Technical and Bibliographic Notes / Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- ☐ Coloured covers / Couverture de couleur
- ☐ Covers damaged / Couverture endommagée
- ☐ Covers restored and/or laminated / Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- ☐ Cover title missing / Le titre de couverture manque
- ☐ Coloured maps / Cartes géographiques en couleur
- ☐ Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black) / Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- ☐ Coloured plates and/or illustrations / Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- ☐ Bound with other material / Relié avec d'autres documents
- ☐ Only edition available / Seule édition disponible
- ☐ Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin / La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distorsion le long de la marge intérieure.
- ☐ Blank leaves added during restorations may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming / Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.
- ☑ Additional comments / Commentaires supplémentaires:

- ☐ Coloured pages / Pages de couleur
- ☐ Pages damaged / Pages endommagées
- ☐ Pages restored and/or laminated / Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- ☑ Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/ Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- ☑ Pages detached / pages détachées
- ☑ Showthrough / Transarence
- ☑ Quality of print varies / Qualité inégale de l'impression
- ☐ Includes supplementary materials Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- ☐ Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image / Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
- ☐ Opposing pages with varying colouration or discolourations are filmed twice to ensure the best possible image / Les pages s'opposant ayant des colorations variables ou des décolorations sont filmées deux fois afin d'obtenir la meilleure image possible.

Page 766 is incorrectly numbered page 66.

DEBATES

OF THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

OF THE

DOMINION OF CANADA.

REPORTED AND EDITED BY A. M. BURGESS.

VOL. I.—SESSION 1875.

Ottawa :

PRINTED BY C. W. MITCHELL, "FREE PRESS" OFFICE, ELGIN STREET.

1875.

OTTAWA : C. W. MITCHELL, PRINTER, ELGIN STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 4th.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT. Page

THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE attend at the Bar of the Senate to hear the Speech from the Throne by HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL. 1

CERTIFICATES AND REPORTS from Judges, relating to the Trial of Controverted Elections 1

NOTIFICATIONS OF VACANCIES 2

NEW MEMBERS 2

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE, of which Mr. Speaker reported that he had received a copy 2

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS—Resolved—That the same shall be printed 3

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES 3

Oaths of Office Bill—

Read the first time—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 3

CONTESTED ELECTIONS AND CORRUPT PRACTICES—Resolutions adopted—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 3

PUBLIC WORKS—Report presented by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 4

PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARY—Report presented by Mr. Speaker 4

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5TH.

THE HANSARD REPORTS—Committee on Printing to manage—Reporters to be admitted to the floor of the House 4

INTERNAL REVENUE—Report presented by Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 5

HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH—A humble Address thereon moved by Mr. Frechette—(the motion being seconded by Mr. Macdougall, Elgin) 5

After debate, Resolutions agreed to; Committee appointed to draw up Address; Address reported, and ordered to be engrossed and presented to His Excellency 18

SUPPLY—Committee on Monday next to consider Supply to be granted to HER MAJESTY—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 18

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—Report presented by Hon. Mr. Cartwright 18

TRADE AND NAVIGATION—Returns presented by Hon. Mr. Burpee 18

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8TH.

NORTH-WEST TROUBLES—Question by Hon. Mr. Holton; Answer by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 18

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

WOODEN AND IRON BRIDGES—Motion to have correspondence printed—Mr. Blain 19

VETERANS OF 1812-14—Question by Mr. Delorme; Answer by Hon. Mr. Vail.. 19

COURT OF ADMIRALTY—Question by Mr. Wood; Answer by Hon. Mr. Fournier 19

WELLAND CANAL—Question by Mr. Wood: Answer by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 20

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS—Question by Mr. Wood; Answer by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 20

INSPECTORS OF INSURANCE COMPANIES—Question by Mr. Wood; Answer by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 20

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY CARS—Question by Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 20

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—Question by Mr. Blain; Answer by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.. 20

HIS EXCELLENCY'S COMMISSION—Motion for copy, Mr. Masson 21

COMMUTATION OF LEPINE'S SENTENCE—Motion for copies of papers, Orders in Council, and correspondence, Mr. Masson 21

After debate, motion agreed to 26

MILITIA MEN OF 1812-13—Motion for Address showing names, ages, and residences of all whose claims to pensions had been transmitted to Imperial Government—Mr. Taschereau 26

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES—Special Committee appointed to prepare lists—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 26

EXPENSES OF SPECIAL COMMITTEES—Motion for statement of expenses—Mr. Ross (Middlesex) 26

After discussion, motion allowed to stand 26

PROCEEDINGS OF 31ST MARCH AND 9TH APRIL, 1874—Motion

That the entry in the journals of this House of 31st of March and 9th of April, 1874, relating to the examination of Attorney General CLARKE, Detective HAMILTON, and policeman McVeity be now read 26

After debate, motion allowed to stand.. 28

LEPINE'S COMMUTATION—Message from His Excellency read, transmitting copies of correspondence—Questions by Mr. Masson and Mr. Kirkpatrick; answers by Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 28

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY—Report for 1873-74, presented by Hon. Mr. Laird .. 28

MILITARY MOVEMENTS, 1866—Returns presented by Hon. Mr. Vail 28

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9TH.

SEAT VACANT—Report by Mr. Speaker that representation of Electoral District of Berthier is vacant 28

STANDING COMMITTEES—Report of Special Committee presented and adopted—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 28

Marine Telegraph Bill—

Introduced—Hon, Mr. Mackenzie 28

Motion—To be read the first time—Carried 29

Repeal of Chap. 147, Nova Scotia Statutes, Bill—

Introduced—Hon. Mr. Fournier 29

Motion—To be read the first time—Carried 29

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Militia Amendment Bill—

Introduced—Hon. Mr. Vail 29

Motion—To be read the first time—Carried 29

Foreign Enlistment Bill—

Introduced—Hon. Mr. Fournier 29

Motion—To be read the first time—Carried 30

MINISTERIAL EXPLANATIONS—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 30

INTERNAL MANAGEMENT OF HOUSE OF COMMONS—Message read from His Excellency, announcing appointment of Commissioners 33

LEPINE'S COMMUTATION—Question—Sir John Macdonald; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 33

TORONTO DRILL SHED—Question—Mr. Wilkes; Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail .. 33

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11TH.

PRINTING COMMITTEE—Motion that a message be sent to the Senate—Mr. Ross (Middlesex) 33

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—Motion for reference to Select Standing Committee—Mr. Young 33

RAILWAY ACT—Motion for leave to introduce a Bill to amend—Mr. Oliver .. 33

After debate, leave granted, and Bill read the first time 34

Regulation of Railway Traffic—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill—Mr. Irving 34

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 34

Cruelty to Animals during Transit—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill 34

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 34

CONSTITUTION OF STANDING COMMITTEES—Motion for substitution of names—Carried—Hon. Mr. Holton 34

THE ADDRESS—Message from HIS EXCELLENCY acknowledging receipt .. 35

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT—Motion for leave to introduce a Bill—Mr. Irving 35

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 35

POSTAL DELIVERY—Question, Mr. Irving; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald .. 35

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE—Question, Mr. Irving; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 35

PUBLIC WORKS ON THE SAGUENAY—Question, Mr. Cimon; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 35

SUBSIDIES TO RAILROADS WHICH RECEIVE GRANTS FROM LOCAL LEGISLATURES—Question, Mr. Cimon; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 35

DOMINION NOTES—Question, Mr. Mackenzie (Montreal); Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 35

CORRECTION OF OFFICIAL REPORTS— 36

North West Troubles—

Motion that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, &c., &c.—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 50

After long debate, ordered on motion by Mr. Wallace (Norfolk) that the debate be adjourned 97

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

ERRATUM—Speech of Hon. Mr. Vail, on Tuesday. 97*

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 12TH.

THE ESTIMATES—Message from His Excellency—Motion to refer to Committee of Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 97

BRITISH COLUMBIA—Message from His Excellency 98

MARINE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPHS—Message from His Excellency transmitting copies of correspondence 98

North West Troubles—

Debate on motion of Hon. Mr. Mackenzie resumed,—Mr. Wallace (Norfolk) 98

Motion in amendment that regretting the Ministers did not, &c.,—Mr. Mousseau 116

House divided, when amendment of Mr. Mousseau was declared resolved in the negative 135

Motion in amendment that the following words be added to the resolutions, &c., —Mr. Farrow 135

Mr. Farrow's amendment declared negatived on division 136

House divided and original motion was declared resolved in the affirmative .. 136

Resolutions referred to a Committee—Address drafted and reported—ordered that an address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of the House as are members of the Privy Council 137

JOINT COMMITTEES—Message from the Senate 137

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15TH.

Protection of Life on Railways—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill,—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 137

After debate, leave granted, and Bill read the first time 139

Postal Service Amendment—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill,—Hon. D. A. Macdonald 139

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 139

Preservation of the Peace in the Vicinity of Public Works—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill,—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 139

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 139

Suits against the Crown—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill,—Mr. Irving 139

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 139

EXPULSION OF RIEL—Policy of the Administration,—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 139

SANITARY BUREAU—Question, Mr. Brouse; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 140

COMMON CARRIERS—Question, Mr. Young; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith .. 140

RAILWAY CARRYING TRADE—Question, Mr. Oliver; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 140

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Question, Mr. Domville; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 140

GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Question, Mr. Wood; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 140

GRAVING DOCK AT ESQUIMAULT—Question, Mr. DeCosmos; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 141

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH THE WEST INDIES—Question, Mr. Young; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 141

CONSTRUCTION OF LIFE BOATS—Question, Mr. Macdougall (Elgin); Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith 141

HARBOUR OF TORONTO—Motion for copy of Engineer's report and Orders in Council relating to the same, Mr. Wilkes 141

After debate—Motion agreed to 144

THE MEMBER FOR PROVENCHER—Motion for leave to withdraw resolution for the reading of the entry on the journals of 31st March and 9th April, 1874,—Mr. Bowell 144

Leave granted and motion withdrawn 144

Juvenile Military Education—Motion—

"That a Select Committee be appointed to report upon our present system of military drill, with the view to ascertain if some improvement may not be effected therein," —(Mr. Brouse). 144

After long debate—Motion in amendment by Hon. Mr. Cameron (South Ontario—

"That so far from it being desirable that our youth should be taught in schools the art of war and a military spirit engendered," &c. 156

Amendment and main motion withdrawn 157

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16TH.

London and Canada Bank—

Private Bill—First reading, Hon. Mr. Cameron (South Ontario) 157

Imperial Loan and Investment Company—

Private Bill—First Reading—Mr. Moss 157

Railway Act—

Bill to Extend and Amend—First Reading—Mr. Irving 157

Controverted Elections Act—

Bill to Amend—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Fournier 157

Suppression of Gaming Houses—

Motion for Leave to Introduce Bill—Mr. Moss 157

Leave Granted and Bill read the first time 158

FELONIES AND MISDEMEANORS—Motion for Leave to Introduce a Bill—Mr. Macdougall (Elgin) 158

Motion allowed to stand as a notice 158

The Budget—Motion—

"That the House do go into Committee to consider the supply to be granted to HER MAJESTY."—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.) 158

After long debate, the motion was agreed to 195

NORTH WELLLINGTON ELECTION—Report of Decision of Judges—Mr. Speaker .. 177

ERRATUM—Speech of Mr. Bowell on Amnesty Resolutions 195

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 17TH.

SOUTH HURON ELECTION—Certificate of Election of Thomas Greenway—Mr. Speaker 195

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Criminal Procedure—

Bill to Amend—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cameron (Cardwell) . . 195

Promissory Notes—

Bill to Amend Law Relating to—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cameron (Cardwell) 195

Protection of Life on Wharves and Docks—

Bill to Provide for—First Reading—Mr. Oliver 196

NAVIGATION OF THE SAGUENAY—Question, Mr. Cimon ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 196

NAVIGATION OF THE MIRAMICHI—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 196

HALF-BREEDS' LANDS—Question, Mr. Ryan ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird. 196

UNPATENTED LANDS IN MANITOBA—Question, Mr. Ryan ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird 197

LIMITS OF INSPECTION DISTRICTS—Question, Mr. Horton ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 197

POST OFFICE MONEY ORDERS—Question, Mr. Landerkin ; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 197

STAMPS ON PROMISSORY NOTES—Question, Mr. Landerkin ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 197

LIGHT-HOUSE ON ISLE OF HAUTTE—Question, Mr. Goudge ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith 197

PREPAYMENT OF MAIL MATTER—Question, Mr. Burpee (Sunbury) ; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 197

BALLAST WHARF AT ST. JOHN—Question, Mr. Domville ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 197

INTERNATIONAL MONEY ORDER SYSTEM—Question, Mr. Scriver ; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 198

CENSUS VOLUMES—Question, Mr. Ross (Middlesex) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 198

RECOVERY OF LOST GOODS ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Question, Mr. Fiset ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 198

NAVIGATION OF THE FRASER RIVER—Question, Mr. Thompson (Cariboo) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 198

IMPORTATION OF LAND PLASTER—Motion for Copies of Returns—Mr. Gordon . . 198

After debate, motion agreed to 199

BOUNDARY LINES BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ALASKA—Motion for an Address to His Exellency the Governor General—Mr. Roscoe 199

Motion in Amendment that all the words after " Survey" be struck out, &c.—Mr. De Cosmos 201

After debate, both Amendment and Original Motion withdrawn 202

THE FISHERIES ACT—Motion for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General—Mr. Cimon 203

Statistics—Motion—

" That the House do on Friday next go into Committee of the Whole to consider Resolutions."—(Mr. Young) 203

After debate, motion withdrawn 205

SPECIAL RATES ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for copies of all special rates granted for Freight—Mr. Domville 205

After debate, motion agreed to 206

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY SUPPLIES—Motion for Papers and Correspondence—Mr. Domville 206

COPYRIGHTS—Motion for copies of correspondence with Imperial authorities—Mr. Dymond 206

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—Motion for memorandum of Chief Engineer to be Laid on the Table—Mr. De Cosmos.. 206

HURON AND OTTAWA RAILWAY—Motion for copy of report of L. G. Bell, C. E.—Mr. Galbraith 206

CANADIAN SHIPPING ON LAKE MICHIGAM—Motion for copies of correspondence relating thereto—Mr. Norris 206

After debate, motion agreed to 209

GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Motion for Returns of Tenders, Orders in Council, &c.—Hon. Mr. Tupper 209

THE LOAN OF 1874—Motion for copy of Prospectus and Terms, &c.—Hon. Mr. Tupper 209

COMPENSATION FOR FISHERIES—Motion—

"Address to His Excellency the Governor General, praying for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Government of Great Britain in reference to the monetary compensation to be paid to Canada, under the Treaty of Washington, for the liberty of fishing in Canadian waters," etc.—(Mr. Mills.) .. 209

A discussion ensuing, the debate was adjourned.. 211

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18TH.

Speedy Trial of Felons—

Bill read the first time—Mr. Macdougall (Elgin) 212

PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY—Question, Mr. Ryan ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 212

WITHDRAWAL OF TWENTY CENT COIN—Question, Mr. Cheval ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 212

PRINTING OF OFFICIAL REPORTS OF THE DEBATES IN FRENCH—Question, Mr. Cheval ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 212

VOLUNTARY MILITIA ORGANIZATION—Question, Hon. Mr. Cauchon ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 212

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—Motion for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General—Mr. Dymond 212

SURVEY OF DOMINION LANDS IN MANITOBA—Motion for copy of resolutions declaring expediency of—Mr. Bunster 214

After debate, motion withdrawn 219

REFRESHMENT ROOM—Motion that it be re-opened for the convenience of members —Mr. Bunster 219

On division, Motion declared resolved in the negative 219

STEAM COMMUNICATION BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND PICTOU—Motion for copy of contract—Mr. McIntyre 219

After debate, Motion agreed to 222

Pacific Railway Survey Accounts—Motion—

"That the letter and telegram of which copies are hereto annexed, were printed, and circulated in the South Riding of Norforlk, during the late Election in that constituency," etc., etc.—(Mr. Wallace) 222

After debate, Motion withdrawn, and subject referred to Public Accounts Committee for Investigation 232

INSOLVENCY AND SUPREME COURTS BILLS—Question, Sir John A. Macdonald ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 232

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Cruelty to Animals While in Transit—

Bill—Second Reading—Mr. Charlton 233

ALLOWANCES AND GRATUITIES—Motion for Return—Sir John A. Macdonald .. 233

VACANCIES SINCE GENERAL ELECTION—Motion for a return of each vacancy, date of same, date when notified to Speaker, date of warrant for new writ, and date of transmission of writ to returning officer—Sir John. A. Macdonald .. 233

Motion to add following words—

"And also a similar statement respecting the vacancies occurring during the last two Parliaments."—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.) 234

Motion agreed to as amended.. 234

GRANTS TO MANITOBA VOLUNTEERS—Motion for Return of all applications for—Sir John A. Macdonald 234

House in Committee of Supply 234

CIVIL SERVICE BONUS—Explanation in Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.. .. 236

SALARIES OF COUNTRY POSTMASTERS—Explanations in Supply—Hon. D. A. Macdonald.. 237

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19TH.

PRINTING COMMITTEE—Motion that second and third Reports be adopted—Mr. Ross (Middlesex) 238

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE—Motion for authority to employ a short-hand Reporter—Mr. Young 238

Private Bills—

First Readings—To Incorporate the Pictou Coal Company; Mr. Baby. To Incorporate the Lower Ottawa Boom Company; Mr. Currier. To Incorporate the Intelligencer Printing and Publishing Company; Mr. Bowell. To Incorporate the Industrial Life Insurance Company; Mr. Baby. To Incorporate La Banque St. Jean Baptiste; Mr. Fréchette 239

Insolvency Law—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill—Hon. Mr. Fournier 239

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 241

Gas Inspection—

Bill—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 241

Marine Electric Telegraphs—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill to regulate the construction and maintenance of—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 241

After debate, leave granted, Bill read the first time, and referred to Railway Committee 245

Criminal Law in Nova Scotia—

Second Reading of Bill to amend—Hon. Mr. Fournier 245

Bill referred to Committee of the Whole, reported, read a third time and passed 245

Foreign Enlistment—

Second Reading of a Bill to prevent—Hon. Mr. Fournier 245

Bill referred to Committee of the Whole and reported 245

House in Committee of Supply 245

THE LATE MR. ALFRED TODD—Discussion in Supply,—Hon. Mr. Holton .. 245

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page.

DOMINION STATUTES—Additional copies—Discussion in Supply—Mr Young .. 246

STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT, NOVA SCOTIA—Discussion in Supply—Hon. Mr. Tupper 247

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITION—Explanations in Supply—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 248

MENONITE LOAN—Explanations in Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 249

VETERANS OF 1812-14—Question, Mr. Kirkpatrick, (in Supply) ; Answer—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 252

GENERAL MILITIA ESTIMATES 253

LAKE SUPERIOR AND OTHER STEAM COMMUNICATION ESTIMATES 255

MARINE ESTIMATES 256

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 22ND.

Private Bill—

First Reading, Relating to the European and North American Railroad companies—Mr. Wright (Ottawa) 259

Enquiries into Public Matters—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill—Hon. Mr. Blake 259

Leave granted and Bill read the first time 259

NORTH WELLINGTON ELECTION—Judge's Certificate and Report—Mr. Speaker .. 259

THE MEMBER FOR CENTRE WELLINGTON—Breach of Privilege—Mr. Speaker .. 260

London and Canada Bank—

Second reading of Bill, and reference to Committee on Banking—Hon. Mr. Cameron (South Ontario) 260

Imperial Loan and Investment Company—

Bill read the second time and referred to Committee on Banking and Commerce—Mr. Moss 260

WEST INDIA MAIL SERVICE—Question, Mr. Forbes ; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 261

CANADIANS IN THE UNITED STATES—Question, Mr. Masson ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 261

STORM SIGNALS—Question, Mr. Forbes ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith 261

AGENT-GENERAL OF CANADA IN LONDON—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 261

ENROLMENT OF RESERVE MILITIA—Question, Mr. Little ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 261

NAVAL STATION AT ESQUIMAULT—Question, Mr. Roscoe ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 261

EXTRA COPIES OF OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES—Question, Mr. Farrow ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Ross (Middlesex) 261

ONTARIO LAND GRANT TO PACIFIC RAILWAY—Question, Hon. Mr. Blake ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 262

LEPINE COMMUTATION—Question, Hon. Mr. Blake ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 262

DAWSON ROUTE—Question, Mr. Farrow ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 262

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS—Motion for copies of despatches from Imperial Government on subject, Mr. Young 262

FREE DELIVERY OF MAIL MATTER IN MONTREAL—Motion for statement of expenses, Mr. Oliver 262

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

EXAMINERS OF FISH INSPECTORS—Motion for Return, Mr. Forbes .. . 262

BOUNDARY BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND NORTH WEST TERRITORIES—Motion for an Address to His Excellency—Mr. Thompson (Cariboo) 262

After debate—Motion withdrawn 263

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS—Motion to increase number of copies distributed—Mr. Baby 263

Motion referred to Printing Committee 264

Spring Hill Branch Railway—Motion—

"That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General for all correspondence between the Government or their officers and the Spring Hill Mining Company, for all Orders in Council relating to the said Company, and any agreements that may have been made with the same."—(Hon. Mr. Tupper) 265

After debate, motion agreed to 265

Public Criers—

Second Reading of Bill for more effectual protection of—Reference to Railway Committee—Mr. Irving 266

Railway Returns—

Bill to amend law regulating to—Read the second time and referred to Railway Committee—Mr. Irving 266

Postal Service Amendment Bill—

Motion for second reading—Hon. D. A. Macdonald 266

After long debate, Resolved, That the debate be adjourned 274

OUTLAWRY OF LOUIS RIEL—Sentence laid on Table—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 273

Preservation of Peace in Vicinity of Public Works—

Bill read the second time, referred to Committee of Whole, reported—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 274

Protection of Persons and Property on Railways—

Bill read the second time and referred to Committee on Railways—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 274

House in Committee of Supply 275

NUMBER OF INDIANS IN ONTARIO, QUEBEC, NOVA SCOTIA, AND NEW BRUNSWICK—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Explanations—Hon. Mr. Laird 275

TREATY WITH INDIANS OF NORTH-WEST—Question, Mr. Masson; Explanations, Hon. Mr. Laird 276

INDIAN RESERVES IN CHICOUTIMI AND SAGUENAY—Mr. Cimon 277

INDIAN LANDS IN NEW BRUNSWICK—Mr. Costigan 279

INDIAN LANDS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question, Mr. De Cosmos; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 279

NATIONAL BOUNDARY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—Explanations—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 282

Committee rose and reported 283

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 23RD.

PRIVATE BILLS—Motion for extension of time for receiving petitions for and reports on—Mr. Rymal 283

After debate, motion agreed to 284

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Private Bills—

First Readings — Respecting the International Bridge Company; Mr. Irving. Respecting the Richelieu Company; Mr. Jetté. Respecting Banks and Banking; Hon. Mr. Cartwright. To Incorporate the Royal Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Jetté 284

Supreme Court—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill to establish—Hon. Mr. Fournier .. 284

After debate, leave granted, and Bill read the first time 289

STATISTICS—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper; Explanation, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 290

Militia Amendment Bill—

Motion for second reading—Hon. Mr. Vail 290

After debate, motion agreed to 291

Controverted Elections Act Amendment Bill—

Second reading—Hon. Mr. Fournier 291

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—CUSTOMS ESTIMATES 291

CIVIL SERVICE—Outside Service 292

CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT IN NEW BRUNSWICK AND NOVA SCOTIA 295

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS 296

INLAND REVENUE DEPARTMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA 297

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT—Question, Mr. Domville: Answer, Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 298

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Question, Mr. Domville; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 298

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—Question, Mr. Domville; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 300

GULF PORTS NAVIGATION—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 302

POST OFFICE ESTIMATES 303

SURVEYS OF LAND IN NORTH-WEST—Hon. Mr. Laird 304

Committee Reported 305

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 24TH.

Dominion Notes—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 305

After debate, leave granted, and Bill read the first time 306

Private Bills—

Respecting the Montreal Board of Trade; Mr. Devlin. To Incorporate the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company—Mr. Murray 306

Penitentiaries—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill respecting—Hon. Mr. Fournier 306

Leave granted, and Bill read the first time 307

Great Western Railway—

Bill to amend Act of Incorporation—first reading—Mr. Moss 307

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING—Fifth report presented—Mr. Ross (Middlesex) .. 307

Page

Outlawry of Riel—Motion

"That the record in the case of Louis Riel, laid on the table of the House on the 22nd., inst., be now read"—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) 307

Motion agreed to 308

Also moved—

"That it appears by the said record that Louis Riel, a member of this House, has been adjudged an outlaw for felony"—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) 308

Motion in amendment—

"That all the words after 'that' in the original motion be struck out, and the following inserted :—'It appears on the face of the record of the proceedings brought before this House that no legal or valid judgment of outlawry has been rendered against the said Louis Riel, member for Provencher, and it also appears from the same record that the said Louis Riel, having been indicted for murder, has not been arrested, nor appeared, nor pleaded to the said indictment, nor surrendered to take his trial thereon, but has been and continues to be voluntarily absent and a fugitive from justice from the Province of Manitoba. Be it therefore resolved that the said Louis Riel be and he is hereby expelled from this House.'"—(Mr. Plumb) .. 315

After debate, the House divided, when the amendment of Mr. Plumb was declared resolved in the negative—24 votes to 146 320

The House again divided, when the original motion was declared resolved in the affirmative—138 votes to 31 320

Also moved—

"That Mr. Speaker do issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to issue a new writ for the electoral district of Provencher, in the room of Louis Riel adjudged an outlaw" -(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) .. — 320

House divided, when the motion was declared resolved in the affirmation—141 to 16 322

THE MEMBER FOR CENTRE WELLINGTON—Motion for leave to introduce a Bill of Indemnity—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 322

After debate, motion allowed to stand 323

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25TH.

Public Bills—

First Readings — Relating to Trade Marks and Industrial Designs ; Mr. Bernier. Prevention of Accidents in Breweries and Distilleries ; Mr. Brouse.. 323

Carriers by Land and Water—

Bill to define Duties, Rights, and Responsibilities of—Motion for leave to introduce—Mr. Devlin 323

After debate, leave granted, and Bill read the first time 324

THE MEMBER FOR CENTRE WELLINGTON—Motion to refer Breach of Privilege to Committee on Privileges and Elections—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 324

After debate, motion agreed to 325

Militia Act Amendment Bill—

Motion for the House to go into Committee of the Whole to consider Resolutions —Hon. Mr. Vail 325

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee 327

After debate, Resolutions concurred in and reported 331

Also moved—That the Resolutions be referred to Committee of the Whole House on Bill No. 4, which was agreed to—Hon. Mr. Vail 331

Bill reported as amended, and Report received 331

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

CONCURRENCE IN ESTIMATES—

MANITOBA MOUNTED POLICE—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 332

PENITENTIARIES—Question, Mr. Kirkpatrick; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright .. 333

ROCKWOOD ASYLUM—Question, Mr. Kirkpatrick; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 333

HALIFAX PENITENTIARY—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 333

ST. JOHN PENITENTIARY—Question, Mr. Domville; Answer, Hon. Mr. Burpee .. 333

CENSUS RETURNS—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.. 334

PHILADELPHIA CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION—Question, Mr. Currier; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 334

The Intercolonial Railway—

Motion—That the House go into Committee of Suppply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 334

After very long debate, the motion was ruled out of order.. 370

FRIDAY FEBRUARY 26TH.

Private Bills—

Respecting the Canadian Navigation Company; Mr. Mackenzie (Montreal). To Incorporate the European and American Express and Agency Company; Mr. Jetté. To Incorporate the Manitoba and North-West Permanent Building Society; Mr. Irving. Respecting the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway, and to Incorporate the St. Lawrence Bridge Company; Mr. Desjardins. To Incorporate a company to construct, own and operate a railway from Red River, in the Province of Manitoba, to a point in British Columbia on the Pacific Coast; Mr. Dewdney. To Incorporate the Canadian Steam Users' Association; Mr. MacLennan 370

SUPPLEMENTARY FINANCIAL STATEMENT—Question, Hon. Mr. Holton; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 370

Preservation of Peace in the Vicinity of Public Works Bill—

Third Reading, Hon Mr. Mackenzie 370

Militia Act Amendment Bill—

Third Reading, Hon. Mr. Vail 370

Insolvency Bill—

Second Reading, reference to Select Committee—Hon. Mr. Fournier .. 371

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT BILL—Question, Sir John A. Macdonald; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 371

CONCURRENCE IN ESTIMATES—

THE AGENT-GENERAL—Motion that item 46 be concurred in—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 371

MENONITE LOAN—Motion that item 47 be concurred in,—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 371

Motion in Amendment—

"And that out of the sum to be set apart for the benefit of the Menonites, a proportionate sum be assigned towards inducing Canadians residing in the United States to settle in Manitoba or the North-West Territories."—(Mr. Masson) 379

Amendment ruled out of order 379

Motion in Amendment—

"That the resolution be not concurred in, but that it be resolved that the sum of $100,000 for a Menonite Loan be reduced to $50,000."—(Mr. Masson) 379

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Motion in Amendment to the Amendment—

"That all the words after 'that' in the Amendment be left out, and that the following be inserted:—But this House will cheerfully assent to any measure which may be proposed by the Government to encourage the settlement of native Canadians now living in the United States on the waste lands of the Dominion."—(Hon. Mr. Holton) .. 383

On the question being put, it was resolved that the Amendment to the Amendment stand part of the question 391

The motion as amended was then agreed to 391

VETERANS OF 1812-14—Motion that item 50 be concurred in,—Hon. Mr. Vail .. 391

GENERAL MILITIA ESTIMATES—Motion for concurrence,—Hon. Mr. Vail .. 392

VOLUNTEER UNIFORMS—Question, Mr. Wright (Pontiac); Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail 393

VOLUNTEER CAMPS—Question, Mr. Plumb; Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail 393

WIMBLEDON TEAM—Question, Mr. Plumb; Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail 395

Private Bills—

Second Readings—To Incorporate the Lower Ottawa Boom Company; Mr. Currier. To Incorporate the Intelligencer Printing and Publishing Company; Mr. Bowell. To Incorporate the Industrial Life Insurance Company; Mr. Baby. To Incorporate La Banque St.-Jean-Baptiste; Mr. Frechette. To Incorporate the Pictou Iron and Coal Company; Mr. Baby. To Incorporate the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company; Mr. Murray 381

MONDAY, MARCH 1ST.

INTEREST AND USURY IN NEW BRUNSWICK—BILL—First reading—Mr. Palmer 396

LEVIS BOARD OF TRADE—Bill to Incorporate—First reading—Mr. Fréchette .. 396

CLAIM OF MATTHEW SMITH—Question, Mr. Domville; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 396

SETTLERS ON INDIAN LANDS IN THE SAUGEEN PENINSULA—Question, Mr. Gillies; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird 397

IMMIGRATION TO BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question, Mr. De Cosmos; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 397

LAWS IN REFERENCE TO INDIANS—Question, Mr. Patterson; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird 397

MARINE HOSPITALS AT SYDNEY—Question, Mr. McKay, (Cape Breton); Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 397

BREAKWATER AT COW BAY—Question, Mr. Mackay, (Cape Breton); Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 397

LIGHT HOUSE ON GUYON ISLAND—Question, Mr. Mackay, (Cape Breton); Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith 397

BREAKWATER AT PORT MAINE A DIEU—Question, Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton); Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 397

PILOTAGE ACT—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith .. 397

ISLAND OF GRAND MANAN—Question, Mr. Gillmor; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 398

NOTES OF CHARTERED BANKS—Question, Mr. Macdougall, (Elgin); Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 398

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEES—Question, Mr. White; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 398

BRIDGING OF THE RIDEAU RIVER—Question, Mr. Rochester; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 398

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

TRANSLATION OF THE DEBATES—Question, Mr. Cheval; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 398

ST. PETER'S CANAL—Question, Mr. Campbell; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 398

CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTES—Question, Mr. Biggar; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 399

THE MISSISSIGUA INDIAN TRIBE—Motion for an address to His Excellency the Governor General for returns—Mr. Gordon 399

Constitution of the Senate—

Motion—That the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution :—

"That the present mode of constituting the Senate is inconsistent with the Federal principle in our system of Government, makes the Senate independent alike of the people and the Crown, and is in other material respects defective; and that our constitution ought to be so amended as to confer upon each Province the power of selecting its own Senators, and to define the mode of their selection."—(Mr. Mills) .. 399

After long debate, the question being put, the House divided when the motion was declared resolved in the affirmative—77 votes to 74 420

House in Committee, and after debate, Committee rose and reported progress .. 423

Corrections of addresses of Messrs. Masson, Desjardins, Gaudet, and Caron .. 423

TUESDAY, MARCH 2ND.

Private Bills—

First Readings—Relating to the Northern Railway; Mr. Cockburn. To Incorporate the Anglo-French Steamship Company; Mr. Jones (Halifax). To Incorporate the Canadian Land and Investment Company; to Incorporate the Metropolitan Insurance Company; and respecting the Canada Guarantee Company; Mr. Jetté. To Incorporate the National Insurance Company; Mr. Desjardins 423

Administration of Justice in the North West—

Bill to amend the Act respecting—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Fournier .. 423

SALARIES OF JUDGES—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions respecting—Hon. Mr. Fournier 424

House in Committee, and resolutions adopted and reported 426

SALARIES OF SUPREME COURT JUDGES—Motion that House do on Thursday go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions respecting—Hon. Mr. Fournier 426

Postal Regulations Bill—

Motion that House go into Committee of the Whole on Thursday next to consider certain resolutions respecting—Hon. D. A. Macdonald 426

SALARIES OF PENITENTIARY OFFICERS—Motion that House go into Committee of the Whole on Thursday next to consider certain resolutions respecting—Hon. Mr. Fournier 426

Marine Electric Telegraphs Bill—

House in Committee, and Bill reported 426

THE CASE OF EDWARD DUCKETT—Motion that House go into Committee of Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 426

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

EXTENSION OF INTERCOLONIAL INTO HALIFAX—Question, Mr. Jones (Halifax); Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 427

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY AT ST. JOHN—Question, Mr. Palmer; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 427

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

LACHINE CANAL—Question, Mr. Jones (Leeds) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 428

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 429

RIDEAU CANAL—Question, Mr. Hagar ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.. 433

ST. PETER'S CANAL—Question, Mr. MacKay (Cape Breton) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 433

BAIE VERTE CANAL—Motion that estimate be not agreed to—Mr. Macdonnell (Inverness) 434

After debate, motion negatived, and estimate passed 447

IMPROVEMENTS OF NAVIGABLE RIVERS—Red River, Wallace River, Saguenay, &c. 447

LAKE SUPERIOR AND RED RIVER ROUTE—Question, Mr. Schultz ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 448

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN ONTARIO—Question, Mr. Wood; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 450

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3RD.

PETITION OF MESSRS. FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co.—Motion for reception of, Mr. Domville 450

Motion ruled out of order 452

Private Bills—

First Readings—To Incorporate the North Western Manufacturing Company ; Mr. Schultz. Respecting the Montreal, Sorel, and Chambly Railway ; Mr. Jetté. Respecting the Niagara Falls Intercolonial Bridge Company ; Mr. Moss 452

Public Debt Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 452

Insurance Companies—

Motion for leave to introduce a Bill respecting—Hon. Mr. Cartwright .. 452

After debate, leave granted, and Bill read the first time 453

ARRANGEMENTS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question, Mr. Bunster ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 453

CLAIMS OF INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY CONTRACTORS — Question, Mr. Palmer ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 453

SALARIES OF JUDGES OF COUNTY COURTS—Question, Hon. Mr. Blake ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 453

SCHOOLS FOR INDIANS—Question, Mr. Goudge ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird .. 454

RAILWAY COMPANIES' BY-LAWS—Question, Mr. Delorme ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 454

THE WELLAND CANAL—Motion for copies of all reports and estimates of engineer in charge—Mr. Norris 454

After discussion, motion agreed to 456

DOMINION NOTE CIRCULATION—Motion for a Select Committee to report on question—Mr. Wilkes 456

On motion, debate adjourned.. 462

Private Bills—

Second Readings—To incorporate the Royal Life Insurance Company ; and respecting the Richelieu Company—Mr. Jetté—Respecting the Canadian Navigation Company—Mr. Mackenzie (Montreal) 462

Page

Canadian Fisheries—

Resumption of debate on motion of Mr. Mills for an Address for correspondence in reference to compensation to be paid by the United States to Canada, under the Treaty of Washington, for the right of fishing in Canadian waters—Hon. Mr. Mitchell 462

After debate, motion withdrawn 472

Railway Act Amendment—

Bill Read the second time and referred to Railway Committee—Mr. Oliver .. 472

Trade Marks—

Bill read the second time and referred to Committee on Banking and Commerce —Mr. Bernier 472

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

PENITENTIARIES—Explanations—Hon. Mr Mackenzie 472

HARBORS AND BREAKWATERS—Question, Mr. Wood; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 473

THURSDAY, MARCH 4TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—To Incorporate the Dominion Railway Equipment Company— Mr. Blain 475

Immigration Act Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Smith 475

CULLING AND MEASURING TIMBER—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next to consider resolutions respecting—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 475

APPOINTMENT OF HARBOR MASTERS—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider resolutions respecting—Hon. Mr. Smith.. 475

THE MEMBER FOR TWO MOUNTAINS—Motion to admit to the House on production of the duplicate indenture of return only—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 475

Postal Regulations Bill—

Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider resolutions—Hon. D. A. Macdonald 475

After debate, motion agreed to, and House went into Committee 485

Motion in amendment to 22nd sub-section of clause 3, that the following words be substituted therefor :—

"That newspapers and periodical publications printed and published in Canada, and issued not less than once a month from a known office of publication or news agency, and addressed by and from the same to regular subscribers or news agents, shall be carried through the mails free; and such newspapers and periodicals shall be put up into packages and delivered into the Post Office, and the postage rate thereon prepaid by the sender thereof, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may from time to time direct—(Mr. Young) 485

Amendment declared resolved in the negative, and clause agreed to 489

Resolutions agreed to and reported 490

Banks and Banking—

Bill to amend Act relating to—Read the second time, referred to Committee of the Whole, and reported, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 490

Inspection of Gas—

Bill to amend Act relating to—Read the second time, referred to Committee of the Whole and reported, Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 490

Page

Controverted Elections—

Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Bill to amend Act relating to, Hon. Mr. Fournier 490

After debate—Motion agreed to, and House in Committee of the Whole .. 494

Motion in amendment to clause first—that the following be substituted therefor :—

"Whenever it appears to the Court or to the Judge that the respondent's presence at the trial is necessary, the trial of the petition shall not be commenced during any session of Parliament, and in the computation of any delay allowed for any step or proceeding in respect of any such trial, or for the commencement of such trial under the next following section, the time occupied by any such session shall not be reckoned —(Hon. Mr. Blake) 495

Amendment agreed to 495

Amendments to clauses 3 and 4, Hon. Mr. Fournier 496

Committee reported Bill with amendments 497

CONCURRENCE IN ESTIMATES—

GENERAL MARINE ESTIMATES—Motion for concurrence, Hon. Mr. Smith .. 497

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 498

GENERAL ESTIMATES OF DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR—Motion for concurrence, Hon. Mr. Laird 499

Committee rose and reported 501

FRIDAY, MARCH 5TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—Respecting the Intercolonial Express Company, Mr. Baby .. 501 Inspection of Produce—

Bill to amend Act respecting, Mr. Forbes 501

THE MENONITE LOAN—Question of Privilege, Mr. Masson 501

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Monday next to consider certain resolutions, Hon. Mr. Smith .. 503

MASTERS AND MATES—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Monday next to consider certain resolutions, Hon. Mr. Smith 503

INSPECTION OF INSURANCE COMPANIES—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Monday next to consider certain resolutions, Hon. Mr. Cartwright 503

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Motion for passage of Estimates, Hon Mr. Mackenzie 503

After long debate—Motion agreed to 553

Private Bills—

Second Readings—Respecting the Provincial Insurance Company of Canada; Hon. Mr. Cameron (Cardwell). Respecting the European and North American Railway Company; Mr. Wright (Ottawa). To incorporate the Royal Mutual Life Insurance Company of Canada; and to incorporate the European and American Express Company; Mr. Jette. Respecting the Montreal Board of Trade; Mr. Devlin. Respecting the International Bridge Company; Mr. Irving. Respecting the Great Western Railway Company; Mr. Moss. To incorporate the Levis Board of Trade—Mr. Fréchette 517

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

MONDAY, MARCH 8TH.

PETITION OF MESSRS. FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co.—Motion that the same be referred to the Public Accounts Committee, and that the petitioners be heard by themselves, their counsel, agents, and witnesses upon their petition—Mr. Domville 553

After short debate, motion ruled out of order 553

Civil Service Bill—

First reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 554

Private Bills—

Referred to Committee of the Whole, reported, read the third time and passed. Respecting the Imperial Building, Savings, and Investment Company—Mr. Moss; Respecting the London and Canada Bank, Hon. Mr. Cameron, (South Ontario); To incorporate the Industrial Life Insurance Company, Mr. Baby; To incorporate La Banque St. Jean Baptiste—Mr. Fréchette .. 554

THE LEPINE COMMUTATION—Message from His Excellency transmitting copies of correspondence 554

CORRUPT PRACTICES AT ELECTIONS—Question, Mr. Casgrain; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 554

PENSIONS TO VETERANS—Question, Mr. Stephenson; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 554

ALLOWANCES TO POST MASTERS—Question, Mr. Greenway; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 554

ORDNANCE LANDS AT FREDERICTON—Question, Mr. Domville; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 555

New Brunswick School Law—

Motion for an humble address to Her Majesty, &c. 555

Motion that the debate be adjourned—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 580

TUESDAY, MARCH, 9TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—Relating to bridging L'Assomption River—Mr. Baby .. 581

Controverted Elections Act—

Bill to amend—First Reading—Hon. J. H. Cameron 581

Capacity of Casks—

Bill to compel persons delivering merchantable liquids in casks to mark on each cask its capacity—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 581

Life Insurance—

Bill to amend the Act respecting—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright .. 581

IMMIGRATION DUTY—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider certain resolutions—Hon. Mr. Smith 581

THE SEAMAN'S ACT—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider certain resolutions—Hon. Mr. Smith 581

Inspection of Gas—

Bill to amend the Act respecting—Read the third time and passed—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 581

THE POSTAL LAW—House in Committee of the Whole on Bill to amend—Hon. D. A. Macdonald 581

Committee rose and reported 585

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Banks and Banking—

Bill to amend the Act respecting—Referred to Committee of the Whole, clauses adopted and reported, and Bill read the third time and passed—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 585

Administration of Justice in the North West Territories.

Bill to amend the Act respecting—Referred to Committee of the Whole, clauses adopted and reported, and Bill read the third time and passed—Hon. Mr. Fournier 585

Public Debt Bill—

Agreed to in Committee, read the third time and passed—Hon. Mr Cartwright 586

Dominion Notes—

House in Committee, and Bill read the third time and passed—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 586

Immigration Act Amendment Bill—

Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Smith 586

Insurance Bill—

Resolutions agreed to in Committee, Bill read the second time, and referred to Committee on Banking and Commerce—Hon. Mr. Smith 586

Appointment of Harbour Masters—

Resolutions agreed to in Committee, Bill introduced founded thereon, and read the first time—Hon. Mr. Smith 586

County Court Judges—

Bill to provide salaries for, in Nova Scotia—Read the first time—Hon. Mr. Fournier 587

Sick and Distressed Mariners' Fund—

House in Committee to consider Resolutions—Hon. Mr. Smith 587
After short debate, resolutions agreed to and reported 588

Interpretation Act Amendment—

Bill read the second time, agreed to in Committee, read the third time and passed—Hon. Mr. Fournier 589

SUPERVISOR OF CULLERS—Resolutions agreed to in Committee, and Bill founded thereon, read the first time—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 589

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

STEEL RAILS FOR INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 589

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY AT ST. JOHN—Question, Mr. Domville ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 590

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS—Question, Mr. Lanthier ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 590

WELLAND CANAL—Question, Mr. McCallum ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 590

After debate, estimate passed 596

ST. ANNE'S LOCKS—Question, Mr. Rochester ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 596

CARILLON AND CHUTE A BLONDEAU CANAL—Question, Mr. Rochester; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 596

RIDEAU CANAL—Question, Mr. Rochester ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 596

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN ONTARIO—Question, Mr. Patterson ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 597

Committee rose and reported progress 598

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10TH.

Private Bills—

First Readings—Respecting the Montreal Saving and Loan Company; Mr. Jetté. Respecting the Canada Central Railway; Mr. Buell 598

CHATHAM BRANCH RAILWAY—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 598

SALARIES OF SAGUENAY AND GASPÉ JUDGES—Question, Mr. Cimon; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 599

MARINE HOSPITAL AT LIVERPOOL, N. S.—Question, Mr. Forbes; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 599

GOVERNMENT OFFICES AT GUELPH—Question, Mr. Stirton; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 599

BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEGRAPH LINES—Motion that certain information be conveyed to the Western Union Telegraph Company, and that the attention of Government be called to the same subject—Mr. De Cosmos 599

After short debate, motion withdrawn 600

Surveys of the St. Lawrence—

Motion for returns of reports and surveys of the St. Lawrence River, and probable estimates of improving the navigation of the river to twelve feet of water; and also to fourteen feet of water—Mr. Blain 600

After debate, the motion was withdrawn 606

Commercial Reciprocity with the United States—Motion—

"That an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that he will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House all the correspondence, despatches, and papers connected with the negotiations with the Government of the United States for a Treaty of Commercial Reciprocity—(Mr. Plumb) 607

Resolved that the debate be adjourned 608

Private Bills—

Second Readings—To Incorporate the Manitoba and North-West Permanent Building Society; Mr. Irving. To Incorporate the Montreal Northern Colonization Railroad Company; to Incorporate the St. Lawrence Bridge Company; and to Incorporate the National Insurance Company; Mr. Desjardins. To Incorporate a Company to construct a portion of the Pacific Railway; Mr. Dewdney. To Incorporate the Canadian Steam Users' Association; Mr. Maclennan. To Incorporate the Anglo-French Steamship Company; Mr. Jones (Halifax). To Incorporate the Canadian Gas Lighting Company; Hon. Mr. Cameron (South Ontario) 608

New Brunswick School Law—

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Costigan—

"That an Address be presented to Her Majesty, on the subject of the law respecting Common Schools adopted by the Legislature of New Brunswick in 1871, and praying for the passing of an Act making certain amendments to the British North America Act of 1867 609

Motion in amendment—

That all the words after "that" in the original resolution be omitted, and the following substituted:—"In the opinion of this House, legislation by the Parliament of the United Kingdom encroaching on any powers reserved to any one of the Provinces by the British North America Act would be an infraction of the Provincial constitution, and that it would be inexpedient, and fraught with danger to the autonomy of the Provinces, for this House to invite such legislation."—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) .. 611

Page

Motion in Amendment to the Amendment—

That on the 29th of May, 1872, the House of Commons adopted the following resolution :—" This House regrets that the School Act recently passed in New Brunswick is unsatisfactory to a portion of the inhabitants of that Province, and hopes that it may be so modified during next session of the Legislature of New Brunswick as to remove any just grounds of dissatisfaction that now exist." That this House regrets that the hope expressed in the said resolution has not been realized, and that an humble Address be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen embodying this resolution, and praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to use Her influence with the Legislature of New Brunswick to procure such a modification of the said Act as shall remove such grounds of discontent—(Hon. Mr. Cauchon) ... 613

Motion that the debate be adjourned—Mr. Costigan 613

The House divided, when the motion for the adjournment of the debate was declared resolved in the negative—60 votes to 124 614

After debate, the House divided on the Amendment to the Amendment, which was resolved in the affirmative—114 votes to 73 632

The House then divided on the Amendment as amended, when the same was declared resolved in the affirmative—121 votes to 61 633

The question being on the main motion as amended, the same was declared resolved in the affirmative—119 votes to 60 634

Address drafted and reported—Ordered that an Address be presented to His Excellency requesting him to transmit the same to Her most Gracious Majesty, to be laid on the foot of the Throne 634

THURSDAY, MARCH 11TH.

Building Societies Bill—

First Reading—Mr. Jetté 634

CIVIL SERVICE—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider certain resolutions respecting—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 635

TRINITY HOUSE, QUEBEC—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to morrow to consider certain resolutions respecting—Hon. Mr. Smith .. 635

REPORTING OF MR. PLUMB'S SPEECH—Sir John A. Macdonald 635

Lachine Canal—

Motion for an Address to His Excellency for copies of correspondence between the Government and proprietors of land in the vicinity of the Lachine Canal, etc.—Mr. Kirkpatrick 636

After debate, motion agreed to 639

Postal Act Amendment—

Bill read the third time and passed—Hon. D. A. Macdonald 639

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS—Motion for reception of the report of the Committee of the Whole—Hon. Mr. Smith 639

Resolutions concurred in, and Bill founded thereon introduced and read the first time—Hon. Mr. Smith 640

Penitentiaries Act Amendment—

Bill read the second time, referred to Committee of the Whole, and reported—Hon. Mr. Fournier 640

REPORTING OF MR. PLUMB'S SPEECH—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 641

Certificates to Masters and Mates of Ships—

House in Committee on Resolutions, which were adopted and reported, and Bill founded thereon introduced and read the first time—Hon. Mr. Smith .. 642

Page

Administration of Justice Bill—

(From the Senate)—Agreed to in Committee of the Whole, read the third time and passed 642

Central Prison (Ontario) Bill—

Agreed to in Committee of the Whole, read the third time, and passed—Hon. Mr. Fournier 642

Speedy Trials Bill—

Agreed to in Committee of the Whole, read the third time, and passed—Hon. Mr. Fournier 642

Copyrights Bill—

(From the Senate)—Motion for Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 642
Motion withdrawn 643

The Baie Verte Canal—

Motion in Amendment to motion for concurrence—

That item 83 of the estimates (being $1,000,000, for the construction of the Baie Verte Canal) be not concurred in, but that it be reduced from $1,000,000 to $20,000—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) 643
After debate, the Amendment was, on division, declared resolved in the affirmative 652

Private Bill—

(From the Senate)—First Reading—Relating to the Niagara and District Bank 653

FRIDAY, MARCH 12TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—Respecting the Canada Southern Railway—Mr. Macdougall (Elgin).. 653

REPORTING THE DEBATES—Motion for a Select Committee for next Session—Mr. Ross (Middlesex) 653

Intercolonial Railway Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 653

North West Territories Act Amendment Bill—

Motion for leave to introduce—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 653
After debate, leave granted, and Bill read the first time 662

NORTHERN RAILWAY—Motion for leave to introduce a Bill—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 662
After debate, motion withdrawn 663

Pacific Railway—

Motion for concurrence in estimate—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.. 663
On motion of Hon. Mr. Tupper, it was resolved that the debate be adjourned.. 687

Private Bills—

Third Readings—To Incorporate the Intelligencer Printing and Publishing Company ; Mr. Bowell. To Incorporate the Lower Ottawa Boom Company ; Mr. Currier 668
Second Readings—To Incorporate the Canada Land Investment and Guarantee Company ; and Respecting the Canada Guarantee Company ; Mr. Jetté. To Incorporate the Dominion Railways Equipment Company ; Mr. Blain. Relating to the Intercolonial Express Company ; Mr. Baby. Respecting the Canada Central Railway ; Mr. Buell. Respecting the Niagara District Bank —Mr. Plumb 668

Peterson Divorce Bill—

(From the Senate)—Motion for first Reading—Mr. Mac'ennan 687

Page

A division being taken, the motion was declared resolved in the affirmative, and Bill referred to a Special Committee—78 votes to 46 688

Northern Railway Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 693

Pacific Railway—

Resumption of the Debate on the motion of Hon. M. Mackenzie for concurrence in the Pacific Railway Estimate—Mr. White.. 693

Motion in Amendment to the motion for Concurrence—

That in view of the engagements entered into during the past year between the Government of Canada and the Imperial Government and British Columbia, to build a railroad without delay from Nanaimo to Esquimault, on Vancouver Island, and to expend not less than $2,000,000 per annum in British Columbia on the Canadian Pacific Railroad ; and to complete the construction of the line from the Pacific Ocean to the shore of Lake Superior in fifteen years ; this House is of opinion that no time should be lost in beginning the Eastern portion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and constructing it as rapidly as is consistent with a due regard to economy, from the point fixed by Parliament at or near to the South of Lake Nipissing westward to Lake Nepigon, and thence to Red River, commencing at Lake Nepigon and working Eastward and Westward ; and that the Government should employ the available funds of the Dominion in the first place for the completion of that great national work—a continuous railway on Canadian Territory by the shortest route from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.—(Hon. Mr. Tupper) 696

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —43 votes to 117 697

The question being put, it was moved in Amendment—

That this resolution be not now concurred in, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House no contract shall be entered into with any company for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch of the Pacific Railway, nor any subsidy granted for the construction of the Railway from the Eastern terminus of said Pacific Railway to Douglas or near Douglas, until a thorough and complete instrumental survey shall have been made of the route proposed, and the route of the Matawan, to ascertain which would be the shorter and more economical of construction—(Mr. Masson) .. 697

The Amendment was withdrawn, and the Estimate concurred in upon division 698

Canada Central Railway Subsidy—Motion—

That this House do ratify the Order in Council granting a subsidy to the Canada Central Railway under authority of the Act providing for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) 698

Motion in Amendment—

That the Order in Council be not ratified, but that (and so on, in terms of the Amendment just withdrawn)—(Mr. Masson).. 699

The House divided, when the Amendment was declared resolved in the negative —39 votes to 113 699

The resolution was then concurred in 699

Private Bills—

First Readings—To Incorporate the Western Insurance Company; and respecting the Canada Car Company—(From the Senate) 699

MONDAY, MARCH 15TH

Private Bills—

FIRST READINGS—Respecting the Mutual Insurance Company of Canada, Mr. Jetté. Respecting the St. Lawrence Steam Navigation Company; and to Incorporate the Quebec and Lake Huron Direct Railway Company; Mr. Caron 699

Dominion Lands in Manitoba

First Reading of Bill to Amend the Act respecting—Hon. Mr. Laird .. 699

Civil Service Superannuation Act Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 699

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

County Court Judges in Nova Scotia—

First Reading of Bill to provide salaries for—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 700

Insolvency Bill—

Report of Select Committee presented—Hon. Mr. Fournier 700

CHARGES OF MALPRACTICE—Question of Privilege—Mr. Burpee (Sunbury) .. 700

Private Bills—

Second Readings—To Incorporate the Metropolitan Insurance Company. To Incorporate the North Western Manufacturing Company. Respecting the Montreal, Sorel, and Chambly Railway. Respecting the Bridge over L'Assomption. Respecting the Western Assurance Company; and Respecting the Canada Car Manufacturing Company 703

Niagara International and Suspension Bridges—

Motion that Bill be read the second time—Mr. Moss 703

After short debate, motion agreed to 704

MIRAMICHI VALLEY RAILWAY—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 704

HARBOR OF LITTLE GLACE BAY—Question, Mr. McDonald, (Cape Breton); Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 704

THE PLIMSOLL BILL—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith.. 704

THE PROCEEDINGS AGAINST MR. HUOT—Question, Mr. Taschereau; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 704

HARBOR AU BOUCHE—Question, Mr. McIsaac; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 705

LEVIS CUSTOM HOUSE—Question, Mr. Fréchette; Answer, Hon. Mr. Burpee .. 705

TERMS OF UNION WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question, Mr. De Cosmos; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 705

PORT DARLINGTON HARBOR—Address to His Excellency for copies of papers relating to the survey of—Mr. Burk 705

HARBOR AND BREAKWATERS OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—Motion for copies of reports of Engineer in charge—Mr. Yeo 705

LIQUOR LICENSES IN NEW BRUNSWICK—Motion for copies of all decisions rendered by Supreme Court of New Brunswick with reference to jurisdiction of Local Government and Municipal authorities—Mr. Burpee (Sunbury) 705

PILOTAGE—Motion for copies of correspondence with Boards of Trade, etc.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell 705

SUBSIDY TO THE QUEBEC AND GULF PORTS COMPANY—Motion for copies of all papers relating to—Hon. Mr. Mitchell 705

DIRECT ROUTE BETWEEN CANADA AND EUROPE—Motion for reference of Report of the Select Committee of last Session to the Printing Committee—Hon. Mr. Robitaille 706

CHATHAM BRANCH RAILWAY—Motion for copies of all papers relating to—Hon. Mr. Mitchell 706

SECTION SIXTEEN, INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for statement in detail of all moneys paid out by Government in connection with, etc.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell 706

LUMBER EXPORTATION FROM CHICOUTIMI AND SAGUENAY—Motion for returns—Mr. Tremblay 706

MONTREAL HARBOR DUES—Motion for copies of instructions given to Collectors of Customs in Ontario to collect Montreal Harbor Dues, etc.—Mr. Wilkes .. 706

THE KITSON LINE—Motion for copies of Orders in Council granting powers to an American Company to trade on the Red River—Mr. Wilkes 706

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

THE WASHINGTON TREATY—Motion for copies of correspondence respecting entering of fish-oil and fish of British Columbia—Mr. De Cosmos 707

THE CASE OF ALEXANDER YOULL—Motion for a Select Committee to inquire into —Mr. Galbraith.. 707

INSTRUCTIONS TO POSTMASTERS—Motion for copies of—Mr. Bertram 707

INTER-PROVINCIAL TRADE—Motion for returns—Mr. Fleming 707

NEW BRUNSWICK SCHOOL LAW—Motion for copies of the despatch of 7th November, 1873, from the Imperial Government, relating to the decision of the Privy Council—Mr. Tremblay 707

APPOINTMENT OF J. A. HAMEL—Motion for copies of papers respecting—Mr. Cimon 707

MONTREAL REGISTRY DIVISION—Motion for copies of the Provincial Act relating to—Mr. Laflamme 707

LAW PURCHASE ACT OF 1874—Motion for copies of correspondence with the Government of Prince Edward Island—Mr. Perry 707

QUEBEC GRAVING DOCK—Motion for copies of correspondence and papers relating to the site—Hon. Mr. Robitaille 707

ORDNANCE LANDS AT FREDERICTON—Motion for copies of papers relating to the sale of—Mr. Domville 708

THE PLIMSOLL MOVEMENT—Motion for copies of correspondence with Imperial Government, etc.—Hon. Mr. Mitchell 708

GRAVING DOCK AT ESQUIMALT—Motion for copies of correspondence relating to—Mr. De Cosmos 708

PICTOU HARBOR—Motion for copies of correspondence relating to—Mr. Killam .. 708

Civil Servce Reform—Motion—

That the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution :—"That the present system of nominations to situations in the Civil Service is not the most convenient, nor the one best calculated to obtain efficient public officers ; that it would be expedient to substitute for it, as far as the exigencies of the service will allow, a system of open competitive examinations as a means of obtaining entrance to the public service—(Mr. Casey) 708

After debate, motion withdrawn 715

Prohibitory Liquor Law—Motion—

That the House go into Committee on Resolutions declaring the expediency of the total prohibition of the importation manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors—(Mr. Ross, Middlesex) 715

Motion in Amendment—

That all the words after "that" in the original resolution be left out, and that the following be inserted in lieu thereof :—Resolved, that in the opinion of this House a Prohibitory Liquor Law is the only effectual remedy for the evils of intemperance, and that it is the duty of the Government to submit such a measure for the approval of Parliament at the earliest movement practicable—(Mr. Schultz) 734

Motion that the debate be adjourned—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 735

After debate, the motion to adjourn the debate was resolved in the affirmative on a division 736

TUESDAY, MARCH 16TH.

Huron and Ontario Ship Canal—

First Reading of Bill respecting—Mr. Blain 736

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES—House in Committee of the Whole, and passed resolutions providing salaries for Lieut. Governor, Magistrates, &c., of the new Province—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 736

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Cask Marks Bill—

Read the second time, agreed to in Committee, read the third time, and passed 737

Inspection of Life Insurance Companies Bill—

Read the second time, passed through Committee, and reported—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 737

SALARIES OF SUPREME COURT JUDGES—House in Committee of the Whole, and passed resolutions providing salaries for the Judges of the Supreme Court .. 737

Supreme Court Bill—

Motion for second Reading—Hon. Mr. Fournier 737

After debate, motion agreed to 746

Motion—That the Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole to-morrow—Hon. Mr. Fournier 746

After debate, motion agreed to 756

QUEBEC TRINITY HOUSE—House in Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 756

Supervisor of Cullers Bill—

Motion for second reading—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 756

Motion in Amendment—

That the following Sections of the Bill be struck out, viz., Clauses 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 24, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35 and 40, together with all such parts of the Bill as are inconsistent with the provisions of the Act repealed—(Mr. Rochester) ..

Amendment negatived, and Bill passed and reported 759

Civil Service—

Bill—House in Committee on resolutions to increase the salaries of Civil Servants—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 759

After debate, resolutions adopted and reported 763

Common Carriers—

Second Reading of Bill—Mr. Irving 763

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 17TH.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY—Ministerial Explanation—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 763

THE DUTY ON TEA—Question, Mr. Donahue ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright .. 763

QUEBEC GRAVING DOCK—Question, Mr. Fréchette ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 764

ORDER OF MOTIONS—Question of Order—Hon. Mr. Holton 764

THE VETERANS OF 1812-14—Question, Mr. Delorme ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail .. 764

THE CASE OF MR. JUSTICE BOSSE—Question, Mr. Taschereau ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 764

ESCUMINAC LIGHT HOUSE—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith 765

WAY-OFFICE SYSTEM IN NOVA SCOTIA—Question, Mr. Borden ; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald 765

INDIAN VETERANS OF 1812-14—Question, Hon. Mr. Pope ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 765

BAYFIELD HARBOR—Question, Mr. McIsaac ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 765

LAND GRANTS TO VOLUNTEERS—Question, Sir John A. Macdonald ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 765

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Private Bills—

Second and third Readings—Respecting the European and North American Railway, and Relating to the Provincial Insurance Company of Canada .. 766

Second Readings—Respecting the Erie and Niagara Railway, and Respecting the Montreal Permanent Building Society 766

Peterson Divorce Bill—

Motion for second Reading—Mr. Maclennan 766

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day three months—(Mr. Taschereau) 766

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —72 votes to 84.. 767

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be referred back to the Committee for reconsideration—(Mr. Mac Millan)—Ruled out of Order 767

The question being on the original motion, the House divided, when the same was declared resolved in the affirmative—82 votes to 71.. 768

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—Motion for copies of correspondence relating to—Mr. Sinclair.. 768

LEASES OF WATER POWER ON RIDEAU CANAL—Motion for returns—Mr. Jones (Leeds) 769

LONDON EMIGRATION OFFICE—Motion for a return of expenses—Mr. Colby .. 770

Eastern Connection with the Pacific Railway—

Motion for copies of correspondence between the Dominion Government and the Government of the Province of Quebec—Mr. Masson 770

After debate, motion agreed to 772

WHITBY HARBOR—Motion for copies of the Report of Survey—Mr. Gordon .. 772

THURSDAY, MARCH 18TH.

THE LENGTH OF THE SESSION—Question, Hon. Mr. Holton; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 773

CANNED LOBSTERS—Violation of the Treaty of Washington—Mr. Jones (Halifax) 774

Insurance Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.. 775

Cullers of Timber Bill—

House in Committee on certain proposed amendments—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion .. 775

Controverted Elections Act Amendment—

House in Committee on Bill—Hon. Mr. Fournier 776

After short debate, Bill reported 777

Protection of Persons and Property on Railways—

Second and third Readings—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 777

Nova Scotia County Courts Bill—

Second and third Readings—Hon. Mr. Fournier.. 777

Copyrights Bill—

Motion for second Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 777

After debate, motion agreed to, Bill referred to Committee of the Whole, reported, read the third time, and passed 781

Page

Seamans' Act Amendment—

House in Committee, resolutions reported, and Bill founded thereon introduced and read the first time—Hon. Mr. Smith 782

Patent Act Amendment—

Bill Read the second time, and agreed to in Committee—Hon. Mr. Laird .. 782

Intercolonial Railway Bill—

Second and third Readings—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 783

Civil Service Superannuation Act Amendment—

House in Committee, Bill reported, read the third time, and passed—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 784

Insurance Bill—

Read the second time, referred to Committee of the Whole, and reported—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 784

On the motion for the third reading, moved in amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to so amend it as to provide that the same amount of security be deposited with the Receiver General for the protection of the public against Canadian Companies as is required to be deposited by foreign companies, viz., $100,000—(Mr. Oliver) 785

After debate, the amendment was negatived on a division, and the Bill read the third time, and passed 786

Northern Railway Bill—

Motion that the Bill be read the second time—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.. .. 786

After debate, the motion was carried on a division 792

Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway—

First Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 792

Manitoba Land Titles—

First Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Laird 793

Manitoba Act Amendment—

First Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Laird 793

Dominion Lands Act Extension—

First Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Laird 793

PAYMENTS TO JUDGES—Return to Address presented—Hon. Mr. Cartwright .. 793

PETITION OF THE MEMBER FOR VICTORIA (N. S.)—Motion that it be printed on the Orders of the Day—Hon. Mr. Blake 793

County Courts (NOVA SCOTIA)—

Bill read the second time and agreed to in Committee—Hon. Mr. Fournier .. 794

Patent Rights—

(Bill from the Senate)—First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.. 795

Pilotage Act Amendment—

Resolutions agreed to in Committee, and Bill founded thereon introduced and read the first time—Hon. Mr. Smith 795

Patent Act Amendment—

Third Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Laird 795

Page

Northern Railway Bill—

Motion, that the Bill be read the third time—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 795

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months—(Mr. McCallum) 796

Amendment declared resolved in the negative, on a division, and Bill read the third time, and passed 796

Controverted Elections Act Amendment—

House in Committee to consider Bill—Hon. Mr. Fournier 796

Motion, that certain clauses be added—Hon. Mr. Cameron (Cardwell) . . 796

After debate, the Bill was agreed to as amended, and reported 801

Distressed Mariners Act Amendment—

Bill agreed to in Committee and Reported—Hon. Mr. Smith 801

Private Bills—

Third Readings—Respecting the Montreal Board of Trade; to Incorporate the Levis Board of Trade; Respecting the Western Insurance Company; Respecting the Richelieu Company; Respecting the Canadian Navigation Company; to Incorporate the European and American Express Agency Company; and to Incorporate the Anglo-French Steamship Company 801

Second Readings—To Incorporate the Quebec and Lake Huron Direct Railway; and Respecting the Huron and Ontario Ship Canal 801

Peterson Divorce Bill—

Bill agreed to in Committee on Division—Mr. Maclennan 801

On the motion for the third reading, the House divided, when the same was resolved in the affirmative—81 votes to 61 802

SALARIES OF SUPREME COURT JUDGES—Report of Committee of the Whole on resolutions respecting received and concurred in—Hon. Mr. Fournier . 802

TRINITY HOUSE, QUEBEC—Report of Committee of the Whole on resolutions respecting received and concurred in—Hon. Mr. Smith 802

Suits against the Crown Bill—

Second Reading—Mr. Irving 802

Exchange and Promissory Notes Act Amendment Bill—

Second and third Readings—Hon. Mr. Cameron (Cardwell) 803

Protection of Life on Wharves—

Motion for second reading of Bill—Mr. Irving 803

Ruled out of Order 803

Summary Trials—

Bill read the second time, agreed to in Committee, and reported—Mr. Irving . . 803

DOMINION NOTE CIRCULATION—Motion for a Select Committee withdrawn—Mr. Wilkes 803

CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE—Motion for the House to go into Committee on resolutions withdrawn—Mr. Mills 804

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Prohibitory Liquor Law—

On the order to resume consideration of the motion of Mr. Ross (Middlesex) for a Committee of the Whole to consider a series of resolutions, and the motion of Mr. Schultz in amendment thereto—

Motion in amendment to the Amendment—

That all the words after "that" in the Amendment be struck out, and that the following be substituted—"That this House do forthwith resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the means best calculated to diminish the evils of intemperance"—(Mr. Oliver) 804

The amendment to the Amendment was carried on division, and it was thereupon resolved that the amendment as amended stand part of the question. The question being on the original motion, the same as amended was resolved in the affirmative 804

The House being in Committee of the Whole, motion made—

That having regard to the beneficial effects arising from a Prohibitory Liquor Law in the States of the American Union in which the same is fully carried out, the House is of opinion that the most effectual remedy of the evils of intemperance is to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating liquors—(Mr. Ross, Middlesex) .. 804

Motion in amendment—

That the following words be added to the resolutions :—And that it is the duty of the Government to prepare a measure at as early a day as possible to carry the principles of prohibition into effect—(Mr. Bowell) 804

Motion in amendment to the amendment—

That the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. Which on division was agreed to—(Hon. Mr. Holton) 804

Suppression of Gaming Houses Bill—

Second Reading—Mr. Moss 804

HOMESTEAD RIGHTS AND WOOD LOTS IN MANITOBA—Questions, Mr. Ryan and Mr. Schultz ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird 806

PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAW—Omission in official report 806

Railway Properties Bill—

First Reading—Mr. Jetté 807

PETITION OF THE MEMBER FOR VICTORIA (N. S.)—Question of Privilege—Hon. Mr. Blake 807

NORFOLK COUNTY COURT—Question, Mr. Charlton ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 809

Insolvency Bill—

House in Committee on—Hon. Mr. Fournier 809

After long debate, the Committee rose and reported the first clause without amendment 833

Quebec Trinity House Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Smith 833

Harbor Masters' Act Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Smith 833

Certificates of Masters (Inland Waters)—

First Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 833

Criminal Law Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Fournier 833

PETITION OF THE MEMBER FOR VICTORIA (N. S.)—Question of Privilege—Hon. Mr. Blake 833

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Private Bills—

Third Readings—To Incorporate the Royal Mutual Assurance Company of Canada ; Mr. Jetté. To Incorporate the National Insurance Company ; Mr. Desjardins. Respecting the Great Western Railway Company ; Mr. Moss. To Incorporate the Canadian Steam Users' Association ; Mr. Maclennan .. 834

Second Readings—Respecting the Mutual Insurance Company of Canada ; Mr. Jetté. Respecting the St. Lawrence Steam Navigation Company ; Mr. Caron 834

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—Question, Mr. Perry ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 834

GAS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS—Question, Mr. Charlton ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 834

STEAM DREDGE AT LINGAN HARBOR—Question, Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 835

DREDGING THE ST. CROIX—Question, Mr. Gillmor ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 835

THE VETERANS OF 1812-14—Question, Mr. Brouse ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail .. 835

Commercial Reciprocity with the United States—

Resumption of the discussion on motion for correspondence—Mr. Plumb .. 835

After debate, motion agreed to 842

TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE HAWAIIAN KINGDOM—Motion—

That in view of extending the commerce of the Dominion on the Pacific, it is desirable that the Government take into consideration the advisableness of securing a Commercial Treaty between Canada and the Hawaiian Kingdom, similar to the Treaty negotiated between that Kingdom and the United States—(Mr. De Cosmos) .. 842

STEEL RAILS FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Question, Mr. Palmer ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 843

International Arbitration—

Motion for an Address to Her Majesty praying

That she will be graciously pleased to cause her principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to enter into negotiations with Foreign Powers with a view to further improvement in International Law, and the establishment of a general and permanent system of International Arbitration—(Hon. Mr. Cameron, South Ontario) 843

Motion in Amendment—

That all the words after "that" in the original motion to be left out, and the following inserted :—"This House will at all times be ready to give its best consideration to any practical legislation that may tend to promote international intercourse, and thus, by establishing a community of interest between Canada and foreign States, secure the maintenance of peace—(Mr. Dymond) 856

After debate, both motion and amendment were withdrawn 858

DIVORCE COURT—Motion—

That the practice of granting divorces by Act of Parliament is, for many reasons, objectionable, and that relief in all matters matrimonial would be best secured by creating a Court in each of the Provinces with exclusive jurisdiction in matters matrimonial ; and with authority in certain cases to decree a dissolution of marriage—(Mr. De Cosmos) 858

Motion in Amendment—

That all divorce Courts existing in the Dominion be abolished—(Mr. Bechard) .. 859

The amendment having been withdrawn, the House divided, when the original motion was declared resolved in the negative—5 votes to 134 861

TUESDAY, MARCH 23RD.

Quebec Graving Dock—

First Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 861

NEW BRUNSWICK SCHOOL LAW—Question of Privilege—Mr. Devlin 861

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

REPORT OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—Question of Privilege—Mr. Domville 864

Culling of Timber—

Motion for third reading—Hon. Mr. Geoffrion 867

Bill recommitted to insert the word "fees" after "salaries" in the 6th clause, and erasing all the clause after the word "proper"—Mr. Macdougall (Renfrew).. 868

On the third reading being again moved, motion in amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike the word salaries in the 6th clause—(Mr. Currier) 869

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time and passed 869

Salaries of County Court Judges (Nova Scotia)

Third Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Fournier. 869

Sick and Distressed Mariners—

Third Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 869

Dominion Lands in Manitoba—

Second Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Laird 869

Masters and Mates of Ships (Inland Waters)—

Second Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 869

Letters Patent Act Amendment—

(Bill from the Senate)—Second and third readings—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 869

Speedy Trials (Manitoba)—

(Bill from the Senate)—Second reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 869

Marine Electric Telegraphs Bill—

(Amendments from the Senate)—Motion for second reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 870

Motion in amendment to add the following words to the amendment made to the 14th Section :—

"Giving notice at the same time that said other Company has stipulated with the Government that the rates for the transmission of messages will not be greater than those charged at the date of said notice by the existing companies"—(Mr. Bowell) .. 871

Amendment ruled out of order 871

Motion in amendment to the amendments made to clause 14—

"That the word 'three' before the word 'months' be struck out, and 'twelve' be substituted therefor"—(Hon. Mr. Tupper) 871

Amendment negatived on a division, and original motion agreed to 873

Controverted Elections Act Amendment—

Third Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Fournier 873

Shipmasters' Certificates—

Second Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 873

Pilotage Act Amendment—

Second and third readings of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 873

Insolvency Bill—

House in Committee upon—Hon. Mr. Fournier.. 874

After discussion, the Committee rose and reported the Bill with several amendments 881

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 24TH.

Fisheries Act Amendment—

First Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 881

Larceny Act Amendment Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Fournier 881

EXPORT DUTY ON OAK LOGS—House in Committee on resolutions—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 881

Resolution concurred in and reported 886

Government Railways Bill—

First Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 886

SOREL CUSTOM HOUSE—Question, Mr. Barthe ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 886

WAY-OFFICE AT LAKE SETTLEMENT—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 887

IMPORT DUTY ON FLOUR—Question, Mr. Fraser ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 887

DREDGING HARBORS—Question, Mr. McDonald (Cape Breton) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 887

Agricultural Interests of the Dominion—

Motion for a Special Committee—Mr. Orton 887

After discussion, the debate was adjourned 893

Private Bills—

Third Readings—Respecting the International Express Company ; and to incorporate the Metropolitan Insurance Company of Canada 893

L'Assomption Bridge Bill—

Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole upon—Mr. Baby .. 893

After debate, motion agreed to 896

Northern Railway (Private Bill)—

Third Reading—Mr. Cockburn 896

Montreal, Chambly and Sorel Railway (Private Bill)—

Third Reading—Mr. Jetté 896

Canada Central Railway Bill—

Third Reading 896

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT—Observations—Mr. Jones (Halifax) 896

THE VETERANS OF 1812-14—Question, Mr. Brouse ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail .. 897

Gaming Houses—

Third Reading of Bill—Mr. Moss 898

Speedy Trials—

Third Reading of Bill—Mr. Macdougall (Elgin) 898

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals while in Transit—

Third Reading of Bill—Mr. Charlton 898

Returns from Railway Companies—

Third Reading of Bill—Mr. Irving 898

Interest and Usury in New Brunswick—

Third Reading of Bill—Mr. Palmer 898

Page

Suits against the Crown Bill—

Third Reading—Mr. Irving 898

Criminal Law Amendment Act Repeal Bill—

Motion for second reading—Mr. Irving 898

After discussion, the debate was adjourned 904

Inspection of Fish Bill—

Second Reading—Mr. Forbes 904

THURSDAY, MARCH 25TH.

Quebec Graving Dock—

Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 905

After debate, motion agreed to 907

Insolvency Bill—

House in Committee for the purpose of making certain amendments to several clauses—Hon. Mr. Fournier 907

Amendments reported, and motion made that the Bill be read the third time .. 907

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of substituting the following for the first clause :—" This Act shall apply to all debtors, and to all copartnerships and companies, whether incoporated banks, insurance, railway and telegraph companies, and debts incurred by breaches of trust."—(Mr. Bowell) ... 908

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —41 votes to 119 909

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to add to the end of the third section the following words :—" Et les dettes dues par un failli, aux personnes du présent Acte, ne seront pas non plus comprises dans la décharge accordée à tel failli, mais ce dernier votera, nonobstant cette décharge, responsable du paiement de toute partie de pareille dette qui n'aura pas été payée à ces personnes ne réputées commerçants, à même les dividend déclarés sur les biens du failli en vertu du présent Acte."—(M. Bourassa) .. 909

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —62 votes to 99.. 910

Moved in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending the first clause by adding the words "lumbermen, millmen, contractors and fishermen."—(Hon. Mr. Mitchell) 910

Amendment negatived on a division 910

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of striking out the 58th clause, which makes it a condition that if a dividend is less than 33 per cent., a discharge may be refused.—(Mr. Colby) 910

After debate, the amendment was declared resolved in the negative on a division 914

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend it in such a way as to provide that all debts due by an insolvent to such persons as farmers, graziers, or common laborers, who are excepted from the operations of this Act, be considered preferential.—(Mr. Bechard) 914

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —56 votes to 83.. 915

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the 58th Section by striking out " 33 " and inserting " 10 " in place thereof.—(Mr. Colby) 915

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —44 votes to 116 917

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that the further consideration thereof be postponed to this day three months.—(Mr. Palmer.) 917

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —41 votes to 115 920

Motion in Amendment—

That when it is proved that the insolvent has lived more extravagantly than his station and condition in life justify, be shall be liable to a term of imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years.—(Mr. Metcalfe)— 920

The Amendment was negatived on a division 920

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding certain resolutions, respecting Official Assignees.—(Mr. Barthe).. 920

Amendment ruled out of order 921

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out words in different clauses, so as to exempt British Columbia from the operations of the Act.—(Mr. Thompson, Cariboo) 921

Amendment lost on division 921

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to add the words "Building Societies" after the words "Telegraph Companies" in the first clause.—(Mr. Mousseau) 921

Amendment lost 921

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee with instructions to strike out the word "Master" where it occurs in the first clause in connection with the word "Quarryman" —(Mr. Goudge.) 921

Amendment agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed 921

Supreme Court Bill—

Motion that the House go into committee to consider—Hon. Mr. Fournier .. 921

Motion in Amendment—

That (for certain reasons set forth) the proposed establishment of the said Supreme Court and Court of Exchequer is not now desirable, and would not justify the considerable expense which they would entail upon the country, and the costs, frequently ruinous, which suitors amenable to their jurdisdiction would have to incur.—(Mr. Baby.) .. 928

Debate, on motion of Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, adjourned 928

SATURDAY, MARCH 29TH.

Criminal Law Amendment Act—

Amendment Bill—First Reading of—Hon. Mr. Fournier 928

Cape Race Light House—

House in Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions ; resolutions adopted, and Bill founded thereon introduced and read the first time—Hon. Mr. Smith 928

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES—Message from His Excellency transmitting, which. on motion, was referred to Committee of Supply 928

ACTS OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES.—Address for copies of Orders in Council relating to the allowance or disallowance of—Sir John A. Macdonald .. 928

THE COASTING TRADE.—House in Committee, and agreed to certain resolutions upon which Bill was founded and read the first time—Hon. Mr. Smith .. 928

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

THE PLIMSOLL BILL.—Observations—Mr. Goudge 929

Foreign Enlistment Bill—
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Fournier 929

Dominion Lands (Manitoba) Act—
Amendment Bill—Third Reading of—Hon. Mr. Laird 930

Harbour Masters' Act—
Second Reading of Amendment Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 930

Manitoba Land Claims Bill—
Second and third readings—Hon. Mr. Laird 930

Dominion Lands Act Extension Bill—
Second and third readings—Hon. Mr. Laird 931

Government of Manitoba Act—
Second Reading of Amendment Bill—Hon. Mr. Laird 931

Supreme Court Bill—
Resumption of the debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Fournier that the House go into Committee, and the amendment of Mr. Baby thereto—Mr. Langlois 932

After debate, the House divided, when the amendment of Mr. Baby was declared resolved in the negative—28 votes to 113 941

Motion in Amendment—
That the Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that (for reasons set forth) it be resolved that it is not expedient to have a Court of Appellate Jurisdiction in cases involving questions of property, civil rights, and civil procedure—(Mr. Ouimet) 942

The amendment, being out of order, was withdrawn, and the original motion agreed to 942

Bill reported, with amendments 944

MONDAY, MARCH 29TH.

Duty on Stave Bolts and Oak Logs Repeal Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 944

Appointment of Harbour Masters—
Second Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 944

Quebec Trinity House—
Motion for second reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 945
Motion agreed to, and Bill referred to Committee 946

Quebec Graving Dock—
Second and third readings of Bill—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 948

Cape Race Light House—
Second Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 948

Masters and Mates of Ships (Inland Waters)—
Second and Third Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 948

Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway—
Motion for second reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 949

Page

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be read the second time this day three months.—(Mr. Wallace, Norfolk) 960

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —62 votes to 101 961

House then went into Committee on the Bill, which after debate, was reported 966

Motion—That the Bill be read the third time—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 966

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to add the following words to the 8th sub-section of the third clause :—" Provided always that any such contract shall have the previous approval of Parliament."—(Hon. Mr. Tupper) 966

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —64 votes to 91.. 966

THE LATE SPEAKER—Question of Privilege—Hon. Mr. Tupper 967

Supreme Court—

Bill referred to Committee of the Whole, and reported with amendments—Hon. Mr. Fournier 967

Private Bills—

Third Readings—Respecting the Niagara District Bank ; To Incorporate the Canada Land Investment Guarantee Company ; To Incorporate the Pictou Iron and Coal Company ; To Incorporate a Company to construct a certain portion of the Pacific Railway ; Respecting the International Bridge Company 967

TUESDAY, MARCH 30TH.

Private Bill—

First Reading—To Incorporate the Canadian Timber and Lumber Association —Mr. Wright (Ottawa) 967

Appointment of Harbour Masters Act Amendment—

Third Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 968

Supreme Court—

Motion that the Bill be read the third time—Hon. Mr. Fournier 968

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months—(Mr. White) 968

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —38 votes to 121 969

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend it so as to exclude from the appellate jurisdiction given to the Supreme Court of Canada all cases involving questions relating to property and civil procedure—(Mr. Ouimet) 969

Motion in Amendment to the Amendment—

That all the words after "House" be struck out, and the following substituted : To amend the same by striking out all provisions conferring upon the said Supreme Court appellate Jurisdiction in suits arising under Provincial Law, and within the Legislative jurisdiction of the Provinces, so as to make the proposed court a general Court of Appeal for Canada solely—(Mr. Taschereau) 969

Page

The House divided, when the amendment to the amendment was declared resolved in the negative—40 votes to 118—The amendment being negatived on the same division 970

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, to be amended by adding the following words after the word "Court" in the 18th line of the 4th section of the said Bill :—Two of whom, at least, shall be taken from the Judges of the Superior Court or Court of Queen's Bench, or from amongst the Barristers or Advocates, of the Province of Quebec."—(Mr. Laflamme) 970

After debate, the amendment was agreed to, and adopted in Committee .. 973

Motion in Amendment to the main motion—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions so to amend the 7th Section as to provide that the salaries of the Chief Justice and Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court shall be $7,000 per year for such Chief Justice, and $6,000 per year for each Puisne Judge of said Court, instead of $8,000 and $7,000 respectively.—(Mr. Palmer) 973

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —49 votes to 99.. 974

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to insert in the Bill, in the 40th Section, the following words :—"No error or appeal shall be brought from any judgment or order of any Court of any of the Provinces, subsequent to the commencement of the said Act, to Her Majesty in Council, but every decree and order of all Courts of final resort within the several Provinces, in respect of any subject-matter or proceeding wherein any appeal now lies from any such Courts to Her Majesty in Council, shall and may be appealed to the Supreme Court.—(Mr. Irving) 974

Amendment declared negatived on a division 974

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of inserting a provision that at least one of the Judges shall selected from the bench or bar of British Columbia.—(Mr. Bunster).. .. 974

Motion declared negatived on a division 974

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, to reconsider the 68th and 69th Sections, with instructions to strike out the enactment which provides that issues of fact in cases arising under the 63rd Section of the Bill shall be tried by the Judge without a jury, and to insert a provision for the summoning of jurors by the Sheriff or Coroner, according to the laws of the Province in which the Sheriff and Coroner are officers—(Mr. Irving) 975

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —10 votes to 123 976

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to insert the following section :—"The judgment of the Supreme Court shall in all cases be final and conclusive, and no error or appeal shall be brought from any judgment or order of the Supreme Court to any Court of Appeal established by the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, to which appeals or petitions to Her Majesty in Council may be ordered to be heard, saving any right which Her Majesty may be graciously pleased to exercise as Her Royal Prerogative.—(Mr. Irving) 976

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the affirmative —112 votes to 40 980

The Amendment was referred to Committee, where it was agreed to. On the motion for concurrence, Motion in Amendment, that the clause as amended be not concurred in, which was declared negatived on division—Mr. Mousseau 983

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

On the motion that the Bill be read the third time—

Motion in Amendment, that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to make certain amendments—Mr. Mousseau 983

Amendment declared negatived on division 984

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the 17th Section by substituting $2,000 for $1,000.—(Mr. Laflamme) 984

Amendment agreed to, and referred to Committee, where it was concurred in .. 985

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to substitute for section 83 the following :—This Act or any part thereof shall take effect and be exercised only at and after such time or times as shall be appointed by proclamation under order of the Governor-in-Council, but no such proclamation shall take place nor be issued in any case unless and until this Act is adopted and approved of by the Legislature of each Province of the Dominion.—(Mr. Mousseau) 985

Amendment negatived on division 985

Motion in Amendment—

That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole to be so amended as to confer upon the Supreme Court Appellate Jurisdiction in Admiralty cases.—(Mr. Mills) .. 985

Amendment withdrawn 986

Motion—"That the question be now put;" which was withdrawn after short discussion—Mr. Gordon 986

Motion in Amendment to motion for third reading—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to insert the following provisions :—"This Act or any part thereof shall take effect and be exercised only and after such time or times as shall be appointed by proclamation under order of Governor-in-Council, but in so far as this Act concerns the Province of Quebec no such proclamation shall take effect unless and until this Act is adopted and approved by the Legislature of the Province of Quebec as to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in cases relating to property and civil rights and civil procedure in the said Province of Quebec.—(Mr. Mousseau) 986

The House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative —20 votes to 106 987

Bill read the third time and passed 987

WELLAND CANAL—Motion that House go into Committee of Supply—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 987

Motion in Amendment—

That the Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House it is desirable that steps should be taken to ascertain the feasibility and cost of adapting the Welland Canal to vessels drawing fourteen feet of water before the Government is irrevocably committed to plans involving a less depth—(Hon. Mr. Holton) 987

Amendment permitted to be declared lost on a division 989

IN COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE 989

PENITENTIARIES OF MANITOBA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA 990

MONTREAL VOLUNTEERS 991

DRILL SHEDS AND RIFLE RANGES 992

BARRACKS AT FORT PELLY 992

MISSIONS TO THE CREE AND BLACKFEET INDIANS 994

INDIAN CLAIMS 995

REIMBURSEMENT OF MR. D. A. SMITH, M. P., for money advanced by him during the Red River Rebellion 996

Page

Motion—That the item be struck out of the Estimates—Mr. Ross (Prince Edward) 996

The Committee divided, when the motion was negatived by 18 votes to 49 .. 1001

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31ST.

HARBOR MASTER FOR THREE RIVERS—Question, Mr. Barthe ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith 1001

JUDGE OF THE COUNTY OF NORFOLK—Question, Mr. Wallace ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1002

PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAW—Question, Mr. Wallace ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1002

RECIPROCITY WITH THE UNITED STATES—Question, Mr. Wallace ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1002

THE TARIFF—Question, Mr. Wallace ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1002

SOREL HARBOR MASTER—Question, Mr. Caron ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith .. 1002

TERMS OF UNION WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA—Question, Mr. De Cosmos ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1002

DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL ACTS—Question, Mr. De Cosmos ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier 1003

HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S CLAIMS—Question, Mr. Schultz ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1003

GEOLOGICAL MUSEUM—Question, Mr. Goudge ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie .. 1003

PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEYS—Question, Mr. Thompson, (Cariboo) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1003

REPORTS OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY—Question, Mr. Thompson, (Cariboo) ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1003

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions—Hon. Mr. Blake.. 1003

After debate, the motion was withdrawn 1010

COMMERCIAL RECIPROCITY WITH THE UNITED STATES—Motion for a statement of expenses incurred in furtherance of the recent negotiations—Mr. Plumb .. 1010

PACIFIC RAILWAY TELEGRAPH—Motion for copies of specifications, contracts, and correspondence—Hon. Mr. Tupper 1011

Motion in Amendment—And this House regrets that contracts have been made by the Government for the construction of a line of telegraph from Lake Superior to Cache Creek before the location of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been determined upon—Mr. Bowell 1013

After debate it being six o'clock, the motion was dropped.. 1015

Private Bills—

Third Readings—Respecting L'Assomption River Bridge ; Respecting the Canada Car Company ; To Incorporate the Quebec and Lake Huron Railway Company ; Respecting the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway ; To Incorporate the Dominion Railways Equipment Company ; Respecting the St. Lawrence Steam Company ; Respecting the Huron and Ontario Ship Canal .. 1015

SHORTEST ROUTE TO EUROPE—Dissent from Report of Committee—Mr. Gillmor 1016

Suits against the Crown—

Third Reading of Bill—Mr. Irving 1016

Inspection Bill—

Third Reading—Mr. Forbes 1016

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Page

Railway Act (1868)—
Amendment Bill—Second Reading of—Mr. Jetté 1016
COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY—PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITION 1017
TORONTO HARBOR 1020
BAIE DES CHALEURS FISHERIES 1022
INDIAN SCHOOLS 1024

THURSDAY, APRIL 1ST.

Quebec Trinity House—
Third Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 1027

Railway Act Amendment—
Motion that the Bill be read the second time—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1028
After debate the motion was agreed to and Bill read the second time .. 1029
Referred to Committee of the Whole and reported 1033

North West Territories—
Second Reading of Bill—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1033

Cape Race Light House—
Second and third readings of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 1035

Coasting Trade Act—
Amendment Bill—Second and third readings of—Hon. Mr. Smith .. 1035

Criminal Law Amendment Act—
Amendment Bill—Second and third readings of—Hon. Mr. Fournier .. 1036

Fisheries Act—
Second and third readings of Bill—Hon. Mr. Smith 1036
CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLY—
MONTREAL VOLUNTEERS 1037
PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND STEAMBOAT SERVICE 1037
TREATY PAYMENTS TO INDIANS 1037
INDEMNITY TO R. S. M. BOUCHETTE 1038
On the motion that the item be concurred in the House divided, when the motion was declared resolved in the affirmative—95 votes to 50 1041
INDEMNITY TO MR. D. A. SMITH, M. P.—Motion that the resolution be concurred in 1041
Motion in amendment—
That this item providing for $3,562.50 to be paid to Mr. D. A. Smith, M. P., in settlement of the amount advanced by him on the 6th February 1872—being £600, together with the interest thereon, be not concurred in, the said sum of £600 having been applied to a purpose of which this House cannot approve—(Mr. White) 1041
After debate, the House divided, when the amendment was declared resolved in the negative—27 votes to 89 1045
Motion for concurrence agreed to 1046
INDEMNITY FOR SERVICES DURING THE NORTH-WEST TROUBLES 1046

Private Bill—
Third Reading—Respecting the Northern Colonization Railway Company .. 1047

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	Page
OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES—Motion for the adoption of the Report of the Printing Committee thereon—Mr. Ross (Middlesex)	1047
Motion agreed to	1048
THE POSTAL SERVICE—Motion for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General—Hon. D. A. Macdonald	1048
Railway Act Amendment Bill—
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1048
North West Bill—
Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1049
Supply Bill—
First Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright	1049
Duty on Stave Bolts and Oak Logs Repeal Bill—
Second and third readings—Hon. Mr. Carwright..	1049
Continuation of Acts Bill—
Second and third readings—Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1050
Larceny Act Amendment Bill—
Second and third readings—Hon. Mr. Fournier	1050
PACIFIC RAILWAY TELEGRAPH—Resumption of the debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Tupper for copies of all specifications and contracts for the construction of a Pacific Railway Telegraph, with all correspondence relating thereto ; and the motion of Mr. Bowell in amendment to the same—Mr. Kirkpatrick ..	1050
Motion in Amendment to the Amendment—
That the following words be added :—"Contrary to the statute authorizing the construction of the said Telegraph line, and therefore this House does not approve of the said contracts—(Mr. Kirkpatrick)	1050
The House divided, when the amendment to the amendment was declared resolved in the negative—48 votes to 101	1051
Mr. Bowell's amendment was declared lost on the same division and the original motion agreed to	1051
PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAW—Motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider resolutions—Mr. Ross (Middlesex)	1051
The House being in Committee, after debate the resolutions were agreed to ..	1059
On the motion that the report be received—Motion in amendment—
That the report be not now received, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding the following words :—"That it is the duty of the Government to prepare a measure at as an early a day as possible to carry the principle of Prohibition into effect—(Mr. Bowell)	1059
Amendment ruled out of order and report received	1060
THE NORTH-WEST TROUBLES—Question of Privilege—Mr. D. A. Smith ..	1060
After debate, subject dropped	1072
ANNUAL SUBSIDY TO MANITOBA—Question, Mr. Bowell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1072
MERCHANT SHIPPING (IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT) BILL—Observations—Hon. Mr. Mitchell	1072
SATURDAY, APRIL 3RD.
AMENDMENTS TO BILLS BY THE SENATE—Question of order—Mr. Speaker ..	1072

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Supply Bill—

Second Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright 1073

PACIFIC RAILWAY CONTRACTS—Motion—

That the House do now ratify the contracts laid on the table, proposed to be entered into with Messrs. Sifton & Ward, for the construction of that portion of the Pacific Railway between Cross Lake and Red River, about 77 miles in length, at a cost of $402,950, the said parties having been the lowest tenderers willing to proceed with the work, and furnishing the required security, (which motion was agreed to without discussion)—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) 1073

Also moved—

That the House do ratify the contract laid on the table, proposed to be entered into with Messrs. Sifton & Ward, for the construction of that portion of the Pacific Railway extending from Fort William to Shebandowan, a distance of about 45 miles, at a cost of $406,194, the said parties having been the lowest tenderers willing to proceed with the work, and furnishing the required security—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) .. 1074

To which it was moved in amendment—

"That the consideration of the approval of the said contracts be postponed to this day three months."—(Hon. Mr. Tupper).. 1074

The amendment was declared lost on a division, and the original motion carried 1075

Motion—

That the Government be authorized to enter into a contract during the recess with the parties sending in the lowest available tender for the construction of that portion of the Pacific Railway extending from Rat Portage to Cross Lake, a distance of about 37 miles—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie) 1075

Motion agreed to 1076

NORTH-WEST TROUBLES—Personal Explanation—Mr. D. A. Smith . .. 1076

After discussion, subject dropped 1079

THE PLIMSOLL BILL—Question, Mr. Palmer ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith .. 1079

THE MILITIA—Question, Mr. Caron ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Vail 1079

PACIFIC RAILWAY TELEGRAPH—Question, Mr. Schultz ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1079

SALE OF ORDNANCE LANDS—Question, Mr. Cuthbert ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird.. 1079

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS—Motion, That the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions respecting—Mr. Young 1079

MONDAY, APRIL 5TH.

LOBBYING IN THE SENATE—Question of Privilege—Sir John A. Macdonald .. 1080

PRINTED REPORTS OF DEPARTMENTS 1080

GOVERNMENT LANDS IN THE NORTH-WEST—Question, Mr. Archibald ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie 1081

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS—House in Committee on resolutions—Mr. Young.. 1082

After debate, resolutions adopted, and Address to Her Majesty founded thereon. Ordered, that the said Address be engrossed, and an Address presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying him to lay the Address to Her Majesty at the foot of the Throne 1087

Supply Bill—

Third Reading—Hon. Mr. Cartwright.. 1087

TUESDAY, APRIL 6TH.

WAY OFFICES—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper ; Answer, Hon. D. A. Macdonald .. 1087

RULES OF THE HOUSE—Sir John A. Macdonald 1088

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	Page
MANITOBA LANDS—Motion for return (which was not pressed)—Mr. Schultz ..	1088
TRIAL OF LÉPINE—Motion for correspondence and papers connected with—Mr. Schultz.	1088
DUTIES ON TEA—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright ..	1088
DUTY ON FISH—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Smith ..	1089
Insolvency Bill—
Consideration of amendments made thereto by the Senate..	1089
DUTIES ON TEA—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Cartwright ..	1089
THE GASPÉ ELECTION TRIAL—Question, Mr. Taschereau ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Fournier	1089
THE MIRAMICHI BRIDGES—Question, Hon. Mr. Mitchell ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1090
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7TH.
ESQUIMAULT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY—Question, Mr. De Cosmos ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1090
THURSDAY, APRIL 8TH.
HALF-BREED'S LANDS—Question, Mr. D. A. Smith ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Laird ..	1090
EASTERN TERMINUS OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Question, Mr. Wright (Pontiac); Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1091
THE CANADA CENTRAL RAILWAY—Question, Hon. Mr. Tupper ; Answer, Hon. Mr. Mackenzie	1091
Message from His Excellency, by the Usher of the Black Rod, calling the Members to the Bar of the Senate	1091
Bills sanctioned by His Excellency	1091
Speech from the Throne . - - .. - ..	1094
Prorogation of Parliament .. .. - - - -	1095

CANADA.

DEBATES of the HOUSE of COMMONS,

FOR THE SECOND SESSION OF THE THIRD PARLIAMENT OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA, CALLED FOR THE DESPATCH OF BUSINESS ON THE 4TH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1875.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, February 4th, 1875.

The Parliament which had been prorogued from the Twenty-fifth of May, 1874, and thence from time to time to the Fourth day of February, 1875, met this day for despatch of business, at 3 o'clock.

A Message from His Excellency the Governor General, by Réné Kimber, Esquire, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:—

"Mr. SPEAKER,

"His Excellency the Governor-General commands this Honorable House to attend immediately in the Chamber of the Senate."

Accordingly Mr. SPEAKER, with the House, went up to attend His Excellency, and having returned:—

CERTIFICATES AND REPORTS FROM JUDGES, RELATING TO ELECTIONS.

Mr. SPEAKER acquainted the House that he had received from the Judges selected for the trial of election petitions, pursuant to the Controverted Elections Act, 1873, certificates and reports relating to the elections for the electoral districts of Essex, Lincoln, Cornwall, Renfrew South, Addington, Argenteuil, Renfrew North, Northumberland West, Montreal West, Montreal Centre, Northumberland East, Richmond and Wolfe, Joliette, Norfolk South, Wellington Centre, Leeds and Grenville North, Colchester, Victoria North, Simcoe North, Niagara, L'Assomption, Kingston, Chambly, Toronto East, Halton, Middlesex East, London, Huron South, and Two Mountains; in each of which cases the sitting member was unseated.

Mr. SPEAKER said—In conformity with section 24 of the said Act, I issued my several warrants to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, to make out new writs of election for the said elective districts respectively.

Mr. SPEAKER also informed the House that he had received from the Hon. Chief Justice WOOD, one of the Judges selected for the trial of Election petitions, a certificate and report of the Election for the Electoral District of Marquette, and, in conformity with section twenty-four of the Controverted Elections Act 1873, had issued his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, directing him to alter the return for the said District, dated February 17, 1874, by expunging the name of ROBERT CUNNINGHAM therefrom, and substituting that of JOSEPH RYAN as the member duly elected; and the Clerk of the House read a report from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, certifying that these instructions had been carried out.

Mr. SPEAKER announced that in the following Controverted Election cases the sitting members had been declared duly elected: Levis, Cumberland, Cardwell, Pictou, L'Islet, and Hants.

Mr. SPEAKER further reported that he had received from the Hon. Mr. Justice WILSON, a certificate and report in reference to the election for the South Riding of the County of Renfrew declaring the same void ; and that he had issued his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to make out a new writ of Election for the said Electoral District.

NOTIFICATIONS OF VACANCIES.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received the following notifications of vacancies, which had occurred in the representation, viz : of the Hon. A. A. DORION, member for Napierville, by acceptance of the office of Chief Justice for the Province of Quebec ; of the Hon. F. GEOFFRION, member for Vercheres, by acceptance of the office of Minister of Inland Revenue ; of WILLIAM HARVEY, Esq., member for Elgin East, by decease ; of E. R. OAKES, Esq., member for Digby, by resignation ; and of the Hon. WILLIAM ROSS, member for Victoria, N. S., by acceptance of Collector of Customs at the Port of Halifax. Warrants for new elections in these respective Districts had accordingly been ordered to be issued.

NEW MEMBERS.

Mr. SPEAKER further informed the House that the Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificates of the election and return of the following members, viz. : Hon. F. GEOFFRION, for Vercheres ; SIXTE COUPAL dit LA REINE, Esq., for Napierville ; COLIN MACDOUGALL, Esq., for Elgin East ; LOUIS RIEL, Esq., for Provencher ; JOHN L. MACDOUGALL, Esq., for Renfrew South ; A. F. MACDONALD, Esq., for Cornwall ; Hon. W. B. VAIL, for Digby ; WILLIAM MURRAY, Esq., for Renfrew North ; SCHUYLER SHIBLEY, Esq., for Addington ; WILLIAM MCGREGOR, Esq., for Essex ; LEMUEL CUSHING, Jr., Esq., for Argenteuil ; JAMES NORRIS, Esq., for Lincoln ; WILLIAM KERR, Esq., for Northumberland West ; L. F. G. BABY, Esq., for Joliette : Hon. HENRY AYLMER, Jr., for Richmond and Wolfe ; F. MACKENZIE, Esq., for Montreal West ; J. B. PLUMB, Esq., for Niagara ; C. F. FERGUSON, Esq., for Leeds and Grenville North ; THOMAS MCKAY, Esq., for Colchester ; JAMES MACLENNAN, Esq., for Victoria North ; WILLIAM WALLACE, Esq., for Norfolk South ; Right Hon. SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD, K.C.B., for Kingston ; C. J. CAMPBELL, Esq., for Victoria, N.S. ; AMABLE JODOIN, Jr., Esq., for Chambly ; G. T. ORTON, Esq., for Wellington Centre ; H. H. COOK, Esq., for Simcoe North ; BERNARD DEVLIN, Esq., for Montreal Centre ; H. HURTEAU, Esq., for L'Assomption ; SAMUEL PLATT, Esq., for Toronto East, and WILLIAM MCCRANEY, Esq., for Halton.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Mr. SPEAKER reported the House had this day attended His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in the Chamber of the Senate, when His Excellency was pleased to make a most gracious speech from the Throne, of which he had, for greater accuracy, obtained a copy, as follows :—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I have much satisfaction in meeting you at this early and convenient season.

I have to congratulate you upon the organization of the North West Police Force, and the success of its operations. It has materially aided in the creation of confidence and good will among the Indian tribes ; in the suppression of the liquor traffic ; the establishment of legitimate trade ; the collection of Customs duties ; and, above all, in maintaining security for life and property within the Territory. Another effect of the presence of the Police in the North West has been to enable the Government to largely reduce the strength of the Military establishment in that country.

The negotiation of a friendly Treaty with the Crees and Sauteux of the North West for the cession of territory may be regarded as a further guarantee for the continuation of amicable relations with the Indian tribes of that vast region.

During the past summer I had the pleasure and advantage of visiting a very large portion of the Province of Ontario, including the whole coast of Georgian Bay and Lake Superior. This official tour enabled me to form a better idea of the great extent of the comparatively well-settled country and of that which is still almost wholly undeveloped. I was everywhere received with the kindest welcome, and was much gratified in witnessing the enterprise, contentment, and loyalty manifested in every quarter.

Your attention will be invited to a measure for the creation of a Supreme Court. The necessity for such a measure has yearly become more and more apparent since the organization of the Dominion; it is essential to our system of jurisprudence and to the settlement of constitutional questions.

You will also be invited to consider a Bill relating to the important subject of Insolvency.

Measures will be submitted to you, providing for the reorganization of the Government of the North West, and the consolidation of the laws relating to that country; for a general Insurance law; and on the subject of Copyright.

Gratifying progress has been made in the survey of the Canada Pacific Railway route. Measures have been taken to secure the early construction of the Georgian Bay branch, and to provide a connection with the eastern railway system. The report of the surveys of the road from Lake Superior to Fort Garry, which will be ready in a few days, will afford information upon which tenders may be invited for the construction of the eastern and western portions of that section, so as to reach the navigable waters of the interior.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

The accounts of the past year will be laid before you. The estimates for the present financial year will also be submitted; they will, I believe, be found to have been framed with every regard to economy, consistent with efficiency in the public service.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am happy to believe that notwithstanding the general and wide-spread commercial depression which has prevailed over the continent, the trade of Canada is sound, and that the contraction we have experienced in some branches of industry for the past year has not been greater than might naturally have been anticipated.

Papers will be submitted to you on the North West troubles, and in reference to the negociations between the Dominion Government and the Government of British Columbia on the subject of the Pacific Railway.

Steps have been taken during the recess for a combination of effort on the part of the several Provinces and the Dominion, to promote immigration from Europe under the general direction of the Dominion officials. It is hoped that the effect will be increased efficiency and economy in this branch of the public service.

Mr. Speaker,

I rely with confidence on your prudence and ability, and on your patriotic devotion to the great public interests entrusted to you; and I pray that the Divine blessing may rest upon your labors.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, it was resolved that the Speech of His Excellency be taken into consideration tomorrow.

PRINTING OF VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, it was resolved that the Votes and Proceedings of the House be printed, being first perused by Mr. SPEAKER, and that he do appoint the printing thereof; and that no person but such as he shall appoint do presume to print the same.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, it was resolved that Select Standing Committees of this House for the present Session be appointed for the following purposes:—

1. On Privileges and Elections. 2. On Expiring Laws. 3. On Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines. 4. On Miscellaneous Private Bills. 5. On Standing Orders. 6. On Printing. 7. On Public Accounts. 8. On Banking and Commerce. 9. On Immigration and Colonization,—which said Committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House; and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

OATHS OF OFFICE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE introduced a Bill respecting the administration of oaths of office. Read a first time.

CONTESTED RETURNS AND CORRUPT PRACTICES.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE it was resolved,

1. That if anything shall come in question touching the return or election of any member, he is to withdraw during the time the matter is in debate, and all members returned upon double returns are to withdraw until their returns are determined.

2. That if it shall appear that any person hath been elected or returned a member of this House, or hath endeavored so to be by bribery or any other corrupt practices, this House will proceed with the utmost severity against all such persons as shall have been wilfully concerned in such bribery or other corrupt practices.

3. That the offer of any money or other advantage to any member of the House of Commons for the promoting of any matter whatsoever depending, or to be transacted in the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, is a high crime and misdemeanour and tends to the subversion of the Constitution.

REPORT ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE presented the report of the Minister of Public Works.

THE PARLIAMENTARY LIBRARY.

Mr. SPEAKER presented the report of the Librarian on the state of the Library of Parliament.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, the House adjourned, at 4.20 p.m.

——:++:——

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, February 5th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

THE HANSARD REPORTS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said, as the House was aware, arrangements were made during last session for reporting the debates of the House, and it was proposed in the report of the Committee which had the matter in charge, that another Standing Committee should be appointed to revise and manage the reporting. It had now become necessary to take immediate action in reference to the form of printing and other matters of detail, that he need scarcely enumerate to the House, and he was himself convinced that the business would be better managed by a Standing Committee than by a Special Committee. He, therefore, moved that the management of the Hansard reports be entrusted to the Joint Committee on Printing, and until the Committee was organized, the Chairman add Clerk of the Committee during last session be authorized to act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD desired, while the present motion was before the House, to call attention to the position occupied by the reporters, especially those on the Hansard. He was afraid the members of the Opposition would suffer by existing arrangements, and if they could do nothing by their votes they could do something by their voices. It had been suggested that some arrangements should be made for the construction of a separate gallery for the reporters for the Hansard somewhere near the Bar, where they would be able to hear the speaking and make the permanent report, to be quoted hereafter historically and for all Parliamentary purposes, without their being mixed up with reporters who were in the gallery for another useful, but very different purpose. He hoped the leader of the Government would endeavor, if possible, to have another Reporters' Gallery constructed as near the Bar as possible or have the Hansard reporters placed on the floor of the House, so that the reports might be well, fully and accurately taken.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there could be no objection to any arrangement proposed in that regard, especially as the leader of the Opposition had intimated that he intended to confine himself to speaking and not voting. The proposition to have a gallery placed over the door was one that he thought could scarcely be entertained without disfiguring the internal appearance of the House, and in any case it was impossible to erect any such gallery within two or three weeks, which would be at all creditable. The suggestion for the erection of an additional gallery was made a few days before the meeting of the House, but he had no hesitation in condemning the proposed arrangement as one utterly untenable. It would have involved the exclusion of the present occupants from the Speaker's gallery, and besides it would have been impossible to have obtained architectural consistency. Personally, he had no objection to reporters having access to the floor of the House, but, although no formal vote was taken, a similar proposal was decided adverseby on a former occasion. If the House was now of opinion that a table might be placed on the floor of the Chamber, and the reporters brought in, he, personally, had no objection to it. Any expressions of opinion by members on the matter would be very welcome. He had requested the Sergeant-at-Arms in the meantime to have at least two seats on each side of the gallery to be reserved for the official reporters, or as many seats as they should require, the remainder of the seats to be placed at the disposal of the leading daily papers. That was the temporary arrangement made, but if it was thought better to have the official reporters placed on the floor of the House, he would acquiesce in the arrangement.

Mr. JAMES YOUNG said he agreed with the view expressed that the erection of another gallery would not contribute to the appearance of the Chamber. At the same time, it was well known that it was exceedingly difficult for reporters to hear the debates in the present gallery. It was highly important that there should be more accommodation provided, not only in the interest of those who were going to take part in reporting for the Hansard, but also for the representatives of the daily press, who were very much crowded under the present arrangement. He was, moreover, convinced that in the present gallery the reporters for the Hansard would not be able to do as much justice to the debates as they would be able to do if placed in a different position. He saw no objection to lengthening the Clerk's table four feet and having the Hansard reporters seated there. That was the course pursued at Washington, and he understood that no practical difficulty arose from the reporters passing in and out from the Chamber every half hour. If that plan were adopted here, it would not practically inconvenience the House, while it would afford the reporters a better chance to make the Hansard a creditable report, and give sufficient room in the present gallery for the representatives of the daily press, throughout the country.

Mr. CAUCHON suggested that a semi-circular table be placed on the floor of the House for the accommodation of the Hansard reporters.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said it was an established rule that no one should be on the floor of the House except officers of the House; but he had no objection to a table being placed there for the accommodation of the Hansard reporters, until some other arrangement of a permanent character could be carried out, when the table could be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he thought the expression of opinion was at present favorable to the introduction of the Hansard reporters on the floor of the House, and at all events it could be tried as an experiment, and he would see before Monday that the necessary arrangements were made.

The motion was adopted.

REPORT OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION presented the report of the Minister of Internal Revenue.

THE ADDRESS.

In rising to move the Address, Mr. FRECHETTE said—Pour la première fois que j'ai l'honneur de prendre la parole devant cette Honorable Chambre, l'on me permettra sans doute de le faire dans ma langue maternelle. Il est assez rare que nous entendions une voix française s'élever dans cette assemblée, la nécessité, forçant presque toujours mes compatriotes de même origine que moi à parler un language qui n'est pas le nôtre, pour mieux être compris de tout le monde. Cependant le droit que avons de parler ici la langue de nos ancêtres est un privilége trop sacré, pour qu'il ne soit pas opportun pour nous de l'affirmer quelquefois. Au reste, si notre langue peut être considérée comme l'une des plus belles parts de l'héritage que nous ont laissé ceux qui nous ont précédés, le droit que nous avons d'en faire usage dans cette enceinte parlementaire fait autant d'honneur à l'esprit de libéralisme de ceux qui nous l'ont maintenu, qu'à l'énergie et au patriotisme de ceux qui nous l'ont conquis, (app.)

C'est avec un vif plaisir, M. l'ORATEUR, que j'ai accepté l'invitation qui m'a été faite de proposer l'adresse à Son Excellence en réponse au Discours du Trône. En me rendant à cette invitation, je trouve l'occasion d'affirmer une fois de plus, et plus solennellement que jamais, la confiance que j'ai depuis longtemps fait reposer dans les hommes qui dirigent en ce moment les destinées du pays, et je la saisis avec empressement. Depuis quelques mois seulement qu'ils ont en mains les rênes de l'administration, les ministres actuels ont déjà accompli les principales réformes qu'ils avaient si longtemps préconisées lorsqu'ils occupaient les banquettes de l'Opposition. (appl.)

Le terrain des réformes est un terrain scabreux, M. l'ORATEUR; et il est toujours dangereux de s'y aventurer imprudemment; voilà pourquoi l'on a si souvent vudes ministres répudier, une fois au pouvoir, ce qu'ils avaient prêché dans l'Opposition : brûler ce qu'ils avaient adoré et adoré ce qu'ils avaient brûlé.

Il n'en a pas été de même des ministres actuels, M. l'ORATEUR. Ils avaient à peine pris place aux bancs du trésor, qu'ils ont mis les principaux articles de leur programme à exécution. Ils n'ont pas craint de l'aborder hardiment ce terrain scabreux des réformes. Forts de leurs convictions, et appuyés comme jamais administration ne l'a encore été, en ce pays, par l'opinion publique, ils ont courageusement mis la main à l'œuvre. Ils sont entrés, pour ainsi dire, la hache à la main dans la forêt des abus, et aujourd'hui il n'est qu'une voix, je puis le dire, parmi tous les véritables amis de l'ordre public, pour les féliciter du succès constant qui s'attache à leurs efforts. (Appl). Admirable souplesse de notre constitution qui se prête à tous les progrés suggérés par l'expérience, et qui rend si faciles toutes les révolutions pacifiques nécessitées par les conquêtes de l'esprit humain !

Mais, M. l'ORATEUR, quels que soient le nombre et l'importance des réformes opérées jusqu'ici, notre législation n'est pas encore parfaite. De graves questions d'intérêt public sont encore la qui demandent une solution prochaine, et il nous reste encore à mettre en opération l'un des rouages les plus considérables de notre organisation judiciaire. L'esprit public attend avec impatience ce complément ou plutôt ce couronnement de la politique inaugurée par la présente administration. Ce ne sont plus des attermoiments ni des subterfuges qu'il nous faut. La politique d'expédients a fait son temps. Or nos ministres ont compris ce que l'on attendait d'eux ; et c'est avec la plus vive satisfaction que le public a dû lire, dans le discours prononcé hier par Son Excellence, l'exposé si clair et si précis des mesures que le gouvernement a l'intention de soumettre aux Chambres pendant la présente session, et de la ligne de conduite sage et progressive qu'il entend suivre jusqu'à la session prochaine.

Cet exposé, M. l'ORATEUR, même si l'on en retranche ce qui a rapport aux mesures si désirables qu'il nous annonce, respire tant de franchise, tant de droiture d'intention, et un si sincère désir de donner satisfaction à l'opinion publique, que le peuple de ce pays ne peut manquer d'en faire contraster la tournure si nette et si claire avec la forme louche et tortueuse qu'assument souvent les documents de ce genre, même dans les pays les mieux gouvernés, et d'en donner crédit à nos administrateurs. Le pays attendait beaucoup : on lui promet beaucoup. Et cela, sans ambages, sans échappatoires, sans faux-fuyants ; avec cette même honnêteté qui a présidé jusqu'ici à l'administration des affaires publiques, depuis l'avénement du parti de la Réforme.

Les principales mesures sur lesquelles Son Excellence attire l'attention des deux branches de notre législature sont la création de la Cour Suprême, une loi de faillite, la réorganisation du gouvernement du Nord-Ouest, la consolidation des lois de ce territoire, une loi générale d'assurance, et une autre pour la protection des droits d'auteurs.

La plus importante de toutes ces mesures est, sans contredit, la création de cette Cour Suprême que l'on nous promet depuis si longtemps. Le besoin d'un haut tribunal prononçant en dernier ressort sur toutes les contestations judiciaires, et auquel les questions constitutionnelles pourront être soumises, se fait sentir depuis bien des années, et même dès avant l'établissement de notre système politique actuel. Le droit d'appel au Conseil Privé de Sa Majesté n'a pas donné toute la satisfaction qu'il nous laissait d'abord entrevoir. A part l'inconvénient qu'il avait d'entrainer les plaideurs dans des frais et des retards considérables, il avait en outre celui bien autrement grave de subordonner l'action de nos tribunaux à une Cour de Justice certainement inférieure à eux sous bien des rapports. Loin de moi, M. l'ORATEUR, l'intention de révoquer en doute le savoir ou l'impartialité des Honorables Conseillers Privés de Sa Majesté ; mais une chose ne peut faire de doute pour personne, c'est que les juges de notre pays doivent nécessairement être plus compétents pour prononcer sur nos intérêts en litige, que des juges plus ou moins étrangers à nos lois, à nos mœurs et à nos coutumes, quelles que soient leur science et leur bonne volonté. De sorte que, M. l'ORATEUR, quand même l'établissement d'une Cour Suprême ne serait point absolument nécessaire aux intérêts généraux du pays, comme tribunal constitutionnel, les intérêts particuliers le demandent d'une manière pressante. Ce sera le couronnement de notre édifice judiciaire. La nation canadienne a laissée tomber ses langes ; à peine sent-elle la lisière que tient encore en mains la mère-patrie ; donnons à ses institutions tout le perfectionnement et tout le développement possible, si nous voulons qu'elle soit prête, lorsque l'heure de la virilité sonnera pour elle. (Appl.)

Quand à la loi de faillite, je n'en dirai rien. Son utilité est constatée par tous ; et cette Honorable Chambre se rappelle sans doute encore les judicieuses remarques que faisait à ce sujet l'Honorable député de Toronto-Ouest, à pareille époque et en pareille circonstance, l'année dernière. Les événements ont retardé jusqu'ici l'adoption de cette importante mesure : espérons que ce retard n'aura servi qu'à la rendre plus parfaite, et que la présente session n'apportera aucun obstacle à son adoption finale.

On ne peut pas s'attendre, M. l'ORATEUR, à ce que j'entre dans les détails des différentes mesures auxquelles il est fait allusion dans le Discours du Trône. Je me contenterai d'en constater l'importance, et de féliciter le gouvernement d'en avoir compris toute l'opportunité, et de ne pas avoir reculé devant la tâche. Un mot seulement de la loi qu'on nous annonce relativement à la protection des droits d'auteurs. La carrière littéraire est encore fort restreinte dans notre pays, M. l'ORATEUR ; mais si petit que soit le nombre de nos écrivains, ils ont droit à la protection des lois. Les travaux de l'esprit ont leur noblesse et leur poids, et les fruits de l'intelligence sont une propriété aussi sacrée que tout autre, et qui a le droit d'être respectée et protégée comme tout autre.

Au nom des lettres donc ; au nom de tous ceux qui vivent de leur plume, ou qui, par amour de l'art, se livrent au noble travail de la pensée, je remercie le gouvernement de l'initiative qu'il prend aujourd'hui sur cette question.

Nous devons aussi féliciter le gouvernement sur la politique large et généreuse qu'il a suivie jusqu'ici dans l'administration des affaires publiques en général. Aucun interêt n'a été négligé. Les grandes entreprises publiques ont reçu une impulsion d'autant plus sûre et d'autant plus durable, qu'elle est sagement proportionnée aux besoins et aux ressources du pays.

L'immigration a reçu aussi toute l'attention qu'elle mérite. De concerts avec les gouvernments locaux des différentes provinces de la confédération, le gouvernement fédéral a pris des mesures pour donner le plus de développement possible à cette importante branche de notre administration. Non seulement on s'est occupé d'attirer sur nos bords le trop plein des populations européennes ; mais, ce qui est beaucoup plus important encore, on s'est attaché tout particulièrement à trouver les moyens de retenir chez nous ces nombreux émigrants qui, chaque année, passent la frontière en si grand nombre, pour aller demander du pain à la république voisine. Bien plus, M. l'ORATEUR, je constate avec plaisir que nous ne sommes plus au temps où nos frères émigrés aux Etats-Unis étaient considérés comme une population abâtardie et indigne de tout intérêt ; au temps où l'un de nos hommes d'Etat pouvait s'écrier impunément dans cette même enceinte parlementaire : " Ils s'en vont, tant mieux : cela fera de la place pour d'autres ! " Le gouvernement d'aujourd'hui a énergiquement répudié cette malheureuse parole, M. l'ORATEUR ; (App.) et les mesures qu'il prend aujourd'hui nous font espérer qu'il viendra un jour où tous les enfants du sol aujourd'hui dispersés ça et là dans l'Union Américaine ; où toute la grande famille canadienne se trouvera réunie de nouveau sous un même drapeau national pour travailler d'un commun accord au bonheur de la patrie commune. (App.) C'est le but patriotique où tendent les efforts de nos administrateurs. Qu'ils persistent dans la voie où ils sont entrés ; et ce but, ils l'atteindront, en s'assurant pour jamais la reconnaissance de tout un peuple que les circonstances on forcé d'aller vivre en exil.

Un autre bon point en faveur du gouvernement, c'est le zèle plein de philanthropie qu'ils ont déployé dans l'administration des affaires du Nord-Ouest, Le mal était pressant, M. l'ORATEUR. Dans ces immenses territoires où la civilisation a à peine pénétré, les meurtres et le brigandage régnaient sans contrainte, depuis quelques années surtout. Le traffic de l'alcohol était devenu une plaie terrible parmi les Indiens, et les assassinats se multipliaient par centaines, malgré les efforts incessants des missionnaires de toutes les croyances.

Aujourd'hui les choses sont changées. Des corps de police ont été envoyés jusqu'au pied des montagnes rocheuses ; et pendant que ces troupes maintiennent l'ordre et la paix parmi les tribus sauvages, protégent les missionnaires, répriment la contrebande, défendent la vie et la propriété des colons, des magistrats sont là pour mettre à exécution les lois du pays, et pour punir les prévaricateurs. Instruits de ces intentions pacifiques, les Indiens ont reçu nos envoyés de la manière la plus cordiale ; et nous pouvons constater aujourd'hui avec bonheur que le territoire du Nord Ouest jusqu'à présent plus ou moins voué au brigandage et à l'anarchie entre en pleine voie de civilisation, surtout depuis la signature du traité du Lac Qu'Appelle auquel Son Excellence a fait allusion dans le Discours du Trône, et qui met sous le contrôle direct du gouvernment un territoire de 75,000 milles quarrés.

Voilà, M. l'ORATEUR, où conduit une politique sage et honnête, une politique qui met les intérêts généraux du pays au-dessus des intérêts du parti et des ambitions personnelles des gouvernants.

Il est une question, M. l'ORATEUR, à laquelle je ne puis me dispenser de toucher avant de terminer les quelques remarques que j'ai l'honneur de faire à cette Honorable Chambre, question qui, depuis quelque temps sutout, a eu le privilége d'intéresser à un haut dégré l'opinion publique. Je veux parler des troubles de Manitoba et des graves conséquences qu'ils ont entraînées.

Cette question, M. l'ORATEUR, et des plus délicates, en ce sens qu'elle est généralement envisagée à des points de vue diametralement opposés par certaines portions condérables de notre population. Les esprits se sont passionnés de part et d'autres : on a fait des appels imprudents aux préjugés nationaux et religieux, sans autre résultat que celui de rendre la solution du problème de plus en plus difficile.

Son Excellence nous annonce dans le Discours du Trône que des documents relatifs à cette question vont prochainement être soumis à cette Honorable Chambre. Ces documents sont-ils de nature à compliquer la question ou à hâter sa solution, nous n'en savons rien. Espérons néanmoins que le pays saura bientôt à quoi s'en tenir, et que les hommes modérés de tous les partis réussiront à s'entendre de façon à maintenir la paix, l'harmonie et la bonne entente parmi les divers éléments qui composent notre population, (App.) Les idées de conciliation prévaudront, j'en suis sûr ; et bientôt, je l'espère, des bords du Pacifique jusqu'aux Provinces du golfe, l'esprit de concorde et d'union règnera sans partage. Nous ne serons plus des Français, des Anglais, des Ecossais ou des Irlandais, nous serons des Canadiens. Nous ne formerons plus qu'une seule et grande nation au patriotisme vivace et aux nobles aspirations, travaillant comme un seul homme à la prospérité commune, et marchant d'un même pas vers un avenir plein de grandeur et de fécondité.

Notre pays grandit et progresse rapidement. Comme l'a dit, hier, Son Excellence, notre commerce ne s'est aucunement ressenti de la terrible crise financière par laquelle viennent de passer nos voisins qui avaient jusqu'ici étonné le monde par leur prodigieuse prospérité. Sachons être à la hauteur des circonstances ; montrons-nous les dignes enfants d'un pays si plein de ressources et de promesses ; et ne laissons pas germer chez nous ces divisions intestinés qui sont le caractère distinctif des peuples en décadence ?

J'ai donc l'honneur M. l'ORATEUR de proposer l'adresse qui est maintenant devant cette Chambre.

Mr. FRECHETTE concluded by moving the following resolutions :—

1. That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, to thank His Excellency for his gracious Speech at the opening of the present Session ; and further to assure His Excellency,—

2. That we are grateful to His Excellency for having convoked Parliament at this early and convenient season.

3. That we rejoice to learn that the organization of the North-West Police Force has materially aided in the creation of confidence and good will among the Indian tribes; in the suppression of the liquor traffic ; the establishment of legitimate trade ; the Collection of Customs duties ; in maintaining security for life and property within the Territory ; and which has enabled the Government to largely reduce the strength of the Military establishment in the North-West.

4. That we regard the negotiation of a friendly Treaty with the Crees and Saueteux of the North-West for the cession of the territory as a further guarantee for the continuation of amicable relations with the Indian tribes of that vast region.

5. That we learn with much satisfaction that during the past summer His Excellency had the pleasure and advantage of visiting a very large portion of the Province of Ontario, including the whole coast of the Georgian Bay and Lake Superior ; that this official tour enabled His Excellency to form a better idea of the great extent of the comparatively well-settled country, and of that which is still almost wholly undeveloped ; and that His Excellency was everywhere received with the kindest welcome, and was much gratified in witnessing the enterprise, contentment, and loyalty manifested in every quarter.

6. That we are gratified by the announcement that our attention will be invited to a measure for the creation of a Supreme Court; the necessity for such a measure having yearly become more and more apparent since the organization of the Dominion; it being essential to our system of jurisprudence and to the settlement of constitutional questions.

7. That we are glad to be informed that we shall be invited to consider a bill relating to the important subject of Insolvency.

8. That our best attention will be given to any measures which may be submitted to us providing for the reorganization of the government of the North-West and the consolidation of the laws relating to that country; for a general Insurance law; and on the subject of Copyright.

9. That it is gratifying to be informed that considerable progress has been made in the survey of the Canada Pacific Railway route, and that measures have been taken to secure the early construction of the Georgian Bay branch, and to provide a connection with the eastern railway system; and we feel satisfaction in learning that the report of the surveys of the road from Lake Superior to Fort Garry, which will be ready in a few days, will afford information upon which tenders may be invited for the construction of the eastern and western portions of that section, so as to reach the navigable waters of the interior.

10. That we thank His Excellency for the assurance that the accounts of the past year, and the estimates for the present financial year, will be laid before us, and that the estimates have been framed with every regard to economy, consistent with efficiency in the public service.

11. That we are gratified in sharing His Excellency's belief that notwithstanding the general and wide-spread commercial depression which has prevailed over the continent, the trade of Canada is sound, and that the contraction we have experienced in some branches of industry for the past year has not been greater than might naturally have been anticipated.

12. That we shall be glad to receive the papers to be submitted to us concerning the North-West troubles, and the negotiations between the Dominion Government and the Government of British Columbia on the subject of the Pacific Railway.

13. That we learn with satisfaction that steps have been taken during the recess for a combination of efforts on the part of the several Provinces and the Dominion, to promote immigration from Europe under the general direction of the Dominion officials, and we share in the hope that the effect will be increased efficiency and economy in this branch of the public service.

14. That we assure His Excellency that our best endeavors will be used to justify His Excellency's expression of confidence in our prudence and ability, and in our patriotic devotion to the great public interests confided to us; and we join with His Excellency in the prayer that the Divine blessing may rest upon our labors.

Mr. COLIN McDOUGALL, in seconding the address, craved the indulgence of the House, while, for a few minutes, he directed their attention to the topics adverted to in the Speech from the Throne, more especially as he was in the somewhat embarrassing position of being called on to address the House for the first time. The Address noticed in the first place the convenient season of the year at which Parliament was summoned, and he believed it would not be disputed that the present was a time when members generally could most conveniently leave their private business. Not that he wished it to be understood that they were unmindful of the obligations that rested upon them as public men, or that they should not be ready at all times when called upon to discharge those public duties which devolved upon them; still it was more convenient for them to leave their private duties at some seasons of the year than others, and it was a matter of satisfaction that the Government had selected the present period for calling Parliament together. It must be a source of gratification to the people of this country—he believed he could speak with a considerable degree of assurance on that point—to know that the organization of the North-west police had had the excellent effect of suppressing the ruinous traffic in intoxicating drinks among the Indians—a traffic that was not only ruinous to the red man, but to a large portion of the human race. That our police in the North-west—a detachment of our army, so to speak—had been so successful in suppressing this traffic and in reducing disorder to order was a matter of which the whole country might well be proud. In connection with this subject it was also gratifying to notice that the negotiations of a treaty with the Indians of our North-west had been so happily consummated. It would enable us to invite immigration to that extensive country, and to give assurance to intending settlers there that they would not be subject to any disturbance from the Indians but that the most cordial good feeling existed between them and their white brethren. The Address next referred to the prospect of a measure being introduced for the establishment of a Supreme Court. That was a subject which had engaged the attention of the House on previous occasions, and no one could doubt its vast importance. Laws were a dead letter unless there were courts to give effect to them, and, in his humble judgment, such a court as the one proposed was much needed in a country under a constitution like ours. Our Federal and Local Legislatures had separate and distinct functions and jurisdictions, and it was necessary to have a Supreme Court to define the limits of the respective jurisdictions, so that on the one hand the rights of this Parliament might not be invaded, and on the other the rights of the Local Legislatures might be respected. Another subject that the attention of the House was directed to in the Address was one that was surrounded with a very great deal of difficulty. He referred to the subject of insolvency. In his opinion some bankrupt law was absolutely necessary in this country. The measure that had been in force for a number of years was by no means perfect, nor could anything else be expected, seeing that it was only by experience of the working of a measure like this, involving so many practical details, that a satisfactory measure could be framed. Profiting by the experience of the past, he had no doubt that the present law could be amended to the great advantage of the whole community. No one could dispute the proposition that an insolvent law should, if possible, protect the honest trader who falls under misfortunes, by circumstances beyond his control, and should allow him the opportunity of making a fresh start, unencumbered with previous obligations; but, on the other hand, the law should be so framed as not to afford protection to the dishonest trader. On the contrary the trader who dishonourably attempted to get rid of his obligations by going into insolvency should be subject to punishment. The present law, in his opinion, was more expensive than there was any occasion for, and he believed, in the light of past experience, a cheaper mode of dealing with insolvent estates might be devised. Another topic to which their attention was directed was that of the Canada Pacific Railway. It was a very great enterprise, and probably would not for many years be a commercial success, though it was to be hoped it would ultimately become so, but it was a national enterprise calculated to bind the people of this whole Dominion together, and make them feel that they were one people. He was glad to know that this great undertaking was being prosecuted with vigor by the present administration, and he hoped that they would receive a liberal and generous support from this House in this important work, so long as they carried it on consistently with the interests and resources of the country. This great enterprise would be the means of still better opening up of the great North-west country that is going to make us a great nation. A vast country was there open for settlement, and no better means for settling it, no better means for developing its resources could be devised than the construction of this road. It would enable us to throw emigration into the North-West, and while we were doing so, and settling it up, we were creating business for the country, and thereby increasing the general welfare of the Dominion. The binding together of this great Confederation by that iron band would not only have the effect of bringing us together more closely, so far as distance was concerned, but it would have the effect of bringing us together socially. It was his desire to see this country prosper, to see it a great country, not to see any question of sectionalism arise, but that harmony should prevail to make us all feel that we had an interest in the prosperity of our land, and in the promotion of the welfare of our people. In the carrying on of any great enterprise, no matter whether it happens to be in the Province to which we belong, or is situated in another province, the settlement of our Great West should be in our hearts, and should give us a national feeling and make us proud of the country in which we live—the country which is ours—that we may be more closely bound together, and feel that we have a destiny which will make us one of the greatest countries in the world while it belongs to the British Empire, of which it is one of the greatest dependencies. He was sure all would agree with him that no event had occurred in many years that had given as much satisfaction as the visit of His Excellency the GOVERNOR GENERAL. While we have had the pleasure of seeing and hearing him; while we have had the pleasure of paying our respects to him as the representative of HER MAJESTY we, at the same time, had the pleasure of listening to his eloquence; of seeing evidences of his great learning; of seeing manifestations of his great ability, and, at the same time, we have had the pleasure in this country of showing to him that although we are many miles distant from our parent land, although many of us have not had the privilege of seeing the land of our fathers, yet that our hearts beat right loyally to the British Crown; that we have an attachment to the land of our fathers; and he (Mr. McDOUGALL), as a Canadian, was proud of having had the opportunity of paying his respects, of showing his allegiance to the representative of HER MAJESTY, and of showing to him at the same time the deep attachment we have for British institutions, and the loyal and lasting devotion that we have to the British Crown. His Excellency has likewise had an opportunity of seeing the working of our institutions —institutions that were created by our Canadian statesmen, he was proud to say. He has had the opportunity of seeing the working of our Municipal institutions, the opportunity—to a limited extent probably —but still an opportunity of seeing the working of our educational institutions. These were all the creatures, so to speak, of Canadian Statesmanship, and the evidence he then received, and that he has no doubt borne home to England, will have the effect of impressing the Mother Country with a strong belief that the newer Britain is not unworthy of the parent stem from which it has sprung. Another question, which was one that a new country like ours is worthy of the most serious consideration, is immigration. He was glad to know that this Government had taken a very active part in this direction, and that they had done, were still doing, and promised to do all that they possibly could towards bringing into this country a healthy immigration. He wished to see people of every clime and country, come to us and see our country filled up, and when they did come here, he wished them to feel that they had a home among us, that there shall be no discrimination as to creed or nationality, that they will find here equal rights for all, to feel that they are Canadians, to feel that when they are here they will become citizens of the country and part of its people. After all what is a country made of? It is made of people. If we have no people we have no country, and to make a country we must have people; we must have people to come here. We have people now, no doubt, but we must throw open the doors and say to the nations of the world come to us, here is a country in which you may make a home. We ask them to come here not as strangers or sojourners in the land, but to become citizens of the Dominion and to help us build up a great nationality. Now, with regard to the difficulty in the relations between the Dominion and British Columbia, he was glad to see they were happily dissipated, and he had no doubt that the administration of the day would do what they possibly could —and had done so—to satisfy the people of that remote Province, that we, in the most central part are willing and anxious to aid and assist them in every possible way to give them such facilities as they require for attaining a way to the Atlantic seaboard. The question of the North-West troubles was one that was surrounded by no small difficulties. It was one that he did not propose at this time to discuss at any great length, but he hoped a solution would be found. He had no doubt that the good nature, good judgment and liberality of this House would enable us to work out such a solution as would not be derogatory to us as a people; that while there would be a vindication of the law, still, at the same time, there would be such a course adopted, as would give general satisfaction to all, and that would secure permanent peace hereafter, and that would have the effect, in the course of time, of stopping any ill-feeling, or any of those disturbing causes that sometimes distract and rend in pieces a nation. Before sitting down he would take the liberty of congratulating the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches on the popularity of their administration as evidenced by the elections during the recent recess. He believed that with very few exceptions indeed—and there had been a good many elections during the recess—the administration had been sustained. In some cases, it was true, opponents of the Administration had been elected. Some, under the Controverted Elections Act, had to go before their constituents again, and though some, who were opponents of the Government were able to get back again, yet they had been returned with their respective majorities very much reduced. It must be a matter of congratulation to the members of the Administration to know that while their policy had been before the country, and every opportunity had been afforded the people to criticise and discuss it, that appeal after appeal to the constituencies that were vacant had been successful with so very few exceptions, and this should be an encouragement to them to persevere in well doing. Notwithstanding the fact that they had the confidence of the country and the hearty support of the people, they were, at the same time, notified that they must be ever vigilant in discharging their duties—that they were custodians of the people's interests, and that if they would retain the confidence of the people they must continue to be the exponents of their views. They must remember that so soon as they forfeit that confidence, it would be withdrawn from them. And he thought under our system of free institutions it was well the voice of the people should be so strongly felt. It had a healthy effect on the members of the House and on the proper working of our institutions. He was glad to notice that the financial affairs of the country had been administered in an economical way. The finances of the country were matters of the very first importance to the people, and if the money had been well expended, and the liabilities not unnecessarily increased, the people were always ready to congratulate and thank those who administered their affairs. It was very gratifying indeed to have the assurance contained in His Excellency's speech that the subject had received proper attention from his ministers, and he, (Mr. McDOUGALL), sincerely trusted that the hopes it inspired would be fully realized by the facts. He thanked the House for the attention they had given him during his remarks, and concluded by seconding the motion made by his hon. friend, the member for Levis.

The Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said it was his pleasing duty to congratulate the hon. gentlemen who had respectively moved and seconded the resolution in Mr. SPEAKER'S hands, upon the able manner in which they had performed their task. It was a proverbially difficult thing to make bricks without straw, and he must say for the hon. gentleman who had seconded the motion that his attempt to do so had been exceedingly successful. He had listened to that gentlemen's speech with great pleasure, but he must apologise to the mover for not being in a position to speak in the terms of his effort which he had every reason to believe it merited. This arose from not being very familiar with the language. He had no doubt, however, that the duty was performed ably and well. The gentleman who seconded need not have apologised to the House for the manner in which he was able to address it; he was happy to be able to congratulate him upon his effort, and he hoped often to hear him. A Canadian statesman, now no more, remarked with regard to the division of labour between the Parliament of the Dominion and the Provincial Legislatures, that the day would come when the Speech from the Throne would include but a simple recommendation to pass the Supply Bill. We had not yet arrived at that point, but we had come near it this time. Looking at the bill of fare he must say it was rather a meagre one, not qualified to satisfy a hungry Parliament. He would allude shortly to some of the subjects referred to in the Speech. He did not propose to move any amendment, believing that the system should be adhered to which had prevailed in the Imperial Parliament of agreeing to it as a matter of form, without undue delay, so that the House might proceed at once to business. The practice of discussing the Speech from the Throne at great length, and of raising endless issues upon it was simply an obstruction to the business. It was his opinion that, unless the Opposition were in a position to move a vote of want of confidence in the Government, which he candidly confessed they were not in a position to do on this occasion, the Address should be passed without delay. His hon. friend, who had seconded the Address, congratulated the gentlemen on the Treasury Benches on their popularity in the country, as displayed during the recent elections. It was certainly matter for congratulation, could it only be shown to be the fact. He would leave to the House and the country to judge whether the hon. gentleman's estimate was correct in that respect or not. The second paragraph of the Address alluded to the organization of the North West Police Force. They must all be pleased to learn that the Act put into force the other year had been so successful, and that the operation of the force had had such a beneficial effect. The measure introduced in 1873, as stated by himself at the time, was an experimental one, and would involve in all probability, from time to time, some improvement and amendment. The Speech had not disclosed whether the Government had found it necessary to alter the constitution of that force or otherwise. This paragraph of the Speech, he repeated, was a very important one, and he hoped the Government would be in a position to lay before the House, during the present Session, and as early as possible, some report from the officers in command of the force, which would show the progress they had made, their experiences of the North-West, their difficulties, their troubles, and the results of the expedition generally; so that the House might be informed of their value as well of their disadvantages. One of these advantages, according to the Speech, was that it largely reduced the military force in the North-West. That, of course, was a matter for congratulation, but he hoped the reduction had not been obtained at the expense of the sense of security which existed up to that time in that country. He reminded the House of the purpose of the late Government in proposing to appoint that expedition, and believed it would be well at least to retain so much of a military force as would be sufficient to preserve order in case the police should at any time fail in their duty. He presumed, although there was no mention of it in the Address, that the papers with regard to the Treaty with the Cree and Sauteux Indians would be laid before the House, and that the sanction of the House would be asked thereto. There was no question of greater importance than the peaceable government of the North-West, and the maintenance of friendly relations between the executive of Canada and the aboriginal inhabitants of that country. He hoped when the Treaty was sent down to Parliament that it would prove to be a fair one in every way to the Indians, and that there would be no opportunity given to them, or to those who were considered their guardians, that a hard bargain had been driven by the Government. It would be exceedingly unfortunate if the Treaty were absolute in its terms, since Parliament could vetoe it at any time if they considered it had been made without due consideration. It would be very unfortunate, however, if it were necessary for Parliament to do anything of the kind, as it would destroy the confidence of the Indians in us. He desired it to be fully understood that all such treaties must be submitted to Parliament for its consideration and approval. In reference to the official tour of His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in the West it was admitted by universal consent that it had been a triumphal march from beginning to end. His Excellency had presented to the people of this country a representation of our monarchical institutions in their most perfect and loveable form. In every speech he made, in every step he took, on every occasion upon which he had any communication with any of HER MAJESTY'S subjects in the West, his conduct was admirable. His most eloquent speech—that delivered at Toronto—containing a resume of his experiences in the West, was a monument to his ability and capacity in every respect to hold the high position he now did, as representing Her Gracious Majesty QUEEN VICTORIA among her Canadian subjects. The attention of the House was called to the proposed creation of a Supreme Court. He had no doubt that this was intended to be the court contemplated in the act of confederation. The subject had already been before Parliament; it had engaged the attention of the late Government; it had engaged himself as Minister of Justice for a considerable time. He had stated when the subject was previously before Parliament, that it would be difficult, in his opinion, to obtain a court that would be satisfactory to all parts of the Dominion—chiefly on account of the Province of Quebec. He hoped that these difficulties had been overcome, and from the fact of the measure being in the hands of his hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, who came from that Province of Her Majesty's Canadian Dominion, he believed they would be. He might add that they were the causes which delayed his own action in the same direction. He scarcely understood, however, how this court could be essential for the settlement of constitutional questions. In England, the only tribunal for the settlement of constitutional questions was the High Court of Parliament, and in Canada, it was this House, subject, of course, to the limitation of our powers by the Act of Confederation; and reference on special subjects to the arbitrament of the Imperial authorities. So far as he was able to judge, the court could only decide upon simply legal questions; they would see, however, what was proposed to be done when the measure was before the House. A measure was a'so promised on the subject of insolvency. It was not stated whether the bill would be a mere alteration of the present law or not, but the Government, as a whole, had apparently given it their consideration, and were to introduce and carry a law settling the whole question. The Hon. the FIRST MINISTER, a few years ago, was of opinion that it was expedient to expunge from the Statute Book altogether anything in reference to a bankrupt law. He did not know whether the hon. gentleman held that opinion still. With respect to the reorganization of the Government of the Northwest, that was a subject of some importance. The Pacific Railway was also a subject which involved the consideration of such great and important principles bearing upon the future as well as the present prosperity of the country, that he would follow the example of the seconder of the Address, and not make any remark in respect of it till the House was in a position to consider the subject with all the papers before it. He was of opinion that these papers should be brought down and considered in connection with the communications which had passed between the Government and the authorities in British Columbia in reference to the same subject. There was one thing he had to say to this clause, and that was that it appeared to pledge the House to an approval of the course taken by the Government in regard to this whole subject. When that paragraph was moved he would therefore ask that it be entered as carried on a division. We then came to the paragraph which referred to the finances of the country, and all were of course glad that the estimates to be brought down had been prepared with every regard to economy. No allusion was made to the state of the revenue. He thought it would have been kindly to the country and fair to the House had some such reference been made in view of the statements of the FINANCE MINISTER last session. It was not found from the Address that there was to be any alteration in the tariff. Last session the MINISTER OF FINANCE had spoken of reforms which he intended to inaugurate in the manner of administering the public affairs, by which he thought it probable that he would be able to relieve the country from the additional taxation then imposed. There was no mention made of that here. With regard to the subject of immigration, he was glad to learn that the Government had fully developed their scheme, and that, instead of having the different Provinces running counter to the Dominion and each other, they would henceforth be found working together. He hoped the papers on this subject would be laid before the House. Speaking generally, he was bound to say that the Speech did not contain reference to many subjects, and that it was generally characterized as one containing remarkably little. It might probably be fair to say that it was as remarkable for what it did not contain as for what it did contain, especially when it made no reference to the Reciprocity Treaty. At the opening of last Session the Speech from the Throne announced that negociations had been entered upon with a view to the consummation of such a treaty, and it was again alluded to in the Speech at prorogation. Although it had caused what might almost be called a crisis in the financial relations of the two countries, it was left out of the question on this occasion. It was scarcely treating the country fairly that some mention was not made of it. He concluded, however, that this was owing to the fact that at the time the Speech was drafted the final action of the United States on the subject had not been taken, and that it could not be alluded to before the United States had so disposed of it. Since that time that final action had been taken, and the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches had thereby been relieved from much trouble. He had no doubt the hon. gentleman at the head of the Government thought, now that the subject was disposed of, to lay all the papers before Parliament, so that the House and country might have an opportunity of discussing it, and, as this question may come up again, or another treaty might be made or pledge made, that the Government of the day and all Governments might know what were the opinions of the representatives of the people on that most important subject; which portions of the treaty were in accordance with the opinion of Parliament, and what portions were worthy of condemnation, or at all events, of disapprobation; so that in the event of any future attempt being made to resume the negociations the Government of the day, and the negociators might be armed with the opinion of Parliament, with respect to the clauses of that treaty. Rocks might be avoided by having an expression of the House as to which of the stipulations in the treaty were worthy of, and would meet with the acceptance of Parliament, and what clauses would receive consideration, if it had been a final and binding treaty between England, Canada and the United States. He hoped the hon. gentleman would find an opportunity, if not during the discussion on the Address, at the earliest period afterwards, to give the usual explanations in regard to the reconstruction of his Government. He recalled to the memory of the leader of the Government an omission that was made during last session. When the Address was being discussed, he called upon the hon. gentleman for the usual Ministerial explanations as to the formation of the Government, and as to the withdrawal of certain of its members. Those explanations were promised to be given at a fitting time, and although he (SIR JOHN MACDONALD) pressed for them, on the suggestion, he thought, of the member for Chateauguay, they were postponed, and the PREMIER promised to make them immediately afterwards. That promise was not fulfilled. They might as well have the explanations this session as the last, because, from a constitutional point of view, it was of importance that no change, either of more or less importance in its nature, should be made in the personnel of the Government, without Parliament being informed of the reasons which induced her members either to join a Government or to withdraw therefrom.

Hon. Mr. McKENZIE said he had no reason to find fault with the remarks of the leader of the Opposition on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. He had complained that the bill of fare was rather meagre; the Government would endeavor to supplement it in such a way as to satisfy his inordinate desire for a large bill. If the hon. gentleman did not approve of the number of dishes he might approve of the quality of those produced. The leader of the Opposition had referred at considerable length to the police force in the North-West, saying that the Government had not afforded information as to the details connected with that force. That was quite true; but the House would be placed in possession at the earliest possible moment of all information in the hands of the Government. The hon. gentleman had laid some stress on the question whether the police force would in itself be a success, meaning in its constitution and in its ability to perform the duties required of perhaps a military force. Well, there was no doubt that difficulties had arisen, not certainly very serious, in conducting the operations of that force with merely civil power at its command. Many were of opinion that it would be exceedingly difficult to maintain a police force acting in a semi-military capacity. It was a subject which had engaged the very serious attention of the Government at the time the force was organized under the existing Act, and it became a grave question whether they should not combine with the force part of the military force then in existence, and thus obtain a civil force with a military character. The Government felt, however, it was due to the wisdom of Parliament in framing that measure that they should give the Police Force as constituted by the Act of the hon. gentleman now leading the Opposition a fair trial before they should make any serious change. They also felt it was not expedient as a matter of public policy to constitute a standing army if it could possibly be avoided. That had been the policy of the country, and the military force that had existed in that country was maintained owing to local irritation and troubles in that country; and it was now felt to be exceedingly desirable that as soon as possible that military force should be removed and the Province be placed in exactly the same position as the other Provinces of the Dominion, military force only being made available to aid the civil force when required. He hoped the hon. gentleman's remarks were not correct when he expressed a fear that the Government had so largely reduced that police force, and not duly considered the necessities that might exist or arise for its continuance and perpetuation. He did not think there was anything in the recent history of the country to justify an opinion of that kind—a fact which the House and country would be glad to learn. Of course, it was impossible to discuss that particular item to any great extent at that time, but when he introduced the Bill, as he would probably do at a very early day, for the reorganization of the Government of the North-West Territory, and consolidation of the laws relating to it, he would enter more fully into the operations of the police force, and present to the House a complete picture of the country as it at present stood in respect of the execution of the laws in force, or supposed to be in force, but which were not being executed when the police force took possession of the country. He would say nothing as to the Insolvency Law, as it would be dealt with by his hon. colleague the MINISTER OF JUSTICE who had given his utmost attention to the subject, and would invite the opinion of the members of the House thereon, so as to obtain the most practical measure possible. But the leader of the Opposition had alluded to his, (Mr. MACKENZIE'S), own opinion at a comparatively recent period as to the necessity of continuing the present law. His opinion then was, and his individual opinion remained to a great extent the same, that it would have been advisable then to have allowed the law to lapse for a year or two. He was bound to say that the commercial opinion of the country was generally opposed to his opinion on that matter. He was equally bound to admit that in executing the office that he held he must consider the commercial sentiment of the country in a question of that kind, and to a certain extent subordinate his opinion to it. He would say nothing as to the remarks of the leader of the Opposition concerning the revenue; no doubt his hon. friend, the member for Cumberland, would discuss the question with him at a later day. The question of immigration had also been mentioned. It was not precisely as his hon. friend had supposed a repetition in the remark in the speech from the Throne last year. There was a combined effort last year, but it was not the same sort of combination as now. An endeavor was made to induce the Dominion and Provincial immigration agents to act in harmony. Now it had been arranged that the several Provinces should pay a certain proportion of the Dominion emigration office, and that the Dominion General Agent in charge of emigration in England would take charge of all the agencies of the several Provinces, and see that every agent was attending to his particular field, and that full information respecting all the Provinces, was placed within the reach of every person in the districts where the agents were to work. This was the difference in the statements of the Speeches from the Throne this year and last. The resolutions aimed at by the representatives of the different Provinces would be placed before the House, which would then have the opportunity of seeing what system had been adopted. The hon. gentleman had regretted very much the omission from the Speech of all reference to the Reciprocity Treaty. He was satisfied that the hon. gentleman was merely joking when he remarked on that omission; he could not, from his knowledge of the practice of Parliament have been serious in his remarks. There was no reason why any mention should be made of that subject. At opening of Parliament last year, the Government had to announce the course taken in regard to the negotiations then in progress, and these negotiations had not been concluded at the close of the session, and indeed, were not even now concluded. The hon. gentleman presumed that the Government had not received notice, at the time the Speech was prepared, of the action of the United States Senate; but they had no notice of the action of the Senate at this moment. All they knew was that the draft treaty, which would be laid on the table of the House on Monday, was submitted, with the approval and sanction of the Government of the United States, as the law required for the action of the Senate, and the Government did not know at this moment what was the action of the Senate. But he would have no difficulty whatever in defending that treaty, and he was satisfied he could be able to show, when it came up for discussion, that it bore a favorable contrast with some treaties that might be discussed in the House. He was deligated to hear the leader of the Opposition state that on all occasions when a treaty was to be negotiated, the opinion of Parliament should be obtained before the ambassadors set out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—No, no.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—What was the course of the hon. gentleman himself on this subject? When a very distinguished member of the House rose in his place, and desired to give instruction to the leader of the Opposition in regard to a certain treaty, the ground was then taken by the Ministry then in power that it was exceedingly improper for any member of the House, or for the House itself to even insinuate any instruction to an ambassador setting out to negotiate a treaty. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) was induced —and he had regretted it ever since—to allow the leader of the then Government to set out for such a purpose without an expression of the opinion of the House having first been obtained, but he supposed the hon. gentleman possessed such an extended knowledge of the wants and peculiar circumstances of the country as would enable him to have that treaty executed in such a way as would not call forth the condemnation of the people afterwards. He would not now discuss the Reciprocity Treaty, and therefore would say nothing further on that point. The hon. gentleman on the present occasion had given the House a somewhat different definition of the power of the Crown in respect to treaties, laying down the principle that it was not capable of executing any treaty without the same having been submitted to and sanctioned by Parliament, and he took the ground that the treaty with the Indians could scarcely be held to be a treaty without its having received the sanction of Parliament. This, however, was not the first negotiation with the Indians since Confederation, and he had no recollection of the hon. gentleman submitting any previous treaty for the approval of Parliament. The hon. gentleman had either changed his views or had neglected to perform his duties ; he must accept one or the other alternative. The poor Indians on the plains would not be able to understand that the treaty was of no force and effect until it had been discussed and approved in Parliament ; and he would state frankly that the Government did not propose to submit the treaty with the Indians, for the approval of Parliament, before considering it already ratified. The Government would not deal with the Indians in that manner. Everything that devolved on us in consequence of that treaty would come before Parliament. The immediate result of the treaty was that we had obtained possession of their lands, and a sum would be placed in the estimates to pay for them, and the very voting of the money for the purchase of these lands was in itself practically the adoption of the treaty by the House. It was of the utmost importance that nothing should be done that would deprive us of the confidence that the Indians reposed in the good faith of the Canadian Government, and he was sure the leader of the Opposition would not insist on the views which he somewhat injudiciously gave utterance to to-day on this subject. With respect to Ministerial explanations, he had not the slightest objection to give the explanations asked for. He had also been reminded of his omission to do this last year, but he was not to blame for that omission. He had stated that after the address was passed he would be prepared to give the explanations whenever asked, but he was never asked to give them, probably owing to the ill health which necessitated the frequent absence of the leader of the Opposition. He was glad to observe that the hon. gentleman was not better able to attend to his parliamentary duties, and he would give these explanations on Monday, together with an explanation of the changes made in the Government last year. He was particularly anxious at the earliest opportunity to refer to the changes in the Government last year, because he conceived that the Minister of Justice had been grievously and unjustly dealt with by the members of the Opposition, as he would be able to show when the time came. He was not aware that there was any other subject which it was necessary for him to refer to on the present occasion. He appreciated the courtesy of the hon. gentlemen of the Opposition in taking the course they had taken in reference to the Address, and he had merely to say one word in conclusion in reference to HIS EXCELLENCY'S official tour in the West, to which the leader of the Opposition had very happily referred. No better emigration agency was ever adopted than the publication of HIS EXCELLENCY'S speeches—especially his speech at Toronto—and the record of the tour generally ; and a very great deal had already been accomplished by this means, in securing for this country the favorable notice of the English public. During last year a large number of distinguished gentlemen from England visited Canada, their first impressions being derived from some of these very speeches. He joined with the leader of the Opposition in congratulating the hon. members for Levis and East Elgin upon the ability they had shown to-day, and their introduction as speakers would have created such a favorable impression that the House would desire to hear them frequently.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in reply said that when the test of the proposed Reciprocity Treaty was before the House, it would be a fitting occasion to discuss in some parliamentary way the terms of that abortive treaty, so that the opinions of the representatives of the people might be expressed upon it, as they would be valuable for guidance on future occasions. With respect to the treaty with the Indians, he said it was in the nature of a contract with persons who were HER MAJESTY'S subjects, though they were in some degree held to be a separate body with whom contracts are to be made, which are by courtesy called treaties. He should be very sorry that it should be understood that any government had the power to make treaties without the consent of Parliament, which contained provisions for the cession of their land. As great a responsibility might be incurred in the acceptance of land as in the granting of land. He did not mean to say that there was anything in this treaty that should receive the disapprobation or even the coldness of this House or any member of it. For himself he had no reason to suppose that this treaty was not satisfactory in every way to this country, both white and red ; but still it was perfectly competent for Parliament to disavow such a treaty if the cession of territory or the granting of territory should be considered to be contrary to the best interests of the country. For that reason he had made the remark that it would be well in all treaties with the Indians—for fear they might not afterwards receive the approbation of Parliament—that some warning should be given that in case Parliament, in the exercise of its undoubted right, disapproved of the treaty, the Indians should not suppose that they had been treated with bad faith. That was all he said. He had no reason to suppose that the treaty was not satisfactory or would not prove satisfactory to the House and the country as well as to the Indians.

The resolutions were then read a first time. The first to the eighth resolution inclusive were carried without division. The ninth was adopted on a division. The tenth and eleventh were adopted without division. On the twelfth resolution,

Mr. MASSON asked whether all the papers, correspondence and other documents in connection with the North-West troubles would be submitted to Parliament. He had himself thought of putting a notice on the paper asking for all the papers, but if the Government intended to include all the papers in their return, that course would be unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The return will include everything.

The resolution was then adopted, as were also the two remaining resolutions, without division.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the said resolutions be referred to a Select Committee composed of Hon. Messrs. SMITH, FOURNIER, CARTWRIGHT and LAIRD and Messrs. FRECHETTE and MCDOUGALL. —Carried.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE from said Committee reported a draft address to HIS EXCELLENCY, which was read a first and second time and ordered to be engrossed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that said address be presented to HIS EXCELLENCY by such members of this House as are of the Privy Council—Carried.

SUPPLY.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved, That this House will, on Monday next, resolve itself into a Committee to consider a supply to be granted to HER MAJESTY—Carried.

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT laid on the table the Public Accounts of Canada for the year ending 30th June, 1874.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE laid on the table the Trade and Navigation returns for 1874.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, the House adjourned at 5.20 p.m.

———:++:———

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, February 8th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock p. m.

NORTH-WEST TROUBLES.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I rise, Mr. SPEAKER, for the purpose of propounding an enquiry on a very important subject, to my hon. friend the FIRST MINISTER, of of which I gave him notice privately on Saturday last. In the Speech from the Throne, which we replied to on Friday, there was an intimation that papers relating to the troubles in the North-West would be laid on the table at a very early day. Now, sir, the question which I propose to ask my hon. friend is twofold: Firstly, as to when these papers will be brought down to the House; and, secondly, as to whether it is the intention of the Government of which he is the head, to submit to the House the proposition founded on these papers, having reference to the subject of an amnesty to the people engaged in the disturbances in the North-West some years ago, and also with reference to the cognate subject of the position of Louis Riel as a member-elect of this House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Sir, — my hon. friend is right in his remark, that he gave me notice of his intention to ask this question, and I am quite prepared to answer it. I expect to be able some time this afternoon to place these papers on the table of the House ; they are not yet quite ready but I hope they will be before the House rises. The Government intend to deal with both subjects as soon as the papers are before the House, and I will place a notice of motion on the paper to-night for Thursday night in order to proceed with the consideration of these questions.

WOODEN AND IRON BRIDGES.

Mr. BLAIN—At the close of last session I moved for certain correspondence relating to the comparative value of iron and wooden bridges on the Intercolonial Railway. The Committee on printing had, I believe, broken up and were unable to consider the question whether these papers would be printed or not. I therefore, sir, with permission of the House, would move that these documents be printed. I suppose it would be irregular to send them to the Printing Committee, as part of the papers belonging to the session, without a special motion being made ; and I therefore, as I think the information is very desirable, seeing we have so many public works now going on, move :—

"That the documents laid on the table last session, in anwser to an address for certain papers and correspondence, relating to the comparative cost of Wooden and Iron Bridges on the Intercolonial Railway, be printed and circulated as public documents usually are."

Mr. SPEAKER suggested that this should take the shape of a formal notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said, the hon. gentleman was quite right in taking this method to bring the subject of the printing of these returns, made last session, before the House. The motion, as a matter of course, went to the Printing Committee without the question being put by Mr. SPEAKER, under Rule 94.

Mr. BLAIN.—The difficulty is that the Committee is not yet appointed.

Hon Mr. HOLTON.—When the Committee is appointed, the motion goes to it as a matter of course.

THE VETERANS OF 1812-14.

Mr. DELORME asked whether it is the intention of the Government to grant a pension or a gratification of some kind to the veterans who served in Canada as soldiers of the sedentary Militia during the years 1812, 1813 and 1814.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—The Government have that matter under their consideration, and have placed an amount in the estimates which they think will be ample to grant a pension to the veterans of 1812.

A COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Mr. WOOD asked whether it is the intention of the Government to establish a Court of Admiralty for the inland waters of the Dominion during the present Session of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. FOURINER—A correspondence has been opened between this Government and the Imperial authorities on this subject. From the answers received, it appears that some legislation would be necessary in order to extend to inland waters the jurisdiction up to this time confined to maritime waters only. The Imperial Government having expressed their willingness to accede to the request of this Government, it has been deemed advisable to ask, during this session of the Imperial Parliament, that the necessary legislation should be passed.

M. FOURNIER répète en français ce qu'il vient de dire en anglais :

Il y a eu, dit-il, échange de correspondance entre le gouvernement impérial et ce gouvernement, et le résultat est qu'il est nécessaire que le gouvernement impérial légifère sur ce sujet pour étendre aux eaux intérieures du Canada, la loi relative aux eaux sujettes au flux et au reflux. Sous ces circonstances le gouvernement a décidé de demander au parlement impérial de passer cette législation.

THE WELLAND CANAL.

Mr. WOOD asked whether it is the intention of the Government to deepen the Welland Canal, so as to secure fourteen feet of water on the mitre sills, instead of twelve, as at first contemplated.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to go to a greater depth than twelve feet of water. I may tell my honorable friend that the harbor capacity of the lakes does not seem to fairly contemplate a greater depth of water than that, as they could not possibly be used without an enormous outlay, and the outlay on the canal even would be so serious as to deter the Government from entering into such a great expense. We have given the question careful consideration, and think that the plan adopted is the one we must adhere to.

ST. LAWRENCE CANALS.

Mr. WOOD asked whether it was the intention of the government to proceed with the enlargement of the St. Lawrence Canals, and how soon, and whether they will be of the same capacity when finished as the Welland Canal?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is the intention of the Government to proceed with the enlargement of the St. Lawrence Canals at an early day. There is not any pressing hurry for them, however, as we believe transhipment to smaller vessels in Kingston harbour can be accomplished without any very great expense. The plan for the ultimate works is to make the locks the same size. The survey has been made upon an intention to deepen the St. Lawrence river to no greater depth than twelve feet. The expense to get fourteen feet would be still more enormous than to get the same depth on the Welland, as it would involve the deepening of a large portion of the channel of the river. It is the intention of the Government to proceed, as time and circumstances may justify them, in doing any enlarging of the St. Lawrence canals, to the same depth as the Welland.

INSPECTORS OF INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. WOOD asked whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present session, to introduce an Act providing for the appointment of inspectors of insurance companies, both fire and life?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman will observe that in the Speech from the Throne one of the measures foreshadowed is a general Insurance Act. That Act will provide for a general inspector of insurance affairs.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY CARS.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked whether tenders have been advertised in Nova Scotia, for the coal and hay cars required by the Intercolonial Railway?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Perhaps the House will allow me to ask whether the question refers to the present or what time?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER explained that he meant the supply of hay and coal cars the Superintendent of Railways intimated it was the intention of the Government to put on the road. The question was put in consequence of a telegram from a contractor in Nova Scotia who had seen no notice and had not had an opportunity of competing for the cars.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Proposals were invited, as I understand, from the various manufacturers of cars in the Dominion for a certain number of cars, and a firm in St. John sent the lowest tender of any, either in the United States or Canada. I was afterwards told that another firm, in Halifax I think, which was in the habit of doing this business had not seen any notice, and as the first tender did not comprise all that was required by the road, I understand that the superintendent gave a contract to the Halifax firm at the same rate as the other.

THE ST. LAWRENCE RIVER.

Mr. BLAIN asked whether the Government have caused to be made a survey of the St. Lawrence with a special view to ascertain whether a depth of fourteen feet of navigable water can be obtained at a reasonable outlay; and, if so, what is the result?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—A careful survey has been made of the River St. Lawrence and the Government are in possession, as nearly as can be possibly ascertained, of the cost of obtaining twelve feet navigation. We are not in possession of information as to fourteen feet navigation, because it was not contemplated when the survey was undertaken. I may say, however, that the cost would be a very unreasonable one, and the Government would not be justified in undertaking the work.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S COMMISSION.

Mr. MASSON moved for a copy of His Excellency the Governor General's commission, and of the Royal Instructions which accompanied it. Carried.

COMMUTATION OF LEPINE'S SENTENCE.

Mr. MASSON moved that an Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General for copies of all papers, Orders in Council and correspondence relating to the commutation of the sentence passed on A. Lepine in Manitoba for the death of Thomas Scott. He said: In making this motion, I desire to draw the attention of the House to a document which has been published in the Official Gazette of this country, and consequently under the authority of the Government, which has affected public opinion considerably in the country within the last few days. It is as follows:—

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
January 15th, 1875.

SIR,—I am commanded by the Governor-General to inform you that His Excellency has had under his full and anxious consideration the evidence and other documents connected with the trial of Ambroise Lepine, who has been capitally convicted before the Court of Assize held at Winnipeg on the 10th day of October, 1874, of the murder of Thomas Scott, on the 4th of March, 1870, at Fort Garry.

Although His Excellency entirely agrees with the finding of the Jury, and considers that the crime, of which the prisoner Lepine has been convicted, was nothing less than a cruel and unjustifiable murder, he is of opinion that subsequent circumstances, and, notably, the relations into which the Provincial Authorities of Manitoba entered with the prisoner and his associates, are such as, in a great degree, to fetter the hands of Justice.

It further appears to His Excellency that the case has passed beyond the province of Departmental Administration, and that it will be best dealt with under the Royal Instructions, which authorize the Governor-General, in certain capital cases, to dispense with the advice of his Ministers, and to exercise the Prerogative of the Crown according to his independent judgment, and on his own personal responsibility.

I have it, therefore, in command to inform you that it is His Excellency's pleasure that the capital sentence passed upon the prisoner Lepine be commuted into two years' imprisonment in gaol from the date of conviction, and the permanent forfeiture of his political rights.

His Excellency desires that the necessary instrument for giving effect to this commutation be forthwith prepared.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,

H. C. FLETCHER,
Governor-General's Secretary.

To the Honorable
The Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Sir, I am not desirous of discussing the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of this document. I am not ready to consider even the bearing it may have upon Ministers of the Crown, His Excellency's advisers in this House, and before the country. I do not even want to search into the reasons which have induced His Excellency to adopt such a course, which, to say the least of it, is unusual, if not entirely unprecedented. Neither is it my intention to enter into a consideration of the declaration made by the Government, which I must say, in all frankness and all honesty, so far is, in my humble opinion, quite satisfactory. But I thought it my duty to seize this first opportunity to protest most respectfully, but at the same time most earnestly, against the unfortunate expression which I find in the first paragraph of this letter: "Although His Excellency entirely agrees with the finding of the jury, and considers that the crime of which the prisoner Lepine has been convicted was nothing less than a cruel and unjustifiable murder." I protest against any such expression, and I protest, moreover, against the conclusion at which—in fact, I am in a bad position; I do not know whether to say the Governor-General or the Government; but, of course, the Government can relieve me; if they don't I shall take the papers as they are, and say the Governor-General—at which His Excellency has arrived. Sir, this verdict—it is a verdict—this sentence will go through this country and will cause immense disappointment to a great number of HER MAJESTY'S loyal subjects, who expected—without considering in the smallest degree the question of amnesty itself—that if parties implicated in those troubles were brought to trial, and justice took its course, at least an immediate pardon would ensue, as many people, in the Province of Quebec especially, were led to understand would be the case. Sir, this unfortunate expression will cause, I will not say discontent—no; but it will cause deep sorrow and grief among the loyal French population of Manitoba, who, notwithstanding the very strong charge of the judge, and notwithstanding the verdict of a packed jury—I hold myself entirely responsible for every word I say—who notwithstanding the verdict of a packed jury still consider that M. LEPINE is entitled to the respect, the esteem and the love of all that population. It will also cause grief and sorrow to the numerous petitioners from all parts of this country who have respectfully approached His Excellency and asked him to extend to LEPINE that mercy which is the noblest prerogative of the Crown. Those thousands of petitioners, those thousands of loyal subjects of HER MAJESTY will not be able to avoid feeling that if state reasons or political difficulties connected with this vexed question rendered it necessary for the Governor General to adopt the course that he has adopted they might at least have been spared the humiliation of it going to the whole country, that they have interested themselves for a man who is nothing but a criminal, guilty of a crime so cruel, so unjustifiable, that perpetual deprivation of political rights, that is to say eternal degradation, is not a punishment in proportion to the guilt that he has committed. Sir, we may say what we please, but if the action of M. LEPINE was not the consequence of the organization of a government which he thought had the real authority in the country it was a crime such as to deprive those who were guilty of it of any sympathy. But notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, notwithstanding this letter which I have read and which grieves me and grieves a majority of the population of Lower Canada and which must grieve I know a majority of the well-thinking English population of this country—notwithstanding that verdict and this letter from such high authority, I still maintain as a petitioner myself, and the petitioners and the loyal population of Lower Canada still maintain, that M. LEPINE is not a murderer in the sense of the word which carries with it degradation, shame and humiliation. I will not dwell at length upon the reasons which induce me to say that M. LEPINE is not a murderer in that sense. The position at which the Government have arrived will necessarily be the subject of discussion before this House, and I still hope the question will come before the House in such a form that all sides may be able not to discuss the question but to congratulate them upon the decision at which they have arrived. But I will take up this letter itself, and whoever is responsible for it bore on its very face a contradiction Look at the second paragraph:—"It further appears to His Excellency that the case has passed beyond the province of Departmental Administration." Why has it passed beyond the province of Departmental Administration? Was it because of the enormity of the crime? There is no crime however enormous which is beyond the noble prerogative of mercy of the Crown, and I may say more, the more enormous the crime the easier it will be for the Governor General to adopt a course upon the subject, because the easier it will be for his Advisers to give advice upon it. Is it because it is beyond the function of HER MAJESTY'S constitutional advisers? No. The offence is one which has been adjudged by one of our own tribunals, and consequently our Minister of Justice can advise His Excellency upon it, and if the Governor General is obliged to act upon his own responsibility it is because he himself feels that there is something in the offence, which takes it beyond an ordinary offence. If the sentence which was passed upon M. LEPINE was for a common crime His Excellency would have found all his advisers ready to give him advice upon the subject. Sir, this letter is unfortunate on another score. His Excellency states that he is of the opinion "that subsequent circumstances, and notably the relations into which the Provincial authorities of Manitoba entered with the prisoner and his associates, are such as in a great degree to fetter the hands of justice." Now, I think any gentleman in this House who wishes to examine the question fairly and impartially will say that this paragraph says a great deal too much, if the action of the Provincial authorities was not approved by the Federal Government, and will also admit that it does not go far enough if the action of the local authorities was approved and endorsed by the Federal Government. What are the facts? The country was then threatened with an invasion. It was considered then in that country that unless the French population came forward and offered themselves to defend the country, the country would be lost to us. What did the Lieutenant Governor, the representative of HER MAJESTY in that country, do? He appealed to RIEL, LEPINE, and others, to come forward in defence of their country. Did they refuse? No, they immediately came forward, and everybody who has read the evidence before the Committee of Enquiry, knows that if that country has been saved to Canada we owe it to the efforts of the parties implicated in that unfortunate affair, and the good will of the French population of Manitoba. This being the fact, what is the consequence? Can you appeal to any man who is not a subject of HER MAJESTY, to take up the sword in defence of the country, and when he comes forward receive him and treat him as one of HER MAJESTY'S loyal subjects, and entrust him with the sword in defence of the country, and at the same time decide that that man shall pass two years in gaol as a common criminal, with thieves, robbers, and burglars, and for the rest of his life condemned to the loss of his political rights. There is no use referring to the authorities on this subject. The best authority is our own feelings, our own judgment, our own common sense, and our feelings, judgment and common sense tell us it is impossible to consider the man that you have entrusted with the defence of the country as a common criminal. I come now to the last paragraph of this document. I will not touch upon the subject of the third paragraph, which certainly places HER MAJESTY'S advisers in this House in a very awkward position, and I hope as I have said that such a course will be taken as will not necessitate the recurrence of this question in the future. The last paragraph is as follows:

"I have it, therefore, in command to inform you that it is His Excellency's pleasure that the Capital sentence passed upon the prisoner Lepine be commuted into two years' imprisonment in gaol from the date of conviction, and the permanent forfeiture of his political rights."

Now, sir, I suppose I need not say that this verdict will be received with immense grief and sorrow by the great majority of the people of this country. I readily understand—I who know the circumstances, who know the country and the people, who know Mr. LEPINE himself—I readily understand that he who is the father of eight children, the responsibility of whose support and education rested upon him, will feel that the sparing of his life is a great boon, because, notwithstanding the humiliation that he will have to bear, whether he remains a patriot in his country or an exile for ever, he will always be in a position in future years to support his family. But I say as a political man, and regarding this as a political question, this verdict of HIS EXCELLENCY is a step backwards. Mr. SPEAKER, I must give the reasons why I now ask for these papers. I have thought it my duty to enter my protest, because I know the whole population of Lower Canada and of Manitoba, and I may say the whole thinking population of Canada protest against the course which has been adopted. I ask for all the documents to be laid before the House, because I see in the letter of His Excellency the Governor General a reference to some documents which are not before us; also, there is a sad rumour—it is more than a rumour—circulating among the public that the papers conveying the Act of Clemency, so called, by His Excellency, reached Manitoba after the time appointed for the execution. Explanations have been given of the fact that the documents relating to that subject had been presented privately to Lieutenant-Governor MORRIS three or four weeks before. Sir, it will be interesting to the House to know that a public print, an organ of the Government, announced that it was authorized to say that the instructions on the subject of the commutation of LEPINE'S sentence had been in the hands of Lieut.-Governor MORRIS long before the date of the execution, and consequently LEPINE ran no risk of being executed. It is important to the House to know by whom this journal had been authorised to make such statement; also, how it occurred that, if His Excellency the Governor-General had come to the determination to issue this commutation of sentence, notice thereof did not reach Manitoba in time to avoid all difficulty, and how it is that these papers, which were written weeks ago, are only published in this country after the elections in Ontario. If Lieutenant-Governor MORRIS had been notified over a month ago that the sentence was to be commuted, how is it that the papers were only signed a few days after the elections in Ontario; and who advised the Governor-General to delay the issuing of the proclamation, when His Excellency had resolved four weeks ago to commute LEPINE'S sentence. The effect has been to keep LEPINE in hot water during one month longer than was necessary. The Government will well understand that the members of the House are entitled to know how it occurred that the decision of the Governor-General, which had been determined four weeks before the matter was known to the public, was kept back from the public until after the Ontario Elections. I beg to move the resolution which I have read.

Mr. MACKENZIE BOWELL,—Mr. SPEAKER, before the motion is put I think it well that some one should object, and it is only that which I propose to do at this moment to the strong language used by the hon. member for Terrebonne in reference to the Judge and Jury which tried this case. It is not my purpose now to discuss the question before the House; I think that can be much better done when we have all the papers before us, but I simply rise to protest against the bold declaration on his part that the Jury was a packed one. I also desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that on that Jury there were only two men of purely white extraction, four being of Anglo-Indian origin and six being French half-breeds. I don't think that at so important a trial any criminal could have been placed at the bar in a more favorable position than was LEPINE, so far as the Jury was concerned. The language used by the Governor General in his letter is fully in accord with the charge of the Judge who tried the case in passing sentence. Having entered my protest against the use of this strong language, I have no desire to discuss the general question at present; no doubt it will come before the House in another shape when the papers are before it, and we can then enter fully into the question and the responsibility of the Cabinet Ministers in tendering, as I presume they did, the advice they did to His Excellency the Governor General in reference to this matter.

Mr. MASSON desired to offer a few remarks in reply. He denied that he had used too strong language in respect to the Judge, who made a strong charge. When the whole papers were submitted to the House he would show, by documents fyled in Court, that the Jury was a packed one; that a very learned criminal lawyer who went from Quebec to Manitoba protested against the packing of the Jury, by which the lists were not followed, but the names of persons favorable to the prisoner and adverse to the Crown were passed over. That fact could be proved, and if all the papers were laid before the House they would on their face establish the charge that the Jury was a packed one.

Mr. SCATCHERD — I rise, Mr. SPEAKER, for the purpose of taking exception to that portion of the address of the hon. member for Terrebonne in which he stated that it was the opinion of many people in this country that the North-West would have been lost to Canada if it had not been for the action of some of the parties that were implicated in those troubles. Now, sir, I believe it was never the opinion of any member of this House, or of any number of people outside of this House, that either RIEL or any of the people concerned in the first insurrection there, by anything they could do, or by any assistance they could give, either in the North-West or outside, could have severed that country either from Canada or Great Britain. I believe, sir, it never was the opinion of any of the members of this House or people of this country that anything LEPINE or those concerned in those troubles afterwards, when the Fenians attempted to invade that country, could have severed the country either from Canada or Great Britain. I protest against it being thought for one moment that those people saved the country to Great Britain, because we found, although they were quite ready to fight against defenceless inhabitants, they had not the courage to face the troops which went up under Sir GARNET WOLSELEY, but ran away.

Mr. MOUSSEAU—It has been said by no less a personage than Lieutenant Governor ARCHIBALD that the action of the French half breeds had saved the country.

Mr. LAURIER said he rose to call attention to the fact that the House was entering upon a very irregular discussion. The time had passed for recriminations, and in view of the praiseworthy action of the Government in endeavoring to heal the wound caused by a wrong policy, the only step the House had to adopt was that of burying the past. He was exceedingly sorry to have listened to the language used by the member for Terrebonne. He (Mr. LAURIER) was a French Liberal, and his party was called the party of demagogues. It would not be the ungracious duty of one of the party of demagogues to criticise the action of His Excellency the Governor General. That duty had apparently devolved on a member of the Conservative party. He regretted the tone of the debate, and hoped that on Thursday they would hear the last of the North West troubles.

Mr. MASSON desired to explain his position.

Mr. CAUCHON raised a question of order, that the member had already spoken.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said, as the hon. gentleman from Quebec persisted in his objection, he moved the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said that nothing but personal explanations would be permissable. There must be an end to the debate.

Mr. MASSON observed that as there was a motion now before the chair, he would speak to it. He did not wish to impose himself upon the House, but at the same time he would state that it was not a personal explanation that he wished to make. The hon. member who raised the objection knew the answer he was going to make.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that as a motion for adjournment had been made, the hon. member for Terrebonne had a right to speak.

Mr. MASSON then proceeded with his reply. He denied that he had acted as a demagogue, or had treated His Excellency disrespectfully, either in regard to the Pacific Railway, or any other subject. The name of His Excellency had been brought before the House, and he was compelled to refer to it in the course of his speech. His Excellency had stated in his letter that he was alone responsible for the commutation of LEPINE's sentence, and it was absurd to argue that members were not to be allowed honestly, honorably, and respectfully, to discuss such an important State document. A few days ago a gentleman who had been recently appointed a Senator, made use of language respecting His Excellency, which he (Mr. MASSON) would not dare to repeat to the House. He would not read the language, but he would try to remember it. The document to which he referred was, he believed, the production of a gentleman occupying a high representative position in this country. It stated that the Governor General had up to this time been a popular representative of HER MAJESTY, but by his action in this matter he has inscribed his name behind those of our most execrated Governors.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE rose to a point of order. The whole of the hon. gentleman's speech and his quotations were most disrespectful to HER MAJESTY'S representative in this Dominion, and he was sorry that he should have considered it not beneath his dignity to attribute the expression of the sentiments alluded to to any one, seeing that he knew nothing of their origin.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said, while he was sorry that the language in reference to His Excellency the Governor-General had been repeated, he was bound to say that his hon. friend from Terrebonne was quite justified in the course he had taken, in view of the language made use of by the hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, who had used the term demagogue.

Mr. LAURIER—No.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the hon. gentleman had remarked that the whole Conservative party of Lower Canada were demagogues, and that his (Mr. LAURIER'S) party were not demagogues at all.

Mr. LAURIER denied that he had used the language.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said such was the substance of the hon. gentleman's remarks, if they had any substance at all, and his hon. friend from Terrebonne was quite justified in quoting the language of a gentleman who certainly belonged to the party of the hon. member for Arthabaska, and who had been raised to one of the highest legislative positions in the Dominion. His hon. friend from Terrebonne was quite justified in resenting the indignity and obloquy thrown across the floor, and showing what those gentlemen were themselves capable of doing in times of excitement.

Mr. LAURIER rose for a personal explanation. He was happy that, if he had been misunderstood upon the other side of the House, he at least had been understood upon his own side. The language he had made use of was this:—He had said that he was a Liberal from Lower Canada and that his party had always been represented for the last twenty years as demagogues by the party to which the hon. gentleman from Terrebonne belonged; and he congratulated his friends that upon this occasion the ungracious duty of criticising the action of His Excellency would not belong to the demagogues, but to one upon the other side of the House. He did not say that the hon. gentleman was a demagogue. He could not then have said that the hon. gentleman was a demagogue, for he had not then heard his speech.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had moved the adjournment of the House because he thought the rule which had been applied to his hon. friend somewhat arbitrary. He now begged leave to withdraw his motion.

Motion for adjournment withdrawn, by permission.

The original motion was then agreed to.

MILITIA MEN OF 1812-13.

Mr. PELLETIER moved an address to His Excellency the Governor-General for a statement, showing the names, ages and places of residence of all militia men of 1812-13, who have transmitted to the Imperial Government their claims for pensions and indemnities.

The motion was agreed to.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that a Special Committee of seven members be appointed to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose Select Standing Committees ordered by this House, Messrs. MACKENZIE, A. J. SMITH, FOURNIER, HOLTON, TUPPER, Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, and Mr. MASSON to compose said Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF SPECIAL COMMITTEES.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) moved, That the Clerk do lay on the table a statement of expenses incurred by Special Committees during the last session of this Parliament the expenses of each committee to be separately stated.

Mr. BOWELL said the information asked for would be found in the Journals of last session, in connection with a motion made by himself, the expenses of each committee being separately stated.

Mr. ROSS said, if the statement of the hon. gentleman was correct, he was willing to withdraw his motion.

The motion was allowed to stand.

PROCEEDINGS OF 31ST MARCH, AND 9TH APRIL, 1874.

Mr. BOWELL moved, That the entry in the journals of this House of 31st of March and 9th of April, 1874, relating to the examination of Attorney-General CLARKE, Detective HAMILTON, and policeman MCVEITY be now read.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON trusted the hon. gentleman would not persist in this motion, after the very explicit declaration from the Government in the afternoon, of their intention to take the initiative in respect to this, and to other matters connected with the difficulties of the North-West to which this motion referred. He believed it was the uniform practice of Parliament whenever the Government avowed their intention to take the initiative in respect to any subject whatever, to leave it in their hands entirely. In this case the leader of the Government had made a statement to the House of what he proposed to do, and he thought there would be a manifest propriety in pursuing the customary course upon this occasion. Of course they could not separate the subject of the hon. gentleman's motion from the other matters relating to the North-West, in respect of which the announcement had been made in the Speech from the Throne, that papers would be laid upon the table, and in respect of which the First Minister had, to-day, declared that he would be in a position to bring them down early. He considered the House was not in a position to deal with the subject, and therefore he would suggest that the hon. gentleman should leave the initiative to the Government.

Mr. BOWELL said it was not his intention to proceed with the other motion, of which he had given notice, at the present time. He could see, however, no impropriety in taking the step that he proposed, of having the journals read in order to prepare this House for a subsequent motion in case the action which the Ministry might take did not accord with what he and those who thought as he did, believed it should be. If the first Minister of the Crown was prepared to say to this House that it was the intention of the Government to take steps to rid this House of an unworthy member, he would leave the entire responsibility to them, and proceed no further. He could not perceive that it would interfere in the least with the course the Ministry intended to pursue, if the Journals were read. It would only place him in a position to take the course he intended and be prepared to make his other motion and bring the matter before the House. The motion for the expulsion of LOUIS RIEL, the member elected in September last for Provencher, would not be moved by him (Mr. BOWELL) until the Government had indicated the course they intended to pursue—until next Thursday. He liked to be prompt in this matter, because the House should act promptly. He was not aware, from reading the authorities, that even if the Government did come down with a proposition for a general amnesty, and it should be HER MAJESTY'S pleasure to grant such amnesty, that the House should allow RIEL to take a seat among them. The authorities were sufficiently clear on this point, and some of the most eminent law officers of the Crown had laid down this principle, that though amnesty and a full pardon might have been granted by HER MAJESTY, such circumstances might have transpired in connection with the crime with which the person was charged, as would justify the House of Commons in expelling him from their midst. He (Mr. BOWELL) mentioned this fact in order that the House might fully understand the position that he, at least, occupied in reference to this matter, and he believed that he spoke the sentiments of a large number, if not a majority, of this House. If he could see the force of the appeal which had been made by the hon. member for Chateauguay, he certainly would allow this matter to stand; but, not having that confidence in the Government which his hon. friend had, he was not prepared, until he knew what their course was to be, to delay placing the House in a position to proceed with the matter. He thought that the House expected, when that return was read by Mr. SPEAKER, that it was the duty of the Government to have at once objected to its reception, and had they done so, it would certainly have met with his (Mr. BOWELL'S) approval. He would have taken such a course himself but for the objection which he thought might possibly have been taken to it, and for that reason he had allowed the matter to remain until now. He intended to follow up this motion with another, to prove to the House that this LOUIS RIEL was the same LOUIS RIEL who was elected in 1872 and expelled from Parliament.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the step which the hon. gentleman proposed to take to-day, and which he said he did not intend to follow up with the other motion, in view of the declaration made by the Government, was an initial step. Now, it was sound doctrine, and the hon. leader of the Opposition would not dissent from it, that when the Ministry had announced their intention to take action in a matter in any way, whether in matters of privilege affecting the House, or matters affecting the country generally, it was the duty of the House to leave the initiative in their hands. Nobody was bound to accept their proposition, but the House was bound to wait the proposition which the Ministry had intimated their intention to lay before the House. As to time, he would point out that no time could possibly be lost by the hon. gentleman waiving the preliminary motion for the present. If he chose to proceed with it as a matter of privilege he could make a motion at any time for reading the Journals. The hon. gentleman had given notice of his intention to make another motion consequent upon this, and he surely would wait before submitting that motion to the House, to see what the action of the Government would be. Clearly by his own argument and by precedent he should wait. He could do so the more readily because as to the question of time it was quite impossible he could lose anything by pursuing that course.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he quite agreed with his hon. friend that, after the announcement of the Government which covered this motion explicitly, the motion might not be pressed for the present.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON,—Yes, quite so.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD—I think, then, my hon. friend had better not press his motion, but let it stand as well as the next motion.

The motion was allowed to stand.

THE LEPINE COMMUTATION.

Mr. SPEAKER read a message from His Excellency the Governor-General, as follows:—

The Governor-General transmits for the information of the House of Commons, copies of a correspondence which has taken place with the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, relating to the commutation of the sentence of death passed on Ambroise Lepine for the murder of Thomas Scott at Fort Garry.

Government House,
February 8, 1875.

Mr. MASSON—Will this meet the motion I have made just now for all the papers?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I told the hon. gentleman that all the papers will be brought down. It does not meet all the hon. gentleman refers to.

Mr. MASSON—Do these papers contain the Judge's charge and the report of the trial?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They do not contain the report of the trial. I think we have the report of the trial and the Judge's charge, and, if so, there is no objection to bringing them down.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—Do these papers include any Orders in Council that passed on the subject?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They include one Order in Council which relates to the troubles.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—Does the return include any with regard to the commutation?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There is no such Order in Council.

REPORTS AND RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD brought down the report of the Geological Survey for 1873-74.

Hon. Mr. VAIL brought down copies of all correspondence, reports and orders between the Militia authorities and the Militia, or any other department in reference to the military movements on the Niagara frontier in the year 1866.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, the House adjourned at 4:30 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, February 9th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at 3 o'clock p. m., and announced that the seat for the constituency of Berthier had been vacated by the appointment of A. H. PAQUETTE to the Senate, and that a new writ had been issued.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE presented the report of the Select Committee appointed to prepare a list of members of the Standing Committees. He said that although it was somewhat irregular, he would, if no objection was taken, propose the adoption of the report without notice, in order that the Committees might get to work as soon as possible. The names proposed on the several Committees were very nearly the same as before, and if there were any omissions they could easily be supplied afterwards.—Report adopted.

MARINE TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE introduced a Bill entitled an Act to regulate the Construction and Maintenance of Marine Telegraph Companies. He explained that this was the same Bill, with very slight alterations, that was introduced last session by the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. BLAKE), and carried through the House. The Government thought they ought to be responsible for such a Bill, and therefore it was now introduced as a Government measure. He had expected to have the Bill ready to lay before the House to-day, but it had not yet been received from the printers. On the second reading he would give full explanations as to the scope of the Bill, and to what had taken place during the recess in reference to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said that he understood from the hon. gentleman that the Bill was the same in substance as that passed last session, the Government feeling it their duty to bring it in as a Government measure and take the responsibility of it. Still he understood that some alterations were proposed and it would be satisfactory for the House to know at the earliest possible moment what those alterations were. His hon. friend knew that the practice in England with regard to all public Bills, certainly with regard to Government Bills, was for the introducer to explain the provisions of the Bill. That was the general rule, though there were exceptions to it. The benefit of this plan was that members were prepared when the Bill came up for the second reading to give due weight and considerations to the arguments of the introducer.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he quite admitted the general rule as stated by his honorable friend, but it was not always possible to follow it, and it was by no means a fixed rule. The only important change in this Bill was a clause providing for the reservation of any rights which might have been in existence with regard to landing cables on Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman was aware that there was a violent opposition to the Bill last Session on the part of one of the Telegraph Companies that profited by the existing state of things. It was asserted by Lord MONK, the Chairman of that Company, that vested rights were seriously interfered with by the Bill, and he was enabled by his personal influence in England to effect a very considerable diversion of public opinion in his favor. The Government had felt bound, therefore, to reserve the Bill for HER MAJESTY'S sanction, and the result was that the Law Officers and the COLONIAL SECRETARY decided the Bill was within the competency of our Parliament. He conceived it was to the interest and honor of this country that it should be enforced, and he had therefore informed his hon. friend from South Bruce that he would prefer taking charge of his Bill as a Government measure, in order that it might have the influence of the Government in passing through the House, and in order also that the Government might assume with respect to it their proper responsibility.

Bill read a first time.

REPEAL OF CHAP. 147, N. S. STATUTES.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to repeal certain provisions of an Act of the Legislature of Nova Scotia." He explained that the object of the Bill was to repeal the first ten sections of Chapter 147 of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, (Third Series,) relating to offences, trespasses and assaults, and felonies committed by persons under fourteen years of age. These provisions had not by inadvertence been repealed by the Criminal Law of 1869, and the Nova Scotia Legislature was not competent to deal with them. The object of the Bill was to repeal them, so that all such offences would come under the provisions of the general criminal law of 1869.

Hon. M. FOURNIER répète en français ce qu'il vient de dire en anglais. Le bill qu'il introduit est pour rappeler le 147me chapitre des statuts revisés de la Nouvelle-Ecosse qui se trouve en contradiction avec la législation fédérale de 1869.

MILITIA AMENDMENT ACT.

Hon Mr. VAIL introduced a Bill to amend the Dominion Militia and Defence Acts. He stated that during the recess the Government had been fortunate in procuring the services of a gentleman of high rank in the Imperial service, and who had great experience in the management of the Militia in other parts of the Empire, and the object of this Bill was to make such changes as were necessary in order to place the Militia of the Dominion under the control of the Major-General. It was also proposed to provide for the appointment of an Adjutant General and to do away with Deputy Adjutants General for the present. These were the only changes proposed.

Bill read a first time.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER introduced a Bill intituled, "An Act to prevent enlistment in the services of any Foreign State in certain cases not provided for by the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870." He explained that the principal object of the Bill was to provide complete and absolute prohibition of enlistment in the service of a foreign State, under any circumstances, covering certain cases to which the Act of 1870 did not apply. The punishment proposed for violation of the Act was not to exceed two years' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, at the discretion of the Court, and a fine not exceeding $200.

Hon. M. FOURNIER répète ses remarques en français en introduisant son bill relatif aux enrôlements. La loi de 1865 ne s'applique qu'aux cas d'une guerre entre deux pays et non pas à certaines parties d'un pays en guerre entre elles ou avec d'autres pays, et reconnues comme belle-gérantes. Il aurait été convenable d'introduire les dispositions du nouveau Bill dans la loi de 1865. Mais il importe de le faire aujourd'hui surtout afin de rendre uniforme la législation sur ce sujet pour les diverses provinces, dont les unes suivent la législation impériale. La nouvelle loi produira dont l'uniformité désirable dans ces matières. Un changement important est introduit par le Bill que je présente. La loi actuelle semble trop rigoureuse lorsqu'elle impose sans alternative une punition de deux ans aux travaux forcés et une amende de $200. La loi telle que modifiée laissera au juge la discrétion de prononcer la sentence de deux ans d'emprisonnement avec ou sans les travaux forcés, plus une pénalité n'excèdant pas $200.

MINISTERIAL EXPLANATION.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said—Mr. SPEAKER,—Before proceeding with the orders of the day, I desire to offer a few words in explanation of the Ministerial changes that have taken place, which I promised on Friday. With reference to the withdrawal of my hon. friend the member for South Bruce from the Government, I have merely to state that his withdrawal was not caused by any change of policy or any difference of opinion as to the policy of the Government, but was dictated solely by considerations personal to the hon. gentleman himself, and does not therefore require to be further alluded to, unless it were to express my own great regret, as well as that of all my colleagues, that my hon. friend did not feel it consistent with his engagements otherwise to continue with us in the Government. I am sure that regret will be shared by gentlemen on both sides of the House. With reference to the other change that took place, prior to the meeting of the House last year, that of the introduction into the Government of Mr. HUNTINGTON as member of the Council and the retirement of Mr. CHRISTIE. Mr. CHRISTIE retired on being appointed President of the Senate, and Mr. HUNTINGTON was invited to join the Administration, as being a gentleman in entire harmony with the Government on its general policy. He accepted that invitation and became a member of the Administration. The chief explanation that I desire to offer to-day is with respect to my hon. friend the late Minister of Justice, who now occupies the post of Chief Justice of Quebec. That hon. gentleman was attacked very severely by the organs of hon. gentlemen opposite, which urged in defence of their attacks, a conversation that had passed across the floor of the House. When the hon. gentleman leading the Opposition accused my hon. friend, then seated beside me, of having in view his elevation to the position of Chief Justice of Quebec, he answered promptly that such a thing had never been contemplated. That, sir, was strictly accurate. It never had been spoken of between the hon. gentleman and myself. On the contrary, knowing that the office would have to be filled very shortly, Mr. DORION suggested to myself three names, some time before that conversation took place, from which he thought the selection ought to be made. After Parliament rose, many friends of the hon. gentleman, and friends of my own, prominent in political life, pressed upon me that it would not only be just and proper, but also in the interest of the judiciary of Lower Canada, that Mr. DORION should receive the offer of this appointment, and a hope was expressed that he would accept it. I never did make that offer to the hon. gentleman until he was gazetted as Chief-Justice, and when I made the offer, he at first declined it, expressing an unwillingness to leave the Government at so early a period after his accession to the Administration ; but after taking twenty-four hours to consider that, and consulting with his friends, the hon. gentleman accepted that office, and I am sure no one, and not the hon. gentleman himself, who sat long with the Chief Justice in Parliament, would for one moment think that that gentleman would be guilty of uttering anything that looked even like an improper remark, far less an evasion of the truth. Sir, while I felt great pain in separating from that hon. gentleman as my chief colleague in the Administration, I felt also it was due to him above all other men in this country that he should receive the offer of the chief Judiciary appointment in his native Province, and I am sure all sides of political opinion will join with me in congratulating the country upon his accession to that position. I felt bound, Sir, in these very few remarks, to justify my hon. friend who is not here, and who cannot be here to speak for himself, and place before the House and the country the real facts in relation to his appointment. The other change that has taken place since then was simply the retirement of Mr. Ross from the position of Minister of Militia, and upon his resignation I offered that post to the present member for Digby, which offer he has accepted. That did not involve any change in any way whatever in the policy or in the opinions of the Administration. I shall be glad if anything further is required that can fairly be asked, to offer to hon. gentlemen opposite and the House the very fullest information that it is proper to give.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said with reference to the Hon. Mr. DORION, the present Chief Justice of Lower Canada, he could only say he deeply regretted that there should be, even in appearance, a want of ingenuousness in his statement to this House. At the time he (SIR JOHN) ventured in this House to state what was the very general impression, he did not do it until after hearing from many sources that Mr. DORION was about to take the position of Chief Justice, and that he was only waiting, as he had a right to wait, until the close of the session before retiring from the Government. He (SIR JOHN) had heard that friends from Montreal had come to Ottawa to press upon Mr. DORION to accept it, and that while he did not announce to them that he was going to take a judicial appointment, it was generally understood he was going to accept the position referred to. Hon gentlemen would remember that he (SIR JOHN) said, in answer to Mr. DORION'S statement, that he did not contemplate accepting a judicial appointment, that the Gazette would show within a fortnight or three weeks whether the report was correct or not. And so it did, for the appointment was gazetted very soon after the close of the session, showing that if the change was not in contemplation when he (SIR JOHN) spoke, it was immediately afterward. However, after the statement just made, he had nothing more to say. Hon. Mr. DORION was a gentleman who had always held a high position and a high character in Canada, and he had no doubt would keep it, but while he regarded him as an ornament to the bench of Lower Canada, he was bound, in all candour, to say he was disappointed in Mr. DORION'S taking the position of Chief Justice. If he had accepted instead, after duly weighing his abilities and disabilities, the Chief Justiceship of the Superior Court, he would have been of much more value than as Chief Justice of Lower Canada. After his long experience in Canada, he had shown that he never paid any attention to criminal law, and never sufficient attention to commercial law. In the Superior Court he would have distinguished himself much better than as chief of a criminal court. Still, he did not say that Mr. DORION, with his abilities and legal and logical mind, would not make a good Chief Justice, and do credit to the position he filled. He thought the explanations with regard to the hon. member for South Bruce were not satisfactory, and he would tell the reason why. It was a matter of very grave importance when a member of Parliament entered an administration, and it was of no less importance when he retired from it. Indeed, the latter was of even graver importance. If the private affairs of a member of Parliament prevent him from accepting office, no one has a right to question the matter. That rests between his friends and party, and himself, but when an hon. gentleman accepts office, it is a matter of very grave consideration to him, and for which he should be held responsible when he retires. After having put his hand to the plough, there should be good reasons for letting it go. Now, there was a peculiarity in this case, and he spoke with a sincere desire that this question should be considered from a constitutional point of view, and without any reference to individuals, but simply to principle. This House would remember, and the country knew that the hon. member for South Bruce, when he entered the Government, very greatly strengthened it. The character he had in the House and the country entitled him to a high position, and he could have selected for himself any position in the Government, except, of course, the leadership, which was in the hands of the GOVERNOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman did give strength to the Cabinet, and, on the strength of a MACKENZIE-BLAKE administration the Government went to the country, and he verily believed that a considerable proportion of the numerical strength and support of this Government was gained by the announcement that the name of the hon. member for South Bruce was included in the administration. If there were any private reasons that would induce him to leave the Government so speedily after the elections, those reasons, it would seem, ought to have been sufficient to prevent him from entering it. But it was really not fair to appeal to the people with one Administration—with one leading man in it, with one man whose name would give confidence to the country and strength to the Government—and, when the elections are over, and the object of taking that leading man into the Cabinet apparently has been obtained, to drop him. It was a sort of false pretence—he spoke in no way offensively—that the Administration which went to the people was not the same which met Parliament in this House. Everyone knew what lawyers termed the principle of "selling by sample." The Administration goes to the country and asks—"Will you buy this article. Here is an excellent article, and one of the strongest claims of this cloth to the good housewife is that there is a strong fibre in it, coming all the way from South Bruce?" And when the people of this country, believing this to be a good kind of cloth, that would stand sun and wind or anything else—when they found that fibre drawn from it immediately after purchasing, it seemed—as the hon. member for South Bruce would observe—that the Government had been guilty of selling under false pretences, and the people would say, "Here we have had pawned off upon us the old brown stuff." Now, he thought the hon. gentleman for South Bruce ought not to have lent himself to this deception. Under the principle of constitutional law, as in private law, a bargain of that kind was not a fair one; but he would say no more upon that point. Then, with regard to the change in Nova Scotia, he could only congratulate the House on getting the services of the hon. member for Digby. He had no doubt the hon. gentleman's previous warlike experience would be of service. He had no doubt the hon. gentleman had accepted office with the greatest diffidence, in view of the great abilities of his predecessor. However, the hon. gentleman's experience and capacity would, no doubt, enable him to distinguish himself as much as his predecessor, the former Minister of Militia. It certainly was a great compliment to the hon. gentleman from Digby that he should be selected to enter the Administration. He (Sir JOHN) did think that there might have been found among the hon. members from Nova Scotia one who would be fitted to fill the office of Minister of Militia—one possessing abilities equal to the late Minister, and almost equal to the present Minister. But the hon. leader of the Government did not appear to think so, and evidently was of the impression that he had selected all the standards and left all the culls when he formed his Cabinet, and that he must go to fresh fields and pastures new for another Minister of Militia. He (Sir JOHN) congratulated the hon. gentleman from Digby, and had no doubt that under him the Militia force would grow and increase in efficiency and numbers—he hoped not too much in expense. By the way, he noticed by the Bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Militia that Major Generals were to be of considerable importance. He directed the attention of the hon. member for Cheateauguay to this feature of the Bill, and he would like to ask him whether he thought the relations of Canada with the nations of the world were in such a condition as to require Major Generals in larger force. He had no further remarks to make on this point, but really he thought, in all seriousness, it would be well that there should be a full discussion upon the fact of the hon. member for South Bruce having accepted a position in the Government, holding office without a portfolio, and being a confidential adviser before the elections, and immediately after the elections retiring from the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the observations of the hon. gentleman scarcely called for any reply, nor were they intended to evoke any reply. With reference to the connection of the hon. member for South Bruce with the Government, he might say that it was not unnatural for an Administration to strengthen themselves as far as possible, especially against such a formidable combination as they had been obliged to face.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD—But what about the false pretenses?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There is no false pretenses in the matter on our side. If the hon. gentleman is judging from a sample, I fear it is from a sample on the other side.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said the Premier had accepted the position in which the Right Hon. member for Kingston had placed him—that the object of taking the hon. member for South Bruce into the Government was to strengthen it for the purpose of facing the electors. Now, the morality of such a thing was questionable.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the House would, no doubt, be disposed to listen to two such worthy exponents of public morality as the hon. members for Kingston and Northumberland. He (Mr. BLAKE) had been accused of being something like a legal fraud. All he had to say was that when he went to the country with his friends, he addressed a great many of his fellow-countrymen, and he acquainted them at an early day—and among them his own constituents—with the fact, which was public property so far as such a thing could fairly be public property, that his connection with the Administration, from circumstances beyond his own control, was of a temporary character. He did not permit, them, so far as his utterances could prevent it, to entertain the idea that he had joined the Administration under circumstances which enabled him to continue any time with them.

INTERNAL MANAGEMENT OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SPEAKER read a message from HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, signed by his own hand, announcing the appointment of the Hon. ALEXANDER MACKENZIE, Minister of Public Works, the Hon. TELESPHORE FOURNIER, Minister of Justice, the Hon. ISAAC BURPEE, Minister of Customs, the Hon. THOMAS COFFIN, Receiver-General, and Mr. SPEAKER, as Commissioners for the Internal Economy of the House of Commons and for other purposes.

THE LEPINE COMMUTATION.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD before the orders of the day were called, inquired if the despatches promised yesterday by the First Minister, containing the correspondence with the Imperial authorities on the LEPINE commutation, had been distributed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the printers had promised to have them distributed to-day by 3 o'clock, and he understood that some of them were already in the hands of members.

DRILL SHED AT TORONTO.

Mr. WILKES inquired whether the Government purposed to place in the Estimates a sum of money sufficient to erect a suitable armoury and drill-shed for the use of the volunteer force in the City of Toronto, the Corporation having set apart a site for such building.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the matter was commanding the consideration of the Government. Providing a Drill Shed and Armouries involved considerable expense, and on this ground it would probably be a few days before he would be able to give his hon. friend the necessary information.

ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that when the House adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until Thursday at three o'clock in the afternoon.—Carried.

The House adjourned at four o'clock.

——:++:——

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, February 11th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at 3 p.m.

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) moved, That a Message be sent to the Senate, requesting that their Honours will unite with this House in the formation of a Joint Committee of both Houses, on the subject of printing.—Carried.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Mr. YOUNG moved, That the Public Accounts for the Dominion of Canada, for the year ending 30th June, 1874, and the statement of unforeseen expenses, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.—Carried.

RAILWAY ACT.

Mr. OLIVER moved for leave to introduce a Bill intituled "An Act to amend the General Railway Act." He explained that this Bill was similar to the one he introduced last session on the same subject, and stated that when it was printed he would fully explain it, if any explanations were then desired.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD observed that if they waited till the Bill was printed for explanations, they would then, in all probability, be unnecessary, as no doubt the Bill would be framed in a sufficiently perspicuous manner as to explain itself. It would be better to explain briefly its provisions now, so that the House might be prepared to deal with it when it came up for a second reading.

Mr. OLIVER said that as an explanation was requested at the present stage, he would state that for a long time people living at points where there was no railway competition had suffered great injustice. He could best illustrate this and explain the object of this Bill by stating the position they occupied in his own section of the country. The freight charged on goods from London to Hamilton, Toronto, or the American markets was considerably less than it was from a point fifty miles nearer the destination, when there was no competition. It was the same with regard to passenger rates. It was to remedy this injustice that he had introduced this Bill, the principal provision of which was that when a railway company made a reduction or an increase in their rate, that reduction or increase should apply to all points on the railway. This, he considered, was a just provision, and he had no doubt when the Bill came up for a second reading it would receive the support of a large majority of the House.

Bill read a first time.

REGULATION OF RAILWAY TRAFFIC.

Mr. IRVING moved for leave to introduce a Bill intituled "An Act for the more effectual protection of carriers by land, and for the regulation of traffic throughout the Dominion." The object of the Bill, he might briefly explain, was, if possible, to change the present unsatisfactory condition of the law with respect to carriers by land, and put them on the same footing as they had occupied in England during the last twenty years. In Ontario the Judges had several times exclaimed against the present system, whereby carriers on improper occasions exonerated themselves from all liability. He had seen occasionally notices in the newspapers of the Province of Quebec to the same effect. He therefore thought there was good reason for legislation on the subject. The Dominion Parliament, three or four years ago, made an attempt to legislate thereon but legislated ineffectually. An amendment to the General Railway Law was passed by the House, stating that the railway companies should not thereafter take advantage of notices or conditions to save themselves from the results of negligence, but when that law came to be tested in the Courts of Ontario, the Judges ruled that it did not apply to the Act which it proposed to amend—namely, the General Railway Act. The Dominion Board of Trade, composed of merchants who had felt the grievance, were favourable to legislation on the subject. The Bill which he proposed to introduce, and which he thought would receive the favourable consideration of every one interested in the commerce of the country, was divided into two branches. First, it introduced what was called in England the Carriers' Act, which was a very great boon to carriers in that it prevented them from being made liable beyond a certain sum for goods in respect to which they had no knowledge. Secondly, it provided that no special contracts or conditions should be made or set up by carriers to clear themselves from the results of their own neglect, unless the Judge who tried the case should certify that they were just and reasonable. That was a very proper protection, and it could not be exercised capriciously or unjustly, inasmuch as the judgment of the court was subject to appeal, and in England it had now been systematised to being a pretty well understood rule.

The Bill was read a first time.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS DURING TRANSIT.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for leave to introduce a bill intituled "An Act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railway or other means of communication throughout the Dominion."

The Bill was read a first time.

THE CONSTITUTION OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON moved certain changes in the Constitution of the Standing Committees of the House.

After a conversation, the following changes and additions were made: Mr. IRVING was struck off the Committee on Public Accounts and Mr. WOOD substituted therefor. Messrs. IRVING, YOUNG, D. A. MACDONALD, DEVLIN, CIMON, and DESJARDINS were added to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. Messrs. WILKES, OUIMET and CARON were added to the Committee on Public Accounts; and Messrs. PLUMB and SHIBLEY to the Committee on Railways and Telegraphs.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE brought down a message from HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, acknowledging the receipt of the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

THE CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

Mr. IRVING (Hamilton) introduced a Bill intituled, "An Act to Repeal the Act amending the Criminal Law relating to violence, threats and molestations." He said this subject was before Parliament last Session, when a Select Committee was appointed on the subject. They reported that the present condition of the law was unsatisfactory, but they recommended that legislation should not take place until the subject had been dealt with by the Imperial Parliament; it then having been understood that a Royal Commission was appointed to investigate it. That Royal Commission had not reported either to the satisfaction of persons affected by the Act in England, or persons whom it affected in this country. The law was considered obnoxious to numbers of his own constituents, and also to constituents of his hon. friend from West Toronto, who fearing that the subject might be shelved in England, desired that the matter should be brought before Parliament this Session. They desired the abrogation of a law obnoxious to them, leaving it to this House to introduce such subsequent legislation as, by the aid of the Imperial Parliament, might be deemed necessary.

The Bill was read a first time.

POSTAL DELIVERY.

Mr. IRVING asked whether it is the intention of the Government to establish at an early period a system of free delivery of letters and postal matter in the cities of the Dominion, in the same manner as that now in force in Montreal?

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—It is the intention of the Government to establish free delivery, with the exception of two or three of the smallest cities of the Dominion.

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE.

Mr. IRVING asked whether it is the intention of the Government to modify or abolish postal charges upon newspapers published in the Dominion?

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—It is the intention of the Government to bring in a Bill on the subject, reducing the postage on newspapers.

PUBLIC WORKS ON THE SAGUENAY.

Mr CIMON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to cause to be executed in the River Saguenay, at the place where it is called Bras de Chicoutimi, the works necessary to enable vessels to reach Chicoutimi in all states of the tide?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is quite impossible for me to answer so general a question. I cannot understand what the works the hon. gentleman refers to mean. If he will be kind enough to put it in a more specific form, I will be glad to give an answer at a future day.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILROADS.

Mr. CIMON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to promote in the Dominion of Canada, by means of subsidies, the construction of those lines of Railway which receive grants from the Local Legislatures?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to subsidize such lines.

DOMINION NOTES.

Mr. F. MACKENZIE asked whether it is the intention of the Government to replace by a new issue the worn and soiled Dominion Notes.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—So far as the small note circulation in the city of Montreal is concerned, instructions have been issued to the Deputy Receiver General in that city not to allow any such notes to go into circulation, and also to exchange any notes worn and soiled which may be presented to him by banks or individuals for clean fresh notes. As regards other places throughout the Dominion, an arrangement is being made which will, I hope, obviate the inconvenience complained of.

CORRECTION OF HANSARD REPORTS.

The Orders of the Day having been called,

Mr. MASSON said he desired to call the attention of the Printing Committee to a subject in connection with the printing of the Official Report of the debates, which was of great importance, seeing that this report would be regarded as an authoritative one for all time. He referred to the necessity of providing some means whereby any mistakes that might be made could be corrected. He fully appreciated the difficult and onerous duties which devolved upon the short-hand-writers, and as regards himself he had only a trifling error or two to complain of, but it was as well to provide for correcting mistakes, as more serious errors might occur in the future. He had been made to say in the Hansard report—"Notwithstanding the humiliation that he will have to bear, whether he remains patriot in his country or an exile forever;" whereas what he did say was—"Whether he remains a Pariah in his country." Then he held that when an interruption was made to a speaker that interruption should be reported, or otherwise the remarks which would follow would not have their full force and meaning. For instance he was reported to have said,—"Notwithstanding the verdict of a packed jury—I hold myself responsible for every word I say." That expression standing alone appeared like boasting. He had said, "I hold myself responsible for every word I say," because some members of the House had cried, "no, no," and "hear, hear." These were small mistakes, and he probably would not have called attention to them were it not to suggest the necessity of providing some means whereby mistakes which might occur might be corrected before the reports were distributed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it would be remembered that this matter was referred to the Printing Committee which was not yet organized. As soon as they met they would no doubt submit some regulations respecting the correction of speeches. The practice in England had been to allow verbal corrections, but no interpolations. He did not make any suggestion to the Committee, but he had no doubt they would bring the matter before the House at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) said his attention had been called to some typographical errors in the report, but no regulations could be made until the Committee met. All that so far had been done was to agree that the speeches should be printed, so far as was necessary, in order to comply with the terms of the contract, and at the same time be condensed in such a manner as not to destroy the meaning of any speech. No doubt when the Committee met they would take the matter into consideration, and he hoped that in the future there would be no cause for complaint.

THE NORTH-WEST TROUBLES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he rose with great willingness in one sense, and a good deal of tremor in another sense, to move the resolution of which he had given notice respecting the granting of an amnesty for acts committed during the troubles in the North-West. He hoped to be able to justify to the House the course which the Government had pursued in this matter, as he did not doubt he would be able to justify it to the country. He was quite aware that there were certain parties who might endeavour for political and party purposes to make capital out of the existing events, and so far as that was legitimately done he had no reason to complain. He expected no exemption from ordinary criticism, and he was quite prepared to defend the motives and the action of the Government in everything that they brought before the House. They had at present to deal with an exceptional state of affairs—one that perhaps might not arise again in the lifetime of any of the members—and that state of affairs had been brought about by no action of the present Government, or of a single member of it, or of a single member of the great Party which he was privileged to lead in this House. But for all that the Government, as a Government, had a duty to perform. There might be frequent changes of administration in the country, but the Government always exists, and is bound to carry on the affairs of the country consistently with those principles of honor and national character which bind every Administra tion, no matter of what Party they may be composed. When the events took place in the North-West, which had given rise to the discussion preceding this motion, and which furnished the necessity for this motion at the present time, the right hon. gentleman opposite had taken certain steps in reference to the acquisition of the North-West, and to the organisation of its Government, which were not sanctioned by the then comparatively small party in this House—the Liberal party. That party then held that the measures that were being taken by the Government for organizing that territory, were such as were sure to produce a certain measure of discontent. He did not allege that as a justification for succeeding events, because he considered that no mere act or fault on the part of the Government of the day could have justified the insurrection and its consequences. But while the thing might not be justified, there might be palliations afforded by circumstances which they were bound to consider, and in the consideration of this motion, he was bound to refer to the provocation which the people in the North-West Territory had received for resisting what they considered a grievous act on the part of the Government of this country. So far as that resistance was of a peaceful and not violent kind, he confessed he had himself some sympathy with them; and he also confessed that had their acts been confined to expressing a strong sense of their indignation at certain things that were done, they would have found, perhaps, a very general response in the hearts of members of the then House, as they would have found in the present House, but these acts were followed up by acts of lawless violence—acts which he had previously characterized in this House, and which he did not hesitate now to characterise as he had then done—acts entirely at variance with all that seemed to him right—acts of cruelty and wrong which he did not at this moment desire at all to palliate. But succeeding events had changed very materially the relations of that people to the people of this country, and to the Government of the Dominion — it was supposed by many—he did not say it was the case, because he never could believe that it could be so. It was believed by many, and said by some in this House, that there was a preconcerted arrangement with the then Administration as to certain events whch took place; but up to the time that Committee met on the North-West difficulties last session, we had no detailed account of events in anything like consecutive order; nor had we a revelation of the private correspondence which was ultimately produced upon that day in order to express more fully the motives as well as the actions of those who ruled here, and of those whom they sent to represent them there. That revelation was sufficiently complete for the purpose of an ultimate decision being arrived at when that Committee rose. The late Administration referred the whole subject, on the 4th June, 1873, to the Imperial Government, representing that it was the best qualified to deal with this question of amnesty. Lord KIMBERLEY, in his reply, combatted this idea, but accepted the responsibility of granting the amnesty, provided that no action would be taken until the precise course to be pursued by the Dominion authorities was made known. This was the last action of an official nature by the late Government, and when the present Administration consented to the motion of the hon. the member for Selkirk for a committee of enquiry, it was with the view of obtaining all the information possible in order to enable them to arrive at a proper decision in the premises. He had not himself been able, from the pressure of the business of the House, to give any attention to the deliberations of the Committee during the session, and except from occasional scraps of conversation, he was not able to obtain what had really been done during the sitting. When the entire evidence was printed, however, it became tolerably clear that nothing was more natural than that the Imperial Government should obtain a copy of the testimony as early as possible, and that they should again be solicited to pass judgment upon the case with the whole of the facts before them. This course the present Administration took, and as would be seen by the Order in Council which was before the House, they again called the attention of the Imperial Government to the subject. The answer to that communication was practically given in Lord CARNARVON'S despatch in which there were several points that he would now desire to call the attention of the House to—not perhaps in their proper consecutive order, but in such a way as to lay the whole subject before the House as shortly, and at the same time, as fairly as possible. He believed there was no necessity for any lengthened exposition of the matter, and besides he was afraid that his voice would fail him before he got through. The first step he conceived to have been wrong on the part of the late Administration was the recognition of the authority of the insurrectionary party of Manitoba. That authority once recognized, the Government was placed in the difficulty he foresaw at the time, and to which he called the attention of the right hon. member for Kingston at the time. It would be remembered that he then asked the right hon. gentleman if the Government intended to recognize the delegates, and was told in reply that the Government were bound to hear the expression of opinion of any one who came from that country, but they need not formally recognize them as coming from the Provisional Government. He found, however, that they had given this recognition, and we had the fact laid before us in the letter of the late Hon. Mr. HOWE, addressed to Father RICHOT, Mr. JOHN BLACK and Mr. ALFRED SCOTT, as follows:—

"OTTAWA, April 26th, 1870.

"GENTLEMEN,—I have to acknowledge the "receipt of your letter of the 22nd instant, "stating that as delegates from the North-West "to the Government of the Dominion of Can- "ada, you are desirous of having an early audi- "ence with the Government, and am to inform "you in reply that the Hon. Sir JOHN A. MAC- "DONALD and Sir GEO. ET. CARTIER have been "authorized by the Government to confer with "you on the subject of your mission, and will "be ready to receive you at eleven o'clock.

"I have the honor to be,

"Gentlemen,

"Your most obdt. servant,

"(Signed,) JOSEPH HOWE."

Not only was the existence of the Provisional Government recognized in this matter, but it was an absolute fact that the authority of RIEL himself as Governor of the territory, was also acknowledged, if we were to believe the evidence set before us. There was no reason to doubt the entire truthfulness of the ARCHBISHOP in giving his evidence. In the first place because of his high ecclesiastical position and personal character, and in the second place because there was no motive to justify any misrepresentation upon the subject. The ARCHBISHOP said, as will be found on page 77 of the blue book:—

"I then asked Sir GEORGE who was to govern the country, pending the arrival of the Lieut. Governor, and if he was to name somebody to do so. He answered, "No, let Mr. RIEL con- "tinue to maintain order and govern the coun- "try as he has done up to the present moment."

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD enquired what the date of the interview was?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was the 28th May, at all events the date was a small matter, as the circumstance referred to took place after the military expedition had been determined upon, and in the interval between the starting of the expedition and the assumption of temporary authority by General WOLSELY, pending the arrival of Governor ARCHIBALD. The evidence goes on to say:—

"He asked me if I thought that RIEL was sufficiently powerful to maintain order. I said I thought he was. Then he answered, "Let "him continue till the Governor arrives." He also inquired whether Mr. RIEL would require that the Governor should take authority as his successor. I answered that he would not; that his Government was only a provisional one, and that he would immediately withdraw when the representative of HER MAJESTY arrived. "Very "well," said Sir GEORGE; "let him be at the "head of his people to receive the Governor."

This gentleman who had usurped authority, and whom the right hon. gentleman opposite some years after this was exceedingly anxious to catch, was apparently duly authorized by Sir GEORGE CARTIER to continue the administration of the affairs of the country as Governor, and was asked through the ARCHBISHOP to meet the new Governor and receive him at the head of his people. The House might be told, and he had no doubt would be told, that Sir GEORGE CARTIER, who unfortunately was not here, had no authority to speak on behalf of the Administration. In order to place this beyond dispute, we had only to refer to Sir JOHN MACDONALD'S own evidence. He said that the correspondence relating to the North-West, of a confidential and inconfidential character, were carried on with Sir JOHN himself until his illness, after which they were carried on with Sir GEORGE CARTIER. During the examination before the Committee, it transpired that there was a private memoranda written by Sir GEORGE CARTIER, and signed by HIS EXCELLENCY, in regard to which the right hon. member for Kingston had addressed HIS EXCELLENCY, suggesting that it might be published. In reply, he received a communication from HIS EXCELLENCY, in which the passage occurs :—

"As, however, Sir GEORGE is dead, and as he drew up the memorandum in question in his capacity of acting Minister of Justice, and as your locum tenens during your absence and illness, I believe I shall be acting in accordance with the rule recognized under such circumstances, in granting the permission you seek, to have the document in question communicated to the Committee, for which I have therefore given the necessary directions."

That clearly disposes of two points—in the first place that there was an actual recognition of a de facto Government. Lord CARNARVON tells us that there can be no such thing as a recognition of a de facto Government within HER MAJESTY'S dominions. Technically, perhaps constitutionally, this may be right; still it is not to be denied that these people exercised authority, and were the de facto Government of the country, although legally and constitutionally they had no right to appear there in that character. But they found the Administration, who were responsible for the peace of the country, acknowledging the existence of this Government by, in the first place, formally recognizing their delegates and conferring with them; and, secondly, by the acting PREMIER actually giving directions that the President of the Provisional Government should hand over his authority in person to the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR when he should reach that country. Now, it was tolerably evident that when these transactions were occurring—he meant these conversations with Sir GEORGE CARTIER and ARCHBISHOP TACHE—it was quite evident that everything connected with the death of SCOTT was perfectly known and understood; the responsibility for it could not be shifted, none of the incidents connected with the tragic death of SCOTT could be changed for a moment, and Sir GEORGE CARTIER, during this time, was acting with the perfect understanding that this matter had to come up sooner or later. Now, they found, as one of the next incidents, that promises of amnesty were given most profusely. It was true that Lord CARNARVON and HIS EXCELLENCY in his despatches both asserted that there was no proof in these documents of "promise of amnesty having been made—an absolute promise, either by HER MAJESTY'S Imperial representative or those acting for him here." Now, while this was technically true to some extent perhaps—it was true so far as Sir JOHN YOUNG was concerned—it was a mere evasion of the truth to say no promise was made in any quarter that an amnesty was to be given. The evidence in this point was so abundant that he would be under the necessity of reading extracts from it, in order to lay the exact facts before the House. Now, one word before proceeding to read the evidence of promises made by gentlemen administering the Government. It was quite true what was said in the Imperial despatch of HIS EXCELLENCY that such promises would not bind the Imperial Government, but he (Mr. MACKENZIE) conceived it was not to be said that promises made in this matter by the previous Administration, sustained by the previous Parliament, must not command a certain amount of respect from the present Administration and the present Parliament. On the contrary, he thought they were bound, as HIS EXCELLENCY EARL DUFFERIN laid down, to consider these promises. He would paraphrase the passage from the blue book: "We are bound to consider all such promises; not to have them made binding upon the House merely in a technical sense, but to give them a fair and literal interpretation." This Government was equally responsible, in one sense, for the conclusion of present affairs, with the Imperial Government, and this Government was bound from its knowledge of the local circumstances when perhaps the Imperial Government would not feel itself so bound. He would feel, therefore, under the necessity of proceeding to quote from the evidence laid before the House in the blue book. Bishop TACHE left Rome early in January at the instance of the Dominion Government, in order to proceed on a mission of pacification to the North-West. He left unwillingly, because he considered he had not been very kindly treated on his way from that country to the East at the time when the disturbances were anticipated, but had not actually broken out. Bishop TACHE in his evidence before the North-West Committee, published in page 39 of the blue book, says :—

"In my conversation with him I questioned Sir GEORGE CARTIER about Father RICHOT's report. I stated as fully as possible what Father RICHOT had told me, and Sir GEORGE CARTIER said that is exactly what has taken place. Directly afterwards I said to Sir GEORGE CARTIER, that Father RICHOT had stated to me that when he was with the delegates of the Government, Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD and Sir GEORGE CARTIER, who had been appointed to negotiate with the delegates of the North-west, he brought forward the 19th clause of the Bill of Rights, and stated it was the sine qua non of an agreement between them and the Canadian Government. The delegates of the Government answered the North-west delegates, that the thing would be settled afterwards, and that it was the privilege of HER MAJESTY the QUEEN, and not for the Canadian Government to grant an amnesty. The delegates of the Provisional Government replied, "We are come to treat "with you, and are to decide with you what "course is to be taken." Then Sir GEORGE CARTIER or Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said: "We will show you how to proceed to obtain "what you require." "No," replied Mr. RICHOT, "I am to deal with nobody but you. "If you are not in a position to decide the whole "matter, I will go home. I came to settle the "difficulty with the Government, and having "received my instructions, I cannot proceed "except the proposals are in accordance with "the instructions I have received." Then the delegates of the Government answered Mr. RICHOT and the other delegates of the North-west, that they were in a positiou to guarantee the granting of an amnesty, and to assure them that the amnesty would be proclaimed, and would reach the country before they did. They further said that they would wait till the passing of the bill they were going to prepare, before they made the proclamation.

"The delegates from the North-West considered there was nothing further to be done upon this point. That is what I reported to Sir GEORGE as having been the statement of Father RICHOT to the people of Manitoba. Sir GEORGE said: "That is true; the thing has not "been changed. We are waiting for the pro-"clamation every day, and if you remain for a "few weeks, it will arrive before you leave."

He proceeds:

"Sir GEORGE CARTIER was in Montreal, and Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD was sick and could not attend to business. So next morning I started for Montreal, where I saw Sir GEORGE E. CARTIER; I had many interviews with him, and I asked him if the report of Father RICHOT was correct, and he said it was."

Sir JOHN MACDONALD desired the hon. gentleman to mention to the House the fact that he (SIR JOHN) was taken ill on 6th May, and was ill all summer.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am quite aware of that, and if the hon. gentleman merely wishes to avoid personal responsibility—

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—No, no; I want the fact stated.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, in reply, said he had stated at the early part of his remarks that Sir GEORGE CARTIER was formally, and by seniority in the Council, appointed and entitled to act as the locum tenens of the Premier. There was another point. It was said—supposing it were true that a promise of amnesty had been made. Was that promise to cover everything? It must be noticed that when this conversation took place, SCOTT had been dead for several months, and all the events were known. But the truth was that before Archbishop TACHE went up at all, he claimed in his evidence that he was authorized to offer an amnesty for proximate events, as he appeared to have pointed out that it was quite possible that something might happen before he could reach there. Archbishop TACHE said, on page 18:

"I understood from the tenor of the conversation that the amnesty would apply to acts committed after that date (I mean the date of the conversation) as well as before; in fact that it should apply to all acts up to the time of my arrival, provided that the people should consent to unite with Canada. One of the ministers, Sir GEORGE CARTIER, said to me:—"The Gov-"ernment has made many mistakes, and we "cannot be surprised that the population should "make some mistakes upon their side. Assure "them that the disposition of the Government "towards them is such that they may rely upon "us with perfect security."

Now, on the same page, the evidence proceeded:

"Any other conversation I had was with Sir JOHN MACDONALD, who again impressed me with the necessity of informing the people of the good intentions of the Government towards them. I said to him then, "This is all very "well, but there have been acts committed "which are blameworthy, and there may be some "others before my arrival there. May I promise "them an amnesty." He answered me:—"Yes, "you may promise it to them." I subsequently asked him to give me in writing the substance of the conversation that had passed between us. This was before I left Ottawa. It was then that Sir JOHN MACDONALD wrote me the letter dated the 16th February, 1870."

That letter would not be found to carry out the ipsissima verba of that report of the conversation. There was another remarkable matter connected with this point of the subject. The ARCHBISHOP, after going up to the North-West, acting as the delegate of this Government, returned to Canada, and it was after he came back that some of the conversation took place. He was invited by Sir GEORGE CARTIER to accompany him to Niagara. They travelled a certain distance together. It was pressed on the ARCHBISHOP that it would be better for him to pass through the States ; he landed at Oswego, travelled overland to Buffalo, and went from Buffalo to Niagara. While at Niagara he endeavored to obtain the assurance of HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in the sense of confirming the promise he had obtained from HIS EXCELLENCY'S advisers, and it was while there he obtained the first hint, he tells us, that, even if an amnesty should be proclaimed, it was likely that a distinction must be made between some of those concerned in the Red River difficulties. He said in his evidence :—

I drew the attention of Sir GEORGE CARTIER to this observation of Mr. TURVILLE'S. I took him aside, and said : "What is the meaning of this?" Sir GEORGE CARTIER replied, "Mr. TURVILLE is a nice man, but he knows nothing about these matters, so you need not be uneasy about what he says." That satisfied me that the amnesty had not been withdrawn, but the statement gave me a little uneasiness on that point. So afterwards, when I again met Sir GEORGE, I again spoke about Mr. TURVILLE'S observation, when he gave me about the same answer, and assured me there was no danger to be apprehended for any one of those concerned in the troubles. He also assured me that the amnesty would come soon, and that it would be of an absolute and general character."

Father RICHOT'S evidence was also exceedingly explicit upon this point. He said :

"I left Red River on the 24th of March, 1870, [this was twenty days after the murder of SCOTT], and arrived in Ottawa on the 11th April. We had interviews with two members of the Canadian Government, who were delegated by their colleagues to treat with us.

Father RICHOT next spoke of the interview, and said :

"I was in company with Mr. BLACK. This was on the 23rd. The amnesty was then treated of. We treated of matters in general, but I said the first thing was the amnesty, and that without it nothing could be done. Sir JOHN was present at the time. The hon. gentleman told me that the amnesty did not rest with Canada, but that they would find means to arrange the matter. Sir GEORGE said these were only preparatory interviews with a view to arranging the matter."

Further on witness proceeds :

"I was with Mr. BLACK ; Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD and Sir GEORGE CARTIER were present. The interview took place at Sir GEORGE'S house. They told me these interviews were semi-official. The hon. gentleman wished on that day to treat for arrangements, but I refused, complaining that I had no written acknowledgment of my position as delegate, and I desired to know with whom I was to communicate. I desired to know how I was looked upon. The hon. gentleman said I was sufficiently recognized by what had taken place and what had been said in the House. I then insisted on having a written acknowledgment of my status. The amnesty was spoken of on the 25th."

It would be observed by the House that Mr. HOWE'S letter was dated 26th April, thus showing that the Government, in the first place, endeavored to treat with the delegates without recognizing their status, but Father RICHOT insisted on that being done prior to negociations being entered upon. Accordingly, Mr. HOWE wrote the letter of the following day. Father RICHOT, in his evidence, said :—

"I said we might speak on it, but we could settle nothing definitely as to that matter. I said the sine qua non of an agreement was a general amnesty. The Hon. Ministers said they would give me an answer on the following day. They also said we give you the means of obtaining an amnesty, but they did not state positively what those means were."

On page 71 of the blue book Father RICHOT'S evidence is as follows :

"The Minister said in reply to our questions that they were in a position to assure us that an amnesty would be granted immediately after the passing of the Manitoba Bill. The nineteenth clause of our instructions is as follows :—

"That all debts contracted by the Provis-"ional Government of the Territory of the "North-West, now called Assiniboia, in conse-"quence of illegal and unconsidered measures "adopted by Canadian Officials to bring about "a civil war in our midst, be paid out of the "Dominion Treasury ; and that none of the " Members of the Provincial Government or "any of those acting under them be in any way "held liable or responsible with regard to the "movement or any of the actions which led to " the present negociations. "

That 19th clause was referred to in Father RICHOT'S evidence as the sine qua non. He then proceeds :

"I asked that this clause should form part of the Bill, but they replied that it was not expedient that it should form part of the Bill, inasmuch as the Bill belonged to the House, while the amnesty was a matter for the administration. I asked for a written assurance, but they answered that it was not necessary, and that we might trust to their word. They also said there would be no difficulty whatever, with regard to the amnesty, and that it was a matter which rested with the Crown. We then went on discussing the other matters of our mission. That was all that was then said with regard to the amnesty. They did not speak at all with regard to the proclamation of December 6th, 1869. They told me it would be an insult to HER MAJESTY if they gave me a written guarantee. They said that if a written promise of the amnesty were required before the passing of the Manitoba Bill it would be imposing conditions on the Crown."

The witness goes on to state :

"The next interview was on the 30th. The three delegates met Sir GEORGE CARTIER ; Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD was still ill. We spoke of the amnesty. Immediately after the interview I took notes of what had been said. I made notes after all our interviews. The note referring to the interview of the 30th is as follows :—"A word about the amnesty all in the same sense." I remember Sir GEORGE told me not to be uneasy, for everything would be granted as it had been promised."

Again he says :

"After the interview with the GOVERNOR GENERAL and Sir CLINTON MURDOCH, I had an interview with Sir GEORGE CARTIER, who asked me if I had not been content with the results of the interview which I had just had with HIS EXCELLENCY and Sir CLINTON. I told him I was sufficiently pleased if what they stated regarding the granting of the amnesty were put in writing. Sir GEORGE then replied the British Government and the Government of Canada would treat our people like spoiled children, and give them more than they expected."

Then, further on, there is the following evidence on page 77, as part of the conversation that took place during the interview on the 28th :

The resume of what Sir GEORGE told me is this, "You have obtained all you desired ; "your amnesty will be proclaimed ; it will be "there before the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR "arrives. In the meantime tell your people "to remain quiet and to fear nothing. * * * "* * * * * I told him that I had expected myself to bring a proclamation of amnesty with the Manitoba Act. He told me that what I had was equivalent to the proclamation of an amnesty, as an amnesty would arrive before any other authority in the North-West, and that meanwhile RIEL was master and had nothing to complain of. I saw Sir GEORGE several times. He said he had a very plain reason for not giving me any more definite written statements, which was that the Canadian Government could not give the amnesty themselves ; that the proclamation of the Governor was sufficient, and that he could not give a better one. The reason he gave me to sign the petition myself to the QUEEN, was in order that the Government and the Governor might not be compromised. He told me that on account of the excitement of feeling it was advisable to take all the means possible, which would arrive at the same end without exciting prejudices ; that in a country like this, where there were different interests and several parties, provided you arrived at the same end, it was advisable to take those means which would least run counter to the opinions of some of the people. That secondly, the means he was taking to have the amnesty proclaimed was the safest and quickest way of obtaining the desired result without creating dissatisfaction ; that by all that had occurred in our interviews, I should see that their own interests more than ours were to have an amnesty proclaimed ; that they had commenced the grand work of Confederation ; that without amnesty all their work would be lost, and that the people in the North-West were to remain tranquil until the amnesty should arrive."

* * * * * * *

"I told Sir GEORGE that I believed what he said, but was very anxious to have it believed up there. Then he said, "Assure RIEL and his "followers that the amnesty will certainly be "granted, and that if he wishes to reflect he will "see that we have more interest than he in "granting the amnesty."

Mr. MACKENZIE said he must apologize to the House for entering so much into detail, but he wished to point out that it was not a stray expression, not a mere remembrance of words dropped in conversation, but by a continuous line of conversations and successive and continuous interviews, it was the sole subject of discussion; that there was no possibility of being mistaken, and that the evidence showed conclusively that those people were led to believe that what they asked would undoubtedly be granted. But besides, we have in Father RICHOT'S affidavit, sworn on 19th November, 1873. He says:—

"On the 26th April, 1870, the negotiations were begun by taking into consideration the list of rights brought by the delegates, and which has served as the basis for the Manitoba Act ; that besides the Manitoba Act, &c., agreeably to the nineteenth section of the list of rights, the delegates demanded, as a sine qua non of the arrangements, a general amnesty for all acts done or authorized by the Provisional Government."

And then he declares in the affidavit:—

"That the Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD and Sir GEO. E. CARTIER, after stating that the amnesty did not rest with the Government of Ottawa, declared that they were in a position to assure us that it was the intention of HER MAJESTY to grant the amnesty, and that they would take upon themselves to proclaim it, that in fact it would be proclaimed immediately after the passing of the Manitoba Act."

He merely quoted that affidavit although it was a repetition of the evidence given by Father RICHOT, in order to show that when under oath that reverend gentleman made precisely the same statement as when he gave his evidence. Then the House had a corroborative statement in the evidence of Mr. GIRARD. It would be observed that the delegates, returning to Manitoba, proclaimed far and near to their people, in order to reassure them, the good intentions of the Government towards the people of the North-West; that the promise of amnesty was as full and complete as anything could be, and there was no reason to doubt the good faith of the Government in the matter. Mr. GIRARD, after stating that he wrote to Sir GEORGE CARTIER in the Fall of 1870, proceeded to say:—

"In these letters I described the condition of the country, and urged strongly upon Sir GEORGE the necessity for an amnesty.

"I received answers to several of these letters—I think to all of them. His answer was to request me to be sure that the amnesty would come. Tell your people to remain quiet and keep order.

"I wrote to Sir GEORGE as well in my capacity of a minister as the sole representative of the French element; and also as a friend. I have not those answers from Sir GEORGE here; they are at Winnipeg. In these letters to me he remarked also when recommending quiet, that the enemies of the people would be gratified if they put themselves in the wrong by acting otherwise, and so deprive themselves of the benefit of their position. He desired me to tell them to adhere to their duty and that the amnesty would inevitably come."

At the same interview, promises were made with respect to the expenditure by the insurrectionary leaders, and there was no question now of the fact that the late Administration did promise absolutely to pay the Hudson's Bay Company for all the stores which were seized by the leaders of the insurrection during their short reign.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—No. If the Hudson's Bay Company should set up any claim for payment of stores, then the Government would stand between the insurgents and all harm.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Company has set up a claim, and perhaps the hon. gentleman would state who had to stand between the parties now. If the hon. gentleman had no regard for his political promises, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) must have regard thereto. Here were the expressions that Archbishop TACHE stated to have been used to him:—

"Should the question arise as to the consumption of any stores or goods belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company by the insurgents, you are authorized to inform the leaders that if the Company's Government is restored, not only will there be a general amnesty granted, but in case the Government should claim the payment for such stores, that the Canadian Government will stand between the insurgents and all harm.

But who was to stand between the Treasury and all harm? Would the leader of the Opposition do so? Mr. GIRARD, speaking of Sir GEORGE CARTIER'S letter to him about the amnesty, said:

"I was then engaged in my election, and I made these communications very generally known among the people, as well in my county as elsewhere. I made extracts from these letters and circulated them among the people; and I consider that they had a powerful effect in calming the people, and preserving peace and good order. I think I can find these letters, and, if I can, I will transmit them to the Chairman."

With regard to the effect produced by the promises made, Archbishop TACHE stated in his letter to Sir JOHN YOUNG, of date 23rd July, 1870:

"The promise of an amnesty has largely contributed to obtain the result secured; had I not been convinced myself that an amnesty would be granted; had I not brought the people to partake of my conviction, the mission intrusted to me by the Government of YOUR EXCELLENCY would certainly not be crowned with the success obtained."

There was another phase of this matter which he proposed to deal with. It would be recollected that the right hon. gentleman opposite made a pilgrimage through Ontario in 1873. It was not, to be sure, a very successful one; on the contrary it was very disastrous to him. During that pilgrimage he (Mr. MACKENZIE) was accused of making capital out of the execution of SCOTT. He declared that he never did make capital out of it. He had expressed his honest conviction in Parliament and out of it, as he was prepared to do on all occasions and on every topic. Gentlemen would search his speeches in 1872 in vain for anything to prove that charge. But what was the course of the right hon. gentleman opposite? Why, as he went west his language became bolder, and he was able at last when he reached the western confines of Ontario, to characterize the execution of SCOTT as a murder, and to express his anxious desire to catch the murderer that he might be punished. Let us see what took place. The general election of 1872 began in August and continued well on in September. In December, 1871, we find the hon. gentleman opposite proposed to Mr. RIEL, through the Archbishop, that he should leave the country, and he (Sir JOHN) would pay him $1,000. The ARCHBISHOP, in his evidence before the North-west Committee, states:

"I came to Canada October 5th, 1871. I saw Sir GEORGE in Montreal and Quebec, and he spoke to me about RIEL'S leaving the country, and he strongly advised me to use my influence to get RIEL to leave the country for a while. This was in October or November, 1871. I told Sir GEORGE that I agreed in his opinion, but that it was extremely difficult for me to interfere, as I had been so badly treated, being deceived about the amnesty. He urged me, saying, "I was the pastor of the people," and he insisted so much, that I at last said I would try, but I said, "You must remember that man is poor; "his mother is a widow with four young girls "and three young boys, and she has no means "of support, especially when her eldest son is "away. He himself has only labor for his sup- "port, and I do not think it is fair to ask him "to leave his home without some compensation "or some means of travelling." "That is true," said Sir GEORGE, "we will see about that." He then asked me if I would go to Ottawa. "Yes," said I, "I intend to be there the beginning of December." "Then," said he, "we will settle the matter there." I came to Ottawa the beginning of December. Sir GEORGE also came, and then I saw him and Sir JOHN. I had several conversations with both of them, but one of them especially I remember with Sir JOHN; it was on the 7th December, about noon, in his office. I do not remember who began, but he insisted that I should advise RIEL to leave the country for a while, and added these words, so far as I can recollect them: "If you "can succeed in keeping him out of the way for "a while, I will make his case mine, and I "will carry the point." The question of amnesty has caused me so much pain already that I thought I would be justified in using all honest means to secure Sir JOHN'S assistance in the granting of the amnesty, and it was on that ground, and on that ground only, that I promised, as I did then promise Sir JOHN, that I would endeavor to persuade RIEL to leave Red River for a while. I made to Sir JOHN the same observation which I had already made to Sir GEORGE, about the necessity of giving some money to RIEL if he were asked to leave the country. It was agreed by Sir JOHN that they would do something about that matter. That he would consult with Sir GEORGE and give me an answer afterwards. I got an answer, dated 27th December, 1871, from Sir JOHN, which I produce, under the direction of the Committee, as follows:

(No. 30.)

"(Private and strictly Confidential.)

"OTTAWA, December 27, 1871.

"MY DEAR LORD ARCHBISHOP,—I have been "able to make the arrangement for the indi- "vidual that we have talked about.

"I now send you a sight draft on the Bank "of Montreal for $1,000. I need not press upon "your Grace the importance of the money "being paid to him periodically (say monthly "or quarterly), and not in a lump, otherwise "the money would be wasted, and our embar- "rassment begin again. The payment should "spread over a year.

"Believe me, Your Grace's

"Very obedient servant,

"Signed,) JOHN A. MACDONALD."

"His Grace

"The Archbishop of

"St. Boniface, Montreal."

He was sure the hon. gentleman would not expect him to pass over this branch of the subject without mentioning a little incident. About the same time that this letter was written, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) joined the Government of the hon. member for South Bruce in Ontario, and a short time after this letter was written, a resolution was passed in the Legislature of Ontario, offering a reward of $5,000 for the apprehension of these men. This was in January or February, 1872, and the letter of the MINISTER OF JUSTICE, sending the $1,000, was dated December, 1871, and in August, 1872, we found the right hon. gentleman proclaiming over the country that we had driven these men out of the country by the offer of the reward, and consequently he was unable to catch them. No doubt—in fact, he must believe it—the right hon. gentleman had forgotten that he had sent $1,000 to induce RIEL to leave the country. Archbishop TACHE further stated in his evidence:—

"I left Montreal on the 2nd January, and at a station between Prescott and Sarnia, I received a letter from Sir GEORGE, which I have not with me, and I do not know whether it is in existence. In this Sir GEORGE alluded to the draft which had been sent me by Sir JOHN, and stated that it would be advisable that LEPINE should leave also, and that the money should be divided between the two."

Further on he stated:—

"It was then that I saw Lieutenant-Governor ARCHIBALD on the subject of money. There were conversations between the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR of Manitoba and myself on the subject. The LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR called on Mr. SMITH, and, in my presence, asked if he could furnish the funds, which, of course, he said would be re-imbursed by the Canadian Government. I named at first £800 sterling to the GOVERNOR as the sum required by RIEL and LEPINE for themselves and their families. The GOVERNOR asked Mr. SMITH to lend £800 sterling. I mentioned that I had $1,000 at my disposal, without mentioning the source, and thus the sum to be furnished by Mr. SMITH was reduced to £600 sterling. I understood that the advance was asked of and made by Mr. SMITH in his capacity of agent for the Company who were the bankers for the Territory. Mr.

SMITH said he could, and did, in fact, furnish £600 sterling. It was handed to me, and I added to the amount, out of the $1,000 before mentioned, a little over $200, to make up $1,600 a piece for RIEL and LEPINE, which I gave them in accordance with their demand, to enable them to go and live outside the Territory. The remainder of the $1,000 I kept in the bank of the Company to be used as required for the support of their families, and it was so used. I wrote the letter which they had asked of me, and I produce a copy, dated 16th February, 1872. * * * I am certain that the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR and the Ottawa Government would repay the money. That money was furnished under the directions of Governor ARCHIBALD."

Now, he did not intend to make any comments at all upon that transaction, further than was pertinent to the subject in hand; but he had merely to say that it was an element in the consideration of this case when they found the MINISTER OF JUSTICE who was responsible for the administration of Justice, who was also the head of the Government, deliberately entering into an arrangement with his own ambassador to furnish funds to enable these parties to leave the territory. It would be exceedingly difficult, after that transaction—as a very eloquent Canadian writer wrote not long ago—to bring the men to trial without placing the MINISTER OF JUSTICE in the dock along with them. He now came to consider another question,—another part of the question rather—which, to his mind was even of more weight in considering what the House should do in this case than the events he had mentioned. That was the conduct of several parties in the North-West — the GOVERNOR and the Government—in connection with the Fenian raid in the Province. He would leave it to legal gentlemen in this House to say what was to be said of promises made by the Chief Magistrate of a country, under such circumstances. It was held, he knew, as a principle in ordinary constitutional law, that where a Government accepts the services of parties, and induces them to risk their lives, that that would undoubtedly act as a condonation of the offences of all such persons, if implicated in a movement of this character. That he merely mentioned for the consideration of legal gentlemen; but he did say, whether this was really the law or not, whether it was to be understood as the law of nations, or not; as a law of Great Britain, or not; as a matter that binds the Crown or does not bind the Crown technically, there could be no question, as Lord CARNARVON remarked, that it would be impossible to consider the sentences of these men, with a view to commutation, without considering the circumstances brought to light in connection with them; and whether the Imperial Government should deem these circumstances as of sufficient weight or not, this House, he had no hesitation in saying, and this Government, should consider, how far they should palliate the circumstances which the Courts of Justice had now recognized and characterized. Mr. GIRARD'S evidence on this point was as follows:—

"I recollect the Fenian raid. I was then in the Government. I remember the arrival near the fort of the body of Metis numbering perhaps 400 or 500, perhaps one-third mounted and the rest dismounted. The greater part were armed. RIEL, LEPINE and PARENTEAU appeared to be jointly in command of them. Those three seemed to be on an equal footing.

"I informed the Lieutenant-Governor of their arrival, at the request of Mr. ROYAL, then Speaker of the Assembly.

"I told him that the Metis wanted to meet him either in the fort or on the other side of the river. I told him that RIEL and his friends were there. He consulted me whether it would be better to meet them in the fort or on the river. I recommended him to see them at the river. He agreed. We crossed the river; I in a rowboat; the Governor in a scow on horseback, accompanied by Captain MACDONALD I think. We came close to them, and I then said to the Governor that these men were ready to go to the front to defend their country; thereupon the Governor spoke to them saying, that he received their offer and had much satisfaction in meeting them.

"Afterwards there was a sort of salute fired and cheering on both sides of the river.

"Afterwards he went with me among the crowd at the river and I, ROYAL and DUBUC, introduced him to the prominent men, amongst whom was RIEL. I introduced RIEL as the man whom the half-breeds had chosen as their chief for the occasion. I thought it would be better not to give the name of RIEL to the Governor. This had occurred to my own mind on the way across the river. It had not in any way been discussed.

"I supposed he understood it was RIEL.

"Governor ARCHIBALD shook hands with RIEL when introduced to him in the way I have described.

"Mr. DUBUC introduced AMBROISE LEPINE by his name as a prominent man and the Governor also shook hands with him.

"PARENTEAU was also introduced by name, and the Governor shook hands with him.

"RIEL was the first introduced.

"After the introductions, RIEL addressed the Governor publicly saying that he was there with his friends to offer their service in defence of the country against all enemies, and asking the Governor to accept their services.

"The Governor thanked him very warmly for that offer of service, and told him it was received with much pleasure.

He did not know that it was necessary to read very much more upon this particular point. The fact was established by the evidence that he had read, that the Governor accepted the services of these parties and thanked them for turning out, but it did not develope the fact that the Governor apprehended serious danger unless he felt himself able to rely upon the assistance that the Metis could give him. Father RICHOT'S evidence, on page 89, has this:

I wrote a letter to the Lieutenant-Governor upon the occasion of the O'Donohue Fenian raid. I have a copy of the letter which I can produce. The Lieutenant-Governor then wrote me a note stating that he desired to see me. I have not the letter of Mr. Archibald in which he asks to see me. I went to see him. This was on the 4th October, 1871. HIS EXCELLENCY said he wanted to know what attitude the French population would take on the occasion of the Fenian invasion. HIS EXCELLENCY stated that he was quite persuaded from what he had seen that the French population was loyal, but that under the circumstances such as those which presented themselves, it was his duty to have exact information of what was going on in the Province. He said if the population showed itself loyal, there would be nothing to fear from the Fenians, whatever might be their numbers; but if, on the contrary, part of the population was hostile to the authorities, the country would be lost, because when divisions took place in a camp nothing could be pone. He said if they could trust to that part of the Metis or half-breeds near the frontier, they had nothing to fear; consequently, he wanted to know from me if I was in a position, living amongst the French half-breeds as I did, to tell him positively if he could count on them, and that I answered him that it was quite certain that he could count on them, and that I had seen the leaders of them, amongst whom was RIEL, and that they themselves were anxious to know what attitude the authorities would take on the occasion of the invasion by the Fenians. I also said that they only waited for word to go to the front if required, and to place themselves in a position to meet that invasion whatever it might be. I stated that in RIEL'S opinion it was a measure of precaution which should be taken immediately. HIS EXCELLENCY commissioned me to tell the French Canadian half-breeds, and especially RIEL, that he would be very happy to see them giving their help to the authorities. I then observed to HIS EXCELLENCY that he (RIEL) was very perplexed because his friends told him that if he went forward and showed himself he would expose himself to be killed, that any action he would take would be badly interpreted, and that there were warrants out against him, and that he could be arrested the very moment he was in arms or elsewhere, if he appeared in a public assembly. HIS EXCELLENCY said there was no danger at all, and that any steps in that direction would be well considered, and that it was a good time for RIEL to prove his loyalty. HIS EXCELLENCY also said that it would be a further occasion for the hastening of the granting of an amnesty, and that it was the time to prove that what had been said against him was false. I promised to communicate what he had said to RIEL, and that on the very next day he would have news of my mission. Then after that I met friends, who observed to me that RIEL'S friends would not allow him to go forward unless there would be something in writing, saying that RIEL would not be ill-treated. Upon this I took the liberty of writing the following letter to Mr. ARCHIBALD.

Then follows the letter and assurance given by the Governor that the actual circumstances would be considered and no harm would come to them. And then the two principal men address the following letter to HIS EXCELLENCY:

"ST. VITAL, 7th October, 1871.

"MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,—We "have the honor of informing you that we high- "ly appreciate what YOUR EXCELLENCY has "been pleased to communicate to the Reverend "Father RITCHOT, in order that we might be "better able to assist the people, in the excep- "tional position they have been placed in, to "answer your appeal. As several trustworthy "persons have been requested to inform you, "the answer of the Metis has been that of "faithful subjects. Several companies have "already been organized, and others are in "process of formation.

"YOUR EXCELLENCY may rest assured that, "without being enthusiastic, we have been "devoted.

"So long as our services continue to be "required, you may rely on us.

"We have the honor,

"&c., &c., &c.,

"(Signed,) "LOUIS RIEL,

" "A. D. LEPINE,

his

" "PIERRE x PARENTEAU.

Mark.

"To the Hon.

"Adams G. Archibald,

"Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba."

Now, it was quite possible that Governor ARCHIBALD might have exaggerated the danger of the occasion. He might have been wrong in assuming that the Province would be over-run by the Fenians unless he obtained the support of these men and their associates, but whether he was so or not, he was there as the representative of this Government, and as such, it was his duty to take measures to keep the peace. He chose to ignore all that had passed and invited their assistance to repel the threatened invasion, and that circumstance must be taken into consideration when Parliament were about to determine the amount of punishment to be given to them for the offences they committed. He would not read Governor ARCHIBALD's evidence, but would simply content himself with paraphrasing it. Governor ARCHIBALD stated in his evidence that he did apprehend serious danger, that the services of these men were tendered, that as the representative of HER MAJESTY he had accepted their services pro tem., and these men entered into the service expecting to reap the reward usually given to men under such circumstances, and placed in such a position. There was one point that he (Mr. MACKENZIE) neglected to notice in connection with the promised amnesty. They found repeated evidence in Mr. LANGEVIN'S deposition, as well as in the deposition of the Archbishop, that Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD intended to go to England immediately after the session, and that he expected then to be able to settle the question of amnesty, and very much reliance appeared to have been placed upon this by the several parties interested. Now, he had only a very few words to say on another point. It was tolerably evident that when frequent communications take place, with people charged with such crimes, by the members of the Government, even if they were not of so serious an import as those referred to, such communications must have their weight. It would be remembered that among the disasters of the Conservative party in the general elections of 1872, the late Sir GEORGE E. CARTIER was defeated in Montreal. It would also be remembered that two candidates were before the electors of Provencher, in Manitoba—Attorney-General CLARKE and LOUIS RIEL—and we find that a series of communications passed between the members of the Administration here, including the PREMIER and Governor ARCHIBALD, in reference to the withdrawal of these two candidates, in order that Sir GEORGE CARTIER might take the seat. Archbishop TACHE in his evidence stated :—

"When we heard in Manitoba that Sir George had been defeated, I received a letter from Lieut.-Governor Archibald either the 3rd or 4th September, 1872, which I produce :

Thursday morning, 5th September, 1872.

My Dear Archbishop,—Now or never. Do not let the chance, which will never recur, be lost. Could you see me to-day.

Yours very sincerely,

(Signed,) A. G. ARCHIBALD.

"His Grace the Archbishop."

"On the same day I went to him who explained to me that it seemed to him that it would be highly advisable that Riel (who was then a candidate for Provencher) should retire and allow Sir George to be elected. I said I would try and see Riel and ascertain his views. The Governor said that this would bind Sir George so tightly that he could not help doing even more afterwards than he had done towards the amnesty. I saw Riel and advised him to retire, giving him the same reasons, and also other reasons on behalf of his country. He told me that personally he would have no hesitation, that he understood perfectly well that it would be for the advantage of Manitoba to have a representative in the Cabinet, but that he was not quite sure his friends would view the matter in the same light, and that in order to satisfy them he must have some guarantee that the half-breeds would not be overlooked. He gave me, in writing, his conditions of withdrawal in favor of Sir George. I returned to Mr. Archibald, and stated the conditions, and myself wrote at his desk a translation made by himself, and which he was to have telegraphed to Sir George."

Then Lieutenant-Governor ARCHIBALD wrote to the Archbishop on the 10th of September, five days afterwards :

"They should elect Sir GEORGE by acclamation, without stipulations or conditions.

"It would be the graceful way, and would bind Sir GEORGE quite as effectually as any stipulations, which after all are not the making, but the renewal of pledges already given.

"However, this is not my business.

"Yours very sincerely,

"(Signed,) A. G. ARCHIBALD.

"His Grace

"The Right-Rev. the Archbishop."

The next day Archbishop TACHE wrote to the GOVERNOR to ascertain whether RIEL'S conditions had been accepted or not. Then in reply to that, the GOVERNOR writes to Archbishop TACHE :—

"12th September, 1872.

"MY DEAR ARCHBISHOP,—I received last evening a telegram from Sir JOHN, to say that he had received my message, and sent it to Sir GEORGE, and that he expected a reply to-day, and would forward it to me at once. I see that he thinks the constituency ought to elect Sir GEORGE promptly, and without stipulation. They could safely confide in promises which, being already made, can gain no strength by repetition. You shall have the answer of Sir GEORGE whenever it arrives.

"Yours sincerely,

"(Signed,) A. G. ARCHIBALD.

"To H Grace the Archbishop."

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie.

The ARCHBISHOP continues :—

"The same evening I received from Mr. ARCHIBALD what he said was a copy of a telegram from Sir JOHN, as follows :—

"OTTAWA, 12th September, 1872.

"LIEUT.-GOV. ARCHIBALD,—Sir GEORGE will "do all he can to meet the wishes of the parties; "this statement should be satisfactory.

"Signed,) JOHN A. MACDONALD."

"Copy of telegram just received.

"(Signed,) HENRI BOUTHILLIER."

This was communicated to the parties ; and just the night before the election I received the information that Riel had succeeded in inducing his friends to support the election of Sir GEORGE, and that on the following day he would, at the nomination, retire in his favour ; and he did so, and immediately after sent Sir GEORGE a telegram, of which I produce a certified copy.

"WINNIPEG, 14th September, 1872.

"To Hon. Sir GEORGE ET. CARTIER, Bart., Montreal.

"Your election in our County is by acclama- "tion, and have reason to hope in the success of the cause trusted into your hands.

"(Signed,) "LOUIS RIEL,
"JOSEPH ROYAL,
"A. LEPINE,
"JAS. DUBUC."

I did not myself communicate with Sir GEORGE on the subject, but I received from him a telegram, dated 17th September, which I produce.

"OTTAWA, 17th September, 1872.

"To His Grace Archbishop TACHE.

"Presume your Grace is one of the friends "who got me elected in Provencher ; accept my "sincere thanks. Give thanks for me to all "friends, and especially to those who were "more instrumental in securing election. Am "leaving for England for brief visit for my "health ; will send letters of thanks before "leaving.

"(Signed,) G. E. CARTIER."

He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had not the passage before him at the moment, but he thought the right hon. member for Kingston, with his usual foresight, wrote to Mr. ARCHIBALD to tell RIEL not to resign in Sir GEORGE'S favor.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD —Tell RIEL!

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Well, the late President of the Provisional Government.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD —The hon. gentleman, I have no doubt, remembers my telegram very well. My telegram was to the Governor of Manitoba, and I asked him to get a seat for Sir GEORGE CARTIER in that Province, but did not say to him to tell Riel not to retire in Sir GEORGE'S favor.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I did not misrepresent it.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD —Yes, but the hon. gentleman did !

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he did not mean to say that the words were actually employed that he stated, but the hon. gentleman suggested to the Governor not to state that RIEL resigned in Sir GEORGE'S favor. He would proceed with the evidence given before the Committee, in order to obtain what was necessary to furnish the circumstances connected with the motion which he was placing in the SPEAKER'S hands. He had merely to say that the Government having acted in this matter, bound as they were to put an end to this vexed controversy now and forever, their proposition was one which would commend itself to every reasonable man, and would answer the expectations of all those who did not take extreme views of the question on both sides. The Government had fairly prosecuted the enquiry regarding the North-West troubles. Those who viewed the offence of which these men stood accused as a crime were quite justified in every effort they made to bring the perpetrators to justice, and he could not condemn the efforts of those who saw in the death of SCOTT merely one of those executions which might occur, and did occur frequently, in insurrections of this nature. Many would recall to memory the incidents which occurred in the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada where lives were sacrificed just as cruelly and unjustly, perhaps, as the one now under discussion. He would not for one moment say a word to justify that execution. It was not only cruel, but entirely unnecessary. He had never been able to understand the reasons for it, but so far as he was able to understand them, they were from a proximate fear of troubles that SCOTT might cause, instead of punishment being inflicted for any crime committed. Some latitude should of course be given to the actors in the scene as being the existing authorities of the Province, and from the promises subsequently given, and the recognition of their services by the Crown, there was but one course to follow ; for whether the Imperial authorities acknowledged Mr. ARCHIBALD as a British Governor or not, regarding which point Earl CARNARVON had raised some question, we at least must recognise him as a Canadian Governor; and if the British Government were pleased to extend our responsibility, he for one was ready to accept it. At the present time it had become the duty of the Government—and he ventured to say it was also the duty of the House—to sustain the motion he had proposed as one that recognized at once that a crime had been committed, and tempered justice with mercy. This he said on the grounds afforded by the evidence before the House, which must have its due weight with all dispassionate and impartial men; and if they followed this course, he thought they would receive the cordial thanks of every member of this House for having removed what had been in time past a stain on the history of the country, and taking a step for which futurity would be thankful,—even if it were done at the risk of being more or less unpopular with one or more of the parties at the present time. He begged to move, in conclusion, the following motion of which he had given notice:

That from the evidence reported to this House by the Committee appointed last session on the questions arising out of the North-West troubles, it appears that the late Sir G. E. CARTIER, Minister of Militia and Defence, and during Sir J. A. MACDONALD'S illness, acting Minister of Justice, leader of the Government, and its representative in its negotiations with the delegates from the North-West, at various times, gave divers persons of prominence in the North-West, amongst whom were Archbishop TACHE, Father RITCHOT, the Hon. M. A. GIRARD and the Hon. J. ROYAL, assurances that a complete amnesty would be granted by the Imperial Government in respect of all acts committed by all persons during the North-West troubles, and requested that these assurances should be as they were communicated to the interested parties. That from the same evidence, it further appears that the envoy of the Canadian Government, Archbishop TACHE, acting in the bona fide belief that he was authorized to do so, assured the people of the North-West that the Imperial Government would grant such an amnesty; and the Canadian Government did not communicate to the people any disavowal of his action.

"That from the same evidence it further appears that the interested parties became, by means of the said assurances convinced that such an amnesty would be granted; and that this conviction so affected their action as to facilitate the acquisition of the territory by Canada.

"That from the same evidence it further appears, that, on the occasion of the raid of Fenians, led by W. B. O'DONOHUE, one of the actors in the North-West troubles, the Hon. A. G. ARCHIBALD, Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba, in the name of HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY, the Queen, by proclamation called on all the inhabitants to rally to its defence; and especially asked through Father RITCHOT, the aid of L. RIEL and A. D. LEPINE, and in reply to a letter from Father RITCHOT on the subject, wrote the following letter:

"GOVERNMENT HOUSE, Oct. 5th, 1871.

REVEREND SIR,—Your note has just reached me. You speak of difficulties which might impede any action of Mr. RIEL in coming forward to use his influence with his fellow citizens, to rally to the support of the Crown in the present emergency.

Should Mr. RIEL come forward as suggested, he need be under no apprehension that his liberty will be interfered with in any way; to use your own language, 'pour la circonstance actuelle.'

It is hardly necessary for me to add that the co-operation of the French half-breeds and their leaders in the support of the Crown under present circumstances will be very welcome and cannot be looked upon otherwise than as entitling them to most favorable consideration.

Let me add that in giving you this assurance with promptitude I feel myself entitled to be met in the same spirit.

The sooner the French half-breeds assume the attitude in question the more graceful will be their action and the more favorable their influence.

I have the honor to be, Revd. Sir,
Yours truly,

(Signed) A. G. ARCHIBALD,
Lieutenant-Governor.'

Revd. PERE RITCHOT,
St. Norbert.

And subsequently in reply to a letter to him from L. RIEL, A. D. LEPINE and P. PARANTEAU caused the following letter to be sent:—

"GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
"FORT GARRY, Oct. 8th, 1871.

"GENTLEMEN,—I have it in command from "HIS EXCELLENCY the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR "to acknowledge receipt of your note of this "morning, assuring HIS EXCELLENCY of the "hearty response of the Metis to the appeal "made to them in HIS EXCELLENCY'S proclama-"tion.

"You may say to the people on whose behalf "you write, that HIS EXCELLENCY is much "gratified to receive the assurance which he "anticipated in his communication with the "Rev. PERE RITCHOT, and which your letter "conveys, and that he will take the earliest "opportunity to transmit to HIS EXCELLENCY "the GOVERNOR-GENERAL this evidence of the "loyalty and good faith of the Metis of Mani-"toba.

"HIS EXCELLENCY will be pleased to be fur-"nished as soon as possible with a nominal "list of persons in each parish who desire to "enrol for active service in the present emer-"gency.

"His Excellency will rely upon their readi"ness to come forward the moment they receive
"notice.

"I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
"Your obedient servant,

"W. F. Buchanan,
"Acting Private Secretary.

"To M. L. Riel,
"M. A. D. Lepine,
"M. Pierre Paranteau."

"That from the same evidence it further appears that the said L. Riel. A. D. Lepine "and P. Paranteau accordingly raised a large "body of men to assist in the defence of the "Province and marched them to the vicinity of "Fort Garry, where they were received and "their services accepted by the Lieutenant-Gov-"ernor, who shook hands with L. Riel and "A. D. Lepine as leaders of the force, and by a "subsequent proclamation recognized their ser-"vices; and the action of the Lieutenant-Gov-"ernor was not disavowed by the Canadian "Government which continued him in his place "and thereafter promoted him to the Lieuten-"ant Governorship of Nova Scotia."

"That from the same evidence it further "appears that Sir J. A. Macdonald, the first "Minister of Canada and Minister of Justice, "in Dec. 1871, after the Fenian Raid was over "entered into negotiations through Archbishop "Taché, with the said L. Riel for his retire-"ment from the Province of Manitoba for the "space of a year, and for his maintenance dur-"ing this expatriation out of the public funds "of Canada, and in order to induce him so to "retire, pointed out to the Archbishop that the "proposed step would improve the chances of "obtaining the amnesty from Her Majesty's "Government, and stated that he would exert "his personal influence to procure action in the "matter by Her Majesty's Government, and "that he would so far make Riel's case his own "and, having so induced the Archbishop to "interfere, sent him the promised sum which "was taken from the Secret Service Fund "placed at the disposal of his Government by "Parliament with the following letter:—

PRIVATE AND STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

Ottawa, Dec. 27th, 1871.

"My Dear Lord Archbishop.—I have been "able to make the arrangement for the "individual that we have talked about. I now "send you a sight draft on the Bank of Montreal "for $1,000. I need not press upon your Grace "the importance of the money being paid to "him periodically (say monthly or quarterly) "and not in a lump, otherwise the money would "be wasted and our embarrassments begin again. "The payment should spread over a year.

"Believe me, your Grace's very obedient "servant, John A. Macdonald.

"His Grace,
"The Archbishop
"of St. Boniface, Manitoba."

That from the same evidence it further appears that Sir George E. Cartier, Minister of Militia and Defence, afterwards communicated with Archbishop Taché, requesting that A. D. Lepine should be included in the same arrangement, and that the Archbishop was, on his return to Manitoba, further requested by Lieutenant-Governor Archibald to procure the expatriation of the said persons, and in order to make a sufficient provision for the maintenance of themselves and their families the Lieutenant Governor procured from the Hudson Bay Company the further sum of £600, and that the Archbishop thereupon induced L. Riel and A. D. Lepine to consent to the requests of Sir J. A. Macdonald, Sir George E. Cartier and A. G. Archibald, and they departed accordingly, and they and their families received for their maintenance said sums of $1,000 and $300.

That thereafter and during the General Election of 1872. L. Riel was contesting Provencher with Attorney-General Clark, when, at the request of Sir John A. Macdonald, First Minister and Minister of Justice, Lieutenant-Governor Archibald arranged that both the said candidates should retire in order that Sir G. E. Cartier, Minister of Militia, might be elected for the County, and he was elected accordingly, and publicly received, and acknowledged the congratulations of L. Riel and A. D. Lepine on the event.

That from the said evidence it further appears that Sir John A. Macdonald, First Minister and Minister of Justice, gave assurances to Archbishop Taché, to his Quebec colleagues and others that he would on his intended visit to England press on Her Majesty's Government to take up the question, thinking that they might see their way to granting a complete amnesty without the Canadian Government being responsible for it, to which he had no objection, and which would, he believed, be loyally accepted by the Canadian people.

That in the opinion of this House it is not for the honor or interest of Canada that the question of amnesty should remain longer in its present shape.

That in the opinion of this House the facts developed in the said evidence cannot be ignored by the people or the Parliament of Canada, and must be considered in the expression of their views as to the disposition of the question.

That in the opinion of this House it would be proper, considering the said facts, that a full amnesty should be granted to all persons concerned in the North-West troubles for all acts committed by them during the said troubles, saving only L. Riel, A. D. Lepine and W. B. O'Donohue.

That in the opinion of this House it would be proper, considering the said facts, that a like amnesty should be granted to L. Riel and A. D. Lepine, conditional on five years' banishment from Her Majesty's Dominions.

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency, the Governor General, embodying this resolution and praying that he will be pleased to take such steps as may be best calculated to calculated to carry it into effect."

It being six o'clock, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. MACKENZIE BOWELL, in resuming the debate, said he rose with considerable diffidence to discuss a question of such momentous importance as that now before the House, more particularly as it had fallen to his lot to follow the First Minister of the Crown. He must, however, express astonishment at the manner in which this question had been brought before the House. Taking the resolutions as a whole, he thought they were unparalleled in the history of any legislative body. It did seem to him that they had been framed—he thought he might safely say with the malignant ingenuity of a subtle mind, other than they might expect of the gentleman who proposed the resolution—for the purpose of relieving the Government of the great responsibility which they should not hesitate to assume as the responsible advisers of the Crown in this country. It seemed to him that they had adopted this course for the purpose of erecting a barrier behind which they could retreat, no matter from what quarter they might be attacked. If from an Ontario standpoint, they would say that, notwithstanding the extreme utterances which they had made for the last three or four years, they had effected a compromise of this kind, and relieved those whom they declared in the past should be hanged or gibbetted. If attacked from a Lower Canada standpoint they could plead that they had placed RIEL and LEPINE, and those who were acting with them in the events which occurred in the North-West, in a much better position than they would have been had they been let alone. If this were not their policy, why, he would ask, had they not given a fair résumé of the evidence that bore particularly upon this subject? Why had they studiously left out of the preamble—if he might so term it—every word that referred to the action of their colleagues in connection with the presumed promise of amnesty. Had they not desired to throw the whole responsibility upon the Government that had passed out of existence, and had they not desired to inflict a stab on the right hon. member for Kingston, and those who supported him at the time, they would have added to these resolutions the action of the late Minister of Justice, Mr. DORION, and the interview which took place between Archbishop TACHE and Mr. LETELLIER, and would have read to the House the telegrams which their late colleague, the then Minister of Justice, sent to Governor MORRIS in order to induce RIEL to retire from Provencher. They might have gone further, and told the House, because the evidence showed it, that Archbishop TACHE through Governor MORRIS informed them where they could find Mr. RIEL, and hold communication with him, and discuss the question of his running for Provencher. They could have even gone further, and stated that Father LASCOMB wrote to Archbishop TACHE and told him that he had an interview either with the late MINISTER OF JUSTICE, or some one in his behalf in reference to this matter. He repeated that had the Government been desirous of making their case stronger, and of reciting all the facts connected with the promise of amnesty and the negotiations that had been carried on with those connected with the troubles in the North-West, they would have placed upon record their own utterances in this matter. He found on reading the evidence, in addition to that recited in the resolution and read to the House, that Archbishop TACHE stated in his evidence that on the 25th November he had an interview with Mr. LETELLIER in his office, and that Mr. LETELLIER said to him: "I think (or I hope) that we shall be able to give the amnesty to our Lower Canadian friends as a New Year's gift." This was, he thought, about as strong evidence as any produced, and if the Government had, he would not say the political courage, but the moral courage which they should possess as responsible Ministers, they would have come down to this House and asked for an amnesty pure and simple. He would say further that if there was any logical deduction to be drawn from the utterances of the PREMIER to-day, basing as he did his whole case upon the promises or supposed promises or utterances, official or unofficial, he (the PREMIER) should say at once that these parties were entitled to an amnesty pure and simple. But it did surprise him that in this resolution any allusion to the utterances of the members or ex-members of the present Government was studiously avoided by the PREMIER. However, when he came to that point, he would discuss it further.

Then on the 30th of the same month Archbishop TACHE states in his evidence that he saw the Hon. Mr. DORION and Hon. Mr. LETELLIER, and this was the evidence he gave of the result of those interviews :

"I was led to believe that they themselves had some guarantees about it, (the amnesty). They were not explicit, but I was led to believe it. It was something to the effect that there was an agreement with their colleagues as to the granting of the amnesty. The words as near as I can say were these : "We cannot settle every-" thing. It is so soon after the formation " of the Government. We have hopes " that the thing will be arranged in a fav-" orable way according to your wishes ; " and we see ourselves the necessity of the " amnesty." I remember no further words."

Of course, these gentlemen he (Mr. BOWELL) presumed, taking the argument of the Premier, were speaking in behalf of their colleagues—Upper Canadian as well as Lower Canadian. His Lordship continues :

" My impression was so strong, that I asked Mr. DORION in what way he and I could communicate together about the amnesty, after my departure for Manitoba, without its being known. He then wrote in my memorandum book two sentences, which he explained as to what their meaning would be in case we should communicate about the amnesty."

He (Mr. BOWELL) supposed hon. gentlemen opposite were as desirous of keeping these matters secret as their predecessors, and hence they had a secret system of communicating with each other. His Lordship continues :

I produce the sentences. "Communication received, matter attended to immediately," meant this : "communication received" means "amnesty ;" "matter attended to immediately" means "immediate promulgation of the amnesty."

Next sentence, "Communication received" (same meaning), "matter under consideration" meaning "that the amnesty was under consideration by the Ottawa Government ;" "you may expect early decision" meaning its inherent sense as bearing on the secret meaning of the prior part of the sentence.

It was agreed that he would add to the latter sentence the name of the month in which he expected the thing would be settled.

The date is marked on the back of this memorandum. It is November 30th. The memorandum was written about the close of our interview of that day, which was my last interview with them.

I left Montreal on the 2nd of December.

The impression made on my mind was so favorable, that on my arrival I told many people that we had every reason to expect that the new Government would carry out the promise of the old Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Hear, hear!

Mr. BOWELL said he was glad there was glad there was something in this part of the evidence that pleased the hon. gentleman opposite. He never approved of this sort of thing in the late Government any more than in the present one. The only difference between them was that there was less hypocrisy about the late Government than characterized the present one.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—You did not show it by your votes.

Mr. BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman has anything to say, I wish he would say it distinctly.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—I said your votes did not show it.

Mr. BOWELL said that assertion had been made by others on the Ministerial side, but if they would examine the records of Parliament they would find that it was not warranted by facts.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—(Ironically)—Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL challenged the hon. gentleman to produce any evidence to prove the assertion. Archbishop TACHE in his evidence furnished the following telegrams :—

"MONTREAL, December 25th, 1873.

"To Archbishop TACHE.

"I received the gratifying intelligence con-"tained in your telegram. Matters here are "progressing slowly, but most satisfactorily. In "a few days I will write result, and about "some important questions.

"(Signed,) A. A. DORION."

On the 2nd January, the following telegram was sent :—

"OTTAWA, January 2nd, 1874.

"To ALEX. MORRIS,

"Fort Garry, Manitoba.

"Will you communicate confidentially "to Bishop TACHE that I am particularly "desirous, in the interest of his people, in "order to avoid excitement, that RIEL "should not be a candidate.

"(Signed), A. A. DORION."

And again on the 5th of January the following despatch :—

"FORT GARRY, 5th January, 1874.

"HON. A. A. DORION,—Have seen "Archbishop. He thinks matter can be "arranged if amnesty granted, or written "promise of it within short and definite "period, but not otherwise. He has "written. You can communicate with "RIEL through Father LACOMB, at Mon- "treal, who knows where he is.

"(Signed), A. MORRIS."

Now, he (Mr. BOWELL) had read these extracts to show that whatever their predecessors might have done, the present Government were apt pupils, and followed in their footsteps in their endeavors to secure as much support from the North West as they possibly could; but there was one point in connection with this that had yet been unexplained. He believed it was on the 16th April last that a motion for the expulsion of RIEL from this House was passed. On the same day a motion was made by the hon. member for Lisgar, that a writ for the election of a member to represent Provencher be issued immediately. Why that writ was withheld, and why the orders of the House were not complied with, he supposed the MINISTER OF JUSTICE or the PREMIER could inform them; but it was a fact that it was not issued until late—if his memory served him, the 16th of July—and the writ was not returnable until the 10th day of September; why the issuing of the writ should be delayed for four months he left it to the Ministry to say. His own impression was that they were in hopes that in the meantime some arrangement could be entered into, as these communications showed, by which they could get RIEL out of the way, or they might accomplish that which Mr. DORION and his colleagues desired. The ARCHBISHOP said they had an understanding that an amnesty should be granted. The whole tenor of the speech of the first Minister went to show that the late Government had promised directly and indirectly an amnesty. What he (Mr. BOWELL) held was this: Though they had promised an amnesty and though they might have stated in their negotiations with Archbishop TACHE and Father RICHOT that the Imperial Government would grant an amnesty, and they would use their best efforts in order to procure such, he (Mr. BOWELL) held that the crime with which some of the parties stood charged was of such a character as not to justify either the late or present or Home Government in granting a total amnesty for that crime. Nor was there anything that occurred afterwards, either in their enrolling themselves and offering their services to the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, or in their pretended loyalty during the time of the Fenian invasion that condoned the offence of which they were charged. It was his purpose to look at the other side of this question of amnesty, and they would see, more particularly from the despatch of HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, and the reply to that despatch from Lord CARNARVON, that the inference drawn from the evidence which has been read by the Prime Minister is certainly not that which was drawn by those two high authorities. The first proclamation of amnesty, and the only one which was ever issued, and of which there has been so much misunderstanding in the country, was that of the 6th December, 1869, and it must be borne in mind that SCOTT was murdered on the 4th of March, that Archbishop TACHE did not arrive in the North-West until the 9th March, 1870, and that on the 9th June His Lordship wrote to the Secretary of State, the late Mr. HOWE, that he had promised an amnesty for all offences which had taken place, and all crimes which had been committed, before he arrived there. It is also shewn that Mr. HOWE, instead of acknowledging the correctness of the position taken by the ARCHBISHOP, denied it, and told him distinctly that his declaration was made upon his own responsibility. Without reading Mr. HOWE's despatch the House would see from that of the GOVERNOR-GENERAL to Lord CARNARVON, this language, which he took to be the best authority it was possible to obtain on this question:

"Immediately, Mr. HOWE, the Secretary of State, received the information of the promise made by His Lordship to RIEL and LEPINE, he warned him that he had done so on his own responsibility, and without the authority of the Canadian Government."

That certainly is not the conclusion which the PREMIER drew from the despatch sent to Archbishop TACHE on this question another day to bear out his assertion that the Government acquiesced, by their silence, in the promise which the Archbishop had made. Lord DUFFERIN also said in reference to the Archbishop's argument in which he laid very great stress on what he said were promises made to them:

"I confess I do not think that His Lordship's arguments can be sustained. In the first place, the Archbishop's claim to such extensive powers is certainly invalid."

Again, he says in the same despatch, paragraph 13:

"There is certainly no intimation in his instructions that he was authorized to promulgate a pardon, in the QUEEN'S name, for a capital felony, still less could it be contended that he was empowered to expunge, of his own mere motion, a principal term from a Royal Proclamation."

Upon this same question Lord DUFFERIN proceeds as follows, in the same despatch:

"It would seem impossible to expand the permission thus conveyed to the Bishop by Sir JOHN, to promise the rebels protection from the monetary demands of the Hudson Bay Company, into an authority to condone such a savage murder as that of SCOTT'S. But even were this point to be conceded, there would still remain an insurmountable difficulty in the way of proving Monseigneur TACHÉ'S case. The terms of pardon, both in Lord LISGAR'S Proclamation and Sir JOHN'S letter, were made conditional, in the one, 'on the immediate and peaceable obedience and dispersion of the insurgents,' and in the other 'on the restoration of the Company's Government.'"

It must be borne in mind that the GOVERNOR GENERAL had given this matter a very great deal of attention, and if we are to suppose that this despatch was written without the knowledge and consent of his Council, he supposed they might argue they were responsible also for the utterances made in it. In paragraph 19 they found the following strong language:—

"Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the Crown is not committed to the pardon of the murderers of SCOTT, upon the ground that the Archbishop was in any sense authorized to made a promise to that effect."

Lord CARNARVON took the same view of this question. On page 37 of the blue book the following language appears:—

"I may observe, in the first place, that it is obvious that neither the proclamation intended to be issued, but from certain causes not published, at Fort Garry, in 1869, nor the correspondence cited in paragraphs 4 to 7 of your despatch, are in any way applicable to the condition of affairs which arose when, some time subsequently, the atrocious murder of SCOTT was committed. Nor can anything promised to the murderers (although in good faith) by Archbishop TACHE, nor any impression or understanding that he or others may have formed of the purport of conversations or communications with individual Ministers, be deemed to have in any way pledged the Crown to extend an amnesty to acts which had not even been heard of by the Dominion Government, when he received the letters instructing him as to his proceedings at Fort Garry, and which on full examination could not fail to appear to be such as the QUEEN (if the Imperial Government should be required to act) could not be advised to leave unpunished. As Archbishop TACHE'S connection with this affair constitutes the first of the five reasons alleged for amnesty, I will now dispose of it by observing that with all respect for his honesty and good intentions, it is impossible to admit that he had any sufficient ground for believing that the Crown, or the Colonial Government acting for the Crown, did or could delegate to him, or to any other unofficial person, or indeed to anyone, as to a Plenipotentiary, an unlimited power of pardoning crimes, of whatever atrocity, not even known to have been committed. And your opinion that the Crown is in no way committed by any promises given by Archbishop TACHE is the only one which I can consider tenable."

Upon this question it appeared to him that the whole argument of the first Minister was based on the presumed promise which had been made by the Ministers of the Crown, officially or otherwise, to the delegates from the North-West, and this declaration sets the whole matter at rest. Lord CARNARVON is fully in accord with the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in his declaration that the Crown could not be held to any such promise. He had laid before the House the deliberate opinion conveyed in a state paper sent by the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, it was to be supposed with the consent of his advisors, and the reply of the Colonial Secretary thereto, which should of themselves be sufficient to convince the House, no matter what conversations had passed between Ministers and delegates from the North-West, that the Government were not justified in asking the House to adopt the resolution submitted to it. Let them now turn to the declarations of the Ministers themselves. Mr. LANGEVIN, who certainly urged on his colleagues the granting of an amnesty, if they were to accept his statements, and who threatened to resign if it were not granted, said in his evidence:

"I am not aware of any promise of amnesty having been made by the Government of Canada further than that contained in the proclamation of 6th December, 1869, or of any promise by any member of the Government on behalf of the Government."

This was a sufficiently explicit denial. But Mr. LANGEVIN went further, and said:

"I had not at any time, nor, so far as I am aware, had any of my colleagues, made any promise of an amnesty to Archbishop TACHE, Father RITCHOT, or any other party. I do not know of anything of the kind, and this statement covers the whole ground since the 6th December, 1869."

Mr. LANGEVIN then proceeds:

"In every conversation I had with Archbishop TACHE, he always stated to me that Sir GEORGE CARTIER and Sir JOHN MACDONALD, when they received, on behalf of the Canadian Government, the delegates from the people of the North-West, had promised an amnesty, but on enquiry of my colleagues, Sir GEORGE CARTIER and Sir JOHN MACDONALD, I must say that they always told me that no such promise was made."

It was quite clear that Archbishop TACHE, in giving his evidence, told what he thought was correct, and the ARCHBISHOP and Father RICHOT became so anxious about the amnesty that it became a monomania with them, and they believed that during the conversations which had taken place between Ministers and themselves, promises had been made. On page 106 of the Blue Book, the evidence of Sir JOHN MACDONALD was printed, and it was one of the few portions of the evidence which was not given in narrative form. He believed the question was put by the member for South Bruce; it appeared in the following form:

Question.—Did the Canadian Government or you, as a member thereof, hold out to the delegates that the Government would use their good offices in endeavouring to secure an amnesty?

Answer.—Neither the Canadian Government nor I gave any such assurance to the delegates.

There was no unofficial expression of a desire that the amnesty should be granted by the Imperial Government. On the contrary, the opinion had been expressed to the delegates that the state of public feeling was such as to render the granting of the amnesty impossible."

On pages 100, 101 and 102 there were the following portions of evidence given by Sir JOHN MACDONALD:

"All requests to the Government on this subject were pressed with a view to include those parties who were charged with complicity in the death of SCOTT. The GOVERNOR GENERAL and his advisers held that the amnesty as proclaimed did not cover that charge; and it seemed to be the opinion of every one interested that a proclamation expressly excluding the parties last referred to would do more harm than good. * * * *

"The proclamation was called a general amnesty, but we understood it to mean a promise of amnesty for the offences referred to in it. I do not think the contingency of a death having occurred before the date of the proclamation was contemplated when it issued, and I do not think its terms would have covered a capital felony. The proclamation would not have covered such a case as the death of Scott."

Now, placing these positive declarations of Ministers, together with the deductions which were drawn from them by the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in his despatch, and Lord CARNARVON'S answer to it, it clearly appeared that no such promise as that mentioned by the First Minister in his speech on the resolution now before the House could by any possibility be deduced from them. There was, however, perhaps a more important point in connection with that question, and one of a more serious character, viz., the affidavit made by Father RICHOT in connection with amnesty. He (Mr. BOWELL), must express his surprise at the language used by the First Minister when discussing this point. If he understood the hon. gentleman aright, he stated that the rev. gentleman, in making that affidavit, was correct in everything he had sworn to; and that Lord LISGAR, Sir CLINTON MURDOCH and Sir GEORGE CARTIER, in their positive denial that any promise of amnesty was made were wrong, and he, Father RICHOT, was right. The PREMIER had forgotten, in the testimony given before the North-West Committee, one of the witnesses, a gentleman who was not all likely to misrepresent the rev. gentleman—Mr. SULTE—stated distinctly that Father RICHOT said after his interview with HIS EXCELLENCY and Sir CLINTON MURDOCH, "As I don't understand English very well, I am not satisfied with what HIS EXCELLENCY said to me at our interview." Now, in opposition to the evidence of Father RICHOT, to which the honorable Premier gave so much weight, we have the declaration of Lord LISGAR himself. He said: "I have in recollection the inter-"view which I had with the Rev. ABBE "RITCHOT upon your introduction and in "your presence.

"He dwelt earnestly upon two points.

"First. The redress of the political "grievances of the inhabitants of the "Red River Settlement, with especial "reference, as I understood, to land grants.

"Second. On an assurance of the exer-"cise of the Royal Prerogative of mercy "to cover all offences.

"With regard to the first point, I gave "him satisfactory assurances of the favor-"able dispositions of the Canadian Govern-"ment and Legislature, as indeed evidenced "by the passing of the Manitoba Act. "With regard to the second point, I stated "I was not in a position to give him any "assurance, not having received instruc-"tions on the subject from HER MAJESTY'S "Government.

"I promised to forward, without delay, "the petition he spoke of as in prepara-"tion, and stated that I felt sure HER "MAJESTY'S Government would give full "and serious consideration to any plea "which might be urged on behalf of the "view he advocated.

"I am quite clear that neither on the "occasion in question, nor on any other "did I give an assurance or promise of an "amnesty to cover all offences committed "during the insurrection."

Further, Sir CLINTON MURDOCH in his letter to the Under Secretary of the Colonies, stated:

"I have no recollection of any promise "or expectation of an amnesty to RIEL "and his associates having been held out "by Lord LISGAR, when Mr. RITCHOT "had an interview with him, in my pre-"sence or at any other time. I scarcely "think if such a promise had been made I "could have failed to notice it at the time "or to recollect it now. As regards Sir "GEORGE CARTIER, I do not remember "having ever had any conversation with "him on the subject, or being present at "any interview when it was discussed "between him and Lord LISGAR."

The late Sir GEORGE E. CARTIER also had stated in his letter, an extract of which had been laid before the North West Committee by the Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD that he made no promise of any amnesty. He merely stated that he would not fail to forward to HER MAJESTY the petition for an amnesty to which Father RITCHOT alluded, and then he added:

"Bear in mind that with Father "RITCHOT and the Archbishop I always "took the same ground we both did—"namely that the question of amnesty "was not for our decision, but for the "QUEEN and Imperial Government."

Now, taking these portions of the evidence, and then referring again to Lord DUFFERIN'S despatch upon this same question, we found that he did not hesitate to give his opinion in reference to the late Sir GEORGE CARTIER'S position. His Lordship said:

"It does not appear from the evidence that he (SIR GEORGE) made any specific promise in respect to the murder of SCOTT." This proof he thought was clear and to the point upon the question of amnesty. Lord CARNARVON also treated upon this question, and in referring to the conversation between the Archbishop and the late Government, and after having studied the whole question, and read the despatch from this country, His Lordship said:

"As to the second plea, based upon alleged conversations held in 1870 by Abbe RITCHOT, Archbishop TACHE and others, with the GOVERNOR-GENERAL and Members of the Dominion Government, I had occasion some time ago to examine the statements made on both sides, and I formed then, and still hold the distinct opinion that the misapprehension on the part of Abbe RITCHOT (from whatever cause it proceeded) of the statements made to him, was so complete as to have led him entirely to misrepresent not only the views but the language of the GOVERNOR GENERAL and of other officers of the Government."

With these facts before the Premier and having studied as he must have done with a good deal of care the despatch of Lord DUFFERIN, and the reply of Lord CARNARVON, he (Mr. BOWELL) thought the House had cause to marvel at the manner in which the Premier had treated this portion of the question, namely, by placing the evidence of a gentleman with a very imperfect knowledge of the English language, the language in which the interview had taken place, against that of the GOVERNOR-GENERAL and Sir CLINTON MURDOCH, and the deductions drawn from the whole evidence by the GOVERNOR-GENERAL and by Lord CARNARVON. However, it was a matter of taste for the Premier to assume that position, and he had no doubt that if it was necessary to go farther in order to retain his followers upon this as upon other questions, that the Premier would not hesitate to do so. But there was other evidence which though perhaps not so important of itself, yet with the followers of the hon. gentleman might have as much weight as, if not more, than the opinion of the GOVERNOR-GENERAL or the Colonial Secretary. He referred to the opinion expressed by the Ontario organ of the Government, though whether it was to continue to be the organ was a question, seeing that the new Liberal paper of Ontario appeared to be high in their favour, judging from the fact that it contained the gist of the resolution before the House one day before the Globe. However, the Globe was still good authority for the views of the Government, although there appeared to be two leaders on the opposite side of the House, with two organs, and that journal stated that there was not a particle of evidence either in the pamphlet published by Archbishop TACHE, or the letter subsequently published by RIEL or in the evidence before the North-West Committee to establish a promise of amnesty. The statement of that journal was as follows:

"It will be seen that the more that is written on this question the more clearly it is proved that there was no promise of amnesty. All the Archbishop's witnesses are against him, and it is a rule of law that a man is bound by his own evidence. Without even hearing the other side, therefore, the Archbishop, is non-suited. We doubt if any abler advocate can be found than the Archbishop, and if he shall have failed to establish the existence of an amnesty, and a grievance affecting RIEL, we doubt if any good can come of placing an impossible task in less skillful hands. One is strongly reminded in reading the Archbishop's pamphlet of what a great lawyer once said to his junior—'We have no case, therefore the less we say the better, for if we say anything we shall only make more clear how completely we are without a leg to stand on.'"

In reference to the letter published by LOUIS RIEL, the same journal said, speaking as they had a right to presume for the Cabinet:

"There is no new evidence adduced, and there is not even a pretence of anything like a written promise having been accorded."

And in reference to the evidence produced before the North-West Committee, that paper stated:

"The reader cannot fail to have observed, (1) That no direct proof of any kind can apparently be brought forward to prove the promise of amnesty. (2) That four years having elapsed, and Archbishop TACHÉ being well informed on the subject, is almost conclusive against the existence of any such proof. (3) That the proof relied on is hearsay evidence of the most unreliable kind."

He begged to draw the attention of the House to the fact that when the Hon. Premier was reading with so much force that portion of the evidence of Archbishop TACHÉ, in reference to the interview with the late Government, the impression that he seemed desirous of making was, that the Archbishop had the interview himself, where as it was only the hearsay evidence of others. He had quoted these extracts on the part of the leading journal of the Government party in Ontario to show that even that journal, that was as anxious as any one could be to fasten upon the late Government the fact of their having promised an amnesty in order to damage them in the country, was compelled to say that there was not a single ground upon which to base a charge that an amnesty had been promised. The next point that the Premier discussed was the assertion that the so-called Government of LOUIS RIEL was a de facto Government, and therefore whatever might have been done by it, partook of a political rather than a civil character. Now, even admitting that it was a de facto Government, would that justify the murder in cold blood of one of our citizens? Upon this point, HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in his despatch used this language:

"But though these proceedings thus received a certain sanction at the hands of the representatives of the population of the North West, it does not appear to me to affect RIEL'S culpability with respect to SCOTT. In the first place, as has been very clearly laid down by the Chief Justice of Manitoba in his charge to the jury on the LEPINE trial, it is not possible for any lawful executive authority to spring into existence within HER MAJESTY'S Dominions, unless it emanates from herself. Without, however, laying too much stress upon the purely legal aspect of this part of the question, it is very evident that the killing of SCOTT was not an exercise of jurisdiction known to any form of law, but an inhuman slaughter of an innocent man, aggravated by circumstances of extraordinary brutality."

Lord CARNARVON also discussed this point very clearly. He stated:—

"The third plea that the murderers of SCOTT represented a de facto Government, and are consequently excusable on political grounds, is one which I cannot for a moment entertain. There could be within the Queen's possessions in North America no power or pretence of establishing a de facto Government, independent of, or defying HER MAJESTY and her officers, which could aspire to any such immunity as that claimed; and any argument based on the view of such a state of things being possible, is in my opinion not even worthy of discussion."

His Lordship also stated, in reference to the receiving of the aid of these men during the threatened Fenian raid—and these remarks of His Lordship were the best reply to the arguments of the Premier, that when a body of men like those who had been in rebellion in the North-West offered their services to the State, and their services were accepted, that the offences they had previously committed were thereby condoned—an argument which, if of any force at all, should if carried out logically, have led to a complete amnesty. His Lordship stated:

"Admitting that Mr. ARCHIBALD dealt with these persons as with any other members of the community, received valuable assistance from them, and not only formally thanked them, but promised them a temporary immunity from the consequences of their crime; I feel no hesitation in concluding that neither these transactions, nor even any further promise (if he had made one), of endeavouring to procure for them an amnesty, can be held to have placed the Crown under any obligation absolutely to condone so disgraceful a crime as that which they had committed."

He (Mr. BOWELL) contented himself with reading these portions of the despatches in reply to the argument of the First Minister as a reason why amnesty should be granted. But he could go farther, and state that it could have been established before the North-west Committee, had the question been allowed to have been proved that the offering of the services of LOUIS RIEL and his compatriots was an after thought. That offer was only given after the Fenians had been driven from British territory, and that it would be madness on their part to have attempted to take part in the raid. The proclamation in reference to this matter was issued on the 3rd October, 1871. On the 5th between two and three hundred men were marching to the frontier, and it was only on the 7th that RIEL and LEPINE wrote to the Governor. It was true that Father RITCHOT had written before that to the Governor, but the affidavit of one FRANCOIS CHARRETTE sworn to before J. H. ASHDOWN, J. P., of Winnipeg, shewed conclusively that these parties were in league with O'DONOHUE, and those connected with him, and it was only when they found that it would be madness on their part to join them that they offered their services to the Governor.

It might perhaps be as well on this point to read the affidavit he had referred to. It was as follows :

" I, FRANCOIS CHARRETTE, of the parish of St. Norbert, make oath and say, that at the Church of PERE RITCHOT, on Sunday, the 8th day of October, 1871, I was present, and in the morning before service commenced, I heard LOUIS RIEL say to a number of half-breeds who were assembled outside the church : " You see," said he, " that our friend O'DONOHUE is taken prisoner at Pembina. He has always been our friend, and we should fight for him and try and get him released."

PIERRE DELORME said : " Our O'DONOHUE is a prisoner, and we can do nothing as the English are stronger than we. But the best thing we can do is to go and see the Governor and to offer him our services, to show that as we can do nothing for O'DONOHUE we are all on his side now." To this RIEL agreed, and they all went away to see the Governor. From what I have heard RIEL and others say, I know that it was the intention of him and his party to join O'DONOHUE and the Fenians.

FRANCOIS CHARRETTE.

"Sworn before me at Winnipeg, this 12th day of October, 1871, and interpreted and thoroughly understood by the above FRANCOIS CHARRETTE.

J. H. ASHDOWN, J. P."

Now, if there was any force in that affidavit and in the fact that these men did not offer their services till the Fenians were driven from the country, he could not see that they were entitled to any consideration for what was only an assumed loyalty. In view of all these facts the question for this House to decide was whether a five years' banishment was a sufficient punishment for the crime with which these men were charged. He held that the position that they occupied now was much worse than it would be after these resolutions were passed, and carried into effect. If the telegrams received from Manitoba were to be relied on—and from our knowledge of what had been done there in the past it was evident they were correct—the papers declaring RIEL an outlaw had yesterday been read in Court, and he was therefore now an outlaw. Then with regard to LEPINE, if these resolutions were carried out, in place of two years' imprisonment and permanent deprivation of his political rights, he would after five years be restored to all the rights and privileges of any British subject. What was this crime of which this man stood charged? He was not a little surprised, as he thought every member of the House must be, to hear the Premier declare with considerable vehemence that neither he nor any one of his colleagues or Party ever tried to make political capital out of this question. Such an assertion, he was bound to say, could not be received with the same dependence as that which were generally placed upon the utterances of the First Minister of the Crown. Looking for a moment at the opinions held of this crime by the different persons who had considered this question, he would commence with that of HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL himself—and he supposed he had the right to refer to that opinion. He would quote only from the communications placed before the House, in which he found HIS EXCELLENCY saying, in his despatch of 10th December: " At the time this instrument (that is, the proclamation of Lord LISGAR) was placed in the hands of these gentlemen (that is, Vicar-General THIBAULT, Colonel De SALABERRY, and Mr. DONALD SMITH), no blood had been shed, nor any very heinous crime committed." HIS EXCELLENCY says in the same despatch that Archbishop TACHE had no authority to condone such a savage murder as that of SCOTT. Again he says the offer of an amnesty must have been communicated to RIEL before the accomplishment of that tragedy. He says further that " the killing of SCOTT was not an exercise of jurisdiction known to any form of law, but an inhuman slaughter of an innocent man, aggravated by circumstances of extraordinary brutality."

These were the deliberate opinions of one who had studied this question from the beginning to the end. His Excellency also said, in paragraph 27, page 12, of this despatch, speaking of the murder :—

" The utmost alleged against SCOTT is that he used violent language in prison, and that he had alluded to an intention of capturing RIEL and retaining him as a hostage for the release of the prisoners already referred to ; but even these allegations were not proved, nor, had they been proved ten times over, could they have rendered him liable to serious punishment."

His Excellency, speaking still of this murder, further said :—

"The further details of the tragedy are so horrible, if the statements in the evidence can be relied on, that I will not shock your Lordship by repeating them ; suffice it to say, that all the special pleading in the world will not prove the killing of SCOTT to be anything else than a cruel, wicked and unnecessary crime."

Lord CARNARVON was equally explicit upon this point, and repeatedly in his despatches he designated it as a brutal and atrocious crime. He spoke of it as a murder no less than five times in the course of his remarks, and wound up by saying that "such a murder as that of SCOTT cannot be allowed to go unpunished." He also said, looking at the matter from an entirely independent point of view—

"It has been a source of much pain to many who, like myself, take pride in the public institutions of Canada, to hear of the Legislature being disgraced by the election to the House of Commons and the presence within its walls of a criminal like RIEL ; and I wholly fail to understand how any section of the Canadian people, of whatever race or creed, can so far mistake the true character of these unhappy proceedings as to throw over them the color of patriotism.

He (Mr. BOWELL) was not aware, indeed, whether those gentlemen were not educated to the use of this strong language by those who now occupied the Treasury Benches. He found, on reference to the record, that the hon. the Premier did not hesitate, when he was discussing the question of the murder of SCOTT to use language equally strong and pointed as that of Lord DUFFERIN and the Earl of CARNARVON—language certainly not in accord with that he used to-night. It must have surprised every one in the House to hear the Premier speak of "the gentlemen who governed that country previous to the troops going there." The gentlemen, forsooth ! When speaking of them from this (the Opposition) side of the House, and of the events which occurred in that part of the world, he made use of the term ruffians ! He did not know whether the Premier had changed his mind, or whether his change of language arose from the fact that he had exchanged seats with the right hon. the member for Kingston and taken the salary attaching to the position. He did not know whether the change had taught him to use other language, and cultivate those influences which in the past he pretended to despise. Of course he had no objection, and the House and country would have no objection to the hon. gentleman's improving in all the language that he might use, but he found that the hon. gentleman termed it in his speeches in the West a murder, and that he was going to do everything he possibly could to have these murderers arrested. When the hon. gentleman was Treasurer of Ontario, in speaking of this same man he now designated a gentleman, he said that RIEL would either be apprehended and brought to justice by means of the $5,000, or be compelled to hide from the light of day his coward face and crime-stained hands. If he was to be driven from the country never again to be seen in Canada, he (Mr. BOWELL) was of opinion that when the Premier's Minister of Justice was in communication with a reverend gentleman who knew where RIEL was, and could put his hands on him, he was equally guilty with the Minister of Justice who sent RIEL one thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Does the hon. member say I have been communicating with some rev. gentleman about RIEL ?

Mr. BOWELL said the idea that he desired to convey was that if the present Premier's Minister of Justice, with the knowledge, he presumed, of the Premier, had an interview either by himself (that was, the Minister of Justice) with Rev. Mr. LASCOMB, and could have had him brought to justice—

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I tell the hon. gentleman I did not know where RIEL was, and if I had known he would have been arrested.

Mr. BOWELL said he was obliged to conclude, then, that Hon. Mr. DORION, when he was making promises on behalf of the Cabinet, and entering into negotiations with Governor MORRIS and Archbishop TACHE to get this man out of the way, was acting on his own responsibility, and they were then as they were now, setting the whole principle of responsible Government at defiance, in throwing on the shoulders of others that which they should assume themselves. Of course, if the Premier placed himself in that position, he (Mr. BOWELL) could have no fault to find. He dealt with facts as they existed, and if the Premier's Minister of Justice failed to arrest RIEL when he could have done so, the hon. gentleman (the Premier) should have visited him with the same condemnation as he did the Minister of Justice in the old Government, knowing, as he must have known (because he had the evidence in his possession) that Hon. Mr DORION pursued such a course. The Premier, in a speech in Lambton, told the electors he would do what he could do to bring the murderers of SCOTT to justice. The hon. gentleman would hardly attempt to say that when he made that speech he made it for political purposes. The hon. member for South Bruce did not hesitate upon every occasion when an opportunity presented itself of using the strongest language that he could command, and when he said that he was using a strong expression, for he believed there was no man in the House or country who knew better how to use language than that gentleman in speaking on a question of this kind. They found the Premier to-night, in his attempts to justify what had been done in the North-West, telling the House that there was nothing done during the Manitoba insurrection that was not equalled in the rebellion of 1837-38. He admitted there were crimes perpetrated in 1837-8 which deserved punishment such as the perpetrators received, but he denied that there was a death or anything that bore a parallel to the atrocity of that crime committed in the North-West. There were deaths, he admitted, but they occurred in fight, and he repeated, as he stated in this House before, that if SCOTT had been shot upon the plains in resisting those who were in revolt at the time, and in anything like fight, there would have been some reason for the arguments now used in order to grant an amnesty; but SCOTT was taken into a cell where there was no possibility of his doing anything that could injure them, and not, as the excuse offered for him by the Premier when he said he was put to death because it was feared SCOTT might do something wrong towards the then powers in that country.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman must not misrepresent me.

Mr. BOWELL—That is a strong expression. I took the words down.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I said that the killing of SCOTT was accompanied with unnecessary cruelty. I said there was no conceivable reason to me why they should put him to death unless it was for fear of some approximate cause. I said that was the only possible reason they could give. I never said it was a proper reason.

Mr. BOWELL said the hon. gentleman must have known from the evidence that SCOTT was at the time of his death in a position that he could not by any possibility have done anything to injure them. He was in a dungeon, manacled, and was brought before the tribunal in that state. He knew very little of the language used in his sham trial. The declaration on the part of LEPINE was that some one, two or three must be put to death in order to impress upon the Canadian Government the fact that they were sincere, and that they were in earnest in what they were doing. Now, he (Mr. BOWELL) held that the Premier knew these facts when he gave them as an indirect reason for SCOTT's death that he desired to convey to the House the impression that he did not hold the same strong opinions that he at one time expressed in this House and outside of it on this subject. The hon. member for South Bruce certainly used this question in more places than one. He designated it in this House as a cold-blooded murder.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL—He designated RIEL as one guilty of murder.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL said he was glad to hear him say "Hear, hear," for if he held the same opinions now he would not vote for the Premier's resolution to condone RIEL's crime and leave him in a position to sit in this House and draw the public money.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—He applied to the proper Minister of Justice to supply the money.

Mr. BOWELL said he condemned the action of the former Minister of Justice, as he did that of the present Premier and his colleagues, and if the same means had been taken to catch RIEL that had been employed to get him here, he would now be in the same position as LEPINE or perhaps worse. The former Minister of Justice did wrong to send money to RIEL, but he was astonished that the member for South Bruce, with all his political morality and honesty, should support a Minister of Justice who had been, directly or indirectly, in communication with this same murderer. On the 11th April, the hon. member for South Bruce said the murder of SCOTT was perpetrated on the ground of pure personal revenge, and in another speech at Bowmanville, he remarked the murdered man was murdered for his loyalty to his QUEEN and country, and for that alone.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Who said that?

Mr. BOWELL—The hon. member for South Bruce, of course. He referred to it, because that hon. gentleman was the power behind the Throne. The same hon. gentleman in this House remarked that the murder of SCOTT was an unprovoked and damnable murder.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear!

Mr. BOWELL said he was glad to hear the hon. gentleman say "hear, hear," and he was sure the hon. gentleman would not vote for a resolution which would say to RIEL, "You can go to the States for five years, and come back again to enjoy all the rights of a loyal citizen. Then, on the 30th January, the member for South Bruce remarked, "It was no ordinary murder; it was no murder for money, or for any of those causes which usually provoke a great crime." He (Mr. BOWELL) could go on reading these extracts, but he thought he had quoted enough to show the opinion Mr. BLAKE formerly held of RIEL's crime. Chief Justice WOOD, who the Hon. Mr. DORION declared a most impartial man, and free from prejudice, in sentencing LEPINE, said:

"An unlawful, ordinary homicide is a startling and shocking occurrence in a civilized and Christian community, but the killing of SCOTT is taken out of the category of common homicides. So dreadful and so horrible was it that even those who at first felt disposed to sympathise with the cause of the insurrectionary movement would not believe it possible until the dark deed was perpetrated. The knowledge of it sent a thrill of horror throughout the Dominion of Canada and the civilized world, and struck the hearts of the settlers of Red River with shuddering terror, and although now over four years have passed away, that crime is still regarded by the people of Red River and the Dominion of Canada with unabated abhorrence, and not a solitary individual has ever dared to speak or write a single sentence, I will not say of justification, but even in extenuation, palliation, excuse or apology of its enormity, and the evidence given on your trial, instead of relieving, has added to and increased the dark shadows surrounding that awful tragedy. In your defence they were allowed the widest latitude, but to the credit of human nature and to the honour of the profession be it said, during their entire defence they had not one syllable of justification or apology to offer for the awful crime of which you have been convicted; indeed, I do not believe twenty respectable French Metis can be found in the whole Red River settlement who would not have come to the same conclusion. PERE RITCHOT swears he advised you and others of the risk and the danger you incurred in the movement in which you and your confreres were engaged. For what was done by you and your associates from that time onward, whatever may be said as to what was done prior thereto, you and your associates stand before the world without a shadow of excuse or justification. You would not heed the warning—you would not listen to what you knew was the truth. You imprisoned, and I may say from what has been disclosed on this trial, tortured those even innocent of actively opposing your mad proceedings. You robbed HER MAJESTY'S loyal subjects of their property, and plundered whenever you could do so with impunity. And lastly, you crowned the long catalogue of your crimes with the slaughter of THOMAS SCOTT, for no other offence than loyalty to his QUEEN. Had you taken the advice of your brother BAPTISTE on that fatal evening of the 3rd of March, you would not now be where you are. You did not spare poor SCOTT You did not think of, or if you did, you did not regard his poor old mother or his relations. Where his ashes repose you may know, but we do not. Whether his body was made away with so as not to be found, to be set up as a defence, as has been done on this trial, or because it was so mangled and mutilated that even you were ashamed it should ever be seen, is unknown. Taking all the facts in evidence together, well might the ever-to-be-lamented Sir GEORGE E. CARTIER, in a private and confidential communication to Lord LISGAR, say, the killing of SCOTT was an excessive abuse of power and cruel brutality. You, unlike SCOTT, will not be forced to prepare to leave this and enter the invisible world in a few short hours. When the Rev. Mr. YOUNG came to you like an angel of mercy, and with streaming eyes begged you to spare SCOTT'S life only for a few short hours to enable him to prepare to meet his GOD, you, inhumanly denied and refused his request with a brevity and emphasis in keeping with every act surrounding this human butchery. After SCOTT'S death, this same messenger of Heaven, bathed in tears, went to RIEL along with the Bishop of Rupert's Land, and humbly implored RIEL to give him the body that he might give it the last sad rites of the Church, intimating that he was about writing to his poor old mother the untimely death of her son, and that it would be a consolation to her to know that her son had received Christian burial. To all entreaties to spare life for a few short hours before death, and to give the body for burial after death, you were alike inflexible. Search the annals of the barbarous tribes which for centuries have roamed over the vast prairies of the North-West, and in them you will fail to find a parallel in savage atrocity." Now, the Premier must have known all these facts when he framed, or allowed some one else to frame those resolutions for him, asking for an amnesty to be granted. He believed the people of this country were unanimous in wishing to grant an amnesty to every one implicated in the Manitoba rebellion except the four men concerned in this savage and damnable butchery. Did any one suppose that even if this resolution were passed it would settle the question? Did the Premier suppose for a moment that those who took the extreme view in favor of RIEL would not the very next session bring in a motion to relieve this gentleman from his political disabilities. (Ministerial cries of "hear, hear.")

Mr. BOWELL said that he had used the expression by mistake, and there was just this difference between himself and the Premier—that the latter did not.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am quite sure if I used the expression I used it inadvertently. I never intended to call RIEL a gentleman.

Mr. BOWELL, continuing, said he was not prepared, considering the fact that the country had been agitated from one end to the other by hon. gentlemen opposite on this subject for no other than political purposes, to accept a milder penalty for the four men implicated in the SCOTT murder than can be obtained. But why should O'DONOHUE receive severe punishment while his colleagues escaped with banishment from the country for five years? The answer which would be given was that O'DONOHUE was a Fenian. He did not hesitate to say that if O'DONOHUE had belonged to the same nationality as LEPINE and his comrades, he would not have been visited with perpetual banishment. While he held that no punishment could be too great to visit upon those who took part in the Fenian raid, the facts showed that O'DONOHUE went there with the knowledge of those who were about to be pardoned, and that they were equally guilty with him, only they possessed less courage. If O'DONOHUE was to receive perpetual banishment, which he richly deserved, so also ought those who were connected with him in the movement, and were guilty of murder. If this difficult question could be wiped out it would be a fortunate circumstance, not only for Parliament, but for the country, but when he found that the party supporting the Government never ceased year after year to agitate this question through the country, and at length ascended to power mainly by that means, he was not prepared to give them credit for either patriotism or kindly feeling towards those whom they now desired should go unwhipped of justice. If the same opportunity was again presented to that party to stump the country on that question, they would prey upon the passions of the people of Ontario, if they could secure political advancement thereby. Knowing what that party had done in the past, and what they would be ready to do in the future, if the opportunity presented itself, he was not prepared to accept the resolutions moved by the First Minister, nor did he believe they would be acceptable to a majority of the people of Ontario, however much they might be supported by members who were driven to voting for them from fear of breaking up the Administration, and the still greater fear that members of another party would occupy their seats on the Treasury Benches, who would govern the country much better than the present Government, and much more in accordance with their professions when out of office. The prediction which he had made during the last political canvass was being verified, viz. : that the very moment the Ontario elections were over, and the Government had secured all the constituencies that could possibly be secured, LEPINE would be reprieved. No sooner were the Ontario elections closed than the fact of LEPINE'S reprieve was promulgated through the Official Gazette. By watching the course of events and knowing the past history of the party in power, he knew moreover that before it was possible for the Quebec elections to be brought on the Government would introduce some scheme for granting an amnesty in order to enable their friends in Lower Canada to go to the polls with the declaration made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier some time ago at a public meeting, that it was only from the Liberal party that an amnesty could be expected, if any should ever be proclaimed. That had also come to pass. The whole scheme for the pardon of LEPINE was purposely kept back until after the Ontario elections, and it was now brought forward before the Quebec elections, and members would hear the parishes of Lower Canada ringing with declarations of the love which the Government had displayed for their countrymen in the North-West, and shown themselves friends and allies of the Metis.

Mr. PLUMB rose amid cries of question. He said that in a debate of so much importance the House had a right to expect to hear from the members supporting the Government, some remarks in justification of the extraordinary resolutions which had been submitted. He could quite imagine the difficulties under which the Premier labored when he rose to support the resolutions which he had brought forward. The hon. gentleman would remember the course which he and his friends pursued, and in view of their past professions he (Mr. PLUMB) was not prepared for the course which had been pursued. It required all the courage, not to say the audacity, of the hon. gentleman to enable him to introduce his resolutions. The people had been surprised to find that immediately after the Ontario elections had taken place an extra Gazette was issued, giving notice of the commutation of the sentence passed on LEPINE, and their surprise was increased when, on examining the papers and despatches brought down, it appeared that on the 15th of January the Minister of Justice was directed to commute the sentence. The reason why that direction was not published to the world in the Gazette of the following Saturday, was found in the fact that immediately after that date there was to be an election in Ontario, and it was supposed no doubt that the publication of that commutation of sentence would have an effect on the result of that election. It was extraordinary under all the circumstances that the announcements should not have been inserted in the Gazette in the regular way, instead of its being published three or four days afterwards in an extra. Those who had taken an interest in the late elections would have been glad to know that it was intended to commute LEPINE'S sentence, for that question of commutation was a prominent one during the canvass. When the Government found themselves brought face to face with that question, beyond a possibility of evading it, a question upon which they had ridden to power in Ontario, it was very convenient for them to find ample reason why His Excellency the GOVERNOR GENERAL should deal with it, and why he should throw his mantle of protection around them, and save them in some measure from taking that responsibility which they were bound to assume before the country, and which the country would hold them to. The GOVERNOR GENERAL, with that kindness which he had shown on all occasions, was perhaps very willing to remove this vexed question from the region of political discussion, while, in doing so, he felt he was supporting a weak-kneed Ministry that had not the power of doing the work itself. In postponing the publication of that announcement of commutation until it should suit the convenience of a political Party in a certain portion of the Dominion, the life of LEPINE might have been sacrified, because the Chief Justice of Manitoba was obliged to interfere and respite the prisoner in order to allow of the receipt of the official notice of commutation of sentence. A man's life was thus trifled with to serve political purposes ; there was a week's delay, during which time LEPINE was lying under sentence of death. This was a kind of cruelty which was only something less atrocious than the murder committed by LEPINE and his associates. A perusal of the papers laid on the table of the House showed that the members of the late Ministry might be content to rest their case, so far as blame might attach to them, on the despatches which accompanied the commutation of sentence. It was very evident that at the outset an impression went abroad into the country that the judgment concerning the commutation had been taken without the advice or suggestion of the Ministry; but such was not found to be the actual fact. That impression was not confirmed by the despatches of HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, and in his despatch to Lord CARNARVON there were the following words: "The reasons for which my Ministers are desirous of seeking your Lordship's assistance are founded on the fact of the circumstances out of which the 'amnesty question, has grown, having occurred at a time anterior to the assumption by Canada of the Government of the North West." It was thus seen that HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL did not seek the assistance of Lord CARNARVON, but his Ministers sought it; and therefore the responsibility must rest with them of having removed the decision of the question from themselves, and placed it in other hands. Reference had been made in the despatches to feelings of antagonism and irritation that existed in this country on this question. If such was the case, who were responsible for exciting such feelings? It was these gentlemen opposite and their friends who had made the SCOTT murder a political cry in the elections, and had raised it to the position of a grave political question. Such being the fact, they should now bear the responsibility of their own conduct, and not seek to shirk it by throwing the blame upon their predecessors. He would like to see this question settled, but those who had brought it so prominently before the public, and made it an embarrassing question, should bear the responsibility of settling it. A great deal had been said about a promise of amnesty by the late Government, but there was nothing that he could find in the evidence to establish such a promise. Garbled extracts of the evidence might be ingeniously connected together with a view to make an impression, but the fact remained that a promise of amnesty had not been proved. That being the case, it devolved upon the present Government to deal with the question upon its merits, and they could not divest themselves of their responsibility by any attempts to throw it upon their predecessors. He was somewhat surprised at the reference to the agreement which he said had been entered into between RIEL and Sir GEORGE CARTIER that the former should vacate Provencher in favour of the latter, because the terms of that arrangement had nothing to do wih the question of amnesty or with the murder of SCOTT, but only had reference to the occupation of certain lands of the Metis. Sir GEORGE CARTIER never acknowledged the telegram which was sent by RIEL and his friends, but telegraphed back to Governor ARCHIBALD. It had been said that the fact that RIEL and his friends had aided the Government at a time when a Fenian raid was threatened, was a good reason for the condonation of their offences. That in his opinion was the only point which had been made which in the slightest degree could justify amnesty; but he found that Lord CARNARVON in his despatch did not consider even that a sufficient reason for condoning the offence. While perhaps under the circumstances it might be best to do something in order to allay the feeling that existed in the country for many years in regard to this affair and prevent further agitation, he did not think the resolutions now before the House at all met the case in a proper way. He was not bound by his constituents to any special or peculiar view of this question, but he had no doubt that other members were differently situated. He had no doubt that the murder of SCOTT was entirely unjustifiable. He adverted to a quarrel which had occurred between RIEL and SCOTT, and related the circumstances connected with SCOTT'S first arrest, his escape and subsequent re-capture and execution. He again expressed his opinion that the resolutions would not settle this difficult question in a manner satisfactory to the country, and he concluded by stating that he had spoken on this question without much previous preparation, and being unaccustomed to address the House especially on questions of this nature, he craved the indulgence of hon. gentlemen.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not think that his hon. friend need ask the indulgence of the House, but if he had done so, it apparently had not been granted, because for the first time in his life had the majority in the House taken a course like that followed to-night. A subject of great importance to the future well-being of this country had been treated by gentlemen opposite with extraordinary levity, encouraged, he was sorry to say, by some Ministers of the Crown. He had listened with great attention, as it deserved, to the speech of the hon. Premier; but he had failed to gather from his elaborate speech whether the honorable gentleman held that the faith of the Crown of England was pledged to amnesty to the parties implicated in the rebellion in the North-West. The whole question turned upon that point, and the hon. gentleman did not explain himself satisfactorily upon it. He had not argued that the faith of the Crown was pledged. If the faith of the Crown was pledged to amnesty, then, no matter what the crime might be—no matter how atrocious it might be in its inception, and in its consummation—no matter how blameable the Government of the day might be in making that pledge—no matter with what condemnation he or his colleagues might be treated for making that pledge—if the honour of the Crown of England was pledged, then an amnesty ought to be extended to these men, and if extended to them it should be full and complete. There could not be a partial performance, an approximate performance, of the pledge—there could not be an approximate saving of the faith of the Crown, and therefore if the honour of the Crown was pledged to amnesty, that amnesty should be granted pure and simple without any conditions. The resolutions before the House did not say, and the Government upon whose responsibility they were brought down, did not think, that the honor or faith of the Crown had been pledged. The Premier attempted to draw a distinction between the honor of the Crown in Canada and the Imperial honor of the Crown. He said that although in a technical sense the honor of the Crown had not been pledged, yet it had been committed to an amnesty to all intents and purposes. HER MAJESTY did not wear two crowns, but one crown, and there was therefore but one way in which the honor of that crown could be said to be pledged, for there were no two kinds of honor attaching to it. The QUEEN was the sovereign of Great Britain, Ireland, and all their colonies and dependencies, and any pledge made on her behalf, whether by her Prime Minister in England or in the smallest dependency in the Empire, would not be broken. No obligation could exist here that did not exist in England. She was Sovereign of Canada, and every pledge made by him (Sir JOHN) when Premier, or by the gentleman now at the head of the Government, as her advisers for this portion of the Empire, could fail in being carried out to the utmost extent, no matter what the result be to the individuals or the parties concerned by that promise. Before discussing the resolutions placed before the House, he would ask leave to recall some of the circumstances connected with the annexation of the North-West to the Dominion of Canada. The Premier in his speech stated that there was something wrong in the course taken by the Dominion Government towards the people of Manitoba, and if the resistance they had offered to the taking possession of the country had taken a passive and not an active shape, the hon. gentleman indicated that he would perhaps have sympathized with it. He (Sir JOHN) denied that there was any force used from beginning to end, that there was one act of aggression, one act of wrong, one act that could not be justified. He heard an honourable gentleman laugh. Well, he could laugh if he could do nothing else.

Mr. YOUNG—What about the thousand dollars?

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—The hon. gentleman should not interrupt me; it is a want of manners, certainly. From the very first motion made by the Dominion to annex the territory of the North-West down to the time the late Government ceased to administer the affairs of the country, there was not one single act of theirs that he was not prepared to justify, and he was quite ready to do so just now, not only with respect to the thousand dollars, but with regard to every other act of the Government, of which he was a member, committed in that connection. The gaining of the union of that country to Canada was no novel question. The late Government did not open it up for the first time. It had occupied the minds of the people of Canada for years and years. From the first time he (Sir JOHN) had entered Parliament, the people of Canada looked forward to a western extension of territory; and from the time he was first a Minister, in 1854, the question was brought up time and again, and pressed with great ability and force by the Hon. GEORGE BROWN, who was then a prominent man in Opposition to the Government, of which he (Sir JOHN) was a member. Not only was that question pressed upon the Government in the Parliament of Canada, but we had petitions from the people of the North West themselves praying to be relieved from the Hudson's Bay Company, and to be added to Canada. They would also find that missions were sent to England, and the rights of Canada were fought before a special committee of the House of Commons of England. In every part of Canada, as well as in the North West itself, there was a universal desire expressed that that country should be sooner or later added to the then Province of Canada. The First Minister would himself remember, and so would his hon. friend from South Ontario, the strong pressure by petitions which was brought to bear upon the Government of Canada and the Government of England, especially by Mr. MCISBISTER, who took a deep and special interest in the matter, setting forth the advantages which would result from the proposed union. The gentleman to whom he had alluded not only fought the question here in Canada but in England, at the Colonial Office, and in Parliament, and it was only after this that he gave up this struggle and addressed himself to other pursuits in which he attained great eminence. The question being so pressed, and continuing to be pressed upon the people and Legislature of Canada, and a Confederation of the Eastern Provinces having been effected, the Government of the day endeavored to enlarge our area in accordance with the wishes which had been thus expressed, and which had been acquiesced in by the Parliament of Canada. That this latter was the case was shewn by the resolutions adopted at Quebec, and it was the bounden duty of the Government of the day to carry out the expressed wishes of the people and Parliament of Canada, and the expressed wishes of the Imperial Government as conveyed to us, and add that country to the Dominion. Negotiations were accordingly opened with the Hudson's Bay Company. They were at first unwilling to deal with us. They desired to make the country a special preserve for their own special purposes, and it was only after strong pressure from HER MAJESTY'S Imperial Government that they consented, and we succeeded. Having acquired that country, the people of the North-West were aware of it, and offered no objection to it; indeed, if the evidence of Archbishop TACHE were referred to, it would be found that he said that until the feeling of dissatisfaction which led to the rebellion had arisen from the causes of which he spoke, there was a universal desire to join Canada, and be free from the rule of the Hudson's Bay Company. When the Government came to deal with that question they believed they had the voice of the people of Canada, and the voice of the people of the North-west in favor of their policy, and they would have been remiss in their duty had they refused to carry that desire into completion. He did not think there was a dissentient voice in the Parliament of Canada, from 1864 to 1867, as to the desirability of uniting with that country. Parliament voted the necessary means to obtain it. There was nothing aggressive in the course of the Government. There was no proposition to alter the tenure of property by the transfer to Canada. It was simply proposed to transfer to the Government of the Dominion all the powers which the Hudson's Bay Company previously had. Every settler was to have the same right that he had under the Council of Assiniboia. But there was this great advantage—that whereas from the first settlement of the country until the time of union with Canada, not a single man could get a free grant of land, or a freehold property in the country. It was proposed at the Union that every man having a lease from the Hudson's Bay Company, or being only tenant-at-will, should have a right to the freehold vested in his own person, thus enabling them to become the proprietors of the land. The arrangement was made. It received the sanction of Parliament and of the people. No objection was made to the price paid for it, but it was agreed upon all hands that the bargain was a good one, and that the property had been obtained on reasonable conditions. It was accepted, too, as one that was fair to the people of the North-West and to the Hudson's Bay Company. The moment the arrangement was made and sanctioned by the British Government, that moment it became the duty of the Canadian Government to make arrangements for securing the Government of the country. That object was attained by passing a law which was probably one of the aggressive measures referred to by the leader of the Government; he thought, however, it met with general support in Parliament, if he remembered rightly, it was not opposed by the Opposition. Before, however, they attempted to carry out the law, a great calamity fell upon the country. A famine arose in the land. The crops were swept away by the locusts, and a cry for help came to us. The construction of the Dawson Road, beginning at Fort Garry and working eastward, was commenced so that the people of the North-West might be supplied with the means of existence. Mr. SNOW was sent out to take charge of the work. It had been charged as one of the causes of dissatisfaction that the people were paid with flour and provisions instead of money. That choice was made after due consideration, and he believed was a well advised measure. The Government knew the nature of the population of that country. They knew that the majority of them were half-breeds or Indians, and that there was great danger if we paid them with money instead of food, that they would spend it in the purchase of intoxicating liquors. To prevent this, supplies of food and clothing were sent to the country by the Government, to be distributed to the people at cost price. It was said that the cost of the supplies was too great, and that some of the articles were high-priced. That might be true, for they had been purchased on the nonce; there was no time to advertise for tenders, no time to make a bargain. Food must be had, somehow and soon, for the perishing multitudes. The purchases were made in the nearest market, in the United States. The desire to furnish those people with food was a humane one, and the steps taken in that direction were approved by Parliament. The next thing done was to send a party of surveyors down. Perhaps that might be one of the acts which the Premier regarded as aggressive. Before the Canadian Government resolved to send a surveyor into that land, they applied to the Hudson's Bay Company, who knew what the people were, and were in a position to offer an opinion on the subject. The Hudson's Bay Company willingly gave their consent to the sending down of the surveyors for the purpose of lotting out the land. What were the surveys made for! Why, for the purpose of marking out the farms of those men who were the tenants-at-will of the Hudson's Bay Company, to have legal instruments prepared on their behalf by the Surveyor-General, so that the moment the Government of Canada took possession of the country, they might each of them be freeholders. That was the other aggression and the only one committed by the Government of Canada in their attempt to aid that country, and to incorporate it as a portion of the Dominion. It had been agreed between the Hudson's Bay Company on the one hand, and England and Canada on the other hand, that upon some day to be fixed by HER MAJESTY the Union should take place. The day was not yet finally settled, when the Dominion Government sent the Hon. WILLIAM MACDOUGALL to the North West. It might be said that this was an act of aggression. They knew, however, that some time between October and January the Union would be perfected. When the Proclamation would appear in the London Gazette, or, at any rate, at the moment fixed by that Proclamation, the Government of the Hudson's Bay Company ended. Then and thereafter the country would be without a Government unless one were supplied from Canada. The Proclamation was to state that on and after a certain day the North West Territory was to cease to be the property of the Hudson's Bay Company, and to become a portion of the Dominion of Canada, to be ruled and governed by it. In view of that, the Government passed an Act enabling them to appoint a Lieutenant-Governor and a temporary Executive Council. They appointed the Hon. WM. MACDOUGALL, who was then a member of the Government, who gave considerable attention to the question of the North West, making the subject indeed a special study, and who was besides a man of great ability, of wide Parliamentary knowledge and skill, and especially qualified to lay the foundation of a new Government in that country—that Government of necessity founded upon the same principle as our representative institutions. He was appointed early in October, so that he might go into the country as a private individual, while it was still under the Hudson's Bay Company, and before he had any authority whatever. The object in sending him so early was that he should inquire upon the spot what were the wants of the country—what the best course to be pursued at the time of assuming the Government—and for the purpose of preventing the country from being taken by surprise—for the purpose in short of giving him two or three months to ascertain what the feelings and desire of the country were, and what the best means of establishing friendly relations between the people of the North-West and the people of Canada. All that was frustrated by the publication of a false and invented rumour, and the beneficent design of the Government of Canada was prevented from being carried into execution by the extreme course taken by men then in opposition to the Government who for the sake of making political capital scarcely scrupled at anything. Under the circumstances, taking possession as we were of a new country it might have been supposed all Canadians would have been willing to accept their share in aiding the completion of so desirable an object—that party would have been forgotten for the time—that we should have confined our party struggles to this House, or at least to the Dominion, where it would have done no harm, and they would have been found aiding each other, as patriots and British subjects, to unite that country to us, and to satisfy it. From the moment, however, that Mr. MACDOUGALL left this country until the time of the rebellion, his footsteps were dogged, and the most erroneous views expressed regarding him. Mr. MACDOUGALL had no fair play at all. From the time he left Ottawa every action and utterance of his was misrepresented, and it was told in the North West that he had a personal feeling against the people of that country, and against one of the prevailing forms of religion there. It was said that he would give no fair play to that religion and that people, and thus the beneficient and benevolent designs of the Government of Canada were frustrated for vicious objects, and by vicious men. Then the occurrences of 1869-70 took place, and Mr. MACDOUGALL was excluded. No Government was formed; a quasi-rebellion arose; and the Government here at Ottawa had to deal with it. They dealt with it as best they could. They took every step that was within their power for the purpose of producing quiet, and allaying the fears of the people, with the view of disabusing them of the false impression created amongst them as to the way in which they would be treated if they became a portion of Canada. Messenger after messenger, with proclamation after proclamation was sent to them. HER MAJESTY interfered and caused the GOVERNOR-GENERAL to issue a proclamation in which it was alleged that HER MAJESTY was well assured that there was no disloyalty in the mind of the people, and that if they submitted to the Government, every wrong would be redressed, and that they would stand in the same position as the rest of the British Empire. They were specially invited by that proclamation to lay their grievances at the foot of the Throne through HER MAJESTY'S representatives on this continent; and if they dispersed and laid down their arms, they were assured that all would be forgotten and an amnesty granted. The proclamation did not arrive in the North-West so soon as it ought to have done, and when it did arrive there, it was never properly circulated. Thus it was that the delegation came to Ottawa, and that Sir GEORGE CARTIER and himself had met them. He was surprised to hear the statement of the Premier that the Government of Canada recognised the revolutionary power. The Government recognised the delegates appointed by a public meeting held at Fort Garry. The hon. gentleman must have forgotten, when he made the statement, that it was at the invitation of HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, that that meeting was held, and not on account of any action of the Provisional Government or the revolutionary authority. It was attended by such men as Judge BLACK, a gentleman who was certainly not one of the discontented. He had been a judge of the land, and an officer of the Hudson's Bay Company, who had been dispossessed of his judicial position by the Provisional Government, and would not have submitted to its authority except so far as he was forced to do by its being a power de facto. At that meeting delegates were appointed by the people on the invitation of the GOVERNOR-GENERAL by order of the QUEEN, and that deputation came here at the instance of HER MAJESTY, and in accordance with the proclamation. As was the duty of the Government, and in accordance with the instruction from England, they met that delegation. It was true that before that meeting Mr. RIEL had been appointed and had acted as President of the Provisional Government. The Provisional Government was not the result of political revulsion, but a Government of some kind had been formed, the Hudson's Bay Company having been dispossessed. The people, however, in the most riotous and illegal manner, prevented the entrance of Mr. MCDOUGALL, a British subject, into the country. This Provisional Government having been formed, they attempted of course to assert a position, and they gave to this delegation an authority over and above that conferred upon them by the resolutions passed at the public meeting referred to—the meeting which gave them their first and only legal authority to come to Ottawa, as would appear from his evidence, and it need not rest upon his evidence alone, for Judge BLACK who was now living in Scotland, could confirm every word that he said. The delegation stated that they had got such a document. He (Sir JOHN) told them that they must not produce it, that neither the Government of Canada nor the GOVERNOR GENERAL could recognize such a body as the Provisional Government. The document was an illegal one, and it must not be laid before the Government or mentioned. One could well understand the anxiety of RIEL and his friends that they should be recognized, but they were not. If the people of the North West had sent RIEL himself to lay their grievances at the feet of the GOVERNOR GENERAL, the Government and the GOVERNOR GENERAL would have received him, leaving him of course to run the risk of being captured and tried for any crime he might have committed. So cautious were the Government—and they had a right to be cautious—because they had to account for every step they took to the GOVERNOR GENERAL, who had HER MAJESTY'S instructions direct, with respect to this proclamation. There was a Bill of Rights prepared by the Provisional Government, but the Government of Canada declined to receive it, as they declined also to receive any authority emanating from that Provisional Council. The Government told the delegation that they had seen this Bill of Rights. That it had been published in the North-West and published in the papers of Canada. The Delegates might, in their peculiar capacity as representing the grievances in the North-West, press every one of the items contained in the Bill of Rights on its own merits, but without discussing them as emanating from any authority or to be regarded as a state document. Before, however, the publication to be made in the London Gazette, arrived in Ottawa the lamentable events which were the subject of this discussion took place—the murder of SCOTT took place, and he need not say that from that unhappy event all the subsequent troubles had arisen. When ARCHBISHOP TACHE came to Ottawa from Rome, at the invitation of the Canadian Government, he certainly performed a duty, and made a sacrifice, for which the best thanks of this country were due to him. He came from Rome at a most important crisis in the history of his Church for the purpose of aiding the Canadian Government in bringing about a settlement of the affairs of the North-West, and quietness and content amongst his people. It was unnecessary to say that the Government had the fullest and most unreserved communication with that gentleman. HIS GRACE proceeded to the North-West, having previously received such papers and instruments as were thought necessary to the accomplishment of his mission. He was told that the amnesty dated the 6th December, had been prevented from being disseminated, and that HIS EXCELLENCY had reason to believe that the beneficent feeling and intention of HER MAJESTY towards them had not been made known, but that they were kept in ignorance of her desires. He was furnished with copies of all the papers that had previously been sent to that country, and with copies of the proclamation. He was told to go to that country and say that the proclamation was still in force. At that time no bloodshed that the Government knew of had taken place; no life had been lost that they were aware of. All that they knew was that there had been armed resistance to the entrance of certain British subjects into that country, and that the resistance was continued. It had been said that that proclamation was to cover all crimes. He left the answer to that to the despatch of His Excellency the GOVERNOR GENERAL and to the despatch of the Colonial Minister. They had dealt with it as any fair man, any man desiring to act in a judicial capacity must and would act if he dealt with it in the manner which these despatches indicated. Both Lord DUFFERIN and Lord CARNARVON say by no possibility could that proclamation, or could the communication of that proclamation, or the act of handing that proclamation to Archbishop TACHE, be held to cover crimes of a far higher and more serious nature than those designed by the very wording of the proclamation to be condoned and pardoned on the laying down of arms. And as one of those despatches states very truly the very fact that in his (Sir JOHN'S) letter of February 16th, he stated to Archbishop TACHE which he desired to contain, and which did contain, the whole, the sole and all the results of their conversation. In that letter he (Sir JOHN) stated if besides the disturbances that had taken place and the obstructions that had been offered to the entrance into that country of British subjects—if, in addition to the obstructions to the administration of the law, there had been (as the Government had good reason to believe) acts that they had heard and that Archbishop TACHE had heard of—that the insurrectionary forces were in possession of Fort Garry, and had broken into some of the Hudson's Bay Company's stores, and used some of the provisions for rations for their men, the Government of Canada would be willing to step between them and the Hudson's Bay Company and settle any claim the Company might press against them. But hon. gentlemen remarked what right had they to make such promises! He answered they had the right any Government possessed to make such promises in such an exigency, trusting to Parliament to sanction their measures if they thought under the circumstances it was for the good of the country to take that responsibility. He was quite well aware of the nature of the responsibility the Government had taken. He was quite well aware they might be attacked as joining, colluding, abetting, and aiding these insurrectionary proceedings by their course. He was well aware every step they took to obtain quiet possession of that country would be made the object of animadversion and reproach, but a man is unworthy of being concerned in the administration of public affairs if he will not assume responsibility, even if, for the moment, it involves great personal unpopularity to himself. The very fact, as the despatch says, that the amnesty of December 6th as indicated to Archbishop TACHE, extended the terms of it to the payment for any trespasses of that kind, excluded the idea and precluded the inference that any greater, or new or unknown crimes were to be contained, added to, included or inserted in the proclamation. That was the argument of the GOVERNOR GENERAL, and it was the only view that constitutionally and legally could be supported and maintained. Did any one suppose that because there must a certain time elapse between the time the proclamation was sent from Canada and the time it reached there, that the Government did not consider events were occurring of a similar nature to those that the amnesty covered? They knew perfectly well that by no magic act could the proclamation be conveyed in a moment and apply only to acts that had occurred up to the date of the proclamation. On placing it in Archbishop TACHE'S hands they knew time must elapse before he could get there and distribute it, and that the people would have a fair right to consider and hold that all that had been done within the terms of that proclamation would be condoned; but by neither common sense nor any principle of law could it be construed to cover crimes that had not yet been committed so far as had been known, in that country—crimes, they had no reason to suppose, were going to occur. And if they talked about the possibility of bloodshed in that country, it was in view of the necessity which might arise to suppress the insurrection by arms, for the Metis could not be allowed to establish permanently their Government there. HER MAJESTY'S power and authority must be vindicated, and possession of that country must be got, peaceably if possible, but got at all events, and the Government knew that arms were to be used, then there would be bloodshed, and there never was any supposition,—it did not come within the scope of their conversation,—that there would be any bloodshed except in armed resistance to HER MAJESTY'S forces. Archbishop TACHE left Ottawa, and four days before he went into Manitoba, SCOTT was murdered. It was a lamentable event, and the atrocity of the events connected with the murder could not be exaggerated. It complicated matters. The prairie was on fire in that country. The Canadian party were in arms, and there was a thrill of horror throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion. The feeling that was then evoked was stimulated and kept up for political purposes by the political party now in power. If that party had thought more of their country and less upon getting themselves into power—if they had thought more of peace with the North-west and less of abusing the Government, this discussion would not have been required, and all the trouble, expense and heart-burning that had occurred since, would have been spared. The Government were made responsible and held responsible for the murder of SCOTT. The Government of the day were held responsible for bringing the parties to trial, and the Hon. Premier knew what it was all for,—knew that the Dominion Parliament had passed an Act giving representative institutions to Manitoba, giving that Province all the power, authority and jurisdiction that Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, had, though he knew the Government of the Dominion had no power in the administration of the law, that by the constitution under the British North America Act, all the administration of criminal law was vested in the local Government, that the Minister of Justice and the GOVERNOR-GENERAL had no power to take one single step in the punishment of the murderers of SCOTT—although the hon. Premier had before his eyes an instance of the powerlessness of the Dominion Government when one of their own members was shot down in the streets of Ottawa, and the Ontario Government alone possessed the power to arrest and punish the murderer of D'ARCY MCGEE—although the hon. Premier knew that the late Government had as great a desire as the hon. gentleman professed to have, he went through the country holding his (Sir JOHN'S) Government responsible for the failure to arrest and punish the murderers of SCOTT, charged with a dereliction of duty, charged with soiling their hands and dipping them in the blood of SCOTT. They were charged with attempting to save RIEL from the consequences of his crime, and held up as he (Sir JOHN) was at the polls during the elections as a man utterly regardless of the life of a fellow-subject. He (Sir JOHN) was charged with allowing a brother Ontarian to be brutally murdered in the North-West, and, as an Ontarian, on whom devolved the responsibility of punishing the murderer, with playing into the hands of the Metis to please the people of Lower Canada, who had made common cause with the insurrectionists. He was held guilty of a moral and political crime, and all this time it was known by the hon. gentlemen who made these accusations that he had no more power to arrest or punish RIEL than they themselves, who were then in opposition. And his triumph was now. He found these gentlemen who had so maligned him, and held him up to the scorn of his fellow-countrymen, who had tried to ruin him politically. These very men were now bringing into this House a resolution that he (Sir JOHN) would never have dared to propose in this House. Now it rested with them to deal with the murderer. He spoke from their point of view, as they did speak, and as they, if still in Opposition, would speak now. After SCOTT was killed the difficulty of Government arose. They had a great responsibility—an enormous responsibility. On the one hand there was a danger of an immediate rising in the North-West. It was the bounden duty of the Government to restore peace and order where discord and lawlessness had prevailed. It was their desire and their duty at the same time in the older portions of the Dominion, in Ontario especially, where the feeling was specially aroused—aroused in the manner so well described by the hon. member for North Hastings, not to shock the moral sense of the people there. They were well inclined. They were led to believe the Government had been guilty of negligence and slackness in their duty. What was there that they could do that they did not do? Would any hon. gentleman point to any dereliction of their duty in the course they pursued? They could not indict Mr. RIEL or Mr. LEPINE for the murder of SCOTT. They could not approach them for the purpose of arresting them. They could not take a single step to urge the vindication of the law. That was thrown on the local advisers of the Governor of the Province at the time, and if they did not choose to follow up and vindicate the majesty of the law by apprehending the perpetrators of the offence, they (the Dominion Government) had no power whatever to force them to do so. The LIEUT.-GOVERNOR was obliged to choose as his advisors men who had the confidence of the people, and his Attorney-General took no steps, so far as they knew, to arrest the murderers. He was free to confess that the Government of the Dominion of that day did not press the Government of Manitoba to arrest these men. He wished this fact to be distinctly understood whatever might be the consequences of the statement. At that time, what was the condition of affairs! The majority of the whole people of Manitoba had been more or less concerned in the rising and establishment of the Provisional Government. Those who had not been immediately concerned in it sympathized with that rising. To have attempted to arrest the murderers would have caused another rising, and instead of the lamentable loss of a life there might have been hundreds lost. He did not wish to charge the Government of Manitoba of that day with dereliction of duty in not bringing these men to punishment at that time. He believed that if an attempt had been made, from the evidence that had since been elicited, there would have been a rising of the whole French population to protect these men, and they would have been joined, and could have obtained, the assistance of the Indians of the plains to aid them in the rising. Then we would have had a widespread devastation, an Indian war with all the horrors that attend Indian warfare. There was no statute of limitation for murder. The Government knew perfectly well that sooner or later, wherever British law exists, and British Sovereignty extends, the law would be vindicated, and he (Sir JOHN) knew perfectly well the arrest of the murderers could well be postponed till circumstances would allow of their punishment. As circumstances prove, the cause of justice lost nothing, and it is shown that the Government of the day exercised a wise discretion in not pressing the Government of Manitoba in the then condition of affairs, to proceed to the punishment of a single crime, irrespective of all the surrounding circumstances. The next subject that he would specially call attention to was the Fenian Raid. RIEL and LEPINE, the persons believed to be chiefly implicated in the murder of SCOTT, were hanging on the frontier, still keeping up the excitement, and were naturally desirous of escaping and being relieved from seeming outlawry—outlaw in fact, though not in law—in which they were placed. The Fenian raid took place, and at that time there was very considerable danger—much greater danger than it will ever appear to the public. Some sort of indication of the feeling that existed on the frontier was shown in the evidence of Archbishop TACHE when he stated that in the previous year, before the Fenian raid actually took place, while RIEL was still acting as President of the Provisional Government, while the insurrectionary powers had possession of the country—enormous inducements were offered to them to sever their connection with Britain and Canada. Bishop TACHE said he knew there were offers of four millions of money, and men to any extent, from the United States. Although that statement might be exaggerated; when he knew the desire of the people of the United States, to add to the domain of the States in Cuba, and when we saw what had occurred in Texas, we could see that large offers must have been made for the purpose of securing that country to the United States. So, when the Fenian invasion took place in October, 1871, although it was speedily dissipated by the prompt action of the United States Government, it was most formidable in its dimensions, and if it had not been for that exceptionally speedy action of the United States Government, it might have ravaged the North-West to an extent which can never been known. In consequence, perhaps, of the much-maligned Washington Treaty, there was a very friendly feeling in the United States towards Canada; but although the Fenian movement was speedily broken up at the time it was not entirely broken up. The Government here had information that those marauders were determined to invade that country after the close of navigation, at a time when we had not a single opportunity of sending a man or gun to resist them. We had in the country then one hundred men, and the force was subsequently increased to two hundred. It was in November, 1871, when Archbishop TACHE came here. He then believed that the withdrawal of RIEL from the frontier to the interior of the United States would be of benefit to the people of the North-West. If the people did not join the marauders, the country would be safe; whereas they were in continual fear and alarm that the discontent prevailing might induce them to join in the Fenian movement. If they read the evidence of Archbishop TACHE, it would appear that he could not say to what extent that dissatisfaction might spread; he held out that if those people were not satisfied, if the amnesty were not granted, and the wishes of the people complied with, he would not guarantee to what extent they might be limited, and the safety of the country be jeopardised. He (Sir JOHN) consulted with Sir GEORGE CARTIER, and after due deliberation they came to the conclusion that the best mode of avoiding the possibility of a union between the Fenians without and the malcontents within, would be to remove RIEL, the ex-President, the man of intellectual power and physical energy, from the frontier. He had no hesitation in saying that if he had to act again under the same circumstances he would pursue the same policy. The Government were responsible for the safety of the lives of the people of Manitoba, for the maintenance of peace in the country, and preventing a war of races —a barbarous and savage civil war. If, by the removal of RIEL to the interior of the United States, they were able to avoid these consequences, the Government deserved the thanks of the country for their action. Of course, they made themselves liable, when the facts came to be publicly enquired into, to all kinds of attacks. He was, however, prepared to meet those attacks. A publication in Ontario, from which the Premier ought not to have quoted unless he made the language used his own, said that he (Sir JOHN) ought to be placed in the dock equally with LEPINE and RIEL. Whether he should be placed in the dock charged as a criminal, he felt that, taking the course he did take, he was acting in his conscientious judgment as a Minister and man who desired to secure the peace of the country. He was not afraid to assume the responsibility of his acts. He was charged with compounding a felony. If he compounded a felony, was not Archbishop TACHE equally guilty of the crime? In thus attacking him (Sir JOHN) they paid a poor compliment to the patriotism of the Archbishop who had assisted him. The course pursued, however, was just such a one as a Government had a right to take, and the Premier should consult the representative of the Sovereign, who would state that such responsibility as he (Sir JOHN) had at that time assumed was frequently taken by the British Government. It was taken whenever there was necessity for it. Salus populi suprema lex. The safety of the people is the highest law. If he compounded a felony with respect to RIEL he did so equally with LEPINE. How, then, did it occur that LEPINE was brought to trial? He, however, was tried and found guilty. RIEL could be tried and found guilty. There is no statute of limitations which applies to murders. When he asked Archbishop TACHE to use his influence to withdraw RIEL and LEPINE from the frontier, he (Sir JOHN) was endeavouring to save the lives of the peaceable inhabitants of Manitoba, and was in no way condoning the offence. If there had been any condonation of the offence, why was it not proved at LEPINE'S trial, when able counsel were defending him. There was no condonation of the offence, and there was no promise of amnesty. If there had been any condonation, there would be no necessity of asking RIEL to retire from the frontier to the United States. It was because the Government of the day would not agree to grant an amnesty, it was because it adhered to that declaration from the beginning to the end, and because it said that under the circumstances the only power that could be asked to grant an amnesty was the Imperial Government, that the Government asked Archbishop TACHE to induce, by his influence, RIEL to retire until the spring should come, and communications were again opened between Canada and the North-West, and the Government had the opportunity of sending forces into the country. The Govern ment desired that an immigration of settlers from Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces should flow in, who would be composed of men who were altogether unconnected with the quarrels and dissensions which had reigned in Manitoba, and until those new settlers should arrive, the Government desired to withdraw those discontented and dissatisfied men. That was the course adopted by the Government, and he was quite willing to assume his share of the responsibility in regard to it. Now with regard to the amnesty, he declined to be bound by statements of verbal conversation when there are written documents to speak for themselves. There was no safety for any man, or any Minister, or any Administration, if the written documents that were carefully prepared, describing the position of affairs were to be qualified by the casual recollections of men. Let the House look at his letter dated 16th February, 1870, in which he said :

"MY DEAR LORD,—Before you leave Ottawa on your mission of peace, I think it well to reduce to writing the subject of the conversation I had the honor to have with you this morning.

"I mark this letter "Private," in order that it may not be made a public document, to be called for by Parliament prematurely ; but you are quite at liberty to use it in such a manner as you may think most advantageous."

He (Sir JOHN continued,) stated distinctly what the Government would agree to, what they would not agree to, and he wound up by saying,

"In case a delegation is appointed to proceed to Ottawa, you can assure them that they will be kindly received, and their suggestions fully considered. Their expenses coming here and returning, and whilst staying in Ottawa, will be defrayed by us.

"You are authorized to state that the two years during which the present tariff shall remain undisturbed, will commence from the 1st January, 1871, instead of last January as first proposed.

"Should the question arise as to the consumption of any stores or goods belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company by the insurgents, you are authorized to inform the leaders that if the Company's Government is restored, not only will there be a general amnesty granted, but in case the Company should claim the payment for such stores, that the Canadian Government will stand between the insurgents and all harm."

That was written deliberately after all conversations had ceased, as the result of those conversations, and the conclusions to which the Government had come, and the final instructions with which Archbishop TACHE left Ottawa to proceed to the North-West. He declined to be bound by any statements made in conversation which were not contained in that letter. The danger to every one, to every Minister and man of business, if a contrary doctrine were admitted was obvious, and was especially shown in this case. Archbishop TACHE stood in a different position to Father RICHOT. The Archbishop was not implicated in the North-West troubles; he was absent from the country at the time of the rising, and he came as a messenger of peace. Father RITCHOT, on the other hand, while not implicated criminally in those unhappy affairs, sympathised with those who were in arms. He, therefore, came to Ottawa as one of themselves to state their grievances; and he had a most exaggerated idea of their grievances and their wrongs, and spoke as any one of those concerned in the rising would have spoken; besides, that reverend father spoke scarcely English. Father RICHOT stated that four individuals of more or less importance in this country had promised an amnesty. Lord LISGAR, he said, had promised an amnesty; the House had Lord LISGAR'S letter before it. Sir CLINTON MURDOCH, the special ambassador of HER MAJESTY, had, he said, promised an amnesty ; the House had his letter before it. Father RICHOT also stated that Sir GEORGE CARTIER had made a promise that an amnesty would be granted; the House had Sir GEORGE CARTIER'S letter and statement before it. He (Sir JOHN) would say nothing as to his own statement. Lord LISGAR and Sir CLINTON MURDOCH had their connection with Canada terminated, and were now absent from it, and their only desire would be, as English gentlemen, to state exactly the facts; and they stated distinctly that Father RICHOT was altogether wrong, though he did not charge that reverend gentleman with making a wilful misstatement. They stated that Father RICHOT entirely misunderstood the matter, when he stated that they promised an amnesty, this being due to his imperfect knowledge of the English language or some other cause. As to Sir GEORGE CARTIER, situated as he was, he might not be supposed to be free from feeling respecting the subject. Sir GEORGE was now dead. Any one could say that he told one thing or another. He would say this, however, of Sir GEORGE CARTIER, that from the time he entered public life to the time he went to his grave, no man could say that he ever told a lie. If ever there was a man who was peculiar for his strict, religious regard for truth, it was Sir GEORGE. When Sir GEORGE, writing to him (Sir JOHN) from England when on his death-bed, penned the letter which had been laid before the North-West Committee, in which he stated that he had a distinct recollection that the Government had always held to the one opinion, viz., that no amnesty could be promised or given except by the Imperial Government, Sir GEORGE wrote the truth. When these were, therefore, the statements of Lord LISGAR, Sir CLINTON MURDOCH, and Sir GEORGE CARTIER, all to the effect that there was no promise of amnesty, the House would be satisfied that Father RITCHOT utterly misapprehended the tenor of the conversation. Besides, the papers themselves showed and the circumstances showed that there was no amnesty promised. Bishop TACHE left here in February 1871. The Archbishop stated in his evidence that he considered he had a right to offer a general amnesty. One word about the question of right. No one could exceed himself (Sir JOHN) in respect for that prelate. He believed Archbishop TACHE, who was a man high in his church and of bright and brilliant intellect, was a sincere lover of his country, and had a sincere desire to aid the Government of the day in restoring peace and harmony in the people of his diocese. When he left here he thought there would be little difficulty in quieting the dissensions there. He was away in Europe when the rising took place; he had no idea of its extent, and when he left here with the proclamation of 6th December, accompanied by his (Sir JOHN'S) letter and the assurance given in it, he was fully confident that his presence would dissipate the troubles and that peace and harmony would take the place of discord. When the Archbishop arrived in Manitoba, as his first letter showed, he found that he was woefully mistaken. The tide of events had rolled on so rapidly that there was a feeling of irritation and resistance that he could not control. He spoke in most pathetic, almost poetic, terms of the hopeless state in which he found his Diocese, and the state of discord in which he found those whom he had left full of good-nature, and the sense of despondency fell upon him. The Archbishop set to work to use his best efforts to remedy that sad state of affairs, and he made the promise of an amnesty. He felt that in doing so he was assuming a responsibility, which would be seen by his letter of 9th June, 1871. Had he got from Lord LISGAR, or from him, or from Sir GEORGE CARTIER the promise of an amnesty, and the authority to announce it he had nothing to do, but as a simple messenger to say: "I am the messenger of peace; I bring you tidings of amnesty; I have the authority of the Government of Canada for saying that you will be pardoned." He had no other responsibility, and yet in his letter of the 9th June, 1870, to the Hon. Mr. HOWE, he used this language:

"I hasten to communicate to you, for "the information of HIS EXCELLENCY in "Council, a very important promise I "have just made in the name of the Cana- "dian Government. I feel all the respon- "sibility I have incurred in taking such a "step, while on another hand I am confi- "dent that HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVER- "NOR-GENERAL and his Privy Council will "not judge with too much severity an act "accomplished in order to avoid great "misfortunes and secure the welfare of "the country."

Now, if he had been sent as a special messenger authorized to announce an amnesty, how could he say that he felt he was assuming an enormous responsibility in making the announcement, and express the hope that in view of the disturbed state of the country and his desire to introduce peace where there was discord the Government would not judge him too severely for assuming the responsibility he had assumed, but that they would endorse what he had done. He (Sir JOHN) wanted no better proof than that letter of the statement made by Lord LISGAR and the rest of them, that there was no understanding of any kind, except that contained in his (Sir JOHN'S) letter and in the proclamation of December, 1869. The case, as put by Archbishop TACHE, and by the resolutions of the Premier was two-fold, and one portion defeated the other. We were told, in the first place, that there was a promise of amnesty, and yet in another portion of the resolutions we were told there was a sum of money offered in order to send the parties away from the frontier. Now, if there had been an amnesty what was the necessity for sending the parties away? It was simply because the Government would not agree to grant an amnesty, because the Government held that they had no power to grant an amnesty, that the only means of these parties getting what they wanted was by appealing to the Throne, that it was suggested that they should withdraw from the country. Again, it was alleged in the resolutions, and it was in the evidence, that he had agreed to go to England and to make the case of Mr. RIEL his own. If the Government had previously promised to grant an amnesty, how was it that his assurance was greedily sought for, that he would go home to England, and try all he could to get the Imperial Government to take the matter up? The statements were inconsistent. If they had promised an amnesty where was the necessity of his going to England? The very fact of its being put in the case of those claiming amnesty that he was going home to England to press the British Government to take up this question and grant an amnesty, was a distinct proof that no amnesty had been promised. He would go back for a moment to the question about the payment of money to induce RIEL to retire from the country. At the time he saw Archbishop TACHE, of course they both felt that it was a matter of very great delicacy. He asked the Archbishop, in the interests of peace, to use his great influence over RIEL to induce him to retire from the frontier for a time. The Archbishop accepted that task. He told him that it was to be a profound secret, and the Archbishop undertook the task. He was not inveigled into it; he was simply asked to use his great influence with Mr. RIEL to induce him to retire from the frontier, and the money was placed in his hands for the purpose of giving it to RIEL to meet his expenses while he was away. If that task had been skilfully performed the Government of Canada would have been relieved from difficulty, but it appeared from the Archbishop's evidence that there was no communication between him and these men until after £600 was forthcoming from the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR and Mr. DONALD A. SMITH. Why the Archbishop did not communicate with these men at once on his arrival in that country, and make an attempt to induce RIEL to leave the frontier, he (Sir JOHN) could not say, but at all events no steps were taken and no money paid, and these men remained on the frontier, still exciting the passions of the people till the £600 was paid. And why was that money paid? The evidence showed clearly why it was paid. Notice had been given in the Legislature of Ontario that a reward of $5,000 would be paid for the apprehension of RIEL. That announcement went up by telegraph to Manitoba, and immediately the prairie was on fire, immediately the Metis arose as one man. The offer of the reward was mere buncombe; those who offered it knew it was of no value whatever, that it would never be asked, that it could not be earned, that no process could be issued from Ontario, that there was no means of bringing these men to trial except upon the spot; and the offer of the reward was simply intended as a means to arouse the people of Ontario against the Government at Ottawa, and it was made utterly regardless of the consequences. What cared those gentlemen what might be the consequences of that course? What cared they what misery or ruin or bloodshed or war might be caused by this offer? What cared they for, save to get a miserable triumph over the Government of the day in Ontario? What cared they whether race was set against race, Frenchmen against Englishmen? What cared they whether fire and sword and ruin spread over the country if they could only show to the people of Ontario that they were vindicating the course of justice, that they were to avenge the murder of THOMAS SCOTT, that they were to bring the murderers to justice, while JOHN A. MACDONALD, sitting in Ottawa, and his colleagues, were wholly regardless of their duty to their country in the administration of justice? And this course had its effect. The evidence showed that the people arose, that they declared that if RIEL was to be arrested, they would be arrested with him. They formed a body-guard around him, there was imminent danger of a rising—so imminent that the three first men in the colony—the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR, the ARCHBISHOP and Mr. SMITH, the chief of the Hudson's Bay Company, men who knew the ruin that would be caused by an uprising—joined together to take steps to prevent it. He charged upon the Ontario Government of that day that in consequence of this offer of a reward the people rose in their might, as it were, and rallied round RIEL, and declared that they would fight for him and die for him rather than he should be arrested. The danger was so great that these three gentlemen consulted together as to the best means to avert it, and they decided that by some means or other RIEL and LEPINE must be removed, and Archbishop TACHE said he could get them to go away if their expenses were paid. Then Mr. ARCHIBALD, as stated in his evidence, said that he would take the responsibility upon himself, that he did not know how it would be looked at in Ottawa, that he had no authority from the Dominion Government, but if Mr. SMITH would advance half the money he would run the risk of advancing the other half. For a time this course succeeded. These men went away for a short time to the United States. Mr. ARCHIBALD stated at the time the money was paid that they should stay away for five years. What he (Sir JOHN) had suggested the December previous was simply that they should stay away for one year. The money was paid, and the Archbishop agreed that he would do what he could to get these men to stay away for five years. Now, the Canadian Government did not know anything about this, and it was not till Mr. DONALD A. SMITH—as shown in his evidence, as well as in the evidence of Mr. ARCHIBALD and himself—had arrived in Ottawa long after these events were over that the Ottawa Government were aware of the course that had been taken. When Mr. D. A. SMITH informed him what had been done he at once—though the sum seemed a large one—stated that if Mr. ARCHIBALD, as representing the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, had pledged the faith of the Dominion Government, at least the Government should assume the responsibility of bearing the charge, and he believed so still, and the money was paid. With respect to this subject the Hon. Premier quoted with a flavor of malice a statement of his (Sir JOHN'S) that he "wished to GOD he could catch him" (RIEL), and he also professed to quote a speech of his to the effect that the offering of the reward by the Ontario Government had frightened away these men, and that we could not therefore catch them. Now, the hon. gentleman had not read his speech, or he had read it very carelessly. The only time he used the language so often quoted was at Peterborough, in the summer of 1872, in that tour which he took and which the hon. gentlemen had characterized, perhaps correctly, as being an unsuccessful one. In that speech he spoke of the reward, and said it was an unworthy attempt on the part of the Government of Ontario to make political capital at the expense of the peace of the North-West and of the whole Dominion, for the sake of gaining a party triumph. He, on that occasion, quoted the language that was attributed to the hon. member for South Bruce, to the effect that the reward had been of the greatest service, because it relieved the sacred soil of Canada from being trodden by a murderer. He quoted that remark, and followed it up by stating that he thought that rewards generally were offered for the purpose of catching people, and not for the purpose of inducing them to go away, and he told his audience a story which he would take the liberty of repeating. An Irishman out shooting, who was rather an unskillful shot, having missed his bird, exclaimed in disgust to the game-keeper, "At all events we make him lave that." He thought that was the whole result of the reward offered by gentlemen opposite.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It was you who made them "lave that."

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—It so happened that I utterly failed in that. We asked Archbishop TACHE to use his great influence to bring about that result, and we placed a sum of money in his hands for that purpose; but strange to say it was utterly valueless for that purpose. He thought so little of it that he did not use a dollar of the money, and RIEL and LEPINE were in happy unconsciousness that we had ever sent them a dollar, or that there was a chance of getting this money. No money was offered to them to leave the country till after the reward of the Ontario Government had been offered, and then the money offered them was the £600 contributed by the three gentlemen he had referred to, and it was offered without the Canadian Government knowing anything about it, and it was that which sent these men away. The Canadian Government did not send them away; it was simply the proclamation of this reward which frightened them away; and not only that, but it frightened the gentlemen at the head of society in Manitoba, and induced them to offer a sum of money to hasten their departure, knowing, as these gentlemen did, that the ill-advised, unpatriotic, indecent course of the Government of Ontario was likely to cause war from one end of Manitoba to the other. He would now come to the resolutions. As he had said before, the hon. gentlemen must take one course or the other. They could not run with the hare and hunt with the hounds. They must say whether the faith of the Crown was pledged or not. If the pledge was given, then they were bound to see it was carried out, and an amnesty granted, no matter what the consequences might be. If the pledge had not been given, then they were bound in all honour and conscience to carry out their own ideas of what was right and just. What had been their attempt? They had attempted to drive the late Government from power because, as it was alleged, they were playing into the hands of Archbishop TACHE and RIEL, because they were giving aid and comfort to murderers,—because they were not exercising the whole power of the law to send them to jail and the gallows. The hon. gentlemen opposite, from Ontario, had declared on every stump and platform that the late Government were utterly unworthy of their position because they would not bring these men to the gallows. Then if no faith had been pledged, the present Government were bound as men of honour, as public men, as candidates for public confidence, to carry out their own pledges made to the people, when they declared that this wretched Government, this truckling Government, this French Government, this Government that was aiding rebellion, should be swept away because they would not bring these men to the gallows, and that they should take their places. One position or the other rested with them. They could not avoid the dilemma. They must either say, as the first part of these resolutions did, that there was an absolute promise of amnesty made—such a promise as was binding as pledging the faith of the Crown—and if so, then the amnesty must be granted; or they must carry out their pledges and promises to the country, and bring these men to justice. They could not avoid that dilemma. But what did these resolutions say? They declared that although the faith of the Crown was pledged, that although an amnesty was promised, still that faith was to be broken, and these men were to be punished. What the amount of punishment was, was quite another question. The actual punishment was nominal. The degradation involved in being a criminal exile from the country was indeed a great moral punishment, but the actual punishment, from the view of hon. gentlemen opposite, was a farce, and worse than a farce. If the United States had been a wild, barbarous country, then there might have been something like adequate punishment involved in the proposition to banish these men. It was said that in the early days of Canada, immediately after the revolutionary war, that somewhere near Ogdensburg, justice was administered in a very off-handed way by an old gentleman who fulfilled the duties of Justice of the Peace, and who, when any one was brought before him charged with any crime, used to declare with great solemnity: "Sir, you are banished off the face of GOD'S earth." When the criminal asked where he was to be sent to, he was told: "Well, I guess you must go to Canada." There might be something in that punishment in those days; but what punishment, in fact, was there in the sentence imposed upon these men by the resolutions of the hon. gentlemen opposite, that is to say, from their point of view. Every one knew perfectly well that there was a large emigration from Lower Canada, and also some from Upper Canada, to the United States already, and that there was an attempt being made in Lower Canada to bring these people back. That attempt was only partially successful, because a great many of the people preferred to remain in the States. How small, then, must that punishment be for this atrocious murder, of which the hon. member for South Bruce had so frequently spoken throughout Western Canada, to declare to these men that they shall be allowed to cross the border, and live in as good a country as this; and he had no doubt that those who sympathized with the exiles would see that they were fully provided with the means of subsistence. We were here presented with the absurdity that while, in the first place, these resolutions stated that there was an absolute pledge of the Crown to amnesty, it was broken, and these men were to be punished. Although that punishment was a great moral degradation in one sense, in another sense it was really no punishment at all adequate for the murder, if the murderer was to be punished at all. But the resolutions were framed with an object. The object was to make things pleasant both in Upper and Lower Canada, and principle was to be sacrificed, promises and pledges were to be broken, in order that Upper Canada members of the Administration might be able to say to their Province: —"We have punished these men; we have vindicated the law, and they are banished to a foreign land." Again, in Lower Canada, they could say:—"We have done the best we could for you; we have sent these men to as good a country as our own, and the punishment is very light." He fancied what the Premier would say to his friends in Lower Canada. He would ask them:—"What did Sir JOHN MACDONALD do for these men? Nothing! They were outlawed, they were liable to be brought to the gallows, the rope was hanging from the scaffold, and they were trembling for their lives. What have we done for them, on the other hand? We have sent them to a very pleasant country, and no doubt they will have a pleasant time." And then if we should go with the Premier up to Sarnia, we should find him telling the people:—"The law has been vindicated. It is true I promised to see this man hanged, and insisted that Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD and his Government ought to be turned out of power because they would not hang him. I cannot hang him because of what Sir JOHN did and promised; however, we have given them such enormous punishment that we have driven them out of Paradise just as ADAM and EVE were driven out of Eden by the avenging angel. Therefore we have vindicated the law, and punished the atrocious murderers as they deserved; we have sent them over to the United States for five years." That was the tone that would be adopted by the Prime Minister in the West. He would like to know if the hon. gentleman was prepared to inform him whether these resolutions were to be moved in the other branch of the Legislature, or whether the GOVERNOR GENERAL was expected to act upon the address of this House alone. According to the theory of our constitutional Government each branch of the Legislature had co-ordinate rights. From the analogies of the English Parliament the House of Lords or the Upper House was particularly interested in matters connected with the administration of justice. He would therefore like to know whether the Senate was also to be asked to pass these resolutions. It was a little too much to suppose that this House alone was to guide and control this matter. His honorable friend would not answer him just now, but perhaps he would tell him to-morrow. However, when this subject was discussed in the Senate and in this House, the question might perhaps arise whether it was in the power of this House or the other House, or even in the power of HER MAJESTY, to impose five years' banishment in a case where there was no conviction. With respect to LEPINE, there could be no doubt if the authorities were examined that the Crown had no power to inflict punishment in this country. He thought if the hon. gentleman looked at the decisions and arguments in cases similar to this he would find the facts as had been stated. Even if these resolutions were adopted it was doubtful if it was not beyond the power of any Government or of the Crown to carry them into effect. He would only say a single word in reference to the unfairness of the Government in not adding to these resolutions all the promises and all the acts of the Dominion of Canada. If it were true that the fact of his having endeavoured to get Sir GEORGE CARTIER elected for Provencher should be recited in these resolutions, as one reason for granting the pardon, it ought also to be recited that a similar attempt made by Mr. DOR-

ION was another and an additional reason; and the hon. gentleman in drawing up these resolutions had not acted with that fairness towards those opposed to him which he no doubt felt inclined to do, and he hoped that the appeal to him, made by the hon. member for North Hastings might assure him of the propriety of adding to the resolutions all the negotiations that passed between Mr. DORION and Mr. RIEL directly or indirectly. He hoped his hon. friend would agree to that for it was but fair to the gentlemen of the Opposition. If the hon. gentleman would not do it in this way these communications and negotiations would at least be placed upon the journals in another way, and the journals would contain a record of the whole transactions between MR. DORION and Mr. RIEL with respect to Provencher. As to his (Sir JOHN'S) action in that matter, it appeared from the evidence of Archbishop TACHE and Mr. ARCHIBALD that when the news arrived of the defeat of Sir GEORGE CARTIER in East Montreal, it occurred to Mr. ARCHIBALD that it would be a good thing to have Sir GEORGE CARTIER elected for one of the constituencies in Manitoba. He stated so in his evidence, and that almost simultaneously, he received a telegram from him (Sir JOHN). Sir GEORGE CARTIER was at the time in Montreal, confined to his house by illness, unable even to assist in his own canvass. He was then in fact dying, but still he was true to his colleagues to the last, and ready to fight to the last, although he knew perfectly well that he was trembling on the brink of the grave. He (Sir JOHN) knew it better than did Sir GEORGE himself. He knew that the physicians would not tell Sir GEORGE that he was on the brink of the grave, and from his political acquaintance with him, that if he was defeated when he had reason to expect different and better treatment, the iron would enter his soul, and that it would operate injuriously on his failing health. And without Sir GEORGE knowing anything about it, he (Sir JOHN) sent that telegram to Mr. ARCHIBALD: "Get Sir GEORGE elected in your Province—do not, however, allow late Provisional resign in his favor." The reason he had used the word "Provisional" was that the telegram was sent in cypher, and the cypher contained no synonym for the name of RIEL, and he therefore had to find a word that could be understood in cypher, and at the same time would indicate RIEL. His telegram simply was this: "I desire to have a seat for Sir GEORGE CARTIER in your Province; take care that RIEL does not resign in his favour." Because, however anxious he was that SIR GEORGE CARTIER should be elected he did not desire that it should be supposed that he asked RIEL to resign in Sir GEORGE'S favour if he was to run for Provencher, where it was known RIEL and Attorney General CLARKE were candidates. Then with regard to the rest of the telegrams on this subject, it would be seen that there was not a single word said about RIEL. The telegram which he had referred to was sent on 4th September, and on the next day he received this reply from Mr. ARCHIBALD:

"5th September, 1872.

"Sir GEORGE can be elected by acclamation for Provencher if he feels free to say,—

"'That the settlers shall be continued in "'the exercise of all the rights they have "'been accustomed to enjoy in respect of "'the lands on the rear of their lots, and "'no sales or entries thereon shall be per-"'mitted till the question of those rights "'shall be settled and adjusted under the "'agreement with the delegates.

"'That no person shall be allowed to "'enter on the townships laid aside for the "'half-breeds from the date of their selec-"'tion, and any person entering after that "'to be removed by the Government "'authority.'

"The above, though ungracious to ask, "concedes nothing.

"The land where the hay privilege "exists is, with hardly an exception, "included in half-breed selections recently "laid aside with orders from Land Depart-"ment. These lands are already with-"drawn from market or entry (see Col. "DENNIS), and as to hay compensation it "ought to be settled before next haying, "and at all events, whether settled or not, "land cannot be sold or entered upon while "it remains a half-breed selection. "McMICKEN agrees with me that that "demand, though ungracious, amounts to "nothing. Please consult Sir GEORGE, "who, so far as I know has no cypher, and "reply immediately."

"(Signed),

A. G. ARCHIBALD.'

Then on the sixth of September in answer to the latter part of his first telegram Mr. ARCHIBALD telegraphed:

"6th September, 1872.

"Not proposed that either candidate "resign in favor of any person. Local "candidates, though determined to fight "each other, will give way to secure a "Cabinet Minister for representative, "thus acquiring for Province direct voice "in Cabinet.

"(Signed).

"A. G. ARCHIBALD."

He (Sir JOHN) communicated with Sir GEO. CARTIER in Montreal immediately, but didn't receive any answer, in consequence he supposes of Sir GEORGE'S ill health. Mr. ARCHIBALD telegraphed again in these terms:

"11th September, 1872.

"Is there any answer to my cypher "telegram? Time passing, and parties "anxious have telegraphed direct, re- "questing reply. (Signed),

"A. G. ARCHIBALD."

He (Sir JOHN) replied as follows:

"11th September, 1872.

"I have sent message to CARTIER, at "Montreal, to-day, and expect his answer "to-morrow by telegram. Offered several "seats here. A Minister ought, I think "to give no pledge; it is a question of "confidence altogether.

"(Signed),

"JOHN A. MACDONALD."

On the 12th of September he again telegraphed to Mr. ARCHIBALD:—

"Sir GEORGE will do all he can to "meet the wishes of the parties. This "statement should be satisfactory."

He (Sir JOHN) telegraphed on the 13th as follows:—

"Sir GEORGE, who is absent, agrees "with me as to pledges. It will be his "interest to secure the approbation of his "constituents, and he can be of more "service to them than any other man."

That reference to pledges (Sir JOHN continued) was to say that Sir GEORGE would make no pledges. Those were the communications that had passed between himself and Mr. ARCHIBALD, and his action was dictated by a desire to make his friend, who was on the verge of the grave, feel that in his last days he was not rejected from the Parliament in which he was so highly honored and esteemed. He had no cause to be ashamed or to regret the course he had taken in that matter, and to attempt to say that those communications involved the promise of an amnesty was absurd. All he asked was that Sir GEORGE CARTIER should be elected for some constituency in Manitoba, and that this man RIEL should not be asked specially to resign in his favor. If RIEL cared to retire in Sir GEORGE'S favor, that was no affair of his (Sir JOHN'S), but in no way was Sir GEORGE or himself committed to it. It was untruly said in the resolutions submitted to the House that Sir GEORGE CARTIER thanked RIEL. The resolution stated

"That thereafter and during the General Election of 1872, L. RIEL was contesting Provencher with Attorney General CLARKE, when, at the request of Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, First Minister and Minister of Justice, Lieutenant-Governor ARCHIBALD arranged that both the said candidates should retire, in order that Sir G. E. CARTIER, Minister of Militia, might be elected for the County."

Such, however, was not the case. The resolutions went on to say: "And he was elected accordingly, and publicly received, and acknowledged the congratulations of L. RIEL and A. D. LEPINE on the event." But the truth was that Sir GEORGE E. CARTIER carefully avoided any such recognition. RIEL and CLARKE had retired, and it was the desire of the people of the constituency that they should be represented by so distinguished a man as Sir GEORGE CARTIER, who was at the same time a Minister of the Crown. But RIEL, having retired, he and three others sent Sir GEORGE a telegram of congratulation. Did Sir GEORGE answer that? Did he acknowledge that as stated in resolutions before the House, for it was only from that telegram that the statement made in the resolutions was founded? Sir GEORGE, on the contrary, instead of making any such recognition ignored the telegram altogether, and did not answer it, but he addressed a telegram to Archbishop TACHE, stating:

"Presume your Grace is one of the "friends who got me elected in Provencher; "accept my sincere thanks. Give thanks "for me to all friends, and especially to "those who were more instrumental in "securing election."

Did they mean to say that there was anything in that telegram conveying public acknowledgement of any special act of RIEL by Sir GEORGE CARTIER? He only desired that the whole facts should be brought out in dealing with this question; and, as Lord DUFFERIN had well said, the fact of paying $1,000 to RIEL, and asking the people of Provencher to elect Sir GEORGE CARTIER, could have no possible connection with the question of amnesty, and therefore such circumstances should not have been recited in those resolutions. There were three grounds on which he thought the resolutions would be opposed. In the first place, all those who thought that under the circumstances there was a positive amnesty promised, that the honor of the Crown was pledged to an absolute amnesty, would vote against the resolutions submitted to the House because a punishment was provided in them. On the other hand, all those who believed, as the hon. Premier once did, that this crime could only be punished by death, that an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and a head for a head, should be exacted—all those thought with the member for North Hastings that the law must be vindicated and murder must be punished—would vote against the resolutions because the punishment was a farce, if meant as a punishment for murder. He would suppose that the member for South Bruce and the Premier, and all those of Upper Canada that acted with him, and who had declared repeatedly before the country that this was an outrageous murder and must be punished by the execution of RIEL, would vote against the resolutions. He himself would vote against them for this reason—viz.: because the resolutions ought never to have been introduced into the House. The Government ought to have assumed the authority as the administration of the affairs of this country, of themselves recommending an amnesty and not come to Parliament at all. It was their duty, as the responsible advisers of the Crown, if they dealt with the matter at all, to have dealt with it as an Executive, and not thrown the responsibility upon Parliament. There was not a shadow of an excuse for hiding themselves behind Parliament. The hon. gentlemen opposite had assumed that the Canadian Government were competent to deal with this question. That was not the course which had been taken by the late Government. They had constantly held that the rebellion in the North-West and the murder of SCOTT had taken place before that country was a part of Canada, and that, therefore, the jurisdiction rested with the Imperial authorities and not with the Canadian Government. But hon. gentlemen opposite had assumed the responsibility of bringing this question before the House, and asking the members to vote for the resolutions, and in doing so they admitted the ground of objection which he had taken. Why, if they held that they were competent to bring the matter before Parliament, and were therefore responsible, should they have dealt with it as an Executive and in accordance with the constitutional doctrines on the subject? No one knew better than his hon. friend the member for Chateauguay how inadvisable it was that the questions of amnesty or pardon should be brought before Legislative bodies. That hon. gentleman and those who, like him, paid attention to those subjects, would remember the expression of Lord MACAULAY, who was an extreme Liberal, a man not disposed to lessen or belittle the influence, powers and prerogatives of Parliament. Lord MACAULAY had said that he would rather leave the pardoning power in the hands of the worst Government that ever existed than confer it on the best Parliament that ever existed. The pardoning power rested with the Crown itself. He would now call the attention of the House to several cases recorded in that most valuable repertory of constitutional law, Mr. TODD's book. One case there referred to was almost identical with the case of LEPINE, because he had been convicted on evidence, which, by the statements of Lord CARNARVON and Lord DUFFERIN, showed that the murder, though a violent one, was still of a political character. Those who were old enough would remember the FROST trials in England, when there was an uprising. FROST was the principal man in the affair, and was tried for constructive treason, and was sent to Botany Bay. It was a case in which certain people took a political stand, and it was pleaded in their defence that their offence was only a political one. There was a petition presented to the House of Commons, largely and respectably signed, on their behalf; but it was decided that the pardoning power rested with the Crown alone, and that Parliament had no right to interfere, except, on the one hand, the Executive had previously acted, and their action had been regarded as entirely too severe; or, on the other hand, that it had been too lenient, and that it was in the interest of the country that Parliament should step in and remedy the abuse. With these exceptions, it was the accepted constitutional doctrine that Parliament should not interfere with the pardoning power. Now, it should be remembered that he (Sir JOHN) started out from this point, namely, that the Government would be perfectly justified had they declined to interfere at all in this matter, but had thrown the responsibility upon the Imperial Government; but having assumed the responsibility, then they should deal with the matter in a constitutional way. That way was by acting in their capacity as the Executive, and not by calling to their assistance the voice of Parliament. He would read to the House the observations made by Mr. TODD in his book, and a few of the cases cited therein. With reference to the prerogative of mercy Mr. TODD said:

"We have next to consider the prerogative of mercy which is a peculiar attribute of royalty, and is vested by statute in the Sovereign of England. All criminal offences are either against the QUEEN'S peace or against her Crown and dignity. She is therefore the proper person to prosecute for all public offences and breaches of the peace. Hence her prerogative of pardon, for it is reasonable that that person only who is injured should have the power of forgiving. But this, like every other prerogative of the British Crown, is held in trust for the welfare of the people, and is exercised only upon the advice of responsible Ministers."

"It is only under very exceptional and extraordinary circumstances that any interference by either House of Parliament with the exercise of this prerogative is justifiable. It was said by MACAULAY, that he would rather entrust it to the hands of the very worst Ministry that ever held office than allow it to be exercised under the direction of the very best House of Commons; and by Sir ROBERT PEEL that he would leave this prerogative in the hands of the Executive, considering that it was the right and duty of the House to interfere only 'if there be a suspicion that justice is perverted for corrupt purposes.'"

The following are some cases quoted by Mr. TODD:

"On July 11, 1820, Lord JOHN RUSSELL headed an address to the King for the liberation of Sir MANASSEH LOPEZ, when in prison under sentence of the Court of King's Bench for bribery and corruption, at the suit of the House of Commons. The Home Secretary (Lord CASTLEREAGH) opposed the motion, saying that 'whether the law should have its execution was the peculiar prerogative of the Crown, and the responsible servants of the Crown could not be justified in recommending the interposition of the royal mercy upon the mere suggestion of that House (he spoke it with perfect respect) any more than upon the application of the humblest individual of the land.' After some discussion the motion was withdrawn."

"On April 13, 1829, the Earl of CLANCARTY moved in the House of Lords for certain documents in the case of Mr. MACDONNELL, who had been sentenced to imprisonment for libel, but had been pardoned in the King's name, by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, under circumstances which, it was correctly reported, did not warrant abridgement of his term of imprisonment. The papers asked for would explain the facts of the case. The Duke of WELLINGTON (the Premier) opposed the motion. He stated that cases of this kind, though not entirely exempt from the inquisition of Parliament, ought to be least liable to inquiry by either House of any of the royal prerogatives; that in the present instance, no sufficient parliamentary ground had been shown to warrant the House in departing from its usual practice and principles not to inquire into the exercise of this branch of HIS MAJESTY'S prerogative."

On August 6th, 1839, Lord BROUGHAM proposed in the House of Lords some resolutions respecting the administration of criminal justice in Ireland, more particularly in respect to the principles which should guide the exercise of the prerogative of mercy, and declaring the mode in which this prerogative ought to be administered. Notwithstanding the opposition of Government these resolutions were agreed to. On the following day, Lord JOHN RUSSELL (the Premier) adverted to this vote, and stated that the proposed practice in the mode of exercising the prerogative of mercy was utterly inconsistent with that which had hitherto been pursued by Secretaries of State in their recommendations to the Crown, and from which it would be exceedingly inconvenient to depart, and that it was not his intention to make any alteration whatever. If, instead of resolutions, a Bill had been passed, then, of course, he would be bound to obey the law."

Then, with respect to the Chartist prisoners in 1841, in reference to an attempt made to obtain from the Crown through the interposition of the House of Commons a remission of sentences, Lord ROBERT PEEL, although at that time in Opposition, strenuously opposed it.

"He urged that the consideration of "such cases should be left exclusively with "the Crown; that the Government, in "exercising the prerogative of mercy, ought "not to be influenced by any opinion which "the House of Commons might express; "and he asserted it to be a dangerous act "for the House to fetter the discretion and "judgment of the Crown by expressing any "recommendation on such subjects. Lord "JOHN RUSSELL (the Colonial Secretary) "also opposed the motion, and pointed out "the general ill effects of such an inter-"ference on the part of the House, although "admitting that there might be exceptional "cases. The motion for the address was "negatived by the casting vote of the "Speaker."

Then came the case of FROST and others to which he had referred, and with respect to which the text said:

"But MACAULAY, Sir ROBERT PEEL Lord JOHN RUSSELL and other leading statesmen, while admitting the abstract right of the House to advise as to the exercises of this or any other prerogative, all concurred in opposing the motion as being of a dangerous tendency, and a departure from the rule imposed upon themselves by former Houses of Commons of non-interference in the exercise of certain prerogatives which should be left to the unfettered discretion of the Crown. The Address was negatived by a large majority."

Those were some of the few cases which had been quoted by Mr. TODD in his valuable book, and they might be multiplied to any extent. While no one could deny the omnipotence of Parliament, and while it was admitted that exceptional cases might arise, in which Parliament would be justified in interfering, still it was clear that these exceptional cases had not arisen in England. There was no case which could be found where Parliament interfered in the exercise of the prerogative right of the Crown. If it was a dangerous precedent for any member to rise in the House in the interest of a prisoner, and apply for the consideration of his sentence, how much worse was it for the Ministry of the day, who had the whole power and responsibility in their hands, to come before Parliament and ask its interference. There was no excuse for it. It was an evasion of the Constitution, a surrender of the power of the Government, and an avoidance of their proper responsibility. If the Government had come to the conclusion that they should take action in the matter, they should have accepted the responsibility of so doing by addressing the Imperial Government on the subject; and when they had done so, if this House had considered that they had done wrong, then would be the time to pass a vote of censure, or in some other way express their disapprobation of the course pursued by the Executive. But there was no case to be found in which a Ministry in England endeavored to shirk the responsibility by acting in a case of this sort and throwing the responsibility upon Parliament. Not with his consent either would the Government in this case be allowed to so shirk their responsibility, but they would be held by him to the obligation imposed on them by the Constitution. This kind of evasion would not do, as had been well said by his hon. friend from North Hastings, the people of this country knew more than some people thought they did. They knew where the responsibility rested, and they would hold the persons bearing that responsibility to strict account.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We know we are responsible.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—If the hon. gentleman knows he is responsible why come there at all? why introduce a practice unknown to the British Constitution, which is indeed abhorrent to the British Constitution. As he had said before, he could quite understand that the friends of the party under punishment might come to Parliament and appeal against the action of the advisers of the Crown on the ground that the punishment was too severe ; but he never before heard, nor did any man read in English history, of Government coming to Parliament, and saying : "We know we are responsible, but we are in a bad fix ; we are in a hole, and we want you in the same hole with us." That was the course taken by the hon. gentleman, and he would find that when he next took an excursion into the country that he would have to justify his responsibility. He would also have to face the graver responsibility of subverting the principles of the Constitution. Had the Government submitted the question to the Imperial authorities, and not endeavored to shirk the responsibility, he would have been very strongly inclined to give them his support, although he knew the Hon. Premier would not have given him (Sir JOHN) his support under similar circumstances. At all events, he never did give the Government his support when he was in Opposition. He (Sir JOHN) hoped the gentlemen who now occupied the Opposition benches would be governed by other and higher principles, and that they would meet their opponents with fair argument and defend their views in a straightforward way. He had only one word more to say before he sat down, and that word was that it was one of the misfortunes of the discussions in our legislatures that there was a want of generosity in dealing with opponents. There was an asperity in our utterances and discussions which was unknown in England, and he hoped that as this country was being extended and developed, we would all be governed by higher principles. He would ask the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches to look back upon the whole course of the late Government with respect to the question of the North-West, and judge their conduct calmly, generously and justly. Gentlemen opposite now know more of the difficulties of Government than they ever knew before. It was one of the difficulties with which the late Government had to contend that they were opposed by an uneducated Opposition—uneducated as regards the responsibilities and labours of Government. Now, his hon. friend at the head of the Government knew what these responsibilities were, and knew the difficulties which surrounded this question. He (Sir JOHN), could assure his hon. friend and the House that the late Government, in all that they did with regard to the North-West, acted upon the conviction that they were doing what was best for the country. They could have had no object in acting otherwise ; they could have had no other ambition than to gain a name in the country as having acted in the best interests of the whole country. They had succeeded in adding that vast portion of the continent to Canada ; they had extended the Dominion to the Pacific ; and they were striving to build up a power upon this northern continent worthy of those from whom we had descended, whether French or English. They made many mistakes, no doubt. He would repeat that in all that they had done with respect to that country, whether approved or disapproved of, they did what they thought at the time to be best. They had an enormous responsibility thrown upon them. In that country race rose against race, and religion against religion, and the plains were roamed over by the savages, only anxious for the opportunity of exercising their savage instincts. The Government had but little to hope for except that they would be sustained by their fellow-citizens in Canada and by Parliament, as they were sustained by their own consciousness that they did all for the best. Peace was their object, and they sacrified a great deal for it. The people of that country were all dissatisfied. Some were savages, some were semi-civilized, and there were rumors floating among them of a disturbing nature. All these difficulties the Government had to deal with, and while dealing with them, they had also to meet the attacks of their opponents at home, who were striving to misrepresent their motives, and to obstruct them in every step they took towards the peace and settlement of the country. He believed that the calm after-thought of the country would take the position that, on the ground that on the whole the late Government had not been wanting in their duty in any single step which they took for the acquisition, the settlement, and the development of that great country.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said that a good deal had been stated by the hon. member for Kingston this evening that was not strictly relevant to the question before the House. He did not complain that the hon. gentleman should have taken this opportunity to enter into a somewhat extended review of the transactions of his Government in connection with the North-West troubles. He did not complain that the hon. gentlemen should have proposed to enlarge the area of the discussion in the manner in which he had done. He did not complain that that gentleman should have closed with an appeal almost touching to both sides of the House and the country at large to bear in mind the great difficulties and responsibilities under which he had laboured in these transactions, and to believe that in all he had done he had acted for the best. After all, the question was not whether he had acted for the best, but what he had done and what consequences were to flow from what he did in all these transactions. The hon. gentleman had pointed out that there were two classes of persons—and he isolated himself and made him a third class—who must vote against the resolutions now before the House. One was that class who believed that the faith of the Crown of England had been pledged to absolute and entire amnesty. They, the hon. gentleman said, must necessarily vote against the resolutions because they did not go far enough, because they imposed conditions and sought to violate that pledged faith. When the hon. gentleman said that there was another class who believed that this murder must be avenged by the death of the murderers, and they, of course, would vote against the resolutions because they did not go the length of inflicting the death penalty for the crime which had been committed. But for himself, the hon. gentleman said he would not vote against the resolutions on either of these grounds. If the Government had taken the course which the hon. gentleman now recommended, and made this question one of Executive action only; if they had upon their own responsibility passed an Order in Council advising an amnesty, then he (Sir JOHN) would have been disposed to support him, but he regarded the manner in which the Government had proposed to deal with this question as one which was subversive of our Constitution, and, therefore, as the saviour and guardian and protector of the Constitution, he would have to vote against the resolutions. The hon. gentleman had stated that the proposal to invite the co-operation of Parliament in an act of grace (the amnesty) was unprecedented. He would not enter into precedents in any detail. He thought he had heard before to-day, and read before to-day of acts of grace. He thought if the hon. gentleman would look at the statute book of England he would find acts of grace not very singular in the records of that Parliament, and he did not know that there was any particular difference in bringing up the question, whether the grace of the Crown should be extended to persons by resolutions or by a Bill. In either sense the Executive action was not brought into play. Parliamentary action was that which was brought into play, and that was what the hon. gentleman complained of. But if he (Mr. BLAKE) was not misinformed, it would be found that in 1841, 1843 and 1845 the Parliament of the late Province of Canada was asked to act and did act in a sense similar to that in which Parliament was now invited to act. The hon. gentleman had acknowledged that the right of Parliament dealing with such a question existed, and the precedents he had quoted showed that such was the case, although it was stated that it was only in exceptional cases that the right ought to be exercised. He (Mr. BLAKE) quite agreed with that view. The question they had now to determine was whether the present case was an exceptional one. What was the position in which that case now stood? It was in this position, that the hon. gentleman and his Government had declared that the question lay altogether beyond the Province, executively, of the Government of Canada. That very question which he now insisted the Government of Canada ought to have executively dealt with was regarded in his own Minutes of Council as a question which lay entirely beyond their province, and as one which could be dealt with by the Imperial authorities alone. The hon. gentleman admitted in one breath that Executive action on the part of our Government should be taken, while, in the very next breath, he declared that the Government had no voice in the matter whatever. But this was not all. The Government of this country recognizing the difficulties which were pointed out in the communications with the Imperial Government, and which were stated in the evidence before the North-West Committee as rendering it almost impossible to solve this question satisfactorily in this country, appealed to the Imperial Government, and the Imperial Government acceded to their request and gave a decision upon the question, which decision was before the House in the despatch of Lord CARNARVON. What the hon. gentleman had suggested was that the Government of Canada ought under such circumstances to have advanced further and after that decision had been obtained—namely, that amnesty at this time and under these circumstances was not to be granted, that being the independent decision of the Imperial Government, the Canadian Government ought to have passed a Minute in Council calling upon the Imperial Government to reverse that decision. He ventured to say that no action less significant, no indication less expressive of the mind and will of the people of this country than a vote of this House would be adequate to produce that result which the hon. gentleman said could be produced by a Minute of Council. He had a firm conviction that Parliamentary action in the sense in which that action could be taken, notwithstanding the hon. gentleman's appeals to the House, would produce the desired result, and he had no doubt that Executive action alone would not produce it. The hon. gentleman the leader of the Opposition acknowledged that this question should be settled, but he objected to the mode in which the Government proposed to do it. He (Mr. BLAKE) believed that the mode adopted was the only practical one. He did not believe that the people of this country or the members of that House would complain that under the peculiar circumstances of this case the Government were shirking any responsibility. On the contrary, they were assuming responsibility in bringing forward the question at the earliest possible moment for the consideration of the representatives of the people. He could well understand that it was extremely embarrassing to the leader of the Opposition that this course should be taken. They all knew there was an expectation that the hon. gentleman would find himself in a very grave difficulty in this discussion. It might come yet. Perhaps what he was about to say might produce something of the kind to which he adverted. The hon. gentleman had supporters in this House. He had on one side the cherub form of the member for Bagot, appearing as an angel of mercy, while on the other side, he had the member for North Hastings, appearing as a minister of vengeance. Between these two the hon. gentleman stood. His (Sir JOHN'S) own position was that the solution proposed by the Government was a just one; but it did not please another class of the hon. gentleman's supporters. If the sentiments of the hon. member for North Hastings were to be put before the House in some formal shape, perhaps they would be embodied in a proposal to strike out all reference to amnesty for those who were connected with the murder of THOMAS SCOTT. In that case the House would find those two guardian angels and their respective followers divided. If, on the other hand, the member for Bagot should bring forward his views in the shape of a resolution, of course the hon. gentlemen would find himself deserted by the hon. member for North Hastings and those who acted with him in this matter. The hon. gentleman's followers would be divided, and he would find himself in so very difficult a position that he would not know which way to vote. The House was aware of that because there was an occasion on which complete amnesty was proposed by the hon. member for Bagot, and in which the hon. leader of the Opposition, although in the House a moment before the vote was taken, and also immediately after, did not have his name recorded on that motion. It might, therefore, be assumed from what the hon. gentleman had done last session, that this question was one which caused him a good deal of embarrassment when it came to a vote and it would no doubt be very greatly to his comfort if he could unite his whole following in opposition to the resolution of the Government. United, he would no doubt say they would look more respectable. Coming now to the resolutions before the House, he would say that the hon. gentleman had criticized them somewhat severely, and not in that spirit which he desired in his concluding remarks should animate discussions in this House. For his own part, he confessed that he was unable to observe in the arguments which had been addressed to the House this evening, that a single statement of fact contained in these resolutions had been in the slightest degree impugned. The first paragraph referred to certain circumstances with reference to the action of the late Sir GEORGE CARTIER, and he might observe at once that he perceived in the resolutions that the Government had wisely omitted all reference to the various matters which had been disputed. They omitted some considerations which would have been urged with great force, and received in some cases with almost equal force, as applicable to the solution of the question, and they confined themselves to such statements of fact as were absolutely incapable of being impugned by any fair consideration of the evidence, the grounds upon which the resolutions were based. Therefore, upon the consideration of those allegations of Father RITCHOT, with reference to his conversation with Sir CLINTON MURDOCH and Lord LISGAR, there was nothing said in those resolutions. The explanations that were given as to the want of acquaintance on the part of the rev. gentleman with the English language, and the statement made by Lord LISGAR and Sir CLINTON MURDOCH as to what they did say, created so much doubt and dispute upon what had actually transpired, that he thought it would have been wrong to leave embodied those statements in these resolutions. Reference had been made in the course of this debate to the conduct of Hon. Mr. DORION as Minister of Justice and the acts of individual Ministers, but he would call the attention of the House to the fact that the negotiations and communications which formed the basis of these resolutions were conducted principally by the late Sir GEORGE CARTIER, who, during Sir JOHN MACDONALD'S illness was acting First Minister, and the then First Minister himself; and if a distinction was to be drawn between the force to be attributed to the statements of individual Ministers not authorized to speak on behalf of the Government, and statements made on behalf of the Government, certainly the statements of the First Minister and the acting First Minister, should have the most force. With reference to Sir GEORGE CARTIER, it was alleged in the resolutions that at various times he gave divers persons of prominence in the North-West, amongst whom were Archbishop TACHE, Father RITCHOT, the Hon. M. A. GIRARD, and the Hon. J. ROYAL, assurances that a complete amnesty would be granted by the Imperial Government in respect of all acts committed by all persons during the North-West troubles, and requested that the assurances should be, as they were, communicated to the interested parties." Now, the hon, gentleman had referred to the first person mentioned here, Archbishop TACHE, and had pointed out the distinction which obviously existed between his position in reference to these assurances and that of Father RITCHOT Archbishop TACHE had proved in the distinctest way in various passages of his evidence that Sir GEORGE CARTIER made these statements to him, that Sir GEORGE gave him assurance not that he would grant an amnesty or that the Imperial Government had promised it, but that the Imperial Government would grant an amnesty, and that that fact should be communicated to the people of the country, and too, at a time when, if the hon. gentleman's description of the state of affairs be not wholly exaggerated, if Archbishop TACHE'S statements were not wholly exaggerated, it was of the utmost consequence in the interests of the whole of Canada that the people should be quieted and tranquilized. The first paragraph of the resolutions alleging that Sir GEORGE CARTIER, filling the position of representative of the Government in the negotiations and being the acting leader of the Government was established to be true beyond contradiction by a vast mass of indisputable testimony. The hon. gentleman declared that Archbishop TACHE had himself stated in his letter of the 29th of June that he had taken the responsibility upon himself with reference to the promise he then made. That was perfectly true. He held with the hon. gentleman that the statement made in that letter practically, though not expressly, amounted to an admission that the Archbishop did not conceive that he was authorized by the Canadian Government in its name to promise an amnesty. The Archbishop fully explained that. He stated that he did conceive himself authorized to promise an amnesty in the name of the Imperial Government that he went up to the country with that belief, that he did promise an amnesty in the name of the Imperial Government, immediately upon his arrival, that the people were afterwards disquieted and disturbed, that the country was in a dangerous condition, that he found that they were not relying as much as he desired on the pledge that he gave in the name of the Imperial Government, and that to accomplish the object which he had in view he had in June to take upon himself the responsibility of making the promise in the name of the Canadian Government as well, and that promise made by the Archbishop acting in the bona fide belief that he was authorized to make it as the promise of the Imperial Government, and the promise he subsequently made in the name of the Canadian Government on his own responsibility, were not disowned by the Canadian Government. It was quite true that with reference to the second promise, two letters were written to His Grace—an official letter from the Secretary of State, pointing out to him that he must take the whole responsibility for the promise, and a private letter from Sir GEORGE CARTIER, pointing out the reason for the despatch, that his colleagues were in great dread of public opinion, and therefore it was necessary to write a disavowing despatch. But what he contended was that the people of the country were not informed of any disavowal of the promise made by the Archbishop. The Canadian Government were informed of the promise which had been made and they took no pains to tell the people that that promise had been disavowed, and therefore they left the people under the impression that they knew had been conveyed to them by the Archbishop that such a promise being made was authorized. It was also established by the evidence of the Archbishop and Mr. ARCHIBALD that the persons in the North-West who were implicated in these troubles became absolutely convinced from whatever source—and we found no source, except the persons who promulgated these assurances in the territory—that a general amnesty had been promised, and that conviction tended to facilitate the acquisition of that territory by Canada. Of that there could be no doubt. With the exception of what the First Minister had done in reference to the sending of Archbishop TACHE to that country, he had no personal individual responsibility, and he believed it had been established that, anterior to the commencement of the hon. gentleman's illness, there was no agreement that there should be an amnesty, if there was one subsequently. His personal and individual responsibility up to the time to which he had arrived, was confined to that part which related to Archbishop TACHE's going up to that country. Now, he was not prepared to accede to the view that the expressions which were used in the letter of the hon. gentleman on the amnesty question were fairly to be construed in such a limited sense as he had proposed. It was perfectly understood that although the Crown might pardon for crimes, the Crown could not take away the right of the subject to have redress for a civil wrong, and what the hon. gentleman said was, that besides giving the general amnesty, which the Crown could do, the Crown would not deprive the Hudson's Bay Company of their right to sue the insurgents for the value of their goods, because that the Crown could not do—but would stand between the insurgents and all harm that might result to them from such demands made by the Hudson's Bay Company. That was the reason for the special reference that was made to the circumstances of the Hudson's Bay Company's goods in the despatch which alludes to the circumstances as a basis for granting a general amnesty. The argument of the hon. gentleman, based upon the despatch, fell entirely to the ground. The simple proposition was this—general amnesty you are promised, and in addition to that you are promised that you will be indemnified against all civil rights that may have arisen in favour of the Hudson's Bay Company or others for civil wrongs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Not others.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Well, in favor of the Hudson's Bay Company alone. Technically there was great force in the argument that this proclamation and letter of the hon. gentleman had a condition attached to them, and therefore it is that I highly approve of the plan which has been adopted in these resolutions of not bringing forward disputable points, and which has been followed out by the exclusion of the proclamations as one of the grounds on which the action of the House is sought. But it was clear that the Archbishop did bona fide believe that under the letter of the hon. gentleman, and of the proclamation, he was authorized in the circumstances which existed in the country at the time of his arrival, to make the promise in the name of the Imperial Government, which he then did make. He (Mr. BLAKE) did not say, and the resolution did not say, that the Archbishop was so authorized, but he did say, and the resolution said that he thought he was authorized to make the promise, and the Canadian Government did not disavow to the people publicly the promise so made. Then the resolutions proceeded to refer—dealing with the subject in chronological order—to the Fenian raid, and the hon. gentleman did not touch upon that branch of the subject. Some observations had been made in the despatches with reference to the position of a Lieutenant Governor in Canada, and it had been alleged that the Lieut.-Governor's action could not be regarded by the Imperial Government as in any way compromising them. That was the distinction which the Imperial Government had been pleased to take. They had been pleased to allege that because Lieut.-Governor ARCHIBALD was not appointed by the Imperial Government, they were not responsible for anything he did or said. Well, if they were not technically bound was not the Canadian Government technically bound? Somebody must be bound, somebody must be responsible for the utterances of this official, and if the Imperial Government discarded all responsibility, then the responsibility clearly fell by that disavowal of theirs upon this country. The Lieut.-Governor in a great emergency, as he conceived it to be, and as he had vividly described in his evidence before the Committee, when he thought that the retention of that country as an appendage of the Crown depended upon prompt action and harmonious united co-operation on the part of all the inhabitants, issued a proclamation, assuming—Lord CARNARVON says without any authority—to use the name of the Sovereign in an appeal to the people. Well, if that was wrong, the hon. gentleman opposite never corrected that wrong. If the Lieut.-Governor did wrong in that step or in any other which he took the hon. gentleman instead of blaming him applauded him. The hon. gentleman in a despatch wrote that the proclamation was a wise step and had given much satisfaction in Ottawa. He was not concerned about that; he was concerned only for this, that this official of ours did assume to act in a particular way. He assumed to call on all the inhabitants of the country, without distinction of race or nationality, without regard to their former position, without regard to the old troubles or the then attitude of the men connected with them, to rally to the defence of the country. But he made a special application tao. RIEL and LEPINE did not come to him. He went to them. He appealed through the medium that he thought most efficacious, through the medium that Archbishop TACHE had at his request recommended to him as he was leaving the Province in case an emergency should arise—he appealed to them through the priest, Father RITCHOT, to come forward. That appeal was responded to, and the Lieut.-Governor accepted the services of these men, and wrote a letter to them in which he told them that he would take the earliest opportunity to transmit to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL a statement of the course which they had taken. Under such circumstances, and in view of the retention of Lieut.-Governor ARCHIBALD in his office, and his subsequent promotion to the Governorship of Nova Scotia, showing that his conduct was highly approved of by the Canadian Government, he held that this country was responsible for the acts of Lieut.-Governor ARCHIBALD. He had sent down to Ottawa a full account of the course he had taken accompanied with his resignation. He said "if you disapprove of my conduct I am willing and anxious to go. I will relieve you of all embarrassment." The Government chose to recognize the wisdom of his course, they did not forbid him to proceed in the same path, and therefore the Government of this country was to a large extent committed by the acts of the Lieutenant Governor, not disowned but approved. That position was practically recognized by Lord CARNARVON. The hon. gentleman thought that those who sustained the statement of facts and also the conclusions of these resolutions were upon the horns of a dilemma; but he would find that while Lord CARNARVON declined to recognize the proposition that the Crown was technically bound by the action of Lieutenant-Governor ARCHIBALD, he specifically acknowledged that the facts and circumstances involved not complete amnesty but favorable consideration, and they rendered it impossible to take the lives of these persons. He did not see the dilemma that the hon. gentleman would put us in. He did not say that it was absolutely necessary to pardon or to hang. He said there was a middle course. He said you may give a certain amount of consideration to acts done and relations assumed by the constituted authorities of the country, without giving all the weight which the advocates of one side of the question might be disposed to give. He said that they must consider the circumstances as rendering it impossible to inflict the death penalty, while he did not consider that as entitling the parties to absolute pardon. Well, what Parliament was asked to do on this occasion was to affirm that clear principle. There might be various circumstances which plainly point to an absolute amnesty to all but two or three persons, and to a very large measure of relief to those two or three, but that did not render it impossible for this House and the Government to indicate their sense of the crime which these persons had committed. The hon. gentleman had at considerable length vindicated his course upon the occasion that occurred almost immediately after the events to which he had just alluded. The Fenian raid was over in October. Early in that month or late in the preceding month, just before the Fenian raid, the Archbishop had left the Province. In November and December he saw Sir GEORGE CARTIER and the hon. gentleman, and the question of the condition of the North-West was discussed between them. It was thought advisable at that time to arrange that RIEL should leave the country, and afterwards that LEPINE should be conjoined in the arrangement, and the resolutions narrated —with an accuracy which had not been disputed by the hon. gentleman himself— the exact facts connected with that transaction. He (Mr. BLAKE) observed that the Government had followed the wise and prudent course of preventing dispute as to the accuracy of these facts, if possible, by adopting the version that the hon. gentleman himself gave, in preference to that of the Archbishop, where they differed. With reference to the conversation that occurred between them on this occasion, it was the language of the hon. gentleman himself that was embodied in the resolutions. The hon. gentleman said that he arranged in a period, as he believed, of great emergency, with Archbishop TACHE to procure the retirement for a season of RIEL and LEPINE from the country, and he said under all the circumstances of the case he would do it again, because it was necessary to do it. He (Mr. BLAKE) was not concerned at this time to determine whether it was or was not necessary. We were concerned to determine whether it was done or not, and whether the mode in which it was done was consistent in the least degree with the notion which the hon. gentleman stated to-night was in his heart at the time that he did it, namely, that there was no Statute of Limitations for murder, and the man might be brought back and hanged afterwards. What did he say to the Archbishop on that occasion? He told him then, urging him to use his influence with those persons to induce them to leave the country, that if they left it it would better the chances of an amnesty being obtained for them. Did the hon. gentleman dare to tell the House that when he was telling Archbishop TACHE, in order to induce him to get these men to leave the country, that it would better the chances of amnesty, he cherished in his heart of hearts the old legal saw that there was no Statute of Limitations for murder, and therefore he could catch and hang these men at any time afterwards? It was utterly inconsistent with the least pretence to honor and good faith that any man in the position of the hon. gentleman should have stated to Archbishop TACHE that he desired the expatriation of these men for a period, and that their expatriation would better the chances of an amnesty, and at the same time should have nourished in his breast any such idea as he now confessed to have. But that was not all. The Archbishop said that the hon. gentleman promised that he could make RIEL'S cause his own, and use his influence with the Imperial Government. The hon. gentleman at first did not remember that he had used any such expression, but he afterwards acknowledged that he did say or may have said that he would exercise his personal influence to procure action in the matter by HER MAJESTY'S Government, and so far to make RIEL'S case his own. Did the hon. gentleman mean to tell us now that the way he intended to use his influence with the Imperial Government was to induce them to prosecute RIEL and hang him, that the way he intended to make RIEL's case his own was to put the noose round his neck. Not so. We understand all this. The hon. gentleman was, as he said, in a grave crisis, and if he had come forward and stated to the House that he conceived that the interests of the country required that he should do that from which his own feelings revolted, that he conceived that the safety of the people was the highest law, and so conceiving, he did make a pledge, we could have understood it, and this House would have been prepared to second him in the redemption of it. But the hon. gentleman did not do this. He accused the First Minister of not daring to deal with this matter, although the Premier had brought down these resolutions—resolutions which, it was rightly said, the hon. gentleman opposite would not have dared to bring down. That was the secret of the business. The hon. gentleman would not dare to produce in public what he had done in secret ; he would not dare to act on the pledges he had given ; he would not dare to brave the unpopularity which might arise from such a course. He had made a promise which no person of common sense or honor could believe could be redeemed otherwise than by using the most strenuous exertions he could to procure an amnesty for RIEL. He (Mr. BLAKE) maintained that that piece of evidence by itself was conclusive to show that the hon. gentleman, then First Minister of this country, did in fact agree that he would do all he could to procure amnesty from the Imperial Government. This was clear beyond dispute, and without denying the language which the Archbishop and the hon. gentleman himself had used, it was impossible to believe that the hon. gentleman could have had in his heart at that time that there was no Statute of Limitations for murder, and that he might be instrumental in catching RIEL after all. Could any one say that when the First Minister of the country, acting under a sense of his responsibility to Parliament, made such an arrangement as this, it was possible to execute to the utmost public justice against the person in respect of whom the arrangement had been made? Was it consistent with the prosecution of this offender—his prosecution to the death—that the First Minister and Minister of Justice of this country should have made an arrangement for his withdrawal from the country at the public expense? The hon. gentleman said that RIEL was not sent out of the country by him, and that as a matter of fact till a considerable time after the arrival of the Archbishop. He had stated that public money was not used for this purpose, but he was mistaken, for he would find by the evidence that a portion of it went to sustain the men and a portion to sustain their families.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I said it was not used till the £600 was forthcoming.

Mr. BLAKE—Yes, because these persons wanted better terms. They had seen the Public Accounts, and found that other persons had got much larger sums, and they really thought they ought to get more money. The hon. gentleman said the Government had nothing to do with that, and that they knew nothing of it. But the hon. gentleman forgot that when these men wanted more money, the Archbishop expressly said, "A thousand dollars have been given to me, and I will add to that out of my own purse what is needed." "No," they said, "the members of the Cabinet at Ottawa request us to go, and you must get them to pay the additional money." It is quite clear from that that the Archbishop had communicated to these persons that he had been requested by the Cabinet at Ottawa to procure their expatriation. But he (Mr. BLAKE) did not care whether the Archbishop had communicated that information to these persons or not. The point was, that this arrangement was made by a person employed by the First Minister to make an arrangement of this kind. The hon. gentleman said it was to be a profound secret. If it was such a meritorious action, why did he wish that it should not be known? It seemed to him that the hon. gentleman would have been less scrupulous about the extreme secrecy of the transaction if he believed it was so commendable. Then, as the resolutions proceed with the narration of events in the order of time, reference was made to what happened in the general election of 1872. It was true that the hon. gentleman had a communication by telegraph with Lieut.-Governor ARCHIBALD, or rather, he sent a peremptory demand to that officer, as if he were his lackey, and not the Lieut.-Governor, "Get Sir GEORGE elected in your Province." The revelations of the North-West Committee had incidentally thrown some light upon the manner in which the late Government treated their Lieut.-Governors, and he (Mr. BLAKE) had no doubt that if they had a committee on British Columbian affairs they would find that Governor TRUTCH had been used in a somewhat similar measure in connection with the securing of a seat for another member of the Cabinet. The hon. gentleman telegraphed to Mr. ARCHIBALD to get Sir GEORGE CARTIER elected in that Province, but not to let the late Provisional President resign in his favor. The hon. gentleman was conscious that the county of Provencher was a French county; that it was the county for which Sir GEORGE was likely to stand, and he knew that RIEL was running for that county so he did not telegraph "Don't let him stand for Provencher," (for he knew very well that he must stand for that county if at all,) but "Don't let Provisional resign in his favour." The hon. gentleman was told the next day by telegraph from Mr. ARCHIBALD that it was Provencher that Sir GEORGE was to run for, and then on the 6th—the Government having apparently not noticed, or perhaps not having fully arranged an answer to the latter part of the hon. gentleman's telegram—answered that part, and he got out of the difficulty in just such a fashion as the hon. gentleman himself would delight in. Mr. ARCHIBALD telegraphed that neither candidate would resign in Sir GEORGE CARTIER'S favor, but they would both retire. That was a distinction without a difference. A plain man like himself did not see the difference, but the hon. gentleman and Mr. ARCHIBALD both saw it. It would have been a very unfortunate thing had the "late Provisional" resigned in Sir GEORGE CARTIER'S favor, but it was perfectly right for him to retire along with Attorney-General CLARKE, and left the seat open for Sir GEORGE. He did not see that the hon. gentleman at that time could have remembered his old saw about the Statute of Limitation of murder when he was arranging with a man to retire who should not have been provided with a seat but with a gibbet. Then, it was clear that the hon. gentleman, as First Minister and leader of the Government, as well as Minister of Justice, did give assurances to Archbishop TACHE and other persons that he would press on HER MAJESTY'S Government to take up this question, thinking they might see their way to granting a complete amnesty without throwing the responsibility on the Canadian Government. It must have been clear to the hon. gentleman's own mind, for he must have read the Statute of Limitation, that he would get rid of the trouble through the Imperial Government, and he gave individual assurances as First Minister of the Cabinet that he would urge the Imperial Government to settle the question. These assurances were of a piece with all the other developments that had been brought out in the evidence. They were simply indicative of one harmonious spirit pervading the policy of these gentlemen from beginning to end, and that spirit was that while they would not do anything openly, while they would not give a promise in writing, while they would do nothing that would disable them from asserting their innocence subsequently, they led these people to believe from an early stage—Sir GEORGE CARTIER, during the negotiations; the hon. member for Kingston afterwards when he resumed the management of affairs—that the Imperial Government would at some time grant an amnesty, embracing every one implicated in the insurrection, and covering every crime committed, and they promised to use what influence they could to procure that amnesty. They said they could not dare to advocate it in the House; they said they could not give it in writing, but their promise was given to procure an amnesty; that that was the general view and the impression they conveyed to Archbishop TACHE and through him to the Metis, could not be disputed. Under these circumstances the House was bound to look to what was practicable. He believed with Lord CARNARVON there might be a middle course to pursue. The late Government had so dealt with affairs that it was necessary to remit a great deal of the penalty for the crime committed, and yet that it was not essential to concede all. They had to be guided by all the circumstances with a view to settle the question consistently with the principles of honour and good faith. He believed the solution the Government had proposed was the right one, and the hon. member for Kingston had not disputed it, nay, had frankly admitted the fact. The hon. member for North Hastings had referred to words used by him (Mr. BLAKE) on this subject on former occasions. He did not disavow them. They represented his former opinion and his present opinion of that act. He was not concerned to know that such a statement as this involved the fact that such words might wound the feelings—though he could not conceive why—of gentlemen in this House and outside of it who entertained very different ideas of that transaction. As the hon. member for Kingston had observed, it was one of the duties of a public man to act upon his views, whether they involved popularity or unpopularity, and he (Mr. BLAKE) did not hesitate to say that he would tell the people of Quebec what he had told the people of Ontario and would justify the words he had used by the record. The crime being conceded, what the House had to consider was how far they could go in one direction or the other, how they could deal with the events which had taken place, and how far those who administered the affairs of the country were responsible. They had been told that there had been a conversation with Hon. MM. DORION and LETTELLIER, which involved promises which ought to be observed and binding on the Government. He entirely denied that there was any promise. The situation of these gentlemen was different from the situation of the two persons on whose promises and assurances this House was asked to act. Sir JOHN was First Minister, and Sir GEORGE acting First Minister, positions which neither Mr. DORION nor Mr. LETTELIER occupied, and if the latter had given such assurances they could not be binding on the Government. But they did not give such assurances. The Archbishop in his evidence says Mr. DORION remarked: "I can make no promises," and he expresses gratification at that statement, saying, "I would rather have no promises than be treated as I was before, for promises were then made which were broken." The last communication which took place before the departure of the Archbishop to Manitoba, was the communication in which cypher telegrams were arranged for, and they prove conclusively that up to that time there had been no promise, for it was an arrangement to convey information if there was to be a complete amnesty, and also if the affair was to be considered by the Government, showing that the question had not been before the Cabinet up to that time. Then the Archbishop's own testimony is:

"At, I think, every one of the conversations, Mr. DORION told me that he personally could not give me any promise of an amnesty. Whether this was in answer to my question or not, I cannot remember. He added that he was perfectly well disposed and expected he would be able to satisfy us as hereinbefore stated.

"In reply to Mr. DORION, when he said he could not give me any promise, I said I had rather have no promise at all, than one that would not be fulfilled afterwards."

On the 3rd of January the Archbishop wrote about "hope of some consolation," and explains in his evidence that the expression referred to the granting of an amnesty. He adds:

"There had, up to the time of the writing of this letter, been no promise of an amnesty by the present Government or any member of it, though I had been led to expect it, as I have before mentioned.

"I can give no more words which passed between MM. DORION or LETELLIER and myself than what I have already given in this examination.

"It was on these words and from the whole tenor of our conversation, that I based the expectation I entertained."

So it was clear that the only two members of the Government with whom the Archbishop had communication, neither of whom were competent to act, gave no promise individually or on behalf of the Government, and the arrangement made for cypher despatches at the close of their communication, was of itself conclusive proof that no promise had been made. He (Mr. BLAKE) was a member of the Government at that time. Of course he did not know, and had not the slightest idea that such communications were passing, and he contended that they did not bind the Government as it was constituted. The Quebec members of the Cabinet said they were individually well-disposed, but they could make no promise for the Government. The Archbishop on his return to Manitoba, said to his friends that he had reason to believe that the new Government would fulfil the promises of the old. He proved that Mr. DORION had received from him a mass of testimony upon this question, from which he was of opinion that an amnesty had been promised, but he declined to make any promise himself. The new Government, as far as it was bound, was fulfilling the promises of the old Government, made by its First Minister and its acting First Minister, promises on which these people acted, and by which the transfer of the North-West territory was facilitated and tranquilized. He did not believe that the intelligent people of the East or the West would be dissatisfied with this solution of the difficulty. While he regretted that they were obliged to arrive at such a solution; while he did not believe it was in acts of Parliament or acts of grace on the part of HER MAJESTY to wash out the guilt of that great crime; while he did not believe that anything this House could do or say could make that crime one whit less than it was, he did believe that the people of this country would be satisfied that enough was said and done by the Premier of the late Government and his colleagues to render it entirely impossible that any other course could be taken than that proposed by the hon. gentlemen now in power, and if the country came to that conclusion, as he believed they would, they would be satisfied with this proposition. If they did not come to that conclusion; if they believed with the hon. member for North Hastings that nothing had been done to bind the country, they must pay the penalty of their error of judgment. If they believed with the hon. member for Terrebonne that the offenders should be free from all punishment, they had to pay the penalty of that. From beginning to end the Government had the satisfaction of knowing, whatever might be the result of their policy, that they had acted upon consistent principle. The hon. member for North Hastings had been pleased to charge them with having for political purposes and for political effect alone, attacked this act as a crime. Did the hon. gentleman suppose that political effect could not be secured by designating it by some milder term. Did not the hon. gentleman's organs attack him (Mr. BLAKE) for having used different language in the Ontario Legislature and in this House? He was of opinion that this Blue Book (the report of the North-West Committee), disclosed facts which rendered it quite impossible to execute that justice which he believed should be executed. It had been asserted that the men who denounced in the Ontario Legislature the murder of SCOTT had made this a question of creed. If it had been made a question of creed, it was the hon. member for North Hastings and the association to which he belonged that must bear the responsibility. He (Mr. BLAKE) had said this before in this House, and he repeated it now. When he (Mr. BLAKE) expressed his views about it, he put it on grounds which applied to all citizens of this country, whether Catholic or Protestant. He appealed for justice for his countryman. He declined to believe then, and he still declined to believe, that his Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen would view that crime with any other sentiments than he viewed it. But the hon. member was not as blameworthy as his chief. He did not know the secret history and was shocked himself with the revelations that were made. What did the hon. member for Kingston say at Peterboro' in referring to the reward offered by the Ontario Government? Referring to the murder of SCOTT and the absence of RIEL, a friend in the crowd asked, "Where is RIEL?" The hon. gentleman replied, "GOD knows; I wish we could catch him. He is, I believe, in the United States, where he retreated, as Mr. BLAKE says, in consequence of the reward offered by Mr. BLAKE'S Government. Anxious, says he, to vindicate the sacred cause of justice, he issued the proclamation offering that reward, and this murderer is no longer in the country. He no longer pollutes the soil of Canada by his presence. Well, I always thought in my simplicity, until I heard this declaration, that rewards were usually offered to catch a man, and not to cause him to go away." He (Mr. BLAKE) confessed that when he, as First Minister of his Province, took the responsibility of offering a reward for the apprehension of the criminal, he did not know that the Minister of Justice at Ottawa, as First Minister of the Dominion, had used the public funds for sending him out of harm's way. Had the hon. gentleman's policy been as open as his (Mr. BLAKE's) he would have pursued a different course. If he (Mr. BLAKE) had known that Canada was offering a reward to RIEL to get him beyond the border, it would have been useless for Ontario to offer a reward to capture him. But the hon. gentleman went a little further in his Peterboro' speech. He said:

"And that is what Mr. BLAKE not only did, but boasts of having done. His proclamation has made RIEL "lave that," and he is now living in peace, prosperity and comfort across the border, and like men of his stamp, ready to stir up another row should opportunity offer."

The House would perceive what an accurate knowledge the hon. member had not only of where RIEL was, but also of the condition in which he was at the time. Of course he (Mr. BLAKE) did not know that RIEL was in peace, prosperity and comfort, but the hon. member for Kingston did, knowing how the secret service money was spent, and could speak with positive assurance on the subject. He would draw the attention of the House to the style in which the hon. member described the act when it was attributed to him (Mr. BLAKE). He said:

"RIEL is now living in peace, prosperity and comfort across the border, and like men of his stamp, ready to stir up another row should opportunity offer. You must remember that the country is a smouldering volcano, and that the slightest imprudence may cause a hostile war; and this man who is now living in security under the American flag may keep up the agitation for his own purposes, and do it free from danger, because we dare not go there and outrage the soil of the United States in order to capture him. He knows he is safe, thanks to Mr. BLAKE, with full opportunity, if he so desires, to plot and plan, in order to destroy the peace and prosperity of that great and growing country."

That was what the hon. gentleman said when he asserted that the Ontario Government sent RIEL across the border. To-night, when the hon. gentleman forgot all that, he called the act of sending RIEL out of the country a master stroke of policy which he would be quite willing to repeat. Under such different circumstances did they find the act described. The one was an act in vindication of public justice; the other was an act which, if done with the described intent of inducing this man to return some other day in order to hang him, was an act of the basest perfidy. He (Mr. BLAKE) did not believe that any amount of argument from the other side, any attempt to obtain from an amendment a union of the scattered forces, would alter the substantial fate of this resolution. He believed it would be carried by a decisive majority and that the vote would be met by the general approbation of the country at large. For his part he rejoiced that it had been given to the present Government and to the great Liberal party of which he was an humble member, to be able to propound a reasonable and satisfactory solution upon reasonable and liberal terms, of a difficulty which ought to be settled, which the late Government did not dare to grasp, but which the hon. Premier did dare and for which he was about to reap the reward of his daring.

Mr. WALLACE (South Norfolk) moved the adjournment of the debate. Carried.

The House adjourned at 3 a. m.

———:++:———

[ERRATUM. — In the remarks of the Hon. Mr. VAIL on Tuesday last, in introducing his bill to amend the Militia Act, instead of "to do away with the Deputy Adjutants General," read "to do away with the office of Deputy Adjutant General at headquarters."]

———.++:———

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, February 12th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

THE ESTIMATES.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT presented a message from HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, submitting the estimates of expenditure for the year ending 30th June, 1876.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved that His Excellency's Message and the accompanying estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.—Carried.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT announced that he proposed to proceed with the consideration of the estimates on Tuesday next, if they could be reached, on which day he would make his financial statement.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE presented a Message from His Excellency, relating to the non-fulfilment of the terms of Confederation made with British Columbia.

MARINE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPHS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE presented a Message from His Excellency, transmitting copies of correspondence which had taken place with HER MAJESTY'S Government on the subject of a Bill passed in the last session of the Dominion Parliament, intituled "An Act for the construction and maintenance of Marine Electric Telegraphs."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD asked whether printed copies of the papers relating to British Columbia and Electric Telegraph Cables would be distributed?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the papers had not been printed, but they would be printed.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said they would have to be printed before any action could be taken on them.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE remarked that the Government had no action to take on them.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the subjects were mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and the papers ought therefore to have been printed before the meeting of the House that the Government might be prepared to deal with those questions.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied that that course had not been followed by the late Government. There had not been time to have the papers printed; the papers on Marine Telegraph Cables were, however, very brief, and could be printed in a day or two.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD presented a return for an address for copies of correspondence and papers connected with the appointment of WILLIAM J. MORDEN as Postmaster for the village of Greensville in the County of Wentworth, and for the removal of the said office to Bullock's Corners.

NORTH-WEST TROUBLES.—AMNESTY.

Mr. WALLACE (South Norfolk) resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE for the adoption of certain resolutions on which to found an Address to His Excellency the GOVERNOR GENERAL praying that steps may be taken for obtaining the granting of an amnesty for acts committed during the troubles in the North-West. The Premier, in his opening speech, Mr. WALLACE said, when speaking about the embarrassment with which that question was surrounded, said that the disturbed state of affairs at the North-West was brought about by no action of the Government, nor of its members, nor by the great Liberal party to which he belonged. The hon. gentleman no doubt felt what he said, because that party was in the habit of arrogating to themselves all the good deeds. He invited the House to examine the history of the North-West affairs to ascertain whether the Premier's statement was strictly in accordance with the facts. On 16th February, 1871, the hon. member, now the Premier, then leader of the Opposition, moved a resolution in reference to the murder of SCOTT, without showing that the House had a right to deal with the question. Did the hon. gentlemen who now occupied the Treasury benches say how the criminals were to be brought to justice? No, they only moved this resolution, and increased the embarrassment surrounding this question. The hon. Premier, when a member of the Ontario Government, moved a resolution offering a reward for the capture of RIEL, when he knew that he could do nothing towards accomplishing the object which he professed to desire. And yet the hon. member claimed that he had done nothing to bring about the embarrassments with which this question was surrounded. In the very action he was now taking he was adding to them. In the despatch of His Excellency the following words occurred:—

"I have the honor of forwarding to Your Lordship a very important Order in Council, which my Ministers have desired me to transmit, with the request that Your Lordship would be pleased to give it your most earnest consideration.

"The purport of the document is to move Your Lordship and the Imperial Government to undertake the settlement of what is known here as the "Amnesty question."

"The reasons for which my Ministers are desirous of seeking Your Lordship's assistance are founded on the fact of the circumstances out of which the "Amnesty question" has grown, having occurred at a time anterior to the assumption by Canada of the Government of the North-West. They are further impelled to adopt this course by the obvious embarrassments attending the settlement of a controversy, whose aspects are alleged to have been already modified by the intervention of Imperial authority, and which are so seriously complicated by the vehement international antagonism which they have excited in this country. Under these circumstances my advisers are of opinion that a dispassionate review of the whole question, emanating from so impartial a source as HER MAJESTY'S Government would tend more to tranquilize the public mind, and secure a loyal acquiescence in whatever decision may be arrived at, than would be the case were they themselves to undertake the settlement of the dispute."

The House would see by the words "which my Ministers have desired me to transmit," that the Government were responsible for handing over this question to the Imperial Government and the commutation of LEPINE'S sentence. And what were the Government doing now? Were they content to let that settlement of the question remain. It surely could not be possible that the men who clamored for the blood of the murderers when in Opposition were now of the opinion that the punishment of LEPINE was too great! He (Mr. WALLACE), regretted that HIS EXCELLENCY did not see fit to eliminate the clause of loss of political rights, for as long as that disability remained, the question would be brought up in this House, session after session, on motions to have it set aside. Coming to another member of the party in power, the hon. member for South Bruce, who deservedly occupied a prominent position in the Ministerial ranks—had he done nothing to surround this question with embarrassments? When in Opposition, he contributed largely to these embarrassments, and the wrongs of the hon. gentlemen who now occupied the Treasury benches, were rising before them. They were brought face to face with the difficulties they had themselves created. Their former conduct made it impossible for them to do what they believed in their inmost souls to be right. Otherwise they contended, when in Opposition, that was right which they believed to be wrong. On February 2nd, in the Ontario Legislature, the hon. member for South Bruce moved a resolution expressing regret that the murderers of THOMAS SCOTT were allowed to go unwhipt of justice; but the hon. gentleman did not show how the Ontario or the Dominion authorities could act in the matter. It was true that SCOTT was a Canadian, but of his own motion he had gone to the North West Territory, and was no longer a Canadian subject. He was in a territory under the Imperial Government, or under the Government of the Hudson's Bay Company. So that the whole of this question was embarrassing just surely and solely because of the agitation and actions of the hon. gentlemen who now occupied the Treasury benches. The hon. member for South Bruce said when speaking in this debate "ours will be the satisfaction of knowing that we have acted from principle from the beginning to the end." Pharisee like, the hon. member considered himself better than other men. But this was the position hon. gentlemen opposite had always assumed—that they had always acted from the purest motives, while their opponents were impure and dishonest in all they did. His (Mr. WALLACE'S) experience of life had been but limited, but it had shown him that those who boasted most of their honesty were generally the most dishonest, just as the man who boasted most of his courage was almost sure to be a coward. The hon. member for South Bruce was always speaking of his honesty—but he (Mr. WALLACE) would not impugn his motives. The hon. member for South Wentworth also made a motion in this House on the subject of the SCOTT murder, and that motion showed that the whole responsibility for the embarrassments which surrounded this question rested with the hon. gentlemen opposite. The Government recommended, and they dare not recommend. They presented the pitiable spectacle of a Government that dare not govern, and Ministers who dare not advise. The reason assigned for the introduction of the resolutions before the House was not that it was in the interest of justice or of the country that it should be settled, but that promises had been made by the late Government, or certain members of it, that an amnesty should be granted. Now, he held that if the hon. gentlemen believed that what they proposed to this House was wrong they should not make the proposition merely because it was asserted that promises had been given by individual members of the late Government. The hon. gentlemen opposite assigned as a reason for giving a full amnesty to some and not to others, that promises of various kinds had been made in respect to the several offenders on which they (the Government) were bound to act. But HIS EXCELLENCY in his despatch says :—

"Archbishop TACHE claims an amnesty on the plea that he went to Red River as a plenipotentiary, empowered both by the Imperial and Dominion Governments to secure the tranquility of the country by the issue of such assurances of immunity to those engaged in the recent disturbances as he should deem fit. In support of this view he found himself, as he himself states, pages 33 to 4 of the Canada Blue Book : First, as regards the Imperial Government, on Lord LISGAR's letter and proclamation, and secondly, as regards the Local Government, on the paragraph I have already quoted in Sir JOHN MACDONALD's communication of the 16th February, 1870. I confess I do not think that his Lordship's argument can be sustained. In the first place, the Archbishop's claim to such extensive powers is certainly invalid. The nature of his position is clearly defined in Mr. HOWE's official despatch of the 16th February, 1870. The instructions already conveyed to Messrs. THIBAULT, DE SALABERRY and SMITH, are communicated to him as additional guides for his conduct, and he is further invited to associate himself, and to act conjointly with these persons. There are, therefore, no grounds for regarding the mission or powers of the Bishop as differing either in character or extent from those entrusted to the gentlemen who had preceded him ; and there is certainly no intimation in his instructions that he was authorized to promulgate a pardon in the QUEEN's name for a capital felony,—still less can it be contended that he was empowered to expunge, on his own mere motion, a principal term from a Royal Proclamation. Mr. SMITH and his colleagues had been already furnished with Lord LISGAR'S Proclamation, but so far from considering that document as conveying a warrant of immunity to RIEL, Mr. SMITH expressly states that after the murder of SCOTT he refused to speak with him. On a reference, moreover, to the wording of the only sentence in Lord LISGAR's Proclamation which proffers grace to the insurgents, it becomes self-evident that it had in contemplation those minor political offences of which news had reached the ears of the Government when the document was framed."

There was clear and direct testimony in this despatch, in contradiction of what was brought forward as a justification for the resolutions now before the House. Then, again, he thought the resolutions themselves were illogical, for if it were true that the killing of THOMAS SCOTT was an inhuman murder, why amnesty one set of men implicated in it and not the others. If an amnesty was then granted to the murderers why not to the whole of them alike ? Surely the perpetrators of the crime were as guilty as the man who issued the order, yet RIEL, who merely gave the order and took no other part in the deed, was treated in a different manner from them. Why this exceptional severity to him ? Then again, in another respect the resolutions were inconsistent. LEPINE had submitted himself to the law, been tried and found guilty, whereas RIEL had not yet been tried. In the eyes of the law he was innocent until proved guilty, yet he was punished in the same manner as LEPINE, whose guilt had been proved. In this respect the resolutions should not receive the support of this House. Then, again, RIEL and LEPINE were not in the same position in another respect. LEPINE had submitted himself to the law ; RIEL had evaded it and was not entitled to the same consideration as the other. It was only in consideration of the fact that LEPINE had been tried, found guilty and received sentence that an amnesty could be asked. RIEL had not done this. If the pardon had been extended to LEPINE alone, he was not prepared to say that he would not be ready to support it, but so long as Mr. RIEL put himself outside the pale of the law, and continued to expatriate himself and remain an outlaw, the punishment proposed in these resolutions was no punishment. It was not so great as he had inflicted on himself. He (Mr. WALLACE) did not demand that vengeance be inflicted on the murderers of SCOTT, but he demanded that the majesty of the law be vindicated and that justice be done. Let RIEL come forward as LEPINE had done, and confess his crime. If he was afraid to do so in his own Province, let him surrender himself anywhere he pleased in the Dominion, and if he should be found guilty, there was no doubt his sentence would be commuted as LEPINE's had been. When RIEL was elected to represent Provencher in the Dominion Parliament, when he came to the Capital and enrolled his name among the Commoners of Canada, who in the Ministry or among their supporters moved for his apprehension and punishment? Why did not the Premier offer a reward of $5,000 as he did when a member of the Ontario Government? The hon. member, on one occasion, remarked that he would scorn to hold the office if he could not hold it with honor. Fiat justitia ruat coelum was his motto, but facts showed that it was on onewhich he did not act. The whole course of the hon. member and his colleagues showed that they were actuated not by a desire to do right, but to hold powers under any circumstances and at any price. They held up Sir JOHN MACDONALD'S conduct as a justification for everything they did, but if he had done wrong that was no reason why they should do likewise. In this matter he had only to ask his French friends to approach it without any prejudice. They must admit that these men had done wrong, and admitting that, they should lay aside their prejudices and deal with the question in a spirit of patriotism. If they insisted that everything their compatriots in Manitoba did was right, no just decision could be arrived at. Let the fugitive submit himself to law and he was sure that the spirit of fairness and justice which animated our people would assist them in obtaining mercy for the offender. Believing this, and feeling that the resolutions before the House were not such as to entitle them to his confidence and support, he would feel it his duty to vote against them.

Mr. RYAN said that in the whole range of Canadian politics there was no other question upon which so great a diversity of sentiment and opinion rested as upon the one under consideration. It had divided Cabinets, it had divided and it still divided the ranks of parties, and unfortunately for us, it had divided the young Province of Manitoba to such an extent that the consideration of this one question had almost wholly engrossed the attention of the Dominion whenever directed towards them, to the exclusion of others of perhaps equal importance. It was much to be regretted that so great a difference of opinion should exist upon a plain question of right and wrong; it was unfortunate that national and even religious prejudices should have become involved to such an extraordinary extent in the consideration of a question of this nature. But although we might differ in our opinions as to the manner in which the question ought to be disposed of, we were all agreed that the time had arrived when the interests of the Dominion require that it should be settled—settled at once and for ever. And although such able expounders of the Constitution as the hon. members for Kingston and South Bruce might differ as to the constitutionality of the manner in which the question had been approached, yet we must all agree that the Government had deserved well of this House and of the country for having touched upon a question of so formidable a nature—a question that for five years had hovered like some terrible dream of night above the bosom of sleeping Canada, a question that for five years the late Ministry allowed to remain like a sleeping dragon. As the question was one that affected the North-West particularly, he believed that the House would be disposed to give more weight to the sentiments of honourable members than they would on any ordinary question not particularly affecting them. Hence it was that he felt it to be his duty to put their sentiments plainly on record before the House and country upon the subject of debate, although, after the magnificent display of argument and eloquence which had entranced the House, and would long live in the memories of those who had been the fortunate spectators, he felt, in venturing upon the question, like a child who has strayed upon some real sanguinary field. Yet his duty to the men who had sent him here, and who felt perhaps more strongly upon the question than any other constituency in the Dominion, would not permit him to be silent. The population of Manitoba was one-third French and two-thirds English. The vacancy in the chair for Provencher, told the House in strong language how the French of Manitoba and the North-West think on the subject. But in the name of the English population he must protest against the amnesty proposed in the resolutions before the House, because to them it seems like a mockery of justice. The people of Manitoba were inclined to acquiesce in an amnesty to all parties concerned in the rebellion of '69 and '70, excepting only the murderers of THOMAS SCOTT. The reason why they made exception was that the murder was not necessary to the purposes or the success of the rebellion. It was not the act of the whole body of the rebels, it was not sanctioned or endorsed by even a majority of the French themselves. Of the Council of War who, with mock formality and real barbarity, sentenced SCOTT to death, a minority were opposed to the sentence; and of the firing party who executed the sentence, some removed the caps from their guns rather than be instrumental in so dreadful a crime. This was done, notwithstanding that their national and religious prejudices had been strongly excited, and liquor had even been given them to nerve them for their savage task. Had SCOTT fallen in a fair combat between the parties, the people of Manitoba would view the matter differently; but the Portage party, which was SCOTT'S party, when captured, had given up the idea of an armed resistance to the French, and were quietly returning to their homes when they were captured. It had been alleged that SCOTT brought his death upon himself by his violent conduct. Having been present during the greater portion of the trial of LEPINE, during which a systematic attempt was made to blacken the character of the murdered man, and having as he believed read the whole of the evidence he knew of no more serious truthful charge against him than that of unshrinking and outspoken loyalty. It had been urged in favor of amnesty that it would establish peace and harmony in the Province of Manitoba and throughout the Dominion. In the first place he was inclined to think that the peace and harmony which could only be purchased by interfering with the pure administration of justice was held at too high a price. If we could not have peace and harmony without pardoning red-handed murder, merely because the sympathies and prejudices of a portion of a community were strangely enlisted in its behalf; then let us at least have justice, and we would make a shift to do without peace and harmony. In the next place, it did not seem to him that the granting of an amnesty would be productive of peace. If amnesty pleased some in Manitoba, it would displease many more; and if it would satisfy those implicated in the murder and their friends, it would embitter the friends of the murdered man. Hence, new complications might arise, and if an amnesty were granted to the one party to-day, there was only too much reason to fear that an occasion might arise and a call be made for amnesty by the other party to-morrow. It had been agreed that an amnesty ought to issue on account of the late Administration. It was not in the power of the late, nor was it in the power of any Canadian Administration, to grant an amnesty—a fact that was well understood by all parties concerned in the negotiation. The most that they could promise was that the Administration would use their influence to have an amnesty granted. That Administration and their influence were things of the past, and the very course which they pursued on this question was perhaps one of the most important causes which led to their overthrow. The promise that they would use their influence in a particular direction could not bind a new House or a new Administration to use their influence in the same direction. The question involved in the resolutions introduced by the leader of the Government was not whether the late Administration did or did not promise an amnesty, but whether, taking all the circumstances into consideration, the alleged promises of the late Administration included, the House was of opinion that the amnesty proposed in the resolutions should issue. He was of the opinion, every member of this House must be of the opinion, who, without prejudice and without being trammeled by religious prejudice or party considerations, reviewed the whole circumstances of the case, that, attaching a due weight to the alleged promises, an amnesty excluding the murderers of SCOTT was the one that ought to issue. It had also been urged that because on the occasion of the Fenian alarms, Governor ARCHIBALD entrusted the murders of SCOTT with arms, that the legal consequences of so doing was an amnesty for the murder. He could not subscribe to this doctrine, nor did he believe it to be true in law or in accordance with the dictates of common sense. If HER MAJESTY, knowing a subject to be guilty of treason, choose to entrust him with arms to defend her, he could see a good reason why she ought to pardon his treason. The murderers of SCOTT were guilty of treason as well as murder, and for their treason there is no desire to molest them. But the principle of English law was that every man is presumed to be innocent until proof of guilt is established, and in the face of this principle, and in the absence of even an indictment, Governor ARCHIBALD, as the representative of HER MAJESTY, could not presume that LEPINE, RIEL, and others were guilty of felony, and could not consequently pardon by implication a crime of whose very existence he was presumably ignorant. Besides, whatever might have been the legally implied consequences of the action of the Governor it was on the occasion controlled by the express words of the parties. On the one side, before RIEL and LEPINE would consent to take up arms there was a demand that "pour la circonstance actuelle" their liberty would not be interfered with; and on the side, the reply of the Governor was that "pour la circonstance actuelle" their liberty would not be interfered with. Thus far and no further the implied promise of amnesty could go, for it was a principle of law that "expressum facit tacitum cessare." Having thus briefly expressed his views on the question before the House, he hoped to be excused from further troubling them, and he merely desired that the occasion should not pass without an expression of the opinions and feelings of the people of the North-West.

Mr. MASSON said he had heard with a great deal of pain the expressions which had fallen from the hon. member. He had himself been a short time in the North-West, and he had some opportunity of ascertaining the feelings of the people. He knew that the opinion not only among the French-speaking portion of the population, but amongst the large majority of the English, was an entirely different one to that represented by the hon. member, and nothing could be more opposite to the fact than that they desired to see the execution of the extreme penalty of the law. He was aware that the constituency for which the hon. gentleman sat did not entertain the opinions to which he had given expression. The late Mr. CUNNINGHAM, who was the duly elected representative, was a strenuous advocate of the complete pardon of those implicated in the troubles of the North-West. It was by the unfortunate circumstance of that gentleman having been suddenly called away from the world that the hon. gentleman who had just spoken got his seat; and he was really no exponent of the public opinion of that constituency. Unfortunately in Manitoba there were some few persons who thought that because a wrong had been done you must do another, and held the opinion that the supreme penalty of the law should be visited on those who were held responsible for the death of poor SCOTT. The people of that Province as a body, as well as the people of the Dominion, understood their duty better than to suppose that, poor SCOTT having been shot, any good would be accomplished by shooting or hanging another man. If the conditions were otherwise, if they could bring SCOTT to life, if to-day the question was between RIEL, LEPINE and SCOTT, we might hesitate as to what should be done. But the case being otherwise it was useless to desire to wreak vengeance on any of the parties concerned in the North-West troubles. On the question of amnesty his opinions were well-known, and they had not changed notwithstanding the very strong expressions used by the Imperial authorities. He still held and believed that the execution of SCOTT was not a murder in the sense usually attached to that word, notwithstanding the fact that the Colonial Secretary had thought fit to write in these terms:

"It has been a source of much pain to many who, like myself, take pride in the public institutions of Canada, to hear of the Legislature being disgraced by the election to the House of Commons and the presence within its walls of a criminal like RIEL; and I wholly fail to understand how any section of Canadian people, of whatever race or creed, can so far mistake the true character of these unhappy proceedings as to throw over them the colour of patriotism."

He had great respect for the views expressed by so distinguished a nobleman as Lord CARNARVON; but if there was one thing that helped him to bear with equanimity the blame cast on himself and his friends in having voted against the expulsion of RIEL from the House, it was the knowledge that though they could not have the support of the Colonial Secretary, they had the approbation of the whole French and English population of Lower Canada. But, even if the killing of SCOTT was a murder and crime, it had been condoned by the promise of amnesty made by the envoy of the Canadian Government, Archbishop TACHE. He believed, moreover, and he had great confidence in the correctness of his opinion after hearing the opinion expressed by the member for South Bruce—that the promise of amnesty and offer of military command, entitled those to whom the amnesty was promised to a complete and immediate amnesty, or nothing at all. Holding these views and having pressed them upon his political friends when they were in power, he would be recreant to his duty if he were now to shrink from the responsibility of his position, and not seek to carry his views to their natural and legitimate conclusion. He would, therefore, vote against the resolutions submitted by the Government to the House. The Premier in moving the resolutions had charged the Opposition with endeavoring to make political capital out of that question. If there was any member who was not entitled to throw such an accusation against his opponents it was the Premier himself. Nether he (Mr. MASSON) nor his friends from Quebec had sought to make political capital out of it. Any one who would read impartially the evidence taken before the Committee on the North-West difficulty would see that when the party to which he was attached was in power, they went to their leader and told him they must be consistent with their expressed opinions, and if the Government did not settle the question of amnesty in the manner in which they desired it to be settled, they would not continue their support to their leader. Mr. LANGEVIN. When the members of the party supporting the Government could show such a record as that, they would have a right to claim that they had not made political capital out of this difficult question. He should consider the subject entirely apart from his feelings as a party man, as he had always done. There were two important points, and only two, to consider in respect to the question of amnesty. First, the promises that had been made; second, the offering of military command made to the parties implicated in the troubles. The two principal resolutions had regard to these points, the remainder of the series being drawn to make a little party capital. The member for North Hastings had stated that the promises that had been made by Archbishop TACHE were not binding because they had not been authorized. That line of argument would have considerable force if they were discussing the relations between Archbishop TACHE and the Government. But they were discussing the relations between the people of Canada and the people of the North-West Territory, as parties who had been led to take a certain action upon the representations or promises of one whom they considered to be a Canadian envoy. He would put aside the promises alleged to have been made by the late Sir GEORGE CARTIER, and the member for Kingston, because they were controverted; but it would not be denied that Archbishop TACHE was asked by the Government of Canada to go to the North-west territory to quell the disturbance there. It could not be denied that when the Archbishop left Canada a proclamation was placed in his hands and instructions were given him to promulgate that proclamation as soon as he arrived in Manitoba. When Archbishop TACHE arrived there he told the people he was the Envoy of the Canadian Government, and that he had brought a proclamation which offered amnesty to all the people. They, of course, believed the Archbishop's assertions. Some parties, however, being anxious, inquired whether those who had been implicated in the death of SCOTT were to be included in that amnesty, and Archbishop TACHE announced that they were. But whether the Archbishop was duly authorized to this act or not, the people supposed him to be duly authorized, and if there was any difficulty to be settled, it was to be settled between Archbishop TACHE and the Government, and not between the people of Manitoba and the Canadian Government. The Government having sent the Archbishop as their representative, they were responsible for his faults of omission and commission whatever they were. The member for Kingston had affirmed that Archbishop TACHE had no reason to believe that he was duly authorised to promise an amnesty. The argument of the member for Kingston was based upon the fact that Archbishop TACHE wrote a letter from which it could be implied that he did not believe he had the right to take the action which he did take. What were the facts? As soon as the Archbishop promised the amnesty to RIEL and LEPINE, because they were the parties to whom he promised the amnesty, he wrote to the Canadian Government informing them of the facts. After having written that letter and before he was able to receive a reply, Archbishop TACHE was obliged to leave the North-West and come to Canada. On his arrival here, he at once went to the Imperial authorities, so that if he had any doubts regarding his action he went to the right quarter to have them dispelled. In his evidence before the North-West Committee the Archbishop stated that being desirous of meeting the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, he went to Ontario to see him. Lord LISGAR, although accompanied by one of his advisers, was very much afraid to speak to the Archbishop. A meeting nevertheless took place, and after the Archbishop had recited the difficulties and had stated that there were differences of opinion as to whether the amnesty promised would include the parties implicated in the death of SCOTT, the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, having the proclamation on his table, placed his hand on it and said, "This meets the whole case." Such was the evidence given by the ARCHBISHOP. Confiding in that declaration of opinion, Archbishop TACHE left. Some time afterwards, those rumors being again circulated, the ARCHBISHOP had an interview with Mr. TURVILLE, the GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S Secretary, who told HIS GRACE that he had better take care, as there might be something wrong. Archbishop TACHE immediately went to Sir GEORGE CARTIER and told him there was something wrong, whereupon Sir GEORGE told him that Mr. TURVILLE was a very nice fellow, but he did not understand anything about the matter. Archbishop TACHE having received those assurances—and this was a point worthy of special attention—returned to Manitoba, and reached there just a few days before the troops arrived, and he advised RIEL, LEPINE and their friends to go quietly and meet the troops. If Archbishop TACHE had any doubt of his right to promulgate that amnesty on his first trip to Manitoba surely after he had returned to Canada and had obtained information from the proper authorities he would be fully informed on the question, and his acts afforded proof that they were dictated by a desire to advance the purposes and intentions of those who sent him. Whether Archbishop TACHE was or was not authorized by the Government, he went to the North West, and on his first visit promised an amnesty, and on the second visit repeated these promises, and in doing so believed he was rightly acting. The Government was responsible for the acts of its representative, provided they were the acts of a prudent man. He came now to the second point of importance. The member for Hastings entertained the idea that the French population did not come forward and offer their services, but were working in concert with the Fenians. That opinion was based on the affidavit of a person named CHARETTE, submitted to the North-West Committee. It would, however, have been desirable for the hon. member to have taken the evidence of men of reputation and character such as Messrs. ROYAL and GIRARD, and Lieutenant-Governor ARCHIBALD. What did Mr. GIRARD say of the conduct of the French half-breeds on the occasion of the Fenian raid, for if they did not come forward courageously to protect their country they should be deprived of that consideration which would entitle them to a complete amnesty. Mr. ROYAL said in his evidence before the North-West Committee :

"I was Speaker in the House in October, 1871, when the so-called Fenian Invasion took place. I acted as intermediary, when the first news of the Fenian Invasion came, between the French half-breeds and the authorities. I explained to the former the nature of the Fenian movement and of the invasion. They were ignorant of both, and Governor ARCHIBALD thought they were slow in expressing their loyalty. The French proclamation about the Fenians was two days later than the English, having been accidentally delayed. I never heard Mr. RIEL'S name mentioned as having anything to do with the Fenians. Before the raid there were rumors of a large Irish colonization movement being organized in the States."

Governor ARCHIBALD stated in his evidence on this point that he took the trouble to inquire after the Fenian affair was over the feelings of the French, and added:

"I took great pains to ascertain whether RIEL was sincerely acting in the interests of the Government, or was really siding with the invaders. The inquiry was as well before as after the invasion. There were a great number of French who never sided with and were never personal friends of RIEL, and I got information from these to the effect that RIEL attended a meeting at White Horse Plains about a week before the invasion, and did his best to induce the people to turn out and join the Government; that nothing was decided at that meeting, but that two or or three days afterwards a meeting was held at the same place, at which RIEL took the same view (before the proclamation was issued); that then there was an arrangement that all should meet at St. Vital on the next day, October 4 (the very day the proclamation was issued, and, in fact, a day before the Fenians were arrested, consequently long before they knew the raid was over.) That they did then meet, and then RIEL took the same line, and it was finally decided by all but two of the meeting that they would join the Government and come out. After the affair was over, I took pains to ascertain from every quarter the real truth in the matter. I wanted to satisfy myself whether they had acted sincerely or not. I came to the conclusion, as I am convinced, that they believed the raid was not over, and did act sincerely, taking their share of the risk of the invasion. Governor ARCHIBALD also stated on another occasion:

"I believe that the action of the Half-breeds at the time of the Fenian raid was attributable to the negotiations with their leaders, which I have described, and if the half-breeds had taken a different course, I do not now believe the Province would be in our possession."

With respect to the affidavit of CHARETTE, Governor ARCHIBALD said:

"I have seen the affidavit made by one CHARETTE. I made it my business to ascertain the facts as to the statements contained in that affidavit, and after the most careful inquiry, I was convinced that these statements were untrue."

Mr. MASSON then called attention to the fact that the promise of an amnesty was made to RIEL and LEPINE, and in conclusion read the following extract from the National, to show that even the Liberal press of Lower Canada was loud in demanding that a general amnesty be granted:

"Le temps est ARRIVÉ DE DÉGAGER LA PAROLE ROYALE donnée par nos ministres. Il appartient au gouvernement fédéral, qui ne peut proclamer l'amnistie lui-même, de demander aux autorités locales de Manitoba la suspension de tout procédés contre RIEL et LÉPINE, et de prier en même temps Sa Majesté de proclamer l'amnistie, l'AMNISTIE QUI EST DUE, MÊME SI ELLE N'EST PAS PROMISE.

"Les raisons que nous avons exposées, celles qui se suggèrent d'elles-mêmes à l'esprit d'équité la bonne justice, la raison d'état, la prudence, le besoin d'empêcher des luttes sanglantes, tout milite en faveur d'une AMNISTIE PROMPTE ET ENTIERE."

"Nous ne sortons pas de là pour réclamer l'amnistie. Il est injuste et absurde de prétendre qu'il est trop tard. Bien au contraire, plus on RETARDE PLUS ON EST OBLIGÉ MAINTENANT DE PROCÉDER PROMPTEMENT à l'amnistie et d'en finir avec les troubles du Nord-Ouest.

"Ceux qui conseillent une autre politique que l'amnistie immédiate, CEUX QUI VEULENT QUE LA JUSTICE AIT SON COURS, sont des gens irréfléchis ou des fanatiques qui ne se soucient pas des conséquences désastreuses qu'auront certainement des procédures criminelles contre le chef des Métis."

Mr. DEVLIN said he could have wished that upon this, his first attempt to take part in the discussions of the House, that he could have addressed himself to a subject more agreeable, less painful and less embarrassing than the one now under consideration; but remembering that he had the honour to represent one of the largest, wealthiest, and, commercially speaking, the most influential constituencies in this Dominion, and one sincerely anxious for a final settlement of the difficulty which the House had to contend with, he felt that he ought not on an occasion of such importance, to record a silent vote. He therefore trusted to the kind indulgence of the House, and would proceed to offer a few remarks upon what had been called and known as the Manitoba difficulty. It was well known that loud and long and bitter complaints had been made against the Metis because of the acts committed by them in the past. But he trusted the House would be prepared, without partiality or prejudice, to consider the question of an amnesty from an unbiassed and humane point of view. Let them bear in mind that the people of whom they were now speaking had not at the time to which he referred any of the opportunities or advantages of a civilized people, and that before they were brought into the Confederation they held the opinion—whether justly or unjustly—whether rightly or wrongly—that they were the true owners of that territory which now constituted the Province of Manitoba. The people—a simple, guileless race—were governed by their own laws and regulations. What occurred? Without a word of warning, without a word of explanation, the bugle was sounded on the frontier, and these people were summoned to surrender themselves to a form of Government of which they were entirely ignorant. They became alarmed. They felt they were about to be deprived of their rights and privileges. They saw an enemy in every man who came from abroad, who appeared among them as a stranger, and fired by honest enthusiasm, and a patriotic desire to protect their hearths and homes from invasion, they defended themselves as best they could, placing themselves under the command of their chief. He asked the members of the House what they would have done under similar circumstances? They would have acted as the people of the North west acted. Add to that that the policy of the late Government was such as to disquiet their minds, and to excite their suspicions, and induce them to believe that confederation, or a change of Government, meant for them their entire extinction. Up to this stage of the proceedings no high-minded man in the Dominion could find fault with their doings; but unfortunately blood was shed, and the loss of one life had filled every Province in the Dominion with a feeling of heartfelt regret and sorrow. But who, after all, were primarily responsible for that which led to the death of SCOTT? He unhesitatingly answered that it was within the power of the late Government to have prevented any outbreak in Manitoba. By the exercise of even the most ordinary judgement they could have prevented it. But they preferred to use their authority at the point of the bayonet rather than to seek to secure the affections of the people by a policy of kindness and conciliation. The Government were warned. The House knew now, as a matter of fact, that Archbishop TACHE, when he saw the storm that was impending, and likely to burst with violence not only over the Province of Manitoba, but over the Dominion, hastened to the capital of the Dominion and being here, communicated with the member for Kingston and the late Sir GEORGE CARTIER, and other members of the Government, his fears of an insurrection. But his admonitions were disregarded—his views were scoffed at, and it was known that he was treated with such indecency that he left Ottawa with a sorrowing heart, and wended his way to the City of Rome where he was called on ecclesiastical duties. The Government felt itself all powerful; but that venerable prelate had scarcely arrived in the City of Rome, before the Government saw the mistake they had made. Like many other poor sinners they turned their eyes to the City of Rome, and through the agency of Mr. LANGEVIN, who had a brother a Bishop there, induced Archbishop TACHE to return to Canada, although when in Ottawa before they scarcely treated him with the ordinary courtesies of life. At a season of the year when it was difficult to travel, he arrived in the Capital of the Dominion, and was received with open arms by the very man who but a few weeks before had driven him forth amongst them without paying the slightest attention to the warnings he offered them in respect of the pending difficulties. They all knew what happened after that. They knew as a matter of fact that the Archbishop was commissioned by the late Government to represent them in Manitoba, that he did represent them; that he did all that man could do to prevent the shedding of blood. That he contributed largely to prevent disorder; that he brought about peace, and there was no honest man, according to his (Mr. DEVLIN'S) view, who, with the whole evidence before him, could arrive at any other conclusion than that the Right Hon. member for Kingston and his colleagues promised an amnesty in the fullest sense of the word to Archbishop TACHE. It was possible to communicate to another, by a sign, what you intended to do just as well as if the intention had been written or spoken; and no man who read the testimony before the House, without prejudice, could help coming to the conclusion that the Archbishop was fully impressed with the belief that a general amnesty would be granted. That question had been so fully discussed by the hon. member for South Bruce, that it would be presumptuous to follow in his steps. He had heard the hon. member for the first time, and he hoped the House would permit him to say that he was never more captivated by the eloquence of any man than he was with that of the hon. member. The Dominion of Canada had reason to feel proud of her honoured son—the great orator, the eloquent statesman, and the true patriot. He would offer a few remarks upon what had fallen from the members from Terrebonne and Marquette. He was surprised at the position of the hon. member for Terrebonne. He had heard that gentleman declare his friendship for RIEL, LEPINE and all those engaged in the outrage in Manitoba; and yet he was found upon this occasion acting in concert with the member for North Hastings. The hon. member for Terrebonne would not vote for a five years' exile; he would have nothing less than an unconditional amnesty. He must know very well, however, that were a motion of that kind presented to the House it could not and would not carry. With the despatch from Lord CARNARVON before the House, upon which this resolution was founded, the idea of a complete amnesty could not for a moment be entertained. They had reason, he thought, to be proud of the course, which the hon. the Premier and his colleagues had thought proper to take upon this occasion. They knew that the question was surrounded with difficulty, that it had been a bone of contention amongst us for the last five years, and they determined at once to remove this cause of discord and dissension, and proposed what, in his humble judgment, was the only means by which that difficulty could be got over. He was surprised that any French Canadian should declare himself prepared to reject this resolution. Was there any motion before the House offering a general amnesty? He was sure that the hon. member for North Hastings, with whom the member for Terrebonne was acting, would not place such a motion before this House. The Premier and his colleagues he repeated were entitled to the gratitude of the House and the country for having grappled with this question and having found a way to settle the difficulty. The members from the Province of Quebec ought not to overlook the fact that in Ontario there was a large and influential body of citizens who regarded this question from a very different point of view. They must make mutual concessions, and it must be admitted that the concession they were asked to make was not a very alarming one, but that, as had been well said by the right hon. member for Kingston, the expatriation proposed was not a very dangerous one, and the exiles would simply have to reside in the State of New York instead of Manitoba. He had expected that every French Canadian who was not blinded by party prejudice would have voted for this resolution. He was surprised to hear the Right Hon. member for Kingston say that he would vote against the resolutions because they were unconstitutional. In 1856, during the Parliament of Canada, a resolution similar to that now before the House was introduced, upon which was founded an address to HER MAJESTY praying for the pardon of SMITH O'BRIEN. That motion was carried, the address founded upon it was presented to HER MAJESTY, and SMITH O'BRIEN afterwards thanked the people of Toronto for the interest they had taken in him in his unfortunate circumstances. If there was any one more than another who should be anxious to obtain an amnesty for RIEL and LEPINE, it was the Right Hon. the member for Kingston. And yet what would be the result of the action he proposed to take. He would keep RIEL in punishment all his life, simply because he fancied he saw a constitutional difficulty. There was no reason in the argument. It might be an excellent one with which to go to a constituency, but there was no reason in it nevertheless. He was also very much surprised at the arguments addressed to this House by the hon. member for Marquette. He had listened to his speech with profound attention. His utterances were remarkable for their eloquence, but it was astonishing that he ranged himself upon the side of those opposed to amnesty, coming as he did from the very place which had caused all this trouble—a trouble which it was now proposed to settle in a peaceful manner. He (Mr. DEVLIN) did not think it necessary to run over ground which had been travelled by other speakers, especially by the members for South Bruce and Kingston. He complimented the right hon. member for Kingston upon his treatment of the subject in hand, as well as upon the high position he occupied in this House—a position he trusted in the interest of the country he might long be permitted to hold. It was the duty of the House, he thought, to pass this motion; to show the country an example of patience; to be just and impartial, and not to be uncharitable in their legislation upon this subject. If hon. members of this House did not set that good example, what could they expect from those outside who were removed from the influences in that direction which prevailed here. He believed hon. members should approach this question in a spirit of toleration, and he repeated that the gratitude of the country was due to the Premier and his colleagues for having wiped out this stain upon the country's honour.

Mr. GORDON said this question had narrowed down to three points. Some insisted upon the death penalty to RIEL and LEPINE for the part they took in the SCOTT tragedy. Some took the view that a complete and unconditional amnesty should be granted; while yet a third party took the middle course, that some sort of mitigated punishment should be awarded. In view of the circumstance under which the House found itself placed, and in view of the despatches from the Colonial Secretary, which were before them, the two extreme propositions of the death penalty and complete pardon were at once set at rest, and could not be considered. He would respectfully direct attention of the House to the following language of those despatches:—

"But, thinking, as I do, that the services rendered by these offenders in 1871 deserve to carry considerable weight, and should be liberally taken into consideration when justice has to be executed with respect to their previous offences; and admitting, indeed, that it is as impossible to permit the extreme sentence of death to be inflicted upon persons who have been recognized and dealt with as they have, as it is to allow them to go unpunished, I feel that the question which I have to consider is, not whether they should be amnestied (for that is not to be heard of,) but what kind of punishment will be just and reasonable in all the peculiar and conflicting circumstances of their case."

Again he stated in the same despatch:—

"You do not state what amount of imprisonment you would consider a proper commutation, but I assume that you contemplate a term sufficient to mark distinctly the sense which both the Crown and all right-minded men must entertain that his offence had been such as cannot be allowed to pass without substantial punishment. Whenever RIEL submits himself, or is brought to justice, it would seem right that he should suffer a similar punishment to that of LEPINE."

In answer to the telegram of the GOVERNOR, stating what was proposed to be done, Lord CARNARVON had sent a confirmatory despatch. The question of death and complete pardon had thus been disposed of in anticipation, and the only one that remained for consideration was the proposal of the Government. Upon a view of all the circumstances, they could only come to the conclusion that the motion of the Premier was manifestly that which met the necessities of the case, and would be a final settlement of the difficulty. If gentlemen opposite in their hearts differed from the opinion that there could be no more fair and just proposition made, they would move an amendment, proposing something which they thought better. But they failed to indicate any distinct line of policy on the question, for it was impossible to conceive a greater divergence of opinion than that existing between the hon. members for North Hastings and Terrebonne. It was therefore useless to look for any counsel from that side of the House, and they were again thrown back upon the policy of the Government as the only one really before them. That policy was worthy of the consideration of the House. The hon. member for Terrebonne had charged the Ministerial side of the House with having no policy. He need only remind him that in December, 1871, the Right Hon. member for Kingston had sent money to RIEL to get him away, and yet he and his party had never, to the time that they went out of power, been able to agree on a policy on the subject. It was now established beyond a doubt that promises of amnesty, more or less direct, had been made and had been proclaimed by Archbishop TACHE in the North-West. But the elections were near and the Government were afraid to take any decided steps. The arguments of the hon. member for South Norfolk were scarcely worth noticing, and reminded one very strongly of a certain gentleman's accounts—they were in a highly mixed up condition. He (Mr. GORDON) could not give a silent vote upon the subject. He heartily endorsed the policy of the Government and was not afraid to face the consequences.

Mr. MOUSSEAU rose to speak, but it being six o'clock the House took recess.

——:++:——

AFTER RECESS

Mr. MOUSSEAU resumed his speech. He said when the House rose he was just enumerating the difficulties under which he labored in rising to speak on this most important question. First, he was suffering from a very severe cold, and second, he spoke in English, because he would like to speak in the language understood by a majority in the House to whose generosity he wished to appeal. A third cause of his difficulty was this. The hon. member for South Bruce, in his admirable speech of last night, or rather this morning, said he (Mr. MOUSSEAU) was an angel —an angel of mercy. He was quite unprepared for the new calling and did not know where he could find suitable wings. And supposing he could find them, an angel would still be out of place in this House and might expect bad treatment where there were so many Grits. But, to return to the subject. One of the many things essential for the building up of a great nation was, first, cordial union among its people. Without this, patriotism would be nothing,—a dead letter, an empty word. In speaking of union they should speak of it in the sense in which it ought to be understood and should prevail, that is, a union based on a due regard for the interests of all. One of GLADSTONE'S beautiful speeches, contained a sentence which might apply to this very case. He remarked—"The best financial system is the one not which serves better the farming, the industrial, the commercial or the maritime interests, but the one which alike serves all these interests." A union in this country must be one which ministers alike to the wants of all creeds, nationalities and interests. It was admitted on all hands that the North-West difficulty stood in the way of that union. It was the cloud which obscured our political horizon, which darkened our otherwise bright prospects for the future of this Confederation. We ought to work shoulder to shoulder to clear away this cloud. We ought by a brotherly union seek to remove that cloud. There was wisdom in the old saw "where there's a will there's a way." If everybody in this honorable House wished to remove these difficulties it would be very easy. Of course it would be necessary to approach this subject with a feeling of true patriotism. We should say as General GRANT at a critical period remarked, "Let us have peace." In all countries, as in this one, where there were various nationalities and creeds to be dealt with, and where there were minorities it had always been observed that minorities were always very sensitive, and sometimes the majorities in a generous spirit came to their relief, and by sometimes laying aside small prejudices quieted these feelings of susceptibility. In this case it was exactly the mistrust of the minority in the majority which rendered the difficulty so great. The result of that was apparent, especially in Quebec Province as in Manitoba. In Quebec Province the people, for reasons which he would indicate by and by, were convinced that all the trouble in the North-West came from an intention not to grant the rights, privileges and immunities to which the people of Manitoba were entitled. They were convinced that RIEL was out of the country and denied his seat because he belonged to the minority. They thought the offence which was the cause of all the trouble was the logical and obvious incident resulting from the movement of a young people to get those rights, privileges and immunities which had been granted to every Province of the Dominion, and which, he might say, were the birthright of English subjects. But he would be answered that this was mere feeling and sentiment, that a great crime had been committed, that one of those connected with it had been tried and convicted, and another had been declared an outlaw, and that the law must be vindicated. But he wished to say that when he appealed to the generosity of the majority of the House he did not appeal as a beggar, but as one who had some weighty considerations of sound public policy in favor of the demand he made. The GOVERNOR-GENERAL, in his letter to the Minister of Justice with reference to the commutation of LEPINE'S sentence, said he was of opinion "that subsequent circumstances, and notably the relations entered into with the prisoner and his associates, are such as to in a great degree to fetter the hands of justice." These weighty words established the position he (Mr. MOUSSEAU) took. It was admitted by the Chief of the State that circumstances of so important a character had occurred as to justify the commutation of LEPINE'S sentence to two years imprisonment, and permanent loss of his political rights.

And it should be remembered that these circumstances occurred subsequent to the execution of SCOTT. He desired to direct the attention of the House to a few prominent historical facts in support of the ground which he had taken. The first was the passage of the Manitoba Act of 1870. That statute was based upon principles which if fully carried out would lead to a solution of the difficulty with which they were now dealing. There were two peculiar features connected with the attempt of Lieutenant-Governor MACDOUGALL to enter and take possession of the North-West in the fall of 1869 which had not received that consideration which their importance deserved. The first was that Mr. MACDOUGALL had no authority to take control of that country. The transfer of the North-West territory to the Canadian Government had not been regularly made; the proclamation absolutely necessary to transfer the country had not then been issued, so that he had not the least authority in that territory. On the other hand, the only authorities in the territory—the Council of Assinaboine and the Governor of the Hudson Bay Company—thought that their rule had ceased, so that at that time the people of the country were without the protection of any Government. These facts would have great weight in the consideration of another matter which he would come to shortly, namely, the other wonderful despatch of Lord CARNARVON. But there being no Government in the country, the people formed a provisional Government, first, with Mr. BRUCE as President, and then with RIEL. They did not rebel against any power, because there was none in the country, About the same time or a little previous, the mistakes of some officials sent by the Dominion Government had aroused their fears and anxieties lest their rights of property would be invaded. The transfer of the country by the Imperial to the Canadian Government was also calculated to excite their apprehensions, as Lord CLARENDON had admitted in speaking on the subject in the House of Lords. The people of the country thought that they were being sold and transferred to other rulers as if they had no rights which should be respected. However, during the whole course of these proceedings the people remained quiet and peaceable. They did not ask anything more than what was enjoyed by the people of all the other Provinces. They held peaceable meetings and discussed their rights, their wants, their privileges and their immunities. They agreed to a Bill of Rights, and sent delegates to Ottawa with it. These delegates were received by the Government and the result was the Manitoba Act of 1870, which was in itself an acknowledgement in the past of the Federal authorities of all the demands embraced in the Bill of Rights; that is, the Government both Imperial and Federal acknowledged that the people of Manitoba in the absence of any Government to protect their interests were perfectly right in establishing a Government of their own, and in demanding all the rights and privileges of other citizens of the Dominion. Had these facts been better appreciated perhaps some harsh words to be found in the memorandum of His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL would not have been used, and some incorrect facts in the letter of Lord CARNARVON would not have been stated. Coming to the next prominent historical fact in connection with this question,—a fact much to be deplored,—the execution of SCOTT, he wished to refer to the efforts put forth by Archbishop TACHE. As the member for Montreal Centre had remarked, when the troubles arose in the North-West every one turned his eyes to the Eternal City, and Archbishop TACHE was not only telegraphed to come, but he was begged to come by the Federal Government at the express desire of the Imperial Government. The late GOVERNOR-GENERAL, Sir JOHN YOUNG, wrote to the Archbishop under date February 16, 1870, as follows:—

"MY DEAR LORD BISHOP,—I am anxious to express to you before you set out, the deep sense of obligation which I feel is due to you for giving up your residence at Rome, leaving the great and interesting affairs in which you were engaged there, and undertaking at this inclement season the long voyage across the Atlantic, and long journey across this Continent, for the purpose of rendering service to HER MAJESTY'S Government, and engaging in a mission in the cause of peace and civilization. Lord GRANVILLE was anxious to avail himself of your valuable assistance from the outset, and I am heartily glad that you have proved willing to afford it so promptly and generously. You are fully in possession of the views of my Government, and the Imperial Government, as I informed you, is earnest in the desire to see the North-West Territory united to the Dominion on equitable conditions."

He read this extract from Lord LISGAR's letter in order to establish the position which Archbishop TACHE held when he was sent up to the North-West. He was a kind of Ambassador—a negotiator, empowered both by the Imperial and Canadian Governments to do all that was necessary in order to produce peace with that country, and, as Lord LISGAR expressed it in his letter, to unite that territory to the Dominion on equitable conditions. He would pass over many facts which were well known to the House, and which fully established the fact that the Archbishop was empowered in the way he had stated. He came now to another point which he would treat very briefly, as it had been fully discussed by his hon. friend from Terrebonne. Archbishop TACHE arrived in the territory after the execution of SCOTT, and finding the country on the verge of civil war, he thought it his duty and within the instructions he had received to promise an amnesty. He wrote to the Federal Government informing them of what he had done. What answer did he receive? Was his promise of amnesty revoked, and was his commission withdrawn? Not at all. It was said that he had exceeded his instructions. But what did the Hon. JOSEPH HOWE write to him in the name of the Canadian Government? In his letter to the Archbishop of the 4th July, 1870, in reply to the letter of the latter, stating what course he had taken with reference to an amnesty, Mr. HOWE said:—

"Though I have felt it my duty to be thus explicit in dealing with the principal subject of your letter, I trust I need not assure you that your zealous and valuable exertions to calm the public mind in the North-West are duly appreciated here, and I am confident that when you regard the obstructions which have been interposed to the adoption of a liberal and enlightened policy for Manitoba, you will not be disposed to relax your exertions until that policy is formally established."

He need say nothing more to establish the fact that the course taken by the Archbishop in promising an amnesty after the unfortunate death of SCOTT was fully endorsed by the Canadian Government; because so far from his conduct being disavowed, he was requested to continue his services in the same direction. He would now call the attention of the House to another phase of the subject, viz: the consequence of a negociator or an ambassador exceeding his powers, while at the same time his whole conduct is endorsed and approved by the Government that employed him. He would ask the House to refer to the skilfully prepared memorandum contained in the despatches laid before the House on Pages 31, 32, 33 & 34, where the authorities on this point were quoted and which bear out the opinion that when a Government endorses the conduct of its Ambassador in reference to transactions which he has conducted in excess of his instructions, that they were then responsible for such transactions. These principles of law were entirely applicable to the case of Archbishop TACHE. Supposing that he had exceeded his instructions the very fact that he was continued in the same service by the Government, and that his promises were not revoked, was sufficient evidence that the Canadian Government as well as the Imperial Government, were responsible for such promises. He would now refer to another historical fact which went to establish the justice of a complete amnesty, namely, the Fenian raid. An affidavit had been read to this House in reference to the conduct of RIEL and his associates, on that occasion, but when it was considered that that affidavit was made by an unknown person and contained statements which were absurd on the face of them and he thought that no one would accept it in opposition to the testimony of a gentleman of so high a standing as Lieut-Governor ARCHIBALD. It was a well known principle of public law that in the case of a rebellion when the State accepted the services of some of its subjects supposed to be in rebellion, such act was always held to imply an amnesty for former offences and there was no case in history in which such persons, whose services were thus accepted, were subsequently prosecuted and punished. He had now referred to the most important historical facts bearing upon this question, and he held that they went very far to establish that a general amnesty could be granted without wounding the feelings of any one. He had listened with astonishment to the speech of the hon. the accidental member for Marquette. That gentleman had told the House that there was an intense feeling throughout his Province against amnesty. The member for Terrebonne had shown conclusively that that gentleman had misrepresented the public sentiment of that Province, and the best proof of that was to be found in the fact that the Legislative Assembly of Manitoba, composed of both French and English, had passed an address praying for an amnesty. He (Mr. MOUSSEAU) hoped that in view of the historical facts to which he had referred, and which established the justice of an amnesty, the feelings against such a course, would now pass away. The English people were a law-abiding people, and that quality was one much to be admired, but the law had had its course, and those who were against an amnesty ought now to be satisfied, because those people who had been guilty of the offences complained of had suffered to a very great extent—to an extent unknown to most of the members of the House. LEPINE had been tried and convicted by a jury of his fellow citizens. Curiously enough, that trial was followed by another in which it was impossible to get a verdict. We must conclude, therefore, that the first verdict was the result of a packed jury and of a strong charge from a partial judge. He had his own opinions on that point, and, if there was another debate upon the commutation of LEPINE'S sentence, he might adduce some facts which he was not now called upon to state, or it was due to that praiseworthy quality of being law-abiding. Truly, if there was no partiality on the part of the judge, the verdict was most curious, and it was to a certain extent most creditable to the French Halfbreeds. They had been accustomed, as peaceful and law-abiding citizens, to obey all lawful authority, which, so far as they knew, consisted of the Hudson's Bay Co., and their religious instructors. It was creditable to them that notwithstanding the fact that they were most deeply wounded in their feelings when they heard that a fellow subject, almost a relation, was guilty of murder, they rendered a verdict of guilty. That fact should be duly considered in favour of a general amnesty. LEPINE had been tried, convicted and sentenced. He had got a reprieve, but that was not enough. RIEL, who was considered the most guilty of all implicated in the troubles, was the one who had most deeply suffered. He had been for five years a fugitive, exiled and hunted. He had been obliged to desert his home, there was nobody to care for his poor old mother, and members of his family had died one after the other. These were sufferings not to be despised by those who called for RIEL'S blood. There would, he was sure, be an outburst of generosity when all the facts were known and considered, which would induce every member of this House to vote for a general amnesty. The hon. member for South Bruce merely advocated the fulfilment of promises made by members of the late Government, but there was a broader and higher ground on which all the members of this House could stand for granting a general amnesty. This question had been most unfairly treated in the past. During the last five years the manner in which it had been used by certain politicians in certain parts of the country was most scandalous, and calculated to teach the most immoral lessons to the young men of the country at the outset of their public career. In 1871, during the general elections in Ontario, SANDFIELD MACDONALD was publicly condemned by the then Opposition members because he was the puppet of Sir JOHN MACDONALD, who, they asserted, was the tool of the French and the Popish party of Quebec, and this was the reason why RIEL had escaped punishment. Now, was not this most scandalous, and a most immoral lesson for the young men of the country? Was it not a most scandalous misuse of the Manitoba affair, by hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House, to blacken and injure the character of political opponents? These were the engines used in Ontario by the hon. member for South Bruce to attack the Administration of the day. In Quebec Sir GEORGE CARTIER was denounced as a vile traitor because he did not promise amnesty. M. MOUSSEAU then proceeded to speak of HIS EXCELLENCY'S despatch to Lord CARNARVON. He was aware that he was treading on delicate ground, but these despatches were laid before the House to be read and criticised in a respectful manner. In perusing the memorandum of His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, he noticed very often the words "atrocious crime," "brutal murder," &c. It was employed many times, and it was evident that HIS EXCELLENCY had not been put in possession by his advisers of all necessary papers: if he had been, they might have induced him to modify or alter his opinion. His Excellency states:

"Perhaps my duty as regards the matter in hand will not be altogether completed unless I transmit to your Lordship some idea of the general view taken of this question by the population at large. With regard to the French section of Her Majesty's subjects, I may say that although there are probably few of them who do not regard the death of Scott as a regrettable event, they were united to a man in the opinion that the part played by Riel in the North-West was that of a brave and spirited patriot; that it is principally to him and to those who acted with him that Manitoba owes her present privileges of self-government and her parity of rank and standing with her sister Provinces. They are equally convinced that the Government of Canada and of Her Majesty are bound by the promises of the Archbishop, and that the Government Riel established at Red River was authoritative and legitimate; nor do I think will they ever be persuaded that the language held by Sir George Cartier did not imply a direct and explicit assurance of immunity to the murderers of Scott, on their submission to the new order of things established under the auspices of the Manitoba Act, and by the advent of Lieutenant-Governor Archibald at Fort Garry."

His Excellency also transmitted a petition, drawn up in most respectful terms, and signed by eight Catholic Bishops—all the Bishops of Quebec, and the Bishop at Ottawa. That petition prayed for a general and full amnesty as one of the means of conciliating the French minority of Quebec and Manitoba. It was founded upon reasons which must be admitted to be very strong, and which he had already mentioned to the House. It seemed to him that when a whole race was concerned which had never been distinguished by any proclivities for breaking the laws, but on the contrary was always ready to rise for the defence of the glorious British flag; who, in the course of their history, had done a great many glorious deeds in defending the honour of England; when such a nation, he repeated, asked for an amnesty, he did not think that those for whom they pleaded ought to be regarded as common marauders. England, he thought, was bound to give the amnesty. What was the answer given by Lord Carnarvon? He says:—

The third plea that the murderers of Scott represented a de facto Government, and are consequently excusable on political grounds, is one which I cannot for a moment entertain. There could be within the Queen's possessions in North America no power or pretence of establishing a de facto Government, independent of, or defying Her Majesty and her officers, which could aspire to any such immunity as that claimed; and any argument based on the view of such a state of things being possible, is in my opinion not even worthy of discussion.

There was in this despatch a display of ignorance or an incomplete knowledge of the facts, or perhaps both. The last section of the despatch alluded to said:—

"There yet remains a further question, whether it should not be a condition of any commutation of sentence, that those actually concerned in the murder of Scott should be deprived of the power of taking part in political affairs within the Dominion. It has been a source of much pain to many who, like myself, take pride in the public institutions of Canada, to hear of the Legislature being disgraced by the election to the House of Commons and the presence within its walls of a criminal like Riel; and I wholly fail to understand how any section of the Canadian people, of whatever race or creed, can so far mistake the true character of these unhappy proceedings as to throw over them the colour of patriotism. I should not therefore think it unreasonable, while it would undoubtedly conduce to a higher tone of constitutional morality, that the liberation of the criminals after the expiration of their commuted sentence, should be accompanied by some stringent conditions as to their good conduct, if they remain in any part of Canada, and by their total exclusion from any participation in political or parliamentary life.

He was not ashamed to repeat the assertion that these despatches were the result either of ignorance or incomplete information in regard to the facts and the great principles at stake. He took very much trouble to state the beginning of these difficulties. He had said first that there was no rebellion whatever. He would go so far as to say that it was a common error upon the part of everybody to call these men rebels, for there could be no rebellion where there was no Sovereign power against which to rebel. Mr. Macdougall had no right to enter the territory, nor had the Canadian Government any right to send him until the Proclamation of the Imperial Government, sanctioning the transfer of the North-West territory from the Hudson's Bay Company, was published in the London Gazette. This was admitted by the Imperial authorities, and Mr. Macdougall himself was rebuked by them for the part he played upon that occasion. By an unfortunate concurrence of circumstances, Mr. Macdougall made his unlawful attempt to take possession of the territory after the Council of Assiniboia had virtually resigned their authority into the hands of the Provisional Government, and Mr. RIEL and his colleagues were de facto the rulers of the North-West. In the "History of the Red River Troubles" the following passage occurs in reference to the visit of Mr. SUTHERLAND to Governor McTAVISH in order to ascertain whether he was favourable to the formation of a Provisional Government. Mr. SUTHERLAND is speaking: "I went with Mr. FRASER to see Governor McTAVISH, and asked him his opinion as to the advisability of forming a Provisional Government. He said form a Government by all means and restore peace in the territory." He did not know whether it was the fault of the Government in not informing the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, or whether it was the fault of the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in not transmitting the information to England, but there was no mention in any of the despatches of these important facts. As far as was possible for any regularity to exist, that Government was most regularly formed according to the law of nations. Any respectable jurisconsult would pro nounce it a Government regularly formed, because it had been formed by the consent of the people, and in the absence of any existing authority. It was not a Government formed against another Government, for there was no other Government existing. That was the reason why he had said that there was no rebellion. It was formed by the people who wanted to protect their own property, and who had no protection from the very fact that there was no authority existing in the territory at the time. There was another view of the question. He asserted most positively, that according to the modern law of nations, even supposing there had been, at the time, an authority existing, the people of the territory would have been justified in resisting that authority because it was intended to dispose of them as if they had been mere cattle. The House of Lords and the House of Commons, and indeed all the Imperial authorities, were agreed that the manner in which the North West Territory was transferred from the Hudson's Bay Company to the Canadian Government, was unconstitutional and a gross blunder from beginning to end. There was no right existing by which the Sovereign of any country could dispose of the people as if they were mere cattle. He was the more astonished to see such opinions as those expressed by Lord CARNARVON, prevailing in the administration of Mr. DISRAELI, from the fact that after the Franco-German war had ended, one of the leading English journals, which was generally supposed to have great weight amongst the people, and to give a very fair expression of the national feeling, advised Prussia that before taking possession of Alsace and Lorraine the voice of the inhabitants of those Provinces should be consulted to see whether they wanted to be united to Prussia or not. When the Press of a country went so far in its impartiality in dealing with the subjects of another nationality, he could not understand how Lord CARNARVON could have treated the subject so lightly, and spoken of the troubles in the North-west as a rebellion and an outbreak. It is true the people wanted to be annexed to this country, but they wanted to be annexed with all the privileges, immunities and rights which belonged to the other subjects of the British Empire. Previous to the shooting of the unfortunate SCOTT, the people had good reason to organise a Provisional Government, and consequently they had a right to be considered as a Government de facto. He failed, therefore, to understand how Lord CARNARVON could go so far as to state that the subject was not even worthy of discussion. Perhaps his (Mr. MOUSSEAU'S) voice was too weak and too far distant for his words to be heard by that nobleman; but he hoped that Lord CARNARVON, in dealing with Canadian matters, would better inform himself, in order to avoid the blundering which had characterized the action of English statesmen on Colonial questions. It was the blundering of British statesmen which had deprived Canada of so many valuable rights and so much territory that naturally belonged to it. The execution of SCOTT was not, under the circumstances, a crime, as some people called it, nor yet a murder, as other people termed it; it was the act of a Government organizing an administration for the affairs of the country, and was at most only what others called an error of judgment. As such it must be dealt with, and not as an outrageous and brutal murder. The language of Lord CARNARVON was insulting to the whole nationality, and was based upon incorrect information or ignorance, instead of being an opinion framed fairly and honestly with the whole facts that were before him. There was one view of the question which was entirely omitted from the despatches, and which did not appear to have received sufficient attention at the hands of the Government. The subject to which he referred was the result of the Manitoba Act, which included the demands of the half-breeds, as laid down in their bill of rights, as accepted by the people and the Provisional Government, and so committed to the delegates. There were many authorities he could quote in justification of his opinion of the regularity of the proceedings of the half-breeds in forming the Provisional Government; but he would content himself with chosing one which bore directly upon this subject. That authority was Burlamagin's "National and International Law," Vol. 5, page 266: "Another question is to know whether a Sovereign or a State must keep the treaties of peace and settlement made with rebel subjects. I answer first, when a Sovereign has reduced his rebel subjects by the force of arms, it is his business to see how he will treat them; but, second, if he has entered with them into any conciliatory arrangement, he is by that mere fact alone deemed to have forgiven them all the past. He could not, therefore, with any reason dispense with keeping his engagements." The Manitoba Act covered this ground entirely. It was a regular treaty between a Sovereign and her subjects; it was the concession to the inhabitants of the territory of their unequivocal, entire and complete claims, and of all their civil rights and privileges. The Federal Government having assented to these claims, and the Imperial Government having also assented to them, a claim to a complete amnesty was also established. He thanked the Government for the tribute paid by them to the late Sir GEORGE CARTIER in having based the resolutions now before the House upon a promise he was said to have made of an amnesty. He thanked the Government for at last acknowledging the great services rendered by the deceased baronet. They must of course remember their battles with him, and the great cries they raised against him because he was too weak to exact an amnesty from that great Orangeman the hon. member for Kingston. The hon. member for Montreal Centre had pressed them to accept the motion of the Government, because if they refused it Lord CARNARVON would refuse an amnesty. He did not think this would be the result. He believed if the House of Commons of Canada would say that the circumstances of the country, its quiet, its peace, its prosperity, required that an absolute amnesty should be granted, and if at the same time we took the trouble to send Lord CARNARVON more complete and correct information on the subject, so that he would see and understand the facts more fully, he was sure that Ministers in England would at once comply with the request. One word more and he would finish. He would take another ground. He would state that everybody from the Province of Quebec, and everybody representing the Halfbreeds of Manitoba, everybody representing the French minority in this Dominion, if he voted for these resolutions was committing himself to the entire endorsation of the insults of Lord CARNARVON to the whole Province and the whole race. He therefore moved in amendment to the motion of the First Minister, that the three last paragraphs of the said motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"That, regretting that the Ministers "did not admit it to be their duty to advise "His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL "to grant a complete pardon to Mr. A. D. "LEPINE, this House is of opinion, as an "obvious conquence of the principles laid "down in the same motion, that it would "be proper that a full amnesty should be "granted to all persons concerned in the "North-West troubles, and for all acts "committed on the occasion of the said "troubles."

Mr. LAURIER said it was not his intention to enter into any discussion of the question now before the House. He considered that the question had been fully discussed, and the points fairly and exhaustively laid before the House. His sole object in rising was to answer the challenge thrown across the floor of the House to the French members of the Liberal party, to the effect that they were voting a complete amnesty and supporting a limited one. Last year, when a similar motion was presented to the House, by the hon. member for Bagot, the Liberal party had voted against it, not because their convictions were averse to the principles of the motion, nor because they had any hesitation as to the real merits of the question, for they thought then, as they thought now, that an amnesty ought to be proclaimed covering all the offence connected with the troubles of 1869-70. But the circumstances under which they voted were their reason, and their only reason, for the course they took. A Committee had been appointed to investigate whether an amnesty had been promised to the promoters of these troubles and the actors therein or not. The motion for the appointment of that Committee had been adopted unanimously by the House, and it would have been a strange contradiction indeed if the House had stepped over the head of the Committee without waiting for the result of the evidence which might be produced before them. There was another reason for their action. The members from the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario had taken a deep interest in the troubles in Manitoba; they had each followed them closely as they occurred; their opinions had been gradually formed, and were more or less irrevocable. But there were members from the Lower and Western Provinces who had not formed any opinion, and who would not form any until the evidence was before the House. Although he fully sympathized with the spirit of the motion of the hon. member for Bagot, for these considerations, he was bound to vote against it. He recalled these things for the purpose of setting himself and his party right before the House and before the country. He charged hon. gentlemen opposite with endeavoring to raise an undue influence, and excite the prejudices of the Province of Quebec. When the House was not in possession of the facts, he wanted them to vote upon an amnesty; and now that the House was in possession of the facts, and also in possession of despatches from the Imperial Government which plainly indicated the only course that was open to them, he again desired them to vote upon the question of a complete amnesty. Was not this attempting to raise undue prejudices and influences in the Province of Quebec. He charged the hon. gentleman with endeavouring to make political capital out of the question. Since last session circumstances had altered. The Committee had sat, and they had the report before them, and they were now in full possession of all facts connected with those unfortunate events. Now the time had come to discuss that question, and to consider what was necessary to be done to settle it at once and forever. But perhaps, in making use of those expressions, he might be in error. The question would be decided at once and forever if decided in a sense of leniency; but if decided in a harsh sense, in a sense of mistaken justice, for there was no more certain fact, as proved by the most unerring testimony of historical events than that political offences must sooner or later be forgiven. History has proved to us that there has never been peace or harmony in any country until a free pardon has been given for all offences of this kind. Those who oppose Mr. RIEL and his associates most bitterly could not expect that they would continue to remain cut off from society, however odious the part might be considered that they took in the troubles referred to. It would be an easy task to show such men and everybody else from historical records that men charged with crimes of this nature were invariably restored to the place they originally held in society. We are told upon this occasion that the question was a national and religious one, and the hon. member for Hastings stated that an amnesty was proposed because RIEL and LEPINE were of French origin. He would commend this opinion to the consideration of the hon. member for Terrebonne, and those who acted in concert with him. Perhaps the hon. member for North Hastings who did not tell them that the amnesty was granted because RIEL and LEPINE were both French, would excuse him if he said that he did not share his views; and if he only thought the hon. member was serious in making the allegation, he might be permitted to ask whether he was not himself opposed to the amnesty because those to whom it was proposed to be granted were French. Now, he (Mr. LAURIER) recollected those facts, and also the expression that had fallen from one of his colleagues, that this was simply a religious and national question. He repelled that idea. The Liberal party of Quebec did not make it a question of race or religion, but dealt with it solely as a question of justice. For his part he regretted that it was so often deemed necessary to remind the House that our nation is composed of different creeds and races, and that the law gives to each and all in this Dominion a full and equal share of liberty and happiness. It was true they were separated by their origin and religion, ut he claimed they were united by a common aim and common interests. They were united by this, that everybody should have a full and equal share of justice and liberty, and in that respect all the creeds and races of this country had an identical interest, for if the liberties of one were to be invaded in any way, the liberties of the others would be jeopardized. He was here as a delegate of the Canadian people, to give justice to those to whom it was due, without bias or favor. He was French, and he did not claim to be free from preferences. He was not an angel, and though he professed to respect and love all the races of this country, yet there was one for which he felt a kinder sympathy, but he would scorn to be led away from the path of duty on account of that preference. He had laid down this confession of principle purposely, because he knew they were the principles of the great French Liberal party to which he belonged, and they intended not only upon the floor of this House, but also throughout this Dominion, to make away with questions of race and religion. He was ready to admit that on the question before the House there had been bitter feelings aroused in Quebec, where a certain portion of the press went so far as to say that the killing of SCOTT was no murder at all. Gentlemen from Ontario would admit that equally bitter feelings had been aroused in that Province, and even in this House it had been said that blood must be shed as an atonement for the death of SCOTT. He was sure moderate men would seek a medium course for justice and truth. His views had not been changed on the subject since last session. He still believed that a full amnesty should be given as promised. But the Imperial Government said that a complete amnesty was out of the question, and, therefore, nothing more need be said on that point. He was disposed to think that out of this great evil some good must arise ; that the two great Provinces of Ontario and Quebec would be drawn nearer together, would shake hands over the chasm and reap a great benefit. He desired to answer the challenge which had been brought against them by the hon. member for Terrebonne for the course that they followed. The hon. member told them they should separate their allegiance from the Government, because they would not grant a complete amnesty, at the same time pointing to the fact that he had threatened to sever his allegiance from the late Government under similar circumstances. That threat was made at a time when the late Government were under trial for a great crime, of which they stood accused. He (Mr. LAURIER) was not at all surprised that the hon. gentleman threatened to desert them under such circumstances, and his only surprise was that he did not do it at the time. If ever this Government should stand charged with the same crime, he (Mr. LAURIER) would at once withdraw his allegiance from it unconditionally and absolutely. Suppose they should follow the advice of the hon. member, the consequence would be they would be in this House without any other base than a distinction of race. So that the Liberal Party of Quebec would never be a Party. Suppose it should have the effect of upsetting the Government, they would be in the same position as the Conservatives from Quebec who were lashed yesterday by their chief—to be told that no promise of amnesty had been given—that the House of Commons had no power to grant one ; and be told as the people of Toronto were recently—that the commutation of LEPINE'S sentence was a disgrace to the country. The hon. gentleman might follow that policy, but the Liberals from Quebec would never do so. They could not, in view of Lord CARNARVON'S despatch, do better than accept the Government's offer ; and he was somewhat surprised that such a strong Conservative as the hon. member for Bagot was willing to commit himself to the course of demanding that which Earl CARNARVON declared to be out of the question. He (Mr. LAURIER) never called the hon gentleman a demagogue, but he could not find an expression to characterize one who professed to be a strong Conservative, and yet wanted to commit the House to a policy opposed to that of the Imperial Government. He (Mr. LAURIER) was not a Conservative, and he would not do it. It was absolutely useless to ask for a complete amnesty, and that was the only reason why the Liberals of Quebec supported the policy now proposed by the Government. When he said the only reason, he was in error. There was another reason. It would have the effect of burying the past in oblivion, and of promoting a policy of self-respect between the two great Provinces of the Dominion. The hon. member of North Hastings, in his speech yesterday, had made a statement, not exactly in a threatening manner, but had warned the people of Ontario of the consequences the statement would have for them. It was that the Liberals of Quebec had been telling on the hustings that the Government would grant an amnesty. He warned the Liberals of Ontario what grave consequences would follow if they carried out that policy. The Liberal party of Quebec had always said, and he repeated it now and wished it should be known throughout the length and breadth of Ontario, that the Liberals of Quebec, for the settlement of this question, depended upon the justice of this Province. They had during the elections last summer stated that the Liberals of Ontario would alone have the courage and manliness to settle it. He would like the statement to be known in this House and throughout Ontario that they had now the fulfilment of the promises to their Lower Canada fellow-countrymen. They were aware and remembered that in former years the Liberal chiefs had acted together; that BALDWIN and LAFONTAINE had followed the course pursued by the present Government, and they found the present Ministry not only a chip of the old block, but the old block itself. He knew political capital would be made by their opponents out of their attitude on this question, but for his part he did not fear it. He was prepared to meet his adversaries before the people and discuss the subject. The hon. member for Bagot tried last session to make political capital by a resolution for a general amnesty, but failed in his object. It did not turn a single vote in Quebec and he would fail again in his attempt, for the strong sense of Quebec was against him. He (Mr. LAURIER) could not but approve of the course adopted by the Government.

L'Hon. M. FOURNIER. Après les nombreux discours qui ont été prononcés, ce n'est pas mon intention de parcourir tout le terrain de la question, et surtout de répéter ce qui a été si bien dit au soutien de la Résolution en faveur de l'amnistie. Ces discours ont porté la conviction dans l'esprit des membres que la vérité des faits et la force des circonstances exigeaient une solution de cette question. J'ai lu avec le plus grand soin M. l'ORATEUR, le rapport de l'enquête, et la connaissance parfaite que j'en ai me justifie de dire que la position prise par le Gouvernement est la plus sage; elle est aussi la seule praticable sous les circonstances.

Je trouve dans ce rapport, M. l'ORATEUR, les promesses les plus formelles d'une amnistie; j'y trouve aussi la reconnaissance par la dernière administration du Gouvernement provisoire du Nord-Ouest. Je tire de ces faits des conclusions qui, sous plusieurs rapports, ne sont pas différentes de celles que d'honorables membres de l'autre côté de la Chambre croient devoir en tirer. Mais pendant que les députés de Terrebonne, de Bagot et autres assurent que les promesses de l'amnistie ont été faites, les dénégations souvent répétées du député de Kingston causent des difficultés et des embarras. Je demanderais avec eux l'amnistie entière, mais après la dépêche de lord CARNARVON, dans laquelle il nous déclare solennellement que l'amnistie complète ne peut être accordée, la position la plus logique et la plus favorable à la justice, aux Métis et à messieurs LÉPINE et RIEL n'est-elle pas celle que le Gouvernement a prise. (Appl.)

Cette position est aussi la plus logique. Et à ce propos je dirai que les messieurs qui, de l'autre côté de la Chambre, parlent de logique comme s'ils en avaient l'usage exclusif, nous mèneraient avec leur logique particulière, à de tristes résultats. Cette logique, M. l'ORATEUR, nous conduirait à l'exile perpétuel de RIEL; elle condamnerait LÉPINE à la perte de ses droits civils; elle condamnerait la population de Manitoba à subir, sans répit et pour longtemps encore, les inquiétudes et les poignantes misères d'une situation aussi critique que regrettable.

A l'heure où nous nous perdons dans de longues discussions de question de droit public, il y a des gens à Manitoba qui sont affectés par l'amnistie et dont le procès a peut-être lieu en ce moment. Leur liberté et leur bien-être sont par conséquent en jeu. En acceptant la logique de nos adversaires, nous exposons des Métis à être frappés par le bras de la loi; nous continuons en toute certitude et sans raison suffisante l'anxiété et les inquiétudes qu'ils éprouvent nécessairement. (Appl.)

Si c'est là de la logique, ça n'est pas du bon sens. Les électeurs du pays en jugeront ainsi, quand on leur expliquera que, ne pouvant obtenir plus, nous avons obtenu de la clémence impériale le moyen de sauver RIEL et LÉPINE d'une peine plus forte, et qu'il était préférable de les soustraire à une justice sévère en acceptant leur banissement pour cinq années, que de les exposer à des dangers imminents, en demandant une amnistie entière. Il est temps que cette question reçoive sa solution dans l'intérêt du pays, sa paix et sa prospérité.

L'hon. Député de Terrebonne a vanté ses sacrifices pour la population de Manitoba, sur laquelle il étend son égide protecteur. Et cependant la position prise par l'hon. député de Terrebonne est la plus désavantageuse qu'il pouvait prendre pour ses protégés. Cela prouve que c'est l'esprit de parti qui domine dans les sentiments de l'hon. député et non pas l'esprit de dévouement pour les habitants du Manitoba ou aucun d'eux. Ce ne serait pas rendre service au député de Terrebonne que d'accorder l'amnistie entière et complète ; car ce serait lui ôter l'occasion, dont il use et dont il abuse, d'agiter le pays et de susciter des difficultés injustes au gouvernement.

Comme l'a fait observer l'hon. Député de Drummond et d'Arthabaska, il est inexact que le député de Terrebonne ait signifié, à une époque antérieure, à l'hon. M. LANGEVIN qu'il cesserait de soutenir son gouvernement si l'amnistie n'était pas accordée, car il a soutenu l'ex-ministre des Travaux Publics jusqu'au bout. Il est certain que, dans toute cette affaire, la conduite singulière d'un membre de l'importance du député de Terrebonne, est non seulement désavantageuse à ceux qu'il veut protéger, mais elle est digne de la conduite de la dernière administration. Qu'a fait la dernière administration dans cette question ? Des promesses que le chef de cette même ex-administration nie mainenant. Le député de Terrebonne devrait s'apercevoir du défaut de sincérité de son chef et ne pas le soutenir comme il le fait dans cette position audacieuse.

Tout ce qu'a fait la dernière administration, ça été de remettre la question entre les mains du gouvernement impérial, duquel il semblait tout attendre et dont il n'a rien obtenu. Le député de Terrebonne sait tout cela depuis longtemps et cependant il n'en a jamais rien dit à SIR JOHN non plus que ses amis.

Mais s'agit-il de critiquer une nouvelle administration qui a fait et fait encore le plus possible pour régler la question d'amnistie, et qui réussit dans la plus large mesure possible sous les circonstances, alors le zèle du député de Terrebonne et de ses amis à nous attaquer, n'a plus de bornes. Le peu de générosité que le gouvernement a rencontré de la part d'une certaine partie de la presse, est vraiment regrettable, et il (l'hon. M. FOURNIER) en prend occasion de constater ce fait pour protester contre tant de fausses représentations et tant d'injustices.

Des l'avénement du nouveau ministère, l'hon. M. DORION a montré des dispositions très favorables à l'amnistie et on a même cité son témoignage qui montre en effet qu'il était bien disposé. D'autres ont même voulu compromettre l'hon. M. DORION en disant qu'il avait promis l'amnistie. Je puis dire que l'hon M. DORION n'a pas fait de promesses qu'il n'a pas tenues, et MGR. TACHÉ lui en a donné le témoignage en disant qu'il aimait mieux ne pas avoir eu de promesses que d'en avoir de fausses, comme celles qui lui avaient été faites antérieurement. L'hon. M. DORION a été consistant jusqu'au bout dans sa conduite avec MGR. TACHÉ. Lorsqu'il était du Gouvernement il fut fait une motion qui a permis de mettre devant cette Chambre la preuve obtenue sur les troubles du Nord Ouest et tous les incidents de cette malheureuse affaire.

Sa réponse à MGR. TACHÉ, "the matter is progressing favorably but slowly," montre son système judicieux et sa sincérité. Il fallait que le temps produisit son effet, car les passions étaient surexcitées ; l'excitation était encore grande. Il fallait calmer, éclairer ; il fallait surtout attendre que l'enquête fût terminée et que le rapport qui nous a convaincus que des promesses, avaient été faites, fût soumis à cette hon. Chambre. Voilà ce qui a été fait sous l'hon. M. DORION.

Le rapport fut ensuite envoyé au Gouvernement Impérial, dont il a eu l'effet de provoquer l'opinion. Ce fut encore un grand pas de fait. Malheureusement les détails de l'exécution de SCOTT, qui expliquent le ton sévère des dépêches, vint raviver les vielles difficultés et en susciter de nouvelles.

Dans une question de cette nature nous devions nous mettre en communication avec le Gouvernement Impérial, comme la dernière administration l'avait fait elle-même du reste, avec un résultat moins favorable à RIEL et LÉPINE que celui que nous avons obtenu. Nous avons adopté cette ligne de conduite, et, aidé par le rapport, nous avons été plus heureux que la dernière administration, car nous sommes en lieu d'obtenir une amnistie entière, à l'exception de MM. RIEL et LÉPINE, dont la peine est le bannissement pour cinq années. Nous adoptons la politique la plus sage, car c'est la seule pratique et de nature à pacifier le pays.

Dans son remarquable discours, le député de Kingston a trouvé cette position contraire à la constitution et même à l'usage. L'hon. Député n'est pas plus exact dans ses prétentions constitutionnelles sur cette question qu'il n'a été vrai dans ses dénégations. Comment l'hon. député de Kingston, qui était en Chambre en 1844, pouvait-il ignorer ce qui était passé en parlement à cette époque ? Croit-il que nous avons oublié les faits de notre histoire et ce que le Parlement Canadien a tenté pour les exilés de 1837-38 ? SIR JOHN n'était-il pas en chambre, lorsqu'en 1856 une résolution analogue à celle-ci fut proposée pour obtenir le pardon d'O'BRIEN, qui subissait sa peine pour avoir participé aux troubles politiques de son pays ? Il est inconcevable que le député de Kingston ait osé critiquer la constitutionnalité de cette résolution après des précédents comme ceux-là.

Mais la question se présente : par quelle issue sortir de la situation faite au pays par les troubles du Nord-Ouest et l'action de la dernière administration ? Deux solutions sont présentées ; l'une par laquelle nos adversaires veulent laisser le Nord-Ouest dans une misérable condition de trouble et de fermentation, LÉPINE en prison et RIEL errant, et dans la situation pénible et dangereuse dans laquelle il se trouve. C'est bien le cas pour RIEL de dire : " Sauvez moi de mes amis." L'autre solution consiste à déterminer le pardon et la peine à subir afin de faire cesser les embarras, les dangers, les troubles, et les misères. C'est la solution qu'offre le Gouvernement. N'est-il pas peu généreux de la part de certains membres, de vouloir rencontrer la Résolution qui doit nous faire parvenir à ces heureux résultats, par un vote de non-confiance dans le Gouvernement sous la forme d'une prétendue demande d'amnistie entière et complète ?

Mais de quelle manière l'hon. député de Terrebonne croit-il donc pouvoir parvenir à son but, lorsqu'il est certain qu'il n'aura pas un dixième des votes de cette Chambre en faveur de sa proposition ? Est-ce par un tel procédé qu'il assure aux Métis, ses protégés qu'il protége si mal, les grâces impériales qu'il se dit si soucieux d'obtenir ? Certainement non.

Mais on a menacé les députés de la Province de Québec de les dénoncer s'ils ne votent pas pour l'amnistie complète. Certes, M. l'ORATEUR, j'ai trop confiance dans l'intelligence et le jugement des électeurs de la Province de Québec pour penser un instant qu'ils ne comprendront pas les raisons sur lesquelles s'appuie le Gouvernement pour demander l'amnistie telle qu'il la demande ; et je suis certain que lorsque l'opinion sera éclairée, le peuple de ce pays témoignera à son Gouvernement la reconnaissance la plus vive pour avoir eu la sagesse et le courage de prendre cette difficile question en sa sincère considération et de proposer une solution basée sur les vues du Gouvernement Impérial, aussi bien que sur les intérêts et les sentiments des populations de la Puissance.

M. MASSON (Terrebonne) demande à l'hon. M. FOURNIER si M. NAULT, actuellement en prison à Manitoba, sous accusation d'avoir pris part à l'exécution de SCOTT, est compris dans l'amnistie ?

L'Hon. M. FOURNIER répond qu'il est vraiment surpris qu'un pareil membre pose une sembable question. Le député de Terrebonne n'a qu'à référer à la Résolution qu'il devrait mieux connaître et surtout mieux interpréter, pour se convaincre que personne n'est exclu de l'amnistie, excepté M. RIEL et M. LÉPINE.

M. MASSON : La raison pour laquelle je pose cette question, c'est que Lord CARNARVON dit dans sa dépêche que l'amnistie ne peut-être accordée à ceux qui ont participé " au meutre" de SCOTT.

M. LAURIER (Arthabaska.)—Si l'hon. membre pour Terrebonne veut me permetere de l'interrompre, je lui ferai observer qu'il a l'air de vouloir suggérer que M. NAULT soit exclu de l'amnistie.

M. MASSON : Le député d'Arthabaska sait que je ne veux pas de mal à M. NAULT, et l'hon. membre devrait s'unir à nous pour que MM. RIEL et LÉPINE reçoivent le même traitement que M. NAULT.

L'hon. M. CAUCHON.—La logique de l'opposition me fait passablement l'effet de boxer le compas, pour me servir d'une expression anglaise : elle frappe de tous côtés mais surtout sur les éléments variés de l'opposition. Le député de Terrebonne possède plutôt la puissance des poumons que celle de la logique. Je regrette de ne pouvoir crier aussi fort que lui pour prouver que j'ai raison.

La logique, M. l'ORATEUR, est dans le sens des mots, et le mot général de la dépêche veut dire absolu. Trève donc de questions hyperboliques. NAULT a été pardonné, et il le restera, malgré la malencontreuse intervention du député de Terrebonne.

Nous sommes, M. l'ORATEUR, dans une position difficile, compromettante et embarrassante. Deux courants également agités et bouillonnants se précipitent en sens inverse au sujet de cette question.

Mais nous avons aussi des faits sur lesquels nous pouvons nous appuyer pour règler les difficultés que l'administration dernière à causées par quatre ans de maladministration, de malhonêteté et de trahison des intérêts du pays dans cette malheureuse affaire. Pourquoi le député de Terrebonne ne demande-t-il pas compte au député de Kington de son système de mensonges politiques et de déceptions indignes d'un homme d'état ? Ne se rappelle-t-on pas que le député de Kingston a arraché l'Archévêque TACHÉ à ses devoirs au Vatican, au moyen d'une dépêche si décevante que Mgr. TACHÉ en fût mis sur ses gardes et ne voulut venir que sur une nouvelle dépêche, établissant plus exactement sa position.

C'est alors, M. l'ORATEUR, que la dernière administration remit une verge de fer à l'hon. M. MCDOUGALL, un homme qui ne connait ni la loi ni les conditions particulières du pays, pour aller faire rentrer dans l'obéissance la population des Métis, pour laquelle la dernière administration n'avait ni égards, ni sympathies, ni considération.

Ouvrez le livre bleu et vous y verrez les dépêches et les lettres sur l'amnistie, et vous y verrez aussi la preuve de la plus monstrueuse politique qui ait encore disgracié les annales pays.

La solution se présentait entre les deux cornes externes de ce dilemne : ou la politique du laisser-faire devait être adoptée, ou bien on devait avoir le courage de suivre une politique qui mît fin à une situation si difficile et si embarrassante. La première position a été prise par la dernière administration, et elle a péri comme toutes les choses qui n'ont aucune valeur. L'autre, adoptée par le ministère actuel, nous amène une solution raisonable et la seule possible sous les circonstances.

Et maintenant nous allons voir l'ange de clémence (le député de Bagot) et l'ange de vengeance (le député de North Hastings) voter ensemble. Quel spectacle moral, édifiant ! Singulier rôle pour un ange de clémence d'exposer la paix et le bien-être de vingt familles !

Nous ne sommes pas des anges, nous ; mais nous avons la satisfaction de nous opposer à cette sorte de douteuse clémence, et en face de la dépêche de lord CARNARVON qui fait deux exceptions, nous prenons ce qu'il nous accorde, quitte à obtenir plus tard ce qu'il nous refuse. Nous voulons que ce soit le plus petit nombre qui souffre, puisque dans notre position il faut que malgré nous, quelqu'un souffre. La politique de tout ou rien, n'est pas la bonne politique. " Half a loaf," dit l'Anglais avec raison, vant mieux que pas de pain du tout.

L'agitation qui a été faite par les conservateurs, n'avait que des fins politiques en vue et l'amendment de M. MOUSSEAU n'a en vue que de faire du capital politique pour les élections locales prochaines. Qu'est-ce que cela fait à ces Messieurs que par leur conduite, LÉPINE souffre l'emprisonement et sa famille et lui-même la misère ; et que RIEL soit banni toute sa vie et sa famille réduite à la dernière pauvreté, et que tous ceux qui sont accusés d'avoir pris part à l'exécution de SCOTT subissent leur procès, et soient voués à la vengence de la justice, condamnés à la même peine que LÉPINE, et réduits à la misère eux aussi : oui, qu'est-ce que cela leur fait pourvu qu'ils fassent du capital politique ? Mais est-ce là une conduite bien patriotique, M. l'ORATEUR ? Est-ce pour cela que nous sommes ici ? Non, nous sommes ici pour régler les grandes questions politiques, quelles qu'elles soient. Si nous avons l'intelligence et le courage de la position, nous saurons la déterminer selon la justice, l'équité et la possibilité des choses, comme faisaient BALDWIN et LAFONTAINE, mes maîtres en politique et mes amis personnels de leur vivant, savaient le faire. Mais nos adversaires disent : "nous aurons tout, ou tous seront punis." Il nous a fallu du temps pour laisser l'appaisement se faire et créer une position logique, rationnelle, juste, et quand nous faisons tout ce qui est possible pour la paix et le bien-être du pays, il est du devoir du peuple de nous soutenir. Je n'ai jamais eu peur de la discussion car le peuple finit toujours par prendre le bon côté des choses.

J'ai voté l'année dernière avec le député de Bagot afin de ne le pas laisser dans une minorité humiliante, et je l'ai dit alors dans cette Chambre. La position rationnelle était de faire une enquête. Les faits ont été établis, et, malgré les dénégations des principaux acteurs dans ce drame ou ce jeu, nous connaissons la vérité. La dernière administration n'a-t-elle pas reconnu que cette question ressort du Gouvernement Impérial ? Et, bien oui ! et maintenant que les autorités impériales nous disent qu'elles ne peuvent nous accorder l'amnistie complète, pouvons, nous faire plus ? Il peut convenir à ceux qui ne pensent qu'à la logique, de vouloir l'amnistie complète et absolue ; mais ceux qui préfèrent amener la paix, l'harmonie, le bien-être dans le pays, acceptent l'amnistie tel que présentée plutôt que de n'en pas avoir du tout. Quant aux membres qui ne croyaient pas que l'amnistie avait été accordée, c'est à eux de voir si devant la preuve qui a été faite, ils peuvent hésiter à voter pour la pleine et entière amnistie, ajourd'hui qu'un mur formidable s'élève devant nos volontés. Bientôt les craintes disparaîtront, la confiance renaîtra et le temps, ce médecin de toutes les choses du passé, nous permettra de demander et d'obtenir le reste.

Aujourd'hui il y a un homme en prison, un autre à l'étranger, et trente qui attendent leur sort. N'est-il pas important de donner à LÉPINE ses droits politiques, à une époque à venir ? N'est-il pas important pour RIEL de voir déterminer la durée de son bannissement ? Devons-nous exposer de braves gens à monter sur l'échafaud, car on ne sait pas ce que le bras de la vengeance peut faire ? Sauvons ceux qui sont en danger de périr, ceux qui s'en vont reviendront bientôt, prenons tout ce que nous pouvons avoir, et plus tard nous aurons le reste. Si nous réveillons les sentiments, les passions et les vengeances, on ne sait ce qui arrivera, mais si l'appaisement se fait nous les verrons revenir avec bonheur. Nous avons affaire à un sentiment contraire, et nos collègues d'origine différente ont aussi des électeurs et sont obligés de faire des sacrifices considérables pour ne pas se perdre. Nous leur devons de la reconnaissance, nous devons faire la moitié du chemin. Nous ne devons pas faire comme la dernière administration, qui a tenu les Métis dans l'inquiétude, par ses déceptions. Nous venons franchement dire ce que nous voulons. Du reste la barrière est là. Voulez-vous voter contre la proposition d'amnistie et contre les hommes qui ont le courage de la présenter, ou voulez-vous voter pour des hommes qui promettaient le oui et le non, qui ne faisaient de promesses que pour y manquer, qui ôtaient le caractère à tout le monde, disant qu'un tel ne savait ce qu'il disait, qu'un autre était un charmant garçon, mais qu'on ne devait s'occuper de ce qu'il faisait, et qui, en un mot, se sont montrés ni sérieux ni honnêtes dans leur politique du Nord-Ouest ! Je le répète en terminant : prenons ce que nous pouvons avoir aujourd'hui et demain nous prendrons le reste.

M. OUIMET (Laval) dit qu'il désire expliquer le vote qu'il va donner pour l'amendement et contre la motion principale. Le petit bataillon auquel il appartient a augmenté considérablement depuis l'année dernière, et c'est grâce à ce bataillon si un grand pas a été fait. Nous demandions l'amnistie complète et on nous la refusait tout-à-fait. Maintenant on nous l'accorde aux trois quarts, et nous l'aurons bientôt complètement. Nous nous appuyons sur le fait qu'il y a eu un Gouvernement "de facto," une promesse d'amnistie complète et l'acceptation du service militaire de RIEL et autres. Si l'année prochaine, le Gouvernement propose, dans sa marche progressive, l'amnistie complète, je serai heureux d'être des siens. Je profiterai de la circonstance pour remercier le député de South Bruce, et l'hon. Premier, du grand changement qui s'est opéré en eux depuis l'année dernière, à tel point que ce qui était blanc l'année dernière est devenu noir, et " vice-versa."

Je voterai pour l'amendement ; on le perdra, je n'en doute pas, et je n'en suis pas fâché. J'entends crier " hear ! hear !" ce sera à mon tour de crier " hear ! hear !" l'année prochaine. Je voterai contre la résolution du Gouvernement ; elle sera emportée par une grande majorité, je n'en doute pas, et j'en suis content ; mais je serai encore plus content l'année prochaine. Quand on a posé un principe on doit en accepter les conséquences. Par conséquent les prémisses étant posées dans la résolution on devrait conclure à l'amnistie complète. Comment peut-on reconnaître le Gouvernement " de facto" et prétendre que l'exécution de SCOTT était un crime et non un acte politique ? Surtout si l'on dit que l'honneur de la couronne est engagé, on doit, à plus forte raison, donner l'amnistie complète. On nous offre une demi - mesure, je ne puis l'accepter. On nous demande de voter l'exile de RIEL et LÉPINE, nous n'avons pas les intérêts du Gouvernement en main, et nous lui en laissons la responsibilité. Le député d'Arthabaska nous dit que nous devons accepter la plus grande somme de bien qui nous est offerte, et que, par conséquent, RIEL n'ait pas le bénéfice de la défense de son pays non plus que des promesses d'amnistie absolue. Le député d'Arthabaska donne aussi pour raison, la déclaration de Lord CARNARVON que rien de plus ne serait accordé. Lord CARNARVON promet moins que cela, il excepte tous les accusés du meurtre de SCOTT, et puisque l'on croit pouvoir obtenir plus que ce qu'il accorde, pourquoi ne pas demander l'amnestie complète ? On a déjà réussi à amender le sentiment impérial depuis l'année dernière, eh bien, pourquoi ne pas aller jusqu'au bout ? Lord CARNARVON est déjà revenu sur ses pas et sa décision n'est pas irrévocable. L'hon. député de Québec Centre considère Lord CARNARVON comme l'autorité suprême, et le député d'Arthabaska veut nous démontrer qu'il soutient le Gouvernement libéral avec les principes conservateurs. Dans un pays constitutionnel les passions cèdent vite, et lorsque l'appaisement dont a parlé le député de Québec Centre sera arrivé, le petit bataillion ne sera pas débandé, nous serons ici et nous demanderons que RIEL soit rappelé, et que l'amnistie soit complète. Nous ne disputons pas seulement la vie de RIEL et de LEPINE. Nous nous plaçons sur un terrain encore plus sérieux—c'est celui de l'influence de la population métisse, anéantie par la privation des services de RIEL et de LÉPINE. C'est par la terreur que l'on domine aujourd'hui sur la population du Nord-Ouest, et si l'on veut la paix, et l'exercice des droits de ce peuple, il faut leur accorder l'amnistie complète.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) referring to the statement that in view of the expressions contained in the despatch of Lord CARNARVON, there would be no use in asking for a complete amnesty, said he saw nothing in the despatch which precluded the possibility of a complete amnesty being granted; but if there was any force in the argument it applied equally to the resolutions before the House. If it be wrong to ask for a full amnesty for RIEL in defiance of the expressions used by Lord CARNARVON in his despatch, it was equally wrong to ask for other things which were equally in express terms refused by the same authority. He was free to confess that he would support neither the amendment nor the resolutions. Some would vote against the resolutions because they did not go far enough, others because they went too far, and others because they were unconstitutional. The position he took was that the killing of SCOTT was not a political crime, and he would therefore oppose its being condoned, while he was in favour of granting a complete amnesty to all mere political offenders, because he believed that under the circumstances the Metis were perfectly justified in standing up for their rights of property, and perhaps their personal liberty. He was almost singular in his Province in the position he took on this question. He knew that the majority of the people in that Province regarded these men as almost heroes, who had acted with justice and patriotism, and were strongly in favour of an amnesty being granted to them. He knew that such a feeling existed, and he thought the resolutions would not be satisfactory to Quebec or to Ontario either and that it would have been more manly if the Government had faced the question directly. There was a strong feeling throughout the country that this question should be settled once for all, and the passage of these resolutions would not settle the question. The hon. member for Laval had told the House that small as the band was that now took a stand for complete amnesty, they would fight that question year after year, and they believed they would in the end compel the Government to grant such an amnesty. He for one would not be disposed to do that. He was one who thought that the majesty of the law should be vindicated in the first place, and that after the law had had its course then, if necessary, the pardoning power could be exercised. He looked upon these resolutions as a mere compromise. He wished to call attention to the peculiar manner in which the commutation of LEPINE's sentence had been published to the country. Just before the Local Elections a good many rumours were afloat in Ottawa about the granting of an amnesty, and the commutation of LEPINE's sentence, and naturally people looked with some anxiety to the appearance of the Official Gazette to see what was done. Strange to say, the Gazette did not appear on the Saturday, the day it usually appeared, though it was said, he did not know with what truth, that a few copies had been issued and recalled. On the following Monday the local elections took place, and on the day after the Gazette appeared containing the announcement of the commutation of LEPINE's sentence. Now, if there had been a desire on the part of the Government of the day correctly to ascertain the feelings of a large and important part of the Dominion—a portion of it which gave them their largest support and following in this House—in the best and almost the only way, they would have issued and circulated the Canada Gazette on the Saturday as usual, and not on the following Wednesday. He would not discuss the question whether the two Governments were connected, but would merely mention the fact that by another strange concatenation of circumstances they found in another important constituency in Ontario the elections for the Legislature and this Parliament so fixed as to come off on one and the same day. Whether this was done by intent or accident, he would leave it to the hon. gentlemen to say.

Mr. FRECHETTE did not rise to speak at any length, as the matter had been ably and thoroughly discussed on both sides on this and on former occasions, in this House, but he could not refrain from expressing his surprise at the strange, extraordinary, and unprecedented difference of opinions expressed by hon. gentlemen in this debate on the other side of the House who opposed the resolutions of the Ministry. The fact was, they all agreed to disagree; they were unanimous to differ. They all differed between themselves, and the hon. Leader of the Opposition differed from them all, and yet they seemed to be disposed to come to the same conclusion and to vote, as they always did, according to their touching sympathy and unanimity. This they were obliged to do to be consistent with themselves. The angels of vengeance would have to vote in such a way to be consistent in their ideas of severity, and the angels of mercy in the same way in order to be consistent in their ideas of mercy, and, at the same time the hon. Leader of the Opposition would have to vote in the same way to be consistent in his traditional opposition to the Government. It would be a singular spectacle to see in the papers to-morrow morning the names of the hon. member for North Hastings and the name of the hon. member for Terrebonne alongside of each other in the vote on the amnesty question. He did not know whether it would be more surprising than to see the member for North Hastings vote with the hon. member for Kingston who gave one thousand dollars to enable RIEL to escape the law; or the hon. member for Terrebonne voting with the hon. member for Kingston, who declared he had never promised an amnesty to RIEL or any of the North-West offenders. He (M. FRECHETTE) was indeed surprised to hear the hon. member for Bagot saying that he considered it an insult to all the people belonging to the same creed as RIEL to hear Lord CARNARVON calling him a murderer. Now as far as he (M. FRECHETTE) was concerned, he belonged to the Roman Catholic creed, but he did not pretend to share the responsibility of all those who were implicated in the so-called murder of SCOTT. If he were in a jury box, he would not inquire the religion of a prisoner, but whether he was guilty or not. He was in favor of amnesty, but not because he was a Catholic and a French Canadian, but because he thought it was the only proper way to maintain peace and harmony among all the portions of our mixed community. On that ground he would be in favor of a complete amnesty, but as it had been indicated in the most emphatic way that such a thing could not be obtained, he was in favor of a partial amnesty, as proposed by the present Ministry. He was not prepared to fight against the British flag or sever the colonial tie just on that question. This was not the course that could be taken by loyal subjects. As far as the present constitutional law bound the country, they had to submit to it. He would vote against the amendment, because he did not think it a proper course to obtain what they always desired, and he would vote for the partial amnesty proposed by the present Government.

Mr. DE COSMOS wanted to offer a few words of explanation as to why he should cast his vote in favour of the resolutions moved by the First Minister. He was one of twenty-seven members who one year ago voted in favor of a complete amnesty for all those who were concerned in the North West troubles some few years ago. He was still prepared to vote for a complete amnesty, if he believed that it could be carried at the present time. But so far as he could gather from the opinions of members no such vote could be carried in the House, nor would it be at the present time endorsed by the country. He, therefore, reserved his right in case this question should be brought forward during a future session to vote with those who might be willing to move a resolution for a complete amnesty to those whom it was now proposed to banish. With respect to the amendment proposed by the member for Bagot, the first portion alluded to the act of the Cabinet in not recommending HIS EXCELLENCY to grant a full and complete pardon to LEPINE. He (Mr. DECOSMOS) was at one with the mover in that particular. He did not believe in any office in this country who was independent of the people who created that Ministry; and when the time should come when Parliament and the country should act upon this principle involved in the statement of the member for Bagot, he would be found on the side of those who would maintain that no GOVERNOR-GENERAL could act unless by and with the consent of his constitutional advisers. He reserved his action on this point to some future period. He advised the friends of RIEL, and those implicated in the North-West troubles, that the true policy for them to adopt was to see how much they could do to relieve those men of the disability under which they labored.

M. DESJARDINS. Avant de donner mon vote je veux faire voir que les prémises posées par le Gouvernement justifient la position que nous avons prise. L'enquête a établi que cette position était la plus juste et la plus vraie. Je félicite le Gouvernement sur les prémisses de ses résolutions. Je le félicite aussi d'assumer la responsabilité d'une politique distincte et si je ne puis voter pour cette résolution je n'en félicite pas moins le Gouvernement d'être entré dans cette phase. Elle justifie la position que j'ai prise depuis quatre ans. Je dirai pourquoi je ne puis voter pour la résolution du Gouvernement. Si l'amnistie a été accordée à la population métisse c'est grâce à ceux qui en sont exclus. Et ce sont ceux là même qui ont mérité l'amnistie par la défense du territoire et qui doivent l'avoir par le droit des gens, qui sont privés du bénéfice de leurs actes ! Je ne puis admettre une pareille proposition, et malgré le regret que j'éprouve, malgré la répulsion que je ressens de me joindre à nos ennemis acharnés, je suis obligé par cette politique mitigée du Gouvernement d'accepter la position qu'elle me fait.

Dr. ST. JEAN (Ottawa) Je n'avais pas l'intention de prendre la parole, mais comme canadien-français habitant le Haut Canada, je dois expliquer mon vote en comparant la position de l'année dernière et celle de cette année. M. l'ORATEUR, ces messieurs de l'autre côté de la Chambre remercient le Gouvernement pour ce qu'il a fait, et, cependant, ils votent contre ! Le député de Terrebonne a voulu nous faire croire à son patriotisme, et c'est lui cependant qui a fait faire, l'année dernière, à RIEL un pélérinage si dangereux. Ces messieurs veulent tout ou rien. Quant à lui, il remercie le Gouvernement d'adopter les mesures nécessaires à la pacification du pays. Le député de Bagot a combattu, malgré lui, le député de Kingston. L'opposition lui fait l'effect de deux personnes tenant une corde et tirant chacune son bout pour les amener ensemble au moment du vote. L'année dernière l'amnistie était prématurée. Cette année c'est la barrière de lord CARNARVON qui nous arrête. Mais je suis heureux que le paati libéral ait trouvé le moyen de régler la question d'amnistie et ce n'est que par inconsistance et par esprit de parti, et pour faire de capital politique, que le député de Terrebonne et ses amis refusent de se rallier à ce mouvement sage et patriotique en disant que les résolutions n'accordaient pas assez. On ne peut obtenir plus, et c'est la meilleure raison d'accepter ce qui nous est offert.

Mr. PICARD said he intended to vote against the amendment, and support the resolutions of the Government, because he wished to see this irritating question settled, and he was glad the Government had faced the difficulty and proposed a mode of settlement. He did not fully endorse everything that was said in the resolutions, but he believed that it was perhaps the best settlement that could be effected, and he would therefore vote for it.

M. GAUDET dit qu'il n'est pas défendu de prier et de demander l'amnistie entière. Il reproche au Gouvernement d'avoir retardé l'envoi des documents de commutation. Il se réserve, en votant contre la résolution, le droit de demander une amnistie complète à une prochaine session. Les hommes du passé ont fait des fautes, mais leur successeurs peuvent en faire aussi. Il désire cette année comme l'année dernière, l'amnistie complète, et il votera pour l'amendement.

Mr. MACKENZIE (West Montreal) said he desired to explain the reasons for the vote he intended to give in view of the pledge he had given to his constituents in regard to this subject. He had decided to vote for the resolutions, and he held that in doing so he would not break the pledge which he had given. He would not discuss the transactions connected with the North-West troubles, but he would advert to one fact—a fact which was disclosed after he had given the pledge he had referred to—and that was that the British Government positively refused to entertain for a moment the idea of a complete amnesty. If therefore we wished to obtain a settlement of this question, we must abandon ohe idea of an unlimited amnesty. That was forced upon them by the despatch of Lord CARNARVON. Then we were brought face to face with this difficulty. Ontario, to a great extent, held one opinion on the subject and Quebec another, and England refused to intervene between them. What were we to do? Did the hon. members for Bagot and Terrebonne propose to take up arms against the Mother Country? He (Mr. MACKENZIE) held that the only course now open to those who had taken the position he had taken was to support the proposition for a conditional amnesty, as the best settlement of a very vexed question. It was of vital importance to the future welfare of this country that the matter should be settled, and he appealed to members on both sides of the House to settle it to-night by their votes. To quote the language of the member for Drummond and Arthabaska, the chasm which was open between Ontario and Quebec would be closed to-night by the united efforts of all men who love their country and desire its highest interests. The wound which had so long been open could be healed to-night by their action, and he appealed to all men in the House, irrespective of what Province they came from, irrespective of their religion or their nationality, irrespective of party claims or prejudices, to do that which would remove from this country this cause of discord, and restore that harmony which should exist between the various Provinces of this Dominion. Unfortunately the trouble in the North-West had come to be a question between Ontario and Quebec, and to speak roughly ,but still perhaps truly, a question between the French and English people of this country. Such a condition of affairs was much to be deplored, and should be remedied at the earliest possible moment. Any feeling of animosity which existed between the English and French speaking people of this country should have been buried in the graves of those rival heroes, MONTCALM and WOLFE. They were buried, but they were unhappily revived by events to which he need not now refer. Again they had subsided, but unfortunately had been aroused to a higher pitch than ever by these troubles in the North-West and the negotiations and complications growing out of them. Petty as the events in the North-West seemed at first, they had assumed proportions which threatened the peace of the whole country. Surely it behoved everyone who sought the future welfare of this country to remove this cause of discord from our midst, so that, as in the Mother Land, Saxon and Norman, Celt and Dane, had been welded into one great nation, so we here in Canada might in the future cease to be divided into Provinces and become a united nationality, making of our country the brightest jewel in the crown of HER MAJESTY and the most prosperous and happy country on the continent.

M. COUPAL dit qu'en votant pour l'amendement il ne donne pas un vote de vengeance, parceque le Gouvernement a opposé sa candidature. S'il vote ainsi c'est parcequ'il a fait à ces électeurs la promesse formelle de voter pour l'amnistie entière.

J'ai confiance dans le Gouvernement, et si l'amendement n'est pas emporté je voterai pour la résolution.

Hon. Mr. POPE said that after the sudden conversion of the hon. gentleman from Montreal West and the remarks of gentlemen opposite, he could not give a silent vote on this question. He should be delighted if the prediction of his hon. friend from Montreal West, should be fulfilled, and that the passage of these resolutions would be a final settlement of the question, but he did not believe that it would. There was no guarantee that next session the question would not again be brought before the House and the agitation continued, and therefore the excuse which the hon. gentleman from Montreal West gave for breaking the express pledge he gave to his constituents was of no avail. Referring to the position of the Government on this question, he said there seemed to be a readiness on their part to yield to the dictates of a Minister in a foreign land—to yield to the express wishes of a Minister in the British Cabinet. It was really refreshing to find gentlemen opposite quite ready to accept the dictates of Lord CARNARVON upon this question. His hon. friend from Drummond and Arthabaska said he would vote for the resolutions because Lord CARNARVON declared that a complete amnesty could not be granted; but was his hon. friend honest in the conclusions he drew from Lord CARNARVON's despatch? Did not Lord CARNARVON state in distinct terms that RIEL never should be allowed to exercise political rights in this country. His hon. friend either went too far or did not go far enough. If Lord CARNARVON's despatch was to be conclusive then a greater punishment should be inflicted on RIEL than the one now proposed; while if His Lordship's despatch was to be disregarded to the extent of giving RIEL more favourable terms than His Lordship considered right, it might be disregarded still further. I was evident that his hon. friend was actuated by some other motive than a desire to please Lord CARNARVON. It was proposed by the resolutions to banish the leaders in the North West troubles from the country for the next five years. What object would be obtained thereby? Was it supposed that allowing these men to remain in the country free and unfettered would cause a rebellion? Or was it supposed that some other body of people were about to rebel, because those men were not punished for their misdeeds? If such were not the case then away with that nonsense contained in the resolutions that the men must be punished. He was in favor of a full and complete pardon being granted them, so that they might remain citizens of the country, and when he expressed that opinion he felt satisfied that it was the one held by a large majority of the people. It was said that if we cannot get the whole loaf it was better to take one half. But he believed that we should endeavor to give all the freedom we can to those men. There was no reason why they should be persecuted if the country would gain nothing thereby. He trusted the Premier would see his way clear to accept the amendment.

Mr. CURRIER desired to explain briefly his reasons for the vote which he intended to give. The reason given by the First Minister for introducing a series of resolutions, namely: that the time had arrived when this great difficulty should if possible be removed, was a sound one. The House was, no doubt, convinced that the time had arrived when the question should be settled at the earliest possible moment. If he thought the adoption of the resolutions would finally settle the question he would certainly be inclined to vote for them. But he was not of that opinion. The member for Terrebonne would not allow the subject to drop, and every session the question would be brought before the House; therefore the adoption of the resolutions would prove no settlement of the difficulty. He would support the amendment, for he believed that a complete and full amnesty would prove the only solution of that difficult question.

Mr. SCRIVER desired to reply to what he conceived to be a very broad and unwarrantable assertion made by the member for Terrebonne, namely, that he had not only the support of the French Canadian population, but also the whole British population.

Mr. MASSON—I did not make that assertion.

Mr. SCRIVER—My friend suggests that he used the words "well thinking people." I am sure he spoke of the British people of Lower Canada.

Mr. MASSON—I said I think that the totality of the French and the totality of the English population of Canada are united on this, that the supreme penalty of the law should not be exercised. That is their opinion. That is what I meant to say at all events.

Mr. SCRIVER accepted the disclaimer made by the hon. gentleman; at the same time he felt bound to say, that so far as he knew, the large majority of the English speaking population of Quebec did not sympathize with the extreme views of the hon. member from Terrebonne. They were disposed to make a distinction between the offences committed in Manitoba. While all the British speaking people of the Province of Quebec were quite prepared to condone anything like political offences in Manitoba, they were not prepared to say that those who were guilty of crime, should have that crime condoned altogether, that anything like a complete amnesty should not be granted to those who took part in killing SCOTT. During the last session of Parliament he voted with the majority of this House for the expulsion of RIEL. He still entertained the same views in regard to the crime charged against RIEL, but he believed like many others that the time had come when something should be done to obtain a settlement of the question. A compromise of some kind had become necessary. He was quite prepared to say that he did not accept in its entirety the conclusions which had been reached by those who framed the resolutions. He did not think they were in every respect logical, or that the conclusion reached was a logical deduction from the premises laid down. Nor was he prepared to say that anything like an official promise or engagement on the part of the late Administration was entered into by them, that a complete amnesty should be granted. Looking at the evidence impartially, he had not reached that conclusion. At the same time he was free to admit that Archbishop TACHE supposed that he had power to announce a complete amnesty. Whether the effect of the resolutions, if adopted, would be to settle the question or not, he was not prepared to say; but he had reason to believe that if the resolutions met the views of the majority of the people the policy they endorsed would be accepted by the extremists. Holding those opinions, he was prepared to vote in favor of the resolutions.

Mr. RYMAL said that reference had been made to a motion which he had submitted to the House on a former occasion respecting the murder of SCOTT. At the time he offered that motion he had come to the conclusion that the then Government were trifling with the best interests of this country, and that we were drifting into serious troubles on account of their negligence. The motion which he had moved was, however, voted down, and now the House was called upon to consider the question from an altogether different standpoint. He found by the evidence taken by the North-west Committee that certain promises and pledges had been made to the people of the North-west who were implicated in the troubles through Archbishop TACHE. He was bound to believe that so shrewd a man as the Archbishop was not mistaken in his appreciation of what the Ministers of the day had communicated to him. Cunning as they were and deceitful as they, they were not sufficiently cunning to deceive so shrewd an observer as Archbishop TACHE, and the Archbishop was justified in the conclusions which he drew from the conversations and correspondence he had with the Government. Believing that, he (Mr. RYMAL) held that it was the bounden duty of Parliament to bring about a settlement of this long-vexed question. There was great difference of opinion among the members of this House on the question, particularly among the members of the Opposition. Reference had been made to the Angel of Mercy and the Minister of Vengeance who surrounded the hon. leader of the Opposition. But the hon. member for South Norfolk did not appear to range himself under the former or either of those Angels; he scarcely knew how to classify that hon. member, but he supposed that he must be "the nice little cherub that sits up aloft and watches the fate of poor Jack." However, notwithstanding that difference of opinion upon the manner in which that vexed question should be settled, they were unanimous in their desire to have it settled as speedily as possible in some way or other. For his part he believed that the resolutions submitted by the Government would bring about a settlement of it; at any rate he sincerely hoped they would, and that no attempt would be made in the future to revive the agitation. If any such attempt should be made to again bring the matter before Parliament after the passage of these resolutions, he would feel it his duty to oppose on every occasion any further treatment of the question. Expatriation for five years was as small a punishment as any one would desire should be meted out to RIEL, and he sincerely hoped that no attempt would be made at a future day to obtain a remission of that slight punishment. It was not with any very great degree of pleasure that he supported the resolutions, holding that it would have been a wiser course to have allowed the ordinary administration of justice to take its course, and those men be brought to trial, and then the royal clemency might possibly have been exercised in their favour; had such been the case he would not have raised any objection, because the attribute of mercy was GOD-like. But in view of all the circumstances connected with this case, he thought that the course proposed by the Government was the wisest that could be adopted, and he appealed to the House to deal with the question, not as partisans, but as lovers of their country, who desire to see this unfortunate and irritating question settled for ever.

Mr. BROOKS said he looked upon this question as not one of party politics. Party ties and relations had nothing to do with the consideration of this subject. If the House really desired to approach the matter in the spirit in which it ought to be approached, they should forget all that had been done in the past and deal with the question as it now stood in the country. He desired to see the sponge passed over all that had been done in the past. For five years the country had been disturbed with this question, and he would be wanting in his duty if he did not approach its settlement with the most ardent desire that we might in the future be relieved from the agitation and heart-burning which had arisen from the unfortunate circumstances connected with this matter. He thought they must be all satisfied from the discussion that had taken place that there was no other possible solution of the matter than by mutual concession. A large portion of the French population took one extreme view, and a very considerable portion of the population of Ontario took another extreme view, and therefore the only practical mode in which they could arrive at any solution was by mutual compromise and concession. He was prepared to vote for anything which reasonably might tend to obtain the object they all desired. He would have been much better pleased if the resolutions had been framed without any reference to the antecedents of this matter. He would have preferred if the bare statement had been made which was contained in one of the paragraphs of the resolutions, namely, "That in the opinion of this House it is not for the honor or interest of Canada that the question of amnesty should remain longer in its present shape." He thought that bare statement would have been sufficient to justify the House passing upon this question, but if any of the facts were to be recited he must frankly say that all should have been recited. But they were there to legislate for a practicable purpose, and not to determine abstract questions of right and wrong; but believing that the resolutions would accomplish the end which they all desired he would vote for them. With regard to the amendment, he had always said that if it was possible to obtain from the Imperial Government an absolute amnesty he would have approved of it. But he took it that when they voted on this question they voted for a purpose, and it was evident that at the present time it would be impossible to obtain a complete amnesty. At the same time while voting against the amendment on this occasion, he would hold himself free to support an absolute amnesty if at any future period it was demanded and he should consider it in the interests of the country to do so. There was a constitutional question raised last night by a gentleman of high authority on such questions (Sir JOHN MACDONALD) which at the time he thought of considerable force. It was with regard to the pardoning power, and he had taken occasion to examine the authorities upon the point. He must say with all deference that he had not come to the same conclusion that the right hon. gentleman had come. The cases cited by Mr. TODD with reference to the exercise of the pardoning power he took to refer to pardon after conviction, which was very different from the case now before the House. The offence was regarded by some as political and by others as not so, but at any rate it had connected with it such political elements as to justify this House in dealing with the whole question by asking the Imperial Government, under whose control the country was where the offences were committed, to grant some measures of relief to the parties implicated. He spoke thus, not as presuming on a constitutional question to differ from those who had such long parliamentary experience, but he took this practical ground that if it was unconstitutional to send up an Address based upon the resolutions, it was equally unconstitutional to pass an Address based upon the amendment. He would support the resolutions submitted by the Government as he would have supported them had they been submitted by the late Government, because he believed they offered a practical solution of the question. It was the duty of them all to endeavor by mutual concession and conciliation to allay the irritation and excitement which had been aroused in connection with this matter.

M. FISET dit que les explications du Ministre de la Justice l'ont convaincu et qu'il votera pour la résolution, car à l'impossible personne n'est tenue ; et puisque le Gouvernement a tout fait pour trouver une solution modératrice, il doit recevoir l'approbation de la Chambre et du pays. Les députés conservateurs canadiens n'ont trouvé rien à dire contre le chef de l'Opposition ; le député d'Hochelaga a été le seul à le faire, ce dont il le félicite cordialement. La résolution propose plutôt de raccourcir l'exile que de décreter le bannissement.

M. CARON dit qu'il votera contre la résolution parcequ'elle ne donne pas une solution complète des difficultés du Nord-Ouest. Après avoir voté contre l'expulsion de RIEL de la Chambre, il ne peut voter pour son banissement du pays. L'amnistie complète est la seule solution pratique. Il est sur que les mêmes difficultés reviendront l'année prochaine.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said before the question was put he desired to refer to some remarks of the leader of the Opposition. Had the hour been earlier he would have given some attention to certain portions of the hon. gentleman's speech not at all relevant to matters before the House, and in which matters had been introduced not at all in accordance with the facts of the case. He would take another opportunity of referring to them and also to the contrast which the hon. gentleman had drawn between his (Sir JOHN'S) course at present and that of the present Government when they were in Opposition. He would show that the hon. gentleman was entirely wrong in saying that he and his friends were alone instrumental in bringing the North-West Territory into the Dominion, and he would also take occasion to show that, so far from that being the case, it was the work almost exclusively of his (Sir JOHN'S) opponents. After the hon. gentleman's accession to power as chief of the Government that was formed at the time of Confederation he knew right well that he received the best assistance in his (Mr. MACKENZIE'S) power in the acquisition and settlement of that country. The hon. gentleman had not the generosity to admit those services now which he (Mr. MACKENZIE) was able to render to his country more than to him and his party, though at the time the hon. member was willing to acknowledge those services from the seat which he (Mr. MACKENZIE) now occupied. He would not follow the hon. gentleman through all the course of his argument, for two-thirds of it was entirely irrelevant, and he could only conclude, from the great length of the speech, that the hon. member believed, like those of old, that he would be heard for his much speaking. But two or three matters were referred to which he (Mr. MACKENZIE) was bound to say would have a serious effect on this discussion if the hon. member's argument were correct. One was the assumption that the course pursued by the Government was entirely wrong—unconstitutional he believed the hon. gentleman said, though the phrase was used somewhat guardedly. The hon. member was good enough to say that he agreed in the conclusion arrived at by the Government—that they proposed the right thing, but proposed it in the wrong way. Well, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) was prepared to show that it was proposed in precisely the same way as in a former Parliament, and he hoped the hon. gentleman would feel himself relieved of the difficulty of supporting the Government in this matter. He could understand the hon. member's difficulty in the extreme difference of opinion which prevailed among those who surrounded him, and appreciate the tender manner in which they treated their leader, though he was somewhat surprised that the hon. member for North Hastings should pour out the vials of his wrath on the heads of the Government, instead of upon his own chief. However, that was a matter to be settled among themselves, but it could not fail to produce the impression in this House that the Opposition, like the Irishman who landed at New York and was asked to vote, being ignorant of the politics of the country, but carrying his old country convictions with him, said he was "agin the Government at all events." That seemed to be the only binding principle which prevailed on the other side of the House. The leader of the Opposition said the Government showed something like cowardice by proceeding to move a resolution in the House—that they should themselves have assumed the responsibility and passed an Order in Council carrying out practically the same views embodied in their resolutions. The hon. member for South Bruce had dealt with that matter somewhat last night, but he (Mr. MACKENZIE) had something more to say on the subject. He could assume no higher responsibility than, as head of the Government, bringing down the resolutions which he had submitted to the ordeal of a discussion in this House. After what had passed last session they would not be treating the House with proper respect if they undertook to settle the matter without having a free expression of opinion from the House on the subject. They took the only proper and constitutional manner of doing this by bringing down, as the responsible Ministers of the Crown, a resolution on which they staked their existence as a Government. If the House thought it was wrong, they should vote it wrong and the Government would take the responsibility on their heads. They would not shelter themselves behind an Order-in-Council, passed in secret, but come to the House, and placing their resolution on the table, challenge the House on its reception as such. Now, what had been the course in our own country on former occasions? The hon. member for South Bruce had pointed out that nothing was more common under our system of Parliamentary Government than to pass acts of grace and resolutions having reference to rebellious proceedings, and the hon. member for Kingston, in his argument, could only cite the trial of the Chartist rioters in Wales some years ago, as a parallel case to the insurrection in the North-West. There was no parallel in the case at all. There was no similarity. There was nothing that could be said to approach the position of affairs in the North-West. But during the rebellion in this country it was well known that a very large number of people were sentenced to terms of banishment, others were proclaimed as outlaws and were banished as such from the country, and excluded from the benefits of residence in this country and all the advantages of British subjects in Canada. In 1841, three years after the close of the rebellion, the House of Assembly in its first session passed the following resolution:

"Resolved—That it is the opinion of this Committee that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, as representing the Crown in this Province, praying the exercise of the Royal prerogative for granting a free pardon, indemnity and oblivion of all crimes, offences and misdemeanours; that the Royal mercy be extended to such of HER MAJESTY'S misguided subjects as may be compatible with the safety of the Crown and this Province, connected with the late unhappy troubles in the late Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, committed or supposed to have been committed within the last four years."

This resolution was carried by a vote of 40 to 25, and very shortly afterwards the reply of the Governor was presented as follows:—

"In reply to their address of the 30th August, the GOVERNOR-GENERAL assures the House of Assembly that both in the advice he may be called upon to tender to the QUEEN and in the exercise of the prerogative of the Crown, where that power is entrusted to himself, within the colony, it is and will continue to be his anxious desire to treat all cases connected with the late unhappy disturbances with the utmost indulgence which may be compatible with the safety of the Crown and the security of the Province.

"The GOVERNOR-GENERAL will not fail to bring the expression of the wishes of the House of Assembly, as conveyed in this address, under the notice of HER MAJESTY'S Government."

In 1844, on the motion of Mr. LAFONTAINE, seconded by Mr. LESLIE, the following address was carried:—

"Resolved, That an humble address be presented to HER MAJESTY praying that she will be graciously pleased to exercise the Royal prerogative by granting to HER MAJESTY'S misguided subjects free pardon, indemnity and oblivion of all crimes, offences and misdemeanors connected with the unhappy troubles referred to in an humble address to this House on the 30th day of August, 1841, on the same subject, and of all attainders and outlawries during the period therein mentioned; most humbly assuring HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY that whenever it may please HER MAJESTY through her representative, and out of her own free will, pleasure and mere motion to transmit a Bill to that effect to the Provincial Assembly, the same will be received with humble gratitude and will tend still more to confirm HER MAJESTY'S faithful subjects in this Province in their affection to their Sovereign, and to strengthen the connection which happily exists between this Province and the parent State."

"Resolved, That an humble address be presented to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL informing HIS EXCELLENCY that this House hath voted an humble address to HER MAJESTY respecting the extension of the Royal clemency to HER MAJESTY'S misguided subjects for all offences connected with the late unhappy troubles, and humbly praying HIS EXCELLENCY to transmit the said address to HER MAJESTY'S principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, to be laid at the foot of the Throne, and also to recommend the prayer thereof to HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY."

The motion for that Address was carried without dissent, but there was a division immediately preceding this, in which he saw the name of the right hon. member for Kingston,so that he was actually in the House and a consenting party to the resolution, and yet he endeavoured yesterday in his speech to establish that it was entirely unconstitutional to introduce any resolution into Parliament affecting the exercise of the Royal prerogative in pardoning criminals. Nothing could be more constitutional than the manner in which this matter had been brought before Parliament by the Administration. It was in entire harmony with the practice in Great Britain, and in entire harmony with our own custom. He could conceive of nothing more proper, nothing more in keeping with the constitution than the steps taken by the Government in order to obtain a free expression of the opinion of Parliament on a matter so vitally important to the welfare of the country as this subject was. In 1849, a matter very similar to this, and to which he had just referred, was buried in oblivion as was everything connected with it by the passage of an Act of Parliament. The member for Kingston, although not then a member of the Government, had been in an Administration very shortly before, and had risen to a position of prominence as a member of the old Parliament of Canada. With regard to the hon. member for North Hastings, who had said that the Government disagreed with him upon this question because they were hypocrites, he would not make use of similar language in reply, he would not call the hon. gentleman and his friends hypocrites, for he believed that they were acting conscientiously, at least he was bound to suppose that they were. He was surprised at the language used by the hon. members for Terrebonne and Bagot in reference to the judge and jury who tried and sentenced LEPINE. The hon. member for North Hastings had referred to matters in the history of the judge which he deemed discreditable, but which he (Mr. MACKENZIE) knew to be untrue. The name of a judge should never be mentioned in a disrespectful way, under any circumstances, unless, indeed, he had been guilty of some act which made him liable to impeachment. He did not propose now to discuss this question at great length. In opening he had merely referred to points pertinent to the subject in hand, and although he had taken copious notes, he would not depart from that rule. There was one phase of the question, however, which he must notice. His hon. friend from South Bruce and himself had been bitterly assailed because they had offered a reward for the apprehension of the murderer of SCOTT. They were assailed in very savage terms by the member for Hastings, and they were also assailed by the gentlemen who sat behind him, although, of course, for very different reasons. He wished to call the attention of the House to the fact that the vote was carried unanimously in the Ontario Legislature, and the leader of the Opposition only found fault because he thought the amount was not enough. There was not a reference to this in the remarks of the hon. member for Hastings, and he could only revile the Ontario Government of the time.

Mr. BOWELL.—I do not suppose the Premier desires to misrepresent me, yet he does so in this matter. I found no fault with him for the language he used on that occasion, nor yet for his offering the reward. What I did attack him for was because having made that speech and offered that reward, he stultifies himself now by moving the resolutions in the SPEAKER'S hands.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had laid down in his resolutions everything that had led him to take the action he now proposed to do. He did not suppose there was a single member in this House who, after having read the evidence produced before the Committee, could say that the circumstances were not entirely changed. It was not fair; it was disingenuous for the hon. gentleman from North Hastings to state that the circumstances were the same as they were a year ago. The hon. gentleman did not appear to recollect that it had been dragged from the lips of his own leader that he had given RIEL and LEPINE money to induce them to go out of the country. The position the hon. gentleman held in those days was a very humble one indeed in regard to this matter. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had not been able so far to change his opinion of the transactions of 1869-70; what he asked the House to do was to consider the changed circumstances in which the Government found themselves placed by the necessity there was for disposing of this question finally. He also asked the House to consider the unfairness of the hon. member for North Hastings, who based his argument on a mere assumption that the circumstances had not been changed by the evidence produced before the North-West Committee He was gratified to know that every moderate man in the House, whether a follower of the Government or not, expressed himself in favour of the resolutions, and that there was a general disposition among members from all the Provinces to accept this as a final and reasonable and just settlement of the whole difficulty. He believed that there would be no cause for irritation hereafter, but that the settlement which the House was now about to ratify would be accepted as a final and complete settlement by the House and the country. He rejoiced to know that they now had an opportunity of settling a question which threatened at one time most serious consequences—something like a war of opinion between different races that might have led to serious misunderstandings in future. He had reason to be proud as a Canadian to find that his French-Canadian fellow-countrymen, as well as his English fellow-countrymen, had all manifested the same generous spirit and the same desire to have a settlement of this question, so that the cause of discord and irritation might be removed from our political discussions. He desired in conclusion to say that throughout that whole matter he had endeavored, as he had stated in his opening remarks, and he had no doubt that other gentlemen also, including many members on the Opposition side of the House, had endeavored to give effect to their own honest views. He had no fault to find with any one expressing his honest convictions, however strongly, but he did protest against any one imputing evil motives to him or his colleagues in the discharge of their duty as Ministers of the Crown in this country.

At 1:40 a. m. the members were called in, and the House divided on Mr. MOUSSEAU'S amendment with the following result :—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Baby,	Lanthier,
Bunster,	Masson,
Caron,	McDougall (Three Riv's)
Cimon,	Montplaisir,
Coupal,	Mousseau,
Currier,	Ouimet.
Desjardins,	Pinsonneault,
Dugas,	Pope,
Gaudet,	Robitaille,
Gill,	Rouleau,
Harwood,	Wright (Ottawa)—23.
Hurteau,

NAYS :

Messieurs

Appleby,	Laird,
Archibald,	Lajoie,
Aylmer,	Landerkin,
Bain,	Langlois,
Barthe,	Laurier,
Béchard,	Little,
Bertram,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Biggar,	Macdonald (Glengarry),
Blackburn,	MacDonnell (Inverness),
Blain,	Macdougall (Elgin),
Blake,	Mackenzie (Lambton),
Bordon,	Mackenzie (Montreal),
Borron,	Maclennan,
Bourassa,	MacMillan,
Bowell,	McCallum,
Bowman,	McCraney,
Boyer,	McGregor,
Brooks,	McIntyre,
Brouse,	McIsaac,
Brown,	McKay (Colchester),
Buell,	McQuade,
Burk,	Metcalfe,
Burpee (St. John),	Mills,
Burpee (Sunbury),	Mitchell,
Cameron (Ontario),	Monteith,
Carmichael,	Moss,
Cartwright,	Murray,
Casey,	Norris,
Casgrain,	Oliver,

Cauchon,	Orton,
Charlton,	Paterson,
Cheval,	Pelletier,
Church,	Perry,
Cockburn,	Pettes,
Coffin,	Pickard,
Cook,	Platt,
Costigan,	Plumb,
Cunningham,	Pouliot,
Cushing,	Pozer,
Dawson,	Ray,
DeCosmos,	Richard,
Delorme.	Robillard,
De St. Georges,	Rochester,
Devlin,	Roscoe,
Domville,	Ross (Durham),
Donahue,	Ross (Middlesex],
Dymond,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Farrow,	Ryan,
Ferris,	Rymal,
Fiset,	Scatcherd,
Fleming,	Scriver,
Flesher,	Shibley,
Forbes,	Sinclair,
Fournier,	Skinner,
Fréchette,	Smith (Peel),
Galbraith,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Geoffrion,	Snider,
Gibson,	Stephenson,
Gillies,	Stirton,
Gillmor,	St. Jean,
Gordon,	Taschereau,
Goudge,	Thibaudeau,
Hagar,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Haggart,	Thompson (Haldimand)
Hall,	Thompson (Welland),
Holton,	Tremblay,
Horton,	Trow,
Huntington,	Tupper,
Irving,	Vail,
Jetté,	Wallace (Albert),
Jones (Leeds),	Wallace (Norfolk),
Kerr,	White,
Killam,	Wilkes,
Kirk,	Wood,
Kirkpatrick,	Wright (Pontiac),
Laflamme,	Young—152.

The amendment was therefore negatived.

Mr. FARROW rose to move another amendment. He said that in the resolutions of the Premier certain facts were set forth as a basis for granting an amnesty, but all the facts bearing upon the question were not included in the resolutions. He thought the negotiations between Mr. DORION, Mr. LETELLIER and Archbishop TACHE in reference to the granting of an amnesty should have been included in the statement of facts contained in the resolutions, and he therefore moved the following amendment:

That the following paragraphs be added to the resolutions, after the words, "Be loyally accepted by the Canadian people," in the 19th paragraph:—

"That from the same evidence it appears that Bishop TACHE had an interview with Messrs. DORION and LETELLIER, Minister of the Crown in November, 1874, and that they informed him that they were personally in favor of an amnesty.

"That on the 25th November the Hon. Mr. LETELLIER, in his office said to Bishop TACHE, "I think (or I hope) that we shall be able to "give the amnesty to our Lower Canadian "friends as a New Year's gift."

"That on the 30th November, Bishop TACHE saw the Hon. Mr. DORION and the Hon. Mr. LETELLIER, and says—'I was led to believe that they themselves had some guarantees about it (the amnesty). They were not explicit, but I was led to believe it. It was something to the effect that there was an agreement with their colleagues as to the granting of the amnesty. The words as near as I can say were these: "We cannot settle everything. It is so soon "after the formation of the Government. We "have hopes that the thing will be arranged in "a favourable way according to your wishes; "and we see ourselves the necessity of the "amnesty." I remember no further words.

"My impression was so strong, that I asked Mr. DORION in what way he and I could communicate together about the amnesty, after my departure for Manitoba, without its being known. He then wrote in my memorandum book two sentences, which he explained as to what their meaning would be in case we should communicate about the amnesty. I produce the sentences, "Communication received, matter attended to immediately," meant this: "communication received" means "amnesty." "Matter attended to immediately" means "immediate promulgation of the amnesty." Next sentence, "Communication received", (same meaning), "matter under consideration" meaning "that the amnesty was under consideration by the Ottawa Government," "you may expect early decision," meaning its inherent sense as bearing on the secret meaning of the prior part of the sentence. It is was agreed that he would add to the latter sentence the name of the month in which he expected the thing would be settled. The date is marked on the back of this memorandum. It is November 30th. The memorandum was written about the close of our interview of that day, which was my last interview with them. I left Montreal on the 2nd of December. The impression made on my mind was so favorable, that on my arrival I told many people that we had every reason to expect that the new Government would carry out the promise of the old Government."

"That it further appears from the said evidence that the following telegrams passed between the Hon. A. A. DORION, Minister of Justice, and others on his behalf and Archbishop TACHE:

"FORT GARRY, Dec. 24, 1873.

"To the Hon. A. A. DORION, Ottawa:

"Anxious hearing from you. Is communication received. LEPINE bailed yesterday.

(Signed,) ARCHBISHOP TACHE.

"MONTREAL, Dec. 25, 1873.

"To Archbishop TACHE:

"I received the gratifying intelligence con- "tained in your telegram. Matters here are "progressing slowly, but most satisfactorily.

"In a few days I will write result, and about "some important questions.

(Signed,) "A. A. DORION."

"OTTAWA, 2nd January, 1874.

* * * * * * *

"General election immediate. Governor "MORRIS will communicate with you. Of par- "amount importance for friends to comply "with his request. Answer by telegraph.

(Signed,) "J. C. TACHE."

OTTAWA, January 2nd, 1874.

"TO ALEX. MORRIS,

"Fort Garry, Manitoba:

"Will you communicate confidentially to Bishop TACHE that I am particularly desirous in the interest of his people, in order to avoid excitement, that RIEL should not be a candidate.

"(Signed,) A. A. DORION."

"That on the 5th January, 1874, Governor MORRIS telegraphed to the Hon. A. A. DORION, Minister of Justice, that he had seen Archbishop TACHE, and that he (DORION) could 'communicate with RIEL through Father LASCOMB 'at Montreal, who knew where he was.'"

"That Bishop TACHE says: 'I wrote to Father LASCOMB immediately after the com- 'munication with Mr. MORRIS, about the first 'week in January, that very likely the Cana- 'dian Government would open negotiations with 'him about RIEL's election;' and that Father LASCOMB informed Bishop TACHE that Mr. DORION had communicated with him, either directly or through some one else."

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

The House then divided on the resolutions, which were carried on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Archibald,	Jetté,
Aylmer,	Kerr,
Bain,	Killam,
Barthe,	Kirk,
Béchard,	Laflamme,
Bertram,	Laird,
Biggar,	Lajoie,
Blackburn,	Landerkin,
Blain,	Langlois,
Blake,	Laurier,
Bordon,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Borron,	Macdonald (Glengarry),
Bourassa,	MacDonnell (Inverness),
Bowman,	Macdougall (Elgin),
Boyer,	Mackenzie (Lambton),
Brooks,	Mackenzie (Montreal),
Brouse,	Maclennan,
Buell,	McCraney,
Burk,	McGregor,
Burpee (St. John),	McIntyre,
Burpee (Sunbury),	McIsaac,
Cameron (Ontario),	McKay (Colchester),
Carmichael,	Metcalfe,
Cartwright,	Mills,
Casey,	Moss,
Casgrain,	Murray,
Cauchon,	Norris,
Charlton,	Oliver,
Cheval,	Paterson,
Church,	Pelletier,
Cockburn,	Perry,
Coffin,	Pettes,
Cook,	Pickard,
Costigan,	Pouliot,
Coupal,	Pozer,
Cunningham,	Ray,
Cushing,	Richard,
Dawson,	Robillard,
DeCosmos,	Roscoe,
Delorme,	Ross (Durham),
De St. Georges,	Ross (Middlesex),
Devlin,	Rymal,
Donahue,	Scatcherd,
Dymond,	Scriver,
Ferris,	Shibley,
Fiset,	Sinclair,
Fleming,	Skinner,
Forbes,	Smith (Peel),
Fournier,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Fréchette,	Snider,
Galbraith,	Stirton,
Geoffrion,	St. Jean,
Gibson,	Taschereau,
Gillies,	Thibaudeau,
Gillmor,	Thompson (Haldimand),
Gordon,	Thompson (Welland),
Goudge,	Tremblay,
Hagar,	Trow,
Hall,	Vail,
Holton,	Wallace (Albert),
Horton,	Wilkes,
Huntington,	Wood,
Irving,	Young—126.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Appleby,	McCallum,
Baby,	McDougall (ThreeRiv's),
Bowell,	McQuade,
Brown,	Mitchell,
Bunster,	Monteith,
Caron,	Montplaisir,
Cimon,	Mousseau,
Currier,	Orton,
Desjardins,	Ouimet,
Domville,	Pinsonneault,
Dugas,	Platt,
Farrow,	Plumb,
Flesher,	Pope,
Gaudet,	Robitaille,
Gill,	Rochester,
Haggart,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Harwood,	Rouleau,
Hurteau,	Ryan,
Jones (Leeds),	Stephenson,
Kirkpatrick,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Lanthier,	Tupper,
Little,	Wallace (Norfolk),
Macdonald (Kingston),	White,
McMillan,	Wright (Ottawa),
Masson,	Wright (Pontiac)—50.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the resolutions be referred to a Select Committee, composed of Messrs. FOUR-

NIER, GEOFFRION, HOLTON, CAUCHON, BLAKE and the mover, to prepare and report the draft of an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in conformity with the said resolutions.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE from the Committee reported an Address founded on the resolutions.

The Address was read a first and second time and adopted, and ordered to be engrossed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the address be presented to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL by such members of the House as are of the Privy Council. Carried.

JOINT COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a message from the Senate informing this House that they had appointed certain members to act with members of the House of Commons as Joint Committee on the Library and on Printing.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 2.40 a.m.

———:++:———

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, February 15th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at 3.15 p.m.

PROTECTION OF LIFE ON RAILWAYS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked leave to introduce a Bill entitled, "An Act for the better protection of persons and property conveyed by railways." This law, he said, embodied the provisions of the several small Bills which were suggested during last session of Parliament. The first section provides that any person employed by any railway company, whether upon any locomotive engine, tender, train or car, or as pointsman, signalman or in any capacity in which by neglect of duty, inattention or error might endanger the safety of human life or property, who shall be drunk or intoxicated while on duty shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanour, and that any railway company knowingly employing or continuing to employ any person in any such capacity as aforesaid, who has been convicted of such misdemeanour or proved to be to the knowledge of the company drunk, intoxicated while on duty, or known to the company to be in the habit of or addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor shall incur a penalty not exceeding two thousand dollars, in the discretion of the Court before which the suit for such penalty is brought, and an additional sum, in the discretion of the Court, for each day during which such employment shall be continued." The reason for making this very stringent enactment rested in the fact that several accidents had occurred through pointsmen or switchmen having opened instead of shutting a switch or shutting it when it should be opened, resulting in very serious loss of life and property. It was conceived that any legislation in this direction that could be practically carried out must be ultimately of great service to the public in the saving of human life. The second section contains the following provisions: "The Governor in Council may from time to time, on the report of the Railway Committee of HER MAJESTY'S Privy Council of Canada, make regulations, First, for obliging the Company owning or working any railway to make on every passenger train run on said railway such arrangements as he may, on the recommendation of the said Committee, deem necessary for establishing an easy, safe communication by the passengers by means of the cars or platforms or stages from car to car through the whole length of such train while it is in motion. Second, for providing that no cars for the conveyance of passengers shall be run on any railway unless the doors of such cars are constructed, hinged and fitted in a manner to be prescribed in such Order, so that they may be easily opened inwards or outwards from the inside or outside of the car; and every such Order in Council shall have the force of law after the expiration of six months from its publication in the Canada Gazette, and any company running any car with respect to which any such Order in Council is not complied with, shall incur a penalty in the discretion of the Court before which the suit is brought." A number of lives had been lost on account of the clumsy connections between passenger carriages, some being constructed so as to render it very difficult to pass from one car to another, while there was insufficient protection by ordinary rails. It was deemed proper and advisable that the platforms of all passenger carriages should be brought so close together as to make it impossible for a human being to fall through, and the sides must be protected by a proper railing. With reference to the provision respecting the doors of carriages, it would be remembered, no doubt, by most members of the House that very serious loss of life occurred last year on the Great Western Railway, near London, the loss of life being almost wholly caused by the door opening only inward. The fire spread rapidly from the front of the carriage. The passengers rushed to the rear. One or two escaped, but the remainder jammed against the door, and only those who had the courage and presence of mind to jump from the windows were saved. Some twelve or fourteen were burned to death. If this provision had been in force no lives would have been lost. The third section provides that "Compliance with the requirements of this Act shall not be construed as exempting any railway company from any obligation to adopt in the construction and working of their railway and for the engines, cars and other appliances thereto, the best plans, devices, arrangements, and provisions for the safety of persons and property conveyed thereby, which may be then acknowledged and in use, or from their responsibility for neglect to adopt the same." When he first proposed this measure it was in amendment to the General Railway Act, but it was thought better to introduce it as an amendment to the criminal law so as to bring all railways under its provisions, whether chartered by the Dominion or local authorities. He moved the first reading of the Bill.

Mr. ROCHESTER suggested the propriety of making provision in the Bill to regulate the speed of trains on leaving the stations. A great many accidents were caused by trains starting off at a rapid speed, and if it was stipulated that the speed of a train running out of a station should not exceed a certain limit until it was past the platform many accidents which now occur would be prevented.

Mr. OLIVER said that several Bills respecting railways were before the Railway Committee last session, and a promise was made by the Government that they would deal with the subject matter of these Bills. He had one Bill before the Committee which he noticed was not treated of in the Bill just introduced. It referred more particularly to the carrying trade of the country, and it would obviate the necessity of his asking a question he had put upon the notice paper, if the Government would now state whether they proposed dealing with that matter. He might state that several of the present Ministers of the Crown, previous to their taking office—particularly the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—had stated to him and to the Committee that the subject was of such great importance that it should not be left in the hands of a private member, but should be dealt with by the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD,—I think the hon. gentleman acted very wisely in drawing up this Bill as a branch of the criminal law, because it relates to that branch of the law. I would ask my hon. friend if he intends to refer the Bill to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think it should go to the Railway Committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Then I will not trouble the House with any remarks upon it at this stage except to say that I think the clause respecting the punishment of persons addicted to the use of liquor, is rather vague, and it would be difficult to obtain a conviction under it. However, if the Bill goes to the Railway Committee we can discuss that point there.

Mr. MILLS observed that it was somewhat singular to propose to send a Bill relating to the Criminal Law to the Railway Committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—merely asked the question.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he thought that as the Bill affected the Railway Companies it should go to the Railway Committee.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said that although it might be very convenient to make the Bill an amendment to the Criminal Law, the House should remember that this Parliament had no power of declaring crimes in order to bring matters within their jurisdiction which were not properly within their jurisdiction.

Mr. STEPHENSON, in a few remarks, endorsed what had fallen from the hon. member for Carleton, and made mention of the fact that, greatly in consequence of the rapid movement of the trains from the railway stations in the part of the country he came from, several valuable lives had been lost; and it was only a few days ago that at the Chatham station one life was lost, and two other lives jeopardized, as not a few think from the rapid approach of a train to that station. He therefore hoped that the Government would, in the Bill just introduced, provide some clause whereby the evils complained might be remedied.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD observed that one reason why this Bill should go to the Railway Committee was that it interfered with the position of the railway companies, and therefore it would be right that the companies should have an opportunity of being heard before the Railway Committee.

Bill read a first time.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD introduced a Bill, intituled, "An Act to amend the Act for the regulation of the Postal Service." He stated that it would be more convenient for him to make the explanations upon the Bill when it came up for the second reading, because in the meantime members would have the Bill in their hands, and would be in a position to discuss it. He would therefore postpone any remarks upon it until it came up for the second reading.

Bill read a first time.

PRESERVATION OF THE PEACE IN THE VICINITY OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE introduced a Bill intituled, "An Act to amend the Act for the better preservation of the peace in the vicinity of Public Works." He stated that the object of this Bill was simply to extend the authority which the Government now had to prohibit the sale of liquor, and to take other measures for the preservation of public order in the vicinity of Public Works. At present that authority was confined to certain classes of public works, and it was proposed in this Bill to extend it to other classes.

Bill read a first time.

SUITS AGAINST THE CROWN.

Mr. IRVING introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to provide for the Institution of Suits against the Crown by Petition of Right, and respecting Procedure in Crown Suits." He explained that the object of the Bill was to provide means of settling disputes between contractors and the Government by a judicial process, and thus avoid any suspicion of partiality on the part of the Government in the settlement of such disputes.

Bill read a first time.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS' ACT.

Mr. COOK introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections' Act of 1874." He explained that the object of the Bill was to give the judge trying any election case four days to make his report to the SPEAKER. Under the present Act the Judge was required to report immediately, and he knew of cases where considerable inconvenience had arisen from that omission in the law.

The Bill was read a first time.

EXPULSION OF RIEL.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Before the House proceeds to the other business of the day I desire to intimate the course that I propose to take with reference to the expulsion of Mr. RIEL, who is at present the member elect for Provencher. On Wednesday the 10th instant the final sentence of outlawry was pronounced in the Court of Queen's Bench in Manitoba, and upon the same day the formal record of the sentence was forwarded to the Secretary of State. I think it is the most convenient method, and one that perhaps will best place upon our Journals the precedent for any future action, to have that formal sentence laid upon the table of this House, and to base upon it the motion for expulsion, precisely as was done in the Imperial Parliament in the case of O'DONOVAN ROSSA. In that case Mr. GLADSTONE first laid the judgment of the court on the table, and then made his motion in accordance with the fact that was established by the judgment, namely, that he had ceased to be qualified to be a member of the House. He hoped that course in the present case would commend itself to the hon. gentlemen opposite and to the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I think the proposition made by the hon. gentleman is the best course to be adopted, and I have no doubt it will meet the views of all those who think RIEL ought to be expelled.

SANITARY BUREAU.

Mr. BROUSE inquired whether the Government intend establishing a Sanitary Bureau in connection with one of the Public Departments, and if not, do they propose any legislation on the subject during the present session?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government had given a great deal of attention to the whole subject of vital statistics, as well as to general statistis with a view to determine whether they could see their way to introduce a measure of a comprehensive character during this session; but the difficulty of reconciling the local and general powers of the Government had operated so as to place a very serious obstacle in the way of carrying out what he was very desirous of doing. While up to the present time he had not given the matter up, he had been compelled to postpone the introduction of any measure on the subject.

COMMON CARRIERS.

Mr. YOUNG inquired whether the Government have under consideration and propose to lay before Parliament this session, a Bill similar to the Imperial Act in force in Great Britain regulating the rights and defining the liabilities of common carriers by land and water?

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the subject was under the consideration of the Government, and he was not prepared now to give an answer to the question.

RAILWAY CARRYING TRADE.

Mr. OLIVER said he supposed the answer given to his hon. friend from South Waterloo would be the same that would be given to him; but he would, nevertheless, ask whether it is the intention of the Government during this session, to introduce a measure to regulate the Railway Carrying Trade of the Dominion, in accordance with a promise made during the last session of this House?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said his hon. friend from Oxford had been very anxious during the last few years, to introduce a measure establishing a pro rata charge upon railways. He might say that the Government considered it impossible, as it would be unjust, to introduce any measure that would carry that principle out in the sense contemplated by his hon. friend's bill. So they were not prepared to do what the hon. gentleman asked. They would not resist any fair modification of the existing regulations, and, indeed, they had it in their power to enforce uniform charges in a certain sense; but in the sense proposed by the hon. member it would be impossible to enforce a pro rata system for goods and passengers.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. DOMVILLE inquired whether it is the intention of the Government to purchase the property in the harbour of St. John, N. B., of FRANCIS FERGUSSON, Esquire, for the purpose of a deep water terminus for the Intercolonial Railway, or for any other purpose?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the question was one that would require a good deal of explanation in order to give it a complete answer. He had directed the Chief Engineer to make enquiries as to the value of the property in the vicinity of what is known as RANKIN'S wharf, and there was a report upon the subject in the Departments, but no resolution had been arrived at in the matter.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked if the report could be laid upon the table, as it would save further questions.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government would not bring the report down at present, but he had no objection if his hon. friend would call at the office and see it.

GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. WOOD inquired what measures have been taken to secure a connection of the Georgian Bay branch of the Canada Pacific Railway with the Eastern Railway system; and whether it is the intention of the Government to aid a line running south to connect with lines terminating on the shores of Lake Ontario; and whether the Government purposes to lay on the table any papers on the subject; and, if so, when?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the measures taken were to advertise for tenders for the construction of the road from the mouth of French River to the south-east side of Lake Nipissing, a distance of some 85 miles, and to subsidize the road from that point to some point in the vicinity of Douglas and Pembroke. It was not the intention of the Government at present to ask aid to any line running south, as it would effect no object. As to the papers being laid on the table, the Government were not bound by the Railway Act to ask the approval of the House of the contract for the branch, but, in conformity with their general policy, it was their intention to lay that contract upon the table and solicit the approval of the House. The tenders would also be laid upon the table, and the Order in Council granting the subsidy to the Canada Central Railway. The contract for steel rails would also be laid upon the table, and he hoped to be able to lay all these papers before the House to-morrow or next day.

GRAVING DOCK AT ESQUIMAULT.

Mr. DECOSMOS inquired whether the Government, since the close of the last Session of Parliament, has again finally agreed to grant as a bonus to the Province of British Columbia, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars to aid in the construction of a first-class Graving Dock at Esquimault?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government had come to no other decision than that arrived at previously. The sum of $250,000 for the construction of the Graving Dock, would be advanced as the works proceeded.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH THE WEST INDIES.

Mr. YOUNG enquired what arrangements have been made to secure regular steam communication between Canada and the British and Spanish West Indies; and if none, what further steps are proposed to accomplish the important object in view?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD said the matter was now engaging the attention of the Government, and when a conclusion had been arrived at, the House would be informed.

IMMIGRATION OF MENONITES.

Mr. YOUNG inquired what steps have been taken, if any, to induce a further immigration of Menonites from Russia to the Province of Manitoba or any other part of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the steps taken last year, he was happy to say, had resulted in great success. His hon. friend from Compton was the first to initiate the movement in this direction, and last year a large proportion of the money lent to the Menonites in Manitoba had been repaid. A deputation of the leading Menonites in the Province of Ontario visited Ottawa a few weeks ago and represented that 900 families in Russia were willing to come to Canada this year, but they were of the poorer class, and were not possessed of the considerable sums of money which these people usually brought to the country. The deputation, therefore, solicited from the Government an advance of $100,000 to enable them to emigrate, the deputation becoming personally responsible for the repayment of this amount in ten annual instalments. The Government considered the project favourably and proposed to ask a loan of $100,000 and $70,000 for transportation. He had no doubt the investment would be a good one, and that every cent of the money would be repaid to the Government, while there would be added to the population of the country a large number of the best emigrants.

CONSTRUCTION OF LIFE BOATS.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) inquired whether it is the intention of the Government to put a sum in the Estimates of this year for the construction of Life-boats to be used in the several Harbours of the great Lakes for the purpose of rescuing the lives of shipwrecked mariners and others?

Hon. Mr. SMITH said it was not the intention of the Government to have Life-boats in all the harbours, but to provide them at those points where they would be most useful. He would be happy to receive any suggestions from his hon. friend as to the points desirable.

HARBOUR OF TORONTO.

Mr. WILKES, in moving an address to His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL for a copy of the Engineer's report on the condition of the harbour of the city of Toronto, and also for copies of Orders-in-Council, if any, concerning proposed improvements of the same, said it would be in the remembrance of members of the former Parliament that in 1873 a sum was placed in the estimates for the survey of Toronto harbour, during which year, however, no expenditure was made upon the appropriation. The Government in 1874 provided a similar amount, and it was now reported that during the past summer a survey had been made. It was important in order that no time must be lost, that during the winter season the report should be laid on the table of the House, and printed. He was not in sympathy with those who were continually bringing local questions before the House, and trying to magnify them into the importance of Dominion questions, because he was quite aware that the principle was unlimited in its application. The city of Toronto had not been upon any occasion since Confederation, and for a great number of years before, an applicant for the expenditure of money on its harbour or upon any other of its public works. It had invested a very large sum on the building of the Esplanade, and issued its debentures for the purpose of improving the harbour. All this expenditure had been borne by the municipality itself. From the fact, however, that for a number of years the encroachment made by the washings of the lake on the harbour had been neglected, and it was at present quite out of the power, in his judgment, and in the judgment of competent engineers, that the Local Board of the city should deal with the question. He supposed most members of the House were aware that the harbour of Toronto was one of two harbours on the lake coast which had always been considered as suitable for harbours of refuge. The first of these, after leaving the harbour of Kingston, was Presque' Isle, which was found, he believed, to be excellent, but from the fact of there being no considerable population at the place, that it was practically out of the way and not without some difficulty of approach during certain winds, it had not been much used. Between the harbour and the upper part of the lake there was no harbour of refuge but Toronto. This fact was the reason why he brought the matter under the consideration of the House. He need not refer to the former reports upon the harbour, nor the original report made by BOUCHETTE in 1793, but it had been asserted that the harbour of Toronto was the best natural harbour on the Great American Lakes. The formation was a peculiar one, and gave a harbour of about four miles long and two wide. It was a matter of dispute how it was originally formed and he would merely mention that it was supposed by those who had given it the best attention that the beach called Scarboro' Heights had been gradually worn away, and that the matter driven from that formed a bar opposite the City of Toronto. This gradually filled up until it formed an island, and it afterwards became a peninsula. During the last ten years the action of the lake had made a breach at the eastern end of about three quarters of a mile wide, and the formation was again turned into an island. The effect of this was that the matter which formerly went to make up the island was now drifted into the basin, and it was the opinion of the best engineers that within twenty years or less, the basin would be entirely filled up. He had a paper before him on this subject, published by an officer who had been resident upon the island for a long time, which showed pretty clearly that if something had been done in the matter several years ago, to arrest the progress of this destruction, the harbor would not have been in its present danger. To give some idea of the expense the harbor had been to the Local Board, he might say that within the last twenty years $1,156,000 had been spent upon it, a considerable portion of which had been contributed by the Harbor Commissioners and from the local rates. The harbor dues and other receipts by the Commissioners amounted to an average of $18,000 a year, and dredging and other expenditures amounted to about a similar sum; indeed the income and expenditure for the last year balanced one another to within about eight dollars, and so there was no surplus revenue whatever. As to the magnitude of the traffic, he might state for the information of the House that the number of vessels entered inward and outward for the past two years was 2,833, and a considerable proportion of the same were steam vessels. He thought that it would be admitted that a harbor of this description was of some public importance, and that it should not be allowed to be destroyed, and that when the report of the engineer was brough down, the Government would be able and willing, in a liberal spirit, to devise some plan by which this destruction might be effectually prevented. The Harbor Commissioners had the power to issue a certain amount of debentures, but the result of this would only be to necessitate the levying of an increased tax upon each entry into the port, which would have a depressing influence upon the traffic. And, further, from the fact that the port was largely used as a harbour of refuge, it was considered to have a fair claim on the attention of this House. He thought, notwithstanding the large expenditure for railways, that it would be conceded our waterways, which were now having such enormous amounts expended on them, should be kept in good condition. The deepening of the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals would be of comparatively small value unless the harbours were maintained. The Eastern gap of Toronto harbour was some seven feet deep in the channel, and on a very large extent of it there was probably five feet of water. He was not an engineer, and he was not prepared to anticipate the report of the engineer, but he was in a position to say that if something were not speedily done to arrest the destruction of the bar of the harbour, great expense would be incurred. He was not prepared to lay the blame for this state of affairs on any particular quarter, but would only say that the harbour had been neglected, and consequently would cost much more now to repair it than if it had been attended to some time ago. He hoped that in bringing down the report the Government would be able to give the House some idea of whether they would do anything to prevent the destruction of the harbour.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was no objection to the motion, but he regretted that he was unable to give his hon. friend any assurances with regard to the course the Government would take in the matter. The explorations made this year were of a very thorough character, and revealed the extent of the destruction which had been going on in the harbour for about ten years. The harbour was formed by a huge sand bar extending from one end of the city to some distance beyond the other end, and wherever a channel had been broken through it by the force of the sea, the sand banks were continually shifting. Storms from different directions formed sand banks in places altogether different from where they might have been settled before. The engineer had reported a plan involving a cost of between three and four hundred thousand dollars to carry it out. The Government could not think of entering upon such enormous expenditure without having further surveys made and plans prepared, and it would be necessary to have further explorations made after the present session. The Government could only take such means as they possessed to keep the channel dredged, by which vessels could have access to the lake. That could be done this year, but he did not think the Government would be justified in entering upon a large expenditure this year.

Mr. WILKES said the dredging last year had been done by the Harbour Commissioners and cost $13,000, but they had not constructed the crib works necessary to arrest the destruction of the harbour. If the Government were prepared during the present session to say whether a stone and crib work would be sunk next summer to aid in the formation of the bar again, it would be of very great importance to know it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is precisely the crib work that would cost the $300,000.

Mr. COOK said he had an opportunity a few years ago to examine Toronto harbour, in connection with the buoying. It was considered by some members of the Board of Commissioners then that as the harbour commenced at Scarboro' Heights, and extended West, the people of Toronto should not be jealous, but let the people of Oakville have the use of it for some time and gradually it would work back again.

Mr. WOOD said he had always looked upon this as a local work. He did not think it could be regarded as a harbor of refuge, and consequently the Government could not expend money upon this work. The people of Toronto levied a toll upon vessels entering and leaving the harbour, and he was quite satisfied if they would call it a local work, and make it a good harbour, they could collect tolls enough there to keep it in good order. So far as Hamilton was concerned, they did not come begging for assistance. The city had a harbour of its own, and kept it in good order. If the people of Toronto could not manage local works let them go to Hamilton for an example, instead of looking to the Government for assistance.

Mr. WILKES said the channel through the bar between Burlington Bay and the Lake had been cut by the Government, and a nominal toll levied on vessels. That toll was still further reduced for the benefit of the enterprising citizens of Hamilton, and the House would perceive how disinterested the hon. member was in the advice he had given on this subject.

Mr. WOOD said the tolls had paid for the improvement several times over.

The motion was carried.

THE MEMBER FOR PROVENCHER.

Mr. BOWELL asked leave to withdraw his motion for the reading of the entry of the Journals of 31st March and 9th of April, 1874, relating to the examination of Attorney-General CLARK, Detective HAMILTON and Policeman MCVEITY; and also his resolution for the expulsion of LOUIS RIEL, Member of the House of Commons for the Electoral District of Provencher, in the Province of Manitoba. In doing so, he said after what had fallen from the leader of the Government on this important question, he would not press his motions, because the result of the Government measure was the same as what he desired to accomplish. He had seen it charged that in discussing this matter he had done so in a savage manner. If so, it was only in repeating and reading the declarations which had been made by gentlemen who now occupied seats on the opposite side of the House, when they were in opposition. It was also asserted that he had stated there was no difference in the circumstances surrounding this unfortunate question now and when it was brought up a few months ago. He was sure when the charge was made it was made in forgetfulness of the facts of the case, because he had pointed out to this House that there was a very great change in the gentlemen on the Treasury benches, and to that change he attributed greatly the change in their sentiments. He had nothing more to say on this point further than to hope that ere many days the Government would take the position that had been indicated by the Premier, and that a writ would be issued in order that Provencher might be properly represented in this House.

The motions were dropped.

JUVENILE MILITARY EDUCATION.

Dr. BROUSE moved the appointment of a Select Committee to report upon our present system of military drill, with the view to ascertain if some improvement may not be effected therein. He said, in accordance with the notice placed on the paper, I desire to draw the attention of the House to our present system of military drill, with the view of recommending the introduction of juvenile military education into our schools, believing that it bears a most important relation to the future growth and stability of our country. We find yearly that the public debt is largely increased, and that the taxes bear more heavily upon the taxpayers, while at the same time from the extent of our domain and the many public improvements that necessarily must be made, our Finance Minister can scarcely promise us even in the far future any diminution in this respect, but rather on the contrary, an additional accumulated financial burden. Hence any legitimate means that can be devised whereby our yearly expenses can be diminished should meet the earliest attention and active consideration of those who legislate for the benefit of the country. Year after year this House has voted I might say ungrudgingly, large sums of money to keep up a militia system, which in my mind has not accomplished the object desired. This large sum voted for this special purpose has in some years consumed one-twelfth of the net aggregate taxation of the Dominion. During the year of 1872, when no disturbance threatened our borders, one and a half million of dollars were voted for militia purposes, and during the past year our Finance Minister called for one million dollars for military expenses. Feeling that a remedy can be given to some extent for this excessive drain upon our resources, and at the same time not lessening the physical and national strength of the country but on the contrary adding largely to them in the future, it is with this view that I call the attention of the House, and the consideration of the Government to the question of Juvenile Military Education in our Schools. This question of Military Instruction in our Schools has received considerable attention from many of the wisest scholars and best statesmen. The Governments of the old countries and also of the United States have turned the national thought to juvenile military training. In 1860 a Royal Commission was appointed in England to report upon the state of popular elementary education in that country. Some of the ablest men, such as the late Duke of NEWCASTLE were selected to act on that Committee. The result of their labours contained in six large volumes, is exceedingly interesting and instructive, and has made a deep impression upon the public mind in England. In discussing this question the House will pardon me for frequently alluding to this report as well as to a treatise written by a Government officer, who has devoted much time to the Militia of our country. Attached to that report we find this important statement, the production of Mr. CHADWICK. Probably throughout Great Britain no person is more entitled to consideration or has done more for social reform than Mr. CHADWICK. He has left on record these valuable conclusions "That too much time is devoted to book instruction in our schools and too little to the physical training of the pupil. That the mind is overworked; the body insufficiently exercised. That book-work is generally prolonged much beyond the capacity of the pupil to the injury alike of his physical and mental powers. He further asserts that it is demonstrable, nay, that it has been demonstrated by actual experiment, that by employing in the physical training of the pupils, more particularly in systematic military drill, a portion of the time now uselessly or hurtfully mis-spent on books, incalculable benefits, physical, moral, intellectual and economical will result to the persons taught, and, as a matter of course, also to the nation." I fully endorse here the statement thus enunciated by so eminent a statesman. It has been and is to-day not only a national mistake but a universal error to compel the tender child to quietly sit for six or more hours, urging them to fix their thoughts and attention upon what to many of them is an uninteresting subject, while the physical developement is not promoted, but actually retarded. I would here remark that intimately connected with the subject of my motion is the question, What is the amount of time, the number of hours per day, during which children may be profitably employed in acquiring mental instruction?—or, in other words, what are the limits, physical and mental, of the tender child during his school days? Mr. SPEAKER, few of us fully appreciate the importance of this national question and the bearing it has upon the future development of the country. Our hospitals, penitentiaries and charitable institutions would afford a history of overwhelming evidence of a defective system of too much early mental and too little physical development. I lay down the broad principle, without fear of contradiction, that the education of the youth should be of a mixed character. That the physical should be associated with the mental and that the youth will acquire knowledge more rapidly and thoroughly when a portion of the time is devoted to physical development. I am aware that many may be found who naturally possess a vigorous constitution, and may devote their entire time to the close studies without impairing their general health, and even succeed in becoming accomplished scholars, and yet not impair their constitutions. Still it is a sad reality that does not require the testimony of medical men to corroborate, that the continued strain of the mental powers of the youth without corresponding physical exercise greatly weakens the youth both of body and mind. An eminent writer, Dr. SCREIBER, has emphatically demanded:—"How are our children brought up? Is it according to the laws of nature?" Then with equal emphasis he declares it is not, or else we should not see so many of our youth who were rosy and healthy before going to school, become pale and bloodless after attending school. Another writer adds:—"Nature commands children to romp and play just as she does young colts and lambs. Pen them up in school, fetter their limbs, shut them out from God's sunshine and vivifying breezes, and what do we make of them? Their physical integrity is certainly impaired, and also their intellectual capacity is equally caused to suffer." Dr. RAY, who has had large experience in mental disease, and who in consequence is acknowledged one of our best authorities on this subject, writes in this manner:—"I have said that insanity is rarely an immediate effect of hard study at school. But if the whole mental history of the patient were clearly unfolded to our view, we should often find, I apprehend, at a much earlier period, some agency far more potent in causing the evil, than the misfortune, or the passion, or the bereavement, or the disappointment which attracts the common attention. Among the remoter agencies in the production of mental disease, I doubt if any —except hereditary defects—is more common at the present time than excessive application of the mind when young." Other eminent authorities can readily be added to corroborate the truth of my proposition that too much culture is usually attached to the mental and too little to the physical development, and that the youth can accomplish more in the acquisition of knowledge even when a portion of the time is devoted to varied exercises. Admitting, therefore—what in my mind cannot be successfully contradicted, we look for the natural remedies for the evil, which is national. They are to be found: 1st, in a reduction to the proper limits of the time set apart in schools for book instruction; and 2nd, in systematical physical training of the children. Mr. CHADWICK, in his admirable paper, placed before the commission, and already referred to, asserts and the testimony of some of the most intelligent witnesses gave similar evidence—that the ordinary school hours may be reduced one half without in the slightest degree diminishing the amount of book instruction acquired by the pupil in a given time. Without accepting this proposition to its full extent, it may be laid down as an axiom that such instruction ceases to become profitable, and should therefore cease when the child is no longer able to give his entire attention to the subject that is taught. The instant the pupil becomes tired and fatigued, that instant he loses the power of careful attention. Everything done after that is either unprofitable or hurtful—it is establishing a habit of listlessly skimming over the lesson, or unconsciously looking at his book without digesting its meaning, and eventually becomes fatal to his future prosperity. I might extend this line of argument to show that much of the time employed in the school is positively injurious to the mental capacities of the overworked child, as also to the physical powers, but will merely assert what we have endeavored to prove and what we believe to be the aim and object of a thorough and practical system of education. It is to secure the development and healthy growth of the entire man, of all the powers and faculties, physical and intellectual. In my remarks I do not desire to be understood as casting any reflection upon our school system. I speak more particularly of that in the Province with which I am familiar—the Province of Ontario—but on the contrary will add that we have just reasons as Canadians to be proud of our schools; and when the principle of military training becomes adopted for the physical development of our sons, then we may boast of possessing the most perfect system for the entire education of the youth on either continent. Having a full conviction of the truth as expressed in my first proposition, that a successful education should be mixed and be both physical and mental, I will now call the attention of the House to what I consider is the best kind of physical training for our schools. This exercise should not be too severe. The tendency of the child is to over exert himself when engaged in the ordinary sports where gymnastics are practiced. An eminent author writes, "That during the period of growth, great fatigue injures the general health. But even when gymnastic exercises are so managed as to avoid this inconvenience, and when they succeed in imparting to the boy an extraordinary degree of muscular development, I am perfectly convinced that the natural adjustment of the functions is thus prevented. For, however well fitted the frame of the youth may be for feats of agility, nature has not adapted it for strength, the attainment of which she defies until the period of growth is passed; and consequently her plans are deranged when muscular strength is artificially and prematurely obtained." Mr. CHADWICK advocates the military drill for occupying a portion of the time taken from book instruction as the best kind of physical training for the scholars. The paper which he submitted to the Commissioners contains the evidence of a number of intelligent witnesses, principally school teachers and military men, most of whom speak of the results produced in school where military drill had actually been tried. He triumphantly appeals to the Committee as establishing the great value of military drill in our schools as regards the present welfare of the pupil and the wider interests of the nation. He contends that the evidence clearly shows where this system has been adopted a salutary and moral improvement. It must be apparent to every hon. member that the drill proposed would have a salutary effect upon our youth, particularly when the constitution is weakened by mental application, or through defective organization, and that the tendency would be to correct those congenital bodily defects which are the source of so much anxiety to parents. WORDSWORTH has truly said —" the child is father to the man, for man received the heritage of vigour, or debility of health or illness, which his childhood bequeathed to him, and we cannot be too careful in watching over this period of life." Again, as regards the moral—no doubt systematized drill gives an early initiation to all that is implied in the term discipline : viz., duty, order, obedience to command, self-restraint, punctuality and patience. On the second chief topic as regards the interests of the nation, Mr. CHADWICK argues that the general introduction of the drill has established the following results proved on practical evidence, of officers and teachers engaged in the drill :—1st, That military drill is more effectively and permanently taught in the juvenile stages than during adult stages ; 2nd, That at school it may be taught most economically as not interfering with productive labour, and that from 30 to 40 boys may be taught the military drill per week as cheaply as one man is now taught, that the whole juvenile population may be drilled completely in the juvenile stage as economically as the small part of it is now taught imperfectly on recruiting, or in the adult stage ; 3rd, That the drill when made generally prevalent will eventually accomplish, in a wider and better manner the objects of volunteer corps, which as interrupting productive occupation is highly expensive, rendering all such volunteer forces dependent on fitful zeal and eventually comparatively ineffective ; that the juvenile drill if made general will accomplish better the object even of the Militia, that the juvenile drill will abate diffidence in Military efficiency, and will spread a wider predisposition to a better order of recruiting for the public service, and will produce an immensely stronger and cheaper defensive force than by the means at present in use or in public view. That it is more lasting when taught in our schools, and is not easily forgotten. The drill when acquired in youth becomes part of the man in years. When thoroughly learned in youth, it is like swimming, riding or skating—it remains a permanent acquisition. And, lastly, that the means of producing this defensive force, instead of being an expense, will be a positive gain to the productive power and value of the labor of the country. We find prominently proved in that evidence, which has been most exhaustive, a singular unanimity among the teachers of the schools where the experiment has been tried—that they all consider the drill as an invaluable help to them in enforcing the school discipline. And they ascribe the usefulness of drill in this particular, to the habits of order, punctuality, of prompt unquestioning obedience, and of respect for their superiors, which the boys necessarily acquire during their lessons in drill. Indeed, several instances are adduced by Mr. CHADWICK'S witnesses, where the Military drill having been from one cause or another discontinued in a school, the spirit of insubordination became such that the unhappy master was compelled to re-establish the drill in order to restore the discipline in the school. I think sufficient has been shown to establish the proposition already made, that advantageous and important results may be expected to flow both to the individual pupil and to the nation by the introduction of an efficient military drill in the general system of our school education. That military drill can be taught to boys at school more effectively and economically than in after life is a proposition which none would be disposed to seriously dispute. The teachings of the youth follow the man through life. The drill learned by the boy at school may be recalled when any future occasion demanded. I will now draw the attention of hon. members to the bearing this question of military drill in our schools would have upon the national defence. As nearly as I can compute the number of boys attending school in the Dominion, we have about 500,000. A writer, who has devoted considerable attention to this subject, considers that one-fifth of this number may by one cause or another be incapacitated from drill ; still after making this deduction and even an additional allowance of 20 per cent we would have 300,000 boys in our schools learning military drill if the system were unanimously adopted. At the end of ten years we might reasonably expect three-fourths of a million of young men who had undergone a regular course of drill; and a very large proportion of whom would be capable of bearing arms, and if the necessity arose could with very little additional training constitute an educated and trained military defence. Let us now inquire what is the result of our present system of military instruction for which the taxpayers have contributed so liberally. I would not speak disparagingly of an organization with which I have been connected for many years, and in which I have striven to bear an humble part, but a sense of patriotism compels me to speak plainly and unmistakeably. The national loss under our present system of military drill is of so serious a character that I must condemn it. Of the number who constituted our military force and received the annual drill for the past few years, a large percentage are now citizens of the neighboring Republic. Of three companies who received regular instructions, residents of the town in which I reside, a large proportion have moved into the United States. The companies of the towns, particularly, have been composed of the floating population—men who are here to-day and away to-morrow. Nay, more, I almost hesitate to say it, but it can be shown that along the frontier when the eight or fourteen days' drill were ordered by the Government, that residents of the U. S. came across the St. Lawrence, joined our companies, put in their drill, received their pay, and returned to their homes beyond our borders. While such facts exist, and many more may be cited, I emphatically condemn the present system of military drill as an unsatisfactory return for the large amount of Dominion treasures that are annually voted by this House. The great point in all defects and all diseases is to be fully satisfied that a safe and successful remedy may be offered. I offer the remedy by adopting military education in our schools. It is then for us to inquire: Can we utilize our schools in imparting military instruction? In 1863 the Chief Superintendent of Education for the Province of Ontario, reported eighteen Grammar schools as partially adopting military education in their course of training. He adds that the Board of Common School Trustees in the City of Toronto have, with praiseworthy intelligence and public spirit, introduced a regular system of military drill among the senior male pupils of their schools. And, to give a practical opinion, Dr. RYERSON declares that the system of military drill can be easily introduced into the schools of all the cities, towns and villages in Ontario, and, perhaps, in some of the larger rural schools; and the military training of teachers in the Normal School, together with the large number of persons who are being taught in the Government Military School, afford great facilities for making military drill a part of the instruction given in the grammar and common schools referred to. In addition to this, I hold in my hand a very elaborate statement from the Inspector of High Schools for the Province of Quebec, Dr. MCLELLAN, which is too voluminous to read to the House, but I will read the following extract:—"There is too much time now devoted to mere intellectual training in the schools. Military drill would be a relief, a recreation, so that, while increased physical energy would be secured, and a knowledge of military matters highly important to the State, greater scholastic proficiency would be sure to follow; the jaded mind, relieved by a salutary and interesting physical discipline, would return to intellectual work with a quickened energy, which must secure more rapid progress in the ordinary studies of the curriculum. In a word, we should have in every respect better teachers, better pupils, better schools, and ultimately better men and better citizens." In the neighboring States this subject is engaging the anxious attention of the Governments, and military drill is likely to become a part of the system of education in all the public schools of their towns and cities. The Legislature of Massachusetts passed a resolution directing the State Board of Education to take into consideration the subject of .introducing an organization of scholars above the age of 12 for military drill and discipline. The Board appointed a Committee, of which the Governor of the State was chairman, to investigate the subject, and to enquire into the result of an experiment which had been tried for two or three years in one of the towns of the State—the town of Brookline. The result of the enquiry is thus stated in their report:—"The boys in the older classes can readily be selected from their playmates by the improvement of their forms. Habits of prompt, instant and unconditional obedience and also more fully and successfully inculcated by this system of instruction than by any other with which we are acquainted. A perfect knowledge of the duties of the soldier can be taught to the boys during the time of their attendance at the public schools, thus obviating the necessity of this acquisition after the time of the pupil has become more valuable. A proper system of military instruction in the schools of our Commonwealth would furnish us with the most perfect militia in the world; and we have little doubt that the good sense of the people would soon arrange such a system in all the schools of the State." The Committee also adds the following remarks, which are as applicable to our Dominion as they are to the State of Massachusetts :—"The public schools are maintained at the public expense in order to prepare youth for the duties of citizenship. One of these duties is to aid in the defence of the Government whenever and wherever assailed. Surely then there is no incongruity, no want of reason in introducing into the schools such studies and modes of discipline as shall prepare for the discharge of this equally with the other duties which the citizen owes to the State. But can this be done without detriment to progress in the other branches? Can it be done without loss of time? The Committee is satisfied that it can, and that thereby a large amount of practical knowledge and discipline in military affairs may be obtained, and at the same time a very great saving of time and labor be effected, which, under a system of adult training, would be withdrawn from the productive industry of the country." I will briefly allude to the system of military drill as taught in the schools of the Island of Jersey. Col. WILEY, himself an old soldier, and of the military department has long been an able advocate of the introduction of military drill in our schools. He alludes to the admirable system adopted in that island, of which he is a native, in these words:—"Under their military organization which has obtained for centuries there, every boy between the age of 14 and 16, is compelled to attend drill once a week—commodious drill sheds and competent drill instructors being provided for the purpose." He also observes that those who are charged with the responsible task of organizing our militia might possibly find it not unprofitable to enquire into the working of a system which has produced at a very trifling cost a militia probably unequalled in the world, and it will probably be found that the great secret of the success of that system lies in the early military drill of every boy upon the island I might extend my remarks by a still further reference to the Prussian system of military education—where every male youth must not only become conversant with the literature of his country but must also thoroughly learn the military drill—a system that has no doubt elevated Prussia to the proud position she occupies among the nations of Europe; but I will not trespass longer on the patience of the House. The Government has acted wisely in establishing a military school for educating young men as engineers and officers. The country has endorsed that action. Let them make an effort to arrange with the Local Governments for the introduction of juvenile military drill in the schools, and utilize those who graduate in the military schools as drill instructors in the normal and grammar schools of the country. In this way a large saving may be effected and a great work be accomplished. It is true, some difficulties may present themselves, inasmuch as school matters are under the control of the Provinces, but the Government looking to the great future of this Dominion can surely make some satisfactory arrangement for accomplishing an object of so much importance to the growth and stability of the country. The history of nations of the past is not the history of the nations of to-day, nor will it be the history of the nations for the future. When war was declared in the past, the Generals commanding the armies had time and opportunity to prepare them for the conflict. Not so at the present hour. The telegraph has annihilated space; the railroad has brought distant localites into close proximity, and the improvements in steam and water communication enable armies to be speedily landed upon distant shores. When the proclamation of war goes forth, almost immediately is heard the clash of arms. The nation best prepared for the conflict must be successful. This was clearly illustrated in the late

Dr. Brouse.

Franco-Prussian war. When France sent her army to the scene of war, her entire army marched ; but when the Prussian forces advanced, a reserve of her entire male population educated in drill were prepared to swell her ranks and do battle. Let us then read aright the history of the hour—let us legislate to inspire into the breasts of our young men the true spirit of patriotism and love of country. Let us introduce into our schools that juvenile military education, that will afford us a prepared educated defence which will successfully protect our homes and nationality should any future occasion demand.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said he did not rise to object to the motion of his hon. friend, nor to express any opinion upon the question of military drill. The hon. gentleman had given the House and the country a great deal of valuable information, but as the education of the youth of our country was under the control of the Local Legislatures, he (Mr. VAIL) feared that there might be some difficulty—perhaps almost insuperable—in carrying out the views so ably presented to the House by that hon. gentleman. He agreed to a great extent on what had fallen from his hon. friend, and he was sorry that more members of the House were not present to hear his able speech, and hoped that the hon. gentleman would during the recess visit various parts of the Dominion and deliver that speech or a similar one before our educational institutions. If he did so he would be entitled to the thanks of the whole country. He (Mr. VAIL) hoped that now his hon. friend had laid his views so ably before the House, he would allow the matter to stand over till next session. We had now at the head of the militia in this country a gentleman of very great ability, one from whom they expected a good deal in the direction of improvements in drill, and he thought he was not asking too much of his hon. friend when he asked him to let the matter stand over till next session. In the meantime he would take advantage of the information given the House by the hon. gentleman, and would also gather such additional information from our educational institutions as might be desired in the consideration of this subject. The question of military drill was one to which he himself had given considerable attention, and he had hoped that before Confederation, when the Provincial authorities had the whole matter under their control, many of the views of the hon. gentleman would be carried into effect. There were now difficulties in the way which did not exist then, and if the hon. gentleman would allow the matter to stand over, no doubt his views would receive careful consideration from the officer at the head of the militia, and by next session the Government would have such information on the whole subject as would place them in a better position to deal with these views.

Mr. ROCHESTER said he was greatly pleased with the speech of the hon. gentleman who had introduced this question to the notice of the House, and he believed that great advantage to the country would flow from the adoption of the system proposed in our common schools. However, he rose, not to discuss the question, but to make a suggestion which had been made to him by several parties connected with the volunteer force. It was to the effect that volunteers who performed the amount of drill required of them should be relieved of the burden of having to perform statute labour. Its performance involved the loss of a good deal of time, and some expense, because the small amount of pay they received from the Government was not adequate to cover the expenses which were generally incurred by the men, and he therefore thought the Government would do well to consider the propriety of relieving those men who assume these burdens of the duty of performing statute labour.

Hon. J.H. CAMERON said the House was very much indebted to the hon. member for South Grenville for having brought this matter so ably before the House. He was sure that the Committee that was asked for would be able to gather a good deal of valuable information on this important subject, and make many valuable suggestions which would be of great assistance to the Government in their future consideration of the question, and might pave the way for the adoption of the system proposed by the hon. member for South Grenville. The difficulties arising from the fact that the common school system was under the control of the Local authorities he thought could be met by a careful examination of the whole question by the Committee, which might lead to the Local Governments taking the matter up.

It was not very often that hon. gentlemen took so much trouble to gather together valuable information as the hon. gentleman had taken, and he was quite sure that if the speech of the hon. gentleman was followed up by a thorough investigation of the whole subject by a Committee of this House, that the way would be opened for the adoption of many of the views of the hon. gentleman. He hoped that the Government would see their way to granting a Committee, even supposing that Committee did nothing more than consider the difficulty which had arisen from the fact that common school education was within the jurisdiction of the Local House; for he believed if they took up that branch of the subject, that a way out of the difficulty might easily be found.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that the Government had no objection to the Committee being appointed, but they must object to being bound in any sense, by any conclusions which the Committee might report to the House respecting the system of drill. As the Minister of Militia had very properly pointed out, they were not in a position to make any promise of that kind, particularly as the new general officer who had been engaged by the Government was considering what improvements were best to be adopted in order to place the active Militia of the Dominion upon the best possible footing. It must also be remembered that the Government last session, with unanimous approval, decided to establish a military college in order to supply a complete system of education for staff officers, thus affording the means of ultimately supplying the entire force with educated officers. They hoped within a very few months to have that Institution opened. He might say—although he could not state what the suggestions were, that being a matter of confidential communication—that two or three entirely new suggestions had been made to the Government by the General Officer, which the Government had under consideration at present, with regard to some radical changes in the Military Institutions of the country. While this was under consideration, the Government would not like to be embarassed by the action of a Committee appointed by the House, otherwise there would be no objection to the appointment of the Committee, the Government, of course, reserving to themselves perfect liberty of action in reference to the matter, which, after all, must be brought up by the Government of the day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he was very glad that the hon. Premier had seen his way to the granting of the Committee with the understanding he had mentioned. Perhaps the motion as put was rather wide, and that there was substantial ground for the objection made by the First Minister, inasmuch as it was proposed that the Committee should consider and report upon the whole subject of Military Drill. If the hon. gentleman who had made the motion would confine the Committee to considering and reporting upon the system of Military Drill so far as it could be made applicable to the Common School system of the country, he thought it would be more satisfactory. If this suggestion was adopted, it would be well to have the subject taken up at once, so that the Government in their future dealing with it would have the benefit of the Committee's report. The hon. member for South Grenville had treated the whole question so ably and exhaustively that his speech, supplemented by the report of the Committee, would have great weight in the country, and no doubt would receive the careful attention of the various Provincial Governments. Of course there was the difficulty that the hon. Minister of Militia had pointed out, namely, that the common school system was under the control of the Provincial authorities. Still, when the Committee should submit their report, if the Government saw its way clear to adopt any of their recommendations, or to take up the subject at all, they might press it upon the Provincial Governments, and secure their co-operation in carrying the proposed system into operation. After the system was once adopted, then the Dominion Parliament might be called upon to supply a certain quantity of arms to the different schools for the purpose of drill. However, he was not at all sure—indeed he would be very sorry to suppose—that this Parliament had not the power under the Constitutional Act to force military drill on the youth of the country. If under the new system which his hon. friend had spoken of, it was considered expedient, the Government could make the training of our youth in military drill at the public schools a part of the system of Militia and Defence, and thus bring it within their jurisdiction. However, that course was in the last degree inadvisable; it would be much better if by concert between the Dominion and Provincial Governments the introduction of military drill into our public schools could be effected. The proposed system could then be introduced as a part of the system of education, and the Dominion Government would, he presumed, be obliged to supply the requisite arms. He would be very glad, the motion being changed as he had suggested, if the Committee were appointed so that the Government and the public might have the advantage of their report in the future consideration of the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had forgotten to refer to the suggestion of the hon. member for Carlton, that those volunteers who undergo the annual drill should be relieved from statute labour. That was a subject not within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament, and the only way they could carry out the suggestion would be by voting money to pay for the statute labour of these men, which they were not likely to do.

Mr. YOUNG said if the motion was confined to the general question of military drill, he had no objection to it. In fact, such a Committee might be highly desirable, seeing that a very large amount of money was spent in militia matters, the return for which was not very apparent. At the same time, there was no doubt that the question of military drill in the common schools was one which ought properly to come before the Local Legislatures. He was of opinion that in the public schools of Ontario at least there was already such a multiplicity of studies prescribed that it would be impossible to add to them with any advantage. In fact, he believed that the public schools in Ontario at the present time were suffering immensely, from the fact of there being such a multiplicity of studies that the more useful parts of education were neglected. If, in addition to the present programme, the study of military drill was added, it would, in his opinion, render the teaching still more inefficient than it was at present. Many of the people in his section of the country, including some of the most respectable, had strong feelings against introducing drill into the common schools. For himself, he was by no means convinced that any advantage would be gained by the adoption of the proposed system, and, as the matter was one which did not properly belong to the Dominion Parliament, he thought the motion ought to be restricted to the general question of military drill, without reference to its being introduced into the public schools. If the hon. gentleman would amend his motion in that direction he would support it, but he would object to it if it was put to the House in its present shape.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he was opposed to an expensive system of drill. The country had already enough of burdens upon it without having to pay for a system of school drill. He, for one, would prefer to see the hon. gentleman introduce a Bill to prohibit the importation and sale of fire-arms in this country except on certain conditions. The youth of this country already had commenced to use fire-arms. He might point to an instance which occurred the other day at Caraquet, in New Brunswick, in which, by the injudicious selling of fire-arms the people had got possession of them, and some men were shot. He certainly was opposed to the idea of supplying the boys of our schools with fire-arms. On this occasion therefore he was happy to be able to coincide with the views of the hon. member for South Waterloo.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) said this subject was of sufficient importance to engage the attention of the Government, and they should take the responsibility of dealing with it. The subject appeared to him to involve two very important considerations. First—What was the extent of the power of this House with regard to legislation on this subject—whether they had the right to force military drill on the youth of our country in the public schools, or whether that power was exclusively under the control of the Local Legislatures? Secondly, if this House had the power, whether it was advisable to adopt the plan proposed, or if the House had not that power, whether a Committee should be appointed, to report upon the question as to whether it be desirable to urge upon the Local Governments the adoption of the proposed system? For these reasons he hoped the hon. member would see the propriety of withdrawing his resolution. The attention of the Minister of Militia had been called to the subject by the hon. gentleman's speech, and he had promised to profit by it. For his own part he thanked the hon. member for South Grenville for the vast amount of information that he had laid before the House on this important subject, and which had made so deep an impression upon his own mind that he was convinced that the Government should take the responsibility of dealing with the subject.

Mr. CASEY said he was very much pleased that the attention of the House had been called by the member for South Grenville to the question of military drill. It was not the first time that that hon. gentleman had brought up questions of that character, and the discussions evoked in times past had no doubt been beneficial in many respects. With regard to the present question, he partly agreed with the hon. member and partly disagreed with him. He believed it was quite established by the evidence that the hon. gentleman had laid before the House that military drill was a very useful method of obtaining gymnastic training in the public schools, as well as forming habits of obedience and self-control in the pupils; but he did not think it had been established that military drill in the public schools would really be of any great benefit to the militia force of the country. He did not understand from the hon. gentleman that he wished to have the scholars in the schools armed with the ordinary weapons, and therefore they could only practice the manual exercises and general elements of drill. That was only part of the duties of volunteers. The use of weapons was a very important part of their instruction, and what was still more important was practice in camping out, and drilling in companies and battalions. In his opinion, even if this House had the power of enforcing Military Drill in the Common Schools, it would be found of such very slight benefit to the Volunteer force of the country, and would involve an expenditure from which they would receive very little revenue. He thought that the money which would be required under the proposed system would be more usefully spent in extending the Military exercises in camp. For those reasons he hoped the member for South Grenville would withdraw his resolution. The attention of the Government having been drawn to the question, he supposed the hon. gentleman had attained the object which he desired, and it would no doubt lead to more attention being paid to the Militia force in the future.

Mr. MILLS said he had listened with a great deal of interest to the very able speech of the hon. member for South Grenville, and he had no doubt that everything that hon. gentleman had said with regard to the hygienic effects of military drill on the part of the pupils of public schools was quite correct. But how far it would benefit the country from a military point of view was entirely another question. He would not pretend to express any opinion on that subject, because he would not presume to express an opinion adverse to that of the hon. gentleman who had given very considerable attention to the subject. But he had the gravest doubts with regard to the advantages in a military point of view of the military drill, not merely of the children in the public schools, but of our volunteers as carried on for some time back. His own impression was that no very great advantage in a military point of view was to be derived from taking extraordinary pains to make our people efficient in that particular, and to prepare them for a contingency that was likely never to arise. One thing was certain that any very extraordinary efforts put forth by us in this direction would attract attention, and suggest similar efforts on the part of our neighbours; and moreover the system would be merely preparing the way for the ultimate introduction of some such system of military training as existed in Europe, which he was sure no one wished to see introduced on this continent. He was of opinion that in a country situated as we were not likely to be involved in war, and having a large demand upon our resources for ordinary public improvements, it was highly desirable to have our military affairs conducted as cheaply as possible, and therefore he thought that the best plan was that adopted by the Government last session, namely—to establish efficient military colleges, in which a few of our people could become thoroughly trained, and who would form the nucleus of a military force in time of necessity. He thought we could learn something from the experience of the United States in their civil war. The most efficient officers that country had were those who received their military training at West Point. He had no doubt whatever that military drill in the schools would secure ready obedience. He had no doubt that the military training of Prussia had had an important effect on the nation. What we required in a country like this, however, where we have popular institutions, was not so much a spirit of obedience as a spirit of self-reliance. There was nothing more wide apart than what we observed in Prussia and in this country, where the Anglo-Saxon and French races were settled. We had here a spirit of self-reliance, and a people who, altogether apart from the restraint of Government, exercised the habits of self-government. It was not so in Prussia, where there was a disposition to obey, it mattered not how arbitrary the law. However despotic the Government, there is no attempt to throw off this restraint. This was largely due, and it was the opinion of a few of the liberal men of the day in Prussia, who had contended for years against the system that prevailed there, that military training in schools had largely tended towards the establishment of arbitrary Government in Prussia. He could not agree with the observations which had fallen from the hon. member from Kingston, because he was disposed to stretch the powers we have under the constitution to an undue degree in the direction of authority. The hon. gentleman contended that if we have a Military force and Volunteers under this Government, we certainly had a right to provide for Military training in the schools. He did not think the Act relating to Military organization contemplated the drilling of persons under a certain age, and he did not think this House could apply to pupils attending the schools the provisions which referred to the Volunteer force of the country. There was no doubt that if it should be found advisable that the youth of the country should undergo a Military training, the Local Governments could be induced, to a very considerable degree, to co-operate with the Government here. For instance, if this Government should contribute a certain amount towards the maintenance of schools, the Local Governments might to a certain extent adopt this system of Military drill. He agreed with those that expressed the opinion that this matter ought to rest with the Minister of Militia, and that the Government ought to take the matter up and be held responsible for any legislation had upon the subject. While he had been much entertained, and had listened with very great attention to the able speech of the hon. member for South Grenville, he was not inclined to agree with him in the opinion that it would be to the advantage of this country that a system of Military drill should be introduced in our schools.

Mr. SCATCHERD said the question was not whether the system should be introduced into our schools, but whether an inquiry should be had to ascertain if it were proper it should be introduced, and for this reason he was very much in favour of the Committee moved for by the hon. member for South Grenville. This was a matter which should engage the attention of the House. They had heard to-day that the Government proposed to spend a large sum of money to bring into this country a class of emigrants who did not believe in defending the country at all, and the hon. member for South Waterloo seemed to indicate that the people of that country showed a similar disposition. There was, therefore, the greater necessity, on the part of the whole country, to prepare for emergencies. He (Mr. SCATCHERD) was not one of those who believed that the defence of the country might not be necessary at some time, and for this reason he believed that an inquiry of this kind should be held in a time of peace.

Mr. PLUMB said he had been very much gratified at the able and comprehensive speech of the hon. member for South Grenville, and the comments which it had elicited. If no other result followed, it certainly would have a good result. He could see no objection to the appointment of a committee for that purpose, and he could not exactly agree with the hon. member for South Waterloo and his friend the political philosopher from Bothwell, who believed that the time was coming when it would be necessary to prepare for the defence of the country. He, (Mr. PLUMB,) did not think that the time of universal peace had arrived, and he thought, at all events, it might be well to increase the military knowledge of our people. Though he did not believe that the proposed system of drill would be of very much service for the young, it would still give them some knowledge of military affairs. Beyond doubt this Parliament had control over the military organizations of the country, and he thought that in some way or other we might with perfect safety teach the young idea how to shoot, without subjecting those who might be in the range to being wounded by the practice. He had no doubt that manual exercise would improve the young, though camp drill would be out of the question. With the understanding that this Committee should merely make enquiries and suggestions he, for one, would like to see it struck. He was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. member for Bothwell say that the youth of this country should be taught self-assertion. For his part, he believed, that the difficulty lay directly the other way, and he was somewhat surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that in Prussia the system of drilling young men early in life had brought about to a certain extent the adoption of an arbitrary system of Government. The establishment of arbitrary rules in Prussia was long prior to the training of the Landwehr.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the House would conclude, after the remarks they had just heard, that much information would be necessary that they did not now possess before a conclusion could be reached on this subject. Hon. gentlemen had referred to the very great expense that the militia system was to the country, but he was very much afraid if this system were introduced without due consideration it would greatly add to that expense If he (Mr. VAIL) understood the matter, the first thing required would be an arrangement with Local Governments that the teachers employed in the common schools of the country should be qualified to drill the pupils. That would be necessary, otherwise the Dominion Government would be obliged to supply a drill instructor for each school. Arms and clothing would also be required and care taken to look after them. These alone would entail a large expense in addition to what the present system involved. After the remarks he had heard he thought the House would conclude to let the matter stand over until next Session.

Mr. OLIVER had a suggestion to make to the House, if the Committee should be appointed, and to the Government if it should not be appointed. It was evident from the remarks of the Minister of Militia that we need not expect a larger appropriation for this service this year than $1,000,000. It was impossible to drill 46,000 men—that was the number of volunteers on paper he believed—and to provide them with clothing and arms. That this number would have to be reduced to 25,000 was clear and evident. Now he believed that the Government ought to recognize independent companies in the various sections of Canada, providing them simply with their arms, leaving the men to provide themselves with clothing, and furnishing them with no pay for drill. In his own section of the country he knew the young men of the present time were most anxious to establish an independent cavalry company, and all they would require would be simply this — the Government to recognize them as a branch of the military force of the country, without paying for their drill or furnishing them with clothing, only providing them with arms. If no larger appropriation could be made than $1,000,000, and 46,000 volunteers were required, then it would be necessary to recognize such independent companies throughout the length and breadth of the land. With respect to military drill in schools, it was not a question for the Local Legislatures alone to deal with. It would be necessary to consult the municipalities also, for they contributed to the support of the schools. The people would be obliged to tax themselves more heavily than they did at present, and he was, therefore, of opinion that it would be impossible to carry out the recommendation of the hon. the member for South Grenville. Yet he could not see any harm the Committee could possibly do. They had merely to take the whole matter into consideration and make certain recommendations to the Government. If the Ministry should not see fit to act on these recommendations, the report would still be valuable to the people, and could be made use of in the future, if not at present. He hoped the Committee would be granted.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) said this was a subject in which he had taken a deep interest for several years. After the remarks of the Minister of Militia, however, he thought it might be left over till next year, though he could see no harm in granting the Committee. The present system was not satisfactory to the country, and he hoped there would be some changes made by the Minister of Militia this Session, before the Volunteers were called out again. He was glad to see that a large appropriation had been placed in the Estimates for the relief of loyal men who had defended this country in 1812. He was sure it would give satisfaction to the people, and that the Premier would receive the thanks of the people. There were many of the veterans of 1812 in his (Mr. Ross') own county who were now very old men. There were 600 of these men in this country still living, and $50,000 was not enough. He would like to see the amount doubled. He would refer to the question again when the Estimates came up. The present Volunteer system was not satisfactory to the country. There was not an adequate return for the amount expended on the Volunteers, and there were no such men turning out to drill now as those who went to the defence of their country a few years ago.

Hon. MALCOLM CAMERON said he was well aware he would find it difficult to get a seconder for the amendment he proposed to bring before the House. He would as soon think of teaching his child to drink whiskey or steal, as to be a soldier. He believed the tone of the world on that subject ought some time or other to change. Most people in this House, no doubt, professed to believe there would some day be a millenium, and so long as people believed there was necessity for fighting it would not come. His father had been a soldier and he (Mr. CAMERON) had as high an appreciation of his duty to his Queen and country as he had shown when it was absolutely necessary. But in this country, at least, we ought to be in favor of peace and universal brotherhood ; we ought to teach the doctrine we professed in our Christian religion, and not be constantly increasing the thought of war, the desire to fight, the idea that our children should be ready to resist and strike back blow for blow, to demand eye for eye, tooth for tooth, and blood for blood. The time had passed for that. He had told the previous Government, and stated in every contest in which he had been engaged, that the time had come when, owing to the peculiar situation of the country, our Government should endeavor to obtain a treaty of peace with Great Britain, United States and France. There was not a military man living who believed that Canada could be defended from the United States. Even if war took place between the United States and England, in which we were not concerned, Canada must be the battle-field. Was this a position in which we should be placed? The hon. member for Bothwell had referred to West Point. Perhaps our Military Academy might, like West Point, supply a training to young men who might head a rebellion to destroy the country. The time had come when the whole world was looking to the settlement of such disputes by arbitration. Our frontier was of such extent that it could not be defended in case of war, and we ought to place ourselves in such a position as we might at all times be neutral and not be involved in bloodshed. In contradistinction to his hon. friend's views, he would place a motion on the paper which he thought was more in accordance with the manner in which Christian Governments ought to act. He would move, seconded by Mr. FORBES, that all after the word "that" be struck out, and the following substituted:—

"That, so far from its being desirable that our youth should be taught in schools the art of war and a military spirit engendered, the doctrine of peace, love and universal brotherhood should be inculcated, and our Government would add greatly to its popularity if they would, by Ministerial delegation to the Mother Country, to the Government at Washington and the Government at Paris, to endeavour to obtain a treaty on the basis of decision by arbitration in case of any difficulty arising with any one of these powers, the same difficulty to be referred to a committee of four persons to be named by the other two."

Mr. COLIN McDOUGALL, (East Elgin), moved that the matter be left to the Government to be dealt with and that they be responsible for any legislation they might submit upon it.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said this was a vote of want of confidence after the declaration of the Premier that he had no objection to the Committee. The necessity of Military drill was evident when they found a spirit of mutiny at headquarters. The hon. gentleman was in rebellion against the Commander-in-Chief, and the Minister of Militia was at war with the Premier. On this occasion he (Sir JOHN) would follow the Premier.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had no doubt the hon. gentleman would follow the Government, but was afraid they could not depend on him long. His (Mr. MACKENZIE'S) statement was simply this—if the hon. member desired to pursue the subject in a certain way the Government would not object to it, but he entirely agreed with the views of the Minister of Militia that it was of comparatively little use to have this Committee appointed, and of no use at all according to the views of some of the gentlemen who had spoken.

Mr. BROUSE in consideration of the request of the Minister of Militia was willing to leave the matter in the hands of the Government.

The Amendment having been withdrawn the original motion was dropped.

The House adjourned at six o'clock p. m.

——:++:——

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, February 16th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

Hon. MALCOLM CAMERON introduced a bill to alter and amend the charter of the London and Canada bank.

Mr. MOSS introduced a bill to change the name of the Imperial Building, Saving and Investment Company to that of the Imperial Loan and Investment Company.

Mr. IRVING introduced a bill to extend and amend the law requiring railway companies to furnish returns of their capital, traffic and working expenditure.

TRIALS OF CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER introduced a Bill to amend the Act respecting Controverted Elections. He explained that the object of the Bill was to prevent the trial of election petitions during any Session of Parliament. The first section provides that in the computation of any delay allowed for any step or proceeding in respect of any such trial, review or repeal, or for the commencement of such trial under the next following election, the time occupied by any such Session shall not be reckoned. The second section provides that the trials shall go on from day to day without adjournment. This was to prevent such delays as had occurred in many of the election trials; in a great number of cases the trials had not yet been fixed.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON asked if the Bill contained a provision fixing a certain time when proceedings must be taken or the case dropped; because if it did not it should. Nothing could be more unfair than the law as it stood. A petition might be allowed to remain standing one, two or three years, according to circumstances and never brought to trial. He thought as the Hon. Minister of Justice was going to amend the law, it would be as well to give some attention to this particular point, in order that there might be a clause inserted requiring the petitioner to proceed or drop the petition. There were now cases a year old that had not been pressed. Instead of providing that trials should not go on during a session of Parliament, it would be better to require a petitioner to proceed whether Parliament was sitting or not, or drop the case. He hoped the Hon. Minister would consider this point.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the Bill did not contain such a provision, but he would be very happy to receive any suggestions the hon. member might wish to offer.

The Bill was read a first time.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMING HOUSES.

Mr. MOSS introduced a Bill for suppressing gaming houses and for punishing keepers thereof. He said he had the honour last session of introducing this Bill, but at so late a stage of the session it was impossible to make sufficient progress. He desired to re-introduce it this session, and he thought that the propriety of the legislation asked for would commend itself to every member of the House. It was sought by this Bill to give power to Police Magistrates and Commissioners of Police in a city or town, upon receiving a report, to authorize constables to enter any house, with force if necessary, that was reported as being a common gaming house; and subsidiary provisions were introduced into the Bill for the purpose of enabling this object to be carried into effect. The Act, as he explained last session, was adapted from the Imperial legislation on this subject, with some modification. He thought it was only proper to mention that the question had been raised as to the constitutionality of this act. It had been stated that some provisions, at any rate, which he desired to embody in the Act, were rather in the scope of Local than of Dominion legislation. He understood, though he had not had an opportunity of communicating with himself, that the Attorney-General of Ontario had expressed the opinion that legislation on this subject should be initiated in this House.

The Bill was read a first time.

FELONIES AND MISDEMEANOURS.

Mr. McDOUGALL (East Elgin) moved for leave to introduce a Bill for the more speedy trial in certain cases of persons charged with felonies and misdemeanours in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. SPEAKER said the hon. member had not given the necessary notice of his motion.

The motion was allowed to stand as a notice.

THE BUDGET.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, in moving the House into Committee of Supply, said :—

Mr. SPEAKER,—It is always a matter of some interest, after any considerable changes have been made in the tariff to examine how they have affected the year in which they occurred or succeeding ones; and probably on the present occasion somewhat more than usual interest may be attached to that subject, because those changes, as the House knows, were of rather an important character. It will also be my duty, on the present occasion, to give the House some explanations with regard to the loan negotiated last June in London, and I propose to take advantage of this occasion to briefly review the general financial position of the country, and to explain the mode which the Government think ought to be adopted to meet the very serious obligations in which we are involved. Now, Sir, as the House has been in possession of the Public Accounts since the first days of the Session, and as the Estimates do not require, I hope, any very great time to enable hon. members to understand them, I shall proceed without further preface to briefly review the condition of the financial year ending 30th of June, 1874. Perhaps for convenience it may be as well, instead of adopting the somewhat cumbrous form of "1873-74," to say when hereafter I refer to any year, "I mean the financial year terminating on 30th June, in the year named." Now, Sir, if hon. gentlemen will refer to that page of the Public Accounts containing a comparative statement of the receipts and expenditures from the commencement of Confederation to the present time, they will observe that in the expenditure for 1874 a total sum is set down of no less than $23,316,000 in round numbers, being an excess of about $4,140,000 over the expenditure of the year preceding. It will be well that I should enumerate the causes which have led to that very large and remarkable increase. These, Mr. SPEAKER, placed in round numbers before the House, are as follows : In the first place, an augmentation took place in the charges on interest on debt to the extent of $500,000. In the next place, owing to the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Union, our annual charges were increased nearly $600,000. The assumption of the Provincial debt, and the subsidy granted to New Brunswick, in lieu of export duties on timber, amount together to $850,000, while the additional expenditure incurred for the proper maintenance of the railroad system of the Dominion involved no less a sum than $900,000. While I am on this subject I may as well state that the Government have carried out, as they declared they would, during last Session, the policy of charging to Income Account everything that properly belongs to the maintenance of these railways. On this subject I may have something to say further on, but for the present I shall content myself by merely adverting to the circumstance. Then there were statutory increases, increases of indemnity to members, and other subjects of a similar character, which required $400,000. The item of elections involved an expenditure of nearly $200,000. The North West Mounted Police, $200,000 ; Indians, and similar purposes, $100,000; Post Office, $300,000, and various other miscellaneous charges, $200,000, making a total of $4,250,000, which represents, and a little exceeds the increase to which I have called attention.

And this increase, Mr. SPEAKER, is specially noteworthy, because, as the House will see the great portion of it is in what is called statutory charges, over which the House has no further control, and for which this Government and all future Governments will have to make provision. Turning to the other side, the House will perceive that the total receipts from all sources amount to $24,200,000; being an increase over the preceding year of $3,400,000; leaving, therefore, a nominal balance of $880,000 to the credit of the past year. It may be as well that I should mention, however, that in this nominal balance are included two sums, one of $166,000 received from Ordnance lands, which was paid late in the year, and is to be treated as a casual rather than an ordinary item of revenue; and another of $45,000, which was returned us by the British Government, but which, together with a much larger sum, will have to be defrayed from the expenditure of the current year on account of the Boundary Survey. In fact, it is a mere cross entry, which, strictly speaking, should not have appeared in our accounts at all. The net balance, therefore, according to my computation from revenue sources, amounts to about $650,000. Now, sir, I propose to devote a short time to explaining somewhat in detail the effect of the recent tariff changes in creating this revenue. I dare say the House will remember that in my Budget speech last year I made these several statements: I stated to the House that unless it consented to impose considerable additional taxation, there would be a serious deficit between the expenditure and the revenue for the past year. I said also that if the sums estimated for by Mr. TILLEY were to have been expended last year in addition to what we knew was about to be expended, the Estimates for the year 1874 would have amounted to $24,100,000. I stated also, that, to the best of my judgment, the House must make up its mind for a temporary pause in the advance in our imports, and particularly our dutiable imports; but I added if the House were willing to give to the Government the supplies they demanded, I had no doubt those supplies would be ample, not only to meet present expenditures, but to make provision for our future liabilities. I shall proceed, Sir, to give to the House, seriatim the proof of the accuracy of these statements. The one to which most attention will probably be directed is the statement made by me that there would be a considerable deficit last year, but for the alteration of the tariff. If the House will look at these statements—I allude to the comparative statement of receipts and expenditure—the House will observe that in the two main items from which our real revenue is chiefly derived,—customs and excise,—there is an increase for 1874 of no less than $2,550,000 in round numbers. Of that increase, as I shall presently show, no less than two millions of dollars, are directly attributable to the operation of the recent tariff. In turning to the Trade and Navigation returns for the past year, the House will observe that the total volume of imports into this country was a little less for 1874 than it was for 1873, the exact figures being $127,500,000 for 1873 as against $127,400,000 for 1874. Now, Sir, if the House will further turn to what are known as dutiable goods, imported into this country during those years, they will find that the total volume of dutiable goods imported into the country in 1874 was $76,232,000 as against $71,409,000 imported in 1873, being an apparent difference therefore in favour of the past year of $4,800,000, in round numbers. From this sum is to be deducted, in the first place the sum of $400,000, being the excess of imports into Manitoba under the four per cent. tariff, and therefore involving so small a sum of money that it in no degree affected the real comparison. Of the remaining four and a-half millions excess, or apparent excess of dutiable goods, about one and one-half millions are due to the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Union; and of the remaining three millions, one and one-half millions were caused directly by the removal from the free list, under the recent tariff, of certain goods, as any one can see on examination of the tables; and the remaining one and one-half millions was anticipated in consequence of the expectation that new duties would be imposed, and was, in fact, borrowed from the revenue of 1875 in advance to make up for the deficiency of 1874. My allegation is, therefore, that of the sum of $2,550,000, the excess in customs and excise, no less than $2,000,-

000 are due directly to the new tariff, the difference of $550,000 being accounted for partly by the admission of Prince Edward Island, and partly by the regular increase which might have been expected in the Excise Department. Now, Sir, although I do not regard this point as one of very great importance, for the simple reason that the taxation was imposed not so much to meet a deficit in the year then nearly expired, as to provide for future engagements, it may be as well to give some still further corroborative proofs of that previous assertion. Now, in the first place, if we choose to compare the importations for the eight months ending the 28th February, 1873, with the same time of 1874 before the new tariff had any effect on the importations, we shall find the total of dutiable imports for 1873 amount to $44,400,000, as against $45,576,000 for 1874, being a difference in favour of 1874 of $1,170,000 in round numbers, almost all of which is due to the admission of Prince Edward Island. Or taking another form of proof.—Take the ten days' statements of the money paid into the exchequer from the first to the tenth of April, and from the tenth to the twentieth of April, of 1873 and 1874, and we have these results—(I am including both customs and excise):—In 1873, between the first and tenth of April, we received $515,000. In 1874 we received $1,375,000 during the same period, being a difference in these ten days of $860,000. In the succeeding period, up to the twentieth of April, as against $336,000 in 1873, we received $1,171,000 in 1874, amounting to a difference of $835,000 in these two periods of twenty days, or rather two periods of ten days. We gained as nearly as possible $1,700,000 under the operation of the new tariff. As I have said, the House will remember that this was to a certain extent borrowed from the revenue of 1875. The remaining two or three hundred thousand dollars are much more than accounted for by the operation of the tariff, as evidenced in these tables. With respect to my second statement, that if the sums estimated for by Mr. TILLEY had been expended in addition to those which we knew would be expended, the estimates must have reached at least $24,100,000, very little explanation is needed. The House is aware that the estimate of the sums expended in Public Works chargeable to income falls short of that estimated by Mr TILLEY, by no less a sum than $624,000. The House is also probably aware that the sum of $250,000 demanded by him for working the Intercolonial Railway was not expended, and the further sum of $40,000 on account of boundary survey is not charged in last year's account, although the money has actually been expended, and will have to be paid this year to the British Government. These three sums combined exceed $900,000, and the House will therefore see that I was within the mark, and not above it, when I stated to the House that those estimates would not exceed $24,100,000 on the presumption stated by me. Now, with respect to my further statement that there was a strong probability that there would be a pause in the volume of the general imports of this country for at least two or three years, the House need only turn to the Trade and Navigation Returns to see that that statement has been literally verified. The total volume of trade for 1873 amounted to $127,500,000. The total volume of trade for 1874, even remembering that Prince Edward Island is included, only amounts to $127,400,000, being a falling off in the total volume of trade of $100,000. The apparent increase on dutiable goods I have already sufficiently explained. I have in my hand a statement recently given me by the Commissioner of Customs, showing the exports and imports for the six months of the current year as compared with those of the six months ending on the 31st of December, 1873. The result of these I will briefly read to the House. During the half year ending the 31st December, 1873, our total exports amounted to $57,251,000. During the six months of the current year, our total imports appear to have amounted to $53,357,000, being a decrease, I am sorry to say, of nearly four millions. Of articles entered for consumption our total imports amounted to $71,068,000 in 1873, and in the corresponding period of 1874, the total imports amounted to $69,588,000, being a deficit of about one million and a half. This I want the House to bear in mind is partly explained by the fact that we have virtually borrowed a portion of the revenue of 1875 for the benefit of 1874. With respect to the fourth statement made by me —that if the House consented to grant those supplies for which we asked, we did not think we would be likely to call upon them for further supplies—I will reserve any further comment until a later period of my remarks. I may, however, take this opportunity of stating briefly that so far as we can now judge, I have no reason to believe that the estimates I made of the probable receipts for 1875 will fall short. Up to the present time the Estimates have corresponded very nearly with the Estimates made by me, and possibly they may be slightly exceeded, although it is too soon yet to form any correct idea of the trade movements during the remaining portion of the year. As regards the expenditure for 1875, I think my hon. friend beside me (the Minister of Public Works) may be able to make a considerable saving in those two large items, namely, public works charged to income, and the maintenance of public works ; but on the other hand, I am afraid I shall be obliged to bring down certain Supplementary Estimates, it being scarcely possible for any Department, however vigilant, to avoid incurring some such Estimates in a period of nearly eighteen months. With respect to the Estimates submitted by me the other day, having reference to the probable expenditure for the ensuing year, the House will observe that the sum total chargeable to income is estimated at $24,857,488, being a trifle less than the sum estimated last year, which amounted to $24,883,000, a certain portion of the sum placed on the Estimates being carried forward. Now, if hon. gentlemen will refer to those Estimates, they will see that we have been obliged to ask for considerable increases in the following services : In the first place, recent negotiations in London have required an increase in the interest on the public debt to the amount of $182,-344. In the next place, the Post Office Department will demand an increase of somewhat over $200,000, combining in that statement the sum demanded under the head of Post Office, and a considerable charge which will also be required under the head of Civil Government. For Menonite Loan, which was alluded to by my honorable friend the other day, and which I fully expect will be returned to us, we will require a further sum of $100,-000. For Dominion lands, in consequence of the demands being constantly made upon us in that direction, we shall be obliged to ask the House to give us this year $200,000, instead of $100,000. For the Philadelphia Exhibition we have been obliged to put a vote of $40,000 in the Estimates, and for an object which I think the House will not grudge, namely, the rewarding of the few remaining veterans of 1812, and for this purpose we ask for an increase in the pension list of $50,000. In addition to these, customs and the administration of justice will require an augmentation of about $70,000. The increase in the case of the Administration of Justice is almost entirely statutory, and will require no explanation from me. The increase in the Customs Department, I may say, is largely due to my hon. friend, (the Minister of Customs) having determined to give the merchants in large cities exemptions from certain vexatious dues which are not enacted, I understand, from those in the smaller towns. Then there are several miscellaneous services amounting to $80,000, which we hope will be repaid by fees, as hon. gentlemen will find stated if they will refer to the particular Estimates, to which I am now alluding. For Indians, we will require, in consequence of the recent treaty, an additional grant to the extent of some $35,000 ; and a similar sum will be required for the reorganization of the North-West, in respect of which the Minister of Justice is about to propose a bill to the House. These I think cover all the increases of any moment to which I will call your attention in these Estimates. On the other hand, the House will see on reference to the item of Public Works, and buildings chargeable to income, we propose a reduction of $309,000, and on Public Works under the head of " Collection of Revenue," we propose a reduction of $488,000, which two sums contain in conjunction with the savings on Military Stores (the last of our instalments to the British Government having been paid off last year) enables us to bring down our Estimates with a slight reduction. I may remark with respect to these Estimates, that there are several of the sums which, from the nature of the case, will not need to be asked for again ; as, for instance, the grant to the Menonites, the grant to the Philadelphia Exhibition, and probably the grant that we make to the veterans of 1812, they being almost all of them men of seventy-eight or eighty years of age, and, therefore, not likely to remain long a burden upon the finances of the country. As regards the Post-Office, my hon. friend, when these items come before the House, will give more detailed explanations than I am at present in a position to give. I may say, generally, however, that partly in consequence of his convention with the United States; partly on account of the increased facilities which he proposes to give in regard to postal matters, he will be obliged to decrease his revenue or increase his expenditure to the extent of about $150,000. With respect to the Post Office Department, I may further say that although the expenditure is always considerably in advance of the revenue, yet it is to be remembered that the revenue increases from time to time, and I am in hopes that in the course of a year or two the receipts from that source will very nearly, or probably quite counterbalance the expenditures we are obliged to incur. As regards the estimate of our probable receipts for the year 1875-76, I may say that I make them as follows:—From Customs I think we shall derive something like fifteen millions and a half, provided no check occurs to the general volume of trade. From the Excise I estimate we will derive a further sum of five and a half millions, amounting to about twenty-one millions. From Stamps I estimate the revenue will be about $250,000. From the Post-Office I am afraid I must expect this year something like $1,050,000, instead of $1,011,000, the first operation of these changes being to cause some reduction to the receipts, although I think they will ultimately increase the revenue. From Public Works I hope to receive something like $1,700,000, and from the other sources—interest and investments and from casual receipts—a little over one million of dollars, making a sum total of twenty-five millions and a quarter, or thereabouts. Now, Sir, turning to the formidable item of capital account, which altogether will amount to no less a sum than $14,717,000, I may briefly say that a very large proportion of this expenditure is, from the nature of the case, not likely to be repeated. For example, I hope next year that we will see the last of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, as far as capital expenditure is concerned. The same remark will apply, probably, to the extension of the railway into Halifax and to a very large part of the expenditure taken for the Pacific Railway, which the House will see is no less a sum than $6,250,000. It is not likely that either the charge for the construction of telegraph lines or for steel rails, and, indeed, for a portion of the remaining charges will require to be repeated next year. With respect to canals, so much depends on the success of the contractors in prosecuting these works with expedition, that it is impossible for me to say how much my hon. friend (Minister of Public Works) will be able to spend on that head. The House is fully aware of the practice of this department of bringing down estimates of all that can by any possibility be spent within the current year. I have suggested to my hon. friend, and I repeat the suggestion to the House, that it may be worth consideration, in view of the fact that these Estimates within my memory have always been by the practice of the department largely in excess of the sum actually required, whether the House would not permit us largely to reduce these items with the understanding that when the work has actually commenced, and the sum which is about to be expended has been fairly stated to the House, in case of need further sums should be taken. In practice no doubt this is very often done. My objection to the present state of things is simply this: That to a certain extent it affects our credit abroad when it is found that we bring down these very large Estimates of amounts which are not likely to be expended during the current year. However, there is no doubt that during the year 1876, a larger proportion of those Estimates will probably be expended than has been customary. I throw out the suggestion for the consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite, who are bound to check any unconstitutional proceedings of ours, and if they will concur, perhaps the House will allow us on future occasions to pare down these Estimates of capital account much more than we can do at present. I will now proceed, Mr. SPEAKER, to give the House explanations with respect to the loan of four millions sterling recently negotiated in London. But, perhaps, before I proceed to do so, it may be well briefly to state to the House what has been done with the funds realized therefrom. That loan being placed at 90, realized the sum of about seventeen million and a half dollars, the gross amount being nineteen and a half million dollars, or four millions sterling, and the net proceeds being, as I have said, a little over seventeen and a half millions. Now, Sir, what we propose to do with these funds is briefly this: We propose to pay off ten millions of the public debt, including the grant to the Seigneurs for compensation; and the remaining seven and a half millions we intend to apply to any public works that we may undertake. Possibly, to prevent misconception, I should rather say that the loan is to free other funds in our hands applicable to such purposes, because as the loan was made for public works, it is well to observe that the money does go bona fide to public works, although practically the result is as I have stated. Now, as these seventeen millions and a half cost this country $778,000 a year, and as the ten millions of debt which we propose to pay have cost us 6 per cent., or $600,000 a year, the result of the operation is that we get seven and a half millions on hand without increasing the charge on the revenue more than $178,000. In other words, to put the matter in a more concise shape, if the House would permit me to invest that money at the ordinary rate which we receive for deposits, we would be the gainer by the transaction to the extent of $200,000 a year. Now, with respect to the loan itself, as far as I understand, three objections have been taken to it. First, as to the expediency of borrowing at all upon our own credit; secondly, as to the expediency of borrowing so large a sum; and, thirdly, as to the terms of the loan. With respect to the first point, I may say the Government had a good deal to consider before they determined on borrowing on their own credit. No doubt it would have been very easy to make the loan on the Imperial guarantee, but it must be observed that had we done so we would have lost a very favorable opportunity for negotiating a loan on our own credit which might not return again, and—what I consider of more importance—we would have lost the control of the market to a certain extent, that is to say we would have lost the power to go to the English market as borrowers at such times as are most convenient and suitable for ourselves. Moreover, I think it would have placed us at a certain disadvantage with the Imperial Government and British Columbia if we had asked for the Imperial guarantee while there was any dispute between ourselves and that Province as to the construction of the Pacific Railway. For all these reasons I advised my colleagues, and they accepted the suggestion, that we should avail ourselves of the opportunity for negotiating a loan on our own undivided credit. As to the amount of the loan, I may remark that it is not quite so large as it appears. A loan of four millions sterling at 90 only amounts to about three and a half millions sterling or seventeen and a half million dollars; and although I would have been glad, other circumstances being equal, not to have placed so large a sum upon the market at once, yet bearing in mind that I had very good investments for the money if I got it, and also bearing in mind that it was absolutely imperative on me to borrow, inasmuch as six millions of debt was maturing, and had to be paid, and inasmuch as a large steady expenditure on capital account is steadily going on, I felt it was absolutely necessary to borrow, if we had a good opportunity, enough to meet these demands, more especially as Canada had appeared in the English market in 1873, and if I appeared in 1874 and then again 1875 I had the best reasons for believing that such a course would have been seriously prejudicial to the interests of this country. Now, Sir, coming to the loan itself, there are three standards of comparison by which the House can fairly judge of the merits of the transaction. They may if they choose take the price of English three per cents. They may also take the price obtained by Mr. TILLEY with the Imperial guarantee in 1873; and they may take the price obtained by other borrowers in the English market. Now, with respect to the first of these standards of comparison, I may say that at the time I was negotiating this loan the price of new consols, new English Three per Cents, was almost exactly the same as that at which our Four per Cents, were floating. The price of old consols it is true were higher, but these, as the House is aware, are maintained at their present rate by causes to which I need not refer. Consols, therefore, are hardly a fair standard of comparison, but as the comparison has been used, I thought I might as well refer to it. With respect to the price obtained for the loan, if hon. gentlemen will compare that loan at 4 per cent. at 90 with the loan negotiated by Mr. TILLEY under the Imperial guarantee at 104, on which I beg to state the allowances taken altogether were fully equal to those made by me, they will find that the difference of interest in the two loans is just twelve shillings per cent. per annum, and the difference, making allowance for premium and discount, amounts to 4 shillings per cent. per annum, consequently the difference between a loan on our own undivided credit and one on our credit joined with the Imperial credit amounts to just sixteen shillings per cent. per annum, or in other words we placed our loan within four-fifths of one per cent. of the loan with the Imperial guarantee Now, in order that the House may fully understand the exact position, I will refer to a statement I have here of six loans negotiated by six nations of the very highest standing in the English Stock Exchange. The first was negotiated by Belgium in 1874, a very few months before I appeared in England. This was a three per cent. loan issued at 75½, but at the time of my arrival in England had fallen to 73. The second was a Brazilian 5 per cent. loan issued in 1871 at 89. The third was a Danish 5 per cent. loan issued at 94¼. The fourth was a Dutch four per cent. loan issued originally at 82. The fifth were Russian five per cents. which were issued during the past six or seven years previous to 1873, and ranging at various prices, one large loan in 1866 being at 86, another in 1873 at 93. The sixth was a Swedish five per cent. loan issued in 1868 at 90. I may remark that in all these cases I believe these loans not only included a heavy sinking fund, but also allowances quite equal to those made by me. Now—I speak under correction, because I am aware that although I have been at some pains to investigate the authorities on the subject, I may be deceiving myself in the statement I am about to make—I think that this general result is apparent, namely, that the loan which was placed in the English market last June was obtained on better terms than any other loan of equal amount for the past twenty years. I believe that there was one foreign loan —the Belgium three per cent., to which I have alluded, and which was only to the amount of one million sterling, while ours was three and a half millions—which was obtained at a shade better terms, and when I state, as I have stated, that our loan was placed on the market at less than one per cent. of what was charged with the Imperial guarantee added, I think I may reasonably say that the Dominion of Canada has no reason to be ashamed of the position in which it stands in the English market. There is another point on which issue has been taken by gentlemen opposite. We have been condemned, I think unadvisedly, for electing to issue this loan at a discount. Now, if there is one principle of finance which is better established than another, it is this —that it is almost impossible to obtain as good a price in proportion for a loan issued at a premium as can be obtained for loans issued at a discount. I need not enlarge upon the reasons that cause investors to prefer such loans. Suffice to say that the fact is notorious, and if further proof of it is wanted, it will be found in the fact that all these States to which I have alluded have preferred to issue their loans at a discount, as I did. I have not alluded to the issues of France and the United States, because great as the resources of these countries are, and high as their credit usually stands, they are debarred for many causes from any fair competition at present. I may remark, however, that the State of Massachusetts, which, as the hon. gentleman knows, has always commanded a high position in the English market, issued its five per cents. at the rate of 87 in 1870, and 91 in 1871. They appear to have been redeemable in 1891. Taking the whole list of investments as set out in the usual authorities, I think—although I am open to correction on that point—that the statement I made is literally correct, namely, that no loan has been floated on the English market of equal amount on such favorable terms within the past twenty years. Moreover, in considering the situation it must be borne in mind that no bona fide Canadian loan on our own credit had been issued since the loan raised by Sir ALEXANDER GALT in 1860, except one small loan of £500,000 negotiated by Sir JOHN ROSE under peculiar circumstances. It must also be borne in mind that the great number of foreign loans now pressing on the English market has caused an increase in the rate of interest even as regards securities of the first-class, as any gentleman will find by referring to the share list, and more particularly to the price of consols during the last twenty or twenty-five years. According to the computations made by persons entitled to respect in these matters, notably, I believe by Mr. DUDLEY BAXTER, it appears that no less a sum than two thousand millions sterling have been added to the national indebtedness of various nations in the English Stock Exchange within the last twenty years. Moreover, it may be as well to call the attention of the House to the fact, as bearing on the advisability of choosing our own time for placing our loans on the market, that the English Stock Exchange is an extremely fluctuating and sensitive body. How fluctuating it is may best be known by the simple statement that within a short period the prices of consols, although artificially kept up, varied from six to ten and twelve per cent, within a single year. It would be apparent, therefore, to the House, that in addition to doing all in our power to maintain our credit, which is essential in the English market, we must also be in a position to choose our own time for putting our loan on the market, and unless we do so, no matter how good the financial condition of the country may be, we may be required to pay more than the rates we have been previously paying. I may also remark, though this is merely a suggestion for the present, that I believe it would greatly conduce to the advantage of Canada if we could consolidate the various securities which are now bearing several rates of interest, into one consolidated Canadian stock. Some steps have been taken which, I hope will ultimately result in achieving that desirable end.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—What rate has the hon. gentleman fixed for the Sinking Fund?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—One-half per cent., The Sinking Fund, I may remark, in Mr. TILLEY's loan is one per cent., and, therefore, the former transaction is a little more favorable to us than would appear at first sight. My hon. friend knows that a Sinking Fund at one per cent. means a much earlier payment than a Sinking Fund at one-half per cent. And now, Mr. SPEAKER, I desire to review the present financial position of this country with reference to the engagements to which this Government and the country at large is committed. That position is one of a very peculiar character, as hon. gentlemen will readily perceive. I shall begin from the 1st July, 1874, and lay before the House a short synopsis of our financial engagements down to the year 1884, that being the period at which most of our loans now current will mature. Our position is peculiar, because, in addition to being committed to very large engagements that properly are chargeable to capital account, and which are in the nature of a debt incurred by treaty, owing partly to the Confederation, and partly to other engagements which we entered into, it will be necessary to expend some sixty or sixty-five millions of dollars during the next ten years on capital account, and we will, therefore, require to make provision for a sum of $125,000,000 during the ensuing ten years. I desire to lay before the House a sort of summary of the mode in which I think that these heavy engagements will be met. Starting from the 1st of July, 1874. On that date, taking into consideration the loan and other assets—though the loan was not all paid up at that date—we had in cash some $25,000,000. Of course, by this time most of that money has been expended in the way indicated, but we still have enough to carry us through the financial year ending the 30th day of June, 1876. In addition to the $25,000,000 we have the English guarantee fund amounting to about $20,000,000. We may also count the sinking fund applicable to that purpose, which cannot be less than $5,000,000, and I think that during those ten years we shall probably borrow from our own people, through the medium of savings banks or other miscellaneous sources, about one million of dollars, annually, amounting in all to about ten millions more. If the House coincides with me in the opinion that it will be wise and prudent, with these heavy engagements, to maintain a steady, moderate surplus, we will have another million per annum, amounting to ten millions more. Of the total $125,000,000, I already see my way clear to provide $70,000,000 in the way indicated, which would leave some $55,000,000 to be borrowed on our own individual credit. The House will understand that twenty-five or thirty millions of this amount may be paid at our option, but there are many reasons why we should pay the whole as it matures. This sum is the loan negotiated by Sir A. T. GALT. The House will therefore see that it will be necessary to borrow $75,000,000, (including the English guarantee,) within the next nine or ten years; in other words, it will be necessary for us to appear in the English market as borrowers four times at least during that period. If we succeed in borrowing that sum at the rates which have been recently established, the results will be as follows:—$125,000,000 borrowed at an average of four per cent. would cost $5,625,000, from which we deduct five or six per cent. interest on $65,000,000, (that being the amount of the old debt maturing), which would be $3,600,000, leaving an additional burden of $2,025,000, per annum. We will further deduct from this the sum of $750,000, representing interest on the Sinking Fund and on the surplus, which I propose to secure as part of our assets. This would give the total of the additional interest for which we will have to provide, if the House does not rush into fresh entanglements and engagements at $1,250,000. Now, I have no doubt whatever that the resources of this country will be ample to meet that additional demand on us, though for reasons frequently stated by me from my place in this House, I am not willing to add to the permanent debt of the country in the shape of interest any more than I can help. But in order that we may obtain these several loans at a cheap rate several things are requisite. We must enjoy some moderate progress, which I have no doubt will take place. I am not going to reflect on the action of my predecessors, but I will simply state as a matter of fact that I found that the manner in which they entered into the Pacific Railway engagement was a serious obstacle in the way of placing a loan on the English market. We must arrange our engagements in such a manner as to be able to obtain the full and complete control of the English market so as to secure our own time for borrowing. That is the reason why I am so anxious to retain the Imperial guarantee by which in case of need we can obtain a loan under almost any conceivable circumstances. Now, if I do not lay very much stress on the probability of a great increase in the revenue from the natural growth of the country, it is because, as every hon. gentleman knows, this country as it grows and increases in prosperity will require considerable additional expenditures, and though I hope we will always maintain a moderate surplus, a considerable portion of our natural increase must go to meet contingencies which, in a country like ours, are inevitable. There can be very little doubt that to maintain the portions of the Pacific Railroad which will be constructed will entail a considerable expenditure, and there will also be a considerable outlay in settling with the Indians in the North West, and maintaining government in that region. No doubt a certain portion of this expenditure may be fairly looked upon as productive, in the sense of bringing back into our coffers some return for the moneys expended, and I may add that of all the schemes submitted to this House, I believe that proposed by my hon. friend the Premier, for opening up that fine and considerable tract between French River and the Ottawa Valley, is the one which on the whole is most likely to add to the paying productive population of the Province of Ontario. I hope also that our merchants will be successful in finding new fields of trade which will partially compensate them for that which they have failed to obtain with the nation on the other side of the line. My advice is in view of those numerous contingencies which always occur in a country like this, that we ought to consider the natural growth as a fair offset against the inevitable expenditures which must occur in the Dominion. It is not necessary for me to spend any further time in reviewing the volume of our exports and imports. I do not consider that it is any proof that a country like ours is retrograding in any way, because there is a check to the imports. Many authorities who were entitled to great respect, state that we have rather overstepped the mark in our progress in this direction, and I look upon the check to our imports more as an indication of greater prudence in the management of our commercial affairs than anything else. Moreover, a certain portion of this falling off is due rather to the decline in value of certain articles of consumption, than to any decrease in the quantity consumed. On the whole, no branch of our trade and commerce, with the important exception of the trade in lumber, seems to have suffered, and the excellent harvest with which we have been favored during the past year will have a very favorable effect, encouraging and inspiriting every portion of the community, mercantile as well as the agricultural. There is a large portion of our imports heretofore caused by the extensive railway improvements in the Province of Ontario, and according to the statement made by the Treasurer of Ontario, in his place in the Legislative Assembly of that Province, the increase in the expenditure of the Dominion can hardly be expected to do more than compensate for the large railway expenditure which occurred in Ontario during the last four or five years. According to the statement of that hon. gentleman upwards of $30,000,000 had been, or were about to be expended on the construction of railways in that Province alone, giving an average of six millions per annum, which, I hope, will be of such nature as to largely aid our production in that region; but it is evident that for the time being the annual expenditure on the Pacific Railway and other works, which will be about six millions on the average, will not do much more than make up for the cessation of this expenditure in the Province of Ontario and elsewhere. I do not doubt, myself, in the least that great ultimate benefit will flow to that Province from the expenditure to which I have alluded, but I am aware, as other hon. gentlemen are aware, that the immediate results are not likely to be great. The benefit, when it comes, will be solid, and it is to be hoped it will be very considerable and permanent. To those hon. gentlemen who consider that the very rapid increase of our importations from 1868-9 to 1872 is a fair proof that the increase is likely to continue after the present temporary panic has passed, I would beg to observe that on looking over the importations of the United States during the past sixty or seventy years they will find, as a rule, that any rapid period of expansion was almost invariably succeeded by a long period of comparative inaction. Now, as this is a point of some little moment, I may be permitted to call the attention of the House to the fact that whereas in the years between 1832 and 1836 the imports of the United States increased, almost as ours have done, from one hundred millions in 1832 to one hundred and eighty-nine millions in 1836; that after attaining that figure in 1836, no less than fifteen years elapsed before they again reached that sum, it was not until 1851 that imports to the United States attained the proportion they had arrived at in 1836, and that, too, in a period of great prosperity in that country, and though the population in the same interval had increased from fifteen millions to nearly twenty-four millions in 1851. I do not anticipate the same results here, but it is my duty, if the House, or any members of it, choose to assume that the fact of a rapid increase in the past is necessarily a proof that an equally rapid increase is to be looked for in the future—to call attention to the fact that that great country though it increased in essential prosperity in all respects in that interval remained without any great increase taking place in its imports for a period of no less than 15 years. The House will therefore see that the problem before us is of a complex character. Not only have we to provide for a considerable number of heavy annual engagements, but we have also to meet promissory notes, if I may so term them, maturing at different dates over a long term of years. Therefore it is necessary to keep stronger than if we were simply dealing with the ordinary annual expenditure, or if any other expenditures we were about to incur were strictly within our own control. I may here allude to the statement made by the hon. member for Kingston in the debate on the Address. He said that I remarked that I would be prepared to reduce taxation during the course of the year. I beg to state that was not what I said, as you will see on referring to my speech of last year. I stated that I did not think if those supplies were granted it would be at all necessary to come before the House again for special taxation. Now, sir, I am not aware that there are any other points of interest upon which hon. members will require explanation. If there are, I shall be glad to give them to them either now or at a later stage in the evening. I think we may very fairly congratulate ourselves that our financial position has materially improved since last year. All immediate demands, which were considerable, have been fully met; there are no pressing claims upon us, with the exception of those for public works, for at least a year or two; we have a reasonable surplus on the transactions of last year; and I have every reason to believe that we shall also have a reasonable surplus on those of the current year. It may also be added that we have so far made no inroads upon that valuable reserve, the Imperial Guarantee. We have completed the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway, and are therefore free to turn our energies and attention to the task of enlarging and improving our canals and constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have succeeded in making such arrangements with British Columbia as, although involving us in very considerable liabilities, are yet quite within our power to perform. Although many of us thought from the beginning that the demands made upon us by that Province were unreasonable and unduly onerous, we are nevertheless prepared to discharge our obligations fairly, provided they can be brought within due bounds. I have no doubt, therefore, that, if we persevere in the course I have indicated, in a very short time we shall be in a position of the highest credit. Still, for the next ten years we must be prudent, and we ought not to rush into other engagements until we have fairly disposed of those for which we are already responsible, though with this proviso I am well convinced that unless some misfortune overtakes the commerce of the country, for which we cannot reasonably look, we shall be able, financially, to give an honourable account of ourselves in the future. One thing we may fairly say, that the sacrifices which we are called upon to make, if sacrifices they may fairly be called, are such as we are asked to make, not from a selfish point of view, but in the interest of the whole of the Provinces of the Dominion. We have chosen to take upon ourselves a truly Imperial task—a greater task than was ever undertaken by a nation of our age and resources—that of colonizing and developing a most enormous extent of country, not so much for our own benefit as that of generations to come. Although I believe that to a certain extent we must make up our minds to forego other improvements of great present value, I also believe that it is better we should do so in order to meet the obligations to which I have referred. I believe that every man who has paid any considerable attention to the question of the future of Canada, will be prepared to admit that with us it is a struggle for the possibility of carving out a distinct national existence. This object is truly one for which we may sacrifice something, and one which I know we will not shrink from sacrificing something for if necessary. It will be the object and the interest of the Government to see that we shall be prepared to attain it without making the sacrifice unreasonable and not beyond due bounds. Perhaps it is as well that we should be thus called upon peaceably to do that other nations have had to do by means of wasting war. Great benefits will arise, not only to the present generation from the prosecution of this great work, but also to the inhabitants, who in the future will populate these vast regions, and I am far from believing that our people will at all shrink from carrying to its most satisfactory conclusion the task to which they have set themselves. In placing in your hand, Sir, the resolution that this House go into Committee to consider of the supply to be granted to HER MAJESTY, I desire, to express my sense of the patience, with which I have been listened to by hon. members on both sides of this House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said:—Mr. SPEAKER,—I am happy to congratulate the Minister of Finance upon the altered tone of the speech delivered to the House upon this occasion as compared with that we had the pleasure of listening to a year ago. We have not been pained by listening to uncomplimentary observations about his predecessors; we have not been pained by that which was even infinitely more painful—the statements he then made use of which were calculated to injure the financial position and lower the financial standing of this country most seriously—that is to say if the statements of the Finance Minister had been received with that credence which it is desirable that they should be received by this House and the country. I will claim the indulgence of the House while I review at some length the circumstances under which increased taxation was imposed on us last year, and the relation they bear to the statements submitted to the House to-day. I claim in the outset some consideration from the members of this House while I state I stand here to-day in a position to challenge the closest scrutiny of the criticisms I offered upon the statements of the Minister of Finance last year, a comparison of those statements with the Public Accounts which the hon. gentleman has laid upon the table of this House. I am prepared to abide by the decision of this House on the issues that exist between the hon. gentleman and myself after they have given careful consideration to a comparison of his statements and mine, and the evidence which the Public Accounts submitted by himself, present to this Parliament. Last year the hon. gentleman placed in the mouth of his EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, a serious and important statement to the effect that the expenditure of the current year largely exceeded the receipts, and involved the necessity of applying to this Parliament for increased taxation, as a means of meeting that deficit. The hon. gentleman also represented in the Speech from the Throne because, of course, every person understands that the hon. gentleman is himself specially and personally responsible for statements contained in that speech touching the trade and expenditure of the country—the hon. gentleman I say, is responsible for the statement, that this country was in a state of commercial depression, so important and so serious as to require a reference from so august a person as the representative of HER MAJESTY in the Dominion of Canada. I turn from the speech of last year to refer for a moment to the speech of this year, as far as the commercial condition of the country is concerned. You find that the hon. gentleman has introduced into that document this year a statement which he could have introduced with very great safety last year, namely, that notwithstanding the great commercial depression which had prevailed in the country lying alongside of us, the trade of Canada was sound; and the hon. gentleman has given to the House and to the country an evidence that his statement of last year was unwarrantable, and that it was rightly submitted to the criticism I then offered. I now state to the House that the hon. gentleman, by his statements a year ago, placed himself in a position that obliged him to deal with the Public Accounts of this country as no Minister of Finance ever dealt with them before. In order to relieve himself from the dilemma, in which his statements of a year ago placed himself, and the Government of which he is a member, he has been obliged to make his comparative statements in a most extraordinary fashion. What use is it for the House to have a statement such as this? A statement which is worth anything must fearlessly and honestly give a comparative statement of the revenue and expenditure of the country on the same basis in each of the years which the comparison proposes to embrace. Of what value, therefore, is the statement presented to the House on this occasion? I take the responsibility of challenging the hon. gentleman that both in reference to the revenue and expenditure of the country, liberties have been taken such as were never taken before. It is true that even in this a surplus of over three-quarters of a million is shown as between revenue and expenditure. The hon. gentleman has given us the revenue of the year, that is the receipts of 1873-74 as $24,205,092.54, and the expenditure as $23,316,316.75, showing a surplus of $888,775.79. I am going to take the liberty of correcting these statements, and of placing in the receipts of the country that which every other Finance Minister placed in them during the whole period that this comparative statement professes to cover, and by deducting from the expenditure that which no Finance Minister hitherto has ever placed in this expenditure. I will not attempt to do this without giving to the House such justification as will carry conviction to the mind of every gentleman upon the other side. If hon. gentlemen will turn their attention to this professedly comparative statement what will they find? They will find that in 1867-68, and in all the other years referred to under the heading of "Premium and Discount," certain sums are inserted. Under that head in 1868 they will find the sum of $608,510.12, and what will the House say when I tell them that in this document, declared to be a comparative statement, which is now placed in the hands of hon. members, to enable them to compare the receipts of the present year with the receipts of the past year. The hon. gentleman has subtracted a corresponding sum and placed in another division of the Public Accounts.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am not discussing the question whether it is right or not; what we are dealing with in the meantime is the question whether this is really and truly a comparative statement. I affirm simply, without fear of successful contradiction, that in order to make it a comparative statement which would be of any value to the House, the sum that I have referred to must be entered in the past year as it was for 1868 and the subsequent years. I therefore add to the receipts of 1873-4 a similar sum to that contained in the former statement of $384,327.48 received as premium on the loan negotiated by the hon. gentleman's predecessor, Mr. TILLEY. That brings the total receipts for the year up to $24,589,419.68. Let me turn to the other side of the account. The House will recollect that the hon. gentleman laid upon the table of this House a statement of the nine months' expenditure a year ago. I challenged the accuracy of that statement, and I told hon. gentlemen opposite that if they would lay upon the table of the House a detailed statement of the mode in which they made up the expenditure chargeable to the operation of our railways, which amount was no less than $1,488,607.89 for nine months, I would pledge myself to show to the House that they were wrong to the extent of half a million. I subsequently claimed that that half million must be added to the surplus that would otherwise exist at the end of the year. In order to show the balance as between revenue and expenditure, I will now give to the House the evidence that will prevent any one ever questioning for a moment my right to do so. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the Public Accounts of 1873, to the second part under the heading of "Railway Expenditure," they will see the following statements:—

Branch Line, Londonderry.....	$ 16,943 29
Point du Chene improvements.....	21,338 91
Branch Line, St. John.....	50,953 59
Mill Pond improvements, St. John.	17,654 35
Halifax City Railway Extension....	15,570 30
Branch Line, Dorchester.....	2,387 20
Deep Water Wharf, St. John.....	98 35
100 new Platform Cars.....	67,110 00
	$192,055 99

If they turn to the 39th page of the 3rd part they will find this sum put down to capital expenditure, or expended upon construction chargeable to capital. Now, Sir, I will ask hon. gentlemen to turn to the Public Accounts of the present year, and I will draw their attention for a single moment to some of the items included in this expenditure put down as expenditure chargeable to railway revenue account. On page 33 of the 3rd part you will find chargeable to working expenses $1,301,550.08. You will find details to which I will for the moment direct the attention of the House. Snow sheds and fences, of the value of $49,097.96, were built, covering a new portion of the Intercolonial Railway, where it passes through the Westchester Mountains. These are as much a part of the Intercolonial Railway as the steel rails with which it is laid. That is one of the items, and one which cannot possibly find its way into the account of revenue and expenditure of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia railways. Then there is the filling in at the Blackburn Trestle Bridge, $4,561.95; siding accommodation at the Intercolonial and Acadia Coal Company's connections $4,221.60; the siding at Newport, $9,384.79; shop tools at Moncton, $11,296, and customs warehouse at St. John, $2,190. The Spring Hill branch, nearly five miles of new railway, was acquired by this Government and for the expenditure upon it the Government absolutely obtained a fee simple of this road yet $32,733.89, is charged for this to revenue expenses. The whole makes a sum of $1,847,175.24. That is the manner in which these Public Accounts have been dealt with, and this is the sum given as a comparative statement by which the hon. gentleman endeavors to create a deficit for 1873-4 and throws upon his predecessors the onus of his having to increase the taxation of the people. But what more? If any further proof is needed, I have here the report of the present Minister of Public Works, and if the hon. members will turn to that report and its appendix, they will find that he there states that $1,301,550.08 is all that can be charged to revenue account. And yet, sir, with this evidence of the Premier as to the impropriety of putting another dollar of expenditure to revenue we have no less than $545,625,16 placed improperly to revenue, according to the admission of the Premier, according to all previous public accounts, and according to the statement of Mr. BRYDGES, a gentleman who at all events is as well able as any man in this country in making up railway accounts to state what portion is chargeable to revenue and what portion to capital. In his report of 18th August, 1874, Mr. BRYDGES informed the Government that the gross expenses for the year ending June 30, 1874, on the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Railways amounted to $1,301,550.08, and yet with all these evidences of the impropriety of including one dollar more, $545,605 are added to the amount that could not be put there without entirely destroying its character as a comparative statement. From the total sum of $23,412,829, I deduct that which ought to be capital expenditure—$545,625—which leaves a total of $22,-867,204. Before I pass away from this railway expenditure, and from the question of the amount that could be legitimately charged against the working of the railways, I will refer to the statement last session of the hon. Minister of Finance, which startled all of us, that there was a deficit of one and a quarter millions in connection with revenue and expenditure of public works due to those railways. Not only that, but the London Economist. which re-published substantially the speech of the hon. gentleman on the eve of negotiating an important loan, drew the attention of the people of England to the fact that Canada was engaging in a series of such thoroughly unprofitable works that a deficit of one and a quarter million dollars had been caused by the operations of the railways. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that, instead of there being a loss of one and a quarter millions upon the operations of our railways, the loss amounts to only $408,119, and that is confirmed by the statement of Mr. BRYDGES in his report. I admit that this is a true statement of what should be charged to working expenses; but it does not represent the true financial condition of the railways. When I state that the public accounts show that of that $408,119 no less than $275,719 are due not to ordinary but to extraordinary expenses, the House will see at once how small was the ground for the Finance Minister's statement that there was a deficit of one and a quarter millions. How would the Grand Trunk officials like the two million pounds sterling expended on the purchase and laying down of steel rails to be charged to the current expenses of a single year. That might technically be a proper position in which to place the renewals, but the expenditure must be spread over twenty years to enable a proper and just comparison to be made between its present and past position. That extraordinary expenditure on the Government railways was caused by a portion of the track being relaid with steel rails, the outlay upon which should be spread over a number of years. Deducting the cost for these extraordinary works, the House would observe that a deficit of $122,666 had been magnified into one and a quarter millions. I think I have satisfied the House that I have rightly deducted that sum of $545,-625 from the statement of the expenditure, which has been laid on the table, which leaves $22,867,204, thus showing an actual surplus of $1,722,215 on 1st. of July, 1874. Now, Mr. SPEAKER, I admit frankly that this amount is subject to some deductions, but I challenge the accurracy of the statements made on this point by the Finance Minister, and will undertake to prove to the House, from the hon. gentleman's own statement, so that he cannot controvert my argument, that no such sum as two millions of the amount received before 1st July 1874, was due to the change of tariff. I will now deal with another point. But before doing so, as the hon. gentleman a year ago cast unwarranted odium upon his predeccssor, Mr. TILLEY, and the calculations he had submitted to the House a year previously, and expressed himself in not very complimentary terms, in respect of my statements, I shall draw the attention of the House for a few moments to Mr. TILLEY'S statement. I have shown that the expenditure was $22,867,204. What did Mr. TILLEY say to this House—this gentleman who has been held up to the people of this country as a Minister who could not approximately estimate the probable expenditure? Mr. TILLEY'S estimate of expenditure for 1873–4 was $22,586,000, while the national expenditure was $22,-867,204, and this statement was made more than a year before it could be verified. In my speech in which I criticised the Finance Minister's statement last year

I ventured to say that the accounts at the end of the year would show an expenditure of $22,933,800. By permission of the House I will read the following extract from a report of my speech :

"The hon. Finance Minister had fallen into "one or two grave errors in estimating the "financial affairs of the country. In page 32 of "the Estimates it would be found that there was "a sum of $766,200 which the hon. gentleman "declared would required to be re-voted. This "was upwards of three-quarters of a million "which according to the hon. gentleman's own "showing would be unappropriated up to the "1st July, 1874. Then he wished to draw "attention to another point. He maintained "that the hon. gentleman had made a mistake "in the statement of expenditure which had been laid on the table of the House of nearly "half a million of dollars. In one item the hon. "gentleman startled the House and the country "with the declaration he made as to the expen-"diture and deficit that would exist in regard "to the working of the Government railways. "He (Dr. TUPPER) might say that he had "watched the operations of those works in "regard to the receipts they would give the "country, the expenditure upon them, and "everything connected with them, in the most "narrow manner for fifteen years, and he would "pledge himself to prove the mistake in the hon. "gentleman's figures if he would bring down "a detailed statement showing how he made "up the $1,488,607 charged against the opera-"tion of the railways for nine months. The "expenditure for the same service in 1873 was "only $791,326, although it was well-known "that, owing to the severity of the winter, the "roads had been worked at unusual cost. He "had no hesitation in saying this was a mistake, "and he would undertake to show before the "Public Accounts Committee that there was "$500,000 charged here to current expenditure "which in all previous years had been charged "to capital account. The addition of the sum "of $776,200 to this error of at least $400,000 "made a total of $1,166,200 as the sum of un-"expended money which would enable the "Finance Minister to meet any possible defi-"ciency in any possible demand which might "arise before the 1st July, 1874. By subtract-"ing these errors from the amount of $24,100,000 "the sum remaining would be $22,933,800, "which would give him a clear surplus of "$966,202 at the end of the current fiscal year."

Dr. TUPPER continued:—The Finance Minister placed the expenditure at $24,100,000. I have the speech of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Dr. TUPPER continued) in reply to the criticism I offered, in which he states that no more than twenty-two millions of dollars could be collected during the year.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Without the new tariff ?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Without the new tariff. I wish to bear that in mind, for that is precisely the point to which I am going to address myself. The hon. gentleman stated that the expenditure for the year would be $24,100,000, and it was upon that statement that he felt warranted in asking the House to resort to the extreme course of levying three millions additional taxation on the country. It will not do for the hon. gentleman to come before the House with an excuse, because if he believed they were only figures on paper, and did not represent the true position of affairs, he was not warranted in resorting to such an extreme course. Deduct the actual expenditure of $22,867,-204 from the estimated expenditure by the Finance Minister, made by him with all the documents in his possession, which would enable him to ascertain the correct financial position of the country, and the hon. gentleman was proved to have been $1,232,-806 astray. I mention that fact to the House because I feel that, after the manner in which the Hon. Finance Minister dealt with the statements which I offered to the House last session, it is not improper that I should remind the House of how the statements I offered have been borne out by the Public Accounts laid on the table by the Minister of Finance himself. I stated that the actual surplus of revenue over expenditure was $1,722,215.41. I will deduct from that, in the first instance, the amount received from new taxes. The hon. gentleman has not told us what they amount to, but I think I have taken a sufficiently wide margin when I state that the amount received from the new taxes—that is to say, the taxes that were received for the two and a half months previous to the end of the year—was $546,000. Then I find that a very talented gentleman—the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, Mr. BRUNEL, who has come to the assistance of the Finance Minister, and I do not blame him for seeking any extraneous aid which he can find—has treated this House to a very able and ingenious argument to show the amount of duties paid in before the 1st July, 1874, in consequence, not of the new tax, for I have already included that in the $546,000 that I have already mentioned—but in consequence of the proposed change of tariff. And let me here make a single remark upon that point. I ventured to say to the Hon. Finance Minister last year, when he was describing the amount of revenue that was received during the last quarter of the year, that it was owing to the fact that the country was excited by the change of tariff. What was the result of that? If taxation is required at all every person knows that wherever constitutional, Parliamentary Government exists, the Government considers itself bound to preserve the strictest secresy in reference to any proposed change of tariff, and for obvious reasons—first—to prevent trade being disturbed; and, secondly, in order to obtain a revenue that would otherwise be lost. But in this case the Government made no secret of the proposed change in the tariff, in fact drew the attention of the public to the subject in the speech from the Throne long before the new tariff was proposed to the House, causing the greatest possible derangement in the trade of the country, and also a loss to the revenue. But I am happy to relieve the hon. gentleman from the obloquy that would rest upon him for taking such a course by stating that the amount thus lost to the revenue is not nearly so large as he himself appears to suppose. However, I will take the estimate of Mr. BRUNEL of the enhanced inland revenue received on account of the change in the tariff, namely, $526,611. I may state in reference to that, a glance at the figures as they now present themselves will show that this is a very extravagant calculation on the part of Mr. BRUNEL, although he is a gentleman in whose judgment and entire honesty of statement I have the most unbounded confidence. A glance at the receipts of the Excise Department for 1873-74 will show that during the six months from the 1st July, 1874, to the 1st of January, 1875, $152,662.50 more were received in 1874 than in 1873. I quite admit that there was a large amount of revenue in the Inland Revenue Department discounted that would have been paid in 1875, but not so much as claimed by Mr. BRUNEL, because the Hon. Minister of Finance stated that all he proposed to obtain from Excise was $750,000 per annum, and the last quarter gives $234,837 more than the last quarter of 1873. With these figures before them, the House can see that in accepting Mr. BRUNEL'S statement we have accepted the outside statement, which can be sustained when you come to examine the amount which has been received during the last six months. Add these sums together the amount derived from new taxes, and the amount received from enhanced inland revenue which ought otherwise to have fallen in 1874–5—and we have $1,072,611 in all. Deduct that from the surplus as it existed and it leaves a surplus for 1873 without change of tariff of $649,604.41. Now, the hon. gentleman will ask me "What about the Customs? If you credit over $500,000 for Inland Revenue what are you going to credit for Customs paid in before the end of the year which otherwise would have gone to the next year?" I tell the hon. gentleman nothing. I will prove to him by his own argument that he cannot claim a single dollar as paid in before the first of July, 1874, over and above that which would have been paid in under other circumstances. I will show the hon. gentleman that all that was discounted must have been discounted before the end of the year. The hon. gentleman tells us that instead of the trade of this year having increased it has decreased. The hon. gentleman has been kind enough to send me over—and I thank him for the courtesy—a statement which makes the whole imports entered for consumption for the six months from the first July, 1874, to the first of January, 1875, and what does it show? A large increase in trade? If these figures are correct—as I am bound to admit they are—they establish a falling off in imports entered for consumption during the past six months of one million and a half. Now, I wish the hon. gentleman to tell me if there was a falling off in the trade of the six months from the first of July, 1874, to the first of January, 1875, of one million and a half, how he can show a single dollar discounted previous to the first of July? I will now draw the attention of the House to the statement of the Customs returns for the six months from the first of July, 1874. Bear in mind the Hon. Minister of Finance assured the House and country when he was levying these new taxes a year ago, that he was only taking three millions additional revenue out of the pockets of the people. Now I invite his attention this statement. I hold in my hand the Customs returns for the six months from July to January, 1875. I have admitted the soundness of Mr. BRUNEL'S argument because he has shewn that there is not a corresponding increase in the receipt of 1874, as compared with the receipts of 1873, notwithstanding the new taxes. But if you accept Mr. BRUNEL'S argument, and if you come to consider that half a million additional revenue went to the Treasury before the 1st of July, then you are bound to accept the same principle as applied to the Customs Department. What does it show? It shows that in July, 1873, we received $1,383,539.48 from customs, and in July, 1874, no less a sum than $2,147,652.76, an amount infinitely larger than the application of the new tariff to the sum received in 1873 would give. That, you may say, is but a single month. In August, 1873, $2,093,-978.15 were received, and in August, 1874, $2,352,768.97; in September, 1873, $1,974,513.75; in September, 1874, $2,471,814.18; in October, 1873, $2,687,-519.02, and in October, 1874, $3,127,-166.77; in November, 1873, $1,814,-885.55, and in November, 1874, $2,230,-540.74; in December, 1873, $1,586,-449.90, and in December, 1874, $1,640,-006.13—making a total revenue during these six months from July to January—when the hon. gentleman has shown that a larger amount by one and a half millions was entered for consumption than during the present year—$11,540,805.85 in 1873, and $13,969,949.52 in 1874, or an increase in the six months of $2,429,-143.67. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman to explain to this House how it is he can obtain the amount of revenue which he could only get from the heavy levy of nearly five millions of taxes per annum upon the people of this country, provided that a million of Customs Revenue was discounted before the first July, 1874 I say that it is impossible for any gentleman who regards the argument addressed to the House by the Finance Minister in this matter, to come to any other conclusion than this—that the hon. gentleman was obliged, drawing upon his imagination for his facts, to put down such a charge to enhanced Customs as was necessary in order to establish his imaginary deficit. Now, let me tell the House what that imaginary deficit was. I hold in my hand a paper that professes to be well informed in this country—the Globe—which states that there was a deficit in the current expenditure of the past year of no less than three millions. The Minister of Finance did not go quite so far as that, but the paper to which I refer had the shamelessness—I say the word advisedly—to state on the 1st January, 1875, in reviewing the events of the year, that there was a deficit of three millions. Let me read the language used by that paper—"A deficit of three millions. The legacy of the former administration, having to be provided for, after much discussion and a very full representation of the views of all classes interested, by raising the 15 per cent. duty on imports to 17½ per cent.; by re-imposing a small duty on tea and coffee; by increasing the excise duties, and in some other particulars readjusting the tariff." The same paper, in reviewing the budget speech, further says:—"In 1874-5, Mr. CARTWRIGHT, who has, omitting Mr. TILLEY'S short rule, virtually succeeded Sir FRANCIS HINCKS, finds the revenue still growing and nearly $3,000,000 ahead of 1870-71, but an expenditure so enhanced that he has to provide by fresh taxes to cover a deficit of three millions." But what does the Finance Minister himself say? I hold in my hand a London Economist containing an account of the speech which he delivered to this House; and it was fortunate for the House and fortunate for the country, in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman was going to England to negotiate a large loan, that there was an Opposition in this House; it was of value to the country that these statements were not allowed to go unchallenged and that the result of the analysis to which we subjected the figures and statements of the hon. gentleman a year ago induced one of the most influential journals in London to disclaim the deficit—a pretended one; and if it had not been that a friend of Canada was then in England to take up and controvert these mischievous statements reproduced from the speech of the Honourable Minister of Finance, his story to-day, respecting the loan—although I shall show that it requires some qualification before I sit down—would have been a different one from what it was. What do they say? Why, basing their remarks on the speech of the honourable gentleman they say:—"There is now a serious deficit, involving the necessity for much new and disagreeable taxation, with every prospect of a still more serious deficit in the future unless the past policy is reversed and great care is otherwise taken." They then give the figures from the Public Accounts, as submitted by the Hon. Minister of Finance and the statement contained in the Budget speech, and thereafter put down a deficit of £472,000 sterling as that which the Hon. Minister of Finance had declared to the people of this country would fall upon the year 1873-74. Having stated that much with reference to the question of the deficit, I will now show the hon. gentleman how the figures really stand. As I have said before, I have proved to the House that the surplus that exists as the actual surplus of the year, irrespective of any change of tariff, would have stood $649,604.41, and I may state that that is only $123,000 over what I stated to the House a year ago would be the surplus at the end of the year. But that is not all. I ask the hon. gentleman where is the surplus that we left in the Treasury, due from the year 1872-3. We showed to the House that we left in the Treasury a surplus of $1,638,821 on the previous year, and if you add that to the $649,604 of surplus for 1873-4 that would have existed on the 1st. of July, 1874, provided this mischievous meddling with the tariff had been avoided, the surplus in the Treasury now, without new taxation or any change in the tariff of the country, from the two years it would have been no less than $2,288,-425.40. And yet with our affairs in that position—with our affairs in such a position that on the 1st of July, 1874, by following the policy of their predecessors there was in the hands of the present Government a sum of over two millions and a quarter — we were compelled to listen to denunciations hurled at us from the Treasury benches, on account of our having, as was alleged, created a deficit, and to have it heralded in London and over the world that this defiicit was owing to the manner in which public affairs were administered by the late Government. Now, let me draw the attention of the House for a moment to what the condition of affairs inherited by the hon. gentlemen, opposite, was, and under which they complain so bitterly. When we were able to show the House and the country that under our administration, the trade of the country had increased in five years from $131,027,928 to no less than $217,-801,203, or an increase in five years of $86,773,671. I think that the honorable gentleman might have allowed his predecessors to have escaped his denunciation as to the past financial management of this country. When we were able to show that the revenue of this country had risen under our administration from $13,687,928 in 1867-68 to $20,813,469 in 1872-73, an increase of $7,125,541 in five years, I think the honourable gentleman might have felt that something was to be learned from examining the financial policy of his predecessors, rather than cast the undeserved obloquy on them that he did. And when it is considered that that enormous increase of no less than seven millions of dollars per annum was obtained, in contrasting these five years, the first with the last; when it is remembered that that was not due to increased taxes as will be to the honourable gentleman's increased revenue which he will be able to flout in our faces a year hence, but had been accomplished while at the same time we had made the great staples of tea, coffee, &c., free and had reduced the taxation to the measures of the people, no less than two millions per annum, we have every reason to court the fullest investigation of the policy of my right honourable friend who now sits beside me.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT—How much does my honourable friend say he reduced the taxes? Two millions?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Over two millions per annum in the two years preceding 1872 and 1873. Now. I have shown the honourable gentleman that he was wrong in his impressions with reference to the trade of the country, and which I do him the justice to say he has frankly and fairly admitted in the speech with which Parliament was opened this session. I have shown the honourable gentleman that he was wrong in reference to the revenue of the country to the extent of something like two millions of dollars, and in reference to the expenditure of the country to something like a million and a quarter; and the honourable gentleman himself was compelled to admit that he was seriously wrong in the means by which he proposed to deal with what he conceived to be the financial position of the country a year ago. Every person recollects that the measures which were proposed to this House, and proposed with severe strictures and comments as to the tariff policy of his predecessor, Sir FRANCIS HINCKS; everyone knows how, that after that the hon. gentleman came back to the House, and reformed his tariff, accepted the criticisms of this side of the House, and tried to get as nearly as he could into the same line of policy as the gentleman who had preceded him in that important office. But there is one question that I thought the honourable gentleman would not have risen from his seat to-day without dealing with. Every person recollects that when the Government of the United States removed the duty from tea and coffee the Government of Canada adopted the same policy and made those great staples free. When it was found we were to have a duty of ten per cent. imposed on tea and coffee as against us, that the Government took power from Parliament to enable them to pass a Minute of Council to meet that policy on the part of the United States, I may say that the policy of protecting the tea importers of Canada by the imposition of a ten per cent. duty on tea from the United States, was a policy which met with a hearty response from every part of Canada. I am not aware that a single person approached the Government with a view to alter that policy, and I do say that the Hon. Minister of Finance was not candid to the House when, at the last moment, he slipped a clause into the Bill without mentioning the important change he was making in the fiscal policy of the country—a change which, I say, he was not justified in making. I am not a lawyer, but I do not believe that the change then made which had the effect of enabling them to repeal our Order in Council destroyed the power to pass another, but if it did it was due to the House and the commercial interests of this country that our traders should have been placed on an equal footing with our American neighbours. Simple justice should have been done to this large and important branch of the trade of the country, or rather what was an important trade, but which, if the suicidal policy of the Government is continued, will soon cease to be. The House will recollet that the hon. gentleman's duties in relation to wines received a most important modification from his hands under the strictures with which the proposed tariff was met. I was in hopes that having still left the tariff on wines in a most unsatisfactory condition, having lost revenue on them,—the hon. gentleman shakes his head! Then I say, he should have stated in his address something like the results of his tariff bearing on the condition of the industries and branches of trade subjected to the additional taxation of last session. I know the tax is most unjust and unequal as it stands to-day. I know the tariff on wines introduced by the hon. gentleman has the effect of making the poor poorer and the rich richer. The duties on wines consumed —necessarily consumed, as a matter of medicinal treatment, by the poor—are largely increased when compared with the wines used by the most luxurious classes of society. That is a matter not undeserving the attention of the Minister of Finance, and it ought to have received attention from him. Then there is the question of sugar. The House will remember that although the hon. gentleman withdrew the tariff on sugar, he said that would receive the attention of the Government this session. There never was a time when the Hon. Minister of Finance had it in his power to deal with this question in a manner more just to the people than at present. He says we have a surplus of half a million. I say the Government have no right to have a surplus. If they have, they should endeavor to get rid of it, and the best way to do so is that pursued by us, and by the Government of Great Britain—by lightening the taxes on the people; and when I tell you the article of sugar pays in this country fifty per cent. on its cost, while in England the Government have swept the tax away altogether, I think the House will agree with me that the time was most opportune to have used this surplus—not in adjusting the tariff for sugars, as the hon. gentleman proposed last year, but by such a decrease of duty upon the lower grades of sugar as might accomplish the object the hon. gentleman had in view when bringing the tariff before the House, and which would be received as a boon by the poorer classes of the country. As far as the tariff is concerned, we had our triumph last year. As far as the revenue is concerned we have our triumph now. We stand in the presence of this hon. House and the country te show that the views we propounded to the country in relation to this matter were sound. I commenced my speech by congratulating the hon. gentleman on the improved tone of his speech. It will be a matter of congratulation not only to this House but to the country that the Hon. Minister of Finance, having been warmed in his seat, and accustomed to the sweets of office, has adopted an altered tone, and says to the country that the position of affairs is not so disastrous as a year ago it seemed to him to be. I congratulate him on his altered tone, and on the prospect which his altered views indicate that the Canada Pacific Railway, the hope of this country, will be entered upon with a vigor and spirit which certainly did not characterize the Budget speech which the hon. member delivered a year ago to this House. The construction of that work will increase the revenue, and year by year we will find that steady prosperity which obtained under the late Government from the commencement of Confederation, and which under a proper Administration of Public Affairs will continue in the future.

It being six o'clock the House rose for recess.

——:++:——

After Recess.

NORTH WELLINGTON ELECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER stated that on Saturday he had received the Judge's decision in the North Wellington Election Case. Under the Acts of 1873-4 he (the SPEAKER) had issued his warrant for a new election immediately. After it had been issued the Clerk discovered that the Judge in his certificate had stated that he had proceeded under the statute 37 Vict.—that it, from the facts, seemed to have been a clerical error. He (the SPEAKER) however hesitated to submit his report to the House until means were taken to ascertain from the Justice whether it was a blunder in the proceedings, or a clerical error. In reply to a telegram he learnt that the proceedings were held under the Act of 1873. He telegraphed to the Judge that it would be necessary to amend the certificate and send it in, when the warrant would be issued again, no proceedings having been taken under the first writ, which was stopped in transit.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE thought the SPEAKER was quite right in waiting for the amended certificate. It would never do to amend the certificate on a mere telegram.

Right Hon. SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD thought, under the circumstances, as it would cause only a momentary delay, it would be well to wait until the amended certificate was received before issuing the writ.

THE BUDGET.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER resumed his speech. When the House rose I was about to make a brief reference to the remarks of the Minister of Finance touching the important subject which he has submitted to the House with reference to the loans negotiated in England. Before doing so, however, I shall occupy the attention of the House for a few moments longer in relation to another very important branch of the speech which the Hon. Minister of Finance has just delivered to the House. I mean that referring to the estimates of the present year. Now, the House will remember that there was no subject upon which that hon. gentleman has dilated more forcibly during the past four years than the charges of extravagance which he brought against the late Administration. No Budget was ever submitted from the time that the hon. gentleman went into opposition to the late Government without the very severest strictures being levelled against it by that hon. gentleman, on the ground of recklessness and extravagance, and the hon. gentleman from his seat on the Treasury benches, followed up the same course last session, and in terms the strongest that he could possibly use characterized the action of his predecessors in reference to the expenditure which they from time to time submitted to the House, as in the last degree uncalled for and extravagant. I will read a single passage from the hon. gentleman's speech of last session, referring to that matter. "The Government are quite "prepared to assume responsibility to "the fullest extent for any act of their "own; but they are not disposed to "assume, nor will their supporters or the "country at large expect them to assume, "any responsibility for acts of their "predecessors against which they protested "to the utmost; which they opposed at "every stage from their inception onward, "and for the results of which they are "now to provide." Now, I see that the organ of the Administration in this city, draws the attention of the country to the estimates which the Finance Minister has submitted; I read from the Ottawa Times of the 13th Feb.:—

"These figures are worthy of careful perusal "at the hands of our readers, for they demon- "strate that Mr. MACKENZIE'S Government are "faithfully carrying out the pledge made to the "country, viz.: To govern the Dominion "efficiently and at the same time economically."

Now, I have, as one of the readers of the Times, accepted its advice and acted upon it. I have carefully considered the estimates which the hon. gentleman has submitted with a view to ascertain if that hon. gentleman holds the same sentiments on the Treasury benches that he held while he occupied a seat on the Opposition benches, and which he expressed in very strong terms last session. But I have perused these estimates with the greatest possible care without being able to find any evidence whatever that that hon. gentleman intends to fulfil the pledge which the Government of which he is a member made to the country that if they were returned they would retrench the public expenditure and economise the public money. On the contrary, I am prepared to prove from the estimates themselves that if the late Administration were extravagant, the present one is more so. I am prepared to show from the estimates that never in the history of the country did any Government exhibit less disposition to retrench public expenditure or economise public money. The hon. member himself stated to the House, during the speech which he has just delivered, the leading items that had largely swoolen the estimates of the late Government, and I am sure, as the hon. gentleman read them over, there was not a member of this House who would say that if he had that subject under consideration he would have adopted any other course than that pursued by the old Government, yet this extravagant Administration—as the hon. gentleman declared it to be, after abandoning his party—although they reduced the taxes $2,000,000 per annum, in three years, expended out of ordinary revenue on public works chargeable to capital in five years no less than $11,726,045. They were not in the position of this Ministry, coming down to this House and saying the revenue would not cover expenditure, but, on the contrary, they found the revenue so large that while they were able to provide liberally and abundantly for every department of the public service, they could, at the same time expend on public works chargeable to capital, reducing the debt of the country nearly $12,000,000 below what it would otherwise have been, out of the ordinary revenue of the country. But what was the budget of the hon. gentleman who declared that he was not only unable to meet the ordinary expenses of the country with the revenue, but required to levy an additional $3,000,000 of taxes on the people? The House knows very well that the hon. gentleman's first budget was in excess of the largest expenditure, the most extravegant if he will (because he was shown that the expenditure of last year was greater than that of any previous year) proposed to this House to authorize him to expend $2,603,345 more than the largest expenditure that the late Government ever made in this country. The estimates for 1874-5 proposed an expenditure of $25,470,649.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT.—The hon. gentleman is including the balances carried forward.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.—I accept the hon. gentleman's statement and would remind him that I drew his attention to the fact that he did not require so much money because he had the balances to carry forward, but no argument I could adduce would persuade him to abate one jot or tittle of his estimates, and he accompanied his demand on the House with the statement that this expenditure was inevitable, although he was obliged to increase the taxation $3,000,000. We have now, in his estimates that the supporters of the Government outside of the House declare to be evidence of the intention of this Government to govern the country economically, that the proposed expenditure for 1875-6 is no less than $24,857,488, or $1,990,184 more than the largest expenditure ever made by any former Government. Yet this is the Government that claims credit from the people of this country for its great economy. Why, does not every one know that one of the largest items of expenditure made by the late Government was in the construction of important public works chargeable to income. Every person is aware, that has had the honour of occupying a seat in this House, that that is an expenditure that you do not expect to go on with. Every person knows that when the Dominion had to provide the principal places with public buildings there was an end to that expenditure, yet we were enabled to reduce the current expenditure while making these improvements, without crippling the resources of the country. We have in the estimate before the House an increase of nearly two millions of dollars over the estimate of the late Administration which the hon. gentleman denounced as recklessly extravagant. Yet, they claim credit for being a remarkably economical Government. If the people accept this statement of the Hon. Finance Minister as evidence of their economy, I say they will find just the same difference between the promises and the performances of the hon. gentlemen opposite that they have in reference to every other subject. Now, let me draw the attention of this House to some items of this increased expenditure in this economical budget that the hon. member's friends are are now claiming credit for. In the item of civil government, the largest expenditure ever known in this country under the old government was in 1873-4, when it amounted to $883,685; but that amount is not sufficient for this economical government. They demand $922,391—a small increase of $38,406. The Administration of Justice I will pass over for the hon. gentleman will tell me that it is a matter over which the government have no control, but in that there is an increase of $72,258.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The increase is $37,000.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then it is a mistake in the figures! I have taken them from the estimates as they are. However, I did not draw attention to that particular; it is a small matter in this heavy budget. I will not make reference to the item of immigration further than to say that I feel the Hon. Premier did himself no more than justice when he complimented my hon. friend who was formerly in charge of that Department, and who now sits on this side of the House, on the eminent success which had attended his policy and that of the late Administration on this subject. The estimate this year, however, is $428,910, being $164,308 over the largest expenditure we ever made in that service. I am reminded by my right hon. friend who sits beside me that there is an Agent General to provide for, and I suppose that is a subject for which we ought to be profoundly grateful to the Administration. I cannot pass over the next item without pausing to make a remark. I find in the item for pensions, though the largest expenditure ever made under this head before was $120,896, it is now swoolen to $207,434, or an increase of no less than $140,981. Now, I may perhaps be reminded by some hon. gentlemen, on both sides of this House, that there is an item which meets the most cordial and hearty concurrence from the members of this House, as it will of the country; that is $50,000 for the veterans of 1812, but that item will not cover an increase for pensions of $140,981. This includes additional provision for superannuation. I call it a demand on the House to place at the service of this Government a sum of money, not for any necessary purpose of superannuating worn out officials, but to provide them with the means of ridding the Government of the services of many of the ablest public servants in this country, only to find a place for partisans of their own. When this item comes up for consideration I will be prepared to show the House that they have dispensed with the ablest men in the service and replaced them with comparatively incompetent men at the cost of the country, and therefore I say this large increase deserves the careful consideration of members of this House as it will receive the close scrutiny of the intelligent people of this country.

A MEMBER—Name them.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I will tell them when the vote on this question comes up, and not a few cases will be mentioned in which the power to superannuate has been grossly abused. Then I come to the item of the Militia. In that I find they ask no less than $1,130,000, an increase of $152,624 over the appropriation of $977,376.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—And that was too big.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—It will hardly answer the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to complain of the expenditure of 1873-4, because I am afraid he is to a certain extent responsible for it. Then we come to the item or Public Works. There is no grant of the public service that the hon. gentleman in his budget speech of a year ago animadverted on in a stronger manner in reference to the expenditures of the late administration than this, and yet we find an increase in the estimate for this year over the amount expended last year—and I am now speaking of public works chargeable to income —of $647,749 over the expenditure for 1873-4. Then in ocean and river service we have an increase of $33,262. And now, I come to that branch of the public service with which, night after night, for several years we were charged by hon. gentlemen opposite with being grossly extravagant—I refer to the expenditure in connection with the collection of the public revenue. Who that has had the honour to fill the position I held for a short time — Minister of Customs— was not compelled to fight, night after night, through the estimates against the attacks of the hon. members opposite, who charged him with extravagance in the appropriations for which he asked? Now, the Hon. Finance Minister tells us that the estimate of last year, $658,299, is to be increased to $721.520, only an increase of $63,221 over the largest expenditure ever made before in this country for that service.

Mr. YOUNG—Is the hon. gentleman comparing one year's estimates with the other?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman is quite intelligent enough to know what I am doing. He knows an estimate is framed in reference to the expenditure for which it is required, if he knows any thing. He knows perfectly well that when a Finance Minister sits down to make an estimate, he sits down with the column of expenditure required for that service, before him, and that he is bound not to ask this House for a single dollar that a comparison with the previous expenditure does not show him will be required for the expenditure of the year. I tell the hon. member who has interrupted me as I believe simply for the purpose of making an interruption, that I am not surprised that he sits uneasily in his seat when he finds the gentleman that he is sustaining, and asks the country to sustain on the ground of the economical manner in which they are going to administer the affairs of this Dominion, asking this House to give no less than $63,221 more money to pay for collecting the revenue of this country than was ever expended before. Then in reference to the collection of excise, there is an increase of $30,565, the estimate being swollen from $206,935 in 1873-4 to $237,500 in 1875-6 and this without reference to the expenditure required under the new Act respecting the inspection of weights and measures, and the inspection of gas, but simply to the collection of excise. Then in the estimate for the Post Office, there is an increase of 301,330 over the largest sum ever expended by the old government in that department. Now, I come to the estimate for public works chargeable to capital account. I make the same corrections that I did in the former accounts in connection with the comparative statement. I proved that $545,525 was put down in this expenditure over and above what was expended in that service. I proved that that amount had been charged to railway revenue, and taking that out I find the largest sum expended by us—in 1873-4—was $1,844,154. The hon. gentlemen who follow us ask us to place $2,379,745 or $535.591, more for the operation of railways in this country than was ever expended in past years. Now I need not follow this subject. I have told the House what the total is. They ask for the modest sum of nearly $2,000,000 more than the greatest expenditure ever made in this country for the purpose of swelling almost all the expenditures which are under the control or in the hands of the government. But there is one point in which I must admit they have made a decrease. I point it out because I wish to be just to the hon. gentlemen opposite; it is the reduction on the geological survey, which amounts to $1,707. Now, I have no hesitation in saying that if there is a service for which the government of this country would be warranted in placing in the estimates a very much larger sum than the appropriation they ask, it is this I say, with the great North-West opening out upon us, with British Columbia added to our domain, there is a field for economical discovery that no intelligent member of this House would for a moment question. Who is it that does not know that the people in the North-West, with the millions that must be brought into it, if Canada is true to itself.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—This is really so very gross a misrepresentation that I am sure the hon. gentleman cannot have looked at the paper before him. He will find on page 52 that the expenditure this year is $5,000 more than last year.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am extremely glad to hear it, and it saves me from a duty that I felt bound to perform. I can only say that I examined these figures with some care, and I will be very much surprised to find—because it is impossible for me to go through the papers now—that I am mistaken. I may say this much to the hon. gentlemen opposite, that a decrease has been claimed for them in this item by the press that supports them. I do not intend to occupy the time of the House at any greater length in reference to the point to which I have drawn attention, but as I promised the House that I would pay some attention to the remarks of the hon. gentleman in reference to the loan, I shall beg the indulgence of the House while I draw attention to that matter. I am obliged to take exception to every statement made by the hon. gentleman in reference to the loan. I believe I shall be able to show to the House not only that the hon. gentleman was not entitled to the credit which he claimed for himself; but that there are circumstances connected with the negotiation of this loan which are of a very serious character, and demand the immediate attention of this House. It will be in the recollection of members on both sides of the House that when the Minister of Finance returned from England the Toronto Globe claimed for that hon. gentleman the credit of having negotiated a loan which, compared with the current rate of the five per cents. in England, was a gain to the people of this country of over $800,000. Well, Mr. SPEAKER, that statement was subjected to a good deal of criticism. The hon. gentleman has stated that there are three modes by which the character of a loan ought to be judged. One mode, he said, was the ruling price of consols at the time the loan was negotiated. Another mode was to compare the last loan with that negotiated by Mr. TILLEY, and the third mode—and the only one that I think will be accepted by hon. members of this House as the true test by which to judge of the character of this financial transaction—is to compare its terms with those upon which parties similarly situated were able to negotiate loans at the same time. I deny that the ruling price of consols have any thing to do with the question.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT — Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman says "Hear, hear!" What did he tell the House during his speech—that any one who had negotiated a loan had found that the rate of consols varied six per cent. during a single year.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Twelve per cent.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—And yet the hon. gentleman asks us to accept the ruling price of consols as any indication. There are a thousand circumstances connected with the price of consols which do not touch a loan of this character. I pass that by as utterly aside of the question, and unworthy of examination, as giving any basis for estimating the terms of the loan. Then, the hon. gentleman asks the House to compare his loan with that negotiated by Mr. TILLEY. What does he take hon. members of the House for? Does he suppose that the intelligent members of this House do not know that the value of a debenture in London one year can no more be contrasted with the value of the same debenture another year, than can the price of a ton of coal one year be compared with that of another year. Any one who knows anything of financial matters knows that such are the fluctuations of the money market from year to year; that no test is thereby afforded. In what position would such an argument place the predecessors of Mr. TILLEY, to go back in Canadian history, if such a test was to be employed? The House knows that the last test is the only one worthy of one moment's consideration at the hands of hon. members. Before proceeding to employ the third test, I will tell the House what was the result of the criticism which that statement in the Globe received at the hands of an experienced accountant. I shall quote from an article which appeartd in the Globe itself, written by a reliable accountant, whose figures never have and never can be controverted, and whose statement was found to be so incontrovertible that the Globe has been silent ever since in respect to the great financial achievement of the Minister of Finance. This communication shows that instead of the Globe's statement being correct, that this loan was negotiated on terms which would give $800,000 more than the price at which our five per cents. were ruling that day in London, the loan was negotiated at a loss of two and a half millions to Canada.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear!" I tell him there is no better indication of the satisfactory condition of the money market in England on the day the loan was negotiated than the price at which Canadian five per cents. were ruling. I did not intend to say (I am only taking the argument of the other side), and I do not say that you can negotiate a loan of twenty millions of dollars at the same price as you can sell small parcels of debentures; but I say that instead of the Finance Minister effecting a saving of $800,000 as compared with the value of five per cents., his loan was attained with a loss of two and a half million dollars.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—You pledge youself to that.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I pledge myself to that; and I will give the hon. gentleman the figures, which I defy him or any other gentleman to controvert. For the five per cents. we would have received, under the hon. gentleman's loan of £4,000,000 sterling, $19,600,000 at 107, giving $20,972,000. I may state at this point that the Canada five per cents. on the day on which the loan was negotiated were selling at 109; there was two per cent. of accrued interest, which left seven per cent. clear. We would pay principle, $19.600,000; interest for thirty years at five per cent, $29,400,000, together $49,000,000. The amount paid for the use of $20,962,000 would therefore be $28,028,000, or 4.45-100 per cent. That is the amount at the ruling rate of our five per cents on the day our loan was negotiated.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT rose and desired to ask a question.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I would rather not be interrupted as I am making a statement of figures. I will place these figures in the hon. gentleman's hands, and let him get the most experienced accountant in this country to deal with them, and endeavour to controvert the correctness of that result. Let me now examine the loan effected by the Hon. Minister of Finance by the same test and see what we paid for that, and what the rate was. My statement will give the hon. member $17,640,000, as the sum derived from £4,000,000 sterling, although he has told us that he only received $17,500,000, and I therefore give the hon. gentleman the benefit of that additional $140,000 in his calculation. Yet I shall show, notwithstanding this advantage of $140,000, what is the difference in the calculations, and that the loss suffered by the country from the negotiations of the Finance Minister is what I have stated. Let us now look at the calculation based on the terms obtained by the hon. gentleman. Assuming we received for $19,600,000 at 90, $17,640,000; we pay principal, $19,600,000; 30 years' interest at 4 per cent., $23,520,000. Under the terms of the loan we lose 130 days' interest at 4 per cent, for the hon. gentleman sold the bonds with accrued interest, giving the parties purchasing the bonds the advantage of accrued interest on the money before they had furnished it. The amount paid for the use of $17,640,000, $25,759,300, or 4.87-100 per cent. "Under the five per cents the country receives the use of $3,332,000 as principal more than it does by the CARTWRIGHT loan, and supposing at the same rate of interest Mr. CARTWRIGHT had succeeded in borrowing $20,972,000, instead of $17,640,000, the difference in favor of the five per cents. would be $2,612,000." These were the figures of a gentleman who published a letter in the Globe signed "Another Accountant," which statement none of the Government accountants had been able to controvert. I have instituted a comparison between a loan negotiated at the ruling prices of our five per cents. and the terms on which the loan was effected, and shown that the latter were two and a-half million dollars below the results which would have been obtained if the loan had been negotiated at the ruling prices of the five per cents. I am now going to apply the test which the Hon. Minister of Finance said was the true test, but I will draw from other sources. I will not ask hon. members to look at the United States, Belgium, or countries whose peculiar circumstances in regard to the negotiation of loans only become known on obtaining a thorough understanding of the whole question; but I will take a loan negotiated in London by a country which ought not to stand in any more favorable position in the money market than Canada. I will draw attention to a loan negotiated by New Zealand at the same time as the Minister of Finance negotiated this loan. I will take that country with a population of 325,000, a country which with that population owed a debt on 1st June of £13,411,736 sterling, a debt which, taking our cash assets into account, is a greater debt for New Zealand, with its one-tenth of the population, than the debt of Canada; and yet its Finance Minister was able to go into the money market of the world, side by side with our Finance Minister, and negotiate a loan on better terms than were obtained by the Finance Minister of Canada. In the financial statement the Finance Minister of New Zealand (Hon. JULIUS VOGEL), made on the 21st July last, said "the £500,000 sterling negotiated at 4¼ per cent. realized £490,000 or 98 per cent., which making allowance for reducing the discount, is tantamount to borrowing at the rate of £4.12.6 per cent. Since then we have advices by cable that £1,500,000 sterling additional of a similar loan has been negotiated. When the Public Works policy was initiated it was calculated that the money required to carry it out might be obtained at 5½ per cent. interest. It is gratifying to know that the average rate of interest on the Public Works' loans yet negotiations including allowance for recovery of discount, amounts only to £4-14-11 per cent. the Hon. Finance Minister's loan, when we take into account the sum that is to be paid at the end of thirty years in excess of that received, costs us nearly £5.0.0 per cent." I am not going to deal further with the amount received, but I have simply contented myself with proving those facts of the question which required to be proved. There are other features of the loan which demand the serious attention of members of this House. I say that the Minister of Finance has adopted a new policy for Canada in the negotiation of the loan. I say he has established a precedent from which the most serious disasters might result to this country, if at any time it happened that the position of Finance Minister should be held by any gentleman of less strict integrity than the hon. gentleman opposite, I will not for a single moment insinuate that the hon. gentleman is capable, because I do not believe he is capable, of dealing with the financial interests of Canada in any way other than with strict integrity. But I say he has introduced a new principle in the negotiation of loans by which a less honest successor could at any moment put half a million dollars in his pocket, without the possibility of this House or the country bringing him to account. I hold in my hands the terms on which this loan was placed on the market, and after I have drawn attention to it, the House will agree that such a precedent is not in accordance with the principle of the public accounts in this country, which principle is this—that no man, from the highest to the lowest, is allowed to expend one dollar of the public money or handle one dollar if there is not means of having a close and accurate examination to ascertain whether the money was properly used or not. That is a cardinal principle, and this House will be unwise if it ever sanctions any departure from it. The Minister of Finance went into the money market of the world at the most favorable time. He went there at a time when our five per cents. were quoted at a premium of seven per cent., showing that the time was more favorable to negotiate a loan than any other in our history. Did he place this loan of twenty millions of dollars from a country which stands thus deservedly high, whose credit from the hour of Confederation had steadily risen, until it had reached a position of which Canada might be justly proud, on the money market as Mr. TILLEY and Sir JOHN ROSE did, and thus enable capitalists to compete for the loan, and obtain for us all the money possible. He did not adopt this course; he did that which was never done before in the history of Canada by any Finance Minister. With the example of those gentlemen before him, the present Finance Minister went to the money market and placed thereon a loan of twenty millions of dollars, and fixed the rate of interest and the discount. Now, what is the result? The result is this—If any one went to England and floated a loan of twenty millions, and fixed the rate of interest and the discount, competition was prevented. When the papers for which I have given notice are brought down, I believe I shall be able to prove that forty millions were offered instead of the twenty millions asked for.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he could easily furnish the information desired by the hon. member for Cumberland. He got the loan taken up only from the fact that the agents themselves took one million of the bonds.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I thank the hon. gentleman for his information, because he has given me an important point—that the financial agents for the Dominion have themselves taken a considerable portion of the loan. It is important to the House that it should know that fact. Supposing forty millions had been offered, the hon. gentleman was prevented from accepting the increased amount, and obtaining for the people of Canada the advantages to be derived from competition among the capitalists. I say that a principle that enabled the person negotiating a loan to fix the premium and rate of interest, and also—and it could be done through the intervention of other people—to negotiate with the capitalist in this way—"What will you give me if I give you two, five or ten millions of Canadian debentures at a certain rate of interest and at a certain price?" It is purely a question of financial economy, and the capitalist might say, "I will give you one quarter or one half per cent." I have already guarded myself from being supposed to cast any imputations on the Hon. Minister of Finance. I have the most unbounded confidence in his integrity, but it is not with him I am dealing—it is with the principle which he has established for the first time which would enable another and less honest man in his position to put half a million dollars in his pocket, without the possibility of Parliament or the people of the country being able to discover it. But these are not the only objections I find to the terms of this law. I have already said that nearly three hundred thousand of accrued interest was paid to the parties who took this loan before they had advanced a dollar of the money. But that was not all. There is a clause contained in the terms of this loan calculated enormously to increase the value of these debentures, and which has never entered into the terms of any loan before. There is a contract in which it is stipulated that every man who subscribes a dollar to this loan shall have the advantage of our being compelled to invest in these bonds, one-half per cent. per annum of it in a sinking fund. What is the result? The result is that the holders of this loan have nothing to do but agree among themselves that they will not accept less than ninety-nine pounds on the hundred, and Canada is bound to take up one-third of this entire loan before the end of thirty years at the rate of ninety-nine pounds on the hundred. While that is calculated to give an enormously increased value to the loan, it is establishing a principle which has never been established before. It is true we are investing our sinking fund in five per cents., but that is done by Order-in-Council, and can be cancelled the moment it is found the holders of the debentures take any advantage of it. But here is a contract made by the Finance Minister, for the first time in this country, by which an enormously increased value is given to this loan, from the fact that the Government of Canada is compelled to invest a sinking fund on this loan. But there is a peculiar feature in this. The terms of this loan do not simply fix the rate of ninety and the interest at four per cent.; they do not simply stipulate by contract that one-half per cent. of this loan shall be invested in a sinking fund; they do more. There is no guarantee that the parties tendering for this loan would be dealt with with even-handed justice and without favouritism. I have absolved the hon. gentleman before from anything like the slightest want of integrity, but I shall look with interest to the return of the names of the parties who have received this loan, because I find a clause which enables the grossest favouritism to be practised—which enables the Finance Minister if he desires to give to one man all that he asks, and refuse another man a single dollar. And when the Finance Minister stated that the financial agents have received a million of the stock, he threw a certain amount of light upon the consultation which resulted in the adoption of this new untried experiment as far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned and I hope an experiment never to be repeated. I regret that it has been necessary that I should draw the attention of the House to the circumstances connected with this matter, and I regret especially having been obliged to trespass so long upon the kind indulgence of the House in making such reference to the hon. gentleman's statement as I feel it, under the circumstances, my duty to do.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that, probably, without knowing it, his honorable friend had done the Government the greatest possible service which he could have bestowed upon it. He (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) had always been exceedingly desirous that the policy which this Government had adopted, and which he meant to adopt, should be fully contrasted with the policy of their predecessors. Beginning at the first of the honorable gentleman's statements, he would call the attention of the House to the statement that he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) as Finance Minister discredited Canada because he refused to say last session that there was no commercial depression, whereas this year, finding that the depression had ceased, he had made that statement. He repeated that there was a considerable and remarkable depression in the two main interests of the country, and thought that he was perfectly justified, and that it was his bounden duty to state the fact that he had stated. As to the accusation that he had injured the credit of Canada because he had declared honestly and openly to the world that there was a deficit which must be provided for by increased taxation, what would the House say when he told them that the Hon. Mr. TILLEY, thirteen months previously, had told the country that there was going to be a deficit, for which he would have to provide for by increased taxation. He made the statement that there was to be additional taxation, because every man of common sense in the country knew perfectly well that new taxation was imminent, and it would have been the most ridiculous pretence for anyone to say that a single merchant of the slightest astuteness would have been deceived had there not been any reference to the increased taxation in the Speech from the Throne. He might remind the honorable member for Cumberland that one of his familiar friends had publicly stated at the Dominion Board of Trade, weeks before the House met, that there would undoubtedly be a considerable deficit. He (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) could not say that he attached much importance to it, but at the same time, as the honorable gentleman had made it a reproach to him that he had so stated, he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) adduced that statement of the honorable gentleman he referred to as additional evidence of what every man in the country knew, namely: that there would be a deficit, and that increased taxation would therefore be necessary. As he had said, he was exceedingly glad that the honorable gentleman had contrasted the policy which the present Government had adopted, both in the matter of receipts and in that of expenditure, with the policy of their predecessors. The honorable gentleman had objected to his charging a certain item to income instead of to capital. He (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) had done so advisedly, and in strict accordance with the principle which he had always advocated. There was no more questionable entry ever made in the columns of any Public Accounts than the item of $610,000, made in 1868-9, chargable to capital by the Finance Minister of that day. He (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) had the gravest objection to that proceeding then, as he had, also, to the equally objectionable proceeding of charging to the revenue of the current year, large sums received on capital account from the Great Western of Canada. The only excuse for such a course was that the financial condition of the country was such that the Finance Minister was perhaps entitled to use every effort to place our position before the world in the best light possible. He came now to the graver question as to whether or not he and the Minister of Public Works had been justified in pursuing the course which they most distinctly indicated on the floor of the House they would pursue with reference to the items falsely and imperfectly charged to the railway account which they contended should be charged to incomes. He called the House to bear in mind, because they would have occasion before long to make further investigation into that matter, that for the last fifteen years the railways of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had engaged the earnest attention of the honourable member for Cumberland, with what result let the report of Mr. C. J. BRYDGES and still more the answer of Mr. CARVELL show. He hoped that the policy of the Government would always continue to differ from the policy of the member for Cumberland on this point. The next statement of the honourable gentlemen that the Government were bound to follow the evil ways of their predecessors in bringing down this comparative statement was too absurd to require any reply. The statement they brought down they were responsible for just as the late Government were responsible for the statement they had brought down, and if they (the present Government) chose to bring down an honest, open statement to the public, so much the better for the public, and so much the worse for those who covered a charge which should have been made to income under the false guise of capital account. Such a course might perhaps be excusable in certain railway companies suffering under financial embarrassments, but certainly that argument did not apply to the Finance Minister of this country. He desired it to be understood that what they had done in this matter had been done with the most deliberate intention. Their opinion was that it was a great mistake to allow capital account to remain open in the case of public works after those public works were once fairly constructed. The opposite course was offering in fact a direct premium to an improper mode of keeping public accounts. He had no doubt that his hon. friend the Minister of Public Works would explain the reasons which had caused him to place these amounts in the income account. However, as a principle he accepted most unreservedly the responsibility for it, and if his hon. friend the Minister of Public Works had done nothing more than to establish such a principle he would have done a very great service to this country. It might be asked how the Grand Trunk of Canada for instance got on if they adopted the same rule. Well, was it desirable that the Dominion of Canada should conduct their public works in the same fashion as the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. DOMVILLE—What did you send Mr. BRYDGES to the Lower Provinces for?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that he knew Mr. BRYDGES was an able and an honourable man, and he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) was inclined to think that the hon. gentleman found he was a little too faithful in the discharge of his duties to serve their purpose. He (Mr. BRYDGES) had discharged his high trust with the utmost ability and fidelity. With respect to these expenditures he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) might say that on coming into office he found these railways greatly run down and very badly managed; and therefore a large amount would be necessary to put them into a state of efficiency. It was quite true that he had stated that according to Mr. TILLEY'S estimate not more than twenty-two millions ought to be expected from the revenue unless an additional tax was imposed. In the first place that estimate was $260,000 less than Mr. TILLEY'S own. Mr. TILLEY, in his budget speech, admitted that there would be an income of $21,740,000 and the addition of Prince Edward Island, he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) stated he believed would make the amount about twenty-two millions, and he had no reason whatever to doubt that that income would have been received had it not been for the direct effect of the new tariff. It was true that he took exception to certain items which Mr. TILLEY had estimated for; but in the general results he agreed with Mr. TILLEY, and he had no reason to draw back from that declaration. What he had said with respect to the $24,100,000 was that that amount would have been in the estimates had the sum estimated for by Mr. TILLEY been spent in addition to those which they knew would be spent. Nowhere from the beginning to the end of his speech would the hon. gentleman find the least indication that he expected that the expenditure would amount to $24,000,000. As to that most ingenious and original advice of the hon. gentleman, by which in estimating the expenditure of one year he proposed to add the surplus of the preceding year, all he could say was that he was afraid such an advice would put no money into the public treasury, certainly would not aid our credit abroad.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Did not Mr. TILLEY state to the House on bringing down his budget, that he proposed to meet the deficiency of three quarters of a million by the surplus of the previous year.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he did not recognise the propriety of carrying forward a surplus when they had an expenditure in capital account known largely to exceed that surplus. He might add, and he directed the attention of the House to the fact, that in the English

Parliament this practice of charging one set of expenses to capital account and another to income was very much discountenanced. With respect to the results of the increased tariff he had not said anything, as the matter would have been more properly discussed in detail at another stage. He simply desired to state that he had not altered, in the slightest degree, the views he had expressed last year, with respect, at least, to the modified tariff. No doubt the position of the country was much better since the present Government came into power. That followed as a matter of course, and he was glad to see that his hon. friend opposite appreciated it. With respect to the charge that they had caused any extravagance, as compared with their predecessors, it would certainly be a very serious one if it were true. If the hon. gentleman wished to make any comparison of that kind he would indulge him to a certain extent. Commencing with an expenditure of $13,500,000, hon. gentlemen opposite increased it to $23,500,000, for, as everybody knew, the expenditure for the year 1874 was practically fixed before the present Government came into office. The estimates were not fixed by the present Government at all, but by their predecessors. In view of these facts, he did not think it became hon. members opposite to charge the present Government with extravagance. Again, as to the charge that the present Government had increased the pensions and superannuation list, he would like to ask the hon. gentleman how he made out that the increase amounted to $144,000. According to his (Mr. CARTWRIGHT'S) calculation $84,000 was the utmost of the increase, and of that $50,000 was for an object which he was glad to find the hon. gentleman approved of. As to the superannuation list, he stated that the Government had acted in this matter strictly in accordance with the law, and he invited the criticism of hon. gentlemen on the point, adding that the Government were prepared to justify all that they had done. His hon. friend was exceedingly anxious to know why such an increase had been made in the customs. Now, as the customs were increased to the extent of $80,000 in 1874 by the direct action of the Minister of Customs, it was no wonder that the ex-Minister should feel a little angry that the present Minister should encroach upon his prerogative, and add $30,000 or $35,000 to that expenditure. He (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) had already stated that the greater portion of the expenditure was asked for in order to relieve the merchants of the large cities from an unfair tax, which was not imposed on the residents of smaller towns. He might add that the present Ministry on entering the Departments found such general abuses existing in it, that it was necessary to exercise the utmost vigilance and to employ the most inexpensive staff. He had no doubt his hon. friend would explain to the House the beautiful way in which the Customs Department had been administered by the member for Cumberland. In one place, specially honored as being his residence, and presided over by officers of his own choosing, it was the practice of merchants to receive their goods from the railway trains without the formality of a customs' entry. This was one instance out of many of the way in which the Customs Department was managed. He (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) next adverted to the criticisms of the hon. gentleman opposite upon the loan, and again showed by a comparison with other loans that it was one of the best loans that had been raised in the English market for the last twenty years. As to the statement of the hon. gentleman that he had lost two and a-half millions by not effecting the loan at 5 per cent., at a premium of 107 or 106¼, instead of 4 per cent. at 90, the statement was incorrect on its face, as any one could discover by making the calculation. With respect to the comparison which the hon. gentleman had made between the loans negotiated by some of the Australian colonies and New Zealand, he would observe that those loans were by no means so large as the loan he had effected, and moreover, those loans being 4½ per cents at 96 or 97½, were not any better than a 4 per cent. loan at 90, if as good.

Dr. TUPPER—They were issued at 98.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT—A small portion was issued at 98, but had to be withdrawn, and was afterwards taken at a lower rate. The fact was that the moment our loan was effected the Australian Colonies rushed in also to obtain four per cent. loans, but he was sorry to say that so far they had not succeeded. He might also state that had the circumstances warranted, he could have bought back the whole of his loan within one month from the time it was secured, for a less sum than it was issued to the English public. His hon. friend had been good enough to say that he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) had committed a most dangerous act in departing from the old fashion of tendering. He desired to say that before he resolved upon his plan, he took the best available advice, in addition to the advice of the financial agents of Canada. He also desired to state that precisely the same course had been taken by Sir A. T. GALT when he was Finance Minister. The fact was that it was always a very serious consideration whether the rate should be fixed, or whether tenders should be invited. The two cases the hon. gentlemen referred to, in which Sir JOHN ROSE and Mr. TILLEY had effected loans by tendering, were not similar to this loan, because they were effected under the Imperial guarantee. He had given the matter the fullest consideration, and had taken the best advice, and was satisfied that had they followed the course suggested by hon. members opposite, they would not have been able to obtain so large a loan at anything like the rate he obtained. The hon. member for Cumberland had drawn attention to the fact that he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) had negotiated the loan at the best time; it was probably well known that he had selected the most favorable opportunity. But the hon. members mistake in supposing that he had found the credit of Canada was so very high in England that there was no difficulty in effecting the loan. The only thing that saved the credit of Canada from sinking very low was the fact that the House had inflicted condign punishment on the late Government. The credit of Canada had been very seriously injured in Great Britain by the action of the late Government, and if it had not been for the stain which had been inflicted on this country by their action, he would have been able to have effected it on still more favourable terms. He might add for the information of hon. gentlemen opposite that the very first questions put to him were—"What is your policy with respect to the Pacific Railway; we know perfectly well that you have been engaged on an insane project; that your resources are inadequate to carry out the engagement you have made with British Columbia, and it is our duty to tell you that you have two dangers before you. If you say you are going to carry out your engagements, no man will believe you, or trust you. If on the other hand, you repudiate them, you will sink to the position of the repudiating States of America. And it was because he was able to say that the Government of Canada, while not proposing to do impossible things were however, prepared, faithfully and honourably to redeem their obligations, and had imposed an additional tax of $2,000,000 upon the country in order to do so, that he had succeeded in this transaction. With respect to the allotment of the loan, he wished to say, that it was a matter of long negotiation between himself and the financial agents, before he could induce them to take that one million sterling. They were most anxious to escape from the responsibility and it was only by refusing to give them the loan at all that he was able to induce them to take it, and it was due to that arrangement that he had succeeded in placing the whole amount on the English market. As to the clause giving power to refuse an allotment to improper parties, he supposed that the hon. gentleman knew what a "stag" was. It was the practice of unscrupulous men to get improper possession of the original certificates, and every financier always reserved to himself and his principals the power of disposing summarily of the applications of this particular class of people. That was the reason for this clause, and it was not inserted in order that he or the agents might show favoritism to any one. Referring to the statement of the hon. the member for Cumberland that the late Government had reduced the taxation by $2,000,000, he (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) contended that inasmuch as this House had promised before that reduction of taxation to carry on the Pacific Railway as rapidly as the Finances would permit, it was only just that in making the arrangement with British Columbia that amount of taxation should be restored. He repeated, the fact was precisely as he stated, that had there been no additional taxation, there would have been a clear deficit in 1874 of one and a quarter millions, and in 1875 of probably two millions. We would have lost control of the market, and the scenes would have been again repeated—scenes which the people of this country had not forgotten—which we witnessed in 1866 when Sir A. T. GALT was obliged to inform the House that he was forced to borrow money on Canadian bonds at 8 per cent., per annum. He would ask the House if they had forgotten that in 1866-67 our five per cents., now quoted at 106 to 107, had run down to the ruinous figure of 74 or 75 cents on the dollar. He had only to say to hon. gentlemen that if they desired to see these scenes renewed, they had only to transfer his friend from Cumberland from the other side of the House to this.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Did that state of things exist during Mr. TILLEY'S administration?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said it had not, to be sure, but it had been very nearly approached since Confederation. He did not blame Sir ALEXANDER GALT for the condition of things in 1866-67, for he was largely the victim of circumstances. While he hoped we should continue to be as prosperous as we were now, it was not impossible that we might live to experience a check. The hon. gentleman charged him (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) with crying down our credit. He had only to say in reply that he believed that in this, as in other matters, honesty was the best policy, and he knew that he was most likely to succeed if he went to the stock market with a straight forward statement of the manner in which he proposed to meet the liability. The policy of the Government and that of the Opposition were now fairly before the country, and before the House. They had, on one side, the fair, honest determination to fulfil the engagements into which they had entered, and trust for success to a fair and honest statement of their position—to performance rather than to promise—to administer the affairs of the country to the best advantage; and he left it to the House and to the country to judge whether the policy of the hon. gentleman was not of a very different kind. The propositions of the government would bear the strictest scrutiny, and they expected next year to be able to make some additional reductions. It might be impossible that they could carry out all that they anticipated, but they at least would do their best. The true comparison between the present and the late Government was the ratio of increase between the public expenditure during their respective administrations. He could only say in conclusion in reference to to the various items which had been mentioned that he would be very glad to supply his hon. friend with any information he might deem desirable. He thought on one point, at least, the House would be satisfied. The statement laid before them had at least the merit of being plain, and he thought that when the facts came to be fairly considered, the country would find that so far from the Government being chargeable with extravagances and inaccuracies that it was the very opposite, and that his own predictions of last year had almost all of them been fulfilled.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he did not ask leave to reply to the general argument of the hon. gentleman, but he thought the House would indulge him while he made a few remarks touching the insinuations which had been thrown out. To the insinuation that he (Mr. TUPPER) had any corrupt connection with any contractor in this country, or that he had thrown the slightest favor in his capacity of Minister of Customs, or permitted any friend of his to do this which it was not permitted to all men to do, or that he permitted any money to be directed into a channel into which it should not have been directed, he gave the most distinct and emphatic denial, and challenged any hon. gentleman that the moment they could make good any such charge he was prepared to vacate his seat in that House.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT did not mean to impute any improper meddling with the Government revenues. What he had to say was that most gross abuses had been discovered by his hon. friend the Minister of Customs, and were being corrected by him. He did not accuse the hon. gentleman with sharing in the peculations, but he would say that the investigation which had been instituted with regard to the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway, had exposed a state of affairs which did not redound very greatly to the credit of the hon. gentleman or the Government with which he was connected.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he was willing to enter into a most exhaustive examination, and discussion into the whole share that the late Government or himself had had in the administration of the affairs of that railway, and he was prepared to challenge a most exhaustive enquiry.

Mr. DOMVILLE inquired why the Government had sent Mr. BRYDGES down to New Brunswick after he had been dismissed from the Grand Trunk Railway. The Minister of Finance had insinuated that he (Mr. DOMVILLE) knew why Mr. BRYDGES had been sent down. He would like the Minister of Finance to get up and state fairly what he had insinuated. The truth was that he had no charge to make, but crept round like a night assassin. He was here to defend the character of the merchants of the Lower Provinces, and his own character, from the foul aspersions which had been cast upon them. He believed there were corruptions, and he did not think that the Government could have selected a better man to ferret them out, than the Minister of Customs. There was an old saying, and a very true one, "set a merchant to catch a merchant." If corruptions had been committed in the Customs or on the Railways, it should be put an end to, no matter under whose administration they were carried on, no matter whether the right hon. member for Kingston, or the present Premier. Although he had not the honour to be one of the supporters of the Prime Minister, he had the honour to believe that that gentleman intended to do right. Although, as a Liberal, he might differ from him on some questions, he would never be found guilty of casting upon him those reflections and aspersions which the Minister of Finance had cast upon the merchants of the Lower Provinces. He was quite willing if the late Administration allowed any species of corruption, such as altering the value of invoices from England, sending down their poor clerks, who knew nothing of the contents of these invoices, and making them perjure themselves, that it should be put an end to, and he was proud to say that the present Administration had managed to do that which the late Goxernment were not able to do. There was nothing like appointing merchants to the position of Minister of Customs, in order that he might ferret out those things. Of course there had been abuses. If the Minister of Customs thought that he overstated the case he would sit down and let him contradict him, but he could not do it. He would say nothing more upon that point, because he was glad to know that in the future all this would be correct. As to Mr. BRYDGES being sent to the Intercolonial Railway, he thought that it would be admitted, at least by the members from the Lower Provinces, that the experiment had been a failure. For any Government, or any manager of a railway, to bring down a tariff which, it was stated distinctly, it was necessary to be applied to a railway to make it a financial success, and yet it was opposed by the voice of the people to depart from it, was, he thought, a most extraordinary procedure. If the policy had been correct in principle, or if it were the opinion of the Government that it was correct, it should not be departed from, at least until it had been proved that the revenue of the railway had thereby been reduced. In this case the matter had been worked thus: If a man had a lumber mill he was asked, "Do you support the Government?" "Yes." "Oh! you shall have a special rate for your lumber. You must bring it to town." But if he were a farmer the question was, "Did you support Domville?" "Yes." "Oh! you have only a few paltry bags of grain and flour to send, and you must pay for it at parcel rates," He concluded by complimenting the House upon the improvement apparent in the tone of the debate this year; and, after the speeches of the Finance Minister and the hon. member for Cumberland, he thought it would not be wise for him to enter at very great length upon the debate.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he did not intend to join in any formal debate. He merely rose to call the attention of the House to the extraordinary circumstances that find a prominent gentleman on the opposite side of the House for the first time really and earnestly contending that the Government shall charge certain expenditures to capital instead of revenue account. When he was in opposition he had a constant struggle with the Government of the day, and voted and spoke to charge such expenditures to income, and he was now really gratified to find a leading gentleman in the opposition insisting that we managed the accounts so as to charge it to income instead of capital. It was a most extraordinary thing for the leader of the Opposition to do, but he could only tell that hon. gentleman that the Government were bound by the same principles on this side of the House, that the same gentlemen advocated when acting on the other side of the House. He considered the half a million which the hon. gentleman insisted was chargeable to capital should not be chargeable to capital, and it should not be chargeable to capital as long as he was connected with the Administration of the affairs of this country. He considered that when a public work was once fairly stocked and fairly in operation that everything connected with it should be chargeable to revenue, because the Government might alienate sums of money from other sources to meet their engagements which a private company could not have at their disposal. The building of additional stock, the obtaining of additional locomotives, making additional sidings, renewing the road with new rails, etc., were clearly chargeable to income and not to capital, and when the hon. gentleman copies my report in proof he seems to think I took the same view as he did. The report of a department like his was not written by the Minister, it was a mere gathering of documents and reports of the respective officers of the department; but there was a simple difference in drawing and working expenses, additions and renewals on the road. The superintendent proper had charge of the working expenses simply. The Chief Engineer had charge of the expenses on the road and so he would have in the future, and he (the Premier) intended that everything connected with the working of the railway should be charged to income, and not to capital. He was quite sure the business men of the House would sustain the Government in the position which they had taken. He would not say much on the topics spoken of by the hon. gentleman opposite, but he would consider it an unfair mode of comparison. The hon. gentleman instituted a comparison between the votes for which they asked the House for the approximate expenditure, and for the actual expenditure of the last year. He knew if they instituted such a comparison as that it would be a false one. It would be fallacious as far as giving information was concerned. Let him take the votes and the estimates, and compare them with the votes and estimates of last year; or let him take the expenditure for any given period under this administration and contrast it with the expenditure under any other administration. The hon. gentleman also alluded in very strong —he would not say offensive terms—to the increase of salaries in the Customs Department, but he supposed the hon. gentleman forgot that on the 31st of October, 1873, at the time they did not possess the confidence of this House, the late Ministry passed an Order in Council to increase the salaries on the Customs list $50,000 a year, yet the hon. gentleman did not scruple, to-night, to charge the whole of this increase on the present Government. It was true the present administration modified that order considerably by $20,000, and yet the hon. gentleman charged the Government, to-night, with making the very increase which the hon. gentleman had put his own hand to. (Hear, hear!) The hon. gentleman from Kings County had alluded very briefly to the position of Mr. BRYDGES as Special Commissioner on the Lower Province Railways. This was not the time to discuss Mr. Brydges' operations or reports, but it was somewhat curious to observe that gentlemen opposite, who placed Mr. BRYDGES as Chief Commissioner for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway ; who was left in the office to which he was entrusted by the gentlemen opposite—is was curious to notice that since that gentleman manifested a desire to investigate the workings and management of the different portions of the road, hon. gentlemen opposite were desirous of assailing him with every opprobious epithet. He was quite satisfied that they should attack Mr. BRYDGES as that gentleman was quite able to defend himself ; but he did not think it was particularly grateful of them to do so. When he came into office the very first thing Mr. BRYDGES did was to hand in his resignation, and he was the only one of the Commissioners who had the good sense and propriety to send in their resignations at once. The others waited until they were removed. He acknowledged Mr. BRYDGES' ability, although he had not the pleasure of being on the same side of politics as he had always been, yet he felt bound to retain his services as one of the ablest men in the country. He did not bind himself to agree with everything Mr. BRYDGES did or may do, but he was bound when a public servant was unjustly attacked to say a word in his favor.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked if he would be allowed to reply, as he thought the hon. gentleman had made a most important mistake when he said all the other members of the Intercolonial Railway Commission but Mr. BRYDGES were dismissed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he did not say they were dismissed, but removed.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman had stated in this House himself that Mr. WALSH had tendered his resignation without any pressure being brought to bear by the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he forgot to state that Mr. WALSH went away on an election tour, a position which he knew would not be tolerated, and he wrote a letter telling him so, therefore it was equivalent to a removal. (Cries of "oh! oh!") What he meant to say was that there was no voluntary resignation of office except by Mr. BRYDGES, as the moment Mr. WALSH plunged into politics he could not remain. Mr. WALSH had the good sense to see this also and resigned, and he gave him credit for it. Only for the improper remarks of the hon. member for Kings County, he would not have referred to this matter at all. Every gentlemen in the House was in possession of the various tariffs published in Mr. BRIDGES' report, and the allegation brought to-night that some individuals had special rates because they were supporters of the Government was to say the least a gross impossivity. He was sure that such a thing never happened, as Mr. BRYDGES' had instructions to arrange for himself and his staff and act purely in the interest of the public as a commercial man. He could not dream that he would act according to political feelings, or under political pressure,to give special rates to any persons or class. He never heard of the accusation before; he never had a word or a line from a living soul or anything of the kind, and he was quite sure the hon. gentlemon was misinformed.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he meant to say, if he had not actually stated, that when a tariff was established on commercial principles in order that a railroad might pay, and not that the public might be accommodated, he thought that it did not say much for that tariff when they were compelled by pressure being brought, to alter it and to give special rates to this man and that man. He was not aware of having made any distinct charge of a special rate being given to political supporters.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was glad that the hon. member had made no special charge, but had only insinuated one.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he was not one of those who insinuated without carrying out his insinuation. If he wished to insinuate, he could turn up one or two cases which he thought it would not be out of the way to investigate. It was not a proper thing for the Finance Minister to do to send the manager of a broken down railroad, who had been removed, to take charge of the railroads in the Maritime Provinces.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had not intended to make any observations during the course of this debate, but the constant attacks made from the other side of the House on the late Administration, of which he had been a member, compelled him to make some few remarks, particularly in reply to the Premier. That hon. gentleman had taken occasion to say that after a railway is built the Government policy was to close the capital account, and to charge all subsequent expenditures on the line to the income of the railway. He asked if this was the policy of the Government with regard to the Spring Hill branch, the extension at Halifax, the extension to the wharves at Shediac, and the extension to the harbor of St. John? When the New Brunswick railroad was built by the Government of that Province, it was constructed on a very limited scale. Although it was well built, the Government, of which he was a member, were not able to finish it as elaborately as the requirements of the present day demanded. Was it to be said that because of this the extensions which were now to be constructed at an expense of millions of dollars, were to be charged to income? The idea was preposterous. They might as well say that the expenditure in laying steel rails on the Grand Trunk Railway should be charged to the income of that road. He did not hesitate to say that the treatment the New Brunswick railroads had received from the Administration of the day had been most unfair. New Brunswick when it entered the Confederation was poor. During the construction of the Intercolonial Railroad the rolling stock of the railroads of the Province was taken to that line, and it was only last year that they were able to replace it with new rolling stock, and to renovate the track with improved rails. It was felt that the expenditure for this purpose should be charged to capital account, and the appropriation for that object was voted by the House. If the policy of the Administration of the day was to charge such expenditures to income, they should change it as soon as possible. He could understand why it was desirable this year that the accounts should show that the past Administration had run the country to a very low ebb, and in order to do this it was advisable that this large expenditure should be put into income and taken out of capital account. He did not mean to say that was the object of the Finance Minister, but it was a very plain conclusion to arrive at as to the policy of the Administration. One word about Mr. BRYDGES. This was not the time, and he was not going to animadvert upon his conduct, or on that of the Administration by whom he had been employed. He believed Mr. BRYDGES to be a very able man, but he also believed that in the course he had pursued in relation to the construction of the Intercolonial Railway if he had given as much attention to that as to the commission with which the hon. Premier had charged him, we would have had the railway running to-day. With regard to the tariff established by Mr. BRYDGES he, Mr. MITCHELL, would say that when the railway was built by New Brunswick it was not with the expectation that it would bring a commercial return, but as a great Provincial work for the benefit of the Province; and the tariffs that were fixed were not based on commercial principles, but with a view to the extension of commerce, and the settlement of the colony. When the Province entered Confederation the railway which represented actual cash for every dollar expended on it was handed over to Canada. It was not less remunerative than the Grand Trunk Railway in which Canada had £3,000,000 sterling invested which yielded no return, or than the investment in the Northern Railway which the House had been asked to give up for a mere song. Hon. gentlemen should remember these facts when they said that there must be commercial return for the millions expended in the construction of the New Brunswick Railway. When Mr. BRYDGES went down and established a tariff on a commercial basis he outraged the opinion of every sensible man in New Brunswick who knew the way they had been taxed to build that railway. Were the St. Lawrence Canals, or the Welland Canals works which had been managed on a commercial basis?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said they were not, and challenged the hon. gentleman to prove his assertion. He, Mr. MITCHELL, could show that they paid only two per cent. on outlay, and even that would have been lost if the Reciprocity Treaty which was so nearly forced upon us—which, thank GOD, had been burked—had passed. There had recently sprung up a trade between Montreal and Toronto, and the Lower Provinces. That trade Mr. BRYDGES' tariff was killing. Thousands of barrels of flour, which formerly went by the Gulf of St. Lawrence, would now go by the Boston, and the New York routes, which before could not compete with the Canadian route. Seven years ago only one small steamer was engaged in this interprovincial trade. Last year thirteen steamers were employed in that trade. With these high tariffs the merchants of Montreal and Toronto would not be able to compete with the millers of Ohio. He believed that Mr. BRYDGES had been sent to the Lower Provinces with instructions to place the Railways there on a commercial basis, whether in doing so the country was injured or not. He warned the Premier that the sooner this tariff was altered the better, if he did not want to destroy the trade which was helping to build up Ontario, as well as the Maritime Provinces. He believed he was uttering the sentiments of the people of New Brunswick when he said that the tariff gave universal dissatisfaction.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the hon. member for Northumberland had professed to speak for New Brunswick, he, (Mr. SMITH) knew something of New Brunswick, and he wished to state distinctly that he did not acquiesce in all that had been said by his hon. friend with reference to that Province. At a fit and proper time, when Mr. BRYDGES' report was before the House, he would give expression to the views he entertained on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the estimates would show that the extensions at Halifax and St. John were beyond the limits at which they had been located, and were therefore very properly charged to capital account.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL — To what account is the Spring Hill Branch chargeable?

Hon. Mr, MACKENZIE—That is a mere siding.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—It is five miles long.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Spring Hill branch, in fact, did not belong to the Dominion at all. The improvement which was to be made was to facilitate the traffic of the road, and therefore came under the ordinary expenditure chargeable to income. He was not aware that he had said anything to provoke the hon. member for Northumberland, but the late Administration could not expect immunity from criticism any more than the present Government. He had no intention to say anything offensive.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said that the Finance Minister had brought the name of Mr. BRYDGES into this debate. He assured the hon. Premier that though he spoke more feelingly than more cold-blooded men, he was not out of temper.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE explained with reference to the increase in the expenditure of his department that it had been going on for the past five years. In the four principal ports of Ontario and Quebec, merchants had been charged for the examining of their goods, for carrying goods from their vessels to the warehouses, and so much for package for examining them afterwards. To remove such charges, as in other ports, would require $16,000. Another warehouse in Toronto would cost $1,000 a year. In the Gauging Department it was found that a great deal of bonded goods had been passing through from the cities to the smaller towns and villages in the interior, without any proper checks to prevent them from being taken from the warehouses and stations by the merchants who, in many cases did not know they were in bond. The department had been obliged to provide warehouses in many places, and also checks to show that the goods were in boud. The old system had been going for years, and it was found that some $70,000 or $80,000 in duties had been lying over since 1868, uncollected. This would add to the expenses of the department. He would submit a detailed statement when the estimates were before the House.

Mr. PLUMB complained of the manner in which the public accounts were submitted. They were calculated to mislead any one who did not examine them very carefully, and create an impression that a saving had been effected where there was none. When it was remembered that the late Government had expended over $11,000,000 in works which were usually chargeable to capital, it showed that through their management that they had a surplus and chose to use it in that way. In regard to the loan negotiated by the Finance Minister, he (Mr. PLUMB) believed it was a very successful transaction, because under the circumstances, after the damaging budget speech of the Finance Minister last year, it was surprising that he could have negotiated a loan of that magnitude at all. It showed that the financiers and capitalists of Great Britain had more confidence in Canada and in its resources than the Hon. Finance Minister. That our credit was so good abroad was due to the able speech of the hon. member for Cumberland. He had shown that there would be no deficit, and though he was laughed at by the Ministry and their supporters, the statement at the end of the financial year proved the accuracy of his prediction. With regard to this loan it was rather peculiar that there was another Canadian loan on the English market at the same time—that was the Ontario Loan. The contrast between the statements of the Finance Minister of the Dominion and the Treasurer of Ontario was striking. One endeavored to show that the country was in a very depressed and deplorable condition, while the other brought every device of book-keeping to bear to make a flourishing statement. He concluded by saying he was willing to rest the case on the Opposition side on the figures of the hon. member for Cumberland. That they could be successfully controverted he would be very much surprised to learn, and he did not envy the man who attempted to match himself against the truth of these statements.

Mr. GOUDGE said he did not rise with the intention of addressing the House at any considerable length to-night, for after the very clear and succinct statement of the Prime Minister, as well as the able criticism of the hon. member for Cumberland, the House would be in possession of all of the facts which was necessary and desirable connected with the administration of the financial affairs of the Dominion. He was happy as a supporter of the Government to say that he had been perfectly satisfied with the statement, and also with the supplementary statement of the Finance Minister, in answer to the hon. member for Cumberland. But as the subject of the Intercolonial railway had been introduced into the debate, which was one in which Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were very much interested, and as he represented a county through which the railway runs, he felt that he could not allow the present opportunity to pass without expressing the hope that when this question came up, as it would come up, it would receive due consideration at the hands of the Ministers, and he trusted they would be prepared to concede the views of the members of Nova Scotia with respect to this subject. He knew it was a grave question, and one that had given the Government much trouble, but it was one which the people of the Maritime Provinces thought should receive due consideration from the hands of the Government, which, he believed, it would receive. His only object in mentioning this matter was to put himself, as a representative of Nova Scotia, right on this subject, and to show to the people of Canada and this House that this was a question in which the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick felt they were very much interested, and one with which they would be prepared to deal when it came before the House in its proper order. He felt that the present was not the proper time, and he would not therefore further discuss the subject.

On the motion being carried, the House went into Committee of Supply, with Mr. SCATCHERD in the Chair.

The Committee passed some formal items, and then rose and reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

———:++:———

ERRATUM.—The following was omitted in the speech of Mr. BOWELL upon the question of amnesty, delivered on February 11th, and should have followed the telegram signed "A. MORRIS," on page 21 of that day's proceedings :—

"That the Minister of Justice (Mr. DORION) or some one on his behalf, did have an interview with RIEL, is proved by Bishop TACHE, who says :—

"I wrote to Father LASCOMB immediately after the communication with Mr. MORRIS, about the first week in January, that very likely the Canadian Government would open negotiations with him about RIEL'S election ;" and that Father LASCOMB informed Bishop TACHE that Mr. DORION had communicated with him, either directly or through some one else."

———:++:———

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, February 17th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER brought down a certificate of the election of THOMAS GREENWAY for South Huron ; also, a list of stockholders of the Metropolitan Bank on the 15th Feb., 1875.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON introduced a Bill to amend the law relating to criminal procedure. He explained that the object of the measure was to provide for the taking of evidence by Commissions, under certain restrictions, in criminal as in civil cases, where it might be necessary.

The Bill was read a first time.

PROMISSORY NOTES.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON introduced a Bill to amend the law relating to bills of exchange and promissory notes. In one particular the law relating to bills of exchange was in a very anomalous condition. In the various Provinces the rate of damages on protested bills of exchange varied from four to ten per cent. He believed very recently the Dominion Board of Trade had passed a recommendation that there should be an entire change respecting the question of damages on notes, placing it in the same position in Canada as that in which it stood in almost all commercial countries. He proposed by this Bill to do way with all the laws existing in the several Provinces on the subject of damages, and place them all on a uniform footing, and make the amounts recoverable on a bill of exchange, in addition to the amount of the Bill itself—the interest on it, the expense of noting and protest, and the amount necessary for exchange and re-exchange—the same in all the Provinces of the Dominion.

The Bill was read a first time.

PROTECTION TO LIFE ON WHARVES AND DOCKS.

Mr. COOK introduced a Bill to provide means of escape for persons falling into the water in the vicinity of wharves and docks. He explained that many lives were lost by persons falling from wharves where there were no means of reaching them. This Bill provided that ladders should be attached to all wharves and docks at distances of not less than twenty feet apart.

The Bill was read a first time.

NAVIGATION OF THE SAGUENAY.

Mr. CIMON asked whether the Government are aware that there exists in the River Saguenay, at the place known as Bras de Chicoutimi, a shoal of about half a mile in length, on which, at low tide, there is not a sufficient depth of water to allow steamboats and the numerous other vessels trading in those waters to pass on their way to Chicoutimi, their port of destination; and whether, being aware of that fact, it is the intention of the Government, in the interest of commerce and navigation, to instruct their Engineers to visit the locality and report as to the works required to be done to enable vessels to reach Chicoutimi in all states of the tide?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am not aware of the fact stated by the hon. gentleman, but I will make inquiries respecting it.

NAVIGATION OF THE MIRAMICHI.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked whether it is the intention of the Government to expend during the coming season a sum of money in the improvement of the navigation of the south-west branch of the River Miramichi, from Newcastle to Boiestown?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I am not intimately acquainted with precise location referred to by the hon. gentleman, but it is the intention of the Government to remove some obstructions in the river Miramichi above the railway bridge so as to enable small vessels to ascend the river, and I presume the portion of the river referred to by the hon. gentleman is included in that arrangement.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I would ask the attention of the Hon. Minister of Public Works to the propriety of spending a small portion of the sum placed in the estimates in improving the river above the place mentioned in the estimates. If the hon. gentleman will make inquiries into that matter I shall be obliged.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Certainly, that will be done.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked whether it is the intention of the Government to expend any sum in the deepening of the bar at the entrance of the Miramichi river during the coming seasion?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is the intention of the Government as soon as the new dredge now built on the Clyde comes out, to straighten the channel at this point. The hon. gentleman may be aware that it was only deferred last year because of our inability to furnish the necessary dredge power.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I am quite satisfied with the explanation.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS TO THE HALF-BREEDS.

Mr. RYAN asked why the allotment of lands to the children of the half-breed heads of families under the provisions of the "Manitoba Act" has been stopped, and when the distribution of said lands will be made.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—The hon. member for Marquette is aware that a year or two ago a certain quantity of land was set aside for the children of Half-breeds. When the Department undertook to proceed with the draining of these lands it was found that there were a number of claims to a considerable portion of the lands so set aside. These claims were of two kinds. One class was what were called "staked" claims, the parties having staked off the land or ploughed around it after the negotiations for the transfer of the territory had commenced, thought they had thus acquired a sort of title to it. The other class, who had, perhaps, a somewhat better show of right, were those who had made surveys before the opening of negotiations for the transfer of the territory, but who had not become settlers or made any improvement on the land thus surveyed. The Department could not proceed with the allotment of lands to the children of the Half-breeds until these claims were disposed of. They were referred to the Minister of Justice. The Department received the report on one class of these claims some time ago and recently the report on the other class, and now is prepared to proceed to the allotment.

Mr. RYAN asked when the distribution of land or scrip will be made to the Half-breed heads of families, under the provisions of the Act of last session, entitled "An Act respecting the appropriation of certain Dominion Lands in Manitoba."

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—In order to obtain some kind of proof as to whether parties applying were really Half-breeds it was necessary to have a Commissoner to receive evidence respecting the applications. It was thought advisable that the claims of the Half-breed heads of families and those of the children of the Half-breeds should be considered at the same time by the Commissioner, and this had caused the delay in the case of the parties referred to in the last question of the hon. member for Marquette.

CLAIMS TO UNPATENTED LANDS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. RYAN asked whether it is the intention of the Government to repeal or amend the "Act respecting claims to lands in Manitoba for which no Patents have issned," or to provide another method than the one therein provided for the trial of claims for Patents under the Manitoba Act.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—It is the intention of the Governmet to amend that Act in order to provide a less expensive machinery for the trial of claims for patents than the one now in operation.

LIMITS OF INSPECTION DISTRICTS.

Mr. HORTON asked whether the Government have determined the Territorial Limits of the Inspection Districts under Chapter 47, 36 Victoria; and if so, what are the limits of the Inspection Districts for the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION—The divisions have not been made, but they will be made within a very short time.

POST OFFICE MONEY ORDERS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked whether it is the intention of the Government to reduce the percentage now charged on Post Office Money Orders.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—It is not the intention of the Government to make any change at present.

STAMPS ON PROMISSORY NOTES.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked whether it is the intention of the Government to abolish Bill Stamps now used on Promissory Notes.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—It is not at present the intention ot the Government to abolish that tax, but the Government may possibly consider the expediency of repealing that portion of it which affects very small notes.

LIGHTHOUSE ON ISLE OF HAUTE.

Mr. GOUDGE asked whether the Government intend during the present year erecting a light house upon the Isle of Haute in the Bay of Fundy.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—The subject is under the consideration of the Department and my present impression is that a light house will be erected on that isle in the course of the year.

PREPAYMENT OF MAIL MATTER.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) asked whether the Government intend during this Session to introduce a measure compelling the prepayment of all matter carried by mail in this Dominion.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—It is the intention of the Government to do so as far as the Dominion is concerned, but of course the measure could not apply to mail matter from abroad.

BALLAST WHARF AT ST. JOHN.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked what progress has been made towards opening for traffic the Branch Railway of the Intercolonial to the Ballast Wharf, St. John, N. B.; also, whether any, and what arrangements, have been made to acquire the Ballast Wharf from the Corporation.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—No progress whatever has been made. The offer made by the city was such that the Government could not accept.

INTERNATIONAL MONEY ORDER SYSTEM.

Mr. SCRIVER asked whether the Government have made or intend to make any effort to effect an arrangement with the American Government for the establishment of an International Money Order System.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—Arrangements have already been arrived at by the Government of the United States by which the evil complained of will be done away with.

CENSUS VOLUMES.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) asked when the remaining volumes of the census of 1871 are to be brought down.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I believe they are all now in the printer's hands, and they will be brought down as soon as printed.

RECOVERY OF LOST GOODS ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. FISET asked whether it is the intention of the Government to provide, by special legislation, regarding the Intercolonial Railway, means for the recovery of lost goods or effects.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to ask for any special legislation on this subject. I presume what the hon. gentleman wants to know is whether special means will be afforded to persons to institute actions against the Government for indemnity for loss sustained on the Government railways. The Government can only say that they will be always prepared to fulfil any obligations that may fairly devolve upon a railway company, but they did not intend to propose any legislation to give peculiar facilities for obtaining redress.

NAVIGATION OF THE FRASER RIVER.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) asked whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed this year with any work for the purpose of rendering navigable any portion of the Fraser River between Lillovet and Soda Creek; and if so, of what nature.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I made inquiries respecting this part of the river with the intention, if I found it was likely to be of any material use in the prosecution of the Pacific Railway, of placing a sum in the estimates for the purpose of making some improvements. The Chief Engineer reports that it can be of no service, so far as he is aware, and therefore in the meantime the matter will stand in abeyance.

IMPORTATION OF LAND PLASTER.

Mr. GORDON moved for copies of Returns to the Customs Department :— 1st, For the entire quantity of land plaster imported into the Dominion of Canada from the United States since the 1st of April 1874; 2nd, For the respective quantities of said plaster imported from the United States as received at the several lake and river ports of the Dominion; 3rd, For the entire sum collected as revenue from the said article of land plaster between the 1st day of April and the 1st day of December 1874. He said the subject which he desired to bring before the House to the motion for the returns, was one of considerable importance to a large section of the agricultural community of Canada. The matter complained of arose through a mistake. The article of ground gypsum, or land plaster, was largely used for manure by the farmers of Western Ontario. The farmers of Central Ontario received extensive imports of the article from the United States, while those residing in the Western section derive their supplies from the beds on Grand River. Up to last year no duty was levied on this article; but since then at Toronto, Whitby and Oshawa duties were collected at the rate of 17½ per cent. or 20 cents per barrel, while at Bowmanville no duties were collected. During last session he put the question direct to the Finance Minister—whether it was the intention of the Government to impose a duty on that article; and he replied that it was not. Notwithstanding this declaration, a duty had been collected at the ports he had named. He therefore brought forward this motion to have the matter remedied, and in doing so he had received the assurance of the Government that the duty was collected by mistake, and that it was not their intention to impose any further duties. Motions had been brought before the House for special committees to deal with the grievances of the farmers. He believed when such committees were moved for, no practical object could be gained by their being granted, because the House could not remedy the grievances, for they asked for protection to the farmers; but in the article of manure it was the desire of the Government to offer the utmost facilities for the importation of articles used in the improvement of land. With respect to the latter clause, seeing that unfairness had been shown to several counties, it would be fair for the Government to make a return of the duties. That could not be made to the importers, because it would be so much profit ; or to the farmers, because it had passed into so many hands ; but the Government could make a grant to the Agricultural Societies of the counties in which duty had been paid, and he hoped the Government would accord that justice to the counties which had been aggrieved.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the hon. member for North Ontario was correct in the statement he had made to the House, and it was not the intention of the Government to tax any article used as manure. Steps were now being taken to remedy the evil complained of. As to the suggestion that the Government might make a grant to the agricultural societies of the counties referred to, he was not sure the Government could comply therewith, but the evils complained of might be removed.

Hon. MALCOLM CAMERON said that the difficulty had no doubt arisen from the fact that plaster was used for agricultural purposes and also as stucco.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said the difficulty was being removed. It was never intended that plaster for stucco work, worth four or five dollars per barrel, should be admitted free of duty ; but the inferior quality, which was worth only ninety cents or one dollar per barrel and was used for manure, would be admitted free. The necessary instructions would be given to the Custom's officials.

Mr. GOUDGE called attention to the fact that the United States impose a duty on ground plaster imported from Canada ; they admitted crude plaster free of duty, but not ground plaster. The article was one which entered into the proposed Reciprocity Treaty. While he would be very sorry to interfere in any way which would militate against the interests of the farmers, yet, he saw a practical difficulty in deciding between the qualities suited for stucco purposes and that for ground plaster. What they did in the United States, and what he thought the consumers should do in North Ontario was to obtain the plaster in its crude state and manufacture it for themselves, thus building up a new industry in their midst, and obviating any difficulty found to exist in the West in discriminating between the two kinds of plaster.

The motion was adopted.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ALASKA.

Mr. ROSCOE moved an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL praying him to call the attention of HER MAJESTY'S Government to the necessity of having the boundary line between British Columbia and Alaska as soon as possible defined and surveyed. Mr. ROSCOE said if he was to move the resolution, of which he had given notice merely, with the remark that the commercial and other interests of British Columbia required the boundary line between that Province and Alaska to be defined and settled as soon as possible. He did not suppose there would be any opposition to the motion, but he thought he might fairly assume that the House would wish, if not expect, to be informed, firstly, as to the nature of any questions which may arise, or have arisen, concerning that boundary line ; and secondly, as to what had occurred which in his opinion rendered an immediate settlement of that question necessary ; and he would, therefore, give the information he considered necessary. If the map of North America be referred to, it will be seen that the Territory of Alaska consists chiefly of that part of the continent lying to the west of the 141st degree of west longitude, and also of a narrow strip of the coast extending from the 60th to the 56th degree of north latitude. As the 60th degree is the boundary line between British Columbia and the North-West Territory, the only part of the boundary line of Alaska to which his motion had reference is the boundary line of this narrow strip. This was settled by the treaty between Great Britain and Russia of 1825 ; previous to that date there had been endless disputes between the various fur companies which represented the interests of their respective countries in this part of the world, and when a settlement was made in 1825 it was found that while the Russian American Fur Company had made various settlements along the coast, the British companies had acquired the whole interior of the country. A settlement of the boundary line was therefore made on the understanding that Russia should keep a narrow strip of the coast, the boundary of which was defined to be the range of mountains running parallel to the coast, but it is further stipulated that wherever this range of mountains is at a greater distance than ten leagues from the coast then the boundary line shall run at this distance. In 1867 this territory was sold by Russia to the United States, but of course in any question concerning the boundary line we have to go back to the original treaty of 1825. It is doubtful, however, whether this question would have arisen but for the discovery of gold in this part of the Dominion. As long ago as 1862 gold was found in the Stikeen River, and since that time there have been prospecting parties in search of diggings in this region, and two years ago these were discovered at a place called Deas Lake, situated about 80 miles east of the head of navigation on Stikeen River. Last year upwards of 2,000 miners were engaged in these diggings, which were found to be both rich and extensive, and in future we may look forward to a large immigration to this region. The only practicable way of getting to these new diggings was by ascending the Stikeen River, of which we have free navigation, and in regard to this I would remark on what appears to me a somewhat remarkable fact. By the treaty of 1825 we had given to us forever the free navigation of all rivers which may cross the line of demarcation referred to, yet in the treaty between the United States and Russia no reference whatever is made to this clause, and I fail to understand how Russia could have sold this territory to the United States unless subject to any rights acquired by any third parties, and, if this was so, he also did not understand why it was thought necessary in the treaty of Washington to concede the navigation of the rivers Stikeen, Porcupine and Yuckon in the British Territory in return for the free navigation of these rivers while flowing through the United States Territory, if we possessed this right before. As soon as the trade up the Stikeen began to assume some proportions the officer commanding at Fort Wrangel,—in whom it appears is invested the Government of the territory,—measured a distance of 10 leagues from the coast, and placing a post there, declared this to be the boundary between British Columbia and Alaska. In consequence of the windings of the river, it seems that this point is between 60 and 70 miles up the river. Now, if the statements of the traders and others going up the Stikeen are correct, it appears that the range of mountains which really defines the boundary line crosses the Stikeen at a point only 15 miles from the coast. He would point out how important the possession of the river between these points would be, especially to his constituents, the merchants of Victoria. It appears that above the present boundary line the Stikeen is so shallow that no steamers which could go there could also go out to sea. Goods, therefore, have to be sent from Victoria to Fort Wrangel, and transferred there to the river steamer, and it has been found that this has been accompanied with much annoyance, risk and expense; and after the goods are placed on the steamer, a Custom House officer is placed on board, who accompanies the steamer as long as she is in American waters, or what the officer commanding at Alaska is pleased to consider American waters, the expense being borne by the steamer. There was also another grievance which he was sure the hon. member for Vancouver will appreciate. As soon as he comes on board, this officer locks up the bar, puts the key in his pocket, and during the voyage the unfortunate diggers cannot get a drink. Now, if the boundary line were placed where we conceive it ought to be, a steamer would probably be able to run from Victoria to a point on the river above the boundary line, or at all events a steamer which could run there would also be able to run out to sea to Fort Simpson, and goods could therefore be transferred on British Territory. The great annoyance and expense of transferring goods on the United States Territory would thus be obviated. There were other reasons why this boundary should be fixed as soon as possible. It was said that important discoveries of silver and gold bearing quartz mines have been made in the disputed territory, and until it is settled in which country these mines are, these sources of wealth will probably remain undeveloped. There may also arise some unpleasant complications in consequence of persons settling in what they consider British Territory, and resisting by force any attempt made to remove them. Since he had put this motion on the paper he noticed in the estimates a sum of $100,000 for this survey, but from what he had stated it would be seen that this was not merely a question of theodolites, but that an important question as to the interpretation of the treaty had to be settled first. The hon. member concluded by moving adoption of motion.

Mr. DECOSMOS rose to concur in the remarks of his hon. colleague who had explained the difficulties interposed by the American authorities to our trade in that part of the Dominion, but he believed that the wiser course would be, if the Governments of the Dominion and Great Britain could agree with the United States Government on the subject, to sell to Canada that portion of Alaska stretching from the 141st meridian West to the 131st meridian West. There was a territory there including an archipelago of 11,000 islands running along the main land of the territory three or four hundred miles, the strip measuring in English statute miles from the coast about 34 miles. The whole of this territory measures about 25.000 square geographical miles. If our Government would pay a reasonable sum for this territory, we would obviate all the difficulties now existing, and which must continually exist in the future if that region were habitable. So far as the population of that belt was concerned there were about 6,000 Indians ; and not more he believed engaged in the fur business along that coast than two or three hundred persons—perhaps less. The United States had bought the Alaska territory, containing 580,000 square miles, for about $7,200,000, and he saw no reason why considering what the United States itself had given, we should not be able to induce them to cede that portion of their territory to Great Britain for a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear, hear !

Hon. Mr. DECOSMOS said the hon. gentleman from South Bruce, who had recently pronounced in favor of nationality and a new departure, ought to be willing to make a new departure in the interest of Canada to enlarge our Dominion and get more land by which the nationality could be extended.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—What about the people ?

Hon. Mr. DECOSMOS said the people would soon be added if we had the land. By the plan he proposed there would be no divided sovereignty. He believed, when we looked at the mountainous character of this belt, that it would cost nearly as much to make a survey of it, to both Governments, as it was practically worth at present. When they came to ascend mountains 3,000, 5,000, and 14,000 feet high to form a boundary, it would be found most expensive. With reference to the convention between Russia and Great Britain of 1825, and the subsequent Treaty of Washington giving the free navigation of the Stickeen River, he would remark that there were two other rivers —the Tako and Chilcot—which might yet be found useful as a means of carrying the mineral wealth of British Columbia north of the 300 mile belt out to sea. And it will be necessary in the interest of British Columbia to enter into further negotiations with the United States in order to define our rights. In addition to that, if mineral discoveries should be made in any part of this belt—and from the geological formation there seemed to be no doubt such would be made—it would be found that American claims on the Alaska side would run into Canadian territory, causing endless disputes. He moved in amendment to the resolution before the House that all after the word "survey" be struck out, and the following added :—"And the desirability of acquiring that portion of the territory of Alaska extending northwestwardly from 54° 40′ north latitude to the meridian of Mount St. Elias."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was all very well for his hon. friend to bring the subject up. It was one of very great interest and had engaged the attention of the Government for some time. Negotiations had already been had through the proper official channel with the Government of the United States on this subject. It was one, however, that would not be promoted by the passage of his hon. friend's motion here, and the amendment by the hon. member behind him (DE COSMOS) was of course entirely inadmissable. A motion of that kind could not seriously be proposed in the House. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) was quite aware that the real difficulty at present was simply the Stickeen River. Under the convention of 1825, the boundary had in the plans exceeded a distance of ten leagues from the coast, and the real difficulty existed in taking these ten leagues from the mouth of the river, instead of following the ridge of hills to a point where it strikes the river. If that point were once determined, no serious inconvenience would arise anywhere else, and to get that point determined at as early a period as possible, the Government had already been directing their attention. He hoped his hon. friend would be satisfied with this explanation and withdraw his motion. As for the amendment it was quite inadmissable.

Mr. BUNSTER said that having heard a good deal from the miners with regard to that region, he claimed to have some knowledge on the subject before the House. He was sorry to see the hon. gentleman from Victoria move an amendment which the Premier had declared to be inadmissable, because the hon. gentleman (DE COSMOS) considered him a constitutional authority. He claimed that this vexed question, which interfered with the development of the rich mines of that country, should be settled. The hardy miners had discovered and developed exceedingly rich mines at Cassiar. They had been badly treated by unprincipled American officers, who had taken and seized their boats while sailing under the Dominion flag. They had been obliged to pay heavy tolls, amounting to four or five thousand dollars, for which tolls no returns were made to the American Government. That was a matter which required to be looked into by the administration of the day, and which should be brought under the notice of the American authorities. The official to whom he had alluded was now undergoing a trial in Oregon for fraud on the American Government, which, he thought, was sufficient proof that he had wronged those Canadians who had gone to the expense of constructing a boat for the navigation of the Stikeen River. The sooner this vexed question was settled the better.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) did not wish to make any remarks after what had been said by the Premier. He was well aware of the great importance of having this question settled as soon as possible. During the ensuing season, perhaps, a much larger number of miners would go to the Stickeen River than the two thousand spoken of by the mover of this resolution, and should these vexatious annoyances continue to be imposed, the more excitable amongst them—though they might be generally peaceable — might resent such interference, and thus bring about complications between the two countries. There was another question which had recently been brought before his notice. The Indians did not understand the divided jurisdiction. They were very numerous, and spent the winter months on the coast, and during the summer fished in the Skeena River, working also for the miners. These Indians had been accustomed to roam at large over that country, whether by water or by land, and they could not understand the divided jurisdiction when told by American officers they were on American soil, and by British officers they were on Canadian soil. In order to prevent coalitions with those Indians, who are usually peaceable, but when under the influence of liquor were very excitable and disposed to quarrel with the whites. Although the liquor traffic was nominally prohibited by the American authorities, the Indians could get all they wanted in Alaska, and if they could not they were ingenious enough to make it for themselves. They made rum from molasses with nothing but a tin kettle and a coil of sea-weed. By fastening the sea-weed to the spout of the kettle they were able to distil liquor. This proves the advancement of civilization among the untutored savages on that coast. He had no doubt the resolution and amendment would be withdrawn. At the same time he thought it had done good by bringing this question before the notice of the House and opening the eyes of members to the vast capabilities of our great North-west.

Hon. Mr. DE COSMOS withdrew his amendment.

Mr. ROSCOE—As the Government have stated that they intend to do all that is necessary in this matter, I will willingly at the request of the Hon. Premier, withdraw my motion.

The resolution was withdrawn.

M. CIMON fait motion, secondé par le Dr. ROBITAILLE, qu'il soit présenté à SON EXCELLENCE le GOUVERNEUR-GÉNÉRAL, une addresse pour

1°. Un état montrant le nombre des rivières dans les Comtés de Saguenay, Chicoutimi et Charlevoix, maintenant louées sous provisions de l'Acte des Pêcheries, le nom du locataire dans chaque cas et le prix pour laquelle chacune est ainsi louée.

2°. Un état montrant le nombre des baux de pêcherie maintenant en existence, accordées pour faire la pèche dans les eaux de la Rivière St. Laurent, dans les Comtés de Saguenay et Charlevoix, le loyer payé pour chaque bail, et le nom des parties auxquelles ils ont été accordées.

3°. Un état du nombre de pénalités infligées par les officiers des Pêcheries pour contravention à l'Acte des Pêcheries, dans les limites des Comtés de Chicoutimi, Charlevoix et Saguenay, depuis 1867.

M. CIMON dit qu'il se permettra d'attirer tout particulièrement l'attention de cette Chambre sur cette question, car il importe de connaître la conduite des officiers publics en cette endroit. Son unique attention est de savoir ce que le Gouvernement retire de cette source de revenu. C'est un champ très entendu; il n'est que juste de savoir ce qu'il rapporte au Gouvernement. Dans une occasion ultérieure, il (M. CIMON) aura l'opportunité de faire d'autres remarques sur cette question.

STATISTICS.

Mr. YOUNG said he probably would not have placed the motion he was about to move on the notice paper had he known that the subject had been under the consideration of the Government. However, as the subject was before the House, he would take the opportunity very briefly, and with some degree of diffidence, to urge some reasons why he thought that some plan should be adopted for securing the early publication of as full and as accurate statistics as could be obtained. The present system of each department publishing its own statistics had probably on the whole worked tolerably well, but from the absence of any general supervision there were a number of defects which ought to be remedied. There were four points at least in which improvements might be made. In some respects our statistics ought to be fuller. We had no statistics, for instance, of our agricultural productions or of the produce of our forests —two of the great industries of this country. He was well aware that there was considerable difficulty in the way of achieving the desired improvement. The co-operation of the Local Legislatures was necessary, but seeing that in immigration matters the Dominion and the Local Governments acted in concert, he thought that in this important matter some arrangement could be made for the co-operation of the Federal and local authorities. In Great Britain there was published every year, by the statistical branch of the Board of Trade, a return showing the total quantity of land under grain crop, green crop and grass, the yield per acre, and a great variety of other information, valuable not only to the agricultural community, but to the whole trade of the country. It would be of great advantage to this country if some such statistics could be obtained here, and notwithstanding the difficulties in the way, an earnest effort ought to be made by the Government to accomplish that result. Again our statistics might be made much more accurate than they usually are. It would probably be invidious to particularize, but he might mention as an instance, our returns of the commerce of the country. He was glad to know that efforts had been made by the Customs Department to secure more accurate statistics of our imports and exports. It was to be feared that for a long time past the collectors at our outside ports had not been as careful by any means as they ought to be in making entries, and he had felt, in dealing with such statistics, as he had frequent occasion to do, he could not so thoroughly rely on the entries of imports and exports, particularly of grain, as he would wish to do. It would be noticed by the report of the Minister of Customs that the deputy head of that department was fully aware that objections might be urged to the correctness of these returns, and was endeavouring to introduce improvements therein. Again, there was a good deal in many of the reports of the departments which might be expunged without loss to the public, and at the saving of a considerable expense, and the space thus saved given to more valuable information. He also had objection to take to the length of time which it took to publish many of these statistics—so long in fact that they were of very little value when they did appear. He was glad to see that this year that no less than four of the principal departmental reports were laid on the table within two or three days after the session opened. For his part, he could see no reason whatever why all of the departmental reports should not be submitted to the House immediately it met. He had seen it stated in the press—he thought correctly—that there was published in Great Britain eleven days after the beginning of the year, a statement of the whole commercial returns of the previous year of the United Kingdom. As our financial year ended on the 30th June, he could see no reason why before the meeting of Parliament, six or seven months afterwards, every report should not be ready weeks before the House met. The defects in the present system were apparent, but the question was how a reform could be effected. At the late meeting of the Dominion Board of Trade he observed that they suggested the propriety of having a Minister of Commerce, whose special duty would be to collect statistics of the kind he had referred to. He could see no great advantage to be derived from such a course being pursned. We had now three Ministers who might be called Ministers of Commerce—the Finance Minister and the Ministers of Customs and Inland Revenue. The most practicable way, in his opinion, to effect the desired improvements would be the way suggested in the motion he was about to move, namely : the establishment of a statistical branch in connection with one of the Departments. The Board of Statistics which he suggested in his motion might be composed of three Ministers, something like the Treasury Board, or of the deputy heads of the Statistical Departments presided over by a Minister. The duty of this Board would be, not to take out of the hands of the Departments the preparation of the statistics, but to supervise their statistics, and to decide what should be published and what should not, and to point out wherein improvements might be made. However, he was strongly of opinion that a better system than that was the system in operation in the Mother Country—that was, the establishment of a statistical branch in connection with one of the existing Departments. To make such a system successful it would be necessary to have one of the best statisticians that could be found, and such men were exceedingly scarce. He knew of but one such man in Canada, and he had no doubt that if such a man as the one he referred to could be secured he would place our statistics in at least a much better position than they were at present. If a plan like the one he had suggested was carried out, and means taken in concert with the local Governments to collect correct statistics of the products of the farm and the forest, the value of real and personal property and also vital statistics, together with commercial statistics, a volume might be published which would be of immense advantage to the whole Dominion. He concluded by moving, "That the House do go into Committee of the Whole on Friday next to consider the following resolution:—That the collection and early publication of full and accurate statistics affecting the commerce, revenues, population and material progress of the Dominion is a matter of great importance, and in the opinion of this House it is highly desirable that the Government should establish a Board of Statistics, or take such other means as may be necessary to have our statistics as complete, reliable and early published as possible."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he well knew the interest that his hon. friend from Waterloo had always taken in the subject of statistics, and he (Mr. MACKENZIE) was equally convinced, with that hon. gentle- of the great importance to the country of full and correct statistics. He had already stated that he had given his personal attention to this matter but up to the present time, he had not been able to secure a plan that in his judgment would prove snccessful. It was known that only in the Province of Ontario was there any regular system of collecting vital statistics, and even in that Province, the returns were so unsatisfactory as to create a good deal of discussion upon the question of adopting some other means to secure more complete returns. If this was the case in the Province of Ontario where the municipal system was most complete, we might easily imagine the difficulties in the way in other Provinces where they had either no municipal system or a very imperfect one. It was expected from the laws of Ontario that the municipal returns would furnish all the necessary information about the quantity of land under crop, the quantity held by private individuals in its original state, and the quantity under the different kinds of crops, and the value of such lands, and the value of the produce, as well as the value of all personal or moveable property. As a matter of fact, however, the returns were exceedingly defective, and to obtain the correct valuations in the country districts at least—for they were a great deal more inaccurate in the country than in the towns and cities—it was necessary to double or treble the valuations given in the returns. It was a matter of regret that this should be the case, but it was so. He presumed that assessors in the country districts were led to assess property at a low rate under the idea that it would produce a corresponding low rate of taxation, which of course, was a wrong idea. The returns therefore, in the Province of Ontario were very incorrect and wholly unreliable as to valuation, though the acreage might perhaps be tolerably near the truth. In the Province of Quebec there was a parochial system of obtaining statistics respecting burials, baptisms and marriages, which were, perhaps, more correct than those of Ontario, although the system was deficient in other respects. There was a system in operation in Nova Scotia, but it was of little use, and in the other Provinces there was no system at all. The subject had engaged, and must again engage, the earnest attention of the Government as it was highly desirable to have full and correct statistics of the progress of the country. With regard to mere departmental statistics he quite admitted that many improvements might be made, and it was the intention of the Government, as one improvement, to publish periodical—at least quarterly—returns showing the state of trade—the imports and exports of the principal articles. This might be done without any addition to the present staff. He could only say that every attention possible would be given towards devising a scheme whereby we might obtain a collection of general statistics, with some approach to accuracy, which would be interesting and valuable to the country, and especially as it would be the means of disseminating abroad correct views of the state of trade, the value of property, the duration of life and other information respecting this country, which had great influence with persons proposing to emigrate. He was of opinion that our statistics if correct would go to show that the comparative wealth of our working classes was perhaps greater than that of almost any other people. He saw no object in his hon. friend pursuing the subject further than he had done in bringing it before the House, as nothing the hon. gentleman or the House could do that could stimulate the Government more than their own sense of the importance of the subject would do. For his own part, it was a subject to which he had given considerable attention, and he would continue to give it as much attention as he could possibly spare from his other public duties.

Mr. YOUNG—I stated in moving my motion that possibly I would not have proposed it had I known the subject had been under the consideration of the Government. After the statement of the leader of the Government I have no objection to withdraw the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

SPECIAL RATES ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY

Mr. DOMVILLE moved for copies of all special rates granted for freight on the Intercolonial Railroad, giving names of person or persons obtaining same and dates. He said he made this motion in order to obtain some light as to the general mode of granting these special rates, and to see how far they were applicable to other parts of the Province that perhaps did not apply for special rates, or did not know that their case entitled them to special rates.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I have no objection to the motion, but I may say that I am not aware of there being any special rates. We have no returns of anything of the kind, but of course I will enquire of the Deputy Superintendent whether there are any, and if there are full particulars of them will be brought down.

Mr. DOMVILLE—Mr. BRYDGES says he has made such rates as will suit persons owning large saw mills, &c., and it was upon that statement that I based my resolution.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I took that to be not special rates to individuals, but rates from certain stations where there were large lumbering or other industries for the carriage of the products of these industries. I am not aware of any other special rates, and I am not even aware of any special rates of that kind, but that is what I understood from the statement of Mr. BRYDGES.

Motion carried.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY SUPPLIES.

Mr. DOMVILLE moved for all papers and correspondence connected with the contract for supplies to the Intercolonial Railroad from 1st June to 31st December, 1874, of cars, trucks, bar iron and railway materials, together with copies of tenders, giving names and dates. He observed that when he put this motion on the notice paper he had good reasons for doing so, and since then things had transpired that made these reasons stronger than before. However, he did not propose to say anything on the subject until the papers came down, when he would be able either to verify or refute certain statements made to him.

Motion carried.

COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. DYMOND moved for copies of any correspondence which may have taken place relating to Addresses of this House presented last session to HIS EXCELLENCY on the subject of the Act to amend the Act respecting Copyrights of 1872, which Act was reserved for the signification of HER MAJESTY'S pleasure thereon. He said it would perhaps be in the recollection of the House that toward the close of last session he brought before it the anomalous condition of the law relating to copyrights in this country, or rather the right to reprint the works published by English authors. The House was then good enough to agree to the motion for an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL praying that he be pleased to convey to HER MAJESTY'S Government the desire and anxiety of this House that the bill respecting copyrights, passed in 1872, and reserved for HER MAJESTY'S sanction, should not be allowed to lapse by the expiration of two years. The motion was not made with the idea that any immediate results would flow therefrom. He presumed, however, that some correspondence may have taken place between our Government and HER MAJESTY'S Government on the subject, and, if such was the case, he supposed there would be no objection to laying that correspondence on the table of the House. Perhaps he might at the same time ask the First Minister whether the measure respecting copyrights, foreshadowed in the Speech from the Throne, dealt with the subject to which he had referred.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Bill which would be introduced shortly by the Minister of Agriculture was intended to be a complete Bill covering all the matters in dispute. It would, however, have to be reserved for HER MAJESTY'S sanction, as it affected Imperial rights, but he hoped it was in such a shape as to meet the approval of HER MAJESTY'S Government.

The motion was carried.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. DE COSMOS moved for an Address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL praying that a copy of the memorandum of the Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, referred to in a Report of the Honourable the Privy Council approved by the GOVERNOR GENERAL on the 7th June, 1873, be laid before this House.—Carried.

HURON AND OTTAWA RAILWAY.

Mr. GALBRAITH moved for an Address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for a copy of the Report of L. G. BELL, C. E., on the exploration made by him of the route of the Huron and Ottawa Railway, from Ottawa City to Parry Sound, together with all maps or papers accompanying the same.—Carried.

CANADIAN SHIPPING ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. NORRIS moved that an Address be presented to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL for copies of any correspondence which may have taken place between the Government of Canada and that of the United States in reference to the stringent regulations compelling Canadian vessels to call and report at Duncan City in the Straits of Mackinaw before being allowed to enter into Lake Michigan: and also in reference to the tonnage dues imposed on all Canadian vessels annually in American ports. In doing so, he said he rose with some diffidence, as he knew the importance of the subject with which he proposed to deal, and the propriety of having it treated thoroughly and ably. It would be within the recollection of the members of the House that at last session he had moved for correspondence of the same nature, believing that an important and large class of our people were suffering a grievance at the hands of the American Government, and hoping and expecting that our own Government would do what was proper to have the grievance removed. It would also be within the recollection of members that the Prime Minister at the time asked him to let the motion stand in the meantime, and that he would take steps to have the restrictions removed. There was then the prospect of the Reciprocity Treaty being negotiated, and he supposed that in that the whole difficulty would have been covered. Since the Reciprocity Treaty had not gone into operation, and since, so far, the restrictions complained of had not been removed, but, on the contrary, these troublesome rules had been enforced in regard to our Canadian commerce with all their former strictness, he considered the subject might very properly be brought before the House again. The history of this matter was a very brief but a very important one. In 1867 or 1868 the United States Government sent an officer up to Duncan City on the Straits of Mackinaw and compelled Canadian vessels to call at Duncan city to report, and get a clearance from the officer, before they were allowed to enter into Lake Michigan at all. This created a good deal of trouble and a good deal of expense. They lost from four to five hours time. They did not care so much for the money they paid in the way of a tax, but they did care for the time, for time was money ; and it frequently happened that if a vessel were bound to call at that place at night, in rough weather, they had to lie over until morning. He had known many instances in which they had to lie over for nearly twelve hours. There was no protection to the revenue of the United States given by this law, and he believed that it was enforced simply to keep before our eyes the fact that Lake Michigan was theirs, and that we must have their permission before we could enter. If they could save anything, or gain anything, by compelling us to do these things, he would have less objection to them, but it could not possibly protect their revenue in any shape, because they had the same means of protection on Lake Michigan of searching our vessels and seeing that everything was as it ought to be. He did not know whether these obstructions could be removed, or whether the Government had taken any steps for their removal, but it was high time that every means should be taken to that end, and leave our commerce as free as possible. There was another matter of which he would speak. About 1867 the American Government imposed upon all Canadian vessels 30 cents per ton of a war tax, which of course went to swell their own revenue. We did not pay it before the war. He did not wish to say anything in retaliation, but if it was proper for them to tax our vessels in this way, he thought it was but fair we should charge them something in retaliation. They collected this tax at every port in the United States where Canadian vessels entered, and on an average each vessel paid the amount of some one hundred dollars. He believed that the whole of the charges made upon our Canadian vessels in this way amounted to $30,000 or $40,000, annually, and yet we charged the Americans nothing for entering our ports, and navigating our canals except the ordinary bills and harbour dues, which were of course levied also upon Canadian vessels in the United States. The Government should communicate, if they had not already done so, with the Government of the United States to see whether or not these restrictions could be removed. He might be wrong about this and perhaps the Government had done all they could. If they had not done anything no time should be lost. He was speaking now on behalf of a class of men second only in importance to the agriculturalists of the country—men who had done their fair proportion in the work of developing our resources and who should have the assistance of the Government in everything like this where it was necessary to deal with a foreign Government. He did not put himself forward as a special representative of this class for he felt that he with his humble capacities could do them but small justice ; but he thought it was his bounden duty to bring this matter before the Government and the House, and endeavour to have those restrictions removed as early as possible. He hoped the Government had taken the necessary steps and if they had not he trusted that not an hour would be lost till they had done so and that our commerce would be as free on Lake Michigan as the commerce of the American people was in Canadian waters.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL suggested that the motion should be amended so as to include any correspondence which had passed on the subject between HER MAJESTY'S Government and the United States Government, because owing to our position as a colony any correspondence on a question of that character would be had between those Governments. The subject was one which had occupied his attention when Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for he felt that to compel vessels to call and report themselves at Duncan City was unparalleled in navigation. We do not require American vessels to call at any particular port to report themselves when they do not go there for the purposes of trade. The hon. member for Lincoln deserved the thanks of the commercial interests of the lakes for bringing this subject before the House, and he hoped it would receive attention at the hands of the Government.

Mr. NORRIS said he had no objection to amending the motion as suggested.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the motion would do as it was drawn. It was quite understood that any information in the possession of the Government which it was proper to bring down would be submitted to the House, when a motion of that kind was passed, even if it was not technically correct. There was one point to which he asked the attention of the hon. member for Lincoln, and it was this: He seemed to think it was a hardship to impose tonnage dues of thirty cents per ton on Canadian vessels. But the hon. member must remember that this was a general tax, levied on all vessels trading in United States ports, whether Canadian or American, or belonging to any other country; and we had an undoubted right to impose dues of thirty cents per ton on United States vessels entering Canadian ports, but then we must impose the tax on our own vessels as well. There can be no discriminating charge against the United States or any other nation. It was complained that the Canadian trade had to pay this very heavy war tax, for it was levied first as a war tax during the time of the Southern Rebellion; but there was no possible remedy except by representing—and those representations, he believed, had been made—that unequal burdens were imposed on Canadian commerce as compared with those we impose on the commerce of the United States. Every thing the Government could do in the matter would be cheerfully done, but that was a matter wholly beyond the region of complaint so long as they made no discrimination against our vessels.

Mr. McCALLUM said the present motion had become an annual one. All those engaged in the Western carrying trade by the inland waters considered it an obnoxious regulation that the Americans should levy an embargo on our vessels before they enter Lake Michigan. This war tax of thirty cents per ton was very objectionable, and it had to be paid by a Canadian vessel if it made only one trip to an American port. When vessels went to American ports a charge of $2.50 for clearance, but when American vessels entered our ports the Government did nothing of that kind. In many places along the frontier our Custom House Officers had become so Americanised that the tug and vessel owners coming over from the United States would scarcely take the trouble of reporting and clearing. By this means, the Americans were enabled to deprive our vessel owners of some of the coasting trade which properly belonged to them. He trusted the Government, would give instructions to their Custom House Officers to enforce the present regulations in regard to reporting and clearing, and that the fees collected from American vessels for reporting and clearing should be increased.

Mr. WOOD said the subject had been brought before the National Board of Trade on two occasions, at New York and Chicago. When he brought the subject before the Board, when in session at Chicago, he was informed by American gentlemen from different parts of the Union that this complaint in regard to Canadian vessels being compelled to stop at Duncan City had only to be represented to the American Government and the cause of complaint would be removed.

The matter had been brought before the attention of the Government by the member for Lincoln at the last session of Parliament, and, therefore, if the Government had not brought the subject before the attention of the United States authorities, they had not been attending to their duties. If the Government had brought it before the notice of the American Government, the evil would no doubt have been removed.

The motion was adopted.

THE GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH RAILROAD.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for a return of all tenders for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with Orders in Council, correspondence and all papers relating thereto. In making this motion he said he had intended to address the House upon this very important question on this motion, but after the statement made by the hon. leader of the Government that it was their intention to bring down these papers without delay, (and, he hoped, quite as fully as this motion covered) and as he desired to economise as much as possible the time of the House, he thought it would be better to defer his remarks until the House was in possession of the documents for which he moved.

The motion was carried.

THE LOAN OF 1874.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for copy of the prospectus and terms of the loan of 1874; the number and names of the parties or firms tendering; the names of the persons or firms to whom the loan was allotted, with the sums to each respectively.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he had no objection to the motion, but he might mention for the information of his hon. friend that though he gave verbal orders to some agents to furnish these particulars, he was afraid that the information desired had not yet arrived, but he hoped to be able to bring it down later in the session.

The motion was carried.

THE CANADIAN FISHERIES.

Mr. MILLS moved for an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the Government of Great Britain in reference to the monetary compensation to be paid by the United States to Canada, under the Treaty of Washington, for the liberty of fishing in Canadian waters; also, for any correspondence on the same subject between the Government of Great Britain and the United States, communicated to HIS EXCELLENCY for the information of the Canadian Government. He said this motion had reference to the fulfilment of certain conditions of the Washington Treaty. He had on former occasions expressed his opinion with regard to this provision, the time for the fulfilment of which had for some time past gone by. He did not regret that this delay had occurred in the fulfilment of those conditions relating to our fisheries. It was well known that before the Washington Treaty was negotiated, the Government of Canada sent one of its members to England for the purpose of discussing this matter with the Imperial Government, and having steps taken with a view to a settlement of the differences between this country and the United States, in reference to the limitary line which should be drawn around our coast. It was well known that we had always contended that upon our maritime coasts, we have the same rights that belong to other countries under the well recognized principles of international law—that the limitary line of our coasts should not follow the sinuosities of the shore at a distance of three miles from it, but should be drawn across the bays and inlets from headland to headland. This view had been disputed by the Government of the United States and when the Government of Canada sought for negotiations between Great Britain and the United States in reference to this matter, it was for the purpose of settling this limitary line. It was rather remarkable that when the Washington Treaty came to be negotiated the protocols contained no reference whatever to the only dispute with regard to our fisheries that existed between the people of the United States and ourselves. Within that treaty there were certain provisions made that we should receive certain compensation for our fisheries in so far as they were of greater value than those of the United States, but there was no statement made in the treaty as to what were the fisheries for which we were to receive compensation, and it was impossible to look at the provisions of that treaty without coming to the conclusion that we were only to be compensated for that which the Americans admitted to be our fisheries, and that for those large bays along our coast which we claimed to be part of the property of Canada, but which the American Government had all along denied to be exclusively our possession, we were to receive no compensation whatever. Now, if we permitted those provisions of the Washington Treaty to be acted upon, as that treaty now stood, we could not afterwards set up our claim to the exclusive possession of those fisheries. We would let our rights pass away from us by default, and it seemed to him, therefore, of the utmost importance, before any attempt was made to come to a settlement under the provisions of the Washington Treaty, that we should determine what our rights are on our own coast, in order, if those fisheries did rightfully belong to us, as we claimed, that we might receive compensation for them. He did not see how it was possible for the Commissioner to go on under the provisions of the Washington Treaty and determine what was the value of our fisheries without first having settled whether they belonged to us.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—They will settle that themselves.

Mr. MILLS did not believe that the Commissioners were empowered under the provisions of the Washington Treaty to settle this important question. On looking at the history of the headlands dispute, it would be seen that the American Government had all along been confounding two matters that were entirely distinct. It was true that under the treaty of 1783 they had the liberty of fishing on our coast, but it was also true at that time the English Government was disposed to refuse them the right to fish on the sandbanks. In the treaty with France, that country bound itself not to fish within thirty leagues of the coast. The object of this provision of the treaty was very obvious. It was to prevent a large military force from being collected under the pretext of a fishing expedition, for the purpose of conquering Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or the islands in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Those who were familiar with the history of our Maritime Provinces knew how often the sovereignty of those possessions changed hands, and how necessary it was to enter into a treaty containing stipulations which would secure the possessors against surprise. The American Government, when their independence was to be recognized, felt that no such reason applied to them, and the English Government conceded to them the right to fish upon the Grand Bank, and also to fish within the Three Mile limit. Those liberties that were secured under the Treaty of 1783 were lost by the war of 1812-15, and they were subsequently regulated by the Convention of 1818. Now, when we look at the words of that Convention we found the words and expressions used were precisely the same as those used by writers on International Law. It seemed to him that under the provisions of that Convention we have just the same right to the fisheries in the bays and inlets of our coast as the Americans had to the fisheries in the Chesapeake Bay or Delaware Bay. He thought it would be of very great consequence to the future of this country, if the Government were to take the necessary steps to have this limitary line finally disposed of before any action was taken under the provisions of the Washington Treaty. It was with the view of bringing this matter before the House that he put this motion in the hands of the SPEAKER.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he did not rise for the purpose of opposing the motion in any way, because he thought it well to have the papers and correspondence asked for laid before the House. He noticed one remark made by his hon. friend which he considered very injudicious in the interests of Canada—that was, that his object in asking for these papers was to have some preliminary action taken to define the boundaries within which Canada had jurisdiction, and over which the United States had not. Now, to his (Mr. MITCHELL's) mind, that object is one which would be very detrimental to the interests of Canada. It would be like raising a question in advance as to our own claims—a doubt whether we had a right to the exclusive jurisdiction of three miles outside the coast, within a line drawn from headland to headland. The hon. member for Bothwell had clearly stated the position of the case up to 1818, but should have gone a little further and followed the history of this dispute from that date to the present day. He (Mr. MITCHELL) would take up the history where his hon. friend had left it, and show the position which Canada occupied to-day in relation to these fisheries. In the treaty of 1818, the last made on the subject between England and the United States, it was very clearly defined that certain privileges were conceded to the United States, which the United States claimed as a right, but which England denied as right. It was agreed that the Americans should have the privilege to enter our ports for wood, water, shelter and protection, and to fish within three miles of the coast. From 1818 to 1842 the right of England to preclude the Americans from coming within the three miles headland line was never conceded by England, but always enforced. Instructions after instructions were given to the commanders of the British maritime forces on our shores to enforce this right, and keep American fishermen outside of the headland line, and seizure after seizure was made of their vessels for infringing within the three miles limit of the headland line. About 1842 matters became rather mixed. England claimed the right to exclude the Americans from the Bay of Fundy. The Americans claimed that as one of the headlands of the bay was in Nova Scotia, and the other in Maine, it was not an exclusively British bay. After a very great deal of correspondence in reference to the seizure of an American vessel in the bay. it was decided that the Bay of Funday was not such a bay as was included within the restrictive clauses of the convention, and the vessel was released, but it was never conceded with reference to the other bays along our coast. From 1842 up to 1854, when the first Reciprocity Treaty with the United States was made, there was a continual agitation going on, the Americans claiming then, for the first time with the intention of enforcing their claim, the right to come within the three mile limit. They tried to set up the decision in the Bay of Fundy case as a precedent for coming into other bays. The Governments of the colonies resisted it, and one of the great objects of the Reciprocity Treaty was to settle that very difficulty and one of the great objects the United States had in view in giving us the privileges conceded under that treaty was to have equal rights with our fishermen to fish in our waters. That treaty lasted till 1866, and during its existence the Americans had the same right as our own people to the use of our fisheries. When that treaty was repealed, it became a question for the Government of Canada to consider what course should be adopted in relation to the fisheries on our coasts. That was before Confederation, and the several Provinces could not take united action at the moment. Correspondence was opened between the Governments of Old Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to take some united action in reference to the policy to be pursued in the new crisis which had arisen. The Government of Old Canada decided upon a policy, after correspondence with HER MAJESTY'S Government of allowing American vessels to take out licenses to come and fish within our waters. The object of that was this; after the Americans had for so long a period under the Reciprocity Treaty enjoyed the same privileges as our own people, they did not like to adopt a system of exclusion. Another reason was that it was desired by HER MAJESTY'S Government that nothing should arise between the two countries which would lead to difficulties between the two Governments. Hence the licensing system was adopted, and the first year some six or seven hundred American fishermen obtained licenses. After confederation one of the first subjects brought under the notice of the new Government was how the fisheries of the country should be dealt with, and what was to be done to prevent our rights from lapsing, and our concessions from being regarded as rights. The late Government brought the matter under the notice of HER MAJESTY'S Government in England for the purpose of preventing our rights from lapsing. The licensing system could not last long. The number of licenses taken out dwindled from six or seven hundred in the first year to something like 120 in the third year.

It being six o'clock, the debate was adjourned, Mr. MITCHELL still having the floor.

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, 18th February, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three P.M.

SPEEDY TRIAL OF FELONS.

Mr. MACDOUGALL introduced a Bill to amend the Act for the more speedy trial in certain cases of persons charged with felony and misdemeanors in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Bill read a first time.

PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM asked whether the Government intend laying before this House, at an early date this session, the Report of the Pacific Railway Survey in British Columbia during the past year, and whether they intend locating the proposed line of Railway on the mainland during the ensuing year.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The report for the last year up to the 30th June is already before the House. The report of the latter half year is not prepared, and therefore cannot be presented to the House. It is only a week I think since the last of the parties returned who were out on the exploratory survey, but I hope to be in a position within a fortnight to give a summary to the House of what has actually been done during the past season up to the first of January which will practically lay the present position of the survey before the House as fully as it is possible to do before Parliament rises.

WITHDRAWAL OF TWENTY CENT PIECES.

Mr. CHEVAL asked whether it is the intention of the Government to withdraw from circulation the twenty cent silver piece of money, its close resemblance to the twenty-five cent piece making it a nuisance to the public.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I have the honour to inform my hon. friend that steps are being taken to provide a further supply of silver coinage, and on the receipt of this coinage from England we propose to withdraw the twenty cent pieces.

PRINTING OF THE "HANSARD."

Mr. CHEVAL asked whether it is the intention of the Government to see that the Hansard is printed in both languages, English and French?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE:—That is a matter entirely in the hands of the House. My hon. friend will remember that the House last session adopted the report of the Printing Committee that the speeches of members should be reported and published in the language in which they are delivered. My hon. friend will observe that they have been so reported, and if he speaks in French he may depend upon it, he will be reported in French. If the House decides upon a more extended report, namely, the translation into both languages of all the speeches the expense will be very great indeed, and till the House does so decide of course nothing will be done in the matter. The House Commissioners were invested during the recess with authority to make preliminary preparations for the reporting and publication of the debates, but since the House met their authority was relegated to the House, and it is now in the hands of the Printing Committee by special motion.

VOLUNTARY MILITIA ORGANIZATION.

Mr. CAUCHON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to institute an inquiry into the working of the Voluntary Militia Organization, especially in the Province of Quebec, and into the abuses connected therewith some of which have been established before the Committee on Public Accounts in a previous session.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—With regard to the first part of the question, it is not our intention to institute an inquiry of so general a character; but it is the intention of the Government to institute an immediate inquiry into abuses which are said to exist in connection with the militia organization in certain places, and in general wherever anything seems to exist that requires examination into whether it is connected in the voluntary organization or not, and we will endeavour to adopt such a system as will prevent the recurrence of these abuses.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. DYMOND moved an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, praying that he will be pleased to direct application to be made to the LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS of the several Provinces composing the Dominion of Canada for returns of all commitments for trial, with the acquittal or convictions resulting therefrom, for capital offences committed since 1st July, 1867 ; and also that HIS EXCELLENCY will be pleased to take such measures as may secure to this House, which is charged with the duty of legislating in respect of criminal jurisprudence, full statistical information on all matters relating thereto. With the indulgence of the House, he would briefly explain his motive for placing this resolution in the hands of the SPEAKER. It would be observed that it was divided into two parts, the one asking for information which could only be obtained from the Governments of the several Provinces, the other asking HIS EXCELLENCY to take measures relating to criminal jurisprudence. He (Mr. DYMOND) had mentioned last session that he hoped to be able to bring the question of abolishing capital punishment before the House this year. It was a new one in the Dominion Parliament, though so long ago as May 5th, 1855, a motion that capital punishment be abolished was discussed in the Provincial Legislature of Canada. As would be seen by the journals, the hon. member for Chateauguay and the present Chief Justice of Quebec, with two or three leading members from the Upper Province, voted for that motion, and although Mr. DRUMMOND moved the three months hoist, he did so more because it was too late in the session than from any opposition to the principle of the resolution. He believed he was correct in saying that Mr. DRUMMOND, like the hon. member for Chateauguay and Mr. DORION was opposed to capital punishment. He would remark, as some of his friends had indulged in some pleasantry at his expense, that he did not raise this question on sentimental grounds. Coming here with other hon. gentlemen in order to effect practical legislation, and to attain results of practical value, their arguments should be put on a practical basis. The object of punishment was to cause the prevention of crime. When sheep stealing was a capital offence, a man who was sentenced to death for this crime pleaded that his life was worth more than the life of a sheep. He was told by the judge "you are not to be hanged for stealing sheep, but that sheep may not be stolen." On the same ground men were hanged—not for committing murder, but that murder might not be committed. Now, in our jurisprudence we must have the element of certainty. He would be able to show by statistics, not obtained here but from the old country, that whilst the crime of murder is one which above all others we should desire to punish with the greatest certainty, it is the one in the conviction for which the most uncertainty existed. That arose from two or three causes. In the first place there was a natural dread in the mind of the juror lest he should be unhappily the means of convicting an innocent person. Having paid a good deal of attention to the subject in England, and also to the law here in Canada, he, (Mr. DYMOND), did not believe that of late years the cases of conviction of innocent persons had been at all frequent where the English system of jurisprudence prevailed. The sentiments of humanity which pervade the whole of our race presses very largely against the sad catastrophe of the conviction of an innocent man, and that was the cause no doubt of many murderers escaping from justice ; and then there was the extraordinary difference in the degree of moral guilt attaching to those who committed murder, and the jury would of course take into account, knowing what the penalty of a conviction was, all these considerations, and would thus to a large extent be thrown off their balance. A juryman once observed to him (Mr. DYMOND) when challenged on this subject, that he would not dream of punishing one charged with murder on the same evidence that would satisfy him of the guilt with the secondary offence. The motion made last year was for commitments, convictions, acquittals, and the results of convictions, where they had occurred, since Confederation. He had been able to obtain a return of convictions simply for the reason that the Minister of Justice received a report in all cases where capital convictions took place, but in no others. But he had no official statistics of any other form of crime. Murderers and members of Parliament were the only persons whose offences were reported to this House. He said murderers because, although in Canada the punishment of death nominally attaches to three or four other crimes, he was glad to observe since 1867 no person had been executed for any other crime but murder. From 1st July, 1867, to April, 1874, the number of capital convictions in the Dominion were 69, of which 41 were for murder. Of these 22 were executed. Why he desired statistics on this subject would be shown by the fact that there was an extraordinary discrepancy between the convictions for secondary offences, and the convictions for murder. In England the number of persons committed for trial for murder, in 1872, was 70. Of these only 30 were convicted, being 43 per cent. While for burglary, housebreaking, sheep-stealing and forgery the number of convictions was 90 per cent. of the whole number tried. Some years ago while paying considerable attention to this subject, he found that the number of convictions for murder did not exceed 21 per cent., whilst in the cases of other crimes more than 80 per cent. of those who were accused were convicted. The testimony of Judges who had been examined at various times before commissions in the old country, had been the same—that there was an uncertainty attaching to the punishment of the crime of murder which did not attach to other crimes. If he could show the House that justice was flouted, that murderers were at large who should be punished, in consequence of this death sentence, he would advance a strong argument for the abolition of the sentence, and show that the question was a strictly practical one. The question of statistics had already been before the House during the present session. He hoped that judicial statistics would receive the attention of the Government as well as statistics relating to other branches of legislation. It did certainly seem extraordinary that while since Confederation we had consolidated the criminal laws, and whilst during every session measures had been introduced altering or amending the criminal law, we had no evidence upon which to base conclusions as to whether those amendments were necessary or not. In our present state of darkness we had no information that enabled us to ascertain what crimes were increasing or decreasing. He was quite aware that in this country we had not as in the old country a large criminal population, but we had growing up in our large cities a class which, if not strictly criminal in its character, was one from which criminals were bred, and he would strongly urge upon hon. members that we should grasp this evil in its infancy, and endeavour to meet it while still in its inception, rather than delay to grapple with it until it had here, as in other countries, almost passed beyond control. The administration of law being in the hands of the provincial authorities he was unable to obtain any report of commitments and acquittals for murder, and for this reason he placed the result in the hands of the SPEAKER.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the Government acquiesced in the motion calling for this important information.

The motion was carried.

Mr. BUNSTER moved for copy of resolutions declaring the expediency of a survey of Dominion lands in British Columbia and the establishment of an office at which reliable information may be obtained by intending settlers. He said these resolutions would commend themselves to the House. It was, in his opinion, a step in the right direction, and one he was directed to take by the constituency he had the honour of representing. Many settlers arriving in Vancouver Island were looking for land, but on going to the land office they were informed that the land was reserved for Dominion purposes, owing to the contract entered into by British Columbia with the Dominion of Canada. The hon. member for South Bruce had referred to British Columbia as an inhospitable colony in his great Aurora speech. He (Mr. BUNSTER) did not think the public would believe it when it was remembered that they paid $5,000 per annum to an agent in London towards encouraging the settlement of emigrants in that Province. He (Mr. BUNSTER) had on his desk a sample of wheat grown in Vancouver Island, and he challenged the hon. member to produce as good wheat as that sample. The farmer who raised this wheat, when he read the speech of the hon. member for South Bruce, in which it was stated that British Columbia was a sea of mountains, and that its people were inhospitable, said:—"Mr. BUNSTER, I wish you would take a bag of our wheat and exhibit it in the House of Commons against any wheat raised in South Bruce or any other part of Canada." The hon. member for South Bruce went on to attack the Province, and to state that the terms were extravagant and the demands of the people impossible of fulfilment. He further stated that every thing that could reasonably be done was done in order to their fulfilment. He (Mr. BUNSTER) did not think the hon. member could consistently say that, inasmuch as two years had elapsed and only an insignificant survey had been attempted to be made. Even now, the first surveyor had not been across that portion of the road which the Government proposed to make this year, namely; that from Victoria to Nanaimo. The hon. member for South Bruce had further commented upon what he was pleased to call the extraordinary expenditure of many millions of money which the first cost would entail, the many more necessary to keep it in running order, and of the impossibility of commencing to build the railway in what he termed a country which was a sea of mountains until complete surveys were made. He. (Mr. BUNSTER) denied that the country was a sea of mountains, and as for the climate, it was a better one than that of Ontario — better far than that of Quebec, if he could rely, as he did rely, upon the accounts which had been given him of it. In fact, he held that the climate of British Columbia was the finest of all the Provinces of the Dominion. He proposed to make a quotation from the report of the San Francisco Board which would show in what estimation they held the natural resources of British Columbia, but before doing so he would remind the House that but a few years ago that same city, now one of the largest exporting centres on the continent of America, was spoken of with as much disdain as that made use of by the hon. member for South Bruce in reference to British Columbia. British Columbia had exported coal to England, not so much because she had much more on hand than she required, but because of its quality. According to the terms of union, there were 20 miles of a belt upon each side of the railway, but the Dominion Government never stated where the railway was going to be built, and the Provincial Government did not therefore know what land they would require. The Local Government would see that the people had their rights, and were not afraid to tell the Government here what they thought. He asked for this land on behalf of the people of British Columbia and on behalf of the whole Dominion. It was rich in agricultural and coal resources, and yet, as was shown by the report of the San Francisco Board of Trade, of the 531,947 tons of coal required at that port, British Columbia only furnished 140,000. If these lands could be made available we could supply the whole that was wanted. A merchant came to the coal region of British Columbia to buy supplies, but found he could not get nearly as much as he wanted, because an order from a Victoria merchant had to be filled up, and there was not enough over. One hundred acres of that land had been sold for $25,000 in cash, and there were portions of it could be sold for much more, but they were locked up by the Government. The people of British Columbia were not receiving that attention from the Government which they deserved about those lands. He did not know who was to blame, but he wished to find out so that he might explain to his people. He hoped the hon. member for South Bruce would do Columbia the honour of paying it a visit, and informing himself upon its climate and resources by personal observation; and he was sure had the hon. member lived as long in the Province as he (Mr. BUNSTER), he would never have said what he did say. He therefore moved the resolution.

Mr. DECOSMOS said he thought the hon. gentleman who had introduced this motion was moving in the right direction. But the question arose with respect to what was called the railway belt of land in British Columbia,—whether the Dominion Government at present was entitled to any land there at all or not. He thought, if he remembered rightly — and he spoke subject to correction — that, under the railway clause of the terms of union British Columbia was bound to convey to the Dominion. Canada a belt of land on both sides of the railway to an equal extent as lands in the North-West territory that might be appropriated by the Government for railway purposes. The original intention it appears was that the railway should be built by a company and not by the Government. Now, unless some new legislation, some new arrangement was made between the Province of British Columbia and the Dominion, it seemed to him there was a difficulty in the way of the Dominion putting forward its claim to that land. He was perfectly satisfied, however, that the Provincial Government was willing to convey to the Dominion Government the railway belt of British Columbia such acreage per mile as would be appropriated along the railway line in the North-West territory, with a view to provide for the expenditure of its construction. Now, in regard to the relation in which British Columbia stood to this railway belt. In July 1873, the Provincial Government received an order in council accompanied by a despatch from the Dominion Government asking it to convey to the Dominion Government a belt of twenty miles for Esquimault to Seymour Narrows. At that time it was thought that the Allan Company would succeed in floating its scheme and would go forward immediately with the construction of the railway. The Provincial Government could not make that conveyance because the Imperial Statute, or the railway clauses of the terms of union, made it incumbent on the Dominion Government first to locate the line; but the Provincial Government did the next best thing they could to keep faith with the Dominion, they reserved this land from sale, from preemption and from lease. A despatch was afterwards received stating that the Dominion Government was willing that the land should remain reserved. The land had remained reserved, therefore, up to the present time. Under the new arrangement with respect to the construction of the railway, the Dominion Government intended to proceed at once with its construction from Esquimault to Nanaimo, and he took it that they ought to make an arrangement with the Provincial Government to obtain possession. The Dominion Government ought to make the Dominion Land Act, which applies exclusively to Manitoba and the North-West, apply to British Columbia, so far as it was applicable, and under that Act appoint an officer there to sell those lands. There were one or two points, however, in connection with that Act, if it should be adopted, in which it would be advisable to modify the Act in that country. Many people went to British Columbia; some of whom had only their labour and others their capital. The lands were now unsurveyed. He thought, therefore, there ought to be provision made in case the Act was to be extended to British Columbia that any person might put in his application to purchase unsurveyed land, and the Government should send out a recognized surveyor, and have it surveyed at the expense of the party making the application. In that way there would be no delay in the settlement of those lands until the general survey had taken place. In the Dominion Land Act, provision was made that the Government may lease coal lands, the rent to be paid being a royalty of two and a half per cent. Such a provision was impracticable of application in British Columbia, and he questioned whether it would work satisfactorily in the North West territory. Such an arrangement would really make the company or individual working the coal mine who possessed the most skill and excised the greatest economy, to pay more than an extravagant firm. He, therefore, recommended the Government in case they extended the Dominion Land Act to British Columbia, and granted leases in certain cases to levy a royalty of so much per ton. Unless the Government adopted this course, there was only one other course for them to adopt, and that was to allow the Provincial Government to sell, or lease, or dispose of the land within this railway belt in accordance with the land laws of British Columbia, but with the understanding that the proceeds, after deducting the expenses of the sales, should be paid to the credit of the Dominion Government. He believed to-day that such land as belonged to the railway belt would be more cheaply managed in the interests of the Dominion if an arrangement were made by the Dominion Government with the Provincial Government for the survey and sale of those lands. He hoped the resolution moved by his hon. friend the member for Vancouver would produce the results he anticipated, and that the Government would during the present session, take some means to place the railway belt in the hands of the people.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE remarked with reference to the last observation of the hon. member for Victoria that, considering that the people of Canada are paying an annuity of one hundred thousand dollars a year in perpetuity, equal to ten millions of dollars, for this railway belt, he hoped the people of Canada would be allowed to manage it themselves, and not remit the management to British Columbia. While he heartily supported such a mode of administering that and the other public lands as would produce the settlement and development of the country, he thought that, having to pay so dearly for these lands, we had better take care of them ourselves. With reference to the observations of the hon. member for Vancouver to the effect that he (Mr. BLAKE) had stated in a public speech that the people of British Columbia were inhospitable, he begged to say that the hon. gentleman was mistaken. He had not said so. Any one who knew the hon. gentleman, himself a representative man from British Columbia—any one who had observed the exertions in the direction of hospitality of that hon. gentleman—exertions which for the moment while he was speaking one might have supposed were successful—would perceive that it was quite impossible that he (Mr. BLAKE) could have talked of the people of British Columbia as inhospitable. No; he had spoken of the country, and he spoke in the sense of a country through which a railway was to be built. In that sense he spoke of it as "a sea of mountains" and as an inhospitable country. He need not go very far to prove the truth of that assertion. Amongst the official documents brought down to the House was a map of British Columbia prepared by Mr. TRUTCH, then Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works, and Surveyor General of that Province, and now Lieut. Governor. He would hold that may up to the House and ask them if the country thereon delineated was not rightly described for the purpose of railway construction as a sea of mountains, and inhospitable. He was glad to know that in some of the valleys there was such good wheat grown as that which the hon. gentleman had described, and he hoped there was more such land than he had at first supposed. But for the purposes for which he was speaking he was prepared to maintain that his statements were correct, and that that country was as difficult a country as could be found for such purposes. The hon. gentleman had referred to another part of his (Mr. BLAKE's) remarks, namely; those relating to the terms which the Government had offered to the people of British Columbia. Upon that point he had only to say that further reflection and information had not caused him to modify in the slightest degree the views he had then expressed. He still entertained the view that the offer made was of a very liberal character, and he should regret if any more liberal offer than that should receive the sanction of this House or the country.

Mr. BUNSTER said he congratulated the hon. gentleman on his conversion and accepted his apology; but he had to inform him that he was mistaken in stating that British Columbia was the most difficult country for the purpose of railway construction. The official reports showed that the altitudes on the Union Pacific Railway were 8,000 feet while in British Columbia they were only some 4,000 feet. He had been credibly informed that the advantages offered to immigration to the lands along the American railway were inferior to those offered by British Columbia, because in the latter country the soil was more fertile. The difficulty in building a railway through British Columbia had been greatly exaggerated. If the Americans could build the Union Pacific in three and a half years in a time of war when the altitude to be crossed was 8,000 feet, surely it could not be said to be an extraordinarily difficult work to build a railway through British Columbia, where the altitude was only 4,000 feet. He believed it could be built one-fourth, aye, one-half as cheap as the American road. He went on to speak of the advantages of the Canadian Pacific Railway in enabling us to command the carrying trade of the East; and he hoped the importance of securing that trade and promoting immigration would induce the Government to put forward the most energetic efforts in advancing the work of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. ROSCOE wished to ascertain what the state of the negotiations were between the Dominion and the British Columbia Government. With reference to the map exhibited by the hon. member for South Bruce, he had to say that it was drawn up on the principle followed in former days in preparing a map of the interior of Africa; that is, when they knew nothing whatever of the place they put in a mountain. It was true they had mountains in British Columbia—mountains of silver, of copper, of lead, and what was better, of gold, and also mountains of timber where the trees grew 300 feet high and were six feet in diameter.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he presumed the object of the hon. gentleman in moving this motion was simply to bring this matter before the House, because he could not of course expect such a motion to carry. The Dominion Government so far had no power in reference to these lands, The First Minister of the late Government had endeavored to obtain an assignment of these lands to the Dominion for the purpose of taking some such steps as the hon. gentleman now suggested, but the Local Government had promptly replied that no such assignment could be made till the railway was located, they not being bound to do so by the Order in Council admitting Columbia into the Union. The railway was not located then, and at the present time the Government were not prepared by any Minute of Council or other authoritative document to say to the British Columbian Government that any portion of the road was located; and until they were able to do that the Columbian government would undoubtedly adhere to their former resolution. The Government intended to make such provisions as would enable them to proceed with a survey of these lands the moment that it was in their power to do so, but they could not force the local government in this matter, and by the 11th clause of the Order in Council they had the power to allow persons to go upon these lands by pre-emptive right, subject, of course, to such prices and regulations as may be established by the Dominion Government as the ultimate proprietors. Nothing more than this could be done at present, and he hoped the hon. gentleman would rest satisfied with the assurance he gave him that the Government would lose no time, so soon as they had it in their power, in taking such steps as would effectually promote the settlement of the country so far as these lands were concerned. The Columbian Government had large quantities of land now available for settlement in places so remote from any possible location of the railway that there could be no difficulty in having them located, and in other places where it was possible the road might be built, persons settling could now acquire pre-emptive rights, and these rights might be acted upon with the perfect assurance that the same principles would apply to them as to prices and rights of property to actual settlers purchasing, after the lands came into the possession of the Dominion Government. He did not see, therefore, that there was any serious hindrance to the occupation of lands throughout Columbia, and the increase of the population in that way as the hon. gentleman suggested. Two or three applications had been made to the Dominion Government within the last six months, with reference to applications made to the Local Government for the right to sink shafts to search for minerals on these lands, and in these cases the Dominion Government waived any right they might have in the matter in order to enable such companies to proceed with the development of the mineral resources of these lands. Anything of this kind that the Government could fairly and justly do in the interest of the public till they were in possession of these lands as sole proprietors they would of course feel themselves bound to do. As to giving the Local Government in the meantime the right to alienate these lands upon terms to be arranged by them, they paying over the proceeds, less the expense incurred, while he had no doubt they would exert themselves to do what was right in the matter, he did not think the Dominion Government could entertain such a proposition for a moment. It was, in fact, entirely out of the question; but he could promise the hon. gentleman that in this, as in every other matter affecting that Province, the utmost expedition consistent with wisdom and prudence would be exercised by the Government in order to accomplish the end the hon. gentleman desired. He asked the hon. gentleman to withdraw his resolution, trusting that he was satisfied with the explanations that had been given of the policy and intentions of the Government. He might say one word with regard to the railway. The policy of the Government was one which they did not desire for one instant to withhold from public inspection. They were now taking measures to proceed with the construction of the line from Esquimault to Nanaimo, without admitting that at all to be part of the main line when finished, though it might be. Till they were able finally to locate the main line it was impossible to do anything further than proceed as far as Nanaimo, from which point the line might be proceeded with or it might terminate opposite any point fixed upon as the terminus on the main line. No time would be lost, and active measures would be taken by the Government immediately on the opening of spring to prosecute the survey of that portion to completion as rapidly as possible, and also to prosecute the survey on the main line, so that they might be enabled finally to locate the line. Everything had been done that it was possible to do with the money which Parliament placed at their disposal last session for that purpose.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said that after the explanations made by the Premier he hoped his hon. friend would withdraw his resolution. With respect to these lands reserved, alluded to by the member for Victoria and the Premier, it was true that the late Government had applied to the Government of British Columbia to assign to the Dominion the lands between Esquimault to Nanaimo, because the arrangement was about to expire by which the Local Government were prevented from alienating these lands, and therefore as it was certain that the moment it was ascertained where the line was to run, people would go in there and take possession of the lands, it was necessary to make some new arrangement. The Government of British Columbia said they would not assign the lands, but they agreed to reserve them for the purposes of the railway.

Mr. BUNSTER said after the assurance he had received from the leader of the Government he would not press his motion.

Mr. DE COSMOS observed that the Premier had stated that the local Government could now grant pre-emptive rights to these lands. That was a mistake. Under the terms of Union the local Government were prohibited from alienating these lands in any way within two years from the date of the Union, and under the arrangement that was subsequently made they could not do so except by withdrawing the reserve.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had not alluded particularly to the Island, but had quoted the language of the Order in Council respecting the whole Province, which was: "The Government of British Columbia shall not sell or alienate any further portion of the public lands in any other way than by the right of pre-emption." He might add that when the head of the Columbia Government was here lately, he had personally—semi-officially, he might say, though not in writing—discussed this matter with him, and called his attention to various matters connected with the land question, particularly to the fact that the Indians were now claiming that their title was never extinguished, and that very serious difficulties existed at present in Columbia because of the ill-treatment the Indians conceived they had received from the local Government. The Dominion Government, as the guardians of the Indians, had been obliged to make very strong representations to the British Columbia Government in this matter, which, if not attended to, might lead to very serious complications. It was in the interests of British Columbia, as well as of the whole Dominion, that the Indians should, if possible, be satisfied; and so far he did not think that fair attempts had been made to give them satisfaction. He thought something further would have to be done by the local Government in order to produce that contentment among the Indian tribes in that country which prevailed on the east side of the Rocky Mountains.

Motion withdrawn.

THE REFRESHMENT ROOM.

Mr. BUNSTER, in moving that the wine and refreshment part of the House be re-opened for the convenience of members, said he had been accused by an hon. member the other day of being weak-kneed, because he proposed to bring this question up with closed doors. He considered that hon. member was himself somewhat weak-kneed in having withdrawn his resolution in favor of a Prohibitory Liquor Law. He (Mr. BUNSTER) made this motion in the interest of all members, some of whom had complained that they had to go outside on cold nights for refreshments. He believed the privilege had formerly been somewhat abused, but that this had been done by a few was no reason why the greater number should suffer, and he thought the saloon should be re-opened.

The motion was declared lost on a division.

STEAM COMMUNICATION BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND PICTOU.

Mr. McINTYRE moved for an Address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for a copy of the contract entered into between this Government and JAMES KING, Esquire, of Halifax, N.S., for the purpose of running a steamer between Georgetown or other convenient port in Prince Edward Island and Pictou or other convenient port in Nova Scotia, during the winter season. In doing so, he said it would be remembered by many hon. gentlemen, at least such of them as were interested in the maintenance of communication between Prince Edward Island and the adjoining mainland, that during the course of last spring a contract was entered into between this Government and a Mr. KING, of Halifax, for the purpose of carrying mails and passengers between the ports of Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, and Pictou, N. S. During the present winter, this contract was attempted to be carried out, but, he regretted to say, with the most indifferent success. The disappointment in connection with this failure was all the more keenly felt from the belief that the boat placed on the line was utterly unfit for the service. From all he could learn —and he had made the most careful inquiries in regard to this matter —it appeared to him that the boat was certainly unfit for such difficult service. She was of the ordinary construction, altogether too small, and not sufficiently powerful for making her way through the ice. He was free to confess that the winter had been an exceptionally severe one, and that the quantity of ice in the Gulf was something extraordinary. However, this was no reason why a properly constructed boat should not be placed on this route. He need scarcely add that this naval curiosity gave out early in January, and as a consequence, they were compelled to fall back on the usual route of communication between Capes Traverse and Tormentine. He was not at all sanguine that steam communication could be kept up all winter, but should it shorten their beleaguerement by six or seven weeks it would be a great boon to the people of Prince Edward Island, as well as those of the adjoining Provinces. As he had already remarked, the ordinary winter route was from Cape Traverse to Cape Tormentine, a distance of some ten miles. The straits were there crossed by means of ice boats, an arduous and dangerous mode of travelling; but he was fully convinced that for a certain time during the winter this must be the only means of crossing. He would, therefore, be happy to see ample provision made for the hardy and faithful men who were at present engaged in this dangerous but unremunerative service. In conclusion, he hoped that the Government would see the necessity of placing a properly constructed steamer on this route, and give the experiment a fair and impartial trial.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said he desired to state for the information of his hon. friend, and for the information of the House, that tenders were asked for this service; and that of Mr. KING, of Halifax, was the lowest. The Government instructed the Inspector of the Marine and Fisheries Department to examine the vessel Mr. KING proposed to put upon the route, and he having done so, she was reported capable of the work, and in good condition. Upon that report the Government entered into a contract with Mr. KING for the sum of $9,000, who undertook to complete the engagement and proceeded to carry out the contract. The steamer made one or two passages successfully; but this winter had been so unprecedentedly severe, and there was such an unusually large quantity of ice to be encountered, that unexpected difficulties and disasters interposed. In fact, from the information the Government had received from the Island, they were led understand that the winter had been the most severe that had been witnessed for a great many years. The steamer was at the island, and was unable to cross to the main shore. It was evident from the information in the possession of the Government that it was not likely that the steamer was able to perform her duties. The contractor was bound to furnish a steamer suitable for the service, which the present boat certainly was not. Either he would have to perform the duty in a proper manner, or the Government would have to see that a proper boat was put on the route. He had grave doubts whether the service could be continued during the entire winter. There were certain times when it could not be done, still, the Government were bound to run a steamer to the island, and they were determined, if they could not get a suitable boat for the service, to have one built.

Mr. SINCLAIR was very glad that this matter had been brought before the House. His opinion was that the Government would have to buy or build a boat suitable for the service, and own it themselves, because no company would have the same interest in looking after the lives and property of passengers as the Government, themselves. It was supposed by many who knew a good deal about the Straits of Northumberland, that it was impossible to ply a steamer across it the year round, though at the time of Confederation it was promised that this would be done. He believed the Government were desirous of doing the best they could. They would have to make proper arrangements for crossing by ice boats in the winter season. For instance, when the steamer ceased to ply, no preparations were made to continue the conveyance of passengers and mails. His opinion was that the Government would have to furnish a proper steamer for the service, and when it could not run, arrangements should be made for larger ice boats. The traffic had greatly increased during the past year, and what was required was larger accommodation. They should receive so much per round trip, and be required to provide more suitable boats, manned by six instead of four men, and capable of carrying five or six passengers and about a ton of mails. The present boat was a failure. In the most favorable weather it would not make more than five or six miles per hour, and many passengers preferred to travel by the ice boats. With reference to the latter, he believed there should be boat houses in which to repair them. He hoped Prince Edward Island would be given this convenience as promised when the Province entered the Union.

Mr. DAWSON said although this was an exceptionally severe winter, it was also true that the steamer was unfit for the service, and many persons who wished to cross to the island preferred to go in the smallest boat rather than by the packet. The contractor was not fit for the service, and the whole matter was worth investigating. He (Mr. DAWSON) was very sorry to hear that the inspector had reported the boat as a good one. It certainly was anything but that. The Government should make an inquiry into the matter, and if they could not get a better boat, he (Mr. DAWSON) would take the contract from them.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said this was a matter in which he had always taken a deep interest, and he had something to do in having that condition inserted in the terms of union. He was fully aware at the time that the proposition was made that it would be a matter of some difficulty, but as the trade between the island and the mainland was annually increasing, it was a matter that should be entertained by the Dominion Government. So far the service had not been successful, A suitable vessel could not be found for the purpose. Tenders had been asked for after the present Government came into power (the former Government having failed to asked for them) for a suitable vessel, but it was impossible to construct one between Nov. 1873, and Nov. 1874. Under the circumstances the Government were obliged to accept the services of the best boat they could get for one winter. The condition of the contract was that the vessel was only to be retained for this winter, and the contractors must furnish a suitable one for the remainder of the term of their contract. A screw boat would be necessary as a paddle-wheel boat would never do to cut through the ice, yet that was the only kind that could be obtained for this winer. The inspector found the boat new, safe, strongly built, and the engines good. It was thought better, therefore, taking all things into consideration, to use the boat for this winter than to be without any. He was very sorry to hear from the hon. member for Pictou, that the contracter was not at all times fit for his business. Mr. KING was a well known contractor in steamboats and owned several. He was interested in the St. John and Digby line which was very successful. He seemed, therefore, to be a man well fitted for the service. He did not think there was any steamer built that could ply regularly across the straits during two months of the winter season—the latter part of January, the month of February, and part of March. During that period the service could be performed in ice-boats. The contractors for carrying the mails across the Straits of Northumberland by ice-boats were bound to perform their duty as soon as they received the mails from the Post Office. If they had not done so they were sadly neglectful of their duty. He had no doubt it was only a little oversight on their part. This winter was the severest that had been experienced on the island for thirty years. Such another might not occur for thirty years again, and he did not think the contractors should be charged with neglect of duty. No person could say what sort of boat exactly would be suitable. It must be built on the principle of the vessels engaged in seal fishing, which were suited for sailing through ice.

Mr. PERRY said the fact was the persons who carried the mails in the ice-boats were not paid sufficiently. They should receive a sufficient amount to keep men enough around them, and pay them daily wages with board, so that when the weather was favorable for crossing they might take advantage of it. The contractors were experienced men, and if they had proper boats and a sufficient number of men the passage could be made much easier and in a much shorter time than at present. As far as steam communication was concerned, he was satisfied that the Government would do all in their power to carry out the terms of union with the Island. The steamer had failed this winter, as many a large enterprise had failed, but he had no doubt that a steamer would be constructed which would be much better suited for the service. He believed the Government would do better by renewing the contract with the ice-boat contractors than by calling for tenders.

The motion was carried.

PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. WALLACE said that in moving the motion which he had placed on the notice paper he would recite, with the permission of the House, some facts which bore on the question. From 15th May, 1871, till 31st July, 1872, he was commissariat officer and paymaster on the Eastern division of the Canada Pacific Survey, and since that period he had at intervals rendered service in connection with the survey. He challenged the strictest inquiry into every act of his, and he defied it to be shown that he wrongfully appropriated a cent of money from the survey, or knowingly allowed any one else to do so. Having made that statement he would pass on to refer to matters that had arisen in connection with it. First he would refer to a letter written by the hon. Premier, and he would say of that letter that it was extraordinary in its contents—extraordinary on account of the time and circumstances in which it was written, and extraordinary in that no action had been taken since the letter was written. The letter was extraordinary, first; because it was written by the hon. Premier, not with a desire to see a wrong remedied, but written at the instigation or at the solicitation of a gentleman who was then opposing him (Mr. WALLACE) in a political canvass. It was written at the time he was actually engaged in a political canvass as an opponent of the hon. Premier. The letter was addressed to Mr. J. STUART, of Hamilton, who was then opposing him (Mr. WALLACE) in South Norfolk. In that letter the Premier said:—"I am in receipt of your letter of enquiry respecting the duties and salary of Mr. WM. WALLACE." Now, he (Mr. WALLACE) held that if the Premier had discovered that he had done anything wrong in connection with that position he held on the survey, it was clear it was the hon. Premier's duty to have taken steps against him on account of the wrong, and not have waited until his attention was called to him by a gentleman who was opposing him (Mr. WALLACE) in a political contest. The letter was extraordinary on account of its contents. He did not say that the hon. Premier stated knowingly that which was false, but he said this—that the statements made in that letter were not strictly in accordance with facts. The Premier says: "Mr. WALLACE was employed as paymaster on the Intercolonial Railway from January, 1867, to January, 1871, at $1,600 per annum." He could not conceive what motive led him, or what object he had in view, to introduce this matter; but it was not correctly stated, because the duties he was discharging were not those of paymaster. He was accountant on the Intercolonial railway. The payments on that work were made at the office on the cheque of two of the commissioners, countersigned by the Secretary. The payments which were made down the line of the railway were made by paymasters, of whom there were three, and he was not one of them. He was only the accountant that recorded the transactions of the paymasters. Then, again, the hon. Premier says:—"Mr. WALLACE resigned. Up to the time he resigned, Mr. WALLACE had received a sum of $338,871.62." Now, that was not correct. He (Mr. WALLACE) had not received up to that time that amount, and, indeed, had never received it. He believed that all the money ever paid into his hands was between $150,000 and $160,000, and of that sum there was a detailed statement in the books. When the correctness of any entry made in that statement was impugned, or of the correctness of any payments that were therein made, he was prepared to answer thereto. Then, again, the hon. Premier said :—

"To that period the books show that $584,579 had been received and vouchers fyled accounting for $373,663 ; and that from June, 1873, to August of the same year there was further accounted for $151,522, leaving at the latter date $59,394 unaccounted for, and in reduction of which no vouchers have since been fyled."

That statement, however, if it were correct, would show that more vouchers had been fyled with the Department than he had received money, or vouchers were admitted to have been fyled for the sums of $151,522 and $373,663, which made a total of $520,000. Since that period vouchers and accounts were brought from the Province of Manitoba in the latter end of the year 1874, amounting to $50,000, and these were in the Department at the time this letter was written. Add that to the above sum stated to have been accounted for, and instead of a deficit as alleged of $59,000, if there was a deficit at all, it would not exceed $10,000 or $12,000. Then further on the hon. Premier says :—"Mr. STEERS, senior, has been continuously, and Mr. STEERS, junior, partially, occupied in the unsuccessful endeavor to strike a balance." Now Mr. STEERS, senior, never touched the books he (Mr. WALLACE) had under his control, while he (Mr. WALLACE) was in that department. The letter also contained a statement that Mr. STEERS, junior, went into the Department in October, 1872. That was not strictly in accordance with the fact, because that gentleman did not enter the office until the end of February, or beginning of March, 1873, where he remained until he went up to Manitoba in connection with some duties arising out of transactions with the office, and did not return to the office, except to do something in connection with duties he had performed in Manitoba. Again, this letter, though it did not expressly charge him with being a defaulter, was used to make people believe he was a defaulter. To show that this inference was drawn from him, he might say that the hon. member for South Wentworth, in addressing the electors of South Norfolk, was reported to have spoken as follows :—"He alluded to the charge which had recently been made against Mr. WALLACE of having wrongfully obtained $60,000 of the public funds which he had not accounted for, and said it was not at all improbable that a portion of that $60,000 was expended by Mr. WALLACE in 1872 in corrupting the electors of Norfolk."

Mr. RYMAL—Hear, hear !

Mr. WALLACE—The hon. gentleman in making that statement was guilty of saying that which had not a particle of foundation in truth, and if Parliament would allow him to make use of stronger expression he would use it. The report of the hon. gentleman's remarks continued: —"It would be strange if some of that $60,000 were not still sticking to his (Mr. WALLACE's) fingers, and it was possible some of it might during the present contest be employed in corrupting the electors of this constituency." So that, if this letter was not written with the design of charging him with being a defaulter, it had the effect of making some people believe that he was guilty, or otherwise the hon. member for South Wentworth had been guilty of having wilfully done a wrong to him. An effort was also made to show that he had overdrawn his salary. In this matter he had been treated most unjustly by his opponents, because, while they had showed the amounts he had taken and charged to himself, they did not give him any credit for services that were rendered subsequently to the 30th June, 1872. It was also stated that he strove, by crediting himself with a larger salary than he was entitled to, to account for the deficiency between the amount he had charged himself with and the amount he was said to be entitled to. With regard to salary, he might say that when he first spoke to Mr. FLEMING his duties were declared to be to buy supplies and attend to their shipment, and for these duties he was to be paid at the rate of $1,800 a year ; and Mr. FLEMING had stated that, considering the responsibilities involved, that salary was large enough. Subsequently, when the parties went into the field, and it was decided that payments should be made periodically from the office to their families, the work of attending to these payments was thrown upon him in addition to his other duties, and for these additional duties additional remuneration was spoken of, but as no rate was fixed he credited himself in the books with the lowest sum, and up to the time of his leaving there was no such thing as over-payment; on the contrary, as the books in the office would show, instead of being over-paid there was a balance in his favour of something like $330 or $340. It was stated that $200 was inserted in pencil for the purpose, as was alleged, of endeavouring to make his salary more nearly correspond with what he had charged himself with. He did not enter that amount at all. When he prepared the statement and showed it to Mr. FLEMING, he put in the time during which he had rendered service, and accounted for all the moneys he had taken, and allowed Mr. FLEMING to fix the remuneration for that time, and if $200 was put in it must have been done by Mr. FLEMING or some other person after the document went into his possession. This was the language used in the Premier's letter: "Thus apparently by an attempt to get an increase of pay, beyond what his books show him to have been entitled to, endeavoring to make his earnings more nearly balance the money he had drawn. But even at $2,400, instead of $1,800 per annum, there is a considerable balance against him. The over-drawn amount as previously stated was $1,772.95 claim for 13½ months at $50 extra per month, $675; extra month, July, 1872, claimed in statement $200, leaving a balance of $897.95." How was that balance made out? By not allowing anything for services that were rendered subsequent to the 31st of July. Then the hon. gentleman further on stated in his letter: "The above information compiled from the statement furnished by the accountant is the most exact statement I can give in reply to your question. This letter, as he had before stated, was not written in the public interest to bring to light any wrong committed against the public service, but for the sole purpose of destroying his (Mr. WALLACE's) election. Immediately after his election he came down to Ottawa to attend the trial of THOMAS STEERS, jr., who had been connected with the office he was in, and surely if the Government had any charge to make, they should have then taken proceedings against him. Not only was this letter published and distributed among his constituents, but a letter he had received from the Public Works' Department in reference to his cash book, and a copy of his telegram in reply had also been sent to his opponent. The Premier telegraphed to Mr. STUART: "None of these books or papers print. Demand made. WALLACE yesterday telegraphed that cash book and cheques would be returned, but not to hand yet." He (Mr. WALLACE) had taken at first an article in the Globe, because at that time he had not seen the Premier's letter, and in replying to that had stated:—"It is possible that when the surveys were burnt, some of the vouchers may have been destroyed," and the reference in this telegram was in reply to that statement. He would ask the House how it was possible that the Premier, knowing nothing of the internal management of the office, could state positively that none of the vouchers were burnt when the office was burned. However, when he came to Ottawa, he wrote to the professional accountant, who now had charge of the books, to this effect:—"Upon your representation, endorsed by the Hon. the Premier of the Dominion, the public has been led to believe that I am unable to account for nearly sixty thousand dollars of the funds of the Canadian Pacific Survey, with which I was entrusted while paymaster on that work, and that therefore I must be a defaulter to that amount." It was true that it was not expressly stated that he was a defaulter, but the public were led to believe, and did believe, that he was unable to account for $60,000 of the funds of the survey that came into his hands, and what else could he be called than a defaulter? Then he went on to say in this letter:—

"These representations were wholly at variance with the truth, for in the books in your possession, there was a cash account which shows the moneys I had received, and a detailed statement of their expenditure, and I am now ready, and always have been ready, to answer if any charge is preferred against me in connection therewith. I may also say that I am prepared to write up the balance of the transactions in connection with the whole expenditure on the Eastern division from to the 30th June 1873, if the books, papers and vouchers taken by you from the office lately in charge of the elder Mr. STEERS are placed under my control. As you are aware, the details and vouchers of over fifty thousand dollars, which was charged to the WALLACE account were only received at Ottawa within the past few, months that they were given you for adjustment, that they were being audited by an officer of your department, and that therefore, it was impossible for me to write up that expenditure until I received the documents, from which it could be done. You were also aware, as I had informed you of the facts that very large sums of the money charged to the WALLACE account, have been paid to others, that the settlement of these sums had in many instances been made when I was disconnected with the office and had no control in the matter, and that, therefore, it was most unjust to have me published to the world as a defaulter, before it was clearly established that there was a deficiency and that I was responsible for it, waiting your immediate reply."

He received the next day the following reply from Mr. RADFORD:

"I am in receipt of your letter of the 4th instant. You state in it that I have made representations endorsed by the hon. Premier of the Dominion, charging you with being a defaulter to the extent of nearly sixty thousand dollars of the funds of the Canadian Pacific Survey. I take the opportunity of denying this statement—no such representations have ever been made. I may say on this subject, that when your books came into my possession on the 18th of November last, your ledger showed your account with Mr FLEMING to stand as follows :—you had taken credit for vouchers to the extent of $473,191.35 against a total debit of $584,582.82."

Now, there was no such debit against him, because, while writing up these books, he did not charge himself with moneys that he had never received. When money was sent through the department, through the paymaster or the assistant paymaster, it was charged to the persons getting it, so that there could be no such debit as $584,582. Neither did he admit that there would be a deficiency when all was straightened up, but if there were a deficiency, he was not going to assume responsibility which other men should bear. If it could be shown that he had misappropriated to his own use or allowed others to do so, he believed he ought to be punished for malfeasance in office. Mr. RADFORD'S letter continued: "Leaving a balance to be accounted for of $111,391.46. From this amount I deducted $52,703.90, said to be the value of the vouchers brought from Manitoba and handed to me at the end of October, leaving $59,187.56 for which vouchers had still to be found." Now, when he (Mr. WALLACE) went over to Mr. RADFORD'S office, he referred to the vouchers that had been sent in. He (Mr. WALLACE) told him he did not hold himself responsible, but that there were other vouchers to be sent in, and that there were balances due by some gentlemen who had been charged with sums of money for which they would have to account, and he had no doubt the matter would be correct. He referred Mr. RADFORD to his cash account in the books, showing it to be balanced, and Mr. RADFORD admitted it would be unjust to hold him (Mr. WALLACE) responsible for expenditures he never made. In the face of this admission Mr. RADFORD wrote: "You will remember my showing you the above figures, and giving you an opportunity to explain the difference before I reported the matter to the department." Now, as he was informed, this same Mr. RADFORD, at the request of the Premier, had some conversation with Mr. STEERS, sr., who was spoken of as his (Mr. WALLACE'S) subordinate, but who was rather a superior for the time being, inasmuch as he checked the vouchers and sent them in to the Department. Now, it would have been more honourable if the Premier had dealt with him, if he suspected anything was wrong, than to talk to Mr. STEERS about him (Mr. WALLACE) in his absence. Mr. RADFORD writes: "I would remind you that your cash book was not in my possession at that time." A great deal had been said about this cash book. A great deal was made of the fact that he had taken it away with him, but he did not take it away surreptiously or unknown to the Department. The other books were there and there was nothing in the whole matter for which he objected to the closest scrutiny. But it showed they were determined to make some charge against him. They had the total statement of every cent of money that came into his hands so that they did not want the cash book. Mr. RADFORD writes: "With reference to your offer now to write up the balance of the transactions to the 30th June, 1873, I am directed to say that the whole of your accounts are under examination the result of which will be made known to you as soon as possible." This showed that they were not in a position to say that any one had done wrong, or that there was any deficiency at all. It would have been time enough to make these serious charges after it was shown by an investigation that there was a deficiency, and that he was responsible for it. Mr. RADFORD concludes:—"And that in the meantime the Department is prepared to receive any vouchers for moneys paid by you on public account which you may be pleased to fyle." In this matter he desired the fullest investigation. If the charges made against him by the hon. member for South Wentworth were true, he (Mr. WALLACE) was unworthy of holding a seat in this House, and should be expelled; but he defied any one to show that in this matter he had been guilty of wrong. Entertaining these views he moved for the appointment of a special Committee consisting of Hon. Messrs. BLAKE and CAMERON, and Messrs. Moss, Ross (Prince Edward) and BOWELL to investigate the charges against him.

Mr. ANGLIN said this motion was clearly not in order. The letter to which it referred was not before the House. It should be contained in the resolution. It being six o'clock the House rose.

———:++:———

AFTER RECESS

Mr. WALLACE resumed. He regretted that he was out of order in submitting his motion to the Chair, but it must be attributed to his ignorance, and not to any disrespect of the rules of the House. It had been alleged that in what he did he had violated the indepenpence of Parliament Act. If he did, he had no intention to do so, and neither in spirit nor in letter had he violated the law so far as he had been aware. If he had done so, of course he would be censurable to that extent. With these remarks he would move:—

"That the letter and telegram, of which copies are hereto annexed, were printed and circulated in the South Riding of Norfolk during the late election in that constituency. That the said letter was addressed by the Hon. A. MACKENZIE to JOHN STUART, Esq., of Hamilton, and with the said telegram related to the accounts, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Survey of WILLIAM WALLACE, now a member of this House. That the letter and telegram aforesaid be referred to a Committee of five members, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and to report thereon, from time to time, with all convenient speed, and that Messrs BLAKE, CAMERON (Cardwell), Ross (Prince Edward), and BOWELL shall compose said Committee."

Mr. Wallace.

"OTTAWA, Nov. 23rd, 1874.

"My Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of inquiry respecting the duties and salary of Mr. W. WALLACE. Mr. WALLACE was employed as paymaster of the Intercolonial Railway from January, 1869, to January, 1871, at $1,600 per annum. From May 15th, 1871, to July 31st, 1872, he was employed as paymaster to the Canadian Pacific Railway Survey for the Eastern Division. In the latter capacity his duty was to purchase supplies as well as pay the salaries of the staff employed. The professional accountant in whose hands we have recently been compelled to place the books and accounts, reports to me that at the time Mr. W. WALLACE resigned he had received for disbursements the sum of $388.871.62, and that the vouchers fyled by him in the department up to that date account for but $142,675.26. After Mr. WALLACE left there continued until 20th June, 1873. to be charged and credited in the same books, and in his own handwriting. the receipts and disbursements for this service. To that period the books show that $584,579 had been received, and vouchers fyled accounting for $373,663, and that from June, 1873, to August of the same year there was further accounted for $151,522, leaving at the latter date $59,394 unaccounted for, and in reduction of which no vouchers have since been fyled. With a view of arranging the accounts they were placed in the hands of Mr. THOMAS STEERS, Senr., in June, 1872, and in October of the same year his son was engaged to assist him. Since these respective periods, Mr. STEERS, Senr., has been continuously, and Mr. STEERS, Junr., partially occupied in the unsuccessful endeavor to strike a balance. The accountant is now engaged in the effort to write up the sum of $59,394 still unaccounted for, but he represents to me that he is beset with difficulty owing to there being in the department no cash or other book—if such book exists—in which the original entries were made, and the only material at his command is a mass of loose papers, including some vouchers which were in Mr. WALLACE'S office, when the accountant took charge of the accounts a few days ago.

In regard to Mr. WALLACE'S salary, there does not seem to have been any Order in Council or other official document fixing it, but the journal and ledger kept by him, alike show that it was intended to be $1,800 per annum. There was paid him, as per his ledger, on account of salary, from June 30th, 1871, to June 30th, 1872, the sum of $2,251.00; against which he is credited in his ledger with salary from May 15th, 1871, to June 30th, 1872, 13½ months at $150 per month, $2,025; and cash in October, 1871, January and June, 1872, $564.14; total, $2,589.14, showing a balance due him June 30th, 1872, of $338.14. On account of which he was paid in July, 1872, $132.30, and October, 1872, $300; total, $432.30, and is credited with payments in November, 1872, amounting to $9.697, leaving a balance of $2.81 in his favor on account of salary to June 30th, 1872. His ledger shows that he subsequently received on same salary account Dec. 30, 1872, $550; Jan. 31, 1873, $100; Feb. 28, 1873, $100; total $750. And on a statement recently lodged by him in the Department, he acknowledges having received further payments as under, which do not appear in his Journal or Ledger: 1873—July $150; August $100; November $100; 1874, January $100; April $80; May $230; 1874—September $65.76; October $200; total $1,025,76. Showing an amount overdrawn by him for salary and after he had left the service of $1,775.76, less the balance in his favor June 30, 1872, $2.81, leaving debtor for $1,772.95. That no doubt may remain of the intention to fix his salary at $1,800 per annum, the following entries are taken from the Journal: 1871—June 30, for salary from 15th May to June 30th one and a half months, at $150, $223; July 31, salary this month $150; August 31, salary this month $150; September 30, salary this month $150; December 31, three months salary from 1st October to 31st December at $150—$450; 1872—March 31, from 1st January to 31st March, three months, at $150—$450; June 30, salaries account from 1st April to 30th June, three months at $150—$450, But in the statement sent in by him within the past few days, occurs this entry, that portion of it following the date "31st July 1872," being written in pencil, "By salary from 15th May, 1871, till 31st July 1872, fourteen and a half months' at $200—$2,900," Thus apparently by an attempt to get an increase of pay beyond what his books show him to have been entitled to, endeavoring to make his earnings more nearly balance the money he had drawn. But even at $2,400 instead of $1,800 per annum there is a considerable of a balance against him. The overdrawn amount as previously stated was.....$1772 25

Claim for 13½ months at $50 extra per month.....	$675.00
Extra work, (July 1872), claimed in statement.....	200.00	875.00
		$897.95

Apparently against this and leading to what further demands their vagueness renders it impossible to say there are in the statement these most extraordinary entries :—

"By services since time of resignation 31st July, 1872.

1872, September October had gone to Toronto, was taken ill and laid up. November, December,	During this time was a Member of Parliament and not legally entitled to Payment.
1873, January, February sick about half the time in Ottawa. June, November, from 6th.
1874, March from 24. April, May, June, about two weeks. September except from 1st till 8th, and from 22nd till 29th. October, November, 10 days."

The above information compiled from the statement furnished by the accountant is the most exact statement I can give in reply to your question.

Yours truly

(Signed) A. MACKENZIE.

JOHN STUART, Esq.,
Hamilton.

TELEGRAM.

Ottawa, 5th Dec. 1874.

None of these books or papers burnt. Demand made—Wallace yesterday telegraphed that cash book and cheques would be returned, but not to hand yet.

(Signed) A. MACKENZIE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman had only read part of the letter; he had not read the most material part, which showed that he (Mr. WALLACE) had resigned his position on the 30th of June, 1872; that he immediately thereafter became a candidate for the representation of one of the counties of Ontario, and that after the time he was a candidate, and after his election, he attended the exercise of the duties of his office, so far as paying himself a salary was concerned. What more than that the hon. member did, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) did not know. These items the hon. gentleman had not read along with the other parts of this letter. The hon. gentleman complained of the inaccuracies of the dates when certain parties were said to have become servants of the Government. This was of no importance. The statements he (Mr. MACKENZIE) had received were such as he believed to be correct, and the question raised by the hon. gentleman's motion was as to whether the money was correct or not. Whether the amounts were settled yet, he was unable to say, but when he came into the office of head of the Public Works' Department, the accounts of the Pacific Railway Survey were in arrear for years. When he had been in office for some months, he appointed a new auditor, in order to be able to ascertain where the money went. At the time the letter in question was written, it was impossible to ascertain even that, for the hon. gentleman had carried away the cash book with him. He quite understood that it was possible to have the money accounted for, and not have vouchers posted in the ledger, but the hon. gentleman did not explain why they were not entered. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had found some statements to be true that he had not embodied in his letter at all. He found, for example, that some parties, servants in the Department, appeared to have some thousands of dollars in their hands, according to the accounts of the hon. member. But he found that they had a certain number of vouchers for years in their possession, which they had never presented, and which were never entered by the hon. gentleman. Whether the hon. gentleman was accountant or not, after he was a member of Parliament, he had public money in his possession, and was drawing public money for his services. After the election was over, he had a special account in his own name at the Bank of Montreal, in this city, and between the 2nd August, 1872, and the 22nd of September last, he had chequed for himself no less than $8,279.44, the last cheque being for $65.76 on the date last mentioned. These were facts that could not be disputed, to which the hon. gentleman had made no allusion, and in regard to which it might be assumed that the hon. gentleman thought there would be nothing wrong. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) did not say there was any deficiency in the hon. gentleman's accounts when they were wound up, but they were not yet wound up. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had never seen the books, but had left them entirely in the hands of those who were charged with the duty of producing a satisfactory statement—a duty, he might add, which it had so far been found impossible to perform. He found also that one gentleman of the Department had drawn $600, of which he, as Minister of Public Works, knew absolutely nothing. As a matter of fact he never knew there was such a person about the Department at all, and no authority could be produced for his possession of the money. He found another gentleman who had received nearly $1,000 returned by parties getting supplies from the Department. That money should have been paid to the Receiver General, or to the Deputy Minister of Public Works; but instead of that the clerk referred to put the money in his own pocket, and charged it against himself. Proceedings were directed against him, but the Police Magistrate decided that since he had a claim against the Government for extra salary, he could not commit him for embezzlement. Another person received $140 which were not accounted for, except by an entry subsequently made in the books to show that the money was paid. He only referred to these matters to point out to the House the irregularity of having a member of Parliament having charge of public moneys, and paying them to himself, without any reference to any Department. It was unnecessary to go into a detailed criticism upon these statements; the whole matter was taken hold of the other day by the Committee on Public Accounts, and they in turn had referred it to a sub-Committee to be dealt with and investigated by them. He had no objection that the late accountant should place his case before that Committee, but the hon. gentleman was not here as a member of the House so far as this matter was concerned, but as an officer of one of the Public Departments; and no clerk of the Public Departments could come to this House and demand an investigation of his grievances. Every facility would be given to the hon. gentleman to have any investigation he desired, and he (Mr. MACKENZIE) would be glad to appear personally before the Committee if they desired him; but he could not consent to have matters of this kind delegated to a special Committee, and the irregularities of a departmental officer magnified into a matter of public importance. He therefore objected to the motion in its present shape, although he was quite willing that the investigation should be prosecuted by the sub-Committee of the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. WALLACE, in reply, contended that he was legitimately entitled to his expenses in going to and coming from Ottawa on the business of the Department. The Minister of Public Works had stated that the sum in connection with which the Clerk referred to had been brought before the police magistrate was $1,000, when he knew very well that it was only $875, and that the entire claim was not for extra salary, but that $300 of it was for his regular pay. The young man at once said, when challenged with respect to the subject, that if there was any balance owing to the Department, he was ready to pay it over. The hon. gentleman knew that this Clerk was brought into the department without him (Mr. WALLACE) knowing anything about it, and he also knew that he (Mr. MACKENZIE) had threatened him with dismissal if he did not pay over the money. The facts connected with this came to the knowledge of the Minister of Public Works in the early part of November, but although this threat had been made at that time, he had allowed it to go on until within a day or two of the nomination in South Norfolk, and then it was heralded abroad that the assistant of the late paymaster of the Pacific Railroad Survey had been arrested for taking the funds of the department. It was also hinted by the supporters of the hon. gentleman that he (Mr. WALLACE) was guilty of the same thing, and the whole matter was used as a lever to prevent, if possible, his election for South Norfolk. The hon. gentleman also knew that in the books in possession of this professional accountant there was contained a full and explicit statement of all moneys expended by him (Mr. WALLACE) in his capacity as paymaster, and it was not necessary, to having this statement, that the book referred to by the Minister of Public Works as missing, and in his (Mr. WALLACE'S) possession, should have been in the hands of the accountant at all. The hon. gentleman said that he (Mr. WALLACE) had drawn some $8,000 from the 2nd August, 1872, to the 2nd September, 1874, for his own purposes. The sum of money, as a matter of fact, was somewhere between $4,500 and $5,000, and for a sum of $3,000, he gave a cheque to the gentleman acting as paymaster. The reason why this sum was not carried over was that there were no settlements of his accounts, and that he was rendering all these services for which he felt he had a right to some compensation. He could not come down here and be under expense without some remuneration. The question was, was there wrong in connection with this matter, or if he had violated the law, or misappropriated any of the funds of that survey? As to those queries he challenged the strictest scrutiny and examination. He had been assured that he might have a committee to investigate to his heart's content; that he should have all he wanted. He asked a committee to investigate. If he had been a member of the Civil Service, as an hon. member claimed, why was he not dealt with as a member of the Civil service? Why did hon. gentlemen not take action against him, instead of giving a letter to the Ministerial candidate to be used against him in the election contest. It was true the hon. gentleman did not speak of him as a defaulter, but the inference to be deduced from the letter was that he had been guilty of a defalcation. He (Mr. WALLACE) had left Ottawa on the 21st November. Very shortly after, if not on this very day, this letter was written. Why did the hon. gentleman not take him to task about these matters instead of writing letters to be scattered broadcast over South Norfolk. If any wrong had been discovered in connection with him (Mr. WALLACE) why was he not asked to come forward and answer for his conduct? He had been summoned as a witness to come to Ottawa, but when he came nothing was said against him. He called the attention of the Department to the fact that he was here, and ready to answer any charges preferred against him; but the matter was allowed quietly to drop, the object in view in referring to it at all having passed. He was not aware whether he had a right to ask for this committee or not, but he demanded justice from the hon. gentlemen opposite.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman would have justice as far as he (the Premier) was concerned, but this matter was in the hands of the Sub-Committee of Public Accounts, and if he (Mr. MACKENZIE) understood right, the hon. member had been summoned before the committee already, and would have an opportunity of making good his case. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) stated as a simple fact, that when the hon member left the service of the Government to become a candidate, he was paid all but $2.08 of what was due him, and he afterwards paid himself $1,775.76 out of moneys improperly kept in his hands that he had no right whatever to deal with. After he became a member of Parliament he should not have remained in the service of the Government, or received any money from it. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) did not say the hon. member had not accounted for all the money for which he was responsible. He could not tell that, the accounts not being posted up. The hon. member asked why he (Mr. MACKENZIE) did not make some charge against him, and have him arrested when he came here. The reason was simply because he did not know there was any charge against him. With reference to young Mr. STEERS, whom he had caused to be arrested, the moment his claim against the Government was presented, he (the Premier) immediately forbade Mr. FLEMING'S entertaining any claim, no matter how just it might be, until he had paid over to the Government what was due them. He had told Mr. STEERS, when he had called on him, that he (Mr. MACKENZIE) could not allow him to keep the public money received on account of the surveys. On that occasion Mr. STEERS promised to make good the amount due. He afterwards took legal advice, and kept the money, and the moment he (the Premier) discovered this, proceedings were taken against him to compel him to make restitution of the funds he held. As to the amount, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) did not pretend to give it. All he knew was that the Department had lost something like $1,000 by clerks in that office putting money in their pockets on the pretence of having claims for payment. He held a certificate from the Bank of Montreal that showed that on Aug. 2nd he had taken $8,279.21 of the public money when he had no position under the Government, and was not entitled to hold any money belonging to the Government.

Mr. RYMAL said he was particular, when assisting his friend, Mr. STUART, in South Norfolk, to abstain from bringing any charge against the present member for that constituency. He did say that if these charges were true—judging from what had transpired not long ago—he could say where some of that money had gone. He did not believe the hon. member was too pure in the days when his friends were in their agony, to advance them something towards the corruption fund, or to retain it for his own services. He (Mr. RYMAL) thought he was amply justified in saying more than that, in view of the fact that the hon. member's friends during the election were parading the streets of Dover with their hands full of money, and betting largely on the results of the election. He (Mr. RYMAL) believed that money was obtained by some other way than by chopping wood by the cord. Perhaps it was easier to obtain it by a system of book-keeping known only to the hon. member for South Norfolk. With reference to the allusion made to himself, he (Mr. RYMAL) could allow it to pass without saying a word. He had been known in Parliament as long as the hon. member, and he would treat that gentleman as the man did the jackass that kicked him. He would consider where he came from, and say no more about it. In the South Norfolk contest he observed, as he always endeavored to do, a strict adherence to truth. He charged the hon. member with no defalcation, but said it was mysterious after his having left office more than a year and a-half, that he was not able to give any account either of moneys or vouchers. All he asked the hon. member was—where the money and the vouchers had gone. After returning from South Norfolk, he (Mr. RYMAL) felt that he had dealt very gingerly with the hon member. If he had done that gentleman any wrong, it was not intentional. The publication of the letter, he was bound to say, had aroused a great deal of sympathy for the hon. member: to it he owed a great deal of his support. The appeals the hon. member made to the electors with his eyes streaming with tears, secured for him many of the votes which he received.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON rose to a question of order. The hon. member asked for a Committee on documents not before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER said they were now included in the resolution.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said he knew nothing of the documents, and had not seen them before, and the resolution was therefore out of order. Since the matter was before the Committee on Public Accounts there was no necessity for bringing it up in the House.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the suggestion in reference to the point of order was quite correct. This question was one for the Committee of Public Accounts and a sub-Committee had been appointed to deal with it. Everybody was willing that the hon. gentleman should have the fullest opportunity of vindicating himself from the statements made with respect to him. He was sure the hon. gentleman would get from the sub-Committee ample justice, but if it should turn out contrary to his expectations, he was sure the House would be willing to take up the matter. On the statement of the First Minister the resolutions should be withdrawn. If there should be any hitch, or anything to prevent him from getting justice in the Public Accounts Committee, he (Mr. BLAKE) gave his assurance that he would do his best to assist the hon. member to have the matter dealt with in the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD contended that the resolution was in order, but since the Premier declined to allow a Committee to be appointed, the hon. member would be obliged to withdraw it. What must strike every fair minded man in this House was this: that the Premier had placed this subject altogether on the ground that it was simply an investigation into the accounts of the hon. member for South Norfolk—that the question to be inquired into was simply whether he was a defaulter or not, and whether he was able to account for all the moneys he had received. It was charged that he had acted with great impropriety in receiving money after becoming a member of this House. This was being investigated, but there was something more that the hon. gentleman had avoided. He (Sir JOHN) asked not only that Mr. WALLACE's conduct should be investigated, but that the conduct of the First Minister should also be investigated. The Premier was on his trial as well as the hon. member for South Norfolk. The charge was that, on the eve of an election, in order to defeat a person seeking the suffrages of the constituency, in order to defeat a candidate opposed to him in politics and to secure the election of a friend, the Premier had written a letter and sent a subsequent telegram to be used at that election, not for the purpose of obtaining justice or restoring to the public treasury money feloniously taken therefrom, but for the purpose of defeating his political opponent and electing his political friend. The Public Accounts Committee could not deal with this matter. They could simply make a report with reference to Mr. WALLACE's accounts. However, the hon. member for South Norfolk must submit and withdraw his motion. The Sub-Committee would report to the Public Accounts Committee, and if justice were not done the hon. member there, he was sure there were enough honest men in this House to see justice done him. Although the member for South Norfolk was one of a small minority in this House, he could appeal to every fair-minded man for justice, and for a decision as to whether a Minister of the Crown can write a letter for an object that was so plain that everyone must understand it. He could pardon a good deal at election times, but it was not fair that the First Minister, in his zeal to elect a friend, should take the course he had pursued in the South Norfolk election.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said he thought the charge made by the First Minister would be a very grave one if, on investigation, it was found that he had written what was untrue of Mr. WALLACE, now the hon. member for South Norfolk. The hon. the First Minister admitted that he had written the letter, and the leader of the Opposition was in as good a position now to move a vote of censure as the writer of the letter—if it wrong to have written it—as he could possibly be on the report of any Committee whatever. He desired to call attention to the point of order—whether the hon. member could change a motion of which he had given notice in a sense entirely contrary to the notice given.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—That I did not hear; that point has not been taken.

Mr. CAUCHON—I raised it myself.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—That point has never been raised up to this moment.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—It seems to me that is the only point.

Mr. SPEAKER—I so understand the member for Quebec Centre. But when the hon. member for South Norfolk put the motion into my hands I directed his attention to the order, and suggested the easiest mode of remedying the defect, and I understood the sense of the House was that he should have permission to remedy the defect. I, therefore, accepted the motion put in my hands, and considered it put in my hands with the consent of the House. I so understood it.

Mr. CAUCHON—I never so understood it. Any member can object to any change, and I do so.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said that the Prime Minister had addressed the House on the motion. However, it was a matter of no consequence, if the motion was not to be granted.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said he was not in the House during the earlier part of the discussion; but he did not desire that the motion should go off on a point of order. If the hon. member for South Norfolk was well advised, however, he would withdraw the motion. If he pressed the motion, it being in Mr. SPEAKER'S hands in order, it would be for the First Minister to consider whether they should have a motion of that kind negatived purely and simply, or whether he would move an amendment, and if he did not do so whether some hon. member should not exercise his right, and move an amendment in order to put the real issue fairly before the House. He did not desire it to go on the journals that the House negatived a demand, purely and simply, made by the hon. member for Norfolk for a Committee of inquiry into the matter.

Mr. WALLACE — As the hon. the First Minister has stated that the whole matter will be investigated — his writing the letter as well as my connection with the matter—and as I am not afraid of any Committee, I will withdraw the motion, and allow the question to go before the sub-Committee of the Public Accounts.

INSOLVENCY AND SUPREME COURT BILLS.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—Before the Orders of the Day are called I would ask the Hon. the First Minister when we are likely to receive the Insolvency and Superior Court Bills. They are mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and both Bills will be regarded by the country of so much importance and general interest that it would be well they should be laid before the House as soon as possible. For instance the Insolvency Bill interested all merchants from British Columbia to Cape Breton, and it would be well that it should be in the hands of members as soon as possible that its main principles should become widely known; and I hope it will be a final Bill, and that the subject will not be treated again for years after it has passed this Parliament, as no doubt it will be. It would also be desirable if it could be speedily known whether the Bill is in substance the old Bill, and if there are any material alterations and amendments, a printed synopsis of the alterations and amendments calling the attention of the House and the country thereto, should be prepared and distributed, because commercial men cannot readily read through an Insolvency Bill and understand its provisions, and any proposed changes. I hope the Bill will be very nearly identical with the old one. No doubt there will be numerous suggestions made to the Minister of Justice, and he will most likely adopt some of them by way of amendment; but I hope the same principles will be embodied in the new as in the old Act, if we are to have an Insolvency Act at all. So with regard to the Superior Court Bill. It will be a matter of very great interest, especially to members of the bar in all the Provinces; and I am quite sure I am speaking the sentiments of all who hear me, and the sentiments of the country when I say that the leader of the Government would confer a favor by having the measures brought down without any delay, so that the House may deal with the questions as soon as possible.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I quite concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman as to the propriety of having these measures brought down immediately. We did expect to bring them down on Tuesday, but as the Budget Speech and the speeches which followed occupied the whole of the evening, they were unavoidably postponed until to-morrow. The Insolvency Bill will be brought in to-morrow, and the Supreme Court Bill will be introduced on Monday.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—When will the Bills be printed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They are now in print. The Insolvency Bill will be distributed to-morrow or the next day, and the Superior Court Bill during the early part of next week; so that not much time has been lost.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—No; I don't complain at all.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—My hon. friend the Minister of Justice will be able to state very fully the changes made in the Insolvency Act, and it is the intention of the Government—(it was done formerly, and is a very proper proceeding)—to refer the Insolvency Bill to a special Committee of perhaps twelve or fifteen leading professional and commercial members of the House, with a view to obtain such amendments as might be thought desirable in Committee, so that, when it came before the House at its next stage, it will pass through almost as a matter of form.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD — Hear, hear!

MILITARY DRILL.

On the order for further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. BROUSE for the appointment of a Select Committee on the subject of a system of military drill, and the proposed motion of Mr. CAMERON (South Ontario) in amendment thereto,—

Hon. MALCOLM CAMERON said he was glad the question was in its present position, because it was evident that the amendment which he had hastily prepared did not fully express his views. He intended to submit a substantive motion to the House on the subject which he hoped would receive the approbation of the whole House, and he was therefore glad to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn accordingly.

Mr. DYMOND said the hon. member for South Grenville who moved the resolution, was unable to be in his place owing to pressing egagements. The mover was very desirous that the discussion should not terminate until he had had an opportunity of replying to the remarks of the hon. member for South Ontario, but as that hon. gentleman had pledged himself to bring up the subject on a substantive motion the member for South Grenville would no doubt be satisfied to have the motion drop and take the opportunity of entering into the discusion at a future time.

Mr. GORDON said before the subject was dropped he wished to offer a few words on the amendment. As the colleague of the member for South Ontario, he desired to enter his protest against a sentiment which fell from him when supporting his amendment to the motion of the member for South Grenville, viz., that this country was indefensible as against the United States. That was a sentiment which was not reciprocated by any constituent in the county represented by the hon. gentleman. It would be most unwise and unpatriotic were they to allow such a sentiment to go forth to the country, as emanating from this House, uncontradicted; therefore, he desired to enter his protest against it, believing that it was not in accordance with the views and sentiments of the mass of the people of this country, and the antecedents of Canada would not warrant such a statement. In 1812, when we possessed a small population compared with that we now possess, we were not afraid to encounter the forces under a General who said he would be able to conquer Canada with a corporal's guard. With the trifling aid which we obtained from England, we were able to repel the invaders. And now, having a population equal to that of the United States at the time she achieved her independence of Great Britain, and being backed by the powerful support of Great Britain, having the promise of the support of Great Britain to her last man and last gun if necessary, it would ill become us to show a craven spirit by allowing such a sentiment as that expressed by the member for South Ontario to be promulgated throughout the country.

The motion was withdrawn.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS WHILE IN TRANSIT.

Mr. CHARLTON moved the second reading of an Act to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railway, within the Dominion of Canada."—Carried.

ALLOWANCES AND GRATTITIES.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD moved for an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL praying that he will be pleased to cause a return to be prepared and laid before the House showing, with respect to the allowances and gratuities granted under the Act 33 Vic., cap. 4—since the beginning of the year 1874—the grounds of superannuation in each case, the age of each person superannuated, the names and ages of the persons appointed to succeed the person so superannuated, and the offices and salaries held by such successors respectively. —Carried.

VACANCIES SINCE GENERAL ELECTION.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD moved that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery be ordered to lay before the House, without delay, a statement showing 1st. The vacancies that have occurred in this House since the last general election, the date when each vacancy took place, and when the same was notified to Mr. SPEAKER. 2nd. The date of the warrant of Mr. SPEAKER for a new writ in each case. 3rd. The date of the issue of the writ in each case. 4th. The date of the transmission of the writ to the Returning Officer in each case. He observed that there was a good deal of irregularity in this matter, and the same irregularity existed in the time of the late Government, and he would be glad if the hon. gentleman opposite would provide in his election bill some remedy for it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE remarked that it would be more interesting to include in the motion the two last Parliaments as well as this one, and suggested the following addition to the motion :—"And also a similar statement respecting the vacancies occurring during the two last Parliaments."

The motion with this addition was carried.

GRANTS TO MANITOBA VOLUNTEERS.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD moved for an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, praying that he may be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a return of all applications made by persons who served in the Militia Volunteer Force in Manitoba, and who have been invalided or discharged before the termination of their term of enlistment, for grants of land in that Province. It was known that the volunteers first sent to Manitoba were promised grants of land in addition to those they might receive as settlers if they filled the term of their enlistment. Before the time expired applications were made by volunteers who were invalided for these grants, but they were not received with much favour, for the very obvious reason that it would encourage others to leave the force whenever they could get the pretext for doing so. However, that reason had no force now, and if it was true, as he was informed it was, that applications had been made by parties whose health had broken down in the service before their term expired, he thought their cases should be considered. He himself was personally aware of some such cases, and he thought they were as much entitled to the grant as those whose health having been preserved had remained in the service to the end. Some he knew had died, and their families should receive the grant.—Motion carried.

SUPPLY.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT the House went into Committee of Supply, (Mr. SCATCHERD in the chair.)

The item "Charges of Management" was first taken up.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained that there was an increase over last year of $500 in the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Toronto, caused by increasing the salaries of two or three clerks who had been a long time in the service. At Halifax there was a decrease of $2,000, and at St. John an increase of $2,000, the salaries at both places having been revised. At Fort Garry there was an increase of $2,500, the total amount being the amount that was actually expended last year. There was a decrease in the charges for seigniorial tenure and commission of $3,500. Most of the claims had been paid and the balance would be closed within a few weeks.—Item adopted.

ITEM ADOPTED.

Civil Government, $715,025.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said there was an increase in the Privy Council of $1,580. The Chief Clerk received an increase of $300, his former salary being $1,900, the three next officers had their salaries increased, and a junior second class clerk had been added. In the Department of Justice, there was an increase of $2,900, two additional officers having been found requisite, and who having to be professional men, had to be paid a higher salary than first class clerks.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER also stated that the gentlemen added to the staff were required to perform professional duties.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said there was an increase of $1,900 in the Militia Department, $700 being caused by the increase of $50 a year provided for by the Civil Service Act, and the remaining $1,200 was the salary of an additional first-class clerk that was found necessary.

Hon. Mr. VAIL was understood to say that this additional officer was required in consequence of the clothing for the Militia having been contracted for in this country. Item adopted.

On the item of $28,930, Secretary of State's Department,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the increase of $2,230 was to some extent caused by an Order in Council passed by the right hon. gentleman opposite before he went out of office. which the present Government confirmed. The other addition was caused by the appointment of a private secretary not formerly employed, who received some four or five hundred dollars, and an additional clerk in the department.

On the item of $39,390, Department of the Interior,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the increase of $3,120 was merely due to numerous treaties with the Indians of the North-West, and the increase of staff necessary to perform the duties. There were also statutory increases in this department, and one or two promotions from second to first-class clerks.—The item was carried.

On the item of $20,898, Receiver General's Department,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the increase was statutory.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD reminded the hon. gentleman that his Party, when upon the Opposition side of the House, had advocated the abolition of the Receiver-Generalship on the ground that it was a sinecure. He would like to know whether it was their intention, now that they had the opportunity of doing it, to carry this out.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that subject, as well as many other important ones, was under the consideration of the Government.

Mr. MILLS said the right hon. gentleman had himself contended that there should be certain members of the Cabinet with very little to do.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he had done so, and he was very glad that his hon. friends had now come to see that there was some force in what he had said.

The item was carried.

On the item of $47,000, Finance Department,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said there was a decrease on account of the superannuation of Mr. DICKINSON. This had been more or less balanced by the statutory increase. There were nevertheless some $230 of a decrease.

The item was carried.

On the item $26,350, Customs Department,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained there was a slight decrease in consequence of a vacancy which had not been filled up; it was possible it would not be necessary to fill it up, but the Government would not pledge themselves to that course.

The item was carried.

On the item $23,840, Inland Revenue Department,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the standard branch created an increase of over $2,000. The rest of the increase was merely statutory.

The item was carried.

On the item $49,890, Public Works Department,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the only increase was statutory.

The item was carried.

On the item $88.180, Post Office Department,

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD said when he came into office he found fourteen clerks employed over and above those whose names appeared in the estimates, and who were provided for out of the contingencies. He at once put ten on the regular list, and after giving a fair trial to the four most recently appointed, he added them also. The staff was thus increased to 82. Since then he had appointed 18 more consequent upon the changes in connection with the Dead Letter Department. He found that the dead letters were destroyed instead of being returned, and he thought he ought to carry out a system similar to that which prevailed in England. That required the employment of ten additional clerks, all of whom were paid reasonable salaries.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said ten was a very large number.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD said his right hon. friend would find if he went to the department that they were all hard at work, and also that there would be very few clerks kept unemployed about the department so long as he (Mr. MACDONALD) had charge of it. In the Money Order Department there were five new clerks employed and one or two in the other branches. The amounts paid in this way were formerly paid out of the contingencies and did not appear upon the estimates. He had no fault to find with the system of his predecessors because he believed the business of the department was as well managed then as now, but he did believe that it was better to place these names upon the estimates so that they should appear publicly. The Assistant Postmaster General had been given a private secretary, a step which had been urged upon him by the late Postmaster-General. This accounted for all the increase.

The item was carried.

On the item $27,340, Department of Agriculture,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained that there had been several increases of salaries to deserving officers, amongst others being $250 to Mr. LOWE. There had, however, been a saving of some $6,000 over the whole.

Item carried.

The following items were passed without discussion:—

Department of Marine and Fisheries, $22,210.

Treasury Board Office..	$ 3,200 00	$ 3,250 00
Marine and Fisheries Department Agencies..	14,900 00
Dominion Lands Office, Manitoba	14,515 00
Public Works, Department, British Columbia	4,000 00
Departmental Contingencies.....	175,000 00	175,000 00
Stationery Office for Stationery	20,000 00	20,000 00

On the item $70,000,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that although this sum was asked under the Civil Service Bill which the Government proposed to introduce, it was not expected that it would be needed.

Mr. WOOD asked if this sum was to be devoted entirely to the officials at Ottawa. The outside service should have some fair consideration at the hands of the Government.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that this sum was especially appropriated, as had been explained by the right hon. member for Kingston, when the vote was first asked on behalf of the service at the capital. The outside service had been in some cases revised and increased.

Mr. IRVING said it constantly appeared in the newspapers that there had been some benefit granted to the civil service, and the outside services throughout the country thought that they had been unfairly treated when they did not get a share of it. The appropriation should be so made that there could not be any doubt as to whom it was intended for.

Mr. SCRIVER said he quite agreed with his hon. friend the member for Hamilton. There had been a great deal of dissatisfaction, founded upon the idea that this appropriation was intended for the whole service, while only those in Ottawa had the benefit of it. Collectors of Customs were living, or rather starving, upon salaries just the same as they had fifteen years ago.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it should be observed that the distribution of this money was restricted by Act of Parliament to the civil service, and the term "Civil Service" had been interpreted to apply simply to those engaged in the departments. Whatever course the Government might feel disposed to follow they were restricted from making its application more general than this. Besides, it must be understood if that $75,000 were distributed over all classes of Government servants it would not augment their salaries more than two or three per cent.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he could not speak from his own recollection as to the disposition of this money, but the hon. gentleman was mistaken in supposing that the term "Civil Service" applied only to the employees in the departments. The Act declared there were two classes in the Civil Service—the inside service and the outside service.

Mr. McDONELL hoped a portion of this fund would be applied to increasing the salaries of postmasters, who, in his opinion, were not fairly paid. In the town of Port Hood, in his own constituency, the postmaster was paid only $200 a year including all the perquisites of his office from the sale of postage, stamps, etc. He had to make up two mails a day, one of them arriving between midnight and two a. m. This officer had sent in his resignation. The customs officer received $600 per annum for services much lighter than the postmaster's. The latter offered to exchange places with him and to discharge his duties for $200. He (Mr. McDONNELL) did not believe that the Government should expect a revenue from the Post Office Department.

Mr. LANDERKIN said country Postmasters were generally in some other business, and instead of finding the Post Office an injury to them, they found it a great advantage. In the constituency he represented there was a Postmaster whose salary was $23 a year. He had to make up two mails every day, one at midnight the other before daylight, and his remuneration was five cents a day and five cents a night. He did not complain, because the Post Office was a great convenience to him. Instead of increasing the salaries of Postmasters, he (Mr. LANDERKIN) would favor diminishing them in cities and towns. There was a Post Office vacant in his own constituency recently, worth only about $50 a year; yet there were some thirty applicants for it. It could not have been for the salary, and there must have been some other advantage in possessing the office. It was not the duty of the House to encourage officials to look for an increase in their salaries; it would not be consistent with a policy of retrenchment.

Mr. WALLACE (South Norfolk), objected to the principle of distributing the $70,000 to the Civil Service by granting 15 per cent. bonus, as being inequitable, and suggested that the amount should be distributed according to the duties performed and the salary received.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said they did not intend to amend that system.

Mr. GOUDGE said there were certainly some anomalies connected with the salaries of the Civil Service, particularly the postmasters. In the town of Windsor, N. S., the postmaster received only $680 a year, though he was obliged to devote his entire time to the duties of the office and had also to employ an assistant, while to his knowledge a junior clerk in the post-office at Halifax, and also at Ottawa, received between $800 and $900. There was a heavy responsibility resting upon the Windsor postmaster, as tens of thousands of dollars passed through his hands every week, and his salary had not increased for the last four or five years. His salary, of course, was based upon the receipts, but there were many offices, and Windsor was one, where the receipts were not a fair criterion of the amount of work done. As the inside Civil Service were receiving additions, he thought the outside service should also receive consideration.

Mr. WOOD hoped the Finance Minister would bring down a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for some additions to the salaries of the outside service. He might mention that one officer in the Customs who had been over twenty years in the service, occupying a very responsible position as appraiser, and who was now receiving only $800 or $900 in the second largest port in Ontario, his predecessor had received $1,200.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said his friend from Inverness had made out a strong case from his point of view, but he could tell him that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had less to complain of than the other Provinces, as in those Provinces under the system in force before Confederation the post-masters received 80 per cent. of the collections, whereas in Ontario and Quebec they received only 40 per cent. He admitted that the pay was small, and he wished it was in his power to increase it; but to add $50 to each postmaster would make an additional charge on the revenue of no less than $225,000. In ninety cases out of a hundred he had half a dozen applications for every vacancy. A great difficulty had been found in the management of the offices in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick on account of the system of Way Offices, which he intended to convert into post offices as speedily as possible.

Mr. McDONNELL contended that the argument that the remuneration to postmasters could not be increased because the revenue from the Post Office Department would not permit of it, was not a sound one, because the rates of postage had been greatly reduced. Surely it would not be contended that if the postage on letters was reduced to one-half a cent, postmasters would receive only the same percentage.

Mr. BUNSTER said the postmasters in his Province complained of insufficient remuneration, and he instanced the case of Mr. HARVEY, postmaster at Nanaimo, who had resigned because he could not get an increase. The duties of postmasters in a new country like British Columbia were greater than in the older Provinces, because they received a great many more letters than they sent.

Mr. DECOSMOS called attention to the fact that although in the resolutions passed in 1873 the salaries of the Lieut. Governors were increased by $2,000, yet in the Act based upon these resolutions the amount of the salary of the LIEUT. GOVERNOR of British Columbia was, apparently by a clerical error, fixed at $9,000. It should have been $10,000, as his former salary was $8,000. He hoped this omission would be supplied, as the GOVERNOR was obliged to draw upon his private income, his salary not being sufficient.—Item passed.

Under the head of "Administration of Justice,"

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained with reference to the increase of $5,000 for Circuit Allowances in British Columbia, that the expenses of travelling were very heavy. Formerly the vote had not been sufficient, and the deficiency had to be made up out of unforeseen expenses.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the first vote was quite experimental. He would like to know if this vote would cover the whole expense.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps I should say it is hoped it will cover it. The hon. gentleman will understand that in a country like British Columbia these expenses varied very much from year to year according to the amount of work to be done.—Item carried.

The items under the head of Police, votes 23 and 24, were passed.

The items under the head of Penitentiaries, votes 25 to 31, were passed.

On vote 27, Penitentiary, Halifax, N.S.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER hoped there was no truth in the rumor that the increased salary for the warden was given with the object of displacing that officer and appointing another gentleman in his place.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he had not heard of any such intention on the part of the Government.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said he had heard the rumor, but that was all he knew about it.

On the item of $37,000 for maintenance of prisoners in Manitoba, British Columbia and P. E. Island.

Mr. BUNSTER called attention to an act passed last year to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians. He thought the Indians should be allowed to go to a bar and have a glass of comparatively pure liquor, rather than drink the foul stuff they obtained from the United States, in fact, they had become so disgusted with that article that they had resolved to distil liquor for themselves. He hoped the Minister of Inland Revenue would give favorable consideration to the Indians of British Colnmbia.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM said he could not allow the remarks of the hon. member to pass unchallenged. The Liquor Law relating to British Columbia, which was passed last session, was doing good work. He was glad to see that those who had been engaged in selling liquor to the Indians had been caught and punished. No greater boon could be conferred on British Columbia than that law. He hoped the day would never come when the Indians of British Columbia could purchase liquors and become intoxicated, for the lives of the whites would then never be safe. To supply Indians with intoxicating liquors was not the way to elevate them in the scale of morality, or teach them the principles of the Christian religion.

The Committee rose and reported.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, February 19th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

PRINTING COMMITTEE'S REPORTS.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) moved the adoption of the second and third reports of the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing. He explained that the second report referred merely to the usual report of the sub-committee on the accounts of the clerk, and the third report to the rules which a sub-committee had laid down for the reporting and printing of the Parliamentary debates.—Carried.

REPORTER FOR PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. YOUNG moved that the sub-committee appointed to consider certain irregularities connected with the Intercolonial Railway be authorized to employ a short-hand reporter to take down evidence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD suggested that the motion be modified so as to give authority to the Public Accounts Committee to employ a short-hand reporter, as the House was not supposed to know anything about sub-committees. In fact it was a question whether a Committee of the House had power to appoint sub-committees, though as a matter of convenience they might do so,

Mr. YOUNG said he had no objection to the modification, and at the suggestion of the Premier, the motion was changed to read as follows:—"That the Select Committee on Public Accounts be authorized to employ a short-hand reporter to take down such evidence as they may find requisite."—Motion carried.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read a first time:—

Mr. BABY—to incorporate the Pictou Coal and Iron Company.

Mr. CURRIER—To incorporate the Lower Ottawa Boom Company.

Mr. BOWELL—To incorporate the Intelligencer Printing and Publishing Company.

Mr. BABY—To incorporate the Industrial Life Insurance Company.

Mr. FRECHETTE—To incorporate La Banque St. Jean Baptiste.

THE INSOLVENCY LAW.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER introduced a Bill respecting insolvency. He said it was, with some modifications in certain clauses, the same as the measure introduced last year by Mr. DORION. The House would recollect that the principal features in that Bill were the abolition of voluntary assignment, the appointment of assignees by the Government, large modifications in the powers of assignees and inspectors and numerous provisions respecting the exercise of these powers. The judicial functions of assignees were altogether taken away and there was a provision relating to the sale of real estate, especially in Lower Canada, with several provisions respecting the application of the Act to Corporations. These clauses were modified in the Bill now presented. The reasons for changing the clause respecting voluntary assignment were these: Small traders, after having exhausted their assets, frequently rushed into bankruptcy without consultation with their creditors. The consequence was that having gone in merely for the purpose of getting whitewashed the most fraudulent debtors could get a discharge. This was considered a sort of protection to dishonest traders. By doing away with this clause, it was believed that small traders, in such cases, would be obliged to consult more with their creditors than they now did. As this Bill required the consent of creditors holding claims to the amount of only $500, to put an estate into insolvency, any merchant desiring to go into bankruptcy could do so. In England, he believed, a merchant could not go into insolvency except after consultation with his creditors, who decided whether he should become an insolvent or not. He did not see any difficulty in adopting this clause, but if there should be any great objection to it, the Government would not insist upon it. As to the assignee, it had been thought proper to leave the power of nominating them, in the hands of the Government. He knew the Board of Trade attached a great deal of importance to the nomination of these officers. It must be remembered that these official assignees had the power of receiving assignments and writs in cases of attachment. Under this Bill, power was left to the creditors at their first meeting to appoint an assignee of their own as soon as they proved their claim. He believed there would be found a great advantage in the Government appointing these assignees. They would be responsible to the Government in case of malversation, and there would be greater control exercised over them than before. They would be bound to give security not only for the due performance of their duties but also security for the benefit of the creditors. The object of the Bill was to give the creditors greater control of the estate. The power of inspectors was therefore augmented very considerably. If the creditors did not appoint inspectors themselves, then the courts would. The duties of inspectors would be to advise the assignees as to the disposal of the estate. In all matters of importance nothing would be done without their advice. The assignee would lose the control he formerly had over the moneys arising from the sale of the estate. As soon as he had in his possession $100, it would be deposited in a bank not in his own name but in the name of the estate, and afterwards he would be bound to open an account with the bank and keep a pass-book, in which all deposits for the estate should be entered. After being deposited the money could only be withdrawn on a joint check signed by the assignee and inspector, so that the funds would be entirely beyond the control of the assignee. This regulation, it was hoped, would prevent such difficulties arising as the use of the moneys by the assignees themselves. Cases had occurred where the moneys of estates had been used, and the assignees were obliged to go into insolvency themselves or leave the country. The interest on the money so deposited would bear interest in favour of the creditors and the amount coming out of the funds deposited would be kept in the same way as the principal deposited. The judicial functions of the assignees had been done away with altogether. It had been found in practice that it was not the assignee who adjudicated claims according to his own knowledge of the law or his own judgment. It was generally some lawyer that he employed, who might be interested for some other creditors, or the assignee himself might be acting as the agent of some of the creditors and adjudicating claims in which he was interested. These powers were taken away from the assignee, and it was provided that any difficulties arising should be settled in a summary way by the judge who should give twenty-four hours' notice that he would adjudicate upon such contestation. In case parties were not satisfied with his decision, they might either go into Appeal or Review according to the law of the Province in which the case occurred, if the amount was sufficiently large. One subject upon which several important provisions had been established, was the sale of real estate. Great injustice was suffered in Lower Canada in consequence of the mortgage system which was different from the system prevailing in the other Provinces. In the Province of Quebec the sale of a mortgaged estate by a sheriff or by an assignee had the effect of clearing off the mortgage altogether, It was not so in the other Provinces in which the property was sold subject to mortgage. It often happened in Quebec that a property mortgaged to very nearly its value happened to pass into the hands of a merchant going into insolvency, in which case all the costs were paid by the mortgage creditors, while, in fact, their claims should have the preference. It was proposed to remedy this inconvenience. As to corporations, the difference between this Bill and the Bill introduced last session, was that no writ of attachment would be obtained from a judge or court without a notice having been given for forty-eight hours to the officers of the company. It would be at the discretion of the Judge or Prothonotary to order the Official Assignee to inspect the books of the company and examine their affairs. Provision would be made to oblige the company to give such information as might be required. In case of refusal the court was empowered to punish the company's managers for contempt of court. If, upon examination, it should appear that the company was not in a hopeless state of insolvency, but only temporarily embarrassed, then it would be in the power of the Judge to order the Official Assignee to give superintendence over the management of affairs. The officers of the company, after such order, would be considered as trustees for the creditors. This state of things might continue for six months. If after that time the business of the company were not in a more prosperous condition, the Judge might order the winding up of the business. If on the contrary it should appear there was a hope that the company might recover from their embarrassments, it would be in the power of the Judge to give another delay of six months. A company might have, according to circumstances, a delay of twelve months. This was a favourable position to place companies in because, under the existing law, they could be put regularly into insolvency, and their properties might be attached without any delay whatsoever. The provisions of this Act, it was believed, would protect companies from being forced into insolvency through the anxiety of creditors for a settlement. He had availed himself of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kingston, and printed on a separate sheet the difference that existed between the present law, and the Bill before the House. In the preparation of the measure he had given close attention to the suggestions of every Board of Trade. In fact, with a very few exceptions they had been introduced into this Bill. Those which he had not adopted were not in harmony with the principle of the Bill.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER inquired if the Bill would be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, as was done last year.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said it would be referred to a Select Committee as was done in 1871. The Bill would be distributed and sent largely to persons interested.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked the hon. gentleman to indicate about the time when the Bill would go before the Committee so that parties interested might have an opportunity to be present.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER—About the end of next week, I suppose.

The Bill read a first time.

GAS INSPECTION.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION introduced a Bill to amend the Gas Inspection Act of 1873. He said that some difficulty had been found in applying the Act passed some few years ago. The most important alteration proposed to be effected by the new Act was this :—The law provided that in the immediate vicinity of the gas works an office should be placed in which the gas was tested. In England the law said that such office should not be placed within one thousand yards of the works. It was proposed in the Bill that the office should be established at a distance of not less than five hundred yards.

The Bill was read a first time.

MARINE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, in moving the second reading of "An Act to regulate the construction and maintenance of the Marine Electric Telegraphs," said he had to give some explanations to the House to account for the Government taking possession of the Bill which was passed last Session through the hands of a private member. The correspondence that had been laid before the House would show that the Government felt impelled to take direct interest in the obtaining of the sanction of HER MAJESTY'S Government to the Bill of that Session. It was reserved, not because the Government had any doubt as to the perfect right of Parliament to pass the Act, or as to the perfect equity of the proceeding, or that any right, legal or equitable, would be injured under it, but simply because strong representations had been made to the Parliament of Canada and to HER MAJESTY'S Government in England, concerning the supposed rights of certain parties connected with the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. And in order that there should be no possible reason for complaining that the rights of parties living out of the Dominion of Canada had been sacrificed or injured by that legislation, it was left to HER MAJESTY'S Government to decide whether it was a subject upon which we had a right to legislate, and whether that legislation was of such a character as should receive the sanction of HER MAJESTY'S Government. He would state the facts as succinctly as possible, and then he intended to send the Bill to the Railway Committee, and give every one who desired an opportunity of appearing in order to represent their own views. HER MAJESTY'S Government, in the despatch that was before the House, concluded as follows:—"While, therefore, I entirely appreciate the action of your Ministers in reserving the Bill, I am of opinion that any further consideration of the subject should be given by that body whose province, as I have observed, is to deal with such questions, and that I cannot properly assume the function of deciding between the conflicting views of those who have addressed me, whether in favor of, or against the policy embodied in this measure. In order to enable this to be done, I have decided to leave the present Bill in abeyance, and to tender no advice to HER MAJESTY respecting it." The Government took the ground, as would be observed by the Minutes in Council, that there was no reason for disallowing this Bill. HER MAJESTY'S Government had assented to that proposition, but deemed it proper, instead of giving the formal assent, to leave it to this Parliament to act afresh, after tendering the advice that they had perfect confidence in leaving the matter to be dealt with by the Canadian Parliament. The object of the Bill was to terminate a monopoly practically enjoyed in the Province of Nova Scotia, and consequently in the Dominion, and prevent the establishment of any monopoly in cable telegraphing; and it became all the more necessary to do this as the Island of Newfoundland had practically established a monopoly which extended to the whole Dominion, and he might say to the whole of America, the Island being used as a telegraph cable station in the middle of the Atlantic. The policy that this measure embodied was one that was entirely consistent with the policy of the British Empire and with the policy of Canada, and was in accordance with all the legislation that had taken place in the United States, for the United States refused to cede any special privilege to the French Telegraph Company, which sought to obtain a special concession for a length of time in bringing that cable to their shores. The Act under which the company enjoyed their monopoly in Newfoundland was passed by the Legislature of Newfoundland in 1854, and they had by its terms a fifty years' concession, but it was provided in the Act that the Island Government might at any time after the expiration of twenty years exercise a right of pre-emption. It was generally supposed, he observed in the papers, and in some of the speeches of gentlemen who had discussed this matter, that this monopoly embraced the cable between England and Newfoundland. That was an entire mistake. The Newfoundland Company simply had a monopoly upon the Island, and in the cable, so far as they could give it, stretching from the Island to Cape Breton, and from Newfoundland to the Island of Prince Edward. The cable from Newfoundland to Prince Edward Island was never laid, and it was a question whether they enjoyed any rights at all in reference to that at the present moment as the Company transferred their supposed rights without the sanction of the Prince Edward Island Legislature before the Confederation of that Island with the Dominion,—without the sanction of the Dominion Legislature since the Union—without the sanction of either party who were capable of giving that sanction. But in order that there could be no possible difficulty on that score he had provided in the Bill this year that whatever rights they might possess—that was the Company to whom the transfer was made—of a legal character, in Prince Edward Island, would be reserved to them. In 1856 the Government of the United States passed an Act which had for its object the promotion of cable telegraph communication, and which contemplated the granting of a monopoly to some Company in order to attain that object. It was known to those who were conversant with the matter that HER MAJESTY'S Government at the time, disallowed this Act. The reason was given in a despatch dated 18th January, 1858, in which Mr. LABOUCHERE, the then Colonial Secretary, states, "This Act purports to give the "New York, Newfoundland and London "Telegraph Company (subject to their "performance of certain conditions, and "to the conclusion of the agreement "specified in Section 6) the exclusive "right to furnish the Province "with the means of telegraphic "communication for a period of 25 years. "I wish to refer you to the despatch "addressed to you by Sir GEORGE GREY, "when holding the seals of this depart-"ment, on this subject, under date of the "22nd March, 1855." He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had searched for this despatch, but had failed to find it. "HER MAJESTY'S "Government sees no reason to modify the "views expressed in that despatch and its "enclosures, which have, on the contrary, "gained additional force by later experi-"ence. They consider that the grant for "such exclusive privileges is highly "inexpedient, not only for the interests of "the Province, but of the Empire in "general. They are fully aware that it "was urged that similar privileges have "been conceded by the Legislatures of "Newfoundland and of Prince Edward "Island without the disallowance of the "Crown. But they must reply that the "implied sanction of these acts, given "without fully adverting to considerations, "the magnitude of which has been ever "since acquiring a greater development, "does not bind them to a continuance in "a course of policy, which, they are "satisfied, cannot but prove extremely "injurious, and thus beyond the limits of "the colony immediately concerned." Such was the view of HER MAJESTY'S Government at that time, and he had no reason to doubt that such was the view entertained by them still. At the present time the position of the matter was this: In May or June, 1873, the Newfoundland Company which possessed the limited monopoly that he had adverted to,—that is, merely the privileges of the land of the Island and the cables to Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island—effected an amalgamation with the English Company, formed, he believed, under the English Joint Stock Act which owned the cable between the Island and Ireland. This amalgamation was effected under powers given by the Act of the Colonial Legislature under the name of the Anglo-American Cable Company. That was the company that now presumed to assert the right of monopoly upon the Island, and also to land their cable on Nova Scotia. To be sure they did not assert that they had any legal right to land their cable on the shores of the Dominion. They merely asserted that having possessed the right for twenty years their privilege of exercising that right should not now be interfered with by any legislation of the Dominion. That ground, of course, the Government did not admit, and besides the stock of the company was chiefly held, and the greater portion of the value of the property was owned by those who never did possess even the limited monopoly that he had referred to, and had only acquired the rights they now possessed by the amalgamation effected nearly two years ago. In the controversy that had arisen and in the allegations made last year chiefly before the Senate Committee, but also to some extent before the Committee of this House, it was assumed that about seven millions sterling, the capital that this company possessed, was the amount of property that this Bill affected; but we now know from the opinion of the highest legal authorities in England that it only affected the property that was comprised within the terms of the Act of 1854, meaning the shore privileges and the minor cables across the straits. They had the opinions of Sir RICHARD BAGGALLAY and Sir HENRY JAMES to this effect; and they had even more than that in the recent despatch of Lord CARNARVON to the Governor of Newfoundland of the 17th November, 1874. In that despatch he stated:—

"But having regard to the conflicting legal opinions to which you refer in your despatch, I have thought it desirable, in the interests of your Government, to consult the Law Officers of the Crown as to the subject-matter comprised within the power to purchase conferred upon the Newfoundland Government by section 15 of the Act above referred to; that is to say, whether that Government could claim to buy out the whole interest of the Company for the actual appraised value of the telegraph lines, wires, cables, apparatus, vessels and all other appliances connected therewith; or whether any further claim could be made by the Company for compensation for the loss of the monopoly which would be terminated by such purchase, or for any other right or interest conveyed by the Act, and further as to the course which it might be advisable that the Government of Newfoundland should take with a view to determine its power to purchase.

"I am accordingly advised that the expressions, 'other property' and 'all other property connected therewith,' used in the 15th section of the Act of 1854, were intended to comprise merely property of the same nature as the property mentioned in the parts of the section immediately preceding those expressions, and therefore that upon payment of the amount awarded as the value of the telegraph lines, wires, &c., under the provisions of the above mentioned section, the undertaking of the Telegraph Company will become vested in Her Majesty, and that the Telegraph Company will not be able to insist upon the arbitrators or umpire awarding an amount of compensation for the good will of the concern, or the loss of the monopoly."

This clearly established the fact that in the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown in England past and present, the entire amount that the Government of Newfoundland, if they gave notice as they might do to terminate the monopoly, would be responsible for was that which was provided for in the Act of 1854, and that they had nothing whatever to do with the value of the cable across the Atlantic. That was a matter entirely apart from the Act of 1854, as it was never constructed by this company. That being the state of the case at present, the Dominion Government conceived that the proper time had arrived to pass an Act which would regulate for the future the operations of any cable company intending to do business in the Dominion, and the present Bill accordingly provided for such regulations. He might say that since the House met he had received intelligence from Newfoundland that the Government had actually given the cable company notice of their intention to purchase, as they might do at any time before May, of this year. There was a substantial reason why this notice should be given at the present time. On the amalgamation of the Companies in May or June, 1873, the Anglo-American Company distribute stock according to the agreement entered into by the shareholders of the Amalgamated Company, but there was the sum of £135,000 sterling in round numbers reserved, which would only be distributed in the event of the Newfoundland Government not assuming the lines under the Act on or before the 1st day of May, 1875, so that the Island Government had a direct interest in terminating the monopoly by pre-emption at the present time; and the parties chiefly interested—CYRUS FIELD principally, who conducted, he believed, the opposition to this Bill in this quarter—had a direct interest in desiring the prolongation of their monopoly because this £135,000 would not be distributed if the Island took the matter in hand as he understood they had done. He would be prepared to give any further explanations that might be desired regarding the measure. The Bill now presented to the House was exactly similar to the one of last Session with the exception of the proviso to the 15th section, and the sub-section of section 16 and section 17. Section 17 simply provided that any acquired rights that this Company might possess on Prince Edward Island should be reserved, and the other two sections were simply intended to make the Bill more complete by providing for certain circumstances that might possibly arise.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON asked what would be the position supposing no right of pre-emption was exercised, but an absolute stop was put to the monopoly.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not exactly understand my hon. friend. Does he mean our position, or the position of the Company?

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—My hon. friend says the opinion of the law officers is that only certain matters can be estimated in damages. Other parties have given opinions that something very different can be estimated in damages. But what I want to understand is supposing, instead of the right of pre-emption being exercised that the whole thing was put at an end, so that the cable was useless is the damage merely to be estimated as the hon. gentleman has stated, or has he any view on that subject?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had a very decided view on the subject, and that was that they had nothing to do with the question of damages. That did not concern them. What concerned them was; were they doing any damage to any parties who had any right to anything at their hands. Did the company possess any privileges legal or equitable within the Dominion of Canada that the Government were bound to consider. He did not think they did. But in any case, supposing that some party was bound to pay some compensation, the compensation could only extend to rights acquired under the act of 1854. That he took it to be quite clear so far as a layman was capable of forming an opinion upon the subject. Of course he gave his own opinion with great deference, and in a matter of this sort it might not be worth much, but the opinion of the English law officers of the Crown was worth a great deal, as was also the opinion of the hon. gentleman opposite, a distinguished lawyer in this country; but in a matter of this sort he was bound, so far as legal opinions had any weight, to be guided by the opinions of the law officers of the Crown. But he did not for a moment admit that this was a matter that concerned us further than that it was desirable to present a fair view of the whole subject to the House in introducing this Bill. This company claimed that because they were allowed practically to enjoy a monopoly for twenty years they should be permitted to enjoy it for the future. That was a claim that, of course, the Government could not admit; it was based on neither legal nor equitable grounds. The company practically received notice from the Colonial Ministry in 1857 that nothing in the direction of a monopoly could be permitted by the Imperial Parliament, even if the Provincial Legislature was disposed to sanction it.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON approved of the proposal to send the Bill to the Railway Committee, where all the parties interested could be heard. The leader of the Government had very fairly laid the whole matter before the House from his point of view, and aside from that statement, any discussion, until the Bill came before the Railway Committee, would be premature. When it came before the Committee, other considerations than these submitted by the Premier might be brought forward, which might lead to other conclusions than those arrived at by the hon. gentleman. He would not now take up the various clauses of the Bill, but in view of the importance to this country of not being suddenly deprived of telegraphic communication with the other side, he thought it would have to be considered how far it would be advisable to adopt the concluding terms of the 14th clause.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that while it was convenient to have a Bill of this sort considered in Committee, it should be discussed in the House in the first place. Either it was right in principle or it was wrong. If any members thought it was wrong in principle, now was the time to oppose it, and show wherein it was wrong. If it was wrong in principle it should not go to the Railway Committee at all. It was only when it was admitted that a Bill was one which should pass in some shape that it should go to a Committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said it was impossible for them to enter into the discussion of the Bill until they had the despatch the hon. gentleman referred to in their hands, and therefore if the hon. gentleman wished the Bill fully discussed before it went to the Railway Committee, the second reading would have to be adjourned.

Bill read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Railways and Telegraphs.

CRIMINAL LAW IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved the second reading of the Bill to repeal certain provisions of an Act of the Legislature of Nova Scotia. He explained that these provisions were overlooked at the time the criminal law was re-enacted in this Parliament, and now the Nova Scotia Legislature had no power to repeal them. They gave power to a Justice of the Peace to try persons charged with larcenies not exceeding $100 and offences committed by juveniles except capital offences. The repeal of these provisions would leave the general criminal law to apply in these cases.

Bill read a second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole, reported without amendments, read a third time and passed.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved the second reading of the Bill to prevent enlistment in the service of any foreign State in certain cases not provided for by the Foreign Enlistment Act of 1870. He said he had nothing to add to the explanations he had made in introducing the Bill. It was simply to make the law the same all over the Dominion.

The motion was carried, and the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill, Mr. GOUDGE in the chair.

The Bill was agreed to clause by clause without amendment and reported.

The report was agreed to.

SUPPLY.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT the House then went into Committee of Supply.

Mr. SCATCHERD in the chair.

The item of $49,768, salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate, was passed.

On the item $106,540, salaries and contingencies of House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained the $8,000 for the Hansard, which appeared for the first time, and $7,500 for expenses of Committees.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON desired to call the attention of the Committee to the claims of an old and valued officer of the House who died, he might almost say, in harness, and who left his family comparatively unprovided for, he referred to the late Mr. ALFRED TODD, so long Chief Clerk of the Private Bills' Committee. It was perfectly unnecessary to say a word as to his ability and assiduity as an officer of the House. He was an officer of this branch of the Legislature since 1841, before the union of the old Provinces of Canada, and retained the same position at Confederation. At the time of his death he had been in the service of the Legislature of his country for a period aprroximating 40 years, during the whole of which time he (Mr. HOLTON) believed, he was never known to have failed in his duty, but year by year had been improving in the manner of its performance. He had studied, thoroughly the whole subject of Parliamentary law; he was in all respects a valuable officer, and an exemplary man; and he (Mr. HOLTON) was grieved to say that having been taken away suddenly, he left his family badly provided for, owing to circumstance which, it was unnecessary to pain the Committee by repeating. It had been a very common practice since he (Mr. HOLTON) had been in Parliament to vote gratuities of moderate amounts to families of officers who had died under similar circumstances. What he desired to do was to elicit the sense of the House as to the propriety of pursuing a similar course in this case, in order that the Finance Minister might know whether he would feel justified in placing an item in the estimates for this purposes. He was sure all he had said with reference to Mr. TODD would be borne out by gentlemen on both sides of the House who knew the value of his services.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON had the greatest pleasure in endorsing all that had been said of Mr. TODD, and he hoped the Finance Minister would see his way to placing a sum in the estimates for the purpose suggested.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the matter would be taken under consideration.

Mr. THOMPSON (Welland) also spoke of Mr. TODD'S valuable services, and urged the Government to grant the aid suggested.—The item was carried.

On the item, $35,860, for salaries and contingencies per Sergeant-at-Arms' estimate, Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said there was an increase of $2,290 over last year's vote. A large part of it was taken up in contingencies for payments to tradesmen and others. There were three additional messengers and one page required.

Hon. Mr. ANGLIN explained that the three messengers referred to had been employed for some three or four years past, though this was the first reference made to them in the estimates. There had been a slight increase in salaries according to law, but no special increase of any kind except for the employment of an additional page. The $1,000 for contingences was found to be necessary, and he thought it was fairer and better to take a sufficient amount than to ask for a sum which the experience of the past had shown would be insufficient.—The item was carried.

On the $7,000, grant to Parliamentary Library,

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked when the Library Building would be completed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said every possible expedition had been used, but the amount of labor to be done was very great indeed. No doubt, though, it would be ready for occupation before next winter. It was now nearly completed so far as the masonry was concerned, and steps had been taken to provide fittings such as shelves and galleries.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD suggested that as soon as the building was finished, the library should be enlarged. Until the books were classified, which could not be done until the new building was ready, they could only keep up with the current literature of the day.—The item was carried.

On the item of $12,500 for printing, binding and distributing the laws,

Mr. YOUNG (Waterloo) asked what mode had been taken to distribute the statutes to the public who might wish to buy copies. He had frequently found persons looking for them, who were unable to get them. If the issue was short, steps could be taken to supply the demand.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he believed the course pursued was this:—Any bookseller might order copies from the printer, but unless they did give an order at the time the statutes were in type, it was impossible to furnish copies. All that the House provided for was the distribution of the Statutes.

Mr. YOUNG said that must lead to a very considerable amount of inconvenience, because, if the booksellers failed to give their orders in time, there might be a dearth in the supply. He thought the Government should print a small number extra, so that the public could get copies. Nobody would go into the publication of them as a private speculation.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said they could not. The QUEEN'S PRINTER alone could print them.

Mr. YOUNG said that made it all the more necessary to have a larger number printed.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said no representations had been made up to the present time to the Government that there was any scarcity in the number of copies. It was a very easy matter to publish a larger number if necessary.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD agreed with the hon. member for South Waterloo. Professional men occasionally had a good deal of difficulty in getting copies of the Statutes. Originally large numbers were published and distributed gratuitously. The English system was now pursued, which was to order enough for Parliament, leaving the publishers to supply the public. He suggested to the Printing Committee that the Statutes should be stereotyped so that extra copies could be struck off from time to time as they might be required. At present if the edition should be exhausted there was no means of getting more.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) said there was a great scarcity of copies of the Statutes in Halifax, and something should be done to supply the demand. Professional men were obliged to lend the copies they possessed to each other.

Mr. MILLS said if the QUEEN'S PRINTER could keep a number of copies on hand and the public were notified that they could be procured there at a certain price, it would meet the difficulty. The QUEEN'S PRINTER could make a report to the Government of the number sold.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he understood the printer was making such an announcement; still, there should be a reserve fund of the Statutes on hand.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was always a reserve fund preserved and rooms had been fitted up in the basement of the library building for the storage of such books. But if it became known that the Government had ordered a large number to be printed for sale, pressure would be brought to bear on them to distribute them gratis. He believed the edition should be limited, but all publishers should be at liberty to order as many extra as they required. The suggestion to stereotype the statutes was an excellent idea. At present it was extremely difficult to get copies of certain statutes and journals that were necessary in the history of the country. That difficulty would increase, and he thought it was a good suggestion to have them stereotyped in future. He called the attention of the Printing Committee to the ugliness of our statutes and public journals when compared with those of other colonies. The printing and binding were entirely too shabby for public documents, and he thought a few thousand dollars could not be better expended than in making an improvement in this respect, especially in copies sent to foreign libraries. —The item was carried.

Items 37 to 39 inclusive were carried without discussion.

On the item $4,100 for salaries and contingent expenses of statistical office, Halifax,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER complained of the terms in which the First Minister had referred to the Statistical Department in Nova Scotia. It certainly compared favourably with that of Ontario, though not so comprehensive in its character. He also complained that during the recess of Parliament the Government had abused the powers given them under the Superannuation Act in superannuating a most faithful and efficient officer, and filling his place with a clerk in the office far inferior to him physically and intellectually, at the same time increasing the salary attached to the office. The result was that the Province was deprived of the services of a gentleman of marked ability who had discharged his duties in a most efficient manner and was able to discharge them now as well as ever, while they had increased the charges over and above the amount necessary for the work.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was not aware of what the hon. gentleman complained of in his (Mr. MACKENZIE'S) remarks. He had said nothing about the efficiency or inefficiency of the department. His remark was that it was a partial and comparatively useless expenditure, and that the Government were only justified in retaining it by the hope that something better and more complete would be brought into operation. With regard to the superannuation of Mr. COSTLEY, he had been superanuated at his own request. His successor, Mr. MCMILLAN, so far as he (Mr. MACKENZIE) could learn from gentlemen in Nova Scotia, was well qualified for the position.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the Premier's statement was true and untrue. The fact was, after the change of Government, Mr. COSTLEY was treated with such gross insolence by one of his clerks, the party now appointed to succeed him, that in a moment of irritation he sent in his resignation, but he soon after recalled it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said this was also true and untrue. It was quite true that Mr. COSTLEY recalled his resignation, but in the interval parties were asking as to the fitness of the first clerk in the office for promotion to the position, and it was left in abeyance for a month or two, felt unwilling to act upon the resignation after Mr. COSTLEY had withdrawn it, and to promote the next officer. However, the transaction was a very legitimate and proper one, and he had no reason to doubt that the duties of the office were discharged quite as well now as ever they had been before.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) said Mr. COSTLEY was a friend of the member for Cumberland, but unfortunately for a time he was physically incapable of performing his duty. Rev. Mr. MCMILLAN, his assistant, was a Presbyterian clergyman who was unable through a throat affection to discharge the duties of a minister. So far from being unfit to attend to the business of the office, he had managed it for Mr. COSTLEY while that gentleman was writing for the press, with which he was connected. At the change of Government Mr. COSTLEY not only sent in his resignation, but it was announced through the press that he did so in consequence of failing health. It was natural that Mr. MCMILLAN, who had been a long time in the office, and in charge of all the business connected with it while Mr. COSTLEY was attending to census affairs two years ago, should succeed him. He (Mr. JONES) had reason to believe, from his knowledge of Mr. MCMILLAN, that the business of the office would be well and efficiently managed. The hon. member for Cumberland would hardly have spoken in such terms of Mr. MCMILLAN if he had known that gentleman as he (Mr. JONES) did.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he made his statement on the authority of Mr. COSTLEY, who was a gentleman bearing the very highest character. Mr. COSTLEY's connection with the press terminated years ago, and though he at one time had an attack of sickness he recovered from it, and was at the time he was superannuated in good health and well qualified to discharge the duties of the office.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said it was the encouragement given to Mr. MCMILLAN which induced Mr. COSTLEY to resign.

Mr. JONES said that any intercourse he had with either Mr. MCMILLAN or Mr. COSTLEY was in the ordinary way. He was not aware that Mr. MCMILLAN ever treated Mr. COSTLEY with disrespect, and he also happened to know that that point had nothing to do with Mr. COSTLEY's resignation.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said that if the hon. member would state to the House that he did not have communication with Mr. MCMILLAN, and did not lead him to suppose that by Mr. COSTLEY's resignation his interest would be promoted, he (Mr. TUPPER) would cheerfully withdraw all he had said.

Mr. JONES said he did not feel bound to make the member for Cumberland his father confessor, but he would make this statement. Mr. MCMILLAN was an officer in that Department for a long time, and enjoyed a very small salary while discharging the whole duties of the office. During the election canvass of 1872, Mr. MCMILLAN was called on by two gentlemen, one of whom was intimately connected with the family of the hon. member for Cumberland, and he was asked if he would vote for Dr. ALMON and Mr. TOBIN. Mr. MCMILLAN said he would not, stating that he took no part in politics. He was asked his name, which was given; then he was told that if he did not vote for those candidates, his name would be forwarded to Ottawa, and he would never receive an increase in salary so long as the hon. gentlemen opposite remained in power.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he was not answerable for statements which may have been made by other persons; but whatever statements were made to Mr. MCMILLAN, he continued, to discharge the duties of his position, and received the same emoluments after such alleged interview.

Mr. POWER said he understood Mr. COSTLEY resigned on account of change of Government.—The item passed.

Items 42, 43 and 44, under the same head, were passed.

On item 45, of $40,000, to meet the probable expenditure required in connection with the Philadelphia Exhibition,

Mr. WOOD asked for explanation.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD thought the Committee and the country would like to learn what was the programme in respect to the expenditure of money, and other particulars.

Hon, Mr. MACKENZIE said the Philadelphia Exhibition would open in 1876. The United States Government invited all other Governments to send the productions of their nations. The British Government accepted the invitation, and requested a certain space to be allotted them; and when the Canadian Government received that intimation, they thought it proper to apply for a certain space. The negotiations concerning the representation of Canada at that exhibition were still incomplete. Several Commissioners had been named who gave their services in order to organize a plan whereby Canadian manufactured goods could be forwarded very much in the the same way as those were forwarded to England for the Exhibition of 1851 and also to the Paris Exhibition. The freight upon those goods was paid at the time, and some means would be adopted by this commisssion, either by having a Provincial Exhibition in the first place or by making some arrangements with the exhibitors at the Provincial Exhibition to have certain goods reserved which would be forwarded to Philadelphia. The amount placed in the estimates was only problematical. No reliable estimate had been formed of the necessary expenditure ; it might be much less or it might exceed the sum put down in the estimates. That sum was merely asked as a necessary preliminary to undertaking any exhibition of Canadian goods, and the Government considered that it was in the public interest that Canadian manufactured goods should be placed on exhibition at Philadelphia, and that as great a variety of objects as possible should be sent to show what our people could do in the way of manufactures. Some distinguished gentlemen had been asked to give their services as Commissioners, and they had been in the city occasionally and had held several meetings in order to organize a plan whereby this desirable object might be effectually accomplished.

Mr. DECOSMOS asked whether it was intended that specimens of the natural resources of the different Provinces should be forwarded to the exhibition.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that although no plan was yet prepared, that would inevitably form part of it.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER understood the Hon. Premier to have said that it was not intended to appoint paid commissioners. No doubt the services of gentlemen as commissioners could be obtained gratuitously, who would devote a certain amount of time to the subject; but he did not believe that Canada would make that display which it was able to make, unless some gentleman should be charged with the responsibility of acting as commissioner and be adequately remunerated for his services.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there must of course be a secretary and some other paid officers, who should act under the commissioners, but he did not think it was desirable that they should obtain the services of distinguished gentlemen in the country and pay them salaries for acting as commissioners. Their officers would of course be paid. He did not approve at the time of the action of the late Government in sending nine leading mechanics to the Vienna Exhibition, and paying them as commissioners. He then thought it would prove a failure, and certainly no benefit had been derived from their appointment ; but by adopting another plan, and by simply appointing some official who would have charge of the department on behalf of the country, and by having the general plan carried out under the direction of commissioners, appointed in the way he had indicated, we would accomplish the object desired, at comparatively small expense. The arrangements were, however, in an unfinished condition, and he was therefore not able to say what the Government might find it necessary to do, but the Government did intend to make a creditable exhibition of Canadian goods at Philadelphia. — The item passed.

Vote 46 under the head of Immigration and Quarantine passed.

On item 47 under this head, being $100,000 for Menonite loan, $70,000 for transporting Menonites and $190,000 toward assisting immigration and meeting immigration expenses,

Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked for explanations in regard to the Menonite loan.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that the use of the money would be allowed during two or three years without interest, and after that it would be repaid by installments running over ten years. The Menonites resident in Waterloo county were for the most part a wealthy class, and bore the highest reputation for strict honesty and integrity in meeting their pecuniary engagements. The Government had, therefore, determined to take a bond from a number of Menonites living in Waterloo county and North York, for the repayment of the loan of $100,000, and he believed the sum would be repaid to the last farthing. Menonites of far less means in the North-West had repaid most creditably money advanced to them. Payment of debt was a doctrine in the Menonite faith, and a very excellent doctrine it appeared to be.

Mr. MASSON said he had seen the Menonites in the North-West and knew them to be an orderly and quiet people, who brought a certain amount of wealth to the country. But he desired to ask the Government if they had considered whether it would not have been for the benefit of this county to have extended the advantages which were given to the Menonites, to bodies of French Canadians or Canadians who had emigrated to the United States, and who were endeavouring to find means to enable them to return to their native land, and some of them were desirous of settling in Manitoba. When in Manitoba he had seen French Canadians come there and look round to see whether they could not have a township or two townships in which to settle. Efforts were made among French Canadians who had settled in the United States to transplant themselves in colonies to Manitoba; societies had been formed among themselves for that purpose, some of which had gone so far as to offer bonuses to persons who would be foremost in going into that country and founding a colony. He asked the Government whether it would not be just as advantageous to have French Canadians now settled in the United States as immigrants to Manitoba as Menonites, and whether it would not be advisable to extend to those people who might desire to emigrate in bodies and establish colonies the same advantages offered to the Menonites.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he could quite understand the desire expressed by the hon. member for Terrebonne, and it was a creditable one, to get back all our people who have gone from Canada to the United States, but he would see that very serious difficulties stood in the way of his proposals being carried out. The Government had considered carefully, and were still considering whether anything could be done in that direction. It was evident, however, that if we aided French Canadians settled in the New England states —for it was there that the French Canadians chiefly were—to go to Manitoba, and did not similarly aid those in the Province of Quebec or other Provinces, it would be easy for them to step over the line, and obtain the aid which they received because they were resident in the States. The chief object that had hitherto been kept in view by the Government in respect to immigration was to make the different countries of Europe the great field from which to draw our immigrants. If the Government once adopted the system indicated by the hon. member for Terrebonne it would lead to serious difficulty, because there could be no good reason why we should aid people on one side of what was practically an imaginary line separating our territory from a foreign country, and not aid those who were on the other side. The Government were, however, still considering this matter, and had taken some steps to ascertain as nearly as may be through semi-official agents at Boston and other places the number of Canadians that might reasonably be expected to take advantage of any offer in that direction.

Mr. MASSON thought his remarks must have been misunderstood. French Canadians would not go from the Eastern states of the Republic to Manitoba in order to come back to Canada.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that it would be easy for residents in Quebec, who desired to go to Manitoba to step over the line into the New England States, and there they would become eligible to receive assistance.

Mr. MASSON asked if he was correctly informed that there were bodies of French-Canadians in the United States who had applied to the Government to assist them in obtaining one or two townships in Manitoba in which to settle. He wished to know what steps had been taken by the Government in regard thereto.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he only knew of two cases. One was a party of Canadians which undertook to settle a township near St. Vincent, on the East side of the Red River, on certain conditions, and he understood these conditions had not been fulfilled. Only a very partial settlement had been made, and the colony would not accomplish what it had engaged to do. There is another colony, led by Mr. RALSTON, which was also a comparative failure, and the conditions will not be carried out by the body emigrating. He was not aware at present of any other society or body of settlers there, but he would make enquiries and inform the hon. gentleman on another day. He had himself recently seen a Nova Scotia gentleman who published a very able paper called the American Canadian in Boston, and had obtained a large amount of information from that gentleman in regard to Nova Scotians, New Brunswickers, and French Canadians resident in Boston. Everything that could fairly be done by the Government to secure the return of Canadians would be done,

Mr. TROW said that, having visited Manitoba, he could bear testimony to the industrious habits of the Menonites. He was satisfied that Mr. RALSTON'S colony was a failure, because instead of there being two hundred and fifty or three hundred persons as was represented, there were only seven families when he saw that gentleman. The other colony referred to by the hon. Premier was also a failure. The Menonite colony was, however, a stern reality. It comprised thirteen hundred people, who had arrived there last summer, and who possessed considerable means. It was the nucleus of a very large settlement, and they were a class of people who were satisfied with the country. Many immigrants complained of the scarcity of wood and water, but though five of the eight Menonite townships were without timber, yet they were satisfied and industrious and determined to encourage their friends in Southern Russia to meet them there next season.

Mr. MASSON desired to suggest to the hon. Premier a method of surmounting the difficulty raised as to granting aid to French Canadians at present settled in the United States who desired to emigrate to Manitoba. The French Canadian population in the United States was largely in groups, and no difficulty would be experienced by the Department in making arrangements, so that no person who had not resided in the United States a certain number of years would come within the arrangement.

Hon. Mr. POPE said that with respect to the question of aiding Canadians or British subjects who had settled in the United States he had endeavored to ascertain how many were desirous of returning to Canada. When in charge of the Immigration Department he had offered all fair and proper inducement to those people to return to Canada, but up to this time not many had returned. He fully concurred in the proposed loan of $100,000 to the Menonites, because he was perfectly satisfied that the money would be returned, and the immigrants were of as good a class as could be obtained.—The item passed.

——:++:——

AFTER RECESS.

The House went again into Committee of Supply.

On the consideration of item $100,000, Menonite Loan,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT assured the House that the country would see that the money was not for any other purpose than that for which it was voted. His hon. friend from North Waterloo and North York would be able to inform the House as to the standing of the persons who had become responsible for the amount. He understood that the Menonites objected to giving a mortgage upon their farms.

Mr. BOWMAN said these people had no objection to giving mortgages to the persons who proposed to make themselves liable for the repayment of this loan. They were worth from $5,000 to $75,000 each, and he learned from the leading gentleman amongst them that it was their intention that no one should make himself liable for over one-tenth of the value of his property, so that if it became necessary for them to pay it out of their pockets they could do so. Gentlemen on the other side of the House appear to examine this matter in a very critical spirit, but the men who made themselves responsible for the payment of this loan, he was glad to be able to assure them, were thoroughly reliable. It was a part of their creed that every man ought to pay his dues and the obligations he undertook. He was perfectly satisfied that these men would carry out their obligations to the letter and the Government would be quite safe in leaving the superintendence of the Loan to themselves.

Mr. CHARLTON said if the Government succeeded in securing four or five thousand of these emigrants on a well recognized principle of political economy as applying to this new country that would increase the capital of the country by four or five million dollars, and would thus have in the emigrants themselves a repayment of the loan. He would be glad to see the Government go a little further, and expend small sums upon opening up railways in the back countries, as well as assisting emigrants of other classes in the same way as they proposed to assist the Menonites. He looked upon the policy as a wise one.

Mr. DYMOND said he thought the simple fact that the gentlemen who became responsible for the repayment of this loan were Menonites should be sufficient to satisfy every one. Their simple promise was as binding upon them as would be their mortgage or an oath. In addition to the guarantee given by their co-religionists in Waterloo and York, these people were bound together in Manitoba by peculiar religious ties, and we had not simply the pledge of individuals, but what amounted to the pledge of the whole community, that they would be responsible for the loan ; indeed there was no doubt they would be sucessful in their enterprise. With regard to extending this system of loans as had been contended for by his hon. friend from North Norfolk, he was afraid that were it to apply generally there would be no end to this system of investment, although the Menonites might repay their debts better than the majority of persons. After all, the Menonite was of no more value as an emigrant than any other man, and he would respectfully protest against the idea of an unlimited system of loans. So long as his hon. friend, the First Minister, was at the head of affairs he was not afraid of the results, but a time might come when the affairs of the nation would unfortunately pass into other hands, and the fact that the Government had small creditors all over the Dominion would not be very satisfactory. It would afford the means of undermining the virtue of the deople and might probably offer very serious temptations to the virtue of the Government.—The item was then passed.

Items 48 and 49,—$1,352 and $5,826 respectively, for pensions, were passed without discussion.

On item 50,—$50,000 to meet the probable amount required for pensions to veterans of the war of 1812,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK asked for some explanations. He desired to know whether those who had served for a shorter period, were to be placed upon the same footing as those who had served for a long period, and whether all regiments would get a grant, or whether those known as the Glengarry regiment, which, he believed, had been pensioned by the Chelsea Hospital authorities, were also to have a share. He also desired to know whether the widows of the veterans of 1812 would receive any consideration.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he feared they could give nothing to the widows. The intention of the Government was to give to all men in actual service, numbering, he believed, probably about five or six hundred—of course they could not tell the exact number, as some applications had come in which would doubtless not be fortified by the records. Those receiving aid must be at least seventy-six or seventy-eight years of age, because the great number of those who took any part in that war must now be about or over 80. The pensions would be as nearly as possible approaching in amount to those given to the pensioners of the regular army at home.

Mr. BROUSE said the Government were to be congratulated upon the amount of money already in these estimates, and it was upon this one. When this question was brought before the House it was in consideration of the royal warrant issued from Chelsea Hospital to the effect that it was understood that certain soldiers of HER MAJESTY'S army who had taken part in the wars of 1815 were in indigent circumstances, and that it was proposed to give them pensions. He regretted that the British Government had ignored an application of the Canadian veterans. The first case in respect to which an application was sent to England was favorably considered and the pension was granted, and three or four others had been granted. Since then they had refused a general application. The sum proposed to be voted would, to a certain extent, meet the wants of very many of these veterans, and when it was known that we had 500 or 600 men upon this portion of the continent who had approached the old age of 70 it would, perhaps, tend to dispel the illusion of certain journals which refer to the climate of Canada as one scarcely fit to live in. About 100 of these old veterans live along the side of the St. Lawrence, and were prepared to do service for their country again, notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. member for South Ontario. He congratulated the Government on having asked for this vote.

Hon. Mr. POPE also added his congratulations, but thought the Government had stopped a little short. He did not see why the widows of these veterans should not also have some share of this money. It was an injustice which he hoped the Government would consider.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said he was afraid it would be impossible to carry out the suggestion of his hon. friend. If they assisted the widows, the question would arise whether they should not also assis.

the fatherless children. It would be difficult to discriminate in regard to the time of service, but he thought they would have to adopt the policy of giving those who came in at the the eleventh hour the same as those who were engaged for the whole time.

In reply to Mr. FLESHER,

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was intended that the vote should be taken yearly.—Item passed.

On item 51—$8,000, compensation to pensioners in lieu of land,

Mr. HAGAR asked explanations. He said there were pensioners in his county who had been promised a grant of $100, but it had never been given to them. He desired to know what the policy of the Government was in respect to them.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the Government could not investigate any claims against the Imperial Government, excepting those which had already been recognized.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK called attention to the item of $2,133 asked as a pension to the Hon. L. A. WILMOT of New Brunswick. He believed that Mr. WILMOT had resigned his position, and now, after five years it was proposed that he should be put on the pension list. He thought there should be a special Act to cover this case.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he thought the case was covered by the Act of last session, but promised full explanations at a future stage.—Item passed.

Items 52, 53 and 54, under the head of Militia, were adopted.

On item 54, Military College, including two Ordinary Schools under District Staff, $40,000,

Mr. MASSON asked how far the School was in progress, and suggested whether it would not be advisable to employ officers belonging to the country instead of importing them from abroad.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was necessary to obtain an officer of high military rank. An offer had been made to an officer of that kind, selected by the Commander in Chief, at the instance of the Colonial Secretary, but he had declined it. Negotiations were afterwards entered into, but they had not yet succeeded in getting the proper person. It was not the intention of the Government to make any subordinate appointments until the commandant was appointed, whose advice would be taken. They had already the names of several distinguished military men in various parts of the Dominion, who probably would receive appointments. —Item passed. Also, the next item, ammunition, $40,000.

On the item, clothing, $75,000,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the increase this year of $50,000 over last year arose from the fact that last year the vote was very much cut down. There had been a good many complaints of the need of more clothing for the men.—Item passed.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained with reference to the next item, Military Stores, $60,000, that it was found necessary to make the increase of $35,000, thus bringing the item up to its former standard, because it had been found that the reduction last year was too great.

Mr. HAGGART asked if the clothing was manufactured in Canada cheaper than it could be obtained in England.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said he was not in a position to state, but even if it cost a little more it would be better to have it manufactured here.

Mr. WOOD highly approved of the course pursued by the Government in encouraging home industry in this matter.

Mr. MASSON also approved of it, but he thought the Government should have ascertained in the first place what was the difference in the price between cloth manufactured here, and imported.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said they had done so before the present Minister of Militia joined the Cabinet. The cloth here was a little dearer than it could have been procured in England, but it was better, and would wear longer, and the Government therefore considered it was practically as cheap.—Item passed.

On next item, No. 59, Public Armouries and Care of Arms, $52,000,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK asked if the Government proposed any change in the system of keeping arms. He was very much afraid that a considerable number of the valuable arms distributed some two years ago were not now in so good a state as they might be.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said that matter had engaged the attention of the department. The Major General had reported in favour of an additional sum being given to certain care-takers who had charge of the arms.

He quite agreed with his hon. friend that sufficient care had not been taken of the arms, and he hoped better care would be taken of them in future.—Item passed.

On item 60, Drill Pay, &c., $375,000,

Mr. FLESHER asked what was the intention of the Government with reference to drill this year.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said they had not yet decided whether they would have camp drill or merely drill at the headquarters of each regiment. He himself questioned whether it was wise to have camp training every year.

Mr. DYMOND suggested that if the militia were called out for camp drill, some time of year be fixed that would be most convenient, and at the same time most comfortable for the men. In one instance they were called out in October, although they might just as well have been called out in June, which was a much superior season. If the system of camp drill was to be continued, he would suggest the propriety of having it only every other year, and then instead of twelve days let sixteen or eighteen days be taken. At present the time was too short for the men to become familiar with their duties.—Item passed, as was also item 61 contingencies $63,000. On item 62, Targets (revote) $19,500,

Mr. FLESHER called attention to the necessity of nine targets for the rural districts. He commanded a company for several years, and they had never been supplied with a target.—Item passed, also item 63.

On item 64, care and maintenance of properties transferred from the Ordnance and Imperial Government, $10,000.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said some Imperial officers had made complaints which appeared to be justifiable of the condition of some of these properties, and it was necessary that proper care should be taken of them. Of course, no more would be spent for this purpose than was absolutely necessary. Item passed.

On item 65, for Improved Fire-Arms (Snider Rifles and "Henry Martini" Rifles,) $40,000,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK asked whether these "Henry Martini" Rifles were to be kept in store or distributed to favored corps.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said it was proposed to purchase them at all events for the militia of the coming year. The Imperial Government had a quantity on hand which they offered to dispose of.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked if these arms were to be used by Rifle Associations as well as Volunteer Companies.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—That question has not yet been considered.—Item passed, also items 66 and 67.

On item 68, Pay and Maintenance of Dominion Force in Manitoba, $125,000,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said they had been able to reduce this item by $50,000, chiefly in consequence of the Mounted Police Force, and it was not impossible that owing to the success of that latter force they might be able to make still further reductions.

Mr. MASSON called attention to the fact that the report of the Minister of Militia was not yet before the House, and therefore they could not judge of the state of the Manitoba force. However, he was in that Province last fall, and he was somewhat startled on being reliably informed up there that that force had not performed any target practice since they went up, and had not even fired a blank cartridge. He would take this opportunity of saying that while the Mounted Police might do good service, he thought their services so far had been greatly exaggerated. He suggested the propriety of introducing something of the military system into that force, making it something like the gens d'armes of France, and then of doing away with the militia force entirely.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said his report had been in the printer's hands some days, and he hoped to lay it on the table of the House in a few days. The information which the hon. gentleman had given to the House was new to him; but if what he had stated was correct, he (Mr. VAIL) might congratulate the House and the country on the fact that it was not necessary for the force in Manitoba to fire even a blank cartridge. That force had been reduced by some 50 men, leaving about 200 there still.

Mr. HAGGART asked why one of the officers who had distinguished himself in the first expedition, and had been asked to command the troops in the second, had been discharged when the reduction was made.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the reduction was made on the recommendation of the Commanding Officer, having regard to the length of service.

Mr. MASSON said the fact that it had not been necessary to fire even a blank cartridge proved the peaceful character of the people, but it did not say much for the Administration of the Militia which thus neglected the training of the force.

Mr. TROW thought the member for Terrebonne must be mistaken with regard to the Manitoba force. He was in that Province some five weeks, and had had opportunities of seeing the force drill. He believed they were under the strictest discipline, and a more efficient officer than Col. SMITH could not be found. He approved of the reduction in the force, and did not see any necessity for any force there at all.

Mr. BUNSTER said this large expenditure for the Manitoba force was another evidence of the necessity of the Pacific Railway, as it would facilitate communication with that Province.—Item passed.

Under the head of Ocean and River Service, items 110 and 111 were passed without discussion.

On the item $12,000 for Steam Communication, Lake Superior,

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) asked whether any arrangement had been made by the Government to construct a canal on the Canadian shore to connect Lakes Huron and Superior.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT replied that nothing had been done except that surveys had been made.—The item passed.

Item 113 passed without discussion.

On item $12,500, Steam Communication on Lake Huron,

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, in reply to Mr. PLUMB, said there were two lines subsidized, one running from Collingwood and the other from Sarnia.

Mr. LANDERKIN complained that the steamers of the Collingwood line did not call at Owen Sound last summer on the way back.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said the reason was that Owen Sound was so out of the way that the steamers could not call there without lying over at Collingwood till Monday.

Mr. PLUMB said he had noticed that the mouth of French River was spoken of as an objective point in connection with the Pacific Railroad. He wished to know if this subsidy included an appropriation for a prospective mail service to that point.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said a small vessel would be employed to run to the mouth of French River, to carry mails and supplies in connection with the railroad survey.

Mr. LANDERKIN said in regard to the steamers not calling at Owen Sound on their return, that if any delay were caused by their touching at that town, the mails could be forwarded by the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railroad, so that no time need be lost.—The item passed.

Item 115 passed without discussion.

On the item $54,000 for Steam Service between San Francisco and Victoria,

Mr. BUNSTER suggested that a larger and faster steamer than the one at present used should be employed, and that it should call at Nanaimo.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said he had ordered tenders to be published calling for a steamship of no less than 1,000 tons, in order to ascertain whether the service could, at a reasonable rate, be made weekly, instead of semi-monthly. If it was to the advantage of the country that the steamers should go to Nanaimo, they could surely go there without instructions from the Government.

Mr. BUNSTER said the contract required the boat to stay two days at Victoria, and there was no time to call at Nanaimo. The trip to San Francisco, which now occupied four days, should be made in two.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) said there was now a project afoot to organize a steamship company to carry these mails. There was no question, faster boats should be employed, though the company carrying the mails had done their duty.—The item passed.

Mr. BROUSE expressed regret that the Government had discontinued the tug service on the St. Lawrence, between Kingston and Montreal. It would give dissatisfaction to a large number of vessel owners on the St. Lawrence, and he trusted the Government would see the necessity of continuing the service, which had been of great advantage to those residing along the river.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said this was a part of the Liberal policy. There was no reason why the Government should aid individual enterprise, There was just as much reason in subsidizing a tug line between Montreal and Quebec, or between Detroit and Sarnia, as a line between Kingston and Montreal. The principle was an unsound one, and the less the Government attempted to bolster up anything of this kind, and the more they left it to free competition, the surer was the commercial prosperity of the country to be advanced. He believed, and all Englishmen believed, in individual effort; and all attempts to regulate the prices of articles by Government advancing money was a great mistake. They had no more right to maintain this line than to grant a subsidy to bakers to regulate the price of bread, or to cotton mills to regulate the price of cotton fabrics. He had an interview last summer with a large number of forwarders in Kingston on this subject, and gave notice that the tug service would be discontinued on the 1st of August. They entirely agreed with him, but believed it should be continued for the season, leaving it open to competition in future. The hon. member for South Grenville was entirely mistaken if he thought the forwarding trade wanted the service continued.

Mr. YOUNG complimented the Government on having pursued the policy they advocated when in opposition.—Item 117 passed.

On the item $5,500 to provide for the examination of masters and mates,

Mr. PLUMB wished to know why there was a reduction in this item. He hoped the Government did not intend to impair the efficiency of this service.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the efficiency of the service would be maintained. The examinations would be continued as before, but by a new arrangement a saving of $1,500 was effected.—The item passed.

On the item $4,000 for the purchase of Life-Boats, Life-Preservers and Rewards for Saving Life.

Mr. PLUMB asked why there was a reduction of $2,000 in this item.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he found a very general desire that life boats should be provided at more places than hitherto, and the supplementary estimates would contain a larger appropriation for this service.

Mr. FARROW asked if it was the intention of the Government to place life-boats on the coast of Lake Huron. It was a very dangerous coast, and many valuable lives had been lost on it. He heartily coincided with the views of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the appropriation should be increased.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said it was the intention of the Government to provide life-boats at all places on our coasts where they thought they would be of service in saving life.—The item passed.

Item 120—$2,500, to provide for investigation into wrecks and casualities and collection of information relating to disasters to shipping, was passed without discussion.

On item 121—$6,000, expenses in connection with Canadian Register and classification of shipping,

Mr. KILLAM inquired what the policy of the Government was on this subject.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he was not prepared to say exactly what the policy of the Government was, but his own policy was in favour of the classification. There had been some feeling on on the subject for a time, which prevented the Government taking any steps to put the law into operation. He thought, however, that bye and bye the feeling would be in favor of it, and he was also of opinion that more than likely the Government would bye and bye put the Act into operation.

Mr. KILLAM said he agreed with his hon. friend on this question.

Items, 122, $1,600 for Secretaries of Pilot Commissioners at Halifax, and St. John; 123, $1,000 for coasting packet service, Prince Edward Island; 124, $14,090, Montreal Water Police; 125, $28,200, River Police, Quebec, were passed without discussion.

On item 126, $142,024, salaries and allowances of light-house keepers,

Mr. HORTON complained of the reduction of the amount for the light-house at Goderich, and thought it was unfair that the light-house keeper at Chantry Island should be paid $400 a year while the officer at Goderich, which was a larger and more important station, was paid only $300.—Item passed.

Item 127, $270,643, maintenance and repairs was passed without discussion.

On item 128, $120,000, construction of new light-houses,

Mr. HAGGART asked if there was ever going to be an end to this expenditure. Surely by this time there were light-houses enough all round the coast of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mr. SMITH said that the expenditure would come to an end some time, but it would be at some distance in the future. if his hon. friend only saw the applications in the Department of Marine and Fisheries for light-houses he would be surprised. If they were all constructed, they would cost three times the amount in his appropriation.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) desired to know what had been done regarding the applications made for light-houses at the Chats Rapids.

Mr. SMITH said he would be glad to see his hon. friend in regard to where he would like the light-houses in question to be placed.

Mr. BUNSTER commended the liberal policy of the Government, and said that British Columbia wanted several light-houses, but were very delicate about the subject in consideration of the Government building the railway.—Item passed.

On item 129, salaries and disbursements, of fishery overseers and wardens, $45,400.

Mr. BERTRAM complained that the Fishery Officers in Ontario were inadequately remunerated. He knew of one place where the officer was paid only $100, and it would not be surprising if, under such circumstances, the duties were poorly performed.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) said there was no fishery officer in his locality but he agreed that the salaries generally paid were too small.

Mr. YOUNG did not know how it was over the country generally, but in his section he thought the fishery officers got more than they were worth. Their duties were miserably performed, and it was with the greatest difficulty that they could be got to move at all, even after people called their attention to irregularities.

Mr. PATERSON was willing to admit that there were grounds of complaint, but they should be made against the proper quarter. The blame rested not so much with the officers as with the Government, who refused to strengthen their hands in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. PLUMB enquired where the fish were to be found in the district of the hon. member for South Waterloo.

Mr. YOUNG said there was some valuable fish in the Grand River. He repeated his complaint that the fishery regulations were poorly enforced. He did not desire to make complaint against any particular officer, but he merely stated, in general terms, that so far as his experience went they were sufficiently, and indeed more than sufficiently paid for their services.

Mr. OLIVER said the subject had been brought before the Government several times and irregularities pointed out, but so far they had failed to put a stop to them. As a matter of fact, so far as the river Thames was concerned, the law had been enforced with sufficient rigour above the city of London, but between that point and the lake, people were allowed to use the river with the same freedom as if no restrictions were imposed. He took this opportunity of pressing upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the desirability of having the law carried out on that portion of the river as vigorously as above the city of London. He also complained that on the Grand River, branches of which ran through his county, people were deprived of the pleasure and profit of fishing in order to conciliate a few.

Hon. Mr. SMITH inquired whether the complaint was that that river was obstructed by saw-dust or what was the complaint.

Mr. OLIVER said there were complaints that fishing with nets, which was prohibited by law, was permitted. He was assured that the fishery officers of the Thames had not been below London upon the river for several years.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) asked whether it was the intention of the Government to apply any portion of this vote for the protection of fish in Gatineau and Ottawa rivers. Raids were made into Canada by pot-hunters from the United States, against whom there was little or no protection.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the amount appropriated for Ontario was only for the payment of the officers he had seen, whose names his hon. friend would find in the Public Accounts. If his hon. friend would inform him of any place where a warden or guardian would be of advantage he would be very glad to appoint one. He might add that he was largely in the hands of the representatives from the different parts of the Dominion as to where the officers were required, and when representations were made and he was satisfied the money would be well spent, he would not fail to make an appointment. He admitted that there was some ground for the complaint that the salaries were too small. So far as the remarks of his hon. friend from South Oxford were concerned, he had only to say that he was surprised that the hon. gentleman had not laid the information before the Department before this time.

Mr. ROCHESTER expressed his pleasure that there was a probability of an officer being appointed for the Ottawa and Gatineau.

Mr. PATERSON said it was necessary there should be a fish warden on Grand River. That officer could only proceed a certain length in his action unless he received the direct sanction of the Government. His hands must be strengthened, and when he reported that mill-owners would not put down fish-ways, and cease fouling streams by emptying saw-dust therein, he should be supported, and then there would be no cause of complaint.

Mr. PLUMB insisted that the fish in the rivers running into Lake Erie were not worth protecting.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he would consider the matter.

The item passed.

In regard to the maintenance of a Government schooner employed in protecting the Gulf fisheries, for which no vote is asked this year,

Mr. CIMON asked what vessel was intended to replace La Canadienne.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he had very considerable doubt as to whether it was desirable to repair the vessel so as to fit it for that service, and it would probably be used as a light ship. It was in the contemplation of the Government to provide a steamer to protect the Gulf fisheries, and a vessel would shortly be purchased.

Items 132 to 136 inclusive, under the head of geological survey and observatories, were passed without discussion.

Hon. Mr. SMITH in reply to Mr. FORBES, said that the omission of a vote for Halifax Observatory was due to the fact that other arrangements had been made.

On item $37,000 for grant for meterological observatories including instruments and cost of telegraphing weather warnings,

Hon. Mr. SMITH in reply to Mr. OLIVER, said that no change was proposed in the distribution of that appropriation.

On item $5,000 additional for geological survey,

Mr. BUNSTER said that British Columbia had been neglected on this important service, for one officer was not adequate to perform the duties over such a vast extent of country. Instead of one there should be three or four.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said British Columbia had received its due share of attention and one of the most efficient officers had been assigned to it. The item, however, was mainly intended to increase the salaries of some of the employees who were underpaid.

The item passed.

Items 139 and 140 for Marine Hospitals passed without discussion.

On item $500 for St. Catherines Hospital,

Mr. NORRIS hoped the Government would increase the grant in the supplementary estimates.

Hon. Mr. SMITH promised to consider the matter. He thought it would be expedient if a tax were imposed on vessels in the inland waters of the Dominion for the maintenance of sick and distressed seamen as was done on the seaboard. If that proposal meet the approbation of the House and the views of hon. members representing the shipping interests, he would have no objection to introduce a measure having that object during the present session.—The item passed.

Mr. ROCHESTER suggested that the lumbermen engaged on the river Ottawa be included in the provisions of the promised bill.

Item passed as were also items 143 to 146 inclusive. On item 147, to re-imburse Board of Trade, London, for expenses incurred in connection with shipwrecked and distressed seamen of the Dominion, $6,000, in answer to Mr. YOUNG,

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the Board of Trade at London, took care of shipwrecked and distressed seamen of the Dominion landing in England, and sent them to their homes, and by arrangement they were to be reimbursed for their outlay in this matter.

Mr. LANDERKIN called attention to the need of some asylum for idiots. In Ontario there were 3,000 of this unfortunate class and there was only asylum accommodation for about 30.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That is a matter that belongs wholly to the Local Legislatures. I quite admit the importance of the subject, but it is wholly beyond our jurisdiction.—Item passed.

On item 148, steamboat inspection, $14,200,

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the Government did not wish to make any money out of this inspection, and therefore they only imposed such fees as were necessary to meet the expenses of inspection. They had recently been able to reduce the fees from ten cents to seven cents. — Item passed.

The Committee then rose, reported progress, and asked leave to sit again.

The House adjourned at 10.20.

——:++:——

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, February 22nd, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

Mr. SPEAKER laid on the table a list of stockholders in the Union Bank of Lower Canada, the Ontario Bank, and the Bank of St. Jean.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—To consolidate and amend the acts relating to the Provincial Insurance Company of Canada.

Mr. WRIGHT (Ottawa)—To confirm the articles of agreement and consolidation between the European and North American Railroad Company, for extension from St. John westward to the European and North American Railway Company of Maine, and for other purposes set out in this Act.

Mr. YOUNG (Waterloo) moved that a message be sent to the Senate requesting their honours will give leave to the Hon. Mr. BELROSE, one of their members, to attend and give evidence before the Select Standing Committee of this House on Public Accounts.—Carried.

ENQUIRIES INTO PUBLIC MATTERS.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE introduced an Act touching the true construction of the Act respecting enquiries into public matters.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON asked for explanations. The title did not explain the object of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said if the title did not explain it the preamble would, It was as follows :—"Whereas it is the right and privilege of the House of Commons that the said House should itself institute and control enquiries into charges preferred in that House by members thereof against ministers of the Crown ; and that such charges should not be made the ground of enquiry by any other tribunal. And whereas it is not fitting that such right and privilege should be infringed, or that such charges should be made the ground of enquiry by the executive through commissioners nominated by the accused parties. And whereas such an enquiry was lately made under powers conferred by an Act respecting enquiries concerning public matters. And whereas thereby doubts have been thrown on the said right and privilege, and on the true construction of the said Act, it is expedient that such doubts should be removed." The Bill was to declare that the Act did not authorize the issue of a Royal Commission in such cases.

The Bill was read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a certificate and report relating to the North Wellington election, declaring said election void. The facts connected with the case were known to the House. Justice GWYNN had sent in a corrected certificate with a letter explaining his mistake in the first instance. Under the Act, however, he (the SPEAKER) had no power to withdraw the first writ and issue a new one. He therefore laid the case before the House.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said it was a mere technical error. In transferring to the Judges the power to try controverted elections, the House also gave the Speaker its jurisdiction in relation to the issuing of writs. Under the acts of 1873 and 1874 the Speaker was only vested with the right of issuing a warrant on receiving the judge's certificate. He had done so in this case, and was therefore defunctus officio, and had no power to issue another writ. The judgment was correct in this case, and the error was trifling. The judge was not bound to state in his certificate the statute under which he proceeded, and there would, therefore, be no difficulty in allowing the writ that had been issued to be executed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he agreed with the hon. Minister of Justice that the course suggested was the correct one.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SPEAKER — There is another matter affecting the House which I think I should call attention to at the earliest possible moment. A member of the House took his seat, and on one occasion voted without having subscribed the roll and taken the oath. I only discovered the fact on Friday evening, and I now lay the matter before the House, and will instruct the Clerk to strike the member's name from the Division List in which it occurs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said that with all due deference to Mr. SPEAKER he did not think the member's name could be struck off the list by the mere order of the SPEAKER. Although the Journals of the House were not read every day they were supposed to be, and if any one had any objections to make they were made on the opening of the House. In the absence of any objections the Journals were held to be correct, and could afterwards only be changed by vote of the House; and without the intervention of the House the hon. member must suffer the consequences of having unwittingly voted without taking the oath.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it would be better to let the matter stand over for a day till he could look into it, as he had only heard of it last night. He believed the hon. member for Wellington was under the impression that having been elected for this Parliament and taken the oath, and his election having been set aside and he re-elected therefore it was unnecessary to take the oath again. Of course, no one would object to taking such steps as might be necessary to relieve the hon. gentleman from the position he was in. He was of opinion that the SPEAKER could not of his own motion order a name to be struck off the Division List. If a name was entered by mistake the matter was brought up next day, and either by motion or general concurrency a correction has been made, but he was not aware of any case where a correction of that kind had been made by the simple order of the SPEAKER.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE observed that the nearest analogy to the present case was the case of a member voting and it being discovered subsequently that he was personally interested, and in such a case the House by motion struck off the name. The present case was if anything stronger, for the Constitutional Act prescribed that the taking of the oath should be a necessary pre-requisite of taking the seat, and, therefore, it was the bounden duty of the House to see that the name was erased. He apprehended that it would be the duty of the Premier to bring forward a motion to that effect, and that being done, if it turned out that any further loss was to be suffered by the hon. member, he supposed the House would agree to obviate it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think the matter had better stand over for to-day, as I have not had time to inquire into the circumstances.

Mr. ORTON wished to explain the circumstances under which he had taken the seat without taking the oath. When he came to Ottawa he inquired of some older members whether it was necessary that he should be re-introduced, and several members informed him that it was not necessary, and gave instances where members had been admitted to the House without being introduced, and, therefore, he considered it was not necessary.

LONDON AND CANADA BANK.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CAMERON (South Ontario), the Bill to amend the Act incorporating the London and Canada Bank was read a second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

IMPERIAL LOAN AND INVESTMENT COMPANY.

On motion of Mr. MOSS, the Bill to change the name of the Imperial Building, Savings and Investment Company to that of the Imperial Loan and Investment Company was read a second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

WEST INDIA MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. FORBES asked whether the Government has accepted any tender for the conveyance of mails between the British West Indies, foreign West Indies and British Guiana and the Dominion of Canada during the present year; if so, when will the service commence, will it be fortnightly or monthly; to whom was the contract awarded, and what is the amount of contract; also, what is the length of contract.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—Tenders are received but not accepted, and the matter is now engaging the attention of the Government.

CANADIANS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MASSON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to extend to Canadians who have emigrated to the United States and other immigrants the advantages which they propose to extend to Menonites.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—As I stated the other night when the estimates were before the House, the Government have the matter under consideration, and they will see what can be done.

STORM SIGNALS.

Mr. FORBES asked whether any provision has been made to render the storm signals throughout the Dominion, more reliable by an appropriation sufficiently large to accomplish the same; also, whether any arrangement has been entered into with Telegraph Companies to forward information to stations at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the Government were endeavoring to secure more reliable information, but not by an increase of the appropriation. They had made arrangements with the Telegraph Companies to obtain information at the earliest possible moment

AGENT GENERAL OF CANADA.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked who performed the duties of Agent General of Canada at the office in London, during the absence in this country of that officer, in September and October last.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—There were no duties to perform except those connected with emigration and those were discharged by the senior clerk.

ENROLMENT OF RESERVE MILITIA.

Mr. LITTLE asked whether it is the intention of the Government to cause an enrolment of the Reserve Militia to take place this year.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to do so.

NAVAL STATION AT ESQUIMAULT.

Mr. ROSCOE asked whether the Government have taken any steps to carry out No. 9 of the terms of Union with British Columbia, which is "the influence of the Dominion Government will be used to secure the continual maintenance of the Naval Station at Esquimault."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The question of continuing or discontinuing the Naval Station by the Imperial Government at Esquimault has never come before the Government in any way, but communication has been made in that interest from the point of view the hon. gentleman desires.

"HANSARD" REPORTS.

Mr. FARROW asked whether it is the intention of the Government to have printed and bound an extra number of copies of the Hansard Reports, so that members desirous of receiving copies may have the privilege of purchasing them at a reasonable price.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman will remember that this matter is entirely in the hands of the House, and unless the House makes an order on the subject the Government have nothing to do with it. Perhaps the Acting Chairman in this House of the Printing Committee will state if anything has taken place in committee on this matter?

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex)—The contractor for the printing is printing an edition of 500 over and above that required by it, and those extra copies can be purchased.

ONTARIO LAND GRANT IN AID OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE asked whether the Government had had any communication with the Ontario Government on the subject of a Land grant in aid of so much of the Canada Pacific Railway as passes through Ontario; and if so, whether the Government will lay before the House the result of such communication.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government did communicate with the Ontario Government in reference to a grant of land for that purpose, but so far there has been no result from that communication. As soon as there is it will be laid before the House.

LEPINE COMMUTATION.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE asked whether the Government intended to bring down any further papers touching the commutation of LEPINE'S sentence in answer to the Address of this House on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government intend to bring down everything that they have in this connection; and they propose to bring the account of the trial including the Judge's charge with the other papers so as to make one package. I hope they will be down in a day or two.

TRANSPORTATION OVER DAWSON ROUTE.

Mr. FARROW asked whether the Government had publicly advertised for tenders for carriage of travellers and baggage over the Dawson route. If so, when advertisements appeared, and upon what terms the Government proposed to award the contract.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The advertisements appeared, as nearly as I can recollect, in March, 1874, and the tenders were laid before the House. The lowest tender I think was accepted, and the contract was to continue in force from year to year.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. YOUNG moved for copies of any despatch or despatches received from the Imperial Government on the subject of the Naturalization of Aliens since the despatch of the Earl of KIMBERLEY of date the 3rd September, 1873. He said the despatch of the Earl of KIMBERLEY dated 3rd September, 1873, spoke of further communications being likely to be made by the Imperial Government to the different Governments of the colonies on this highly important subject. He desired before taking other action to ascertain whether any such despatches had been received, and, if so, he trusted they would be brought down.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was not quite certain whether any subsequent correspondence on the subject which the hon. member referred had been received. He thought not, but he would make inquiries and inform the hon. gentleman to-morrow.

Motion carried.

FREE DELIVERY IN MONTREAL.

Mr. OLIVER moved that an order of this House do issue for a statement of the yearly expenses connected with the free delivery of letters and papers in the City of Montreal. Motion carried.

EXAMINERS OF FISH INSPECTORS.

Mr. FORBES moved for a return of the number of Counties in Nova Scotia in which Examiners of Fish Inspectors have been appointed; the number of Inspectors appointed in each County; also, the quantities of fish or fish-oil inspected, with description of package, and by whom inspected, and amount of fees collected. He asked that the return might be brought down on as early a day as possible. Carried.

BOUNDARY LINE BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORY.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) moved the adoption of an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, praying that he will take the necessary steps to have the boundary line between British Columbia and the North-West Territory (especially towards the North-Eastern boundary of the former) defined without delay, in view of the anticipated extensive immigration to the recently discovered gold mines on the Arctic Watershed. He said he would state briefly the reasons which led him to submit the motion to the House. The miners who had settled in the Stikeen river country had ascended the river 160 miles, and crossed the high-land separating the waters which ran into the Pacific Ocean by the Stikeen from those which ultimately flow into the Arctic Ocean by the Mackenzie river. During three months, because the miners reached there late in the season, between one million and one million and a quarter of dollars worth of gold was taken out of the streams tributary to the Mackenzie. A number of miners had gone two hundred and fifty miles further up than any point hitherto discovered ; laid in a stock of provisions there, and were engaged in prosecuting mining operations in that section. In travelling through an unsettled country it was impossible for those men to know when they crossed the boundary line separating British Columbia from the North-West territory, and passed under different jurisdiction. The Chief Justice of British Columbia, on a trip made into that section last year, took observations from which he came to the conclusion that the mines then being worked were between 58° and 59° parallel of north latitude—the boundary line being at 60° —and when the miners proceeded between 250 and 300 miles further in a north-easterly direction, it was impossible for them to know when they might strike one of the boundaries of British Columbia, and therefore whether they were within the jurisdiction of British Columbia or the North-West territory. He believed there was no officer of the North-West Government in that section of country, and it was therefore highly important that either the boundaries be definitely settled, or powers be delegated to the British Columbia Government to exercise jurisdiction on the boundaries of the North West territory.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Dominion Government would have, in the first place, to take steps to ascertain, as far as possible, from existing documents, where this boundary should be located, and then they would determine what steps should be taken in connection with the Columbia Government to determine the boundary. Communications would, therefore, have to take place with the Columbia Government on the subject. He hoped the motion would not be pressed, because the matter would be dealt with by the Government as a matter of course, and it could only be dealt with, in the first place, by correspondence with the Local Government.

Mr. THOMPSON said that on the understanding that the matter would be brought before the Provincial Government by the Dominion Government, which he hoped would be done without delay, he would withdraw the motion.—Motion withdrawn.

VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. BABY moved that notwithstanding the adoption, during last Session, of the seventh report of the Joint Committee of the House on the Printing of Parliament, reducing to two the copies of the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons, now distributed to each member of this House, said number be increased to eight, the number distributed before the adoption of said Report. He explained that the motion was necessary in the interests of the French members of the House.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) said the Printing Committee considered it advisable last Session to reduce the number of copies of Votes and Proceedings distributed to each member from eight to two. It was felt by many members that the distribution of such a large number of those documents was not advantageous to them, but a source of constant annoyance. It might be, however, that inasmuch as so few public documents were printed in the French language, the request of the hon. member for Joliette might be considered a reasonable one. If the hon. gentleman chose to refer his motion to the Printing Committee, he (Mr. Ross) would call the attention of the Committee to it at their first meeting, and perhaps they would be able to meet the hon. member's wishes. He would, however, oppose any increase in the number of Votes and Proceedings in the English language beyond that agreed upon by the Committee last year.

Mr. MILLS enquired whether the motion did not involve an expenditure of money.

Mr. MASSON desired to know if the Government opposed the motion.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the motion went as a matter of course to the Printing Committee and it would be for them to report on it. It was a domestic matter, and the House could order, on the motion of a member, the printing of documents.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said that perhaps eight copies to each member was a larger number than was absolutely necessary, but to now give only two copies of the Votes and Proceedings to each member was too great a reduction. He thought the point of the hon. member for Bothwell was not well taken, for they were constantly ordering printing to be done for the use of the House.

The motion was referred to the Printing Committee.

THE SPRING HILL BRANCH RAILROAD.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an Address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for all correspondence between the Government or their Officers and the Spring Hill Mining Company, for all Orders in Council relating to the said Company, and any agreements that may have been made with the same. He explained that he would like to have all the communications between the Spring Hill Company or any of their officers and the Government, whether the present Government or their predecessors. The report of Mr. BRYDGES to the Government in relation to this matter would naturally lead to the inference in the minds of persons who did not understand the question, that the late Government had made an arrangement with the company which was not beneficial to the public interest. The first time that the question of connecting the Intercolonial Railway with local industries along the route was brought under the notice of the Government, was when the Acadian Iron Mining Company at Londonderry applied for such connection, showing that the establishment would be able to furnish a very large amount of traffic to the railroad. As this was likely to be a precedent for some time and was a matter of a good deal of importance, it was thoroughly examined by the late Minister of Public Works, and he believed there was a report in existence of the Intercolonial Railway Commissioners on the subject. The Government finally proposed to Mr. DEVESEY the Manager of the Acadian Iron Mining Company that the company should show its confidence in the substantial character of their works, and the necessity for the proposed branch, by grading and furnishing the sleepers for it at their own expense the Government agreeing to find the superstructure and lay the track, the fee simple of the road to be conveyed by the Government, and the line to be owned and worked by them in precisely the same way as the Intercolonial Railroad. The Government would charge the company who had thus contributed their money precisely the same rate upon the branch line as on the Intercolonial Railway. The late Minister of Public Works submitted this as the policy of the Government, to the House, and it was endorsed unanimously. Subsequently the Spring Hill Coal Company, in the County of Cumberland, applied to the Government for similar facilities. Although the policy of the Government on this question had been definitely settled, the Government thought proper to submit the application to the House. He had himself an interest in the enterprise, but parted with it at a considerable loss in order that he might be in a position to give the question impartial consideration. The company were able to show more substantial reasons for having this branch constructed than the Acadian Iron Company. The Government required coal for their road, and unless they connected with these mines by a branch of five miles, they would be obliged to carry coal a distance of something like one hundred miles from Pictou for that section of the line between St. John, N. B., and Truro. The company were, therefore, in a position to claim consideration at the hands of the Government that the Iron Company were not, because they could show it was eminently in the interests of the Government that the branch should be built. They were treated in precisely the same way as the other company. They were told if they would acquire the land, grade the line, and furnish the ties at their own expense, the Government would complete the line and take possession of it, charging the company the same rates for freight as other companies. This also was sanctioned by the Honse, he believed, unanimously. He was surprised, therefore, to observe in Mr. BRYDGES' report a statement conveying the impression that the late Government had made an arrangement which was disadvantageous to the public interest. He would not say anything as to that gentleman's motives for making such a statement, but merely mention the position of affairs. The present Government considered it wise to entirely change the policy which Parliament had on two occasions formally sanctioned in relation to local industries. This Government had not only made a present of the road to the company, but had bound them to furnish a new superstructure for the entire line, between four and five miles in length.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—New rails, you mean?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—New rails for the purpose of laying the entire line. In addition to this, they had largely reduced the rates of freight—he did not say improperly, because he believed it was in the interests of the country to develop these great mineral resources to the largest possible extent, and that every facility should be given to those engaged in developing such industries. They had reduced the charge established by the late Government for the conveyance of coal to the extent of something like 40 per cent. per ton between the junction of the branch with the main line and St. John.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Do you object to that?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Not at all. But he believed, when an important statement was made by an officer of the Government that the late Government had, for some reason best known to themselves, unduly favored the Spring Hill Mining Company, that it was right for him (Mr. TUPPER), in dealing with the question, to show precisely the position in which affairs stood. He believed he had a right to say that, instead of the Spring Hill Company being in the slightest degree indebted to the late Government, they certainly were to the present Ministry for the extremely generous manner in which they had been presented with five miles of railway, which the Government bound themselves to furnish with new rails to lay the entire track, and make besides a reduction in the freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway of 40 cents per ton to St. John.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE had no objection to submit the papers. He might remark, however, that the hon. gentleman seemed to have made his statement with a view to giving the impression that the present Government had unduly favored this company, though he did not find fault with them for doing so. The Government policy was that these short lines should be, if possible, managed by parties immediately or wholly interested, and that the Government should receive their cars at the junction and run them over the main line. He entirely differed from the hon. gentleman that the policy of the late Government was a proper one to pursue. They were bound to give every facility to the large companies along the line and carry freights for them at the lowest possible rates, especially where there was water competition. This was the case between the Spring Hill mines and St. John, and, unless the rates were reduced, they would lose the carrying of the coal. He did not see anything in Mr. BRYDGES' report to convey such an impression as that indicated by the hon. member for Cumberland. It was simply the intention to convey the impression that the arrangement made in the matter by him was one not in the interest of the country or the Government either, and that a change would be advisable. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) entirely approved of that change, and, whether right or wrong, it had been made with the general approval of both sides. He did not admit at all the doctrine that because a vote of money was passed for a specific purpose on this occasion that thereby the Government became pledged to the policy involved in it. So far from the House having unanimously adopted the policy of the late Government in this respect, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) for one objected to it very strongly at the time, and whether he divided the Committee or not he certainly stated his objection. If he yielded, it was simply because, like the hon. gentleman opposite at present, he could not help himself.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said his object was simply to show that the Government had taken a retrograde step. The Spring Hill Mining Company owned a very large and valuable coal area, it was true, but they did not own the entire coal field at Spring Hill. There was one Association which owned four square miles of coal, believed to be very valuable, and there were several other large coal properties independent of that held by the Spring Hill Mining Company. The fact of the change in the Government policy was that either all these companies must expend very large amounts of money in building parallel lines to that recently owned by Government but now presented to the Spring Hill Mining Company, or submit to whatever terms that Company might impose, since they had the monopoly of the branch. He mentioned this as one of the reasons why he thought it was not wise to change the policy of this House in relation to this local enterprise.

The motion was carried.

PROTECTION OF CARRIERS.

Mr. IRVING moved the second reading of the Bill for the more effectual protection of carriers by land, and for the regulation of traffic throughout the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE enquired what course his hon. friend proposed to take if the Bill were read a second time.

Mr. IRVING said he proposed to have it referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON (Cardwell) said it was a question how far the Civil Law in the different Provinces might be affected by this Bill, and he thought, considering the great amount of important business continually before the Committee on Railways and the Committee on Banking and Commerce, that neither of them would be able to do entire justice to this subject. Questions as to jurisdiction would necessarily spring up in connection with it, and the question of local jurisdiction he considered to be one of those requiring the most careful consideration and delicate handling.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that personally he had the strongest objection to some provisions of the Bill, and he thought it should go to a sub-committee, the members of which should be very carefully selected. There were some provisions in the Bill similar to those of other Acts passed in the Federal Parliament, and the principle had, to some extent, been acknowledged ; but it was also evident that it involved matters which might conflict with the jurisdiction of the Local Governments. The Government had given the Bill some consideration, and while there were propositions in it which might not be objected to, there were others of a very different kind.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON suggested the propriety of letting the matter stand in the meantime until the Government had arranged for SpecialCommittee to consider it.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said he thought a Sub-Committee of either the Committee on Railways or the Committee on Banking and Commerce, would be the proper body to which to refer it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said if the Bill were referred to any standing committee, it should be the Committee on Railways.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD agreed with the hon. member for South Bruce with regard to the propriety of submitting the matter to a Sub-Committee ; and also with the Premier that the Committee best fitted to deal with it was the Railway Committee.

Mr. WILKES said the Bill had been spoken of as if it largely or entirely affected railways, when the fact was that it should be considered as affecting commerce. Every clause of it was in the interest of railways and against trade. He was distinctly opposed to the legislation proposed, and hoped, if the Bill were referred to the Railway Committee, that it would be placed in the hands of a Sub-Committee qualified to deal with it.

The Bill was then read a second time and was referred to the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraphs.

RAILWAY RETURNS.

On the motion of Mr. IRVING, the Bill to extend and amend the law requiring Railway Companies to furnish returns of their capital, traffic and working expenditure, was read a second time, and referred to the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraphs.

PRECEDENCE TO GOVERNMENT MEASURES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that during the remainder of the Session Government measures shall have precedence on Thursday, on the Orders of the Day.—Carried.

POSTAL SERVICE AMENDMENT BILL.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD rose to move the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act for the regulation of the postal service. In doing so, he said that at the first reading he proposed that the explanations should be made in the second reading. The first clause merely extended the meaning of the term " Post Letters," which would signify, when used throughout the Act, any letters delivered through the post or deposited in any Post Office, drop letters included. The second clause was merely a verbal amendment of the ninth section of the Act and also a verbal amendment of the fourth sub-section of the tenth section. With regard to the sixth subsection of the tenth section he proposed the following addition:—

"Cause to be prepared and distributed postage and registration stamps necessary for the pre-payment of postages and registration charges under this Act; also stamped envelopes for the like purpose, and post cards and stamped post bands or wrappers for newspapers or other mailable articles not being post letters."

This is by regulation in the meantime, and he desired that it should have a place in the Act. He proposed to amend the fourteenth section by giving greater powers to the Deputy Inspectors, which would enable them, when necessary, to perform the duties which at present could only be performed by Inspectors. The duties of Inspectors were daily becoming heavier, and the result had been that some of the offices were not inspected for years. He therefore proposed to add to that section the following:—

"And it shall be the duty of such Post Office Inspectors and Assistant Post Office Inspectors, under such instructions as may from time to time be given to them by the Postmaster General, to superintend the performance of the mail service, taking care that, as far as the state of the roads and other circumstances will permit, the stipulations of all contracts for the conveyance of the mail are strictly complied with by the contractors. To instruct new Pastmasters in their duties; to keep the Postmasters to their duty in rendering their accounts and paying over their balances; to inspect every Post Office from time to time, to see that it is properly kept, and that the Postmasters and their assistants perfectly understand their instructions and perform their duty well in every particular; to inquire into complaints or suspected cases of misconduct or mismanagement in respect of such duty; and also into complaints of the miscarriage or loss of letters or other mail matter; and generally to do all and whatsoever they are from time to time instructed or required by the Postmaster General to do for the service of the Post Office Department."

It was his intention that every office within the limits of each division should henceforward be inspected every year, and that the condition of the books and accounts should be regularly reported upon. The sixth section was proposed as a subsection of the 18th, Section of the old act, and was as follows:—

"The Postmaster General, upon evidence satisfactory to him, that any person, firm, partnership or company, in Canada or elsewhere, is engaged in conducting any scheme or device for obtaining remittances through the Post Office by means of false or fraudulent pretences, representations of promises of any kind, may forbid the payment by any Postmaster to any such person, firm, partnership or company, of any Postal Money Order drawn in his or their favor, and may provide for the return of the sum named in any such order, to the remitter thereof, and may, upon such like evidence forbid the delivery to such person, firm, partnership or company, of any registered or other letter, which he belives to be addressed to or for him or them, through or by reason of any such fraudulent scheme or device, and may cause any such letter to be returned to the sender thereof, marked with the word "Fraud." as reason of non-delivery to its address."

During the last few years bogus companies had been using the Post Office in order to impose on the public, and the Department had received several communications directing attention to the operations of such bogus companies, and asking that letters sent by the parties so communicating might be stopped in the mail. The United States had passed in 1873 a still more stringent Act than the one now proposed, and it had resulted in driving these bogus companies into this country, where they carried on their fraudulent operations with impunity. It was impossible to put a stop to them unless some such power as that asked for was granted to the Department. This power was never likely to be abused because no Postmaster General could act upon it unless a case was specially brought under the notice of the Department. The 19th section amended so as to make it read as follows:

"On all letters transmitted by post for any distance within Canada, except in cases herein otherwise specially provided for, there shall be charged and paid one uniform rate of three cents per half ounce weight, any fraction of a half ounce being chargeable as a half ounce; and such postage rate of three cents shall be pre-paid by postage stamp or stamps at the time of posting the letter, otherwise such letter shall not be forwarded by post."

The result of the reduction in the rates on letters to the United States would involve in the meantime a direct loss to the revenue of $60,000, but he thought the accommodation to the public would more than compensate for the loss.

Hon. Mr. POPE asked what could be done in the case of a letter having a three-cent stamp but weighing over half an ounce.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD said in such a case it would be the duty of the Postmaster General to return the letter to the sender, and not send it to its destination. The 8th Section amended the 20th Section of the Act by inserting the words "per half ounce in weight" after the words

"one cent" in the third line of the said section. This was to provide that drop letters should be paid according to weight. Section 9 repealed Sections 22, 23, 24 and 25 of the old Act, as under the proposed provision requiring prepayment of newspapers, they were unnecessary, and substituted the following :—

"The rate of postage on newspapers and periodical publications, printed and published in Canada, and issued not less frequently than once a month from a known office of publication or news agency, and addressed and posted by and from the same to regular subscribers or news agents, shall be one cent for each pound weight, or any fraction of a pound weight, to be prepaid by postage stamps or otherwise, as the Postmaster General may from time to time direct; and such newspapers and periodicals shall be put into packages and delivered into the post office, and the postage rate thereon prepaid by the sender thereof, under such regulations as the Postmaster General may from time to time direct."

The proposed rate was one cent a pound. In order to show how small the tax really was he had selected a few newspapers and ascertained how many of them it took to make a pound, as follows :— London Advertiser, Ottawa Free Press, Ottawa Citizen, and Montreal Witness, each about 15 to the pound ; Walkerton Telescope, 12 ; Bruce Reporter, 13 ; Ingersoll Chronicle and Woodstock Times, each 10 ; Montreal Bien Public, 16 ; Toronto Daily Globe, 8 ; Daily Mail, Montreal Gazette and Herald, each 9 ; Halifax Citizen, 14 ; St. John Telegraph, 12 ; and Hamilton Times, 11. The way in which Postmasters would deal with newspapers sent from the office of publication would be to weigh all the papers brought to the office together, whether they were addressed to one or more offices, and charge one cent a pound for the whole. There would be no separate weighing of papers sent to different Post Offices. The Department expected to lose by this change $40,000, so that by this and the other changes there would be a loss to the revenue of $100,000, but he was satisfied that in a short time the increased matter that would be sent through the Post Office would make up this loss. At present a large number of newspapers were sent by express, but after our proposed reduction in the rates of postage it would cease to be an object to publishers to send their papers by express. He proposed also to insert the following section, which was now by regulations, and he wished it placed in the Statute :—

"Newspapers and periodicals weighing less than one ounce each may be posted singly at a postage rate of half a cent each, which must be in all cases prepaid by postage stamp affixed to each."

The twenty-sixth section of the old Act is amended to make it read as follows :—

"On all newspapers and periodicals posted in Canada, except in the cases hereinbefore expressly provided for, and on books, pamphlets, occasional publications, printed circulars, prices current, hand-bills, book and newspaper manuscripts, printers' proof sheets, whether corrected or not ; maps, prints, drawings, engravings, lithographs. photographs when not on glass or in cases containing glass, sheet music, whether printed or written ; documents wholly or partly printed or written, such as deeds, insurance policies, militia and school returns, or other documents of like nature ; packages of seeds, cuttings, bulbous roots, scions or grafts, patterns or samples of goods or merchandise, the rate of postage shall be one cent for each four ounces, or fraction of four ounces.

"Provided that no letter other communication intended to serve the purpose of a letter be sent or enclosed in any such newspaper or other package or thing mentioned in this or the next preceding section, and that the same be sent in covers open at the ends or sides, or otherwise so put up as to admit of inspection by the officers of the Post Office to ensure compliance with this provision, and the postage rate shall be prepaid by postage stamp or stamped post bands or wrappers, in all cases when any such articles as are mentioned in this section are posted in Canada."

Section 28 of the Act is amended by inserting after the word "prepared" the words "in cases where prepayment has not been made obligatory." This referred to mail matter coming in from foreign countries, over which we had no control. He hoped, however, that arrangements might be made before long by which foreign mail matter would be prepaid. The 29th section of the Act is amended by the following paragraph :—

"And when any letter or other mailable matter is posted in Canada without pre-payment, or insufficiently prepaid, in any case in which pre-payment is by this Act made obligatory, the Postmaster-General may detain the same, and return it, when practicable, to the sender."

Section 30 of the Act is amended by striking out all the words after the word "delivered" in the sixth line thereof, and inserting the following instead thereof, as part of the said Section :

"Bearing unpaid postage, as shall also the exact value in current coin as respects postage stamps, registration stamps, stamped envelopes or post cards, post bands or wrappers, purchased from any Postmaster, and the exact amount of postage payable to any letter carrier on any letter or mailable matter delivered by him."

The Department would issue post bands or wrappers, ready stamped, with a one cent stamp, which would be sold at the rate of four for five cents, barely enough to cover the cost of the paper and the stamp. Section 36 of the act is amended by striking out all the words after the word "city" in the seventh line of the said Section, and inserting the following instead thereof, as part of the said Section :—

"And such system of free delivery when established in any city shall be subject to such regulations as the Postmaster General shall from time to time see fit to make."

The third Sub-section of the thirty-eighth Section of the said Act is amended by striking out all the words after "Commons," in the third line, and inserting instead thereof the words "and books belonging to the Library of Parliament at Ottawa may be sent from the same to any member of either House, or from any such member addressed to the Librarian, during the recess of Parliament, and free of postage in either case."

At present only about one thousand dollars per annum was received from this source, and as it involved a great deal of trouble it was thought best to do away with it entirely.

The fifth sub-section of the said section was also amended by adding at the end thereof the words, "and members of the Legislature of any one of the Provinces of the Dominion may in like manner send by mail free of postage all papers printed by order of such Legislature. The seventh sub-section of the said section is amended by striking out all the words in the first and second lines thereof, and inserting in their place the words, "petitions and addresses to the Legislature of any of the Provinces of the Dominion."

The 40th section is amended

By substituting the words "three cents" for the words "five cents," in the seventh line thereof, and by inserting after the words "returning the same," in the eighth line thereof. the words "less, in the case of insufficiently pre-paid letters or other mailable matter posted in Canada, such amount of postage as may have been pre-paid on the same."

This was reducing the charge on letters returned to the sender from five to three cents. Section 41 of the act is repealed, as it would no longer be necessary to advertise dead letters, they being returned to the senders. Section 42 being a useless amendment. The forty-fourth Section of the Act is amended by striking out the words "at the expense of the said United States," when they occur in the said Section. This Section was in accordance with the Convention recently entered into with the United States, by which we agreed to carry their mail matter over the Great Western Railway from one part of the United States to the other, which would cost us $11,000. In return for this the Americans were to carry our mails through their territory to British Columbia, Manitoba and the Lower Provinces, which would cost us about $28,000, so that in this respect a very satisfactory arrangement had been made.

There was considerable difficulty felt in respect to the forty-ninth section of the old act, and in order to make the act clear he proposed to amend it by striking out the whole section, except the following provision :—

"No postmaster shall, under any pretence whatsoever, have or receive or retain for himself any greater or other allowance or emolument of any kind than the amount of his salary and allowance as fixed by law, or by the Postmaster General."

By the fiftieth section there were some verbal amendments. The fifty-first section was amended by striking out the words "one or more of the newspapers published in or nearest to the county or counties where the contract is to be performed," and inserting in their place the words "such newspaper or newspapers as the Postmaster General shall direct in each case, and by public notices put up in the principal post offices concerned in such contract." The sixty-eighth section was amended by striking the words "three dollars," out of the fourth line, and inserting in their place the words "one dollar." This change was made to meet depositors who are very numerous. The seventy-sixth section was amended by striking out the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, twelfth and fourteenth sub-sections thereof, and by inserting at the end of the fifteenth Sub-section thereof, the words, "showing how such dead letters have been disposed of." The department desired to discontinue the publication of certain portions of the Annual Report, and the sections relating thereto were struck out of the act. In that connection he desired to state that too many details were published in the general report. Folios 202 to 262 were occupied with a report of contracts made for the transportation of mails in Canada during the year, stating in each case its date and intended duration, the name of the contractor, the routes embraced in the contract, with the length of each, the time of arrival and departure at the end of each route, the mode of transportation contracted for, and the price stipulated to be paid by the Department. By omitting that statement the annual report of the Department would be reduced one-third, and so far as its usefulness was concerned, he could not conceive why it should be printed. In the United States the Post Office Department had abolished its publication in its report. Any member who desired could always see at the Public Departments the contracts awarded. The list of Post Offices established in Canada, during the year, he also proposed to strike out of the annual report; it was of little or no use to the public, and its omission would effect a considerable saving. He also proposed to omit Report No. 14, which was a copy from the records of all offers made for carrying the mails upon contracts advertised for public competition in the Dominion. If the House would agree to also strike this out, they would save a large sum, which was every year increasing, The twelfth, fifteenth and sixteenth sub-sections of the seventy-seventh section were verbally amended. Further provision is made for offences which are to be included as misdemeanours under the seventy-seventh section of the act, among these being the posting of immoral publications, pictures, &c. The sub-section was as follows:

"To post for transmission or delivery by or through the post any obscene or immoral book, pamphlet, picture, print, engraving, lithograph, photograph or other publication, matter or thing of an indecent, immoral, seditious, disloyal, scurrilous or libellous character, or any letter upon the outside or envelope of which, or any post card or post band or wrapper upon which, there are words, devices, matters or things of the character aforesaid, shall be a misdemeanor. The eighty-first section of the said act is hereby amended by inserting immediately before the word "such" in the fourth line thereof, the words "or if any person uses or attempts to use for the purpose of transmission by or through the post, any post card or stamped envelope or stamped post band or wrapper, which has been before used for a like purpose," —and by inserting after the word "used" in the seventh line of the said section, the words "and the post card or stamped envelope stamped post band or wrapper so used more than once."

Hon. Mr. Macdonald.

A new section (numbered thirty in amendment with) was introduced to enable government to obtain better security from the employers of the Department in the interest of the public who might require to furnish bonds from guarrantee societies or others, for the due discharge of their duties. The expense which would be involved by the adoption of the bill was $150,000. That was exclusive of free delivery of letters in nine cities of the Dominion, Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Ottawa, Hamilton, London and Toronto, which would cost $45,000. The increase in the number of drop or city letters distributed at Montreal since the adoption of the free delivery system had been ten fold, and he expected to realize a very large sum from the increased business caused by the introduction of the free delivery system. The convenience arising from a free delivery of letters could only be estimated by the satisfaction it had already given in Montreal, and it was intended within a few days to establish it in Toronto, and as soon as possible in the Lower Provinces. He hoped that on 1st July all the principal cities of the Dominion would have a free delivery of letters. With those explanations he moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. CURRIER said it was to be regretted, since the Postmaster General had made so many improvements and reforms in his Department, that he was taking a backward step in one particular —namely, in charging more than one cent for "drop" or local letters. The increased charge, he thought, would be a very great inconvenience, and there would be but very little increase of revenue to the Department arising therefrom. Hon. members who represented city constituencies knew how large was the number of 'drop' letters passing through the respective city Post-Offices, containing accounts for money due and remittances in payment, which, if the proposed increase were carried into effect, would not be sent by post at all. The benefit to be derived by the Department, he thought, was by no means a compensation for the inconvenience it would cause the public.

Mr. OLIVER said it would have been better if the Postmaster General had consolidated the whole Post Office law. It was a most difficult thing for people in country sections, and even those in the centres of trade, who were unacquainted with tracing up Acts of Parliament, to understand what the Act as it stood really meant; and he hoped, before this Bill was finally disposed of, that the Postmaster General would consolidate the whole law relating to the postal service. There was another matter which he would like to see somewhat changed that was, the provision which compelled local newspapers to prepay their postage. The House knew, at the present time, people in the rural districts, subscribing for a newspaper, paid the post office the postal charges on delivery. Under this Bill it was proposed that publishers should be compelled to pay the postage themselves, which would entail upon them an expenditure of from $50 to $400 a year. He had no objection to reducing the postage upon newspapers, which he thought was a step in the right direction, but he did think that the Postmaster General might have gone further and removed the impost altogether. In the case of newspapers published in cities, such as Toronto, and Montreal, the Express Companies distribute them throughout the country, free of charge he understood, receiving value, of course, for their work, in the shape of advertisements, and "puffs." Thus the publishers of local journals were placed at a disadvantage. He believed the whole revenue derived from the postage of newspapers, would not exceed $25,000. Provision was made in the Bill, for the free delivery of letters in cities. He was not opposed to free delivery, if such were required, but there were very few cities in the Dominion which were so large, that the people could not send to the post office for their letters themselves. He understood from the Postmaster General that free delivery in all the cities of Canada would entail an expenditure of $45,000 per annum. There was another point to which he desired to refer—public documents were all sent by mail free of charge. The Province of Ontario had a surplus of $6,000,000 and other Provinces had also surpluses. He asked, therefore, whether it would not be well to remove the postage from newspapers and make these rich Provinces pay for mailing their official documents. He believed that would be endorsed by the people of this country. He was sure the publishers of newspapers in the rural districts were less able to pay the postage on their newspapers than the rich Province of Ontario. He submitted these considerations to the Postmaster General in the hope that he would see his way to carrying newspapers free of charge.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON quite concurred in the suggestion that this Bill of thirty clauses should be incorporated in the old Act. There were some clauses amending portions of the latter which were not based on prepayment of postage.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—That would relate to foreign.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—No, not to foreign. For instance, the 13th section was as follows :—

> The thirtieth section of said Act is hereby amended by striking out all the words after the word "delivered" in the sixth line thereof, and inserting the following instead thereof, as part of the said Section :
>
> "Bearing unpaid postage as shall also the exact value of current coin as respects postage stamps, registration stamps, stamped envelopes or post cards, post bands or wrappers, purchased from any Postmaster, and the exact amount of postage payable to any letter carrier on any letter or mailable matter delivered by him."

This related to postage within the country, and there was another instance in another part of the bill. Then clause six empowered

> The Postmaster General, upon evidence satisfactory to him, that any person, firm or partnership or company, in Canada or elsewhere, is engaged in conducting any scheme or device for obtaining remittances through the Post Office, by means of false or fraudulent pretences, representations or promises of any kind, to forbid the payment by any Postmaster to any such person firm, partnership and company, of any postal money order drawn in his or their favor, and to provide for the return of the sum named in such order, to the remitter thereof, and may, upon such like evidence, forbid the delivery to such person, firm, partnership or company, of any registered or other letter, which he believes to be addressed to or for him or them. through or by reason of any such fraudulent scheme or device, and may cause any such letter to be returned to the sender thereof, marked with the word "Fraud" as reason of non-delivery to its address.

Now, it was very true that the provision in the United States law on this subject was more stringent than this was in one sense, because it made the offence a misdemeanor, but it must be tried first. Under this clause, however, the Postmaster General was given the very great power to stop mail matter, upon the ex parte statement of any one, open letters and packages and hold their contents. Then the clause with regard to a guarantee was one which deserved careful consideration. While it held officials responble for losses which might occur in the transmission of mails and empowered the Postmaster General to prosecute and recover the amount of the penalty stipulated in the bond, the clause contained the following proviso :—

But nothing herein contained shall be held to create any liability on the part of HER MAJESTY or the Postmaster General, to any person or parties whomsoever, to indemnify or hold harmless, pay or reimburse such person or party for the loss of any such money, goods, chattels, or valuables or effects.

The Government might recover the money, but need not distribute it to those who had sustained loss. Without going into such a statement at all, the Government could deal with such cases. There were two or three other clauses to which he would refer at another time. With reference to the report, he considered that the information it contained was exceedingly valuable to the public. It was all very well to say that any one desiring information not contained in the report could get it on application at the Department, but the country at large could not obtain it in that way, and should have it in the report. He did not believe free delivery in cities was necessary. If it was to cost $45,000 annually, and the revenue from newspaper postage was only $25,000, he would prefer to have newspapers free.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is the law now to have free delivery.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—It is not carried out, then.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — Yes, partially.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON said it was in Montreal, and the House was now officially informed that it was to be carried out in other cities. This Bill was a step in the right direction. For making intercourse by mail easier and freer, the Postmaster General was entitled to the thanks of the country. If the Government had a teeming surplus and could afford to give free delivery in cities as well as to carry newspapers free, so much the better, but he would prefer the latter to the former.

Mr. YOUNG urged the Postmaster General to carry newspapers free of postage. He regarded the Bill as a very valuable one, and he was sure it would be received with great satisfaction by the country. It was really absurd the condition of our postal laws in so far as connection with the United States was concerned. He had the honour of calling attention to this on a former occasion, and he was sure that, although there would be a small decrease of revenue by the new arrangement, the public would heartily approve of what the Postmaster General had done. He had practically thrown aside newspaper postage, but had left the fag end of it on the proprietors of country newspapers. He should have made the reform complete. The total amount received from newspaper postage last year was $72,000. Two years ago, as shown by return that he (Mr. YOUNG) had called for, it was $60,000, and it was stated by the Deputy Postmaster General that $30,000 of that amount was supposed to have been received from newspapers sent direct from the office of publication. The total amount received from the same source last year, therefore, could not have been more than $36,000. If the reduction in postage proposed by the Bill were applied to this amount, it would reduce it to such an extent that it would not be worth keeping an account of it. Twelve ordinary newspapers would weigh one pound, the postage of which would be one cent. The postage on weekly newspapers at present was about one-half a cent per newspaper. The reduction would, therefore, be about one-sixth, which would yield a revenue of some six thousand dollars. For such a small amount it was hardly worth while to keep accounts. A newspaper having a circulation of one thousand would pay about $50 a year in postage, which would fall upon the publisher because it was simply impossible to get it from the subscribers. He was extremely doubtful, from his experience in the newspaper business, whether publishers would be able to increase their circulation sufficiently to make up his amount. Every one was interested in the improvement of our newspapers. This postage would have a tendency to induce publishers to use lighter paper which through weighing less would not have such a neat appearance as better and heavier qualities. He hoped the Postmaster General would remove the postage on newspapers altogether.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE laid on the table the sentence of outlawry on LOUIS RIEL.

It being six o'clock the House rose for recess.

——:++:——

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. COLBY said he had not had the opportunity of listening to the explanations of the Hon. Postmaster General nor had he the opportunity of giving the Bill more than a cursory reading. He could not, however, refrain from expressing the satisfaction he felt in common, he believed, with perhaps every member of the House with the main features of the Bill. It was one he believed which would give great satisfaction to the country. At the same time he was inclined to agree with the suggestions of the members for North Oxford and South Waterloo with regard to postage on newspapers. There were special reasons why this matter should receive the favourable consideration of the Government at the present time. In consequence of the recent convention with the United States our newspaper and magazine publishers had to encounter an opposition which they had hithereo never met in their business. It was well known that the leading magazines and newspapers of the United States were conducted in a very enterprising manner, and having large circulations they were able to have a large amount of capital at their command. At Chicago the other day he was told that one newspaper proprietor paid no less than $400 to $600, a day for a verbatim report of the testimony in the celebrated Beecher case, and either that proprietor or another newspaper proprietor ran a special Sunday morning train between Chicago and Milwaukee for the delivery of its Sunday edition. This spirit of enterprise was not confined to Chicago, but existed in the management of all great newspapers in New York, Boston and other cities. While we in this country had very many valuable magazines and newspapers, yet some of them had a hard struggle for existance, and in many instances proved to be disastrous to their promoters. Now the practical effect of this convention would be to cause an inundation of newspapers and magazines from the United States into Canada. He was told by a mail-conductor that since that convention the increase in the amount of literature of that kind introduced into Canada from the United States was astonishing. Our newspapers, therefore, would have to encounter this kind of competition. Moreover, the American publishers having a large field for their papers, and being able to command the highest talent were able to produce very valuable and readable papers—papers which from a mere money point of view were better than any that could possibly be produced in this country. While our newspapers generally would have to encounter this kind of competition, it would fall with special force upon the local press of the country. The country newspaper not only contained the local news of its constituency, but required to have a certain amount of what may be called domestic reading, and in this respect it would be affected very seriously by the competition of a large class of family newspapers in the United States. The amount of revenue which would be derived from the postage of newspapers under the present Bill would be very small, and he trusted that the postage on newspapers would be entirely removed.

Mr. MILLS said he did not propose to enter into any lengthened discussion on this Bill. It seemed to him that it had generally met with the approval of the House, and he thought deservedly so. With the exception of the objection made by the hon. member for Cardwell all the objections to the Bill were as to mere matters of detail, and not to the principle of the Bill. He was one of those that were opposed to the abolition of newspaper postage. He had never been able to understand upon what grounds its abolition could be defended. The Government in undertaking to carry letters and newspapers undertook in so far the work which belonged to common carriers, and he was sure that if any private parties were to undertake to perform the work now being done by the Government it would seem a very extraordinary proposition that they should do work free for the parties receiving the papers, and be paid for doing it out of the public treasury. He could see no difference whatever between the public treasury paying for the transmission of newspapers or letters and the removing of the postage altogether from newspapers. The people of this country were not so indifferent to newspaper literature as to give up their subscriptions to newspapers unless they were carried free. This question was one simply of demand and supply. Those who required newspapers would subscribe for them, and they would make no more objection to paying the Government for carrying their papers than they would to paying the editor or publisher the subscription price. He could therefore see no ground for the demand that newspaper postage should be entirely abolished. It was not a tax. It bore no resemblance to a tax. It was not something imposed upon parties for the purpose of enabling the Government to do something else, but it was simply a charge, and a very small charge indeed, considering the amount of labor involved in carrying newspapers from the place of publication to the parties wishing to receive them. Another observation he would make was this: He believed that if they did away with newspaper postage altogether the result would be to close up a considerable number of small post offices throughout the country. He himself had experienced very considerable difficulty in getting post offices established where he thought they were necessary, and he was quite sure if the postage on newspapers was abolished, and that source of legitimate revenue taken away from the Postmaster General, he would find very great difficulty in extending facilities for the distribution of postal matter to the people of sparsely populated rural districts. He apprehended that people who would have to go four or five miles instead of one or two for the purpose of receiving postal matter, would be much more likely to discontinue their subscriptions to newspapers than they would on account of having to pay 20 or 25 cents postage. He was, therefore, entirely opposed to the principle of the abolition of postage on newspapers, and held that there were no grounds upon which it could be justified. The money required for carrying on the Post Office Department must be had somewhere. It must come out of the pockets of the people in some form or other, and he could see no fairer way of getting the money than by requiring people who received newspapers and letters to pay the small charge imposed for carrying them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not rise to continue the debate, but to ask the hon. gentleman to postpone it. The House had now heard the explanations of the Postmaster General, and the hon. gentleman would see from the remarks of various members that his Bill would be treated on its merits, and not in any way as a party measure. He would also suggest that in the meantime the hon. gentleman consider well the point taken by the members for South Oxford and Cardwell respecting the advantage of consolidating the postal law rather than passing a Bill in amendment. If there were two large Acts in force Postmasters and others would have great difficulty in ascertaining exactly what was the law, and it would be a great advantage to the public to have all the law on the subject embodied in one Act. He would also suggest to the Postmaster General that he introduce his resolutions relating to the rates and prepayment of postage without delay, as it was irregular to discuss these matters in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD said, as there appeared to be a general desire to have the debate adjourned, he would not raise any objection, though, as the objections were principally to details, he had supposed they might better be considered in Committee.

On motion the debate was adjourned.

PRESERVATION OF PEACE IN VICINITY OF PUBLIC WORKS.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, the Bill to amend the Acts for the better preservation of peace in the vicinity of public works was read a second time and referred to Committee of the Whole forthwith, and reported with amendments.

PROTECTION ON RAILWAYS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the second reading of an Act for the better protection of persons and property conveyed by railways. He said the bill would be referred to the Committee on Railways and Telegraph Lines.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he was glad to hear it. The measure was one requiring to be well considered by the Minister of Justice before it became law.

The bill was read a second time and referred to the Committee on Railway and Telegraph lines.

SUPPLY.

The House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. SCATCHERD in the chair.

The estimates for the Indians were first taken up.

On item $2,200 for the Indians of Quebec.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) asked why there was an increase of $950 over the appropriation of last year.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD regretted that the Indians of Quebec were not so well situated as the Indians of Ontario. Their lands were not so good, and they were not realizing anything like fair prices from them. They were, generally speaking, in very poor circumstances indeed, and this increase was to supply their real wants.

The item passed.

Items 150 and 151 were passed without discussion.

On item $4,500 for the Indians of New Brunswick,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked the Minister of the Interior if he could give the relative number of Indians in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It appeared to him there was a large number of Indians in New Brunswick, and this sum was not sufficient to meet their wants.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said he had not the statistics by him that were asked for. Last year the Government had increased the vote for the Indians in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and as they were not increasing fast in numbers this estimate might be considered fair now. He believed there was a larger number of Indians in Nova Scotia than in New Brunswick, but in the latter province a good deal of the money that should have gone to the Indians had been lavished on two officials. He was thinking of reducing their salaries and giving more of the appropriation to the Indians.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL doubted the correctness of the hon. gentleman's information. With reference to the two officials the hon. gentleman was entirely misinformed. They discharged their duties very efficiently. He (Mr. MITCHELL) thought there had not been sufficient attention given to these unfortunate people, and his object in rising now was to ask the Minister of the Interior to increase this appropriation for the purpose of relieving the distress which prevailed this winter among them. It would be much better if the hon. gentleman would turn his attention to relieving these unfortunate Indians, than attacking an Administration that had passed away.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the Indians in some parts of the Province had funds of their own. They had timber lands and received a revenue from them, over and above this Parliamentary grant. This was not the case in Nova Scotia, where the Indians had no funds or lands, and in this respect were less favourably situated than those of New Brunswick. The hon. gentleman was correct in saying that there had been some hardship among them this winter in consequence of the great depth of the snow, but this was an exceptional year.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL was not prepared to assert positively, but his belief was that the funds derived from the lands owned by the Indians of New Brunswick went into the Public Treasury out of which this vote was taken. This was, no doubt, a very hard winter and he hoped the Government would aid the Indians who were dying from cold and starvation.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the Indian funds did not go into the General Treasury, but were kept for their own benefit. With regard to the distress among the Indians in New Brunswick it was not at all general, and as there was some of last years' appropriation, still on hand, he could see no necessity of increasing the vote this year.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said what he meant was that the Indians of New Brunswick, though they held lands and were more numerous than those of Nova Scotia received only $4,500—no more than the Indians of Nova Scotia, who were fewer in number and who had comparatively no lands. He did not object to the amount given to the Indians of Nova Scotia; what he did say was, that this appropriation was not enough for the Indians of New Brunswick, who were in great distress, and could scarcely keep themselves from perishing. He hoped that the Minister of the Interior would take steps to relieve their distress.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the Government could not be supposed to feed and clothe all the Indians. These appropriations were for the purposes of education and for relieving cases of real want. To give aid generally to the Indians would be to encourage idleness. With respect to the funds owned by the Indians, they were not subject to the vote of this Parliament. The Indians had a right to their own money, and it was paid to them and the interest arising therefrom. In the Lower Provinces the Indians were not so highly favoured as in Ontario, and this vote was in some measure, making up for this deficiency. In Ontario the Indians relied entirely on their own funds, and there was nothing coming out of the Public Treasury for them.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he must have entirely misunderstood the object of this vote. His impression was that it was distributed to the individual members of each tribe. What he wished to know was whether the funds arising from the Indian lands of New Brunswick were at their disposal in addition to this grant. If they were, he was satisfied.

Hon. Mr. VAIL assured the hon. member for Cumberland that there was money derived from the lands of the Indians in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said his statement was that it was very little as compared with the revenue from the Indian lands in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the fund amounted to a considerable sum at the time of Confederation, when it was handed over to the Indian Department.—The item was carried.

On item 153, relating to payments under the treaties with the Indians in the North-West,

Mr. MASSON suggested that the discussion on these items should be postponed until the papers relating to the recent treaty with the Indians were brought down. He had heard numerous complaints that the treaties entered into a year ago had not been carried out by the Government.

Right Hon. SIR JOHN MACDONALD suggested that the items not affected by these treaties could be discussed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said these papers could not affect these items. They were not gratuities to the Indians, but the money involved in a bargain and sale of property transferred by them to the Dominion.

Mr. MASSON said the conditions of the treaty made a year ago last fall had not been complied with, and he thought it was not asking too much of the Government to have these papers laid before the House before proceeding with the discussion.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said that it had not been usual to bring down treaties which had not been made during the financial year, The treaty which had been referred to had been embodied in his report, which he expected to be able to lay on the table within one or two days. Its presentation had been delayed, owing to the preparation of a map in which all the lands proposed to be dealt with would be shown. He thought he would be able to satisfy the hon. member for Terrebonne, who had raised some objections, in regard to Treaty No. 3. The hon. member had visited the country when the Indians were complaining that the money which had been promised them had not been distributed. It was distributed, however, shortly afterwards. The articles which were also promised to the Indians were on their way to the North-West when the hon. member was talking with the Indians. The great distance which they had to be conveyed caused a considerable time to be occupied in their transportation, and they were distributed late in the season. Every effort had been made to carry out strictly the provisions of the treaty which had been made in the fall of 1873. It was provided that the reserves were to be selected by Commissioners sent to consult with the Indians. It was not deemed expedient that there should be two meetings, one to receive the treaty money, and another to meet for the selection of the reserves, consequently the distribution of money had been delayed for a short time, until Mr. Dawson, one of the Commissioners, was able to be present. Mr. Dawson was delayed two or three weeks at Fort William by illness, and he was not able to go forward so soon as he expected. Every point the hon. member for Terrebonne could bring forward the Government would be able to explain without the treaties being laid on the table.

Mr. MASSON said the complaints were not made to him at a time when the money had not been paid; the money had been paid, but the articles promised had not been delivered, and there was no sign of their being delivered. The statement of the Minister of the Interior proved that the members of the House were unable to ascertain whether the Canadian Government had fulfilled their promises made to the Indians without knowing from the Government what those promises were, which could only be done when the treaties were laid on the table. The Indians complain that the engagement which the Government had entered into had not been carried out; so far from saying that the money had not been paid, they said that the money had been paid, but that all the articles promised had not been given, and that some of those which had been given were spurious. He knew, therefore, what the complaints of the Indians were for, but not being able to see the treaties made a year ago last fall, he could not say whether their complaints were just or not. If the Government promised that, before concurrence was taken, the treaties would be laid before the House, he would not offer further opposition at that stage.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that if the members of the Opposition desired the items for treaties 3 and 4, for which the Government were responsible, to stand over, he would offer no objection; but with respect to the other treaties, as the House voted payments last year, he must insist on those items being passed.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD was understood to say that medals had been distributed, the surface of which washed off with wear, but for that he was not responsible.

Mr. MASSON said he had never asserted that the Hon. Minister of the Interior was responsible for the distribution of spurious articles. He supposed somebody was responsible.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said that if the late Government promised silver medals they were given; if plated ones, they were given.

Item No. 153, respecting treaties 1 and 2, was then passed. Nos. 154, 155 and 156, were allowed to stand.

M. CIMON :—Le comité me permettra de lui adresser la parole sur un sujet qui intéresse un certain nombre de personnes vivant dans le comté que j'ai l'honneur de représenter. Malheureusement je ne trouvais en dehors de la Chambre lorsque l'hon. Ministre de l'Intérieur a expliqué le but de ce vote d'argent. Je dois dire qu'il reste encore dans le comté que je représente, des vestiges de la fameuse tribu des Montagnais, si nombreuse autrefois et maintenant réduite à quelques familles. Le Gouvernement ne saurait vraiment leur montrer trop de sollicitude, et pour démontrer au comité qu'ils méritent l'intérêt que je leur porte, je demanderai la permission de lire une lettre que j'ai reçue de leur chef avant mon départ pour Ottawa, à l'approche de cette session. Cette lettre, ajoute l'hon. membre, contient quelques expressions sauvages, dont je laisserai la traduction à l'hon. Greffier de la Chambre.

RÉSERVE DES SAUVAGES,

TOWNSHIP OUIATCHOUAN,

23 Janvier 1875.

A—ERNEST CIMON, Ecr.,

Député à la Chambre des Communes par les Comtés unis de Chicoutimi et du Saguenay.

TIWAIEM MINO,

(Notre ami.)

Permets à de pauvres descendants de la tribu des Montagnais, autrefois si nombreuse et si puissante de t'exposer, en vue d'être soulagés par qui de droit, le triste état de misère dans lequel ils languissent surtout cet hiver. Depuis des années les chasseurs aux pâles visages ont envahi notre territoire de chasse, et en dépit des lois de notre bonne mère la Reine, ils ont fait cette chase de manière à détruire presque complètement les visons, les martres, les loutres, les castors et autres animaux à poils précieux. De plus, le souffle irrité du Grand Esprit a changé de grandes forêts en une mer de feu, et nos chasseurs se sont assis mornes et silencieux, en regardant leurs wigwams détruits. Cet hiver nous sommes revenus sans pelleteries pour vendre, et notre faim est grande. Notre bon ami, M. OTIS fait ce qu'il faut pour nous, mais il ne peut suffire à tous nos besoins. Toi dont le cœur généreux nous est connu, et qui va bientôt s'asseoir dans le grand Wigwam à Ottawa, tu parleras de la misère des pauvres Sauvages du lac St. Jean, au Gouverneur Général grand ami de la Reine. Tu lui diras que nous profiterons bien de la terre qu'ils nous a donnée pour semer, mais qu'en en attendant le printemps, nous sommes en proie à la faim, et que les larmes des femmes et des enfants brisent le cœur du pauvre Sauvage. Dis lui que la terre de nos ancêtres, dont le nom comme hommes pacifiques est grand, ne voit que quelques wigwams, habités par la misères et la désolation. Parles lui, comme tu sais parler et notre prière sera écoutée de notre grand Sachem, (chef.) Tu écriras à notre bon ami OTIS que tu connais bien et qui doit aussi parler pour nous. N'oublie pas de saluer pour nous le bon Takœgan, et tous les sachems du grand Wigwan d'Ottawa.

—Eh ! bien, M. le PRÉSIDENT, on voit par cette lettre le triste état dans lequel se trouvent ces pauvres Indiens. Et la lettre que je viens de lire n'exagère aucunement le triste état dans lequel se trouvent les Montagnais, car j'ai moi-même été témoin de leur misère. Ces sauvages vivent de pêche et de chasse et n'ont rien autre chose pour trouver leur subsistance. Ne trouvant plus dans le voisinage du lac St. Jean les moyens de subsister qu'ils y trouvaient autrefois, à raison des empiètements de la civilisation et des progrès constants de l'Agriculture et de la colonisation ; à raison aussi de ce que les blancs font eux-mêmes la pêche et la chasse dans ces endroits, ils sont obligés de partir l'automne pour aller faire la chasse à deux ou trois cent lieux au Nord.

On constate souvent avec peiné qu'il meurt trente ou quarante de ces pauvres sauvages pendant la saison de la chasse. Si l'on considère que le Gouvernement Canadien retire des revenus toujours croissants des territoires autrefois habités par les sauvages et des pêcheries qu'il afferme, on sera porté à leur accorder généreusement ce qu'il faut pour leurs besoins. Je félicite le Gouvernement actuel d'avoir marché sur les traces du dernier Gouvernement, en donnant aux Indiens l'attention nécessaire et en leur votant certaines sommes d'argent. Mais il y a encore des progrès à faire. Cette année surtout le Gouvernement ne doit pas se montrer trop parcimonieux, car il est de fait que plusieurs Indiens du lac St. Jean sont exposés à mourir de faim cet hiver. Il serait très injuste, de notre part, de lésiner avec ces pauvres gens, après avoir hérité de leur pêche, de leur chasse et avoir succédé à leur ancien patrimoine. J'attire de plus l'attention du Gouvernement sur les sauvages qui demeurent à la Rivière Bethsiamites, où la misère règne aussi d'une manière affreuse, comme la lettre du Père LACASSE le prouve suffisamment. Je me permettrai de lire quelques extraits de cette lettre, qui contient ce qui suit :—

" Je vous dirais difficilement tout ce que la " position faite aux Mathémeuses tribus sau- " vages de notre endroit a de pénible. Tout " leur a été enlevée, à l'exception peut être de " leurs droits sur la rivière Bethsiamites qui " leur reste. En forme de compensation, le " Gouvernement envoie quelques faibles secours " aux veuves et aux orphelins de la tribu, mais " là se trouvent toutes ses faveurs et c'est abso- " lument insuffisant pour faire face à la misère " générale. Jusqu'ici nos pauvres sauvages se " sont montrés assez résignés à leur triste sort ; " mais aujourd'hui qu'ils souffrent plus que " jamais, ils perdent toute patience et s'agitent. " Ils nous demandent pourquoi le Gouvernement " ne tient pas avec eux ses promesses. On ne " leur a enlevé tout droit sur leurs nombreuses " rivières qu'après leur avoir donné l'assurance, " par l'entremise de Mgr. BAILLARGEON, et du " Révd. Père ARNAND, que le moitié du revenu " de l'exploitation de ces rivières leur revien- " dront annuellement.

" ..... Les plaintes cruelles de ces " pauvres sauvages, que la faim et la misère déci- " ment, devraient pourtant, ce semble, être " entendues de loin. Six des principaux de la " tribu de Wingan veulent, dans le désespoir, " partir pour Londres, et aller comme ils disent, " parler à la Grande Dame. Nous avons cepen- " dant adressé une demande au Gouvernement " au nom de ces infortunés. Ils sollicitent son " secours, parceque : 1°. on jouit de leurs " terres et de leurs revenus ; 2°. on ne leur " donne cependant aucune compensation pour " ces biens ; 3°. une épidémie a régné tout le " printemps dernier à Wingan. Les chasseurs " étaient étendus dans leurs cabanes souffrant " et n'ayant rien à manger. La rivière sura- " bondait de saumons à leurs pieds ; mais on " menaçait de la prison quiconque eût ôsé se " permettre d'en prendre un seul pour se " nourrir. Les choses aujourd'hui en sont " rendues au point qu'un hôpital construit sur " une bonne ferme leur serait plus utile que la " remise de leur rivière et de leurs droits de " pêche.....

" ..... D'après la loi " de Dieu, ces indigènes peuvent posséder ce " qu'ils tiennent de leurs ancêtres et n'oublions " pas que parce que celui qui la leur ravit est le " plus fort il ne s'en suit pas que cet acte ne " soit et ne reste point une injustice criante."

Il me semble, M. le PRÉSIDENT, que le Gouvernement ne fera qu'un acte de justice en accordant une allocation suffisante à ces pauvres malheureux. Le fait que souvent il en périt de cinquante à soixante chaque hiver dans les bois, faute de moyens de subsistance, en dit assez au cœur de chacun. Si le Gouvernemsnt leur aidait de façon à prévenir ces longues courses qu'ils sont obligés de faire pendant l'hiver pour gagner leur vie, ces malheurs ne leur arriveraient pas. Sous ces circonstances, j'espère que le Gouvernement fera tout ce qu'il pourra pour alléger la misère de ces pauvres Indiens.

Hon. M. GEOFFRION—Si l'honorable membre qui vient de parler avait été présent lorsque l'hon. Ministre de l'Intérieur a expliqué l'item 149, il aurait vu que le Gouvernement était allé au devant de ses désirs, l'item en question est précisément demandé pour venir au secours des tribus qui se trouvent dans l'extrême besoin, et le Gouvernement a déjà expédié des secours à ceux dont l'hon. membre vient de représenter les besoins. L'hon. membre pour Chicoutimi ne nous donne pas souvent son approbation, et si nous pouvons l'obtenir cette fois, elle nous paraîtra d'autant plus précieuse qu'elle est plus rare.

M. CIMON.—Je suis satisfait des explications qui viennent de m'être données, et j'en remercie l'hon. Ministre.

M. BABY. — Je suggérerai à l'hon. Ministre du Revenu de l'Intérieur de traduire les compliments des sauvages à ses collègues anglais, et de faire transmettre leur réponse par l'hon. Député de Chicoutimi.

L'hon. M. GEOFFRION. — Nous sommes si peu habitués à recevoir des remerciements pour le bien que nous faisons, que nous nous contentons de faire le bien pour le bien, sans nous occuper d'en être remerciés.

M. MASSON.—C'est si microscopique!

M. GEOFFRION.—Quoi? L'Opposition?

Respecting the item of $4,500 for Indians in New Brunswick, which had been passed by the Committee,

Mr. COSTIGAN desired to offer some remarks. The late Government had appointed two Indian Commissioners for the Province of New Brunswick at salaries of $400 or $500. He did not think that the salaries of those officers were too large for the services they were called on to perform; but what he complained of was the fact that, while whenever the Indians made an application to the Government for assistance they continually received a statement in reply that there were no funds derived from their lands sufficient to enable the Government to give them any relief. Commissioners were appointed at high salaries derived from those same lands. The Government would do wrong if they continued those offices. The former Commissioners did the work without salary, and if the funds were sufficient to justify the Government to support two Commissioners and give them large salaries, those gentlemen who performed the duties gratuitously in past years were entitled to be considered when the new appointments were made. He had no fault to find with the Commissioner for the Western portion of New Brunswick, but it was inconvenient to have a Commissioner in Fredericton with whom the Indians at the North end of the Province had to do business.

Item 158, salaries and office expenses, $16,750 was adopted. On item probable expenses in connection with Indians in British Columbia, $25,000.

Mr. DECOSMOS asked what the Government intended to do in the administration of Indian affairs in British Columbia. Ever since the Union, promises had been made from time to time of a reform in that respect, but nothing had been done. One Commissioner sent out there was drawing his salary but was not doing anything. It had been the policy of the British Columbia Government, while he was a member of it at any rate, to give the Indians as much land as they could utilize and yet it was said that that Government was treating the Indians badly. He thought it was a great mistake for the Dominion Government to press upon the Local Government to grant the Indians a larger reserve than they could use.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was well known that the scheme proposed by the late Government was to have three Commissioners appointed for British Columbia, of whom the Lieutenant-Governor was to be one, and that as there was a large number of both Protestant and Catholic missions, one of them should be a Catholic and the other a Protestant. The present Government had carried out that plan, but difficulties had arisen in reference to the Lieutenant Governor acting in the capacity of Commissioner, and he had not taken any active part in this matter. In the meantime two other Commissioners were on hand, and he had no reason to doubt the entire efficiency. The Indians of British Columbia had been in a state of chronic discontent the whole of last year, and he was bound to say that he did not wonder at it. He did not consider that they had been fairly used in the land matter. All the Dominion Government had asked the local Government to do was to place the Indians of that Province on as good a footing in respect to the amount of land reserved for them as the Indians to the east of the Rocky Mountains, but according to the evidence which had been published—among other communications a letter of the English Church clergyman, who was a devoted missionary among the Indians in that Province, and also a letter by the Roman Catholic priest, who had also labored among them, and which letter had appeared in the British Columbia papers—and taking into consideration the fact that the Indians had on several occasions of late undertaken by violence to assert their rights, he was forced to the conclusion that there was chronic discontent among the Indians which might break out into a flame at any moment. The Dominion Government had therefore made strong representations to the local Government on the subject, and they had also communicated the documents relating to the subject to the Colonial Secretary, in order that, in case of a dispute arising out of it which should be referred to him, he would understand the case. The blame did not rest with the Dominion Government, but rested entirely with those who were seeking to impose upon the Indians, as he believed the Provincial Government were doing. If the Indians of that Province should assert their rights, as they might do, that Government would find themselves in very serious difficulties, for in no part of the Province had the Indians been even asked to extinguish their title to the lands, as they had been in other parts of the Dominion. The Indians were perfectly aware of what had taken place on the east side of the Rocky Mountains. They knew that their brethern in the other parts of the Dominion had been bargained with and paid for their lands, while they had received nothing except from five to ten acres per family, the Indians in the other parts of the Dominion receiving eighty acres per family. The money that this House had voted in any one year was more than the entire sum paid by the British Columbia Government during the entire time of its existence for the benefit of the Indians, and yet the hon. member for Victoria had endeavored to cast blame on the Dominion Government for not dealing liberally with the Indians.

Mr. DECOSMOS said he cast as much blame upon the late Government as upon the present one. Both Governments had neglected their duty. He heard last session that they intended to do this and that, but up to the present time he was not aware that they had done anything. The best proof that could be given of the manner in which the Indians of British Columbia had been treated by the Provincial Government was the words of the Premier himself. He had stated that since the Union the Dominion Government had expended more money in the Indian Department of British Columbia than was spent during the whole previous history of the Province. That showed that the Provincial Government knew how to manage the Indians, and it was only since the management of Indian affairs came into the hands of the Dominion Government that discontent had arisen. He strongly urged the necessity of steps being taken to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians, and also to establish schools amongst them, and model farms where they might learn how to carry on agricultural pursuits. With respect to a letter which had been written by a reverend gentleman, he might say that he could easily understand that in the district where that reverend gentleman resided there might be some desire on the part of the Indians to get more land for grazing purposes, and he was not aware that the Government of British Columbia had any objection whatever to give them more land for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that the Provincial Government had absolutely refused to grant the Indians lands equivalent to those held by Indians elsewhere, One of the missionaries laboring amongst the Indians in that Province had told him that when he called upon the Local Government and had a long discussion with them as to what they proposed to do, he was finally told by one of the members of the Government that they intended to act upon the motto, "Let him take who has the power, and let him keep who can." This was not the principle the Indians themselves acted upon, or else the whites of British Columbia would have had more trouble in the settlement of that country. The hon. member for Victoria had stated that the Indians had only become discontented after that Province had been joined to the Confederation, but he would assure that hon. gentlemen that the evidence very clearly established that there was great discontent before the Union, and that discontent was wholly on account of the local mismanagement of the affairs in connection with the reservation of land to the Indians. The Local Government might depend upon it that until the grievances of the Indians were removed and they were allowed to obtain a fair share of the land they could not expect to have peace and quietness. No white people would submit to the usage that the Indians had received, and they could not expect the Indians to submit to it. He had no doubt that the Indians would be satisfied with what had been done by the Dominion Government in the direction of securing them their rights.

Mr. DE COSMOS said that all that the Dominion Government was bound by the Act of Union to do, was to treat the Indians of the Province as liberally as the Government of British Columbia was accustomed to do before the Union, and in case any dispute should arise with respect to the Indian lands it was to be referred to the Colonial Secretary.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It has been referred.

Mr. DE COSMOS proceeded to say that the quantity of land given to the Indians previous to the Union, did not exceed ten acres for each family, and yet the Dominion Government now wanted the Local Government to give them eighty acres. If the Dominion Government wanted any more land for the Indians they could purchase it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We do not intend to purchase land for that purpose, but we will probably require that the Columbia Government shall extinguish the Indian title.

Mr. BUNSTER contended that the Commissioners sent up to British Columbia were not fitted to perform their duties. They did not understand the Indian language, and when the Indians would go to them, they could get no satisfaction. There were plenty of men in British Columbia familiar with the Indian language who would have been well fitted to fulfil the duties of Commissioners.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said that the dissatisfaction of the Indians arose entirely out of the land question, and until that was settled the Commissioners could do very little. He understood that the leading Commissioner was a medical man and was very popular among the Indians, and had been the means of conciliating them when their discontent might have taken a serious form. The principal objection to the other Commissioner was that he did not belong to British Columbia, but that objection was not made by the Indians, who were, he believed, well satisfied with him. The hon. member for Victoria was mistaken in saying that the Commissioners had done nothing, as he (Mr. LAIRD) was aware of the contrary. It was the intention of the Commissioners to go through the Province and organize the Department, establishing agencies and schools, and aiding the Indians in agricultural pursuits, but it was impossible to do anything in that direction until the Indians knew where their reservations were to be. The hon. member for Victoria had stated that the British Columbia Government gave the Indians all the land they could utilize. That might have been the case years ago, when ten acres to a family was enough for agricultural purposes, because game was plentiful and the Indians had plenty of hunting grounds. But that state of things had, to a great extent, changed, and the Indians now required a much larger reserve. However, the British Columbia Government had not, so far, given the Indians more than ten acres to a family. He (Mr. LAIRD) contended that eighty acres for each family was not too much, and he thought the Local Government had not acted fairly with the Indians in restricting their reserve to ten acres to a family. With respect to the Indian Boards he must admit that they had not been entirely successful either in Manitoba or British Columbia. In both Provinces the Lieutenant Governors did not care to act upon the Boards, and the Government had not pressed them. In the meantime they were endeavouring to make other arrangements to carry out the organization of the Department in British Columbia, and it was probable they would have to establish the system adopted in Ontario; that was, to divide the Province into superintendencies and appoint a superintendent over each district. The present system of an Indian Board was the suggestion of the late Mr. Howe, and it was thought the best system that could be adopted, on account of the difficulty of communicating with that distant Province. However, as we were likely soon to have telegraphic communication with British Columbia, through our own territory, the necessity for an Indian Board had, in a great measure, ceased. and as it had not been very successful, the Government had under consideration the expediency of abolishing it and appointing superintendents instead.

Mr. BUNSTER expressed astonishment at the remarks of the hon., the Minister, and insisted that the Government of the Dominion had been altogether to blame for the injustice done to the Indians, inasmuch at they had never taken possession of the land which the Government of Columbia was keeping in trust for them. The Commissioners, he repeated, did not understand the Indians, who were the best class of the aborigines in this country. He did not appear as the advocate of the Local Government, for he had been an opponent of theirs. but he would not see any injustice done them, and he thought it most unjust to blame them for not giving away lands which were not theirs to give. He hoped the Dominion Government would take possession of these lands, and distribute them, and he also hoped that they would otherwise fulfil the terms of Union which gave them the right to the possession of the land. The hon. gentleman, he thought, was in error in accusing the Local Government in breaking faith with the Indians.

Mr. DECOSMOS said he could not coincide with the hon. gentleman, who had just spoken in the sweeping charge of incompetency made against the Agent. So far as Dr. BOWELL was concerned he (Mr. DECOSMOS) had no fault to find. The prineple objection he had to the others was, that there were men in the Province who were just as well fitted for the duties as they, but under the proposed new arrangement he thought they might probably do their work more satisfactorily.

The item was then carried.

On item 160, $2,000, probable expenses with Indians in Prince Edward Island,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he would expect the hon. gentleman to furnish the House with some details as to the relative number of Indians in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. His own impression was that in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia the grant given was too large in proportion to the number of the Indians, as compared to the grants given in New Brunswick. He would, also, ask the hon. gentleman to say whether the sum derived from timber lands in New Brunswick was expended on behalf of the Indians of that Province. The item was carried.

Item 161 was passed without discussion.

On item 162, to provide for surveys of boundary between British Columbia and the United States, $100,000,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said this was a new vote, the object of which was to provide for the survey of the boundary between Alaska and Canada. The government hoped it would not be neccssary to expend the whole of it, but it was well to have sufficient on hand if it should be required.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked if any negotiations were going on with respect to this boundary.

Hon Mr. CARTWRIGHT replied that communications were now going on through Sir EDWARD THORNTON with the United Sta'es government, and it was hoped that some settlement would be arrived at which would enable this government to dispense with the expenditure of the large amount asked for. The Alaska coast was very intricate, and there was no doubt the running of a line on the ridges of the mountains would be very expensive. It was with a view to effect a saving in this respect that these negotiations were now going on.—The item passed.

Items 163 to 166, inclusive, were passed without discusison.

On item $12,000 commutation liens of remission of duties on articles imported for the use of the army and navy.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked why there was an increase of $2,000.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said the amount hitherto allowed was $50, which was not sufficient. Representations were made by the officers at Halifax to that effect, and this increase was allowed,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—In point of fact this $2,000 increase is in consequence of the recent increase in the duties.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Partly that and partly in consequence of the increased cost of living in the last few years.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said the government should have made enquiries in order to ascertain whether this increase was necessary before making it. The sum was not large, but the principle of making an increase on the representation of these gentlemen was a bad one.—The item passed.

One item, 168, miscellaneous expenses in the North-West, not otherwise provided for, $33,800.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked why there was an increase of $23,-800,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said as a bill was soon to be brought down giving this information in detail, it would be better to let the item stand.

The Committee rose and reported the resolutions.

The House adjourned at ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, 23rd February, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three P.M.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR RECEIVING PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. RYMAL moved that the time for receiving petitions for Private Bills be extended two weeks and the time for receiving Private Bills and Reports thereon for a like period.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said it was usual to give some extension of time in the early stages of the session, but he would invite his hon. friend the leader of the House, to state explicitly that this was the only extension to which he as leader of the House would give his consent. The practice of bringing forward private bills at a very late period of the session when it was quite impossible to give them the consideration which their importance frequently demanded, was one which he thought should be put an end to. The notices given according to the rules of the House meant something or they meant nothing. If they meant anything there was no reason in the world why applications for private bills should not be before the House within the prescribed delay. His own experience in one of the leading Private Bill Committees of the House had led him to the conclusion that it was utterly impossible to bestow the care and deliberation absolutely required in the interests of sound legislation upon bills which were hurried in under a suspension of the rules during the last days of the session. He would therefore urge his honourable friend to resist any application which might be made hereafter for the suspension of the rules, thus doing away with those conditions with which the House had surrounded Private Bill legislation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD hoped the Premier would think twice before he accepted the suggestion of the hon. member for Chateauguay. Private Bill legislation was not a matter of political importance. it was not a matter of party politics, and it was not necessary that the whole power of the Government need be invoked to prevent the extension of time under any circumstances. He had no doubt that the Premier would take care that the interests of every one affected by any Private Bill should be protected. He (Sir JOHN) would be very sorry to see a cast-iron rule adopted which would prevent the introduction of a Private Bill after the usual time had expired, no matter how urgent it might be. The question of the extension of the time might be safely left to the Premier and to the majority of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was a good deal of conversation upon this subject during the last three sessions, consequent upon the repeated introduction of motions to suspend the rules. The extension of time, if reasonable, was not in itself objectionable; but still it was not desirable to have Private Bills introduced suddenly, at a late period of the session, when it was impossible to give them due consideration. It would not be well to prohibit by absolute rule under any circumstances the introduction of a private bill after the delay fixed by the rules, because cases of urgency might arise in which the House would be unanimous in desiring to extend the time; but he thought the extension of time once asked for by the committee should not be exceeded.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said this continual prolongation of the time during which private bills might be received was equivalent to an abrogation of the rule of the House. If it was the sense of the House that the rule should be abrogated, he had not a word to say, but if it was important that the rule should be enforced, it should be enforced, or it would lose its value. Last session, as chairman of one of the principal Private Bills Committees, he found it impossible to give due consideration to very important bills introduced at a late period of the session, under a suspension of the rules, and on examination of the statute book he found clauses in private bills which had not, and could not have had, under the circumstances. the consideration they deserved. It is therefore in the interest of sound private bill legislation for which the leader of the Government was equally as responsible as he was for public legislation, that he made the suggestion he had offered to the Premier. Under our system we must hold the Government responsible for the whole legislation of the country. In private bills it not unfrequently happened that clauses were introduced affecting quoad particular interests the public law of the country, and in respect to these Bills the Government must be held responsible.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said his hon. friend carried this responsibility further than it was carried in England, where the Government was not held responsible for private legislation. The hon. gentleman spoke, also, of this extension of time as an abrogation of the rules of the House, but it would be admitted that the rules might sometimes be abrogated with great advantage. The hon. gentleman, for instance, had spoken twice on this subject, which was an abrogation of the rule, but still a very great advantage to the House.

Mr. RYMAL said it was perfectly regular for the Committee to recommend a suspension of the rule, and, considering the fact that this session had commenced some six weeks earlier than usual, the recommendation should be adopted,

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the early meeting of the House furnished an ample justification for the suspension of the rules, and it would be very improper to refuse it, but he thought the remarks of the hon. member for Kingston ought to make the House all the more alert in maintaing the rules since the Government were not responsible for private legislation. Numbers of private bills were in effect largely public bills. Take for example two cases of the previous session. Numerous bills relating to banks were settled by a public bill, and in the same manner bills relating to building societies were brought under a general act. In both these cases the government were responsible for the legislation. He suggested that the House should determine upon a certain time within which petitions could be received, and adhere rigidly to that, only extending the time in special cases where the committee were satisfied that such extension should be granted. No general extension should in future take place.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the remarks made by the hon. member for South Bruce were particularly in point with reference to the legislation of last session. Two bills relating to building societies came in late in the session and it was utterly impossible from the lateness of the season and the anxiety of members to leave, for the government to give them the consideration they should receive. He felt that for these, at least, the Government had a direct responsibility that they could not shake off.

The motion was carried.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following bills were introduced and read a first time:—

Mr. IRVING—Act respecting the International Bridge Company.

Mr. JETTE—Bill to amend the several acts incorporating and relating to the Richelieu Company and to change its name.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Act to amend the act respecting banks and banking. He explained that the object of this bill was to amend the schedule in which one particular bank, which had become insolvent, appeared regularly every month.

Mr. JETTE—A Bill for the incorporation of the Royal Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada.

THE SUPREME COURT.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved for leave to introduce a bill which had been announced in the Speech from the Throne —an Act respecting the establishment of a Supreme Court. He said that a Bill on this subject had been announced on four occasions. The hon. leader of the Opposition had, in another debate, alluded to the numerous difficulties that had presented themselves in the preparation of such bill, and stated that he had given his best attention to the preparation of a measure of that kind. Had it not been that such an amount of valuable labour had been bestowed upon the preparation of a Supreme Court bill, he would have felt diffident in undertaking the task. Some features of the present Bill bore on their face a relationship to the features of the Bill of the hon. member for Kingston, and it should, therefore, secure his tender mercies. The very first difficulty met with in the preparation of the Bill was in writing the first word of it. It was a Bill creating a Court of appellate jurisdiction. Should that Court have a jurisdiction of appeal arising out of Local laws as well as out of Federal laws? That was one of the important questions which he had been compelled to consider in the preparation of the measure, and he felt bound to say that the opinions of men whom he highly esteemed differed on this point. Article 101 of the British North America Act said, "The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance and organization of a General Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional Courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada." He understood the Federal Parliament was thus given the power to establish a Court of appellate jurisdiction. If these words "notwithstanding" &c., did not apply as an exception to the power given to the Local Government of establishing Courts of Justice, they would then mean nothing. This power was evidently given in view of the existing Provincial tribunals, because there was no other tribunal from whose decision an appeal might be taken. If it were not so, the clause would have been written otherwise. Tribunals of original instance would have been first established and then the power of establishing a Court of Appeals would naturally have followed It appeared, moreover, from a perusal of the concluding portion of that article that power was given to create additional Courts. The Court would have appellate civil and criminal jurisdiction, in cases of habeas corpus, of extradition and in constitutional cases. The Bill also provided for the creation of a Court of Exchequer. Some objection had been made to one of the Bills presented by the hon. member for Kingston for the reason that it gave to the Court of Appeal an original jurisdiction. He would avoid that difficulty by creating two Courts, one of appellate jurisdiction, the Supreme Court of Appeal; and another, a tribunal of the first instance, composed of the same members but being a totally different court. There was ample authority for adopting that course, and he found it in clause 101 of the Constitution. It was proposed to give the Judges of the Supreme Court the same rank as the Chief Justices of the Provinces, the Chief Justice of the court having rank and precedence over all other Judges. The proposed number of Judges was six, which some thought too large a number, and some persons thought five would be a satisfactory number. He thought, however, that six would be a satisfactory number for the present. When the Superior Court of the United States was first organized, it was composed of six Judges, though the number was subsequently increased, and at that time their population was about the same as ours. There would be two court terms, but as power had been given to it to adjourn from time to time, the court would be, practically, constantly in session. All the clauses from 18 to 49 were especially in relation to appellate proceedings. The 50th clause gave the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction in controverted election cases, for if the law was to be interpreted by the courts of the different provinces, much difference would prevail.

Some alterations had been made in regard to cases of extradition, and some additions relating thereto, so far as the Province of Quebec was concerned. The following was the clause of the Bill referring to the subject:—It was very important to have these cases adjudicated upon by the highest tribunal of the country, because it involved correspondence with foreign countries on treaty matters.

"Any person convicted of treason, felony, or misdemeanour, before any Court of Oyer and Terminer or Gaol Delivery, or before the Court of Queen's Bench in the Province of Quebec on its Crown side, whose conviction has been affirmed by any Court of last resort, or in the Province of Quebec by the Court of Queen's Bench on its appeal side, or any person in custody within the Dominion of Canada, whose extradition is claimed in pursuance of any treaty and whose application for discharge on a writ of Habeas Corpus a l subjiciendum has been refused, may appeal to the Supreme Court against the affirmation of such conviction or the refusal of such application, and the said Court shall make such rule or order therein, either in affirmance of the conviction, or for granting a new trial, or otherwise, as the justice of the case requires, and shall make all other necessary rules and orders for carrying such rule or order into effect, anything in the eightieth section of the Act. passed in the Session held in the thirty-second and thirty-third years of HER MAJESTY'S Reign, chapter twenty-nine, to the contrary, notwithstanding: Provided that no such Appeal shall be allowed where the Court affirming the conviction is unanimous, nor unless notice of Appeal in writing has been served on the Attorney General for the proper Province, within fifteen days after such affirmance or refusal."

He believed that this provision would be acceptable to the whole House. It was also desirable that some means should exist of setting right questions of law arising out of the execution of treaties with foreign countries. As would be seen from the 53rd clause of the Bill, the judgment of the Supreme Court, in all cases, would be final and conclusive. Hon. members would observe that on the question of appeal to the Privy Council, he had thought it better to make no provision in the Bill. Parties desiring to avail themselves of the right could address HER MAJESTY'S Privy Council by petition, and have their cases heard. He had omitted alluding to the subject purposely, because, while he did not desire to put any unnecessary obstacle in the way of exercising the right of petition, he wished to see the practice put an end to altogether. In view of the law recently passed in England, which was intended to have come into effect on the 1st November, 1874, but the operation of which had been postponed up to 1st November next, establishing a Supreme Court of Judicature, he thought the realization of his desire in respect to this matter was likely to be fulfilled. Under this law the jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council would be transferred to the Supreme Court of Judicature sitting in London. He did not think the right of appeal would not then be prized so much as it was now, because the new court in London would be a court of law, and not as the Privy Council is, a court of prerogative. He would like very well to see a clause introduced declaring that this right of appeal to the Privy Council existed no longer. There were very strong reasons in favour of the right of appeal to the Privy Council, but the reasons against it were still stronger. The right of appeal had been rather extensively used, and he might add, considerably abused in the Province of Quebec, by wealthy men and wealthy corporations to force suiters to compromise in cases in which they had succeeded in all the tribunals of the country. However, as he had already said, he had made no mention of the matter in the bill now before the House, but left it to be disposed at some future time. Clause 54 gave the Judges of the proposed Supreme Court jurisdiction in habeas corpus concurrently with the Judges of the several Provinces. In that portion of the bill referring to constitutional matters, he had preserved two of the clauses of the measure introduced by the right hon. member for Kingston. The first clause in reference to this subject—clause 55—provided that the Governor-in-Council might direct a special case to be laid before the Court for its opinion. Clause 56 gave the right to any Province, or any other interested party, thought fit to appear before the Court and be heard in any such case, but the decision rendered by the Court would not bear the character of a judgment, it would merely have its moral weight in assisting the Government to arrive at a determination. Clause 57 extended this reference to the other cases at the pleasure of the Governor-in-Council. As to the portion of the Bill relating to special jurisdiction, it was framed in order to satisfy a very generally expressed public desire that there should be some court which would settle the extent of the powers of Local Legislatures when these powers were in dispute. No one doubted, however, that under the constitution it was not in the power of this Parliament to give jurisdiction to such a court to try constitutional questions. As a matter of fact, the only power which could be conferred upon the court properly was to try appeals from the decisions of courts of original jurisdiction. A Justice of the Peace had as good a right, according to the constitution, to try constitutional questions as would the Judges of the highest existing courts, but it was obviously proper nevertheless that the trial of such cases should be in the hands of the highest tribunal in the land. Acknowledging his inability then to prepare a clause which could constitutionally confer the power of trying such cases upon the court directly he had resorted to the expedient of providing that, by the consent of the Provincial Governments concerned, decisions given by the Supreme Court would have their effect in the cases mentioned as fitted for reference to it. It had been suggested that the Imperial authorities should be asked to amend our constitution in this respect, but even with their assistance the change could not be made unless consented to by all the Provinces interested. He felt pretty sure that all the Provinces would not consent, for, as an example, be found that a petition had been filed from New Brunswick protesting against the measure introduced by his right hon. friend the member for Kingston, and if the Imperial authorities were appealed to they would answer, as they have already done under such circumstances, that the Canadian Federal compact could not be altered without the consent of all the parties thereto. The constitution could only be altered with the consent of the Local authorities, and he thought the simpler way would be to make the adoption of these clauses of the Act a matter of choice with the Local Governments. If they adopted it, they would reap its advantages, and if they did not, they would occupy exactly the same position as they did at present. But, then, the Government would have the advantage of referring constitutional cases, as provided in clauses 55, 56 and 57. He would read over the clauses of the Bill bearing upon this subject, as follow :—

"When the Legislature of any Province forming part of Canada shall have passed an Act agreeing and providing that the Supreme Court shall have jurisdiction in the following cases, viz.:—(1st) Of controversies between the Dominion of Canada and such Province; (2nd) Of controversies between such Province and any other Province or Provinces; (3rd) Of suits, actions or proceedings in which the parties thereto by their pleadings shall have raised the question of the validity of a Provincial or Dominion Act; (4th) In any case in which any Superior Court of original jurisdiction in common law or equity in any Province, or any judge of such Court sitting alone in such case, after having heard the parties, declares that in the opinion of such Court or judge the proper decision in such case cannot be given without considering some Dominion or Provincial Act or some part thereof to be unconstitutional; then this section and the three following sections of this Act shall be in force to all intents and purposes.

"The procedure in the cases firstly and secondly mentioned in the next preceding section shall be in the Exchequer Court, and shall, unless otherwise provided for by general rules made in pursuance of this Act, be regulated by the present practice of HER MAJESTY'S Court of Exchequer at Westminster, as far as the same may be consistent with the provisions of this Act, and an appeal shall lie in any such case to the Supreme Court.

"In the case thirdly mentioned in the next preceding section but one, the parties shall, notwithstanding, proceed to hearing and trial, according to the ordinary rules of procedure in the Province wherein the case is pending; and if the trial is before a jury, the verdict shall be taken; but no final judgment will be rendered in such case by the Court or Judge before whom it is pending, whose duty it shall then be, on the application of either of the parties, to order that the case be removed to the Supreme Court, to be heard and decided upon the question so raised, and it shall be so removed accordingly; and after the decision of the Supreme Court, the said case shall be sent back, with a copy of the judgment on the question raised, to the Court or Judge whence it came, to be then and there finally adjudicated upon as to justice may appertain.

"In the case fourthly mentioned in the next preceding section but two, where the validity of a Dominion or a Provincial Statute shall not have been raised by the parties, but in which the Court or Judge is of opinion that the proper decision cannot be given without considering a Dominion or a Provincial Act to be unconstitutional, it shall be the duty of the said Court or Judge to make and fyle of record a declaration in writing, stating the reasons for considering such law as unconstitutional; and after the fyling of such declaration, the case, at the diligence of either party to the suit, shall be removed to the Supreme Court, to be there heard upon the question raised, and after the decision of the Supreme Court, the said case shall be sent back, with a copy of the judgment, to the Court or Judge whence it came, to be then and there finally adjudicated upon as to justice may appertain.

"The next three preceding sections apply only to cases of a civil nature, and shall take effect in the cases therein provided for respectively, whatever may be the value of the matter in dispute, and there shall be no further appeal to the Supreme Court on any point decided by it in any such case, nor on any other point unless the value of the matter in dispute exceeds one thousand dollars."

It will be seen by these clauses that if, for instance, in a case before a Justice of the Peace, in an action for illegally selling liquor, in which the constitutionality of a local law would be raised (as some doubts seem to exist about the constitutionality of some of these laws,) that the evidence would have to be received and the case heard with the exception only that judgment could not be rendered on such questions, it would be the duty of the Judge to refer the case to the Supreme Court for adjudication on the constitutional question. It will be the same in civil cases tried before a jury. Evidence would be received and verdict taken, but the constitutional question would be reserved for the Supreme Court. One objection was that in cases involving a larger amount than $1,000 there might be two appeals, one on the constitutional question and the other on the merits of the case afterwards, but such appeals would be very rare, because when one case would have been decided it would serve as a precedent and become the law of the Dominion. There would be no similar case brought again before the Supreme Court. With the right of appeal this Court would have jurisdiction in revenue cases. To a certain amount the jurisdiction would be exclusive but under it would be concurrent with the other Courts. Finally there were general provisions for the appointment of Registrars and other officers necessary for the Court. These were the principal features of the Bill with the details arranged in order to suit the object thereof in so far as he had been able to effect this. The measure was certainly of the greatest importance. It had been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne four times, and this was the third Bill that had been submitted to the House. Every one admitted that it was very important that the Federal Government should have an institution of its own in order to secure the due execution of its laws. There might perhaps come a time when it would not be very safe for the Federal Government to be at the mercy of the tribunals of the Provinces. He believed this to be an anomaly contrary to the spirit of our Constitution. It was not necessary for him to add any remarks concerning the importance of the measure, because every member was aware of it. He resumed his seat expressing the hope that the House would give its most careful consideration to the bill irrespective of party. Every one he believed would admit that it was not a party measure, and think it his duty to assist in carrying a good law which had for its sole object the harmonious working of our young construction.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said by the courtesy of the Minister of Justice he had received an advance copy of the measure, and had been able to follow him in his very interesting speech on this occasion. He (Sir JOHN) was glad that the measure of the late Government had been of service to the hon. gentleman. He could quite understand and appreciate, as he was sure the whole House would appreciate, the desire of the hon. gentleman that this bill should be considered apart from party views, since its object was the establishment of a court of jurisdiction for dealing with litigation affecting all subjects and all parties. In the first place he did not intend to follow the hon. gentleman in all that he had said. His hon. friend had gone very carefully and elaborately into the different divisions of this measure, and the House would have a better opportunity of considering it on the second reading and for full discussion of all the clauses in Committee of the Whole. He quite agreed with the views of the hon. gentleman that this Court of Appeal, when established, would be a Court of Appeal for Canada —a court that could entertain appeals from the decisions of all the Provincial Courts, whether such decisions were based on Provincial laws, or laws of the Dominion. He knew there was one authority in this House who had a contrary opinion, and that authority was one that he greatly respected, and he was always sorry to differ from, but he (Sir JOHN) was fortified in his opinion by the views entertained by the Minister of Justice and the Government. He believed the logical and grammatical construction of the term "Court of Appeal" made it a Court of Appeal from all tribunals in this Dominion. The hon. Minister of Justice had pointed out one distinction between the Bill of the late Government and this. It was this, that the latter established here a Supreme Court which was a court of appellant jurisdiction as well as an Exchequer Court. He (Sir JOHN) was free to admit that this was an improvement for it avoided any disputes as to jurisdiction. The hon. gentleman would remember it was the intention of the Bill which he (Sir JOHN) had the honor to lay before Parliament that it should be a Supreme Court having an Appeal Court, and an Exchequer side; but he thought, on the whole, there should be two Courts as provided for in this Bill. He would wait until the Bill was further advanced before making up his mind as to the number of Judges necessary. The House would be very glad to hear the views of the hon. gentleman on this point, and to know why he fixed upon six and preferred that number to five or seven. After giving the question careful consideration he (Sir JOHN) thought on the whole, seven was not too many. It will be remembered, however, that in his Bill, it was proposed that the Supreme Court Judges should be the Judge who should try all cases of controverted elections. He thought perhaps it would be found by and bye that this jurisdiction must be conferred upon the Judges, and if they were to believe the English newspaper reports the number of controverted elections was growing very rapidly in the Mother Country, and the avenues of justice would be obstructed very much. The Minister of Justice had a Bill before the House compelling the Judges to sit de die in diem whatever might be their ordinary duties in their own Provinces, and the litigation in their own Courts. However, that was a matter that time would settle, and he did not doubt that, hereafter, if representations should be made from the different Provincial Courts that the ordinary administration of justice was being interfered with very much by this jurisdiction being thrown upon them, the Supreme Court Judges would be made available. At first he imagined that the duties of these Judges would not be onerous, that is to say, their time would not be so fully occupied as the other Judges, and they might probably be found available to try controverted elections originally instead of simply in appeal. The clauses concerning the constitutional questions to be submitted to these Judges would, of course, require the gravest consideration. He saw from the remarks of his hon. friend that he was fully impressed with the importance of these clauses and the necessity of their being fully considered and of seeing that they did not in any way infringe upon our constitution or erect any Court which would in any degree over-ride the Parliament of Canada. So far as he understood his hon. friend, these clauses were principally for the purpose of informing the conscience of the Government, just as the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council might be called upon by HER MAJESTY to give their opinion upon certain questions. He supposed that the new Supreme Court Act in England contained similar clauses. As to the two or three new clauses on the subject which the hon. gentleman had discussed at some length, they were so important that he would claim the liberty of reserving his opinion. As regards the question of appeal to the Privy Council, he had always held the opinion that as long as we were a dependency it was of importance that the right of every Canadian, as of every other British subject, to appeal to the Court of the highest jurisdiction should be preserved, though he was free to admit that sometimes this appeal was made the means of oppression in the case of a rich man against a poor man, on account of the great expense attending it. It seemed to him that it would be severing one of the links between this country and the Mother Country if the right of appeal were cut off ruthlessly. That, however, could only be done by Imperial statute. There was a good deal in what the hon. gentleman had said that the new Supreme Court in England was not a prerogative Court like the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Still that Court was designed by the Imperial Parliament to have all the functions by substitution which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had. In fact by the Act the Prerogative Court had been made statutory and conferred upon the new Court. As to the other details of the Bill they seemed to be very carefully considered, and he had no doubt that the hon. gentleman would receive from this side of the House any suggestions as to those details in the same spirit in which he had addressed the House in introducing the Bill.

The Bill was then read a first time.

STATISTICS.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said before the Orders of the Day were called he desired to draw the attention of the Premier to a point in which the Government in this House seemed to entertain a different opinion from the Government in the other end of the building. It would be in the recollection of the House that the member for South Waterloo offered a motion to refer the question of procuring statistics to a Committee which at the suggestion of the Premier was withdrawn. It would be noticed that in the other end of the building the Government had agreed to the appointment of a Committee to enquire into this subject.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. member for South Waterloo had proposed to refer the subject to a Committee of the Whole, while in the other House the motion was for a special Committee which was quite a different thing.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the object of the member for South Waterloo was to obtain the assistance of members of the House in considering the very important question of statistics. The hon. gentleman was met by the statement from the First Minister that in the present position of the question he (the Premier) did not consider the House could assist them, that the Government had the subject under consideration, and that it would be better to leave it in their hands. The House agreed to that view, and the motion was withdrawn. He was therefore somewhat surprised to learn that a motion having been made in the other end of the building to refer the same subject to a a Committee, the gentleman who represented the Government there had stated that the Government desired the assistance of a Committee on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had not the slightest objection to the hon. member for South Waterloo receiving a Special Committee on the subject, but that hon. gentleman had proposed to refer it to the Committee of the Whole, and he (Mr. MACKENZIE) had stated that he could see no object to be gained in taking that course, inasmuch as no result could be accomplished by it further than obtaining a discussion. If his hon. friend desired a Special Committee the Government would be very glad to have its assistance.

Mr. YOUNG said he had withdrawn his motion on the understanding that the Government had the matter under consideration, and he supposed that they intended at a future time to propose some scheme to place our statistics upon a better footing than they were at present. He knew that ultimately the matter would have to be dealt with by the Government, and therefore he was perfectly satisfied to leave it in their hands.

Hon. Mr. Tupper.

MILITIA AMENDMENT ACT.

Hon. Mr. VAIL moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act respecting Militia and Defence.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked if this Bill would increase the militia expenditures.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said said the increase would be very trifling. The chief amendment proposed was to place the militia of the country under a Major General instead of a Deputy Adjutant General, with, he thought, about the same salary.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL objected to the enormous expenditure incurred for militia purposes, and when concurrence in the militia estimates came before the House, would take the opportunity of giving expression to his views on that subject.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the expenditure now was only about a million, whereas under the late Government, of which the hon. gentleman was a member, it was a million and a-half.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Last session I declared my opinion that half a million was as much as should be expended.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—The hon. gentleman took care not to express that opinion until his Government went out of power.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had always held the opinion he now expressed. (Laughter.) Hon. gentlemen opposite might laugh, but they had not the courage to adhere to the opinions they had expressed when in opposition, that the militia expenditure should be decreased. He held that half a million was quite enough, and in that he believed he would be sustained by the hon. member for South Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said his hon. friend, the leader of the Left Centre, was of opinion that all money that was spent on defence was mis-spent, unless it was spent on the navy. The hon. gentleman had been looking around for a follower, and he had found either a follower or a leader in the hon. member for South Ontario. In reference to the general question of defence, it must never be forgotten that in 1865 a deputation went to England, and the whole subject of the relative contributions for the defence of the empire was discussed, and it was arranged then that the contribution of the old Province of Canada towards its own defence should not be less than one million dollars a year. That arrangement had never been altered, and on the faith of it the Imperial Government still kept a force at Halifax, and were pledged to use the whole force of the empire in our defence.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he could stand the badinage of his hon. friend, and the laughter which had been raised at his expense. He held that this country was not bound by the arrangement entered into by the old Province of Canada with reference to militia expenditure, and moreover since that arrangement was made HER MAJESTY'S forces had been withdrawn from nearly every city in the Dominion, leaving only a small force at Halifax. He fully appreciated the advantages he derived from the protection of the Imperial Government, but what we had to look to was our own resources and our own expenditure. A simple paper organization of the militia was all we needed, and there was no necessity for us spending more than a half a million. When the militia estimates were again before the House, he would have more to say on the subject.

The Bill was then read a second time.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER, in moving the second reading of the Bill to amend the acts respecting controverted elections, said he proposed when the bill was before Committee of the Whole to propose some amendments, in order to embody the views of the hon. member for Cardwell, and the suggestions of another hon. gentleman who had introduced a Bill on the subject.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE suggested that an amendment be also introduced giving the Judge in election cases power to adjudge part of the costs to the agents by whose acts the election was voided. This would not only be fair to the respondent, but would have the effect of restraining agents from doing unlawful acts.

SUPPLY.

The House went into Committee of Supply, Mr. SCATCHERD in the chair.

On the item of $721,520.25 for collection of Customs,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the increase in Ontario, amounting to $13,848, was chiefly caused by the creation of one new office at PRINCE ARTHUR'S Landing and certain advantages, as stated by him the other day, given to the merchants of Hamilton, Toronto, Kingston and London. Collectively these comprehended the great bulk of the increase in Ontario. Similarly in Quebec the great bulk of the increase was caused at the port of Montreal, and in St. John in New Brunswick. In Manitoba and the North-West Territories there was an increase of $1,500. The remainder of the items were the same as heretofore voted. The Minister of Customs would explain details.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked why there was an increase of $700 in the port of Chatham, N. B.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said it was caused by the appointment of an appraiser who was not there before. There was an officer in Newcastle who had been doing the work at both Chatham and Newcastle, receiving his salary partly for one and partly for the other. He was taken off at Chatham, and an appraiser was appointed there in his place.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL declined to accept that as the actual reason. Newcastle and Chatham were five miles apart and the Customs Officer lived at Douglastown about a mile or a mile and a half from Newcastle. His salary was reduced because it was deemed convenient to punish a supporter of PETER MITCHELL, and reward a man who had canvassed the county against him (Mr. MITCHELL), and lied about him. Mr. MILLER, the old official, lived nearer Chatham than Newcastle. He (Mr. MITCHELL) mentioned those facts because the Minister of Customs might not be aware of them.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE assured the hon. gentleman that the change was not made on political grounds, but on representations made to the department that Mr. MILLER was residing in Newcastle.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—He was not residing in Newcastle.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said the amount Mr. MILLER received was as much as the Act allowed him. The officer at Chatham collected a great deal more than the officer at Newcastle.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL had not a word to say to the amount of salary. The gen tleman who collected for Miramichi, which comprised besides Chatham and Newcastle, Douglastown and Nelson, resided at Douglastown. He had steadily opposed Mr. HUTCHESON, the former member for Northumberland and it was through the influence of the latter that he was removed. Mr. MILLER had well and faithfully discharged his duties, but because he was a friend of PETER MITCHELL's his salary was reduced from $1,100 to $500. The change was made without his (Mr. MITCHELL's) recommendation. Occupying an independent position in this House, he asked the Government for no favors, but he was bound to state that he had no hand, act, or part in removing Mr. MILLER from his position.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said the hon. gentleman must surely know that an officer could not discharge the duties of an appraiser and not live in either town. The salary was the maximum amount allowed by law, and as there was nothing to do in the winter months, it was fair enough. He repeated his assurance that the change was not made for political reasons.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL pointed to instances where appraisers did not live within a mile and a half of the ports where they discharged their duties. He challenged the hon. Minister of Customs to show one single charge that had ever been made against Mr. MILLER in his official capacity. While he (Mr. MITCHELL) had to accept the explanations of the hon. Minister of Customs, he had his own convictions.

Mr. PLUMB called attention to the fact that there was an increase of $375, at Fort Erie, $450 at St. Catharines, $950 at Clifton, $2,275 at Hamilton, and a decrease of $190 at Niagara. He asked for explanations.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said the contingent fund for Fort Erie had been found insufficient, hence the increase at that port. At Hamilton the increase was for delivering goods to merchants. Instead of charging them for the examination of their goods the expense was covered by this appropriation. There had been one appointment made at Clifton at the request of the Collector there, an increase of salaries of two officers and an increase of $50 in the contingent fund.

Mr. PLUMB said these were illustrations in a small way of the economy which they were told would be shown by hon. gentlemen opposite. These were small sums, but they amounted to a good deal in the aggregate.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK complained that the Government in making appointments frequently passed new men over the heads of officers who had been in the service for years, and for no cause that he could see, but for political reasons. If there was a Civil Service Act on the statute books it should be observed in making these promotions.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the Civil Service Act would be brought down shortly, but he did not think they could follow the same course with regard to the outside service as with the Civil Service at Ottawa. The other Government did not do so, nor did the present Administration find it possible always to promote according to seniority. Where it was possible to do so, it had been done. It was not always possible to find among employees who had been four or five years in the service, persons fit to discharge the duties of collectors. With regard to the increase of salaries, it would be remembered that there was an increase of two and a-half millions in the revenue, and there was necessarily a larger expense in collecting it. The Minister of Customs had devoted himself to the work of reforming certain very flagrant abuses, which had existed in his department for some time, and it was quite impossible for him to do so unless he employed officers of a competent and reliable character. Some of the most flagrant of these abuses were found in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and he could not have believed they existed if he had not got the details. In one place on the boundary of the United States, merchants were in the habit of taking goods across the frontier without entering them, and sending in checks, at such times as pleased themselves, to the collector of that port. The Minister of Customs found it necessary, in view of such abuses, to take measures for the better collection of the revenue.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked the Finance Minister to specify any charges he had to make against the officials of New Brunswick. His opinion was that the department was as well managed in that Province as in any other part of the Dominion. If abuses existed they should be investigated and remedied. It was a fallacious argument to advance in support of the increase of salaries, to say that it was due to the increase of revenue. Merchants could do a business yielding a profit of $500,000 on the same staff as one giving $250,000. It made no difference to a collector whether he collected a duty of twenty per cent., or fifteen per cent. There was no additional calculation or labor through the unjust and unnecessary tax levied by the Finance Minister. He (Mr. MITCHELL) was not one of those who objected to the increase of salaries ; he merely objected to the justification which was taken.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE reminded the hon. member that under the Civil Service Act, when the revenue of certain ports reached a certain magnitude, the collectors were entitled to increased salaries. That had taken place in a number of instances. He had mislaid a statement which had been prepared showing these increases, and also where salaries were paid to officers far in advance of what the Civil Service Act allowed. They had been established by the late Government, and the present administration thought it was not advisable to reduce them. Among these were the ports of Lindsay and Collingwood. The collector at Lindsay received $1,000 a year, and the collector at Collingwood $1,200, though the revenue did not amount to $5,000 at either place, and they were not entitled to such salaries. The Government could not in every case decide upon the amount of salary by the mere collections, because, in some ports where they were comparatively small, the business done at the Customs Houses through shipping was very large, and imposed a certain amount of work that was to be considered when the question of salary was taken into account. The general complaint the other day was that the salaries were too small and should be increased. He was not aware of a single case where a salary had been increased without giving due weight to every circumstance connected with it. If the Government had erred, it was in the interests of the public and not of the service.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said this was an intelligent reason, and he repeated that he did not object to the increase of salaries, but to the reasons given by the Finance Minister for it.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT thought the House would understand that if duties were increased there would be greater inducements for evading them, and, consequently, an increased amount of vigilance would be necessary to collect the revenue.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said the principle on which salaries were based was this—wages should be commensurate with the labor performed, whether the port was large or small. With Collectors a different rule prevailed. He could understand the difficulties of the Government. They were not long in office and they were suffering from a swarm of new flies. The old ones were satisfied, but the new ones were very troublesome to the Premier who, it must be admitted was fighting them manfully, and trying to brush them away. If the hon. gentleman would make a candid confession, he would say that the administration of the affairs of the Dominion was less embarrassing than the swarm of flies which were constantly putting their stings into him. He (Sir JOHN) had a good deal of sympathy for the hon. gentleman, and when he saw him err in that way, could understand the pressure that was brought to bear on him. With regard to the outside service, the principal objection he had was that in somes places—Kingston for instance—new men in subordinate offices were given positions over the heads of officials who had been longer in the service. With regard to the head officers, the Government must have a great deal of latitude in making appointments, but with subordinates this principle should be rigidly maintained, and there should be no preference shown to new men. It chilled the hearts of young men in the service to see new men promoted over their heads, and it destroyed their usefulness. In discussing the Civil Service Act it was the general feeling that the English system should be followed—that an officer when appointed should not be considered anchored, but promoted from a smaller to a larger port. The late Government though they tried to adopt this system were not successful because of the intense localism which prevailed, young men preferring often to remain where they were settled to moving to another port where the salary might be larger. Still, he thought the English system was better than our own.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE quite admitted that the hon. member for Kingston was an admirable preacher, and it was to be hoped that nothing would occur which would prevent him exercising his talents in that particular direction. The hon. gentleman thought that many hearts had been broken by the injustice of promoting new men over their heads, If he would take a retrospect of the last twenty years, he (Sir JOHN) would feel grieved at the suffering he had caused. The greatest trouble the present government experienced was not from the new flies, but from the old ones the hon. gentleman had left behind him.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—You are killing them as fast as you can.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the government had been obliged to exercise a great deal of forbearance where officials had been appointed for purely political reasons without any regard to their fitness for office. He did not object to any reasonable thing that had been done for persons in a certain position, but it was hardly fair for the hon. gentleman after having so extensively done this, to come to this House and administer to the government a lecture on the proper mode of conducting the public business. The system which the hon. gentleman had laid as the proper one to follow, could not always be pursued. In some cases which had been referred to, there was no promotion simply because there was no person who ought to be promoted. He knew one port, for instance, where the leading official, under the collector, had been appointed by the hon. member for Kingston for political services rendered by a friend. A vacancy occurred which was not filled until the new Government came into power, when it was filled by the promotion of the man appointed by the hon. gentleman himself. Nothing could please him (Mr. MACKENZIE) better than to be entirely rid of the responsibility which this patronage involved ; and if a plan could be devised such as that in operation in England, which could be fairly carried out, the Government would be glad to adopt it. They had endeavored to appoint no one who was not qualified for an office, and, if possible, to give promotion to those who were entitled to it by seniority. The system of making appointments for political reasons had been carried out to such an extent by the old Government that it was impossible to entirely avoid the system now, but he admitted it was not a correct principle.

Mr. WOOD was sorry the hon. member for Kingston did not put his principles into practice while in power. For instance, in a certain port an official who had long been working at a salary of $500 a year, saw men appointed over his head who were less competent. The present Government, on coming into power, saw the wrong, and rectified it immediately. The man who received a salary of $1,200 was put back to his proper position of locker, at a salary of $800, and the other man was advanced to his position, but at a salary of only $900 a year instead of $1,200, to which he was entitled. He (Mr. WOOD) hoped the Government would pursue the course suggested by the hon. member for Kingston, and relieve members of Parliament from exercising the influence they now possessed in the distribution of patronage.

Mr. BERTRAM called the attention of the Government to the difference between the salaries of the officer at Dunnville and the officer at Port Colborne. The former received $1,300, the latter only $800, though the collections were much larger at Colborne than at Dunnville.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said this was due to the fact that the Customs officer at Port Colborne received a large salary for collecting Inland Revenue.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand) thought a considerable saving might be effected by abolishing the office of collector of Welland Canal tolls at Dunnville, allowingt he duties to be performed by the collector of customs at that port.

Mr. McCALLUM supported this view.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had made a note of the suggestion which would be considered.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) complained that the officers in the small towns, who had seen considerable service, could not obtain preferment to collectorships in the large ports, even if their abilities qualified them for the position. This arose because both sides of the House declared that they could not carry out the Civil Service Reform Act, a fact which he regretted. He referred to the case of an officer who though possessed of good abilities, only received $900 per annum.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE regretted that the salary received by the officer referred to was only $600. The hon. member would, however, understand the difficulty which would arise were the salaries of officers in the small towns increased throughout the Dominion, on account of the increased expenditure which it would involve.

Mr. JONES said all he desired was that officers at the small towns should have preferment to the higher offices, if they were qualified.

Mr. BERTRAM said there were several ports in the Dominion where one officer could perform the duties of Revenue officer and Custom House officer. At Lindsay, $1,555 were expended to collect a revenue of $4,657. The Inland Revenue officer could, without much trouble, collect that revenue, and by adopting that arrangement a considerable saving would be effected in the Custom Department.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER regretted that the Minister of Finance, knowing that he (Mr. TUPPER) was anxious to take the earliest opportunity of replying to his speech the other night, and that he had at the request of the hon. member postponed doing so until the motion was made that the SPEAKER do leave the chair,—should again refer in pointed language to abuses in the Customs Department of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The hon. Finance Minister should have left the statement to be made by the hon. gentleman who presides over the Customs Department. He now rose in his place to say—and he mentioned it in justice to himself after the very pointed remarks of the Minister of Finance—that he was prepared to meet any statement which the Minister of Customs could make by which it might be attempted to be shown that during the brief period he (Mr. TUPPER) had the honor of administering that Department he failed in the discharge of his duty to this House or the people of this country in any way whatever. He invited the Minister of Customs if he had any statement to make or any reason to believe that he had failed to efficiently administer the Department when he was at its head, to state the facts specifically to the House, and allow him to reply to them—not such vague insinuations as were made by the Minister of Finance, but some distinct, positive statement by which an hon. member would know what were the charges brought against him, and be prepared to meet them. He might state, for the information of the House, that, so far as the administration of Customs in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia was concerned, the late Government labored for some time under considerable difficulty and disadvantage. It might not be known to the House that the gentleman who was appointed several years ago to the imporant position of Inspector of Customs, a gentleman of great ability and high character in the public service—unfortunately became insane, and was sent to the hospital for the insane a considerable time ago. Under these melancholy circumstances the Government were reluctant to appoint a successor to that officer, while there was the slightest possibility that his unfortunate malady would be successfully treated, and that officer be enabled to resume his duties. In consequence of that circumstance a vacancy occurred in the important office of Inspector of Customs for a considerable period, and it was only at a comparatively recent date that the Government found that the case was hopeless, and appointed an officer to the position. He (Mr. TUPPER) was quite prepared to admit that under those circumstances, there might not have been that close vigilance which otherwise the Government would have had the advantage of; but he was not aware down to this moment of anything that occurred in the Customs Department of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick which showed that he had failed to discharge his duty. Of course, there was the case at St. John which was brought under the notice of the Public Accounts Committee—that was, however, anterior to the time when he accepted the position of Minister of Customs—and it was dealt with by the Administration the moment it was brought before their notice by the Committee, with very great vigor, almost amounting to harshness. The Finance Minister had indicated a place which, he said, had been the residence of the late Minister of Customs, where a very lax system prevailed. He had not the slightest idea to what place the hon. member referred, and, having discharged the duties of his position to the best of his ability, he could assure the House that if there was any laxity at any port he was ignorant of it. It was true that under the old system in Nova Scotia, there was considerable freedom allowed the collectors; that in country towns and villages it was the practice for collectors frequently to allow goods to pass into the hands of merchants without pre-payment of the duties. It was quite possible that this system might to a certain extent have been adopted by some of the officers; but on all those occasions the officer was held to be responsible, and he was not aware of a single case in which a single dollar had been lost to the revenue from any laxity of that kind. If any case could be mentioned, he would be glad to give explanations in respect to it. What he complained of in the statements made by the Finance Minister was that the charges were insinuated rather than made in terms which would enable a member who had occupied the position of Minister of Customs to meet it promptly and deal with it as might be required, and in a manner which he was convinced, would meet the satisfaction of the House.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said he did not understand his colleague, the hon. Minister of Finance, to have charged the member for Cumberland with any neglect of duty while Minister of Customs. It was quite true, however, as his colleague had said, that irregularities did exist while the hon. member for Cumberland was at the head of the Department. They had been revealed by Inspectors, appointed by the present Government, who had been inspecting the offices in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario, and in some instances the irregularities had been going on since 1868. These irregularities were found to involve a loss in two places of $16,000, and they had been going on since 1868. It appeared that the collectors had been in the habit of allowing merchants to take goods from ware-houses, steam vessels or cars, without any regard to their being in bond, and without duty being first paid on them. At another place merchants had been allowed to bring goods into the Dominion across a river which formed the boundary between Canada and the United States, and make their returns for the duties at the end of one or two months. Some cases of a similar character had also been brought to light in the Upper Provinces. While he mentioned those facts to show that irregularities did exist, and had been discovered by the Government inspectors, he, at the same time, desired to state that every liberty and the benefit of every doubt would always be given to the merchant in case of trouble and difficulty.

It being six o'clock the SPEAKER left the chair.

——:++:——

AFTER RECESS

The House again went into Committee of Supply, Mr. SCATCHERD in the chair.

The Committee resumed consideration of the item of $721,520.25, collection of customs.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said he thought it right to call the attention of the Committee to the amount of $10,000, to cover appointments, promotions, &c. It was very strange that the Government should ask for a sum of money like this without any statement of its purpose further than that quoted. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in opposition they cried out against the voting of money when its purpose was not clearly specified, and he thought they were justified in doing so. The system was a most reprehensible one, but in this case they could not make use of the tu quoque argument and reply that hon. gentlemen on his side of the House had done the same thing when they were in power, for the item appeared in the estimates last year for the first time.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE thought this money had been voted in some way for a considerable number of years, and he knew at any rate that there was likely to be use for it. The estimate for the port of Halifax, for example, would be exceeded he had no doubt, and it was to meet contingencies of this kind that the vote was asked. Of course if it were not needed it would not be used. He might add that it often happened that they had to appoint extra inspectors to go to certain ports of the Dominion, and this item would meet expenses of that kind.

Mr. BOWELL asked if these expenses were not covered by the vote of $15,000 for contingencies of head office.

Mr, JONES (South Leeds) complained of the small salaries paid the officers at a number of ports, many of whom had been induced to accept situations at a small remuneration in the hope that they would receive promotion under the Civil Service Act. The only complaint he had to make against the $10,000, was that it was not sufficient—a larger sum should be asked for.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he quite agreed that it was a very improper thing to ask for a vote of this kind if it could be avoided, or unless the Government are prepared to point out the specific uses to which it will be applied. They would look into the matter before concurrence, and if the sum should be considered necessary, the use to which it was intended to be applied would be explained to the House. If they could manage without it they would.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said in reply to the question of the hon. member for Hastings that the sum of $15,000 that gentleman had alluded to was for the inside service, and not for the outside service. In reference to the remarks of the hon. member for South Leeds, there were cases in which the salaries might be increased, and increased with great justice.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he thought the Finance Minister could scarcely have been serious when he suggested on a former occasion that a large increase made in the Customs Department by the late Government warranted a large increase by the present Government. He did not, however, intend to take any exception to the increase because he had found from experience that it was in the interest of the public revenue to pay those liberally who were engaged in its collection. With reference to the item for promotions it was well-known that under the regulations of the Department when a port reached a certain amount of revenue, the collector there was entitled to an increase of salary, and besides this, new officers were occasionally needed, and therefore the Government would require this vote. It was also remembered that the $70,000 voted by the House two years ago for the re-adjustment of salaries was at that time applied to both the inside and outside Civil Service.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. member must remember that he distributed himself to the inside service only.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said they distributed some $55,000 to the inside service, and then distributed the balance in the outside service, but it fell far short of what was required.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL observed that the Premier having stated that on concurrence he would be prepared to give information as to how this sum was likely to be expended, the item should be allowed to pass.

Item passed.

On item 170, under the head of Excise,

Mr. DECOSMOS desired to call the attention of the Government to the state of the Inland Revenue Department in British Columbia. The total revenue from this source in that Province in the year 1873-4 was $10,878, and the expenditure $6,065, leaving a net revenue of $4,813. This revenue was almost wholly derived from five breweries and one distillery in the Town of Victoria, and to collect it surely three officers were not required. These parties did not object to paying the tax, but they would prefer to pay a fixed license and be relieved from the inquisitorial system of the Excise Department. If this plan were adopted the Government would get more revenue, and the brewers would be relieved from a great deal of annoyance.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said the same system was applied to British Columbia as was in force in the rest of the Dominion. An exception could not be made in favor of any one Province. If the hon. gentleman had any better system to propose, he would be glad to give it his consideration.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL called attention to the fact that at the port of Newcastle the predecessor of the present collector received five per cent. on all excise duties he collected. Since the appointment of the present collector he had continued to perform the same duties, but was not allowed the commission of five per cent.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said he would make inquiry into that case. The rule of the Department was that where there was no excise officer, the officer of customs collected the excise and received a commission of five per cent.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said all he asked was that that rule be applied in the case he had instanced. Item passed, also Item 171.

On item 172, for standards of weights and measures ordered in England, but not yet delivered, $25,000, in answer to Hon. Mr. MITCHELL,

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said the $70,000 voted last year was found not to be enough to buy all the required standards, and therefore this additional vote was called for.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked whether the Government intended to put the Act respecting weights and measures in force at once, and whether they would extend the Act to all the cities and towns of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said the Act provided that it should come into force six months after a notice to that effect appeared in the Official Gazette. The notice had been delayed till the standards had arrived from England. It has now been published, and the Act would come into force on the 1st of July.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) said he had hoped that the Government would not put this Act into force at all, as he considered it a step in the wrong direction. It would be much better to assimilate our weights and measures to those of the rest of the continent, as we had done our currency and our railway guages. The Imperial standard, which was to be introduced by this Act, would cause a great deal of inconvenience throughout the country, and if it was made compulsory it would be very unpopular.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the late Government had introduced this measure under an imperative sense of their duty to the country, and he believed that although it might be attended with temporary inconvenience it would prove to be a substantial reform. He hoped the Government would take steps to make public the general terms of the law before it went into force, so that the people would become familiar with it.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said that would be done.

Item passed, also item 173, salaries of Inspectors of Weights and Measures, $60,000.

On item 174, for the purchase and distribution of standards of flour, &c., $3,000 in answer to Hon. Mr. MITCHELL, Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said this vote was required to provide Inspectors of flour, fish, &c., with the necessary standards.—Item passed.

On item 175 to meet expenses under the Act 36 Vic., Chap. 49.,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked what steps it was proposed to take under this Act.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the present idea was to appoint medical officers familiar with chemistry in the large cities of the Dominion, whose duty would be to examine samples of different articles of food, and if they found any adulteration the parties guilty would be prosecuted.—Item passed.

Items 176, salaries and contingencies of canal officers; 177, collection of slide and boom dues; 178, repairs and working expenses of ditto, were passed without discussion.

On item 179, $2,055,000 Intercolonial and other Government Railways in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick,

Mr. DOMVILLE inquired whether that amount of money was to be applied to what we understood as the Intercolonial Railway proper, or whether all the Government railways in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were included. There did not seem to be any well marked distinction between the railways in this respect. He would have referred to this subject before now, but as it had been relegated to a sub-Committee, and as Mr. BRYDGES and others would be called before that Committee, he had refrained from doing so. We could not, however, allow this amount to pass en bloc without asking whether the Government had placed it to the account of construction or maintenance.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the hon. gentleman would see the details at page 69. He added that the term "Intercolonial Railway" included all the Government railways in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. YOUNG called attention to the fact that there was $447,000 of a reduction in the expenditure in this one single branch of the public service, and the mere statement reflected, he thought considerably, upon the character of the management of the late Government. He did not intend to make any remarks upon this point, seeing that the whole subject had been referred to a committee, but would simply say that it was a very good proo of the energy and economy which the Minister of Public Works had been able to infuse into his Department.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said the hon. gentleman for South Waterloo was in too great a hurry to take credit to the Government. The fact was that last year they had increased the estimate by $496,000, and this year they had reduced it about $447,000, leaving a net increase over the highest estimate of the late Government of $40,000.

Mr. YOUNG said the increase last year was accounted for by the changed system of making up the accounts, charged, as much of the expenditure was, to working expenses instead of capital account. Surely the hon. gentleman was not so ignorant as not to know of the mismanagement on the Intercolonial Railway which had been brought to light by Mr. BRYDGES, If he were acquainted with the facts, his temerity in challenging comparision was extraordinary. He (Mr. YOUNG) took for granted that the reduction accomplished by the Government was a bona fide one, while it was well-known that the increase last year was not due to any greater expenditure, but to a desire to have the expenditures which already existed charged to their proper account.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) would like to know whether the reduction was upon capital account or working expenses, because until that was explained, it was impossible to say whether the Government was worthy of praise or blame. If the diminution were chargeable to construction, he thought the eulogiums of the hon. member for South Waterloo were uncalled for, as there was nothing more natural, now that the road was finished, than that such a reduction should take place. He hoped soon to see the day when there would be no charge against the Intercolonial Railway except for running expenses.

Mr. DOMVILLE contended that the expenditures for several new works on the railway, to the amount of $47.000 should have been charged to construction, whereas they had been charged to maintenance; the same principle, in his opinion, being applicable in this case by which merchants spread the expenses of starting in business over a series of years. He would like to know what had been done with the old rails taken up and replaced on what was formerly known as the European and North American Railway.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said they were returned as "stores sold."

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL desired to know whether the amount realized was charged to cost or deducted from the actual expenditure of the year.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was not quite sure but he would find out.

Mr. DOMVILLE maintained that there was no reduction but rather an increase in the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked the leader of the Government to postpone the discussion which he knew must take place upon this item because there were statements made in that regard, especially in the report laid before the country by Mr. BRYDGES, which his hon. friend could well understand it was quite impossible for him (Mr. TUPPER) to allow to pass without notice.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was most willing that the hon. gentleman should have a chance of making any statement, or entering into any discussion on the subject he might desire.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL did not desire to enter into a discussion on this subject at the present stage, but the hon. member for South Waterloo had challenged comparison between the administration of the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway under Mr. BRYDGES and the present Government, and under the late Government. He did not desire to bring the name of Mr. BRYDGES before the Committee, but that gentleman's name having once been before us it was made public property. He (Mr. MITCHELL) was quite prepared to discuss the management of the Intercolonial Railway under both parties, and although it might be true that some of the things referred to by Mr. BRYDGES were open to criticism and censure, he held that Mr. BRYDGES should be subjected to the same treatment as Mr. CARVELL. He felt very doubtful whether in the end it would turn out whether the hon. member for South Waterloo had been wise in challenging this comparison.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it seemed to him an extraordinary thing that the hon. gentleman should make an attack of this kind, particularly after having said that he did not intend to enter into any discussion on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he simply resented the remarks of the hon. member for South Waterloo.

Mr. YOUNG said the proper time to enter into a discussion was when the item came up in connection with the report of the sub-Committee. Nobody, however, was afraid of what the hon. gentleman did upon this or any other matter. They had found from long experience that his bark was worse than his bite.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said it had frequently been found that his bite was worse than his bark—at any rate his position in the House would compare very respectably with that of the hon. member for South Waterloo.

The item was allowed to stand.

Item 180, $250,000 Intercolonial Railway, Quebec—was passed without discussion.

On item 181, $200,000, Prince Edward Island Railway.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he understood at one time that this Railway had been taken over from the Local authorities, but he now understood that there was a heavy claim for extras by the contractors, Messrs. SCHREIBER and BURPEE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that was a subject with which the Government had nothing to do, but he never heard of the claim before. At the time of Confederation, the Island Government had two hundred miles of road under contract, there was no distinct arrangement made in regard to it, and the Local authorities were allowed to continue in charge of its construction, the Dominion Government paying upon their certificates. The entire amount thus paid was about $44,000, and the final certificate of the engineer was being waited for. The Dominion Government had nothing to do with the contractors; they settled with the Island Government. The Dominion Government, however, had to take measures early last summer to prepare for working the road, and certain expenditures had been incurred upon that account. The money asked now was for the working of the road, and had no connection with the claims of contractors. He added, in reply to a few other questions, that preparations were made for obtaining further locomotive power, in addition to maintaining those they already had.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he was informed that there six locomotives on the railway that were of very little use. The Dominion Government had to assure the bonds provided to meet the cost of building the road. The Government of Prince Edward Island gave a contract to Messrs. SCHREIBER and BURPEE to build a railway which, when the Island came into Confederation, was paid for by bonds issued by the Dominion Government, and yet the House was now informed that several of the locomotives were worn out. Either the Island Government or the contractors were answerable for placing the railway in such a position, that no repairs to locomotives would be required or new locomotives purchased.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the contract was not made with the Dominion Government. Mr. SWINYARD was sent to the Island last summer by this Government to make a thorough inspection of the road. They subsequently sent down another engineer. As Mr. BOYD, the engineer of the Island Government, was employed by them and not by the Dominion Government, and Mr. GREGORY, the contractors' engineer, was partially employed as foreman to the contractors, so that it was desirable in the public interest to have a thorough inspection of the road made by an independent engineer appointed by this Government. A statement of the result of that inspection and all the details connected with it was now being printed, and he hoped it would be distributed in a few days. There are fourteen locomotives, six heavy, four comparatively light, or too light for general traffic, and the others are of medium sizes.

Mr. DOMVILLE hoped the papers which the Government would bring down would contain all the particulars in regard to the transfer of the railway to the Dominion Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there were no papers connected with the transfer. The moment the contract was finished the road was handed over to the Dominion as a matter of course, but they had no power to compel the Island Government to do anything.

Mr. DOMVILLE hoped the Dominion was not compelled to receive the railway in any condition in which the contractors chose to leave it, for he was not willing to be told next session that the railway which was thus received was not paying expenses. He was not condemning the Government, but he wanted to know that the railway was handed over in a proper condition.

Mr. SINCLAIR said the Dominion Government did not pay a dollar for the building of the Island railway. At the time of Confederation the whole of their liability under this head was charged against the Island, and there was deducted from the subsidy due to the colony $200,000 a year on account of the railway. All the Dominion Government had to do was to run the road. An amount of $200,000 was placed in the estimates for running the road, and against that there was to be placed the whole of the earnings. He had no doubt that within a very few years the road would pay itself. The Provincial Government had to look after the carrying out of the contract for building the road; all the Dominion Government had to do was to see that the bonds were paid. The Provincial Government let the contract and appointed an engineer to see its provisions carried out. If locomotives had been accepted which were in a bad condition, the Government engineer was responsible because he had certified in favourable terms. It was currently reported that the Island was handed over in a bad condition, that there were steeper grades and sharper curves than were provided for under the contract. The Dominion Government were not responsible for that state of affairs, because the Local Government had full charge of the work, and had an engineer in charge. He (Mr. SINCLAIR) understood that the road had been taken from the Local Government under protest, and it would be a question as to who had to pay for any defects. The contractors would get clear of their responsibility when the Government engineer certified that the road was completed; he had so certified and that would clear the contractors, and the question, therefore, now was, if there were defects, whether the Dominion or the Local Governments would have to remedy them.

Mr. DOMVILLE remarked that Mr. POPE, of Charlottetown had offered to take the railway and work it at his own expense, at all seasons of the year. Yet that railway, which had cost so much money, was now buried under the snow. He hoped that the railway would not be accepted unless we received a quid pro quo, and that any claim put in by the contractors SCHREIBER and BURPEE would be examined carefully before being paid.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Dominion Government had nothing to do with extras. If the Local Government had allowed extras they would have to pay them, or if the Dominion Government paid them, they would be charged to the Island at the rate of interest mentioned in the Confederation Act, viz.: five per cent. The curves and grades of the line seemed to be excessive, but whether they were in accordance with the contract or not, he was not then able to state. Mr. BOYD, acting as engineer by the Island Government, stated that they were, whereas the Dominion engineer said they were not in accordance with the contract, and the work was not what it ought to be. There were some grades seventy to seventy-four feet per mile, and one or two curves on branches—not on the main line—with a four hundred feet radius, which ought to be much larger for ordinary traffic. This was a narrow gauge railway of 3 ft. 6 inches, and it was said that short curves were no disadvantage. The rolling stock was smaller than on lines of the ordinary 4 ft. 8½ inch gauge, but it was evident that a high rate of speed could not be made with such short curves and steep grades. When the report made on behalf of the Dominion Government was printed, the House would have the fullest information on the subject.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked what return was anticipated from the working of the railway. An item was put down for annual expenses, $115,000. Had any estimate been made of the revenue likely to be derived?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said various estimates had been made, but they were utterly unreliable. The maximum estimate was $150,000. With regard to the offer of Mr. POPE, he might state that a simple telegram was received from that gentleman stating that he would be willing to work the road without any subsidy from the Government. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) simply replied that the Government were not in a position to enter into any arrangement with regard to that undertaking.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the Government would be in a much better position after they had ascertained what the necessary expenditure would be, and the revenue which would be derived, to determine whether they would not work the road by means of a company. As the hon. Premier had promised to lay on the table of the House a report from the Dominion Government engineer, the subject would come more properly before the House when that document had been submitted.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was utterly impossible to work the road during the present season on account of the heavy snow storms on the Island. An attempt was made during a number of days when the heavy storms commenced, but with all the powers of the engines and with hundreds of men at work they were obliged to relinquish the effort. The momentum of an engine and accompanying train on a narrow guage was not able to cope with the heavy snow storms of the Island.

The item was passed.

On the item of $33,000 for telegraph lines in British Columbia,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked for explanations.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the vote was for current expenses for working the lines, and the $6,000 additional over last year was to meet the expense of laying a cable.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) asked if the cable that was being laid was included in the estimate.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was. The estimate of the Chief Engineer of the Department gave simply these details:—For the payment of salaries, $24,000; renewals and repairs, $9,000.

On the item for $4,000 for agent and contingencies, British Columbia,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained that the item was a transfer from the Civil Government to Public Works chargeable to revenue.

The item was passed.

On the vote of $1,689,500 for Post Office service,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked whether the contract of the Gulf Ports Steamship Company did not expire last year; whether, when that contract was renewed, tenders were advertised; whether the Government had any information that there was any person desirous of competing for that service; and whether or not the Government did award the contract without tender.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said he had no knowledge that any tender was offered for that service. Certain parties came to him and insisted on getting $24,000. He (Mr. MACDONALD) refused that and finally gave them $16,000. That was done in the usual way: when a contract could be reduced, it was very seldom that tenders were called for.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said if his memory served him right the contract with the Gulf Ports Company expired last year. Knowing this he intimated to the Postmaster General, having met him just at the corner of Metcalfe street, that if the subsidy was to be continued, the company with which he (Mr. MITCHELL) was connected would like to compete for it. The hon. gentleman replied that due notice would be given of the contract was to be let. He (Mr. MITCHELL) intimated the same to another member of the Cabinet. The trade along the St. Lawrence, when the subsidy was commenced was carried in one steamer with a capacity of 1,000 tons, the Lady Head, running between Quebec and the Lower Ports. There were now twenty steamers with a capacity of from 3,000 to 9,000 tons each, engaged in the trade. It was understood by the predecessor of the Postmaster General that this subsidy was to be discontinued at the end of the contract. With the increased trade and the competition of other lines, the public money should not be expended in that way. The pledge given him by the Postmaster General was not carried out. No doubt if escaped his memory, but he would say no more on that point. What he complained of was the principle of giving a subsidy to one line where there were two other lines competing for the trade. It was unfair to the other companies. But he was told that the Gulf Ports Company initiated the business. That was not a fact. The business was in existence long before that Company was organized. If the old Government continued the subsidy longer than they should, they should be condemned for it; it was no justification for the wrong doing of the present Administration. He held that the Government had done a great injustice to the trade between Montreal and the lower ports, and deserved the censure of the House.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD had no recollection of ever having been spoken to by the hon. member for Northumberland on this subject, and had no idea that the hon. gentleman was interested in the trade with the lower ports. How he could have been engaged in it while a Minister of the Crown he (Mr. MACDONALD) did not understand. When the subsidy was reduced to $16,000 the Gulf Ports Company regretted exceedingly that the old Government was not in power, and said if they had, the company would not be screwed down in this manner. The subsidy was given to the Gulf Ports Company because they had the largest number of boats. The Government consented to continue the subsidy for two years when it would cease, as the Intercolonial Railroad would then be completed. The contract would terminate at the end of the coming season and would not be renewed.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL reminded the Postmaster General that the conversation to which he had alluded took place opposite the club at the corner of Metcalf Street. He was not aware that the company of which he was president had no right to compete for this subsidy because he had been a Minister of the Crown. What he complained of was the principle of entering into this contract without calling for tenders.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he was glad to hear the doctrine advocated that a Minister of the Crown could not be connected with any business respecting which he could use his position in the Government to benefit himself personally.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the House would like to receive some fuller information respecting the large increase in this department. Of course the details given by the Postmaster General were very satisfactory as far as they went, but further information was required as the increase was no less than $302,370.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The increase is only $184,000 over last year's estimates.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the proper comparison was not with the estimates of last year, but with the expenditure. In 1873-4, the year in which the largest expenditure took place, the outlay was $1,387,270, whereas the amount now asked for was $1,689,500. The increase in salaries alone amounted to $93,000, and he thought that some explanation should be given.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT pointed to the fact that both the receipts and the expenditures of the Post Office Department had increased year after year. In 1873-4 the expenditure was $1,387,000, and the present year it was expected it would be $1,500,000. He ventured to say that the whole amount asked for this year would be required.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman did not take into consideration the fact that the large increase made last year was no reason why no increase should be made this year, but rather a reason for a decrease.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the expenditure in the Post Office Department last year was $815,000 ; in 1871-2 $929,000; 1872-3, $1,067,000 ; in 1873-4 $1,387,000 ; showing a steady increase each year.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said if that argument were carried out to its logical conclusion, it would would soon land us in a very large expenditure in this Department.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT observed that while the temporary result of the changes proposed by the Postmaster General in the postal service would be a decrease in the revenue, the ultimate result would be a very large increase. The revenue of the Post Office Department during the four years before referred to were, in 1870-1, $600,000 ; in 1871-2, $929,000 ; in 1871-3, $883,000, and in 1873-4, $1,139,000, so that if the expenditure was increasing year by year the income of the Department was likewise increasing.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE read a statement showing the expenditure in the Post Office Department for the last year as follows :—In Ontario and Quebec, salaries $145,748 ; city post offices, $151,-707 ; country post offices, $239,037 ; ocean mail clerks, $4,621 ; other expenses, $91,600 ; total, $1,249,182. In Nova Scotia, total expenditure, $202,848 ; New Brunswick, $130,658 ; Manitoba, $16,107 ; British Columbia, $72,529 ; Prince Edward Island, $25,057—total, $1,689,383.

This showed the expenditure to be about the amount that was voted last year.

Mr. BUNSTER said a local company was being started in British Columbia which would be prepared to carry the Pacific mails for $4,000 or $5,000 less than was now being paid.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said that advertisements would he issued in a few days calling for tenders for that service, and if a British Columbian company's tender was satisfactory, they would get the preference over a foreign company. At the same time it was the desire of the Government to get the best service at the cheapest possible rate.

Mr. BUNSTER asked what time tenders would be received.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said the present contract would expire on the first of August, and he issued instructions to have tenders advertised for in British Columbia and other places, as well as in Liverpool. The Government would require vessels of one thousand tons burden, and to have accommodation for passengers.

Mr. BUNSTER said the company he had referred to intended to have a first-class boat.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said that the vessel must be to the satisfaction of the Department. None others would be accepted.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked what revenue was expected from the post office for the year 1875-6.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he did not expect any increase over last year.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said that by the convention with the United States the Department would temporarily lose $100,000, but they hoped in a very short time to make up that loss by the increase in the mail matter sent to the United States. By the change from six to three cents, letter postage, they would lose at first something like $60,000, and the reduction in the rate on newspapers and periodicals about $40,000. This, in addition to the loss that would be temporarily sustained by the reduction of the postage on newspapers and periodicals in this country, would involve a loss of something like $150,000 to $160,000, but he hoped shortly that this loss would be more than made up.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER observed that the admirable arrangement which the Postmaster General had made with the United States was one which he was sure would meet with the hearty concurrence of every one, although it might be attended with temporary loss. In a short time he believed the deficiency would be more than made up.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had just been informed by the Secretary of the Post Office Department that the statement of expenditure which he read a short time ago did not include subsidies to steamers. The actual outlay for the year was $1,689,383, the revenue was $1,379,087, leaving a deficit of a little over $310,000. Such being the case, the estimate of last year appeared to have fallen short of the expenditure by a considerable amount.

Hon. Mr. POPE asked for explanations of the increase of $92,000 in salaries.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said he would give explanations on that point on concurrence.—The item passed.

On item 185, surveys of land, North-West (including staff) $230,000.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD explained that only $100,000 was asked for this service last year, as compared with $183,000 the previous year, because last year they did not consider it necessary to carry on the surveys to so large an extent as formerly as the Pacific Railway was not located, and it was not desirable to survey further than the road was located. But now that a good part of the railway was located through the prairie it would be expedient to carry out the surveys into townships more extensively, so that the blocks designed for the railway might be surveyed on the same plan as the other portions.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Do I understand that the line of the Pacific Railway through that country has been settled?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—And it is intended to make a continuation of the survey beyond Manitoba?

Hon Mr. LAIRD—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it would be quite possible, once the telegraph line was constructed westward, to commence the survey of a new point further west of the present survey, because they could ascertain by means of the telegraph an astronomical point to start from. In the meantime the survey must be continued from the point of the present survey.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Would the hon. gentleman object to stating whether the line of the railway will pass to the north or south of Lake Manitoba.

Hon Mr. MACKENZIE—It will not pass either to the north or the south, but through the middle of it. There was a point where Lake Manitoba narrowed to the width of about 1,200 feet, and with a depth of only some 16 feet; and the railway would cross at that point. This enabled them to build the road in an almost perfectly straight line from the North end of the Lake of the Woods to Fort Pelly, and through one of the finest sections of the country, yet explored. It would cross the Red River about three miles North of the Stone Fort, about 22 & 23 miles, North of Winnipeg.

Item passed.

On item 186, estimate of amount for which a vote is required for minor revenues, $10,000, in answer to Hon. Mr. MITCHELL, Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said this amount was rarely expended. Last year there was a surplus of $6,000 or $7,000.

Item passed.

The Committee then rose and reported the resolutions passed and asked leave to sit again.

The House adjourned at 10.30.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, February 24th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

THE DOMINION NOTES ACT.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT introduced a Bill to amend the Act regulating the issue of Dominion Notes. He said he need hardly state that his own notions as to the issuing of Dominion Notes were tolerably well-known, and so far as the theoretical part was concerned, they had not changed, but after the introduction of certain measures it was not always advisable to change them. Although his ideas of the Dominion Notes Act were unchanged, his opinion was that it should be restored to the original shape in which it was introduced in this House. For many reasons he believed its operation would be more wholesome in that form. The original proposition contemplated a Dominion Note circulation of $9,000,000, and if any amount above that should be issued, dollar for dollar in specie should be held for such excess. He knew that when the present Act was on the statute book certain serious inconveniences might ensue, and those inconveniences had ensued. From the time it had been on the statute book, the gold reserved in this country, never very large, had been steadily decreasing. It was safer and cheaper for the banks to hold notes which were legal tender in the country and as good as gold in all cases for commerce. Some two or three years ago a portion of the specie held as against Dominion notes was very considerably in excess of the amount of notes, and very considerably larger in proportion to the total liabilities of the conjoined banks, than at present. Now these facts had been reversed. The banks held considerably more Dominion notes than gold. There was comparatively but a small amount of gold in Canada, and this was a matter of serious consequence. The House and the mercantile community were aware there had been a rather serious draw on gold of late. Within the past six or seven weeks the Government had had to pay some $2,000,000 in gold in redemption of their Dominion notes, and had it not been for the fact that for a considerable time back the Government had held a large excess of specie, amounting to something like $500,000 or $600,000 in excess of that required by law, rather serious inconvenience would have been felt. As the matter stood, the inconvenience was but slight to what the public would have experienced had not the reserve of gold been retained at a high figure. It would be obvious to the House that it was not desirable that the Government should be exposed to the charge of interfering with the ordinary operations of the market. In all cases it was extremely important as far as possible that the working of this gold reserve should be automatic, and, with a view of attaining that end, it was his intention to propose to the House that the Government should fix a certain sum, beyond which, as heretofore, they should hold dollar for dollar, and within certain other limits should considerably increase the proportion of gold held for notes. He did not propose to return to the limit originally fixed by Sir FRANCIS HINCKS, because the business and trade of the country, the number of banks and the volume of their liabilities, had increased considerably in the meantime; but he had proposed to fix a certain limit beyond which they should hold dollar for dollar. That limit was $12,000,000. For notes below $12,000,000 and above $9,000,000 held by the Government it was proposed to hold 50 per cent., instead of 35 per cent., as at present. He was inclined to think from his own experience that if this modification were adopted in the future very little inconvenience would be felt from these periodical drains on our specie. Whatever might be the ultimate decision the Government might arrive at on this whole question, it required the most careful consideration. While on this subject he might say that it must be obvious to the House that when this gold drain to which he had alluded should exceed its ordinary proportions—when it would be necessary to send several millions of dollars to England to pay our remittances—rather serious inconvenience might occur. It was quite clear that if the present system were continued, and the reserve were maintained at 35 per cent., these gold drains would go on from year to year, and, as it was quite impossible for the Government to protect themselves against such drains except by calling in deposits, which would hamper the commerce of the country, the limit proposed at which dollar for dollar should be held should be fixed. He had had some considerable doubt in his own mind as to whether there should be two-thirds held between $9,000,000 and $12,000,000, but his object was to hold no more than the necessities of the case required. He was willing to give the 50 per cent. reserve a fair trial before asking for further legislation on the subject. The only provisions in the Bill were those to which he alluded.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said he was disposed to regard with a good deal of favor the proposition which the hon. Minister of Finance had just submitted to the House, but he presumed his hon. friend regarded this measure as only a provisional one. The hon. gentleman, like himself, was opposed in toto to the introduction of the system of legal tender. A good many of the evils that had been foretold by the opponents of that system were beginning to develop themselves, and, in fact, had been developing themselves almost from the start. But opposition to a measure at its inception, and the entire abrogation of it after it had been for several years in operation, were two very distinct things. We were not at all now in the position that we were in when he opposed the introduction of the legal tender system. We had to deal with existing facts, and in the light of existing facts he was disposed to regard this measure which he conceived to be merely provisional with a good deal of favour. It would be the duty of the Minister of Finance he thought to consider the whole question of legal tenders at a very early day. He did not propose to raise a discussion on the introduction of this Bill, but he felt it his duty to take this early opportunity of stating that as a provisional measure the Bill now introduced was one worthy of the favorable consideration of the House.

Mr. PLUMB said no one could object to any measure that would give greater stability to our financial position; but he failed to see that any of the evils referred to by the hon. member from Chateauguay had followed the introduction of the legal tender system. He hoped, therefore, that this proposed measure would not be merely a provisional one, for it was better to put up with a few evils than to have an unsettled financial system.

Bill read a first time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read a first time:

Mr. DEVLIN—To amend the act incorporating the Montreal Board of Trade.

Mr. MURRAY—To incorporate the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company.

PENITENTIARIES.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER introduced a Bill respecting penitentiaries, and the inspectors thereof. He explained that the chief amendment proposed to the existing law was to substitute for the present Board of Directors, an Inspector who should be an officer of the Department of Justice acting under the immediate control of the Minister of Justice. The clause embodying this alteration was as follows:—

"It shall be the duty of the Minister of Justice to require and obtain from the Inspector an annual report on or before the first day of January in each year, to be laid before Parliament at the then next session, which report shall contain a full and accurate report on the state, condition and management of the penitentiaries under his control and supervision, and inspected during the preceding year, together with such suggestions for the improvement of the same as he may deem necessary and expedient, and accompanied by copies of the annual reports of the officers of the penitentiaries, and by such financial and statistical statements and tables as the books kept by them may supply; and which report shall also comprise and embrace the following particulars, viz :—

1. Any facts which may have come to his knowledge with respect to the working of the laws and penal system of the Dominion, or any injustice or hardship which, in his opinion has arisen therefrom, and such suggestions for the improvement or amendment at the same, and for the prevention of crime, or for the reformation of criminals, as he may deem expedient ;

2. An inventory and valuation of all the property belonging to the penitentiaries respectively, moveable and immoveable ; distinguishing the estimated value of the several descriptions of property ;

3. A statement of all debts due by the penitentiaries, showing the names of the parties to whom each is due, and showing also the debts, if any, due to the institution, with the amount and nature of each debt ;

4. An estimate of the expense of the penitentiaries for the ensuing year, distinguishing the ordinary from the extraordinary.

" In case the Inspector finds at any time that any Penitentiary is out of repair, or is, or has become unsafe or unfit for the confinement of prisoners confined therein, he shall forthwith report the fact to the Minister of Justice, and shall at the same time furnish a copy of such report to the Minster of Public Works.

" Another important change proposed by the Bill was to place the construction and repairs of buildings and others works in connection with penitentiaries under the control of the Department of Public Works."

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he had paid much attention to the subject, as it came within his department when Minister of Justice, and he would, therefore, look with great interest at the Bill. He did not at that stage propose to discuss whether the amendments proposed were such as should receive the sanction of the House, but ventured to hope that if existing interests were affected, compensation would be provided to the parties suffering.

The Bill was read a first time.

Mr. MOSS introduced a Bill to amend the act of incorporation of the Great Western Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked the object of the Bill.

Mr. MOSS said the object of the Bill was to change the number of directors, and to apply to the Great Western Railway Company certain clauses relating to sidings, and other matters which are found in the General Railway Act of 1869.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked if the Bill contained anything affecting the financial affairs of the company.

Mr. MOSS—Nothing whatever.

The Bill was read a first time.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) presented the fifth report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing.

THE OUTLAWRY OF LOUIS RIEL.

On question being called,

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said—Mr. SPEAKER : Before proceeding on to the regular business of the day, I propose to move in the matter of which I gave notice verbally on Monday. I then laid the record of the judgment of outlawry, in the case of LOUIS RIEL, the member elect for Provencher, upon the table, and intimated my intention to move, in pursuance of the Parliamentary course pursued in England upon a similar occasion, or one as nearly parallel to it as any case that can possibly be found. I propose to move in the same sense as the leader of the House of Commons moved in the case of SMITH O'BRIEN, who was convicted of felony when he was a member of the House, being advised—for I do not presume to enter upon any legal argument in the matter—that the sentence of outlawry is equivalent to a conviction by the Court of the crime charged in the indictment. In that case Lord JOHN RUSSELL simply moved, in the first place, that the record laid on the table be read. I have private notice given me by the hon. member for Cardwell that he intends to dispute both the motion and the premises. I am not quite sure that I am doing quite right in anticipating his own statement of the case, but it is necessary in submitting my motion to do so to some extent. He disputes that a legal outlawery has been pronounced at all ; he disputes the legality of the proceedings, and proposes that this House shall constitute itself into a Court of Review of the proceedings of the Court in Manitoba. I am not aware that any proceeding of that kind was ever undertaken or was indeed ever proposed by any member of the English House of Commons. There is no case where anything of the kind has taken place. He also proposes, as I understand from him, to establish the point that outlawry in this country is entirely foreign to our own criminal procedure for the reason that in our Act of 1869 at the 82nd section, it is stated that any person indicted for any offence made capital by any statute should be liable to the same punishment whether it be a conviction by verdict or confession; and therefore the omission of the term outlawry in a particular section of our criminal procedure operates as setting aside all the outlawry proceedings in criminal cases. I will not venture for a moment to discuss the legal aspects of the case. They will be discussed, no doubt, by the gentlemen learned in the law on both sides of this House. I simply take the ground that I think I am entitled to take by enquiries on the subject, that the law of England still prevails throughout these territories, and in Canada where it has not been specially repealed by special enactments. That the law of England does extend to these territories in this respect in this particular instance there can be no doubt whatever, and if it be disputed there is abundant proof of the allegation that it is. In the 78th section of the Act relating to criminal procedure, we find that our own act does contemplate a verdict by outlawry, and it is tolerably clear to my own mind, looking at the question from a common sense point of view; that the ground proposed to be taken by the hon. gentleman is not tenable, so far as the enactment is concerned, upon which he intends to found his objection. I do not propose to enter upon the question as to whether it is so or not. I simply state these facts in order that they may be dealt with by gentlemen who were to follow him conducting the legal part of the argument. The question may possibly be raised as to whether the document laid before the House is precisely the kind that it should be. I do not know whether it is or not. In the O'DONOVAN ROSSA judgment the document itself was not laid on the table, but a certificate from the officer of the court stating that such a decision had been rendered. In the present case the document itself is laid on the table, and it is competent for this House to question the legality of it. I shall, therefore, move in the first place, "That the record in the case of LOUIS RIEL, laid on the table of the House on the 22nd inst., be now read." I follow, as I said before, very closely the precedent in the SMITH O'BRIEN case, in which the motion was that the decision be entered as read.

The motion was carried, the House dispensing with the reading of the document.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I now move "That it appears by the said record that LOUIS RIEL, a member of this House, has been adjudged an outlaw for felony."

Mr. MASSON suggested that it would be well to know if there was anything before the House to prove that the LOUIS RIEL who had been adjudged an outlaw was the LOUIS RIEL who was a member of this House.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman must judge for himself. The document was on the table making that statement, and the House had dispensed with the reading of it.

Mr. MASSON asked that the document be read.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is now too late.

Mr. MASSON—The hon. gentleman should not take shelter behind forms.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not go behind forms. The hon. gentleman should have called for the reading of the document at the proper time.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—The hon. member for Terrebonne says the fact that LOUIS RIEL is an outlaw in Manitoba is no proof that he is the LOUIS RIEL who is a member of Parliament. That is the point the hon. gentleman makes.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—If the hon. gentleman has any doubt of it he will vote against the motion.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said that was to a certain extent an answer to the objection, because the Premier in his reply had by inference stated the two were one and the same person.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON quite agreed with what his hon. friend said; that there was enough to bring before the House the fact that the person charged with outlawry was a member of this House. The Premier had partly stated his (Mr. CAMERON'S) objection to the House, but not being a lawyer he could not be expected to remember exactly what was said. His (Mr. CAMERON'S) objection was not merely with regard to the criminal law of the land, not having process of outlawry in it, but that so far as this particular case was concerned, in the Province of Manitoba, whatever it might be elsewhere, the process of outlawry did not exist, and that the proceedings in outlawry upon an indictment for felony could not be had in the manner required by the law of England. He would endeavour to explain to the House the ground upon which he had taken that view. No one for a single moment would imagine that he (Mr. CAMERON) had the least desire that RIEL should remain a member of this House, because if he was not to vacate his seat he (Mr. CAMERON) would be prepared to move that he be expelled. The position that should be taken with regard to constitutional forms and rights was one that should not be given up if they had strong convictions on the subject. He (Mr. CAMERON) had very strong convictions on this point, and felt bound to offer for the consideration of the House the grounds which had influenced his mind in saying that upon the face of the records of this proceeding there was no valid judgment of outlawry. Those who were versed in the law were aware that certain proceedings must be taken in reference to outlawry in England. They go back to a very remote period, except recently, when a change was made in civil procedure by what was called the "Common Law Procedure Act." They dated back prior to the existence of Canada as a colony. From the times of HENRY VI. down to the last act passed in the reign of WILLIAM and MARY. They explained the manner in which proceedings were to be taken in criminal and civil cases tending to outlawry. While in common law proceedings for initiating outlawry might be taken upon an indictment, for criminal proceedings the manner in which these proceedings were afterwards carried on, and the ceremony to be observed in respect to them were pointed out. Now, when they had before them a record of judgment, and there was either in the law with regard to it, or on the face of the judgment itself, that which invalidated it, he thought they were not precluded from declaring that it was not a record of outlawry. They were not in the least degree precluded, as they would be in dealing with a question of fact, from examining the record. They could not be prevented any more than a court could, from declaring from the face of that record that there was no outlawry, and that the House could not, therefore, take proceedings upon it. Now, in the proceedings to be taken in outlawry, though to most persons they might appear to be merely technical, involved rights and privileges, and an explanation of them, therefore, might be interesting to most of the hon. gentlemen present. Upon an indictment for a felony punishable with death, if the accused does not appear, a writ called a bench warrant is issued at the time of the Assizes, which is the same as a writ which is called capias ad respondendum. That writ requires to be issued once, twice and three times in some cases and once or twice in other cases. The sheriff of the county where the party dwells or of the county next to it is required to return the writ, declaring the party is not forthcoming, and for each writ a similar return is made. He is required to make proclamations at the seat of the County Court for five different times, and a writ was required to be issued called a writ of exigent. That writ and the proclamation bear the same date of issue and the same date of return. The time which must by law elapse between each of these proclamations is a month. The last day—the quinto exactus—when the proclamation of declaration expires, is the day on which the party is required to appear, so that, in fact, the outlawry shall not take place until the day in which the party has been required to appear shall have passed. So much was this the case in England, where this system had been in use for so long a period of years, that if there happened not to be a coroner in a county, there could be no judgment of outlawry pronounced. The law was plain upon that point, and the authorities distinct. If there were no sheriff in the county for over a year, proceedings could not be taken until a new sheriff was appointed, and so long as there was no coroner in the county, no sentence of outlawry could be pronounced. The proceedings to which he had referred had every one of them to be taken in the order in which he had referred to them, and if that order were departed from in the slightest degree, the record might be treated as null and void.

Although in most cases writs of error and motions to set aside could be entertained in cases of this nature, if any error of informality were apparent on the face of the proceedings, outlawry could be of no effect. In the Province of Manitoba there could be no outlawry. In the first place, there were no sheriffs of counties, for there was but one sheriff, and in the second place, there were no coroners of counties, for there was only one coroner. As these first instruments to outlawry did not exist according to the law, the means of taking the course dictated by the law of England did not exist, and that course could not therefore be taken. The form of proceeding was a peculiar one, but it was required to be carried out with the strictest possible exactitude. The result of carrying out these proceedings in England was that, if the man did not appear within the time stated, and judgment of outlawry were pronounced, he might be executed without any further proceeding. Therefore it was that the law was so particularly observed as in favor of life, and matters which under ordinary circumstances would be looked upon as mere irregularities were in this regard treated by the law as defects. Outlawries had over and over again been reversed upon grounds which in other cases would be of no force at all. For the reasons stated, therefore, no judgment of outlawry could have existed in the case of RIEL at all. In reference to the record before the House, the difficulties that might occur, and did occur in many cases in England, appeared to be multiplied tenfold. He thought it would be almost impossible to produce any record of outlawry with so many mistakes in it as there were in this. There were no less than ten or a dozen grounds, upon the face of the record, why judgment should be reversed. There was one ground, at least, upon which not only could no legal man, but also no layman in the House, fail to see that the outlawry was null and void. The quinto exactus was the 10th February, the 10th of this present month, and that was the very day upon which RIEL was required to appear in Court. He had the whole of that day in which to appear, and therefore he could not be outlawed by any possibility until the next day. Yet on the very face of this proceeding it appeared that he was outlawed on the day he was required to appear. The case on that point was as clear as it could be, and the authorities as plain. In a case where an offender was outlawed on the day of the quinto exactus, the outlawry was set aside because he had all that day in which to appear before the Court, and by no possibility could he be outlawed until the following day. The cases reported in COKE JAMES, 160, and PALMER, 280, were clear upon this point, and the reason of the thing was quite as evident as the law; because if a man had the whole of the 10th of February to appear, it was quite clear that he could not be outlawed on that day. And yet the record upon which the House was called upon to act declared that LOUIS RIEL was an outlaw on the 10th of February, and was certified to by the Clerk of the Court of Queen's Bench on that day—the day before RIEL could possibly have became an outlaw. In addition to that point there were other objections which might be taken, and which would on the face of the record be sufficient to void the sentence of outlawry. For instance: the statute which the sheriff professed to follow was the 31 ELIZABETH, and that statute declared that there should be no outlawry unless three proclamations were issued, the first in the County Court, the second in the Quarter Sessions, and the third at the door of the parish church of the place where the party lived, one month before the outlawry. But on the face of the record in this case it appeared that the first and third proclamations took place on the same day, 4th January, and the second immediately afterwards, and not at the Quarter Sessions, but at the County Court. So that the very statute that had professedly been acted upon had not been acted upon. This was not his own reasoning merely, for he had authorities, and could give an adjudged case for every point he took. Moreover, it could not be controverted that one month must elapse between the issues of the five proclamations in the County Courts required by law. What time had been allowed to elapse in this case? The first proclamation was issued on the 4th of January, 1875, in the County of Selkirk; the second on the 7th of January, in the County of Lisgar; the third on the 11th January, in the County of Provencher; and the fourth on the 13th January, in the County of Marquette East. The law provided that a month's delay should take place between the proclamations, in order to give the fullest opportunity to the accused party to appear. COKE in his second Institutes, page 47, stated: "As the punishment under outlawry is very severe, the law has provided and takes care that no person shall be outlawed till he has had all due and proper notice of the proceedings." It was evident that the provisions of the statute in this respect had not been followed in this case, and as the law required that every step in outlawry should, on pain of nullity, be taken in strict accordance with the law, there could be no doubt that this sentence of outlawry was void. He could cite a case in which the mere change of a single letter had been held enough to upset the process of outlawry. There was another objection to the proceedings, and that was that RIEL was outlawed in the wrong court. He could only be outlawed in the County Court, but according to the record he was outlawed in the Court of Queen's Bench, sitting as a Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery. The law was clear upon that point, and if it was necessary he could cite numerous authorities. He could quite understand the argument that would be raised against his position, namely, that the House had no right to constitute themselves a court of revision or appeal to sit upon this sentence of outlawry. But the House was dealing with the rights and liberties of the people, and with a constitutional question, and he held they had a right to deal with objections to this sentence of outlawry which appeared on the face of it, and which showed that it was entirely void. His position would not be misunderstood in this matter. He had voted last session for the expulsion of RIEL from this House, and he would do so again, but not upon the ground that RIEL was an outlaw, because he held that RIEL had never properly been pronounced an outlaw. If it was proposed to go behind the record, and inquire into facts not apparent on the record, then he could understand the objection that might properly be taken to such a course. But the House was asked to take action upon the record, which, upon its face, he held to be void, and therefore he could not vote for the motion of the Premier, and declare upon the strength of that record that RIEL was an outlaw.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER contended that the whole criminal law of England, including outlawry, had been introduced into Manitoba, and therefore the objection to the course proposed by the Premier was narrowed down to the question of the legality of the proceedings that had been taken in this matter. It might perhaps be difficult with the existing organization of the courts in Manitoba to follow strictly the process laid down in the statute, because the organization of the courts in Manitoba were different from the organization of the courts in England; but that was not a matter for this House to consider. This House did not sit as a court of revision or appeal to declare whether the proper formalities of the law had been complied with or not. They had no right to look behind the judgment of the court. Whether the court was competent or not, it was not for the House to decide. If they were satisfied that outlawry existed under our law, and that a regular court of the country had decided that RIEL was an outlaw, then they must abide by the decision. He would not contest the allegations of the hon. gentleman with regard to the mode of procedure. He admitted that it was very precise and special, and that it was requisite that all the formalties should be complied with, but that was not an argument to be taken here. He had no doubt that if LOUIS RIEL engaged the hon. gentleman as counsel, and availed himself before the court of the irregularities referred to, he might, perhaps, get rid of the sentence of outlawry. No doubt the sentence of outlawry was a very severe one, but at the same time the person of RIEL was protected by law, and no one could touch him, and if he was apprehended he might take advantage of all the informalities mentioned by the hon. gentleman. But what he (Mr. FOURNIER) contended was that this House had no right to pronounce upon these irregularities, and were bound to take cognizance of the record of outlawry now before them, seeing that prima facia a regular and proper sentence of outlawry had been pronounced by a competent court. He might say, moreover, that this sentence was the strongest evidence that could be adduced that LOUIS

RIEL was a fugitive from justice—stronger evidence than that upon which the House expelled him last session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he quite agreed with the conclusion of the Minister of Justice, namely, that there was sufficient evidence before the House on which to expel LOUIS RIEL. At the same time he held that the member for Cardwell had conclusively established that these papers establishing outlawry were mere waste paper. He was inclined to believe that it was almost impossible on this continent without a new law to place any of HER MAJESTY'S subjects in the position of an outlaw. We had not the requisite machinery. The process of outlawry was only to be obtained by virtue of the importation of the English law, and the law relating to outlawry was so utterly inapplicable to the organization of our courts that he did not believe a valid judgment of outlawry could be obtained against any person for any crime. The Minister of Justice had held that the House ought not to go behind the sentence, but the objection taken was due to the jurisdiction in the beginning. If the court had no jurisdiction in the matter the House was bound to know it. Supposing that the court for the trial of small causes in Quebec issued a decree of outlawry against a man who was elected a member of this House, would this House be bound to act upon that decree and expel the man so sentenced? Or supposing the Court of Chancery undertook to act in criminal matters this House would be bound to say that that court had gone beyond its jurisdiction. He held that the seat was not void, that it was absolutely necessary to expel LOUIS RIEL, because until he was expelled he had the same right to take his seat in the House as any other member had. He agreed with the Minister of Justice that the record before the House was sufficient to establish that RIEL was a fugitive from Justice and that the same cause of expulsion existed now as existed last session. He would vote for expulsion, but he did not think the seat was void by this sentence of outlawry.

Mr. MILLS said it appeared to him that the line of argument pursued by the hon. member for Kingston and the hon. member for Cardwell was the strongest possible evidence the House could have of the impropriety of the course they had recommended. Those hon. members had discussed the question precisely as if the House was a Court of Appeal for the consideration of the legality of the judgment of outlawry which had been pronounced, a copy of which had been laid on the table of the House. Now, they were not called upon, as the hon. member for Cardwell had said, to declare that RIEL was an outlaw: there had been no such proposition submitted to the House. They were called upon to declare that RIEL had been adjudged an outlaw, and evidence of his having been so adjudged had been laid on the table of the House. If they followed English precedent, he thought it would be found that there were two cases in which Parliamentary law had recognised a right in the Commons to enquire into a judgment of the court, viz.; when the court was charged with either corruption or incompetency. It was only when a Judge was attacked that the House of Commons had any right to enquire into a judgment. Here, however, there was no charge made against the Judge—he was not impeached or proceeded against. That being the case the House had no right to review his judgment, to enquire whether it was valid or invalid, or whether it was one which, if taken before the court on writ of error, it might be well for the court to reverse. He would not enquire whether the court was a proper court to pronounce the judgment of outlawry; he did not think the House was competent to deal with the matter. The highest court of Manitoba had assumed it had jurisdiction, and he did not think the House was competent to say by its voice or vote that the highest court of that province had erred. The case of Lord COCHRANE afforded the strongest possible evidence of the impropriety of the course suggested by the member for Cardwell and the hon. member for Kingston. Lord COCHRANE was accused of making certain false representations, and improperly dealing with certain stocks, and was found guilty by the Court of Queen's Bench. He appeared in his place in the House of Commons, and when the motion was made for his expulsion; he contended that the judgment was an improper one, as he had been improperly joined with other parties, and that in consequence of that he was not allowed to produce evidence which was necessary for his exculpation. Lord COCHRANE asked the House to make an inquiry itself, declaring his readiness to produce such evidence as would beyond all question establish his entire innocence of the charge made against him. What was the answer of the Attorney General? Why, that the House was not a judicial tribunal for reviewing decisions of the Court of Queen's Bench; that if any improper act had been done by the court, the party should adopt the legal course and seek the proper remedy; that the remedy was not to be sought in the House of Commons; that the House was precluded from entering into the merits of the question by the judgment of the court itself. Now, this House was in precisely this position: they had nothing to do with the regularity or irregularity of the proceedings against RIEL. They knew that he had been accused of murder, that he was a fugitive from justice, and because he was such they expelled him. The House was not called upon to review the judgment of the court, but simply, in consequence of that judgment, to take the necessary proceedings for the election of another member in the place of RIEL, whose seat in consequence of that judgment whether it was valid or invalid was vacant,—and until it was set aside it must be assumed to be valid by the House. The House should not be misled by the arguments of the hon. member for Cardwell and the hon. member for Kingston, which might be very proper and pertinent if addressed to a court reviewing the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench of Manitoba, but which were entirely out of place, under the circumstances in this House.

Mr. MASSON said that he and those on that side of the House with whom he worked and with whom he fought the question of amnesty up to that time were comparatively indifferent to the present discussion. It had been decided against everything they had said and done that they had lost the battle, and that RIEL must be expelled the House. The only difficulty now was to find the proper way of turning him out. The majority of the House had decided, upon the advice of the Government, that the settlement which they had offered the House was a final settlement, and that RIEL should be banished from this country for five years. The House had decided, consistently, on the advice of the Prime Minister, that RIEL should be banished, in order to mark the enormity of the crime, and now they should be asked, on the strength of the evidence before them, to vote for the expulsion of RIEL, irrespective of any legal proceedings that might have been taken. A more manly course to have pursued would have been to declare that RIEL, being guilty of a crime which necessitated his banishment from the country, he had no right to sit in this House. He had told hon. members when the question was previously before the House that in voting for the resolutions of the Government they voted that RIEL should be expelled from the House, and his prediction was that day verified. The Government did not go to the logical conclusion of their position, but they told their friends, "You are not voting for the expulsion of RIEL because he deserves to be expelled, but because he has been outlawed." The Minister of Justice had told the House that the reasons which induced them to expel RIEL last year were stronger now; that last year there may have been a doubt; that the Minister of Public Works was wrong perhaps last year in voting for the expulsion of RIEL, but this year he would be right in doing so because RIEL was outlawed. Why was RIEL an outlaw? RIEL was an outlaw because all along he (RIEL) and the people of Lower Canada had been led to understand that the whole of RIEL's case rested on the point, whether an amnesty had or had not been promised him. RIEL had been led to believe, as he (Mr. MASSON), and all those who had taken an interest in the subject had been led to believe, that an amnesty would soon be granted. At the time of the last elections it was proclaimed through Lower Canada that now that this Government had taken the place of the Government of the member for Kingston the amnesty would be sure to come.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—The hon. member for Kingston denies that the amnesty was promised.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—I said the amnesty was sure to come.

Mr. MASSON—A few months before the meeting of Parliament last session they were told that if an amnesty had been promised, it would be granted and that it was the intention of the Government to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into and ascertain whether a promise of amnesty had or had not been made. Before the opening of the Session the Government decided not to appoint a Royal Commission, but to charge a committee with the duty of ascertaining whether an amnesty had been granted, which, if promised, would surely be granted. Were they to believe that RIEL did not know the intentions of the Government from those who were speaking for the Government through the Press. RIEL very properly said: "There is to be a Committee of Inquiry; I will not, therefore, submit myself to be tried for an offence when it is at this moment under discussion as to whether I shall be tried for it or not." Because the House should remember that an amnesty is not a pardon; it was more than a pardon. A pardon comes after the offence; an amnesty comes before the offence. The meaning of the word amnesty was not pardon, but obliteration; and the authority granting the amnesty forgets, as it were, that the act has been committed.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE — Because it is impossible to forgive what has not happened, so the amnesty does not precede the offence.

Mr. MASSON—The House decided to have a Committee of Inquiry. In the face of that decision, was there a fair-minded man who would say that RIEL was bound to come and offer himself for trial when at that very time they were enquiring into the question, whether he was entitled to a complete amnesty, and whether he should come to trial at all. RIEL, very properly, did not come forward at that particular time. During the session of Parliament could RIEL, who was a member of the House, come forward and deliver himself to the tribunal? They were told that it could clearly be proved that an amnesty had been promised. After the evidence was taken by the committee, the people of Lower Canada were told that they must not hurry the question, because the evidence must be sent to England, so that the Imperial authorities might see it. He (Mr. MASSON) was not casting blame on the Minister of Justice, but was showing that the action of the Government from the very beginning had been such as to induce RIEL to believe that the question of amnesty was being honestly and fairly discussed with a view to ascertain whether he was entitled to an amnesty or not. Months afterwards, the papers had not been sent to England, and up to the commencement of this session the people of Quebec were led to believe that, on the evidence taken by the committee, RIEL was assured of his amnesty. The question had only been decided a few days ago, when the House resolved that so far from RIEL being entitled to an amnesty, he was entitled to banishment. The logical consequence of the vote of the House, given a few days ago, was that RIEL should be expelled. The only thing that remained for him (Mr. MASSON) to do was, to be consistent with himself. In the first place, there were doubts about the outlawry. In the second place, he considered that RIEL was entitled to his seat in this House, as he was entitled last year, and consequently he was determined to vote against any motion that would have the effect of turning RIEL out of the House, and in favor of any motion which would have the effect of retaining RIEL in his place.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON hoped the hon. member from Terrebonne did not claim for himself all the consistency and patriotism there was in the House. The hon. gentleman complained that he was abandoned by those around him, but he had been abandoned before when his chief failed to vote on a resolution for a complete amnesty. The hon. gentleman contended that the proceedings of to-day were a consequence of the vote of the other day, but was it the same last year when LOUIS RIEL was expelled from the House. The hon. gentleman's object was to quash these proceedings in order that RIEL might be expelled a second time and that hon. gentleman opposite could go to the country and declare that they had done a very patriotic thing. The question was this—whether this judgment should be discussed. The House was not a court of error, and even though it was the party affected by this judgment was not here to ask revision. The English course was the proper one to pursue. If this was a judgment at all, LOUIS RIEL was no longer a member of this House and a writ must be issued for the election of a member to represent Provencher in this House. Otherwise the constituency would remain unrepresented in this House for four years more. He was sure that when both sides of this question were laid before the people, and the passions which it aroused were swept away by time, the country would judge it in its true light. He had no objection to vote for the motion as it stood. The amnesty question had nothing to do with it. The fact was before the House that Provencher was not represented because LOUIS RIEL had been declared an outlaw and it was their duty to have a representative elected.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said the hon. member for Terrebonne had contrasted the position occupied by Quebec members of the Cabinet on this question now, with that which they held when in opposition, but he should remember that they were not responsible for LOUIS RIEL's outlawry. It was the personal friends of hon. gentlemen opposite—Messrs. ROYAL, GIRARD and DUBUQUE, members of the Manitoba Government. It was by them that proceedings were taken against LOUIS RIEL, and if steps were not taken to set aside the judgment of the Court it was the fault of his legal advisers there and of nobody else. He (Mr. GEOFFRION) and his colleagues were responsible for the policy of this Government on the RIEL question. He noticed the hon. member for Joliette smiling, but he was prepared to meet the hon. gentleman in that constituency and show that while hon. gentlemen opposite were trying to excite popular feeling against the Government for not giving RIEL a complete amnesty. their friends in Manitoba, Messrs. ROYAL, DUBUQUE and GIRARD were declaring him an outlaw. This Government was merely pursuing the course necessitated by the action taken in Manitoba by the friends of the hon. gentlemen opposite. The only course for this Government to pursue was to receive the judgment of the court of Manitoba.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—A court without jurisdiction in this case.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION contended that this House was not a Court of Appeal, and could not enter into the question of the validity of the judgment.

Mr. BABY, in reply to the personal reference made to him by the hon. member for Vercheres, said his smile was at the enthusiasm of the hon. gentleman who, while in opposition, would accept nothing but a complete amnesty for LOUIS RIEL, but being in power accepted a mongrel amnesty. The hon. gentleman pronounced the Quebec members of the late government and their supporters traitors to the Metis, because they did not insist upon a complete amnesty, at the same time that his colleagues, the present Premier and the hon. member for South Bruce, were offering a reward for the arrest of RIEL. Now, who were the traitors to the Metis? The hon. member for Terrebonne refused a seat in the late Cabinet because his leader would not promise a complete amnesty: did the hon. member for Vercheres exact such terms when he became a member of the present government? He (Mr. BABY) was sure the hon. gentleman did not, for he would have kept his word and resigned his portfolio when the Government measure was brought down. He concluded by contending that the House had a right to examine the judgment and say whether it had been rendered by a legally constituted tribunal or not.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON rose to move an amendment, but was ruled out of order, as he had already spoken on the question. He handed the amendment to Mr. PLUMB and resumed his seat.

Mr. PLUMB moved that all after the word "that," in the original motion be struck out and the following inserted:—"It appears on the face of the record of proceedings brought before this House that no legal or valid judgment of outlawry has been rendered against the said LOUIS RIEL, member for Provencher, and it also appears from the same record that the said LOUIS RIEL, having been indicted for murder, has not been arrested nor appeared nor pleaded to said indictment nor surrendered to take his trial thereon, but has been and continues to be voluntarily absent and a fugitive from justice from the Province of Manitoba. Be it therefore resolved, that the said LOUIS RIEL shall be and he is hereby expelled from this House."

Mr. MASSON said he had no doubt, when the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue had time to reflect upon the speech he had made, he would regret it. There was nothing said by any hon. member in this discussion which would justify the hon. Minister in making such an onslaught upon persons not in this House, whose he conduct had not approved of. He

(Mr. MASSON) supposed the hon. gentleman and his friends had in this matter acted quite conscientiously, and that they desired to do what was right. They seemed to feel that the position in which they were placed was not exactly what they could wish it to be ; and their conduct reminded him of the husband who went home late, and in order to be saved a scolding began himself to scold his wife. The hon. Minister knew that the solution of the question proposed by the Government would not please his friends in Lower Canada, that there was a strong feeling existing there against their policy on the question now before the House, and he (the MINISTER) desired that something should be said or done which would remove the remembrance of these things from the public mind. His plan appeared to be a general attack upon the Conservative party in Manitoba and Lower Canada. He (Mr. MASSON) had avoided reproaching gentlemen upon the other side of the House, and had indeed been guarded in what he said. He did not make any attack upon hon. members, or if anything he said had been so construed, it was quite foreign to his intention. What he had said was that if Mr. RIEL did not come forward for his trial, it was due to the action of hon. gentlemen opposite themselves. They had promised that an amnesty would be forthcoming, as gentlemen upon this side of the House had promised an amnesty, and in consequence of that statement Mr. RIEL had not come forward. Surely that was no attack upon the hon. gentleman or his friends. He (Mr. MASSON) had referred to the outlawry because the Minister of Justice had argued that those who had voted against the expulsion last year—and would have a difficulty in voting otherwise this year—could vote for the issue of a new writ consistently, and thus relieve themselves from the consequences which a direct reversal of last year's vote would necessarily entail in Lower Canada. He (Mr. MASSON) believed that members on the other side of the House from the Province of Quebec wished for a complete amnesty, but preferred to vote for what had been described by an hon. member as a "mongrel motion" rather than permit the gentlemen upon this (the Opposition) side of the House to go over to that.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said he had not been quite fairly represented by the hon. member for Terrebonne. What he had said was that, while in no measure receding from the position he, like other hon. members, had taken on this question last year, the position in which Mr. RIEL was now placed, and the position in which the House found itself in regard to him, was entirely different from what it had formerly been. The law now pointed out the course they were bound to pursue. There was to be found upon the records of this House a precedent for the action about to be taken. An hon. member had in that case been expelled because he was a fugitive from justice. Outlawry amounted to the same thing as a conviction, and involved the same consequences. The motion before the House was based upon the legal consequences of the sentence of outlawry, by the operation of which Mr. RIEL had become disqualified to hold a seat in this House. He did not believe there was a single member in the House prepared to deny the legal proposition that Mr. RIEL, being outlawed, he was disqualified from taking his seat.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said he understood the Minister of Justice to mean that if the House had expelled Mr. RIEL last year, there were greater grounds for his expulsion this year.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER repeated that he had not departed from the position he took last year, but the fact of RIEL's outlawry left no course except that which it was proposed the House should now take.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness) said there were two points which it was the duty of the House to consider. First, there were the facts and the evidence which were before them, and in the second place there was the authority of the court before which the process of outlawry had been taken. The question of fact and of evidence was not one for this hon. House to consider. There was but one tribunal which could take cognizance of the matter, and until the sentence had been reversed by that tribunal, it stood good in all tribunals. So far it had not been set aside, and the House was bound to regard it as legal and proper. With regard to the authority of the tribunal, the case quoted by the right hon., the leader of the Opposition, was not in point. The Court of Chancery was not a court of criminal jurisdiction. It had not, now, and never had, the power of taking cognizance of processes of outlawry. Hon. members were aware that the Court of Queen's Bench, and that court alone, had jurisdiction. In all countries processes of outlawry were taken before the Court of Queen's Bench.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD — They never are.

Mr. McDONNELL explained that he meant that the Court of Queen's Bench originally had cognizance of all matters of crime.

It being six o'clock, the House rose for recess.

——:++:——

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness) said that since the House rose he had referred to the criminal statute of 1869, and he found that the process of outlawry was recognized by that statute, which being passed after Manitoba was united to Canada, extended to that Province. That being the case the next question was whether the proceedings in outlawry had been regularly taken. He contended that was not a question for this House at all, because the House must act upon the maxim that what was done by a public official must be presumed to be rightly done until the contrary is proved.

Mr. FLESHER said he had listened attentively to the debate, but there were still one or two points he was not quite clear upon. The Minister of Justice had not met the argument of the member for Cardwell to the effect that the machinery for carrying outlawry into operation was defective, and that the proper formalities had not been observed. Surely this was a matter that the House should take cognizance of. Supposing a case was brought before a magistrate, it would be his duty to inquire whether the case was one which should properly come before him, and whether the warrant was regularly made out. If this was done in small matters, how much more necessary was it for the House to follow the same principle in dealing with so grave a matter as the expulsion of a member on the ground of outlawry, especially when it was remembered that the House was acting ex parte in the matter. Supposing that this sentence of outlawry should be set aside subsequently what position would the House be in after having declared that the outlawry was valid and had expelled RIEL on the strength of it. There was no reason why the course proposed by the Premier should be taken in preference to the course taken last session.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said hon. gentlemen opposite had argued that there was no machinery for giving effect to outlawry in this country. Chief Justice WOOD sitting judicially had declared LOUIS RIEL to be outlaw in a judgment which was now before the House.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—No, no! That is a mistake. The Chief Justice has nothing to do with the judgment of outlawry. All that he had done was to certify that the record was the record before the court.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—It is quite clear that a machinery for this purpose has been found and has been certified to by the Chief Justice sitting in his judicial capacity.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—No.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON went on to say that the whole scope of the argument on the other side was that the Chief Justice was wrong, and that this House was sitting as a court of review upon the action of the court in Manitoba. He maintained that they must accept the judgment of the court for Parliamentary purposes. If the party interested felt aggrieved, and if there were these irregularities that had been pointed out, he could seek redress from the courts; but for all Parliamentary purposes they had ample evidence that LOUIS RIEL had been declared an outlaw, and the effect of that declaration was to void the seat. He would not go into the political aspect of the case; he simply desired to point out what he believed to be the only question before the House namely; the sufficiency and the authenticity of the judgment of outlawry for the purpose of governing their action. Whether the proceedings were regular or irregular, it was quite incompetent for the House to decide. With all his respect for the legal abilities and Parliamentary experience of the hon. members from Kingston and Cardwell, he would not accept the doctrine of either of them as to the regularity or irregularity of the proceedings, the net result of which they had now before the House. That judgment properly authenticated was, he maintained, all that they required to govern their Parliamentary action.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said the certificate of the SPEAKER, or of the Clerk of the House, accompanying the proceedings of the House, would only mean that it was certified that the copies were true copies. So in this case Chief Justice WOOD certified that the papers now before the House were the papers connected with this case, and being so certified they must be held by the House to be true copies. But as the SPEAKER's or the Clerk's certificate would go no further than to certify that the copies were true copies, so Chief Justice WOOD's certificate went no further than to certify that the documents were true copies of the papers that appeared in the court in Manitoba. It did not in any way give a character to these documents. They must stand upon their own merits. If defective they must fall: if sufficient they would be maintained. Yet the hon. gentleman said that for Parliamentary purposes these must be held to be correct, and a member of this House must be expelled on them whether correct or not. It was said he could go to the Court of Appeal of it was incorrect, but suppose the appeal should be successful what satisfaction would it be to be told "You ought to have sat for four years." In the case in which Lord DENMAN and the Court of Queen's Bench decided against the jurisdiction of Parliament, Sir ROBERT PEEL rose in his place and appealed to Parliament against the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas. He said no matter how the law might have been construed, the House of Commons could not be denuded of its jurisdiction; and that was a case in which the lawyers in the House of Commons did not say that the Court of Common Pleas was wrong. In this case, the House was asked to declare a seat vacant on a document that was rotten, on its face; that was not worth the paper it was written on. There was no legal man in the House who would venture to say that the judgment of outlawry, as declared in these documents, would be sustained where British law existed, yet the House was told that for Parliamentary purpose this rotten, illegal paper must be accepted as correct. The House should take the honest, straightforward course which the hon. gentlemen opposite voted last year, and ought to vote this year—to say that the man who was a fugitive from justice and expelled for that reason, was still a fugitive from justice and should be expelled again.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE was surprised that the hon. gentleman should use such vehement language as to call the judgment of a court a rotten document. It was not respectful to the court or to this House. The mere fact that the hon. gentleman characterized these documents as rotten did not make them so. The sentence of outlawry was equal to conviction of crime, and that having been pronounced. the House was not to go behind the record, but simply to accept the judgment of the court and act accordingly. The right hon. gentleman seemed to be extremely anxious that this man should be expelled from the House; the hon. members for Bagot and Terrebonne wished that he should not, but they were all working most harmoniously in order to obtain a common ground upon which they could vote. A great blunder had been made in framing this motion, and he was anxious to see how the hon. gentleman to whom he had alluded would vote on it. They were all exceedingly anxious to put members on the Government side of the House in an awkward position, but they would not accomplish their object. The motion before the House was based upon the procedure of the English House of Commons, and no one would venture to say that Lord JOHN RUSSELL was not quite as good an authority as the hon. member for Kingston. He defied the hon. gentleman to find a single instance where the House of Commons had ever gone behind a verdict of a court to criticise it. The verdict of the court in the SMITH O'BRIEN case was sent down to the Commons from the House of Lords. It might have been competent for any member of the House of Commons to raise an objection to that judgment and state that the House of Lords and the Court of Appeal were wrong, but no one thought of such a thing, and it had been left to a Parliamentarian in Canada to impugn the judgment of a court and characterize it in such strong language.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD pointed to the case of Mr. JOHN MITCHELL, in which such a great authority as Mr. GLADSTONE objected to a summary decision upon the ground that the conviction of Mr. MITCHELL was not sufficient to remove him from the House at once, and asked for a postponement in order that the whole question might be discussed and not decided as it was attempted here, upon the mere production of a paper. These were parallel cases. In each the document was laid upon the table.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—What document? There was only a telegram.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said there was more. The judgment paper was laid before the House, and the question about the subsequent escape was discussed. The two cases were altogether similar.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the return had not been received, but the intelligence of Mr. MITCHELL'S election was received by telegraph. Proceedings were at once taken, and Mr. GLADSTONE urged that such precipitancy was not desirable. It was not pretended that the judgment of the court was not sufficient evidence of the disqualification of JOHN MITCHELL.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) said he did not want to argue legal points. He would merely mention the fact that in 1871 he drew the attention of this House to the SCOTT murder, and had always advocated the punishment of the perpetrators of that cruel deed. The other night he voted against amnesty and partial amnesty. To-night he would vote for the strongest motion condemning LOUIS RIEL. The amendment declared there was no proof of outlawry, and if it were carried RIEL could again become a candidate, and be elected a member of this House. The motion of the Minister of Justice would prevent that, and as it was the strongest, he would vote for it. He took an independent position in this House.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the hon. member for Kingston had called attention to the fact that in the most recent case of which we had cognizance, Mr. GLADSTONE asked for delay. The House had to attend not to what a fallen leader (who fell without dishonour, however,) had to say, but to what the House of Commons did. They did not listen to the appeal of Mr. GLADSTONE. On the contrary, by an overwhelming majority they determined that Mr. GLADSTONE was wrong, and that the proposition to proceed immediately, was the correct one. This was a precedent which the hon. Premier could quote.

At 8:30 the members were called in and a vote was taken on the amendment, which was rejected on the following division :—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Bowell,	McQuade,
Cameron, (Cardwell),	Mitchell,
Colby,	Monteith,
Domville,	Orton,
Ferguson,	Platt,
Flesher,	Plumb,
Jones (Leeds),	Rochester,
Kirkpatrick,	Stephenson,
Little,	Thompson (Caribou),
Macdonald (Kingston),	Tupper,
McMillan,	Wallace (Norfolk),
McCallum,	White.—24.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Appleby,	Kirk,
Archibald,	Ladamme,
Baby,	Laird,
Borron,	Lajoie,
Béchard,	Landerkin,
Bernier,	Langlois,
Bertram,	Lanthier,
Biggar,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Blain,	Macdonald (Glengarry),
Blake,	MacDonnell (Inverness),
Borden,	Macdougall (Elgin),
Bourassa,	MacKay, (Cape Breton,)
Bowman,	Mackenzie (Lambton),
Boyer,	Mackenzie (Montreal),
Brouse,	Maclennan,
Brown,	Masson,
Bunster,	McCraney,
Burk,	McDonald, (Cape Breton)
Burpee (St. John),	McDougall, (Renfrew),
Burpee (Sunbury),	McGregor,
Cameron (Ontario),	McIntyre,
Campbell,	McIsaac,
Carmichael,	McKay (Colchester),
Caron,	Metcalfe,
Cartwright,	Mills,
Casey,	Moffat,
Casgrain,	Montplaisir,
Cauchon,	Moss,
Charlton,	Mousseau,
Cheval,	Murray,
Church,	Norris,
Cimon,	Oliver,
Cockburn,	Ouimet,
Coffin,	Paterson,
Costigan,	Pelletier,
Coupal,	Perry,
Cunningham,	Pettes,
Cushing,	Pickard,
Dawson,	Pinsonneault,
DeCosmos,	Pouliot,
Delorme,	Power,
Desjardins,	Pozer,
De St. Georges,	Ray,
De Veber,	Richard,
Devlin,	Robillard,
Dewdney,	Robitaille,
Dymond,	Ross (Durham),

Ferris,
Fiset,
Fleming,
Flynn,
Forbes,
Fournier,
Fréchette,
Galbraith,
Gaudet.
Geoffrion,
Gibson,
Gill,
Gillies,
Gillmor,
Gordon,
Hagar,
Hall,
Harwood,
Holton,
Horton,
Hurteau.
Irving,
Jetté,
Jones, (Halifax),
Kerr,
Killam,
Ross (Middlesex),
Ross (Prince Edward),
Rouleau,
Ryan,
Rymal,
Scatcherd,
Schultz,
Scriver,
Sinclair,
Skinner,
Smith (Peel),
Snider,
Stirton,
St. Jean,
Taschereau,
Thibaudeau,
Thompson(Haldimand),
Thomson (Welland),
Tremblay,
Trow,
Vail,
Wallace (Albert),
Wilkes,
Wood,
Yeo,
Young—146.

The original motion was then carried on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Appleby,
Archibald,
Borron,
Béchard,
Bernier,
Bertram,
Biggar, Blain,
Blake,
Borden,
Bourassa,
Bowell,
Bowman,
Boyer,
Brouse,
Brown,
Burk,
Burpee (St. John),
Burpee (Sunbury),
Cameron (Ontario),
Campbell,
Carmichael,
Cartwright,
Casey,
Casgrain,
Cauchon,
Charlton,
Cheval,
Church,
Cockburn,
Coffin,
Costigan,
Cunningham,
Cushing,
Dawson,
DeCosmos,
Delorme.
De St. Georges,
De Veber,
Landerkin,
Langlois,
Little,
Macdonald (Cornwall),
Macdonald (Glengarry),
MacDonnell (Inverness),
Macdougall (Elgin),
MacKay (Cape Breton),
Mackenzie (Lambton),
Mackenzie (Montreal),
Maclennan,
MacMillan,
McCallum,
McCraney,
McDougall (Renfrew),
McGregor,
McIntyre,
McIsaac,
McKay (Colchester),
McQuade,
Metcalfe,
Mills,
Moffat,
Monteith,
Moss,
Murray,
Norris,
Oliver,
Orton,
Paterson,
Pelletier,
Perry,
Pettes,
Pickard,
Pouliot,
Power,
Pozer,
Ray,
Richard,
Robillard,
Rochester,
Ross (Durham),
Ross (Middlesex),
Ross (Prince Edward),
Ryan,
Rymal,
Scatcherd,
Schultz,
Scriver,
Sinclair,
Skinner,
Smith (Peel),
Snider,
Stirton,
St. Jean,
Taschereau,
Thibaudeau,
Thompson (Cariboo),
Thompson (Haldimand)
Thomson (Welland),
Tremblay,
Trow,
Vail,
Wallace (Albert),
White,
Wilkes,
Wood,
Yeo,
Young—138.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Baby,
Bunster,
Cameron (Cardwell),
Caron,
Cimon,
Colby,
Coupal,
Desjardins,
Domville,
Flesher,
Gaudet,
Gill,
Harwood,
Hurteau,
Jones (Leeds),
Kirkpatrick,
Lanthier,
Macdonald (Kingston),
Masson,
McDonald (Cape Breton)
Mitchell,
Montplaisir,
Mousseau,
Ouimet,
Pinsonneault,
Platt,
Robitaillie,
Rouleau,
Stephenson,
Tupper,
Wallace (Norfolk)—31.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that Mr. SPEAKER do issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to issue a new writ for the electoral district of Provencher, in the room of LOUIS RIEL, adjudged an outlaw.

Mr. SPEAKER—I am not sure that this motion is in order. I have not looked at the statutes, but my impression is that the SPEAKER issues his warrant without any motion.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said under the Controverted Elections Act the House had not divested itself of the control over the issue of new writs, except in certain specified cases, such as the death or resignation of a member, or the return of a Judge declaring the seat vacant. In the case of O'DONOVAN ROSSA, a motion was made for the issue of a new writ, although that took place after the passage of the Controverted Elections Act.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said that in the absence of any enactment depriving the House entirely of control over the issue of writs, the House retained that control, except in the cases specially excepted, and this case was not one of them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD agreed with that view, and said he would vote for the motion. He wished, however, it to be understood — and his declaration would appear in Hansard—that he did not agree with that portion of the resolution which stated that RIEL had been adjudged an outlaw, because he did not believe there was any evidence before the House establishing that he was an outlaw. Still he would vote for the motion because the seat ought to be filled.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had voted for the amendment of the hon. member for Cardwell because he was under the impression that the proceedings submitted to the House did not satisfactorily establish the fact that LOUIS RIEL was legally adjudged an outlaw. The House, however, had declared that LOUIS RIEL was an outlaw, and therefore he was bound, having voted for his expulsion, to vote for the issue of a new writ.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the House had not declared LOUIS RIEL an outlaw; the House had declared that LOUIS RIEL had been adjudged an outlaw. The right hon. member for Kingston had stated he would vote for the issue of a new writ, and yet he held that RIEL had not been adjudged an outlaw. Now if RIEL was not adjudged an outlaw the seat was not vacant, because RIEL had not been expelled. He (Mr. BLAKE) would leave it to the hon. gentleman to reconcile the two positions either in Hansard or elsewhere.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON observed that having placed upon the records of the House their opinion that RIEL was not an outlaw and that he should be expelled, and the House having declared that he was an outlaw, there could now be no inconsistency in his hon. friend from Kingston, and those who voted with him in voting that a new writ be issued; they would vote for a new writ because they had voted that RIEL should be expelled, and the seat should not remain vacant.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE wished to point out the illogical position of the hon. gentleman opposite. He had taken the strongest ground against anything being done that might appear illegal, but now he declared that a new writ should be issued though RIEL had not been expelled.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON—I declare he is expelled.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman had voted that RIEL had not been adjudged an outlaw; certainly he was not expelled; and yet the hon. gentleman holding that he was not an outlaw was ready to vote for the issue of a new writ before RIEL was expelled, and therefore according to his view before the seat was vacant.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he and others had stated at the outset that although the record before the House was insufficient to establish the fact of outlawry it was quite sufficient to establish the fact of LOUIS RIEL being a fugitive from justice, and therefore he voted now as he voted last year consistently; but the hon. gentleman opposite did not vote consistently.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—That is not the question before the House. The hon. gentleman may vote consistently, but he cannot vote logically.

The House then divided on the motion which was carried on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Appleby,	Landerkin,
Archibald,	Langlois,
Borron,	Little,
Bechard,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Bernier,	Macdonald (Glengary),
Bertram,	Macdonald (Kingston).
Biggar,	Macdougall (Elgin),
Blain,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Blake,	Mackenzie (Lambton),
Borden,	Mackenzie (Montreal),
Bourassa,	Maclennan,
Bowell,	MacMillan,
Bowman,	McCallum,
Boyer,	McCraney,
Brouse,	McDougall (Renfrew),
Bunster,	McGregor,
Burpee (St. John),	McIntyre,
Burpee (Sunbury),	McKay (Colchester),
Cameron (Cardwell),	McQuade,
Cameron (Ontario),	Metcalfe,
Campbell,	Mills,
Carmichael,	Mitchell.

Cartwright,	Moffat,
Casey,	Monteith,
Casgrain,	Moss,
Cauchon,	Murray,
Charlton,	Norris,
Cheval,	Oliver,
Church,	Paterson,
Cockburn,	Pelletier,
Coffin,	Perry,
Costigan,	Pettes,
Coupal,	Pickard,
Cunningham,	Platt,
Cushing,	Pouliot,
Dawson,	Pozer,
Delorme,	Ray.
De St. Georges,	Richard,
De Veber,	Robillard,
Devlin,	Rochester,
Dewdney,	Ross (Middlesex),
Domville,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Dymond,	Ryan,
Ferguson,	Rymal,
Ferris,	Scatcherd,
Fiset,	Schultz,
Fleming,	Scriver,
Flesher,	Sinclair,
Forbes,	Skinner,
Fournier,	Smith (Peel),
Frechette,	Snider,
Galbraith,	Stephenson,
Geoffrion,	Stirton,
Gibson,	St. Jean,
Gillies,	Taschereau,
Gordon,	Thibaudeau,
Hagar,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Hall,	Thompson (Haldimand),
Holton,	Thomson (Welland),
Horton,	Tremblay,
Irving,	Trow,
Jette,	Tupper,
Jones (Halifax),	Vail,
Jones (Leeds),	Wallace (Albert),
Kerr,	Wallace (Norfolk),
Killam,	White,
Kirk,	Wilkes,
Kirkpatrick,	Wood,
Laflamme,	Yeo,
Laird,	Young—141.
Lajoie,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Baby,	Lanthier,
Caron,	Masson,
Cimon,	Montplaisir,
Desjardins,	Mousseau,
Gaudet,	Ouimet
Gill,	Pinsonnault
Harwood,	Robitaille,
Hurteau.	Rouleau—16.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said—Mr. Speaker, You mentioned a case of an hon. member of this House, the other evening, who had voted inadvertently before he had taken the oath that he was required to take by law. I said at the time I did not think it would be competent for you, sir, to strike the name off the roll. I have since examined similar cases occurring in England, and I did not find that the name was struck off; but in one case, —I will furnish the reference to hon. gentlemen opposite—the voting without having taken the oath was held to operate as vacating the seat, and a new writ was moved for immediately.

Mr. McCALLUM—The seat is vacant now.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. member for Monck says the seat is vacant now; but I think the hon. gentleman is quite capable of filling both seats. I was about to say, Mr. SPEAKER, that in that particular case, and it is the only case I have been able to find, a motion was made for the issue of a new writ, and immediately following it was a motion to introduce a Bill of Indemnity. The hon. gentleman has undoubtedly subjected himself to the penalties imposed by law upon such members as sit and vote without having taken the oath prescribed by law, and my impression is at present (and I state it subject to the opinion of the House which I invite) that we cannot strike the name off the division list. We must consider that the division might have been one carried by a majority of one, or it might have been carried by the casting vote of the SPEAKER; it might have, therefore, been an important division, and we have to consider what the effect would be if the vote were struck off such a division as that. As the name does not appear to have been struck off in the English House of Commons, I propose, subject as I say to the opinion of old members of the House who have thought over this question, simply to have a Bill of indemnity introduced that will be held to cover any wrong the hon. gentleman has committed in the premises.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD hoped the Hon. First Minister would be kind enough to hand over the case which was a startling one, and he would take the earliest opportunity of looking into it. It would be an unfortunate circumstance, and one which the House would deplore, if an inadvertance of that kind should compel any hon. member to vacate his seat. He thought the correct course to pursue was to introduce a Bill of indemnity, so as to protect the hon. member from the possibility of an action. The case ought to be examined by members of the House, in order that they might decide what course should be adopted, and in order to ascertain what difference, if any, existed between the law of England and our law.

Mr. SCATCHERD said that when a somewhat similar case came up last session, it was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for them to report thereon, and a Bill was introduced founded on their report.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—That was Mr. PERRY'S case, I believe.

Mr. SCATCHERD—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said that in that case the hon. member had not taken his seat. If serious consequences were expected to follow, it would be well for the hon. gentleman who was supposed to represent Centre Wellington, not to take his seat in the meantime.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON said the reason why the case which arose last session was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections was because there was some dispute about the facts. In the present case there was no dispute about the facts; it was perfectly clear that the hon. gentleman did vote before he took the oath, and the committee therefore would have nothing to do beyond what the Premier had already promised to do, to prepare a Bill for the consideration of the House. But the other suggestion was one that was worthy the consideration of the hon. member for Centre Wellington, namely; whether it was not advisable to wait until the Bill passed before he took his seat.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said that these cases were referred in England to a Select Committee and here to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, although they might not involve any question of disputed facts, it being the function of the committee to search for precedents, and bring them before the notice of the House. The leader of this House had stated that he had found a precedent, and if that was the only one in existence, and no more light could be obtained, then it could be discussed in the full House at some future time. It appeared from the statement of the hon. gentleman that this was a much more serious question than he (Mr. BLAKE) had anticipated, and it, therefore, might be proper for the House to adopt the course suggested by the hon. member for Middlesex.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked the leader of the Government to allow the matter to stand over till to-morrow, so as to allow members an opportunity of examining the English case which had been brought forward, and the House would then be better able to decide whether the present case should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections or not.

The order was allowed to stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 9.30.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, February 25th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read a first time.

Mr. BERNIER—To amend the Act relating to trade marks and industrial designs.

Mr. BROUSE—For the prevention of accidents entailing loss of life in breweries and distilleries. He explained that on Friday last, in the town of Prescott a valuable life had been lost by a person falling into a mash tub. During the past few years, no less than five lives had been lost in a similar manner in Prescott, and such accidents were of frequent occurrence in various parts of the Dominion. The object of this Bill was to prevent such accidents in future.

CARRIERS BY LAND AND WATER.

Mr. DEVLIN introduced a Bill defining and settling the duties, rights and responsibilities of carriers by land and also carriers by water. This Bill, he said, was founded on suggestions of the Dominion Board of Trade, and had been carefully prepared with a view to providing a remedy for the difficulties from which the commerce of this country had suffered for a long time past.

Mr. SPEAKER said the hon. member for Hamilton had introduced a Bill on the same subject.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON remarked that this Bill covered a different ground. At all events it should pass the first reading.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER suggested that the two Bills should be referred to the same committee to be amalgamated. This would obviate the difficulty of having two laws on the same subject in the statute book of one year.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON said these Bills hsould be carefully considered because they might conflict with the rights of the Local Legislatures. He had not examined this Bill, but he knew there were provisions in the measure introduced by the hon. member for Hamilton which most certainly came within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature. If, in such cases, the Government did not themselves determine upon a certain course to be pursued, they ought to see in smce way that a special committee, or a sub-committee of the Railways and the Banking and Commerce Committees, should examine such Bills carefully with a view to recommending some system to be followed in reference to these measures.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE entirely agreed with the suggestion made by the hon. members for Cumberland and Cardwell. It was understood when the hon. member for Hamilton introduced his Bill that it should be referred to a sub-committee of the Railway Committee, composed of gentlemen learned in the law and experienced in business. It would be advisable to refer this Bill to the same committee and have the two amalgamated. The Government would take their own course, but would invite the assistance of hon. members opposite in dealing with this matter.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL would have very much preferred to see this question taken up by the Government, as it affected the travel, trade and commerce of the country, which ought not to be dealt with according to the views of a private member of this House. It was taken up by the late administration, and it seemed to him the same course should be pursued by the present Government after these bills were reported from the committee.

Mr. MILLS suggested the propriety of the House appointing a Judicial Committee, of which the Minister of Justice would always be one, to whom any Bill respecting which there was any doubt as to the jurisdiction of this Parliament might be referred. In the two Bills adverted to in the present instance, not only the question of jurisdiction, but questions relating to trade and commerce were raised, and which the Committee on Banking and Commerce might be a very proper committee to deal with the latter questions, they might not be the best committee that could be found for considering the former. Under a limited constitution like ours the question of jurisdiction might be raised upon many measures, and it would be well to have a committee whose special functions would be to consider such measures with reference to the question of jurisdiction, and that point being disposed of, they could be dealt with by the appropriate committees.

Bill read a first time.

RETURN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER—I have the honor to inform the House that the clerk has just received the certificate of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, informing him that JAMES H. FRASER is returned as duly elected to represent the city of London.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I called the attention of the House, yesterday, to the case of the hon. member for Centre Wellington who sat and voted in this House before he became qualified to do so by taking the oath prescribed by law. I stated, also, that in a similar case in England the member who had voted in this manner voided his seat by the act of voting, and that the course pursued was to move at once for the issue of a new writ. I have examined the reports since then, and I find that no discussion in the House of Commons upon the case is reported, but I find that under the act of 1702 it is provided that where parties voted without having taken and subscribed the oath, the seat was thereby voided, and this act was renewed in 1866. It was under the act of 1702, that the proceedings took place in 1831. Although the law was renewed as late as 1866, in England, it has never been the law in this country, and to what extent the English law may govern the procedure of this House, I think it is a matter for the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who should consider also what the consequences are of a personal nature to the hon. gentlemen who sat and voted as stated. I propose, therefore, the following resolution :

"That the attention of the House having been called to the fact that Mr. Orton, member elect for the Electoral District of Centre Wellington, sat and voted in the House during the present session without having qualified himself to sit and vote by taking and subscribing the oath prescribed in the 128th section of the British North America Act of 1867, the matter be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to consider and report to the House on the proper course to be pursued in relation thereto."

This will place on record in our Journals that the matter occupied the immediate attention of the House, and the report of the committee will no doubt present some recommendation to the House as to the course to be pursued in order at once to vindicate the dignity and honor of the House, and at the same time not be personally unjust to any person who might by inadvertance have committed a wrong in this respect.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON said that after the hon. Premier mentioned yesterday, the case which had occurred in England, he took the earliest opportunity of looking into it, in order to ascertain precisely how the matter was, and found it was exactly as the hon. Premier had stated, viz., that it was under the effect of a law existing in England which for a time was allowed to lie dormant, but which was again revived. So far as he was able to judge that law was not in force in this country, but there were one or two very peculiar passages in our own statutes which certainly required that the course which the hon. Premier had proposed should be favourably considered, and the question referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It would probably be found that there was not the personal liability to the penalty which was mentioned with relation to certain acts which were done by parties who sat and voted in the House under the circumstances stated. But there was even a doubt on that point; therefore there was no clearer course to pursue than to refer the question to the committee indicated. It was a matter of very great importance, and as this was the first occasion on which the attention of the House had been called to it, they ought to have a record on the Journals to which they would be able to refer should a similar case again arise.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON thought the disqualification of the hon. member for Centre Wellington was wrought by the provisions of the British North American Act, and not by the provisions of our Independence of Parliament Act. It was under our Independence of Parliament Act that penalties accrue. It might be doubted, therefore, whether similar or perhaps any penalties arose under the other Act; but that was precisely the point which should be inquired into by the committee.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that the Independence of Parliament Act mentioned certain causes for disqualification in the first three sections, and by the sub-section of the fourth section the penalty was imposed. That sub-section says: "And if any person disqualified or declared incapable of sitting or voting, by the first, second or third sections, * *" The doubt arose as to the application of the word "disqualified," but the researches of the committee might throw more light on it than was obtained by a cursory examination.

The motion was carried.

THE MILITIA AMENDMENT ACT.

Hon. Mr. VAIL moved the House into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—"1. That it is expedient to provide that the officer to be appointed to command the Militia of the Dominion of Canada under Bill No. 4 'to amend the Dominion Militia and Defence Acts' shall be paid at the rate of four thousand dollars per annum in full of all pay and allowances. 2. That is is expedient to provide that the Adjutant General of Militia at Headquarters, to be appointed under the said Bill, shall be paid at the rate of twenty-six hundred dollars per annum." The hon. gentleman repeated the explanations offered by him on introducing the Act to amend the Dominion Militia and Defence Acts, in compliance with a request made by the hon. member for Northumberland.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said that the explanations of the Hon. Minister of Militia had fully satisfied him as to the propriety of the Bill, at all events so far as the changes proposed in regard to the officer in command and the change of title of the Deputy Adjutants General throughout the country to inspecting field-officers. He had, moreover, no objection to offer to the sums proposed as salaries in the resolutions before the House. If Canada should have an officer of the rank named, and belonging to HER MAJESTY'S service, $4,000 a year was not too high a salary, and the sum named for the Adjutant-General of Militia at headquarters, who he believed to be an exceedingly efficient officer, was certainly not excessive. On those points the Bill, indeed, was quite satisfactory. He had the more satisfaction in giving the new Militia Bill his support, because it was framed in accordance with the views he had long entertained in relation to the army that was necessary for the defence of this country. The view he entertained, and which he had previously expressed, was that the expenditure for the Militia and Volunteer service should be reduced from $1,300,000, which was the proposed vote for this year, to something like half a million dollars. He believed that all that was necessary in the present position of the Dominion on this continent was to keep up a skeleton organization which could be supplemented and increased when the exigencies of the public service demanded that such action be taken. He looked forward to a time of peace reigning on this continent, and we should do nothing either to arouse the warlike spirit in our people, or to excite through the press the jealousy of our neighbors by leading them to think that we were making preparations in anticipation of a collision between them and us. He wished, however, to be distinctly understood that he was not one of those who thought we ought not to be prepared to defend ourselves. He favoured the adoption of such measures as might be necessary, and the utmost economy to be exercised in carrying them out; but the amount placed in the estimates this year was more than the public exigencies demanded. Therefore, while he thought that in order to maintain such skeleton organization as he had suggested, it was essential to have a commanding officer and Adjutant General at headquarters, he desired the Minister of Militia to consider, before the next session of Parliament, how far the expenditure for defensive services might be reduced in accordance with public sentiment. He did not undervalue the great services which the militia and volunteer forces had rendered to the country. He knew that it was necessary to maintain a military organization not only to provide against foreign aggression, but also for the preservation of our domestic peace, the services of the militia having to a small extent being called for recently. He would, however, be prepared to assist any hon. member in taking measures to bring our military expenditure within a limit which would be satisfactory to the public.

Mr. McKAY WRIGHT said while he agreed generally with the views of the hon. member for Northumberland and the hon. Minister of Militia, he disagreed with them in one respect. He thought the alterations mentioned in regard to the appointment of a chief officer of our militia force, should be a little less stringent, and we should not be limited in our choice to an officer of the regular army of Great Britain. We were now endeavouring to train up in this country an army of volunteers who would be able to defend our land should the occasion arise, and we were at considerable expense to officer and arm them. He did not believe that native Canadians should be excluded from any office which was in the gift of the Government. There were men now on the militia staff of this Dominion who were eminently qualified to take command of troops in the field, and if we did not throw open all military appointments to our native soldiery they were debarred from the legitimate prizes which they had a right to expect to obtain if the Government proposal was adopted. This appointment should be an exceptional one, because he was not aware that even the office of Governor General of this Dominion could not be well filled by a native Canadian. He submitted for the consideration of the hon. Minister of Militia that, without preventing the office of Major General or commanding officer of the force of the Dominion being filled by an officer of the Imperial army, it should be thrown open to the competition of militia officers who are now building up our force, and expending time and money in acquiring that knowledge and experience which was necessary to render them efficient. He was prepared, however, to go a little further. He believed that the selection of an officer of the Imperial army was not calculated to best serve the interests of the militia force of this country. The experience such an officer had acquired was entirely different from that which he would require when he took command of our volunteers. That was entirely a different force to the one he would have been accustomed to command in England. Here the men were no mere machines, as were soldiers of the Old Country. An Imperial officer coming to Canada and assuming the command of our militia volunteer force would find that he was placed in entirely different circumstances, and that in order to become an efficient commander he must unlearn nearly everything he had learnt before. As an humble member of that force, and appreciating the idiosyncrasies of it, he respectfully protested against the exclusion of any of our militia officers from occupying the first militia position which the country had at its disposal.

The motion was carried, and the House went into Committee on the Resolutions, Mr. RYMAL in the chair.

The first resolution was put and carried without discussion.

On the second resolution being put,

Mr. BOWELL enquired of the Minister of Militia why the distinction was made between the wording of the two resolutions in regard to the salaries to be paid to the Major General and the Adjutant General at headquarters, respectively. It was stated that $4,000 should be paid to the Major General in full of all pay and allowances; but these words did not occur in the resolution which followed. He was aware that it had been customary to pay additions to these officers under the heading of "Pay" and "Allowances" which the law did not provide for. The attention of the late Government had been repeatedly called to this fact, but the claim was always made that the Government had a right to pay these increases under the Queen's Regulations, and salaries of Adjutants General and Deputy Adjutants General had been regularly increased from $3,000, and $2,600 to $4,000 and $3,600 respectively. What he desired to ask, now, was why the words "Pay" and "Allowances" were made applicable in the first resolution and not in the other. He did not wish it to be inferred, even by insinuation, that he believed the gentleman who occupied the position of Deputy Adjutant General at headquarters, and who he was happy to understand was to be promoted, was not worth all the amount he received. On the other hand he did not hesitate to say that he was one of the best officers in the force or connected with the Militia Department, and as an independent member of this House he would be willing to support a resolution for the increase of his salary to $3,000. If it were desirable—and he believed this House would sanction it—and if it were intended to add allowances to the amount provided in this clause, he thought it would be better to make provision for it in the Bill at once. The report of the Major General, now in command of the force in this country, gave, in his opinion, the best possible answer to the hon. member for Pontiac. He (Mr. BOWELL) had been in the habit of reading the reports of all commanding officers which had been presented to the House since he had become a member, and he did not hesitate to say that this was the most practical he ever knew to be presented to the Parliament of Canada. There were suggestions in it of a most desirable and practical nature, and he should like to know whether it was the intention of the Government to carry them all out. Members who were in the House in 1869 would remember that when this question was under discussion, he, as an independent member took exception to the Militia Act of that time, and pointed out what he thought were necessary amendments. He believed then, and believed now, that if more money was distributed among the men and the officers, who did a great amount of the work, instead of paying it, to what he then termed it, the useless officers of the staff, it would be better for the volunteer force and for the country. If there was anything gratifying to him as a member of this House and a Volunteer officer for a number of years, it was the fact that on reference to the remarks he made in 1869, he found that almost everyone of his suggestions were recommended to the Minister of Militia by Major General SMYTH, and more particularly that portion relating to the unnecessary number of staff officers in the different military districts. This officer pointed out that the Brigade Majors were utterly useless for almost any purpose, and their position could be much better supplied by Adjutants of the force. There were many other suggestions in this report which he trusted the Minister of Militia when he had time to fully investigate and compare them with the facts as they existed, would see his way clear to carry out. It would add much, not only to the stability, but also to the popularity of the Volunteer force of this country.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the salary of the Major General was precisely the same as that paid to the former Adjutant General.

Mr. BOWELL—But not the amount provided by law to be paid.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was practically the same, because the allowances brought it to that. It was due to the Imperial authorities to say that when this Government proposed to place an officer of that rank at the head of the Militia force, they received the utmost possible encouragement from HER MAJESTY'S Government, and they (the Imperial Government) undertook to supplement the salary, so that it would not amount to more. But for that arrangement this Government would have been obliged to ask a sum very considerably in excess of this, in order to obtain an officer of that rank in the Province.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the hon. member for Northumberland referred to the expenditure for the militia service as too large. He (Mr. VAIL) agreed with the hon. member that the expenditure for this purpose should be reduced to the lowest possible point consistent with the obligations the Government rested under to protect the interests of the Dominion. It was just as necessary, perhaps, to keep up a militia force to be used for civil purposes when required as it would be to defend the country against foreign invasion, but he might say further that it would be quite out of the question at the present time, considering what the late Government had expended in the service, to reduce the amount named in the estimates for the present year. With regard to what the hon. member for Pontiac had said, the hon. member for North Hastings gave a complete answer to the opinion that our militia would be in a better position if the Commander in Chief were chosen from the militia force. The fact that the report laid upon the table this session was the best brought down for a long time, was due to the appointment of an Imperial officer who had had great experience in the militia service in Ireland and England. When the college that was now being built, and which would be in operation at the end of the year, was in operation, he hoped in time we would be able to educate an officer qualified to fill the position. No one would more heartily welcome that day than himself (Mr. VAIL), for he believed they should offer a premium to native talent. If we had a man in this country fitted for the position he ought to have the preference, but under present circumstances it was better that the militia should be under the command of an Imperial officer. In regard to the salaries the only increase was in that of the Adjutant General. The increase was $360. The gentleman who at present occupied that position was an experienced officer, and had been Deputy Adjutant General at headquarters. In consequence of the late appointment larger and more important duties would devolve upon him. After thinking over the whole matter, and having a due regard to economy and efficiency in the service, it was felt that this increase of $360 was a wise one, since they were doing away the office of Deputy Adjutant General, and did not intend to appoint one as heretofore. He was quite sure the House would, after this explanation, vote the amount without any further question.

Mr. BOWELL said the hon. gentleman had not answered his question. He (Mr. BOWELL) did not find fault with the increase of salary, but on the contrary said he would approve of it. His question was why the words "paid allowance" were not added to the 29th clause as to the other, and whether it was intended to pay the allowance in addition to the salary.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the intention was to let the salary remain as it had been since 1867, with the exception of this increase of $360.

Mr. BOWELL thought it would be much better to pay a stated salary, as in the case of the Major General.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON called attention to the objections of the Premier with regard to the salary of the Major General, which he thought were likely to be misconstrued. The inference was that a part of the salary was to be paid by the Imperial Government. It would be a great pity that the Imperial Government should bear any portion of the expenses attaching to this appointment, and no member of this House would like it to be the case. What he (Mr. CAMERON) understood was that the Imperial Government continued Major General SMYTH's allowance as an officer of the regular army, although he was in the service of this country with the consent of the British Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE remarked that that was precisely the case, but it was not the case with former officers. Practically it had the effect of reducing the salary to be voted for by the House. When he announced to the House last session that it was the intention of the government to appoint a Major General to command our militia, he expected to have to pay a larger salary, and if we had not a larger salary it was in consequence of the allowance of the Imperial Government under the army regulations.

Hon. J. H. CAMERON said there was another point to which he wished to call the attention of the Minister of Militia in relation to the suggestion that officers for the command of our militia should be taken from amongst ourselves. An important step might be taken in this direction by selecting Canadians who were already officers of the British army, several of these, he was happy to say, had distinguished themselves, and had passed with great honor and credit the Staff College, and held very important positions in the British service. Many of these young men were very anxious to have their services used in this country if the opportunity offered, and he hoped that they would receive every consideration at the hands of the Government in making their selections. He could name several of these Canadian officers of the British army. There was the son of the late Chief Justice ROBINSON—Major ROBINSON—who had passed through the Staff College with a great deal of credit, and who was in the Ashantee expedition. There was also another gentleman, at present in Ottawa, son of another very old resident of Upper Canada, who had distinguished himself for many years as one of the instructors of musketry at Hythe. There were several others he could name who he had no doubt would be glad to have their services employed in this country.

Hon. J. H. Cameron.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had stated in reply to a question a few days ago, that the Commandant of the Military College must almost necessarily be an officer of high rank in the army, and also an officer of high scientific attainments. The Act respecting the establishment of the Military College provided for two other professors, and such instructors as may be found necessary. He had stated then that while the commandant must almost necessarily be chosen from the British army, it was the intention of the Government while consulting the commandant to endeavour to fill the other positions in the institution from amongst the ranks of Canadians who had qualified themselves for the positions. The Government had the names of a number of distinguished Canadian officers who might fairly be supposed to be qualfied to fill at least some of these positions, and it was the intention of the Government as far as it was possible to do so to encourage that particular class of our own people.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL while not objecting to the remuneration it was proposed to give to the Adjutant General, said he would prefer to have his full salary stated, so that the House might know what he was to receive. While in the abstract he agreed with the remarks of the member for Pontiac that it was desirable to have every position in this country filled by our own people, he was of opinion that this particular branch of the service would for a time at least be promoted by selecting officers of experience who had the confidence of HER MAJESTY'S Government.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said he quite agreed with the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland that it would be better perhaps to name a specific amount in the Bill which should be paid to the Adjutant General; but at some future time—he hoped it would be a long time hence—some other person might be called on to fill the position who would not have the claims that the present officer had, and whom it would not be advisable to pay more than the amount named in the resolution. The Government, therefore, could make no promise for the future, but he was prepared to say that when they were called upon to make a new appointment it might be well to fix the salary by statute.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL seid he did not wish it to be understood that he thought the salary was too high, because he did not think so, and moreover, he did not think there was any man in the public service that was more entitled to the confidence of the public than the present Deputy Adjutant General. All he asked was that when the Government came to appoint a successor, this systemof allowances should be done away with, and a fixed salary paid.

Hon. Hr. VAIL—Hear, hear?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL was glad to find that the hon. Minister of Militia approved of his suggestion.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—I have no objection to promise the hon. gentleman that this matter will receive the fullest consideration on the part of the Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE BOWELL observed that last year the Deputy Adjutant General received an amount in salary and allowances of over $4,000, which was more than it was now proposed to pay the Major General. The public accounts showed that he received his salary, amounting to $2,240; the usual allowance of $600; and a bonus of $534; and in addition to that, $666 for extra services which he supposed was on account of having to fulfil the duties of the Adjutant General.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK was of opinion that the Government should state to the House whether they intended to act upon the suggestions contained in the very able and practical report of the Major General—that the staff appointments should be made for five years, and that the staff officers should be liable to be removed from one place to another—suggestions which he (Mr. KIRKPATRICK) approved of. He would also like to know whether the Government intended to have a Deputy Adjutant General at headquarters.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—No.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said that he noticed in the estimates the sum of $600 "contingencies, Deputy Adjutant General at headquarters."

Hon. Mr. VAIL—That is for the Adjutant General's office. He proceeded to say that it was not usual for the Government to lay down their policy with reference to a report such as this, immediately on its being laid before the House. All he could say was that the report would receive the fullest consideration, and the Government would adopt such portions of it as they thought were in the interests of the service and of the country.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL was of opinion that the Government should be prepared to declare their policy upon such questions, if they had any policy at all. Of course, if they wished more time to consider it, he was willing that they should have it. He wished to know from the Government whether it was their intention in any way to change the direct jurisdiction which the Minister of Militia had over militia affairs, and to give to the present commanding officer more powers than his predecessor enjoyed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The policy of the Government is not to tell my hon. friend what he asks at present, and when any change is made the House will receive the first notification of it.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That is just about what I would expect from the arbitrary way in which the hon. gentleman conducts public business.

Hon. Mr. POPE, referring to the remarks of the member for Pontiac, stated that in his judgment the Government should at least place no obstacle in the way of their selecting Canadian officers if they found they were suited for the position. He, of course, did not object to the selection of Imperial officers, but he thought the Government should be free, when they found the opportunity, to make a selection from Canadians. He proceeded to say that the argument of the Minister of Militia that because the late Government had increased the expenses of the Militia Department, therefore the present Government were justified in increasing them also—was a very extraordinary one. As a matter of fact, the late Government were in a different position from the present Government on account of the threatened Fenian invasion, and they had, before they left office begun to reduce the Militia expenditure. The contended that the present Government, although they professed to have reduced the Militia expenditure, had actually increased it to the extent of over $100,000.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had no desire to interfere with the liberty of discussion, but he doubted the propriety of raising a general discussion upon the Militia estimates upon these resolutions.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL contended that the hon. member for Compton was quite in order because he was only replying to the arguments of the Minister of Militia which were based upon the alleged extravagance of the late Government.

Hon. Mr. VAIL—If the hon. gentleman was so anxious that a volunteer officer should be appointed to command the Militia, why did he not repeal the Act when he was in power?

Hon. Mr. POPE said his remarks would not bear the construction which had been put upon them. He thought the present appointment was a good one, but he did not think it wise to pass an Act which was so drawn as to bar volunteer officers from ever obtaining the command of our Militia forces.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK hoped the hon. Minister of Militia and the hon., the First Minister would take sweet counsel together and endeavour to reconcile their statements. The former stated that after Parliament rose the Government would take the report into consideration, and consider what was proper to be done, while the latter Minister said that if any change was made, Parliament would obtain the first intimation of it. It was due to the people's representatives that they should know what changes were proposed.

The motions were carried.

On motion of hon. Mr. VAIL, the resolutions were referred to the Committee of the whole House on Bill No. 4.

The House then went into Committee on the Militia Bill.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward), in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. VAIL moved that the blanks in the Bill be filled by inserting $4,000 and $2,600 according to the resolutions passed by the House.

Mr. BOWELL asked the hon. Minister of Militia to explain his intentions with respect to the payment of bonuses.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said it was unfortunate that the hon. member had not asked the Minister of Militia two or three years ago for these explanations. He was, however, prepared to give the hon. gentleman and the House every information in regard to that matter as early as possible, and he would submit a paper containing the necessary details in the course of a few days.

Mr. BOWELL said the hon. Minister of Militia did not know what he spoke when he said it was unfortunate that these explanations had not been asked for before. Every member of the House knew that for the last six years he had been asking for explanations on that matter.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said:—If the hon. member had been asking for explanations for five or six years without effect, he might give him the space of a day or two to make them now.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER congratulated the Government upon the fact that they always fell back upon the actions of the late Government when they wished to excuse themselves, and no explanation they could make to the House and country would be so satisfactory as that.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said if he had ever made such a statement he took that particular opportunity of making a full and complete retraction.

The Bill was reported as amended, and the report received.

CONCURRENCE IN ESTIMATES.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, item No. 2 of Committee of Supply, $8,025, to defray salaries of the Governor General's Secretary's Office, was concurred in; as also was resolution No. 1 of Committee of Supply, $68,600, charges of management.

Items 3 to 18 inclusive were concurred in without discussion.

On item 19, $70,000, re-adjustment of salaries,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, at the request of Hon. Mr. TUPPER, repeated his explanations of the proposed amended system of increasing the salaries of civil servants, the hon. member for Cumberland having been absent when those explanations were originally given.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) inquired whether any of this sum could legally be applied to increasing the salaries of the outside service.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said there could be but little doubt as to its legality, but the increase of outside service salaries was more a matter to be dealt with departmentally than otherwise.

The item was concurred in.

Item 20 was concurred in without discussion.

On item 21, $15,000, circuit allowances, British Columbia,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained, in answer to a question, that the Minister of Justice did not consider the former vote of $10,000 sufficient for the service.

Items 22 and 23 were concurred in without discussion.

On item 24, $185,000, Manitoba Mounted Police,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked whether it was in contemplation to make alteration in the constitution of that body. The experiment of the past year—for it was a mere experiment—would have satisfied the Government, whether it was proper or otherwise, to incorporate the Mounted Police with the regular force in Manitoba. He had been following as closely as possible the statements from the best sources at the command of gentlemen on his side, that was to say the press, and they were to the effect that the system provided by the Government and sanctioned by the House for the administration of the Mounted Police had been attended with a good many serious difficulties, that the powers possessed by the officers had been insufficient to preserve that degree of subordination and harmony which was necessary to prevent desertions; and the question must force itself upon the attention of the Government as to how far it would be advisable to change the organization of that force. It appeared to him that it would be a very great advantage to incorporate it with the standing force in that Province, the result of which would be that the Government would have at their command for whatever purpose it might be required, a compact body which could be detailed to the different parts of the country when their services were necessary. He thought it was unfortunate to have two forces in the same Province organized upon entirely different systems, and considered they would be more effective for every purpose if consolidated. He was very happy to believe that the prospect in the North-West was such that a very large standing force would soon become quite unnecessary, but under the present circumstances he believed neither the House nor the country would be disposed to dispense with the services of that force, and therefore he made the suggestion that the Government should consider the advantage of incorporating the two bodies.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER stated that it was not the intention of the Government to incorporate the mounted police with the militia force. It had been stated in the House that the mounted police had been a failure. On the contrary it had been an entire success, certainly beyond the expectations that might fairly be formed of it. It was true there had been difficulties, but they were entirely due to the novelty of the organization, and the inexperience of the men. He was glad that the hon. gentleman had given him an opportunity of denying the statement that there had been many desertions. The total number of the force was in the neighborhood of 250, and the desertions which took place were only some sixteen. Those who had deserted were enlisted in the force from the beginning, and it was calculated that a great many of those who had already been in the service would leave it, and in order to meet that contingency a number of men were engaged before the expedition started to be in readiness to fill up vacant places. The force was a much superior one to that of the United States, and the good effects of it had not been confined to Manitoba, but had extended to the American territory bordering. He hoped that a report on the subject would be laid before the House shortly when the beneficial results of the force in every respect, and the part it contributed towards maintaing peace and security all over the territory would be shown to be greater than could have fairly been anticipated.

Mr. MASSON said his remark was not that he was in a position to state that the force was not a success, but that it was commonly reported in Manitoba and in the press generally that such was the case. The hon. gentleman, by stating there were 36 desertions, out of a force of 246 men, gave some confirmation of that report. He (Mr. MASSON) found no fault with the hon. gentleman for this; he merely drew the attention of the Government to the fact, and suggested that the force should be included in the militagy organization of the country. The officers should have more command over the men, and should be empowered to punish for desertion and refusal to obey orders, with something more than a fine. These remarks were made in a kindly spirit.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said his Bill contained a clause increasing the powers of the officers to prevent and punish desertion.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked why $25,000 was asked for the Dominion Police. Last year the expenditure was only $17,490.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the police force for guarding the public buildings had been found insufficient, and the number had been augmented. Hence the increased appropriation.

The item was concurred in.

On the items under the head of "Penitentiaries"

Mr. KIRKPATRICK called the attention of the Government and the House to the unfortunate position of the guards and officials of the Penitentiaries. While their duties were, perhaps, not very laborious, they were very hazardous. They carried their lives in their hands, and it frequently happened that they were killed or maimed for life by sudden outbreaks among the convicts. Although these men might spend their lives in the service of the country, and discharge their duties faithfully and efficiently, in old age, when they were no longer fit for service, they were turned adrift without any provision being made for their families. The Government could when they pleased grant a gratuity extending from half a year to a year's salary, but what was that for a man who was turned adrift on the world in his last years. He wished to know whether the Government proposed to put these civil servants on the superannuation list and allow them the same payment which was given to other civil servants. He might mention an instance where a storekeeper, who was obliged to give large security to the Government, received only $700 a year, a small salary for such a responsible position. He asked the Government to take these cases into their consideration.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the expenditure was already very large for the number of convicts in the penitentiaries, and the Government could not see their way clear to increase it. It was true there was some risk attending the positions referred to, but for all that there was never any lack of applicants for any vacancies that occurred.

The item was concurred in.

On item 26,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK asked whether anything was being done under the Act passed a few years ago giving power to transfer Rockwood Asylum to the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government desired to make the transfer, and had some reason to believe the Local Government would take it, the value to be settled by arbitration on the 1st of January, but when the time came the Ontario Government were not prepared to carry out what they supposed they could do. As soon as they were ready to arbitrate, a valuation would be arrived at, and the institution would be handed over to them. In the meantime the Province of Ontario practically paid the expenses of the institution, as they were charged so much per patient for every one kept there.

The item was concurred in.

On item 27,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER drew the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that a rumor existed that it was the intention of the Government to supersede the Warden of Halifax Penitentiary, who was still as capable of discharging his duties as at any period of his life. He would be glad to hear from the Minister of Justice that there was no ground for the rumor.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said it was only a rumor. He might add that this officer would be treated with the justice due to all public officers. There would be no exception made in his case.

The item was concurred in.

On item 28,

Mr. DOMVILLE asked why the salary of the Warden of St. John Penitentiary had been increased $400. He believed that the salary should be proportionate to that of the Warden of Halifax Penitentiary, and therefore did not object to the increase, but he asked the question, seeing that the late Warden had been removed and a new one appointed at an increased salary. Why was the old Warden removed, and why was the salary of the new one increased?

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said the removal was recommended by the Commissioners more than once, and particularly so during last summer, and for reasons which the hon. gentleman could see in their report. The increase of salary was also made on the recommendation of the Commissioners, and he had already saved more than two years' salary in orders for clothing. Although cloth and clothing had been ordered by the old Warden, the new one found enough on hand to last for two or three years.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he had not seen the report of the Commissioners, but the community in general did not believe that the removal was made in consequence of any dereliction of duty or incapacity on the part of the old Warden; it was looked upon as a removal for purely political reasons.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was out of order to discuss the question in this way on concurrence. The hon. member should move for the papers, and on receiving them bring the matter before the House.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL admitted that would be the strictly Parliamentary course. but reminded the Premier that a great deal of latitude in discussion had always been allowed on concurrence. The Government should not keep hon. members to the strict letter of the rule in discussing matters of this kind; the late Government had not done so.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had always been careful when in opposition to state when in committee he would discuss certain items on concurrence. He did not wish to prevent the discussion now, but merely to point out the proper mode of bringing the matter before the House.

Mr. DEVEBER concurred in all that the Minister of Customs had said, and more too. If the Government had investigated the matter they would not only have removed the old warden, but also taken away his allowance. The public were satisfied that the Government were justified in removing him.

The item was concurred in.

Items 29 to 43, inclusive, were concurred in.

On item 44,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked when the census returns would be published. Unless they appeared within a reasonable time after the taking of the census, the object of the work would be defeated.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied that the officer in charge of the Census Department said the returns were now in the hands of the printers, and he expected in a short time to be able to give the results of the census.

The item was concurred in.

On item 45,

Mr. CURRIER asked whether $40,000 would meet all the expenses that would attend a proper representation of Canada at the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. It appeared to him to be a very small sum for the purpose.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that depended entirely upon the extent of the plan which might be adopted. That was in course of preparation now, and he could not say what amount would be required. He might say, however, that he did not think this sum would suffice.

Mr. YOUNG said if Canada was to put in an appearance at all at the exhibition, we should make a creditable appearance. He was not an advocate of lavish expenditure, but he thought it would be a great mistake not to vote enough to make such an appearance as would attract the attention of European visitors.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE observed that from all he could learn since the vote had been passed in the committee, they would require at least $100,000.

Mr. CURRIER thought that $150,000 or $200,000 would be little enough to do credit to this country. If we were to put in an appearance at all, we should do it with credit to ourselves.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — It is expected that the Local Legislatures will aid to some extent.

Mr. CURRIER—Even if they do, more will be required than appears in the Estimates.

Item concurred in.

It being six o'clock the SPEAKER left the chair.

——:++:——

AFTER RECESS

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT again moved the House into Committee of Supply.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said—Mr. SPEAKER: the hon. Minister of Finance in replying to the observations which I addressed to the House upon the speech which he delivered in submitting the budget took the somewhat unusual course I think, Sir, of considerably widening the range of the debate. I endeavoured, Sir, in the criticisms which I offered to that hon. gentleman's statements, to confine myself as closely as I could to the subject to which they were immediately related. The hon. gentleman with some warmth, at a time when he was aware the rules of the House precluded me from offering any rebuttal of the statements he made, took the somewhat unusual course of persistently widening the range of the debate. I do not intend, in availing myself of this opportunity to notice the statements which that hon. gentleman made on that occasion, to copy what I take to be his very bad example in that respect. I shall endeavor, Sir, not only to confine myself as closely as I can to the remarks he made on that occasion, but I shall endeavour to set the hon. gentleman a good example in another respect, and I trust exhibit less warmth than he did on that occasion. The hon. Minister of Finance took exception to the statement that I made with respect to the passages in the Speech from the Throne on the opening of Parliament last year and this year in reference to the trade of the country. I claimed that the statement contained in the speech with which Parliament was opened this session, that "the trade of Canada is sound," had fully justified the criticisms I had offered on the hon. gentleman's statement when a year before the attention of the country was drawn by the Speech from the Throne to the fact that commercial depression existed in Canada. Now, the hon. gentleman has replied to me, and he contended that he was right in having stated that there was commercial depression a year ago, and in having stated this year that the commercial depression has passed away, and the condition of the country is sound. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the cause he gave one year ago, which led him to make the statement that the commercial industries of the country were laboring under a considerable commercial depression, has passed away. I would like to ask, if the great lumbering interest is not more seriously depressed at this moment than it was then. But the ground I took then, and I take now is, that no temporary depression in any one commercial interest of the country, however important it may be, ought to be made the subject of unfavorable comment by an hon. gentleman holding the high and important position of Minister of Finance. When the hon. gentleman has informed the House that in the great index of trade, the imports of the country, there has been a falling off of one milllon and a half of dollars in the first six months of the present fiscal year, he has taken away from himself any reason for giving a more favorable statement of the condition of the affairs at this time than he could have been justified in giving a year ago.

I pass over that point to the consideration of a more important question which was in dispute between the hon. gentleman and myself, and that was the question of the existence of a deficit for the fiscal year ending 1st July, 1874. The hon. gentleman has qualified very much the statements he addressed to the House last year, and also the statements he has, from time to time, made in relation to that matter; in fact I may say the hon. gentleman has given up the whole question in dispute. I say that by the admission made by the hon. gentleman a few evenings ago, he has virtually abandoned the whole ground which he previously held, and has admitted that the three millions of taxes which he asked this House to impose on the country a year ago were imposed, not to cover any deficit in the then current year, but was done in anticipation of the necessity for a larger amount of public money in the future. If the hon. gentleman had made that statement a year ago, it would have saved us a great deal of trouble. If he had admitted what was the fact, that the condition of Canada was not only most prosperous in every respect, but that the expenditure of the year would be amply covered by the revenue of the year, but that in view of future and ulterior liabilities—in view of increased expenditure which the Government intended to impose—more money would be required, it would, I say, have saved us a great deal of trouble. But although the hon. gentleman has qualified his statements he still made this statement: "I regret to state that the receipts of the current year will not be sufficient to meet the expenditure. It will therefore be necessary for you to consider the best means to be adopted of making good the anticipated deficiency." There is no reference there to increased expenditure, but there is the statement that the taxation to which the people of this country were called upon to submit is a taxation required in order to meet a deficit in the then current year. I need not occupy the attention of the House at much length after the discussion which took place the other night. The hon. gentleman's admissions on that point will save me much trouble in that respect. He has admitted that if the Public Accounts were made up as they had been made on all previous occasions there would have been a surplus on the 1st of July last of $1,722,215.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—No, I did not.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman did not reply to the statement I made in which I showed that deducting from the expenditure that which all previous Governments had kept out of that expenditure, deducting that which the Minister of Public Works in his report to the House showed ought not to be in that expenditure, deducting that railway expenditure which there own officer, Mr. BRYDGES claimed to be capital expenditure and not chargeable to revenue — making that deduction and adding to the receipts the premium on tho loan negotiated by Mr. TILLEY, the surplus would have stood at $1,722,215. I will detain the House for a few moments to strengthen tbe position which I took on that occasion. The hon. gentleman says—and he expresses himself in very strong terms — that expenditure was falsely placed by the previous Governments to capital when it ought to have been paid to revenue account, but the hon. gentleman can hardly forget that one of the objections he took to the policy of the previous administration was to their making large provisions for capital expenditure out of current revenue of the day. The hon. gentleman knows that in support of the position which I took that the Government had placed $545,625 of capital expenditure to current revenue. I showed, by reference to the public accounts of former years, that precisely the same class of items had invariably been charged to capital account and not to revenue. The hon. gentleman knows that Mr. BRYDGES,—who was employed as an expert in relation to railway accounts,—has, in his report to the Government, supported the position which I took that $545,625 of money which the hon. gentleman has charged to current revenue should have been charged to capital. Now, he has given Mr. BRYDGES a very high character—he has stated he is a gentleman of great ability, and I ask him to reconcile the statement of that gentleman—a gentleman better qualified than almost any other man in this country to state what is a fair and legitimate charge upon revenue—with the statement that the hon. gentleman himself has made. But I have better authority still, namely, the estimate submitted to this House by the hon. gentleman himself, in which a similar expenditure is charged to capital account and not to revenue. The hon. gentleman knows that I challenged the accuracy of putting such expenditure as that for the Spring Mill branch of the Intercolonial Railway to revenue account. I showed him that Mr. BRYDGES in his report had placed it to capital account, and that the Minister of Public Works had done the same thing in his report, and I now show him in his own estimates on this table that he is asking the House to vote $60,000 for the construction of a station at Halifax, and that he is charging that expenditure as part of the expenditure on capital account. I ask the hon. gentleman, Does he intend to make up this account falsely? to use his own term,—for I would be sorry to use such strong language myself—and to put himself in a position to be challenged by his successor for having made up his account in an improper manner? I have shown that throughout the past these expenditures have all been charged to capital, and I now show the House that in a precisely similar case the hon. gentleman has himself done the same thing. According to the hon. gentleman's own showing he is bound—if his estimate is properly made up this year—to put the four hundred odd thousand dollars of expenditure, which he asks this House to make to extend the railway one mile, to revenue account, if he claims that the extension of five miles of railway last year should be placed to revenue account, I ask the hon. gentleman whether he is not impaled on the horns of this dilemma, either that his his own accounts this year are not based upon correct principles, or that these charges that have always in the past been placed to capital account, and which he declared should not have been so placed, were correctly placed to capital account. I come now to the other side of the account; and I admit frankly that it is a matter fairly open to question as to whether a premium on a loan should be placed to the receipts of the year; but I say that in a comparison with former statements that contained that item in the receipts you must put it to the receipts of the year. But that is a secondary question altogether. I ask the hon. gentleman whether he had money enough, and if he had, as he did have, he must not come down and say the people must be taxed to make up this $345,000 which he had actually received as a premium on the loan. The hon. gentleman cannot say that he had not the money available to meet the current expenditure of the year. I admit frankly that the hon. gentleman has given us a good reason from his standpoint why he wished that these matters of premium and discount should forever disappear from the account of revenue and expenditure. He says, "What position would I be in next year if I did not change this system? It is all very well in dealing with Mr. TILLEY'S loan when there was a premium of $345,000, but next year I would be compelled to put two millions of discount on my loan on the other side of the account." The hon. gentleman has therefore from his standpoint given us a sufficient reason why he should wish to introduce a new system and change the position of that item in the public accounts. The hon. gentleman in reviewing the remarks I addressed to the House, did not question the amounts that I placed to the credit of the Government as received under the new taxes for the two and a half months, and the amount discounted in the Inland Revenue Department. The hon. gentleman accepted my statement.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—No.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—If the hon. gentleman did not, I challenge him now to state to the House that I did not place the outside estimate of the amount received under the new taxes for the two and a half months when I placed it at $546,000. Does he question that?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then I want him to tell me how it is if he only taxed the people of the country three millions per annum he can get with all the goods passed in anticipation of the tariff within two and a half months of the end of the year, he can get more than $546,000 in the two and a half months. He cannot claim more if he admits that only three millions per annum of new taxes were imposed. But the fact that the hon. gentleman passed over that statement may be taken as an admission that I was correct. Deducting from the total surplus of $1,722,215 the sum of $1,072,611, as representing the amount received for new taxes, and the amount that was discounted in the Inland Revenue Department, and there was a surplus left of $649,604. These statements the hon. gentleman did not venture to question, and therefore I assume that he admits their accuracy. I then dealt with the only made by which it was possible to establish the hon. gentleman's imaginary deficit, and that was with the question as to whether there had been an anticipation of revenue from the Customs as well as from the Inland Revenue; and I proved that in six months the duties—six months in which the hon. gentleman showed that there had been a falling off of imports entered for consumption of a million and a half as compared with the previous year—had increased $2,429,143; and when I proved that, I took away the possibility of the hon. gentleman using the argument that there was a single dollar discounted in relation to the Customs Revenue. I have ere now called the attention of the hon. gentleman and the attention of the House to the fact that he had adopted a new mode of making up the Public Accounts, in order to make an apparent increase of the expenditure and an apparent decrease of the receipts. There is another item in the Public Accounts to which I would call the attention of the House, as illustrating the length the hon. gentleman is prepared to go, in order to create imaginary deficits. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the Public Accounts, they will find the extraordinary item of "Customs Refunds in former years." Remember, Sir, that we have before us what professes to be a comparative statement for the year ending June, 1874. What is that item? I think the House will be surprised to hear that it consists in the hon. gentleman making a present of over $69,000 of the people's money to certain railway companies in this country.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The first Order in Council was passed by the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman is always ready to shelter himself behind the Government of which I was a member. I can inform the hon. gentleman and the House that this was a question of discussion with the Government of which I was a member. In conformity with that fairness of dealing which characterized all the actions of the late Government, they showed that they were disposed to give the most favorable consideration to the Great Western Railway, which that railway deserved. But they maintained that the law must be carried out; and, while they allowed the Great Western Railway Company to enter unfinished locomotives free of duty, they insisted, and very properly insisted, that duty should be paid on finished locomotives. Such was the determination of the late Government after the most thorough and perfect investigation into the question, and I am fully justified in repeating that they dealt with that company in a spirit of generous liberality. Now, I ask this House, if the hon. gentleman can put his hand into the public treasury and take therefrom over $69,000 of the people's money without the permission of this House, what difficulty can there be in creating deficits where he pleases? He has only, Sir, just to take enough away. In this case he has taken $69,178, under the designation of Customs refunds of former years, an amount of money legitimately exacted from that company under the law; he has refunded the amount to that company, and he now applies it in reduction of that surplus which last year I told him, in this House, would be the result of his financial engineering. But the hon. gentleman has gone a little further and he has refunded to the Canada Southern Railway an amount of $1,384.54. These duties, sir, were paid under the law, after officers eminently qualified to press their just claims had come before the Government and pressed them, and after the Government had carefully examined the question with every desire to deal justly and generously with the company. Sir, if the Hon. Mr. McMASTER could obtain the position of being a Canadian Director of the Great Western Railway—the only Canadian Director when all the others were swept aside—by stating to the shareholders in England that his position in Parliament would enable him to save considerable amounts of money to the company, what favors may he not expect at their hands now when he can state to them that he got $69,178 of public money which was exacted by a former Government for duties levied under the law, refunded by the present Finance Minister. That system has been carried on to such an extent, that between these two companies—the Canada Southern and the Great Western—the public Treasury has been depleted, according to the Public Accounts, of a sum of $90,461. I ask my honorable friend to add to the surplus existing on the first of July, the sum of $69,178, which cannot be charged to the expenditure of the year without such a violation of law and propriety as would render the keeping of public accounts utterly useless and worse than a farce. When the hon. gentleman found, as I predicted, that instead of a deficit he had a surplus, that instead of being under the necessity of taxing the people of this country for $3,000,000 per annum additional revenue, he would at the old rate of taxation have half a million over, he endeavors to shelter himself behind the pretext that he was providing for the future. He also endeavored, Sir, to shelter himself behind the statement of his predecessor, Mr. TILLEY, and he so far forgot himself and the nature of the position he occupies, as to find a pretext for his proposition in a statement made by Mr. THOMAS WHITE, as a member of the Board of Trade. That statement certainly anticipated a deficit, but it was based upon the figures published by the hon. gentleman himself and the department under his control in the Official Gazette. That statement misled Mr. WHITE and misled everybody else; it was millions astray. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that Mr. THOMAS WHITE made an estimate that there would be a deficit, believing that he could depend upon the accuracy of the figures furnished him by the Minister of Finance, this House would have accepted that as an excuse for the imposition of $3,000,000 additional taxation? I need not say that the House would not have accepted any such excuse. We would have told him rectthat it was because of the incorness of the figures the hon. gentleman had caused to be published in the Official Gazette. The hon. gentleman endeavored to shelter himself behind Mr. TILLEY, and has told this House that his hon predecessor had also anticipated a deficit. When I heard that statement I felt that there was a grave injustice being done to a gentleman who had discharged the duties attaching to his office, in a manner that reflected the highest credit upon his ability as a statesman. Let me read to the House what Mr. TILLEY did say upon the occasion, and it will be found that his words most completely vindicate him; and I would ask the House to mark that his statement, which has proved to be so remarkably accurate, was made long in advance of the time that it was to be verified. Mr. TILLEY in submitting his estimate to the House and in giving a statement of the condition of public affairs said :—

"Now, the question arises, how is the Government to obtain the means of paying for this increased expenditure. It was intimated last session, that after having made a reduction of $1,200,000 of duties, the Government would probably have to ask the House this session for increased taxation in some direction. And I can quite understand, sir, that hon. members and the country generally would not be disappointed if the Government were to declare on the present occasion that such was their intention; but after having surveyed the whole matter carefully, and looked into it with a most rigid scrutiny, they have arrived at the conclusion that it is not wise nor is it necessary to ask Parliament this session to impose any additional taxation."

As if this were not strong enough to satisfy every one that additional taxation was not necessary, he adds :—

"The Government have concluded to make no present change, inasmuch as they believe they will have means amply sufficient to meet all the requirements of the country."

Further on he says :—

"On the whole if our estimates be based on eorrect principles, we will have a revenue of $21,740,000, against an estimated expenditure of $20,826,849, or a surplus of $913,151. Of course there will be supplementary estimates, and other propositions which may cover a large portion of this estimated surplus, but the Government feel that they are not in a position requiring them to ask additional taxation."

Not only, Sir, did Mr. TILLEY not anticipate a deficit, but he showed that such was the prosperity of Canadathat it would only be after spending thirty millions to complete our canals, and thirty millions more as a subsidy to the Canada Pacific Railway, that the three millionsadditional taxation would be required. If he did speak of three millions additional taxation it was only in anticipation of the sixty millions additional debt to meet, whereas my hon. friend has only $182,000 of additional debt to meet. I stand here now to tell him that on the 1st July, 1875, he will have a surplus of three millions; and a year hence I will stand in the same relation to him with regard to that prediction that I did with regard to the position I took a year ago. If the hon. gentleman goes on making lavish presents to his friends out of the public treasury with the consent of this House he may be able to reduce these figures a little, but I believe it will puzzle even the hon. Minister of Finance, with his extraordinary facility for the creation of a deficit, to damage the position I have taken up to any great extent. I have already reminded the House that last year I predicted that there would be no less than $500,000 of a surplus if there were no increase of taxation, and I will do Mr. TILLEY the justice to draw the attention of the House to what he states in reference to that subject. Having shown the policy that the late Government had pursued; having shown what had been achieved in respect to trade and commerce under the policy of progress carried out by the Government, Mr. TILLEY asked what will be the result of the expenditure of the sixty millions of dollars for canals and the Pacific Railway. He says :—

"And can we suppose that with all these influences there will not be an increased revenue sufficient to meet the interest on increased expenditure for public works?"

So far from the taxes being increased in consequence of that expenditure of sixty millions, he shows that, let Canada go on in the future as she has in the past under our administration of Public Affairs, and we may confidently anticipate a sufficient increase in the revenue of the country to meet these three millions of additional taxation. Mr. TILLEY says :—

"But supposing that all this is a vain delusion, suppose that notwithstanding this enormous expenditure, suppose that notwithstanding the completion of the Pacific Railway and the opening up of our magnificent canals, the population should not increased beyond the per centage of the past ten years. Suppose there should be no increase in the importations and in the general trade, which is supposable, but which certainly will not be realized. Let us see what our position would then be in the event of our having to fall back on increased taxation to make up deficiency. I have stated that in the last five years the average of duty collected on the imports was 12¾ per cent. For the first six months of the current year it was not ten per cent. At the expiration of the year it will not exceed ten per cent. Suppose it became necessary to impose additional taxation on the people equal to that which has been exacted during the first five years of Confederation, by increasing the average from 10 to 12¾ per cent. Has the taxation of the past been oppressive? Have our people felt that it was grievous and hard to bear? I think not. But let us apply that increased taxation to the imports of the present year which will probably be $125,000,000. This would give us $3,437,500 to meet the interest, and the sinking fund, and the commission on interest amounting altogether to $3,367,000. Bearing in mind that during the last five years we could have borne an increased debt of $30,000,000; we can bear $30,000,000 more in the next ten years, without materially increasing the taxation of the people, while at the same time we are opening up a magnificent country for the millions who will pour into it, and are increasing the strength and power of this Dominion, and making it what I trust it will ever continue to be, the strong right arm of our own British Empire."

I think, Mr. SPEAKER, I have vindicated my late hon. colleague, and the hon. gentleman's predecessor against the imputation of having proposed an increased taxation of three millions in order to cover a deficit which would arise in 1873-74. But there is another phase in connection with these statements to which I will direct the attention of the House and it is this:—I say there is no member of this House but must regard with pleasure the fact the statement of the Finance Minister made a year ago that he would require these additional three millions has proved altogether unfounded. I cannot but believe that the hon. gentleman himself possesses a spirit of patriotism sufficient to lead him to rejoice that in this particular he proved a false prophet. But there is a feature connected with this increased taxation of three millions on the people of this country that I feel ought to be gratifying to the members of this House and to the people, and it is this:—that three millions—more than this, if we are to judge by what we have already received—have been taken from the pockets of the people during the past year in increased taxation, and I doubt if any one would have known it, if I had not made a noise about it. Such is the position of Canada, and it is a circumstance that no patriotic mind could contemplate without a feeling of pride—such is the power of the people to bear taxation, which springs from the wealth of the people as compared with that of most other countries, that these three millions of additional taxes, whether required or not, had slipped from the pockets of the people into the public treasury without any person having felt that there was reason to complain. I give that to the hon. gentleman as the reason why this House and this country would never suffer the hon. Minister of Finance to throw a doubt on the capacity of the people to carry to completion the great public works on which the prosperity and future progress of Canada depend. Now, sir, the hon. gentleman stated that he had nowhere stated that the expenditure would reach twenty-four millions. What was all the discussion about last winter? Was it that the hon. gentleman would establish a deficit on paper which would never really exist, or was it a tangible deficit that would have to be met by increased taxation? I will not turn to the hon. gentleman's speech unless it is necessary to do so. Any hon. gentleman has only to read it to find that the whole controversy last year was whether the expenditure which would be made during the year ending 1st July, 1874, required increased taxation in order to meet the then existing deficit. But if a single doubt remains in the mind of the Minister of Finance himself—for none remain in the mind of any other gentleman in this House or in the country who has watched the progress of the discussion—as to whether there can by any possibility exist a deficit—let me remove that doubt by turning the hon. gentleman's attention to a page in the printed public accounts that has not yet attracted the attention of this House. What is it? If he will turn to page 12 of the public accounts he will find a statement which he himself has submitted to the House, of the amount that has been expended on capital account out of the current revenue of the year. Will you tell me how any person can make an expenditure on capital account out of current expenditure unless he has got the funds? What is the fact? The fact is, that during our seven years' occupation of office—those seven years to which to the end of time I and other men who had the honor of assisting in the administration of public affairs will point with just pride as the best proof of the manner in which we administered the public affairs of this country—that statement will show that we were able to expend on capital account during those seven years no less than $13,430,208. But what more? The hon. gentleman shows that in this very year for which he claimed there would be a deficit on the 1st July, 1874, there had been expended $1,705,256 on capital account out of the current revenue of the country. The hon. gentleman never made a statement which received my more implicit concurrence than that statement made under his own hand. I think, sir, I may now safely venture to turn away from this question of a deficit, which I think it will be many years before Parliament again discusses. I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman in his remarks with respect to the statement I made in regard to the loan, further than to say that he entirely mis-stated—and, I am bound to assume, he entirely misunderstood—the argument I addressed to the House. I did not say that the hon. gentleman's loan was effected on terms that were $2,600,000 worse than those which might have been obtained. What I did say was this — that the Globe, the organ of his party, on the return of the hon. gentleman from England, had claimed that he had negotiated that loan on terms which, compared with the value of our 5 per cents. in London at that time, was a boon of $800,000 to the people of Canada. I said that that statement had been subjected to criticism, and it had been shown beyond controversy by an accountant residing in Guelph, whose figures had never been controverted, because they were strictly accurate, that instead of the loan being a gain, as compared with the sale of the 5 per cents at 107, it was a loss to the country of $2,600,000. They would see that if the hon. gentleman could have sold his £4,000,000 sterling at the same rate as the 5 per cents. at a premium of 7, the country would have been $2,600,000 better off at the end of thirty years than under the terms obtained. That is a statement for which I am prepared to hold myself responsible in this House or out of it. I did not, however, state that the hon. gentleman could have obtained those terms, because on referring to the report he will see that I said it was impossible to negotiate a loan for £4,000,000 sterling on the same terms as small parcels of debentures could be sold at. I have placed that statement in the hands of the most eminent financier in this country, and it received his entire concurrence, as it has also received the concurrence of every skilful accountant who has investigated it. There could not be much better evidence that the statement was incontrovertible than that afforded by the action of the Globe newspaper; although that paper had sounded loud peans of triumph at the terms obtained when the hon. gentleman returned from England, yet it never attempted to controvert the statements made in that letter from the Guelph accountant. They are not in the habit of admitting that they are wrong, and therefore it would be expecting too much to have hoped that they would have made such an admission, but they had tacitly admitted the truth of the statement that the Globe was about three millions astray in its statement by publishing that accountant's letter, and leaving its contents uncontroverted to the present hour. But the hon. gentleman conceded everything in regard to the loan. I clearly showed that the little colony of New Zealand with a population of 375,000 and a public debt comparatively as large as our own went, side by side with Canada into the money market, and floated a loan on better terms than our Finance Minister. When that fact had to be admitted, as it was admitted, there is an end to the discussion as to whether Canada is to be profoundly grateful to the hon. Minister of Finance for the manner in which he had negotiated the loan. Now, Mr. SPEAKER, I don't intend to follow the hon. gentleman into the discussion which he has invited as to the conduct of the late Government in relation to the Pacific Railway. I believe every hon. member in this House and every intelligent man in this country is coming to the conclusion that the time has arrived when these gentlemen at the head of our affairs should find some other mode of vindicating their public conduct in the presence of this House and country than that of reiterating the Pacific Railway scandal.

I do not wish to weary the House, but I will throw out this challenge—I will meet any gentleman at any time and in any place to discuss in the face of a free and intelligent people everything in relation to that transaction. I desire to vindicate the character of gentlemen who are not here, viz: the directors of Inter-Oceanic Railway Company in Toronto, and the Directors of the Canada Pacific Railway Company in Montreal. Who are these gentlemen who are described as lunatics by the Minister of Finance, for the hon. gentleman said that the scheme of a Canadian Pacific Railway was an insane project? Who are the lunatics who are ready to engage in that so-called insane project? If the project of the Government was an insane one, why were the directors of these companies ready to fight to the death to obtain possession of the work? Why were Hon. Mr. McMASTER, Mr. W. H. HOWLAND, late President of the Dominion Board of Trade, Mr. McINNES, Mr. CUMBERLAND, Mr. WALTER SHANLY, the Postmaster General, the Minister of Customs, Hon. DAVID CHRISTIE and Sir HUGH ALLEN, all anxious to gain command of the scheme. I need not say more to vindicate the late Government for having engaged in that so-called insane project. I think the hon. Minister of Finance unnecessarily widened the discussion which took place on the last occasion; but as he did so I am bound to deal with the statements that hon. gentleman has put before the country, and which, because of the position held by the hon. Minister of Finance, I must deal with in order to vindicate my late colleague. The hon. gentleman, I think, forgot somewhat what was due to the House when he said:—

"He called the House to bear in mind, because they would have occasion before long to make further investigation into that matter, that for the last fifteen years the railways of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick had engaged the earnest attention of the hon. member for Cumberland, with what result let the report of Mr. C. J. BRYDGES and still more the answer of Mr. CARVELL show."

The hon. Minister of France, in another portion of his speech, said:

"On coming into office he found these railways greatly run down and very badly managed; and, therefore, a large amount will be necessary to put them in a state of efficiency."

That is a challenge which I stand here prepared to accept to the fullest possible extent, and I claim that I shall be able to show, out of the mouths of his own witness, that the statement he has ventured to make—that he found the railways run down and in a bad condition—is as inaccurate as it is possible for any statement to be made by any gentleman. I shall be prepared to prove, out of the mouth of the man selected by the hon. gentleman to throw all the discredit that could be thrown on myself and my colleagues, that the utterances of the hon. Finance Minister are utterly and entirely unfounded in fact. I am prepared to show that if there is a man they could not afford to send on that mission, that man is C. J. BRYDGES. It is painful for me to say anything to wound the feelings of any one. It is so when it affects the hon. Finance Minister who is present to defend himself, but it is doubly painful to me when the gentleman is absent, and I only do so in the discharge of a public duty. But Mr. BYDGES has a Minister of the Crown to give him a certificate of character in the strongest and most glowing terms, and I will only be doing what the House will say I am justified in doing, when I challenge proof from this report that his statements are unfounded. They could not employ Mr. Bridges on this mission without a loss of public character, because for twelve years he had been denounced by the Bible of their party, the Globe, of Toronto, and held up to the execration of the people of this country, not only as a man utterly unqualified to discharge the duties of manager of a railway, but also as a man whose integrity could not be relied upon, and as one engaged in every job that has impoverished the Grand Trunk Railway. He was denounced as being so utterly incompetent for his office that they had to keep a standing column of the Globe for publishing a list of the smash-ups and crash-ups resulting through his mismanagement on the Grand Trunk Railway. If they wish any intelligent man in this country forever after to believe that their statements in reference to any public man are not a tissue of lies, I ask how they can place that man in office. I do not endorse their statements; I did not believe them then; I do not believe them now, and I have no hesitation in saying so. It is not only a fact that Mr. BRYDGES has been held up for years to the execration of the people of this country as a man not to be trusted with the management of a railroad, but what did the Premier say of him a year ago? When I listened to the eulogium passed on him the other night by that hon. gentleman, when I heard him dwell on the services of Mr. BRYDGES to the country, I could not but turn back to what occured not long ago in the committee on Public Accounts. Do I require to tell any person in this country that from the hour Mr. BRYDGES was appointed a commissioner on the Intercolonial Railroad, that the appointment was assailed as one disgraceful to the Government of the day. They cited his past bad management on the Grand Trunk Railway as proof that he was unfit for the position. The Premier arraigned him before the Committee of Public Accounts.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Hear! hear!

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I hear the hon. member for South Bruce, with his derisive "Hear! hear!" That hon. gentleman has proved equal on past occasions to just such work as this, and will be equal to it now. The man who upholds the standard of public morality, has shown himself worthy of the party that for years held up Mr. BRYDGES to public execration, and exerted themselves to strike down his character.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—No, no!

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I will read from their statements, and see whether he will have breath to say No. I will show that hon. gentlemen opposite endeavored to brand Mr. BRYDGES as a man not to be trusted with the expenditure of public money. The House will remember that the conduct of the Intercolonial Railroad Commissioners was arraigned before the Committee on Public Accounts by hon. gentlemen opposite, and after a full and exhaustive examination—lasting for weeks—of one contract, Mr. BRYDGES was permitted to appear in vindication of his own character as a Commissioner. After the First Minister had listened to him, hour after hour, what did he do? Accept his statement and acquit him as a public officer? No! He came down stairs and moved a resolution with reference to a payment of $64,685, which, as these gentlemen stated, Mr. BRYDGES had paid to one contractor of the Intercolonial Railway, out of the public funds of this country, more than he should receive. That resolution was that, "showing an over-payment of $64,685, that the payment of money to contractors in excess of the contract sum is a gross violation of public duty, and that the system of ignoring the terms of contracts entered into with the Government and reported without Parliamentary authority is inexpedient and unjustifiable." Here is the gentleman that the hon. First Minister, when sitting on the Opposition benches, charged with having improperly expended $64,000 of the public funds, and this is the same gentleman who, the moment the First Minister is in power, finds it not inconsistent with his former abuse to make him sole autocrat of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, with all the hundreds of thousands of dollars that have to be paid out. Now, I ask, with such a fact as that standing out patent before the people of this country, how they can ever expect their denunciations of any man to mean anything but this—that whoever is charged by them or their organs with being dishonest and incapable is the very type of honor and ability, provided he only transfers his allegiance to their party. I say no party in this country can afford to place themselves in such a position as that, because, when they do, their strongest criticisms, however well deserved they may be, will be accepted by the people of this country as unfounded in fact, and which the moment they have the power to discredit by their acts they show that they themselves did not believe. But there were other reasons why this gentleman should not have been sent on such a mission. What had been the effect of these assaults on his character? Under the pressure of the feeling these years of concentrated attack by that great organ of public sentiment in this country, Mr. BRYDGES was obliged, to avoid an ignominous dismissal, to send in his resignation by a cable telegram, of the position he held as manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. This gentleman being thus left destitute of a situation, and in search of employment, was selected by the men who had assailed him for years, as the man to send down to the Lower Provinces to give a fair, manly and independent report of the condition of the railways. He was clothed with the title of Inspector, to inspect these roads, with the knowledge that if he could make out a case and undermine the manager of the public railways of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, there was a situation open for him. He goes down, undermines the manager and gets the position. If these gentlemen wished to have Mr. BRYDGES' report accepted by the people of this country as an impartial statement, they would not have sent a man to make it who was in search of employment and got it by displacing another. I do not under-rate the ability of Mr. BRYDGES and whatever integrity he may possess. I say he was placed in a position of temptation that no Government should have put him in. His ability no man will question. If there is a man in this country who is able to put the English language together in a way that will convey an impression favorable to the views which the gentleman himself wishes to be conveyed, that gentleman is C. J. BRYDGES. I will fearlessly place this report in the hands of the ablest railway men in this country; in the hands of men who are most capable of criticizing the condition of railways, and rest my whole case as to the condition in which he found the Nova Scotia and New Brunswich Railways. Yet so ingeniously is it strung together that it is calculated to leave an impression upon the minds of the people of this country and of gentlemen who do not examine it carefully, the same as that expressed by the hon. Finance Minister to the House—that the railways were found to be in a bad condition. I will take that report and prove within itself that Mr. BRYDGES found the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick railways in a condition which will bear favorable comparison with that of any railroad on this continent. Every person knows that this item of $546,000 grew out of the vigor and energy displayed by the Government in putting these railways in a complete and efficient condition. Every one knows that has read this report that Mr. BRYDGES states in it that so completely had we provided for all the new works that a sum of $15,000 is all that is required to complete them. It was only the other day that these two systems of railways in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were brought together by the construction of the Intercolonial line between Moncton and Truro. Everyone knows that the superintendent of these two lines was engaged in amalgamating the two systems and that we made large expenditures in relaying the track with steel rails, until we brought the road into such a condition that Mr. BRYDGES, after going over it, and examining every nook and corner, reports to the Government that all that is required for new works during the year, is an expenditure of $15,000. Yet when less than $20,000 is required to put the railway in splendid condition, the Finance Minister asks the House to believe that he found those railways run down and in bad condition, This report shows that in rolling stock, cars, and the whole condition of road, Mr. BRYDGES is compelled by force of facts that he cannot evade, to report to the Government that he found this road in such a position that it would challenge comparison, and challenge it favorably, with any railroad in this country. Let me draw the attention of the House, in support of this statement, to page 17 of the report, in which he speaks of the new works required on the whole system in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. He says :—

"In regard to the question of the amount of accommodation now existing along the line, and what is required to provide what is necessary, I may say generally that there is almost everywhere sufficient accommodation at present. Halifax, of course, I shall deal with separately, but outside of Halifax the most urgent is an extension of facilities at Pictou Landing. There are, in addition to this, a few matters which I think ought to be done this year, not, however, costing more than $15,000, and which, when done, will, with what I understand has already been authorized in the last estimates, place the entire system in a condition which will be satisfactory, for a considerable increase over the present traffic."

So the commissioner sent to spy out the nakedness of the land, and hunt for a situation for himself, is compelled to come back and tell the Government that he cannot find a place where he can spend $20,000 on the line, because $15,000 will put everything in such a splendid condition that it will not only meet all the present necessities of the road, but provide for a large additional traffic. On page six, he says he is compelled to report an enormous expenditure having been made in previous years, and the road having been brought into a thoroughly efficient condition. Not only that, but the locomotive power, besides being enough to do the whole business of the road, will give enough to open 80 miles without the expenditure of a dollar. Why, sir, he was unable after the closest examination to show that in the business of the road the receipts of which are three-quarters of a million per annum there was more than £500 missing in five years. In his report Mr. BRYDGES speaks in the following manner of the gentleman at the head of the Audit Office upon whose integrity and ability depended the exposure of any mismanagement :—

"In the Audit Office, at the head of it, Mr. J. J. WALLACE, appears to be a painstaking and careful officer, and with some changes of system, which at my suggestion, he will, I am sure, readily adopt, I think the work in his office will be properly carried on ; and the staff in it is neither too large nor too small, for the work which is to be done."

"All returns from the different stations are sent promptly, and regularly, and with full information to the Audit Office. They are there examined and collated, but there is a want of a perfect and regular system of inspection, of the accounts themselves, at each individual station."

Then let me turn to page 12 and what do we find. He says :—"I have no reason at all to believe that there was anything wrong at any of the stations." I think that is a tolerably satisfactory statement with reference to the stations. I am aware that he has pointed to the portion of the road that runs through the county I have the honor to represent, and has charged that the station masters there are old and incapable. That of course is pointed at myself. It would be readily understood that I would suggest the names of station masters for that section of the road, and those station masters recommended by me remain in their positions to this day, and though they may not be expert accountants, they are all men of integrity and intelligence. You cannot expect to secure skilful accountants for a salary of $400 per annum, an amount which would not obtain the services of an ignorant day laborer. And yet, because these gentlemen are not first-class accountants, the finger of scorn is pointed at them by Mr. BRYDGES, or rather at me for naming such officers, although I named men of the highest character and integrity. Then, if you turn to the 22nd page, you will find that exception is taken to the location of the Grenville station, and the statement, I have no hesitation in saying, is aimed at myself. He says :—

"The Grenville station, on the Central District, has clearly been placed in a wrong position. It is a mile away from the main road, and with no approach except the one which carries the railway over the river, which intervenes between the road and the station.

"It has evidently been put there for some reason other than that connected with the traffic of the line, and is very loudly and justly complained of by the sections of country through which the roads crossing the railway pass. I saw the people in the vicinity when passing there, and they have agreed to give all the land that is necessary for the placing of the station in a proper place. The cost of removing it and the siding will be $1,800. This should be done without delay."

What will the House think when I tell them that that station is there to-day exactly where it was when this report was made, declaring that it must be removed without delay. It has not been removed, and for the best reason, because the man who wrote that report found upon examination that he could not remove it to the place he proposed to do. This station was located by the Chief Engineer and Mr. BRYDGES himself, and if he will remove the seal of secrecy from a letter over his own signature I will prove by his own hand-writing that the location which he now denounces was made by himself and his brother commissioners. It is said that this station should have been placed at the road crossing, and that it was placed where it is for some reason other than that connected with the traffic of the line. Does any hon. gentleman suppose that I would not be anxious, as member for the county, to accommodate the people as far as I possibly could ? But when I tell the House that the Chief Engineer stated that the grade at the road crossing was such that every time the train started or stopped would involve an additional expenditure of public money ; that it would interfere with the rapid transmission of mails and passengers, that this was the nearest point to that road-crossing that could be obtained without sacrificing the public interest, and that the station was put where it is for these reasons, the House will see that I have just grounds for saying that this report, instead of being a fair, honest and manly report, is one prepared for the purpose of endeavoring to strike a blow at the late administration, but which, like the boomerang, only rebounds with double force upon the heads of its authors. We will now turn to page 32 and we find that he has great fault to find with the fact that Mr. MACNAB, the engineer of this road, does not appoint his own officers to assist him, and serve under him, and he makes this statement, the soundness of which I am not disposed to controvert :—

"I am quite clear that this is a wrong position, and that no Engineer can successfully carry on such works, as Mr. MACNAB is entrusted with, unless he has full authority to deal with the men, if he thinks they are not acting properly, or do not perform the duties entrusted to them."

What will the House think when I tell them that the practice of this gentleman, who finds out at this late hour that an engineer cannot discharge his duties satisfactorily unless he can appoint the engineers that serve under him, differs very much from his precept, and that Mr. FLEMING could not name an engineer on the Intercolonial Railway without the consent of Mr. C. J. BRYDGES, and engineers were appointed and removed by that gentleman without reference to the Chief Engineer ; so that the very practice which he claims should be followed in this case is utterly at variance with his own acts, and that is his strongest condemnation. Then, on page 36 what does he say in reference to the character of the road ? I have shown that as far as the new works were concerned he was unable to find any room for the expenditure of more than $20,000, and now in reference to the condition of the permanent way he says :—

"From the date of the amalgamation, that is, the opening of the Central districts, on the 9th November, 1872, up to the close of the present year, there will have been renewed 315,000 sleepers, or more than one-third of the whole."

I think that it is a tolerably good certificate, and it strikes from under the Minister of Finance the ground that he took when he stated that the road was run down and in a bad condition. Does he think that the Government should have put in more than one-third of the new sleepers during that brief period ? Mr. BRYDGES continues :—

"At the end of this year, the condition of the sleepers generally will be in very fair condition, and it will not require, in my judgment, more than an average of about 100,000 a year in future, to keep the line in a proper and satisfactory condition."

I have already stated that one of our large expenditures was the relaying of the road with steel rails, and taking up the old iron rails. So much for the track. I have shown that so far as these two important items in connection with the condition of a road are concerned, Mr. BRYDGES is compelled to admit that there is nothing to be desired, but everything is in a very fair condition. And yet the Minister of Finance comes to the conclusion that this road thus testified to by Mr. BRYDGES as being in a thoroughly satisfactory condition, was run down and in a bad condition. Then with reference to one other most important part of a railway, the sidings, Mr. BRYDGES says :—

"With the addition of the slight recommendations which I have made, of the few additional sidings wanted, the siding capacity of the line will be ample for all purposes."

"The siding accommodation with what I have now recommended will, in my judgment, be ample for a considerable increase of traffic beyond what already exists, and no further sidings should be put down without a special report."

So that in relation to the track, in relation to the sleepers, in relation to the sidings, and in relation to new works required, Mr. BRYDGES can find no place in which public money required to be expended. And when I tell the House that, notwithstanding the statement of the Finance Minister that this road was run down and in a bad condition, he only asks this year $58,000 to put the road in good condition, and for corresponding services, on which we spent over half a million the last year we were in power. I have shown that we have not only Mr. BRYDGES' report, but the evidence of the Finance Minister himself, proving that the road is in a good condition. Then, if you turn to page 41, you will find this statement in reference to the locomotives :—

"The total number is 72, of which 36 have been placed upon the line since the beginning of the year 1870, and six more are now under completion at the workshops at Richmond. These 36 have all been obtained from good makers."

"There are 47 engines upon the line, all in good order, and of comparatively recent manufacture. These engines, in point of fact, are now doing almost the whole work of the railway, the older engines being used for very light work, or for shunting purposes."

In another place he says with regard to the Locomotive Department, the most important department in a railway, that it is in a splendid condition, and that without spending an additional dollar he can open the line from Moncton to Newcastle. And yet this is the report upon which my hon. friend came to the conclusion that the road was run down and badly managed and in a very disastrous condition. I turn now to page 43 and I find that Mr. BRYDGES says with reference to the car stock:—

"All these cars will be completed by the end of July; when the passenger car stock will generally be in a good condition, although for the next year or two there will be considerable outlay required for painting and renovating some of them."

So that we have the rails, the sleepers, the sidings, all the new works required except what $15,000 will supply, the locomotives, the cars—we have everything proclaimed by Mr. BRYDGES to be in a condition that will challenge the most favorable comparison with any road on this continent. Now, I think I need not trouble the House longer with extracts from this report. I stated that I would prove out of the mouth of Mr. BRYDGES that he found this road, instead of being run down and in a bad condition, in such a condition that the late administration have no reason to shrink from the fullest investigation in connection with it, and I think I have done so. But we have been told that there have been very extravagant expenditure in connection with some of the supplies on the road. Now, I do not intend to deal with the statements made by Mr. BRYDGES in connection with the firm of FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co., further than to say one word. The House knows that that matter is undergoing the investigation of a sub-committee of the Public Accounts Committee, and I shall await the report of that committee before addressing a single remark in reference to that subject further than to say this:—That I take this opportunity here in my place in the House to state that I never had in my life any connection with the firm of FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co.; that I never had any interest in that firm which the hon. Minister of Finance, himself, had not, I say here from my place in this House, that I never had cognizance of the business transactions between the Government and FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co. I state frankly that that company were political friends of the late administration, that one gentleman connected with it, Mr. GRANT, was not only a political but a warm personal friend of my own, and I shall await with calmness the report of the committee, and I shall be greatly surprised to learn that any of these gentlemen have been connected with any transactions which will reflect any personal dishonor upon them, because, so far as my knowledge of them goes they are men of high character and high standing, and have a high sense of personal honor. Mr. GRANT was QUEEN'S PRINTER for several years of the Government of which I was the head. I feel I would be doing wrong, as this matter is under investigation, to address a single word upon the subject except that which I do state in my place, and that is that the Minister of Public Works himself to-day has the same connection—aye, a much stronger connection—with a firm supporting his Government as I had with FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co. I say as Mr. CARVELL has stated in his report that the custom in Nova Scotia has been when one Government went out and another took their place, for the legitimate patronage of the Government to go to their friends. I have no hesitation in saying that that is my policy; that I believe a Government have a right to prefer their political friends to their political foes; and if the patronage of the late Government went to their political friends, I challenge any man living to show that any member of the late Administration ever gave the slightest intimation of a desire to put one dollar of the public money in the pockets of any of their friends more than what would be required to obtain the same supplies elsewhere. But the Government had no sooner changed hands than a rival firm to that of FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co., came to Ottawa, and I presume had an interview with the Minister of Public Works. At all events Mr. CARVELL who is summoned before the sub-committee of Public Accounts will tell under oath, if he is asked, and will produce a letter if his word is doubted, that the Government had no sooner changed hands than the Chief Secretary of the Public Works Department, Mr. BRAUN, addressed an official letter to him telling him to hand over the patronage of the Railway Department so far as supplies were concerned to the political friends of gentlemen opposite; the firm of BLACK BROS. & Co. I do not blame them for that. I say they would have done wrong if they had not given any patronage that they could legitimately give to those who support them, and in whom they have confidence. Having shown that this report of Mr. BRYDGES bears out all that I claim respecting the good condition in which this great public work was handed over by the late administration to their successors, let me draw the attention of the House to the evidence that there was no excessive or improper expenditure in connection with the supplies. Mr. BRYDGES was sent down to report upon this expenditure, and on the first page of his supplementary report he states that the total outlay for working expenses and maintenance of way for the year ending 30th June, 1874, was $1,301,550. Now, look at the estimates laid on the table by the present Finance Minister, who wishes the House to believe that he is going to save half a million of money in this matter, and what do we find? We find that while he only asks for $58,000 for expenditure outside of maintenance of way and working expenses, thereby furnishing the very best evidence that the road was handed over to the present Government in a splendid condition, he asks no less than $1,300,000 for working expenses and maintenance of way in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, as against our expenditure of $1,301,550, showing only a saving of $1,550. I say, therefore, that I want no better evidence than his own figures to prove that if there were any extravagance on our part the hon. gentleman does not intend to retrench that extravagance. Now, before I pass away from the report of Mr. BRYDGES, I want to draw the attention of the House to a fact upon which he lays great stress. He tells the Government that the political management of the railway is wrong; that it is a vicious system; that it is crowding the department with incapable officials; that men are appointed to the offices in connection with the railway not because they could manage railways, but because they were political partizans. Well, I think the best evidence I can give the House of the want of truthfulness—no, I will not use that word, I will say want of accuracy in that statement, for the Government placed him in a position not to hear what his ears otherwise would have heard—is furnished by Mr. BRYDGES himself. He himself supplies the evidence that under this political system the late Government furnished the best men that the country could supply for this important work. He, in the first place, becomes an inspector, and then when he says all is wrong, he is clothed with the power to reform, and is made superintendent, and what then does he do? He goes and returns again, and tells the Government that all is serene, and that he has got every position in connection with the road filled with able and competent men. Where do you suppose he got them? He says he got every one of them inside of the Department, that this corrupt, vicious system, that had crowded the Department with incapable officials, had furnished to his hands all the men he had required in order to put that road under the most satisfactory administration. Let me read you what he says:—

"These resignations and dismissals of course rendered necessary the entire reorganization of the different departments, and this has been accomplished by promoting those men in the service who were found to be deserving, and who were fitted for the duties they will be required to perform, and without the employment of one single person, who had not previously been in the service of the railway.

"I have no doubt, whatever, that the organization which has now been perfected will prove to be a satisfactory one. The men who have been placed in the different positions have been selected on account of their fitness for the offices which they have to fill. They have, by their past record, shown that they deserve to have confidence placed in them, and I have every reason to believe that satisfactory results will follow from the arrangements which have been made."

Now I have shown from his report that he has found everything connected with the road—the rolling stock, sleepers, sidings, &c.—in a splendid condition; that he found in the Audit officeand the offices along the line, able and competent men, and that everything was going on rightly, and that when he undertook to reorganize the Department, he found all the men he needed furnished to his hand by the late Government. But what more, sir? You may say he had to remove a number of officers; that he had decreased his staff. I have explained to you that this road was in this condition; that two systems had just been amalgamated; that a great deal had been expended to put in a thoroughly efficient state, and that the late Government were prepared, in accordance with the dictates of that wise and economical mode of administration which they carried into all the affairs of the country, to make other reductions and improvements. But there is an item in this connection which will rather amuse the House. Mr. BRYDGES says he does not care whether it is the past or the present Government which is responsible, but he must have the affairs of this road carried on entirely independent of political influences. He, sir, is the autocrat of the whole road from River du Loup to Halifax. He can afford to treat our public men with perfect contempt, and no other but Mr. C. J. BRYDGES has any control of the management of those railways. Has he shown that he is fitted for such a position? I will read to you one or two extracts from his report, and you will be able to judge for yourselves. In that portion which I propose to read to you Mr. BRYDGES has heaped upon one of the most important officers on the railway—a man who holds a position second to none on the road—the Superintendent of the locomotive department—the gentleman upon whose energy and ability depends the whole safety of life and property on the road—every term of opprobrium and contempt that the English language could furnish him with. He did not consider that Mr. WHITNEY had the necessary experience or force of character for the position which he filled! He was not a mechanic! He had never gone over the shops! He was learning his business at the expense of the railway! He had no experience and no force of character! He had no business habits! He had no vigor, and indeed everything was said of him to convince the country that it was dangerous and wrong for him to be continued in charge of the Department. Further on you will find that Mr. BRYDGES had the advantage of the advice and assistance of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and of the Minister of Customs; and as a result of that advice we find that he comes to the conclusion that this man should be continued in his office for which were we to believe his original estimate he was so entirely unfitted. This is the man who is to bring about a political milennium—a man to whom the Government have entrusted the entire management and control of our railways. Here is what he says:—

"I am bound to say that having very carefully considered the question of the organization of the mechanical department at present, I consider it to be both expensive and inefficient. The mechanical superintendent, Mr. WHITNEY, although at the head of the entire establishment, has apparently but very little, if any, control over what is going on at Richmond and other places. There are practically two superintendents at work, each acting independently, and spending, therefore, in the aggregate, very much more money than ought to be spent.

"I do not consider that Mr. WHITNEY has the necessary experience or force of character for the position which he fills. He is not a mechanic; has never gone through the shops, in the proper sense of the word; and is in fact learning his business at the expense of the railway; nor does he appear to me to have the necessary qualifications for a Superintendent, and I am satisfied that a different class of man, brought up to the business, and having regularly served his time, both in the drawing office and in the shops, who had filled the position of Locomotive Foreman, would make large reforms in the Department, have the work better executed, and at a considerable saving of expense."

And now let me invite attention to the changed light after he had the benefit of the advice and assistance of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the hon. the Minister of Customs. "In regard to the mechanical superintendent, Mr. WHITNEY," he says, "whilst I do not in any way change the opinions which I have previously expressed, I think it will be desirable to give him another trial. * * * Inasmuch as it may fairly be said under past circumstances that Mr. WHITNEY has not had a fair chance of showing what he is capable of doing, I recommend that he be retained at any rate for six months, during which time careful consideration will be given to the manner in which he carries out the duties of his office." Give him six months to do what? To learn his business at the public expense, is it? Would six months enable him to learn his business, would they enable him to become a mechanic and give him all those qualities for the asserted want of which Mr. BRYDGES accuses him. Sir, there is one explanation of this change. and only one—that he, too, is not insensible to the influence of the masters under whom he serves—that although political influence was a vice when practiced by the late Government, it is a virtue when practiced by the present. Mr. BRYDGES, according to his own statement, made some wonderful discoveries, and saved the country a wonderful amount of money—$25,000 on one transaction. He could not have given a better illustration of his value to the Government; and I confidently believe he owes the office he now holds on the Great Western Railway to the statement in his report to the Government that on the single item of coal he saved $25,000. The House will be amused when I tell them, as Mr. CARVELL clearly proves, that there was no saving in reality, and that it was only the difference of the price of coal one day and another. The way in which Mr. BRYDGES proceeds to prove his assertion is this: He tells us that the late Superintendent paid so much for coal, and he got them for so much less. When he called the saving $25,000 he fell into a grievous error, for I believe that it was only something like $3,000. But Mr. CARVELL shows that in reality he lost $5,000 by closing the transaction at the time he did, instead of saving anything, for within a few days there was still a further reduction in the price of coal. Everybody can understand what a difference a few cents per ton would make in the cost of fuel to a road of the extent of the Intercolonial Railway. But, Sir, this gentleman, when he went down, informed the world through his report that the Spring Hill coal was worth nothing; it was at least twenty per cent. worse than Pictou coal; but the next day, when he found that your humble servant was not a stockholder, and that hon. gentlemen opposite were largely interested, he purchased 10,000 tons of it.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I understood the honorable member to say that gentlemen on this side of the House—gentlemen in the Government presumably—had become interested in coal stock. I desire to know if I understood him correctly, and what it is that he insinuates.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I say I believe that Mr. BRYDGES, when he made his report against the Spring Hill coal, was under the impression that I was a stockholder in it, but when he went down to St. John and found that the Hon. Mr. BURPEE was a stockholder, and that I was not, he thought it necessary and proper to change his tactics. I do not complain that the Minister of Customs should have stock in that concern, nor do I speak of it to find fault, or to insinuate that there has been anything in his conduct in that regard which was at all open to exception. I simply state what the facts are.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I desire to explain, for the information of the hon. gentleman, and for the information of the House, that I had nothing whatever to do with the formation or organization of the Spring Hill company, and the only shares I ever had in it, which came to me at second hand, have been in the hands of the broker for over a year, and are nearly all disposed of.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is satisfied.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I desired that the hon. gentleman should be specific in his statement. He said there were gentlemen on this side of the House—meaning gentlemen in the Government—who had shares in the Spring Hill mine.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I correct myself, and say, instead of gentlemen, that there is a gentleman.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—Perhaps the House will permit me to add that I never heard that tenders were being called for, nor did I know that coals had been purchased from any source whatever, until three weeks after the transaction closed.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I have expressly stated that I did not refer to this matter in order to find fault with the hon. gentleman, and I take this opportunity to state that I do not believe he had the slightest corrupt relations with any person in that connection. I consider it entirely consistent with the position he holds that he should be a shareholder in the Spring Hill Mining Company, and, indeed, I consider it an exceedingly proper thing that he, a member of the Government of this country, should encourage the development of the resources of this country. What I was pointing out to the House was that, at the time Mr. BRYDGES understood that I was a stockholder in that company, he reported that the coal was worthless, and that a most disadvantageous bargain had been made in connection with the branch of railway, which I believe was made upon his own recommendation. But when he went down to St. John, and there learned who the proprietors were, he apologised to them, and made a contract with them for the supply of 10,000 tons of coal.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—To whom did he apologise?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—He apologised to the President of the Company; and not only did he apologise, but he induced the Government to make them a present of five miles of railway, and to relay it with new iron. The hon., the Minister of Customs says he has placed his stock in the hands of a broker. I ask him what would be more calculated to damage its sale than this same report of Mr. BRYDGES, which is in direct contradiction to the report of one of the best authorities on the continent, Sir WILLIAM LOGAN, who declares it to be the best coal in America. I ask the House what could be more calculated to injure the stock of this Company than the report of Mr. BRYDGES, and what better calculated to restore it to its value than the fact that he went and purchased 10,000 tons for the use of the railway, whose management was in his hands. But I tell the hon. Minister of Customs that I believe he is incapable of having improper transactions with Mr. BRYDGES, and I will go further and say there is not a member of the present administration who would be connected with any transaction that was not perfectly fair and above board. So that if hon. gentlemen opposite feel I am personally attacking them, they are entirely mistaken; I am only showing in respect to this man who assumes to be autocrat of the railways in Canada, that if there is a man who is ready to bend his policy and statements to the interests of those he served it is C. J. BRYDGES. Well, he made another wonderful discovery—that the country had been robbed to the extent of $12,000 by the Spring Hill Mining Company giving short measure. The evidence of Mr. CARVELL shows, however, there was not one dollar lost in the purchase of coal, and Mr. BRYDGES was at last compelled to admit that the Government had received more coals, instead of less coals than they had paid for. Yet that gentleman (Mr. BRYDGES) so far forgot what was due to those who had supported and sustained him in the time of trial, when he was persecuted by the gentlemen then in Opposition, that he was ready to throw discredit on his former friends in order to obtain consideration from his new found friends. I believe Mr. BRYDGES has made a fatal mistake. I believe he has not only shown his incompetency in his report, but in assuming the position he has taken he has given pain to every friend in this country. Has he a friend in this country who does not feel pained in relation to his management of these railways, when he showed that he was ready to go down to the maritime provinces and lend himself to men who, during long years, had traduced him in every possible way, who had regarded him as utterly incompetent to manage the Intercolonial Railway, and who is called upon to make a report, which is our vindication here. We cannot regard with increased respect a man who is so soon ready to forget his former friends, and to sustain those who were in past years his most bitter foes. But what has been the result? Because there is a more important question underlying the matter than any I have yet touched upon, I say the result of his management has been disastrous to the Government and the country. I say that clothed with the power to deal with these railways, he has raised up throughout the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick a host of enemies, among those who would otherwise have been friends of the Government.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—So much the better for you.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—If Mr. BRYDGES had been anxious to be our friend he could not have pursued a policy which would have been more disastrous to the Government. In the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries' own county, public meeting after public meeting has been held, denouncing the mismanagement and cruel oppression in connection with the railway, and that, too, by the hon. gentleman's own constituents.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Only against the tariff.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The tariff is everything.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to make an explanation. The public meetings were called, and not unnaturally so, to denounce the increase in the tariff, not with regard to the management of the railways.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—There is in the House a gentleman, and he is a supporter of the Government, who attended these meetings and denounced the policy of cruel oppression pursued by Mr. BRYDGES. I say "cruel oppression," and I will show, too, that the country is injured. I feel keenly on this point. Everybody knows that I incurred obloquy by leading Nova Scotia into Confederation, and every opponent of union has been triumphant at the realization of their anticipations, and now declares: "Did we not say that Ontario would send down officials to grind down the people of the Maritime Provinces, irrespective of their rights." When the Government sends down a man who rode rough-shod over the people of the Maritime Provinces, they were not only doing an injury to those Provinces, but also to Ontario and Quebec, because their action contradicts the statement I made to my constituents—that they could confidently rely on the sense of justice and honor of the people of those great Provinces to act rightly towards the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. When the late Mr. JOSEPH HOWE proposed the policy of constructing the railways in Nova Scotia, which policy was subsequently adopted in New Brunswick, it was not done with a view to constructing railways, to be conducted on what Mr. BRYDGES calls commercial principles. The people of the country were invited to take their own money out of the public treasury to defray the cost of constructing the railways, not looking to be recompensed from the receipts, but looking for a satisfactory return in the increased trade and revenue of the country. That policy had been eminently successful, and its success is proved by the largely increased revenues flowing into the Dominion Treasury from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—If the hon. gentleman wishes to know, I may say that the expenditure is one million more than the receipts.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The increased revenue goes into the Dominion Treasury. Did not Canada give twenty millions of dollars to the Grand Trunk Railway to foster and cheapen transportation through Ontario and Quebec, and yet the Government does not seek to operate the road on commercial principles, or obtain any revenue therefrom. Is it, then, right or fair, if it could be done to oppress the Maritime Provinces by endeavoring to enforce upon them a tariff which was never before contemplated. Instead of there being always a deficit from the railways, the deficit is only temporary. The time will come when the working expenses will be absolutely covered by the receipts. What has Mr. BRYDGES done? He went down to the Maritime Provinces and rode rough-shod over every interest existing there. Nothing was right from beginning to end—everything must be changed. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows that the proposals Mr. BRYDGES made from one end of the lines to the other failed and changes have to be made not once but twice. I say Mr. BRYDGES' administration has been an entire failure as regards results obtained. There is less money in the Dominion Treasury to-day than there would have been if Mr. BRYDGES had never visited the road. Under the old tariff more money would have been received than was now derived under the present one. The adoption of his policy drove the agriculturalists off the line of railway, and they who previously carried their goods to market by rail, now carried them in sleighs. Every interest has been injured. In my own county the farmers, relying on the good faith of the Government, made contracts for the delivery of hay in Halifax, 130 miles distant. Every contract has had to be carried out at a large loss to the contractors, because without giving one hour's notice the additional charges were imposed, thus changing a profitable transaction into a losing one. Along those lines of railways various industries have grown up, and the people wake up on one fine morning to find that this man (Mr. BRYDGES) sent by the hon. Minister of Public Works to grind down the people of the Maritime Provinces, had suddenly sprung a tariff upon them which entirely paralyzed the industries in which they were engaged. To stem the tide of discontent and trouble Mr. BRYDGES comes forward and says, "I will undo all I have done; I will make special rates." But that, Mr. SPEAKER, is entrusting enormous power to a man who is undeserving of it, because he will abuse it. It is giving the power to Mr. BRYDGES to favor here and there certain industries which he chose to favor, and it would lay the Government open to the suspicion that they were not dealing with even-handed justice by the people of the various sections. While you find Mr. BRYDGES increasing the tariff in the Maritime Provinces, paralysing trade along the line of railways so that the whole Provinces are arrayed against the administration, you see him reducing the tariff on the Great Western Railway from twenty to fifty per cent. below the existing rates. The adoption of Mr. BRYDGES' policy in the Maritime Provinces, I have shown therefore to have been in direct opposition to the wishes of the people, and most disastrous to the country so far as regards the collection of revenue. I regret, sir, that the hon. Minister of Finance should have widened this discussion in the way he did, and which compelled me to make these remarks; but I do not think the time I have occupied has been lost. It was impossible to avoid this discussion; if it had not come now, it would have come in relation to the Intercolonial Railway in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I, therefore, thought I was consulting the convenience of the House and economizing the public time by dealing with the subjects which the hon. Minister of Finance introduced into his reply to my criticism of his financial statement.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said:—Mr. SPEAKER—As to the major part of the speech of the hon. member for Cumberland, that I can leave to the care of my friend, the Minister of Public Works, and also to Mr. BRYDGES, both of which gentlemen, I have not the slightest doubt; will take admirable care of themselves. Now, sir, generally speaking, when my hon. friend deals in assertions, particularly as to matters of facts and figures, it is my painful duty to dispute and utterly deny every statement whatever that the hon. gentleman may make. On the present occasion, I am heartily glad to say there is at least one statement made by him which I most cordially endorse, as I have no doubt does my hon. friend who sits beside me. When the hon. member for Cumberland stated to the House that he believed the taxation of this country had been increased twenty per cent. or thereabouts, without the people of Canada being inconvenienced by the burden, I believe he stated the truth, and no greater compliment could be paid to any tariff or to any Finance Minister. I would not have dared to pay such a compliment to the tariff myself, but I accept it from the hon. member for Cumberland in the spirit in which it is given.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—It is true.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I am glad to hear it, and I hope hon. gentlemen will make a note of it. I would like to call the attention of the House to a remarkable omission made by my hon. friend. The House heard him read from the speech of Mr. TILLEY two paragraphs, but the House did not hear him—because they had not that speech about them as I had—read one still more remarkable paragraph inserted between the two he read. He read "The Government will not, during the present session, propose to touch the tariff in any particular." That was correctly read, but Mr. TILLEY went on to say "Under the peculiar circumstances in which we are placed, and with the certainty almost, looking at the increased expenditure of the next year, that some re-adjustment must take place next session, the Government have concluded to make no present change." That sentence was omitted, and from that omission coming between the two paragraphs quoted the House will learn with what remarkable fairness my hon. friend is wont to state his case. I must protest once for all against his assertion that whenever I do not explicitly deny a statement made by him, I admit its truth. I desire to say that when I do not expressly admit the truth of any statement of his in matters of arithmetic, I am to be understood as utterly denying it. This is the principle on which I deal with his arithmetic. Greatly as I admire the unquestionable valor with which the hon. gentleman charges the question, I am bound to say his valor exceeds his discretion. I will now refer to the customs refunds, amounting to $69,000. These refunds were charged on a plan laid down while he, himself, was Minister of Customs, and established by an order in council. So far from the present Government desiring to maintain that rule, the very first thing we did after getting into power was to put a stop to this in the tariff brought down last year. We did that because we thought these railway companies were receiving more than they should in the matter of exemptions, and no portion of those refunds were given except on the report of the Minister of Customs, and also of the Minister of Justice, that the law required these refunds to be paid. As to the insinuation touching Mr. McMASTER, I must say I think that ought to have been omitted, especially by a gentleman who winces so much at any reference made to the last transaction in which he was engaged. I desire now to turn to the extraordinary conclusion to which the hon. gentleman arrived in both of his speeches. He was good enough to state on the former occasion, and he repeated the statement to-night, that the fact that after a harvest of unusual excellence the imports of the country had diminished by a considerable amount was conclusive proof that during the preceding half year, nothing had been anticipated. To my humble comprehension if anything could prove more clearly than another that a certain considerable portion of the receipts for the year ending June 30th, 1874, had been in anticipation of what might reasonably be expected to come in at the end of the half year, it was that circumstance. Surely the hon. gentleman will see that no better proof could be produced of the perfect correctness of my argument than the fact that under circumstances which in the ordinary condition of things would have warranted a considerable increase of imports, they had actually diminished. Every mercantile man will see that this is the very clearest proof that I was correct in stating a considerable amount had been anticipated. Now, sir, I desire to deal with another statement made on that occasion by my hon. friend who, I am willing to believe, made it under a misapprehension. The hon. gentleman stated that I had declared that a deficit of $1,250,000 would occur on the transactions of 1874 in respect to railways. What I stated, as he could have seen by reference to my speech, was that according to the estimates laid before the House, there would be a deficit of $1,250,000 between my estimated receipts and estimated expenditures. The estimated receipts were $1,600,000; the estimated expenditures, $2,867,000, being a difference of one and a quarter millions. In that was included $200,000 for the Prince Edward Island Railway and $250,000 for the working of the Intercolonial Railway, being $450,000 additional to the expenditure which we expected to be incurred for that current year. I merely said that the estimate made by Mr. TILLEY of $2,250,000 for receipts from public works was likely to be very much in excess of the actual figures—I think I said the amount would be $600,000. The actual fact was that we received only $1,500,000 in place of the estimated $2,250,000. It would, perhaps, be idle for me to go through the speech of my hon. friend and refer to all his statements. He says I criticized the tariff policy of Sir FRANCIS HINCKS and directed my severest strictures to it, I did not criticize his tariff policy. With that I had nothing to do, but I did criticize his financial policy. The hon. member for Cumberland was also good enough to say that the price of consols at the time a loan is negotiated has nothing to do with the goodness or badness of the terms obtained. I do not know that a statement showing more utter ignorance of the English market was ever promulgated in the Canadian House of Commons or any other Legislature. The price of consols varies very much, and that is a very good reason for choosing our own time for entering the market. But every one—except, perhaps, my hon. friend—knows that the price of consols is a very true barometer of the price of money in the English market at the time. With respect to the New Zealand loan, to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, I may say that it was not a fair standard of comparison for two reasons. In the first place, the colony did not obtain £98 for them; and, in the second place, it was a much smaller loan than I negotiated. I might add, in the third place, as a matter of fact, that it was a little dearer (though not much) than a four per cent. loan at 90 would be. But now I come to a statement made by my hon. friend which I confess I deeply regret, because the hon.

gentleman fills the high position of financial leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman's statement was that a four per cent. loan at 90, having thirty years to run, was worse by $2,500,000 than a five cent. loan negotiated at 107, and having likewise thirty years to run. That statement was repeated again and again, and which he has had the temerity to repeat to-night. I am quite prepared to go into this calculation with him by means of logarithms, decimals, algebra, differential calculus, or any other way he pleases, though I do not propose to inflict it on the House to-night, but I think I can explain in a very few moments, not to the hon. member for Cumberland—I do not presume to explain to him—but to the House that his statement is positively grossly in defiance of the simplest facts by which any loan can be computed. Now, suppose my hon. friend borrowed £107 at five per cent., giving his bond, payable in thirty years for £100. Supposing I, on the other hand, borrowed £107, and gave my bond for £118 17s, payable at the end of thirty years. Every one can see that £118 17s is precisely the amount of premium which would represent £107 at the rate of ten per cent. discount. Now, in the one case the hon. gentleman would pay £5 and in the other case I would pay £4 15s. I would gain five shillings per annum during the thirty years, and on the other hand, at the expiration of that time, I would have to repay £18 17s, and that 5s per annum would amount at compound interest at the expiration of thirty years to precisely £16 12s. 6d. The difference between a five per cent. loan at 107 and a four per cent. loan at 90 is precisely eight pence per centum per annum on the £100. In other words, if I were to turn that into an annuity and capitalize it, I would show that my hon. friend is astray in his calculation to the extent of about $2,400,000 out of $2,500,000. I very much regret that a gentleman who seems to believe that his word should be attentively listened to in Lombard street, and whose friends have insinuated that but for him the credit of Canada would have run down, should have made such extraordinary statements to be sent across the Atlantic, there to astonish the minds of all English actuaries and of every one who believes that the ordinary computations on which loans are calculated in the English market are worthy of some respect. I say it is a matter of grave regret that a gentleman so profoundly ignorant of the ordinary principles of arithmetic as my hon. friend should take upon himself to criticise a matter like that. If he wants to know what the loan is worth, I will tell him. It is worth a little more than a five per cent. loan, negotiated at 106. Upon the correctness of that statement I will place my reputation on financial matters, which the hon. gentleman will find quite as likely to be accepted as his after the exhibition he has chosen to make of himself. The hon. gentleman was pleased to state that I characterised a certain number of persons as lunatics for having engaged in an insane project for building the Pacific Railway. I did not say it would be an insane project for them, but an insane project for the country, as the country would have discovered if they had been entrusted with that enterprise. Now, with respect to Mr. BRYDGES, I will leave him in the hands of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. I simply say that at any rate the members of the late Government cannot complain if Mr. BRYDGES, their trusted Intercolonial Commissioner, has sent in a report with respect to their administration of the railway. They were always glad to avail themselves of his services, and I am bound to say they did so rightly. The report he has submitted shows that he was a gentleman capable of discharging with the utmost fidelity the very difficult functions which were assigned to him. Now, there is but one other point that I shall notice at this late hour, and it is this, The hon. gentleman was pleased to state that I had admitted his conclusion that only some $540,000 was received from customs under the new tariff. I stated in my speech most explicitly, and I do not retract that statement now, that in my judgment some two million dollars were due to the operation, direct or indirect, of the new tariff.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The hon. gentleman entirely misapprehends me. I stated that I credited to the new taxes received during the two and a half months at the end of the year, $546,000, and you admittted the correctness of that statement, or, at all events, you did not state that was incorrect. And I ask you now to state whether any more than $546,000 were received—not discounted—from the new taxes during that period, because you must know to a dollar what was received. What was the amount received from the new taxes in the Internal Revenue and Customs Department during those two and a half months?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—What I stated was that the sum of two millions was due to the direct and indirect effect of the new tariff; to the effect of the new taxes upon customs and excise considerably more than $600,000 was due; and a very much larger sum was due to what was borrowed from the succeeding year. As to what particular amount was paid in on the 14th April, that has not very much to do with the argument then or now, which was that the revenue would have very little exceeded the twenty-two millions estimated by Mr. TILLEY, with the addition of Prince Edward Island, had it not been for the effect of the new tariff, which, as I showed then, and am prepared to show in fuller detail at any time, poured into the treasury at least two million dollars. The other points of difference between us are whether I was right or wrong in refusing to charge the premium on a loan to annual expenditure, and whether I was right or wrong in charging items to income which he thinks should be charged to capital. The arguments on both sides have been fully set before the country, and by its verdict we are prepared to abide. I think that verdict has been tolerably well expressed both in this House and out of it. It is certainly one of the strangest charges ever made against a Minister of Finance that he refused to allow capital account to be improperly swollen by items which should be charged to income. I will take all the responsibility of such a course, and I hope at the end of our tenure of office charges, such as these, will be the only ones that my hon. friend can bring against us.

Mr. PLUMB said he had made a calculation which he would submit to the House. The hon. Finance Minister's four per cent. loan netted 88½ or $17,700,000. Thirty years' interest at four per cent. would amount to $24,000,000, which added to the principal, $20,000,000, made a total of $44,000,000. Now, a five per cent. loan at 107, would net, say, $17,700.000. Thirty years' interest, at five per cent., would amount to $24,825,000, which added to the principal, $16,550,000, would make a total of $41,375,000, leaving a difference in favor of the five per cent. loan at 107, of $2,625,000. That calculation was as correct in its way as the calculation of the Minister of Finance. He would not say that a four per cent. loan at 88½, was not a good one; but he did say that the hon. Finance Minister was not entitled to any special credit for negotiating it.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I would just point out to the House that any calculation of simple interest for 30 years is not worth the paper it is written on. The calculation is one which is quite worthy the hon. member for Niagara.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not propose at this late hour to go into any exhaustive criticism of the speech of the hon. gentleman opposite—a speech that I must say was not worthy of him or his position in this House. He chose to attack an employee of the Government with a violence and a virulence quite unprecedented even with the hon. gentleman. He has endeavored to show that Mr. BRYDGES and myself and the gentlemen associated with me in the administration were long bitterly hostile to each other. He was pleased to say that we had loaded him with every term of opprobrium that could be thought of, that we questioned his integrity, his political opinions and his management of public affairs; and he was pleased to refer to a motion made by me in reference to the Intercolonial Railway. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman to read that motion. He will not find one word reflecting on Mr. BRYDGES. That motion was simply a statement of facts. It reflected on no person. It was simply a statement of figures laid down by the engineers, and the hon. gentleman and his colleagues were the men who were responsible for the over payment in that case, and not Mr. BRYDGES. And yet now the hon. gentleman turns round and casts the blame for his own action upon the man he had employed. A more unfair, more ungenerous, I would say a more scandalous attack was never made upon any man than that made to-night upon Mr. BRYDGES by the hon. gentleman opposite. Now, I may tell the hon. gentleman that I never had any difference, personal or political, with Mr. BRYDGES. I have had the honor of his friendship since I knew him, and I never had the slightest personal or political difficulty with him. I knew him first as manager of the Great Western Railway, and I always admired his ability. I admire it now as much as I ever did, and the mere fact that a newspaper correspondence might be carried on hostile to that gentleman cannot be cited as evidence that I or those acting with me ever entertained any opinion of him which would cause us to hesitate to employ him in the public service. But we did not employ Mr. BRYDGES. We found him there when we went into office, and we continued him in the position he was in, and I have no hesitation in saying that but for his ability as chairman of the Intercolonial Railway Commissioners, that work would not have been managed even as well as it was.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—He was not chairman.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is quite true he was not nominally the chairman. Another gentleman of whom I will not speak in his absence as the hon. gentleman has spoken of Mr. BRYDGES in his absence—and he would not have dared to speak so of him except under the shelter of the House—I shall not follow his example, and will, therefore, not say one word of the gentleman who was chairman of the commission; but we all know who was the real managing chairman.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—He was responsible for the payment of $44,000 on No. 5, according to the hon. Premier.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I hold the gentlemen opposite responsible for that.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Mr. BRYDGES took the entire responsibility upon himself before the committee.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I defy the hon. gentleman to show that I held Mr. BRYDGES responsible for that matter. I invite any person to read the motion I made. I made quotations of all the entries made by the engineer of the value of the work done, and my motion was simply a logical and necessary deduction that the hon. gentleman opposite did not venture to dispute, and Mr. BRYDGES is never mentioned in the motion at all.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Who paid the money?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman and his colleagues paid the money.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Not a dollar of it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Mr. BRYDGES had no authority to pay a single dollar till it passed the Privy Council. The hon. gentleman knows that no payment was made till it was sanctioned by the Privy Council, and yet he would endeavor to throw all the odium of over-paying contracts upon Mr. BRYDGES.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—No odium at all; it was right.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not my business to defend Mr. BRYDGES; he is able to defend himself. But look at the manner in which the hon. gentleman attacked him. He says if Mr. BRYDGES would remove the seal of secrecy from a certain letter he would be able to prove certain things, and then he went on to state what the letter would prove. He speaks of removing the seal of secrecy and then goes on to disclose the contents of the letter. I appeal to the House to say whether that is generous or fair treatment of any person. There was a vein of unfairness all through the hon. gentleman's remarks. The report of Mr. BRYDGES, he says, was made in his own interest, because he was an applicant for office, that he set to work to undermine the former Superintendent.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman is not ashamed to cry "hear, hear!" but I tell him that such imputation of motives will not commend itself to the good sense of this House or this country. Strong language may be used by any person, but it ought never to be used under the shelter of the House of Commons in reference to a man who cannot be present to answer it. Now, I tell the hon. gentleman, and the House, that Mr. BRYDGES was never an applicant for that office. He told me from the first that he never would take the office, and he recommended two or three other gentlemen to me to fill that position after Mr. CARVELL had sent in his resignation, and he has only taken charge of the road provisionally till we are able to obtain the services of a Superintendent in the place of Mr. CARVELL. And yet the hon. gentleman insinuates that Mr. BRYDGES set to work to undermine Mr. CARVELL in order to get his place. A more unfair attack I can hardly imagine. Why does he attack Mr. BRYDGES so vehemently? Why does he feel so intensely interested in this report? He says he is not to blame for all that is spoken of in that report. I do not say he is, but why does he show this excessive partizanship, this utter want of any judicial spirit which every member of the House is supposed to possess in discussing public documents, and especially in discussing the report of a public servant who cannot be here to defend himself. The hon. gentleman all through his speech has acted in the spirit of an advocate pleading the case of a person who might be prosecuting Mr. BRYDGES for libel or some other offence.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am not prosecuting him.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman has endeavored, with the ingenuity of an advocate and the intense hatred of a personal enemy, to insinuate everything he thought would militate against the character of Mr. BRYDGES. After making all the charges he could conceive against Mr. BRYDGES in connection with this report he says, "Of Fraser, Reynolds & Co.'s accounts I shall say nothing, because they are under examination." It is quite right, according to the hon. gentleman, to mention everything that might tell against Mr. BRYDGES, but it is altogether wrong to say a word that tells in his favour. There is another little matter, Sir, that the hon. gentleman must be aware of already. It will be observed in Mr. BRYDGES' report he calls attention to the extraordinary circumstance that Mr. CARVELL, in the months of December, 1873, and January, 1874, ordered 3,750 tons of steel rails from England without any communication with the Department, and without any authority whatever. I look upon that as one of the most serious allegations against that officer. But then it would not be fair to discuss these matters, for they are before a Committee of Investigation. Now, Sir, there is still another purchase, in regard to which the company refused to tell us at what price they actually sold, and I am taking legal proceedings to compel them to do so. I do not say where this money went. I do not know where it went or how it went, and therefore I make no charge; but Mr. BRYDGES very clearly shows in dealing with the subject that the country lost in this transaction somewhere between £9,000 and £10,000 sterling, and yet the hon. gentleman refuses to give him credit for it. Now, Sir, we find that Mr. BRYDGES develops another transaction in reference to this firm at Halifax. He says the Government had to pay at the rate at $2\frac{1}{4}$ cents per pound for steel springs; and we find from the correspondence in the office in relation to this matter that Mr. SADLER, who was the store-keeper, in the first instance refused to certify to these. Mr. CARVELL was in Halifax sometime afterwards, and made representations to this firm as to the price. They told him in reply that if he would prefer it they would make out an account and charge a regular commission, He did prefer it, and we find that while the real invoice price of these springs was £429 sterling and some odds, in order to make up the sum they had already charged they put it down at £852 sterling some odds, and, Sir, by a most extraordinary process, they manage, between one charge and another, to make up the exact amount of their first account, which was charged at so much per pound. It would have puzzled even the member for Niagara, with all his ability in calculations, to make up a statement so that it would reach the exact fraction. I do not intend to discuss this report or Mr. BRYDGES' position. As to Mr. CARVEL, I know nothing whatever to his prejudice, further than his mismanagement. What the enquiry may develop I cannot tell. I have always had great respect for him personally, and I always found him very pleasant to do business with; but after the admissions he has made in his own report, and the fact that he never made his position known to me, but purchased so extensively without consulting the Department—so extensively, indeed, that no member of the Government would have dared to do it, without an Order in Council —I felt it was neither desirable nor possible in the public interest that he should remain in his position. That was my sole ground of reference to him, and as he is not here, and cannot defend himself, I shall say nothing regarding him with which it would be possible to find fault. The hon. gentleman says that, notwithstanding all Mr. BRYDGES' representations, political influence cannot have done so much injury to the road after all, because all these men, however incapable, were continued in the employment of the Government. If there is anything I abhor, it is the dismissal of a public servant without good cause having been shown, and I felt that it would neither be just nor generous to remove any of them until we had proof of their incapacity or something worse. I gave orders to remove one or two of them, because I found that their incapacity and inefficiency were so thoroughly established, that it was impossible they could be retained; but my direct instructions to Mr. BRYDGES—and he quite agreed with me—were that there should be no persons taken from a distance to do the work, if men were to be found on the road capable of the duties. The hon. member for Cumberland, with that remarkable tendency to exaggeration which characterises him, says Mr. BRYDGES alluded to Mr. WHITNEY with every term of opprobrium the English language could furnish.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Yes, and I gave the evidence.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Now, Sir, I am confident the hon. gentleman knows that this statement is not correct—that Mr. BRYDGES did not use every term of opprobrium the English language furnishes. For instance, he did not say that Mr. WHITNEY was a follower of the hon. member for Cumberland. I shall read the whole passage, and I think when I have done so I can appeal to the House, yes, I can appeal to my hon. friend himself, if he did not needlessly and absurdly exaggerate the passage. I venture here to read him a little lesson, and to assure him that if he persists in exaggerating with regard to these trivial matters people will make allowances for extravagances in greater matters, and they will boil down his speeches until the residuum left will scarcely be worth looking after. Here is what Mr. BRYDGES says of Mr. WHITNEY: —"I am bound to say that, having very carefully considered the question of the organization of the mechanical department at present, I consider it to be both expensive and inefficient. The mechanical superintendent, Mr. WHITNEY, although at the head of the entire establishment, has apparently but very little, if any, control over what is going on at Richmond and other places. There are practically two superintendents at work, each acting independently, and spending, therefore, in the aggregate very much more money than ought to be spent. I do not consider that Mr. WHITNEY has the necessary experience or force of character for the position which he fills. He is not a mechanic; has never gone through the shops, in the proper sense of the word; and is, in fact, learning his business at the expense of the railway. Nor does he appear to me to have the necessary qualifications for a superintendent, and I am satisfied that a different class of man, brought up to the business, and having regularly served his time, both in the drawing office and in the shops, who had filled the position of locomotive foreman, would make large reforms in the department, have the work better executed, and at a considerable saving of expense."

Now, Sir, is there a single term of opprobrium in all this? For my own part, I see nothing in it but the fairest of criticism.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I cannot understand anything disparaging to the occupant of a position such as Mr. WHITNEY'S that has not been mentioned.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—But my hon. friend cannot surely assert that this would bear out his assertion that every term of opprobrium in the English language was made use of. It is nothing more than a fair criticism of the gentleman's ability to fill the position. I do not propose to-night to discuss several of the matters into which the hon. gentleman has entered. He rarely alludes to anything affecting the financial relations of the Government to any undertaking without endeavoring to inflame sectional feelings and prejudices. I shall not follow his example, but if he desires a discussion upon that point, we can have it. I may mention that during the last six months, the increase in receipts for traffic on the Intercolonial Railway was $21,346, and the decrease in expenses for the corresponding period was $72,348.30. The costs of renewals amounted to $278,466.29 as against $277,619.48 last year, being an increase of $846.81. At the same time the train mileage was 536,824 miles, and for the corresponding six months of 1873, it was 571.224 or a decrease of 34,400. The car mileage for the two periods was 3,786,696, and 3.591,482 respectively, being an increase in favor of 1874 of 195,214. The result of these figures is to show that a larger traffic has been carried by a smaller number of train miles for the six months ending 31st Dec., 1874, than for the corresponding period of 1873. On the single item of fuel there has been a saving for 1874 of $18,311.35. I think, sir, that this exhibit does not show that the road has not been so badly managed after all. In regard to the tariff I have merely to say that it is in the hands of every member of this House, and is lower than any other railway tariff on the continent of America. I do not say that it is perfect, and if any hon. gentleman could show that it was not lower than on competing roads, or lower than it could be carried by water to similar destinations, I have no objection whatever to have it revised in such a way as to fairly meet the exigencies of the case. But if the hon. gentleman from Cumberland ventures to say to that the tariff is higher than upon other roads, I simply challenge a comparison.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—It is higher.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman knows that it is not, and with all his capacity for misunderstanding and misconstruing figures, which I admit is extensive, it will defy him to prove the contrary. I may further say that representations were made to Mr. BRYDGES that it was quite impossible for Mr. McNAB to work the road properly if he did not have the control of his assistants. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. BRYDGES would not allow Mr. FLEMING to employ an engineer without his permission.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I said that he insisted on the Commissioners employing the engineers.

Hon. M. MACKENZIE — He referred to the necessity of having power to discharge trackmen, when they misdirected their efforts. He has absolute control over them now, and the result has been a great saving. As long as trackmen knew they were independent of the engineer, and that political influences were sufficient to sustain them in their places, so long would they manage the road precisely as they pleased. Mr. CARVELL says :—"The difficulties at St. John station arose out of, and are altogether due to political influences, and the natural dislike of men in charge to be brought into conflict with members of Parliament, when they feel that the sympathy of those in authority is pretty sure to be favorable to the supporters of the Ministry."

Such was his position. But as I told him I was quite surprised he had not made known to me that state of affairs. He adds :—"Because Mr. PICK, the Freight Agent, was believed to hold a high position in a society supposed to have great political influence, his assistance was sought, naturally enough, by all parties seeking Parliamentary honors."

Such was the state of affairs when Mr. BRYDGES went there. I have simply to say in conclusion, as I stated before, that Mr. BRYDGES never was an applicant for, and never would have accepted the position of Superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway. It was never intended he should be so employed. The Government simply retained him in the same position in which the hon. gentleman and his friends left him.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—That is impossible, for the hon. gentleman (Mr. MACKENZIE) legislated all the Commissioners out of office.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman must not try to push me aside on a technicality. The difference is that I did with one man what the hon. gentleman and his colleagues employed three to do. The difference, however, is a material one, as the country will testify. Acting in this capacity, he was the best man the Government could have got to thoroughly investigate the affairs of this railway, and he overhauled the whole system from Halifax to St. John. That it is now in a better condition than when he opened that investigation, there can be no doubt, and it will be the business of this administration to conduct it for the future in as just, and correct, and fair a manner as possible. One word more about the relation of the Government to the public service. Sir, in this very investigation that the hon. member has alluded to, we had two prominent witnesses on the witness stand, Mr. SANDFORD FLEMING and Mr. BRYDGES; and the only thing, I ever said, that would in the slightest degree reflect on Mr. BRYDGES, was my checking Mr. BRYDGES when he was giving his opinions on outside matters, instead of giving evidence. But I had reason to find fault in my character as a member of this House with the way in which evidence was given by Mr. SANDFORD FLEMING. But, sir, I did not doubt Mr. SANDFORD FLEMING'S perfect integrity, and Mr. FLEMING continues to occupy the highest engineering position under the Government. I do not claim that I was absolutely right in everything I have done in that or any other investigation; but I do say this:—when there is a change of administration, new ministers ought to give every public servant in the departments their confidence and their support, and enable them to carry on the work of the department with that efficiency that should characterize every officer; and no Minister is justified in removing a public servant, especially one who has performed a large amount of service and occupied a high position in the department, unless he has satisfied himself that the public interest absolutely demands such removal. Sir, I have endeavored to carry out that doctrine, as have also my colleagues, and in administering the affairs of my own office, I think I have endeavored to give every officer, whether I have always agreed with him politically or his mode of management, fair play and nothing more. Mr. BRYDGES has been treated precisely like other high officers of my department. He has received my confidence as they have received my confidence, and I have no reason to doubt that he has rendered the best possible service to the State, notwithstanding all the hon. member for Cumberland has been pleased to say to-night, in a tone and manner as improper as, I think, they were offensive.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said the hon. First Minister had introduced into the debate some matters which were being considered by a Committee of the House, and which hon. members were not able to discuss with the same advantage as that hon. gentleman, because they did not possess the same information as himself. As to the sale of iron by Messrs. HAWS & Co., he would content himself with quoting from the reply made by Mr. CARVELL to Mr. BRYDGES' report. Mr. CARVELL says, in relation to these transactions:—

In the first place, let me correct an error in Mr. BRYDGES' figures.

The rails for 1873 were purchased at £16 12s. and £17, not £16 12s. and £17 10s. per ton.

In July, 1872, I directed Messrs. HAWS & Co. to procure and ship 500 tons of steel rails on account of the European and North American Railway (Shediac line).

This lot was arranged for early in the fall of that year, at £16 12s., although the lowest price at which the Mersey Steel and Iron Company at Liverpool, would then engage to deliver this quantity in the spring of the following year was £19 sterling, net cash, or £2 8s. higher per ton than HAWS & Co. purchased for, as will be seen by reference to the letter of the secretary of that company, dated 22nd August, 1872, a copy of which will hereinafter be found. These rails formed part of the shipment of the spring of 1873.

Just before my departure for England, in January, 1873, after a consultation with the engineer, I found that rails to renew twenty (20) miles of the line would be required as soon as possible. I took the order with me, and on my arrival at Liverpool, requested Messrs. HAWS & Co., who had always done the railway business in England satisfactorily, to see upon what terms they could secure 2,000 tons of the best description of these rails, for early spring shipment.

They accordingly sent to me in London an offer of £17 free on board at Liverpool, and as I found, after making personal enquiry, that this offer was better than could be done elsewhere, I directed them to accept it, upon the understanding that the rails should be shipped early.

At this time it must be borne in mind that the iron market was in a most anomalous state, strikes were raging throughout the whole of England, and makers were not disposed to undertake any more contracts.

At the time this purchase was made rails were being booked for 1874 at prices varying from £17 10s. as high as £19, and from January to July, 1873, the prices of steel rails ranged from £16 10s. to £18 sterling, the latter price being freely paid for such first-class brands as that received.

In confirmation of this I beg to refer you to a copy of a letter from Mr. JAMES SIMPSON, Liverpool, which will hereafter appear in this report, together with a copy of a letter from the Hœmatite Iron and Steel Company (Limited) of Barrow, dated the 13th February, 1873, by which it will be seen that they could not "entertain any further orders for steel rails for delivery this year."

Mr. BRYDGES, in his report, says:—"The highest price paid for rails by the Grand Trunk Railway at this time was £16 per ton."

I understood from Mr. BRYDGES that this was for a purchase of six thousand (6,000) tons by the Grand Trunk Railway (f. o. b.) at Barrow, from the house which on the 13th February, 1873, refused to "entertain any further orders for steel rails" for that year.

The question may now fairly be asked when did the Grand Trunk Company make their contract?

The letter from the Barrow Company which I have quoted, distinctly shows that it must have been before we went into the market, and that the Grand Trunk Railway rails were not "bought at the same time."

Mr. BRYDGES, when manager of the Grand Trunk Company, doubtless gave this Barrow firm extensive orders from time to time, and being so good a customer, he was naturally in a position to get better terms than smaller buyers.

It must also be borne in mind that I ordered only two thousand (2,000) tons of a special section, at a time when houses were filled with orders and at a late season of the year for early delivery,

The freights paid were the prevailing rates in Liverpool at the time they were shipped.

Respecting the rails for 1874, seventeen hundred and sixty tons were purchased in December last at £15 10s. for shipment to St. John, and seventeen hundred and sixty tons in January, 1874, for shipment to Halifax, at £15 15s per ton, and I have every reason to believe that the same prudence and care were exercised in this purchase as in the case of those aaranged for by Messrs. HAWS & Co., in 1872 and 1873.

Then Mr. CARVELL goes on to show what the terms in the printed circulars were during the months of December 1873, and January 1874, for rails. He says the terms were as follows:—

December 1st, 1873....	£16 00 to	£18 00
" 4th, "	16 00 to	17 00
January 2nd, 1874.....	16 10 to	17 00
" 22d, "	16 00
" 29th, "	16 00

Mr. CARVELL proceeds:—

These figures will, I think, show that the rails purchased by Messrs. HAWS & Co. for this railway in December last at £15 10s., and in January at £15 15s., free on board, were below the current market rates.

It must also be borne in mind that these rails were all of a special section and of first-class brands.

When the question of the purchase of these rails first came up, on the occasion of the first visit of Mr. BRYDGES, I at once wrote to Messrs. HAWS & Co., under date 13th June, and received from them a reply dated 30th June last.

The following is a copy of that correspondence, with letters from Mr. JAMES SIMPSON, The Mersey Steel and Iron Company (Limited), the Secretary of the Hæmatite Iron and Steel Company, Barrow; and also from Messrs. SANDERS Bros., Liverpool.

MR. CARVELL TO MESSRS. HAWS & CO.

"MONCTON, 13th June, 1874.

"DEAR SIRS,

"Mr. C. J. BRYDGES, who has been "here during the past two weeks, under "the authority of the Canadian Govern- "ment, making a thorough enquiry into "everything pertaining to the Intercolon- "ial Railway, has said to me that we have "paid both last year and this much higher "rates for our steel rails, fish plates, bolts "and nuts, than they could have been pro- "cured for.

"He says that the Grand Trunk in "1873, (I presume the beginning of the "year), bought 6,000 tons, f. o. b., at Bar- "row, at £16 sterling, and that the freight "and insurance to Montreal cost 28s. per "ton; that fish plates cost them £12 10s. "sterling, and bolts and nuts £24.

"He further states that in January of "this year, he bought from the same peo- "ple for the Intercolonial Railway Com- "missioners at £15 10s. sterling, deliv- "ered at St. John, N. B.

"These statements in view of the prices "arranged for by you, surprise me very "much. What have you to say in reply?

"When giving you the order for these "rails, I supposed you would be able to "get them upon terms as favorable as any "others. It is not pleasant now to know "that we might have done so much bet- "ter.

"Be good enough to reply to this letter "by return mail in order that I may be in "a position to reply to enquiries which "will be made in regard to this subject.

(Signed) L. CARVELL."

Mr. MITCHELL (continuing) said he hoped the House would also allow him to read the following documents :—

MESSRS. HAWS & Co. TO MR. CARVELL.

"42 SOUTH JOHN STREET,

"Liverpool, 30th June, 1874.

"SIR,

"Your letter of the 13th instant is "to hand, and the contents have caused us "grievous disappointment, as we at all "times, before closing the orders of our "esteemed correspondents, make enquiries "of several parties in the trade, as to the "prices of the articles required, and we "invariably give the order to those who "can fill it at the lowest rate, having of "course regard to the quality of article "required.

"This course we adopted with all your "orders, and we are still confident that we "have obtained all your goods at the "lowest rates prevalent at the time we "purchased them.

"We enclose circulars which will show "you the rates ruling at the time we pur-"chased, also letters from Mr. JAMES "SIMPSON and Messrs. SANDERS Bros. "relative thereto. We respectfully beg "to remind you that at the time we "received your esteemed order for 2,000 "tons of steel rails for early delivery in "the spring and summer of 1873, the "trade of the country was in a very "anomalous state, owing to the strikes "raging both in the coal and iron trade, "and that it was next to impossible to "obtain quotations for early delivery as "required by you ; you will also please "remember that before accepting the offer "of this lot at £17 per ton, we submitted "the offer to you, and that you accepted "it, as you will find on reference to your "letter, dated in London, 25th February, "1873.

"As regards the order for this year "which is now in course of shipment, we "beg to say we followed our usual course, "and that the price quoted by Messrs. "SANDERS Bros. was the lowest offer we "could obtain, and as you will see by the "circulars sent herewith, the price is below "the rate quoted in the market. We "acknowledge that prices have since "fallen below the figure at which we "purchased, but we could not foresee this, "and in fact, the indications then were "that prices had touched their lowest, and "any change that should take place would "be upwards, and this was shown from "the fact that we could not place the lot "for Halifax on quite as advantageous "terms as the St. John lot.

"We feel it due to ourselves thus to "enter fully into the matter, as we are "conscious of having done our best to "obtain the rails at the lowest possible "price ruling in the market for a good "article at the time we purchased. We "also beg to call your attention to the "fact, that you impressed upon us the "importance that the rails should be "shipped early, and consequently we "could not hold off any longer, if we were "to have them ready at the time first "named by you.

"The makers of the 500 ton lot in 1873 "was the EBBW VALE ; and of the 2,000 "tons, GUEST ; and those of this year are "made by the MERSEY STEEL, and Messrs. "BOLCKOW, VAUGHAN & Co.

"(Signed),

"JOHN HAWS & CO."

MR. JAMES SIMPSON TO MESSRS. J. HAWS & Co.

"10 Rumford Place,

"LIVERPOOL, 26th June, 1874.

"GENTLEMEN,

"Referring to the complaints which you "have received respecting the price of "the rails (steel) sold you last "year—I think if your friends had been "here during the early part of 1873, at "the time the purchase was made, they "would have been convinced that not only "was the price a very reasonable one, but "they would also have discovered that "makers were then so full of orders, both "for early and forward delivery, that com-"paratively few were in a position to book "additional contracts. I have several "letters, received from different makers "during the period referred to, saying "that they were fully sold for the entire "year, and orders were even then being "entered for 1874, at prices varying from

"£17 10s. as high as £19. It is also to "be borne in mind that the market was "advancing during the early part of 1873; "and the purchase to which you refer— "of 6,000 tons at £16 f.o.b. at Barrow— "must have been made early, the large "quantity being also a consideration to the "seller.

"I enclose you a letter from the Barrow "Hæmatite Company, dated 13th Feb- "ruary, 1873, from which you will see "that they were then full orders for the "entire year.

"From January to July the range of "prices of steel rails was £16 10s. to "£18, the latter price being freely paid "for such first class brands as that you "received, namely, GUEST'S. I cannot, "therefore, see what grounds of complaint "there can be at the price of £17 under "the circumstances; nor do I think I could "have supplied them so cheap, had I not "managed to get them delivered on account "of an existing contract."

(Signed) JAMES SIMPSON.

HÆMATITE IRON AND STEEL WORKS, TO J. SIMPSON, ESQ.

"HÆMATITE IRON AND STEEL WORKS,
"BARROW-IN-FURNESS,
"13th February, 1873.

"DEAR SIR,—

"We thank you for your enquiry dated "yesterday, but cannot entertain any "further orders for steel rails for delivery "this year."

"(Signed) HENRY THOMAS,
Secretary.

MERSEY STEEL AND IRON COMPANY, TO J. W. TURLEY, ESQ., LIVERPOOL.

"DEAR SIR,—

"In reply to yours of the 21st, we "enclose section of steel rail, the nearest "we have to yours. If this will do our "price for 500 tons will be £19 per ton, "net cash, against B. of L., delivery in "spring of next year."

SANDERS BROS., TO JOHN HAWS & CO.

"32 AND 33 THE ALBANY,
"Liverpool, June 30, 1874.

"DEAR SIRS,—

"We have your favor of the 26th inst., "and cannot but express our surprise at "any such question being raised as you "have laid before us. The purchases you "made from us have, it is true, turned out "unfavorably, though, on the other hand, "had there been an advance instead of a "decline, your buyers would have con- "gratulated themselves that the market "had gone in their favor. The prices "paid at the time the contracts were made "were the current figures of the day, as a "reference to the circulars enclosed, which "are issued by the leading railway iron "brokers in this country, will readily "show.

"The course of a market subsequent to "the conclusion of a purchase is beyond "the control either of a buyer or seller, "and is a contingency the purchaser has "always to consider.

"Exceptionally unfavorable circumstan- "ces have developed themselves within "the last six months, causing a stagnation "of trade and depression of prices in iron, "such as no one could anticipate or guard "against in any way.

"In fact so uncertain was the future, "that many makers declined to contract "for forward deliveries at all—the prices "asked for all descriptions of raw mate- "rials being so extravagant that they pre- "ferred to wait until matters beeame more "settled before committing themselves to "actual sales.

"(Signed) SANDERS BROS."

Mr. CARVELL says :—

"I think this correspondence will show conclusively that the rails were at least purchased upon the best terms prevalent at the time.

I was in England, as I have already said, when the 2,000 tons (the major portion of the shipment of 1873) was bought, and can state that every reasonable effort was made to make an advantageous purchase, and although I was not present when the rails for 1874 were contracted for, I had no reason to believe that any less care and attention were exercised than in the case of the former order."

Now such was the reply which Mr. CARVELL made to the statement of Mr. BRYDGES. He (Mr. MITCHELL) considered it most unfair to attack Mr. HAWS in his absence. Talk about attacking Mr. BRYDGES ! That gentleman was a public servant, acting under instructions from the Government, though what those instructions were he was not going to say. The Government had not pursued that course which should be expected from an honorable administration. They attacked men who were absent and officers who had been removed, and were deprived of an opportunity to defend themselves. When they heard the explanation of Mr. HAWS, and learned what extra charges for freight and insurance he paid on the rails, it would be time enough to attack him. Freights, as every one knew, varied fifty, sixty and even seventy per cent. in a season. On the St. Lawrence, insurance rates could be had at one-half per cent. between Chicago and Liverpool; a few days before the close of navigation they could not be had for five per cent., yet, without explanations from Mr. HAWES, it was asserted that the profits on these rails had gone into his pockets. He (Mr. MITCHELL) was well aware what a clever man like Mr. BRYDGES, sent down to investigate everything connected with these roads, would report if his instructions were as unfair as the method adopted by the Government of attacking absent men. He could destroy the reputation of any man, no matter how pure and fair he might be. It would be a work of superorogation for him (Mr. MITCHELL) to follow all the gentlemen who had spoken in this debate, after the able and exhaustive speech of the hon. member for Cumberland. The course his hon. friend had pursued, with reference to the charges against Messrs. FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co., was the right one. The subject was under consideration in the Committee on Public Accounts, and though five of the seven gentlemen who were investigating the matter were supporters of the Government, he (Mr. MITCHELL) would await their report before attempting to refute or explain, as a member of the late Administration, the charges preferred. He was not going to constitute himself the champion of Mr. HAWS, or of Messrs. FRASER, REYNOLDS & Co., but he felt bound, as a member of the late Administration, to meet the charges against himself or his late colleagues in relation to their management of public affairs. The hon., the Premier had pronounced the conduct of the hon. member for Cumberland as scandalous, yet he (Mr. MACKENZIE) did not hesitate to attack as honorable, upright and honest a man as any one in this House, who was now on the other side of the Atlantic.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I attacked no one.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The hon. gentleman thinks it is no attack to read papers in this House which no one but himself possesses.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he simply stated the price which this Government had paid for iron, delivered free on board the vessel on the coast of England, and the price which they had every reason to believe on investigation was really paid to the manufacturers of the rails. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) stated explicitly that he did not know where the money was lost, but he did know that the Government lost between nine and ten thousand pounds somewhere.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said this explanation was some modification of the inference conveyed by the first statement, but there was nothing in it to warrant him in saying that it was not unjustifiable for any one occupying the high position of the Premier to attack the private reputations of public officers and imply against them mismanagement and misconduct. The hon., the Premier asked, "Is it not scandalous to attack Mr. BRYDGES?" Was the name of Mr. BRYDGES so sacred that men must stand aghast when it was uttered in this House? Mr. BRYDGES had placed nimself in the position of a paid employee of the Government, sent down to the Lower Provinces to report in a most unfair way as to the condition of the railroads, and attack the men who managed them. Any one reading the report would see that his object was to find fault where he could. It was unfair and did not do justice either to the working of the railways or the officers who managed them. It did not do justice to Mr. BRYDGES himself, who, as they all knew, was a man of great ability. The hon. Premier said he merely kept Mr. BRYDGES on. Now, what were the facts? Every one knew that the Legislation of this House swept away the old Commissioners. The Premier said "Did hon. gentlemen expect the road to build itself?" No, but they had a right to expect that the man who practically controlled the road and possessed the ability and experience requisite to its proper management, but whose neglect had delayed its constructions from 1867 to the present time—and if report spoke truly it would not be completed for two years longer—should not be sent to report upon the public works of this country. Did the hon. Premier, when he boasted of Mr. BRYDGES, know that on some sections of the Intercolonial Railroad that gentleman had never set his foot? Yet the public reputation of Mr. BRYDGES was to be held sacred! But it was said he was absent. He was in the House all afternoon, and it was well known that this question was to be discussed after recess. If he was not present it was his own fault. He stood before the country like every other public official, and if his treatment of the Intercolonial Railway was unfair and unjust, he was not above criticism. The hon. Premier said "Who paid the money?" The over-payment of $64,000 was made by Mr. BRYDGES. True, the late Government were responsible for it, as the Government of the day were responsible for the conduct of Mr. BRYDGES. While the Commissioners were in office under the late Administration they (the Government) were bound to accept their conclusions. It was well known that in the administration of affairs in a country like this, it was utterly impossible for the Government to attend to every detail of the public service. When the railroad was placed under management of the ablest and most experienced men in the country, it was understood that they would give their attention to it. But the Government found before they knew where they were that an over-payment of $64,000 had been made, but they had to assume the responsibility of Mr. BRYDGES' conduct; yet this was the man who was sent down to the Lower Provinces to revolutionize the management of the railways there. With reference to the charge of entering goods free of duty, could hon. gentlemen opposite say they had never entered goods for a railway, free of duty?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I say at once that I never heard of such a thing being done.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to me. The goods mentioned were imported for the railway in the fall of 1873. They were ordered by the railway people through the firm with which I am connected, but they were taken from the vessel and entered by the railway people themselves.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The hon. member admits that it was done once. I do not say he did anything wrong. I merely refer to it to show that when the charge is thrown across the House that political friends of the late Administration were allowed to enter goods free of duty; they should be careful that the same charge, like a boomerang, might not fall on themselves.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—The goods were not ordered or imported in the usual way. It was a special order made by the railway people for goods that could not be got in St. John, and the order was sent by telegram by my brother. The case came directed to the railway people, who entered it themselves and took it from the vessel.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said: The hon. gentleman took great credit to himself for managing the Intercolonial Railway with one commissioner instead of four, but he failed to tell the House that the road has been in course of construction almost since 1867, and that it ought to have been finished three years ago. He was not going to shield the late Administration. They were responsible for the misconduct of Mr. BRYDGES and his associates; and their experience of the management of the road under Mr. BRYDGES, gave them very little confidence in his reports. Then the hon. gentleman had stated that Mr. FLEMING was still the highest engineer. Did he not know that he had appointed a gentleman (Mr. SCHREIBER) to examine the railway over Mr. FLEMING—a gentleman who took his instructions, not from Mr. FLEMING, but from the head of the Administration.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Why should he not?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he was not objecting to that—he was simply replying to the statement of the hon. gentleman that Mr. FLEMING occupied the position of Chief Engineer.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he could not conceive what the hon. gentleman was driving at. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had referred to Mr. FLEMING as a gentleman holding one of the highest positions in his department, and he still held that position, Mr. SCHREIBER was appointed by the gentleman opposite as the Chief Engineer upon these railways, and in order to enable Mr. FLEMING to devote all his attention to the Pacific Railway, and by arrangement with that gentleman, Mr. SCHREIBER was appointed to the position subject to the ultimate decision on engineering matters of Mr. FLEMING. Mr. FLEMING was still Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, but the superintendence of everything except two large bridges devolves upon Mr. SCHREIBER.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL proceeded to say that the hon. gentleman did not find Mr. SCHREIBER as Chief Engineer, but as a special engineer under Mr. FLEMING, and he (Mr. MACKENZIE) had placed him in complete control of the entire road with the exception of two bridges. It would not have suited the policy of Mr. BRYDGES that Mr. FLEMING should have remained in that position, for he might state that many of the troubles which the late Administration had in connection with this railway arose from the fact of a rivalry existing between Mr. BRYDGES and Mr. FLEMING. A constant struggle went on between them, and at one time it became so serious that it was almost necessary for the Government to consider which to dispense with in order to obtain harmony. They were embarrassed very frequently from the fact that Mr. BRYDGES would report directly in the teeth of the report of the Chief Engineer. The Premier had chosen to refer to the circumstance that the employees upon this road were appointed merely from political considerations. He (Mr. MITCHELL) was not prepared to say that political influence might not have entered into some of the appointments that were made. He did not believe an Administration could carry on the affairs of the country without recognizing political support. Did the present Government contend that they could appoint a man irrespective of the wishes of their supporters, or would any supporters of the hon. gentleman say so?

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said his hon. friend must be a solitary instance, for he did not believe that a single other member would take the same position. He would not deny the fact that political influence under the late Administration, as it did under the present, controlled very largely the appointment of public officers; but the late Administration never to his knowledge appointed a man to a position, the duties of which they did not consider he was perfectly competent to perform, and so far as the department over which he had control was concerned, he was free to admit that in making any appointments in any county he felt it his duty to consult the member for that county if he was a gentleman who had confidence in the Administration, rather than to consult those who were opposed to the Administration. Would hon. gentlemen opposite say that a different policy was pursued now? If they did say so they did not possess that candour which he gave them credit for. He ventured to say that the hon. member for Chateauguay in all the appointments which he had recommended under the present Administration had not gone beyond the ranks of his own party. It was futile for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that they acted upon a different policy; if they did they would soon become too unpopular to retain their places. It was all very well for them to pretend to a sentiment they did not feel for the purpose of crushing opponents who had pursued a course which they were frank enough to own and admit. The Premier had stated that he had not removed a public officer for political purposes. He would like to ask the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what course had been pursued during the last two years of the late Administration. He would ask them if in the counties they represented they did not generally desire to get their own friends appointed. Did not the present Minister of Customs recommend this man PICK and was he not a special friend of the Minister of Customs, and did he not support the Administration that was assailed in Mr. BRYDGES' report? Did not the Minister of Customs use his influence to keep that man in office and was not that man a standing obstacle to Mr. CARVELL in the proper management of the railway at St. John. And yet they were to have it cast in their teeth that they had appointed officers for party purposes and not for their efficiency. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will find that some of these charges may come home to him. At this late hour he would not occupy any longer the attention of the House, but when the report of the committee was presented he might again take the opportunity of dealing with this whole question. He believed that that Committee, though the majority were Government supporters, would do what was right, and when their report was presented the House would be better able to judge whether the charges brought against the late Administration and their friends were true or not. All he could say at present was that if they were true, the persons who were guilty of improper conduct must take the consequences.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) after referring to a remark of the last speaker of a personal character, proceeded to deny the accusation that the supporters of the present Administration were influenced in any way by the patronage which the Government might be able to place in their hands. He for one would never ask the Government to appoint any friend of his to office if he did not think the person was well fitted to discharge its duties. He asked no favors of the Government; he merely asked that they do their duty to the country, and so long as they did that he would support them, whether they appointed his friends to office or not. The supporters of the Government did not come here to levy blackmail on them, but to assist them in administering the affairs of the country. The hon. gentleman who had just sat down had admitted that the late Government could not exist without appointing political partizans to office, and he (Mr. MACDOUGALL) wanted no better evidence of the necessity there was for a change of Government at that time than the speech of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DOMVILLE said the report of Mr. BRYDGES could only be viewed as the report of the Government, for he would not have made such a report, and could not have effected the arrangements, except with the consent of the Government. One or two points in the report had escaped the attention of the member for Cumberland. Mr. BRYDGES says:—

"I found also at St. John the mode of collecting the money due for the carriage of freight was not at all in a satisfactory position."

After going into details, he said:—

"There is a freight agent, Mr. PICK, who remains at the freight office, and who is responsible to Mr. COLEMAN for the proper carrying out of the work. How well that is done you will be able to understand from the description I have given you of what I found to be the facts."

Mr. CARVELL in answer to this said:—

"The difficulties at St. John station arose out of, and are altogether due to political influences, and the natural dislike of men in charge to be brought into conflict with members of Parliament, when they feel that the sympathy of those in authority is pretty sure to be favorable to the supporters of the Ministry.

"It is natural therefore, that men should desire, under such circumstances, to get along with as little contention as possible.

"The freight agent at St. John had charge of the freight department at that place, and in the performance of his duties was responsible to the station-master.

"Because Mr. PICK, the freight agent, was believed to hold a high position in a society supposed to have great political influence, his assistance was sought, naturally enough, by all parties seeking Parliamentary honors."

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said he had never asked either Mr. CARVELL or Mr. BRYDGES to keep any officer in the public service unless it was for the good of the Department.

Mr. DOMVILLE said that Mr. PICK was sent three times through Kings County at the last election, and worked, in broad day light to the knowledge of every one, at Hampden for the present Administration, and he (Mr. DOMVILLE) could prove by Mr. CARVELL that he was instructed by the hon. Minister of Customs to retain Mr. PICK in his position. Mr. CARVELL was now present and ready to substantiate what he (Mr. DOMVILLE) had said.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE said he never mentioned to Mr. CARVELL anything about Mr. PICK when Mr. BRYDGES was down there. Mr. PICK was removed from St. John to Point du Chene, but not by my instructions or with my knowledge.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he did not state that it was done then, but it was done before or after. The hon. Minister of Customs kept that man: in office, and sent his employees out to work at elections, while at the same time the hon. Minister addressed the people in the Mechanics' Institute of St. John, and warned all officers not to take part in the elections.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I never addressed a meeting in the Mechanics' Institute of St. John.

Mr. DOMVILLE—I say the hon. gentleman was present.

Hon. Mr. BURPEE—I say I was not.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE said the hon. gentleman's denial went only to show that he was not at the Institute. He was bound, however, to accept the statement of the hon. Minister, although he did so with great reservation. He also received with great reservation the statement of the hon. Minister that only on one occasion were goods imported on which the duty was not paid by means of a pass.

Mr. DOMVILLE next proceeded to refer to the investigation which was being made by the Committee of the House into the FRASER, REYNOLDS account, when Mr. SPEAKER called the hon. member to order, and ruled that it was entirely out of order for hon. members to refer to what had transpired in a committee before the committee had reported.

Mr. DOMVILLE called the attention of the House to a statement appearing in Mr. BRYDGES' report which he considered very unfair. After stating that he had visited the Auditor and examined the acccounts. Mr. BRYDGES said :—

"The balance against the station at the date that I examined the accounts was $4,866.80, said to be for goods in store but not delivered. Upon examination I did not find this to be an accurate statement of the case. Upon examination of the accounts I found that one item—$893.88—was for charges due by the railway for the carriage of its own materials. It did not, of course, affect the cash balances, but made the apparent balance at the station much higher than it actually was. There was an amount of $958.08 owing by the Coldbrook Rolling Mill Company, for goods which had been delivered to the mill, but which had not been paid for on delivery."

That was an assertion that was calculated to mislead the public, to cast a slur on the credit of the company, and to convey the impression that they were unable to meet their engagements, and that Government allowed them to continue their operations on suffrance. In order to explain that statement, he would state that those mills turned out from twenty to twenty five thousand tons per annum of raw and manufactured material. Sometimes three or four vessels would be lying at the wharf discharging their cargos, and the inspectors found themselves compelled to wait till the end of the month to send in their statement. On that occasion the month had expired three days previous. It appeared to have been the habit to give a monthly account. Mr. BRYDGES also said:—

"The amount which was due at the time I made the examination of the accounts was for a very much longer period than a week, and, as far as I could ascertain, it extended over a month. There is no reason why this account should have been allowed to run so long."

On the day the account was presented at the office of the Company (said Mr. DOMVILLE) it was paid and receipted. Mr. DOMVILLE next proceeded to show that the freight tariff had been raised so as to reach $26\frac{2}{3}$ cents per ton per mile on the material sent from the mill; and that the company had been compelled to purchase their own rails for their siding and put them down, whereas in other cases the rails were supplied by the Government. As regarded the management of the railroad, he had only to take up the public prints and refer to the report of a meeting held by the mechanics of St. John, where it was stated, even by JEREMIAH TRAVIS,—

Hon. Mr. HOLTON rose to a point of order. He asked what was the question now before the chair?

Mr. SPEAKER—The question is that I do leave the chair.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON submitted that was a question which should not be put. When the House rose for recess they were receiving the report of the Committee of Supply. The hon. gentleman was now speaking to the motion before the House at six o'clock, and his speech had no reference to the item then under consideration.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER understood that when the House resumed after recess, the Finance Minister made a motion that the SPEAKER do now leave the chair to go into Committee of Supply. The debate had correctly taken place upon that motion, and he (Mr. TUPPER) was careful not to travel in the slightest degree outside the statements made by the Finance Minister, in his remarks to the House. The remarks now being made by the hon. member for King's County were in reply to the speech of the hon. Finance Minister.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON submitted that the motion of the Finance Minister was not in order. At six o'clock the House was receiving the report of the Committee of Supply, which was not disposed of, and until it was, no motion to go into Committee of Supply could be entertained.

Mr. SPEAKER said the remarks of the hon. member for Chateauguay were quite correct. The House was receiving the report of the Committee of Supply when the House rose for recess. It was only after the hon. member for Cumberland had commenced his speech that he noticed that the motion of the Finance Minister was out of order. He thought it better not to interrupt the debate then, as there seemed to be an understanding between the hon. Finance Minister and the hon. member for Cumberland that it should take place. If the House were unanimous in wishing the debate to be continued, he would not notice the irregularity since it had gone so far.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON insisted that the debate be discontinued.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled the motion of the Finance Minister out of order, and called the next item.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, further consideration of the report was adjourned, and the House adjourned at 1 a. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, February 26th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read a first time:—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Montreal)—To amend the act incorporating the Canadian Navigation Company.

Mr. JETTE—To incorporate the European and American Express and Agency Company.

Mr. IRVING—To incorporate the Manitoba and North-West Permanent Building Society.

Mr. DESJARDINS—Respecting the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway Company.

Also to incorporate the St. Lawrence Bridge Company.

Mr. DEWDNEY—To incorporate a company to construct, own and operate a railway from Red River, in the Province of Manitoba, to a point in British Columbia on the Pacific coast.

Mr. MACLELLAN—To incorporate the Canadian Steam Users' Association.

THE SUPPLEMENTARY FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON asked the hon. Finance Minister when he would have the kindness to lay on the table, as was customary, the supplementary statement of receipts and expenditures, from the end of the financial year ending June 30th, 1874, to the latest practicable date, in order that the House might be in a position to consider the present financial condition of the country as affected by such statement before the financial measures of the session finally passed from their consideration. Honorable gentlemen opposite had not called for this statement, and he felt it necessary to make the request which he should perhaps have left to them.

Hon Mr. MITCHELL said this implied a quiet charge of neglect of duty on the part of the Opposition. As hon. gentlemen on the left of Mr. SPEAKER had asked in vain for such a statement last year, they thought it was of little use to make the request this year. They thought it would be better to leave the matter in the hands of the hon. member for Chateauguay, whose sense of duty would not allow him to overlook it, and whose demand the Government would not care to refuse.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — It was brought down last year.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT hoped to be able to bring down the statement next Tuesday.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were read a third time and passed:—

To amend the Acts for the better preservation of the peace in the vicinity of Public Works.

To amend the Dominion Militia and Defence Acts.

THE INSOLVENCY BILL.

The Bill respecting Insolvency was read a second time.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said it was not his intention to say anything with reference to the measure at this stage. It would be referred to a special committee to be thoroughly examined there, and the committee would also receive suggestions from hon. members. The House would have a full discussion of the measure in Committee of the Whole. He moved that the vote be referred to a select committee (the rule of the House being suspended) composed of Sir JOHN MACDONALD, Messrs. BLAKE, HOLTON, CAMERON (Cardwell,) WILKES, DEVLIN, CAUCHON, JETTE, DAVIES, PELLETIER, THIBEAUDEAU, LAFLAMME, COLBY, JONES (Halifax,) WOOD, CUNNINGHAM, APPLEBY, MOSS, IRVING, RYAN, BABY, BARTHE, MOUSSEAU, CARON, PALMER, MACLELLAN, and the mover, to report thereon with all convenient speed. —Carried.

THE FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD asked when the Act relating to Foreign Enlistment was coming up.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER — On Tuesday.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD thought it fair to say that he would oppose the Bill, and that he would state his reasons why he thought the Bill should not become law.

IMMIGRATION AND QUARANTINE.

On item 46, reported from Committee of Supply,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked for information respecting the instructions given to the Agent General to England. He did so because he found in a paper he had received a very able address delivered by that gentleman at Manchester some time during the month of January. While the address itself was exceedingly interesting and one in which there was a great deal calculated to benefit Canada, there were some portions of it which, to his mind, were exceedingly injudicious and not calculated to impress very favorably this House in relation to Mr. JENKINS. Was the mission of Mr. JENKINS on the other side of the water, in addition to attending to emigration matters, to discuss politics and deal with the public questions and public opinions of gentlemen in this country? It seemed to him (Mr. MITCHELL) that Mr. JENKINS should confine himself strictly to the mission for which he was employed, and not discuss political questions as he did at Manchester in the following manner :—" No doubt there are instances of incidental protection, and these probably the leaders and adherents of the present Government of Canada will endeavor gradually to remove, because their policy is essentially a liberal policy, based upon a recognition of established principles of economy and economic administration in the State." Further on, Mr. JENKINS says :—" If you ask whether there is not in Canada a party of manufacturers who are in favor of protection, I am bound to admit that there is ; but no one would think of comparing the mere streaks of protective policy in the Canadian political strata with the vast protective conglomerate of the other side of the border." He (Mr. MITCHELL) was not going to express an opinion in favor of protection or of free trade at this time, but he thought it impolitic of Mr. JENKINS and unwise on the part of the Administration to allow a servant of theirs in England, who should occupy a neutral position, to express opinions where there might be divided opinions in relation to trade. Mr. JENKINS further on remarks :—" I think I may safely say there is growing up an opinion in Canada in favor of permanent union with the British Empire on very equitable terms. I could, were there time, allude to the remarkable utterances of Mr. BLAKE, one of the most distinguished of Canadian statesmen, who has distinctly and deliberately thrown himself into the fore-front of the movement in favor of an Imperial Confederation. This I know is viewed by some persons, and very eminent persons, in Canada, as well as by a numerous and influential class of the community as a chimera—so was reform, so was free trade, so was the abolition of the slave trade. But when it is considered that it must be either Imperial Confederation or Imperial disintegration, it may be asked whether the man who considers that the probabilities of the permanency of an empire based upon politic concessions and just recognition of mutual rights and obligations is less visionary than one who entertains the prospects of a dissociation of the elements of an empire so strong, so universal, so knit together by ties of kindred, of government, of interest, and of national glory." Now, he (Mr. MITCHELL) did not object to this statement if it had been confined to the growing feeling in Canada in favor of continued connection with the empire, but he did not agree with Mr. JENKINS when he went further on and said that either Imperial confederation or Imperial disintegration was ahead of us. The present condition of affairs was satisfactory to the people of England and to the people of this country. The true interest of Canada was to continue our present relations with the Mother Country, maintaining independence in reference to the internal economy of the Dominion, and at the same time the most intimate and friendly relations with the empire. Another remark of Mr. JENKINS met with his most cordial approval. It was that portion of the speech in which he characterized the utterances of Mr. BLAKE as remarkable. They certainly were remarkable. and Mr. JENKINS was right in saying that the hon. member for South Bruce was a distinguished Canadian statesman. No one could doubt the talents and ability of the hon. gentleman and he (Mr. MITCHELL) did not object to Mr. JENKINS lauding our public men in England, but he did object to his representing the hon. member as being in favor of Imperial Confederation. The hon. member for South Bruce had never advocated such a change in Parliament, and there was a great difference between his utterances in Parliament and in other places. If the hon. gentleman was in favor of changing our relations with the Mother Country the fact should be stated from his place in this House, and not through such a seemingly irresponsible party as Mr. JENKINS. That gentleman should not be allowed, while holding a position something like that of an Ambassador, to make such a statement as the following :—"There can be only one opinion on the part of anybody who has taken the trouble to look into the financial position of the Dominion at the time the present Government came into power, and at those engagements into which the previous Government had entered with British Columbia, viz. ; that to carry out those engagements in their integrity would have been a stupid and idle waste of the resources of the Dominion. It would more than have doubled the debt of Canada ; it would have taxed her resources —resources better devoted to the development of population and wealth—to the utmost ; it would have created a vast and costly Government patronage and a constant financial derangement which must always have been perilous to good and economic and honest government. Great as must have been the mortification of Imperial and Canadian statesmen to find that a solemn compact entered into by a Government could not be carried out with justice to 3,500,000 whilst it involved an injustice to some few thousands on the distant shores of the Pacific—I venture to say that no impartial Canadian politician or financier, and no sensible English critic, economist or statesman will look upon the conduct of the present Canadian Government in regard to this matter as dictated by anything but sound and necessary policy." Now, Mr. JENKINS should not be allowed to tell the people of England that we were anti-protection or free-trade people, or condemn the policy of the Government, or reflect upon the public acts of this Parliament, or the Parliament that passed that Pacific Railway Bill and bound themselves in a compact with British Columbia to build a railroad across the continent. He did not intend to oppose this grant, but he felt it his duty to ask the House to reflect upon maintaining a person in such a position without instructions to prevent a recurrence of such utterances as these. At a public meeting in St. John, Mr. JENKINS had stated that three or four years would not elapse before such a change would occur in public feeling that it would either result in binding the Dominion closer to the Empire, or sever the ties that bind us to the Mother Country. On that occasion he (Mr. MITCHELL) combatted this view. He held that the tie, which was almost imaginary, should be maintained. He hoped the day would be long in coming before a change would occur, but when it did come, his first interest would be Canada. When, therefore, Mr. JENKINS proposed a closer alliance with the Empire by which we should assume her responsibilities and debts, all her international obligations and difficulties created by entanglements with foreign States, the necessity of contributing to her army and navy, with the chance of being ruled from Downing street, his (Mr. MITCHELL's) feeling would be Canada, first —not Canada, first in the sense in which it had been proclaimed in Toronto, but Canada's interests first. It might seem strange that he should make such remarks on this motion. He knew it was open to the criticism of being injudicious, but it was due to the country, when statements like these were made by a man in the position of Mr. JENKINS, that the Ministry should not by a silent endorsation assent to such views or the country believe that a change was either necessary to its prosperity or desired by its people.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD did not think his hon. friend had any reason for getting into an exalted state, but enough had been said to make it necessary for the Premier to make some explanations respecting the Agent General. He (Sir JOHN) admired the manner in which the Premier had protected Mr. JENKINS from censure for his very foolish speech last year, but, while the hon. gentleman was quite right in standing by his public officer, he (Sir JOHN) thought that the Agent General would soon disappear. It was absolutely necesssary that, if Canada was to have a really efficient and effective agent, that man should be a civil servant and officer of this Government, attending his office from 9 a. m. to a certain hour at night, ready to meet people desiring to emigrate to Canada, and not be spreading himself at Liverpool, Manchester, Dundee and everywhere else at the expense—he had no hesitation to say —of the people of Canada. That man was never to be found at his office. He was out here last summer starring it in America, and what became of the office while he was away? The Premier replied that Mr. JENKINS had a chief clerk, and it was not necessary that he should be there in September. If there was any month in the year when it was necessary to have an agent in London it was September. In September, October and November emigrants were looking for information preparatory to coming to this country. And where was Mr. JENKINS' next man while he was in America himself. That next man was his brother.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—No.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—Is not Mr. JENKINS' brother there?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—He may be there, but he is not the next man.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said Mr. JENKINS' brother was in Egypt, and a little runner was left in charge and the agency was neglected. Was not that so?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It was not.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he must be mistaken then, but the hon. Premier would find that he (Sir JOHN) was correct in his information. Mr. JENKINS had made himself personally offensive to the British Government, and should be obliged either to resign his position in Parliament or his office as Agent General. It was quite impossible that the interests of Canada could be protected if that officer was a political partisan of the most advanced stripe.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said his hon. friend thought it very wrong that Mr. JENKINS should attend to emigration matters in England because he was a partizan. Was not WILLIAM MACDOUGALL a partizan, and was he not appointed because he was a partizan? It was all right for WILLIAM MACDOUGALL to write articles in the English press against this Government, but the moment an expression fell from Mr. JENKINS that was thought indiscreet, it was made the ground of attack on the Government. Nothing could be more scandalous than the attacks of the Tory press, mentioned by Mr. JENKINS in his speech, upon the Government and people of Canada at the very time when the Finance Minister of the Dominion was in England. These articles were produced for the express purpose of misrepresenting the Government and Parliament of Canada in relation to the Pacific Railway policy and to throw all the odium possible upon them. With reference to the speech of Mr. JENKINS, perhaps it was a great crime to refer to Mr. BLAKE as a leading statesman of Canada.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I said nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The great objection was that he made reference to any of our public men.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—On the contrary I said I approved of his noticing in England the public men of Canada.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Then I do not know what the extract was read for.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I objected to his condemnation of the late Government and his comments on the policy of the Canadian Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was not bound to restrict any officer of the Government to say anything speculative of our politics. Why did the hon. member never call the attention of the House to the fact that a salaried officer, in his own presence, went upon the hustings and denounced this Government and proposed a candidate in opposition to the Ministerial candidate? Why did the hon. member for Kingston appear at a public meeting in Stratford with one of the civil servants appearing with him and denouncing the then Opposition through a salaried officer?

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—It has never been denied that an officer of the Government may support the Government of the day, and the question is whether he can oppose the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman says it has never been denied that an officer of the Government may support the Government of the day. Very well then, the converse is true—an officer of the Government may oppose the Government. The hon. gentleman cannot take one side without taking the other. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) thought it was exceedingly improper for an officer of the Government to adopt either course.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the House would remember what Mr. DORION had said in his place when he carried the ballot clauses. He then said that one of the advantages of those clauses was that every officer of the Government, whether for or against the Government, could vote.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that was an entirely different matter. But the hon. gentleman opposite took the ground that a very general expression of opinion, so general that no bias could be discovered in it, was exceedingly improper in Mr. JENKINS; but it was exceedingly proper for the hon. leader of the Opposition to take one of his chief officers of his own department, when at the head of the Government, and travel with him as part of that political menagerie that travelled through the country in 1872. Then there was the case of Lieut. Col. INCHES, a salaried militia officer in New Brunswick, who appeared on the platform, denounced the Government, and proposed the Opposition candidate. And yet, with these cases before him the hon. leader of the Opposition had attacked Mr. JENKINS. He quite admitted that it was a question for discussion whether the position of a member of Parliament in England is compatible or not with the position of Agent General of the Dominion, and the Government would now have to consider whether there was anything objectionable in the gentleman holding the two positions; but when the hon. gentleman stated that the emigration business was neglected he spoke without any kind of authority. On the contrary our emigration business was never attended to so well since it was commenced in England as during the past year. There never was previously such an efficient supervision of emigration matters in England and the business capacity that Mr. JENKINS had displayed in this particular was greater than that which had ever been shown before. In regard to Mr. JENKINS' visit to Canada he (Mr. MACKENZIE) had only to say that he came at the request, and with the assent of the Government, to make arrangements with the different Provinces which would prove more effective than those then in existence. He came to complete arrangements which were contemplated when he left England, and which had been carried through most successfully. He had no object in defending Mr. JENKINS other than that of doing him justice. He believed, however, he was a most efficient Superintendent of our emigration business in England. During his absence the duties of the office were discharged by Mr. ADAMS, a senior clerk, who is reported to be an able officer. He was quite willing to contrast the services Mr. JENKINS had rendered in the Emigration Department with the efficiency or non-efficiency of the London office in years past, and was also quite willing to contrast his services with those of the agent of the hon. gentleman opposite, the hon. Mr. MACDOUGALL.

Hon. Mr. POPE denied in toto that the Hon. WILLIAM MACDOUGALL had agitated the country and written articles in the papers while he was in the employ of the late Government. That gentleman was sent abroad by the late Government on a particular mission, namely, that of special agent in Norway, Sweden and Denmark. He remained there until the late Government went out of office, in fact his term expired about that time; and if he was continued in the position afterwards it was with the consent and approval of the present Government. That gentleman had no occasion to be in England so far as emigration was concerned. By perusing the Orders in Council the hon. leader of the Government would see that Mr. MACDOUGALL'S appointment had reference solely to the Scandinavian kingdoms. The Premier had gone so far as to state that the present incumbent of the office of Agent General was a person of wonderful ability, and had done more than his predecessor to promote emigration to Canada. He (Mr. POPE) regretted more than he could express the death of Mr. DIXON, the late Agent. He was held in high esteem both here and in the Old Country, and was a gentleman who never identified himself either with one political party or the other, but fairly and honestly represented Canada in England. If the House wished to know which of these Agents had really done the most to promote emigration it could obtain the information in no manner with more certainty than by consulting the returns of the number of emigrants who had arrived here. During the past year of Mr. DIXON'S service there came and settled here 50,000 emigrants, while the number for the present year would not exceed 36,000. The truth was that Mr. DIXON killed himself in the service of Canada by over-work. It was worth while also to consider the expenditure during Mr. DIXON'S term of office and that at the present time. It would be found that the expenses for the current year, under Mr. JENKINS' supervision, would be three times that which was being incurred when Mr. DIXON left office, and yet the emigration returns showed that the volume of emigration was only two-thirds of what it was. With this experience he would leave the House and the country to judge whether Mr. JENKINS had done such wonderful service for this country in emigration matters as compared with the work performed when Mr. DIXON was in charge of the London office. He desired while on the immigration items to inform the House that when Minister of Agriculture and Immigration he promised increases of salaries to the agents at Toronto and Quebec, so soon as there should be an organization of the Department. He hoped the hon. leader of the Government would take the matter into consideration.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that while declining to agree absolutely to any promise made by the late Minister of Immigration, they would consider his promises entitled to all possible respect and consideration. With respect to the other point, he thought the hon. member for Compton had forgotten the circumstances connected with the appointment of Mr. MACDOUGALL. The hon. gentleman appointed Mr. MACDOUGALL for four months, at $200 per month; but at the end of that period an Order in Council was passed extending the appointment to an unlimited time. If any hon. member called for the Order in Council it would be brought down.

Hon Mr. POPE said he did not remember the second Order in Council. He did remember, however, giving instructions to the Secretary of the Department to inform Mr. MACDOUGALL that his services in the Scandinavian countries could be no longer required.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that that lettter had not been yet discovered. When he (Mr. MACKENZIE) ascertained that Mr. MACDOUGALL was engaged as agent in the Scandinavian countries, and was spending his time almost wholly in London, he thought another agent in London was unnecessary. As Mr. MACDOUGALL was in the service of the late Government when it resigned, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) did not think it fair that he should be dismissed without a moment's notice, and he was, therefore, informed that his services would not be required after 15th April. Mr. MACDOUGALL was not only appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite as Emigration Agent, but at that very time he was supposed to be working in Scandinavia. He was also the agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and received $400 for that service before he left the country, and he had a claim before the Government now for £500 sterling for his services up to the time he left England. The Leader of the Opposition took the somewhat remarkable ground that it was quite proper for a servant of the Government even to appear on a public platform as a partisan of the Government, but it was ex ceedingly improper in Mr. JENKINS who must be admitted to be a servant, ever to insinuate afterwards in favor of the Administration. He left hon. gentlemen opposite to reconcile their statements if they could ; and in the meantime he had merely to say he had no knowledge of the speech which had been read, being a speech delivered by Mr. JENKINS, or whether the report was a correct one of the speech. If there was anything improper in any speech delivered by any agent of the Goverment it would be the duty of the Government of course to deal with the matter ; but he (Mr. MACKENZIE) was not to assume an idle, newspaper report as conveying a correct statement of what a gentleman said. But the remarks were made by hon. gentlemen opposite in the present instance as a means of attack on the Government.

Hon. Mr. POPE said there was now a question of veracity between himself and the hon., the Premier; and he repeated his statement—that before he left the Government he instructed the Secretary of the Department to notify Mr. MACDOUGALL that the season had passed in which his services were of any further use in the Scandinavian countries.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT admitted the correctness of the statement of the hon. member for Compton, that the number of immigrants arriving in Canada had decreased during the past year ; but he thought it would be well if the House would bear in mind the cause of the decrease. Every one knew that during the past eighteen months the state of affairs in the United States had been such that for the first time in their history there had been something like a counter current back to Europe, and no doubt that had materially affected the immigration to Canada. It was very difficult to induce the people of Europe to distinguish between Canada and the United States—they were both known as America, and if they knew there was prostration in trade on the South side of the line, it was difficult to have a fair field in Canada. Having spent a considerable time in London, I had a favorable opportunity of watching Mr. JENKINS' mode of doing business in his capacity as our chief Emigration Agent, and he displayed much zeal and ability. He thought Mr. JENKINS possessing that capacity, would render very considerable service to the country.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL rose to offer a personal explanation in reference to the remarks of the hon., the First Minister. He denied the assertion that Mr. JENKINS' remarks were put forward as affording ground for an attack on the Government. The tenor of his remarks would show that such was not his intention, and he fully disclaimed any such intention.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I referred to the hon. gentleman's leader more than to himself.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he was responsible to his constituents for the sentiment he uttered, and he had no leader in the House. He would offer an explanation in respect to the payment made to Mr. MACDOUGALL before he left this country for special services in connection with the Marine and Fisheries Department. When the Treaty of Washington was completed as far as regarded its preliminaries, it became necessary for the Government of Canada to prepare to meet the case which the Government then hoped was likely to be heard at an early day, to fix the compensation to be paid to Canada in refund to the Fisheries. It was expected that the Fishery Commission, which was to be held in Halifax, would have been appointed, and that the Government of Canada would have at once directed its attention to making up a case to be presented to that Commission. The Government of which he was a member felt it to be their duty to apply to Downing Street for the necessary correspondence, documents and charts relating to our rights to the fisheries which dated from 1782. When they applied to the Colonial office for that information, they were informed that the office was quite prepared to give the Dominion Government any information or document it possessed, but as it was not known what documents would be required the Dominion Government should employ some suitable person to examine the archives and obtain papers that were desirable and important. For some time he was in doubt as to whom he could get to perform the duty. Mr. WM. MACDOUGALL was going over to the Scandinavian provinces on emigration matters, and he felt that that gentleman's intimate knowledge of the history of this country and his great ability ren dered him the very best man that could be obtained to secure the information he desired. With no little reluctance Mr. MACDOUGALL consented to perform the duty, and for his services in that respect the Government advanced him $400. Was that too much to pay for securing information that might be worth thousands of dollars to us when the consideration of the fishery question came up? If Mr. MACDOUGALL was on a salary at that time, he (Mr. MITCHELL) did not know it, and if he had known it, it would have made no difference. He was justified in what he did, and he believed the country would justify him in it. As to the extent of the information that Mr. MACDOUGALL secured, he was not prepared to say, but his successor ought now to be in possession of all the information, and if he was not it was his own fault.

Mr. MILLS observed that there was an extraordinary discrepancy between the statements made by the hon. members for Compton and Northumberland. The member for Compton said it was never contemplated by the Government that Mr. MACDOUGALL should spend his time in London, but should go to the Scandinavian counties. On the other hand, the member for Northumberland said he expected that Mr. MACDOUGALL would spend his time in London, and therefore he employed him to search the public records there.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I did not say he was going to spend his time in London. I said he was going to the other side of the Atlantic.

Mr. MILLS asked how he was going to make these laborious researches if he was to go direct to Scandinavia to perform the duties of emigration agent there? His hon. friend opposite had received new light since he became an independent member of this House. Under the late Administration there was an emigration agent in Ireland—Mr. MOYLAN—who took a very active part in the politics of Great Britain, and who wrote a very extraordinary and, as some think, a somewhat impertinent letter to Mr. GLADSTONE about public affairs. That matter was brought before this House, and the then Government, of which the hon. gentleman was a member, had no objection to make to such conduct, but, on the contrary, they thought Mr. MOYLAN had acted quite properly. According to the hon. gentleman, what was quite right for Mr. MOYLAN to say with regard to public affairs in Great Britain was altogether improper for Mr. JENKINS to say with regard to affairs in Canada. For his (Mr. MILLS') part, he did not consider it necessary that an emigration agent should be deprived of the right to think and speak on public affairs, and he saw nothing out of the way in the speech of Mr. JENKINS. What this House and the Government had to consider was whether he discharged his duties to this country efficiently, and of that there was very little doubt. Holding the political views he did, Mr. JENKINS was all the better able to discharge the duties of emigration agent, because they brought the emigrating classes more closely into sympathy with him and he with them. Who were the men that had led immigration into Canada during the last five years? Mr. ARCH, Mr. TAYLOR, and Mr. O'LEARY, men who held political views similar to those held by Mr. JENKINS, and who sympathized with the dissatisfied portions of the people, who were the very classes that were most disposed to emigrate.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had never approved, and he would be very sorry to approve, of the conduct of Mr. MOYLAN in writing that very extraordinary letter to Mr. GLADSTONE.

Item concurred in.

THE MENONITE LOAN.

On the next item, Menonite Loan, $100,000,

Mr. MASSON said, when this question was before the committee, he had stated that he was not at all disposed to object to the loan because he knew himself that the Menonites were a good class of emigrants, whose presence in our country would add to its wealth and prosperity. However, he was not such an enthusiast on this matter as some hon. gentlemen, and he did not think they were any superior to many other classes of emigrants, and should not receive any greater advantages than any other class that was prepared to fulfil the same conditions. He had stated then that he thought it would be more advantageous to this country to strive to recall from the neighboring country those numerous children of Canada who had left our soil, but who were now disposed to return. The Premier on that occasion, stated that there were some difficulties in the way of doing this, but that the matter would receive consideration. Before making any further remarks, he would ask the Premier whether it was his intention to take means to encourage the return of Canadians from the United States similar to these it was proposed to take to promote the immigration of the Menonites.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I can hardly add anything to what I said the other evening. I quite sympathize with the hon. gentleman's desire to secure the return, if possible, of those Canadians who had gone to the United States, but as I stated then there are peculiar difficulties to contend with in doing that. The Government will endeavor to devise some plan if they can by which that may be accomplished to some extent. I am not prepared at present to say how it can be accomplished.

Mr. MASSON observed that the money now being voted was for the year ending 30th June, 1876, and he had hoped that the Premier would have been able to have made such a statement of his intentions as would have obviated the necessity of asking the House to say whether so large a grant should be given to the Menonites without some guarantee being given that before July, 1876, something would be done to promote the return to Canada of our own fellow-countrymen. But, of course, if the hon. gentleman said he could not do so, he (Mr. MASSON) would be obliged to divide the House.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the object of his hon. friend from Terrebone was one with which they must all sympathize. But the distinction between the case of the Menonites and the case referred to by the hon. gentleman was this ; that whereas the Menonites came before the Government with a distinct proposition, he was not aware that there was any distinct practical proposition before the Government upon which they could invite the House to take any action with respect to the re-immigration of our own people into this country. If the hon. member for Terrebonne was in a position to present to the Government a tangible, practical proposition for the promotion of the return of any considerable number of our fellow-countrymen, he (Mr. HOLTON) for one would be prepared to second his efforts in urging such a proposition upon the favorable consideration of the Government. We had a practical plan as respects the Menonites, but he was not aware that we had any such plan as respects our own countrymen in the United States,

Mr. MASSON said he had already stated that he had such information as would justify him in saying that applications had been made to the Government on behalf of Canadians in the United States wishing to return and that no proper answer had been given. He had asked the Minister of Public Works if townships had not been reserved in Manitoba for certain colonies of immigrants. and he had replied that he thought such was the case but that the scheme had been a complete failure. To a certain extent that statement was true.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I said it was a comparative failure.

Mr. MASSON—The first colony was called the Emerson Colony, and it had not been able to comply entirely with the Order in Council which had been passed to enable them to have a township reserved for them. There was another effort made to establish a colony called the Rolestan Colony, but that he knew was a complete failure. But still the Government were not discouraged by these failures for at the present moment negotiations are going on with a Mr. SHAW to bring out a number of European immigrants, and to have a certain number of townships set apart for them. Last fall when he (Mr. MASSON) was in Manitoba a gentleman named Mr. MONTY came over from the United States to examine the territory and see whether it would not be possible to throw into Manitoba a current of French immigration from the United States. He returned to his home at Fall River and made a report to the Canadian Colonization Company of that city, speaking in glowing terms of Manitoba and of its advantages to immigrants. In consequence of that the Colonization Society of Manitoba wrote to the Government here, applying for the same advantages which the Government had granted to other colonies, namely ; the reservation of a certain number of townships. Application was also made for a bonus to assist Canadians who desired to come to Manitoba from the United States to do so. That application was made in October last, and he believed that up to the present time no answer had been received which could be considered as either an acceptance or a refusal of their proposal. The Minister of Public Works knew that there was an intense desire among the people of the Province of Quebec to assist their compatriots in the United States to return, and among the French Canadians in the United States there was a strong desire to come back to this country. The Legislature of Quebec, supported by public opinion, had lately passed resolutions offering great inducements for that class of people to return. Of course the Government of the Dominion could not particularly and specially encourage immigration to Quebec, but they had full charge over immigration to Manitoba and the North-West. It was our duty to do our utmost in favor of the repatriation of Canadians, more especially as the very fact of a large number of Canadians abandoning their own country and living in the United States was calculated to induce emigrants from Europe to go to the United States in preference to Canada. He did not wish in the least degree to embarrass the Government, but in the interests of this country as well as of his compatriots in the United States, he felt bound to urge this matter upon the Government. He concluded by moving that the following words be added to the resolution :

" And that out of the sum to be set apart for the benefit of the Menonites a proportionate sum be assigned towards inducing Canadians residing in the United States to settle in Manitoba or the North-West Territory."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — That is not an appropriation recommended by the GOVERNOR GENERAL, and therefore is out of order.

The amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. MASSON said he had offered that amendment to show that he was quite willing that this grant of $100,000 should be voted, provided the same advantages were given to Canadians in the United States, as it was proposed to give to the Menonites. As it had been ruled out of order, he would move the following amendment :

" That the resolution be not concurred in, but that it be resolved that the sum of $100,000 for a Menonite loan be reduced to $50,000."

Mr. D. A. SMITH (Selkirk) said he cordially sympathized with the proposal to encourage the immigration of the Menonites to Manitoba, and he would be very sorry to see the amount reduced. He proceeded to speak in high terms of the Menonites as a very valuable class of immigrants. Had the Government thought proper to ask for $150,000 instead of $100,000 he would have voted for it. for it would be money well spent even though not a dollar of it was directly repaid. The same amount of money could not be spent more profitably in any other way. While he said this he would also say that he would be very glad to see every possible encouragement given to the return of Canadians to our country, and he trusted the Government would see their way to assist them. He hoped the hon. member for Terrebonne would withdraw his amendment, for he must know that not only the Government but every member of the House were anxious to extend a helping hand to our countrymen in the United States who desired to return to this country.

Mr. BLAKE trusted that his hon. friend from Terrebonne would not press this motion. The hon. gentleman he contended had not submitted any argument in support of his proposition, and did not even conjecture by what arguments it ought to be supported. He (Mr. BLAKE) had not heard one complaint against the grant, and the principle once admitted it could not be said that the amount was inordinate. If there were any good reasons for the reduction proposed by his hon. friend, the same reasons would apply to the item being struck from the estimates. He assured the hon. gentleman that he would by no means advance the cause he had at heart by this proposition. Having in view the fact that a scheme of some description had been laid before the Government, and admitting that there would be most serious difficulties in the way of its organization, he considered that it might be expedient to provide a sum which would be available, if any practicable scheme was submitted. He thought the Government might propose a moderate amount in the supplementary estimates to be dealt with in the way suggested, as they might think fit, but while making this suggestion to his hon. friend the First Minister, he would also advise the hon.

gentleman that if he insisted upon his amendment the House would of course reject it.

Mr. YOUNG said the Menonites of Waterloo had taken a deep interest in the immigration to this country from South Russia and had suggested this loan. He thought, therefore, that the hon. member for Terrebonne should withdraw this motion, for he considered in allowing it to stand he was taking a most ungracious position. The hon. member, too, had advocated that it should be given to French Canadians in the United States, to induce them to return, but because he could not get what he wanted, at once, he appeared to be unwilling to permit any advantages being given to others. He (Mr. YOUNG) would be glad of any practicable scheme for bringing back, not only the French Canadians, but Canadians from all parts of Canada who had emigrated to the United States, and having them settled in their own country again. He believed there were about half a million on the other side of the line, and their return was a very desirable thing, but he did not regard their position as being the same as that of persons in foreign countries, who desired to come here. The Menonites, for example, had to come a very great distance, and the chances were that when they did come they would remain. Their circumstances were such that a little assistance was of very great importance to them, and the grant which the Government proposed in the estimate was, he considered, as well spent as money possibly could be. If there were Canadians in the United States, they were there by choice, and the distance between here and there and the cost of returning was so small, that he could scarcely think that any large amount of money should be necessary to induce them to return. If they had any desire to come the expense need not stand in their way. So far as land was concerned, he considered they should be placed in just as favorable a position as any class of immigrants that come to the country. He trusted the hon. member for Terrebonne would see that his position in opposing this loan was quite inconsistent with the proposition he made that aid should be given to the French Canadians in the United States in order to induce them to return. He was acting, he was sorry to see, somewhat after the fashion of what was called in English, "the dog in the manger," and he (Mr. YOUNG) regretted that the hon. member, who was credited—and, he believed, justly credited—with the possession of so much chivalry, should leave his motives in this matter open to question. The Menonites in Waterloo would be very much disappointed if this vote were not carried. As his hon. friend from Selkirk had said, the money would be well spent if never a dollar of it were returned. There was no question, however, that every cent of it would be returned. The Menonites in Waterloo and elsewhere who had become personally responsible for the re-payment of this loan, were some of them the wealthiest people in the county, and the Government and the country might depend upon it that they would see the terms of the loan were regularly carried out. He hoped, under the circumstances, that the hon. member would not persist in his motion.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD denied the assertion that the Government were only prepared to encourage colonization from Europe, and, in proof of his statement, called attention to the fact that two of the colonies established in Manitoba during the last year were from the United States. Emerson colony (started by FAIRBANKS and KEARNEY) was one of the very character advocated by the hon. member, and, although every inducement had been held out to men of all nationalities, in the way of reserving land, the number who took advantage of it was comparatively small, and he believed there were no French Canadians amongst those who did. He reminded the hon. gentleman that this system of settling in Canada was as open to them as it was to anybody else, and that the reservations set apart were the best in the Province of Manitoba. The Emerson Colony was right at the entrance of the Province, and the Pembina Railway passed through it. However, he was sorry to see that even under these most favorable circumstances FAIRBANKS and KEARNEY had been unable to make up their compliment of immigrants within the time specified in the terms under which the reservation was made. There were two schemes for bringing in settlers on this system, neither of which had been at all successful, and, indeed, the people of the North-West looked upon the system of reservation as one of the greatest objections to the administration of their land by the Dominion Government. It meant frequently simply the locking up of a large amount of land in the hands of a few men. The Government were now becoming more careful in regard to that subject, and refused to make reservations in favor of anybody, unless they were assured not only of their bona fide intention, but of their ability to make a settlement within a reasonable period. It would be the policy of the Government in regard to this land to do the most ample justice to all parties concerned.

It being 6 o'clock, the House rose for recess.

After Recess.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were read a second time.

Mr. CURRIER—To incorporate the Lower Ottawa Boom Company.

Mr. BOWELL—To incorporate the Intelligencer Printing and Publishing Company.

Mr. BABY—To incorporate the Industrial Life Insurance Company.

Mr. FRECHETTE—To incorporate La Banque St. Jean Baptiste.

Mr. BABY—To incorporate the Pictou Coal and Iron Company.

Mr. MURRAY—To incorporate the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company.

THE MENONITE LOAN.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD in resuming the debate, referred to another reservation of nearly two townships made by the late Government at the instance of the German Immigration Society of Montreal. Last year not a single immigrant under the auspices of that Society entered upon the reservation. Last spring correspondence was opened with the Society again, and the Secretary replied that they expected a number of immigrants from Europe, and that in fact he believed they were in the way. However, not a single immigrant entered upon the reservation last summer. Of all the attempts which had been made at colonization the Menonite colony was the only one that had been successful. A large number of them had arrived and settled on their lands last summer. He went up to Manitoba with a number of them, and immediately on their arrival they were off to their lands, and the next week some of them were back to Winnipeg selling butter. In view of the failure of previous schemes the Government felt they must be very careful about making any further reservations of land, for these reservations if not speedily taken up, remained a barrier to the settlement and development of the country. With reference to the case referred to by the hon. member for Terrebonne, he was not aware that any practical scheme had been proposed. Certainly the Government did not desire to exclude any class, and were prepared to consider any practicable scheme for the settlement of Manitoba and the North-West with Canadians from the United States as well as European and other emigrants.

Mr. TROW said he could testify to the truth of the statements of the Minister of the Interior with reference to the total failure of those companies organized to colonize a portion of Manitoba. He considered the EMERSON scheme was a perfect fraud on the community. He himself had been offered land in that reservation at the rate of $75 for one-eighth of an acre, merely taking Mr. EMERSON'S writing that when he obtained the title to the properity he would transfer it. Numerous lots were sold on these conditions. That reservation contained four townships of the best lands in the Province. He noticed that Mr. ROLESTAN took credit for settling upwards of two hundred immigrants. He met that gentleman on the prairie with about seven or eight families, and he told him (Mr.T.) that it was impossible for him to bring out more, as he had no preparation made to keep them over winter. There was no analogy between the emigrants that the hon. member for Terrebonne referred to and the Menonites. The former class had left this country of their own accord, and it did not involve a great expense for them to come back, and he was happy to say that some 14,000 had returned during the past year. On the other hand the Menonites were coming a great distance, and if once settled they would be likely to remain, and they were first-class settlers. He adverted to the position of the Menonites in Europe, and to the fact that wherever they went they were the best settlers a country could have. Some thirteen hundred of them had immigrated to Manitoba during the past year. He had the pleasure of meeting a good many of them, and they were perfectly satisfied with the country and with their condition. He doubted whether Canadians from the United States, if settled on the same lands, would be equally content. He hoped the Government would take steps to prevent land monopolies in Manitoba, which was the greatest curse that could afflict that country. There were two sections in each township reserved for the Hudson Bay Company. He was persuaded it would have been much better had that company's claim been purchased outright instead of reserving to them large portions of the land, which retarded settlement. At present some settlers in coming to Winnipeg had to travel through these unoccupied sections held by the Hudson Bay Company. With reference to the proposed loan to the Menonites he was as certain as he was of anything that it would all be repaid principal and interest, for their word was as good as their bond, and moreover the Government were offered the very best security—the security of men in the County of Waterloo worth each from $50,000 to $60,000. He was not opposed to a grant being given to promote the return to this country of Canadians in the United States, for he believed that the Government could not spend money to better advantage than in encouraging immigration.

Mr. ROCHESTER was very much pleased to see this sum in the estimates to aid the Menonites to come to this country, for he believed they were an excellent class of immigrants. They were agriculturalists and that was the class Manitoba required, and the French Canadians who went to the United States were not generally speaking agriculturalists, but most of them were engaged in manufacturing pursuits. However, he did not mean to say that they were not a desirable class of people to have in this country, and he would be glad if the Government could devise some practical plan to induce them to return. There were, however, serious difficulties in the way of granting them public money, because there would be no guarantee that they would remain in this country. He thought some further explanations should be given with respect to the lands that were said by the Minister of the Interior to be locked up, because it was very desirable to have all the lands in Manitoba open to the choice of settlers.

Mr. PLUMB, while not objecting to the loan to the Menonites, expressed his surprise that the land monopolies referred to by gentlemen opposite should be allowed to exist.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) said he was somewhat surprised to notice the amendment submitted by the member for Terrebonne. He had thought, judging from the tone of the press, which supported the political views represented on the Opposition side of the House, that the party was still a party of Union and Progress; but here was a resolution of the Government asking for an appropriation of $100,000 for immigration purposes, and yet from the members on the opposite side of the House, who were supposed to belong to the party of Progress, a retrogressive amendment was moved, asking the House to vote only $50,000 for purposes of that kind. As he understood the resources and needs of this country, he was thoroughly convinced there was no policy the Government could adopt which would prove more advantageous to this country, and more calculated to develop its resources, and more on which the progress and prosperity of the Dominion more depends than on a liberal, progressive immigration policy. If we look at the history of the United States, a country that has given us a good example in respect to this matter, we found they had settled their land, developed their resources and become a powerful nation, very much because they were liberal in respect to immigration matters. We were told by statisticians that, if the United States had suspended their immigration policy as far back as 1830, their present population, instead of being 40,000,000 would be something like 14,000,000. If we, possessing such large undeveloped resources, with such fertile tracts of land in the North-West, stated by the member for South Perth at 2,700,000 square miles, with Manitoba, yet unsettled, embracing 9,000,000 acres,—wished to occupy these wild lands, we must not adopt the policy of the member for Terrebonne, but we must rather urge, even this present Government, that is disposed to be liberal in matters of that kind, to increase their grants for immigration purposes, and, if possible, secure a larger proportion of immigration to this country than has been obtained in years gone by. He wished to call attention to this feature of the question, viz., that the difficulties in obtaining immigrants are greater now than they were some years ago. The social condition of the people in the old countries from which the immigrants come, has improved; the agricultural classes are more comfortable, the cities are not so overcrowded, and wages are high: hence the necessity of a more liberal policy than that adopted some years ago, if we wish to secure a fair share of immigration to Canada. This was abundantly shown by the difficulties experienced in attracting immigrants to this country at the present time. The South American Republics, New Zealand, and the Australian colonies were offering bonuses to immigrants in order to induce them to take ship for those countries, and the Governments of Ontario and Quebec offered similar bonuses; and so the Government of the Dominion could not be less progressive and enterprising than the Governments of those Provinces. This view was further sustained when we considered the results of the immigration to the United States, with all the advantages they offered. The number of immigrants that arrived at New York last year was only 147,620, while in the year previous, 1873, the number reached 268,288, so that there had been a falling off in one year of 120,000, simply for the reason he had given. Now, the Government proposed a tangible and very satisfactory system of immigration. They proposed appropriating a specific sum for a specific purpose, which was sure to accomplish the end for which it was designed. Under the ordinary system the expenditure for immigration purposes might or might not succeed. We send agents out, who, by disseminating information, might succeed in sending immigrants into Canada, but by this system the House would be sure, from information they had obtained, to accomplish the object for which it was appropriated. From the views expressed by the hon. members for South Waterloo and South Perth, there was no doubt that the loan would be fully repaid. But suppose it was not repaid, it would be well to reduce the matter to an arithmetical calculation. In loaning $100,000 for this purpose the annual interest which would be a loss to the country if the loan were not repaid would amount to $5,000. Let the House now observe what the country would realize from that immigration. Suppose 900 families came to this country, comprising 4,000 individuals. Each individual pays to the revenue of the country an average of $6, so that, by settling 4,000 individuals in Manitoba, we would realize $24,000 of annual revenue, which would be placed against a loss for interest on the loan of $5,000. That reduced the matter to figures, and it appeared clear that the proposed loan would be a good investment to the country. He wished to make this general remark in regard to immigration —he trusted so long as this Government asked him to support them in any measures they might bring before the House, he hoped they always would be prepared to adopt liberal measures in the matter of immigration, and by a prudent expenditure of our public money to see that we obtained as settlers upon our Canadian soil the best of the surplus population of the Old World. There was an abundance of land in Manitoba open for settlement, and before many years he trusted that country would be as well settled as any part of Ontario. The Government were entitled to the support of the House in submitting the resolutions which had been placed on the table.

Mr. DYMOND said the hon. member for South Perth was perfectly correct when he alluded to the large German emigration to Pennsylvania, under the auspices of WILLIAM PENN, as being to a considerable extent analogous to that which we are now welcoming to Manitoba. Long before PENN settled in Pennsylvania he visited Germany on two or three occasions, and there inspired with his own desire to found a free colony in the New World a large number of the members of pious German sects who followed him to America, and it was those very men who laid in Pennsylvania the foundation of that great movement against human slavery which resulted in the overthrow of that institution in our own day. He had no doubt that the same love of liberty and peace characterized the Menonites in Manitoba that was so distinguishing a feature of those who took shelter under the broad brim of WILLIAM PENN. He did not, however, rise to say much with reference to the Menonites, but to offer a few general observations on the position of the emigration question at this time, and to say that he considered that no wiser step could have been taken by the Government than to place the management of the emigration movement in Great Britain in charge of a gentleman of such large intelligence and high social position as our present agent, Mr. JENKINS. That gentleman was thoroughly in accord with the great laboring classes at home, which was the first essential of any representative of this country in Great Britain. If, seven or eight years ago Canada had been represented in Great Britain by a gentleman of Mr. JENKINS' capacity we would not now be comparing 39,000 with 50.000 immigrants, but would have probably been welcoming 100,000 souls to our shores annually. No man could estimate more highly than he (Mr. DYMOND) did the honest desire to serve his country exhibited by the hon. member for Compton. When in office that hon. gentleman was kind enough to converse with him on several occasions as one who was acquainted with public opinion in the Old Country, with a view of obtaining from him (Mr. DYMOND) any suggestion on the subject of emigration. He would venture to say that if that hon. gentleman had been supported when he first entered office, as his successor had been, the results would have been far more satisfactory to himself. During the first two or three years after Confederation there were great opportunities of adding to our population from the people of the Old Country. They all remembered the period of distress that prevailed in 1866. Numerous benevolent societies sprung into existence at that epoch, and men were assisted by thousands to our colonies; but that was to a very large extent an indiscriminate emigration, composed of those who, if not actually of the pauper class, were but a few degrees removed from it—they were the poor struggling classes of the cities. Now, if Canada had possessed in the Mother Country a gentleman—not merely such an officer as Mr. DIXON, who was an honorable and industrious man, but whose whole ideas were limited to his office—but a man with something like plenary authority to make arrangements in all directions for the promotion of emigration, then we would have had far more to boast of than we have to-day. It would be remembered by the hon. member for Compton and his friends, that about the time he entered office there appeared in a paper, supporting the late Government—the Montreal Gazette—a most scathing criticism upon the inertness and mismanagement of the Immigration Department. He was aware that the hon. gentleman, the late Minister of Agriculture, effected considerable reforms, and that emigration received from that moment a certain stimulus. But the credit of that was not entirely due to the hon. gentleman. A new government, with broad and enlightened views, had entered into power in Ontario; from that moment it was certain that a liberal emigration policy would be pursued by the Upper Province, and it was necessary therefore, if the Government at Ottawa would not lag behind, that they should offer the right hand to the Ontario Administration and assist them in carrying out an enlightened immigration policy in the interest of the whole Dominion. With respect to Mr. JENKINS; he had been attacked on account of certain speeches he had made. If we could induce the people of Great Britain to think about Canada, three-fourths of the work would be done. Six or seven years ago, when he (Mr. DYMOND) was in England, Canada was almost a sealed book to the great mass of the people. The most absurd stories were told about this country, and even educated men had the most extraordinary impressions concerning it. He remembered a person of very considerable education who expressed the opinion respecting gentlemen who had been in the country twenty-five years, that he was probably by that time quite equal to conversing in the Indian language. But Mr. JENKINS moving from city to city, not as had been incorrectly suggested during the time he was required in the London office but during the winter months when there was little doing in emigration matters at the metropolis, gathered together the men of Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham and the great towns, and his speeches being reported through a daily press that had an aggregate circulation probably of from 500,000 to 600,000 copies per day, we could not exaggerate the benefit which those speeches might confer on Canada. An important speech delivered some time ago in Toronto, by HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL had been copied into all the newspapers in England, that too was the speech of a man of intellect and education whose words were listened to with respect not merely because they were eloquent, but because they described what people wanted to know, the social and political condition of Canada. It was not simply by the labouring classes, but also by the aid of those who called themselves the upper classes in England that we were to make Canada known on the other side and obtain the co-operation of the British people. With respect to colonization schemes and the various proposals to bring out colonies to Manitoba, he deemed it to be of the utmost importance that our representative should possess judgment and ability, and occupy a sufficiently high position in the country to influence in the right direction proposals of that kind. There was nothing about which men were more Quixotic, nothing in which men were more likely to fail, than in conducting emigration schemes. The reason why the Menonite colonies had been successful was to be found in the fact that the people were bound together by religious and social ties, and stood shoulder to shoulder in every difficulty. If the Government loaned $100,000 to the Menonites of Manitoba, the whole community wes pledged morally to repay it. If the hon. member for Terrebonne could bring forward a colony composed of people who possessed the same qualities; who would afford the same evidence as that given by the Menonites, that the immigration would be successful, then every hon. member would be anxious to assist him. But he (Mr. DYMOND) did not believe that, except here and there under peculiarly able management and peculiarly favorable conditions, colonization schemes would succeed. Immigration must be made, to a large extent, a matter of voluntary effort. We must throw open the country to individual immigration. We must teach people what the conditions of success are, we had got to provide them with the necessary machinery for reaching their destination, and if we only kept Canada well before the outside world, and the people of Great Britain, no doubt, many of our errors and omissions of the past would be forgotten, and we would reap an ample reward for every dollar we expended.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON moved in amendment to the amendment: "That all the words after 'that' in the amendment be left out, and the following be inserted, 'The following words be added to the motion: But this House will cheerfully assent to any measure which may be proposed by the Government to encourage the settlement of native Canadians now living in the United States on the waste lands of the Dominion.'" He said there could be no objection on the part of the House to express its readiness to entertain favorably any proposition submitted by the Government, looking to the encouragement of the settlement of the waste lands of the Dominion by native Canadians now residents of the United States. He thought the proposition of the hon. member for Terrebonne to reduce the appropriation under discussion was an exceedingly illogical one. He could have understood the force of the argument that might be urged in favor of rejecting the vote. It was a novelty no doubt in our Legislature to advance money for such a purpose. The object, however, was admitted on all hands to be a praiseworthy and advantageous one, and therefore to reduce the appropriation sought by the Government, was illogical in the last degree. He had hoped that the member for Terrebonne, yielding to what appeared to be the sense of the House, would have withdrawn the motion on receiving an expression of the opinion of the Government of their readiness to consider the claims of the parties to whom the hon. member for Terrebonne referred; but as the hon. member did not see fit to do so, he, (Mr. HOLTON) submitted to the House that proposition, which he held to be infinitely superior to the amendment, because it left the appropriation now under consideration untouched.

Mr. PALMER thought the amount proposed to be loaned to the Menonites should be appropriated. The Government expended an excessive sum for Military purposes, and the Military camps had demoralized many of our young men.

Mr. MASSON said the Minister of the Interior, in discussing this question, had stated that the township system in the North West was a failure. Nevertheless the Government did not abandon it, and they were at present negotiating with a party to continue it.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the negotiations with Mr. SHANTZ were made last spring before they knew the result of the township system.

Mr. MASSON said he believed the Menonites should be encouraged to come to this country. He had attained the end he desired, and he complimented the hon. member for Chateauguay on having told the House that his (Mr. MASSON'S) position was the correct one. He would have no objection to vote for the motion.

M. TREMBLAY: Si l'on jette la vue en arrière, on se souvient que le député de St. Hyacinthe proposait à l'ancien Gouvernement de prendre les moyens pour arrêter l'émigration aux Etats-Unis, et le Gouvernement, composé des amis de l'Opposition, était sourd à sa voix et à la voix de tout le parti libéral. L'hon. Député de Terrebonne a fait allusion aux moyens que le Gouvernement de Québec a pris pour repatrier les Canadiens-Français. Je vois que l'organe de l'hon. Député de Terrebonne et de ses amis est opposé à ce projet, à ce point du moins qu'il ne croit pas à son succès. Je vais lire un passage du Nouveau-Monde qui prouve cet avancé, ce journal pensant évidemment que les Canadiens émigrés qui sont habitués à travailler dans les manufactures ne seront pas tentés de venir s'établir sur des terres en bois debout. Le Nouveau-Monde dit donc:—

"Bas-Canadiens nous-même, nous préfé-
"rerions naturellement que ce repatrie-
"ment se fit surtout dans la Province de
"Québec, d'autant plus que c'est elle qui
"a le plus souffert de l'émigration. Mais "nous savons qu'un certain nombre qui
"ne voudront pas entreprendre de défri-
"cher les terres en bois de bout offertes
"par le Gouvernement de Québec, seraient
"disposés à aller s'établir sur les terres en
"prairie du Manitoba, et ne pouvant les
"ramener directement dans notre provin"ce, nous préférerions encore de beaucoup
"les voir se diriger vers une partie de la
"Puissance, que de les voir rester sur le
"sol étranger des Etats-Unis."

Le passage que je viens de citer prouve qu'il n'est pas certain, dans l'opinion de l'organe même de l'Opposition, que le projet du Gouvernement de Québec réussisse. Je doute moi-même que les $50,000 accordés par le Gouvernement de Québec, pour les fins du repatriement, soient utilisées par les Canadiens des Etats-Unis. Je doute également que si le Gouvernement d'Ottawa joint ses efforts à ceux du Gouvernement de Québec, je doute qu'il puisse réussir dans son louable projet, et ce qui produit ce doute chez moi c'est que les Canadiens des Etats-Unis sont plutôt adonnés au travail indutriel, qu'au défrichement des terres et aux travaux de l'agriculture. Quant aux Mennonites, je ne puis qu'approuver le Gouvernement de leur donner l'encouragement nécessaire, parce que, venant à l'invitation et sur la recommandation des Mennonites qui habitent le pays, c'est une garantie que leur établissement dans Manitoba sera permanent. Je n'ai aucun doute du reste que les $100,000 seront remboursés, si je dois en croire les renseignements que j'ai eus sur les garanties offertes au Gouvernement et acceptées par lui.—Mais le Député de Terrebonne semble par sa motion, nourrir le dessein de dépeupler Manitoba. En cela, l'hon. Député de Terrebonne est malheureusement consistant dans la politique de destruction qu'il a suivie depuis plus d'un an à l'égard de la Province de Manitoba. Oui, je maintiens que la politique du Député de Terrebonne à l'égard du Manitoba est une politique de destruction. Le Député de Terrebonne était à peine rendu à Manitoba l'été dernier, que RIEL était mis hors la loi, LÉPINE poursuivi et condamné à mort et les populations de l'Ouest livrées à l'inquiétude et placées sur un volcan de dangers et de ressentiments. Et maintenant, poursuivant sa politique de destruction, le Député de Terrebonne voudrait dépeupler la Province qu'il prétend défendre et protéger! L'hon. membre pour Terrebonne veut me faire rappeler à l'ordre, je comprends pourquoi il n'aime pas à voir dévoiler sa politique perfide et trompeuse à l'égard de Manitoba. Mais je ne crains pas de le répéter: la politivue du Député de Terrebonne est une politique de destruction, car il a été encore plus loin, et il a même essayé d'une manière indirecte et directe, de priver le comté de Provencher d'un représentant dans cette Chambre. Il est donc évident que le Député de Terrebonne ne veut pas la prospérité de Manitoba, et que c'est dans cet esprit qu'il s'oppose aux bonnes intentions du gouvernement pour peupler Manitoba et y conduire un courant d'émigration canadienne-française, si la chose est possible.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Victoria) asked if there was any understanding with these Menonites by which they were to be treated differently from other settlers. He thought it would be a misfortune for us to expend the public money in bringing them to Canada if they were to be governed by separate laws. We had a long line of frontier which could only be protected by our people, and none of them should be exempted from military service in time of trouble and invasion. There was no doubt, though, that our great North-West should be settled. With reference to the re-patriation of Canadians who had gone to the United States, he believed the best way to get them back and to keep our own people at home was to amend our tariff. Through the importation of coal free of duty, the owners of the coal areas in Nova Scotia could not keep men in their mines. Instead of settling Manitoba with Menonites, he thought it would be better to send to the hills of Scotland and Ireland and bring out a hardy people who, in time of need, would help to fight the battles of the country. If the Government would amend the tariff so that our people would be enabled to live with us, instead of going to Washington to beg for a reciprocity treaty, they would meet the views of the country.

M. DESJARDINS: Je ne suis pas surpris que le Député de Charlevoix ait fournie une nouvelle preuve que ses assertions sont quelquefois plutôt supportées par son imagination que par les faits. Quant à la proposition du député de Chateauguay, provoquée par l'amendement à la motion ministérielle, je crois que nous devons être satisfaits si nous pouvons faire reconnaître par cette honorable Chambre, le grand et important principe que ceux de nos concitoyens qui ont émigré à l'étranger, parce que dans un certain temps il pouvait y avoir des raisons qui les engageassent à s'éloigner du pays, ont droit aux mêmes termes et aux mêmes priviléges que ceux qui ont été accordés ou qui seront accordés aux émigrés des pays européens. Il est évident que nous aurons plus d'avantages à ramener au pays ceux qui sont habitués à nos lois, à nos institutions, à nos mœurs, et qui sont désireux de venir reprendre leur place au foyer de la patrie, qu'à payer de larges sommes à des étrangers qui ont des habitudes, des lois et des coutumes différentes et même contraires aux nôtres. Sans vouloir dénier les qualités des Mennonites, je trouve cependant qu'ils ont des prétentions assez singulières pour provoquer un examen de quelques-unes des conditions de leur marché avec le gouvernement. Si un groupe aussi considérable d'émigrants désire l'aide de notre gouvernement, il semble bien juste qu'il supporte toutes les charges que subissent ceux qui n'obtiennent pas de tels priviléges ou des priviléges équivalents. Est-ce que quand on veut devenir citoyen de notre pays, on ne doive pas être prêt à le défendre s'il est attaqué? Je ne comprends pas que le gouvernement encourage d'un côté l'organisation militaire et d'un autre côté l'immigration de gens dispensés du service militaire, excepté qu'on veuille faire monter la garde autour des établissements Mennonites et les protéger dans les cas de danger. Je crois que l'encouragement accordé par le gouvernement est un peu hazardé et qu'il ne convient guère de nous demander de l'argent pour ces gens, et, de plus, de les défendre au besoin. En résumé, j'espère que la position prise par le député de Chateauguay et qui je n'ai aucun doute, sera appuyée par la Chambre, engagera le gouvernement à seconder le mouvement de repatriement de nos compatriotes émigrés aux Etats-Unis. J'ai entendu exprimer des doutes sur le caractère sérieux et efficace du mouvement de repatriement aux Etats-Unis. Je crois au contraire que ce mouvement s'accentue de plus en plus et qu'à mesure que le gouvernement local et le gouvernement fédéral offriront des avantages et des considérations suffisantes à nos compatriotes des Etats-Unis, on les verra revenir en grand nombre au pays. Je n'en veux pour preuve que le mouvement qui s'est fait dans la Province de Québec depuis le mois de juin dernier. Mais on objecte que les Canadiens des Etats-Unis sont plutôt qualifiés pour le travail agricole. Cela est vrai jusqu'à un certain point des Canadiens habitant les états de l'Est. Mais dans les états de l'Ouest, il y a un nombreux groupe de Canadiens-français qui n'ont jamais suivi d'autre carrière que celle de l'agriculture et qui sont très désireux, si je suis bien informé, de s'établir sur des terres au Manitoba. D'ailleurs, dans les Etats de l'Est même, l'immigration venue au Canada s'est recruté pour le plus grand nombre de nos compatriotes de la campagne qui lorsqu'ils habitaient ce pays, se livraient aux travaux de l'agriculture, et on a vu plusieurs canadiens revenus au pays, se livrer de nouveau à la culture du sol et montrer qu'ils n'avaient pas oublié leur premier métier. En terminant je soumets de nouveau à cette honorable Chambre l'à-propos d'adopter la motion du député de Chateauguay, qui devra décider le gouvernement à encourager nos compatriotes des Etats-Unis à revenir prendre leur place sur un sol qu'ils ont été les premiers à défricher.

Mr. FARROW said there was an old saying that one volunteer was as good as a half dozen pressed men, and the same principle was true in immigration. He believed that one man coming voluntarily to our shores from any country, was worth three times half a dozen paid immigrants. Not that he (Mr. FARROW) declaimed against this amount in the estimates, but he liked the amendment to the amendment much better than the amendment itself. Our forefathers had to encounter numerous difficulties in crossing the Atlantic and settling in Canada. Now the difficulties were so few that it was easier to travel from Southern Russia to this country than it was for the early settlers in Canada to come from England and Ireland. The amendment did not go far enough. He would be willing to support a scheme that would re-patriate Canadians now living in the United States, and to keep them here when they return. We have an overplus farming population in Ontario. Many farmers could not procure land for their sons, who crowded into the towns. There were too many of them there, and they were starving. These men should be encouraged to settle in Manitoba, and why should not the amendment provide for this as well as for bringing back the recreant ones from the United States. Let us say we would pay their passage to the Red River country, and give them an opportunity to settle there. The hon. member for North York had asserted that seven years ago Canada was a sealed book so far as information concerning it in England was concerned. He (Mr. FARROW) was brought up in a rural district, and left the Mother Country twenty-five years ago; yet at that time he had a good knowledge of what Canada West was, and was aware that the education of the people here was higher than in the Old Land. Therefore it came with a very bad grace from the hon. member to represent Englishmen as such an ignorant people. The hon. member for West Middlesex had spoken about the United States policy of immigration as being a most liberal one, and that thousands were drawn to that country thereby. How did they get these people? By building railroads throughout the country, and railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific, opening up their territories and settling them. That was what the late Government proposed to do, and in anticipation of the opening up of the North-West by the Pacific Railroad 50,000 emigrants settled in the country in 1873. If the present Government had closely followed up the policy of their predecessors, instead of the 39,000 who came to the country last year, we would have had double that number. The sooner our country is opened up by a railroad the better for the Dominion, and we shall see a great influx of population from Europe to our great North-West. The falling off in the emigration to the United States last year was due to the depression which prevailed in that country. He was not against this item, but he wanted to know when it was going to be paid, to whom it was to be paid, and when it was to be re-paid. If these Menonites possessed such high moral characters, they should be imported as patterns, and $100,000 was a small appropriation for the purpose.

M. POULIOT: Je suis content que les messieues de l'autre côté soient satisfaits et je suis de l'avis qui domine maintenant des deux côtés de la Chambre, que l'immigration soit encouragée au Manitoba et qu'un aide supplémentaire devrait être voté dans ce sens. J'ai entendu dire que la difficulté consistait dans l'incertitude que les Canadiens resteraient au Canada ou la crainte qu'ils retourneraient aux Etats-Unis. Je n'ai aucune objection, M. l'ORATEUR, à ce qu'on prenne toute précaution à ce sujet; mais en même temps je prétends que ces précautions doivent être prises avec toute autre émigration. Car il arrive, M. l'ORATEUR, que l'émigration européenne, qui nous coûte si cher, passe à nos portes sans s'arrêter et ne fait le profit que des compagnies qui la transportent. La discussion de ce soir a eu l'effet de renforcer la position du gouvernement à ce sujet et de l'éclairer sur les désirs du peuple et de la Chambre, relativement à un autre point, qui est celui-ci : M. L'ORATEUR, cette Chambre et le pays sont évidemment en faveur d'une diminution des dépenses de la milice, et la réduction qu'ils demandent ils sont désireux de la voir appliquer à encourager l'immigration et la colonisation, et je n'ai aucun doute que le gouvernement viendra l'année prochaine proposer une réduction à cette Chambre des dépenses de la milice et une augmentation des subventions pour l'immigration et la colonisation. Le gouvernement a exigé une garantie pour les $100,000 qu'il a avancées, mais je crois bien qu'il ne la demandera pas, comme cela arrive généralement dans ces cas, et je ne demande pas que le gouvernement réclame jamais cette somme. Mais ce que je désire c'est qu'on ne l'applique pas à nourrir des cadets, à faire l'exercice dans les camps, mais à encourager l'immigration et la colonisation. Je crois que le gouvernement en encourageant l'émigration des Mennonites, a montré qu'il était un gouvernement pacifique, car on sait que cette population est tout-à-fait opposé à la guerre et se refuse au service militaire. Nous pouvons sans danger devenir Mennonite pour le quart-d'heure, et si le cas se présente, les Canadiens sauront faire leur devoir, comme en 1775 et en 1812. Je me résume, M. l'ORATEUR. 1o. Je désire qu'on encourage l'immigration canadienne au moins au même dégré que l'émigration Mennonite 2o. Je désire qu'on exige des garanties pour la résidence permanente des Canadiens qui en autant qu'on les exige des autres émigrations; 3o. Enfin, je suis d'avis que l'on diminue les dépenses militaires et qu'on augmente d'autant la subvention pour les fins d'immigration et de colonisation.

Mr. KERR feared we were in danger of under-estimating rather than of over-estimating the importance to this country of the great question of immigration. We have a magnificent country, but its magnificence can be greatly improved. It is not our broad lands nor our broad expanse of waters, nor our noble rivers simply that make a great country. These broad lands must be filled up with an industrious and a moral people. The present Government were entitled to the special support and thanks of the people of this country for the wise and liberal policy which they were about to inaugurate in the matter of immigration, and the House should not hesitate for a moment in cheerfully making this appropriation. No given sum of money could be better expended than for the purpose of bringing from the Old World a thrifty and hardy people to develop the resources of our country. He was glad that the Menonite experiment had thus far proved a success. He was glad to find that in their thrift and morality they resembled the Society of Friends, who were as thrifty a people as ever inhabited any country, and though they might be referred to occasionally in terms not quite as complimentary as they should be, he did not think it was any discredit to them to love peace rather than war. Though he would not go as far as the hon. member for South Ontario went the other day, he sympathized to a large extent with the wholesome sentiments that gentleman saw fit on that occasion to express. He did not believe it was necessary to expend an unmeasured sum annually in this country in keeping up a military establishment. He did not stop to enquire when this appropriation was to be paid or when it was to be re-paid. This House was not running any great risk in advancing $100,000 when they knew that there was undoubted security for its re-payment. He favored the re-patriation of Canadians who had left their native land for any lawful cause whatever. He would even welcome back the Americans to the protection of the Union Jack, believing that our institutions were better than theirs. He was sorry to hear it observed during the course of this debate that our Quebec agriculturalists were not considered to be as thrifty as those of the other Provinces. His impression, after travelling through Quebec was altogether different. He had seen farms in the highest state of cultivation, and he was assured by a gentleman from that Province that there were many instances where farmers on small patches of land supported families of from ten to fifteen children. This question of immigration should be discussed irrespective of creeds or nationalities, and while he held a seat in this House his aim would be to consider all public questions free from prejudices of race or party. The people of the North-West were looking most anxiously to the action of this Parliament on the policy under consideration, and they yearned for a large accession to their thrifty and law-abiding population. He was glad to find that the Government did not make a mistake in their policy of last year, and that they had decided upon taking another step in advance. The statement that Canada was a sealed book to a great portion of the European world might not be literally but it certainly was comparatively correct. It was surprising to find even among the more intelligent class in England itself, what an amount of ignorance existed with regard to the great resources and advantages which this country offers to settlers. Let us lose no opportunity to bring by every lawful means this country's advantages before the eyes of all intelligent Europeans. Then could we say in the words of the poet :—

" Our country, 'tis a glorious land
With broad arms stretched from shore to shore ;
The broad Pacific chafes her strand
She hears the dark Atlantic's roar.
And nurtured on her ample breast
How many a goodly prospect lies :
In nature's wildest grandeur dressed,
Enamelled with the richest dyes.
Great God ! we thank thee for this home,
This bounteous birth-land of the free ;
Where wanderers may find a home
And breathe the air of liberty.
Still may her flowers untrampled spring,
Her harvests wave, her cities rise ;
And yet, till time shall fold his wing,
Remain earth's loveliest Paradise."

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, in reply to Mr. FLESHER, explained that the Government proposed to take security from certain wealthy farmers for the re-payment of this sum advanced to the Menonites, so that, although it appeared in the estimates as an annual charge, the expenditure would be nothing more than the interest on this amount for three or four years. If we could get 35,000 souls for that, it would be an extremely profitable investment. These Menonite families would settle in Manitoba, and he did not think there was the slightest risk, after coming such a great distance with their families, that they would encounter the risk and expense of a second removal to a distant part of the United States, unless for a good cause indeed. It must be left to their own discretion to remain in the country or not, but from all the Government knew of these Menonites, and the peculiar circumstances under which they came to this country, the risk of losing them was very slight indeed.

Hon. Mr. POPE was sure the hon. member for Terrebonne would feel very much gratified with the result of his resolution. He was exceedingly gratified for many reasons. In the first place it brought out the hon. member for Chateauguay, a gentleman who, when he (Mr. POPE) proposed to ask this House for a sum for immigration said the bubble would burst and there would be an end of. The hon. member now placed a motion on the paper which showed that the bubble had not burst, and the altered tone of this House from what it was a few years ago would convince every one that the course he felt it his duty to pursue had succeeded. He would support the amendment of the hon. member for Chateauguay, for the same reason that he supported this proposal to advance a loan to the Menonites. It was important to bring the Menonites into our country, but it was no less important to bring back Canadians from the United States. The Government had no right to say at this time that the township system in the North-West had proved a failure. The ROLSTAN reservation was 150 miles west of Manitoba, and would form a nucleus for future settlement. The Finance Minister had stated that immigration showed a decrease last year in this country as in the United States, and for the same reason. He thought that was a mistake. Canada had shown no decline in prosperity, and there should have been an increased immigration in consequence of the troubles among the agricultural population of the Mother Country. There were other reasons, and, as far as he could learn, one of the principal was that the powerful agency of the steamship people, numbering some twelve hundred persons, had not been employed as it should have been. These agents were scattered throughout Europe, and by offering a small commission to them they could be employed to send emigrants to our shores.

Mr. PATERSON said this item involved a new departure in the legislation of this country—the principle of protection. He looked upon this as a matter of business, and he believed the management of the affairs of a nation should be conducted on business principles. The Government should extend no special privileges to any religious sect or creed, and he did not believe they intended to do anything of the kind; they merely treated with these people as a colony. Now, were they adopting a correct principle. Was it right to recognize that protection shall be extended to this colony in order to settle our country. He was happy to see that the Government believed that special advantages might be given to the people of this country in order to increase its prosperity and develop its resources. The country was paying a bonus of $25 per head for those they were bringing into the land, or rather were contributing the interest on that amount for three years. He believed the adoption of this principle would pay, and he heartily sustained the Government policy. He found no difficulty in supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Chateauguay. The same privileges should be extended to Canadians that were granted to the Menonites. For some years, at least, the country would be bound by this principle, and Parliament would have to appropriate money on the same terms to all comers. He would support the item with pleasure, and he congratulated the Government on having at last adopted the principle of protection, thus offering larger inducements than any other nation, to those who wished to settle in the country.

Mr. SINCLAIR observed that no immigration agent had been appointed for Prince Edward Island. In his judgment the grant was by no means too large; indeed it was not large enough. It was not merely that the Government had assurance that the money would be re-paid—and even if it was not paid the country would receive value for it—but if one hundred thousand immigrants were settled in the North-West it would obviate the necessity of keeping up at great expense the Mounted Police. It was a pity that either the amendment or the amendment to the amendment should have been moved, because it was perfectly unnecessary to say that they would all be glad to see our fellow-countrymen who were in the United States, whether they were French or English Canadians, come back to this country.

The amendment to the amendment was then put and declared carried.

Items 48 and 49 were concurred in without discussion.

On item, $50,000, to meet the probable amount required for pensions to veterans of the war of 1812,

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) congratulated the Government upon their determination to recognize the services of the veterans of 1812, who deserved well of the country. There were a number of these veterans in his own county, from some of whom he had received letters, and he now desired to learn how it was proposed that application for a share in this grant should be made and the time within which it must be made, and whether blank forms would be supplied.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said this matter had not yet been fully considered by the Government, and it was impossible that it could be considered for several weeks. The Government were getting a list of those who applied to the Imperial Government for pensions, when it was believed that the Canadian veterans of 1812 would receive their share along with the survivors in the regular army. His own personal view was that it would be necessary that boards should be appointed in the various military districts composed of militia officers resident therein, whose duty would be to collect proofs that the applicants were really entitled to a pension and to report the same to Government. His hon. friend might rest assured, however, that the whole subject would receive the early and best attention of the Government.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) said the Government should take the matter up at once, for it was unnecessary to remind them that nearly all the survivors of 1812 were over 80 years of age, and the time within which their services could be recognized in the way proposed, was necessarily very limited, as these veterans were passing away each year. He wished to know whether it was intended that this should be an annual grant.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE stated that the grant would be continued annually during the lives of the pensioners. He might add that the Government would require some evidence that applicants had seen actual service in the war of 1812-14. There could be no serious difficulty in ascertaining who were entitled to pensions and who were not, and blank forms would be furnished to intending applicants.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT remarked that the claims of many of these veterans could be ascertained from the fact that they had received grants of land for which patents had been issued in their own names.

Mr. SNIDER said that some of these veterans who had done good service for their country would have considerable difficulty in satisfactorily establishing their claims, in consequence of all the officers of their regiment and, in fact, all who served along with them having passed away. There was an example of this fact in his own part of the country, where there were but two survivors out of one company. He had received several letters on the subject, one of them from one of the two veterans he had referred to, who had served as an officer during 1812-13, and from the information contained in that letter he (Mr. SNIDER) had little doubt that this gentleman would have a good deal of difficulty in proving his connection with the service.

Mr. BROUSE agreed that there would be a good deal of difficulty in many cases with regard to proof of service. The other day a gentleman ninety-four years of age had travelled three hundred miles to prove his service, and he (Mr. BROUSE) believed that many of those who were really entitled to assistance were so old that they had forgotten the names of those who served along with them, and indeed except the fact that they had served and where they had served they could give little information that would establish their claim. He agreed with the member for Prince Edward that what the Government intended to do should be done soon. No less than four of those who had applied to him last summer and who to his own knowledge had served in the war had recently died. He considered the Government should not be so particular about proof, and as an instance of how the Imperial Government had dealt with the men in that position, he stated that one man with whose case he was conversant had applied to Chelsea Hospital for a pension, and upon his furnishing the name of the surgeon of his regiment, who was the only person connected with it of whom he had any remembrance, he got a warrant for £20 at once, and a promise of £30 annually for his life.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said it was very clear that some proof was requisite. The Government could not be expected to pay money indiscriminately to every man over 80 years of age, who came and told them that he was a veteran of 1812.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) inquired whether part of the grant would be paid to the widows of veterans.

Hon Mr. VAIL replied in the negative.

On item 51, $8,000 compensation to pensioners in lieu of land,

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) called attention to the fact that the widows of the pensioners under this head obtain a share of the compensation. He considered that the widows of veterans of 1812 who died three months ago, were as well entitled to compensation.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the item was statutory and was not an annual vote. He thought the payment of pensions under this head was a transfer from the Imperial Government.

The item was concurred in.

On item 52, $36,000, salaries to the Militia branch and District staff,

Mr. BOWELL asked if the hon. Minister of Militia could afford the information promised in regard to this item.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said that if the hon. member would turn to the Public Accounts he would find all the details in connection with their vote and the allowances to the Deputy Adjutant Generals. He did not know that the Government would continue to make the allowance, but they would at least consider the matter.

Mr. BOWELL said it was owing to the fact that he had seen those items in the Public Accounts that he was led to make the inquiries. He knew that those amounts had been voted since 1867, but he had always doubted whether they were according to law; and he now again inquired why they were voted.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said that the item of $534 was the fifteen per cent. bonus given by the late Government; the $666 was the salary of the Deputy Adjutant General at headquarters.

The item was concurred in.

Item 53 was concurred in without discussion.

On item 54, $40,000, allowance for drill instruction,

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand) said that a large proportion of the grant was paid to drill instructors, who never did anything. He called the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia to this fact, so that he might make the necessary inquiries.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the subject had already engaged the attention of the Department, but after the remarks of the hon. member it would receive additional attention, with a view to ascertain if any improvement could be effected.

On item 55, $40,000, Military College,

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said, in reply to Hon. Mr. MITCHELL, that the salaries of the commandant and officers of the college were fixed by the Act of last session.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked for information as to the object and details as to its management.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he could afford no further information than was contained in the statute of last session. He trusted he would not have to read the statutes for the hon. member.

Mr. McMILLAN said he was one of the members who was not in the House last session, and he considered it was most unfair, when information of that kind was asked, that members should be referred to the Acts of last session.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the law of the land was within the hon. gentleman's cognisance even if he were not a member of the House last year.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE then read the statute referred to.

The item was concurred in.

On item 56, $40,000, ammunition,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL complained that the members of the Government treated the Opposition unfairly in the matter of giving information. He had no desire to obstruct the progress of the public business, but when a question was asked by an hon. member on a subject affecting the public interest, he thought it should be answered civilly. It was the only means the members of the Opposition had of justifying themselves in agreeing to vote the money asked by the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government would be most happy to give all the information required by hon. gentlemen on the other side, and he was not aware that any question had been asked which was not fully answered.

The item was concurred in.

On item 57, $75,000, clothing,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, in reply to Mr. PLUMB, said there were some 30,000 volunteers to whom it was necessary to furnish clothing, and upon the principle of giving the new uniforms every three years, an average of ten thousand each year were required.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) enquired whether it was the intention to alter the style of the uniforms in any particular. He called the attention of the Minister of Militia to the report of Colonel JACKSON, in which the present forage cap was described as neither fit for winter or summer wear, and the difficulty of enforcing its use so great as to be absolutely a hindrance to proper military subordination. The recommendations of the gentleman referred to were worth being carefully considered.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said the question of a change in this portion of the uniform had given rise, he noticed, to considerable discussion outside, and was worthy of consideration.

On item 58,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said, in answer to Hon. Mr. MITCHELL, that the Government had closed their account with the Imperial authorities. The hon. gentleman would see that there was no supply from that quarter, and that there would be none after this. Although the item appeared an increase, practically it was a great reduction.

The item was concurred in.

Item 59 was also concurred in without discussion.

On item 60, $375,000, drill pay and other expenses connected with the training of the militia,

Mr. PLUMB asked whether it was the intention of the Government that there should be volunteer camps this season. He remarked that one of the finest reservations for military purposes owned by the Government had been alienated from its original purpose, and that negotiations were going on for the sale of a portion of it.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward)—Before the question of his hon. friend was replied to, said he did not think that the military camp system was satisfactory to the country. He had himself had a good deal of experience in military drill, and he thought it was better that it should be conducted as a rule at the headquarters of battalions and companies. In this way the men were not taken away from their homes, as under the old system they frequently were, at the very busiest season of the year. Those who went to camp were formerly raw, untrained lads, and he thought that for the first and second years at least they should be drilled in battalion and company head-quarters, and, perhaps, it might be proper that they should go to camp the third year.

Mr. THOMSON (Welland) said there was no land reserved at Niagara for military purposes that had been alienated or any that was proposed to be alienated. There was a strip of land which at one time was transferred to the Erie and Niagara Railway Company, but which, under the circumstances in which the company found itself placed, had not been used, but the title had lapsed to the Government. Since the railway had become a more prosperous corporation he, as President, had asked that the lands should again pass into the hands of the company, as it was intended to use the frontage for dock purposes and the remainder for pleasure grounds.

Hon. Mr. VAIL, in reply to the question by the hon. member for Prince Edward, said that the Government had not decided whether they would confine the drill this year to battalion and company head-quarters or whether they would have a camp. Personally, he agreed with his hon. friend that it would be better for the first two years to have the drill done at battalion head-quarters.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL again protested against the expenditure of the amount proposed for military purposes.

Mr. OLIVER, on behalf of the young men of the country, declared that it was small encouragement to those who had expended much time and money in qualifying themselves for service to be told by hon. members that the proposed vote was enormous. We looked to the volunteers for our protection in time of danger, and thought that those men who had exposed themselves to danger and privation in the defence of Canada should be treated with the respect to which they were entitled. He considered the amount proposed to be appropriated was the smallest that could be granted, and although he was not a military man he would be willing to vote for a larger sum. There was one point, however, which was deserving the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia, viz.; that one million of dollars would not be sufficient to defray the expense of drilling 40,000 volunteers, and that if only 20,000 could be drilled annually, the balance would be dissatisfied. He suggested the desirability of forming independent cavalry companies, for many young men would be quite prepared to organize such companies, provided the Government supplied them with arms.

Mr. ORTON agreed with the hon. member for North Oxford that it would be well to keep up the military spirit of the people, and although, happily owing to the Treaty of Washington, there was no probability that we would require our volunteers for any warlike purpose for many years to come, it was through the influence of that spirit that we were recognized as a people and a nation, and he hoped that the people in this Dominion would unanimously endeavor to keep up their martial spirit. He endorsed to a certain extent the opinion of the hon. member for Prince Edward in regard to drills, and said that the fact of men having to leave the vicinity of their homes hindered many of them from joining the volunteer forces. He strongly advocated some mode of recognizing the services of those volunteers who had been connected with the force for fifteen years and upwards. We had passed through times of danger and those men had always been ready to go to the front, and he thought that in some way their services should be recognized.

Mr. GOUDGE endorsed the sentiments of the hon. member for Prince Edward, and observed that it was the opinion of practical men that camp drill as it had been conducted in the past have been productive of very little good, and that company drill at headquarters would make the men equally efficient. If we were to have a military system it should be as perfect as possible, and while he was not prepared to advocate the granting of a larger amount of money he hoped the subject of improving the military drill would receive the earnest consideration of the Government.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand) said he believed there was some good done by camp drill, but at the same time there was also a great deal of time wasted and much dissipation in connection with these camps. Young men who never had a uniform on their backs before went to the camps and had what they called a good time. If the camps were to be continued they should at least be held in places where there were the least possible temptations to immoral practices. After volunteers learned some drill at home they might be sent to camp.

Mr. McCALLUM approved of this proposed expenditure and observed that there were three times as many men in the country fit for military service as were actually connected with the militia.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said he wished the country to understand that we could only have 28,000 out of the 40,000 in camp each year. He was desirous that there should be no misunderstanding on that point.

Mr. BROWN defended the volunteers from the aspersions of the member for Haldimand, and said their conduct in camp, so far as his experience was concerned, had been admirable. He congratulated the Government upon the fact that they had this year purchased the military clothing in the country, and he hoped before long that the Government would be able to obtain arms and equipments also in this country.

Mr. BIGGAR said he was surprised that the hon. member for Cumberland should wish to reduce the militia expenditure to half a million. As he understood it, the Government of this country were bound by arrangement with the Imperial authorities to spend at least one million dollars annually on militia and defence.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—No.

Mr. BIGGAR—Whether the Government were bound to do so or no he believed the money was spent to the satisfaction of the country and that the country got value for it. He spoke in high terms of the Deputy Adjutant General, and expressed the hope that that officer would be promoted.

Item concurred in.

On item 61, contingencies and general service not otherwise provided for, including assistance to rifle associations and bands of efficient corps, $63,000,

Mr. PLUMB asked how much of this amount was to be given to rifle associations. He would be glad if they received a liberal proportion, as he considered them the most meritorious associations in the country. He also trusted that some portion of this vote would be given to pay the expenses of sending a Canadian team to compete at Wimbledon. The presence of a Canadian team at Wimbledon each year was one of the best means of interesting the people of Great Britain in Canada and of promoting emigration. He repelled with indignation the insinuations of the hon. member for Haldimand, to the effect that the volunteer camps were scenes of dissipation and disorder. The camp at Niagara was near his own residence, and although there was a large number of men gathered together, he had not heard of any instances of disorder, and his grounds, though open, had never been disturbed. As to whether these camps afforded the best means of military training, that was another question, which he would leave to military men.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) cordially supported the suggestion of the last speaker that a portion of this vote should be granted towards paying the expense of sending a Canadian team to Wimbledon. This country had no reason to regret such expenditure in the past. our example was now being followed by other colonies, and next summer it is expected that India, Australia and the United States would send rifle teams to compete at Wimbledon. It therefore behoved this country to send her very best riflemen. The great difficulty in the way in the past was the uncertainty which existed as to receiving aid from the Government. He spoke with some knowledge upon this point, as he had the honor of being a member of the Council of the Dominion Rifle Association. They had always received a grant from Government for this purpose, but owing to the uncertainty of receiving it they were frequently embarrassed in making their arrangements; and what he wished to press upon the Government was the propriety of placing this grant upon a permanent basis so that there would be no doubt about receiving it each year, As to the advantages of sending a Canadian team to Wimbledon, he need say nothing, as they were pretty generally recognised; but he would take the liberty of reading an extract from a speech of Lord CARNARVON in addressing the Canadian team at Wimbledon last year. His Lordship said:—"It afforded him the greatest pleasure to see them all at Wimbledon. He was informed that the men came from all the Provinces of Canada, and that they, therefore, represented well the Dominion. He was in receipt of letters at the Colonial Office from day to day which showed a strong desire on the part of the Canadian people to have their militia made in every respect thoroughly efficient for the protection of the Dominion."

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) observed that, while his hon. friend from Niagara appeared as an advocate of the gentlemen branch of the service, he (Mr. Ross) wished to say a word on behalf of the privates, upon whom, in case the tug of war ever came, we would have mainly to depend. He did not approve of devoting a large sum to rifle associations to the exclusion of the more important branches of the service, as many of the members of such associations, if war ever came, might never handle a rifle. It would be much better if the Government would encourage target practice among the volunteers by offering prizes to battalions, and he hoped a large portion of this vote would be spent in that way.

Hon. Mr. VAIL thought the hon. member for Pontiac might rest satified that the Government would make a grant to the Wimbledon Team, but he could make no more definite promise at present.

Item concurred in; also, items 62 and 64.

On item 65, for improved fire-arms (Snider rifles and "Henry Martin;" rifles); $40,000,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL called attention to that portion of the report of Major General SMYTH, in which he recommended the purchase of an additional quantity of fire-arms. The Department, he understood, had already on hand a large number of fire-arms, and he did not see the necessity of making additions to them, especially when it was remembered that experiments were continually going on in relation to the improvement of fire-arms, and it might be that before the Government required to use them a more efficient weapon would be invented, and these arms would be superseded. In view of this fact, he hoped the Government would make further inquiries as to the desirability of making this purchase before they spent the money.

Item concurred in; also items 66 to 68 inclusive, and items 109 and 110 under the head of Ocean and River Service.

The House then adjourned at 12:15.

——:++:——

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 1st March, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three P.M.

INTEREST AND USURY IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. PALMER introduced a Bill relating to interest and usury in the Province of New Brunswick. He explained that the object of the Bill was to assimilate the law of New Brunswick on the subject of usury as nearly as possible to the law of Ontario and Quebec. In Nova Scotia the law was also different from that of New Brunswich, the legal rate being seven per cent., while in New Brunswick it was only six. The result was that persons in New Brunswick having money to lend when it was dear, would withdraw it in New Brunswick and send to Nova Scotia, where it could be permanently invested at seven per cent. He did not propose by this Bill to alter the law with reference to banks and corporations, nor did he propose that it should apply to the past. The only object he had in view was to assimilate the law in New Brunswick to that of the other Provinces.

Bill read a first time.

LEVIS BOARD OF TRADE.

Mr. FRECHETTE introduced a Bill to amend the Act incorporating the Board of Trade of the town of Levis.

Bill read a first time.

CLAIM OF MATTHEW SMITH.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked what the Government intend to do in regard to the claims of MATTHEW SMITH of King's County, New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.—I have inquired into this matter and the claim is still under adjudication by the Superintendent and the Engineer, and so soon as anything is recommended I will inform the hon. gentlemen.

SETTLERS ON INDIAN LANDS IN THE SAUGEEN PENINSULA.

Mr. GILLIES asked whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present year, to adopt steps by which a measure of relief may be granted to the settlers on Indian lands, in the Saugeen Peninsula.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said that some cases of hardship had occurred, and the Government would take steps to relieve some of the hardest cases.

IMMIGRATION INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. DE COSMOS asked—Have the Government made any special provision for the introduction of European or Canadian Immigrants into British Columbia during the construction of the Western Division of the Canada Pacific Railway, in order to provide a supply of labor other than Chinese?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government have not taken any special means to introduce any class of immigrants into that country.

LAWS IN REFERENCE TO INDIANS.

Mr. PATERSON asked whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to introduce a Bill amending the existing laws in reference to Indians?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said it was not the intention of the Government to submit any Bill in respect to Indian laws this session. It was not deemed advisable to amend any further the laws without consolidating, as there were already six or seven statutes relating to Indian affairs, and it was thought advisable to give fuller consideration to the subject. Besides a deputation consisting of the President and Vice-President of the Indian Council had visited the capitol one or two weeks ago, and asked that the final settlement of this matter should be postponed until there was time to discuss the matter further among themselves.

MARINE HOSPITALS AT SYDNEY.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) asked whether it is the intention of the Government to take any steps towards the construction of the Marine and Maritime Hospitals at Sydney, for which appropriations were made last year; and if so, when the work would commence?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied that a contract had been let and the work would be proceeded with as soon as the weather permitted.

BREAKWATER AT COW BAY.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) asked whether anything was to be done towards completing the arrangements which the Government were authorized to make, and which had been in part acted upon, respecting the breakwater at the foot of Cow Bay?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that arrangements under the authority obtained last session would he expected, be completed within a day or two. When the supplementary estimates come down they would be explained to the House.

LIGHT-HOUSE ON GUYON ISLAND.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) asked whether the appropriation made last year for the erection of a light-house on Guyon Island, would be expended on its construction?

Hon. Mr. SMITH said it was the intention of the Government to expend that amount together with a supplentary sum to be voted, and they expected the light-house to be completed during the approaching season.

BREAKWATER AT PORT MAINE-A-DIEU.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton) asked whether the Government has considered the advisability of building a breakwater at the Port of Maine-a-Dieu, N. S., according to the report of the engineer.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.—It has been considered and is still under consideration.

AMENDMENT TO ACT RESPECTING PILOTAGE.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked whether it was the intention of the Government, during the present session, to introduce an amendment to "An Act respecting Pilotage," by which the authority and powers of the Trinity House, Quebec, to deal with offences under Section 71, and other clauses of said Act shall be more clearly defined.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said although he himself had no doubt as to the law, it was the intention of the Government to bring in a Bill on the subject.

EXAMINATION OF HARBORS, ISLAND GRAND MANAN.

Mr. GILLMOR asked whether it was the intention of the Government during the present year, to send a competent engineer to visit the island of Grand Manan, in the County of Charlotte, in New Brunswick, for the purpose of examining the harbors on the Island, with a view to the erection of Breakwaters or such other erections as may be required for the safety and protection of life and shipping.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.—There was an estimate last year of $5,000 for a breakwater at a certain point on this Island, and a survey having been made, this sum was proved to be wholly inadequate, and the amount required to construct a breakwater at that particular place was so enormous as to make it quite inexpedient to expend any portion of the money voted. The Government intended during the coming season to have the coast examined with a view to determine on some more favorable point for a harbor.

NOTES OF CHARTERED BANKS.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) asked whether it is the intention of the Government this session to introduce a Bill to amend Sections 4 of Cap. 11, 33 Vict., so as to permit the chartered banks of Canada to issue notes for less sums than four dollars each.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—It is not the intention of the Government.

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEES.

Mr. WHITE asked whether it is the intention of the Government to cancel all appointments of Official Assignees when the new Act comes into force or whether they will allow them to remain and only deal with new appointments as in cases of death or other causes.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We will cancel whatever appointments may seem to be necessary in the public interest.

BRIDGING THE RIDEAU RIVER.

Mr. ROCHESTER asked whether it is the intention of the Government to build a bridge over the Rideau River at or near the village of Wellington, in the Township of North Gower in the County of Carleton.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government have had interviews with several gentlemen in the locality, and with my hon. friend himself as the member for that district, but they have not decided upon doing anything this year, for this reason. The Rideau Canal last year cost the Government $53,000, while the entire revenue was less than $9,000. I felt that we must be very careful to expend moneys that was not particularly called for. The bridge at this point crosses not the canal, but the River Rideau, and the bridging of the Rideau rests with municipalities on its borders. The river is raised somewhat, however, by using it as a canal, and it would be a question whether the Government would not in that case be prepared to meet the expenditure rendered necessary by the additional work on the margin of the river, and to that extent the Government would give aid, but no more. I asked the deputation to say what they were prepared to do, and we would consider the matter. They have not made any proposition, and I have not felt myself justified in the public interest to make any advance, but I am prepared to consider any proposal that may be made.

ST. PETER'S CANAL.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked whether it is the intention of the Government to proceed with work on the St. Peter's Canal, and when.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.—It is the intention, and so soon as possible.

THE "HANSARD."

M. CHEVAL demande si [dans le but de faire arriver les diverses nationalités de cette Confédération à se bien comprendre, à mieux s'instruire sur leurs besoins, droits et devoirs politiques, sur les vraies tendences, la valeur et le vrai caractère des hommes publics, de produire entr'elles la bonne entente et l'harmonie, toutes choses essentielles à la formation d'un grand peuple], le gouvernement a l'intention de faire en sorte que tous les débats de cette Chambre soient publiés dans les deux langues anglaise et française.

Hon. M. FOURNIER En réponse à la question posée par l'hon. membre, je dois dire que la Chambre ayant pris sur elle le contrôle de la publication des débats, il appartient par conséquent à la Chambre de faire les changements et les améliorations qu'elle jugera à propos.

Mr. CHEVAL asked whether (with a view to cause the different nationalities of this Confederation to arrive at a true mutual understanding and a better knowledge of their political requirements, rights and duties, and of the veritable tendencies, real worth and true character of public men, and of producing that good feeling and harmony between them which are essential to the formation of a great nation) it is the intention of the Government to take the necessary steps to cause the debates of this House to be published in both the English and French languages.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER—The House having the entire control of the publication of the Hansard, it is for the House itself to declare whether the suggestion of the hon. member will be adopted or not.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE STATUTES.

Mr. BIGGAR asked whether it is the intention of the Government to take any steps towards securing a consolidation of the Dominion Statutes.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER—This question has been under consideration, but, as a period of ten years has not yet elapsed since Confederation, it has not been thought expedient to that end before the expiration of the period referred to. To avoid difficulties, however, the Government are considering the necessity of reprinting such of the old statutes as may yet remain in force. There are very few of them however.

THE MISSISSAGUA INDIAN TRIBE.

Mr. GORDON moved an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for returns respecting that portion of the Mississagua Indian Tribe now settled upon Scugog Island. 1st.—For the amount invested by the Dominion Government on their behalf in the lands which said Indians now occupy. 2nd.—For the amount of all other funds with the several annual additions thereto which the Government has received from said Indians; showing how said funds are invested, at what rate of interest, and the several annual payments or donations made by Government to them since the first receipt and investment of said funds in the Indians' behalf. He explained that some years ago this tribe held their portion of land to the north of Peterboro', in the neighborhood of Mud Lake. They were induced to sell out that portion of the reserve, and place the funds they received for it in the hands of the Government of the day. Part of it was invested in a block of eight hundred acres of land on Scugog Island, in Scugog Lake. A still further portion of the money, not invested in these lands, was placed in the hands of the Government for investment. Some designing persons had been impressing the Indians with the belief that they had not been fairly dealt with. This information was asked for in order that the Indians might learn from headquarters that they had been dealt with in good faith.

The motion was carried.

CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MILLS—I rise for the purpose of moving the resolution of which I have given notice, "That the House go into Committee of the the Whole to consider the following resolution :—That the present mode of constituting the Senate is inconsistent with the Federal Principle in our system of Government, makes the Senate alike independent of the people and the Crown, and is in other material respects defective, and that our Constitution ought to be so amended as to confer upon each Province the power of selecting its own Senators and to define the mode of their selection." I introduced this resolution to the attention of the House last year, and the House did on that occasion go into committee to consider it, without any opposition being offered, or any division taken. I was assured that what was then done was not to be taken as an expression of the opinion of the House upon the resolution. I intimated then that it was my purpose when the House went into committee to suggest in detail a plan by which effect could be given to the views enunciated in this resolution. I have, therefore—because it was then stated that what was done was no indication of the opinions of the majority of the House—begun this year in precisely the same way as I did last. I again give the House an opportunity of expressing an opinion upon the principles enunciated in this resolution. I have here stated what I think I shall be able to establish that the present mode of constituting the Senate is inconsistent with the Federal Principle which underlies our system of Government. Our Government is declared to be a Government based upon the Federal principle, and it was so to be understood and carried out, excepting in so far as the constitution itself has introduced other and different elements. I think, Sir, when we examine our constitution, we will find that there have been some departures from this principle in three or four particulars. First, in the constitution of the Senate; second, in the provisions of a tentative character, by which the Local Legislatures are authorized to divest themselves of the power of legislating upon the subject of property and civil rights, except in the case of the Province of Quebec; thirdly, in the sort of partnership in which our courts are constituted; and in the vetoing power reserved to the GOVERNOR GENERAL over all acts which may be carried through the various Provincial Legislatures. It seems to me that these are all disturbing elements which at an earlier or more remote period it will be necessary to get eliminated from our constitution before it can be worked harmoniously. The declaration in our constitution that it is based upon the Federal principle I understand in the broad sense in which that term is usually employed. It indicates not an assembly of ambassadors, but a Government operating (not upon the Governments of the Provinces) but directly upon the people. It is the union of several independent and distinct sovereignities for certain definite purposes which have divested themselves of the original power of which they were possessed just in so far as these powers have been conferred upon a single or national Legislature. I have always thought that this is the best system of Government that it is posssible for our people to adopt. I am of opinion that the system of representative Government is one which never can be satisfactorily carried out over a very great extent of territory except we divest the national assembly of those local and minor questions which may properly be dealt with by local representatives of the people, who are to be immediately affected by them. I think it may be laid down as a general proposition to which there can be no exception, that no Parliament can be successful in undertaking to legislate for the people except the people themselves sympathise with the Government in the work in which they are engaged. Unless the people at large feel an interest in what has been done by the Legislature, the legislation is not likely to be successful in its working; and there certainly can be no such thing as direct Parliamentary responsibility where there is not felt a strong interest in the work in which the Legislature is engaged. I am satisfied that our past experience under the old Legislative Union of Canada is sufficient to establish this proposition. Before the system of responsible government was introduced we were without anything which might fairly be designated Municipal institutions, and although there were very important questions before the country—questions with regard to the relations of Church and State; questions with regard to the intro duction of a system of responsible government; questions with regard to the introduction of a system of superior education upon a secular basis—upon which the public mind had been made up, and more or less definitely expressed, yet in many cases it was impossible to get a fair expression of opinion, beoause some local question intervened. Two candidates might be before the electors, and yet the one who agreed most closely with the people upon general questions of public policy, might be, and generally were, rejected because he had not sufficient influence with the Government of the day to secure the construction of a road, or a bridge, or some other local work. By the introduction of Muncipal institutions, these questions were withdrawn from the consideration of the Legislature, and public opinion could be effectually and directly expressed upon the larger questions the settlement of which were necessary in the public interest. But we find under the old system of a Legislative Union between Ontario and Quebec, which existed from 1841 to 1866, a similar class of questions cropped up—— questions of a larger and more general character, but still questions which were essentially Provincial, and upon which it was frequently found impossible to obtain a general expresion of public opinion. If you look at the Statutes of the old Parliament of Canada you will find a large volume of Statutes of Lower Canada—another volume equally large of Statutes of Upper Canada. You will find in many instances they were carried notwithstanding that a majority of the representatives of the Province to be were opposed to their enactments; and I dare say similar legislation was had on behalf of Quebec. Those people were legislated for by others than those representing them, and thus with regard to a matter which peculiarly concerned the people of Lower Canada we find the representatives of Upper Canada to whose constituencies the law did not extend and upon whose people the law did not in any way operate, assisting in legislation of that character. Now instead of that union being a strong one it was essentially a weak one. Instead of those powers which have since been given to the Legislature being elements of strength, too and serving to bind the two Provinces more closely together, they became elements of repulsion by which the ties, which naturally bound the two Provinces together, were well nigh severed. I say, then, that the system was essentially a weak one. We find that although we had what was called a united Cabinet, yet we had an Attorney General from Lower Canada and another from Upper Canada. We had in effect two distinct set of officers, which were in reality two Cabinets, each of which was responsible to the people of its own Province, and which for certain purposes assumed general responsibility in public affairs. Now, although this was called a Legislative union it was in fact a very imperfect, a very unsystematic species of Federal union. I think, then, I am justified in saying that the Federal Government is the only one of a representative character which is adapted to our circumstances and to the people of this country; and if there can be found among the questions with which the Parliament of Canada is called to deal those effecting only a portion of the population of this country—a portion of the population separated from the rest by geographical lines—they ought, I think, to be again relegated by an amendment of the constitution to the Provinces affected by them. The federal system of Government which has been adopted in this country is not one that has sprung from any pre-conceived opinions of the population. It has not been adopted from the fact that our public men held certain theoretical opinions on the subject of government, and discussed them before the people, and agitated the public mind with regard to them till they were finally carried into practice. The Federal principle has grown out of the peculiar circumstances of our population. We were, in fact, eight colonies before we were united under one Government, and in the answer to the question how we came to be eight instead of one great colony will, I think, be found the reasons upon which our federal system is based. In fact, it would be impossible to lay down any general principle which would justify us in establishing here a consolidated Government which would not, if carried out to its logical consequence, take from this country separate legislative bodies. All the reasons which would go to show that we ought to have a consolidated Government in British North America would go to show that we ought to be represented in Westminster and represented nowhere else. I believe I would be justified in saying that a legislative union fully carried out has never worked satisfactorily anywhere. It was a legislative union that existed between Austria and Hungary from 1848 to 1866, and it never worked satisfactorily. The people of Hungary were always on the point of rebellion. A Federal Government existed under the old united Provinces of Holland for nearly three centuries. Legislative Union was tried and it hardly lasted thirty years. Legislative Union has been tried it is true between England and Scotland, but it has been worked simply by giving to Scotland in a great measure all the powers of Local Government, and all the special Legislation which would have been adopted in that country had it possessed a Local Government of its own. I think—I have always thought—that it was unfortunate that the question of a Federal Government came up here for discussion during the period of the American War, or immediately after that war had closed. There was a general opinion prevalent in this country amongst our public men that the federal system had some way or other shown itself to be too weak, and that it would be necessary, if we established that system of Government here, to make it in some way stronger than the Government which prevailed on the other side of the line. I think that this was a mistaken opinion. I think that those who will take the trouble of examining the history of that country closely will find that so far from the doctrine of State Sovereignity, as it was called, serving to break up the Union it was the only policy which prevented a civil war on the subject of slavery from being precipitated upon the country for nearly half a century. I say I think it was unfortunate for us that the change in our constitution was brought before Parliament for practical consideration at a period when the conflict existed on the other side of the line. I think that some of the defects in our system of Government and that many of those incongruities, and many of those obscure provisions which have given rise to a very great deal of perplexity, and no little discussion, in this House, are due to that fact. Our system too, it will not be forgotten, never received popular sanction. It is a well understood principle in the English Parliamentary Government that the Government is to be carried on according to the known wishes of the people. The most important question that has ever been brought before a legislative body in this country for its consideration was one upon which the public voice was never consulted. In ordinary legislation we expect to carry on Government according to the view of the Electoral body of the country. We express our opinions upon various public questions at the elections, and we enunciate views of public policy before the people, and for what reason? In order to ascertain what is the public opinion upon these questions that we thus enunciate, and which we suppose will be dealt with by Parliament after the elections are over—in order that the legislation of the country may rest upon popular sympathy and the popular conviction. But here was an important public matter—one which if dealt with could not be recalled—one which if enacted it would be impossible that the people could by any popular vote put back into the position in which it stood before. It was allied with others and the views of any one Province, however strongly expressed, could not affect the system once it was adopted, or bring back any of the powers which had been withdrawn from the Province by that act. I think had our system been subjected to the popular ordeal — had it been subjected fairly to public criticism some of these defects which I have indicated and the one especially with which I now ask this House to deal never would have found their way into the fundamental law of this country. A second chamber may be either federal or national. Under the federal system of Government it is not absolutely necessary that you should have a federal house created upon a federal basis. You may make it a National Assembly, as much so as this House is a National Assembly, but in order to do so it is necessary that the Crown should not be limited with regard to its appointments in any particular provision. If the Senate were not intended to be organized upon a federal basis, then the provisions of our British North American Act (which may be designated our Constitution) providing that Ontario should be represented by twenty-four persons in the Senate—that Quebec should be represented by twenty-four—and that the Maritime Provinces should be represented by twenty-four, have no meaning whatever. I say these provisions have no meaning whatever if it was not intended that the Senate should be organized upon a federal basis. If it is intended to be constituted upon a federal basis, it was absolutely necessary that the Provinces which were to be represented in this House should in some way or other control the appointments of those who were to represent them. Now, it is an event extremely improbable in the history of this country, and scarcely possible that any Government, however strong it may be, will have the confidence of a majority of the people's representatives from every Province, and yet the appointments made by the Crown are the appointments made by the Government. We all remember very well that after the elections in 1867, several vacancies occurred in the representation of the Province of Nova Scotia in the Senate. There were some eighteen representatives from Nova Scotia in the House of Commons hostile to the Administration, and only one or two supporting it, and yet that Province was to have its representation in the Senate filled up by a Government opposed by eighteen-twentieths of the people's representatives in this House.

I say then that in order that the second chamber may be really a federal body—in order that the Province may be really and substantially represented in this Chamber, it is necessary that the Province should in some way control the appointments to that House. I have stated in this relation that not only is the present constitution of the Senate inconsistent with our present system of government, but that it is alike independent of the people and of the Crown. The English system is one of mutual checks. The House of Commons controls the Crown by withholding supplies; the Crown controls the House of Commons by the power of dissolution; and the House of Lords is controlled by the power of creating new peers. But here we have a second Chamber which is responsible to nobody—influenced by nobody, and which is in no way bound to pay any respect to public opinion or to the opinion of this House. It may set itself up in opposition to this House upon a measure of the greatest possible importance to the public, and there is no provision whatever in our constitution for bringing the Senate into harmony with the public opinion of the country. Other members are limited. If that Chamber was to possess a national instead of a federal character—if it was to be treated as a unit—it was of the utmost consequence that the Crown should possess the power of indefinitely increasing the number, and thereby, in case of necessity, of bringing the opinions of that House into harmony with this House. But there is no provision in our Constitution by which that might be done, and if our legislation has not been opposed, it is simply because of the indifference with regard to the important functions with which they have been intrusted. I say a second chamber to serve any real and substantial purpose, must rest upon the same great power or authority in the State. We know what is possessed by the House of Lords in England. We know that they represented for a long time the principal portion of the real property of the nation. We know that their influence outside of Parliament and beyond the limits of their own order is very considerable, even at this day, although it has very much diminished. But upon what great element of society does the Senate rest in this country? It has no substantial basis whatever. There is no part of the community which it can be said to represent; there is no portion of the people of this country with whom it may be said to sympathize. It is, as it stands at present, an isolated body—an excrescence upon our constitution, placed beyond the pale of the influence of public opinion and without any sympathy with any element in the State. Now, sir, I believe there are but two ways in this country by which we can get a second chamber of real importance; the one is direct election by the people, which, in my opinion, would make it a rival of this House, and would ultimately weaken the authority and influence of this House; and the second is by making it a representative body of the sovereignty of the Provinces of the Dominion, which purpose it does not serve now, although it is said to be a body representing the Provinces, and is so designed in our constitution. It does not serve any one of the purposes for which a second chamber can be said to exist, with the single exception of the one mentioned by Mr. MILL, and that is, that it impresses upon this House the idea that there is a second body to consult, and this prevents the complete absolutism of the House. Not only do we find that we have closely followed in this matter the constitution of the House of Lords in creating Senators for life, but we have even provided in our constitution that the appointment of the SPEAKER of the Senate shall not be vested in the Senate, but in the Crown. Sir, there was reason for vesting the appointment of the SPEAKER of the House of Lords in the Crown, because, as a member of the Administration his office of SPEAKER is inseparably connected ithw his position in the Government. But, Sir, the SPEAKER of our Senate is no such personage, and it will be remembered that when the member for Quebec Centre was SPEAKER of the Senate and found it necessary to withdraw from the Chamber for a week or two, he had to tender his resignation, and another had to be appointed by Commission in his stead during the few days he was absent from the House. I know, Sir, of no reason why this appointment was vested in the Crown, except a disposition to servilely imitate the English Government in a matter in which there is no real resemblance between their system and our own. It has been well said by Sir

JAMES MACKINTOSH that the English system of Government is something like a nobleman's mansion. It has been occupied for generations, it has had alterations made in it and additions built, and it is exceedingly unsymetrical; but it is also very convenient, and it would be a very unwise act to tear it down to its foundations for the purpose of building a better and more symmetrical edifice. At the same time, no man in his senses would choose it as a model if he had to build from the foundations. It seems to me, Sir, that this very wise and thoughtful observation, made by a very distinguished English statesman, was lost sight of when these provisions of our constitution were prepared by the delegates to London. I do not think we are bound to imitate the English system of Government in any particular where our circumstances are so totally different from theirs that what is admirably adapted to the English people is in no way suited to us. It is not necessary that we should copy a dead limb of the British constitution in order to show our attachment to that which is green and vigorous, any more than it is necessary for us to shave our heads to show our parental affection simply because our grandfathers may be bald. We have not sir, followed the English system of Parliamentary representation. We have adopted the system of representation by population, which is essentially American in its origin. The English system of Parliamentary representation is a representation of interests. There never has been any serious attempt there to base representation by population. It has always been said by those who have exercised the controlling influence in the Government of that country that in their system of representation they have kept in view all the multifarious interests of the nation, and the representatives of the people of Great Britain in the Imperial Parliament have resolved that no single interest shall have a controlling influence in the legislation of the country. That, sir, is quite clear if you look at the populations of London and Scotland, which are about equal, for you will find Scotland returning many more representatives than the City of London. I think, sir, we acted wisely in taking population as a basis of representation in this House, that we did well to treat our own people as a unit, that in doing so we have taken an important step towards consolidating them, as far as they have common interests, into a real nationality; and it seems to me we would do equally well in looking at the federal features of our Government and establishing a second chamber which would serve some of the important purposes for which a second chamber ought to exist. We sometimes forget, sir, the very rapid changes that take place in a single generation in this country. Lord MACAULAY, not long before his death, speaking of the representation system of England, thought the period of seven years was too long. He said when the Septennial Act was carried English society moved much more slowly than it did in his day; that the changes in five years was greater than had occurred in seven years a century before, and because they were greater it was necessary that the elections should be more frequent in order to adjust the opinions of the House of Commons to the opinions of the nation. Now, Sir, when we look at our Senate, what do we find? We find that the average political life of a Senator is fifteen years, while that of a representative of the people is but two and a half years. Is it possible that such a body as the Senate can be fairly said in any measure to represent the people of this country, that they can be the guardians of any public interest in this country, that they can serve any useful purpose as a legislative body, other than that of taking away the idea of absolute power being possessed by this House. There can be no doubt that whatever position you place public men in, if you completely separate them from the rest of the community and make them completely independent, you unfit them for the discharge of legislative functions. It is necessary in every vocation and position of life that there should be a sense of dependence on our fellow countrymen. Without this essential dependence we become utterly unfit to discharge our duties properly as members of the State, and any legislative body that is completely separated from the rest of the community, that is in no way obliged to conform to the public opinion of the country or show any deference to that public opinion, is in no way qualified to perform the important duties that devolve upon the Second Chamber. There is another objection which I make to a Second Chamber, and it is this: I do not say that you will not get able men as its members, but I say that however honest and capable an Administration may be, it is impossible that it can constitute a Second Chamber possessing that versatility of character and thought which is necessary to give the Chamber influence in the country. It is not only necessary that a representative body should be composed of able men, but they should be men drawn from every variety of pursuit that exists in the country, in order that the country may have confidence and take an interest in its proceedings. We do not all take exactly the same view of public questions, but we view them from different standpoints. Our minds have been trained to particular avocations, our thoughts flow in particular channels, and we cannot divert them from that groove in which they have been habituated to run. It is therefore necessary that we have men who have been accustomed to think differently, who from the difference of their avocations and positions will be brought to view public questions from different standpoints. Who are you likely to find composing the Second Chamber? Is it the artisan, the agriculturist, the lawyer of good standing? No! You get none of these. You find a few wealthy merchants and retired bankers and defeated politicians, and when you go behind this list you get nothing. I say that such a body, however capable its members may be, is altogether too narrow for the purpose of exerting any important influence upon the legislation of the country. A good Government, Sir, implies two things:—First, familiarity with the objects of Government, and, second, a knowledge of the means to be employed. I do not believe that the Second Chamber is possessed of either of these qualities. There cannot be a proper knowledge of the means to be employed unless the members are brought in contact with the people of the country in some way or other, and, where they stand completely isolated as they do, they are disqualified by that isolation from possessing the necessary qualification. I was told, Sir, last year by a gentleman occupying a prominent position on that side of the House that this is a hobby of mine. But I suppose every measure submitted to this House that has occupied the attention of the party who submits it, and who had seriously considered it, may be called his hobby. I don't think it is necessary to wait for some great calamity to burst upon the nation before we propose to apply a practical remedy to obvious defects. I am of opinion that Government partakes of the elements of an exact science. I believe it is possible to anticipate mischief, and to study the geography of politics in such a manner as to determine with a very considerable degree of accuracy to what particular point any particular measure is likely to lead. I do not think it is necessary we should have a practical experience of very serious defects before it is wise in us to undertake to apply a remedy. I am aware that in the estimation of certain classes of politicians, gentlemen who call themselves practical politicians, but who, in my opinion, are not entitled to that appellation, if you can urge a reason for a particular line of conduct, it is sufficient to justify its rejection as a mere theory. Well, Sir, we have been told by these eminently practical politicians that this second Chamber is to be a check on hasty legislation. It has been tried in this country for a great many years. Has it ever served that purpose? Who does not know that during the closing days of the session as many as fifty Bills has been passed through that House at a single session. Is that acting as a check on hasty legislation? Then we are told that it is to serve as a check against encroachments on the rights and functions of the Local Legislatures; and that would be very important work if it was performed by the second Chamber. Did it serve that purpose? If a second Chamber is to serve that purpose it must derive its authority from the Local Legislatures. Then we are told that the second Chamber is to serve as a Court of Review. When did it ever serve that purpose? What Bill possessing serious defects, improperly and ungrammatically drawn which had ever passed this House, has ever been properly corrected by the other Chamber? I have never seen such a Bill. The hon. member for Quebec Centre, who has returned from the place of the spirits of old politicians, may be able to tell us something in respect to this matter; but my observation, and I have given some attention to the work done by those hon. gentlemen points in an entirely different direction. It was said by a gentleman who, when appointed to the Senate found himself among gentlemen very much his senior in years, that he expected to be with those who lived two or three generations ago, but to his surprise he found himself with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob when he took his seat in that Chamber. There was an objection taken by the hon. member for St. John last year which I think it will be well to notice—viz. ;—that Parliament had no right to alter the constitution without the consent of the Local Legislatures. Now, sir, I think we are not to forget that we have in our British North America Act two sets of constitutions. We have the constitution of the Federal Government and the constitutions of the various Locla Legislatures. I do not think it would be a proper thing for this House to amend the constitution of any of the Provinces. I think these constitutions are under the purview of the several Local Governments, but at the same time we are the best judges of our constitution here. I think so long as we do not diminish the powers of the Local Legislatures we may, without consulting them, undertake to change the instrument under which we are here legislating. I propose this resolution now, and when the House is in Committee, I will propose a series of resolutions with regard to carrying it into effect. With reference to the schemes I have before enunciated in this House, I think the best way to elect our Senate is to elect them in the Local Legislatures. I believe by increasing their powers and influence you will hold out greater inducements to able men to go into these Local Legislatures. It certainly cannot be to the interest of this country to diminish the importance of those Legislatures or to make them less attractive to men of standing and abilility. We are exercising the powers of Government over a very large extent of territory, and there is no visible emblem of our authority in the remote parts of our country. If there is dissatisfaction on the part of any Local Government or Legislature, if the people of any Province become discontented with the policy pursued by the National Government and Parliament, the Local Legislature and Local Government become the rallying point towards which the disaffected portion of the population gathers. It is of very great consequence, exercising as we do a governmental authority over a vast extent of territory, that we should give to the Local Governments and Legislatures an interest in the maintenance of national authority. You do this to a very considerable extent when you confer upon those Local Governments the power of electing one branch of the Legislature. The English system of government has been defined by a modern writer as an unworkable form of government, made workable by a constant threat of revolution. No important measure has been submitted to the House of Commons that has not been rejected by the House of Lords and continued to be rejected until the public mind became so excited that further rejection was dangerous. Now, I think that every one will admit that is a defect, and I think no one will maintain that a defect of that sort is desirable to copy in this country. We have that defect under our present system in an aggravated form. We have a second Chamber that has no possible connection with the people of this country, that is in no way responsible to the people of this country, and that may, at the same time, set itself up in opposition to the Government and House of Commons without any possibility of bringing it into harmony with the other branch of the Legislature. I shall not further trespass upon the attention of this House. I ask the support of the House to this proposition with a view to removing a useless and rotten institution from our system, and with a view to establishing one more in harmony with the genius of our constitution and more in keeping with the spirit of the age.

Mr. PALMER desired to state certain preliminary objections to this resolution, which he thought should first be settled before adopting or rejecting the resolution. He did not think it expedient to condemn a portion of this legislature until a mode was discovered for effecting what was desired. This resolution proposed to ask the Imperial Parliament to pass an Act to wipe out the Senate and in lieu of that, to make the Senate elective by the Local Legislatures. As a member representing a county in one of the smaller Provinces, he objected to this proposition. It would introduce a principle so dangerous and so subversive of the independence of his Province, that he could not consent to its adoption. Previous to the adoption of our constitution, every colony of the British Empire—on this continent at all events—had responsible Government, the effect of which was that no Imperial legislation could be passed without their assent. From the beginning he, (Mr. PALMER) was in favor of an elective union. He was for it still and he was prepared to support it now if any one would take the proper way to have the present system abolished and a legislative union adopted. Under that system the small Provinces would have equal rights with the large ones, and until its adoption the smaller Provinces would suffer. His preliminary objections to the resolution before the House were; 1st, in point of law it was unconstitutional. It would be a violation of the agreement made with the several Provinces if that were allowed to be done; 2nd, we had not had that experience with reference to the working of the constitution that would be necessary before passing so solemn a judgment with regard to it. The statement that the Senate had done nothing was incorrect. He could point out Bills which had passed this House and were checked by the Upper House. That was done with reference to the Bill to change the ridings of Huron. Whether this was right or wrong, the Senate could not be said to have done nothing. Would the hon. member for Bothwell contend in this House that the Imperial Parliament would have a constitutional right to pass the British North America Act at all without the consent of the various Provinces interested therein? He (Mr. PALMER) insisted they would not. And, having passed that Act with the consent of the Provinces, could it be altered by the Imperial Parliament without the same consent? It would not only be a violation of the constitution, but also of the distinctive agreement between the Provinces. If the hon. gentleman admitted these two propositions, he would have to admit that this proposition involved the commisssion of an unconstitutional act by this House. If our constitution could be altered in one point, none of its provisions were safe. If this House had a right to ask the Imperial Parliament to amend our constitution, the Local Legislatures had a similar right. He was surprised at the proposition of his hon. friend, to the effect that the constitution was incomplete. He (Mr. PALMER) was always under the impression that it was complete in all its parts. It was impossible that we could have two constitutions, although the proposition of his hon. friend asserted as much. It was true that the Provinces might have each a mode of government peculiar to itself, and the Federation had a mode of government peculiar to itself; but the whole taken together went to form our constitution, and each portion ought to work in harmony with the others, neither of them endeavoring or desiring to entrench on the powers of the others. Without this spirit prevailing, it was impossible to carry on our system of government satisfactorily. The hon. gentleman has spoken as though this Government were worked upon the same principle as the American Constitution, but if he looked at the Constitutional Act, he would find that the consent of the people of this country to confederation was based upon the consideration that our Constitution would be framed after the principle of the British Constitution, thus distinctly excluding that of the United States. If his hon. friend succeeded in eliminating the Senate from our system of government, he would destroy the great underlying principle which distinguished our constitution from that of the republic to the south of us. The federal principle, in his (Mr. PALMER'S) opinion, was simply an agreement between two Powers or States to unite in governing themselves by conferring upon each other certain powers. This, at least, was how the people of this country understood it when they made their agreement at Confederation. However much he might sympathise with his hon. friend from Bothwell in many of the views he expressed, yet he was forced to oppose him in this motion until the people had agreed to it. The hon. gentleman proposed to alter our constitution so as to assimilate the Senate in its powers and composition to the Federal principle, and yet the very essence of that principle was the fact that nothing of the kind could be done without the agreement of the people. He (Mr. PALMER) had not the slightest objection to this or any other question being brought forward, provided it were done in the proper way, and the proper way in this case was to have a joint convention of the Provinces, afterwards initiating any measure on the subject in the Local Legislatures, and afterwards passing it through the Dominion Parliament. Then, and not till then, would the British Government be likely to accede to an alteration of our Constitution.

Mr. MILLS—What about the Act of 1871?

Mr. PALMER said he was bound to confess he did not know exactly to what Act his hon. friend referred. If it were to the increase of subsidy to Nova Scotia, he believed his hon. friend objected to it, because it was not provided for in the Constitutional Act. The Government of that time defended themselves on the ground that the finances of the country could be dealt with independently of the Imperial authorities. Whatever might be his opinion of the subject from an equitable point of view, he certainly agreed with his hon. friend on the unconstitutionality of the Act. The hon. gentleman's own argument in that case was good against the position he took in regard to this. If all the hon. gentleman alleged against the Senate are at present constituted, he was not surprised that he should bring such a motion as this before the House; but there was no other ground upon which he could conceive of one who took such a deep interest in constitutional questions, and who had studied them from such a calm and philosophical point of view, proposing to interfere with our system of government in a manner so entirely opposed to the spirit of the constitution. The extent of the evil, however, did not to him (Mr. PALMER) appear to be a justification of the means, and he was afraid if we permitted ourselves to go out of the strait and narrow path in one instance, there would be no saying where we should stop. Unless this House had the right to ask for an alteration of the constitution without the consent of the whole of the Provinces, which he was not prepared to admit, he would feel bound upon that ground alone to oppose the motion.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON hoped the hon. member for Bothwell would not insist upon dividing the House upon this question. The problem was as yet an abstract one, and the House was not in a position to come to a conclusion upon it, for there were as many theories as to the proper mode of constituting the Senate, provided the present system were abandoned, as there were men. His own opinion was, that we should not change the existing organization of that body; for, although it was admitted that the Senate was not in point of ability all that we might desire, that was the fault of those who had made the nominations. It could not be denied that many of its members would be an honor to any Legislature. It was estimated that we required 1,200 men for our various Legislatures, and our country ought, indeed, to be a happy one, if the majority of these were at all equal to the duties required of them. This might, perhaps, be considered a very good argument in favor of legislative union, but there were several interests which would suffer by this proposition, and for the want of whose acquiescence it would be unnecessary to discuss it. It might, perhaps, be true, that the number of Senators was too great, and some reduction might be practicable; but in regard to the mode in which it was constituted, the hon. member for St. John was perfectly right in saying that it was formed after the principle of the British House of Lords. This House had not the authority to alter the constitution, but there could be no doubt that it had the authority to ask for an alteration. We could not in this country adopt the constitution of the United States, for the point from which we started was a different one, and we could not, therefore, reach the same object. He thought there was an immense danger in the present Constitution of the United States, arising from the tendency to centralize power. That had, unfortunately, been one of the results of the civil war of 1860-64, and, to all appearance, the Federal Government would soon become so powerful as to swallow up the whole authority. If we had an upper House elected by the Local Legislatures, without going the length of saying that in the fact, would lie an absolute danger, there was no denying that the result would be that there would be a tendency to centralization, he deprecated this continual tinkering at the Constitution. Every year disclosed the fact that for some time to come, difficulties would continually arise, especially as the respective powers of the Local and Federal Governments, against which the Constitution did not provide. When, therefore, we came to amend that Constitution, as would some day doubtless be necessary, we should have already considered not only this, but every other feature it was desirable to alter. To press for a vote, in the meantime, declaring in effect against the utility of the Senate, would simply be to weaken the moral strength of that House before the country. He had himself the honor of presiding over that body, and he had left it, not because he thought it was not respectable, but because like his hon. friend from Northumberland, there was not enough paper in it for him. To illustrate the good purposes which the Senate served, he recalled the circumstances under which that House a few years ago rejected eleven Bills, because they were brought down to them at the end of the session when they had not time to give them full consideration. Upon that and upon several other occasions the Senate had rendered the country good service. There were many good men from whom to choose in making appointments, but unfortunately selections had frequently been made for other reasons than that the appointee was fitted for the discharge of the duties. What was true of the Federal Senate was equally true of the Upper Houses of the various Provinces. Although he was opposed to forcing this question to a vote, he agreed somewhat with the hon. member for Bothwell that the discussion was useful. The proper place to discuss it, however, was at the polls, where the people would themselves have an opportunity of pronouncing upon it directly. If he were bound to vote upon this occasion he would vote against the resolution of the hon. member, not because he objected to any plan that might be proposed, but because he objected to changing the Constitution of the Senate at the present time.

Mr. PLUMB confessed that he had listened with some curiosity to the speech of the hon. member who had brought up this question, and considering the amount of time and labor the hon. gentleman had devoted to the subject, the arguments he had brought forward were hardly such as might have been expected. There were some of the views expressed with which he was prepared to concur, but he did not pretend to understand the legal or constitutional questions, nor could he exactly see the appropriateness of importing into this discussion the relations of Hungary and Austria or the subject of State Sovereignity in the United States. Neither of these, so far as he could see served to illustrate anything that had taken place or could take place in this connection. So far as the United States was concerned the union of its various States was in direct antagonism to Federalism. The hon. gentleman, however, was to a certain extent correct when he stated that the tendency was towards the concentration of power in the hands of the Federal Government as against the State, and it was also true that it was this battle between Federal and State power, which finally brought about the difficulties of 1860-64. The precipitation of that struggle had been prevented years before with great difficulty by the efforts of HENRY CLAY and DANIEL WEBSTER. Since the civil war there had been a continual struggle in the United States between Centralization and Federalism. He proceeded to point out the difference between the Constitution of the United States Senate and of ours, and he contended that any argument drawn from a supposed analogy between the two bodies was entirely worthless. He strongly objected to the harsh terms which had been used by the member for Bothwell in reference to the present Senate, and he was somewhat surprised that his hon. friend should have used such expressions in view of the recent appointments which had been made to that body by the present Government.

Mr. DECOSMOS said he did not believe the Senate as at present constituted was worth the money the country paid for it, and he was of opinion that the proper course to pursue would be to abolish it altogether. He instanced the case of the North German Confederation, where legislation was successfully conducted with only one Chamber. He also noticed the fact that in North Germany universal suffrage prevailed, and he would be prepared to support the introduction of that franchise into this country, both for our Local and General Legislatures. With regard to the suggestion that this question of changing the Constitution of the Senate to the popular vote, he approved of the practice of holding national conventions, where all such questions might be discussed by the people. If we were to have a Second Chamber at all, it should be in some measure a representative body, and yet, so far as his own district was concerned, at least, he believed the Senator who came from there could not be returned to the people. Members of the Senate also should be above accepting paltry offices from the Ministry of the day, if the Senate was to retain any portion of that respect which the House of Lords commands. If the Senate was not to be abolished altogether, he would support such a change in its constitution as that now proposed.

Mr. MOSS said it had been strongly objected in the House and the country that it was scarcely fitting to discuss this question at the present time, and that objection was founded upon the ground that our Confederation was so young, and our constitution so recently established, that it was inexpedient to consider any change whatever until a longer time had elapsed. To that doctrine he was unable to subscribe. It appeared to him that it was the duty of members of that House when an hon. member brought forward a motion of the character of that which had been laid on the table, and supported it with the ability and research with which it had been supported by the hon. member for Bothwell, to endeavor to form some conclusion as to the course which should be adopted. He was not more than any other member of the House in favor of change for change's sake. He did not believe in violent political agitation, but he could not conceive how it could be urged that the fair open consideration of the question under discussion involved any political agitation. He had heard the objection raised on this and other occasions that the proposal of the hon. member for Bothwell was a mere theory, a mere hobby, which was unworthy of the consideration of practical statesmen. Surely gentlemen who made remarks of that kind did not duly consider the language which they were using, and it was the duty of members to consider any question which so gravely affected the constitution of the country. He would ask those gentlemen whether our constitutional system was not adopted as a theory. The framers of the British North America Act were men of great breadth of view and of large experience, but still they did not possess all the wisdom of the country on the subject which they discussed, and there was no reason why the members of the House should not approach the consideration of the subject as fairly as did the framers of the constitution. If, then, they were not precluded from discussing the subject from high State necessity, which he could not conceive existed, the first question to decide was whether or not the present system was satisfactory. The hon. member for Bothwell attacked it on two distinct grounds. First, that the second Chamber was inconsistent with the federal system, and second, that it constituted a body which was not responsible either to the Crown or to the people. The House had heard a good deal of theorising from hon. members during the discussion, even from the hon. member for Bothwell. The difference, however, between the theorising of the different gentlemen and the mover of the resolution was that he was in the main right, while the other gentlemen were either wrong or irrelevant in the expression of their views. But there was one point on which he could not agree with the hon. member for Bothwell, and he desired to guard himself from being understood to coincide entirely with that hon. member's idea of the federal character of our constitution The hon. member for Bothweil had correctly stated that the idea of a federal-government was one in which separate states had resigned a certain amount of their powers and functions to the national authority, and that the national authority is circumscribed by the limits of the direct power which has been given it by something in the nature of a constitution. That, of course, was the case in the Federal Union known as the United States. But he (Mr. Moss) did not think that was the true character of the Federal Union under which we live. In Section 91 of the British North America Act it is declared :—

"It shall be lawful for the QUEEN, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces;" and the Act then proceeded to specify certain powers which were by that Act assigned to the Federal Parliament, but especially without limiting the general powers.. But that appeared to be the converse of the system under which the American constitution was founded. Under the American system the States retained all their rights which they did not expressly cede, and the Federal Government had only power to deal with matters expressly assigned to it. Under our Constitution the Local Legislatures had only power to deal with those matters which were expressly conveyed to them. While differing from the hon. member for Bothwell on this point, he agreed with the hon. member in believing that the present Constitution of the Senate was not in accordance with any federal system, and there could be no doubt that ours is a federal system, for it was so set forth in our Constitution. It might just as well be argued that it would be in accordance with the Federal system if the members of this House were empowered to elect the members of the Senate as that it was in accordance with the federal system to leave the power in the hands of Dominion Government. Such a proposition was made when the Constitution of the United States was first framed, but it was rejected by an overwhelming majority. The mode of choice which had been adopted in regard to the Senate was one which no man could defend, more especially in that the Government of the day appointed members to the Senate when a vacancy occurred. Members of the Government were not altogether free from human weakness, and he could appeal with confidence to the members of the present Administration, because they were honest in their statements, to say whether they had not felt that human weakness, sorely tried by the presence of political considerations. He did not mean to say it had been so in regard to the appointment of Senators since the Government came into office, but whenever power was entrusted to the hands of a government, it was liable to be influenced by political considerations, no matter how honest, upright and able that government might be. If it was conceded that the present mode of appointment was not the most desirable one, and that the present Constitution of the Senate might be improved, there appeared to be four courses open for consideration. In the first place it was said the Senate might be dispensed with. It was, however, utterly impossible that any such proposition could be entertained by the House, under the peculiar circumstances in which the Dominion was placed. There were several reasons why a proposition to abolish the Senate could not be entertained. No doubt experience had proved that under certain circumstances the work of legislation might be done, and well done, by a single legislative body. Reference had been made to the experience of the Ontario Legislature. He believed the Ontario Legislature had done its work in the main well, and there was no desire among the people of that Province that the Legislative Assembly should be supplemented by a second Chamber. But the circumstances of the case here were entirely different. If, however, our representation were based on a different principle, if our system of representation were something very different from what it now is, if our mode of securing a full and accurate representation of the people was more perfect than he believed it to be, there would be much more room for the argument that a single Chamber was sufficient for the necessities of the people. But, while we had the system which now obtained, but which he did not believe would be permanent, under which a majority of the people returned the representatives to this House, and while there was no attempt made to perfect a system of representation under which the people of the country would be more fairly represented, he believed a single Chamber would be out of the question. But, even if that improvement in the mode of our representation could be secured, there was still one objection, which, in his view, was quite fatal to the abolition of the Senate. He agreed with the hon. member for St. John that when Confederation was entered into, an arrangement was arrived at between the Provinces that came into the Union that they should have representation in the Senate. The federal character of our Union required that the younger Provinces which entered the Union should enjoy that representation. One object which the framers of the constitution had in view was, as they had been told on high authority and learned from the Confederation debates, that the Senate should be a sort of buttress against encroachment by the larger Provinces on the rights of the smaller Provinces. That buttress must be allowed to remain. He believed its retention was to be justified on principles of high policy; but at all events, it was sufficient for the present purpose to say that the compact had been entered into by which the smaller Provinces were to enjoy representation in a body distinct from the popular body, and that the compact must be observed.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. MOSS resumed his speech. He said he had been endeavoring when the House rose, to explain to the House the reasons that led him to believe that it would be inconsistent with the obligations under which we entered into Confederation to abolish the Senate. These considerations, he admitted, were entitled to the very greatest weight. He had always been an advocate for continuing to the Provinces every right conceded to them by Confederation. They, of course, would demand no larger rights than were conceded to them, and they should not be asked to accept less. If there was weight in the argument of the hon. member for St. John that there was in the proposal before the House something to violate the compact entered into with the Lower Provinces at the time of Confederation, he for one should be disposed not to accept the resolution, but he failed to find in it any derogation from the rights conceded to the Provinces with respect to the Senate. When that scheme was entered into, those who represented the Provinces were naturally anxious that some system should be devised for protecting the smaller against the larger Provinces more perfectly than it was supposed might be done by the ordinary procedure in the popular assembly. One of those, the House was told was the Constitution of the Senate. It was arranged between the contracting parties that Ontario should be represented by 24 Senators, Quebec by 24, and the two Maritime Provinces which then came into Confederation by 24. It was supposed, and justly supposed, that in this way a means could be had for giving to these smaller Provinces some security against encroachments by the larger Provinces. That security he was not disposed to diminish: that security the proposition before the House was not calculated to diminish, and he could not conceive on what ground a liberal gentleman like the hon. member for St. John, who professed to hold so dear the true principles of liberality and constitutionalism at the same time, could object to a proposition which relegated to the Provinces the right to determine the mode by which these Senators should be appointed. It was not proposed to take away its proportional representation, curtail its powers, or alter its usefulness for the protection of the smaller Provinces, and it could not be regarded as an infringement of the rights they hoped to enjoy under confederation. The proposition was to so amend the Constitution as to confer upon each Province the power to select its own Senators. This was an enlargement of the rights of the smaller Provinces. According to the hon. member for St. John, this House and this country were prevented forever from making such a change as this, because the preamble of the British North America Act declared that the confederation was to have a Constitution similar to that of the United Kingdom. He (Mr. Moss) supposed that meant a Constitution as similar in principle as the circumstances of the case admitted. No one would pretend that the Constitution built up under this act was similar to the British Constitution and therefore, the analogy sought to be founded on the functions of the House of Lords totally failed. But in England now-a-days we did not find that the House of Lords was that sacred thing which no man dared to touch. Even Conservatives discussed the question as to whether the House of Lords should remain as it was or the circumstances of the country did not demand an imperative change in its Constitution. The analogy of the House of Lords was totally useless, too, considering the Constitution under which we ought to live. The House of Lords was not the product of any theorizing. It was not established as it was. It did not enjoy its proper functions because the people of England thought it was the best form of a second Chamber which could be devised. A great thinker states it has no definite place and no actual power in the constitution. It had opposed every measure for the improvement of the people until resistance was impossible. It was so with the measures for the removal of disabilities from Jews and Catholics, the removal of the tax on food and knowledge, and abolishing tests in the universities of England. It resisted until resistance threatened its existence, and then it gave way. An analogy founded on this could not be of advantage to Canada. He did not object to the introduction of a reference to the British constitution. It was quite proper that the attention of this House should be directed to it, as a model which it was desirable to follow, so far as the circumstances of our country permitted. But no idolatrous idea, no notion that, because it was the British Constitution, therefore it was the best for us, should prevent this House from looking at the facts as they actually existed. He regarded the abolition of the Senate as impracticable and possibly undesirable if practicable, and that at any rate it was a proposition not likely to be entertained by the people of this country at the present moment. There arose then a second course which it was open for this House to adopt if a change were made. The Senate might be elected directly by the people of this country. They would then, he presumed, be elected as representatives of districts similar in character, but different in magnitude from the constituencies which now sent hon. members to this House. No other difference that he knew of was suggested. There might be some property qualification, though the sense of the country seemed to be opposed to that. There might possibly be some qualification of age, although he doubted whether the House would be quite satisfied that age always brought wisdom to such an extent as to render it a desirable qualification where the will of the people was to make the choice. He assumed, therefore, if the Senators were to be elected directly by the people, the same system as that which prevailed in the election of members for the House of Commons would be adopted, the only difference being in the size of the constituency. He did not hesitate to say that to this system he was entirely opposed. If that were the only mode of having the second Chamber, it would be better to do without it altogether. A Parliament thus consituted would be the expression of the people's feelings with two tongues instead of one. Could it be expected that a body chosen by the same class of electors from the same districts—in fact the aggregation of the same districts—would represent any different feelings or impulses or passions from the present House? Such a thing was impossible. It would not produce a body that could afford any of those checks or safe-guards against hasty legislation, which gentlemen on the other side seemed to think was the great object of the Senate to secure. If there was to be a second Chamber it was quite clear that it should be quite dissimilar in genius from the people's immediate representatives. They must be chosen on a different principle, and not likely to be influenced by the same impulses and sentiments as a merely popular House. There would be, as had been pointed out, the danger of a dead-lock if the two Houses were elected directly by the people. One House might interpret the popular will differently from the other. Who was to determine which House properly represented the popular will? But, it would be said, under our present constitution we might have a dead-lock. He had no apprehension of it with the Senate constituted in any way except by the direct vote of the people. For his part he would not like to be obliged to choose between the present system, which he held to be so extremely bad, and the system of direct election by the people, the consequences of which he could apprehend. There was a third scheme which had not, so far as he knew, been suggested to the House, but which had, nevertheless, some merit. It might have the great demerit of not being very practicable, but it certainly had some features to recommend it. It might be perhaps called a composite scheme by which an endeavour would be made to select members of the Senate out of different classes of persons. In the first place, we could have retired officials of high character and standing; ex-Lieutenant-Governors and retired Judges and Privy Councillors who were unwilling again to submit themselves to the test of a popular election. That would form a class of ex-officio members. In the second place, we might have some members nominated by the Crown, and, although he was himself of opinion that that was a very bad system, as he had already attempted to show, yet if it were as indispensible as some hon. members contended, it might possibly be conceded to this extent. Lastly, we might have members elected by the people or Local Legislatures. There were objections to this scheme which had been very naturally urged. Most gentlemen in the House would agree that it would be a desirable thing to lessen rather than to increase the number of Senators. Under the scheme he had mentioned it was possible that an increase of members might be necessary, and if that were the result it would be a grave objection to its acceptance. There remained then this scheme—that of election by the Local Legislatures, a scheme to which his hon. friend from Bothwell had pledged himself, and which appeared to him (Mr. Moss) most likely under our actual circumstances to work satisfactorily. It had the great advantage of being strictly in accordance with the Federal theory upon which our system was based. No man who had listened to the arguments of his hon. friend would dispute that the theory upon which our Constitution was framed was that the Provinces should exercise certain legislative, judicial and executive rights. No one who had heard him would dispute that it was part of our system of federation that the Senate should be constituted so as to afford to the Provinces a guarantee against the infringement of their rights by the central authority. If that idea were carried into practice, it must be by allowing the various Local Legislatures to send to the Senate men whom they chose to represent their Provinces. However able a Premier of the Dominion might be, however watchful he might be, he was not and could not be so well fitted to select for the Senate men who could fairly and properly represent the various Provinces as the Legislatures of those Provinces. He (Mr. Moss) was well aware of the objections made to this system. He had frequently heard it said that the moment this power was given to Local Legislatures it was in effect given over into the hands of the Premier of that Province, who would name his man, and the majority supporting him would rise up at his bidding and vote. It was said there would be no freedom of choice under that system any more than there was under the present—that the power of nominating would merely be transferred from the hands of the Premier of the Dominion into the hands of the Premiers of the Provinces. It was said, again, by those who were ready to give credit to the Legislatures for some independence of action, but still opposed transferring to them the power of electing the Federal Senators, that they would be so influenced by party and sectional feelings that it would be impossible to rely upon good men being chosen, that the majority would return men of their own political stripe, without regard to their ability or experience. There was force in the objection, and it had been pressed upon him on several occasions since last he had the honor of addressing the House. Some gentlemen regarded it as a fatal objection, but he took another view of it entirely. He held there was a simple and easy expedient for removing that difficulty—an expedient known to every member of the House, and one that had been resorted to upon a very memorable occasion in the history of Canada—an expedient which would ensure the minority of the Legislature a fair representation in the Senate. That expedient was the one resorted to in this House on the occasion of choosing a committee to investigate certain grave charges against Ministers of the Crown, and but for it no one could expect that the hon. member for South Bruce and the hon. member for Napierville should have been chosen as two out of the five who composed that committee. This mode was perfectly adaptable to the choice of Senators by the Local Legislature. Suppose, as an example, that New Brunswick had to send five Senators, and the Local Legislature had the choice, the majority upon this principle might send three and the minority two. It would thus be seen that there was no foundation for the argument that the election would be in the hands of the majority.

Mr. BOWELL — Suppose that only one Senator were to be chosen.

Mr. MOSS said he knew that in that event they could only have an election by the majority, but that would only occur in the case of a vacancy by death or resignation. However, he would just as soon, considering all the circumstances, leave the choice to the majority of the Local Legislature in any of the Provinces as to the gentleman who might happen to be Premier of the Dominion. The possible difficulty of Senators being chosen unfairly, not incidental to the plan, on the contrary, they would more fully and fairly represent the sense of the people in these Provinces than it would be possible for men to do who were merely the choice of the Premier of the Dominion. He had heard this question spoken of as involving a great constitutional change ; he had heard that it was tearing up the roots of the Constitution. He (Mr. Moss) failed to see that we were entering upon any such grave task. The House was not being asked to assert that the constitution of the Senate should be changed, except as to the mode of appointment. It was not being asked that the powers of the Senate should be enlarged or abridged. It was not being asked that their constitutional mode of action should in any way be altered. All that the hon. member for Bothwell suggested to the House was that the mode of appointment at present was not a proper one, and that there were modes open for adoption, by which we could more certainly attain the objects which the framers of the Constitution had in view when they determined upon the establishment of a second Chamber. He had heard, too, that the House was being asked to adopt the Constitution of the United States, and that every one who favored a change of the existing system looked for a model to the other side of the line. He, for one, repudiated that insinuation. He did not look in that direction for his model, but he held himself as free as the framers of our Constitution to take from it any suggestion which appeared practicable. If he and those who agreed with him proposed to make our Senate similar to that of the United States, if it had been proposed to confer upon them similar powers, if it had even been proposed to confer upon them powers which they did not at present possess or to take away any function which they exercised now, there might be some foundation for this charge. Not only was the question of the mode of appointing Senators a proper one for the members of this House to consider, but it was their bounden duty to consider it, and to see whether the system in force at present was the best possible, or whether it would not be better, inasmuch as the Senate was considered to be the guardian of the smaller Provinces against the encroachments of the larger, to place that power more extensively in the hands of those Provinces. He was not afraid to submit this question fairly to a good many members of the Senate itself. He did not suppose that any one intended to interfere with the vested rights of the present incumbents. He had no doubt that they did their best to perform their duties faithfully. The materials were such as would not lead one to expect the results to be very great. Nevertheless, he repeated they had been faithful in the discharge of their duties to the best of their ability. He would not go the length of saying that all the gentlemen who had been appointed to the Senate had been capable legislators, but to the extent of their capability they had done faithfully. But the fact that they had done their best to discharge their duties did not prove that a change in the mode of the Constitution of the Senate would not be to the benefit of this country. It did not appear to him that this was a question that should have the slightest party tinge or that it involved any party differences. He could not conceive why gentlemen who held strong Conservative opinions—whatever that might mean now-a-days, unless they believed that whatever is, is best—should not be prepared to consider the question of whether or not some better mode than the present could be devised for constituting the Senate ; and a fair consideration was all he believed that the hon. member for Bothwell sought. If the House should decide to go into Committee on the resolution then no doubt his hon. friend would explain in detail the means that had occurred to him as likely to procure the result which he (Mr. Moss) believed a large majority of this House and of the country desired, namely; that of improving the present Constitution of the Senate.

Mr. CASEY referring to the argument of the member for St. John based upon an analogy between our Senate and the House of Lords pointed out that these two bodies were not at all analogous either in their origin or their constitution. The House of Lords originated in no special legislation as did our Senate. It arose from the old Council of the Kings, the hereditary nobles of the country and originally the natural advisers of the king. The members of it held their seats not by virtue of nomination by the Crown, but in virtue of their descent. A part of that House it is true were nominated by the Crown, namely, the spiritual peers, but as these held their seats by virtue of their holding certain ecclesiastical positions, it might be fairly said that no portion of the House of Lords were nominated directly to their legislative positions by the Crown. Then the members of this body received a special, social and educational training for their bright positions, as they knew from their earliest youth that they would in time be called to take their seats in the House of Lords. The same could not be said of our Senators. They went through the same political and party training as did members of the Commons, and that training was not of a kind to make them independent, either of the government of the day or of the gusts of popular feeling. In fact, the appointments to the Senate were exactly of the same class as the appointments to any other salaried position in the gift of the Government. They were rewards of party zeal, or of the influence which the persons receiving the appointments may have exercised or will be able to exercise on behalf of the Government of the day, and the same kind of evils which were connected with the system of making appointments to the civil service for political considerations existed with reference to appointments to the Senate, though in a much greater degree, as the position was higher and the duties more important. If he might be allowed to give his own opinion of what position the Senate should fill under the Federal system, it would be that that body should not only be a check on hasty legislation, but should be a mediator between the various Provinces and between the provinces and the federal power, In order that it might be a check upon hasty legislation, it might be sufficient if its members were elected for a longer term than the members of the Commons; but in order that it should be in a position to act as mediator between the Provinces, it should be the representatives of the different Provinces and not of constituencies. Senators nominated by the Government of the day were not necessarily representatives of their Provinces, but might, on the contrary, be entirely opposed to the prevailing sentiment in their Provinces. On the whole, he approved of the plan suggested by the mover of the resolution for which he would cast his vote. Referring to the case cited by the member for St. John, in which the Senate had defeated a Bill sent up by the Lower House, namely, the Tuckersmith Bill, he thought the hon. gentleman had selected a most unfortunate illustration, because, if there was any subject upon which the Commons might be supposed to have full control it was one which related to its own constitution.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin), approved of having a Second Chamber, but thought that some better mode than the present should be devised for constituting it. His idea of the functions of the Senate were those of a revising body, as a sort of appellant body, where questions could be decided in a judicial spirit. Then with reference to those who should be called on to perform those functions, they should be men of large experience and great learning, and men who were familiar with the principles of constitutional Government. The next question was how were these men to be selected. He proceeded to discuss the different modes suggested, namely, the nominative system, the elective system, and the system of election by the Local Legislatures, and pointed out the advantages of the latter system. We had a right to ask the Imperial Parliament to revise our Constitution, the Imperial Parliament being the highest authority to which we could appeal. There was nothing in the proposition of the hon. member for Bothwell which was contrary to responsible government, as understood under the principles of the British Constitution. The allegation that any change made in the Constitution was revolutionary fell to the ground, because he found that such changes were often made in England. Although the framers of our constitution had determined the Senate would be nominated by the Crown, it afforded no reason why, if further experience and knowledge obtained since that time satisfied us that a change was required, that change should be made. It would be a very dangerous principle to adopt in legislation, if as soon as an Act of Parliament was passed adopting a certain principle, no change could be made, however much it was required. He believed there was a growing feeling prevailing in the country that a change was necessary in the organization of the Senate; the question was one which pressed itself on the attention of the House.

Mr. WALLACE (South Norfolk) said that some of the hon. members who had taken part in the debate had forgotten that we are part of a monarchy and have a Sovereign. It was calmly proposed by the resolution on the table to change the mode of constituting a body which was equal to this House, a power which the House did not possess. He had always believed that Senatorships were the rewards of merit, similar to the creation of Peerages in England. Peers were created for services rendered in the field or in Parliament. Sir HUGH SMITH and General NAPIER having been raised to the Upper House for military services, while HER MAJESTY offered a peerage to M. DISRAELI for his political services. Take away from the Crown the right to appoint to the Senate, and what means remained by which the Sovereign could recompense a Canadian subject for his service to his country. Titles were not in accordance with the genius or spirit of this people, and this right taken away nothing was left. It was incorrect to say that the representation of this country was based on population. It was based on property or income. There were no two constituences having a population alike, and therefore that could not be the basis of representation. It was also a mistake to speak of the sovereignity of the Provinces of this Dominion. There was no such thing; all the powers the Provinces possessed were delegated to them. They legislated within limits fixed by the Imperial Parliament. The Senate had been spoken of as a safe-guard against the encroachments of the larger Provinces on the smaller. He did not understand how such encroachment was possible. No burden could be imposed on one that did not fall on the other. The only way this House could impose on them was by not giving them a proper share of the public expenditure, but that was a matter over which the Senate had no control. It would be a difficult matter to prevent conflicts from arising between the two Houses, but the House of Commons could at any time stop the supplies which they controlled. If the Senate were made elective, did any one suppose that the seventy or eighty members elected to that body would be better representatives of the people than the 206 members of this House? Or did any one suppose that the 206 members of the House of Commons would submit to be controlled by the 80 Senators if the latter were elected by the people? He looked upon it that the Senators were not to represent public opinion, but were to exercise judicial powers. He held that Senators who held their position for life were more independent of the popular will than the Commons, and, therefore, more likely to give a calm and unbiassed judgment on questions affecting the public mind. Therefore, he thought it better that they should be nominated as they were now, and that they should be elected as representatives of the people. There would be little difference between elections by the Local Legislatures and elections by the people directly. The majority supporting the Government of the day would elect their candidates. He regarded this resolution as a sort of want-of-confidence motion. It implied a doubt as to whether the Ministry would do justice. It had been asserted that the Senate was a useless body in legislation. He denied that. He held that many members of the Senate would be ornaments to this House or any other legislative body. There were gentlemen there who had taken a prominent part in public affairs for years, and who had breathed political being into many members of this House who had been disparaging that honorable body. He did not think it was wise in this House to depreciate the other branch of the Legislature. But, it was said, they had retarded legislation. Well, this House was responsible for that, in losing time in long debates in the early part of the session and rushing Bills through without giving them proper consideration. Would that be an argument for doing away with this House? If the Upper Chamber had not given as much attention to these measures as they ought to have done, it was the fault of this House. But hon. members should remember that measures were debated in this House before they were sent to the Senate, and they did not, therefore, require to be so thoroughly discussed in the Upper Chamber. He was opposed to the resolution, because he felt, if this right of appointing to the Senate were taken away from the Crown, there was but one link remaining connecting this colony with the Sovereign, and that was the appointment of the GOVERNOR GENERAL. For thse reasons he would vote against the resolution.

Mr. APPLEBY said this proposition to change the Constitution should be considered with great care, and he would hesitate very much before giving his assent to it unless an agreement were made with the several Provinces and the Imperial Parliament for such a change as would not shock the political feeling of the Dominion at large. A question like this should be approached with very great delicacy, and he presumed the hon. member for Bothwell merely intended to have a full discussion on his resolution in order to prepare the country for a plan to be submitted at a future day. He had been told that some members of the Senate were very much offended at some of the remarks made last year during the discussion on this question. He regretted this, and believed that this matter could be discussed in a gentlemanly manner so as not to give offence to any one. If there was weight in the arguments used in favor of this resolution, he held that there was patriotism enough in the other House to vote themselves out of existence. It was assumed that our Constitution was modelled after the Constitution of Great Britain. Under that Constitution the people of Great Britain had prospered, and grown, reaped as much happiness and attained as high a standard of civilization as any other nation, but it did not follow that this was precisely the form of Government which was suited to this country. The Constitution of Great Britain grew up out of conditions and circumstances of the people which did not exist here at the present day. In the Mother Country there were the House of Commons and the House of Lords, the former representing the great mass of the people, the latter the nobility and the great landholding interests of the country. There was, therefore, a necessity for two Legislative bodies. In this country there was no such state of affairs. We had no nobles, earls, lords, or dukes. It was true we had a few knights, but though they were remarkable men, there was no particular necessity that they should be represented, especially as they were past middle age, and, the feeling of the country being against titles, there would be few, if any, more created. Having no lords, there was no necessity for a House of Lords, It was a well known principle that when the reason for a law ceased to exist, the law itself should also cease to exist. In this country there was no necessity for a second body, except to put a check on hasty legislation. If we were to have a second Chamber, which he did not think the country required, let us have it established on more common sense principles than it was based on to-day. It should represent the sentiments and ideas of to-day. We did not get such representation in the present way of constituting the Senate. He believed the present Senate was an abler body than it was likely to be 25 years hence under the present system, Senators being appointed for life. When the hon. member for Bothwell brought in his Bill he would be happy to give it his humble support.

Mr. BLAIN did not agree with the remarks made towards the members of the Senate at present in that body. He believed the Senate, as a whole, was perhaps the ablest body of men, considering its numbers, that we had in this country. There were some of them on whom the hand of time was now pressing, but there were very many of them very able and talented men, who had occupied the first positions in this country, and he, for one, disapproved of remarks made by some hon. gentlemen as affecting members of that House. Nevertheless, he felt it his duty to say that he believed the people of this country were not satisfied with the manner in which that House was at present constituted. They desired a change, and the only matter to be discussed was how that change was to be brought about. The only way was to petition the Imperial Government to amend the Constitution, and we could point out the manner in which we believed it should be done. He disapproved of the election of Senators by the Local Legislatures. They all knew perfectly well the difficulty the people of the United States had through this system. When our own Constitution was framed that difficulty was provided against by giving this House control in conflicts arising between the Federal and Local Legislatures. He did not feel disposed to interfere with that. He believed there should be a central power, and if we were to build up a great nation here, as he believed we were some day, that central power should be held here. It was proposed that the separate provinces should declare how the Senators should be elected. In other words, there would be a power thrown into the hands of the Local Legislatures which would be equal to the power enjoyed by this House. That is, they would constitute one-half of the legislative body of this Parliament. We stood in an entirely different position from the people of the United States. New York State, with four millions of people, elected only two Senators; Quebec, with one-fourth of that population, elected 24. There would be no analogy whatever between the manner in which Senators were elected in the United States and the practical working out of the system proposed by the present resolution. Then, again, it did not appear on the face of the resolution whether it was intended there should be a uniform rule in the various Provinces. Ontario might adopt the plan of allowing the people to elect the Senator, while Quebec might elect them in her Local Legislature, and New Brunswick and Nova Scotia might adopt different rules. Now, if we were to make any alteration at all, we should settle upon one which would be applicable to the Dominion. What was proposed here was that this matter should go to the respective Provinces to be dealt with by them in whatever manner they might think fit. He did not approve of that. There were different modes, of course, by which the Senate might be constituted. If we wanted to carry out the analogy of the Imperial House of Lords, the Senate should be constituted so as to represent property in this country. There must be a different franchise from that under which members of this House were elected. Another mode which might well be tested here would be to give, for instance in Ontario where twenty-four Senators are elected, each elector twenty-four votes, and allow him to poll them for whomsoever he pleased. That would be the minority system, and would be entirely different from the franchise for this House. But in any event the Senate should not be constituted in the same way as this House. With the present representation Ontario would have three Senators for eleven members of the Lower House, Quebec three to eight, and Nova Scotia five to nine. The territorial limits of the constituencies that would elect them, would therefore be on an entirely different basis, and require a different system. If he did not very greatly mistake the meaning of the resolution, he could not vote for it in its present form.

The House then divided, when the resolution was carried on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Archibald,	Lajoie,
Borron,	Landerkin,
Barthe,	MacDonnell (Inverness),
Béchard,	Macdougall (Elgin),
Bernier,	Mackenzie (Lambton),
Blake,	Mackenzie (Montreal),
Bourassa,	Maclennan,
Bowman,	McCraney,
Campbell,	McDougall, (Renfrew),
Carmichael,	McIntyre,
Cartwright,	McIsaac,
Casey,	McKay (Colchester),
Cheval,	Metcalfe,
Church,	Mills,
Cockburn,	Moss,
Coupal,	Oliver,
Cushing,	Paterson,
Dawson,	Pelletier,
DeCosmos,	Pouliot,
Delorme,	Power,
De St. Georges,	Pozer,
Dymond,	Richard,
Fleming,	Ross (Middlesex),
Flynn,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Fournier,	Ryan,
Galbraith,	Rymal,
Gibson,	Schultz,
Gillies,	Scriver,
Gordon,	Shibley,
Hagar,	Sinclair,
Holton,	Smith (Peel),
Horton,	Stirton,
Huntington,	St. Jean,
Irving,	Taschereau,
Jette,	Tremblay,
Jodoin,	Trow,
Killam,	Yeo,
Laflamme,	Young—77.
Laird,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Appleby,	MacMillan,
Aylmer,	Masson,
Baby,	McCallum,
Bertram,	McDonald, (Cape Breton),
Biggar,	McLeod,
Blain,	McQuade,
Borden,	Mitchell,
Bowell,	Moffat,
Brouse,	Monteith,
Brown,	Mousseau,
Bunster,	Murray,
Burpee (St. John),	Orton,
Burpee (Sunbury),	Ouimet
Cameron (Cardwell),	Palmer,
Caron,	Perry,
Casgrain,	Pickard,

Cauchon,	Platt,
Cimon,	Plumb,
Coffin,	Ray,
Costigan,	Robitaille,
Currier,	Roscoe,
Desjardins,	Ross (Durham),
Domville,	Rouleau,
Farrow,	Scatcherd,
Ferris,	Skinner,
Flesher,	Snider,
Forbes,	Stephenson,
Fraser,	Thibaudeau,
Gaudet,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Gillmor,	Thompson(Haldimand),
Goudge,	Thomson (Welland),
Greenway,	Wallace (Albert),
Hall,	Wallace (Norfolk),
Harwood,	White,
Kirk,	Wood,
Lanthier,	Wright (Ottawa),
Little,	Wright (Pontiac)—74.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Young in the chair.

Mr. MILLS said the course he intended to pursue was the same as he had taken last year under similar circumstances. The House had committed itself to the principle that a change was desirable in the Constitution of the Senate — there could be no doubt about that proposition. The House had affirmed that the Constitution of the Senate was inconsistent with the principle of our Federal Government, and some change should be made which would give to each Province the appointment of its Senators. It was now for the Committee to decide what shape could be given to that proposition. He submitted last year for their legislation a series of resolutions for the purpose of giving effect to the principle which had just been affirmed. He intended to pursue the same course on the present occasion. He did not desire to proceed more rapidly than public opinion indicated that Parliament should proceed, and he had no intention of pressing the question to the extent that the Government should be bound to take it up in the meantime. It was highly important in all constitutional questions that we should proceed with deliberation, and that the people, whose representatives the members of the House were, should have the opportunity of discussing the various changes proposed, and of pronouncing upon them. He proposed to submit to the House a general scheme by which our Constitution could be amended, a scheme which provided that the number of Senators appointed on the existing principle should be reduced in proportion as the present members died, so that there might be no interference with vested rights. In order that the House should have the fullest opportunity of considering his proposal, he thought that in the meantime, the set of resolutions which he had framed should be printed; and he therefore moved that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON admitted that the hon. member for Bothwell had gained a very great victory, but suggested that as there were at least seventy members absent, the vote was not fairly representative of the opinions of the majority of the House. The majority was only three. When the House was so nearly divided, he thought the hon. gentleman should not persist in pressing his resolution before the committee, but should give an opportunity for public opinion to mature.

