agincourt; victories in which Englifhmen often glory and that undoubtedly proceeded from different grounds, than from numerous and mercenary armies then maintained and trained among us in time of peace. But fhould ever Britons in the chance and the change of things firt lofe their own liberty at home and then fight to deprive others of theirs abroad; it may be depended upon, that we fhall ourfelves add one more bis inftance to the very many already experiences, of how much men and nations are by flavery demeaned and debafed bafed in military, as well as in every other virtue. May however heaven defend us from affording in our days an example to the world of fo unhappy and fo unfit a reverfe! Thefe ftates of America vie with the freeft in freedom: what reafon is there then, that they may not likewife rival the moft warlike in the art of war ; if they fhall turn their views and their endeavours that way? They are faid to have already introduced means of offence in fighting and in battle hitherto unknown or unpractifed among Europeans and fuch as we are ourfelves at this time preparing to imitate. I don't hereby mean to fignify, that fuch views and fuch endeavours are defirable or recommendable. It may be neceflary for them to maintain and to continue in time to come the general mufter of their country, as their beft defence againft both foreign foes and any domeftic defigns of ambitious men among themfelves ; but it is for their own happinefs and for that of the human fpecies to be hoped ; that they will feek their greatnefs and their riches not by conqueft and by mifchief, but by peace and by com. merce; whenever they fhall become a perfectly free, felf-governed, independent people; people: which fate feems to be fooner c. ${ }^{\text {later }}$ preparing for them; later if we coald continue contented with the prodigious benefits formerly and hitherto received from them; but fooner and perhaps immediately, if nothing fhall remove or reftrain the prefent raging madnefs of our minifters.

But it has been the farhion to fignify, that the Americans are cowards and poltroons and that therefore it matters not what numbers or what difcipline they may have: I dare fay, that their own inftant anfwer to this will be; let then better and braver men than ourfelves win our country and wear it, if that is the cafe : they will no doubt readily fling down the gauntlet on this fubject. They have however given to it another yet fuller and more effectual reply, which is by their behaviour itfelf. This reflection will hardly be again repeated; but is not it very extraordinary; that fuch a general, an injnrious and in itfelf an incredible and an improbable charge fhould have been fuggefted refpecting thefe numerous communities of men without one lingle fact being in confirmation of it produced or faftened upon them among all the vafous events and occurrences of the lace war, throughout which our and their troops almoft conftantly acted together both on the continent and in the iflands of the Weft-Indies; I fay, without its being fupported or confirmed by any one fact of that kind hitherto known or heard of? As to the fuccefsful fiege of Louifbourg and their making themfelves maf ters of Cape-Breton in the war before, an expedition undertaken, performed and until now at leaft ever remembered highly to their honour and which afforded us the only acquifition, that we had to part with at the enfuing peace; they could be in no very great danger of finking or of fuffering under that infamy of that affair ; but they muft on the contrary have furely been much flattered, when they found their enemies forced to produce their victories and their conquefts to prove their poltroonery and their cowardice. I don't hereby mean to exprefs, that all the things were really faid in public, which may on this fubject have fometimes been reported; but the particular reafon of my now introducing this circumftance on the fcene is, that it feems impoffible to account for all the extreme frangenefs of our conduct except on the ground, that fome men did feriounly fuppofe, believe and proceed upon a principle, that the American militia would never have the valour to face our forces in the field, however they might perhaps vapour and fpeak big at a diftance; as if our colours had carried with them an irrefiftible virtue and magic, like what has fometimes been attributed to the flandard of Mahomet or to banners bleffed by the Pope. How muft any man capable of the leaft pity for the public be moved; if the fate and the welfare of this great, but ill-governed country have actually been flaked on any fuch childif and extravagant conception ? It is the part of perfons ruling or leading others firft to found their own proceedings in prudence and afterwards rather to refpect, than to defpife their enemies. If our minifters are however fo much bent on making comparifons between Britain and America; why don't they contraft the counfels of our cabinet and the fuccefs of them with thofe of the continental congrefs; which feems to be more peculiarly their province and where they will certainly find very fufficient matter to employ and to exercife their reflections? The courage of others we cannot command; our own meafures we may; let us then leave the provincial valour to itfelf and let us look to our own fteps: the prefent conjuncture does but too much want all the wifdom of the wifert.

I come now to a charge againft the Americans of a very different and a much more ferious fort, of no lefs than rebellion made upon them not only in our ordinary prints and our daily difcourfe, but in the proclamations of the King and in other the higheft authorities of our country. This is indeed a matter of great magnitude and importance: our governors have involved in it the fate of Great-Britain itfelf. Thefe conftantly deduce as a confequence from fuch a fuppofed fate of things; that our own nation is for that reafon under a neceffity of running upon its ruin; that the dignity of government demands of us to purfue and to adopt meafures leading directly to our deftruction: that there can be no talk, no treaty with rebels; but it muft be bas les armes, fubmiffion to mercy and to taxation or otherwife the fortune and the event of a civil war: there appears fometimes fuch an eagernefs in afferting thefe premifos; as if it was only done on purpofe to come to the conclufion: the parent-country of Old-England is abfolutely doomed to be undone, there feems to be in the whole wheel of fate no fingle chance left in her favour; however it may happen with the provinces. This is much as prudent in our politicians with refpect to the public; as it would be juft in our judges with regard to a; rivate perfon; if they hould condemn any one to be executed at Tyburn, becaufe he had the evil fortune to be robbed upon the high-road. This is pofibly not all; who knows, whether no men about the perfon of our ever gracious Prince may by reprefentations and by reafoning of the fame fort endeavour to raife in the royal breaft difpleafure or indignation againft a large part of lately at leaft fome of the moft loyal among his fubjects to the extreme prejudice not only of his people; but perhaps of the concerns and the interefts of his crown? One would imagine ; that fuch alarming, fuch enormous confequences, fhould bring into fulpicion the truth and the foundnefs of the principle itfelf, from which tiey do or are pretended to proceed; that they fhould incline us well and carefully to queftion; whether thefe prefent commotions of our provinces are at the bottom real rebellion or whether they may not poffibly arife from fome other reafon or ftand on fome other ground. It is in fo great a fake of our country undoubtedly not only moft lawful, but moft fitting to debate and to difcufs a pofition, big with fo much mifchief to the public: whoever fhall difprove it, will open a way to our peace and our prefervation ; will wreft the means of malice out of the hands of ill-defigning men and will remove the foundation of the folly and the infatuation of weak ones. There can be left no true liberty of fpeaking or of writing, all application by the prefs to the public for the common benefit muft be foreclofed and forbidden; if that this fubject fhall not find a perfect fanction and protection. The tafk demands and deferves a far better labourer, than the prefent writer: it has found and I truff, that it will again find many fuch : I fhall however for one proceed without further fcruple to the confideration of that queftion, hoping at leaft to point out the road for fome abler perfon to purfue and being fully confident; that $I$ am therein performing my poor, but my beft and my moft faithful fervices to my King and ray country.

I fay then in the firft place; that it is no wonder, if one looking without the pectacles of learning cannot in the 25 th of Edw. 3 d. difcern the actions of our countrymen beyond the Atlantic. The material words therein are "If a man do levy war againft our Lord the King in his realm or be adherent to the King's enemies in his realm giving to them aid and comfort in the realm or elfewhere" whereby it appears; that the treafonable war muft abfolutely be levied in the realm. It is in a fubject being at home or abroad treafon to aid, comfort or adhere to the King's enemies in fuch a war ; the enemies and the war itfelf muft nevertheieis be in the realm. Now the realm of America, the realm of England and America, the realms of England and America are nonfenfe, they are all jargon, no one of them is an exprefion of the Englifh language; from whence it mof certainly and moft evidently follows; that neither America nar any war levied there is or can be included in thofe words. The King of England had at that time great poffeffions and claims abroad and this act was iadifputably couched in fuch terms on purpofe to confine it from affecting them. A law of Poynings paffed by the parliament of Ireland extended to that country, all the Englifh fatutes fubfifting in the tenth year of H. 7: our laws of treafon were the year after the union by 7 Anne c. 21. introduced into Scotland: but I wrant to know, how the words be-fore-mentioned defcribe or comprehend America. This moft penal of all laws and higheft of all crimes cannot be ftretched one jot beyond the ftricteft fenfe with refpect either to purpofe or to expreffion: where the ore or the other of thefe fails, there ends likewife the extent of the ftatute. It is not very furprifing, it America has hitherto been miffed or overlooked on this fubject; for rebellion never founded from thofe fhores, until that fome men at home gave occafion to tumults there and then chriftened them with a hard name. The queftion is not, what law our anceftors would under Ed. 3 have made; if things had been then, as they are now; bit whether they actually employed on that occafion terms expreflive of America or whether we have fince fupplied the defect ; if that they did not. Men are not to be hanged, drawn and quartered without or againft law, becaufe that their anceftors long lived totally free from all fufpicion of deferving it. What reflections ought this fact to raife in us, that American treafon is neither to be heard of in our hiftory nor traced in our ftatutes? Is it then fuddenly fallen from the clouds or has it flamed from the earth among them or is all this civil war only refiftance arifing from oppreffion, oppreffion which has before formed fo many combinations and has already effected fuch a number of revolutions in the world?. This is however not my immediate fubject; but it may be faid, that we will try thefe poople by the 35 th of H. 8; as if their deeds were done in England: to which I hall now only anfwer, that the fact or the crime muft neverthelefs keep its American complexion; that a riot there cannot by that means be turned into a rebellion in England. We may likewife be told, that this term of rebellion is in fome tate acts of parliament round ${ }^{*}$ attributed to the actions of our colonifts. My reply to this is; that fuch expreflions are at moft to be efteemed only, only, as the private and the perfonal fentiments oi thofe fuffering them to pafs; but that the moft pofitive; legillative, enacting words aré necefliary to conftitute a new treafon and to move the land marks fixed by fo material and fo fundamental a ftatute, as this in queftion. I wonder, how an indictment for rebellion without the word treafon would be treated in Weftminfter-hall. But cries fome bolder man, we will cut the Gordian knot, if we cannot untie it; we will pafs a fpecial act for that purpofe. I will to this fay only: that I hall then delay the binding up my curious collection of our late American acts; until that I can include with them an ex poft facto ftatute for treafon. I fpeak on this fubject however no opinion of my own: I throw out thefe things for inquiry and for information. The writer is fenfible, that he is according to the expreffion of a countryman of his own on a like occation putting his fickle into the harveft of a particular proftifion. It is in thefe moft unpromifing times inoreover a peculiar happinefs, that our country has fome perfons towards whom to caft their eyes; who a:e eminent not only for their confummate knowledge of our laws and our conftitution; but likewife for what can alone beftow a true luftre upon the moft fplendid talents, their integrity; men whohave evidently facrificed to their opinion of the public good the firft pofts and profits and honours of ambition. I quit therefore this ground and freely defcend further into the field.

1 fay then, that rebellion is indeed a big,word, but that it is at the fame time a moft fufpicious one: it is the common term, which tyrants ever affect to attribute to fuch, as defend and as maintain againft them either their own rights or thofe of the reft of mankind. When our anceftors depofed with fo much reafon the fecond Edward and the fecend Richard would not their proceedings have borne the name of treaion or of rebellion, if thefe Kings had been the frongeft? How fond are Englifhmen of the very found of Magna-Charta, but howioften has force been employed to enact, to renew and to confirm it? Might not fuch fteps have paffed for rebellion; if the fortune of the feld had on thofe occafions been againft our forefathers? Who knows, but that Runnymede might in fuch a cafe have now been celebrated, as al fcene of difappointed rebellion? The defence of the conftitution by our anceftors againft Charles the Firft has it in our hiftories, in our ftatutes, in our prayers, nevel been called a rebellion? The Revolution would not it have been branded for a rebellion, the Revolution itfelf, whereon are founded the right and the throne of our moft gracious King now reigning over us and the claims and the expectations of his family after him, if: it had unfortunately failed and mifcarried of fuccefs? Does any one queftion, whether Attornies and Sollicitors would then have been found to file informations or judges to give fentence in that ftite? Would honeft Jefferies have on fo inviting an occafion been wanting to his office? I hope however and I truft, that I may for the honour of our anceftors add, -that Parliaments could not in thofe days have been bought, packed or procured, who would likewife have voted, addreffed and enacted in the fame language? Thefe are neverthelefs the parts and the periods of our hiftory, in which Englifhmen efpecially pride themfelves and to which we believe, that we owe the prefervation of our moft precious rights and the poffeffion of every thing, that E 3 we can properly call our own. I will go no further into this trite topic; it is almoft a common place upon the liberties of the people ; but refiftance therefore or levying and waging war againft the King is not always treafon or rebellion; notwithftanding many plain, pofitive, general acts of parliament containing or expreffing no particular exceptions in the cafe.

Our next queftion feems to be; what is then the circumftance, which diftinguifhes acts of refiftance from one another; that fanctifies or juitifies fome while others of the fame fort are fo immoral and fo criminal? I anfwer the caufe: the caufe is the original fource, which communicates on fuch oceafions the quality of good or of evil, of right or of wrong to the conduct flowing and proceeding from it. What name is among Englifhmen held in higher honour, than that of Mr. John Hampden? He was neverthelefs one of the firft, who levied war, who took the field, who marched, who fought againft the banners, the troops and the perfon of his Prince: He likewife led and induced many others to do the fame. He merits to be reckoned among the rankert of rebels; unlefs that his caufe fuficiently fupported him in all thefe things; I fay, if either that the King was intitled to have taxed him without his confent perfonal or reprefentative or if that the right of preferving from fuch injuftice and oppreffion himfelf and thofe after him did not duly and fully warrant his refiftance. A claim of that kind is well known to have been the great queftion of their quarrel and that it was in Weftminfter-Hall decided on the fide of the King againft Mr. Hampden by a moft folemn fentence of all the twelve judges there, being according to the written law of the land the perfons proper and competent for that purpofe, Truth and time have notwithftanding determined $\mathrm{c}-$ therwife. The name and the remembrance of that excellent Englifhman are by his country, as much cherifhed and refpected, as thofe of fome others may probably be condemned and reprobated; if that they hall not be well aware, how they walk in the ways or they revive the fatal principles of thofe, who counfelled that unhappy Prince, with whom Mr: Hampden was under a neceflity to contend.

will not here multiply examples; our hiftory is almoft compored of them. We have however proceeded one ftep further: the caufe is then the criterion of right and of wrong in thofe extraordinary cafes; where a great part of the people believe themrelves obliged to appeal from their own government to the fupreme arbiter of the univerfe.

What is on this occafion then the caule of the Ainericans? Every one will to that anfwer; the great queftion of taxation, the claim of that country not to be taxed in England. On that point totally refts all this difpute; if that is falfe, the Americans are errant traitors and rebels; but if it be on the other hand fixed above in truth and in juftice, it will well beat the whole weight depending uponit. $A$ right includes the means neceffarytomaintain it. A right fanctifies the actions done in a juft confequence of it. A right in any cafe and a duty of paffive obedience and of non-refiftance in the fame are an abrolute abfurdity and contradiction. The actions of the Americans done in a due defence of a real right, will be perfectly and abfolutely innocent; as much as to eat or to drink or to fleep. Why may they in their opinions not partake of the nature of thofe which have preferved and have, as it were, confecrated the memory of the firt men of Greece and of Rome, of Tell of Switzerland, of the Naffaus of Holland, of Ruffel, of Sydney, of Pym, of Hampden before-mentioned and of other eminent patriots of our own nation? Moft facred fhactes and names ever to be reverenced, fure at leaft I am; that I do not mean to introdace you on the feenerwantonly or unworthily some acts of parliament lately paffed concerning that weftern continent will no doubt be the admiration of pofterity; but $I$ do not know, that we have as yet directly and immediately forbid to its natives the love of their country iand fhould we in ourfelves fhew them a domeftic pattern of the neglect of that duty; our fuccefs on the prefentoccafion or our profpect in time to come is perhaps not fuch, as may tempt them to copy and to purfue the example. I fay then; that we had need to demonftrate at leaft, that the Americans act unjuftly; before we pretend to accufe them of acting rebellioufly: the latter charge without the former would be a notable and a çurious curious paradox in law, in politics and in morality.: They advance particularly three defences; the neceflary and the inherent rights of humanity, the effential conftitution of England and their provincial grants and charters: every one of thefe muft be fully difproved and removed out of the way before that the brand of rebellion can be fixed upon the forcheads of that people. I do not mean at this moment to launch again into that large ocean. I fpeak now no opinion: my American countrymen have on thefe fubjects: found friends and advocates the latchet of whofe thoes this writer is not worthy to unlcofe; although he may have endeavoured not to be wanting on the occafion with his mite I fhall leave this warfare of words, where it is between the mercenary troops on the one fide and the militia on the other, I rear dily reft it on that iffue only repeating once more with refpect to it ; that there is no crime of rebellion in America, if there is no right of taxation in GreatBritain,

It may perhaps be obferved; that Mr. Hampden was fupported by two parts of the

the parliament and that he only denied his fhip-money to the fingle command of the King: whereas our Americans are in arms againft the ftatutes and the authority of the whole legillature. They pretend likewife however to be in a fituation and toftand on a ground with refpect to that point very different from the inhabitants of Great-Britain. I don't at prefent meddle in that matter: but the parliament here referred to (and of which Mr. Hampden was a member) was fummoned by force and by means of a Scotch army, which probably marched into the kingdom for that purpofe. It fubfifted under under an extraordinary and an extorted power of not being diffolved but by itfelf. Our ancient Barons acted on great exigencies fometimes in their collective, fometimes in their legiflative capacity and were in this latter cafe fometimes called together with the good will of the King and fometimes by compulfion upon him. What regard however does at the time any man pay to the exprefs words of many acts of parliament, who once erects in England his ftandard againft the crown? Did the Houfe of Lords or the Houfe of Commons addrefs the Prince of Orange to come over from Holland ? I hardly know, whether it is lawful for me to fay, that the revolution was brought about in the face of the higheft written laws of the land; but the flatutes of treafon, the feeptre of the King and the cuftom of -fucceffion all plied and bent in that day, like twigs of ozièr. We chall be told, that our anceftors were on fuch high occafions warranted by reafon and by felfprefervation. Who is more forward to acknowledge that than the writer? But what is then become of thofé principles? Did they in the year eighty-eight abandan England never to be known there again; when a few men were once fatisfied with their having got at the head of the government? Have they under the prefent planet loft their influence and have power and fore taken their place? But it may be faid; that our all was in thofe ancient times attacked and muft have beendurrendered by fubmiffion. Will not the Americans in anfwer to this reply the prefent claim of taxation to be a net; which evidently catches and covers the whole property of their continent? We have by the means of fuch maxims and fuch motives of action in thofe preceding us inherited and do enjoy the higheft of human advantages; our liberties and our properties; we mean: then beyond doubt not to deny or to difavow them in any due cafe of another people our kinfmen, our brethren, the common offspring of the fame forefathers and progenitors. I make here however no precife comparifons: my conclufion is general; that therefore the Americans and all other communities of men are according to the practice of our anceftors, the right of the revolution and the principles of the people of England warranted in a juft felf-defence and a righteous caufe to wage war, if I may fo exprefs myfelf, with the whole or with any part of the world.:

I had with regard to the future fact likewife rather, that any other would anfwer than the writer; I mean, how long it would probably be, before that the real practice of taking the little all of this poo: and this beginning people might accompany the pretenfion fupported by the power. The property of America does wonders in the poffeflion and the difpofition of its owners, wonders that may make fome men amazed, if they thall continue hardened; but would the whole of it be many breakfarts for a Britifh minifter with two or three ways-and-meane men at his table? What hands have on the head of taxation been the heavieft of the whole world? Dic quibus in terrisWhat ftate or kingdom is now indebted and mortgaged the highelt of any that ever was upon the earth? If we have wantonly fquandered the fair lot left us by our own fore-fathers or have bafely and meanly confented to its being done, is that a juft rcafon for us to bereave other more prudent perfons of the inheritance of their anceftors or the acquifitions of their induftry ? Mankind contend againft tyranny, in order to have fomething of their own and fome controul over it; but where is the differer se to any people by whom they are deprived of their all; if that the evil itfelf is to be done them?

But what are we, if the Americans are not rebels? Is it imagined; that their dictionaries do not contain on that head, as many hard words, as our own ? The rectitude of our actions refers to the fame claim of taxation, with theirs; but on the oppofide iide: Let us build as high, as Babel; all we raife muft reft on our firf firft foundation : the edifice above willcertainly be ftrong or ruinous; as the ground below is found or rotten. We may cover the fea with our hips and the land with our troops; we may add ingratitude, injuftice, rapine, murder and other crimes to one another, as the giants of of old are faid to have heaped mountain upon mountain againft heaven; but we cannot by that means turn right into wrong, tyranny into protection or felfdefence into rebellion. Cruelty has often disfigured a fair beginning and made more black many a foul one; but we may, as well hope to wafh with water an 厄thiopian white, as to change by power the complexion of a bad caufe. When we accufe the Americans of offending againft our national ftatutes; let us remember ourfelves, that there is a law more unalterable than that of the Medes and the Perfians and higher and ftronger than acts of the Britifh Parliament.

But does not this fubject open to us obfervations of another fort; although whether fuch as will be taken in an evil or a favourable light for the Americans, I am at a lofs to fay? Thefe have fuddenly and totally diffolved for the prefent at leaft our government throughout thirteen colonies and over a vaft tract of country; they have hitherto wanted time or per-haps on our account inclination to fettle and to eftablifh another regular one in the: room of it : they are neverthelefs fo far from falling into confufion and into diftraction among themfelves thereupon; that. they have in the fame very fhort time raifed and formed a ftrong defence, have maintained an open and a declared war with a moft potent nation directed by minifters earneftly bent upon their mifchief, have fuccefsfully and effectually made head againft our attacks, againft an army compofed of the flower of our troops, commanded by chofen generals, fupported by the fleet and backed with all the power and the means of Great-Britain. They rather threaten to gain of ours, than feem likely to lofe of their own. The whole conteft has hitherto not coft them a thoufand men. Thefe circumftances and many more confidered, may not any one venture to affirm; that it is an everit unequalled by any of the fame nature in the annals of mankind, the victorious contention of Holland with Spain not excepted? It is difficult difficult to determine, whether the vigouit or the difcretion of their counfels and their actions has been moft diftinguifhable. The whole is an admirable, but a natural effect of freedom united with a knowledge and an experience of government. Some men feem fo much out of humour with the neceffary confequences of their own conduct; that they will perhaps hardly permit me to fay that it does a credit and an honour to the actual ftate of humanity. Let us however hope, that it is a fmall glimpfe or promife of a much more improved and more advantageous condition, than the prefent; to which the general community of mankind is daily and by degrees advancing. Barbarous tribes of Savages, fuch as Indians or as Corficans, are like a loofe body of fand, of which no firm building can be framed. A people of flaves, the populace and the janiffaries of Conftantinople or any other can on their occafions act only by fudden impulfes, ftarts and fallies; without a plan, without prudence and without forefight. A happy combination of order with liberty makes the cafe of our NorthAmericans equally to differ from each of thefe other and fupplies the defects of F them both. They have all over their country many and various reprefentative inftitutions; one for their whole union, the reft f. particular provinces, counties, cities or ouler diftricts; fome of them ancient, fome new and introduced on account of this critical and difficult conjuncture. Thefe bodies are truly and really without fallhood or fiction chofen and nominated either immediately or ultimately by the perfons, whom they pretend to reprefent and for whom they act: their duration is fhort and their intire dependence upon their conftituents: their countrymen caft their eyes towards them, they can confide in them and they pay them accordingly a due and a deferved refpect and fubmiffion. Thefe can therefore reftrain, encourage, regulate and conduct their actions on great or on neceffary occafions. They are moft wife and moft excellent eftablifhments, however fome men proud of the little paltry power or diftinction thrown upon them by a prince or a minifter may pretend to defpife and to traduce them: they can only obtain among a free people, who will ever find the benefit of them; as will their enemies the difadvantage: they proceed indeed from

from the multitude and not from a fingle mafter, they bring with them no profit, but in the fervice of the public; but they are on account of thefe circumftances perhaps neither the lefs ufeful or the lefs refpectable. Would to God, that no contraft or contrary example could be produced of any men nearer home and advanced from a different quarter than from the people, who have by their inconfiderate conduct firft involved their country in the guilt and the blame and who are by the fame means now bringing on its head the mifchiefs and the miferies of the prefent moft unhappy troubles. Thefe bodies might have been as beneficial to Great-Britain, as to America; if that a due ufe had been made of them. They removed from us the neceffity of having to do with confufed and enraged multitudes; we might by their means have treated with wife and with confiderate men: we needed no longer to have been in the hands of our own creatures and our own governors, fome of whom have by their falfe, their flattering, their felf-interefted advices and advice had but too much fhare in thefe mifohiefs; we fhould directly have dealt with thofe, who well know and who would truly fpeak the opinions and the inclinations of their conflituents: they are the very provifion, which we fhould have wifhed for as the moft proper inftruments to bring back to their obedience thefc our ancient colonies and dependencies. Ido not however mean by bribery or by bafe methods: there is not one of thefe, men, but would be moft unworthy of his fituation and of the truft repofed in him, every drop of blood in whofe veins would not revolt at the leaft hint or appearance of any fuch propofition nor would their conftituents be in that manner impofed upon; but I mean by fair, fit, honeft, honourable terms, by conditions equally and mutually advantageous both to the colonies and to the mother-country. and which furely might without difficulty have been found, at leaft far better and for Great-Britain efpecially, than the prefent unnatural and, it is to be feared, on our part fatal civil war. Let us then not affect to contemn thofe, whom no man in his fenfes can but honour: let us not arrogantly reject every thing, which comes from their quarter: they are an appointment of importance; if we will not profit by them for our good, we fhall certainly feel the force of them by our evil. A late application from the chief Congrefs of that continent and its reception here do but too well warrant the urging and the preffing of this point : fuch another may never come from thence; but if neither reafon nor experience nor even opportunity provided and propofed to our hands will produce with us any effect; what fate can a people expect, who only turn againft themfelves the means, which Providence is pleafed to offer them for their fafety?

The writer however does not mean on all occafions of this unfortunate divifion to warrant each action of our American countrymen under every poffible perfecution or provocation. I am unacquainted with their mifconduct hitherto: let us drive or lead them into none fuch by our own behaviour and example. We are but at the beginning of troubles; the worft parts of this ftory are probably behind: The paffions, the vices, the frailties of private perfons will not fail to find a place amidft fuch ungovernable broils and contefts. What man or affembly of men can direct and confine within compafs all the confufion, the violence, the evils and the watte of a civil war? Who knows, whither the wind and the weather will blow the flame, when a whole region is on fire? What muft in that care the firt incendiaries not have to anfwer for, be they who they will; but how can any human repentance ever be fufficient atonement in thofe, whohaving undertaken the care of a great country and of its fafety and its welfare fling neverthelefs with their own rafh or impious hands the accurfed brands, which light up in it fuch a general and fuch a fatal conflagration? Men of that turn certainly conceive in their minds no image of the many calamities occafioned by them : they would otherwife never fleep in peace, who now appear perhaps little difturbed, but by their own diffipations or their own ambition. What muft be the fituation of any one, who has it every moment to reflect; that he was born for the misfortunes of mankind and the ruin of his country? Let us however not make a very bad matter exceedingly worfe by harfhnefs, by cruelty, by any proceedings, which may require or may provoke and which will in fuch a cafe unqueftionably be repaid with reprifals. It will be heaping up of harm, that muft infallibly fall heavily on ourfelves. Hard words and big pretenfions at home will be but a poor alleviation for the fufferings of thofe unfortunate perfons, who thall in their turns be the victims of fuch a behaviour on our parts. I have before faid fomething on this fubject: I will dwell no longer on it now. The weight however of all the evils of this horrible civil war will lie upon the authors of the whole and every individual will befides be refponfible for his own immediate mifdeeds: fingle and independent actions muft be judged of by themfelves; but the general caufe will ever retain its original colour and complexion.

We have however in a pamphlet intitled Taxation no Tyranny been told that government cannot be limited; that there muft be in all fates an unlimited government or one bounded only by phyjical neceflity; that this may do werong, but that it muft neverthelefs not be reffed; for that can be done only by rebellion.* This is the pofition,

[^1] are no gradations. There may be limited royalty, there

pofition. I would advife fuch writers well to beware how they renew principles, which formerly produced among us fo ruuch mifchief; how they rafhly unfheath again the fword dyed with the blood of Charles the Firft and which has twice driven into banifhment his unfortunate family. The doctrine of defpotifm did thefe things and more. We fhall perhaps be told, that this doctrine was then applied to the Prince, but that now it is fo to the Parliament. Alas! a thin partition---I will at this inftant not inquire, whether there is in that diftinction always as much real ifference, as the firft found of the words may fometimes feem to imply or to import; I will not ank niay be limited confulfhip ; but there can be no limited government. There mult in every fociety be fome power or other, from which there is no appeal, which admits no reftrictions, which pervades the whole mafs of the community, regulates and adjufts all fubordination; enacts laws and repeals them, erects or annuls judicatures, extends or contracts privileges, exempt itfelf from queftion or controul and bounded only by phyyjcal neceffity.

By this power wherever it fubfifts all legiflation and jurifdiction is animated and maintained. From this all legal rights are emanations, which, whether equitably or not may be legally recalled; it is not infallible, for it may do wrong; buit it is irrefifible, for it can be refifted only by febellion, by an aet which makes it queftionable, what thall be from thence forward the fupreme power.

afk again, whether there were in the way no Acts of Parliament, when the Prince of Orange landed at Torbay, marched to London and was nade King in his own right; but the propofitions and the expreffions before referred to evidently fignify either a right in the government to do wrong or a duty of paffive obedience and of non-refiftance in the fubject, when there is no right at all in the government; the one or the other of which appears to be no better than downright nonfenfe, contradiction and abfurdity and but a moft weak and moft defpicable foundation for the great work of overturning the liberties and the properties not of one fingle people only, but of all mankind.

When this claim of abfolute power was formerly trumpeted under thole princes, whom it was to have made magnificently great, but who miferably fuffered by its means ; the parafites, the flatterers, the hunters after preferment of thofe days firft founded it on divine right; but they had very evil fortune. A fecond fort then arofe, who faw this and who befides never loved to waik in the fame way with the others, even when they fought the fame end : thefe fixed it in the flrength of the Leviathan; which means in plain Englifh and when examined to the bottom neither more or lefs than the law of the ftrongeft or the longeft fword. Our prefent advocates of the fame caufe are not pleafed to be explicit on this fubject. They advance the like exorbitant and extravagant claim, but do not fo clearly explain on what ground: It feems now to over-fhadow the earth with its body, but to hide its head in the clouds. Divine right however is gone much out of fafhion: fome other people formerly very fond of it are now fhifting their own demands upon a ground, which they like better. The pain of rebellion is likewife produced for the proof and the fanction of this power. It is undoubtedly of the eftablifhment of the Leviathan; although there may be fome caution with refpect to fpeaking out. I fay then to this, that the longeft fword is undoubtedly a very refpectable authority and what no prudent perfon would advife another haftily and rafhly to difpute, wherever it happens to be for the time; but that it is apt to change hands. The Behemoth may come and may overpower the Leviathan. The fword of Oliver proved longer or ftron-

ger than that of Charles: : he became then the governing beaft. What a parliament is to -day, afiemblies or committees or congrefies may be to-morrow. That criterion determines now nothing between us and the Americans: it refers all, whether we are tyrants or they are rebels to be decided, when that the fwords fhall fairly and fully have been meafured. What are the pains and the penalties of rebellion to thofe, who get the better? Will this writer or any other go and hang that bell on the neck of Warhington or of Putnam; if they and their continent fhall be conquerors? This is crying havoc and letting flip the dogs of war on all occafions. Don't refift unlefs you are the ftrongeft; left you fhould be fhort by the head: if you can make yourfelf mafter, all is well; my objection is nothing, and your enemy muft then look to his. This is the doctrine, which is to keep peace between fiates and their fubjects: it preaches abfolute power on the one hand, rebellion on the other and nothing between. It would no doubt fuit wonderfully well with patrons bent on ruling defpotically and ready rather to rifque their due authority, than not to attain to that end. The arguments of all from the paradoxical dean to the itinerant preacher bottom on the fame principle, which do not ftand on the ground of confent: even the words of legiflative authority and fupremacy fo extremely refpectabie in their right and their proper fenfe feem in the difcourfe of fome individuals to mean no more, than the ftrength of the Leviathan.

Let us however totally quit this narrow ground and let us endeavour to confider in fome general, extenfive, and decifive manner this moft importent and to all mankind moft interefting queftion-Whether that there is and there muft or there can be in every ftate a defpotic, abfolute, arbitrary governing body of men without check, without controul and whom it is unlawful to refift in any cafe whatfoever without exception. I fay then thereupon; that all things will probably have a pe-riod, which have had a beginning; fo muft however moft certainly every human inflitution. States have their birth, become mature and then decay: none is nor can be fo well contrived or well conftituted, but that it will through its in.

ternal weaknefs and by corruption or by, fome other mans become in time the prey of abfolute and of arbitrary power. This has long been the cafe of the many free governments of Greece and of the mightyand the eminent republic of Rome; it is the conftant courfe of the whole world: every ancient nation has taken and every other muft and will take its courfe in the fame manner: the prefent public appearances of Europe are not fuch as to deny credit to that point. Let us then confider upon this the confequences of the doctrine in queftion. Here are all mankind at once condernned to a perpetual bondage: there remains no right of refiftance, no remedy, no redrefs, no means of recovery for them, at leaft unlefs that their tyrants hould of themfelves be pleafed to lay down their arms and their power and to beg of their fubjects to accept again of their liberties and their properties. I need not ftay to inquire, whether fuch is the nature of tyranny ot the purpofe of the propofition bcfore us. A total, general defpotifm muft by degrees obtain and in the end reign every where: it will, as it were, cover and envelope the whole globe of our earth.

[ 80 ]

What a comfortable: condition of humanity is thus carved out for us! Is कhis then the work of that moft benevolent Power, whofe every fmalleit production befpeaks a goodnefs infinitely beyond the wit of the wifeft man to trace or to underftand; can they be divines, fcholars and philofophers, who preach and who teach thefe doctrines and what are the rewards, for which men of letters fo lower themfelves as to maintain the rectitude of ruining their country, the right of irrefiftible tyranny and the unavoidable and the irrecoverable flavery of the whole human fpecies? There was formerly a mythology of two eternal, independent beings, the one good and the other evil; who governed the univerfe, but who were ever at variance with one another. If that this could be the cafe and that the bad power was contrary to the Perfian opinion the ftrongeft and the uppermoft fuch a ftate of things might naturally and neceffarily obtain on the habitation of men: but any one may be bold to fay, that this oppreffive and this deteftable fyftem can on no other terms nor other fuppofition take place and propofitions of the fort in queftion would have better become the priefts and

and the minifters of fuch a malevolent divinity; than they do the fervants or the dependants of that all-preferving principle, which has framed the earth, the air and the feas and which is pleafed to grant unto man life, liberty and property for the purpofe of ufing and of enjoying them.

So much for the doctrine of defpotifm. It is however to be hoped, that we are not yet fo bowed and fo broken to the yoke, as to trample with indifference upon our beft rights and privileges; we are furely not going to beccme a bye-word among nations and the fhame of our own anceftors; we cannot certainly be unwilling to hear the firft interefts of ourfelves and of all mankind endeavoured to be defended againft fuch extravagant and fuch exorbitant claims over us. The American caufe requires on this head, no more than is faid already and fo I would be underftood; the prefent writer however does not fcruple, but is proud to fet his hand to the principles of liberty, whenever and wherever they fhall lie before him. Let me therefore be on this fubject fuffered to point towards the outlines of a fyftem of civil government, at leaft very different from that of flavery. Good and evil, pleafure and pain, happinefs and mifery are then the interefting objects of all beings endowed with a fenfation of them : they are, as it were, the polar ftars towards which the axle of every world muft perpetually point: they are the motives of all human actions and endeavours : every thing elfe refers finally and perhaps folely to them: the one of them of neceffity is our conftant defire and the other our unalterable averfion. Good or happinefs feems indeed to be the great end, and as it were, the foundation of the univerfe itfelf, fo far as our weak faculties enable us to judge upon fuch a tranfcendent fubject: mankind is not only intitled, but bound to purfue it. Such is the general and the unalterable nature allotred to us by the tranfcendent principle on which we depend and from which we have received our being. The fame high author has under thefe fanctions of good and of evil given us feveral laws, as duty to our parents, protection of our children, truth, juftice and others: that is, he has either inftantly or by necefläry chains of caufes and of effects duly and refpectively annexed to the obfervance or the violation of fuch rules the reward of pleafure or the penalty of pain. Thefe his laws all tend to the fame purpofe of the general happinefs: they are prior and fuperior to any human appointment: men and nations may neglect or may offend againft, they cannot however repeal, annul or abrogate them; thefe chains will continue conflant and unbroken notwithftanding our ftrongeft efforts, our fulleft refolves, all our acts and our ftatutes, our cuftoms and our practices to the contrary: a higher power than ours holds his hand to this point. Thefe things fometimes proceed in a plain and an immediate, but often likewife in a complicated, an unobs fervable or to us an unaccountable manner; which is no wonder; fince that they are the combined effects of infinite power, wifdom and goodnefs. This is noble matter, but into which I do not now mean to enter nicely and minutely. I am not pretending to explain a compleat fyftem of morality or of policy; it will be fufficient for my fubject to obferve the foundations, on which thefe ftand. The moral however much refembles the material world: outward force is the means, which commands us in the latter: we cannot in it alter the great laws of nature: numberlefs operations thercin are notwithftanding fubjected to our will and our power; but ever within the bounds preforibed to us. I fay, that it is the fame in moral things: very many circumftances of them are within the compals and the competence of man; but fo as we obferve our limits. We are in the one cale confined by an external ftrength, which fate does not fuffer us to overcome: we are in the other reftrained by the confiderations of our own good and our own evil where a grea. ter freedom is left to us of action; we have neverthelefs in both cafes laws and bounds from above. Civil government is among the things within our province and a moft important one : it is by experience found to contribute in a great degree towards the happinefs of our fpecies: it is an union and a compact for that end and for that only; for procuring the good and the advantage and for preventing the evil and the calamities of thofe, who compofe it: a prodigious object when millions of mankind are therein concerned: this is the principle from which it proceeds : thefe are the views from which it never can confti-

[ 85 ] conftitutionally fwerve. To agree and to affociate together for our mifchief and our mifery, does not even come within our conception; it would be fomething more than null and void, it would be utterly abfurd if that we did. I fay nothing how far every man has in himfelf or can in confequence give to others a command over his life; but what contracts would or could bind any one to continue in exiftence and at the fame time not to defire or to endeavour after his own felicity? There are various and different forms of civil government : its chief means is the inftitution of laws and of magiftrates and its main ends are perfonal rafety and private property: the right of felf-defence is in neceffary cafes preferved under it to individuals: rights belonging to the body and not parted with remain there; rights entrufted by it, but being at an end return again thither. This circumftance of magiftracy is not inherent in the perfon like a quality received from nature of youth or health, of ftrength or beauty; but it is a truft, an office, a jurifdiction. When magiftrates more or fewer in number and higher or lower in rank, a king, a conftable, an affembly, a fenate, a legiflature G 2 exceed exceed this their public capacity, they become and are in that refpect no more than private perfons: they may then be withftood and be refifted, as fuch; if they offer violence and injuftice. Should a king in a tranfport of paffion endeavour to flay one of his fubjects; who had no means of defence, but by the deftruction of the aggreffir ; it would for fuch a fubject be as lawful to put an end to the life of his king, as to that of any other man in their common nation on the like occafion. Where the right of command in the magiffrate ends, there begins in the cafe of wrong the right of refiftance in the fubject. On this propofition depend all perfonal fafety and all private property, where. ever civil fociety has been introduced: there will be left neither the one or the other of them throughout the whole world; they are now not to be found among men in a flate of nature and they will befides be totally banifhed from every empire, kini dom and commonwealth upon earth, if that this point be but determined in the negative. Should then any government pervert the very purpofe of its inflitution; fhould it inftead of the benefit and the profperity feek the bane and the deftruction

tion of the people confided to its care; to make a queftion; whether thefe have themfelves in that cafe a right to purfue and to provide for their happinefs by fuch means, as they conceive the moft conducive thereto, be it by refiftance or by obedience; feems much what it would be to debate, whether it is lawful for the fparks to fly upwards or for ftones to fall to the ground or for the planets to gravitate towards the center of their fyftem: they muft all of them equally be impelled and be drawn by their refpective nature to their proper end. It is likewife not permitted for magiftrates to abrogate the eternal and the unalterable laws of Providence. It is fo very far from being true; that there is or there can be upon the earth a body of men defpotic, abfolute and bound only by phyfical necelity, than which the Englifh language hardly furnifhes a more emphatical expreffion; that fhould a whole nation command with an unanimous voice one of its individuals to flay his own fon or to lift up his hand againft his father: I will be bold to fay, that fuch a perfon would have a right rather to refift than to perform it ; if he could on the face of the earth find help or protection or if he was of himfelf able to mafter thofe, who fhould endeavour to enforce the impious command. The firft laws muft ever be thofe of the incomprehenfible power, on which the whole world depends.

It may perhaps be hereupon afked; why are not then almoft all ftates in continual convulfions and diftractions, fince men armed and tempted with power are fo apt to trefpafs beyond their due bounds. I fay from the fame fimple principle of this tendency and this attachment to happinefs perpetually fubfifting in all beings. A general love and defire of peace, an averfion to difturbance and to confufion, the common intereft of every one in order and in union remain and continue notwithftunding the imprudence or the ambition of thofe at the helm. The acquiefcence, the forbearance, the patience of the people and the public take place, where the Arict right of their rulers is at its extent. How often do thefe preferve and uphold governments, after that they have themfelves by their ill conduct weakened or perhaps deftroyed their firft and their original foundations? This is the great and the effectual caufe which maintains the internal tranquillity of nations and, if I may fay fo, the domeftic quiet of the world. How happy would it be for mankind if the outward peace of fates with each other washalf as well preferved, which commonly depends not upon the people, but upon their governments? It muft be confidered, that a right to refift is almoit always accompanied by another circumftance, which is, if I may fo exprefs myfelf, a like and an equal right not to refift. A traveller has a right to refift a robber on the road, but his piftols are in his holfters or he can fpare his money and he defires to fleep in a whole 1 kin ; he is not according to the vulgar expreffion faid to be common on fuch occafions obliged to have his brains blown about his ears, only becaufe he has the benefit of felfdefonce, if he pleafes. It is common to have a right to a fmall fum of money, but which will coft ten times its value to demand in a court of law. A right does not deprive people of their fenfes. A private perfon in England would foon be fhot upon the highway or be ruined in Weft-minfter-hall or would meet with fome other mifchance and be in the mean time G 4 excluded excluded from all honeft company, as troublefome and quarrelfome; who fhould purfue and profecute one half of the rights, which fortune to make no mention of nature confers upon him. It is not to be imagined, that every man cafts about the firft moment of rifing out of his bed in a morning only how to difturb the ftate or to deftroy himfelf. An Englihman has a fhorter method than to trouble others, when he is in fo diftempered a mood or however he would foon be brought to a better mind in a country, where content and good government give a vigour to the laws. The Earl of Effex is faid in the reign of Queen Elizabeth to have run through the ftreets of London calling and crying to arms : the citizens kept about their bufinefs in peace: he flept that evening in the Tower and from thence ftepped foon afterwards to the fcaffold. It is one thing rafhly and wantonly to unfettle the quiet of a ftate and another very different to move with the whole; when grievances are infupportable, when events are ripe and when the hand of Providence prepares a revolution as the laft refource of an oppreffed and a fuffering people. Governments have ftrong and wide and deep roots

nor are to be moved or fhaken but by violent hurricanes, by high and public and probably not ill-grounded difcontents. The head and the heighth even of the laft rebellion in Great-Britain give no conviction to the contrary. Thefe were totally owing to the mifmanagement of the adminiftration at the time; as might from authentic materials be eafily demonftrated and as is well known to thofe, who are acquainted with the conduct of the regency and the cabinet on that occafion. How fmall a matter was the former rifing for the fame caufe in the year fifteen, which had neverthelefs more hidden foundation and was at the bottom more abetted than the other? Is it believed, that fubjects are more apt to become rebels, than their rulers are to turn tyrants; although the latter circumftance often gives occafion to a charge of the former? How many free ftates have by gentle degrees funk into flavery for one righteous rule, that was ever overturned by violence? The difturbance of the public peace is to a whole people always a moft ferious and moft important object. It would perhaps be on a fair examination found, that men of moderate means love and poffibly that

[ 92 ]

they enjoy too their domeftic comfort and felicity, at leaft as much as the rich and the great. What alone feems to caufe the true difficulty in this confideration is, that fome perfons are fo elevated with their privilcges and their prerogatives, as ever to look down with contempt upon the community: they can brook no condefcenfion towards that quarter : they cannot perfwade themfelves to own; that they hold or they enjoy by their means fuch precious boons, as riches, honours and power: they defire enough to accept and to poffefs thofe benefits, but it is upon the proudeft and the moft prefumptuous terms: give me leave to fay, that they are hardly willing to acknowledge the fuperiority of Providence itfelf on this fubject; I mean, that they deny the validity of his laws and, if they fometimes introduce his authority, it feems to be oniy for the purpofe of putting themfelves in his place. It is however to be feared, that there are hanging over our heads events; which may before long bring to another fenfe of themfelves fuch men, as muft for that end learn the hard leffon of misfortunes and of calamities,

[ 93 ]

It is perhaps no very uncommon opinion; that the many and the multitude are conftantly endeavouring to run wrong and that their rulers and their governors are ever hard at work to fet or to keep them to rights; but this is a fancy, which has not the leaft foundation except in the prejudices of the perfons entertaining it and directly the contrary of which will upon a fair enquiry into the fact be certainly found the cafe. I will appeai to any one, whofe fenfes are not abfolutely bought and fold; whether it is the people and the public or whether it is the adminiftration and (if a handful of inconfiderate men are to be dignified with that name) the government, who have in the prefent cafe and in our own country fought confufion and enfued it? This reflection will likewife hold true upon a larger fcale. States almoft always flourifh according to their freedom and according to the greater or the leffer proportion of the community, which partakes in the government of them ; but princes without reftraint and acting only by their minifters feldom or never fail to turn into defarts their dominions. Let any one caft his eyes or his thoughts over France, over Spain, over Italy,

[ 94 ]

Italy, over Germany without paffing from Europe into Turkey and into Perfia, all of them countries moft bountifully bleffed by the beneficent hand of nature, and having fo done let him then fay, whether it is rebellion or it is defpotifm, which lays wafte the world. Our own nation was formerly famous for the check and the controul which it kept upon its governors and fo has it likewife been for its figure abroad and its felicity at home: our domeftic hiftory however confifts fince the Revolution of a conftant complaifance in our parliaments for our princes and their minifters, I mean in our parliaments, that are paft ; but is the moment very far remote, when we Chall fenfibly and perhaps fatally experience, whether the abjectnefs and the obfequioufnefs of this latter period have more contributed to the profperity or even to the quiet and the fecurity of the public, than the former firmnefs, fteadinefs and let me add, at times warrantable and neceffary refiftance of our anceftors? We are fure, that the one rendered us an inftance of a rich, a powerful, and upon the whole likewife a.well-governed nation; God forbid, that the other fhould firft fling us into confufion fion and then fink us into nothing! But it may be faid; are there then no inftances of popular diforders and difturbances? I anfwer; what were the tumults of Tyler, of Cade or of Maffanello more than fires of ftraw kindled and extinguifhed in an inftant? Such things are not the wounds of a needle, if I may fay fo, in the welfare or the hiftory of a nation. It was the defence of the conftitution, which drove our anceftors into arms againft Charles the firft nor fo far did they fuffer by it. The conduct of Cromwell was by the means of a veternn army devoted to its leader a fhort turn upon both prince and people, both royalifts and republicans; but the bent and the inclinations of the whole righted again that affair in a few years. It was from the temper of the community at the time, that General Monk took his meafures. This ambition however and this apoftacy of Cromwell fo difgraced the republican caufe and fo funk the republican fpirit, that they have fince never held up their heads in England. Were not the perfons now prefiding over us fo far above the poor counfels of this writer, my humble advice to them would be; that they fhould beware of reviving them.

them. I do not at all mean, that there is in the nation now any tendency that way: the prefent complexion of the public appears to be of a very different caft. It muft be totally the management of our minifters; if republicanifin does in our days ever recover and raife again its creft among us. Who knows however what may poffibly and by induftry be brought to pafs? Some men have a moft fuccefsful hand at miíchief, when they fet about it. They have certainly given rife to thirteen republics elfewhere; who appear a fhort time fince to have little thought of any fuch thing; but it is to be hoped, that the experience already proved will caufe them to ftop their headlong career, before that they produce any fuch defperate effects nearer home. There is on the fubject of our compariton in the balance of the people however many millions of men, who have with refpect to political concerns no intereft but in the good of the public; there are the lights, the experience and the underftanding of a wholena. tion: whereas on the other fide and in the minifterial fcale are often only the blindnefs, the obftinacy and the phrenzy of a few, who are but too apt to make the whole a prey to their private paffions and advantage. Where is the wonder then that both the paft hiftory and the prefent condition of mankind fhould unite to inftruct us, that it is not the many and the multitude ; but that it is courts and cabinets which are the more given to go wrong and which commonly want the curb and the reftraint of the others to keep them right.

Some one may perhaps on the otiner hand here demand ; what force and effect then can this right of the collective body have, if it is of fo gentle and fo inactive a nature, as is here reprefented ? I anfwer ; that it is like a fword, which may in cafe of neceffity be drawn out of its fcabbard. It is a power dormant and quiet in all tolerable times; but which provoked by oppreffion beyond bounds has in the hiftory of mankind tumbled many a tyrant from his throne. It keeps even on common occafions lawlefs and defpotical men in fome check and fome awe. How little liberty is now to be any where found; but what would be the condition of nations; if that this right and the fenfe and the apprehenfion of it were totally removed from among mankind ?

It is a circumftance, which has fometimes been much agitated on this fubject; who is then to judge when and whether thefe magiftrates, thefe rulers are within or without their limits, are doing right or wrong? I truft, this point to have been already explained: the queftion however anfwers itfélf. Grant to any man a grain of power and let him in the lart inftance but decide upon the extent of its jurifdiction and the rectitude of its execution and you give him the whole world. He will be far more powerful than the famous mathematician and mechanic of old; for he will not move, but he will pofiefs the earth: fuch is the boundlefs ambition of man. The very point formerly propofed by King Charles the firft to the twelve judges was; whether he might not lawfully levy fhip-money in cafe of neceffity and whether he was not judge of that neceffity. He wanted nothing more to put the whole property of his people in his power. It is therefore an utter abfurdity to fuppofe, that the perfons confided in are to determine this matter in their own cafe and for themfelves; but it muft neceffarily be the body of their conftituents, from whom the truft and the office are derived:
derived : but how will a whole nation or fuch a number of people act and execute their judgment and their opinion? This is going back again : I fhall only repeat, by fupporting and by preferving the peace of the fubfifting ftate; except in cafes of the very laft and utmoft extremity; when men will no doubt again do, as many others and Englifhmen in particular have fo often done before. However we may have foregone the principles, we certainly have not forgotten the hiftory of our anceftors. Thus therefore does upon the whole the great concern of human happinefs firft form civil government and then reftrain the magiftrate on the one hand and the multitude on the other : a moft excellent inftitution, when that incomparable principle is fuffered to continue its operation and its influence; but if we once quit that object as the end and confent as the means, we muft neceffarily run into a wildernefs; where we cannot fail of falling a prey either to a qualified plunderer of a prince or to fome bold and lawlefs leader of banditti, who carves out his fortune for himfelf with his fword.

Let us fee then, whether thefe opinions are not confonant to the hiftory and H the

[ 100 ]

the conftitution of our own country, as well as applicable to the events of the prefent times. Our anceftors formerly affembled and refolved upon their laws and their meafures in their collective capacity: their princes and their leaders were as evidently commiffioned in the execution of them, as one private perfon is by another : the power then reverted to the body and on occalion iffued from it again. This was the firft origin of our form of government; where we are to feek, where we fhall find and by which we thall comprehend its real, original nature and effence. Whatever changes or variations have through neceffity and the mutability of things fince been made or happened in its outward form and circumftances, thefe have all referred and related to its primitive inherent principle: this was on fuch occafions never underftood to have been overturned or over-ruled. Reprefentation firft took place inftead of perfonal prefence : the condition of the nation united into one rendered this necerfary: it was a great alteration, but it ftands on the fame ground of the confent and the concurrence of the whole. Every freeman had in the beginning his voice towards towards chufing the general reprefentatives. Elections began next to be cont fined and to be reftricted: voters for counties were required to own a certain annual income in land: other reftraints were likewife contrived : a nominal, artificial, fictitious freedom was introduced into cities and into towns inftead of the true and the real one, a freedom only from flavery and from villenage: new and narrow rights of voting were invented : boroughs were empowered to fend nembers of Parliament, to which the number of their inhabitants did upon a juft and a general comparifon by no means entitle them : places once confiderable came to decay and preferved neverthelefs that privilege. It is not more melancholy, than it is certain and evident; that our conftitution has by the means of thefe abufes multiplied and increafed through a fucceffion of ages at length totally loft its true and its juft bias. I muft be perfwaded, that the perfons now poffeffed of its powers would upon a proper application of the public reftore to us our rightful and our ancient form of government ; I mean, a delegated body as one part, which being fairly, equally, generally and Ha impar=

impartially chofen, may reprefent the whole by as natural and as necoliary a comection, as a hadow reprefents its fubflance or the inage in a mirror its original. Is it unlawful to fay, that we hall be refuled our right, if that fuch a boon or demand fhall be denied tus? I truft however, that this will not be the cafe and the times do certainly require, that we fould fpeedily and earneftly make the requeft. How vain muft then be the pretence, that perfons appointed in their greater and confequently their governing part by a fmall proportion only of the whole nation can have over us an abfolute and an arbitrary power in all cafes whatfoever without any exception, without redrefs or refource in the laws of God or of man? This is fpoken with refpect to GreatBritain; but when the fame claim is extended over countries diftant from us feveral thoufand miles and being without the lealt fhare even in fuch a choice and having governmenis and legiflatures of their own and declaring with a wonderful unanimity againft that claim, how can it but be numbered with infallibility, divine right and fomie other pretenfions of that fort, which power has at times been able more more or lefs to impore and to fpread among men, but againft which reaton exercifed with any the leaft degree of freedom has ever moft ftrongly revolted and remonftrated? Neither is this all; the prefent difpute particularly regards taxation. This ruling and this taxing body are to fave and to ipare in the pockets of themfelves and of their conftituents precifely as much money, as they take out of thofe of the others, a pound for a pound, a thoufand for a thouiand and a million for a million. Does not this circumftance contain in itfelf fuch a contraft and a contradiction, that it would appear impoffible to be a point of difpute; but that at this inftant treatifes, addreffes and I know, what are writing in letters of blood, that a great continent is threatened to be laid wafte with fire and with fword and that the moft eminent ifland of the whole world is brought to the very brink of being undone upon the fubject of it? Were it in a common cafe and about a moderate matter; would any one hear or anfwer it with ferioufnefs? Would to God, that I had yet done. This fame taxing body have in lefs than ninety years. contracted for its own nation a debt of one hundred and forty millions ferling or thereabouts befides vaft fums fpent and raifed in the mean time.. The nation is believed not to have had fair play upon that head; but that particulars were by places, by penfions, by preferments and advantages of various and endlefs forts repaid or rewarded for the burthens laid upon them by the public. None will deny or difpute this; at leaft unlefs it fhould be fome, who beft know it to be true. Was then the hand of adminiftration ever ftronger than at this inftant? What has happened with refpect to parliaments not long part muft not the fame be expected to happen with regard to thofe foon to come ; however the perfonal virtue of the individuals compofing the prefent may be proof againft fuch objects? What muft be the force of this means applied to perfwade men to grant the money of others abroad, when it has had fuch effects upon them in the cafe of giving and lavifhing their and our own at home? The whole of thefe things being therefore taken together; the original inequality of our elections themfelves, the remote regions in queftion having nothing to do even with them, the intereft of the taxing party to load thofe taxed for the eafe of themfelves, and a private, but moft ilreng influence holding the back hand of all, I will leave it with every one to determine; whether it is wronging this propofition to reckon it among the abfurdities of the firit rank ever remembered to have been enforced by the hand or been advanced by the pride of power. How fhould any fuch propofition poffibly confift with juftice? Who can fo diffolve all fenfe and reafon, all right and wrong? Our Parliaments themfelves are undoubtedly within the bounds of human beings. Are they able to feparate from exiftence a defire of happinefs or can thcy abolifh among men the right of felf-prefervation? Have they depofed Providence from the government of the world or when did they wreft the fceptre out of the hands of the Almighty? Is then any one fo full of himfelf as to fancy, that he can with a few ayes or noes at a table of corrupt or of uncorrupt men repeal and annul the general principles and laws of all nature, which not only compafs and pervade this comparatively fmall ball of our earth; but whofe beginning in time paft or whofe end in time to come or whofe extent in that prefent is every one of them infinitely beyond the very narrow bounds of his little and contemptible conception?

So much for our legiflative and I defire now to fay fomething concerning our judicial conftitution. Juries are not only a moft reafonable and moft equitable means of determination in matters of meum and tuum between man and man; but they are likewife a very excellent fafeguard of the general rights of the community againft the attacks and the attempts of princes, of minifters or of any other powerful perfons. They reprefent in their province the public, not by election, but as a fair, equal, indifferent part and pattern of the whole. This is the fenfe and the language of our law and in that meaning it is, that every one fubmitting to them puts himfelf upon his country. They have in the moft dangerous and moft defperate periods ftood in the breach and made head againft our court and its cabinet, when Parliaments were laid afide and unable to heip themfelves. They have then not fcrupled to prefent and to demand juftice againft the fuccefior to the throne ; which act of theirs the whole nation confirmed by banifhing notwithftanding the moft folemn fatutes him and his, when he came afterwards himfelf to the crown. They fheltered at the fame time, as it were, under the Chield of Ignoramus the friends and the defenders of the public liberty. All human inftitutions muft ever keep an infinite diftance from every production of nature; but if there is among them fome one, which bears more the femblance of a divine appointment than any other; I believe it to be the democratical part of the Englifh conftitution. May heaven long preferve the whole of it entire and perfect ! Being however the offspring of frailty it mult perifh and I appeal to every one, whether the legiflative branch of it does not already begin to betray ftronger $\cdot$ proofs of its mortal birth, than the judicial. I don't neverthelefs prefume from thence to fay, that it will fooner come to an abfolute decay and corruption than the other: much lefs will I pretend to point out the day and the date of fuch a mifchief. I will however fhew the figns, as plainly as the fun marks the hour of the day upon the dial; by which it may be known; if fuch an event fhall ever happen. It may be depended upon; that this cafe is no longer at a diftance, but to be reckoned among the facts already arrived; whenever private property thall be well preferved between man and man and notwithrtanding any fuperiority of the rich and the great; but that our princes and their minifters Shail be able to take the money out of the pockets of the people at their will and their pleafure. Another ftrange appearance in politics and arifing from one common origin with the former may poffibly be at the fame period likewife feen among us; I mean, every individual free in his perfonal concerns, but a general ruin brought upon all againft the common fenfe and confent of the whole and without their having the means or the power to prevent it. Let us however pray, that thefe things may either never come to pafs or at leaft very far from our time if that they are already written in the leaves of fate.

Our juries then have before them the great law of nature, which makes a part of the law of our and of every other iand; they have our national cuftoms and ftatutes and give me leave to add, that they have have on very high and very extraordinary oecafions likewiife the conduct of adminiftrations and of government; which may in fome f.ch cafes poffibly afford exceptions, that it is the practice never to exprefs in our acts of parliament nor always in the books of the profeffion. Should therefore any one anfwering at the bar be ignorant; fhould his council be backward and bafhful ; fhould even his Judges (which I hardly know how to fuppofe) refure him the full freedom of felf-defence or fhould he be under any other hardfhip, I will be bold to fay, that as it is immediately within the province and the power; fo is it abfolutely a part of the incumbent duty of his jury to reniedy and to redrefs in the laft inftance all fuch grievances or fuch deficiencies. Next to heaven, let us thank and admire the wifdom of out forefithers Jwies have at moft to pronounce, but two words and thofe only by one of themfelves: they muft be unanimors: a fingular circumftance, but no doult introduced at firl in favour of life, of liberty and of property: they are for their fentence accountable to no man; accountable to no man; but unavoidably fo to that Superior Power, which protects the happinefs of mankind, which prefcribes to us juftice for that purpofe and which will by the conflant courfe of his eternal laws certainly repay with a due retribution to them and to theirs, all who fhall perform or fhall neglect it. Whoever does injuftice as a judge, acts in an eminent manner againft himfe, and is at that inftant preferring fome other intereft to his own, however he may be far from intending it at the time. The greateft concerns of our country come under the decifion of juries, in many of which theie do in effect give judgenent upon themfelves and upon their children after them. Such mult be the fubjects, which are now before us. I am in what is faid fpeaking not of abufes, but of the true and the genuine confitution. It is the worft abafement and proftitution of that almon facred name to apply or to attribute it to practices, which are its oppofite and which pervert and deftroy inftead of maintaining and of executing it. No fuch thing however is or can be law againft the confitution. That is, in the flate, as the fun is in the firmament, all mifts and vapours vanifh before it : however it may by chance and for a time be under a cloud,

[III]

it neither is nor can be extinguifhed: practice, ufage, cuftom muft all give way, whenever it appears. Maxims and rules of law are on fuch occafions not wanting to fet afide abufes nor may the introduction of thefe be difficult to account for; although it might for the fubject be happy, if that they could always be as readily removed. I declare with truth, that I have not the leaft meaning towards the refpectable perfons now prefiding and fitting upon our benches, in what I am about to fay; I do not at all look that way; I defire neither to flatter or to offend; although I think, that the trueft compliment in my power to pay them is by the writing and the exprefling my fentiments with freedom under their protection and I truft, that it will be fo received; if that thefe mean words of mime fhall have the fortune to fall into fuch honourable hands; but juries ought in political cafes never to be forgetful or unmindful of the general influerice, which the crown muft naturally and neceffarily have in our courts of juftice. Men are ever forward enough to conform to the will and the pleafure of their vifible, whatever they may be to thofe of their invifible Mafter or Maker. Juries then are here referred to free and uninfluenced, not picked or packed or partially chofen by the artifice of fome fmall otficer of a court or of any other perfon, but twelve men of the vicinage fairly and indifferently taken, twelve near neighbours of the fact to be queftioned and confidered and who may by that means be probably able to diftinguif between a malignant defire to difturb the peace and a meritorious attempt to preferve the rights and the privileges of the public. Such is, I fay, our conftitution in its, purity and its perfection and whenever the practice fhall fo far deviate from thence, as for this its true nature and effence to be loft, it becomes in thofe inftances a mifchief inftead of a benefit or it remains at beft an infignificant form without either virtue or effect. What would it be more, than meer mockery, to preferve this cuttom with fcrupuloufnefs concerning the ftealing of a horfe or the cutting of a purfe, where there is no apprehention of injuftice ; but to over-rule, evade or elude it in the great queftions of government, when a nation may in a manner and by the means of fome one man ftand trial for its firft rights and interefts and when the neceffity and the effential ufe of fuch an excellent inftitution efpecially take place? Thus then do the legillative and the judicial parts of our conftitution unite and concur in one uniform, congruous, confonant fyftem of the good and the happinefs of the whole purfued and enfured by confulting the general fenfe upon the general concerns with refpect both to the public meafures and the diftribution of juftice; a fyftem of confummate wifdom and the production probably not of one age or of one people: we received it as a birthright and an inheritance, our obligations for which to our anceftors will be equalled only by our own bafenefs, if we do not deliver down the fame to their and to our pofterity.

Let us on thefe grounds then judge the perfons in queftion. Empannel a Boftorn or a Maffachufets jury to try thofe, whom fome fo often affect to term by the name of rebels. Solventur riju tabula---They may there be thinking of ftatues and of pyramids to their honour, while we are pleading about fcaffolds and gibbets. I fay then, that this is according to the conftitution a full and a fair determing-tion of the point in difpute : the conftitution itfelf decides the controverfy: you can poffibly bring thefe mer to no conviction upon the conftitution. When a people fo numerous, fo profperous, poffefied of very large: provinces and otherwife fo circumftanced (as are our countrymen of America) concur on any occafion of government in'an almoft unanimons refufal and refiftance, it becomes and it behoves minifters carefully and candidly to exainine their own conduct and to new-model or to reverfe meafures productive of fuch defperate and fuch fatal mifchiefs : fuch a people have an abfolute right to be ruled with their own confent, opinion and fatisfaction. On the fingle circumftance of that right then ftands without comprehending any other the American caufe as firmly and as immovably, as on a rock; although fuch other may perhaps be found equally ftrong: I fay this, whether we confider the general law of nature and the neceffary confequence of a fenfation of good and of evil or we go upon the national conflitution of England either in its legillative or its judicial branch or in both united. I prefs this fubject for the particular purpofe of bringing ing to fome degree of reafon thofe, on whom the fate of my country at this inftant depends: I would on the firft of thefe grounds however make likewife the fame claim in the name and upon the behalf of mankind, if that it became an infignificant individual to fpeak fuch a language ; but I fay it with a moft confummate contempt of all the little, low ridicule or raillery of any bafe fcribblers; who are ready to bark at the rights of that nature, from which they have received the very paltry talents, whercof they are proud, and who join in the cry for hunting down their country; with whofe bread and whofe bounty they are themfelves, but too unworthily fed.

This, may fay fome one, is more than the Americans themfelves demand : they contend only concerning taxation and their internal jurifdiction; but this goes to the whole of government. I anfwer, that we had better be put in mind of thefe things among ourfelves; than to be threatened with them by others from abroad. Such is the natural confequence of our ftirring dangerous and unneceffary difputes about the bounds of power and of obedience.

The Americans well underftand the rights of mankind and of themfelves and fo indeed do all the world and will advance them too, when they are oppreffed and can fupport them with the fword. It will be our bufinefs, our greateft both duty and intereft to give our countrymen no more caufe of complaint or of difcontent ; if we thall havs the fortune to be once again united with them. Experience has proved, that they can find arms and a very little reflection might demonftrate to us, that they will not want reafons in their defence; if we act otherwife. We thall be well off, if we pay on this occafion no worfe a price for our folly; than to be forced for the future to opvern; as men ought to govern and to be governed.

Seme other however will poffibly fay, that we have a furer way of proceeding by a jury, than what is here reprefented; that is to enforce and to extend to America the $35^{\text {th }}$ of H. 8, which with a little fretching of the 25 th of Edward 3, will fufficiently anfwer our ends: but this propofal is neither more or lefs, than that we hould ourfelves violate and break through the conflutution for the fake of calling other other people rebels. Neither however will the ftatute itfelf bear fairly fuch a conftruction. Words are only figns of the thoughts and the ideas exifting in the minds of men nor are they to be otherwife interpreted. They can on no occafion be confiftently with juftice extended beyond what was at the time the fenfe and the meaning of the perfons employing them. This is a conftant maxim and principle in the common proceedings of men with one another, of bodies with bodies and of individuals with individuals. No faith or confidence could on any other terms obtain among us in our ordinary and our daily dealings; but difcourfe and language would inftead of the happy means of our mutual commerce and intercourfe be no better than a fnare, a trap or a pitfall. Our anceftors did at the time of paffing the act in queftion no more think of a people bearing a great proportion to ourfelves in their numbers and far exceeding us in the extent of their territo-ries, removed at a vaft diftance from us, wonderfully unanimolis among themfelves and I am notwithftanding fome late compliments and addreffes perfwaded, that any one may moft truly add, concurred with by very much the majority of the nation at home and contending upon the general right of taxation or upon any other, I fay, that they thought no more of fuch circumftances, than of a new heaven and a new earth. Thefe provinecs of America were then undifcovered and unknown. This act of parliament does not execute itfelf by internal provifions of its own: it is entrufted with the adminiftration for the time being; not however as an inftrument of paffion, of malice, of revenge; but to be put in ufe on particular occafions according to the true intent and meaning with which it was enacted and on no other account. The very inhumanity and unreafonablenefs of bringing perfuns three thoufand miles from the fcene of the fact, from their friends and their witneffes and then trying them in a ftrange land for their lives do at firft fight fufficiently demonftrate ; that it can only be fome ftrained or fome perverted law, on which it is poffible to found fo unfit a proceeding. Laws are meant and made for far other purpofes or they are but ill employed, who pafs them.

Suppofe however an American dragged before one of our courts of jiftice and holding: holding up his hand at the bar. It would both for its merits and its importance be a moft extraordinary trial: A whole people would through one perron beabfolved or be condemned in their conduct; all America would be determined to be in rebellion or under oppreffion. The decifion might much contribute to continuing in fome degree the ancient union between them and us or to divide and to diffever the chain; fo as never to be again joined and united. The juft and the upright judgment of a jury given in the face of the public might perhaps have an effect upon the madnefs of fonie men; which nothing has hitherto been able to check or to reftrain. No one knows, how far the fate of our country or the welfare of each individual might be involved in the event. The jury would have before them the whole merits of the caufe and the quarrel, in which the perfon accufed was engaged and from rhence the particular fact charged upon him muft take its ftamp: his lafe refource and redrefs or his laft fentence and condemnation would be in them. I will enter no more into that matter; but the eyes of Great-Britain, of Ireland, of America and of other parts of the world would be upon them and the invifible hand of the everruling Power be over their heads nor might it probably be long ; before that the due confequences of their good or their evil ronduct would follow and be felt by them and by theirs. I don't however think; that things will come to fuch extremities : thefe would produce reprifals. That circumftance may bid fair to prevail; where reafon and juftice might have failed : it will probably fpare all the trouble of the judge and the jury, of the heads-man or the hangman.

It is then fo far from holding good, what is fometimes faid; that there can be no reafon or confiftency in the doctrine of its never being lawful to difobey or to refift in the cafe of an act of parliament on any occafion or on any fuppofition whatfoever; that the fumbling blocks and the difficulties not to be furmounted do certainly lie on the other fide. I do not mean to affirm; whether or no it is impoffible to lay down in general a confiftent fyftem of defpotifm, confiftent with itfelf; but incompatible with every thing befides, with liberty, with property, with fcience, with happinefs, with virtue $_{8}$ virtue, with every thing good or great among men and give me leave to fay, likewife with the benevolence of Providence and the whole apparent form of our world. This however muft then be in Utopia, in fome unknown or diftant lasu: even that cannot be done with refpect to Great-Britain, the fcene of our prefent queftion; where are certain laws, certain ftatutes, Magna Charta and others, certain facts, certain points of hiftory, the Revolution efpecially, which muft be fupported and be defended: infomuch that whoever proceeds on that ground in our country, cannot but fet his foot on contradiction and abfurdity, every ftep that he takes. No doctrine can with us wreft from the people their privileges; which will not equally pluck the fceptre out of the hands of the prince. It is not unpleafant to obferve how gently and how tenderly fome even truly-learned and ingenious writers embarraffed by their own principles touch the fubject of the Revolution, when it lies in their way and is not to be avoided. We are by no means to inquire into the reafons of it any furtber, than for: inftructive amujement and fpeculation; it maj be of dangerous confequence for us to pret ourdelees

We are likewife plainly enough given to underftand; that the fentiments of him and of our two other eminent patriots and writers in politicks Milton and Sydney are at the bottom much the fame with thofe of Wat Tyler or Jack Cade; however they may be expreffed in a more polite language or drefled in a more gentlemanlike garb.* But does then any one ferioully

Had not the Revolution been perpetually ripening from the time of the Exclufion Bill; until the period in which it took place? The King did not quit his palace until the Prince of Orange was arrived near Henley. I wonder by what law his Highnefs marched fo far or he was afterwards preferred on the throne before his own Queen and Queen Anne; I mean, except by that of the common confent founded on the common good? It ought for the honour of our nation ever to be remembered, how unanimous an
of Mr. Locke, which would have reduced the fociety almoft to a ftate of nature, would have levelled all diftinctions of honour, rank, offices and property . . . and have repealed all pofitive laws.-Ditto, b. 4, c. 33. Our anceftors heard with deteftation and horror thefe fentiments rudely delivered and pufhed to moft abfurd extremes by the violence of a Cade and a Tyler; which have fince been applauded with a zeal almoft rifing to idolatry; when foftened and recommended by the eloquence, the moderation and the arguments of a Sydney, a Locke and a Milton.

act that great event was: a drop of blood was not fpilt nor a head broken, if I may fay fo, on the occafion throughout our whole ifland : the profits of fome from it night be and were much more than thufe of others; but the confent and the concurrence and confequently the merit of all according to their rank was alike and equal from the children of the King down to almoft the meaneft fubject: the deed was in effect done, I will not fay only, before that the King went away from Whitehall or that there was any fuch notable pretence for abdication; but before that the Prince of Orange landed in England or that he fet fail from Holland. The whole queftion and introduction of that word Abdication is perfectly well known to have been only a comedy acted between the leaders of parties at the time; that the new conduct might appear to fquare with the old principles of fome of them. The fetting forth a breach of the original contract between King and people and an endeavour to overturn the fundamental laws and to make thefe a part of abdication, as was then done; what was it but for the fame purpofe a public and a legiflative perver-fion of the Englifh languge, an improper application application of that term infead of Forfeiture on the moft folemn fabject ? How many Kings of Europe have at that rate abdicated their thrones; who never dream but of maintaining and of magnifying them ? As to grounding this circumftance on the going away of one, whofe father had loft his head on a fcaffold by ftaying, I fhall only obferve; that however the Earl of Warwick might be fomewhat of a foldier, he was but little of a lawyer not to think of the abdication of Edw. 4 th; when he had driven him from his kingdom. The parliament or pretended parliament of fixteen hundred and forty did not much mind fuch ceremonies; it is therefore lefs furprifing, that they did not trouble themfelves about the abdication of King Charles the 2d after the battle of Worcefter. We furely ought on fuch fubjects to write and to reafon, as becomes men; they who are mafters and capable of performing it, when they pleafe. I don't mean, that paffages of a different purport may not be produced out of the fame well-written book; but they found in ignorant ears very like to contradiction. How can it agree to affect extolling the fact of the Revolution; but to condemn or to decry the principles on which the nation in general undoubtedly acted and proceeded, when they brought it about? Little did this writer think twenty years ago to fee in our nation the neceffity and much lefs to have ever the perfonal honour of faying to the public one fingle word in fupport of fuch names; as Milton, Sydney and Locke. He does no way mean; that the principles of thefe perfons or in his poor opinion of the Revolution itfelf are not juft as open to be queftioned and to be canvafied, as thofe of any other men or other fact; for what has truth to demand or to defire, but a fair difcuffion? So however is likewife the defence of them furely full as free againit any living authority whatfoever. We are often told of the protection, which a people receive from their prince; but we are rarely reminded of that, which they confer upon him. It is however the public, that truly fupport the Revolution upon its real principles and who never obferve without impatience either the one or the other to be difrefpected or depreciated : they are fenfible of thefe being the beft barrier and fecurity both of the fubject and the prince. I do not mean applying the following reflections flections to the refpectable perfon, unto whofe expreffions I have before prefumed to refer ; but video equum cpbippiatum-..as has on other occafions been faid. The horfe feems to be ready faddled and bridled: it may not be difficult to difcern, what might happen; if it was not for this temper of the people. Who knows how foon we thould otherwife fee a right of pofieffion raifed up and the poor Revolution left to Chift for itfelf; by fome who have reafon to be its firmeft and its moft gratefulfriends. How ftrange would it appear to any one unpractifed and unexperienced in the arts of courts, if he fhould be told; that it may in fome future time be the way of becoming a good courtier to profers the principles of a doubtful fubject and the means of teftifying loyalty towards a King to advance doctrines clafhing or inconfiftent with the title, by which he wears his crown?

There is a point refpecting fenates, legillatures and other affemblies of that fort, which I have referved by itfelf, becaufe that it does not relate to the prefent inftant, although it may much concern thofe to come after us; who will perhaps perhaps be in that regard under circumftances utterly unlike our own and for which reafon I hall prefume to fay fomething upon it. Did then the laws of nature, the conftitution of our country, the charters of the colonies all unanimoufly confpire and concur after the ftrongeit and the plaineft manner in fubjecting America to the taxation of a Britifh Parliament ; this would and could only be meant of a true Parliament, of a Parliament both in word and in deed, of a free Parliament, free from corruption and from pecuniary influence, as well as from fcree and from violence. Should at fome future time therefore the perfon placed in commifion for the common good at the helm of the public bend and employ to the purpofe of gaining, of leading, of influencing, of corrupting the members of our national affemblies all the prodigious power of the crown, by the civil lift, the army, the navy, the church, the law, the cuftoms, the excife, by our companies, by public contracts, by what are fometimes called honours and by innumerable other means, in Great-Britain, in Ireland, in North-America, in the Wert-Indies and the Eaft and fhould he through fo many frong temptations applied to the virtue of a few hundreds of frail men obtain unhappily his end ; I ark then, whether any jurifdiction, any authority, any claim before-mentioned, however iffiuing from the higheft and the moft facred fources, would belong or appertain to this falfe, this figurative, this nominal, this venal parliament any more; than it would to the divan of Conftantinople, the conclave of Rome, the hourhold of the King or the menial family of the Minifter himfelf? How does the want of liberty in fuch an affembly itfelf confift with its right of command over others? Are not powers of the nature with that here fpoken of entrufted in confidence and on condition only of their being duly and faithfully difchargea? Does it make any difference to the conftituents, whether their reprefentative body is turned from its duty by the more open and more avowed force of arms or by the bafer, but no lefs effectual influence of corruption? What matter is it to them; whether it be the metal of gold or of iron, which is employed for that purpofe? Either the one or the other equally cuts the chain and the connection between them. Would the refolutions of a fenate

a fenate fo circumfanced be its own fenfe, its addreffes its own language, its ftatutes its own acts or thofe of the minifter; by whom it was guided and governed and from whom they proceeded? Would not in that cafe the minifter fpeak from the throne, the minifter anfwer from the houfe, the minifter enact, the minifter execute; the right hand and the left hand of the minifter be perpetually playing backwards and forwards the fame ball to one another? The prudent and the proper part of Great-Britain muft in fuch an exigency be patience, moderation and fubmiffion; to expect in peace a prince better informed, a more independent and more conftitutional reprefentative or other gentle and benignant relief from the goodnefs of Providence. Great-Britain would be under the immediate hand of power : the bridle might be in its mouth and the faddle on its back. A minifter however would perhaps find tougher work on the other fide of the Atlantic: the means, and the inftruments of his influence would be at three thoufand miles diftance from thence or very flightly fcattered throughout that vaft country. Should then fuch a one not content witn having at his feet Great-Britain, Ireland, our prodigious pofieffions in the Eaft-Indies and our rich iflands in the Wctt and inftead of pitying the flate of the public throw through an ambitious defire and an inconfiderate eagernefs to extend the fame abfolute fway over the continent of America the whole into an utter diftraction and confufion tetally ungoverrable by himfelf; who could but be ftruck with admiration of the manner, in which the paffions, the rices and the follies of men are punifhed by the very means of their own effects and confequences? But let us avert our views from this melancholy fcene bleffing ourfelves; that however any one may fancy himfelf to fee fome refemblance of the latter, the former part of it is very different from any thing paffing in our days or before our own eyes.

But it may be afked; what are thefe laws of Nature, which are thus oppofed to the pofitive ftatutes of a prince or a ftate; where are their fanctions, their rewards and their punifhments? Can a French cook ferve a dinner by the fitnefs of things or will their eternal relations K

I anfwer, that I have no fuch meaning; I underftand much better to whom I am taiking. I am fully fenfible; that the love of mankind and of our country, the regard and the affection of good men in return, an honeft ambition of a fair name together with many other confiderations of the fame fort are by fome people held, as unworthy and below the notice of a wife man. I cannot perfwade myfelf to be of the fame fentiment. I refer however here to the moft fubftantial good and evil; although not always obferved or attended to, before that it is too late and that it happens. Examples might eafily be produced of fatefmen, of church. men and of gownfinen in times paft; of Strafford, of Laud, of Jefferies and of others; who little thought of the mifchiefs, which they were. bringing upon their mafters and how foon they fhould pay their own forfeit on a fcaffuld or in a prifon; until that thefe events themfelves took effect. Any one might perhaps approach nearer and name another Judge,

The defcendant of fuch an anceftor might be advifed well to beware, left meafures formod upon the fame plan and founded upon the fame principles may in our days likewife be productive of fome fimilar or fome correfpondent cataftrophe, fo far fimilar or correfpondent as the general circumftances of each period will permit. To pafs by however fuch old ftories and let the turn of any particular time be what it will; I fay, that the evils following the offences againft this univerfal law are fo far from being only the inventions of fancy, from being doubt. ful or in the prefent cafe diftant; that they appear now to be near at hand and that no one knows; in how hort a time our rulers, our leaders and we ourfelves thall all feel at leaft our own full fhare of them. chicfs firft begun in the days of our forefathers; I mean, unlefs that we fhall prevent them by an inftant alteration of our courfe; but of which there appears by far too little likelihood. Our government has ever fince the Revolution been fapping and undermining by corruption. This once noble fabric built up by our anceftors and the work of many ages might neverthelefs have probably been upheld and repaired, mighe for fucceeding generations have continued .. ding fhelter and fafety to its numerous innabitants by the means of a proper prudence and forefight in, thofe; to whom the care and the guardianfhip of it are confided. But the blind Sampfons of our ftate have on the contrary themfelves fet their fhoulders againft its props and its fupports and are pulling down the whole pile on our heads and their own: the pillars already tremble, the walls give way, the roof divides and we bid fair to be buried under the ruins; before that thefe frantic minifters fhall recover any fhare of their reafon. What prodigies do we expect ; that beafts fhould fpeak, that men fhould be feen fighting in the air, that the heavens fhould drop blood or that graves hould open and give up their dead? Is it imagined, that Jerufalem had ever more figns of her ruin; than Britain has at this moment of its own? Reafon, experience, facts, events all oppofe our proceedings and point towards the gulph, into which we are going. But to what end ferves any admonition of God or of man? Every warning, every notice, every difcouragement and mifcarriage prove only the caufe of fome new and further meafure more extravagant, more ruinous, more wild, more mad than that, which went before. The whole will certainly fuffer and be overwhelmed; but do the authors of thefe things expect to remain themfelves fafe and exempt in the midft of univerfal mifchief or that they fhall not be crufhed in the common confufion of their own creating; evep if the nation itfelf fhould be fo far funk and weakened, as in its own capacity to think of no vengeance nor to demand any account at their hands?

It may however be further afked on this fubject; if then there things are in truth any other than only pretended terrors in the air; why do not men more mind them nor the ambitious and the powerful powerful be perpetually purfuing wrong and rapine without apprehenfion? I anfwer, that this is exactly the fame cafe with refpect to human and to apparent inftruments of punifhment. How many a man commits robbery or murder while his fellow is hanging upon a gibbet over hishead? Offenders are continualiy caught in the fact before a court of juftice and the face of a judge. The tranfported felon returns unlawfully to his country one day and to his former practices the next. It does not however follow from thence, that there are no civil laws or cir" penalties nor that thefe perfons do I t in the end feel and fuffer by them. Fortune determines the firft ftation of every man, Suppofe therefore thefe fame people born in palaces and hred in purple. They would have been nurfed and, as it were, fed with flattery inftead of eating the bread of mifery and of penury. Their fituation would have fecured them from their prefent temptations and perils. Might not they then have inherited many crowns and kirigdoms in Europe and out of it? Why could not they in a rank rather lower have become hereditary or clective legiflators? Many of thefe unhappy men do not want parts or talents. Schooled, taught and called might none of them have come to fit upon benches and, I dare be bound that it will only move the mirth of fome very refpectable perfons, if thefe queftions fhould be pufhed even fo far as to alk; whether they might not in fuch a cafe and in former times have by the help of a little more tranfpofition poffibly hanged thofe, who in the actual courfe of things have hanged them? Education, circumftances, fituation do wonderfully vary our outward drapery and the particular objects of our purfuit; but they do not perhaps fo much alter our inward form and fafhion or the turn and the temper of our minds. However unwelcome a maxim it may fometimes be; human nature is in all conditions ever underfood to be at the bottom much the fame. If we do not therefore fuffer ourfelves to be impofed upon by the reverence of robes nor to be fooled with the fancy of ribbands nor to be dazzled with the fplendor of crowns and of coronets ; it will not be an hour's won" der with us, that the laws and the punifhments of nature are by the high and the great often overlooked and neglected; although the firft are eternal and univerfal and the latter are moft juft and that it will be well ; if we do not by our ows experience foon find them to be ai ', 'reary and unavoidable.

- I have one more word to fay upon my prefent fubject, which is; who have made the Americans rebels, if they are fuch ? How long is it fince that weftern world was in peace, in fubmifion, in obedience; when the wild, the wanton, the unjuft and the abfurd attempt to tax them at Weftminfter put at once into diforder that whole continent?. What a medley has there been fince that time of odious and impolitic bills, of arbitrary alterations of charters, of defpotic plans of government, of cruel fchemes of refentment, of harih and unbecoming language, of proud and contemptuous rejections of application? Rapacioutneds begun, oppreffion followed, violence lupported and contumely added infilit to all the reft; infomuch that we have by thele means and thefe meafures fo haftened and to heaped on one another atchieved the revolt of thirteen provinces and perhaps the lofs of more in almoft as little tinie, as a man can tell ten. When fone people found forth the protended offences of our brethren abroad; one would almoft expect that the force of truth hould oblige them to add; that they have themfelves been the caufe of all the mifchiefs, of which they are complaining. But lay fome; the American plan now begins to open and they are fetting up independent republics anong themfelves. It is however a certain truth, that they intended and endeavoured no fuch thing three years ago: it appears likewife true, that they now propofe it or that they will probably do fo very foon. What is then the reafon or the occafion of this great and fudden difference in fuch effential affairs? As truly and as furely our own conductand managementor rather that of our minifters. Rage, malice and revenge are now bringing up the rear of all the preceding righteous train and are intended to give the final blow; but it will be very contrary to the common courfe of things; if that thefe paffions do not in the end turn upon their own mafters, who refign to them the reins of their conduct and who make them the guides of their actions againft others. May heaven however preferve this poor nation from being the victim and the facrifice on fo unfit an occafion!

[ 140 ]

So much upon the head of rebellion; but fome new argunents feem to be introduced on the general matier; at leaft fince that this writer prefumed laft to trouble the public upon the fubject of our American difputes. The minifter himfelf is faid to have advanced; that this fingle ifland paying yearly in taxes at leaft ten millions fterling and a dozen of our colonies together not one hundred thoufand pounds it is fit and proper, that we fhould add to their proportion. I muft confefs myfelf pleafed, that certain men begin at length to fignify fome fenfe of the load and the incumbrances lying upon this nation : it is to be hoped; that they may in time proceed to the intention of lightening and of leflening them. But what an expedient for that purpofe is the prefent of an American civil war! May it rather be ever the lot of our enemies to alleviate their burthens and to eafe their diftreffes in fuch a manner and by fuch methods! Myanfwerhowever is on this occafion; that no reafon can demonftrate the right of Great-Britain to tax America or of America to tax Great-Britain; but that it would on thofe grounds follow, not that we ought to perform that good office for them; but that that they fhould do it for us and that all England would fay amen, if the point of one taxing the other was proved between us. Suppofe on the one hand a very rich man to fquander his all and to run himfelf exceedingly into debt, more than he or his can poflibly expect to difcharge. Suppote on the other fide one of moderate means paying to all their own and faving for himfelf and his family: would you in that cafe make the richer prodigal or the poorer prudent perfon the fteward for them both? What man in Britain apprehends, that our ftate would be more indebted, than it now is; if the affemblies or a congrefs of our colonies had inftead of our own parliaments taxed us from the Revolution to this day? But what would at the prefent inftant be the condition of the poor people with whom we are on this fubject at war, if the reverfe had been the cafe ? I don't know, with what to compare fuch a propofition; except with the idle talk of fchool-boys at their dinners; that he who has done firft hould help his neighbour. We may perhops be here put in mind of our protection, our protection not to be put in comparion with that of a contemptible colony and that people ought ought ever to remember the abundance of protection received in recurn for the demands made upon them. I believe however; that ill-managed ftates have feldom much to boart of on that fubject. The general bad conduct of a private man's affairs may commonly be difcerned in the domeftic diforder of his houfhold. It is delivered down to us as a proof of the good government of King Alfred; that a maiden bearinc a purfe of money in her hand might in his reign have gone from one end of the kingdom to the other without fear of violence either to her perfon or her property. How is it with us? Can a man almoft nleep in his bed within the walls of our metropolis or travel on the King's high-road with fafety and with fecurity? Have we not among us more capital condemnations and executions, than all Europe befides? Does neverthelefs any one believe, that our people have in them a native iniquity or an original profligacy, beyond what there is in the reft of mankind? Are not in truth and at the bottom the accurfed taxes and the infupportable burthens of our country a confiderable caufe of the rapines, the robberies, se frauds, the forgeries and other offences of the fame fnrt now rife and reigning among us? I would for the honour of human nature willingly carry this reafoning fo far ; as to account in fome meafure by the fame means even for the venality and the proftitution obtaining at this time among the great and the qualified themfelves. We are notwithftanding told; that taxation is no tyranny; but I cannot conceive, in what corner of this kingdom, that expreffion could be picked up. It furely becomes any one ufing fuch difcourfe to explain; for what he pays taxes befides the produce of a place or a penfion: left it fhould look like the licentious language of fome bold beggar in the ftreets pretending to wonder; that the owner of a houfe was alarmed at its being in flames, whereas he himfelf warmed his fingers very comfortably at the fire. Protection and expence however do not go hand in hand in government: experience proves, that the rule ought rather to be reverfed. Let any one look around the world and frugal, œconomical ftates maintained at a fimall charge and with a tendernefs towards the property of the fubject will almoft ever be found moft diftinguifhable for a peaceable difpofition and an obedience to the laws

laws in their people at home; as well as the leaft difturbed by the infults and the attacks of their enemies abroad. Confider our plantations the objects of our prefent comparifon and into which we perpetually empty our jails, as into a jacques: are neverthelefs to be feen there fuch fure marks of mif-rule and mif-government? It may look like much too ludicrous a queftion on fo truly and exceedingly ferious a fubject; but might not in moft countries as good a king be had for a thoufand pounds a year and without putting up their regencies to auction, as any now known to reign, I mean, excepting our own? How many a people in Europe would at leaft think themfelves moft happy to have the experiment tried in their own ftate? Nolo regnare is a new language and to be as yet learned amons men. There is an expreffion of the fame fort faid fometimes to fall from a reverend profeffion and yet how very worthily and let me add not iery unwillingly is a certain honourable bench confantly filled ? Infomuch that were as many more wanted, their placcs might poffibly be fupplied; although not cqually well. Would to God therefore that high duties and taxes, heavy heavy preffures and burthens were in a nation; but half as fure a fign of protection and of fecurity, as they are of corruption and of venality and 1 knew a kingdom (to which the witer wifhes moft extremely weil) that might bid full defiance to all its foes without and through which Alfred's maiden might within travel as fafely in our days, as ever the did in his. Let however fome men inftead of defpifing, fufpending, overturning the affemblies and the legiflatures of our colonies rather think in what refpects to copy and to imitate governments fo much better adminiftered than their own: let them try an other time to find fome more ftriking reafon for taking their domeftic taxation out of their hands into ours, than their difcretion and our own extravagance.

Here I quit then this new argument; that we ought to tax our colonies, becaufe we do that matter fo very imprudently for ourfelves. It is likewife reported to have been flung out from the fame quarter; that our wars have ever fince the Revolution been the wars and that our debt is therefore in confequence the debt not of our minifters, but of our people.

This may appear rather to relate to the part of our nation refident in England or in Britain, than to thofe in America: as it feems however meant to throw the occafion of our actual neceffities and rapacioufnefs on the whole coliective community and as I verily believe the prefent difpute to be the general caufe and concern of all the members of our great empire againt a handful of over-bearing men and alfo the fact itfelf to be totally different from what is fo reprefented; I defire to fay fomething on the fubject. The whole pretence is plainly and totally groxndlefs. There is in all the domeftic hiftory of our country nothing more notorious, than how much our adminiftrations have ever fince the Revolution been conftantly mafters and unreftrained. Whatever picqueering there might in the time of King William be between the two ancient parties or between individuals defirous to be at the head; that matter was always ordered in the cabinet by fhuffling and cutting or balancing between whig and tory and tory and whig. For how very fmall a part did the body of the people or their incli "tions or their interefts ever enter intc government; after that the great event of the Revolution itfelf effected through them was to the minds of a few leading men once fettled and regulated. It is well known how in the reign of Qureen Anne one fét of minitters made war and another fet made peace at their pleafure and how their refpective parlianents backed them both. Different parliaments did then contradict one another ; but there has fince been an improvement made upon that practice; for the fame parliament has on a change of minifters and of neafures not ferupled readdy and difectly to contradict itfelf. The power of the crown and of thofe appointed by it has from the fe periods been continually increafing untill the prefent time; if there was between thirty and forty years ago in the religh of King George the 2 d : once a momentafy appearance of an independent majority it pafled away in an inftant like a flaff of lightning. The honour and the merit ate no doubt to be attributed to our adminiftrations'; if that: the nation has from the beginning of the reign of Eirig Willim Been ftrengthened, inriched and improved; more than might naturally have been expected in a courfo of noar sinety' years: $:$ bite to whom then belong the guilt and the difgrace; if that it is on the contrary fince that time weakened, begrared and undone? Thefe things are in general; but let me be fuffered to fay a word concerning our wars themfelves. Whoever has heard of the name of King William knows; that an oppofition to France was his ruling paffion. He firft led us into Flanders and into Germany; where fo much of the precious blood and treafure of this nation has fince been fpent. There was fome ground of gratitude towards him; but our obligations fhould hạve been paid in a more prudent manner and that was in a good degree perhaps then already done by the gift of thecrown. He dying left us at his deceafe the legacy of a French war. Queen Anne and her couniellors adminiftered; but what was the public better than betrayed by our being again led againt the almoft impregnable cities and fortifications of Flanders? Our nation was then in its vigour: the Spanihih Indies, Mexico, Pcru, Manilla and : the reft of thofe rich regions were open to us almoft without defence., What it was: probably in our power to have then done upon that ground; if we had to the utmoft:availed ourfelyes of our fleet, as we might and as we ought ; the events of the laft war fufficiently teftif $j$. Our conquefts there were befides to have by treaty belonged to us: whereas we bargained for nothing upon the contin $2 n t$ of Europe except to expend our men and our money. Our next war was foon after the acceffion of King George the firft; when Bremen and Verden extended their influence into the Mediterranean and involved us in hoftilities with Spain. That court accepted of peace through force: the Emperor profited by it: the evil of the war all fell on ourfelves. : The Spaniards long remembered and refented our conduct on that occafion; if they have at this day forgotten it. From thence proceeded their many infults, injuries and depredations; which produced the laft war but one forced upon us by thofe means in defence of our commerce and called for by our mercharits on that account and under thofe circumftances. This has heen our only neceffary war fince the Revolution nor was any one of the three former entered into even upon the fubject of our own interefts. The mifchief of this meafure was firf in the miferable management and then in a French war brought on by our

German campaigns and German meafures in the middle of it and which was even worfe conducted and made by that means. yet a greater grievance than the other. There remains to be mentioned only the late war. I wonder, who called for that? Not the Americans. Some men could at that time not fleep in their beds and in peace for want of a war with France to amufethem, when theywere waking. There were then forward; who are faid to have now been not backward in preffing and in recommending the prefent American mifchief. The French built caftles, buthad no numbers of inhabitants in America; hardly a hundred thoufand men, women and children; when we took Canada. Our people on the contrary multiplied in a prodigious proportion; but did not much trouble themfelves about building caftles. I wonder; whether that the cantles were in the end moft likely to take the men on the men to take the caftles or why oun Americans might not have been left to judge; when was the feafon to fettle with the fword the bounds between themfolves and their neighbours on that vaft continent, as would probably one day be done; but the moie in all appearance to our adhvantage, vantage, the longer that it was deferred. We armed however, as it were, in filence: the mation was fuddenly engaged in hoftilities and in reprifals. So much for our adventures in the fields of Mars; but what neceflary connection have lefs than half a dozen wars with a debt of one hundred and forty millionsfterling? Do not we read and hear of wars throughout our whale hiftory? Our ancuftors have feated their King on the throne of France. The reign of Queen Elizabeth was almoft a continued feene of war. She is well known to have neverthelefs refufed in the mean time the money offered by her people. King Charles the firit was not without foreign war. The mock commonwealth waged war. Cromwell to be the more like a King would have his war. Had not we feveral wars under Charles the fecond? But there was with all thefe things no national debt at the revolution; hardly of a fingle fhilling. This immenfe fabric and fyftem of our funds has all been raifed fince that time; a Aructure never equalled in the world of its kind; a building that may in its confequences caufe more and worfe confufion; than ever did Babel : although after a different manmer:

[351]

Our common income raifed on the publie and without reckoning the collection is by this means now mounted to between ten and eleven millions fterling annually! The whole of this immenfe edifice are our wife minifters at this moment undermining and going by their trains to blow up into the air and if I may fo exprefs myfelf about the ears of themfelves, of us and of all Europe. Providence was by a long interval of peace pleafed to afford us an opportunity of fo new modelling the fyftem of our taxes, our revenue and our trade; as that we might have ftood under our prodigious burthen and perhaps have in time leffened or difcharged it. That feafon is now paffed in vain and we fhall in all appearance never have fuch another: a proper plan for that purpofe could never enter into breafts fafceptible of our prefent moft extravagant fchemes: far other counfels, very different conceptions were required for that end. It is always fufpicious, that fomething is bad at the boitom; when minifters endeavour to fhuft upon the fhoulders of the people meafures or events; which they are at all tinies exceedingly unwilling to fuffer them to have any real fhare in the form= HO ing or the producing. Let however fome men at leaft confider the extreme importance and confequence of our prefent incumbrances now that they are brought upon us and do fublift; by whatever means, thefe things have happened : let them well reflect; that whofefoever was the debt, theirs will be the bankruptcy; if they fhall drive us into one.

It will hardly fail of being here afked, whether all adminiftrations fince the Revolution are included in thefe obfervations and particularly, whether there is any exception kept for the noble Lord; who conducted a confiderable part of the late war. I anfwer; that as long as the health of that noble perfon will permit him to pay any attention to the bufinefs of the public; fo long will in any extraordinary or difficuit conjuncture his country certainly caft their eyes towards him. His Lordmip is faid to have on this occafion been not wanting to offer hìs advice and his affiftance in his fituation, as one of the legillature and the great council of the nation. A very refpectable affembly of America have declared, that the propofitions thrown out by his Lordfhip might united with thofe of the continentad congrefs be made to ferve for the bafis or the beginning of a treaty of accommodation. The conduct of the nobie Lord, as a minifter, has therefore not only a relation to the paft and the general concerns; but likewife a connexion with this prefent and this efpecial exigency of our country. Every public perfon fubmits of courfe dis actions to the examination and the opinion of the whole; who are warranted to canvafs them with freedom; fo far as their own welfare, their good or theif evil is or has been affected by them, I don't know; that his Lordihip was an active advifer of the laft war ; that did not at leart appear in public. It was however begun with other cqunfels and thofe yery unlike his Lordrhip's. What campaigns in Germany and in America and what neglect of the Mediterranean and of Minorca! Let us draw, the viel over thofe difgraces. The nation fendible of its fituation crouched under the apprehenfions of a foreign invafion. Our mi, nifters $f$ or the time being however had happily fo much wit at leaft, as to perceive their own weaknefs and their want of affiltance. When the counfels of Proyidence donce and the courfe of ovents are fully ripe for the ruin of a people; thefe fall under the government of men equally blind to all outward circumftances and to their own infufficiency; but that moment was with us not then come. In this fate and condition of the public Lord Chatham was called to the helm. How fudden and how glorious a change for chis country then took place; I hall leave for our hiftory to tell; to tell perhaps, after that the government itfelf of Great-Britain fhall be no more; which period however let us hope to be very far removed; much farther than fome figns feem at prefent to threaten and to forewarn. It would be impertinent to repeat here the long and the well-known catalogue of our victories, our conquefts and our acquifitions under his Lordhhip's conduct in Europe, in Afia, in Africa and in America; as the language of the times then was. When a French fleet had fet fail known to be deftined for the invafion of thefe realms and that no news came of it for fome days, how indifferent an object of idle curiofity and inquiry was it with us? His Lordfhip united all the parts of this great empire and turned and employed againft its, enemies the combined ftrength of the whole. I don't know; whether I may fay; that he was as fortunate at union, as fome men have fince been effectual at divifion: the whole world may perhaps be well challenged on that head; but he and others have each had their different means of adminiftration and the effects have on both fides accordingly and perfectly correfponded. How is our America changed fince that time! Under whofe banners did it then ferve and then fight? But for what defign are its colours now flying, its fwords now drawn, its armies now marching, its artillery now mounted: who and where are its enemies and againft whom are all there preparations provided and intended? -The war however went on in Germany and we continued to run in debt under his Lord/hip.-Nothing wili ever induce me to deny the having learnt with my alphabet in politics; that our ifland ought on fuch occafions to keep clear of the continent : the whole experience of my life has to the greateft degree further ftrengthened in me the fame opinion nor do I in the leaft doubt ; but that I fhall to my laft day day continue in it fo confirmed and corroborated. I am yet more averfe to borrowing, than to the other ftep, if poffible, and fo far as they are different. Were it not for our debt ; the maddeft fet of minifters would be put to it totally to undo the nation within the period of their power. Lord Chatham did not however firft carry us into Germany; he found us there. I will not enter into the particular circumftances of Hanover or into any difficulties with regard to giving it up at that time, engaged as it was ; but a defenfive war in that country was certainly very different from an offinfive one in Flanders: our enemies confumed in that conteft many men and much treafure. With refpect to the latter point of money matters; Lord Chatham did not during the preceding peace guide the reins of government. He never had the power or the opportunity of fettling any previous eftablifhment on which to have fupported a war without adding to our debt: the midft of hoftilities with France was not a fit moment for fuch a purpofe. The revenue withal was not withn the province of his Lordfhip. He recommended in the firft feafon of his ministry a icheme for a tax; but which his colleagues in government refufed : I might perhaps have fomething to fay on that particular fubject; were it to my purpofe. It was however without doubt infinitely preferar ble to gain every thing with an additional debt of twelve millions a year than to lofe all with one of eight. His Lord/hip's plan appears to have been the making by victory way to a fpeedy, an honourable and an advantageous peace and he nobly performed his part towards it. Every candid man will in reflecting on this fubject confider; how much our wonderful fuccefs and conquefts were evidently owing to the counfels of Lord Chatham ; as likewife how far any difficulties or cmbarraffiments obfervisle in his meafures proceeded from the fituation and the circumftances of the nation; at the time that the adminiftration of it came into inis hands. Fortune however has probably never fuffered us to fee or to experience the full effects of the views and the defigns of his LordMip. This able ftatefman was not long after the conclufion of the late war again called to take upon him the care and the conduct of our government.

ment. I am perfectly perfuaded, that his Lordfhip would in fuch a fituation. have difdained to ufe his poft or his power ouly for the purpofe of heaping profits and advantagest on himfelf, his friends or hios famidy: that he would hardly have lhid his head on his pillow. with comfort nor have feen the face of the fun with fatisfaction; until he had eftablifhed the nas tion on fome fure and folid ground of bet ing able to difcharge its debts in time of peace and to make head againft its enemies in time of war. His capacity would have comprehended the means and the extent of our commerce, the fources and the effects of our taxes and the mutual combinations and relations of thefe two great objects with each other: his underftanding would have enabled him to avail himfelf of the lights and the affiftance of athers; where any thing of that kind might be required. It is inconceivable; but what our condition and our circumftandes would in the nature of things have admitted of fuch a fyftem and a fettle.ment, if that a due confideration and attention had been given to fo important a fubject and if our late time of leifure and of quiet had been properly employed to that moif effential and abfolutely neceffary purpofe. However motley the adminifration then formed by his Lordihip is reprefented to have been; he feems to have meant to manage and to govern them. by the means and as it were the dint of wife, of honeft and of good meafures. I truft, that he would have accomplifhed as much : that way would have over-borne all oppofition : the public would have co-operated with him: his Lordhip had proved that in the progrefs of the late war. A prince or a minifter and the people united can do wonders: although that may unhappily be an experiment not often put to the proof. But the Guardian Genius of Great-Britain Alept at that moment. Lord Chatham was driven by ficknefs from the helm and how different a fcene of affairs is now before our eyes! The evening fun of this great minifter feems to be fetting with a beauty and a luftre anfwerable to the blaze and the brightnefs of his meridian. The laft endeavours of his Lordihip during his feafon of heaith and in the capacity of an independent patriot have bees to reconcile the differences and to prevent the calamities of the public by a fcheme of accommodation modation between us and our colonies and likewife to improve the independence of Parliament by a moft well-judged propofition : of doubling the members for our counties in the Houfe of Commons together with correfpondent provifions for the Houfe of Peers; but which latter I will not prefume to repeat. The writer wifhes the welfare of his LordThip for the remainder of his days accordingly and in juft proportion, as his fervices and his conduct towards his country, have deferved: the fame is his moft fincere prayer with refipect to every public perfon, minifter or any other. May all men wear eternal laurels earned by their merits: may all men bear on their own heads only all the evils brought about by themfelves! Thefe things come from one hardly known to Lord Chatham except in public and whofe obligations to him are only in common with all the kingdom. This fmall incenfe is unworthy the enyy of any man : a poor, but due tribute of this kind is all the little return or reward likely to be received by thofe; who endeavour at this time to ferve or to fave their country. As to the general affairs before us; his Lordfhip's opinion having having on that fubject been rejected and a contrary plan being purfued: what can we expeft but likewife a fuccefs and an iffue ,tally different from thofe: which we formerly experienced under the counfels and the conduct of his Lordhip?

We are however fometimes tolid; that it is not they, who cry war and havock ; but who recommend peace and reconciliation: not they who paffed or who enforti ced the ftamp or the tea bills; bat who repealed the one and who have attempted to do the fame by the other, that have made all this mifchief. I hall in anfwer to this ondy wifh; that Providence may' be pleafed to refore the public to the ftate, in which it was before the date or between the execution of thofe acts and I will not add (but the nation itfelf mould readily enough ;) may the peace prodaced by the prefent meafures be upon the atuthors of them! People munt however be furely hard driven in their own defence; when they condefcend to employ fuck an argument.

But what fhall we fay to the authority and the fupremacy of the Legiflature fometimes tlmes founded fo high ? I truift myfelf to have already been fufficiently full and explicit on that head. It is however a mof refpectable expreffion: I know none more fo relative to human affairs; fo far as it is founded on the true conftitution of our country and when it is confined within the bounds prefcribed by God and by Nature to human government. I bear it at all events fo much reverence; that I fhall avoid to fpeak over-freely on the fubject of it: but fo much I muft fay; that whenever it is proftituted to fignify directly or indirectly the pleafure of a prince or a minifter or is put for arbitrary power and for abfolute defpotifm, in whatever hands placed ; the fanctity of it is exceedingly leffened: As to another language of the credit and the fteadinefs and the confiftency of government often in fome men's mouths I muft frankly confefs myfelf notfo much to worfhip thofe words: they perpetually appear to me to mean no more than the pofts and the places of thofe employing them. A total alteration of our meafures might poffibly demand likewife one among our minifters: That impediment removed, what further difficulty is there in the cafe? How can the honour M of government be really engaged in any meafures otherwife, than according to the rectitude of them ? Prudent, upright, beneficial proceedings do a credit to all governments: but for weak, unjuft, deftructive ones; furely the fooner that they are got rid of fo much the better. I flatter myfelf, that I could on this occafion have furnifhed certain perfons with a hint not unworthy of their reflection; if I had enjoyed the honour of being in their counfels: which would have been; to have inftead of drawing fo very deeply upon the public made rather fome demand upon their own modefty; I mean to have changed their meafures; but to have tried whether they could not by the help of a good friend in the cabinet have kept their pofts. One would have thought, that they fhould not have wanted advice on this head; but nemo omnibus boris-They appear now to have unneceffarily ftaked both their country and their places; if nothing elfe befides.

Some one may however afk; why is there fo much contention about thefe colonies; cannot we well live without them? How do many other nations and how did we in the reign of Queen Elizabeth ? To which I fay; pence be with the fpirit of that excellent princefs; whom I cannot mention or think of without honour : although it may perhaps be the fafhion of the times to reflect upon her name and that there may be reafon for it; fince thefe do certainly very little refemble hers: Heaven only knows; whether that exalted fpirits look down from above upon the affairs of mortal men; whether they intereft therifelves in our concerns or receive fatisfaction from our refpect and our remembrance of them: the writer however finds a pleafure in profeffing his reverence for the memory of that incomparable Queen ; whom he holds for one of the firft crowned heads, that ever fat on this or on any other throne: the diftinguifhing mark and character of whofe reign were a true care of her people and of the public; who commanded money and taxes granted to her by unbribed and by unbought parliameits to remain in the pockets of her fubjects, as her beft and her fureft treafury. I wonder; whether there our invaluable provinces would have been under revolt againft the mother country on the fubject of taxation, when that M 2

Queen wore the crown of England; if they had then belonged to us. I am however very far from meaning to charge this unfortunate event upon the perfon of our gracious Prince: the royal breaft is reported to have been filled and infpired with a warm affection to our colonies. It muft be makers of mifchief, whifperers, flatterers, evil minifters and favourites; who alone can in the prefent æra caufe our troubles and our grievances. Perfons indeed of that fort are faid to have from the truly great Princefs before Spoken of found but little entertainment and I truft, that they will equally be difcouraged or be difcharged; if any fuch fhould have prefumed to approach the prefence of majefty in our days and if the fruits of their works fhall by this time have but too fully teltified the nature of the parent ftock; from which they muft be fprung. It is however true; that in thofe times Scotland was not united, Ireland not fubdued, our Weft-Indies not planted, our EaftIndies not fettled nor Africa frequented by us: we were neverthelefs a great, a glorious, a flourifhing and an improving people. Colonies and dependencies are doubtlefs not abfolutely neceffary to a nation;

tion; but there muft according to an ancient expreflion be no brick to make, where no ftraw can be procured. There muft in fuch a cafe not be every year to pay near five millions of pounds ferling for the intereft of a debt nor above five other millions to find for current fervices; there muft not be more than ten millions to bring annually clear and neat into an exchequer. I wonder how our minifters will manage thefe matters without America. It is there, that the political fhoe pinches thofe, who feem to feel nowhere elfe. Were it not for this caufe; America might be the main and that whole continent be put upon the caft of a die. Were we out of wantonnefs or for amurement ftripped in a courfe of lefs than three years of all our provinces; the debt of honour might poffibly be paid and we neverthelefs not become baṇkrupt; but it is another conjuncture now. How will fome people in the prefent fituation provide for our increafed navy, our various and numerous armies, our ftanding troops, our militia, our foreign forces, Dutch, Hanoverians, Heffians, Brunfwickers, Ruflians and the Lord knows whom; I fay, for the ordinance, the tranf-port fervice, the civil lift, for all the extraordinary efforts now making; as well as the common frength and trappings of our moft expenive government? What will they anfwer; if a defperate and a ftarving people, a licentious and an illpaid foldiery tired with plundering and with deftroying each other fhould unite in requiring reaion of them, as of the authors of all their evils? What fatisfaction will they make; if a debt of near upon a hundred and forty millions of pounds fterling fhall one day be demanded at their hands? The proudeft and the moft ornamented among them may in fuch a time look very imall : they do nev thelefs not know and they feem full as little to reflect; whether or no that hour is very far off. This is the point, which I would likewife willingly preis upon our country gentlemen. It may feem a ipecious language to fome : why cannot we filently and quietly fink into an abfolute monarchy ; like fo many other nations around us? We fhall neverthelefs enjoy our manfions, our parks, our tables, the regard of our friends and the refpect of our neighbours: we may indeed be obliged to bend to a few fuperiors; but the natural pride of man will be pleafed and be flattered with a great number of inferiors, over whom he may himfelf lord it a little in return: Who can then call this fuch an uncomfortable or an infuppo table life? I will not in anfwer to thefe things once more point out fome of the nobleft parts of the world laid wafte by defpotifin : I will not endeavour to roufe or to raife in fupport of the public liberty and profperity the honourable blood received from the anceftors and running in the veins of thofe to whom I am now particularly prefuming to apply myfelf; but I fay; that this pleafing dream of fuch a peaceable change cannot in our circumftances poffibly take place. Bankruptcy and the breach of our provinces from us neceffarily muft and inevitably will produce diftraction, confufion, convulfions and every evil; which thefe perfons do with very great reafon ever the moft fear and moft abhor. Should two fuch very confiderable portions, of this empire, as the mother country and our colonies of North-America feparate from each other only to mect again in a contention of arms; all Englịh eftates cannot but be broken into a thoufand Shatters by the hoock and the conlict. Should

Should the funds fail; however fome men may flatter themfelves about a fponge and the wiping off our debts in fuch a way ; their lands will infallibly be brought to nothing long enough before even the boldeft minifter will venture upon that meafure ; however ill it may befides fare in the mean time with the public creditors. I verily belicve, that there is in Europe no rank and number of men whatfoever without exception more to be envied than the country gentlemen of England nor perhaps fo much; if that the nation fhall continue in the fame internal peace and tranquility as it has for many ages paft enjoyed: but fo then on the other hand there being throughout our whole kingdom not one fingle fortified place, no city, town, royal or private caftle capable of refiftance neither are in appearance any perfons more expofed, more helplefs or lefs prepared for felf-defence, than they; if that thefe bleffings fhall unhappily leave our ifland and give way to rapine, to plunder and to violence; either coming upon us from abroad, like a cloud, or arifing among ourfelves, as a peftilence. Some one however may here fay; if that this America is fuch a fine and a fpacious place; as is often often talked of: why may not we emigrate thither, as well as others? Be it fo; but will the fame ranks be maintained in New England as in Old; may in that day poffibly the low not be made high and the high be made low? Is the fable forgotten of a prince and a ploughman caft together upon a ftrange coaft and how much better the latter fared, than the former? An Englifh country gentleman will make but an indifferent figure with the Atlantic ocean between him and his eftate; when high taxes, abatement of rents, breaking of tenants and other domeftic diforders thall abforb or fhall prevent his remittances. Let this matter be turned in all its lights, let the fubject be confidered on every fide and it may be depended upon; that there will be found no poffible fafety or welfare for this now happy and fortunate, as well as moft refpectable order of men; except by the prefervation of all the effential parts of our great empirc in peace, in union and in harmony with each other. Thefe things are fo clear and fo ftriking; that the prefent indifference, abjectnefs, defpondency, or whatever it is to be called of our landed gentlemen in this moft crifical conjuncture of their country is indeed deed very ftrange. They might do much did they exert themfelves on the occafion : their proper applications could not well be refifted or refufed; but caufes appear to be even from that quarter preparing, confpiring and concurring towards our ruin. Thefe perfons will one day have hearty reafon to repent them of their conduct; but the time and the opportunity will then be part and beyond the power of man to call back. There is another more hardened and more hard-hearted race, who may not in an univerfal calamity merit perhaps any particular compaffion; but to whom I would neverthelefs fay fomething; I mear, the expectants of a 'court and the creatures of a minifter. Such are the circumftances and the condition of thefe times, that even they will in all appearance be little longer able to enjoy peaceably their places and their profits; unlefs that they fhail likewife conrent to join in the faving of their country. It will be but poor plundering of the public for people; who thall by the means of foreign enemies or by any other general misfortunes be themfelves the prey of others. So far is it then from being indifferent for us in our prefent fituation tuation to forego America; that it would be a much ricer queftion, whether there is almoft a fingle man in the kingdom; who will not find and feel the lofs of it.

One ingenious gentleman however declares himfelf to have difcovered; that there can be no medium or accommodation between us and the Americans; no fuch peace and terms, as fubfinted from the firft foundation of the colonies until within thefe very few years; until the ftory of the ftamps and afterwaras from the repeal of that act to the project of the tea; no fuch as does at this time moft happily obtain between us and Ireland: I fay, that a figure has been formed, by which all this is found to be utterly impoffible under the prefent planet and we are given to underftand inftead; that no aiternative is left for us; but either to bring them into abfolute fubjection, that is, in plain Englifh to cut their throats or elfe to caft them off. The turn is in the mean time to revile and to abufe the Americans; that fo our wife and merciful adminiftration may be fupported firft in trying the bloody experiment and then in lofing our colonies; if that fhall not fuc-ceed. It is neverthelefs but a very fhort. time, not above three or four years at mort ; fince that rivers of gold and of filver kept conftantly, quietly, gently flowing from that continent into the mother country and the feat of empire. Things might have fo continued : the caufe of rupture did not come from their part : it proceeded from Great-Britain. Why might not we then have let them gone on pouring their millions into our laps; at leaft while they were willing? What has on a fudden brought us into this new and this defperate dilemma; if we are under fuch a one? Undoubtedly, our own extreme folly and madnefs and nothing elfe. This is as certain; I will not fay, as demonftration ; but as matter of faet can make it. So much for the time paft and concerning that to come; fince the making of peace is certainly, as cheap and as eafy and probably as fure likewife; as cutting the throats of hundreds of thoufands of armed men: why. Gould we in the firft place not employ tiat means and do thefe Americans the honour to accept from them: fome further quantities of that trafh; for which they fribetitute paper in their country, but which Englifhmen have have a wonderful fondnefs to handle in fpecie? Why will it not be time enough for telling them to fet up for themfelves; when we do not want or are not willing to meddle with any more of their money? Will not the propofed expedient be at all times ready to our hands without trouble? But quid non mortalia pectora cogis---What will not the taite of fome preferment and the defire of more induce men to advance ? We are however to conceive no fuch caufe in the cafe of this gentleman; for non vult Epifsopari. I fay, and I acknowledge that whoever prefumes to propofe himfelf to the public for a guide; does certainly and of courfe intitle them to enquire into the grounds of his conduct for fo doing. No man deals about him more freely or more plentifully his hard words than this writer. That they break ibrough every tie of bonour, bonefty and conjcience; that they forge, lie and fallify* make but a mighty fmall part of the compliments; which he beftows upon thofe, with whom he declares himfelf to be in controverfy. He is therefore on a double account the object

[^3]ject of that maxim. It has not pleafed the Maker of men; that they fhould abfolutely look into the breafts of one another; as they do into a book : but if it was not for a feeming difclaim, the fincerity of which I do not quention; I hould fhrewdly fufpect inyfelf to fee in the writings of this gentleman the very frongeft, outward figns of feeking preferment. There are various and different ways of doing this; but perhaps few furer or better for the purpofe, than pamphleteering after a proper manner. I wifh however this gentleman fincere' $y$ and heartily a Bifhoprick, whatever he may do for himfelf; if the opinion promoted by him fhall prove true of the little importance of North-America to Great-Brit in. God is my Judge; that I feek only truth and the good of my country. It is neverthelefs to be earnefly hoped; that a proper period and a due time may be token for the experiment and that neither he nor any man will in the face of a diftracted public wear a mitre; as the reward of his having contribated to their confufion. But this gentleman is not fatisfied with one civil war in America: he beats the drum drum for another in Ireland. He propofes to unite likewife that ifland under the Parliament of Great-Britain; which he fays bas long been the ardent wijb of every true patriot of botb nations.* We fhall then have all the Irifh, as we have now all the American throats to cut. I will for one however venture to advire ; that we firft finilh our prefent, before we begin upon fuch another bufinefs. Does the gentleman mean there likewife to recommend his noftrum of calting them off; if they thall after the fame manner prove fubborn and backward upon the experiment? They have rich bifhopricks in that country; however ftupid the Americans may have been in putting by fuch an eftablifhment; when it has been prefied upon them. I dare fay that no ecclefiaftical pique or ipirit on any account of that kind ever makes a part of the prefent fubject; but furely all men of every or of no profeffion muft wih us well to reflect ; before that we fling away our ineftimable poffeffion of Ireland after North-America already gone by the very means propofed for the other. What could induce any [^4]man in his fenfes to found at this inftant an alarm likewife for that ifland and to threaten them there with the attempt of a Britifh taxation in their turn? Is not this doing the work of the Americans with a witnefs? It certainly could not be intended to flatter the views of fome men in the moft remote receffes of their minds or to make a merit of avowing an extravagance beyond what our minifters have hitherto publicly at leaft appeared to defign or to defire upon their own principles. This would indeed be bidding high for advancement ; could it be the meaning: but whatever may be the motive; it becomes in fo great a crifis, a good and a faithful Englifhman not to fcruple faying; that this writer feems in fact moft wantonly to play with the fafety and the welfare of his country.

Some grofs accounts of our exports to America, to Holland and to Germany are by the fame perfon produced out of the Cuftom-Houfe books and comparifons made upon them. I will not enter into that fuoject: I will fay nothing about the authority of thefe books nor how confiderable or how improving our NorthAmerican

American trade was according to thofe accounts themfelves: it would not pay the pains. We ought for the purpofe of forming by fuch a means any proper opinion concerning the value of our late connection with that country to have before us all the true particulars of every thing really brought in and carried out between us in any way and on whatfoever account. There would then be feen, what might perhaps amaze fome men; but which will infallibly be found by the effects. Our NorthAmerican trade was undoubtedly both moft important in itfelf and likewife complicated with a great part of our whole commerce. We fee what has by its failure already happened with regard to the African; but which muft in thofe books be entered under its own head and not that of America. This fingle inftance fully proves the fallacy of all fuch confined obfervations and reafoning. Our Colonies and Great-Britain however are to be compared in a very different manner befides; as dependencies on one hand and as the feat of empire on the other. All the treafure, all the gold and the filver however procured, all the fpare produce of that vaft continent came on this acN count to us and centered here. So likewifo would it in great meafure have done had it been ten times as much and whether or no one word was written about it in a book. What mines of money have by the fame means our Weft-India iflands been to us? But go and confult the CuftomHoufe books on the fubject and the balance of trade with them will of courfe and from that very circumftance there appear againft us. I wonder what book contains an account of the prodigious profit received by us every year from Ireland. I cannot likewife help obferving here; that the fame reafoning holds good with regard to England and to Scotland; where however no book is kept and of which there does not always feem to be the jufteft fenfe; but men are eagle-eyed to their perfonal and abfolutely blind to their general interefts. No fmall fhare of the fubftance of thefe countries is by our dominion and our government drawn hither: the lefs that they receive from us in return, the clearer are our gains and the more remains with us to fend and to fell to others. When this gentleman comes to confider the advantage of our imports from North-America; he admits only of two heads; Raw materials of manufactures and taxable objects.* This feems very ftrange. Suppofe Corn, a commodity not taxed, fent from thence hither to the amount of a million of money, the produce of which is without return or exchange to difcharge the demands of government, of abfentees &c. is this nothing nor worth the reckoning? He feems to object to rice being a taxable object. He fays, it ought not to be taxed. Suppofe then neither that nor tobacco to be fo; but remitted hither for the end and in the manner before mentioned: fuppofe them however to be purchafed at the fountain head of our plantations with our manufactures; inftead of being paid for at foreign markets with our moncy: fuppofe again neither the one or the other; but that they were only a profit to our merchants and an employment to our feamen by being imported and exported. Would they in all or in any of thefe cafes be of no confideration? I will not dwell on this fubject: but it feems to me that the gentleman himfelf muft on further reflection fee the deficiency of his own argument. There are indeed perfons, who appear to think the reft and the bulk of mankind N 2 made made only to be taxed; but that cannot here be the cafe. Thefe cuftom-houfe books however having thus come in my way, I defire to be indulged in throwing out an ænigma concerning them; which I hall not ftay to explain, but the meaning of which I truft myfelf well to underftand. The beft meafure poffible to purfue with refpect to them would perhaps be; if the Legiflature was pleafed to command them all to be burnt in one common pile and never to be again begun. What a noble facrifice and offering would that be upon the altar of commerce! It would be a flame of a very different kind from that, which is now kindled between Britain and America. Our merchants might perhaps take no great pains to extinguifh it. That point however lies out of my prefent road.

But we are told; that if we ranfack hiftory, records, ftatutes, books and writings, we may mufter ftrange charges againft thefe Americans. They fometimes winched and flinched under government, at other times they fmuggled and contrabanded in trade. Thefe are truly mighty matters. Were not they upon the whole moft obedient fubjects in peace? It was as rare to fird a rebel as a pher-

a phoenix among them. Were they not zealous allies in war? It is but between ten and twenty years, fince they helped us to fubdue no fmall portion of the globe. Did not we to a great degree direct their trade? We have received from them mines of riches by that means. What real wrong did they ever once offer us? They planted themfelves at their own expence and are neverthelefs known and acknowledged among mankind for the moft noble and moft ieneficial colonies ever fubject to any nation. Why fhould we then trouble currelves about trifles or make mountains of mole-hills; when the whole rent fo very well? Do we expect, that nature fhould to content our humours have made millions of men without the paffions and the fenfations common to our fpecies or are we ourfelves exempt from thefe at home? Such things, it may be faid, betrayed however a lurking and a latent fire; which might one day flame forth. But I afk when and how, in what manner or at what diftance? Any fuch pretence is as to the prefent time totally groundlefs, contradictory both to the fact and to our own conduct. If a fpirit of rebellion or of fedition was fpread and rife rife throughout our provinces; how came our cunning men with all their lights to be ignorant of it or knowing that a number of barrels of gunpowder were ready heaped up and prepared; did they themfelves witl their own hands lay the trains and put the match to them? This would have been full as abfurd in action; as their friend's paradox is in reafon. The truth is ; that inftend of owning and of amending our errors; now that they are become fo plain, as to be perceived both by ourfelves and by the whole world; fome of us feek or encourage others to feek thefe poor, paltry, contemptible fubterfuges; as a colour or an excufe for our crying injuftice and ingratitude with regard to the Americans and our moft wretched and ruinous conduct with refpect to our country at home.

But Methodifm has entered the lifts againft liberty and againft property. We are from that quarter told; that it is only a few deep, fecret, covert, Englifh Republicans; who have raifed up this civil war in America and who oppofe all meafures of reconciliation. Thefe Republicans therefore paffed or executed the acts relating relating to the famps, the tea, the port of Bofton, the charter and the government of Maffachufets-bay, the fifheries and the commerce of America: they fent an army to that country laft year and they doubled it this together with fleets, artillery and all fit means of mifchief to attend it: they rejected, refufed or neglected all applications and petitions for peace from New-York, from the continental congrefs, from the city of London, from various parts of America and of Britain; as likewife the propofitions of Lord Ch., of Mr. B. and of other perfons for the fame purpofe. One part of thefe meafures have been the certain caufes of our civil war and the other part the oppofition to reconciliation. Is it the fame Republicans, who have garrifoned Gibraltar and Minorca with Hanoverians and who have publifhed a Crufado calling all men and all nations to the deftruction and the plunder of our colonies and who are to tranfport them thither for that pious and that beneficial purpofe? 1 am tired with reckoning; but how horrible a lift it is and what wicked men muft thefe Republicans be! Thefe dew, covert Republicans muft furely have been very crafty fo to have have baffled and to have over-reached our many oftenfible minifters; who being able to act openly and avowedly have no doubt, good men, taken ten times the pains to keep things right; that thefe abominable Republicans have to put them wrong. How unlucky is it ; that either our minifters were not as cunning as thefe Republicans or thefe Republicans not as honeft as our minifters: in either of which cafes we and our colonies might have continued towards one another in the fame ftate, as we were three or four years ago; peaceable, contented and quiet! I cannot however but congratulate mankind; that there were not more of thefe Republicans: thefe very few have, it feems, flung into confufion one of the firft ftates in the world and, it is to be hoped, as wifely governed; as it is high in other regards-Si duo praterea tales-If there had been a dozen more fuch and efpecially if they durft have proceeded by daylight, what part of Europe might have efcaped? Republics do not rife or fpring up like mufhrooms; but who knows, whether they might not have been, as thick, as iflands in the Archipelago? An European could then have hardly gone to Court for Republics. There would have bee. no King's Chaplains---Dii meliors piis---I wonder, what the King of CochinChina would have thought concerning fuch a condition of our quarter of the earth; who, a Dutch traveller tells us, had like to have choaked himfelf with laughing only on hearing; that there was a people in Holland, who lived without a King. This Reverend Gentleman tells us in his Calm Addrefs; that thefe Republicans are endeavouring to divide our colonies from us in order to bring about by that means their favourite fcheme of a commonwealth in England: another charges upon them in his Humble Addrefs; that they are endeavouring to keep us and our colonies together for the very fame evil end. This argument is then a two-edged fword with a wienefs; which cuts the republican fingers both ways. I don't know; whether I may not compare it to Scylla and to Charibdis: that if a poor Republican happens to efcape the one; he is fure to be devoured or to be fiwallowed up by the other. I don't pretend to reconcile thefe two Reverend Gentlemen: unlefs we may fuppofe; that it is. poffibly poffibly fome honeft, moderate, wellmeaning men, whom they both concur to abufe, but in this moft contradictory manner; men who defire nothing but the peace and who heartily abhor on any account whatfoever the very idea of the diftraction and the confufion of their country, who never entertained for a moment the leaft intention towards an Englifh or a Britifh commonwealth in their lives and whom thefe Gentlemen make fo bold to charge only from their love of the public and at the moft perhaps fome diftant, fpeculative, Utopian opinions, which are many and various among mankind. The fame Apoftle in Politicks, as well as in Religion, fingles out Venice, Genoa and Holland, as three the moft defpotic ftates under heaven. It is a pity, that he did not likewife favour us with his patterns of the freeft: it is to be prefumed; that they would have been Pruflia, Ruffia and Turkey. Hypocrite, Bigot or Enthufiaft or a compofition of thefe three characters, do you in your dotage likewife long after the flefh-pots of Egypt or are you afraid; left that the light of reafon and of liberty fhould banifh your cant and your jargon out of America? Be fatisfied fatisfied with puzzling or with mifleading yourfelf and your followers about frecwill, grace, fpirit and other fuch fubjects comprehended neither by you nor by them nor perhaps by any body elfe: you cannot at the bottom but be fenfible; that truth and reafon will not afford grounds whereon to perfwade a great people; that they have nothing belonging to them of their own: other means muft be employed for that purpofe; to which however you are willing to become a trumpeter. All government whatfoever is founded in confent or in force: all lawful government is fo in confent; from which alone can arife any obligation to obedience. They who fcorn to require on their fide confent ; neceffarily leave againft them the right of reffitance. Where club-law is the practice of the Sovereign; the fame code is of courfe open for the ufe of the fubjects; when they can execute it. Slavery depends upon the will and the pleafure of the mafter; but liberty and property reft in the concurrence of the governed. You tell us; that the Americans and their anceftors had a right to be taxed by the Par: liament of England; but that they never: had any other. I fay; that they had a right right to liberty and to property, to the fubftance and not to the Chadow, to the matter and not to the form only: they enjoyed thefe by our parliament; when this was the proper method for that purpofe: but fince it has ceafed to be fuch; they ftill retain their right to thofe ineftimable bleffings to be enjoyed by fuch means and in fuch manner; as their new circumftances and condition do beft admit. But you and many more in England, you fay, have no votes for Members of Parliament and where is the difference between fuch perfons and the Americans? Let me try to tell you; if you do not already know. You are exactly in the fame fituation, with thofe who have votes; law for law, tax for tax, benefit for benefit, burthen for burthen. Thefe cannot preferve or profit themfelves without doing precifely the fame by you; they cannot enflave or empoverifh you without fuffering the like fate and fortune themfelves. The Americans are under very different and in fome refpects contrary circumftances. They are abfolutely with regard to this great point of taxation in the oppofite fcale. Every fingle fhilling levied on an American weighs on the Britifh fide and faves juft the fame fum to the perfons impofing it upon him or to thofe chufing fuch, as do fo. This argument is hourly hackneyed in our ears; but how few words afford it an anfwer in appearance beyond reply? You tell us; that it will be no harm for America, if it is taxed like Scotland. I anfwer, that Great-Britain now raifes for the year at three fhillings in the pound upon the land about eleven millions fterling; the collection included. Scotland is favoured in the two taxes of the land and the malt; that is in two millions and a quarter of this fum; but with refpect to the remaining eight millions and three quarters the NorthBriton pays alike and exactly, as the South. This is your pattern for a people; who now plainly appear to have neither gold nor filver among them and whofecommerce is confined by ourfelves. I think; that you can hardly be acquainted with the meaning and the extent of your own words on this fubject. You mention Ireland, as another example for America. That feems. as Atrange as the other. Could it mifs your memory; that Ireland is actually taxed by their own reprefentatives in the very manner; which the Americans defire? Every man, man, you fay, may fit under his own vine and his own fig.tree. But how can that or to what purpofe will it be; when another may come and cut it down or take the fruit of it at his pleafure ?---But that has not been fo hitherto---no nor this taxation. Paft parliaments have undone our country at home by taxing: what ground then can there be to imagine; that thofe to come would not do as much by America? You may quibble and chicane, as long as you will; but you had need to pull down the pillars of nature ; before you can overturn the great principles of liberty and of property. You are faid to have ftrangely contradicted yourfelf on this fubject; but I little trouble myfelf about that: you contradict the cleareft reafon; after which you may for me make as free with yourfelf befides as you pleafe. Your conduct however does in one refpect a credit to this people; if that the charge of fanaticifm often laid upon them by their adverfaries; was as well founded, as is fometimes pretended; they would hardly have had you for an enemy. You remind us of the great rule to fear God and to honour the King: when all will be well; but no other way, I fay, reverence God; fear to offend offend his laws; love him, as far as our poor and our weak faculties can lift themfelves up towards his incomprehenfible nature: honour the King, when he is a good one ; think defervedly of him when he is otherwife. Truft conftantly to the truth; never wilfully be deceived yourfelf nor deceive others. A good King is truly a great bleffing of Heaven; the contrary is a fcourge and a judgement. Plagues, peftilence and famine are the bites of a fly in comparifon of a bad prince; as the ftate of mankind and the hiftory of the world will well inftruct us. Let us not affect to couple together two Beings infinitely diftant from each other, infinitely more diftant than the vaulted kky fometimes called Heaven is from our earth; I fay, to couple them with an affectation of equality or perhaps with fome preference of the mortal to the eternal: fince to be honoured is certainly before being feared. Methodift, methodift, do not you with all your pretences of piety about you compliment your King at the expence of your God; however covertly or indirectly. I hope to fee no Mcthodift on the throne of England: it might be a fad prefage. Three of our princes have particularly given into fuperfition perftition and their reigns have in a fingular manner been marked with misfortunes. Let us on all occafions feek and purfue the happinefs of mankind. That is the real rule given by God to all men and all nations: it is plain to every apprehenfion: it is more or lefs within the power of every one to perform and he is the worft of impoftors; who perverts to any other purpofe our moft benevolent religion. Why did not you endeavour to induce the governors of our country to caft the weapons out of their hands; where peace has ever ftuck from the beginning and where it yet fticks; if that they have not themfelves made it too late? Why did you not fet forth the prefent ftarving, wretched condition of the poorer people or England? Is this no grievance or does it according to your general pretence not fubfift or is it no confequence of national meafures or is it an improper fubject in this American difpute or are you unacquainted with it? You can tell it loudly enough, when you are talking to the lower rank themfelves; but fo do you likewife know how to whifper it ; when you fpeak for fome others to hear and for whofe ears your addrefs was in all appearance intended tended and not for thofe of the Americans to whom it is for form fake fuperfcribed. Your zeal is now not without knowledge; whatever it may be at fome other times.

[ 191 ]

It is fometimes faid in defence of the minifter, that the prefent meafures are not according to his own opinion or inclination; but that they are impofed upon him from another quarter. No fuch difcourfe deferves a moment's delay or attention. If the nation is undone, what does it matter by whofe means? Whether any one hurried and blinded by his own paffions ftrikes with a bold and a defperate hand his dagger into the heart of his country or whether he confents to be made the cool and the abandoned inftrument of another in the doing of it; either the one or the other crime is of fuch a magnitude; that the whole world is hardly capable to hold a balance wherein toweigh it. I do not doubt; but that many a man has in different fations concurred on this occafion with a moft unwilling mind: the few at the helm however have from the beginning to the prefent inftant carried on all the procefs of thefe mierable meafures fo roundly, fo readily, fo earnefly, fo violently and with fo little appearance of backwardnefs or of ferupuloufnefs; that their willingnefs towards the work and not the contrary appears the only wonder to be accounted for. It hurts me to take notice; that a caft and colour of cruelty feem to dye the whole of thefe proceedings. But the attempt to ftarve the inhabitants of our colonies by prohibiting the importation of provifions; which is waging war with the poor and the helplefs, with women and children, on whom only fuch a meafure muft fall: the defign of exciting, of arming and of leading againft our countrymen nations of favage Indians; who do not in their hoftilities act like men, but who feek with a horrible barbarity to imbrue their hands in the blood of that defencelefs fex and their harmlefs little ones: the endeavours to debauch llaves for the purpofe of deftroying and of butchering their mafters: the fending armies of ftrangers and of barbarians to wafte with fire and with fword that country; which was within thefe three years fubject to us and which we pretend tend to defire and to expect hould be fo again : the wanton deftruction of towns and of dwellings and, I-hope, that I may not join the unbecoming treatment of brave men under the pretence of their being rebels: the general hardnefs and ingratitude of doing thefe things and much more to a people; who ever bore us the moft fincere and the warment affection and from whom we have received unfpeakable benefit; muft, I fay, furely move every one, whofe nature has in it any mixture of the milk of humanity. Cruelty has hitherto been never charged upon us, as a nation: do not let that likewife be now thrown into our meafure; as if it was on this occafion not fufficiently heaped up and full without any fuch addition.

Our adminiftration however, we are told, has been deceived. That matter will not be difputed with them; but if any one neither knows of himfelf how to chufe fit meafures nor to confult proper perfons upon the fubject of them nor to adopt them; when they are pointed out and preffed upon him by thof. whom he $\mathrm{O}_{2}$ does does not confult ; for the love of heaver what has he to do at the head of a ftate? Can fuch a perfon poffibly find no other way of fpending his time? If any thing can add to the enormity of the prefent proceedings themfelves; it is the headlong manner in which they have againft fo much advice and admonition and from fo many quarters both at home and abroad been pieffed and purfued. It was not particularly pointed out; that Lexington would be the beginning of blood or Bunker's-Hill the field of battle: the names of Putnam and of Warhington were not written down; but I cannot recollect fo much as one fingle material circumftance, which has taken place and of which our rulers were not fairly and timely forewarned. Every ftep might readily be reckoned up; if it was not too ftale and too well known a fory to be now repeated. Have not we fought and bought and paid for deception? Was not it publicly underftood to be the high road of preferment for our governors to flatter our power and our meafures and to make mifchief between us and our colonies? When we had thus purchafed mifinformation and evil counfel were we not our own dupes and did we not greedily fwallow and believe, what we had ourfelves fo procured with our money? Why is however not fome fmall fatisfaction at leaft given on this fubject? Why are fuch wretched advifers, the ill-fated inftruments of this moft ruinous civil war, fuffered to continue crawling about our councils or feeding upon the blood of the public? But wherefore do we talk of the counfels or the information of men; when Providence, fate, events themfelves have in the ftrongeft manner admonifhed and difcouraged the authors of thefe misfortunes; but with no more effect, than if fuch circumftances had only concerned the flate of affairs and fome fquabble in China or in Japan. There is not a deafer adder upon earth than a minifier of ftate; when you would charm his paffions, his pride, his ambition or his avarice: but Heaven have pity upon that poor people; whofe adder is blind, as well as deaf; who will neither hear the cleareft reafon nor can fee the plaineft facts, when they fare him the moft fully in the face. It now rains addreffes; as fome people fay, that frogs drop from the clouds. To addrefs is underftood to be the means of finding favour at court and in the cabinet. Thefe addreffes fet forth the flourifhing fate of the kingdom, of our commerce and our manufactures and how little the war and the revolt of America ar, yet felt. Men may put their confidence in this fine account; who have a mind and are determined to be deceived: but our minifters furely cannot be fuch children, fuch chickens, fuch innocents as not to be fenfible, that there has hitherto been no time for a full and a fair trial of the effect. While our colonies kept paying their debts and fending plentifully of their own produce to us and took from us little or nothing of ours: what muft be the wifdom of thofe ftatefmen or of any other perfons; who could fancy that to be the period, in which we were likely to feel their lofs? If the importation from thence into Britain ftopped on the Monday, did any one dream; that our government would be bankrupt or our people all be ftarved or our country be in diftraction on the Tuefday? The proverb fays, that opportunity flies apace; but fuch great events and the fate of nations demand time and maturity. The fact neverthelefs does already begin as much to fhew and to develop itfelf; felf; as could in fo fhort a fpace have been feared or expected. Manchefter and fome few other of our manufacturing places may perhaps maintain their former ground; but it is too fure a truth, that the body of our poorer and our lower people, our labourers, our handycriftfmen and our manufacturers themfelves are in general throughout the nation now funk and reduced to a degree never experienced before among us. What a material, what a melancholy circumftance and confideration! This our minifters might know without flirring out of their own faction for information. How can then fome men read or hear without blufhing thofe pretty compofitions of their own procuring or encouraging ? Come our misfortunes infallibly will and but too faft, if we continue our actual courfe; when court-adulation, addreffes and flattery will little avail to defend us from them. Would to God, that fome men would have more patience on the fubject and not fo haften them upon us; merely becaufe they are not here at this moment! They will not come like a flath of lightning; but let me add, neither will they fo pafs away When we produce ourfelves the caufes, do we ftand ftaring and enquiring; whether it is to be expected, that the effects will follow? What fort of an hurbandman muft he be; who having with his own hand fown the feed fhould doubt; whether he was in due time to reap the fruits and the harveft of it, or who made a wonder; that his corn was not in the ear and the grain at Chriftmas? Our minifters have immoveably fixed their eyes on one favourite point, the abfolute fubjection of America; they will believe in the moft abfurd propofition, opinion or plan; which appears to lead or to contribute to it ; but they feem neither to fee or to hear or to underftand any one object in the whole world lying out of that line. Deceived no doubt we have been and moft grofsly and moft grievoufly. But by what means? Our own paffions have impofed upon us; our contempt of the perfons, our averfion to the liberty and our rapacioufnefs after the property of others. Thefe are the counfellors which have miflead us and what is worfe; we yet continue to be ac vifed and to be directed by them: we have no more difcharged or difcarded thefe, than we have done B. and H.

Can it then be conceived, fays fome one, that a number of unreafonable and of ill-judging men fhould at one time be all fo oddly jumbled together at the head of any fate or government? The chance would have been much againft fuch an unlucky combination; if that its inhabitants had in common drawn lots or caft the die on the occation. The prefent times muft fpeak for themfelves: I Thall anfwer nothing as to them. I may however endeavour to explain ; how things have heretofore come to pafs and pofterity will he more fortunate than their fore-fthers; if they fhall never happen again after the fame manner. A Prince often empowers fome particular perfon to chufe or to controul all the other counfellors and officers of his kingdom. Such a one will probably pick them out according to his own pattern or expect them to conform to it; when the difficult and the difobedient will of courfe be difcarded the company. It is an old faying; that all life is a ftage play: but where a firft minifter rules every thing, the comparifon may perhaps rife no higher than to the humble reprefentation of a pup-pet-fhow pet-fhow: in which however the figures may ftrut, ftare or look big upon the outward ftage and whether they act tragedy, comedy or farce; they dance and they fpeak and they fqueak, only as their mafter behind the fcenes moves the fprings and the ftrings and the wires.

I defire however to fay fomething upon the fubject of fuch a firft or prime minifter. I have ufed the expreffion after others: but it is not the language of the conftitution. We are not a race of Turkifh flaves to be governed by a Grand Vizir nor is our nation a province of France, where the practice and the abufe of many ages have accuftomed the Monarch to delegate his power and his authority to a fubftitute. I do not know how to perfwade myfelf; that a Prince reigning in a land of liberty can be intitled or warranted to deliver over his people into the hands of any fingle fubject. A Parliament, I fay, a free Parliament, a Parliament elected and acting without corruption is by our conflitution appointed for the chief council of the King of England and not fome one minifter, flatterer or favourite. Our common people are apt to complain; that their their betters fometimes ape the modes of a neighbouring nation: but if this of a firft minifter is a French fafhion, any one may be bold to fay; that it is the worft cuftom ever copied by us from that people. The political habits of that country are of late however much changed. The writer is not a very old man and he remembers when the Parliaments of Paris were a bye-word for their meanneis and their abjectnefs towards their Prince. That matter however is now totally altered. I wonder what Parliaments will in time to come be the proverb for complaifance and ductility. The French have learnt a firmnefs and a fteadinefs and to look in cafe of exigency their King and his minifter in the face. This is affirmed to have been formerly a good old Englifh fahhion. When will our travelled gentry bring it with them back again to their own country? I truft ; that I may anfwer, as foon as reafon and occafion fhall require: although the happinefs of the times may not now demand any fuch prefent practice. How would it otherwife appear in the eyes of pofterity; fhould the abject Alaves of a prime minifter be the defpotic mafters of NorthAmerica?

America? Non bene conveniunt nec in und fede morantur-I am perfectly perfwaded, that two fuch directly contradictory circumftances will never happen or be united in one and the fame body of men.

There is a circumftance, (which however contemptible in itfelf,) I do not know how to pafs over in filence ; as it lies in my way and as it explains the temper of fome men. The minifterial writers have on this occafion already begun to cry out for forfeitures and againft noxious and erroneous clemency.* Can then the imagination and the ambition of our philofophers carry them acrofs the Atlantic in hopes of farms and of plantations there for themfelves or do thefe things tempt their patrons and their paymafters; in whofe praifes and for whofe pleafure they tune their lyres? Some Englifh hiftorians tell us, I will not warrant how truly; that the French played before the battle of Agincourt at dice for their their prifoners; but who were neither then taken nor ever afterwards. We read of armies; that have brought along with them chains to bind their enemies: by whom they have themfelves been foundly beaten for their pains. The learning of thefe authors might at leaft have furnifhed them with the fable; whofe moral admonifhes us not to be over-forward to divide the bear-fkin, until we have firft maftered the bear. What is this but warning the Colonies to hold out to the utmoft and in cafe of neceffity to feck foreign affiftance; rather than to forfeit their eftates to perfons at home: whofe fancy feems fo forward to give them livery and feifin on the occafion. It may perhaps be a problem not unworthy the folution of thefe ingenious gentlemen themfelves; whether the policy or the humanity of this proceeding the moft deferves to be approved of and to be commended.

I have formerly touched upon Ireland. They have not there our debt : they have a different government and they are by the fea feparated from us. They may poffibly fwim, when we fink; but that muft depend upon the utmoft uncertainty of chance. They are a people moft fingularly and peculiarly circ' :mftanced among themfelves and with refpect to one another ; more fo, than I will endeavour to explain nor which is neceffary, it being well known and underftood. Hiftery can hardly trace; when they were combined under one head or had any form of civil fociety of their own. Their prefent government originated many centuries ago from England; where its connection and its dependance have ever fince continued. If the guiding reins fhould through weaknefs or through diforder drop out of our hands; they cannot but run the moft dangerous rifque of falling under the command of fome foreign nation or of their ftate being totally turned un-fide-down or of both mifchances. Thofe perfons then muft furely be doubly poffeffed; who having a ftake in each of thefe illands have neverthclefs preffed and urged the prefent proceedings. I think, that fuch men muft by this time begin to grow fick of their own work: in which cafe it is undoubtedly their higheft duty to retract or to foften, what they have faid and to the beft of their power to repair and to amend amend what they have done. There is however another part of our country : which if I have before approached on this fide, it was yet in a more diftant manner and whofe condition is in almoft every refpect directly contrary to that of Ireland; I mean, Scotland. They are of one ifland with us; but they had for many ages within themfelves their Kings, their Lords, their Commons, their Parliaments, their Courts and their Officers of Juftice, their Laws and every other circumftance of a perfect, compleat, feparate government. They have made with us many a war and many a peace ; they had an ally, who did not ufe to fail them in time of their need and to whom they were themfelves according to the conjuncture of that period faithful in return. It has not been two centuries; fince that we firt had the fame prince nor one fince we have had the fame legiflaturc. This laft union was the act of the Scottifh not people, but parliament: were it to-morrow to be voted there by every man of twenty-one years of age; he is ill-informed; who believes, that it would not be diffolved by a very great majority. They are a people perhaps, as much and as remarkably united

[ 2 io ]

among themfelves as they of Ireland are divided. What fhould then hinder ; but that they may in the cafe of an utter diffolution or diftraction of our government cut all the ties, the links, the chains, which now hold and faften us together; I fay, that they may leave England to fink alone into a bottomlefs abyfs with a debt of a hundred and forty millions of pounds fterling, hanging like a mill-ftone about its neck? I fhall not here be mifunderftood, as if I was meaning any reflection upon a people; to whom I have from my youth up ever borne refpect. I am moft fenfible of many and great advantages received by England from the union with Scotland. If they have no more gold and filver in Nortir-Britain it is, becaufe that their nobility and their gentry prodigal them away after their pleafures and their ambition in the South. They people us in the mean time with men, as good as ourfelves; as even our maidens and our widows feem fometimes to bear witnefs. I verily believe them to have no more idea of a prefent divifion from us; than of a feparation from the fin or the moon. I am in my own mind fully latisfied; that the Americans entertained tained five years paft no fuch intentions; whatever pretences the authors of thefe mifchiefs may in defence of themfelves and of their miferable meafures now invent or propagate. It is my particular perfwafion; that no people reafonably happy will for the fake of diftant and of uncertain fancies ever break or difturb their real and their actual felicity. I feeak on a fuppofition therefore of a fincere and an abfolute neceffity; to which the proudeft muft bend and which the moft powerful muft obey. They may perhaps be then more willing to allow of its law in their own cafe; than they feem to be now in that of forne others. When their only alternative left thall be to perih with their neighbours or to preferve themfelves without them ; they may conceive, that there is but little cither of cafuiftry or of policy required to refolve the queftion. Why is fuch a poffibility much more diftant or different from the fate; in which we now are: than our prefent fituation is from that; in which we were at this time five years? I refer to five years ago, as to a former period; before that thefe troubles broke out : our active governors however have in fact employed but about two revolving funs in performing the firft half of their work. They truly have in a fhort fpace of time deftroyed the temple of peace; but their wonders feem to be of a very different fort from building up again with the fame hafte. I prefs the rather thefe points in hopes of bringing certain perfons to fome fenfe of the circumfances about them, of inducing them to confi'der on what ground they ftand, of making them reflect; that it is not every man, whom they meet in the ftreets or whom they converfe or they confult with; whofe fortunes and whofe affairs are on this fubject in the fame bottom with their own. There are who may get and may gain; who may lofe one half and may hold the other; who may fuffer much and may neverthel frs fave a remnant: but they, to whom I' would at this monent particularly apply myfelf, have no ftake but in one fpot, have their all in one veffel or, to fpeak a plain language, in England. I am fully perfuaded; that there are fome perfons, whom it moft behoves and moft concerns; but who are even yet not aware upon what an adventure they have embarked themfelves, their families, their country and their King.

[2II]

What then are we in this difficult ftate of our affairs moft to wifh and to defire; the victory of adminiftration and the devaftation of America or the fuperiority and the liberty and confequently to us the lofs of our colonies? This may not be the eafieft of queftions $\dagger$ anfwer. He was a wife man ; who prayed his God to fend him, what he knew in his wifdom to be good for him; although he did himfelf not defire it: but to keep from him, what was evil; although he did defire it. Should Proyidence for our penalty and our punifhment fuffer us to deftroy our colonies; we fhall bite the duft together and France and Spain and perhaps leffer people befides take the fpoils of both. Many men and fome nations would commiferate America: they would recollect her former affection, attachment and fervices to us; although we forget them. Great-Britain would perifh unpitied and unlarrated: our fall would be attributed to ingratitude and to injuftice united with folly and with phrenzy. This however does not appear to be the probable train of future events; we feem on the contrary to be by force driving our Colonies into independance and into greatnefs. The common courfe of hiftory has hitherto been; that little fcattered fparks of liberty have fallen, as it were, from Heaven on particular fpots; by virtue of which fome ftates frmall at the beginning have wonderfully fpread abroad their name and their power among mankind. It was never before known in the civilized world; that this holy flame blazed brightly and infpired with an equal ardour every part throughout a great and a moft extenfive continent, The effects of this phœnomenon in politicks are yet to be experienced. Athens is well underftood to hive been a democracy managed in great meafure by its citizens in their collective capacity and it fhone; as a light among nations. Rome was likewife a republic ; but chiefly conducted by an elected fenate nor need it to be faid; how it over fladowed the world. Thefe were however fingle cities; within whofe walls were confined their governments and their elections. There have hitherto been among men no inftances of large, numerous and civilized nations; where the whole people ruled themfelves without a monarch by the means of reprefentative bodies appointed fairly, egually and frequently for that purpofe,

'This will probably be one day a new form of government and an improvement in democratical conftitutions. It feems peculiarly well adapted to promote the interefts and the happinefs; as well a to unite the inclinations and the opinions of all its members: it admits by an equal election and a real reprefentation every man to a juft fhare in the management and the adminiftration of the whole. Perfection is not to be expected in the affairs of men nor will I now enquire ; how far this may or may not within its province approach to it or partake of it. Holland copies in fome meafure this pattern by extenfive ariftocracies and is in comparifon of its territory the firft country on the globe for trade, for opulence and for numbers of inhabitants : the Swifs come yet more nearly to it ; although nevertheiefs ftill at a confiderable diftance: thefe want the fea, the fcene of commerce and the fource of riches; they are however a happy people. It is perhaps referved for our American Colonies to erect the firft republics on this plan and who knows; but that they may in confequence thereof together with the other improvements to be expected among mankind arrive onie day to a degree of happinefs and of profperity and may enjoy a ftability hitherto unknown and unexperienced in civil governments? Can any one pretend to explain; whether Providence is not in his unfathomable wifdom and by the means of our conduct, however ftrange and unaccountable upon any plan of human prudence or reafon, at this inftant raifing in America the ftandard of liberty and preparing a refuge and an afylum for the enflaved and the oppreffed of different parts of the earth? The governments there forced and broken off from us will at their command have vaft tracts and regions fufficient to receive and to accommodate a good part of Europe; whofe domeftic oppreffions and miferies will not fail to drive them into countries fo much freer and fo much happier than their own. It is not neceffary; that there fhould be a leader efpecially commiffioned from Heaven or that the waves of the Atlantic ocean hould be divided and hould ftand on an heap for that purpofe : the defire of good and the averfion to evil perpetually prefent in every human breaft will be a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to conduct them thither. Are the Germans at this time ignorant of the chat of that country or do the Irifh, the Englifh and the Scotch leaving their taxes and their burthens behind them not crowd already the fame road ? Were it cuftomary to magnify thofe; who ferve or who aggrandize us with an evil will and againft their intentions : fome men might perhaps be then celebrated, painted and fta-. tued for the fathers and the founders of American Commonwealths; who now bid fair to be only heard of in hiftory, as having ruined and overturned their own monarchy. I fpeak with the moft profound reverence; but I do not believe it to be the ultimate end and purpofe of ani all-benevolent Providence: that fo great a part of the buman fpecies fhould perpetually remain under their prefent bondage and that civility and lavery fhall for ever be almoft conftant companions of each other. Clouds will arife in the political, as well as in the natural world; but fo will they likewife pafs away or the funfine of liberty will break forth in other parts: I truft ; that the civilized portion of our fpecies is upon the whole notwithftanding fome crofs and untoward occurrences happening at times and at places

places conftantly advancing and improving in their freedom. The condition of our earth is undoubtedly new, new in comparifon not only of eternity; but of time. It is but little more than twenty centuries, not more than the fucceffive lives of fifteen fuch perfons as our countryman Parr ; fince that the firft human hiftory was written. What a fpan! Men are but beginning to emerge out of their natural barbarity into national communities and focieties : we are as yet perfect novices in the art of framing or of modelling inftitutions of that fort. Our inward nature muft ever remain the fame: the feeds of ambition, of avarice and of the other felfifh paffions having been fown in our breafts from the firft will in all appearance never be rooted out ; but the outward circumftances of things will very much vary. Mankind will in time grow more upon their guard againft one another: nations will by degrees learn how to provide more effectual defences and fecurities againft the defigns and the attempts, the force and the artifice of thofe; to whom they confide their governments and by whom it is, that they are moft commonly undone. Letters may do much : they enlighten the world :
world: the prefent, frequent, increafing, public and private ufe of them muft not only inform and inftruct the multitude and the many; but muft likewife enable them better to move and to act together for their common interefts and concerns; than they formerly did or could without any or with but little of fuch communication. America is now arming and muftering, almoft to a man; we alike catch good and evil of each other. Who knows ; but that this may become the practice of nations? On that rock will then be founded the freedom of mankind: This feems to be the means by which defpotifm muft one day receive its mortal blow. A few bearing the fword do ever opprefs the helplefs public; but how can one man tyrannife over millions of his equals, all of them armed and ready for their own defence? Whatever country defires to maintain its independance againft foreign foes and its freedom againft domeftic ones; let it copy the prefent conduct of the Americans and keep the whole body of its people armed and muftered: in which cafe, if I may make bold to ufe fo high an expreffion, the gates of hell will not be able to prevail againft its liberty. But what will then become of Great-Britain in there halcyon times of Americn or of mankind? Who knows whether the may not wifh to take fhelter under the fhadow of ftates, fo lately her own provinces and her own dependencies? Whether our only poffible means of efeaping the laft diftrefles and calamities incuicnt to a nation may not be; if that they thall protect us from the creditors of our government, from our neighbours, from our rivals and from all others; who may be willing to infuit a fallen, an abject and a helplefs people: I fay; if that their own reafon or, I am very forry to add, the unhappy precedent of Great-Britain fhall teach them of what extreme, mutual utility, advantage and affittance two great branches of the fame nation may be to one another: when united and connected by confent in their interefts; however diftant and divided by the ocean in their dwellings. This will indeed be a very different fituation from having America at our feet; butwe may well becontent to turn our backs on that fentence and leave it to be engraven on the monument of him, from from whom it came. It is furely a moft unfit and moft unbecoming expreffion and which all parties fhould wifh to be buried in oblivion; but how different a temper feems to prevail in fome men, from that: when fchemes are at this moment laid and means are now preparing to wafte with fire and with fword and to deluge with blood that continent for the very end of carrying it into execution? Great-Britain however had need both then and at this time to fee to her own concerns. Foreign reliance is but a flender reed in the hands of thofe; who have ruined themfelves. That the fyftem of benevolence is a right and a real policy in the conduct of nations and in their government of others; may perhaps be believed by a few philofophers in their clofets; be reprefented by a finall number of moralifts in their writings ; be preached from the pulpit by fome one truly worthy to attend at the altars of the Divinity, one happily blending the public fpirit of patriotifm with the charity of our holy religion: but it is to be feared ; that the hiftories, the examples, the experience of many ages to come are yet required; before that great itates and empires fhall actually and effectually adopt it into their practice. Should thefe dreams and thefe vifions ever be fooner or later in any degree realized; we fhall find and our former provinces will find; that profperity and fuperiority readily forget the rules and the refolutions nade or approved in adverfity and in humility. Our condition however demands inftant affintance: the clouds are collected : the form is about to burft upon our heads: the thunders begin to roll and the lightnings to fly: our minifters are notwithftanding leading us further into the wildernefs: it is high time for the collective wifdom of the nation to exert itfelf and the conftitution: peace, peace, peace is the only protection held forth to us by Providence in this great and this dangerous conjuncture.

What methods can we then take towards that defirable end? To which I muft anfwer; that fome men affect to talk fo hark a language and feem fo fond of every means to diflever us from our colonies; that I hardly know, whether it is lawful for me to fignify my wifh: that there was preferved a conjunction, a connection, a correfpondence between honef and well- $\left.\begin{array}{c}223\end{array}\right]$ intentioned men of England and of America the better to counteract the enemies of both countries and for watching every opening and opportunity to reftore the ancient harmony and tranquility between us. It is certainly our true intereft inftead of prohibiting to encourage in continuing an intercourfe with their friends and their fanilies over the Atlantic fuch perfons; as having property and poffeffions there neverthelefs remain with us at this moment out of a fort of affection and of attachment to Great-Britain. Thefe are fo many links and chains holding together us and that weftern continent : they may poffibly be one day by prudent and by proper means made of effential fervice between us; but the fame infatuation feems to affect all our meafiures from the firft and the highert to the fmallert and the loweft. As to what we are to do more immediately within ourfelves; the advifers of war and the hounds of blood lead us the way. Let us follow their footfteps, purfue their paths, but for the contrary purpofe; for the preferving this great empire, which their endeavours tend to confound and to deftroy. One body of men have fince the Revolution chiefly had pofieffion poffeffion of pur government: they fapped by corruption all the outworks of the conftitution: liberty was perpetually in their mouths and their difcourfe; but proftitution was in their hearts and thete actions. The wind has lately veered and another fet have fince fucceeded to the: helm. Thefe are now endeavouring to make up for the time paft by outdoing their predeceffors: they are flinging down the fences, which the others had undermined to their hands: they have revived the principles of flavery and have added them to an increafe of the fame detefrable pecuniary influence. Both thefe were however only two venal factions; who perverted in their turns the facred name of government to their own corruption: the public continued in the mean time an helplefs prey without power between them. But endeavours are now uling to involve the nation itfelf and to make them confenting and concurring to their own ruin. What will then remain; except that we fhall be totaily ripe and ready for deftruction with none left among us to lift up their hands towards heaven and to afk even, how they nave deferved it? Such are thy ways, O Providence, while men are difputing;

Let us however hope for fome happier iffue. The vaft powers of the crown and the very free ufe of them confidered, where is the wonder; if a few thoufands of men are fubfrcibing of papers to pleafe and to flatier an adminiftration? What proportion or what comparifon do thefe bear to the vhole body of the kingdom; who moft undoubtedly and moft ardently detire an end of this wort of all wars and thefe moft ruinous of all meafures? It is our filence and our acquiefcence, which make us acceffaries to the guilt of thofe; who are going to give th? laft froke to our country. God and men require of every people to reftrain within due bounds their own rulers. Governments direct under the appointment and the authority of the people; but the people act and execute with their own hands: the people man the navies and compofe the armies; which carry fire and fword, devaftation and defolation over the earth : the people are the immediate inftruments in mifchief mifchief and fo are they likewife the main victims of it : the calamities confequent to a public mifcondućt ever fall chiefly and moft heavily upon their body. What are the misfortunes of a few men or a few families fuffering their portion of the evils caufed by their own counfels in comparifon of the general diftrefs and mifeit of a whole people; although I do not at all mean; that even the others commonly do or that they will on this orcation in particular efcape a hare of fuch mifchiefs fully fufficient to make likewife them earneftly to repent of their par: in the production of them? Why are then fo few found who fet their hands to the faving of their rountry; when fo many are figning to their ruin? If we approach with petitions the Royal prefence; the cry of the public could not but fart and drive away any one, who lurks behind the throne and who poifons with evil counfels the ear of our Prince and if that there is fuch a perfon. If we prefume to apply to our Parliament ; that powerful body is able to bind certain madmen in the chains of the conftitution and to make them conduct themfelves at leaft with lefs danger and lefs damage to the public: whether no they will ever be turned into very deep politicians or very difinterefted patriots. What witholds then, the cool and the confiderate and (I am perfectly perfwaded) by much the major part of the nation, the friends and the favourers of peace from offering in their turn to our King and to the other branches of our legiflature humble; but general and earneft petitions for the purpofe of faving the whole, of fiving even thofe who are endeavouring to deftroy both the reft and themfelves? Thefe are the proper prayers for drawing down once again the dove of Heaven among us; but which due means if we neglect, we hall no more deferve her happy prefence; than we did, when fle was of late fo rafhly and fo fatally and no one knows why driven away from this empire.

On what conditions then can peace be made? In anfwer to which I muif in my furn afk; how vain is it for individuals in be propofing plans on that fubject in oppofition to the obftinacy of thofe; who poflefs all the power of the nation and who appear plainly to have no fuch intentions? The door of that bleffed Temple Would teadily have been thrown open to us; if we had ever fignified any fincere defire of entering into it: but nothing of that fort has from the beginning of thefe broils to the prefent moment come from our minifters, nothing but a conftant demand of an abfolute fubjection on the part of the Colonies; however fome men at a diftance from our counfels may at times have deceived themfelves on this head. As to that crude, indigefted, perplexed, obfcure parcel of words complimented by for 2 with the title of a conciliatory plan; t. pears proper only to expofe the poor conceptions of its authors and how very far thefe were from having any ideas fit for the compofing our prefent moft high and moft unhappy troubles. It met accordingly with nothing, but contempt in the country; which it concerned: It feems to have faftened and to have riveted to the general union the colony of New-York; which it was in all appearance particularly intended to divide and to feparate from the reft and which was fuppofed to be at that time wavering and doubtful. It could not but operate in the like manner with our other Colonies; as it plainly betrayed how little was to be expected towards peace from the
the quarter of adminiftration. The fame cafe ftill continues. The Continental Congrefs fent by Mr. Penn their laft addrefs and application. It is publicly underftood, that they will on the news of its being neglected take fome very vigorous fteps towards independence. We are in the mean time purpofely fuffering the prefent moft precious feafon to elapfe and to pafs by without moving hand or foot towards an accommodation. We declare; that we will have nothing to do with the bodies particularly delegated by the Americans and in whom they efpecially confide. We talk of treating only at the point of the fword. We affect to make a myftery of our terms. No hints are flung out of confenting to recall on any conditions whatfoever the act altering the charter of Maffachufets-Bay or of giving fecurity and fatisfaction to our Colonies in general concerning the boundaries or other grievances of the Quebec-bill ; without which points it is not to be expected, that a fingle man in America will lay down his arms. What does all this mean and much more that might be mentioned; but a full determination to march withput turning to the right or to the left directly forwards in our firft road ; to try the whole chance and to rifque the wortt confequences of a civil war ; to ftake the all of England on the caft in hopes of bringing America to bend under our abfolute power: although there is at the fame time no more probability of fucceeding in that project, than of obtaining the command of the moon? Good God in Heaven; how do fome men trifle with the fate of this nation!

But a numerous commiffion is to be named; which will do wonders. I will not now inquire after what mans fuch perfons are likely to be received in America; if they fhall refufe to treat with the reprefentatives of the country, when they come there. But my anfwer is; that our Colonifts muft have liberty and property in its fubftance and its effence nor will they on any other terms be contented : we muft confent to pals that point; if we mean ever to have peace with them more. A child may be the tale-beater, if fuch is our real purpofe and refolution; but no commiffioners in the world will be equal to the work; if it is only intended to out-wit them by treaty into what what we have in vain endeavoured to force them with the fword; if our defign is at the bottom no deeper or no better than under the colour and the cover of negotiating and by the means of certain Englifh arts of bribing, of corrupting, of holding forth perfonal or provincial advantages to make fome weak attempts for the disjoining and the dividing thofe; whom our own acts and our own meafures have moft frongly united and cemented. What a poor, pitiful, cobweb policy and having in it, full as little ftrength, as honefty; are all fuch methods? The Americans will in that cafe baffle or avoid our artifices even with more facility; than they have reftrained and refifted our arms. Our commiffioners had much better be content at home than to expofe us and themfelves beyond the Atlantic; if fuch only are to be their errand and their inftructions.

It may here be repeated; let us neverthelefs draw nearer to the very terms of reconciliation: but Imuft again afk; whydo not the proper perfons inquire after them at Philadelphia; where men are met qualified and commiffioned to anfwer any duo quertion on that fubject? The writer can only pretend to point towards the ground; which viry many before him have already marses ut in vain. We are however ta ont; that the fmalleft mite offered with a fit intention will not be refufed even of the higheft. It becomes no man to be backward at doing his duty towards his country in its laft moments. Where will be the great damage of giving a few words to the wind, after numberlefs 0 thers far more worthy than mine gone the fame way and on the fame occafion? I will therefore not fcruple to exprefs at leaft the wifh of one individual and what he believes would in the prefent cafe be moft for the benefit of Great-Britain and perhaps not very far from the acceptance of the colonies.* We muft in the firft place recall our fleets, our armics, our martial governors and put an end to all the apparel and appearance of war there. This needs no explanation. We muft moreover fully, effectually, perfectly convince all that continent; that we retain not the leaft intention of ruling them for the future by military means. No peace cant be expected for us with America either now or in time to come; except on that ground. We can after certain events with but an evil grace force our troops upon them under the pretence of protection nor can they with a much better demand them of us, as neceffary for their defence. We fhall by this means fave both our men and our . .oney; neither of which can we well fpare. Let us likewife fling upon them the expences of their own civil governments: let them pay their officers on that eftablifhment more or lefs and in fuch manner ; as they pleafe themfelves. They cannot then pretend difcontent on that head and what is it to us? Here will be another œconomy. I will give the authority of a minifterial writer; that thefe favings will according to a common and current calculation amount to no lefs than 300,000 pounds a year:* but who would know, at what rate to reckon them; if the prefent job was to be taken into the account? We firft run ourfelves into Q4 | enormous enormous expences for very bad purpofes and we then make the matter much worfe by unjuft and by oppreffive means of fupplying them. This is one article. The next is; a compleat, intire, unreferved, unexcepted repeal of all the offenfive and obnoxious acts of parliament paffed fince the prefent peace, the declaratory bill included. How happy muft every Englifhman be to fee them expunged out of our ftatute book! It will be like flinging out of a houfe the brands, which are fetting it on fire. The language to us laft year of the Continental Congrefs was " place us in the fame fituation, that we were at the clofe of the laft war and our former harmony will be reftored:"* What could we have expected more; if an angel had defcended from heaven ond had delivered an olive branch to America; who had held it forth to Great-Britain? Are not thefe the very terms; which every prudent man would have defired: had we been ourfelves to have dictated them? What planet has been uppermoft or how has the moon erred for thefe three years? I have here offered my two firft articles:

unlefs we confent to which; we had need to fpill almoft every drop of blood in America. There remains then one more point. The wounds of that country are now open and bleeding nor will be healed without leaving ftrong marks and fcars. Our defire of a revenue is yet unfatisfied. Suffer the writer here to repeat a former propofition of his own. To open and to enlarge the commerce of our colonies is the true means of our mutual contentment. It is a fure refource to enrich us and the fit falve for their fores: it will be the beft act of oblivion to induce a forgetfulnefs of all paft injuries and offences. I mean nothing which thall fow a jealoufy or diffention between our dependencies; but a general meafure, that they fhould all be affifted according to the efpecial occafion rud exigencies of each. I will not now dwell on this fubject. I have formerly done it more fully.* How very far greater profit and benefit muft to our treafury arile from the favings and the means here mentioned; than from all what we could hope to have levied by odious and by vexatious taxes laid upon a country; country; which now plainly appears to have in the laft neceffity no gold or filver even for its own ufe? We have had our project : we have made a moft unjuft attempt : we have been beaten and been baffled for our pains: we fhall neverthelefs gain in the end and in this manner what we wanted and we defired; although fo very undefervedly. Some perfons will poffibly reflect here; how much better all thefe things might have been obtained in peace; but let us draw th: veil over that point : difcontent and perhaps defpair lie that way. Thefe are then my three propofitions for the re-union in prefent and the harmony in time to come of our empire : to withdraw our forces and to leave our Colonies to their own civil governments; to recall our late American laws; to increafe the commerce of that country. But if we do not purfue this or fome fuch plan, what is on the other fide ; except downright madnefs, the diftemper of Moorfields and the politicks of Bedlam ?

But will fuch terms be fufficient and fatisfactory in the fight of our countrymen over the Atlantic ?-_It is but a hort time paft; that peace was in our own keeping: we wantonly broke it then : the confent
confent of thers muft now be required, before it can be reftored. We certainly might with our Colonies have again coalefced on thefe conditions within the period of the prefent year; but every moon widens the breach between us and adds to our own difgrace and mifcarriage. We do ourfelves make it difficult to anfwer for the immediate moment. I truft however, that preliminaries nearly refembling thofe now mentioned might at leaff ferve for a foundation; whereon to build up once more the temple of peace among us: if that fome men at home were but half as much inclined; as they feem to be averfe to that meafure. A great deal would depend on the manner in which thefe things were done and every honeft man muft hope : that our reconciliation fhould be made, as fincerely and as cordially; as our quarrel was occafioned rafhly and inconfiderately. I murt however add, that the time now prefles ; no moment is to be fpared; we fland upon the brink of a gulph; the ground crumbles under our feet; no man knows how foon we may fink to rife no more. If the next vernal xquinox (ncar as it is) does not find us entered into fome hopeful and fome probable bable treaty of accommodation; we fhall in all appearance never fee again our late provinces under our dominion: but they will hpift the flags of their rifing Republics; * they will fet up the ftandard of their new nation: we muft wage war with them, as with a feparate people; the nexi convention between us will very likely be upon a level and an equality or Great-Britain or England may poffibly receive from them the law of the Conquer'r. I don't know; whether the condition of thefe times is not fuch; that even a Minifter may be too big to be approached by fincerity ; that he may be furrounded with a circle of flattery: although not quite fo wide and fo impenetrable, as that of his Mafter. I know ftill lefs; whether thefe poor proverbs of mine will ever find their way to any levy of the great: fhould fuch a chance how.ever happen; they may poffibly tell a jerfon truths; which they about him may be backward to fpeak. The writer will not fcruple faying to fuch a one; that an inftant reconciliation with our cotntrymen of America on the terms of maintaining and

and of allowing to them their libcity and their property is the only probable expedient under heaven to preferve his country and perhaps himfelf. It is however to be feared; that there is little likelihood of fo prudent a ftep being taken: but this caution may then be poffibly one day remembered; when it will be toj late and when the ruin at leaft of the one, if not of both, ihail be irrevocable. If the clock has already hruck the laft hour; if the moment of accommodation is even now no nore; what have not fome men to anfwer for?

Suppofe however that America fhould make an offer or a tender of fome fixed, certain, annual contribution : I anfwer; that any end may perhaps be better than our prefent proceedings; but that we have on our great occafions and exigencies ever received from thofe provinces moft ample help and affiftance: whenever we have required or requefted it of them. They have equally fupported us with their men and their money in war' as they have benefited us with their trade and their commerce in peace. They are an improving people and our advantages by their means means might therefore be expected to increafe in proportion. Shall we then abandon this bountiful and this plentiful fream conftantly flowing in the time of our want and our neceffity like the river Nile for fome mean, pitiful, artificial rivulet : only becaufe we can meafure or can command the waters of the one; when it is our particular happinefs; that thofe of the other know no bounds? What will pofterity in that cafe fay of us; but that as this meafure was begun in madnefs, fo it was finifhed in folly?

So much for an immediate accommodation - but our mifchief lies deeper: there remains more to be done, if we would employ the fit and the effectual remedy. Our reprefentation is loft or is at leaft in fufpenfe. It need not be repeated, that a majority of the members of our Houfe of Commons is named by a fmall part of the people in comparifon of the whole : their actions and their refolutions have therefore no neceflary connection with the fentiments and the inclinations of the nation at large. The hatchet of this prefent American war might be buried or be hidd $\cdots$, the fübject of our actual tual contention might be dropped or be fettled; but the pride of a prince, the refentment of a favourite, the rapacioufnefs of a minifter, the violence of a faction or any other equally trifling and infignificant caufe will ever be futficient to kindle again the fame flame: unlefs we can for a check and a controul in fuch cafes rely upon the independence and the fteadinets of our reprefentatives. The two bodies of our people will at their own choice never wage war with each other and imbrue their hands in the blood of their brethren: their interefts are too much united and their mutual affection is overwell founded; but what is the caprice of a fingle perfon governed by his paffions and having perhaps his head turned with an opinion of his power more to be depended on, than a weather-cock moved with the wind? The circumitance is very little different of a few men; whofe actions and whofe motions all refer to thofe of one. The proper redrefs for this is an equal reprefentation; give me leave to repeat; that it is our original and our fundamental right. It might have been moft happy for our empire in general and for Britain in particular ; if a demand of this great right could in fome proper and fome peaceable manner have been blended with the juft claims of the Americans: that the reftoration of our'own conflitution at home might have gone hand in hand with the re-eftablifmment of the franchifes of our fellow-fubjects beyond the Atlantic. We might then have hoped for the peace, the union, the harmony of the parts and for the grandeur, the flendor, the profperity, the ftability of the whole; I will not fay until time fhall be no more, which is not the lot of mortality; but perhaps with a duration and to a degree hitherto unexampled in the hiftory of mankind. We fhould then have had reafon to blefs the unfathomable wifdom of Providence for leading us by thefe broils to fo fortunate an end; although not to thank thofe thoughtlefs and headlong men, who were the authors of ihem. But thefe unhappy troubles exceeding the common courfe and the peaceable bounds of our conftitution feem to have made any fuch meafure now impoffible; even if it was not fo before. Should however in the future revolutions of fate our late provinces ever come to a confiderable power and to an extenfive influence among nations;

tions; the beft boon, which they can confer upon their dependencies and at the fame time the moft probable to attach them by a conformity of government to themfelves, will be legiflative bodies truly and really reprefentative of each refpective people. This important object is however with regard to Great-Britain not to be totally defpaired of and abandoned or at leaft not on the account before mentioned: it is neverthelefs left for us to purfue among ourfelves. Thefe difturbances are now but beginning: but there are in all appearance before us other events, other trials, other exigencies, which will demand all the united wifdom of our nation; the moft perfect fidelity of thofe intrufted by us; the fulleft confidence of the public in our parliaments; I fay, will require thefe things on account of the crown, as well as of the country; of the prince, as well as of the fubject. Nothing can give us a government attended with thefe advantages and adequate to our difficulties; except an equal election. It is our bufinefs to avail ourfelves of the opportunity arifing from the perfonal virtue. of the members compofing our prefent R Houfe

Houfe of Commons to apply for and to obtain this point. I am perfwaded, that we fhall not be refufed it upon petitions from different parts of the nation, fuch as become the fubject humble, dutiful, refpectful; but at the fame time exerting the whole force and influence of the conftitution. Our prefent and our approaching fituation fuffers us no longer to reft in a ftate of indifference. Corruption has ruined itielf; it can no longer retain its rule and its command: that moft filthy monfter has devoured its own vitals, as well as thofe of the government. The nation fands at this time on fuch terms; that we muft either perifh immediately and defervedly or muft recover the confitution for ourfelves and for thofe to come after us: we have however no reafon to refure this condition; the future welfare and greatnefs of our country are placed before us, as a prize; if we will attempt and will obtain it by means, which are perfectly within our own power. I truft, that the author has no neceffity to explain which way are his wifhes on the occafion and the heart of every honeft man muft furely attend him: I cannot however however deny but that my mind much mifgives me, while I am writing thefe words ; the profpect appears very faint cia the fide of this delufive paradife: would to Heaven; that our real evils and misfortunes were but half as uncertain, half as far removed from effect; as are any fuch flattering, but it is to be feared, only vain and fanciful conceptions.

It is time, that I fhould come to my conclufion. I may be told, that I have written freely. I have certainly written from my heart and, I truft, with no more freedom; than is becoming and is demanded by my fubject. When the trumpets found and the drums beat to battle; he had need to fpeak aloud, who defires to be heard; efpecially if he preaches peace. When the fea rages and the tempeft roars, every one muft raife his voice; unlefs he means to give his words to the winds and the waves. Did a paffenger fee the fhip ready to run upon a rock, in which he was embarked with his all; would it at once not be his duty, his right and his intereft to warn the company of their danger and to call upon the pilot to R 2 avoid avoid it? How trange mult it be; if it was permitted for forme perfons to deftoy the ftate and forbidden for others to reprefent to them, that they are fo doing? There is in poetry a beautiful fable of one faid to have pafled fafe through the world below by virtue of the golden branch of a certain tree; which he carried before him. I will not now enquire critically; whether truth is under a fine allegory there figured; but I truft, that whoever holds in his hand that powerful charm and bears in his breaft the love of his country; may march free from mifchief in any world governed by a benevolent and a beneficent Providence: the writer defires no longer the regard of mankind or the protection of the laws; than he fhall continue to be conducted by thofe two facred guides nor does he know the prefervation of the Britifh empire to be a lefs noble object, than the foundation of the Roman. He rifques his reputation and the ridicule of his neighbours; who ventures to fpeak frankly about events to come und remaining in the womb of time: that is furely ftake enough for any honeft man to hazard. The adriiniftra-tion have however taken extraordinary care of our credit on this account. It is Atrange, with what rapidity they have reilifed the many expectations and apprehenfions fignified to them of approaching mifchiefs. I don't know to what they can in that refpect be compared ; except to a pilot, who chould run upon every. beacon placed on purpofe to warn him of his danger. Where would then be the wonder, if any one fhould be emboldened by events; if he hould believe himfelf intitled and warranted to fpeak freely in future upon the experience and the authority of what had already proved true and taken place? Why do our minifters not make advantage of thefe circumftances and look into their own conduct; why do they not fteer clear of the rocks remarked to them or at leaft learn to be more wife and more cautious by their errors? Why do they not fallify what pecple pretend to forefee or to foretell about the evil effects of their meafures and filence fuch perfons by chame and by the difappointment of their opinions? The parafites and the fycophants, the placemen and the penfioners of minifters will by means of the power behind them ever ftand on higher ground, than the friends and the advocates of liberty and of the public. Should any one be offended at frecdom, let him reflect on the mifchief done hy flattery; whofe poifon time-ferving and felf-interefted men are perpetually pouring into the ears of thofe, where it is moft noxious. Let every one prove himfelf ready to hear the gentle voice of reafon; before he blames or impeaches the bolder fpeech of liberty.

My race is at length nearly run. Providence fuperintends all things and all nations. The eternal purpofe of that tranfcendent exiftence appears to be the general and the univerfal happinefs of the whole. He feems to have in the diffufion of his infinite benevolence ordained certain rules and laws, connected certain caures and effects before the birth of time, without beginning and without end. Thefe promote and enfure that moft bleffed object: their force and their influence can be avoided or eluded by no beings whatfoever: from their fountain flow two important duties among men; that nations tions fhould govern with mercy and with moderation thofe dependent upon them; that they fhould in a proper manner prevent from difturbing the peace of mankind thofe entrufted by them with their public, combined flrength and power. Thefe are perpetual and unalterable rules of right ; they obtain in all places, at a! times, on all occafions, whenever and wherever they are applicable; they particularly and effentially concern us at this inftant: we fhall ferve the fupreme purpofe in leading others to their fafety and their welfare by the example of our misfortunes and our miferies; if we fhall neglect or hall counteract them: we fhall ferve the fame in our own enjoyment of benefits ard of bleffings; if we fhall obferve and thall purfue them. Which of thefe means we fhall chufe depends upon ourfelves : our prefent fupinenefs and indifference in American affairs will fatisfy the one; a more active conduct and exertion of the contitution will be required for the other. We are on the verge of fate; we are already late in the day: there remains for us no more than a moment of which to avail ourfelves: that we may do what will mot contribute

contribute to the prefervation, the profperity, the felicity of our empire in general and of Great-Britain in particular is the earneft prayer and defire and, let me be permitted to add, the only defign of the writer.

POSTSCRIPT.

$A^{\prime}$CCOUNTS come from America during the printing of the preceding papers are fo material and fo important and have in fome refpects fo changed the flate of my fubject; that I would willingly, offer a few words more, before I finifh. Our countrymen there are now known to have in great meafure poffeffed themfelves of the province of Canada, to have taken prifoners the chief part of the regular forces flationed by us in it for its defence and to have been left befieging Quebec. The war at land feems to be already decided. Some men may be fo obftinately bent, as neverthelefs to perfift in proceeding with it ; but it muft furely be even in their own conceptions without any any hopes or alinoft poffibility of fuccefs. Our thirteen Colonies are now become fo many independent commonwealths and we may perhaps hear before long; that a fourteenth French one is joined and affociated to their union. We have ourfelves by a late act of parliament very much treated our own, as fuch: it muft be expected; that other fates likewife will foon begin to look upon them in the fame light. It is power; which gives refpect to a people. The Americans will from this time underftand themfelves to be mafters at home and will moft likely act in that manner and talk in that tone. They will believe it to depend on themfelves; whether they fhall again fubmit to what they will perhaps call our yoke and tell us, that we have made it too heavy for then to bear. Thefe are the actions of cur Herculean colonses in their cradie: they have been done by them in the courfe of one campaign or in lefs than a twelvemonth; with almoft no lofs, without allies, without the ufe of gold or of filver. They cannot have becin the fingle effects either of the wifdom of their counfels or of the weaknefs wefs of ours : both the one and the other undoubtedly have in a great degree conributed to them. The winter is withal not weathered : who knows what further eveats it may yet produce? Will it be owing to our forefight and our prudence; if that neither Halifax with our ftores nor Bofton with our troops follow the fate of Canadian forts? As our Colonies have rifen, fo, I am forry to fay, murt GreatBritain be funk; which we fhall certainly find by the effects. We are now by no means the fame nation, as we were three years ago. It will be well; if we fhall not foon feel fome diftrefs even at fea. The Americans have hitherto refrained from meddling with our mercantile veffels. Will not the late act of parliament expofing all their commerce to our hoftilities let them likewife loofe upon ours? Does not it almoft feem to be a meafure contrived for that very end ? Might we not have waited and have feen; whether they would have begun this new kind of enmity between us? Would not that have been at leaft fo much time got and gained to our merchants? We have declared war againft their trade, which is none, and have by that means commiffioned figned them againt pur own, which is great. What has at the bottom then been the caufe of our many míchiefs ? I I will make bold to reply ; corruption. What is the remedy for them? He mut perbaps be more than man who Mall anfwer that. The writer however will for one in this perhaps the latt crifis of our country prefume to fpeak his humble opinion: he means his fentiments on a fuppofition; that the ftate of things is and will on fair experience or examination be found much fuch, as has been here reprefented. Let us then make in the firft place inftant peace with our Colonies on the terms of our giving or oun leaving to them a full and a free traffic throughout the world, but of their returning again under the former fyftem of our government reftained however from excefs; if that they will accept of fuch conditions. Let us allow the fane liberty of commerce to our Iflands of the Wef-Indies and to Ireland. Let us make Great-Britain from one end to the other an intire free port for unexcepted importation and exportation: lef us for that purpofe abolifh all our cuftoms and raife our whole revenue by internal means. Let us by a real milltia arm all our people and net a fmall part of theim only by a fanding army under the name of one : let is in this refpect imitate the Americans and defend ourfelves againf others by the fame means, as they have defended themielves againf us. Laftly let us eftablifh general aind etrual elections of the members of our Houre of Commons. Let us do thefe things without the Americans and on condition only of their affiftance againft other nations; if that they fhall decline coming once more to any nearer connection with us: their aid and their help we may one day enough want; whatever we now think on that head. We may by thefe means hope to preferve under heaven and at all probable events our King, our government and our country : but whether we are likely fo to do without taking all and the whole of there fteps, it may become me to pull the veil over my opinion; efpecially as the truth urges and preffes me moft unwillingly to fay; that there is at prefent hardly the leaft appearance of our purfuing any or at beft more than one of them. Here then I take my final leave, trufting
