M. CIMON: — Avant la 3me lecture de ce Bill, j'aimerais à demander à M. le Ministre du Revenu de l'Intérieur ce qu'il entend faire au sujet de l'inspection du bois à l'Est de l'Ile d'Orléans. A la 2me lecture l'hon. ministre a demandé son Bill en faisant disparaître la 4me sous-section de la Section 46 du Chap. 46 des Statuts Refondus du Canada. C'était précisément cette partie du Statut qui a toujours exempté tous ceux situés à l'est de l'Ile d'Orléans de l'opération de la loi. Je lui avais fait demander par le député de Northumberland si l'intention de rendre obligatoire, de faire inspecter et marquer le bois dans cette partie du pays à l'Est de l'Ile d'Orléane. L'hon. Ministre a répondu que ce n'était que dans le cas où il y aurait des difficultés entre le vendeur et l'acheteur. C'était fort bien. Mais plus tard, en examinant le Bill, je me suis aperçu que le Bill rendait pour plusieurs personnes la chose compulsoire. Quels sont ceux qui sont exemptés? Il n'y a que ceux qui sont de bonne foi producteur ou qui ont de bonne foi manufacturé ce bois, qui peuvent l'exporter par l'océan sans avoir rncours à un officier du Gouvernement. Par exemple, dans le comté que je représente, il y a des commerçants qui font chaque saison quelques milles de madriers, qu'ils vendent à la maison Price. La raison pour laquelle ce bois n'a jamais été inspecté, c'est qu'il était impossible d'avoir, sans exposer les bâtiments à des retards assez longs, dues cullers, surtout à une si grande distance de Québec; les retards étaient trop longs. Le député de Charlevoix est intéressé non pour lui-même, mais pour ses constituants, comme je le suis moi-même pour le comté que je représente, à ne pas obliger ces commerçants à faire inspecter ces bois et j'espère qu'il se joindra à moi dans cette occasion pour obtenir l'objet de ma demande.

L'hon. M. CAUCHON :—L'hon. membre croit-il que des exceptions doivent être faites partout où le même cas se présente? L'hon. membre a l'air de travailler pour un tel ou un tel, tandis qu' il s'agit ici de travailler pour tout le monde, et s'abstenir de faire de législation exceptionnelle.

M. CIMON :—L'hon. membre est lui-même un sujet d'exceptions, et il a soutenu les Gouvernements d'une manière peu exceptionnelle. Ce n'est pas dans l'intérêt de la maison Price, mais dans l'intérêt public, dans l'intérêt des petits commerçants dont j'ai parlé, qu je demande au Ministre de l'Intérieur de retrancher de la loi l'obligation de faire mesurer leur bois. Car ce sont eux qui subissent le préjudice ; ce sont eux qui seront retardés par les inspecteurs et qui souffriront si leur bois ne peut être mesuré et livré à temps à la maison Price pour être exporté. L'hon. député de Québec Centre n'a pas le droit de suspecter l'intention des jeunes membres.

L'hon. M. CAUCHON : — Oui bien jeune !

M. CIMON :—Car je pourrais dire que plusieurs jeunes membres en le voyant dans cette Chambre pourraient être justifiables de travailler pour un intérêt particulier.

L'hon. M. CAUCHON :—L'hon. député est trop sensible, on dirait qu'il se sent coupable. Je ne dis pas qu'il travaille pour ceux qui l'ont élu ou qu'il est intéressé. Mais je dis qu'on ne peut faire une législation différente pour chaque endroit ; une législation pour Montréal, une législation pour Ottawa, enfin une législation pour toutes les parties du pays où il se fait du bois, car il y a des petits commerçants de bois dans chaque endroit. On ne peut pas faire de législation exceptionnelle. Du reste, la loi n'est pas obligatoire. Elle l'est seulement quand l'acheteur l'exige. Il serait bon que dans tous les cas l'inspection fût faite, afin d'éviter les résultats qui proviennent de la pratique contraire.

Mr. McDOUGALL (South Renfrew) moved that the Bill be not now read a third time but that it be re-committed for the purpose of amending the 6th clause by inserting the word "fees" after "salaries" and erasing all the clause after "proper." This amendment, he said, was not all that the lumbermen desired, but, at the same time they thought it was not too much to ask the Government to accept it. They believed the Government should not commit themselves to pay fixed salaries, so that between this time and the season for culling lumber, they could consider the matter before deciding whether to pay the cullers fees or salaries. He agreed with the general provisions of the Bill, and he believed that it was important to the lumbermen that it should not be thrown out.

Mr. GEOFFRION had no objection to accepting this amendment.

Mr. CURRIER approved of the clauses bringing this office under the immediate control of the Inland Revenue Department. He maintained that it should be the privilege of the lumbermen since they had to bear the expense, to have something to say as to the mode of paying the cullers, and the footing on which they should be placed. The very worst mode of paying them was by salary. Hitherto they had been paid by fees, but there was the objectionable rotary system. This should be done away with and the men should be paid by fees.

Mr. ROCHESTER said this Cullers' Office was established in order that both buyer and seller might have equal justice done them in the Quebec market. It was not intended that the Government should derive any revenue from the office, but simply that the lumbermen should pay the cost of culling. That being the case he did not see why the Government should insist on paying them by salary instead of by fees. If paid by salary, the men would no doubt, have regular working hours ; if paid by fees, they would work early in the morning and late in the evening, resting during the heat of the day, and would thus be able to do their work more efficiently. He wished to know if clause 8 referred to sawn lumber as well as to deals.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said it was the 24th clause of the Consolidated Statute of Canada, and if sawn lumber did not come under that, clause 8 would have no reference to it.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said as deals were mentioned it might be construed to include battens. He would suggest, therefore, that the words "sawn lumber" be added to "lumber."

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said that was unnecessary. The Government did not intend to interfere with all these details of the law. It was the old law which had never been complained of and was therefore adopted unchanged. The intention of the Government was merely to bring the office under the control of the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. ROCHESTER was quite satisfied with the Bill after this explanation.

The motion was carried and the House went into committee to make the amendment.

The Bill was reported as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

On the motion for the third reading of the Bill,

Mr. CURRIER moved in amendment "That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike out the word salaries in the 6th clause."

Hr. HAGGART seconded the amendment, which was declared lost on a division.

Mr. CIMON then moved in amendment "That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred to Committee of the Whole with instructions to strike out the first section, and the 4th sub-section of section 46." He simply desired, he explained, to record his protest against the provision. He had desired explanations from the Minister of Inland Revenue regarding the proposed changes, but the hon. gentleman had never been kind enough to make those explanations. The measure as it stood was against the interests of the lower portion of the Province of Quebec, and he felt confident the hon. Minister would have regretted the changes made so much that next session he would be glad to withdraw them.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION thought if the law was considered good for the upper portion of Quebec and for Ontario, it ought also to work well in Lower Quebec. The House at least was entitled to hear the reasons for which the amendment was asked. The hon. gentleman complained that he had not been given explanations on the Bill. He (Mr. GEOFFRION) had explained the Bill to the House several times.

M. CIMON :—A Montréal et dans le Haut-Canada le bois est exporté aux Etats-Unis, et les dispositions de la loi auxquelles je réfère ne s'appliquent pas dans ces cas là. Mais la loi s'applique seulement aux bois exportés par l'Océan. Les producteurs et les manufacturiers, de bonne foi, peuvent eux-mêmes exporter par l'Océan leur bois, sans avoir recours aux inspecteurs (cullers) du Gouvernement ; mais ils ne peuvent exporter le bois qu'ils achétent manufacturé, sans qu'il ait été au préalable mesuré et inspecté par un " culler" du Gouvernement. Voilà la loi que M. GEOFFRION fait appliquer aux comtés de la côte Nord et du Snd, en bas de l'Isle d'Orléans. Or il y a, dans ces endroits, un nombre de personnes qui font 4 à 5 mille billots, et plus, scient ces billots à leurs moulins, et vendent le bois manufacturé aux grands marchans, par exemple, à la maison PRICE. Ils ne peuvent, comme de raison, exporter 8 à 10 mille madriers. Or ces grands marchands ne pouvant exporter ce bois sans qu'il ait été inspecté par un officier du Gouvernement, diront : Nous prendrons votre bois si vous pouvez le faire inspecter à temps par un officier du Gouvernement. Donc tout le fardeau de cette loi tombe sur les petits commerçants. Ces officers du Gouvernement résident à Québec, il y aura retard dans l'inspection de ce bois. En conséquence, en outre des droits payés pour ces officiers, ces petits marchands seront exposées à ne pouvoir livrer ce bois que l'année suivante.

The amendment was declared lost on a division, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SALARIES OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

On motion of Hon. Mr. FOURNIER, the Bill to provide for the salaries of County Court Judges in the Province of Nova Scotia was read the third time and passed.

SICK AND DISTRESSED MARINERS.

On motion of Hon. Mr. SMITH, the Bill respecting the treatment of Sick and Distressed Mariners was read the third time and passed.

DOMINION LANDS IN MANITOBA.

On motion of Hon. Mr. LAIRD, the Bill respecting the appropriation of certain Dominion Lands in Manitoba was read the second time.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE the Bill respecting certificates to Masters of inland and coasting ships was read a second time.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE the Bill respecting defective letters patent and the discharge of securities to the Crown, (from the Senate) was read a second time, passed through Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BLAIN in the chair), read a third time and passed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE the Bill to extend to the Province of Manitoba the Act for the more speedy trial in certain cases of persons charged with felonies and misdemeanors in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec (from the Senate), was read a second time, passed through Committee of the Whole (Mr. PELLETIER,) and reported.

MARINE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPHS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the second reading of the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill to regulate the construction and maintenance of Marine Electric Telegraphs.

Mr. BOWELL said before taking concurrence on this Bill he desired to call the attention of the House to a particular clause which the Senate had amended, and to move an addition to that amendment. We had in passing this Bill affirmed the principle of interference with what the Anglo American Company considered its vested rights; but that was not the point before the House. He thought that in doing away, as this Bill proposed to do away, with the present monopoly we should be cautious not to establish a second monopoly. He understood that this Bill provided that the direct company which claimed the exclusive right to land their cable in Newfoundland, when they surrendered that right to other companies or competitive companies.

Mr. MACKENZIE wished to know if the hon. gentlemen proposed to make an amendment to the Bill, because that could not be done. The amendments must be to the Senate amendments, they could not enter upon further amendments to a Bill that had passed the House.

Mr. BOWELL said that he had anticipated that objection, and had consulted upon that point the Librarian, who was considered the best authority in the Dominion, and he had been informed that it was quite competent for the House to alter, change, amend, reject or adopt any amendment which might have been made to the Bill by the Senate. There had been cases in the Imperial Parliament where a Bill, although adopted by the Lower House, had been changed in the Upper House, and those changes amended again. If they would consult the authorities they would find that it was within the competency of this House to add to any amendment made to a Bill after it had gone from this House to the Senate. He would read from May, (page 523) as follows:—

"If one House agree to a Bill passed by the other, without any amendment, no further question or discussion can arise upon it; but the Bill is ready to put into the commission for receiving the Royal assent, If a Bill be returned from one House to another with amendments these amendments must either be agreed to by the House which had first passed the Bill, or the other House must waive their amendments, otherwise the Bill will be lost. Sometimes one House agrees to the amendments with amendments, to which the other House agrees. Occasionally this interchange of amendments is carried even further, and one House agrees to amendments with amendments, to which also the first House in its turn agrees."

Mr. BLAKE said if the hon. gentleman would read the sentences immediately following he would find these words:—"But it is a rule that neither House may at this time leave out or otherwise amend anything which they have already passed themselves; unless such amendment be immediately consequent upon amendments of the other House, which have been agreed to and are necessary for carrying them into effect. And if an amendment be proposed to a Lords' amendment, not consequent on or relevent to such amendment, the question will not be put from the Chair." This Bill having been passed unanimously in a certain shape, any amendments by the hon. gentleman would have to be consequent upon the Senate amendments, or we would be amending our own Bill. It was proposed to obviate the prospective monopoly which was not a consequence of the Senate amendments, and the adoption of such an amendment would be an amendment of our own Bill, and would be an interference with the Bill that was not at this stage admissable. The Senate, in its amendment, had provided that the question of compensation should be against the Dominion of Canada, and should be triable upon petition of right. Another amendment was that the third clause of the Bill as they passed it should not come into effect until three months' notice had been given in the Canada Gazette. Another amendment was to strike out a clause because a monopoly might have been possible. The hon. gentleman thought a monopoly might be created by the junction of all the companies created in the Bill; but no amendments were made in the Senate which could produce a monopoly, as the object of one of their amendments was to prevent such a result.

Mr. BOWELL said he would read his motion, and he thought the House should be careful not to do anything which might by any possibility create a monopoly. He moved that the following be added to the amendment made to the 14th section of the "Act to regulate the construction and maintenance of Marine Electric Telegraphs" immediately following the words "Canada Gazette," in said clause :—"Giving notice at the same time that said other company has stipulated with the Government that the rates for the transmission of messages will not be greater than those charged at the date of said notice by the existing companies." He did not suppose if by the passage of the Bill as amended the Anglo Company were driven from the shores of Nova Scotia, the Direct Company which claimed the right of landing cables upon those shores would be in a position to charge just such rates as they please for any communication with Europe ; but on the other hand, if the Anglo Company elected to accept this Bill, and continue their communication from the shores of Nova Scotia they must of necessity give the right to other companies to land their cables upon Newfoundland. What he desired to prevent was that in case this course should be pursued by the Anglo Company, there should be no combination between the companies by which they might land their cables upon the shores of Nova Scotia, and charge any rate they pleased

Hon. Mr. BLAKE contended that this was not an amendment to the amendmement. It was nothing relevant to it, but was for another object altogether.

Mr. BOWELL asked if this House was restricted to simply accepting or rejecting amendments made by the Senate ?

Mr. SPEAKER said it would be quite open to the hon. gentleman to move that six months be inserted instead of three months, or that the notice appear in several other papers instead of in the Canada Gazette, but this was not fairly an alteration of the amendment of the Senate. It was quite a new thing.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE hardly thought this House could even insert six instead of three months.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE thought the rule was that this House could not amend the Lords' amendments. They might either agree, or disagree with them, or insert anything necessary to given them full effect.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said this House could amend any portion of the Lord's amendments just as they could amend any portion of the Bills sent there from the Lower House.

The amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. BOWELL asked to have this ruling put upon the Journals of this House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved that the word " three" before the word " months" in the 14th section be struck out, and " twelve " be substituted therefor. He presumed no question would be raised as to the propriety of this amendment. It was evident that the Bill was not amended in the Senate without the necessity and justice of it being seen. If it was advisable that a three months' notice should be given, he thought a little consideration would show the House how entirely inadequate that term was for the purpose for which it was provided ; and how necessary it was for the House to adopt the amendment which he proposed. It would be difficult to imagine any body of gentlemen or any company in any part of the civilized world having greater claims upon the consideration of an enlightened Parliament than the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. They had accomplished that which for years many of the most eminent scientific men in the world believed to be utterly impossible. They had expended in giving that which was invaluable to the two hemispheres—the means of annihilating both time and distance in the communication between the two countries. It would be impossible for any man to grasp the immense service that had been performed for the world by this company. They had expended an amount of capital which was almost incredible. When the first cable was laid, it was found in a short time that the means of communication had died out, and it was feared that the prognostications of scientific men that it would be impossible to sustain electrical communication between the two continents for any length of time were realized. But when an enormous amount of capital had thus been been sunk literally to the bottom of the sea without an appearance that any portion of it would ever be recovered ;

when the experiments that had been tried for the restoration by this cable had utterly failed the capitalists of Great Britain were still equal to the occasion. Notwithstanding the enormous amount of money that seemed to have been utterly and uselessly expended, they came forward and supplemented it with fresh capital as no other capitalists in the world would have done. They succeeded, and the whole civilized world were electrified and delighted to learn that their efforts had been attended with success. If there was any company that had a claim, not only for justice, but for the most liberal consideration, it was the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. This measure was only now beginning to attract notice, and it was time for the House to wake up to the fact that its object was not to get rid of a monopoly, but for the purpose of substituting one monopoly for another. It was a proposition to sweep away all the rights and privileges enjoyed by men who had laid the world under tribute by the munificent manner in which they had subscribed their capital for the accomplishment of a great work. But there was another important consideration. If there was a country that was under a moral obligation to preserve the credit and good name of the country by keeping good faith with those who had invested their capital within its boundaries, that country was Canada. We have a great country, abounding in natural resources which only required foreign capital to develop it, and therefore this question above all others required careful and deliberate consideration in this House, 6,000 British capitalists representing £6,000,000 sterling were interested in this Bill. Could this country afford to have every enterprise, however, sound and substantial that was originated in Canada, and that had to go to England, the great money market of the world for capital—could Canada, I say, afford that these capitalists should feel that it was unsafe to invest their money, because they could not rely on the good faith of the Legislature of the Dominion being kept? If this Bill were passed it would not only interfere with the rights of men who deserved most liberal treatment at the hands of this Parliament, but it would strike a most fatal blow at the most vital interest of the Dominion. It was well known that the Legislature of Nova Scotia had given this company the right to land their cable in that Province. This Bill proposed legislation such as he was bold to say no legislation in any other part of the world could parallel. It was proposed by an Act of this Parliament to declare that the rights and privileges given by another and a different country to certain capitalists should be surrendered or abandoned, or this House would use the power it had to coerce and compel this company into the abandonment of those rights. Parliament was asking the company to surrender the right and privilege it possessed of exclusively laying cables in Nova Scotia, a right not only conferred by the Provincial Legislature, but strengthened by an occupancy during twenty years. Under these circumstances he felt that if the House did not exercise care as to the action it adopted, Parliament would expose itself to the imputation in the minds of that great body of capitalists in Great Britain, and of every intelligent man in that country, that it was not safe for them to invest money in Canada on the faith of a Canadian Act of Parliament or the Act of any Government in this Dominion. But the proposed legislation was not only objectionable in that point of view, but there was no necessity for it. The island of Newfoundland did not exclusively belong to Great Britain, a portion belonging to France. At St. Pierre the company could land cables without any legislation by the Canadian Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE objected to the hon. member discussing the principle of the Bill at that stage, when he was speaking to a motion to make a verbal amendment in the Bill as sent down by the Senate.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that the hon. member for Cumberland was out of order in attacking the essential features of a measure which had already passed the House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER, refrreing to the amendment which he had submitted, reminded the House that the Senate had declared that Parliament must not interfere with the Company's privileges, without giving it due notice, and that notice should be twelve months. The Senate had thought that three months would be "due notice," but during that time the company would have to take up cable to the value of one million pounds sterling, which was one of the most difficult and expensive operations, and if the notice were given in December it would be practically no notice whatever. He regretted that this important subject had not received full consideration at an earlier period of the session, but even at this late stage, he would appeal to the sense of justice, if not of fair consideration, of hon. members on both sides of the House, to extend the time from three months to twelve months.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not intend to say anything on the merits of the Bill, but I am bound to notice one or two statements which the hon. gentleman made before I was compelled to stop him by appealing to the Chair. He said we were compelled by regard for the honor of the country, and by regard for our own securities to adopt a certain course. Now, the hon. gentleman has been attempting to decry a monopoly, and at the same time became the advocate of a monopoly himself. The hon. gentleman knows that company is not bound to take up its cable. He knows perfectly well that they have connections entirely independent. He knows it, for he was a member of the committee before which Lord HAY stated distinctly that they were thinking at various times of taking up the cable with Nova Scotia and making another connection. Not only so, but he gave it to understand that the company's privilege was a very small one. If the company should make any attempt to influence the value of the securities of this country. I shall know where the responsibility for that will rest. I say this deliberately I say that the threat has been made that the hon. gentleman has indicated to-day in his speech; nevertheless, I am glad to be able to state, notwithstanding the threat, that has been made by this monopoly to be avenged because we passed a measure of public utility, our securities never stood so high as it stood yesterday on the London market.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I am quite sure the First Minister will allow me to say that this is the first intimation I have received that such a threat was indulged in from that quarter—I never heard any statement of the kind before. My remarks were based solely on my judgment as to the effect of the proposed legislation.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I was about to say that this movement of the hon. member for Cumberland to obtain twelve months instead of three months time was confessedly made in the interest of this monopoly which this Bill is framed to destroy. It is a public Bill—has been maturely considered in this House—I made a long speech on introducing it, citing fully all the facts connected with the company; it has been considered in committee and accepted by the representatives of this company in committee, and it passed unanimously. And yet it is now attempted by a motion of this kind practically to defeat its object! The amendment is one, I feel sure, that the House will not for one moment entertain.

The amendment was then lost on division.

The amendments by the Senate were afterwards read a second time and concurred in.

It being six o'clock, the SPEAKER left the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS BILL.

On motion of Hon. Mr. FOURNIER, the Bill to amend the Act respecting Controverted Elections was read a third time and passed.

SHIPMASTERS' CERTIFICATES.

On motion of Hon. Mr. SMITH (Westmoreland) the Bill to amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships, was read a second time.

THE PILOTAGE ACT.

On motion of Hon. Mr. SMITH (Westmoreland) the Bill further to amend the Pilotage Act, 1873, was read a second time, and the House went into committee thereon—Mr. DYMOND in the chair.

Mr. MCKAY (Cape Breton) said as many pilots were in the habit of proceeding for a time for the purpose of "speaking" vessels as to whether they should come on board, some indications should be given by the master as to whether their services were required or not. Otherwise it was a hardship to pilots to find after they had sailed eight or thirteen miles that they were not wanted. A simple remedy could be provided. If masters would exhibit a triangular flag at their fore, pilots would not require to "speak" those vessels, and they would save going perhaps eight or ten miles. It seemed to him unjust to the pilots that their interests should not be considered to a certain extent. They were a class of men who were an absolute necessity upon some of our coasts, and if legislation was only for the benefit of our ship-owners and ship-masters, those hardy classes would have to resort to some other means of earning a livelihood.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton) called the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that in the district of Sydney, Cape Breton, the Commissioners of Pilots were also pilots. They were two out of the five, and had everything in their own hands. He had written to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries about the matter some time ago, as it was a state of things he desired to prevent.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said if he had received a letter he must have overlooked it; but if the hon. gentleman would address him again he would have the error rectified.

The Bill was reported, read a third time and passed.

THE INSOLVENCY ACT.

On motion of Hon. Mr. FOURNIER the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Insolvency Bill and amendments—Mr. IRVING in the chair.

On the second clause,

Mr. McISAAC suggested that in the second clause the words "Supreme Court" be struck out, and "Court of Probate" be substituted. In Nova Scotia it was uncertain whether the County Courts would be organized, and it would be exceedingly inconvenient to carry all the insolvency cases to Halifax.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER was sorry he was not able to accept the amendment. He was satisfied that the Bill now before the Nova Scotia Legislature to repeal the Act establishing County Courts in that Province would not pass, and that the proclamation of the Governor in Council would soon be issued organizing County Courts.

Mr. McISAAC—In that event there would be nothing lost by adopting my amendment.

Mr. KILLAM hoped the Minister of Justice would see fit to accept this amendment. Nova Scotia might as well be without an Insolvency Law at all as to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court alone. Even when the County Courts were established, if they were to be established, there would not be a Judge in every county to try these cases.

Mr. MILLS said the Probate Judges were officers of the Local Government, and it was objectionable to impose duties on them while there were other Judges for the purpose.

Mr. GOUDGE said there was a great deal of uncertainty as to whether the County Courts' Bill would go into operation or not, but should it fail, the Province would be practically without Judges to administer the law. As far as his own experience went the Judges of Probate were very competent men—quite competent to discharge the duties devolving upon them under the law, and therefore he hoped before this clause passed the Minister of Justice would make some provision whereby in case the County Courts should not be organized, there would be some tribunal besides the Supreme Court to try cases under this law.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER hoped the suggestion of the hon. member for Antigonish would commend itself to this committee. A law was passed by the Legislature of Nova Scotia a year ago, providing for the appointment of County Court Judges in that Province. That law contained a clause which required a proclamation of the Governor in Council in order to bring it into operation, and though a year had transpired since the passage of the law, that proclamation had never been issued. On the meeting of the Legislature a short time ago, a Bill was introduced to repeal it. Of course it was impossible to say what the fate of that Bill would be. The Minister of Justice asserted that he had been advised that the Bill was certain to be defeated, and it would be in the power of the Governor in Council to bring the Bill into operation by proclamation. There were no County Courts in existence in the Province. Seven County Court Judges had been provided for by the Local Legislature, on the ground that the Supreme Court was so overworked that it was not able to do the judicial work of the Province. Until these County Court Judges were appointed, this Bill would throw all the work it involved on the already overworked Supreme Court Judges. But that was not all. Until the County Court Judges were appointed, parties living 200 miles away from Halifax, where the Supreme Court Judges resided, would be placed in the greatest possible difficulty, cost and inconvenience in carrying out the provisions of the Bill. He hoped, therefore, that some means would be taken to provide for the trial of these cases if the County Court Judges should not be appointed.

Hon. Mr. VAIL was so satisfied that the Bill to repeal the County Courts Bill would be rejected that he did not think it necessary to provide against the contingency suggested.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE did not attach much importance to the prospect of the County Courts not being established, but he thought that inasmuch as the Probate Judges were now Judges of insolvency cases, it would be as well to leave them jurisdiction until the County Courts were established.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that although the Government had no official information on this subject, he was semi-officially informed that the Bill now before the Nova Scotia Legislature would not pass, and that it was intended to bring the County Courts Bill into operation immediately.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER accepted the amendment which was accordingly made, and the clause was passed.

Clauses 5 to 20 inclusive were passed without discussion.

On clause 21,

Mr. WOOD desired an amendment to be inserted to provide for giving notices to creditors by advertisement in cases where debtors absconded and took with them their books and papers.

The section was amended by adding the following words :—"In case the Assignee is unable to obtain such list, then ten day's notice shall be given by advertisement in the local papers."

Mr. MACLENNAN called attention to section 19, and moved that a provision be made for the registration of assignment, by adding to the clause the following words :—"And in the Province of Ontario such copy may be registered without any other proof than the certificate of the Assignee or Clerk as aforesaid."

Mr. KIRKPATRICK thought that clause was beyond our power as we could not alter the Registration Laws of Ontario.

Mr. MACLENNAN said the same objection would apply to our deciding the forms of conveyance. He thought we had the same jurisdiction to provide for the registration of the deed as the form of it.

Mr. PALMER did not think there was anything in the objection of his hon. friend from Frontenac ; and he did not think the amendment was necessary at all.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE considered the objection was worthy of consideration, and suggested that it be held over for another day.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER was understood to argue that the proposition could be carried into effect.

Mr. PALMER admitted that the question of registration of deeds was a civil right, entirely within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature ; but as this was one of the subjects abrogated to this Parliament we must necessarily have power over those subjects ; and if it were not so Parliament might be blocked any time by the local laws, as his hon. friend from Frontenac would see. Suppose the Local Parliament had a particular form of transfer, would his hon. friend say that no assignment in insolvency would be valid simply because it had not local registration. He thought it would be enough for this Parliament to say that a certain thing must be done.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said there was no doubt whatever that Parliament had jurisdiction in insolvency, and they had jurisdiction to make their disposition of that subject effectual. The question was whether it was necessary to exercise these powers ; whether we should provide that an estate should go in a particular way for a particular purpose. It might be necessary that we should provide a form of conveyance ; but the question was whether it was a necessary incident of that power that we should provide a peculiar mode for the registration of instruments, and so encroach upon the method the local law provided.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK thought it was sufficient for us to say that the deed should be registered and leave it for the local laws to say how.

The amendment was lost.

The 23rd to 26th clauses were adopted.

On the 27th clause,

Mr. PALMER said a very important matter was before the committee as to whether Official Assignees were to be appointed by the Government or elected in the old way by Boards of Trade, and also as to whether they should reside in the county or district in which was the principal place of business of the insolvent. All over the country there were officers who had had considerable experience in this business under the old law, and if fresh persons were appointed we should lose a great deal of valuable experience. In New Brunswick he had heard no complaints against a single Assignee from one end of the Province to the other, and he supposed that observation would apply to every portion of the Dominion, but of that of course he could not speak positively. He would move that the appointments be made as formerly by the Boards of Trade of the district, or by the nearest Board of Trade to the place where the appointment was to be made. He did not, however, propose to have appointments made exactly as before. In every district in New Brunswick they had only one Assignee. In Ontario he understood several Assignees had been appointed to one district. He thought that was a mistake, and that it had probably led to trouble. He thought there should be only one Assignee for each district or county or division.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) thought the 27th clause one of the most important in the Bill. He thought the Official Assignees should not be appointed by the Government at all, but that Sheriffs should be made ad interim, Assignees with such restrictions as the Government might see fit to adopt, and then the creditors themselves could make the appointment of an assignee. We should simplify this Act as much as we possibly could, but he felt we were making it far worse than before, and instead of simplifying it were making it more complicated.

Mr. LAFLAMME moved in amendment—"That in the districts of Quebec and Montreal the Governor in Council may appoint one person or several persons to act as an Assignee or Assignees, or as joint Assignees for one or more electoral divisions, as the Governor in Council may determine." He said that this amendment arose from the fact that the districts of Montreal and Quebec comprised such a large territorial division that it would be almost impossible to have the Act well executed in those parts if the duties were assigned to one Assignee or a joint Assignee, who would in fact amount to only one Assignee, because when two men were appointed as joint Assignees they required joint sureties, which would lead to confusion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) thought there was, no doubt, force in the objection of the hon. member. He thought it was objectionable to have a joint Assignee at all. He was opposed to having more than one Assignee in a district on account of the difficulties that would be occasioned by the securities; as in the case of a joint Assignee being appointed one man might become responsible for three men, and these complications would embarrass the estate. He understood from the Government in committee that the appointment of Assignees was a point upon which they were not disposed to yield, and that it was a principle of the Bill they desired to maintain. He differed entirely from the hon. member for Leeds with respect to placing an estate ad interim in the hands of the Sheriff, for they were not always business men who should have the administration of a large estate. He thought an Official Assignee appointed by the Government, and selected for his business qualities, would probably be a much better administrator until the creditors met, and put the estate into the hands of a man of their own choice. He was quite willing to vote for a proposition to that effect.

Mr. DOMVILLE thought it was a capital plan for the Government to appoint Official Assignees, and he objected entirely to a majority of the creditors or a clique appointing their own Assignee. That plan never worked well, and if the Government would assume the responsibility of appointing an Assignee that Assignee must do his duty, and if he did not we would have the Government to fall back upon. If the creditors, or a clique of the creditors, appointed an Assignee, and he did not perform his duty they had no one to hold responsible at present. The great object of too many Assignees was to get an estate, and to pocket all the fees they could, and then wind it up. The consequence was that in many instances the interests of creditors were almost wholly or even entirely neglected. The Official Assignees appointed by the Government ought to be persons of responsibility and ability with such a staff as would enable them to put matters straight and be a go-between the creditors and debtors.

Mr. BROOKS approved the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and desired that the district of St. Francis should be added. He desired that the Assignees should be appointed as heretofore, but as he understood the Government had insisted upon making the appointments themselves he would submit to that desire. He thought by that method only responsible persons would be appointed Assignees. He would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice whether in the appointment of those Assignees they would recognize the Assignees in the different districts who had held that office heretofore, and who had some claims to receive the appointments that might be made in future.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the Government would certainly consider the cases of every one of those who held office; but could not pledge themselves as to whether they should be Assignees or not.

Mr. DEVLIN said he sincerely hoped the Government would dispense with the services of a great many who were employed in that capacity; and the country would be grateful to the Government if they did so. He quite agreed with the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and hoped his amendment would be carried.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) said if the Government insisted upon pressing this clause of course it would be carried. He moved in amendment that the 27th clause be struck out, and that the Sheriff be Official Assignee within his county or district.

Mr. McKAY (Cape Breton) was sure there were many instances in which the Sheriffs of the different counties would not be thoroughly up to their work. He thought that the interests of the creditors would be safer in the hands of the nominees of the Government than if they were selected without regard to the capacities of the person throughout the country simply because they held positions. He also objected to the appointment of Assignees by Boards of Trade inasmuch as they did not always exercise the best discretion, but when the Government made selections they could be held responsible for the appointment of competent men. For these reasons he was satisfied that the best course would be to leave the appointment of Assignees in the hands of the Government.

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON said there would be little capital to be made with the commercial community by the possession of the power of appointing Official Assignees. There was no one case in twenty in which the ad interim Assignee would not be dismissed by the creditors.

Mr. WOOD concurred in this opinion, and was quite satisfied to take the Bill with the amendment as it stood now.

The amendment of Mr. JONES (Leeds) was lost on a division.

Mr. PALMER did not agree with the hon. member for Shefford, but held that these appointments were of considerable importance. He believed Boards of Trade were more likely to make good selections than the Government; because it was likely the fruits of bad management would come out of their own pockets, many of the members of the Boards of Trade in such instances being interested as creditors. It was of vast importance that a person interested in the particular district in which insolvency occurred should be appointed, and none were better fitted to make such appointments than Boards of Trade. He therefore moved in amendment to the 27th clause "That the person shall be appointed in every county or district in which the court is held, by the Boards of Trade in such county and district, or the nearest to such county or district who shall reside in such county or district to act as Assignee for such county or district."

The amendment was lost on a division and the clause passed.

Clauses from 28 to 42 were passed without discussion.

Clauses 43 to 57 were carried without discussion.

On clause 58 Mr. DEVLIN said he understood the clause was discussed by the Special Committee that it would not be submitted to the House in its present form.

Mr. WOOD—It was carried in the Committee.

Mr. DEVLIN said he knew how it was carried. The clause was at first refused, but some gentleman found there was not a quorum, and on the following day a majority was found to support the clause. The President of the Montreal Board of Trade and other gentlemen of large mercantile influence spoke strongly against it, and characterized the clause as a most unjust one. It provided that insolvents must pay 33 cents on the dollar, or they would not obtain a discharge. Traders were to be forced into insolvency by the act of their creditors. Their estates were taken possession of by the creditors, and yet the debtors were to be responsible for the mismanagement which followed whereby an estate which was worth 100 per cent. above the claims against it would be so reduced as to leave a very small dividend. Notwithstanding this arrangement debtors were to be deprived of a discharge if they could not pay 33 cents on the dollar. He submitted that such legislation would most unfairly press on those who would become the subjects of the Insolvency Law, and he, therefore, called the attention of the committee to the danger which accrued from placing that clause in the Act. He regarded it as an act of tyranny of the very worst kind, and he hoped the House would reject a clause which exposed men to be made bankrupt for ever, no matter how honest they might be.

Mr. NORRIS fully concurred in the remarks of the hon. member for Montreal Centre. He believed that if every bankrupt had to pay a dividend of 33 cents on the dollar, there would be very few discharges granted, because the class of people who would take advantage of the Act were those whose goods would not bring 50 cents on the dollar if put up for sale, and after the expenses of the Assignee and other officials were deducted there would not be sufficient dividend to secure a discharge.

Mr. PALMER thought the hon. member for Montreal Centre had not carefully read the clause to which he referred, which stated :—"Whenever it appears that the estate of the Insolvent has not paid or is not likely to realize for the creditors a dividend of thirty-three cents in the dollar on the unsecured claims and sufficient account is not given for the deficiency, the Judge or Court may in his or its discretion suspend or refuse altogether the discharge of the Insolvent." Three things, therefore, had to occurr. First, a bankrupt had not to pay 33 cents on the dollar; in the second place his estate was not likely to realize that dividend; and in the third place he had not to give a sufficient account for the deficiency. The only object of this section was, therefore, to leave the fact of not being able to pay 33 cents on the dollar, a question to be discussed before the Judge that he might require a better account of the deficiency. It was a matter of great importance that the debtor should understand they should seize his business before two-thirds of their estate had been squandered and they were unable to pay the dividend set forth in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the clause as it stood with other provisions of the Bill, was not satisfactory. He thought when they did not give the debtor the opportunity of going into insolvency, the House ought to be very careful how they imposed a barrier to the discharge of the honest debtor. His opinion was that the Insolvency Law ought to give facilities for a trader who was embarrassed to go into insolvency at the earliest possible moment, and also to make provision for his paying a certain dividend on his estate, unless some unfortunate accident should have reduced it. He admitted there were cases in which a sudden disaster, such as a conflagration or failure of a house, in which he was entirely dependent, might bring a man below any mark which Parliament might please to appoint, but in ordinary conditions if a debtor were allowed to go into insolvency he ought to be obliged to pay a reasonable dividend. He advised the hon. member for Montreal to bring up the question on concurrence, when the SPEAKER was in the chair.

Mr. WOOD said he felt the importance of pecuniary embarrassment, and thought if his business was falling off he should consult his friends as to the propriety of going into insolvency, at the same time laying a statement of his affairs before them. With this clause hanging over him he would be more likely to adopt that course at an earlier period of his difficulties than he would be inclined to do if he was not compelled by the Act to pay a certain dividend. The debtor was required under the Act to account before the Judge for his deficiency before he could obtain a discharge in the event of his paying less than 33 per cent. dividend, and the power of deciding on these cases was, therefore, left in the hand of the Judge. The 58th was a very salutory clause, and he hoped it would be preserved in the Bill.

Mr. DOMVILLE moved that the clause be amended by striking out 33 cents and inserting 50 cents. He said he moved the amendment because it would meet the views of a large body of merchants and bankers if not of the whole of them. No hardship would be involved by placing the dividend at that amount because discretionary power was placed in the hands of the Judge. If a man had been unfortunate and had been overtaken by a calamity the Judge would give him his discharge, but on the other hand if the amount of the dividend was placed in the Act at 33 cents, that would be the highest amount ever paid by the debtors : and he desired the clause to be so framed that Parliament would not be giving a premium to debtors for paying a small dividend. It was an axiom in business that every debtor should submit a statement of his affairs to his creditors if they did not show 75 cents in the dollar ; and surely, therefore, Parliament would not be doing too much in compelling debtors to pay at least 50 cents.

Mr. OLIVER quite agreed with the hon. member for Montreal Centre that if a trader was unfortunate and was compelled by his creditors to go into insolvency, and thus place his estate entirely under the management of his creditors, it was not advisable that Parliament should fix the amount of dividend that should be paid. The present Bill was framed in the interests of the wholesale merchants of this country, and not in the interests of the retail merchants, for the former had power to put their customers into insolvency whereas the latter class had not that power because their creditors were generally non-traders and consequently outside the provisions of the Act. The law was therefore entirely in the interests of the wholesale merchants, who had two classes of customers ; one was the independent retailer who met his paper at maturity, and who was not afraid of the merchant and who could go to the markets of the United States or Great Britain with every confidence to purchase his supplies ; the other class was subject to the operations of the Act, and were the poor traders of Canada, and this 33 cents on the dollar had been fixed by the wholesale merchants and Boards of Trade because they knew that they could afford to take once in every five years a dividend of that amount. The independent trader could buy goods at 5 or 10 per cent less than those who were not independent, and it was nothing but reasonable to come to the conclusion that after a very nice calculation they had found that they could afford to receive every five years a divident of exactly that amount. If the unfortunate trader was unable to pay 33 cents dividend the Judge had the power to refuse him a discharge, whereas an insolvent who could pay only one cent more could obtain a discharge in spite of any action taken by the Judge. If Parliament should decide to give relief to the unfortunate trader, then the more unfortunate he was the more entitled he was to the sympathy of the people, and to relief, and this clause ought not to be so limited in its operations. If insolvent estates were managed in the future as they had been in the past, the Bill would not benefit unfortunate traders because there was not one in twenty who would be able to pay the dividend specified, and the Judge, therefore, would not give him a discharge. He submitted that the clause fixing the dividend should be removed from the Bill, and that then unfortunate traders would have the power to go into insolvency themselves.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked if the hon. member meant to say that a dishonest debtor who got rid of his property and would not account for it to his creditors should obtain a discharge.

Mr. OLIVER said the operation of the law would tend to make men dishonest. He did not mean to say that the Bill applied to dishonest traders, but Parliament was about to leave debtors in the hands of one man in each district, and if a trader had a misunderstanding with a Judge and become bankrupt the Judge might refuse him a discharge if he could not pay a dividend of 33 cents. He regretted the committee had been composed of 10 wholesale merchants and 17 lawyers.

Mr. BUNSTER dissented from the view that so much discretion should be placed in the hands of the Judges as to state whether or not a debtor who had paid less than thirty-three per cent. dividend should obtain a discharge or not. What this country wanted was not a cumbrous Bill like this, but plain, simple legislation, so that farmers and the public generally could understand the law without the aid of lawyers. He gave great credit to the hon. member for Montreal Centre, who, in the face of his professional friends desired the clause to be struck out, and it was certainly in the interests of this country not to leave a decision of this kind to any one who might possibly have had a difficulty with the insolvent. The proper method to deal with the question was to strike out the clause altogether. If any unfortunate debtor could not obtain his discharge in Canada he would follow his 500,000 fellow Canadians to the United States, and yet this country would continue to pay heavy amounts to promote immigration. He had no doubt the House would strike the clause from the Bill.

Mr. DEVLIN called the attention of the committee to the words "or is not likely to realize," and asked who was to decide as to whether an estate was likely to realize the legal dividend or not, for the value of the estate might change within a few months. He was not prepared to place the liberty of the subject to the whim and caprice of a Judge.

Mr. GOUDGE said that while he did not go so far as the hon. member for Montreal he thought the clause ought to be made more distinct, and might be made so easily by stating that a dividend of thirty-three per cent. should be the proposed value, because many of the assets were eaten up by expenses, and would not realize the fixed dividend after all the expenses were paid.

The amendments were withdrawn and the clause was carried on a division.

The following clauses to the 79th inclusive, were passed without any discussion.

On clause 80,

Mr. MACLENNAN said he had an amendment to propose for the purpose of enabling certain unliquidated claims to be proved in insolvency. Under the existing law there were certain claims of a mercantile kind which could not be proved, but which, he thought, it was desirable should be entitled to proof. He had mentioned this matter in committee, but the Minister thought it would be better brought up in the House. In 1861 the Insolvency Law of England was amended in the respect in which he proposed to amend the present law. In the existing law of England it was retained, and it was also a provision in the Insolvency Law of Ireland passed in 1872. He would best explain the object of the amendment by an illustration. For example, if a trader were to give to a miller 10,000 bushels of wheat upon a written agreement that in return for it he should not have cash, but a certain number of barrels of flour. If the miller should fail, the person who gave him the grain would not be entitled to prove his claim in insolvency, and the very grain which the vendor had given to the miller, though perhaps not yet ground, would be part of the estate and go to pay the other creditors, while the vendor would receive not one single farthing. Cases of that kind had occurred in Ontario, and it was very desirable that such cases should be met. He moved that the following clause be inserted :—"Demands in the nature of unliquidated damages arising out of contracts, expressed or implied, entered into before the commencement of insolvency proceedings, shall also be provable against the estate of the insolvent; the claim of such damages and the amount thereof shall be determined in the usual manner or by the Judge either with or without the intervention of the jury, under such orders as may be made under authority of this Act. Provided that the winding up of the estate shall not be delayed to await proof of such demands, and provided that such demands shall not be affected by the discharge under this Act unless or until the claims shall have been paid the same dividend thereon as the other creditors."

Mr. GORDON said this was a case not likely to occur often. He had had a good deal of experience in the wheat trade and met very few cases of the kind referred to. If there was anything which should be discouraged more than another, it was giving credit on wheat transactions, and he thought sufficient relief was given under the Bill otherwise without inserting a special clause in this way.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said he had not changed his mind on this subject, and could not entertain the proposition. No doubt damage had been suffered by some parties, but instances of the kind were not so numerous as to make a clause of this kind advisable. The commercial community had made no recommendation of that sort. The Government had received recommendations from all the Boards of Trade, but not one of them had made a recommendation to this effect.

Mr. MACLENNAN regretted that the Minister of Justice did not see fit to adopt this suggestion. He hoped to bring this matter up at a future stage of the Bill.

The clause was carried.

The following clauses to the 92nd inclusive, were passed :

On the 93rd clause,

Mr. LANGLOIS said this clause was adopted from the old law, and related to the contestation of claims. It provided that they should be decided by the Assignee himself, acting as Judge. The Assignee was to examine witnesses and render a decision, from which an appeal could be taken either before a Judge or Court. There was no provision in the Bill to provide before whom the contestation should be made and who should render a decision. He moved that after the words "consenting thereto," in the 44th line, the following be added : "shall be adjudicated upon by the Judge in the manner and form by him directed."

The amendment was adopted and the clause as amended was carried.

The remaining clauses in the Bill were passed without discussion.

The 22nd clause was changed so as to provide that the creditors at their first meeting should elect one of themselves as chairman, and that at all subsequent meetings the Assignee should be chairman.

The preamble and forms of the Bill were adopted, and the Bill reported, and the amendments read the first and second time.

On the question of the third reading it was suggested that the hon. Minister of Justice had some changes for the first clause.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said those who were interested in this clause would do well to consider it carefully. In Quebec they had long had an exact legal definition of what a trader was, but in the other Provinces that was not the case. The Quebec Act had worked very well. He would have no difficulty in making some slight changes.

The House then adjourned at 11.30 P. M.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Wednesday, March 24th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills were introduced and read the first time :—

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT (in the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries)—To amend the Fisheries Act.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER—To amend the Act passed in the 32nd and 33rd year of HER MAJESTY'S reign, Chap. 21, entitled an Act respecting larceny and other similar offences.

THE EXPORT DUTY ON OAK LOGS.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, the House went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. FORBES in the chair) on a resolution declaring it expedient to repeal the export duty on stave, bolts and oak logs.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked for explanations with regard to the measure.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said its object was to repeal the export duty on stave bolts and oak logs. He was informed that all the gentlemen of the lumber persuasion at Ottawa were favorable to this doctrine. Otherwise he would not have introduced it.

Hon. Mr. POPE said there were other gentlemen whose interests should be consulted well as the exporters of oak logs. He did not see why the export duty should not be removed from spruce logs as well as from oak logs.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) said the principle that had been fought against last session was introduced in this Bill, but in a modified degree. They were endeavoring to build up the manufacturing interests of this country, and he was decidedly opposed to the exportation of the raw material from Canada to enrich foreign industries. He believed this country was in the infancy of its manufactures, and they should be encouraged. He thought it was the policy of this country, if we wished to preserve to ourselves the material industries of the Dominion, that the exportation of the raw material should be deprecated. It should be manufactured in Canada so that the country might get not only the value of the material itself, but its manufactured value also. He hoped this House would not consent to the removal of duty from oak logs. or from any kind of logs.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) said the producers lost nothing in this country by this duty. The foreigner who exported the logs had to pay the duty, and he agreed with the member for Pontiac that we should continue the duty. He would therefore oppose this Bill.

Mr. WRIGHT (Ottawa) said the hon. member for Pontiac represented, so far as he was aware, the views of not one single gentleman in the trade of Ottawa. He (Mr. ALONZO WRIGHT) had introduced Mr. CHARLTON to the lumber men of Ottawa, and they consented to his very reasonable proposition to remove the export duty from oak logs, which would not affect this section in the slightest degree, while it was in the interests of the section represented by the hon. member for North Norfolk.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said this was not, by any means, a novel proposition. It had been referred on at least two occasions to committees of this House, and a good deal of evidence had been taken with reference to it. It did appear that this export duty affected the interests of the section of the country adjacent to Lake Erie, and a good deal of valuable timber was destroyed because the owners could not take it to the United States, the only market for it, without paying an export duty. For these reasons the Government had assented to the introduction, though, he was bound to say, they were given to understand there would be no opposition to the measure.

Hon. Mr. POPE said the Eastern Townships stood in exactly the same position with respect to spruce logs, and he was sure the lumbermen of Ottawa would have as little objection to the removal of the duty on one kind as on the other kind of logs. It would be a great advantage to the people living along the frontier of Quebec if spruce logs could be exported free of duty. In many instances it had to be burned up, yet the duty had been exacted in all instances. Were the residents of the country adjacent to Lake Erie to be relieved of a duty which was continued on the residents of the Eastern Townships? He had presented to the Government, from twenty-four mill owners of the section he represented, a petition asking some protection, and stating that the country was being so depleted of raw material that they were obliged to shut down, and since then more than half of them had closed their mills from this cause.

Mr. CHARLTON said the section he represented was more deeply interested than any other part of the Dominion. The county of Norfolk had paid three-fourths of those export duties, and had never received any return for the exceptional burden imposed on them. It had been a sort of special tax levied on that county. Last year he had interested himself in this matter and called for a committee to give it due consideration. The report of the committee was adverse to the continuance of the duty. He found that many of his friends in Ottawa feared that the removal of the duty would work against their interests, and, consequently, he forebore to press the measure during that session. Recently he had an interview with the leading lumbermen in this city, and made a certain proposition to them, with regard to the abolition of duty on stave bolts and oak logs. There was no opposition to that from any one of them. The whole of the export duty on these two items was less than $2,000 last year. He did not ask the removal of duty from spruce logs, or pine logs, or shingle bolts, but merely from stave bolts and oak logs, which were principally exported from Norfolk. He held that the owners of logs had the right to select the best market they could find. A mill owner had no right to have a special tax levied for his benefit. By removing the export duty on stave bolts the settler would be enabled to utilize timber which was otherwise almost useless, and he would thus be able to obtain means for procuring comforts which would aid him in overcoming the difficulties with which he was surrounded. With respect to oak logs, there was no export trade except on the shores of Lake Erie, and that did not amount to one million feet, board measure, per annum. The duty imposed was $2 per thousand feet, and the revenue was therefore very small. The measure proposed was satisfactory to all lumbermen who had been consulted, including those of the Ottawa Valley, and he hoped it would be allowed to pass without further cavil or comment.

Mr. COLIN McDOUGALL said his constituents desired him to ask that the duties should be repealed. He sincerely trusted the Government would carry the measure which they proposed to introduce. The best interests of the trade would be served thereby.

Mr. PALMER said that the imposition of the duties was a hardship upon manufacturers in the Maritime Provinces. The manufacturers of carriages and railway cars had to import their oak and pay taxes that foreign manufacturers who competed with them did not have to pay. It, therefore, operated as a discrimination against our own manufacturers. He hoped that the Finance Minister would add a few words to the Bill which would abolish the duties, which amounted to a very small sum. The Maritime Provinces could not obtain from Western Canada the goods required in the manufacture of carriages, as the cost of transportation was more than the value of the article. They were, however, compelled to pay duty on a foreign article.

Mr. SCRIVER thought the measure proposed did not go far enough, and regretted that the hon. Minister had not, when taking a step in the direction of repealing the duties, gone the length of proposing the abolition of import duty on all kinds of timber. He agreed with the hon. member for Compton that there was no reason whatever if the duties were to be rescinded on certain qualities of timber; why they should not be abolished on all. The operation of the law affected very much the frontier townships in Quebec, where there was a very large amount of spruce timber. This country ought to give every support to the pioneers who went and settled on its waste lands, and manufacturing industries should not be bolstered up to their injury.

Mr. MACKENZIE BOWELL was surprised to hear the Hon. Finance Minister state that the result of the Investigating Committees, that had been appointed on different occasions to inquire into the effect of the repeal of the export duties on lumber, had come to an unanimous decision. If the repeal of the duties proposed was necessary for the material growth and prosperity of the county of Norfolk, he would prefer that its operation should be confined to that county and the neighborhood, rather than that it should extend to other portions of the Dominion. There were not many oak logs exported from the central parts of Canada, but there was a large export trade in stave bolts, and if Parliament repealed the export duty upon them, the repeal of the duties on shingles, bolts and saw-logs would follow. If the measure were passed, the mills that had been erected for the manufacture of staves and shingles along our shores, and particularly in the district in which he resided, would be compelled, as they had been on a previous occasion, when the duties were removed, to take away their machinery and re-erect their mills on the other side of the line. The American lumbermen, who owned extensive limits in Ontario, would find it to be to their advantage to bring the logs down along the shores and boom them, and watch for an opportunity to take them across the lakes, and the slabs which were of no use in this country but for fuel, would more than pay the expenses of transport. The result would, therefore, be that our manufacturing operations in a large degree would be transferred to the mills of Oswego and along the frontier. He did not hold free trade views, but believed it was the duty of Parliament, even if it were necessary to impose exceptional duties, to do everything possible to build up the industry of the country, and not to drive our raw material to the United States to be manufactured, thereby increasing their population and wealth at our expense. For these reasons he objected to the repeal of the duties upon even staves, bolts, and oak logs. Lumbermen, like other classes of the community, were very magnanimous when to be so did not cost them anything. The lumbermen of the Ottawa region had no oak timber to export, nor did they export stave bolts, and as the measure would not, therefore, interfere with their trade, he could easily understand the magnanimity of the Ottawa members in concurring in the proposition of the hon. member for Norfolk. If, on the other hand, it had been proposed to abolish the duties on saw logs, he suspected they would have entertained different views.

Mr. WRIGHT (Ottawa) said one would think from the debate that the whole object of legislation was the protection of saw-logs. He thought the Ottawa lumbermen were as keen and sharp business men as would be found any where in the community; and they had been brought into contact with the hon. member for North Norfolk, and after considering the whole matter had given their consent to the proposition, which he thought was a very moderate one, and worthy the consideration of the House. He considered the matter was a purely local one, and even though it did affect his hon. friend from North Norfolk, it was worthy the consideration of the House, and he would give the proposition of the hon. Minister of Finance his support.

Mr. CURRIER said he had been consulted about the matter by his hon. friend from North Norfolk, and had consented to to the proposition, but he had expressed his regret that the Government should be asked to remove the export duty upon any class of lumber, though it was quite time that there were not oak logs in the Ottawa Valley to be exported. He thought every inducemeut should be offered for manufacturing lumber in this country, as the Americans were sharp enough to put a duty of $2 per thousand on sawn lumber and admit logs duty free, so as to encourage dealers to float logs down the Ottawa and up to Lake Champlain, there to be manufactured and to compete with our sawn lumber with the disadvantage of $2 per thousand.

Mr. McCALLUM did not consider the resolution went quite far enough, as he thought the export duties should be removed altogether, because then a great deal of timber would be exported that was fit for nothing else but burning. When a farmer went to clear off his land, he could get out a good deal of swamp elm that could be manufactured into stave-bolts if he could get a market, and this would be supplied by the removal of the export duty of a dollar per cord on stave-bolts. The Government sold these lands to the people of Norfolk, and in many cases they mortgaged their land to pay the Government, and the Government put on the export duty, and by that means made them pay for the land the second time. The people calculated to pay for the land with the sale of the timber, and the removal of the duty would help to give them a market. As it was, the settlers were compelled to burn a great deal of timber for which they could not get a market. If they wished to put a duty upon any timber it should be upon oak timber, because we have less of it than any other kind of timber. He thought the Government should go a little further, and include saw-logs of all kinds.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) said he was somewhat astonished at seeing the lumbermen of the Ottawa valley supporting the removal of the export duty on oak logs and bolt-staves, because he considered that policy was most suicidal for their own interests; and he was glad to learn that the hon. member for Ottawa City, although he had given his assent to the proposition, had done so reluctantly, and he presumed it was with the idea of preventing the hon. member from Norfolk proceeding the same length as the hon. member for Monck, and asking for the total abolition of all export duties. He held the principle that we should endeavor to encourage as far as we possibly could our home manufactures. He believed it would be a great advantage to the Ottawa Valley if the trade in square timber were materially reduced; and he would be glad to see the day when not one stick of square timber should be sent to Quebec and thence to England, to be manufactured there. He considered it would be in the interest of the country if the square timber trade were abandoned, and the manufacturing done at our own mills, and he hoped to see the day when we should manufacture everything that is made of wood in the Dominion of Canada. He did not believe that either the abolition or the imposition of the export duty would have the effect of damaging the interests of farmers. He believed that lumber was required on the other side, and that we did not pay the duty at all, but that the consumer paid it. Whether we imposed a duty or not would not in his opinion make the slightest difference in the amount exported from Canada, but it would make a difference to the amount manufactured in Canada. If they wished to remove the wooden manufactures from the Dominion and reinstate them among our neighbors, we would be doing that by taking off the export duty. We knew what they had done to the United States, and when they would not give us an advantage why should we throw off an advantage, and give it to them by the removal of the export duties.

Mr. McDOUGALL (South Renfrew) said although he was interested in the Ottawa Valley lumber trade, which was large and important, he thought there were some other interests in the country besides lumber. He believed that although lumbermen should be sufficiently sensitive to their own interests to see that no disadvantage and no injury was done them, they ought to be willing to admit the rights of other industries and of the same industry in other parts of the Dominion. Before they argued that it was unjust to remove the export duty on oak logs and stave-bolts, and keeping the interests of the lumberman in view, they should show some reasons whereby the removal of that duty would necessarily involve the removal of the duty on pine. It was not enough to say that the removal of the duty on oak logs and stave-bolts would draw attention to and produce the removal of the export duty on saw-logs. It would be time enough to defend it and discuss it when some person asked its removal, or the Government brought down a proposition to remove the duty on pine logs. He thought the proposed removal of the duty would have the effect of enabling persons who certainly had as much right as any lumberman to sell lumber they could not now dispose of. It would enable the people of this country to get a large amount of money that could not now under any circumstances be brought into the country, and he thought in any case where such a reasonable proposition as that was shown it should not be opposed by any one who claimed to be a Canadian. It was the duty of this Parliament to see that all the interests of this vast Dominion should have an equal chance when they come before Parliament. He thought there could be nothing more injurious to the lumbermen—as it was injurious to every other interest—than the fact that when anything comes up in this House the invariable cry should be raised by those engaged in lumbering that it might affect their interests. Instead of doing that they should show directly how this matter would affect the interests of the Ottawa Valley.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he entirely dissented from the principle laid down by the hon. member for South Renfrew. He thought those gentlemen who asked for the removal of the duty on oak logs and stave-bolts should state the ground for requesting such exceptional legislation, and did not include pine lumber. He was not an advocate for the removal of the export duties. He had been a member of the Government that had asked that certain export duties should be placed for certain purposes on particular kinds of lumber, and that principle having been adopted by the Parliament of Canada, if he meant to change that principle and take off the duty the persons asking for the removal should give reasons why the duty should be taken off one class of logs and not off another. He thought the argument of the hon. member for Pontiac had force, and that the removal of the export duty would have a tendency injurious in relation to certain classes of productions on our side of the line, and beneficial to certain classes on the other side of the line. The general principle of the imposition of an export duty was one he did not believe in. He would support the measure of the hon. gentleman would extend the removal of extra taxes from all the clauses in the law as it now stood. He hoped the hon. member the First Minister would give some better reason for the proposition submitted to the House than that the lumbermen of the Ottawa Valley had consented to it. There was another matter to which he would refer. His hon. friend (Mr. CARTWRIGHT) had chosen to occupy a private day by interjecting into this House a Government measure when there were sixty or seventy motions on the paper, and some of which had been standing there for a month.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman from Northumberland, two or three sessions ago, had himself asked the House to remove the duty on logs exported from New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said the Premier knew that the New Brunswick export duty was removed to enable the Government to carry the Washington Treaty into effect, and the hon. gentleman as leader of the Opposition at that time used his influence to have the measure passed.

Mr. PALMER explained that the sum of $150,000 was given to New Brunswick in lieu of the export duty which she retained under the terms of Union.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT agreed to a very great extent with the hon. member for Northumberland that there should be a special case made out for interfering with these particular duties. The reasons were briefly these. Very few manufactories exist in Canada, if indeed any at all, for the manufacture of these stave-bolts. It had been shown again and again that the export duty had affected this particular interest injuriously. Having failed of any useful effect and having worked positive mischief, it was thought expedient that these two particular duties should be removed.

Hon. Mr. POPE said the people of the Eastern Townships were placed in exactly the same position with regard to their lumber as those in whose interest this Bill was pressed. There was not a single word expressed with regard to the hardships encountered by the farmers of Norfolk that did not apply with ten times more force, because the quantity was so much greater, to spruce lumber along the frontier. There were many sections where there were no mills, and where the timber could easily be carried down the streams running southward, but for this duty. They had not pressed the abolition of this duty hitherto because they understood the general interests of the country demanded that it should be imposed. It had been asserted, however, that by the passage of this Bill there would be money brought into the country, and every man would have cash jingling in his pockets. Well, why not extend the measure to spruce logs and put cash in the pockets of the Eastern Township farmers ?

Mr. COOK said one would think there was no place in Canada where lumbering operations were carried on except in the Ottawa Valley. Now, there was a large lumbering district on the coast of Georgian Bay, where the lumbermen would be benefitted by the removal of this export duty on saw-logs of all kinds. He asked his hon. friend to extend the amendment so as to include white and red pine saw-logs. This would enable our lumbermen to compete with their Michigan rivals in the export trade of round timber to Eastern markets.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings) thought the remarks of the hon. member for South Grenville deserved some consideration. Certainly there was a good deal of cedar exported from the country which ought to be sawed by our own mills. It would be nothing but fair to put a duty on cedar logs as well as on cedar bolts.

The amendment was lost and the committee rose and reported the resolution which was concurred in.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked leave to introduce a Bill to amend the general Act respecting railways. He explained that the object of the Bill was simply to apply certain provisions of that Act, regarding the expropriation of lands and other matters, to Government Railways generally, in accordance with the recommendation of the Railway Committee.

Mr. BOWELL—Is this Bill confined to railways of a particular length or to all railways ?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—To all railways that are under the control of the Dominion in any way.

The Bill was read a first time.

SOREL CUSTOM HOUSE.

Mr. BARTHE asked whether it is the intention of the Government to comply with the Petition of the inhabitants of the Town of Sorel in the District of Richelieu, (P. Q.), praying for the erection of a Custom House to serve also as a Post Office, and in which building the Inland Revenue and Harbor Masters' offices might in like manner be located ?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — The Government have not come to any decision of that kind yet.

THE WAY-OFFICE AT LAKE SETTLEMENT.

Mr. MITCHELL asked whether the Government have done away with the Way-Office at the Flannagan Settlement, on the road between Richibucto and Miramichi ; and if so, for what reason, and whether they intend to restore it ?

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD—There is no Flannagan Settlement on the books of our Departement. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to Lake Settlement. At the death of Mr. FLANNIGAN the office was discontinued. Since then there has been no application to re-instate the office. The Postmaster at Chatham reported to the Department that there is no necessity for the office, and no application having been made the office has been closed.

IMPORT DUTY ON FLOUR.

Mr. FRASER asked whether it is the intention of the Government to impose any duty on foreign flour, imported into and consumed in the Dominion of Canada; if so, when and what amount?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the custom for the Government to intimate before hand to the House the changes they may propose in the tariff.

DREDGING HARBORS.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton) asked whether, owing to the large amount of business in the coal trade from Port Caledonia and from Little Glace Bay Harbors, and owing to the large amount of private capital invested in those harbors, the Government would send the Government Steam Dredge after it has finished at Lingan, to assist in further deepening the entrance into those harbors respectively?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government have no application of any kind from those places for any of the works indicated. We cannot assume anything about the large amount of business, not knowing what that large amount is. We have no dredge that we can send there, and we are not able to tell when we can have one.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS OF THE DOMINION.

Mr. ORTON in moving for a Special Committee on the agricultural interests of the Dominion, said that the subject was one of sufficient importance to demand the serious consideration of the House. The agricultural population of the Dominion comprised two-thirds of its inhabitants, and anything which affected their interests would affect the interests of the whole people. Through the enlightened policy of former Governments, which had been carried out to a considerable extent by the present Government, we had established in this country, home markets to a very large extent. Through the improvements of our inland navigation, the assistance given to railways, which had been very ably sustained by the Local Legislatures communication from one part of the country to the other had become more easy, and transportation had been cheapened. By the action of Parliament the commercial and financial condition of the country had been improved, and our progress had been so rapid during the last eight or ten years, that our large cities, towns and villages now afford a home market for the farmer. We had expended a very large amount of money in procuring this desirable result, a very large portion of which had been paid by the farmers, and it was nothing but just to the agricultural community that they should have the preference in their own markets, over the farmers of a foreign country. The result obtained during former inquiries showed that the farmers of Canada occupied a very unfavourable position as compared with those of the United States, and that the Government had not done its whole duty towards them, and that much might yet remain to be done to place them in a position as favourable as their neighbours on the other side. The exports of farm products from Canada to the United States, on which import duties were paid, were of the value of $12,980,670 for the year ending June 30, 1874, as shown by the following statistics: Barley, 3,745,087 bushels, worth $4,074,553, duty paid $451,763; beans, 89,982 bushels, worth $132,508, duty paid $26,501; bran, 13,989 cwt., worth $27,998, duty paid $5,599; flax, 782,504 cwt., worth $113,256, duty paid $195,625; flax-seed, 15,257 bushels, worth $15,257, duty paid $8,475; flour, 138,845 barrels, worth $802,895, duty paid $160,579; fruit, 31,826 barrels, worth $62,104, duty paid $6,210; hay, 25,904 tons, worth $282,660, duty paid $56,532; hops, 168,951 lbs., worth $40,022, duty paid $8,447; malt, 481,099 bushels, worth $529,208, duty paid $105,841; meal, 9,539 barrels, worth $41,959, duty paid $9,539; oats, 138,125 barrels, worth $57,148, duty paid $13,812; peas, 571,256 bushels, value $452,291, duty paid $57,125; vegetables of the value of $214,622, duty paid $21,462; wheat, 1,874,202 bushels, worth $2,248,200, duty paid $374,840. A very large amount of duties was also paid by our farmers in order to pass animals and their products into the United States. The total duties paid on the imports of Canadian farm products into the adjoining Republic amounted to $2,218,237. The agricultural imports from the United States into Canada, which are admitted free reached a total value of $18,516.125, during the same period. If duties were levied on these imports at the same rates as the American tariff $2,975,732 would be received, or $500,000 in excess of that paid by Canadian farmers to the United States Treasury. Another point worthy of consideration was the fact that, while it was generally supposed that Canada had a large amount of surplus wheat which was exported, it appeared that the surplus only amounted to the value of $332,683, which divided among two million farmers only allowed 15 cents for each. If the Dominion Government imposed on American produce coming into this country the same rates as were levied by the United States authorities on produce going over the line, a large saving would be effected to this country. When the condition of our farmers was considered it was not to be wondered that the agriculturists in all parts of the country were rising in their own interests and agitating for a policy which would give them greater advantages, and place them in a more favorable position than they at present occupied as compared with the farmers of the United States. It was not surprising that they were asking for a national policy which would not only increase the home markets, but would give them the preference in those markets which they had contributed largely to build up, and when they saw the farmers of the adjoining Republic receive fifteen cents a bushel more for their barley and thirty cents more for their wheat and every article of breadstuff in proportion, that a large number of our farmers were, every year, removing to the United States, where they appeared to obtain a larger return for their labor. It was, therefore, incumbent on the Government to consider this question seriously and inaugurate a national policy that would give our farmers the preference in our home markets. A protective policy for manufactories would increase home markets and thus add to the prosperity of the country. Our imports of manufactured goods amounted to $60,000,000, and it was generally estimated that one-third of those goods consisted of farm products. If we manufactured one-third of that amount of goods we would attract to this country a sufficient number of artizans to consume the whole of our surplus products. The benefit of having, a home market for the farmers was very great, for it was well known that the most profitable kind of farming was that of cattle breeding, by which means the fertility of the soil was improved. That desirable result could only be brought about by developing the internal resources of the country, and promoting manufactures by a policy of protection which would enable the Canadian manufacturer to compete with the rest of the world. It had been proved by experience in other countries that a moderate protective tariff did not increase the price of manufactured goods, although the contrary would, no doubt, be urged by hon. members. In the United States, for example, previous to the inauguration of a protective policy, cotton goods were much higher in price than to-day, and an article which then cost thirty-five cents per yard, could now be purchased for ten cents. The great benefit of a modern protective tariff was that it enabled the manufacturer to have the preference in the home markets, and by encouraging capitalists to invest therein promoted competition which had the effect of reducing the price of the goods; and at the same time a market was afforded to the farmers: not only so, but each artisan employed in the manufactories contributed to the revenue of the country. The result, therefore, was not to impose additional taxation on the agricultural class, but the action of a protective tariff was to provide a home market where the farmer could dispose of his live stock. There were two great classes in the community, consumers and producers, and it should be the object of every Government to obtain as many as possible of both these classes in every country. He could easily conceive of a policy that would have the effect of ruining the country by placing it in a position of being almost entirely producer, and thereby dependent on a foreign market for consumption. Wherever such a policy had been carried out it had been attended with disastrous results. With respect to the free trade doctrines of Great Britain, no doubt enthusiastic advocates of free trade would refer to the benefits which Great Britain had derived therefrom; but if we compared the condition of Great Britain, when it inaugurated that policy, to the condition of Canada at the present time, no intelligent person could for a moment maintain that the conditions were the same, that because free trade was a wise policy for that country, it would be attended with similar advantageous results in this Dominion. It might be a wise policy for Canada to adopt if it adjoined a country which believed in free trade doctrines, but when the United States established a high protective tariff and closed up the markets to foreign producers as much as possible, it became almost a necessity for Canada to pursue the same policy. Again, at the time Great Britain established the free trade policy the agriculturists of that country were a small class compared with the manufacturing community; manufactories in England having assumed very large proportions in the cities and towns, as was the case at present. The English people did not produce sufficient farm products for their own consumption, and therefore foreign produce was required, and it was wise for that Government to admit foreign breadstuffs free of duty. Great Britain having decided that free trade principles were correct, was willing that those ideas should be carried out in her large colonial possessions, particularly as the colonies would be disposed to trade freely with her, and would not adopt protective tariffs, as against her manufactures, simply out of respect to a policy that was beneficial in her case. He was sure when we came to consider our relations with foreign countries and with the United States, we ought in justice to the people of this country to impose the same duties upon articles they have to send us as they impose upon the same articles we send to them; especially with regard to farm produce. We ought to impose the same duty upon their articles as they do upon ours without any exception. It was true the Maritime Provinces were against such a policy, but he maintained that such sectional feelings ought not to prevail in this country, and he thought it not too much to ask the hon. members of the Maritime Provinces to give up their ideas in reference to this question for the general good of the Dominion. He thought it could not be argued successfully that it would be an injury to the Lower Provinces to impose such duties, because if they were imposed there would be a greater interchange of products between the Provinces. The farm products of Ontario would be carried down to the Maritime Provinces, and coal, fish and other articles would be brought back. The increased trade between the different sections of the Dominion would more than compensate for the loss which might be sustained from the imposition of these duties. It was argued by some that it was absurd to put a duty upon grain and the productions of the farm, because the consumer was the one who actually had to pay this tax. If that were the case why should the Government of this country be so anxious to pay such a large sum for reciprocity in those articles for free trade between the two countries? Because according to that argument it was the consumer who paid the duties and we were not sustaining any loss. But he thought that idea had been pretty well exploded. There were other matters to which he might draw the attention of the House in connection with the agricultural interest, but at this late period of the session he would not detain the House any longer. We import some eight or ten million dollars worth of sugar, and if the Government could by any means encourage the manufacture of sugar from the beet, they would be doing a great service to the agricultural interests of the country. When so much money out of the treasury was being expended, and apparently without any great object in view, he thought a small sum might be devoted to the encouragement of a beet sugar manufactory in this country. He thought the Dominion Government should devote at least $100,000—as much as was voted for the Menonites—for the encouragement of this industry, In France it was one of the chief sources of wealth, not only furnishing occupation for a large number of people in winter, but the refuse from its manufacture was utilized as food for cattle and as manure to enrich the soil. A further advantage derived from its cultivation was the fact that the land on which it was grown was improved for other crops and especially barley. Ontario was becoming a great agricultural centre. We had an agricultural college established by the Local Legislature, and he thought the Dominion Government might establish a sugar beet manufactory in this country. They would find a most favorable spot for such an establishment in the county of Wellington for there was no section where roots grew so prolifically. The manufactory could only be established with the assistance of the Government, and he thought it was their duty to do it seeing they were expending such large sums of money out of the treasury for other interests, they should do something for the farmers of the country. He thought he had done sufficient to draw the attention of the House to the important question involved in the motion, and concluded by moving that Messrs. BIGGAR, HARWOOD, PERRY, WALLACE (Norfolk), FLEMING, MCQUADE, BURKE GAUDET, MCGREGOR, BUNSTER, ROSS (P. Edward), MONTEITH, COUPAL, FARROW, and the mover, be a Select Committee on the agricultural interests of the Dominion with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. MILLS said this seemed to him a very extraordinary proposition to make at this period of the session—to send for persons and papers at the time when most of the members were endeavoring to get away, and the House would soon be prepared to rise. He had never been able to understand precisely what the hon. gentleman wanted, though he had given some attention to the speech to-day, and he did not see how his motion would benefit agriculture. He believed the hon. Minister of Finance might have had an opportunity of doing something in that way by lessening taxation, and by cheapening articles of consumption if the present financial condition of the country would warrant such a proposition on his part. He did not suppose that the hon. gentleman expected we had the power to make the soil more fertile or the climate more salubrious, or increase the industrious inclinations of the population; and unless we could do something of that sort in one way or the other he did not see what could be accomplished by the motion. The hon. gentleman had spoken about the productions of American industry coming into competition with our own, but that seemed to him to be a very curious matter to complain of. We were an agricultural population, producing more than was consumed by the country. The prices of our agricultural prductions were regulated not by our home markets but by the foreign markets in which our surplus was sold; and while this was the case the hon. gentleman expected that we were going to improve the markets of the farmers, not by enlarging that market but by increasing the prices of that portion of the produce to be consumed at home, and increasing the price on the consumer. He supposed that when we were enlarging the canals at a heavy expenditure, we were doing so not merely for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of the productions of our own industry to foreign markets, because it would not be denied that our present facilities were equal to our own present wants; but we have been laboring under the impression—a very erroneous one according to the views of the hon. gentleman—that it was an advantage to this country to secure the carrying trade of the West, an advantage to our shipowners and an advantage to Montreal (and other cities), which might become a gteat emporium of commercial industry. But this was all a mistake according to the views of the hon. gentleman, for we ought to impose duties on American produce and cereals lest we might be injured by competition. While we were endeavouring to secure this carrying trade, we were by legislation here to nullify our efforts and erect barriers in our own way. The general tendency of our improvements was to diminish the cost of transportation and thus take away the natural protection which this distance imposed. But the hon. gentleman said this was all wrong, that our large expenditure would prove mischievous to the best interests of the country, and, therefore, in order to prevent that mischief arising we should impose duties upon the productions of American industry. This was the way we were to encourage our agricultural interest. We had incurred a large expenditure to aid in the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway, and we had diminished the actual amount of our claims against the Great Western and Northern Railway companies. These railways were not sustained by local trade altogether, but received a large portion of the carrying trade of the West. That in the opinion of the hon. gentleman was wrong, He (Mr. ORTON) thought the agricultural interests would suffer serious detriment, and that a great wrong would be done them if we could not exclude American productions from our markets. He (Mr. MILLS) was an agriculturalist, but the hon. gentleman was not, and he (Mr. MILLS) had given some attention to the subject and was not aware that it was within the power of this House to impose duties upon the production of the American farmer to foster and encourage the agricultural interests of this country. What Canadian farmers most required was to be let alone. What they needed was that they should be able to get the articles they required at the lowest prices possible. They wanted the liberty to sell in the best markets, and they wanted the equal liberty of purchasing in the best markets. They recognized their obligation to bear their fair proportion of the burdens to taxation. He believed they did this, and he did not think they did anything more. If the time should ever come when the agricultural interests of Canada required further protection in order that they might exist, then the time would come when they should be no longer continued. He did not know that the Government possessed facilities to make that profitable which otherwise would be unprofitable except at the expense of the community generally. Providence had so ordered things that it was not in the power of the Government to tax any people except those they governed, and any taxes they imposed could only be a burden upon their own people if the articles taxed were imported into the country. If we had a surplus of agricultural products, foreign markets regulated the prices for them, and if large quantities of foreign grain were imported, it was only for the purpose of exporting them again. The more traffic passed over our channels of transportation, the cheaper was the price of transport to ourselves. The increase of trade and industry in the country indirectly compensated us for all our expenditures upon canals and public works of that character. If we could by securing the carrying trade of the West double the population of Montreal within the next fifteen years, he apprehended that the 150,000 people who would settle there that otherwise would not be in the country, would bear their fair proportion of the public burden, and that population would pay more than the interest upon the debt incurred upon the improvements that were being made. But of what advantage or use would those public improvements be if we were to impose barriers to the importation of American cereals as the hon. gentleman suggested. The hon. member, to be consistent, should have opposed any appropriation for the enlargement of our canals and building of railways, because everything done to facilitate trade between one point and another and to give cheaper transportation, was doing away with that natural protection which the hon. gentleman desired to compensate for by artificial protection. The motion was one that could not possibly inure to the advantage of agriculture.

Mr. DYMOND said this was a motion of an utterly futile character, and would come to the same unhappy and disastrous conclusion as similar ones that had preceded it. They had all been strangled without coming to any practical result. In 1872 Mr. FRANCIS JONES moved for a committee. Questions were sent out all over the country, and out of some thousands of circulars a few hundreds of replies were received. In 1873 Mr. JONES moved his resolution again, and the result was that there was a debate and an adjournment, and nothing more was heard of it. In 1874 the mantle of the departed JONES was taken up by the hon. member for North Wellington, who obtained a committee. The history of that committee was a melancholy one. In the first place the hon. gentleman nearly came to a dead lock, on a point of order, in his attempt to get the number increased. The good feeling of the House came to his aid, and the hon. gentleman proceeded. After a most painful period of incubation the hon. member found it quite impossible to hatch his egg, and he went with his friends to the manufacturers' committee to ask if it would take the great agricultural interest into its ample bosom and nurse it into life. The Manufacturing Interest Committee, though consisting of large hearted men, was busy about its own affairs. At last the hon. gentleman and his friends, finding it impossible to do anything on their own account, procured the answers obtained to the questions sent out by the abortive JONES Committee a year or two before, and on these documents, which were worthless in themselves, proceeded to found a report. When the adoption of that report was moved, the unfortunate constructors of it were told it was out of order. Strange to say it nevertheless appeared in the votes and proceedings, and the illegitimate bantling of the hon. member was safely bound up with the legitimate offspring of the session. After that history of committees on behalf of the agricultural interest, the hon. gentleman might have been satisfied to let the matter drop, because if his last report were worth anything, surely he ought to be able to found a motion on that report at the present time. What was another committee wanted for? To send out more circulars and find out if the farmers wanted protection or not? If the hon. member did not know what the farmers wanted, what right had he to occupy the time of the House for an hour on the subject. There were many members in this House connected with agriculture, and they could state what that interest wanted. What did this House want to know about the agricultural interest more than it knew already? The hon. gentleman did not want a committee; he knew if he had one he would have to chase around the lobbies for a quorum and after all might not succeed. His (Mr. DYMOND'S) advice to the hon. member was to rest satisfied with the triumph he had won in delivering a speech that very few had heard, and if next session he was a wiser man he would bring up the subject in such a form as would enable him, if he should succeed in carrying it, to scale the Treasury Benches and form the new Government of of which, no doubt, he hoped to become a distinguished member.

Mr. FLEMING said it was unfortunate that all the Agricultural Committees which had been moved for in this House, had failed to attain the object for which they were intended. He recollected that in 1864 the hon. GEO. BROWN moved for an Agricultural Committee, and that committee was a perfect failure. Neither Conservatives nor Reformers had anything to boast of in moving for such committees. However much they might desire to improve and further the interests of that portion of the community, at all events Agricultural Committees as organized in this House, had never succeeded in accomplishing anything. The true position for agriculturists in this country was not to cry for protection but for a reduction of taxation. Unfortunately, last session the necessities of the Government required an increase of revenue, and additional taxation was put on manufactured goods. Expecting the Reciprocity Treaty no exception was taken to it by the agricultural community, but seeing that there was going to be none, they were now crying out for protection. They contended that if protection was good far the manufacturers it must be good for them. The true policy of the farmers, however, was to oppose all increase in taxation and reduce it whenever it was possible to do so. Suppose a duty were put upon American grain imported into the country, there must be a duty on coal. That would increase the price of manufactures, and the manufacturers would come to this House for an increase of taxation. Now he contended that the proper way was to reduce taxation in order to enable the farmers to raise crops at the lowest possible cost, and to compete with the markets. Anything he could do in committee or otherwise to further the interests of the farmers he would do. If it were possible to increase the fertility of the soil or the resources of agriculture he would regard it as a benefit, but to appoint a committee to sit here and advise that this House should impose further taxation would be futile. But it was contended that it would increase the revenue. Now there was a return showing the amount of duties received from the 7th April to the 31st December from flour, wheat and other grain, and the total amount received for nine months under that tariff was $109,956. At the same ratio the whole revenue from that source for the year would be $146,568. This was all that we should gain for revenue purposes by the imposition of such a duty. Was it worth while to tax the people for that amount? He had heard another argument used—that it would be a retaliatory measure and would force the Americans to open their ports to us. It was well known that when our neighbors abrogated the Reciprocity Treaty that their intention was to force us into annexation. They did not succeed in that, and when we found forty millions of people could not coerce four millions, was it likely that four millions were able to force forty millions of people into the adoption of a policy against their wishes? This motion brought up the whole question of free trade and protection. He contended that our true policy as a country, was to offer all the facilities possible for traffic and trade in the country, and we should then build up the manufacturing interests of the Dominion in the right way. They would never be firmly established on such a basis, but should be founded on free competition with other countries.

It being six o'clock, the SPEAKER left the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

PRIVATE AND LOCAL BILLS.

The following Private and Local Bills passed through committee and were read the third time and passed :—

To amend the Act 37-38 Victoria Chapter 115, incorporating the International Express Company.

BRIDGE OVER RIVER L'ASSOMPTION.

Mr. BABY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the Bill to authorize FRANCOIS XAVIER GALARNEAU and others to build a bridge over the River L'Asssomption in the Parish of L'Assomption.

Mr. DYMOND desired to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to the Bill, because he thought when the hon. gentleman had considered it, he would decide that the main subject dealt with was outside of the jurisdiction of the House, or if it were shown that the House possessed such jurisdiction, other matters incorporated in the Bill were clearly beyond the province of the House to deal with. The bridge which it was asked to build was already built, and had been in existence for fifteen years. It was private property, and no one could have access to it, except with permission of the owners. The only ground on which any one could apply to Parliament, and ask for powers to erect and maintain a bridge was that the bridge was to cross a navigable river, the object being to prevent navtigaion it being obstructed The promoters of the Bill did not desire to be put to the expense of constructing a swing or draw to the bridge which was already built, and a clause in the Bill stated that the bridge should not be provided with such machinery as there was no navigation above the bridge. That was the best possible proof that the river was not navigable in such a sense as to entitle Parliament to deal with the subject. The Bill also provided for the levying of tolls, which might or might not be necessary for a bridge. If tolls were not a necessary incidence to a bridge, although they would naturally be associated with it, Parliament had no right to deal with the subject. Moreover, the House was asked to give police jurisdiction in connection with the bridge, not only to protect passengers from being assaulted or interfered with when on the bridge itself, but to protect them on roads and avenues leading therefrom. These, however, were matters under municipal control, and did not come within the domain of Federal legislation. If there were no navigation above the bridge, it could not be a navigable stream, and therefore it was incompetent for this Parliament to say whether a bridge should be constructed over the stream or not. The Bill then went on to provide against the establishment of a ferry in the neighborhood. The Confederation Act explicitly provided that the Federal Parliament should only have the power of establishing a ferry, in certain cases, of which this was not one, and it was therefore impossible that it could enact that there should not be a ferry in this instance. The Bill also conferred certain powers upon the local magistrates—something which was entirely within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature. The last clause of the measure was of itself a proof that the promoter knew he was asking the House to exceed its powers, for it made the absurd and extraordinary admission that this Parliament was possibly doing something which might conflict with the jurisdiction of the Legislature of the Province of Quebec. There was no doubt that in the past a great many evil precedents had been set in regard to legislation of this class. He remarked that there were a great many legal gentlemen on the Private Bills Committee, and there was in this as in all similar matters an extraordinary affinity between them which made them unite in passing it through. The less they dealt with Private Bill legislation in the Federal Parliament, he contended, the better. When an hon. member called attention, in the Private Bills Committee, to some point in a Bill affecting another Province than that from which he came himself, he was told he was speaking of a subject of which he knew nothing. The rebuke was a fitting one. and was really the strongest argument that could be put into any man's mouth against this Parliament legislating on local subjects. With regard to the Bill in question, he submitted, that it was beyond the jurisdiction of the House; if that point were decided against his opinion, he would ask that the clauses to which he referred should be struck out; and, in conclusion, he submitted that it contained in reality a proposal that the House should stultify itself.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he thought the objections of his hon. friend were valid. It was clear the Bill could not be allowed to pass in its present shape. This Parliament had clearly nothing to do with the ferries, unless over a navigable river communicating with the sea. The House had no business to submit anything to a Municipal Council. The House could neither direct them to do anything, nor make any legislation subject to their approval. This whole matter must de dealt with by the Local Legislature, and he felt bound to object to the Bill in its present shape.

Mr. BABY said the provisions of this Bill were exactly the same as those contained in a Bill passed last year for the erection of a bridge over this same river at a point nine miles higher up the stream. That Bill had been submitted to the then Minister of Justice, and approved of by him. Perhaps this one could not be passed exactly in its present shape, but he thought the necessary alterations could be made in committee. The provision regarding the approval of the Municipal Council was inserted at the suggestion of the Minister of the Interior. The stream in question was really a navigable river for three months of the year, and steamers had gone nine miles above it. He called upon his hon. friends from Montreal East, from Drummond and Arthabaska, and from L'Assomption to state what they knew of the necessity of this bridge. He proposed, when the House went into Committee to eliminate the last clause, and insert instead that the whole be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. MACLENNAN, as chairman of the Private Bills Committee, was ready to give a few explanations as to the manner in which the Bill appeared before that committee. It was explained that the river was for a great part of the year navigable, that the land on either side belonged to the parties making application for power to construct this bridge, that a bridge had existed there for some years, that it was in fact a private bridge erected by these parties at their own expense, and maintained by the collection of tolls. The hon. member for North York raised a question before the committee as to the jurisdiction of this Parliament in the premises. Of course that was a nice question of law, but the hon. gentlemen had no doubt whatever upon the point of law. There were some legal gentleman on the committee, but they were far from being quite as clear. The hon. member for North York was always very clear upon all points—particularly upon points of law. The committee had to consider whether they would report against the Bill, and thereby prevent what was represented to be a very useful public enterprise. They thought, and the House would certainly agree with them, that it was not for them to determine a nice point of law with regard to the jurisdiction of this law, and that it was better for them to report the Bill in order that the House might itself deal with it. The committee were further influenced in the course they took by the consideration that during the last session of Parliament a similar application was made to the House, and when the Bill came before the committee it was referred to the Minister of Justice, who made such amendments to it as he thought the circumstances demanded, and the Bill was finally passed. The committee thought they would not be doing their duty to the House unless they followed the precedent which was set them by the committee and the Minister of Justice last year. They therefore determined to report the Bill in the form in which it now stood. With reference to the provision against the obstruction of the navigation, they thought it was only right that some provision on the subject should be introduced into the Bill; and the First Minister would see that it was provided that the arches of the bridge should not be less than five feet above the water level. They might make them as much higher as they pleased, but it had been determined that they should be that high anyhow. The First Minister was not quite correct when he said that navigable streams, according to the interpretation of the British North America Act, were streams which were tidal.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I did not say so.

Mr. MACLENNAN said the committee concluded, at any rate, that the stream in question was a navigable one, and that the Local Legislature would have no jurisdiction with regard to it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he thought his hon. friend would see that it was quite impossible to call this a navigable stream when the bridge over it was only required to be five feet above the water level. No vessel navigating our rivers could pass underneath it. He did not agree that the committee could not consider the question of jurisdiction. Indeed, he was of opinion that that was one of the questions which they had a right to consider, and which they ought to consider. In other committees great care was taken to see that the Bills did not contain unconstitutional provisions, and wherever such provisions were found to exist the clauses containing them were struck out. There could be no reason why the Private Bills Committee should not act upon the same principle, and indeed there were the very strongest reasons why they should act upon it. The Bill now before the House described modes by which penalties might be recovered, and it undertoook to state what were the duties of Justices of the Peace in civil cases, something with which this House had really nothing to do. Then it gave the Municipal Councils the power of deciding whether they should put the legislation of this House into effect or not, That certainly could not be done. The Bill interfered with the powers of the Local Legislature. This Parliament had the right to authorize the construction of a bridge over a stream which was navigable, but when they did that they had reached the extent of their powers. The Bill of last session—with the provisions of which he was far from agreeing—provided that there should be no interference with the navigation, and that the passage of the river should be kept open at all times by the proprietor of the bridge. In order to admit of this being done it was provided that the bridge should be a swing-bridge; so that there was a very great difference indeed between the provisions of the Bill passed last session and that now before the House. But even if the House did last session pass a law which it should not have passed, that was no reason why the same thing should be done a second time. Such legislation as this could not, properly be had in this House, for it was quite clear that even if the Bill passed it would be of no use, at any rate it could not be permitted to go on in its present shape.

Mr. JETTE said he would be very sorry indeed if this Bill did not pass. He knew it was of the utmost necessity that this bridge should exist at the place indicated. A bridge had been in existence there for the last fifteen years and it was at present in a bad condition. If this Bill did not pass the inhabitants would be without the means of crossing the river, and would be practically shut out from the rest of the Province. He believed it was agreed in committee that the clause relating to whether or not the bridge should be a swing-bridge should be modified. His hon. friend from Joliette was prepared with an amendment in that connection which would meet the reqirements of the case. He believed the principle admitted in committee was that this Parliament had a right to grant the privilege of building bridges over all navigable rivers, and having this right it was contended that this Parliament could also grant all incidental powers necessary for the execution of the work. If, however, any of the clauses were unconstitional that could be remedied in committee. He did not think that the Bill interfered with the legislative rights of the Province of Quebec, for it was exactly similar in its provisions to that drawn by Mr. DORION last year. It was, perhaps, true that frequently in legislation of this kind encroachments were made upon the powers of Local Legislatures, which was a very good argument in favor of the necessity which existed for the Bill, introduced by the Minister of Justice this session, to create a Supreme Court. There were Bills, for example, passed by which powers were granted to mortgage property, while it was well known that the regulation of property was exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures.

Mr. PALMER thought the depth of the water did not decide whether a steam was navigable or not, because though it might not be navigable by large vessels it might be navigable by canoes and small boats. He considered this was a very important point, and the interests of the people were largely concerned in it; and if care were not taken in connection with this Bill people might be prevented ferrying across the river. There was doubt about the matter, but it was proper in such a case for the Local Legislature to pass the Act as well as the Dominion Parliament. He thought there was nothing to prevent that being done; and there would be no harm done and they would be sure to be right. There was another objection and a more material one,—that the Bill passed was promoted by the hon. member for Montreal Centre, while this was promoted by the hon. member for Joliette.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE thanked the hon. gentleman for his charitable construction, and suggested the committee should rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, and in the meantime he would give his personal attention to the matter.

The House went into Committee (Mr. HURTEAU in the chair), took a formal step, then rose, reported and asked leave to sit again.

NORTHERN RAILWAY BILL.

On motion of Mr. COCKBURN the House went into Committee on the Bill to consolidate the enactments relating to the Northern Railway Company of Canada, and to provide for the consolidation of the Loan capital of the Company, (as amended by Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.) Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON called attention to a new clause, (Clause B.) inserted in the Bill, and which struck him as being a very important one if it were not objectionable in itself, which he did not know, though he considered it was objectionable in its form. The Bill repealed a great number of existing Acts of the old Parliament of Canada and of this Parliament as well as of the Ontario Legislature. In this new clause so much of the powers in the repealed Bills as had been unused were revived. It might be all right but he thought it required explanation from the promoters of the Bill.

Mr. MOSS said the object of the clause was to prevent the clauses repealed from effecting any mischief to the company respecting certain things and works that were going on under those Acts and not completed. It was therefore desirable to provide that anything going on should be completed.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER doubted whether they had power to revve, and change a clause in an Act repealed by a preceding clause.

Mr. MOSS said the clause might be more artistically prepared.

The Clause B. was added to the 26th Clause of the Bill as follows:—"It shall be lawful for the company, and they shall have the power to construct and complete any work hereinbefore mentioned as authorized under any of the Acts hereby repealed, which work has been constructed or completed, and the time for the completion whereof was not elapsed before the passing of this Act."

The Bill was reported, read a third time and passed.

MONTREAL, CHAMBLY AND SOREL RAILWAY.

On motion of Mr. JETTE the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill for granting further powers to Montreal, Chambly and Sorel Railway Company, and to change its name, (as amended by Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.) — Mr. YOUNG.

The Bill was reported.

CANADA CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Bill respecting the Canada Central Railway passed through Committee of the Whole, was read a third time and passed.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) desired to call the attention of the Government to the fact that the Act respecting Weights and Measures was going into operation next July. He had made a great many inquiries of members of this House and business people and found that this Act would cause very great and general inconvenience. It had been enacted without ever being asked for by any representative body of the commercial community or the public at large, and he found also that it would cause the greatest inconvenience in the collection of the revenue. It did not apply to the present tariff and would not suit the business community. If the hon. Minister of Finance would make up a calculation reducing the charge on wines and liquors of all kinds to the imperial measure, and apply the present rate, he would find it would give such fractions of duty as would be very inconvenient to the public at large. He asked the Government to seriously consider whether they should not allow this Act to stand over or repeal it for the present until such time as they could take the tariff into consideration and base it on the measure proposed by the Bill he referred to. It must be obvious that this was a retrograde step. Our largest transactions were with the West Indies, and our neighbors alongside us, where the wine measure was in use. We had made every effort to assimilate our trade customs with those of our neighbours across the border. We had assimilated our currency to theirs adopted the continental gauge for our railways, and now we were adopting a system of Weights and Measures which the old country would be glad to get rid of. We might as well return to the system of pounds, shillings and pence, or hundred weights, quarters and pounds. He would once more urge the Government to allow the matter to stand until the tariff was re-adjusted on a basis which would make it so that it could be calculated without the inconvenience of fractions.

Hon. Mr. GEOFFRION said the law was passed about three years ago, and he did not see how the Government could suspend the operation of the law. It was imperative, and as soon as the standards were procured the Government issued the proclamation, six months after which the law was to go into force. Before this Government came into power the department had contracted for the making of the standards, and as soon as they were received, the proclamation was issued. The law would be in force on the 1st of July next. It had passed both branches of Parliament without opposition, and had never been petitioned against. Without an expression of the opinion of Parliament against it he did not see how the Government could repeal the law or suspend its operation.

Mr. JONES said the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue could not point to one petition for the Act, and it owed its existence to the fact that one energetic officer wanted to make some business for his department. The public were not aware that the law was on the Statute Book. There was not a hundred men outside of Parliament who knew the Act was coming into operation. He paid some attention to public matters, and was not aware until a week before he came to Ottawa that there was such a law at all. If the public knew of its existence, they would flood this House with petitions against it.

Mr. YOUNG was rather surprised that the hon. member for Cumberland, who was really responsible for the measure, had nothing to say in defence of his bantling. So far as the inspection of weights and measures was concerned, he (Mr. YOUNG) was quite convinced there was a necessity for the law being enacted. He was quite certain there was a great difference in the weights used by retail dealers in the country. In many cases they were cheating the public inadvertantly, and in other cases cheating themselves. It was absolutely necessary there should be some system of inspection to do justice to both buyers and sellers, and similar inspection was required with regard to measures for liquids. He had not looked into the Bill so far as it related to the adoption of the Imperial gallon, though it seemed to him on the face of it that there were objections to that particular part of the Act.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said if he had not made any remarks on the subject, it was because there was nothing before the House. He looked upon such discussions as an abuse of the privilege of drawing attention to these matters when the Orders of the Day were called. When this measure was attacked on a proper occasion he was not at all backward in stating to the House that he held himself entirely responsible, as a member of the late Government for this legislation. No measure had ever been passed by this House upon more indisputable testimony of the strongest character showing its necessity. So strong was the testimony in its favor that it passed the House unanimously, and he was glad to find that the present Government, in the discharge of the duty devolving upon them, had incurred all the expense of putting it into operation. They should take every means of notifying the public that the Act would go into operation next July.

THE VETERANS OF 1812.

Mr. BROUSE brought to the notice of the Government the following paragraph which he observed in a newspaper :—"A shameful case of swindling is reported from Montreal. It seems that unprincipled scoundrels are buying up claims of the Veterans of 1812-15. In Montmorency several poor and ignorant men were induced to sell their claims for sums of from two to eight dollars." He desired that the Government should speak out on this matter and declare that they would not see old and infirm men, who were weak in mind, thus swindled out of their rights.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said he had stated very explicitly on a former occasion that it was the intention of the Government, and he was sure it would be carried out, to place this money in the hands of those who were entitled to it and to no one else. He was very glad the hon. member had brought the matter up again, because it gave him an opportunity to repeat that the Government felt it their duty to see that in the distribution of this money it would go to nobody who was not formally authorized to receive it. If hon. members should learn, after returning to their homes, of any attempt being made to cheat the veterans out of their allowances, he hoped they would notify him in order that he might ensure the placing the money in the hands of the right parties.

GAMING HOUSES.

The Bill to suppress gaming houses and punish the keepers thereof was read a third time and passed.

TRIALS OF FELONIES AND MISDEMEANORS IN ONTARIO AND QUEEEC.

On motion of Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) the House went into Committee to consider amendments made in Committee of Whole to the Bill to amend the Act for the more speedy trial in certain cases of persons charged with felonies and misdemeanors in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

The amendments were read a second time, and the Bill was then read a third time and passed.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS IN TRANSIT.

On motion of Mr. CHARLTON, the House went in Committee—Mr. IRVING in the chair—on the Bill to prevent cruelty to animals while in transit by railway, or other means of conveyance, within the Dominion of Canada.

The Bill was reported, read a third time and passed.

RETURNS FROM RAILROAD COMPANIES.

On motion of Mr. IRVING, the House went into Committee—Mr. CHARLTON in the chair— on the Bill to extend and amend the law requiring railroad companies to furnish returns of their capital traffic and working expenditure.

The Bill was reported, read the third time and passed.

INTEREST AND USURY IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

On motion of Mr. PALMER, the House went into into Committee—Mr. BOWELL in the chair—on the Bill relating to interest and usury in the Province of New Brunswick.

The Bill was reported, read a third time and passed.

SUITS AGAINST THE CROWN.

On motion of Mr. IRVING the House went into Committee—Mr. MACLENNAN in the chair—on the Bill to provide for the institution of suits agrainst the Crown, by petition of right and respecting procedure in Crown suits.

The Bill was reported as amended.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

Mr. IRVING in moving the second reading of the Bill to repeal an Act to amend the Criminal Law relating to violence, threats and molestation, hoped the measure would receive the approbation of the Government. The Bill was one of great interest to a very large class of persons throughout the Dominion. The Act which the Bill proposed to repeal was generally known as the Criminal Law Amendment Act. In 1872 that Act was passed at a period of time when it was supposed very great benefits were conferred on working men by shielding them from those penalties, which it was supposed they might suffer by reason of entering into the combinations known as Trades' Unions. Trades' Unions were legalised in this country by the passing of an Act, copied from the Imperial Parliament, which had legalised them in England. When that Act was passed in England legalising Trades' Unions, the Act now proposed to be repealed laid on workingmen heavy liabilities, against which they had since had ground for serious complaint. In the last session of this Parliament a special committee was appointed for the consideration of that law. The committee reported, and, referring to the Act which the present Bill proposed to repeal, said: "It is nevertheless felt both in England "and Canada that the judicial construc- "tion which has been placed upon the pro- "visions of the Act differs from the im- "pression which had been generally "formed of them, and such construction "has not operated as fairly to the "working classes as the respective Legis- "latures of the two countries intended in "enacting them. And this committee is "of opinion that further and more remedial "legislation is required." The report further went on to say that as there was a Royal Commission pending in England to inquire into that subject, it recommended that at some future session a perfect measure should be framed, giving relief in that particular direction. The Royal Commission had reported in England, but no report had yet arrived in this country whereby its purport could be; but the report, as was plain from the public prints, was wholly unsatisfactory to the working classes, against whom special legislation, of which complaint had been made. Throughout Ontario, (he would confine his remarks to that Province, because he was not aware of what had been done in the other Provinces), in Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton and St. Catharines public meetings had been held by working men in favor of his proposed legislation, and praying for the repeal of the present Act. The law at present on the Statute Book provided that "whoever in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy to raise the rate of wages, or of any unlawful combination or conspiracy respecting any trade, business or manufacture, or respecting any person concerned or employed therein, unlawfully assaults any person, he shall be guilty of misdemeanor, and shall be liable to be imprisoned." When the objectionable Criminal Law Amendment Act was introduced into England, the clause he had read, which was also part of the English Law, was repealed, but when this Parliament introduced the Act three years ago, it did not repeal that law. Further, there was an enactment which applied in the Dominion but which did not apply in England at that period, viz, that "whoever in pursuance of any such com- "bination or conspiracy uses any violence "or threat of violence to any person, with "a view to hinder him from working and "being employed at such trade, business, "or manufacture is guilty of a misde- "meanor." The working classes urge, and he thought correctly urge, that the Statute Law as it stood in 1872, and as it stands now, with the additional and offensive Act which was passed and known as the Criminal Law Amendment Act, was sufficient to punish and correct them for all conceivable offences in respect of which they might be guilty, as working men. He agreed with them, and thought it was unfair to working men that they should be specially legislated upon. The effect had been found to be very odious to them. For instance, if under the law, as it is now found to exist, any workman or any servant chose to unlawfully leave his employment the offence was punishable summarily before a magistrate; but if two men agreed to leave the same employment then under that odious Criminal Law Amendment Act, it became a conspiracy, and the offence for which a man was liable under the original law to one or two months' imprisonment, by reason of two men taking offence at the employment they became liable to be imprisoned two years in the penitentiary. The question had engaged the attention of the Imperial Parliament, but all the efforts that had been made on behalf of the working men had, hitherto, been futile. The working men of Canada thought they should not be placed in an analogous position to the working men in England. They believed they should not be legislated against by any tyranical class, and they trusted to the good sense of this Legislature not to allow this session to pass without extending to them a remedial measure. He sincerely hoped that a Reform Government would not disregard so reasonable and proper an application. He therefore moved that the Bill be read a second time.

Mr. MOSS seconded the motion, and in doing so said his hon. friend from Hamilton had, he thought, fairly and temperately stated the case on behalf of the working men. The working men felt that they had a grievance which must be removed in some manner. The history of the case could be briefly stated. As the law stood before 1872, working men who engaged in a combination for the purpose of exercising an influence upon the rate of wages were liable to be indicted for conspiracy. Various prosecutions of extreme hardship had taken place while that state of the law existed. The working men remonstrated vigorously against this injustice, and so manifest was the injustice of their case, that the Government of the day, in England, introduced a Bill which removed the obnoxious interpretation which had been placed upon the law regarding conspiracy, and enabled the working men to combine lawfully for certain purposes beneficial to themselves, and not injurious to society. But to that law was annexed an Act of which that on our Statute Book was a transcript, and now formed that part of our law which his hon. friend desired to repeal. The Trades Union Act undoubtedly conferred a great boon upon working men. It liberated them from the operation of the severe construction which the courts had placed upon the law of conspiracy; but the Criminal Law Amendment Act subjected them to provisions of an extremely stringent character. In one breath the Legislature gave them rights and struck a blow at their liberties. It might be said in a general way that the statute under consideration dealt with three classes of offences—assaults, threats, and a nondescript species, which the Legislature had not defined, and which he would not attempt to define. He preferred that hon. members should hear the very words of the statute in order to understand what the clause in question actually involved. The statute enacted that every person who used violence to any person or property; who threatened or intimidated any person in such a manner as would justify a Justice of the Peace on complaint made, to bind over the person threatening or intimidating to keep the peace; or who molested or obstructed any person with a view to coerce in certain directions, left exceedingly indefinite, would be liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for three months. It then proceeded to describe, still as he thought too indefinitely, what conduct on the part of those to whom the statute was intended to apply should be deemed as constituting molestations or obstructions. It must be remembered that this Act was passed contemporaneously with the Trades' Union Act, and with the ostensible purpose of preventing that Act from being worked mischievously. This was the object which the powerful employers in England had in their view when they induced the Legislature to pass the Act. While they were compelled, in obedience to the will of the people, to accede to the legalising of Trades' Unions—while they were compelled to permit working men to unite in a peaceful manner for the promotion of their own interests—they succeeded in passing this severe measure, with the purpose and the knowledge that its presence on the Statute Book would prevent the Trades' Union Act from being of any benefit to the working men. The practical result had been that the Criminal Law Amendment Act had never been invoked except when a difficulty occurred between employer and employed. Whenever working men believed that they were not receiving justice at the hands of their employers, and when they took the steps which they considered necessary to remedy that injustice and assert their rights, when they brought into action the machinery which the Trades' Union Act permitted them lawfully to create, and which it was intended to enable them to employ, the provisions of this harsh and stringent Criminal Law Amendment Act were invoked against them. It was true that the report of the Committee of this House, to which his hon. friend had referred, stated that no serious case of hardship was found in this country under the Act. That was accounted for by the fact that employers in this country had not been, generally, willing to enforce its harsh and stringent provisions against those whom they employed; nevertheless the Act stood upon our Statute Book, and it continued to stand there with all its odious provisions, so unjust to the working men, and so calculated to destroy the rights they had been led to expect under the Trades' Union Act. It was naturally viewed by them as a standing menace and insult. He asked the House to consider the exceptional nature of its provisions. The first part of the statute provided for cases of mere assault and injury to property. It further penalized in a special way unknown to the general law. The use of any violence, however slight, if used with a view to coerce masters or workmen to do certain specified things. The law had already provided adequate means of punishing any man who used violence towards another, varying the punishment according to the extent of the injury done. If violence were offered under the provisions of this Act, no matter how trifling in character, the accused was liable to imprisonment, with or without hard labor, for a term of three months. In England the construction placed upon the Act had led to cases of extreme hardship. He would presently refer the House to some he had been able to find in the English papers. It was indeed said the provisions of the Act were not in themselves so dangerous to the rights and liberties of working men as they were now commonly supposed to be, but that the interpretation usually put upon them was a strained and harsh one. This was a convenient plea for those who desired to retain the law, by shifting the responsibility of its results to the magistrates upon whom its enforcement devolved. He was of opinion that the provisions were not such as should remain in our Statute Book. They were so vague, and admitted such generality and width of interpretation that he thought no working man should be exposed to their grasp. He had pointed out the vagueness of the phrase "use violence to any person or property." If violence were used, as he had already shown, it was punishable under the existing state of the law. The Act said that if a person molested or obstructed any other person in the manner defined by different sections, he should be liable to the penalty specified ; and it also pretended to define what should be deemed a molestation or an obstruction. It was stated, for example, that it was a molestation and obstruction for any person to follow another person about from place to place. These words were extremely vague, and, still worse, the interpretation of the statute was left not to the Judges of the Superior Court—not to trained Judges of high capacity and complete independence—but to magistrates, who may have intimate relations with the employers. The House would understand exactly, without further explanation, how that might work. When a strike occurred, and except during a strike the Act was sure to be a dead letter, the men who had ceased to work were disposed to follow those of their fellow-workmen who did not join them, and whose abodes they did not know. They often wished to become acquainted with their residences, not from any design to injure them, but because they were desirous of knowing the influences by which they were surrounded. Under certain circumstances he was prepared to admit that might become a molestation or obstruction, from which the law was bound to protect a man who was unwilling to unite with his fellows in a particular course of action. But what he did argue was that the law should not be left so extremely vague, that a police magistrate or justices of the peace could be called upon to declare when a molestation or obstruction was sufficient in degree to entitle them to send an accused person to prison with hard labour for a period of three months. Another sub-section imposes the same penalty upon a person who hides any tools, clothes, or other property owned by another, or deprives him of or hinders him in the use thereof. That provision was also dangerously vague and indefinite, but its indefiniteness sank into insignificance when compared with the third sub-section of that section, which enacts that if he watch or beset the house or place where a non-unionist resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or if he approaches such a house or place, or if, with two or more other persons he follows another in a disorderly manner through a street or road, he is subject to the penalty. He ventured to say that no working man should be left at the mercy of a magistrate who had the power of dispensing what was called justice under a law worded in this fashion. He would now mention to the House some cases in which, since the Act had been put in operation in England, sentences of extreme injustice and harshness had been pronounced. In one case seven men were sent to prison in Perth, for endeavouring to influence by argument and persuasion a fellow working man who refused to unite with them in leaving work, and insisted upon remaining in employment at the place of business which the accused had left. It was shown in evidence that they used no force, that they had been guilty of no violence that they had resorted to no threats, that all the influence they had brought to bear was that of argument and persuasion. They said in effect you should not work at the rate for which you are working. You came into our union, you bound yourself to comply with its regulations, and now when the hour of danger comes, are you going to abandon us? Now, when union would be effective, will you assist disunion? These and similar arguments were all that had been employed by these men, and yet they were sent to gaol for a considerable period. In another case a number of women in one of the mining districts of England were sent to prison upon evidence still more vague and unsatisfactory. The sole proof against them was that they were near the mouth of a pit, that shouts were directed against a miner who had refused to join in a strike, and his sworn testimony amounted to this: "I heard shouting, but I could not say from whom it came." It was, however, considered to be proved that these women were the only persons in the neighborhood from whom the shouting was likely to have proceeded, and that they were the wives of the men who were out on strike, and the magistrate thereupon undertook to find them guilty under this Act, and to commit them to gaol. Another prosecution was instituted against a person for distrbuting hand bills. They did not contain anything offensive or anything tending to a breach of the peace, but simply endeavored to place the views of the Unionists before their fellow workmen, warning them of the consequences to themselves of refusing to join in a body in an endeavor to gain the point for which they contended. The language which was considered sufficiently obnoxious to be punishable was somewhat as follows, if his memory served him right:—"By refusing to join you will injure your fellow workmen and yourselves." The magistrate declared it was a molestation, a sort of coercion, an inducement to the working men to adopt a particular course of action, and therefore it came within the vengeful arm of the statute. He ventured to say that no statue that admitted of such a construction being placed upon it by any magistrate should remain upon our Statute Book. In fact, whenever a difficulty arose between employer and employed the magistrate was, so far at least as English experience went, only too ready to assume coercion, and the slightest vestige of proof satisfied him that there was an offence, thus he could severely punish a working man and enforce to the utmost the provisions of this extremely stringent law, even when working men believed they were within the privileges of the Trades Union Act, and were only doing what they reasonably deemed to be lawful. There was one other illustration which the House might derive from another sub-section. It was made an offence if there was a molestation, or obstruction, or following about, or watching a house to coerce a person being a workman, to pay any fine or penalty imposed by any association or combination of working men. This was a fine array of words. One would suppose it was intended by the first part to bring everybody, employer as well as employed, within the grasp of this law, but they must well know that the law was not put in force against the employers. Practically it was directed against working men and against Unionists. He asked them to observe the provision which affixed a punishment to any attempt to induce a workman to pay the fine imposed by the Trades Union to which he might belong. There seemed to be no doubt that if a workman had been fined by his Union, if he had ceased to attend the meetings of the Union, if he had disolved his connection, but if, nevertheless, some of his friends in the Union assumed to advise him that he had better resume his connection with his fellow-workmen, and told him he ought not to leave the Union, that he ought to pay his fines, or that otherwise his severence from the Union would be permanent, and that the Union men would not work with him. This was coercion under the Act, and would entitle the magistrate in strict law to send the person who used such form of inducement or argument to gaol at hard labor for three months. The Act had not removed in the statute book in England without the strongest efforts by the working men and the friends of the workingmen to obtain its repeal. In 1872 the House of Commons appointed Sir WILLIAM HARCOURT, Mr., now Sir HENRY JONES, Mr. MONDELLA, and two other gentlemen to prepare a Bill. They did prepare a Bill modifying the law. It was submitted to Parliament upon a first reading, but at a very late period in the session its opponents succeeded by Parliamentary manœuvres to prevent its being fairly brought before and discussed by the House that session, after that, a commission was issued, which had recently reported but the report had not been laid before this House, and whether it would or would not assist the House in coming to a conclusion upon this grave question it was impossible to say. It might prove to be of no assistance to the deliberations of this House, but he was free to admit that it might be of value to the Government in suggesting a modification of the present objectionable law. He did not contend that some legislation other than an absolute repeal might be required. He did not argue that it might not be necessary to enact some provisions against a possible abuse of the powers which might be set in action by unions under shelter of the Trades Union Acts. He saw no reason to apprehend such abuses from the utterances or acts of those concerned, but he had sufficient faith in the intelligence and justice of the working men of this country to feel assured that they would not object to any measure which had for its object the prevention of any abuses. He thought that in the general interest it might be necessary to introduce such a measure. There might be difficulties in the way of its being duly considered this session, but that was no reason why working men should be subject to this statutory menace and insult, or why a law so unjust in its provisions, so incapable of precise definition, and so liable to abuse, should be permitted in the meantime to continue in force. If there was not time to perfect a modification of the law the House could declare that the law was unjust and should not remain on the statute book. He was not prepared to say whether the Bill of Sir WILLIAM HARCOURT would be acceptable to the working men of this country. He did not know what were their views on that point. He did not know whether they had had a fair opportunity of considering it, But speaking for himself, he was bound to say that so far as it sought to alter the particular Act now before the House, it did not seem to make any very great change in the existing law, or to be sufficient to satisfy the just expectations of working men. But with certain enlargements, not difficult of suggestion, it might suffice. The existing law was unfair, unjust, and altogether uncalled for by anything done by the working men of Canada, and it would, therefore, in the absence of any measure removing its obnoxious features, be his duty to vote for its repeal.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Hamilton was a very important one, and was connected with one of the most important social questions of the day—the question of labor. At the time the Bill was introduced, he might be permitted to remind the hon. member, it was considered a great boon to the working classes; but they had not had the law long when they found it was an unfortunate present, for under it some men had been sent to gaol with hard labor. Hon. members must not forget the circumstances under which the law was introduced into this country. It had been literally copied from the English law on the same subject. We had two Acts relating to the working classes, by one of which they had succeeded in making lawful meetings for the discussion of their own interest and of effecting unions, and thought it was a great concession made to them. On the other hand the employers obtained a law making it an offence to interfere with other men at work or using violence to compel themt o leave work. Undoubtedly some legislation was necessary. He did not pretend to say that it was not proper legislation that had been adopted in England, but he was free to admit that this legislation was of too harsh a character for the circumstances of this country. Its provisions were too stringent and punishment a little too severe. The offences were not sufficiently defined, too much was left to the magistrate and in that respect the law should be amended. It was a very difficult subject to deal with, and while he was as anxious as any man to help the working class to secure proper legislation to enable them to discuss trade questions among themselves and also with their employers, at the same time, he must admit there were offences that must be reached and punished. At this late period of the session it would be extremely difficult to deal with a subject of so serious and intricate a character, but the subject would be taken in hand by the Government and they would modify the legislation complained of so much.

Mr. IRVING said the Bill of which they complained was introduced in this Parliament in 1872, and went through all the stages in one day. Therefore the working men would say that if it was reasonable to pass such a law in one day, the same Parliament could devise a remedial measure in the eight or ten days he supposed was still left us before prorogation. If the hon. Minister of Justice would say that he would examine the Bill put forward by Sir WILLIAM HARCOURT and others who espoused the cause of the working men in England, and presented to the House and used the influence at his back to pass it, if in his opinion there was time, and it was a proper Bill to pass, he would not feel justified in proceeding with his motion. On the other hand, if the Hon. Minister did not feel justified in accepting the proposition in the spirit he desired, he must take the liberty of pressing the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said he had not had time to examine the Bill, but from the cursory reading he had given it, he believed he could make the undertaking he (Mr. IRVING) desired to have made.

Mr. IRVING suggested the second reading of his Bill now, and he could drop it when the Hon. Minister of Justice brought in the new Bill.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE suggested that the debate be adjourned; and this was done.

INSPECTION OF FISH.

Mr. FORBES moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act to make better provision for the inspection of certain staple articles of Canadian produce. He said the Inspection Act passed last year was rather obnoxious owing to certain compulsory clauses for the removal of which they had made unsuccessful efforts. He considered the compulsory clauses had had the effect of rendering the Act almost nugatory. In Nova Scotia only six inspectors been appointed for six out of eighteen counties, only a third of the Province was therefore under the operations of the law; and this was very inconvenient because fish had to be inspected before it was exported. In New Brunswick, with much larger area and much larger fishing interests, there were only two inspectors appointed. This compulsory clause required the inspection of pickled fish in the county in which the fish was prepared. This was inconvenient, and the people found that if they sold their fish without first going to an inspector they were liable to a fine of $5. He thought the compulsory clauses should be removed. The Hon. Minister of Inland Revenue had proposed an amendment that would be satisfactory to the Province of Quebec—from which there had been the strongest opposition before—and he believed it would be satisfactory to all the Provinces.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON suggested that the Bill should be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) hoped that view would not be pressed. As the Act stood on the Statute Book it could not be worked. In many counties the machinery for inspection had not been provided. For instance, in Lunenburg no inspector had been appointed, and the law only provided that inspection should be compulsory where an inspector was appointed. In Halifax county, inspectors had been provided, and the result was that fish could be exported from Lunenburg without inspection, which could not be done in Halifax county. The Bill before the House provided that inspection should not be compulsory when the fish were sent out of the Dominion. He did not see why inspection of fish should be compulsory when the inspection of other staple articles was not. This Bill should be dealt with now and the principle of it either affirmed or rejected. If it were sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce it might not reach the House in time to have the suggestions of that committee acted on.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said this was a Bill which in his judgment should be taken up and dealt with by the Government. It should not be allowed to be dealt with by a private member of this House. Great difficulties had been experienced in the working of the law in relation to the inspection of fish in remote localities. In such places as Shippigan, Caraquet and other ports in New Brunswick there was no inspection. When fish were sent to Montreal or other places to be shipped for exportation they must be inspected again. This involved an additional charge for cartage, inspection fees and cooperage of one dollar per barrel. Moreover, the fresh water of the St. Lawrence when used for pickling spoiled the fish. Our fishermen desired to have a simpler mode than the present one, of leaving inspectors in districts where the fish were put up, and not to be compelled to have their fish inspected in Montreal and Quebec. But there was a greater difficulty than this. While the Act on the statute book made the inspection of all fish caught and cured in Canada compulsory, fish coming from Newfoundland, St. Pierre, Miguelon, or the United States, could be sold in our markets free from inspection. This was unjust to our own fishermen. He had put a notice on the paper a month ago, which had not yet been reached, calling the attention of the Government to the necessity of amending the Act, either by removing the compulsory clause or, if it were continued, by making it apply to fish imported from Newfoundland, the United States and St. Pierre, Miguelon. The effect of inspecting the fish at Montreal was thus stated to him by a practical merchant of Montreal: Where goods were ordered including say, a dozen barrels of fish, he had been compelled invariably during the last year to decline to fill the order for fish, because in almost every instance in which he had done so, some of the barrels in which the St. Lawrence water had been used had proved to be unsound. The trade of Montreal had declared the present system was not satisfactory to the trade. While he (Mr. MITCHELL) quite agreed with the hon. member for Queens that the law should be remedied, he thought that it was a matter which should be dealt with by the Government. The original Act was a Government measure and should be amended by the Government. Isolated legislation of this kind ought not to be permitted in such an important measure, affecting the trade of the country. He hoped, if this Bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, that the Minister of Inland Revenue would take charge of it, and not only deal with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Queens, but also place our fishermen on an equal footing with those of Newfoundland and the United States.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he did not subscribe to the doctrine that a Bill introduced by the Government must necessarily be amended by the Government. That would preclude all independent action by members of this House in reference to Bills of importance. The only thing the Government had specially to do was to guard the public interest in all Bills introduced. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue had so guarded the public interest by informing the hon. member for Queens that the Bill could not be accepted as it was, and afterwards arranging with him one that could be accepted. He agreed with the hon. member for Chateauguay that the Bill should go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and the hon. member for Halifax need not fear that the Bill by going there should suffer defeat.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) pointed out that under the Bill the inspector would only be required to test ten barrels out of every hundred. With respect to Newfoundland fish, the large packing firms stamped their packages with their private brands, and their guarantee was as satisfactory as inspection by a local inspector.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said the practical experience of Canadian merchants was, notwithstanding the guarantee of the Island firms, that large quantities of the Newfoundland fish sent through the country were unsound.

The Bill was read the second time, and referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, March 25th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

QUEBEC GRAVING DOCK.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions for the purpose of revoking the power given to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners under the Act 36 Vict., Cap. 62, Sec. 23, and providing other means for raising the sum requisite to defray the expense of constructing a Graving Dock in the Harbor of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked whether the site of the Graving Dock had been fixed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied that it had not. He proposed consulting the Montreal Harbor Commissioners who were to pay part of the charges, as well as the Harbor Commission of Quebec, and to endeavor to arrive at the selection of a site that would meet the commercial requirements of the river as a whole without regard to sectional interests, except so far as was necessary to obtain the best possible site. He had received a semi-official communication from the Acting Chairman of the Montreal Harbor Commission indicating the place where the dock should be erected. It agreed with the opinion expressed by the Quebec Commissioners when he (Mr. MACKENZIE) was there last summer. These resolutions provided that the selection must be approved of by the Governor in Council. The Montreal Commission had agreed to pay $5,000, the Quebec Commission paid a similar sum, and all the revenues went to make up the amount required for the payment of the cost of the dock. This being so it was only fair the Montreal Harbor Commissioners should have a voice in the selection of the site.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER regretted to hear the statement made by the First Minister because he thought Parliament was not only entitled to know in a matter of this kind the site for the proposed work, but also to have some idea of the cost. It would be recollected that on a recent occasion the hon. member for South Bruce took exception to entrusting the Government with the power of exercising their own judgment in regard to the construction of a public work.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—What work?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—The Baie Verte Canal. He (Mr. TUPPER) was not going to revive that question because, it had been disposed of already, but if the objection might properly be urged against the Government being entrusted with the power to go on with a public work provided for by Parliament, until the House was given the information asked by the hon. member for South Bruce. They had a right to refuse to sanction this measure until the Government should explain how they proposed to expend it, and how much money would be required. The subject of this Graving Dock was not a new one. The Government had in their possession very full information in regard to this matter. It had been brought again and again before the notice of the Government. It had been made the subject of reports by engineers of the Government, and by very distinguished engineers from Great Britain. The work itself was not one of great importance or very considerable magnitude, but the question as to whether it should be erected in Quebec or Levis was one of very great consequence to the public, because the amount of money in one case would be something like fifty or sixty per cent. more than in the other. Now he thought that in relation to this the House was entitled to a statement from the Premier before he asked for this authority from Parliament, that they might know whether the site chosen by the very highest authorities and impartial tribunals at Point Levis, or a site which perhaps would be more approved by a number of gentlemen on both sides of the House, in Quebec, but which would involve a much larger expenditure of public money. It was one of those cases in which the Government having the means of forming an opinion, ought to take Parliament into their confidence and inform them where the site was to be, and what amount would be necessary for the construction of the work. He learnt from a communication he had received from one of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec that not only had the officers of the Imperial Government, who were deeply interested in this matter, decided upon Point Levis as the proper location for this work, but that seven out of the nine Harbor Commissioners of Quebec—the men he supposed the best qualified to judge what site should be selected—concurred in the opinion expressed by the Imperial officers in relation to this work. He regretted that under such circumstances the Premier was not in a position to state to the House whether the best location would be chosen, or whether that was to depend upon the amount of political pressure brought to bear upon the Government by parties in this House or outside of it. There were gentlemen in this House to whom the Government would be disposed to defer a good deal, who were ready to exercise all the influence they could bring to bear upon the Government, and he hoped the Premier would invoke the assistance of the House if necessary against any pressure that might involve a very large increase in public expenditure. The engineers' estimate for a dock on the Levis side at St. Joseph, 500 feet long, was £88,900 sterling, and for a dock 850 feet long, £104,000; for a dock 500 feet long at Diamond Harbor, the estimate was £110,000. This was the information furnished to him by one of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE called the attention of the House to the fact that this was not a public work and that the Government would not spend any money on it. They merely borrowed money to pay over to the trust, which amount would be repaid. The Graving Dock was in no sense a work which the Government had undertaken, or in which they proposed to spend a dollar of the public money any more than the harbor works of Montreal, for which the Government had borrowed money and charged interest. As to whether seven of the nine Harbor Commissioners of Quebec were in favor of one site or another he had no means of knowing. The Harbor Commissioners had not communicated with the Government further than sending a report of the engineers whom they invited from Liverpool to report upon the site, and their report stated, not as the hon. gentlemen said, a difference of fifty or sixty per cent in favor of Point Levis as compared with Quebec, but a difference of only twenty per cent or £20,000, and they confessedly did not possess very exact information as to the Charles River site. As to the Government giving exact information to the House, if the Government were carrying out the work themselves they would only be obliged to give the information they had afforded to the House. The proposition was to build the Graving Dock in the harbor of Quebec, and the House could not desire exact information as to the site, any more than it would desire exact information as the site of the public building to be erected in Montreal or Halifax, respecting which it would be enough to state that the building was to be erected in Halifax, for example, at a certain cost, the Government not being required to name the street or the number of the lot. But the Graving Dock not being a public work but merely a work to be done by an official board in trust, the Government were still less necessitated to make particular specification of the exact location, it being quite sufficient to say that it was to be constructed in the harbor of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER thought the reply of the hon. First Minister was not in point. Any work for which the Government pledged the credit of the Dominion, no matter in what way the money might be recouped, he held to be a public work. The hon. gentleman had admitted there was a difference of 20 per cent between the two sites.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that his statement was only to the effect that between the two locations mentioned by the engineers in their report there was a difference of £20,000; but he did not say there were only two sites which might be selected.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman was, therefore, not able to state whether the difference might not be 20 per cent or 50 per cent as between different sites.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was not able to state there would be any difference.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON asked for an explanation as to how the hon. member for Cumberland would submit the questions to the House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he would submit a proposition setting forth that a Graving Dock would be constructed at a certain place to cost a certain sum, and would not come down to the House with a proposition to construct a Graving Dock without stating whether it would cost £50,000 or £100,000.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. member in 1873 asked authority from Parliament to borrow one and a half million dollars to build docks in the harbor of Montreal, without stating the site. The Government would be bound to see that the location of the dock in Quebec harbor was such as would best meet the public interest, and they would arrive at a conclusion which would meet the views of mercantile men.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. THIBAUDEAU in the chair, and reported the resolutions.

INSOLVENCY.

On motion of Hon. Mr. FOURNIER, the House went into committee to insert further amendments in the Insolvency Bill, Mr. McKAY (Cape Breton) in the chair.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved that the Bill be amended by striking out bleachers, carpenters and cow-keepers from the first clause, and inserting miners and master quarrymen.

Mr. GOUDGE stated that the word "master quarryman" did not meet the case, and suggested that it should be made "quarryman" and "operators in plaster." There was not a clause in the Bill that would meet the circumstances of those engaged in that business.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said he believed he had gone as far as he could to meet the views of the hon. gentleman. The suggestion made was of a vague and uncertain character. What was an operator in plaster? What kind of an operation did he perform?

Mr. GOUDGE suggested that the word "shipper" should be included in the list for they did in his Province a large business, and a business of considerable risk. They were not agents or traders, and were not buyers and sellers.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER raised a point of order. The Bill had been referred to committee for the special purpose of inserting two amendments, and any other amendments could not be made in this committee.

Mr. MOUSSEAU wanted to know if building societies were included in the category of traders.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said if they were traders of course they would be submitted to the action of the law.

Mr. MOUSSEAU said Art. 369 of the Civil Code applied to them, and they should be exempted from the action of this law.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL wished to present to the committee his idea of what the first section of the Bill ought to be. On a former occasion when the Bill was under the consideration of the House, he had stated that he believed all those enumerated professions and occupations should be struck out, and the general term of "all traders" substituted, and he thought non-traders should have the advantages and disadvantages of the Bill. The general term of "all traders" was very well known, and very generally accepted, and could be placed in the Bill instead of the enumerated list. His opinion was, that not only traders, but non-traders should have the benefit of the Bill, and that all persons in the Dominion, whether engaged in merchandise or not, if they showed they had acted fairly, should be entitled to receive the benefits and advantages of the Bill.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the Bill had been referred back to Committee of the Whole for a certain purpose, and no other could be entertained.

The amendments were then adopted.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved that the 27th clause :—"The Governor in Council may appoint in the several Provinces of Canada, except the Province of Quebec, one or more persons to be Official Assignee or Assignees in and for every county, and in the Province of Quebec such appointment of Official Assignee or joint Official Assignees shall be made in and for each judicial district of the Province, except in each of the districts of Montreal and St. Francis respectively. Such appointment may be made for such district or for one or more electoral divisions of the same.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked why Quebec should have exceptional legislation.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said it was because an Official Assignee was not required for every county in that Province.

The amendment was adopted, and the committee rose and reported the Bill as amended. The amendment was read a first and second time.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of substituting the following for the first clause :—"This Act shall apply to all debtors and to all co-partnerships and companies whether incorporated or not, except incorporated banks, insurance, railway and telegraph companies and debts incurred by breaches of trust."

The House divided on the amendment which was rejected by the following vote :—

Mr. Bourassa

M. BOURASSA propose, secondé par M. BECHARD, "Que le Bill ne passe pas maintenant, mais qu'il soit renvoyé à un comité de tout la Chambre, avec instruction d'ajouter à la fin de la 3me Section, les mots suivants : 'Et les dettes dues par un failli, aux personnes du présent Acte, ne seront pas non plus comprises dans la décharge accordée à tel failli, mais ce dernier votera, nonobstant cette décharge, responsable du paiement de toute partie de pareille dette qui n'aura pas été payee à ces personnes non réputées commerçants, à même les dividendes déclarés sur les biens du failli en vertu du présent Acte.'"

Mr. MILLS said there was a difficulty in connection with the adoption of the motion, viz., debts represented by negotiable securities. If the motion was carried, it would be necessary to make provision that negotiable notes, bills receivable and bills of exchange might not be transferred from traders to non-traders with a view of making the party liable who otherwise would not be liable.

Mr. PALMER thought that the Government should seriously consider whether it was desirable to proceed with the Bill in view of the serious difficulties which would arise in placing it in operation.

The amendment was negatived on the following division :—

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL moved, seconded by Mr. BOWELL—"That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of amending the first clause by adding the words 'lumbermen, millmen, contractors and fishermen.'" Lost on division.

Mr. COLBY moved, seconded by Mr. DEVLIN,—"That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of striking out the 58th clause, which makes it a condition that if a dividend is less than 33 per cent., discharge may be refused." In moving this amendment he would say briefly that in any insolvency measure, where the system of voluntary assignments was preserved, he could quite understand the propriety of inserting a clause which would require the debtor to pay a given percentage, say 33 or 50 per cent., as it followed quite logically from such a system. If the debtor could elect his own time, and of his own option throw his estate into insolvency and compel the creditor to accept the consequences, he ought to do so at such a stage that it would produce something for the creditor. He should not be permitted to allow his estate to become entirely wasted and then offer it to the creditor. But the hon. the Minister of Justice had eliminated from the Bill the principle of voluntary assignments, and adopted that of compulsory assignments; and in so doing he thought the hon. gentleman had done wisely and well, and that he would be supported by the sentiment of the country. He believed a large proportion of the evils and complaints, hitherto, had grown out of the system of voluntary assignments, which this Bill proposed to abolish. If the system of voluntary assignments were swept away, then the clause requiring 33 per cent. dividend should also be struck out, for it could only be applicable to the voluntary system. He could see no propriety in such a clause when the voluntary system was done away with. The law threw the whole onus of assignments upon the creditor, and it was purely in the interests of the creditor, and permitted the creditor to throw the debtor into insolvency. We had given the creditor all the legal power he desired, and if in the exercise of his own discretion, and purely in reference to his own interest, he permitted the debtor to run on from bad to worse, until his estate was wasted, he should be held responsible legally for the consequences of his negligence and faults. If he permitted such a state of affairs he was the only person who could be blamed. He thought it was desirable to facilitate composition arrangements between debtor and creditor. If the hon. gentleman would look back to the clause preceding the 58th clause, they would see the ordeal through which the poor debtor must pass before he would be even entitled to a discharge at all, and he thought the stringency of the Act should be mitigated by the abolition of this clause requiring a dividend of 33 per cent. It was a desirable provision that a minority of the creditors should not be able to control a majority of the creditors. He would call their attention to the provisions for a composition and discharge. There must be a majority in the number of creditors at the first meeting called, and when the proposition for composition was submitted, and after the majority had consented to a certain mode of composition, the Assignee called a special meeting for the specific purpose of considering that proposition, and at that meeting there must be the concurrence, not merely of the majority in number, but of those holding three-fourths of the aggregate amount of indebtedness. The opinion of the creditors was forwarded to the Judge, accompanied by the affidavit of the insolvent, to the effect that no one of his creditors had been induced by any preferential arrangement, or promise of preferential payment to give his consent; and after that is done it must be made to appear to the Judge that the consent of the majority of the creditors had been fairly obtained, that the trader had not, to the knowledge of any one interested, been guilty of fraudulent concealment of his property, or evasion, or false swearing, that he had kept his account books properly, and after all that the Judge had the discretionary right to confirm the discharge or postpone the discharge. Although a man might have been honest, yet if he had been negligent in business, or had recklessly endorsed the security of others, or had continued his business unduly after he believed himself an insolvent, the Judge might withhold his discharge. After the poor debtor had passed through all that ordeal, and had acquitted himself of any dishonest intent or reckless impropriety he should get his discharge. To withhold the discharge under these circumstances would be an act of prohibition; and that opinion was not confined to himself, but was entertained by representatives of the creditor class by the members of Boards of Trade and others, who represented the creditor class purely in that matter—and they considered this clause requiring a dividend of 33 per cent. should be dispensed with. He believed it should not be in the power of a single obstinate creditor, where there was a general concurrence of the majority of those interested, still further to embarrass and delay the proceedings under the Act. The effect of this clause would be to prevent composition, which was the most desirable arrangement, since it saved costs. He therefore moved "That the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of striking out the 58th Clause which makes it a condition that if the dividend be less than 33 per cent. the discharge may be refused."

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said he felt bound, for the reasons given by the hon. member for Stanstead, to support the amendment. He believed that the debtor should be encouraged and threatened to go into insolvency while there was anything to be divided amongst the creditors. He believed that if power were given to a debtor to go into insolvency voluntarily, it would be proper to impose as a condition of discharge that the dividend to be realized from the estate should not be less than a certain amount; but to tell the insolvent that he should not be allowed to go into insolvency of his own accord—that the time for him to do so must be fixed by the creditors, and that in case of their forcing him into insolvency, and the estate should not bring 33 cents on the dollar, he should not have his discharge, was too hard, and besides was inconsistent with the principle of the Bill.

Mr. WOOD said it seemed remarkable that nearly all the amendments that had been offered to this Bill had been proposed by gentlemen who were opposed to any Insolvency Act at all. The hon. gentleman who moved this amendment was one of that number. If this clause were retained in the Bill, and held over the head of a debtor, the inducement to save as much as he could of his estate would not be held out. If he knew that he could not get his discharge, unless the estate would realize 33 per cent., he would call his creditors before him at the earliest possible moment and lay the condition of his estate before them. If they were satisfied, he would at once be put into insolvency. The amendment was not fair to the commercial community. If this clause were struck out a debtor could go on spending his money as he pleased without giving any account of it, because he would know that under any circumstances he could get his discharge.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said this amendment was not accurate in point of fact. The 58th clause would not bear the interpretation put upon it by the mover of the amendment. Under that clause no Judge had the power to refuse a discharge to any debtor whose assets amounted to ten cents in the dollar, provided he could account in a satisfactory manner for the deficiency. That was a good provision. No debtor should get his discharge who could not account for his deficiency, whether he paid 33 cents in the dollar or 60 cents.

Mr. PALMER quite agreed with the remarks which had fallen from the hon. member for Cumberland. This clause would do no injustice to the honest trader who could give a satisfactory account of the condition of his estate. No man in this country should go on with his business when his assets were reduced to anything like 33 per cent. It was true a debtor could not make a voluntary assignment, but he could call his creditors together, explain to them the position in which he stood, and ask them to put him into insolvency. If they should refuse to do so, the fact would weigh with the Judge. The clause would have a good effect in preventing fraud, and he would therefore oppose the amendment.

Mr. PATERSON said there was a strong feeling in this House in favor of doing away altogether with the Insolvency Law. Now, why was this? The fact was that under the operations of the old law, in which there was no clause of this kind, fraud was perpetrated to such an extent that it was considered the country would be better without an Insolvency Act at all. The object of this clause was to prevent the frauds which had been so prevalent in the past, and at the same time, it afforded relief to the honest trader. Under the old law men had passed through the Insolvency Court, paying ten or fifteen cents in the dollar, and when whitewashed occupied a better position than the men they had defrauded. Any one whose estate could not pay 33 cents in the dollar, who had not been overtaken by some unexpected calamity, had no t to be whitewashed or to receive credit again. The clause was a good one and should not be struck out.

Mr. YOUNG said that under the old law he was in favor of some check being placed on the release of debtors who had became insolvents, as some abuses had undoubtedly occurred in that way. He felt, however, the position was entirely altered by the change in the principle of the Bill, and the fact that a man could no longer make a voluntarily assignment, but could be placed in insolvency by his creditors whenever they pleased. Under the 58th Clause a number of the creditors of a debtor might refuse to allow him to go into insolvency while he was able to pay 33 cents on the dollar, and if he afterwards became an insolvent, the fact that he was unable to pay that dividend would operate against him obtaining a discharge. He was strongly of opinion that if under the old law Parliament went a little too far in the interest of the debtor, there was now danger of going too far in the interests of the creditors. It behooved hon. members to guard against doing an act of injustice to honest and industrious traders who might be unfortunate in business from some unlucky speculation. When the hon. member for Hamilton, who represented the wholesale trade, had obtained a Bill framed in such a way as to give merchants immense power over their debtors, it was too much to ask that the insolvent, after being stripped of all his property should be refused a discharge. Under the Bill the creditors would have entire control of the insolvent's estate, and they might so mismanage it as to prevent the debtor from being able to pay the dividend specified, and obtain a discharge. The hon. member for Cumberland had argued that under that 50th clause no Judge would refuse to grant a discharge to an insolvent, provided he was able to explain why he could not pay 33 cents on the dollar. That was, however, just where the difficulty arose. In many cases perfectly honest men would find it difficult to explain the reasons why they were unable to pay that amount. Moreover, explanations that would be satisfactory to a Judge of one county, might not prove so to another; and hence there would be different decisions in different localities. It would be a much wiser policy for Parliament itself to decide the conditions under which the insolvent should obtain his discharge, rather than leave the power in the hands of any single person. Again, it should not be forgotten that there were a dozen different points in the Bill, which, if not satisfactorily explained, would debar the insolvent from obtaining a discharge. The Bill was an exceedingly stringent one, and was framed almost entirely in the interests of the creditors. He trusted hon. members would judge the question on its merits, and not be led to do an injustice, because under the system of voluntary assignments, there were some abuses; but recognizing that the Bill provided for compulsory assignments, he hoped they would vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Stanstead, which would protect the honest and industrious debtor.

Mr. SCATCHERD said the section proposed to be struck out did not compel the payment of a dividend of 33 per cent. before a discharge was granted, but it provided that if an insolvent failed to pay that amount he was compelled to account for the deficiency to the satisfaction of a Judge before he obtained a discharge. The 56th section provides that an insolvent should not obtain a discharge if he was guilty of fraud, and that point would have to be decided by the Judge. He held that the 58th section was the best section in the Bill, and if any amendment would be made, it should be in the direction of compelling an insolvent to pay a hundred cents on the dollar, and he would therefore vote against the amendment.

Mr. LANGLOIS said that creditors who were traders were interested in debtors making a composition, for insolvent traders shortly afterwards resumed business, and the creditors were recouped in the shape of additional trade. Non-traders did not occupy the same position, and the clause was framed in their interest.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) supported the amendment, and protested against such large discretionary power being placed in the hands of Judges, who, like all men, were fallible, and entertained prejudices against certain parties. If the Dominion should have an Insolvent Law, there should be no dividend specified to be paid by the insolvent, and when a bankrupt was compelled to come forward and transfer all his property to his creditors, he was entitled to his discharge.

Mr. RICHARD thought the question had not been properly put by the hon. member for Stanstead in his amendment. The only question which the Judge had to decide in considering an application for a discharge, was whether the insolvent had been honest or dishonest. If the insolvent had been honest, no matter if his assets only realized five cents on the dollar, he would be entitled to his discharge; but if he were proved dishonest and paid ninety cents, he would not be entitled to it. The clause was not a limiting, but a protective one. If an insolvent paid thirty-three cents dividend the presumption was that he had been honest in business, and the burden of proof would rest on the creditors to show that he had not so acted and was not entitled to a discharge. If, however, the debtor paid a smaller dividend, the burden of proof fell upon him to show that he had acted honestly, and if that was proved he would obtain his discharge. The clause would therefore operate as a definite guarantee to creditors for the honesty of debtors.

Mr. DEVLIN, as seconder of the amendment, desired to state that the commercial opinion of Montreal was against the clause as it appeared in the Bill, and it had been opposed by the President and Vice-President of the Board of Trade of that city. He was surprised at the anxiety manifested by some hon. members to have the clause passed, because clauses 56 and 57 appeared to provide sufficient safeguards for creditors. The 58th clause was opposed to the true interests of the people, for it placed the insolvent at the mercy of the Judge. In 1871 the total liabilities of insolvents in England amounted to $17,000,000 and the assets to $3,000,000, showing an average dividend of three shillings and sixpence on the pound sterling, and it was unwise, therefore, to provide in the Act for insolvents in this country to pay so large a dividend as 33 cents on the dollar.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

AFTER RECESS,

Mr. DEVLIN said he did not desire to occupy the attention of the House longer with a debate upon the clause he had seconded. He believed the question was fully understood by hon. members, and that the feeling was that there should be no further debate upon the question.

Mr. McCALLUM said he was opposed to an insolvency law altogether, as he considered it was simply a premium upon wrong doing; but at the same time if we were to have an Insolvency Law at all, we should retain this clause in the Bill. What was the object of our Insolvency Law? It was to give relief to the honest debtor; and in his opinion it was no trouble to an honest debtor to get his release under this clause. The first duty of a business man who found himself in difficulties would be to count up the full amount of his liabilities, give notice to his creditors and call upon them, and if they assisted him after that, and he should continue in business, the Judge, when the debtor applied for his discharge, would take into consideration the notice given to the creditors at that time. If the creditors insisted on their debtor continuing in business at a loss until he could not pay five cents in the dollar, the Judge would also take that into consideration. The object of this law was in favor of the honest man, to give relief to the honest trader, and not to help a man to rob his neighbor. He believed the honest people of this country did not want an Insolvency Law, and if any one would second it he would move the "six months' hoist."

Mr. DAVIES did not think it would be a hardship to compel debtors to pay 33 cents on the dollar. Every debtor should acknowledge his obligation to pay 100 cents on the dollar if he could; and if an insolvent had some trouble in getting through he should not complain. In his Province they had some few years ago passed an Insolvency Act; but there was no limit to the amount a debtor had to pay. The consequence was that in one year afterwards they were very glad to amend the Act with a provision requiring 25c on the dollar, and since that the Act had worked very well indeed. He could not see that there was any harm at all in having the creditor pay a reasonable amount. In many cases merchants who by any means got into difficulties, became reckless and speculated wildly with the view of making up their losses; but with this clause they would pause before they did so, because if they could not pay the proper amount they could not get a certificate from the Judge. What was the object of the present Bill. It was found that the Act in the Statute Book was not stringent enough, but this Bill was to make it more stringent for it had been found that dishonest traders could go into court and come out whitewashed, and in a few days carry on business just as well as ever, and acquire property. On looking over the Act he must say he liked it as a whole; and as he considered this one of the best clauses in the Bill, he should be very sorry to see it struck out.

The amendment was declared lost on division.

Mr. BECHARD moved that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend it in such a way as to provide that all debts due by an insolvent to such persons as farmers, graziers or common laborers, who are excepted from the operations of this Act, be considered preferential. He held that those who were not allowed to take advantage of this Act should not be subjected to its injurious consequences.

The House divided on the amendment, which was rejected by the following vote:—

Killam,

Mr. COLBY moved that the Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the 58th section by striking out "33" and inserting "10" in place thereof. He hoped the House would recollect that this Bill was an Act which applied to traders strictly. It was a question as between traders of the creditor class, who, as a rule, were the wholesale merchants, and the debtor class of traders, who, as a rule, were retailers. Formerly under the law on our Statute Books it was the privilege of the debtor trader when he found himself in failing circumstances to make a voluntary assignment of his estate and compel the creditors to accept it. Under that law it would have been logical, fit, and proper where a debtor used that privilege to pay the trader a certain percentage. The law was changed, however, and that privilege to the retail trader was taken away. It was now a stringent law for the use and benefit of the wholesale trader for winding up the retail trader's estate. He did not think it should be made too stringent on the retail traders of the country. The rosponsibily of action being now in the hands of the wholesale trader, if he neglected to take advantage of an early opportunity—if he chose by his own negligence to let the estate drift into a position where it could not pay more than a small percentage, it was at his own risk. The estate under this Bill would be taken out of the hands of the debtor, and wound up by the creditors without consulting the individual who of all others could best assist in making the most of it. He did not think that any percentage should be fixed, but since the principle had been affirmed he should reduce it to a lower amount than thirty-three per cent. He regretted to see that the cost of winding up an estate under this Bill was not to be lessened, but was to be fully as great as under the existing law. He knew instances in which estates of large magnitude had been entirely wasted by the process of winding them up. In one case an estate valued at $13,000 was wound up. The father of the debtor offered ninety cents on the dollar—this was refused, and the estate was thrown into insolvency and though valued at $13,000, did not pay the cost of winding it up. Instead of ninety cents the creditors got nothing at all. He thought the proposition he now submitted to the House would perhaps meet the views of the hon. gentleman better than his former amendment on which he had hoped a vote would be taken.

Mr. COLIN MACDOUGALL said he would have been better pleased if the clause had been struck out altogether, but that could not be done now, and he would support the next best thing, which was to reduce the percentage as much as possible, The voluntary clause being done away with and a compulsory one substituted this proposition of the hon. member for Stanstead was one which ought to meet with the approval of this House. Down to thirty-three per cent., it was incumbent upon the creditor to show cause why the debtor should not get his discharge, but below that amount the burden of proof as to the cause of the deficiency was thrown on the debtor; and if it should happen after all the expense of winding up the estate that it did not pay thirty-three cents on the dollar he could not get his discharge. He would therefore support the amendment.

Mr. DEVLIN desired to record his protest against this act of legislation. He believed that the wholesale merchants, who were very ably represented in this House, were seeking legislation which, ultimately might become ruinous to small traders throughout the Dominion. He asked hon. members who had some regard and respect for honest industry and for traders who through misfortune might go into insolvency, to read the clause of the Bill preceding the 58th clause, and consider whether the merchants were not, by those provisions, amply protected. He affirmed that they would be sufficiently protected, and he was amazed that enlightened men should be asking further legislation with the view of crushing the last spark of liberty from those insolvents. He recorded his protest against the Bill as a most unjust act of legislation.

Mr. PATERSON said the experience of retail dealers in regard to the present Insolvency Law was that its provisions were so lax that they were constantly defrauded by their debtors. It was the duty of every man to pay his debts in full, and by reducing a trader's liabilities by two-thirds, Parliament performed an act of grace.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said that if the hon. member for Stanstead had taken a vote upon his first amendment, he would have voted in its favor, because it affirmed a sound principle, namely, that the question of discharge should be a purely judicial question, not at all dependent on the creditor or the amount of dividend paid, as Parliament was now doing away with voluntary insolvency. But he could not go with the hon. member in the amendment, because he recognized, admitted and adopted the principle of the clause as it stood and proposed to reduce the amount from 33 cents on the dollar, as provided in the clause, to 10 cents. The choice, therefore, presented was simply between the limitation of 33 cents as provided by the Bill, and was reported from the select committee, by whom it was carefully considered, and 10 cents. He could see no good reason whatever, for the proposition to fix the dividend at 10 cents, indeed, the proposition appeared absurd. The House having affirmed the principle embodied in the Bill, as reported by the committee, he would stand by the dividend fixed by the committee in preference to the dividend proposed by the amendment of the hon. member for Stanstead.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said that the principle of the 58th clause of the Bill was mischievous, but the House was committed to it, and he would vote for the amendment, because he believed it would render the operation of the Bill less mischievous.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL agreed with the hon. member for South Bruce, and was also opposed to the principle of the 58th clause. He would, therefore, vote for the amendment of the member for Stanstead, because it would be less mischevous than the clause as it stood in the Bill.

Mr. COLBY wished it to be distinctly understood that it was not the intention of himself or the hon. member for Montreal Centre that the proposed amendment would not have been lost if a division had been taken.

The amendment was then put and negatived on the following division :—

Mr. PALMER said he did not think it worth while taking up the time of the House in proposing amendments to the Bill; but he thought as the House was now pretty full it would be the proper time to test the question as to whether the country wanted the Bill at all. He would move, seconded by Mr. RYMAL, that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that the further consideration thereof be postponed to this day three months. He desired to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the old statute had been in force since 1869, and this law had not been in force at all—but was it not the experience of every member of the House that the law had been detrimental? Had not the working of the law been a fraud upon the country? Did it not enable persons to take the benefit of it and go through the Bankruptcy Court and not pay their creditors who had no right to do so? In the United States they found it the best policy not to have a Bankruptcy Law; and he thought that one law should be a temporary, and not a permanent one. Another objection was, while the old law had a limit to it, this one had no limit, and once on the Statute Book no matter how badly it might work, an Act for its repeal would have to go through Parliament. In this country a man's labor was always capital; and the consequence was a habit of trusting people without capital; and it very often happened that the dealings of such a man were out of all proportion to the value of his labor, and when a great crisis came on he was almost certain to be unable to meet his liabilities. He had heard the hon. member for West Montreal say it was a terrible thing to be so hard upon the poor debtor, and he talked of the tyrany of the law as though it were a dreadful piece of tyranny that a man should pay a debt he had incurred. His (Mr. PALMER'S) idea was that a man who had undertaken a debt should discharge it if there were any means in his power. The object of our legislation should be in the direction of making persons honestly discharge the liabilities they took upon themselves, and not in a direction to encourage an assumption of liabilities with the view of getting rid of them under the law. He thought there was at this time no particular reason why this law should go into operation. There was also this objection to a permanent Bankruptcy Law. Persons who were dishonestly inclined would shape their affairs and their credit so as to take advantage of the law and squirm through; but if they were allowed to go on without a Bankruptcy Law they would not know when it would be adopted, and consequently they could not but shape their affairs so as to take undue advantage of the law. There was another thing in this law that was unfair. Farmers were excluded from its benefit though they ran great risk—in fact every thing they did was risky. They put in a crop; but it was not at all certain that they would take out a crop; and even when they sold that crop to the merchant it was not always certain that they would get their pay—particularly after a Bankruptcy Law was passed. He thought the farming community would feel an injustice was done them if they were debarred from the benefits of this Act. Another and stronger objection to the Act was that it put upon the over-taxed people of Canada a lot of officials—accountants they were called—at $4,000 each, and he did not know how much more would be spent in working the machinery of the law. He had heard of a case where an estate of $13,000 was eaten up by the cost of winding it up.

Mr. RYMAL said he had always opposed Bankruptcy Laws. He considered it his duty to oppose this measure at every stage. He was convinced that Insolvency Laws were an unmitigated nuisance, a school of immorality and rascality, and he believed it was well that people should understand that when they contracted debt they should be strictly held to the payment thereof. Under this system of insolvency the shrewd, designing, calculating man can bring his affairs into such a shape as to defraud his creditors and—as he (Mr. RYMAL) had seen such men on many occasions do—appear on the streets in a much better position than before they got whitewashed. It was a very common remark that when you saw a man dressed in extra fine clothes, driving in an extra fine carriage, whose family was clothed in scarlet and fine linen and fared sumptuously every day—that that man had passed through the Bankruptcy Court, and that all this luxury followed the operation. He believed the country would be better without a Bankruptcy Law, and he had great pleasure in seconding the amendment of the hon. member for St. John. He trusted that every man who had any regard for pure and simple justice, and was not willing to give his adherence to an Act of confiscation, whereby one man's property was sacrificed for the benefit of another, would stop before supporting this Bill. His sentiments on this matter were well expressed by General MARION shortly after the American Revolution, when the question whether the property of loyalists should be confiscated was under consideration. At a convivial meeting where a number of politicians were at the table, this question had been pretty well discussed, and General MARION, who had a great love for justice, tempered with mercy, tossed off the wine and uttered this sentiment—which was his (Mr. RYMAL'S): Damnation take all confiscation Acts!

Mr. THOMSON (Welland) said he was generally a pretty faithful follower of the Government in this House, and he was disposed to follow them on this occasion, because he was willing to give this Act to the mercantile community just as the Almighty gave the Jews a King when they asked for one—to punish them. There never would have been a necessity for such a law if the mercantile community did not really rule the country. We find young men going into a mercantile business under this law, and before they have been in commerce more than five years, run against the stone wall of credit and get knocked down, and laboring for the remainder of their existence to work up a competence. The whole system was wrong. When the Americans threw that chest of tea into the harbor of Boston they meant to typify that they threw over the whole political system of England. They ought to have thrown over the mercantile system of England and kept the political system instead. But they threw away the angel and kept the devil. He (Mr. THOMSON) was disposed to give the merchants this Insolvency Act, and allow them to ruin every man they could, and then the cure would come. That cure was to be had in the first place by securing the liberty of the people in the aggregate by giving every man a voice in the legislation of the country—that was to say universal suffrage. The next step was to raise the whole revenue of this country by direct taxation. The next to create free trade with all the world, no matter what policy other nations may adopt towards us. The next thing was a national currency. Under that altered condition of affairs we could manufacture cheaper than any other people on the face of the earth. This was his political creed from the time he came into this House, and he was going to live, if his constitution continued as good as it was then, to see those views adopted in this country. The time would come when this beggarly mercantile system would have to be swept away by the able-bodied yeomanry of this country. The country had yet to rule the town. He would support this Insolvency Law although he considered it an abomination. He would support any abomination—and the more abominations the better—that would drive this people to an appreciation of the evils of the present system, and result in its being abolished.

Mr. COLBY said he had for many years held the opinion that the Insolvency Act had worked more harm than good in this country. Although he had felt it his duty on more than one occasion to introduce Bills tending to the repeal of the Insolvency Act, he did not feel at liberty at this stage of the debate—having agreed to the principle of the Bill at the second reading, and having succeeded in committee in making it as perfect as possible, or rather as little imperfect as may be—having come to this stage he did not feel himself justified in supporting the amendment. On former occasions when he had introduced the Bill for the abrogation of this law he was, or believed he was, supported by a very strong sentiment on the part of the mercantile interests of this community. In 1872 when the Bill was before the House asking to repeal this law, petitions came in in favor of it largely signed by the merchants of Montreal and other parts of the Dominion. To such an extent were these petitions signed that it was difficult to say on which side of the question the feeling of the mercantile classes preponderated. The various Boards of Trade had since then pronounced themselves in favor of an Insolvency Act. On the other hand, there had been no remonstrance on the part of any portion of the mercantile community. There was no petition before the House asking that this Act be not passed. He was driven to the conclusion that whatever might be the private convictions and sentiments of hon. gentlemen with regard to the operation of this Act, it was the desire of the mercantile portion of the community that it should be passed, and it affected no other class. If both the wholesale and retail merchants desired it, he did not feel himself justified at this stage of the Bill in attempting to defeat the passage of this law. He was induced to give this law a trial for one year for this reason. His own individual belief was that the chief evils of which the country complained in the past had resulted from the principle of voluntary assignment in the existing law.

Mr. Thompson.

When the Government came down and said: "We will give you a Bill which does away with that objectionable feature of voluntary assignment," he was willing to give that law a trial. He was not very sanguine as to the successful operation of this law. It was not sufficiently dissimilar to the existing law to lead him to anticipate the best results, but inasmuch as the most objectionable feature of the old law had been removed, he would not oppose it. If the merchants of the country disapproved of it, they should approach this House and express the sentiments they entertained.

Mr. BUNSTER had yet failed to hear any advantage that this law would confer upon the country. It proposed to give employment to a large number of officials. He believed it was the duty of Parliament to keep down taxation as much as possible and to devote our revenues to the development of our resources. He would therefore vote for the amendment.

The House then divided on the amendment which was rejected on the following vote:—

Killam,

Mr. METCALFE said he believed that a great many, if not a majority, of the failures in business were caused not by losses in trade, but by high living and extravagant expenses. A man might have a splendid equipage, a magnificent house, and his annual expenditure might exceed that of a realm. He fails, and when his books are examined it is found that the profits of his business would not pay for his expenses. Yet, according to the 57th clause of this Bill his certificate of discharge would only be withheld for a short time. Now, he believed that the certificate in such a case ought to be refused, and that a term of imprisonment would have a salutary effect in deterring men from plunging into a career of extravagance at the expense of their creditors. He therefore moved that the 57th clause be amended by adding the following words :—" That when it is proved that the insolvent has lived more extravagantly than his station and condition in life justifies, he shall be liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for a term not exceeding five years."

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

Mr. BARTHE moved that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of adding the following resolutions: First—That it is desirable that the power of appointing Assignees should not be vested in the creditors, but that the Assignees appointed by Government should alone be charged and entrusted with the winding up of estates, that they should not have any charges on the estates either by way of fees or expenses, but receive a salary from the Government out of the consolidated funds of the Dominion, and that out of the assets of each estate a percentage of five per cent. be levied and paid into the said consolidated funds of the Dominion, apart from necessary disbursements. Second—That all the moneys levied by Assignees shall be deposited by them in a chartered bank of the Dominion to the credit of the Government, and be not paid out only on a Government cheque according to the principle adopted in the Province of Quebec for the payment of moneys levied by Sheriffs." He said the object of having Official Assignees appointed by the Government was to avoid the expenses attending the appointment of inspectors. By the law as it stood, the expenses for inspectors, Official Assignees and Interim Assignees amounted to about fifteen or seventeen per cent. upon the assets of every estate. By the Government assuming the payment of the Assignees, there would be only five per cent. The reason why the old law gave so much dissatisfaction was that it was so expensive. Some Assignees were not conversant with the law, and had to incur the expense of consulting lawyers. Under this system competent men, versed in the law, would be appointed, and the Government having control of them, no two or three creditors could get an estate into their hands to the detriment of a minority. There were many other arguments which he would urge, if time permitted, in support of his amendment.

The amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) said the people of British Columbia had a Bankruptcy Law that had worked satisfactorily; and as there had been no expression, either on the part of the people or the Legislature, of a desire for a change, he thought that Province should be left to enjoy its own law. The law before the House had never been tried, and if it passed and proved satisfactory, an Act of a dozen lines would extend it to British Columbia. His country was sparsely settled, unfortunately, but they were encouraging immigration; and a harsh law would have the effect of driving unfortunate men across to the States to find a home. He objected altogether to the Act as a step backward to the dark ages. It would be a harshness for the other Provinces to endeavor to crush British Columbians under their heels and force upon that Province a law that was not needed. He would move, seconded by Mr. DECOSMOS, that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out words in different clauses, so as to exempt British Columbia from the operations of the Act.

The amendment was lost on division.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved, seconded by Mr. CIMON, that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to add the words "building societies" after the words "telegraph companies" in the first clause. He said he proposed this amendment in order that there might be no doubt as to the position of building societies. Some of them not only lent money, but were building houses and tenements.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER inquired if the amendment was not substantially embodied in the law as it stood.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the law embraced building societies that were trading corporations. Some of the building societies now had more of the character of banking institutions.

The amendment was declared lost on division.

On motion of Mr. GOUDGE, seconded by Mr. HORTON, the Bill was referred back to Committee of the Whole (Mr. FORBES in the chair), with instructions to strike out the word "master" where it occurred in the first clause in connection with the word quarryman.

The amendment was reported and read, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

THE SUPREME COURT.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the Bill to establish a Supreme Court and a Court of Exchequer for the Dominion.

Mr. BABY said he would move a series of resolutions based upon the resolutions passed at Quebec prior to the passage of the British North America Act, and which were embodied in that legislation. Amongst the rights reserved to the Legislature of Quebec was that of dealing with property, civil rights and civil procedure in the courts. The constitution of the proposed Supreme Court would take away those rights. Either Parliament had the right to create that court or not. If they had the right, on what was it based? It could only be based on the British North America Act; but it stated that all the rights appertaining to property, civil right and civil procedure were expressly placed under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures. The Superior Court was to be constituted of six Judges, two from Quebec, two from Ontario and the rest from the Maritime Provinces. The Bill gave an appelate right to any suitor whose claim amounted to $500. The consequence would be that a disappointed suitor, whose case had been adjudicated upon by the different courts of the Province, would appeal to the Supreme Court and the decision of the different tribunals would be reviewed by that court and possibly set aside. The decisions of Judges fully acquainted with the French law would be set aside by six Judges, four of whom would be unlearned in the laws of Quebec. The laws of all the other Provinces of the Dominion, except Quebec, might be assimilated, but the laws of Lower Canada were specially reserved to it. If the Supreme Court was established it would practically remove the trial of cases from courts of final jurisdiction in the several Provinces. Not only would the rights of Quebec be jeopardized by the fact that four of the six Supreme Court judges would be ignorant of French laws, but the rights of the other Provinces would be endangered by the Judges being unacquainted with the laws, customs and habits of the parties pleading before the court. Moreover, the Dominion Parliament did not possess the power of establishing a Supreme Court before the Provincial Legislatures had decided that it was required and provided therefor Before the Bill was submitted to Parliament the Local Legislature should have called for the establishment of the court by Parliament, and by their laws have declared that hereafter certain cases should be taken before the Supreme Court, and fixed the degree of appellate jurisdiction. The resolutions would speak for themselves, ves, and he, therefore, concluded by asking hon. members to pause before enacting the legislation proposed which threatened the rights secured to the Province of Quebec. He moved the following amendment :—

That in the resolutions adopted at the Conference held at Quebec on the 10th October, 1864, and which served as the basis of "The British North America Act, 1867," it is set forth :—

2. In the Federation of the British North American Provinces, the system of Government best adapted under existing circumstances to protect the diversified interest of the several Provinces, and secure efficiency, harmony and permanency in the working of the Union, would be a General Government, charged with matters of common interest to the whole country ; and Local Governments for each of the Canadas and for the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, charged with the control of local matters in their respective sections.

6. There shall be a General Legislature or Parliament for the Federated Provinces.

29. The General Parliament shall have power to make laws for the peace, welfare and good government of the Federated Provinces, and especially laws respecting the following subjects.

34. The establishment of a General Court of Appeal for the Federated Provinces.

37. And generally respecting all matters of a general character, not specially and exclusively reserved for the Local Governments and Legislatures.

33. Rendering uniform all or any of the laws relative to property and civil rights in Upper Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, and rendering uniform the procedure of all or any of the Courts in these Provinces ; but any Statute for this purpose shall have no force or authority in any Province until sanctioned by the Legislature thereof.

31. The General Parliament may also, from time to time, establish additional Courts, and the General Government may appoint Judges and officers thereof, when the same shall appear necessary or for the public advantage, in order to the due execution of the laws of Parliament.

32. All Courts, Judges and officers of the several Provinces shall aid, assist and obey the General Government in the exercise of its rights and powers, and for such purposes shall be held to be Courts, Judges and officers of the General Government.

34. Until the Consolidation of the Laws of Upper Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, the Judges of these Provinces, appointed by the General Government, shall be elected from their respective Bars.

38. The Judges of the Courts of Lower Canada shall be selected from the Bar of Lower Canada.

43. The Local Legislatures shall have power to make laws respecting the following subjects :—

17. The Administration of Justice, including the Constitution, maintenance and organization of the Courts, both of Civil and Criminal Jurisdiction, and including also the Procedure in Civil matters.

That the several resolutions above cited are reproduced in substance in the said Act of Confederation.

That by the said Bill No. 31 it is specially proposed to provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court from all final judgments, as well as from all preliminary or interlocutory judgments, in the cases and in the manner therein mentioned, of Courts of final resort (whether Courts of Appeal or of original jurisdiction) in each Province of Canada; and for the institution of proceedings in Error before the said Supreme Court; and that, in consequence the said Bill would have the effect :—

1. Of virtually depriving each Province, in a very great proportion, of the administration of justice, the control of which is, by the Constitution, reserved exclusively to the local Legislatures and Governments, at least in so far as relates to laws respecting Property and civil rights and civil Procedure in each Province.

2. Of removing that administration of justice to Judges indiscriminately taken and selected from the whole of Canada, whereas by the Federal Compact the Judges of each Province (except the Province of Quebec) are to be selected from the respective bars of those Provinces, so long as their laws remain unconsolidated ; and as to the Province of Quebec, in particular, its Judges are always to be selected from among the Members of the Bar of that same Province.

3. Of submitting the laws relating to property, to civil right and to civil procedure in the Province of Quebec, the causes and the fate of citizens of that Province to judges, who, for the most part are strangers to their language, their manners, their usages, and their customs, to the origin of their codes and to the numerous commentators thereon, and to the practice of their Courts.

4. Of submitting and attributing to the said Supreme Court the management and control of matters which are not common to the whole country.

That the appeal now allowed in the Province of Quebec in certain cases to Her Majesty's Privy Council, was so authorized originally by a law of that Province (34 Geo. 3, Cap. 6.)

That (saving the inherent right of the Sovereign, or the Crown, to evoke every clause) by natural right, those amenable to the jurisdiction only, and by consequence each Province, should decide through how many degrees and classes of jurisdiction the administration of justice should pass in order to satisfy them.

That Her Majesty's Privy Council, composed as it is of men acquainted, in general, with the English and French languages, as also with the laws and institutions of England and France, affords much greater security than the proposed Court for the safety of the civil and constitutional rights of the several nationalities which this country comprises.

That as respects the exercise and enforcing of all rights and powers of the General Parliament and Government of Canada, for matters common to the whole country, the courts and Judges of the several Provinces are at present considered the Courts and Judges of Canada.

That in consequence the proposed establishment of the said Supreme Court and Court of Exchequer is not now desirable, and would not justify the considerable expense which they would entail upon the country, and the costs, frequently ruinous, which suitors amenable to their jurisdiction would have to incur.

Mr. MOUSSEAU apologised for speaking on this question at so late an hour in the evening, and at so late a period of the session; but the subject was one of so much importance to the Province of Quebec that it was impossible for him to allow the occasion to pass without addressing a few observations to the House. It was always an important matter to create a new tribunal, but it was a still more so to establish a court under circumstances so peculiar as the present. The first question which every member—he might say every citizen of this country—would naturally put to himself, would be—" whether is the law necessary or otherwise? Is it asked for by British Columbia, a Province which has but recently entered the Confederation?" He did not think so. Was it asked for by Ontario, which prided itself upon the constitution of its courts, and the general administration of justice within its jurisdiction? Certainly not. Was it asked for by Quebec? On the contrary it was, because Quebec always strongly opposed the creation of a court of this nature that it had not been consummated before. It was not from the Maritime Provinces the request came. The Press moreover had never urged that this court was necessary. Public opinion did not ask for it, nor did it give expression to any desire in that direction through the usual channels. To him it appeared that public men and statesmen before entering upon a great enterprise, before spending many thousands of dollars, in short, before passing any important law, ought always first to study whether such a law was wanted by the country. Public men and statesmen usually watch very closely and very attentively what was called the tide of public opinion before imposing upon the country such an expenditure as this, for it was after all a very doubtful boon. It seemed to him that the members of the Government should have inquired when bringing this measure down whether it was demanded by the wants of the country. If such an inquiry had been made he felt certain that the proposition to pass this Bill would never have been laid before the House. He was specially speaking for the Province of Quebec in this matter but he dared to say that the same opinion prevailed in any other Province. He was aware as a matter of fact, that there was the very gravest objection to such a law on all hands; and the right hon. member for Kingston who introduced a similar measure one session when he was at the head of a large and powerful majority, felt compelled to withdraw the Bill because he could not carry it through. He (Mr. MOUSSEAU) was well informed when he made this statement, and it was within his knowledge that the strongest opposition came from the Province of Quebec, supplemented, to be sure, by all the other Provinces. He would ask first whether that law was necessary as a court of appeal having a right to take cognizance of our whole Civil Law. In the Province of Quebec he was of opinion that it would be perfectly useless, and he dared to say that in this opinion he would be supported by the unanimous voice of the people of his own Province. They had already in that Province a most perfect and complete judical organization. They had excellent courts of original jurisdiction, equally good Appellate Courts of the second degree, an Appellate Court of the third degree, which was the Court of Queen's Bench, sitting in appeal; and, lastly, they had the judicial committee of the Privy Council. All these courts, he was bound to say, gave perfect satisfaction. Of course wherever there were lawyers and litigants who lost their cases, there would be more or less dissatisfaction with the courts. There was an old and trite French adage, that forty-four hours must always be granted to litigants to course their Judges, but after the expiration of that period, everything ran as smoothly as before. Of course he could understand that it would be desirable to establish a Supreme Court if it were proposed to abolish the right of appeal to the Privy Council; but he was sure that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury Benches were most unwilling to do that, for the special organ of the Minister of Justice in Montreal, Le National, had the following article on that very subject:—

"On siége, aujourd'hui, notre dernier tribunal d'appel, et comment est-il composé? Il siége à Londres. En ne mettant que deux plaideurs dans une cause, nous voyons aller à Londres 25 ou 30 plaideurs par année et y envoyer une douzaine d'avocats du Canada. Le plaideur qui gagne sa cause est en général à demi ruiné et celui qui perd la sienne est sur le pavé. Pourquoi nos plaideurs vont-ils au Conseil Privé? Les juges qui y siégent sont-ils dans de meilleures conditions que les nôtres ou ceux qui siégeraient dans la Cour Suprême pour apprécier nos lois? Assurément non. L'éducation des juges du Conseil Privé est sans aucun doute de l'ordre le plus élevé. Il n'existe pas au monde un tribunal dans des conditions analogues. L'Angleterre a conquis, plus qu'aucune autre puissance, des colonies et territoires appartenant à des pouvoirs étrangers. Elle a su non-seulement conquérir mais conserver. Elle a conservé en rendant sa domination tolérable. Elle s'est fait tolérer en laisant subsister, dans les pays conquis, les lois qui y régnaient. Elle a laissé chaque population ainsi conquise jouir de ses coutumes et même de ces préjugés, tant que l'abus n'arrivait pas à compromettre la suprématie du Souverain ou les droits inhérents à la qualité de sujet anglais. Cette tolérance de l'Angleterre est et sera son éternel honneur dans l'histoire de l'humanité."

It would be quite impossible to find in the Judges of the intended Supreme Court the same ability and capacity, and especially the same impartiality that was stated in that article. He considered the Supreme Court was entirely unnecessary; and so also was the proposed Court of Exchequer. It seemed the framers of the Confederation Act were wise enough to foresee the dangers our constitution might meet, and to provide a remedy in advance. At the same time they were wise enough to imitate the American system as regards the establishment of a Supreme Court, having inferior jurisdiction, and also to make such provisions as would render it for a long period of time entirely unnecessary. They were under the necessity in the States of establishing a Supreme Court and inferior tribunals for the better administration of the Federal Laws, because the Judges of State Courts were not responsible to the national authorities, as they were not paid by them or appointed by them. The Federal Government had no control whatever over them. He would read a section from STORY on the constitution, but it discussed a question that was very much like ours:—"In regard to the power of constituting inferior courts of the Union, it is evidently calculated to obviate the necessity of having recourse to the Supreme Court in every case of Federal cognizance. It enables the National Government to institute or authorize in each State or district of the United States a tribunal competent to the determination of all matters of national jurisdiction within its limits. One of two courses only could be open for adoption—either to create inferior courts under the national authority, to reach all cases fit for the national jurisdiction, which either constitutionally or conveniently could not be of original cognizance in the Supreme Court; or to confide jurisdiction of the same cases to the State Courts, with a right of appeal to the Supreme Court. To the latter course solid objections were thought to apply, which rendered it ineligible and unsatisfactory. In the first place the Judges of the State Courts would be wholly irresponsible to the National Government for their conduct in the administration of national justice; so that the National Government would or might be wholly dependent upon the good will or sound discretion of the States in regard to the efficiency, promptitude and ability with which the judicial authority of the nation was administered. In the next place, the prevalency of a local or sectional spirit might be found to disqualify the State tribunals for a suitable discharge of national judicial functions, and the very modes of appointment of some of the State Judges might render them improper channels of the judicial authority of the Union. State Judges, holding their offices during pleasure, or from year to year, or for other short periods, would, or at least might, be too little independent to be relied upon for an inflexible execution of the national laws." Our constitution had wisely given the Federal Government control of all the Judges of the Provincial Courts, and because there was that marked difference, and for other reasons he had seconded the proposition of his hon. friend. He thought, as the Government had control over all our Provincial Judges, there was no necessity for the establishment of a Supreme Court. This court would cost from $80,000 to $100,000; and he thought it would be much better to husband our resources, and employ them in carrying on and completing our great public improvements, such as the enlargement of the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals, the building of the Pacific Railway, and perhaps in time the construction of the Ottawa Canal. So far as Quebec was concerned the Federal Parliament had no right, for two reasons, to abolish the right of appeal. One reason was, that it was established by statute, and formed part of their administration of justice, and could not be touched by this Parliament or Government. It had been established by statute in Upper Canada as well, and now formed part of their Provincial Laws and the administration of justice. The right of petition to the QUEEN was one that could not be touched by any Parliament as long as we were governed by the English Sovereigns as it was the immediate attribute and prerogative of the Sovereign. In his humble opinion all the parts of the Bill that gave the right of appeal to the Supreme Court from the jurisdiction of the Civil Laws of Quebec were entirely unconstitutional. He knew the opinions of hon. members of the House who occupied a very high standing did not agree altogether with his; but, still, after studying over carefully all the authorities on the subject, he felt it was his duty to give his construction of the laws under which the Supreme Court was to be established. The 101st clause of the British North America Act provided that —"The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance, and organization of a general Court of Appeal for Canada, and for the establishment of any additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada." The hon. the Minister of Justice and the hon. member for Kingston had given as their opinion that that clause should be construed in such a way as to give this Parliament the right to establish a Supreme Court with appellant jurisdiction as regarded the Civil Laws of Quebec. He submitted, respectfully, that that construction and interpretation of the law was ruinous when there was any difference of opinion or any doubt as to the interpretation of the Act, they generally took the views of those who had taken part in framing that Act. In the Quebec resolutions which were embodied in the British North America Act, two great principles were not only laid down, but recognized, affirmed and reaffirmed in many clauses. The one principle was the Federal one, and the second was the Provincial autonomy of all Provinces entering into the compact. This was so evident that in the debates in the House of Lords, when that constitution came before their Lordships, the opinion was expressed that it would be better to have legislative union, but it was pointed out that this would be impracticable especially as regarded the Province of Quebec which had had its autonomy guaranteed by the 42nd Article of the Treaty of Capitulation of 1760.

"Les Français et Canadiens, 'quotes "the noble Lord,' continueront d'être "gouvernés suivant la coutume de Paris "et les lois et usages établis pour ce pays."

Whenever the Confederated Provinces were mentioned, it was always in contradistinction to the special powers given to the Provincial Legislature. He contended that it was impossible to construe the law otherwise than he did at the present moment. Otherwise it would have been the complete destruction of all the clauses regarding Provincial powers which were specially given to the Local Legislatures. He understood that by giving to the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction with regard to matters coming from the courts of Quebec in matters relating to the civil, Provincial and municipal laws of that Province, was conferring power which this Parliament had no right to give. It was a dangerous encroachment on the Provincial rights of Quebec.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) said he was not connected with the legal profession and would not, therefore, discuss the legal points of the measure. He would say, however, that he did not think this Bill was now needed by the country. After what had fallen in the debate on this Bill a few nights since, he was in hopes that this Bill would have been dropped. For his part he thought that in all the Provinces, and particularly in Ontario, the Judiciary was in excellent condition. They had all the legal tribunals they required, and here was an expense about to be put on the country of $100,000 at least. He merely rose here in the name of the county he represented in Ontario to enter his protest against the passage of this Bill, because he did not think it was needed by the country at present.

Mr. PALMER said that as before the House went into Committee upon the Bill he desired to make some observations as to the extent of the power of the Dominion Parliament to create the court contemplated, principally in answer to the arguments addressed to the House by the hon. member for West Toronto and the hon. member for Bothwell, and also to point out one or two objectionable features in the Bill in addition to those he had pointed out before the second reading. Although it was so late, he asked the House to indulge him while he did so. First, then, he agreed with what he understood was the view of the Minister of Justice as to the extent of the power of this Parliament to create the court, and dissented from the views expressed by the hon. members for Bothwell and Toronto West. His view was that the 101st section of the British North America Act authorized the Parliament of Canada to create a court having appellate jurisdiction over all the courts in each of the Provinces of Canada, with full power to hear and determine any and all causes and suits that may have been adjudged in the local courts; and also to regulate the mode of suit appeal, and further to create a court having original jurisdiction to administer the laws of Canada, that is the laws in force in the several Provinces of Canada on the subjects assigned exclusively to the Parliament of Canada by the 91st Section of the British North America Act which he considered the true meaning of the words "the Laws of Canada" as used in the 101st Section, and this Legislature had no power to create any courts having any further original jurisdiction, all such powers having been given exclusively to the Local Legislatures, by the 14th sub-Section of the 92nd Section of the British North America Act. Of course, this Parliament in addition would, under other provisions of Union, Act have the power either to create a court to adjudicate upon all matters relating to the election and return of members of the House of Commons which is outside the matter in the controversy as raised by the hon. members alluded to. He (Mr. PALMER) in basing his argument on the point stated, desired to say at the outset that the mode of argument adopted by the hon. member for Bothwell, drawn from the eternal fitness of things or what he called the federal principle, might be very well when applied to a question of policy, but was entirely out of place in discussing a mere question of law and the question the proper construction of an Act of Parliament that this House could not alter, and he thought members were too apt to lose sight of the fact that they were not to decide what powers they should have, but simply what powers the British North America Act had given them in this regard. He (Mr. PALMER) contended that this must be decided simply by construing the Act itself, and this must be done by the ordinary rules of law applicable to the subject: Then what were those rules? The first and great leading rule was to ascertain all the facts that surrounded the passing of the Act, and look at the whole Act and from this ascertain what were the law and status of the parties affected by the Act before it was passed; then the objects of the Act, and the evils it was intended to remedy; and thus construe it so as to remedy such evils, as far as the words would permit. Now, the facts that appear to affect this part of the Act are shortly these. That it was made as appears by the preamble to carry out an agreement made by the separate Provinces of Canada, who thus (quo ad this question) possessed independent jurisdictions, having different laws, courts, and jurisprudence. This being so, if the 101st Section is ambiguous. The best key to it would be the provisions on this same subject in the agreement which the Act was made to carry out. Those provisions, hon. members would find, contained in the 14th Sub-Section of the 29th and 31st Sections, and the 17th Sub-Section of the 43rd Section of the Quebec Section so-called, which was the agreement referred to in the said Act. Before referring particularly to the words of these references, hon. members would do well to remember that an evil existed in Canada, particularly in the smaller Provinces, that there was no Court of Appeal in this provision except to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which was too far distant and expensive, and this was intended to remedy that evil. Then referring to the words themselves of the 14th Sub-Section, "The establishment of a General Court of Appeal for the Federated Provinces"—and the 32nd Section—"Establish additional courts, &c., in order to the due execution of the laws of Parliament." Those two sections which are so distinct in the agreement, are combined in the 101st section of the Act, and the "Laws of Parliament" in the agreement are changed in the Act to "the Laws of Canada." But in each it is contended they mean the same thing—that is, the laws of Canada, or the laws on the subjects that are within the powers of the Parliament of Canada, as distinguished from these laws, that are not within the powers of that Parliament, but are only within the powers of the Local Legislatures, and may be quite different in each Province. We must notice the great difference in the words when applied to the Appeal Courts and the other courts provided for both in the agreement and the Act. The Appeal Court is to be a General Appeal Court for Canada in that Act. In the agreement it is a General Court of Appeal for the Federated Provinces clearly meaning the same thing, while the court of original jurisdiction is confined in the Act to the better administration of the Laws of Canada, and in the agreement to the due execution of the Law of Parliament, meaning in both the same. Now if it was intended that the jurisdiction of both those courts should be the same, that is, should be confined to the better administration of the laws on the subjects given to the general Parliament, how could the different words be accounted for? If such was the object it appeared to be clear that such powers would have been created by the same words and confined to the better administration of the Law of Canada, and consequently a wider meaning must be given, and because, while by the agreements the General Court of Appeal was to be established at all events, the Courts of Original Jurisdiction were only to be additional courts and established from time to time as required. Now this clearly contemplated the establishment of a Court of Appeal before any Court Original Jurisdiction, and, in that state of things, the only court from which they could have appealed must be the local Provincial Courts, as those were all the courts which were in existence, and there certainly could be found no words of limitation of the powers of such appeal either in the Act or the agreement. This Appeal Court was for Canada—that is for all Canada—but not confined as were the courts of original jurisdiction, to the administration of the laws of Canada. This being the power of this Parliament, in addition to the policy, or expediency of creating any original jurisdiction in this court, without any necessity for it, he (Mr. PALMER) wished and pointed out to the Minister of Justice that it was impossible for him to create all the original jurisdiction contained in the Bill as it stood. The hon. gentleman would see that his (Mr. PALMER'S) view of the power of this Parliament in this regard was the widest and largest possible under the words of the Act, but in the matter of original jurisdiction it was limited strictly to the administration of the laws, or subjects in the power of the General Parliament. Now, it could not be denied that the original jurisdiction attempted to be given by the 55th and 58th sections, was to decide upon Acts of the Local Parliaments, and the 58th section professed to take away from the Provincial courts the power to decide upon such local Acts. Such legislation he (Mr. PALMER) considered not only bad policy, as such questions had better come by way of appeal, but it was an unconstitutional and illegal attempt to wrest from the local authorites what was vested in them by the Constitution. He (Mr. PALMER) also objected to the 80th and 81st sections of the Act. These sections were intended to create a separate bar, who alone could practice in this court. This he considered a great injustice to the barristers and attorneys of each Province, who should have a right to practice in this court by virtue of their office in the courts below. It would be a curious state of things if a barrister of New Brunswick could be excluded from arguing the case of his client in this court, while at the same time he would have a right to conduct it in the final court of appeal—the Privy Council. It would be a useless hardship, and would be felt seriously by the small and distant Provinces. He hoped it would be struck out, and all attornies and barristers of the courts appealed from, would be allowed to practice in this court without any other ceremony or form whatever. He did not desire to go over the various objections to the Bill, which he had pointed out at the second reading, but he must again urge upon the Minister if he would strike out all the sections of the Bill from the 16th to the 35th, and in lieu thereof substitute one section simply, giving an appeal on all the cases allowed, by a notice shortly stating the ground of appeal, which when perfected by the security, etc., would have the effect of taking the whole proceedings into the Court of Appeal, no matter what the form or nature of the pleadings below were, and then direct the Appeal Court to give and enforce the judgment that the court below ought to have given—it would much better answer all the purposes required. and render the court more efficient and useful.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE the debate was adjourned, and the House adjourned at 12.20 A.M., till Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Saturday, March 27th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER introduced a Bill to amend the provisions of "An Act to amend the Criminal Law relating to violence, threats and molestations."

The Bill was read a first time.

CAPE RACE LIGHT HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. SMITH (Westmoreland) moved the House into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution: that it is expedient that the Act of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, intituled; "An Act to provide for the collection in this Island of the Cape Race Light House Toll," be repealed.

The resolution was reported and a Bill founded on it was introduced and read a first time.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. SPEAKER read messages from HIS EXCELLENCY transmitting the Supplementary Estimates for the year ending June 30th 1875, and also for the year ending June 30th, 1876.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved that they be referred to Committee of Supply. —Carried.

ACTS OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURES.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD by permission of the House, moved an Address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL for copies of all Orders in Council not already laid before this House relating to the allowance or disallowance of Acts of the several Provincial Legislatures since Confederation, and of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and the several Provincial Governments respecting such Acts.—Carried.

THE COASTING TRADE.

Hon. Mr. SMITH moved the House into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—That it is expedient to amend the Act 33 Vict., c. 14, respecting the Coasting Trade of Canada, by providing that the master of any steam vessel, not being a British ship, found towing any ship, vessel, or raft from one place to another in Canada, or in Canadian waters, shall forfeit the sum of four hundred dollars, and that such steam vessel may be detained by any officer of Customs until the forfeiture is paid; but that the said provision shall not extend to ships of any foreign country to the Coasting Trade of which the Governor in Council may declare that British ships are admitted, or to any foreign ship admitted to the Coasting Trade of Canada under any treaty made by HER MAJESTY with the country to which such foreign ship belongs.

In Committee, Mr. DE ST. GEORGES in the chair,

Hon. Mr. SMITH explained that it had come to the knowledge of the Government that in many parts of the Dominion, particularly on the coast of British Columbia, and also in the inland waters of other Provinces, American vessels were engaged in this trade, while no such privilege was granted to Canadian vessels in United States waters.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD suggested that an exception should be made in case of wrecked vessels.

The resolution was amended in accordance with this suggestion, reported and concurred in.

Hon. Mr. SMITH introduced a Bill to amend the Act 33 Vict., Cap. 14, respecting the Coasting Trade of Canada, which was read a first time.

MR. PLIMSOLL'S BILL.

The Orders of the Day being called,

Mr. GOUDGE said: Before proceeding to the Orders of the Day I desire to draw the attention of the House and the Government to a recent article in the London Shipping and Mercantile Gazette on the subject of a Bill now before the Imperial Parliament known as Mr. PLIMSOLL'S Bill, which is an amendment to the present Merchant's Shipping Act. With the permission of the House I will read the article :—

"The Merchant Shipping Acts Amendment (No, 2) Bill, known as Mr. PLIMSOLL'S Bill, has been printed. It is a short Bill, of fourteen clauses, and proposes to deal with the questions of Surveys, the Load-line, Deck Cargoes, Time Policies, and the quality of iron employed in the construction of ships. The Survey is to have reference to classification, and the Bill proposes that no Br. ship shall proceed on any voyage from a British port without a certificate of classification granted by LLOYD'S Registry of British and Foreign Shipping, or the Liverpool Registry, or some other Corporation or Association approved for the time being for this purpose by the Board of Trade. This certificate is to be made compulsory, except in cases of ships specially exempted by the Board of Trade by reason of their being constructed on some new and previously untried principle. As regards a fixed Load-line, it is proposed that on and after the 1st of January, 1876, on every British ship registered before that day shall be "permanently and conspicuously" marked the limit of the ships displacement. This Load-line is to be settled under the direction and the satisfaction of Commissioners to be appointed under the Bill, and for its purposes ; and in order to defray the expenses of ascertaining the displacements and Load-lines of British ships, these Commissioners are to be authorized to a levy charge not exceeding 2d. per ton on the gross registered tonnage of each ship. No Br. ship is to leave Port unless the Load-line mark is visible. Consular Officers in foreign Ports are to ascertain the draught of water of British ships leaving Port, and forward the same to the Board of Trade, and the Load-line marks are to be permanently continued under heavy penalties. The proposal relative to Deck Cargoes is that they shall be limited to acids and other chemicals which are unsafe to be carried below, and to cattle and other stock, and "other matters and things, and in such qualities, as the Board of Trade shall, by special license, or under general regulations to be issued by them from time to time, permit." There is then a provision that Time Policies shall be affected by unseaworthiness in the same manner as Voyage Policies ; and, lastly, that iron used in the construction of ships shall be subjected to certain tests, a provision which, if carried out, would affect the Ironmaster and Shipbuilder rather than the Shipowner."

Objection having been taken to the further reading of a newspaper article,

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked what was the object of the hon. gentleman in bringing up this matter now.

Mr. GOUDGE said his object was to draw the attention of the Government to the subject so that representation might be made to the Imperial Government before it was too late, as the proposed amendment to the Merchant's Shipping Act would seriously interfere with our shipping both on the lakes and the ocean.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was for the Government, not the House, to make the representation. The hon. gentleman could bring the matter before the Government.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the subject to which the hon. gentleman referred was now engaging the attention of the Government with a view to a remonstrance.

The matter then dropped.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved the third reading of the Bill to prevent enlistment in the service of any foreign State in certain cases not provided for by the Foreign Enlistment Act of 1870.

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

DOMINION LANDS IN MANITOBA.

On motion of Hon. Mr. LAIRD, the House went into committee, Mr GOUDGE in the chair, on the Bill to amend the Act respecting the appropriation of certain Dominion lands in Manitoba.

The Bill was reported, read the third time and passed.

HARBOR MASTERS.

Hon. Mr. SMITH moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Act 37 Vict., cap. 34, appointing Harbor Masters.

Mr. MACKAY, (Cape Breton) did not desire that duties should be imposed on Harbor Masters for which they would receive no compensation. The Bill proposed to compel Harbor Masters to remove the buoys in the different harbors, a task which would involve considerable labor and expense, and yet no arrangement was made for remunerating them for the service. Certain persons had now charge of the work of laying down the buoys in the spring and removing them in the fall, for which service they were paid. If, therefore, the duty was to be transferred to Harbor Masters they should be paid for their labor.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL concurred in the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton. The harbor of Montreal extended a distance of 100 miles, and that of Quebec 200 miles, and if the Harbor Masters were to be compelled to place and remove the buoys the expenditure for performing that work would be in excess of the fees they received.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said that Quebec harbor extended from Bic to St. Barnabe, Hon. Mr. SMITH said that the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal and Quebec were entrusted with the appointment of Harbor Masters for those ports.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said that the Bill would extend to the whole Dominion and would therefore affect Montreal and Quebec unless they were excepted from its operation. If the Harbor Masters of these to ports were to be compelled to place and remove the buoys, which in Quebec extended two hundred miles, how were their expenses to be paid ?

Hon. Mr. SMITH replied that the Bill would not apply to the ports referred to.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL inquired whether the Bill would apply to the Harbour of Mirimichi ?

Hon. Mr. SMITH replied that it would.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said that the Marine and Fisheries Department had always performed the work of buoying Mirimichi harbor, which involved an expense of £60 or £70.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said it was important that certain officers should be charged with the special duty of looking after the buoys. If the work could not be performed by the Harbor Masters for the remuneration they at present received, their allowances might be supplemented.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER observed that the hon. gentleman had made out a case for having officers appointed for this purpose, but there was no justice in throwing these duties upon them without remuneration.

Mr. GILLMOR said he did not see any necessity for taking away from officers who now attended to buoys that duty and placing it in the hands of harbor masters.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL remarked that it would be well to confine the Bill to the smaller ports, and appoint special officers for the larger ports.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said that under the re-adjustment of fees of vessels, it was impossible to know beforehand how much the harbor masters would receive, but if it was found that their remuneration was inadequate to the extra duties required of them, then the Government had power to supplement it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD pointed out that in this Bill it was provided that harbor masters shall perform this duty without any remuneration, and therefore no matter what hardship the harbor masters suffered, their remuneration could not be increased without an Act of Parliament.

The Bill was then read a second time.

MANITOBA LANDS.

The Bill respecting conflicting claims to lands of occupants in Manitoba was read a second time forthwith.

In committee—Mr. GILLIES in the chair,

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the object of the Bill was to decrease the number of commissioners and also the number of references to them, as provided in the Act of 1873. The operation of that Act was found to be very expensive, and it was believed that there was no necessity for so many commissioners, and that many cases now referred to the commissioners could be settled by the department. He proposed, therefore, in the present Bill to decrease the number of commissioners by one, and to limit the cases to be referred to them to those which related to disputes between two parties who laid claim to the same section of land.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER called the attention of the Government to a matter which might not apply strictly to this Bill. The Government for the purpose of obtaining persons to serve in a military capacity in Manitoba offered, in addition to that payment, a grant of land after a certain term of service. These persons served that term, and subsequently the Government asked for additional volunteers on the same terms as before. Now it appeared in a number of cases parties re-enlisted, and that the Government had declined to carry out the arrangement on the second occasion, on the ground that these men had already received a grant of land. Now it appeared to him (Mr. TUPPER) that if such were the case, nothing could be more unjust. It was a great advantage to the Government to secure the services of parties who by their previous experience had become thoroughly acquainted with the duties, and would be much more efficient than new men. He did not see why men who re-enlisted should not be placed on as favourable a footing as raw recruits.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said this matter had not been brought to his notice before. He promised to look into it.

The Bill was reported, read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

The Bill to extend to the Province of British Columbia the provisions of the "Dominion Lands Act" was read the second time, passed through Committee of the Whole, read the third time and passed.

PROVINCE OF MANITOBA.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD moved the second reading of the Bill to amend an Act to amend and continue the Act 32 and 33 Victoria, Chapter 3, and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. MASSON asked for some explanations with regard to this Bill. He had heard there were some complaints with respect to it.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the object of the Bill was this: It had been found in distributing the 1,400,000 acres of land appropriated to the half-breeds that the Act was rather indefinite. There were so many shades of half-breeds that it was difficult to say who were and who were not entitled to a portion of this land. This Bill gave a list of the degrees of relationship which would enable the Government more speedily to adjust claims of that nature. Then there was another doubtful clause. It was supposed that 190 acres of land were to be given to each claimant. It was thought that if the lands were divided there would be a quantity still left. It was not desirable that it should be divided into small lots of four or five acres, and the Government therefore proposed to give the half-breeds scrip for that portion of the lands left over, with a view of preventing any part of the lands being locked up after the distribution of the lands appropriated.

Mr. MASSON asked if there was not a clause in this Bill which provided that under certain circumstances the lands of minors would revert to the Crown. He understood that 1,400,000 acres of land were given en bloc to the half-breeds as a community; consequently, not an acre of it could come back to the Crown, or if it did, there must be some provision by which it could be got back from the half-breeds in some other way.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the section referred to provided that in case of the death of a child before 18 years, the land would revert to the Crown. It was in case there were no heir that this provision was made. He supposed, however, there would be very few cases of that kind.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE called attention to the possible difficulties that might exist in reference to the right of this Parliament to pass such an Act. This Bill was to amend the Act creating a constitution for Manitoba, and was thought by many in this Parliament and in this Dominion to be beyond the powers of this House. It would be in the memory of those who served in the first Parliament after confederation that an address to the Imperial authorities was passed, asking legislation on this subject. In conformity with that address an Act was passed which would be found in our Statutes of 1872, which provided that:—

"Except as provided by the third section of this Act, it shall not be competent for the Parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the last mentioned Act of the said Parliament, in so far as it relates to the Province of Manitoba, or of any other Act hereafter establishing new Provinces in the said Dominion, subject always to the right of the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba to alter from time to time the provisions of any law respecting the qualification of electors and members of the Legislative Assembly, and to make laws respecting elections in the said Province."

Now the third section only provided for this Parliament altering the limits or extending the territories of the Province of Manitoba, so that the expression did not apply to this Bill. It seemed to him that this was for the purposes of this Parliament a law—as it were of the Medes and Persians—unalterable.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD was understood to say that he concurred in the opinion of the member for South Bruce.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said they would simply take this stage to-day, and look into the matter before Monday. The objection would only apply to the first section; there was no doubt as to their power to deal with the second section.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he fancied that could be done because the second section was quite consistent with the original Manitoba Act. With the understanding that the principle of the Bill was not admitted this stage might now be taken.

The Bill was then read a second time.

SUPREME COURT.

The order of the day was called for resuming the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. FOURNIER that Mr. SPEAKER leave the chair for House in Committee on Bill [No. 31] to establish a Supreme Court and a Court of Exchequer for the Dominion and the motion of Mr. BABY in amendment thereto.

Mr. LANGLOIS said the doubts which had been expressed as to the constitutionality of some parts of this measure had not changed his opinion, which continued to be that all the provisions of the Bill were within our powers. The clause on which the Bill was founded was of such a general character that it bore no exception but the exceptions that might be created by our own legislation. The words, "notwithstanding anything in this Act," certainly did not apply to any part of the Dominion jurisdiction. They must have been inserted for another purpose, and that purpose must be to do away with all exceptions which might be taken to the jurisdiction of appeal in matters belonging to the jurisdiction of the Local Parliaments. It was plain, therefore, that we had a right to constitute a Court of Appeal, notwithstanding anything in the Act. The name of the court was given, it was to be a General Court of Appeal, and not a court of limited jurisdiction. It was to be a Court of Appeal from all judgments that might be given in any of the Provinces. He had, therefore, no doubt as to the legality of the jurisdiction of this Court of Appeal in matters of a local nature, in matters of local legislation, even in matters of Civil Law. But notwithstanding any doubt which may be urged as to the constitutionality of this court, there would be no harm done in establishing it, because immediately after it is established the Government could at once submit to it the questions raised as to the constitutionality of some parts of the Act, and the court would be competent to decide them. If, in their opinion, the court was constitutionally created for all the purposes of the Act, then the question would be settled; if, on the contrary, their opinion was that it was unconstitutional in some respects, then, perhaps, by next session of Parliament, application could be made to the Imperial Parliament for additional powers. It had been urged that this court would be a disadvantage to the Province of Quebec, especially in cases to be decided by the Civil Law. He admitted there would be some disadvantage, that the Province of Quebec would not be in the same position before the Supreme Court as the other Provinces, because the majority of the Judges would not be familiar with the French Civil Law. However, the position of Quebec would be better with this court than it is now. At present we had the right of appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, though there was in the Province of Quebec a growing feeling in favor of abolishing it. It was doubtful if at present a majority could be obtained in the Local Parliament —which was the proper tribunal to decide the point—in favor of abolishing the appeal to the Privy Council, but the opinion against that appeal was gaining ground every day in the Province of Quebec. After the establishment of this Supreme Court we, in the Province of Quebec, would have the option of the appeals — to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council or to the Supreme Court. He had no doubt that nine-tenths—perhaps ninety-nine one-hundredths—of the cases appealable to the Privy Council would be taken to the Supreme court. So that without any enactment abolishing appeal to the Privy Council the result would be nearly the same as if such an enactment is made. One reason for such a course being adopted would be that the expense would be much less. The cost of appeal to the Privy Council was never less than $4,000 whereas the cost of an appeal to the Supreme Court would probably not exceed $1,000. Aside from the advantage of this court in point of expense, there were other advantages which he could point out. The court would have at least two Judges versed in the French Civil Law. The hon. member for Montmagny had stated, as an objection to this court, that a case might arise in which three Judges, from other Provinces would reverse the judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeals even though unanimously rendered, and contrary to the opinion of the two Quebec Judges in the Supreme Court. Such a case if it really happened would certainly be one of extreme hardship, and if it was at all probable it should be provided against. But was it at all probable? He thought not. On the contrary he thought that in cases involving the French Civil Law the Judges from the other Provinces would be inclined to defer to the opinions of the two Quebec Judges. But if such cases as the one referred to were thought to be probable they might be provided against by an amendment to the effect that in such cases the judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal should stand confirmed. But the danger adverted to was greater in regard to the appeal to the Privy Council, as was apparent from a recent case. He referred to the GUIBORD case. In that case the decision of eight Judges out of nine in the Province of Quebec was reversed by the Privy Council on questions involving not only Civil Law which was very difficult for the English Judges to understand but Ecclesiastical Law as well—that is, the old Ecclesiastical Law as it stood in France before 1663. Such a case might justify a repeal of the legislation which authorized an appeal to the Privy Council. There was another advantage to be derived from this court as compared with the Privy Council. When a case is sent to the Privy Council it is taken up by English barristers, who though no doubt men of ability cannot be expected for the small fee that is allowed them—seldom exceeding £150 sterling—to became as familiar with the case as the Canadian Counsel who has followed it through all the courts. On the other hand, before the Supreme Court the pleader has the advantage of a council familiar with the case from the beginning. In this connection he begged to express the hope that the Bill would be so amended as to do away with any formality with respect to pleading before the court, such as requiring barristers to be enrolled and to pay a fee, especially, as Canadian barristers are allowed to appear before the Privy Council without even a certificate of identity. He had no doubt that the advantage of being heard by Canadian Counsel before this Court would more than compensate far any of its disadvantages. He had another suggestion to make in the direction of an amendment to the Bill, and that was that the appeal to this court should be made final, so that, while the appellant would have the option of taking his case either to the Supreme Court or the Privy Council, yet if he chose to take it to the Supreme Court he should not afterwards have the right to take it again to the Privy Council. Of course, we could not take away the right of appeal to the foot of the Throne by prerogative, but such appeals had almost fallen into disuse. In the district of Quebec he knew of only one appeal of that kind within the last thirty years, while there had been about twenty appeals every year under the Statute. It had been said that this Parliament could not take away the right of appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. To his mind that question admitted of no doubt, although the member for Hamilton had given notice of an amendment to abolish that right. In his judgment that was a question for the Local Parliaments. The statutory right of appeal to the Privy Council originated by the ordinance of 1777 passed by the Governor and Legislative Council of the then Province of Quebec which included both Upper and Lower Canada. He did not know how far that ordinance had been continued by Upper Canada, but in Lower Canada it was repeated by the Statute of 1793 and also by the Judicature Act of LAFONTAINE passed in 1849, and of course it was introduced into the Quebec Code of Procedure. The statutory right of appeal to the Privy Council existed only under that law, and it could only be repealed by the Local Legislature. There was no Imperial legislation on the subject, save the establishment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which was of very ancient date. He had made reference to a small book of practice before the Judicial Committee and he found from this book that appeals from Upper and Lower Canada were founded upon the statutes of these Provinces. There was no Imperial legislation, and therefore the repeal of those statutes would do away with the right of appeal. With respect to cases involving Commercial Law and Criminal Law the advantages of this court would manifestly be very great. He had no doubt that the people of Quebec were willing to have their Commercial Law assimilated entirely to that of the other Provinces. It would be a great advantage to have a uniform law and uniform decisions on matters of trade and commerce throughout the whole Dominion, At present we had different decisions on the same law in different Provinces—on the Insolvency Law for instance. The effect of the Supreme Court would be to establish a uniform jurisprudence in commercial and criminal matters all over the Dominion, which would be a great advantage. The member for Bagot had asked who had demanded for the establishment of this court. In his (Mr. LANGLOIS') opinion the Province of Quebec had need of such a court, and in proof of that he instanced the case of BELISLE vs. L'Union St. Joseph, which was appealed to the Privy Council at the expense of the Government of Quebec. As to the objection that the people had not petitioned for this court, he thought the people had a right to expect that members of Parliament knew what was needed in the interests of the country without being specially informed of it. The measure had been before the House for several years, and he believed there was a general desire that the court should be established. A considerable part of our legislation, Federal as well as Provincial, was unconstitutional, and some day or other the evil effects of such legislation would become apparent. It had been said that the Judges of this court would have very little to do for a few years, but he thought they might very well be employed in correcting unconstitutional legislation. A special commission might be appointed to revise legislation and collect all those statutes, Federal and Local, respecting which there were doubts as to their constitutionality. Upon the reception of the report of this commission by the Governor in Council, cases might be submitted to the Supreme Court covering the constitutional points in those statutes, and the result would be the expunging of unconstitutional legislation from our Statutes Book.

Mr. LAFLAMME said he concurred in most of the remarks of the hon. member for Montmorency, and he sympathized with the expressions of the hon. members for Joliette and Bagot; but he was surprised that their feelings of alarm at the danger to which Lower Canadian institutions were exposed by the passing of the Bill did not arise sooner. For eight years this measure had been threatened on Lower Canada, and not a voice was ever heard against its passage; when the provision for the establishment of a General Court of Appeal was placed in the Constitutional Act, there was not a murmur from hon. gentlemen opposite. There might be doubts, would he had no hesitation in saying these were doubts as to the proper interpretation of clause 101; but he believed the interpretation given by the hon. member for Montmorency was satisfactory. This was one of the many experiences which they had lately had, in this very session, of the hurried way in which the Confederation Act was passed, that it was not prepared to meet the absolute wants of the country, but made for the wants of a party. The question of the School Law had been brought before Parliament, and hon. gentlemen opposite would remember when the Confederation Act was brought before the public of Lower Canada a strong feeling was expressed against it. They desired to be allowed time in which to examine the proposal submitted by the framers of the constitution, in order to ascertain its bearing on the institutions of Lower Canada. But the people were debarred from doing so, and were accused of being disorderly and revolutionary; and the men who made those charges were themselves attempting to carry out, and did carry out the greatest revolution the Lower Canadians ever experienced without even obtaining the voice of the people upon it. If hon. gentlemen opposite had been careful of the interests of their co-religionists at that time, they would have been saved from the consequences of that School Law, from which they sought now to obtain redress. But those gentlemen thought then more of the existence of their party, than of the interests of their household gods. He would also call attention to the indifference exhibited by those gentlemen to the interests of Lower Canada since then, when on the Federal Act of Insolvency being passed the people of that Province understood it would apply only to commercial insolvency. But it was passed without opposition, and to-day it was apparent that Parliament under the pretence of dealing with regular insolvency could attack the foundations of most of the institutions of Lower Canada. And so again, to-day, with respect to the Supreme Federal Court. How did it occur, he would ask hon. members opposite, that the hon. member for Bagot never raised his voice, although he was very prolific in passing enconiums on the Confederation Act, to call the attention of the people of the Province of Quebec to the danger that would arise from the creation of a Federal Supreme Court, notwithstanding the fact that his leaders at that time, men whose orders he could not resist, had declared that the intention of the framers of the Constitutional Act was to establish for the whole Dominion of Canada a Court of Appeal. He maintained there was an absolute necessity for such a court. It was indispensable. If we were to have a Confederation in the full and best sense of the term, we must have a Federal Court. Speaking for the people of his own Province, he was aware that every one of them knew there were many obnoxious Acts of the Provincial Legislature, and probably not a few of the Acts of the Federal Parliament, which might be arrested before they went into operation and made absolutely null if there was a Supreme Court to examine and declare whether or not such laws were constitutional or otherwise. Unless this Court were formed, and formed soon, there was a sea of trouble and numberless difficulties in store for us. There was no other mode of settling difficulties of this nature than the establishment of a Supreme Court. Hon. members opposite had stated that there was no necessity for the court and that no one demanded it. On the contrary, so well agreed were all parties that such a court was requisite that a Bill for its establishment had been promised the country ever since Confederation. There had scarcely been since that period, a session of Parliament when statements in regard to the subject were not contained in the Speech from the Throne, and the people had been anxiously awaiting the formation of the court to bring before it questions of the greatest importance. As to the danger of its not having sufficient business to transact, he believed that the question would be rather whether there were sufficient Judges for the work. As to the allegation that the court would be perfectly useless so far as the Province of Quebec was concerned, its peculiar institutions were undoubtedly threatened with danger when cases were decided by a tribunal most of whom were ignorant of the laws of Lower Canada, and he would oppose the Bill if he were not convinced that its passage would have the effect of abolishing appeals to the Privy Council. He would certainly have taken that step if the effect of establishing that court would not be to abolish those appeals, because it would be somewhat onerous to a litigant to impose on him the cost of an additional appeal, and to take the case from the Supreme Court to the Privy Council at a cost of one thousand or twelve hundred guineas. The only safe way of abolishing the appeal to the Privy Council was by establishing a Supreme Court. Was there any lawyer in Lower Canada who would not prefer to have a case of importance brought before a court of justice where at least two of the Judges would be conversant with the laws of Quebec, than have the case sent to a tribunal where the Judges were entirely ignorant of those laws? Was there a Lower Canadian owning property who would not prefer that any case relating to property should be tried by a tribunal where two Judges were perfectly conversant with the Real Estate Laws of Quebec; rather than by a court which was entirely ignorant of those laws? That was the question as regards the Province of Quebec. But some hon. members argued that we could not abolish the right of appeal to the Privy Council, and there were some hon. members for Ontario, especially the hon. member for Toronto Centre, who pretended that this right of appeal was a link binding us to Great Britain, that if the right of appeal were taken away it would weaken our connection with the Mother Country. He wished to ask hon. members why, if the Federal Parliament was fit to legislate on subjects of vast importance connected with the interests of this country, men could not also be found able to interpret our laws. If this Parliament were called upon to legislate for a country twenty times as large as Great Britain, if we had men who understood the interests and wants of this country—men who were called upon every day to make laws and modify those that were already made—was it to be said that we could not find within this broad Dominion — extending, as we were frequently told, from ocean to ocean—men as competent to interpret our laws as the arbitration in England ; for the Judges of the Privy Council were after all only arbitrators as between litigant parties. As far as our Canadian laws were concerned, those Judges did not know even their elementary principle. He found that a prejudice existed in the minds of some Englishmen in regard to the appeal to the foot of the Throne, and they thought that by removing this right Parliament would be depriving them of a privilege which was inherent to every British subject. When he came, however, to read authorities on this subject he found that during no period—not even the PLANTAGENET period—did an English King administer justice, except through his Judges. It was a well known fact that no English King ever sat upon the judicial tribunal except one, and he was advised by his Judges not to express any opinion upon the case. If that were so the natural inference was that the law was administered by English Judges. Were Canadian Judges not English Judges ? Did not our Judges also render justice in the name of HER MAJESTY, and were they not selected as Judges were in England on account of their capacity and ability to administer the laws ? If in England a British subject found justice at his own door, and if there men were found competent to understand and administer the laws, why should the people of Canada, who were also British subjects, submit—for he called it a submission—our Judges to the contumely of being suspected of ignoring the law ? Why should the people have to appeal to the Judges of what was practically a foreign country ? He did not say a foreign country in a political sense, but meant it in a judicial sense. If the position of the people of Ontario and Quebec were reversed, that appeal to the Privy Council would have long since been abolished. It was admitted that the law of Lower Canada was different from that of the other Provinces, there was not a man who had read the pages of the Quebec law who was not ready to admit that it was as different from the Common Law of England as was the Chinese law. Questions which sometimes embraced the whole system of the law of Lower Canada were decided by Judges who were only conversant with the Common Law of England, and perchance the tribunal had the benefit of an Equity Judge, though such was not absolutely required. If the people of Ontario or of any other Province in the Dominion, except Quebec, were called upon to submit to the Cour de Cassation in Paris, how long would their temper permit such a state of affairs to continue ? And yet the people of Quebec occupied a precisely similar position. But irrespective of the position occupied by Quebec, there were paramount reasons why in the interest of the whole Dominion a Federal Supreme Court should be established, because it would not be disloyal to say that we are laying the foundations of a great country and are preparing to establish a nation in Canada. We are preparing for the future. We have formed laws which meet our wants and which suit our peculiar circumstances, and those laws were not and could not be the same as those of England ; and on a question of interpretation, the judicial atmosphere in which the English Judges lived was different from that in which dwelt the Judges who were born and brought up in Canada and were acquainted with the wants of this country. Assuredly there were wide differences between the laws of the English Provinces of the Dominion which could not be so well appreciated by the Judges on the other side as in this country. Unless we were prepared to say that we could not find in Canada competent Judges to interprete our laws, we were not bound to retain the appeal to the Privy Council. Supposing that the creation of a Supreme Federal Court should not have the effect of immediately abolishing the appeal to the Privy Council, on whom would rest the responsability? Under the Code of Lower Canada there was a right of appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench to the Committee of the Privy Council given in all cases over £500 sterling. After the Bill now before the House had become law, the responsibility of retaining that right of appeal would rest entirely upon the Local Legislature. He did not, however, believe it would be retained during a single session; but expected that, when the Supreme Court was created, the Provincial Legislature of Quebec would withdraw that right. He found that in England, notwithstanding the right to appeal to the Privy Council, and notwithstanding that this was reserved by the original Act giving the first Constitution in the Province of Quebec. Although it was reserved absolutely, they had always admitted the right of restricting this appeal and attaching to it any conditions the colonies might think proper to establish. The origin of this Bill was well explained in all the English law books. It was nothing but a dismemberment of the high court of Parliament. It was the House of Lords who had this jurisdiction, and they, in olden times, established a separate committee, the tryers as they were called, to determine all cases which came from France, that is, the Provinces which were then under the Dominion of England, such as Normandy and Brittany. This was continued and reserved afterwards to the Channel Islands. As a sort of favor, it was afterwards extended to the plantations, because it was understood they had not competent Judges to administer the laws of England. As there might have been great interests at stake, they reserved this right to appeal to HIS MAJESTY in his Privy Council. But it is nothing but a sort of branch of the original jurisdiction of the House of Lords, and in England, no later than last year, they thought proper, notwithstanding the great attachment to their institutions, notwithstanding the veneration they had for the jurisdiction of the House of Lords, after a long debate they resolved by an immense majority in the Imperial Parliament to abolish the appeal to the House of Lords and to create a Supreme Court of Appeal, and in that statute the Privy Council is abolished also, and its jurisdiction is transferred to this Supreme Court of Judicature of England. Consequently the appeal to the Privy Council will exist no more, even for the colonies. We shall have to resort to this Supreme Court of England, and if the Imperial Parliament is competent, if it is a privilege with the sanction of HER MAJESTY, who abandons her prerogative on that subject, to substitute a Supreme Court for an appeal to the House of Lords—why should not we, with the sanction of HER MAJESTY to this Bill, be entitled to establish a Court of Appeal which would meet all the requirements of this Dominion. This was the benefit which the Bill proposed to confer upon the inhabitants of this Dominion. Even before this Bill in England the procedure of appeal to the Privy Council was regulated by statute; its jurisdiction was defined and limited by statute. Consequently everything could be done by statute in England, and as we are a branch of the British Empire, we should certainly have the same privilege as they have, provided we do not invade the prerogative of HER MAJESTY, or that she condescends to abandon her prerogative in favor of her subjects in America. He thought from the peculiar disposition of the Province of Quebec that an amendment should be introduced in order to meet the objection which had been raised by some hon. gentlemen on the opposite side—that is, when two of the Quebec Courts would be unanimous in an opinion as to judgment to be rendered, that except in commercial questions there should be no appeal to the Supreme Court. As the hon. member for Montmorency remarked there was no difference in the principle of the commerce which regulates the Province of Quebec to that of the British Empire, and everything tends to bring about an assimilation of laws throughout the world. Consequently there could be no objection, and it would be a great benefit to have this court to adjudicate upon every question of commercial law. Moreover, on all questions of bankruptcy and insolvency, and, also in cases of corporations, it would be well to have the decisions of this court. In order to avoid a great objection which might rise in the opinion of some hon. gentleman from Lower Canada, by establishing this proviso, that when two or three courts in Lower Canada should have been called upon to decide cases, and should settle them unanimously, he would ask, in that case, there should be no appeal; but when one court should have given a different opinion, or the Court of Appeal might have been divided, then there should be an appeal to the Supreme Court. This would give to the people of Quebec every guarantee possible or desirable, because then they would have two or three, and sometimes four Judges of the Lower Court concurring with Judges of the Supreme Court; and this would certainly secure the maintenance, and would prevent the invasion of the principle of their law. He believed that this amendment, if assented to by the Minister of Justice, would be accepted with great favor by the people of Lower Canada. He believed that the character of the men who should be selected for this Court must necessarily be such that we would have no reason to regret their comparison with the hon. Lords who sit in the Privy Council. He believed there were men in this House, on both sides of it, who were equal to these hon. Lords. He had witnessed the deliberations of the Privy Council, and he had argued cases before them. Perhaps he had not sufficient occasion to appreciate their merits. He acknowledged they were great men, superior men, but he was not willing to admit there were not as good and great men in this country. When we should have a court composed of our fellow citizens, he thought it would be better prepared to understand the peculiarities of the Quebec Law and to give an opinion. They would be always at hand to state the laws and better able to apply them than in the case of the Privy Council, where they had the whole universe almost to judge. They had to judge not only French Law, but Spanish, Dutch and Hindoo Law. They were called upon sometimes, in the same day, to decide three or four cases in law, and these of a variegated description. He understood if this Supreme Court was to regulate and definitely settle all the questions which involved the interests of Lower Canada, that Province was entitled to two of the six Judges. With those two Judges who would be, he was certain, men of the highest position, and against whose integrity no one could raise suspicion, the provision would have more and better safeguards than under the present system.

It being six o'clock the SPEAKER left the Chair.

AFTER RECESS.

Mr. OUIMET said that the Bill now before the House was of very great importance inasmuch as it involved constitutional questions of some magnitude, and created an entirely new judicial system. He understood that this Bill involved serious encroachments on the Provincial privileges that were secured to Quebec by the British North America Act. He was very much astonished to see that this Superior Court Bill was being forced upon the House by the very men who used to be most strenously opposed to it when they were in opposition. He ventured to say that this measure brought with it a great constitutional change in our system, and that part of it, at any rate, was unconstitutional inasmuch as it was contrary to the spirit and letter of the British North America Act. This Bill was based upon the 101st Clause of that Act, which said that the Parliament may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time, provide for the constitution, maintenance and organization of any additional courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada. He (Mr. OUIMET) held that this term, "Court of Appeal of Canada," must be read together with the following words "and generally courts for the better administration of the laws of Canada." What confirmed him in this opinion was that in the construction of the Statute be taken the general meaning of the Act. He referred to Clauses 91 and 92 where the powers of the different Legislatures were defined. If this 101st Clause were interpreted to justify this Bill, it would give to the Superior Court an appelate jurisdiction in matters connected with civil procedure, and destroy the whole meaning of the Clauses 91 and 92. The 91st Clause declares that "It shall be lawful for the QUEEN with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace and order and good government of Canada in relation to all matters not coming within the class of subjects reserved to the various Provincial Legislatures." And in the 92nd clause, amongst these excluded subjects, under the 13th section, are property and civil rights in the Provinces, and the administration of Justice, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of the Provincial Courts both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including proceedings in criminal matters in those courts. When he saw this Parliament dealing with precisely those matters exclusively reserved to the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures, he could not resist coming to the conclusion that it was an encroachment on the rights and privileges secured to the Provinces by the British North America Act. These clauses providing for the establishment of a General Court of Appeal said that the Dominion Parliament might establish a Court of Appeal for the better administration of the Laws of Canada from time to time, or as it appeared by the French translation, when there was need for it. He thought that the Provinces did not now need that legislation—they did not require this Court of Appeal. It was intended that this court should be composed of seven Judges, two of whom would be chosen by the Province of Quebec. Now, every one knew that there were special laws in that Province—special usages, of which the people of the other Provinces were entirely ignorant; and no doubt a great many of the Provincial Laws of other Provinces were also peculiar to themselves. In Quebec, as elsewhere, there were tribunals of original jurisdiction, and tribunals of appellate jurisdiction. In Quebec they had after the Superior Court the Court of Review, or Superior Court sitting in review. Then there was the Queen's Bench sitting in review. In this court the first Judges could sit in the same cases. Thus it would be seen there were nine Judges pronouncing upon the same question, and he contended that the feeling in the Province of Quebec has been to restrict that power of appeal. In Quebec lately the Local Legislature had restricted the right of the intermediate jurisdiction of the Court of Review because it was ruinous for litigants, yet here they were called upon to establish a new court giving a new appellate jurisdiction. When the people would have gone through the Superior Court and Court of Review, and through the Queen's Bench in appeal, they would be able still to come before the Supreme Court and after that would be at liberty to go to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council thus being subject to four or five separate jurisdictions; and he held that a party who had gone through all these courts must be either a very rich man, or he would be ruined before the case came back from England. He would deal with the arguments employed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. In the first place the hon. member had contended that the Supreme Court would put an end to the appeal to the Privy Council. He (Mr. OUIMET) did not see how that could be done. It might be restricted, and he thought the Provincial Legislatures could effect that. At present an appeal could not be taken for less than £500, or $2,000. If in Quebec they were dissatisfied with that state of things, he would venture to say the Local Legislature might fix the amount at say £5,000 or £10,000, which would render the right of appeal nearly useless. But no such demand had been made on the Quebec Legislature. He objected to the Supreme Court having jurisdiction in civil matters because Quebec would be represented in that court by only two Judges, and when they should agree upon a decision it would be confirmed. Now, there was no necessity for an appeal before a court of two Judges only, when there were five Judges in Lower Canada. No one would venture to judge the qualification of Judges by the name of the court to which they belonged. No one would venture to say that Judges of Superior Courts were not equal in a great many instances to the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench. The House was aware that some Judges of the Superior Court in Lower Canada had refused to accept an appointment to the Court of Queen's Bench, and it was not to be supposed that there would be greater intelligence, or knowledge of the law in the Appeal Court, but there would be a greater number of Judges, and five Judges would understand the law better than one could. He knew of one case having been decided in a court below by one Judge, in favor of the defendant. The case went to review, and the court decided unanimously again in favor of the defendant, and when the case was appealed before five Judges, three of them decided in favor of the plaintiff, reversing the judgment of six other gentlemen of equal capacity, and the defendant was obliged to comply with that judgment. So it would appear, there was no need of multiplying the appeal jurisdiction in any way. There was no guarantee that the rights of Quebec would be preserved in this Supreme Court. There would be only two Judges presumed to have a perfect knowledge of the laws and usages of that Province, and although he was satisfied the Government would appoint the ablest men in the Dominion, the people would have no better confidence in that Court than in the Provincial tribunal. The argument of the hon. member for Jacques Carter that there would be better justice administered by this court than by the Privy Council was no reason why the Supreme Court should be given jurisdiction in civil matters. The Bill was unconstitutional and encroached on the rights of Quebec. By the 12th clause it was provided that appeals might be taken from the judgement of the Provincial Courts whether of original or appellate jurisdiction. So in civil matters they would be obliged to go before a tribunal essentially ignorant of the laws and usages of Quebec, for, as every one knew, the theory of law was not sufficient for a Judge to give confidence to an appellant. A man might be versed in the theory of law, and yet in applying it where principles were so conflicting, practice was necessary. In Quebec an advocate must have ten years' practice before he can be a Judge. The Judges from the other Provinces might have the finest intelligence and the best talent possible and yet not give such satisfaction to the people of Quebec as their own judiciary. The 92nd clause of the British North America Act, provided that Quebec shall have the exclusive right to deal with civil rights in that Province, and it was clear that this Bill was unconstitutional inasmuch as it comprised an old system of civil procedure, and an old system on the execution of judgement in civil matters. He spoke for the Province of Quebec though he did not intend to speak from a personal point of view. He understood all the other Provinces had just the same reasons that Quebec had against giving to themselves appellant jurisdiction in such matters. The hon. member for Jacques Carter thought there was no reason to complain of this law. It was the fault of the British North America Act, and that Act had been drafted or enacted only for party purposes, and to help the party to remain in power. This reason was bad, because if the hon. member ventured to say that the principle laid down in our constitution was bad, he must agree that he ought to have prevented that Act from being put into force. If it was bad in itself, as hon. members on the other side contended, why did they at the same time want to force its meaning to the most extreme point by enacting a law that might be prejudicial to the Provinces. The hon. member, had, also, remarked that it was strange to see members in the Opposition side of the House complain of this Bill when it had been brought before the House several times by the late Government, Now, he (Mr. OUIMET) was not aware that the Bill had ever been discussed before in this House, and he could assert from personal knowledge that if it had not been pressed on this House before this session, it was on account of the strong doubts raised in the mind of its author, and it was especially on account of the strong pressure brought to bear on the late Government by hon. gentlemen who were now in the Opposition. If it was not pressed last year, it was in consequence of the strong antipathy which a great many Quebec members, who supported the Minister, felt towards it. How was it that they changed their opinions so soon? How was it they now came to sustain a change they had every reason to oppose at the time it was introduced by the late Government, and when it was brought up again by this Government last session? As the Bill proposed to make such serious encroachments on the rights of the Province of Quebec, he hoped the hon. Minister of Justice would not press it this session, unless he chose to remove from the Bill appellate jurisdiction in civil matters.

Mr. TASCHEREAU stated in reply to the hon. member for Laval that in 1869 the Supreme Court measure was first brought before the notice of Parliament, on which occasion the Bill was merely introduced and there was not a word of discussion on it. In 1870 the subject of establishing a Supreme Court was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne and a Bill in regard thereto was introduced by the hon. member for Kingston. There was again no discussion in the House; a few remarks, only, being made, merely of an interrogatory character by the hon. member for South Bruce and the hon. member for Cardwell, then representing Peel. The subject was again referred to in the Speech from the Throne last year. But a Bill thereon was never prepared by the Government, and therefore could have been withdrawn on account of pressure brought to bear by hon. members in the House. On a previous evening he had objected to several details of the measure which he thought prejudicial to the Province of Quebec, and he intended when in Committee of the Whole, or when concurrence was taken, to move an amendment in order to express his views; but on that occasion he had not opposed the principle of the Bill and did not oppose it now. He would vote against the amendment of the hon. member for Joliette.

The amendment was negatived on the following division:—

Mr. OUIMET said that as he believed appelate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court should be limited to the laws enacted by the Federal Parliament, he moved the following amendment:—"That the SPEAKER do not now leave the chair, and as the passing of the Bill would have the effect:—

1. "Of virtually depriving each Province, in a very great proportion, of 'administration of justice,' the control of which is, by the Constitution, reserved exclusively to the Local Legislatures and Governments, at least in so far as relates to laws respecting Property and Civil Rights and Civil Procedure in each Province.

2. "Of removing that administration of justice to judges 'indiscriminately' taken and selected from 'the whole' of Canada, whereas by the Federal compact the Judges of 'each' Province (except the Province of Quebec) are to be selected from the respective Bars of those Provinces 'so long as' their laws remain 'unconsolidated;' and as to the Province of Quebec, in particular, its Judges are always to be selected from among the Members of the Bar of 'that same Province.'

3. "Of submitting the laws relating to 'property,' to 'civil right' and to 'civil procedure' in the Province of Quebec, the causes and the fate of citizens of that Province to Judges, who, for the most part are strangers to their language, their manners, their usages and their customs, to the origin of their codes and to the numerous commentators, thereon, and to the practice of their Courts.

4. " Of submitting and attributing to the said Supreme Court the management and control of matters which are 'not common' to the 'whole' country.

" Resolved that it is not expedient to have a Court of Appelate Jurisdiction in cases involving questions of property, civil rights and civil procedure."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked if the amendment was in order.

Mr. SPEAKER it was not exactly the same as that which had been previously moved because it did not go quite so far as the other amendment. But it was in the nature of an instruction to the committee directing it to do what it had ample power to do, namely, to alter the character of the Bill to a certain extent.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the amendment was either intended as an instruction to the Committee or it was an attempt to defeat the whole Bill because a small portion of it was thought to be objectionable. It was exactly the same objection that was taken to the objection by the hon. member for Joliette. The better course for the hon. member to pursue was not to press the amendment at this stage, and thus stop the progress of the Bill entirely, but to submit it either when the House was in committee or in concurrence, and thus strike out the clauses which gave the court power to deal with subjects within the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature and Local Courts. By adopting any other course the hon. member would not obtain a correct expression of the House for all the hon. members who were in favor of a Supreme Court Bill would vote against it notwithstanding the fact that some of them might be in favor of restricting the jurisdiction of the court.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD thought the hon. member for South Bruce had put the case very correctly. The motion was perfectly in order but it would not have the effect intended by the mover. He advised the hon. gentleman to submit his amendment at a subsequent stage.

Mr. CUIMET withdrew his amendment.

The House then went into Committee on the Bill (Mr. CASGRAIN in the chair).

The first four clauses were adopted.

On the fifth clause, respecting the precedence of Judges,

Mr. MILLS asked what authority this Parliament had to establish any order of precedence as between the Judges of the Provincial Courts and those of the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the Judges of the Provincial Courts were officers of the Dominion Government as well as the Judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MOSS pointed out that the Bill did not provide what rank the Judges of the Court of Error and Appeal of Ontario would be entitled to.

Mr. MILLS—It seems to me that we should strike out the clause.

Mr. MOSS—That may be, but if we are to retain it we should provide for those Judges.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE observed that if the Judges of the Supreme Court and of the Provincial Courts were to come into contact, it might be worth while to settle the important question of which was to walk in and out first, but it was not probable they would ever come in contact.

Mr. MACLENNAN said that a Chief Justice of a Province who had precedence over the Pusine Judges of the Supreme Court by virtue of the seniority of his appointment would lose that precedence by appointment as one of the Pusine Judges of the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said it had been decided that a Judge appointed under such circumstances did not lose his precedence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said that he did not see any legal necessity for this clause, but he took it that socially the GOVERNOR as representative of the fountain of honor should see to it that the Judges of the highest courts had their proper rank.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—I think if we get the question down to a social one it should disappear from an Act of Parliament.

The clause was adopted. Also the sixth clause. On the seventh, the blanks for the salaries of Judges were filled up with $8,000 for the Chief Justice and $7,000 for each of the Pusine Judges,

Mr. PALMER thought the amount was too high, and would prefer to see the salary of the Chief Justice reduced to $7,000 and the others to $6,000. For a number of years these Judges would have very little to do, and if it was found that if their duties were greater than anticipated the salaries could very easily be increased.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD called attention to the fact that the House had already adopted a resolution fixing the salaries at $8,000 and $7,000, and it was not competent for the committee to change these amounts. On concurrence they might be changed.

Mr. PALMER said he did not propose to move an amendment now, but merely to place his views before the Government.

Mr. SCATCHERD said the first proposition of the Government was to fix the salaries at the amount mentioned by the hon. member for St. John, but it appeared that the policy of the Government on that point was changed after the Bill had been presented to the House, although he had no recollection of any petition having been presented to that effect. The hon. member for St. John had spoken of the proposition of the late Government, but that was a Conservative Government. This Reform Government appeared to reform in the direction of increasing salaries, although in doing so they had to change their deliberately formed policy.

Mr. PALMER said if he had understood that, he would not have made the observations he had made. He did not see that it was necessary for a Reform Government to assert itself by increasing salaries.

The clause was carried, as were also clauses 8, 9 and 10.

The words "of emolument" were inserted after the word "office" in the 11th clause, thus prohibiting any Judge from holding any other office of emolument under the Government.

The 12th and 13th clauses were adopted, five Judges being constituted a quorum.

On the 14th clause,

Mr. MOSS asked whether there was any practical necessity for retaining the words in the Act "proceedings in error." The proceeding that the Act contemplated was exceedingly simple. It was in reality by appeal in every case. No writ of error was provided for by the Act.

Mr. PALMER read an amendment which he proposed to move in concurrence, in order to provide that every case which was now appealable to the Privy Council would be appealable to the Supreme Court.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD approved the suggestion of the hon. member for West Toronto that procedure should be simply by appeal.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE was also of a similar opinion. He suggested that a clause be inserted to provide that all matters, whether of appeal or error, should be appealable by way of appeal simply, and that the words "proceedings in error" should be struck out wherever they occur.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER accepted the suggestion, and the clause was adopted.

The words "proceedings in error" were struck out of the 14th clause, and it was then adopted.

The fifteenth clause was amended on the suggestion of Mr. Moss, so as to provide that in the case of the absence or illness of the Chief Justice one of the other Judges might convene the court.

On the sixteenth clause,

Mr. IRVING moved in amendment:—"That no error or appeal shall be brought from any judgment or order of any court of any of the Provinces subsequent to the commencement of the said Act to HER MAJESTY in Council, but every decree and order of all courts of final resort within the several Provinces in respect of any subject matter or proceeding wherein appeal now lies from any such court to HER MAJESTY in Council shall and may be appealable to the Supreme Court. He said the object of this amendment was to shut off appeals to the Privy Council from any Provincial Court without the case being first brought to the Supreme Court. He referred to the statutes of WILLIAM and of VICTORIA and compared them with the Confederation Act to show that Parliament had power to adopt the amendment he proposed.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said it would be necessary to abrogate Provincial Laws in order to carry out the proposition of the hon. gentleman, and he was not prepared to deal with that question now. It might be a question for the Supreme Court to decide whether this Parliament could adopt such a proposition.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) supported the amendment and argued that one great object of the court, namely, to obviate the expense of appealing to the Privy Council would be defeated.

The amendment was lost, and the clause adopted.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER agreed to amend the 17th clause by providing that cases involving an amount of $500, instead of $1,000, might be appealed to the Supreme Court.

Mr. LAURIER moved in amendment: That in the Province of Quebec this section shall apply to all cases of Insolvency or Bankruptcy and all cases of a commercial nature and cases relating to the general Laws of Canada and in other cases where one of the inferior courts shall have rendered a different judgment from that of a higher court, or when the judgment in appeal in that Province shall be given unanimously confirming or reversing such judgment.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER suggested that the amendment be placed upon the journals and it could be considered subsequently.—Agreed to.

Mr. MILLS gave notice that on concurrence he would move an amendment to the 17th clause to exclude appeals in cases arising under Provincial Laws. While he was anxious to see this court established as an Appeal Court for Canada, he did not desire to see it hold control over the laws of the various Provinces. They ought to be left to manage their own affairs in their own way, and if not satisfied with the decisions of their Judges they could amend their laws as they thought right and proper.

The clause was passed.

The remaining clauses to the 40th, with the exception of the 29th which was struck out, were passed and the committee rose and reported progress.

The House adjourned at 11.15 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, March 29th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER introduced a Bill to continue for a limited time certain Acts therein mentioned.

The Bill was read a first time.

THE DUTY ON STAVE-BOLTS AND OAK LOGS.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved the reception of the report of Committee of the Whole on the resolution for the purpose of amending the Act 31 Vic., Ch. 55, so as to repeal the export duty on stave-bolts and oak logs.—Carried.

The resolution was read the first and second times.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT introduced a Bill based on the resolutions, which was read a first time.

APPOINTMENT OF HARBOR MASTERS.

Hon. Mr. SMITH moved the second reading of Bill to amend the Act 36 Vic., Cap. 9, and 37 Vic., Cap. 34, respecting the appointment of harbor masters. He explained in reply to a question by Hon. Mr. MITCHEEL, that the Bill empowered the Government to supplement the remuneration to harbor masters for extra duties imposed on them. It was not proposed in this Bill to increase their salaries, but to empower the Government to do so when it was deemed necessary or advisable.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL withdrew his objection to the Bill.

Mr. MACDONNELL asked what had been done with regard to the placing of buoys.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the harbor masters would be required to superintend the placing and taking up of buoys.

The Bill was read a second time and referred to Committee of the Whole, Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) in the chair.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said this Bill was suitable to the circumstances of the minor ports in the Maritime Province, but not at all to the circumstances of the minor ports or harbors of the St. Lawrence. He suggested to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the committee should rise in order that the hon. gentleman might have an opportunity to consult with members of the Montreal Harbor Commission, with a view to inserting a clause giving to the Government instead of to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, the power of appointing Harbor Masters in the minor ports along the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. SMITH adopted the suggestion and the committee rose and reported progress.

QUEBEC TRINITY HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. SMITH moved the second reading of the Bill respecting the Trinity House and Harbor Commissioners of Quebec.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD was understood to suggest certain modifications of the Bill, but owing to the noise in the vicinity of the reporters' table he was inaudible.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government were taking the same course with regard to the Quebec Harbor Board that they had with regard to the Montreal Harbour Board; that is, as the Board would have the disbursement of a large amount of public money, the Government thought it only right that they should have the appointment of the majority of the Board.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL made a statement of the position of the Quebec Harbor Trust. He said when it was originally created it received power to borrow money, and did so to the extent of $700,000. It likewise received power to levy a duty of five cents per ton upon all vessels coming into the Port of Quebec. The object of raising this money and imposing this charge was to enable the Board to provide better facilities for shipping. Instead of providing these facilities, the Harbor Trust spent the money in purchasing existing wharves, and in building a separate dock at the mouth of the River St. Charles. In fact they provided very few additional facilities to the shipping. The result was that the rent received for these wharves did not pay the interest upon the bonds. That state of things continued for a considerable time; and for two or three successive years negotiations were carried on with the Harbor Trust and the Quebec Board of Trade with a view to improving the condition of affairs. The Harbor Trust wanted to get their bonds paid which were in arrears, and the Board of Trade wanted the additional facilities for shipping which were promised when the five per cent. duty was levied. In fact an agitation had begun among the business men to have this duty abolished seeing that the facilities promised had not been provided. It was represented to the Government that as they had the appointment of the majority of the Harbor Trust they were responsible for the unfortunate state into which its affairs had fallen. The result was that surveyors were appointed to inquire into the condition of the Trust, the extent of the facilities to shipping which had been provided by it, and into the financial state of its affairs. On the information thus received he recommended that the debt of the Harbor Trust should be consolidated, and that the Government should agree to capitalize the amount at five per cent. interest, and take the management of the Trust into their own hands. That was not agreed to, and the negotiation failed. The year before last the negotiation was again resumed, and a committee from the Harbor Trust, the Quebec Board of Trade, and the shipping interest, came to Ottawa for the purpose of entering into some arrangement which would put the Trust upon a better footing and provide better facilities for shipping. The proposition agreed to was that the Government should buy up the Harbor Bonds, that a new Trust should be constituted, and that an additional charge should be placed upon certain goods coming into and leaving the Port of Quebec, and upon that proposition was based the law of 1873. The law gave the Government a minority on the Board, but still the minority was sufficiently large to protect the public interests. Now, in view of the failure of the old system why did his hon. friend wish to return to it. History would repeat itself and it would be found in the course of time that the Quebec merchants would again throw the responsibility of the failure of the Harbor Trust upon the Government, because they had the appointment of a majority of the members, and the Government might again have to buy up more worthless bonds of the Trust. Only from a party point of view could he see any advantage in this measure. It would give the Government a little more patronage, but it would increase their responsibility in a way that they might yet have to pay dearly for.

Hon. Mr. SMITH took issue with the argument of the hon. member for Northumberland, that the tax was local in its operation. Every man in the Dominion, especially those in the western Provinces, were interested in the question. Every shipowner in this country and many shipowners in England who send their vessels to Quebec, were interested in the tax. Those persons would, of course, prefer that the Government should have control of the Board which would have the power of levying the tax on shipping, and he was surprised that the hon. member for Northumberland should have contended that the people of Quebec should control that body. The citizens of that port desired to construct a graving dock, but finding that they were unable to carry out the work unaided, they applied to Government for assistance to the extent of half a million dollars. While acceding to that request the Government acted in the interests of the Dominion in providing that they should have control of the Board which would have charge of disbursing the money. The Government proposed in the Bill to abolish the Quebec Trinity House which appeared to be an excrescence, and thereby a considerable economy would be effected. They proposed also to make the chairman of the corporation of Pilots an ex-officio member of the harbor commission, which arrangement would meet the views of hon. members from Quebec.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—He was an ex-officio member of the Trinity House.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the Bill did not ignore the interests of Quebec, for the Mayors of Quebec and Levis, and the Boards of Trade of those cities would be represented on the Board, as well as the shipping interests of the Dominion. He hoped all opposition to the measure would be withdrawn as it was absurd to expect Parliament to be bound by arrangements of a private nature which might be made.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said it was quite true that neither Parliament nor the Government were bound by any private conversation. But in the case referred to the representatives of the mercantile interests at Quebec come to Ottawa aud had a series of discussions with several members of the Cabinet, at which an arrangement was arrived at. The Act which carried that arrangement into effect provided for the establishment of a Board of Harbour Commissioners, comprising nine members, three to be appointed by the Governor, two by the Quebec Board of Trade, one by the Levis Board of Trade, and three by ship owners, shippers and consignees. That arrangement was carefully entered into, and no doubt all the facts were stated to Parliament at the time.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that, supposing the arrangement was arrived at on consultation with representatives of the general shipping interest, the circumstances were entirely changed, because Parliament was voting Quebec half a million dollars for a specific purpose. That would involve an additional burden not only on the Port but on the commerce of the country, and it was only on the condition that the Government obtained control of the Harbour Commission the Government were prepared to advance the money.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD reminded the hon. First Minister that the other night he stated that the graving dock at Quebec was not going to be a Government work but a local work, and for that reason the Government were not bound to state the location of the dock. But the Government by assuming the controlling power render the dock a Government work in fact, and all the arguments of the hon. Flrst Minister the other night, therefore, went for nought.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE explained that his statement made the other night was to the effect that the Government would exercise control on fixing the location of the dock; but they would endeavour to arrive at a decision in accordance with the views of the Harbour Commissioners of both ports. He was not aware that his statements had not been thoroughly consistent.

The Bill was read the second time, and the House went into Committee on the Bill, Mr. FERRIS in the chair.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL replying to the previous remarks of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, said the people of the whole Dominion were interested in the free navigation of the St. Lawrence, but the port of Quebec was only incident thereto.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—Who pays the dues.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The people of the port at first.

The first twelve clauses were passed without further discussion.

On the 13th clause,

Hon. Mr. HOLTON called attention to the fact that the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec had so construed the powers they enjoyed so as to impose upon property not landing at Quebec at all, but merely passing in transitu to Montreal. They imposed dues on goods transferred in the middle of the stream from sea-going vessels too heavily laden to pass up to Montreal to lighters. This he was sure was never contemplated by those who framed the Act on this subject. The effect of these charges was to impose double harbor dues on the same cargoes ; first, in the middle of the stream at Quebec, and secondly, in the Harbor of Montreal. He suggested that a clause should be introduced to amend the Act in such a way as to put an end to this manifest injustice.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said such a clause would enable vessels to evade paying any duties. On one cargo that he knew of there was a difference of $100,000 between the report of the Harbor Commissioners at Quebec and the Harbor Commissioners at Montreal. A portion of the goods after being transhipped into lighters was forwarded by rail. He objected to this discussion taking place in such an irregular manner. It should be introduced by a resolution declaring that the duty imposed at Quebec should be abolished. Then the matter would be fairly brought before Parliament.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON did not think it could be brought up on a more fitting occasion than this. The public policy of the country was involved in the proper distribution of burdens on commerce passing Quebec and Montreal. He would not move an amendment to-day, but would bring the matter before the House on the third reading It was only quite recently that the Act had been so construed by the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said the point was a most important one in the interests of the trade of the West, and there was also something in what the hon. member for Quebec Centre had said. His (Mr. MITCHELL'S) idea was this, that ships transferring a portion of their cargoes in the middle of the stream to lighters, and did not avail themselves of the Port of Quebec should not pay dues ; but ships that used the wharves at that port could hardly expect to escape paying the tolls. It would be advisable to have a statement from the Minister of Customs showing what portion of goods was transhipped in that way at the Port of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said whoever proposed to bring this question up again should be prepared to show in what way this grievance complained of affected the revenues of the Port of Montreal. The point, as he understood it, was this : A vessel anchoring in the middle of the stream at Quebec and transhipping some of her cargo to lighters, was afterwards charged for the entire cargo on its arrival at Montreal, whether in the vessel itself or in the lighters. There was one point about this which should be understood. The Harbor Commissioners contended that vessels had the right to use the middle stream opposite Quebec, just as well as they would the middle of the stream at any other point between Montreal and the sea. That was plausible on the face of it, but it must be remembered that the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec were obliged to keep the river clear opposite the city. They were obliged to pay a large price every year for removing anchors and chains from the bottom of the river. At present there was not one chance out of every twenty that a vessel anchoring in the middle of the stream could recover her anchor, in consequence of the state of the bottom of the river. The Harbor Commissioners of Quebec claimed that, being obliged to expend a large amount of money for removing anchors and chains lost in the middle of the river, they should be entitled to more returns in the shape of charges on vessels anchoring there. He did not pretend to understand, precisely, the state of the case, but merely referred to this matter in order that it could be discussed when this subject was before the House again.

Mr. DEVLIN said he would be prepared to-morrow to lay before the House any statement that might be necessary under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said this was a public question, and should be dealt with as such. However, he had no objections to delaying the measure in order that the Montreal Harbor Commissioners might be heard, provided that time be given to enable the Quebec Commissioners to be heard also.

Mr. DEVLIN said it was manifestly unjust to impose duties upon ships that did not use the Harbor of Quebec, but merely transhipped in mid-stream.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL pointed out that under the Act of 1873 power was given to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners to impose charges upon goods transhipped at Quebec whether at the wharf or in the stream.

The Committee then rose, and reported the Bill, with amendments which were concurred in, and the third reading fixed for to-morrow.

GRAVING DOCK AT QUEBEC.

The Bill respecting the Graving Dock in the Harbor of Quebec, and authorizing the raising of a loan in respect thereof was read the second time, and referred to Committee of the Whole forthwith — Mr. DYMOND in the chair.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the working of the fourth clause was ambiguous. He wished to know whether it was intended to give the Harbor Commissioners power to levy tolls generally on all vessels, or only on vessels using the Graving Dock.

Mr. DEVLIN said he had sent a copy of this Bill to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, but it could only have reached them yesterday morning: He would therefore ask the Premier not to take the final stage at present, but to leave the door open for representations from the Montreal Harbor Commissioners if any should be made. He would be in a position to-morrow to say whether they had any representations to make or not.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he did not know what the Montreal Harbor Commissioners could have to say in the matter. They had agreed with the Quebec Harbor Commissioners to pay $5,000 a year, and that was all the interest they had in the matter. The acting Chairman of the Montreal Commission was here last week, and wished to obtain for his Board some share in the management of the Graving Dock after it was built. That was out of the question. That could not be done without creating a separate corporation, composed of members from both the Harbor Commissions. He had, however, told the acting Chairman that the Montreal Harbor Commissioners would be consulted as to the location of the dock, and the adoption of plans, and the tolls to be imposed upon vessels using the dock would be imposed with their knowledge and concurrence. He believed the acting Chairman was quite satisfied with that statement. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Chateauguay, the intention of the Bill was that the public should not be burdened with any payment on account of this dock. That being the case they had to consider what the probable income of the dock would be; and it was quite evident that the use of the dock would not produce $25,000 per annum in addition to the ordinary cost of its maintenance. The Quebec and Montreal Harbor Commissions agreed to pay out of the general revenues $5,000 each annually, and it was expected that the revenue of the dock would produce the other $15,000. He was not quite sure it would produce that amount, but for the purpose of this Act it was assumed that it would do so. It was intended, therefore, by this Act simply to impose dues upon vessels that would derive a direct benefit from the use of the Graving Dock. He was willing that the clause should be modified, so as to make that point plain.

The modification in the fourth clause in the direction indicated having been made, the various clauses of the Bill were adopted, and the Committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read the third time and passed.

CAPE RACE LIGHT HOUSE.

Bill to repeal an Act of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island for the collection of the Cape Race Light House tolls, was read a second time.

BILLS DISCHARGED.

The following Bills were discharged:—

Act respecting certificates to Masters of Inland and Coasting Ships.

To amend the Act respecting certificates to masters and mates of ships.

SHIPPING OF SEAMEN.

The House went into Committee of the Whole on Bill respecting the Shipping of Seamen in the inland waters of Canada—Mr. ARCHIBALD in the chair.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said as he understood the Bill it was to subject mariners employed on vessels on inland waters to all the provisions now applicable to seamen on ocean-going ships. He did not desire to raise any objections to the Bill, but he doubted whether it would be adapted to the habits of our people engaged on vessels on the inland waters of Canada.

Mr. NORRIS said some amendments would be necessary, but he thought the trade of the country required this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the Bill did not include all the provisions applicable to sea-going ships, but merely those suited to the inland waters.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the Bill applied to bargemen as well as to mariners, and it would result in practical inconvenience. He suggested that the second clause should be amended by excepting bargemen from its provisions.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he saw the force of this suggestion and he accordingly moved to amend the second clause by adding the following words:—"This Act shall not apply to barges and scows navigating canals and rivers."

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SMITH also amended the Bill to provide that it shall not come in force until Jan. 1st, 1876.

The Bill was reported—read a third time and passed.

RAILWAY FROM ESQUIMALT TO NANAIMO.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the second reading of the Bill to provide for the construction of a line of railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked if the Government propose to insert in the Bill a provision, that no contract shall be made without the approval of Parliament.

Hon. Mr, MACKENZIE—No.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said a Bill had passed through committee and would be reported to the House providing for the incorporation of a private company to construct a line between the two points specified in the Government Bill, but the object of obtaining that Act by the company was thought by the hon. First Minister to be that of being made contractors. The necessity of having all contracts laid before Parliament was therefore more pressing. It was important that no obstructions should be placed in the way of the construction of the road from the waters of the Pacific at either Bute Inlet or Burret Inlet to Red River. The Government Bill provided for the railway when built becoming the property of the contractors in the same way as the Georgian Bay Branch would become the property of the contractor, Mr. FOSTER. The answer of the Government, no doubt, would be that to carry out his proposal would involve one year's delay; but, at all events, the House would be glad to hear whether the Government had any idea as to the probable contractors. Those inquiries would, of course, have been unnecessary, if the Government were to be the contracts for the railway between Esquimault and Nanaimo.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Bill as prepared did not require that the contracts should be submitted to Parliament, especially as Mr. SMITH the chief engineer on the Pacific side, thought he would be ready by midsummer for contracts. The Government must either let the contracts without their being submitted to Parliament or put off the work for a year. Rightly or wrongly they had agreed with British Columbia to commence the construction of this road immediately, and this Bill was introduced in accordance with that arrangement. As to the statement that Esquimault was by this Bill constituted the terminus of the Pacific Railway, it was incorrect.

Mr. IRVING said he hoped this Bill would not be taken as a precedent to justify a departure from what was understood to be a part of the general policy of the Government, namely, to submit every contract for large works for the sanction of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE that is not the general policy of the Government. We let out contracts last year on the canals to the amount of several millions and the law did not require them to be submitted to Parliament.

Mr. IRVING said the law did not require it, but it was understood to be a part of the present Government when they criticised the late Government for not following it in connection with the Pacific Railway. He was not speaking of the way contracts might be carried out under the present law, but under new legislation. He belived the country expected that the ratification of Parliament would be obtained to all contracts for important works just as such contracts were submitted to the Imperial Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman was mistaken. It was not the custom to submit contracts of this kind to the Imperial Parliament, but only those of a certain class—chiefly those with Mail Steamship Companies who received subsidies. He had insisted upon that policy only in regard to the Pacific Railway. He had no objection, whatever, to that policy being adopted wherever it could be conveniently adopted; but, for instance, contracts would be immediately let for the enlargement of the Welland and Lachine Canals, and it would be impossible, without delaying the execution of these works, to submit those contracts to Parliament. The rule could not very well be applied to ordinary contracts. The contracts for the Pacific Railway were not ordinary contracts, because they provided for the road becoming, ultimately, the property of the company. On the other hand, the works on the canals were for the country, and the contracts were given to the lowest tender, when sufficient security could be obtained, and there was not, therefore, the same opportunity for intrigue with contractors, The contracts now being let for the grading of certain portions of the Pacific Railway were merely for the preliminary part of the work, and whatever was done would be taken by the ultimate contractors as part payment. He was not sure, therefore, that the consent of Parliament would be required to these contracts, because they were merely for the preliminary part of the work and the same principle was not involved as in the larger contract, where the parties were to accept certain quantities of land upon certain conditions, obtain a guarantee for a certain amount, and to have the road become their property upon certain conditions. If they attempted to carry out the principle that all contracts should be submitted to Parliament, there would be most serious difficulties with regard to many of our public works; and he had never advocated that principle, because he knew it would be quite impracticable.

Mr. CURRIER said, in the first place, he hoped the Government would not find it their duty to construct this railway at all: and, in the next place, he hoped if they did go on with the work, they would not let the contracts without first submitting them to Parliament.

Mr. PLUMB said he was surprised at the statement of the First Minister that he had not, when in opposition, advocated the policy of submitting all important contracts to Parliament. He believed statements directly contrary to that had been made throughout the country, and the late Government had been condemned for not adopting that policy. Not many years ago, the Local Government was attacked and condemned chiefly on that very ground. It seemed to him that gentlemen opposite took a ver different view of this matter from th a which they held when in opposition, The country would be very much surprised at the declaration of the First Minister. Certainly, if any contracts should be submitted to Parliament those for the construction of this work should be.

Mr. IRVING wished to say one word of an explanation. He did not mean to reflect upon the propriety of any contracts that had been given out, nor to express any doubt that what was fair would be done. That was not the point. The point was that the country had been led to expect that such contracts would be submitted to Parliament. If the question of expediency or delay was permitted to prevail in any particular case, it would apply in every case. All large contracts, he held, should be submitted to Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he was quite sure he had never led the country or any one to expect that all important contracts would be laid upon the table of the House. He never said a word that could imply such a course because he knew it would be utterly impracticable. But there was a particular class of contracts which should be submitted to Parliament and which should be specified in the Bill authorizing such contracts—such as contracts for the Pacific Railway and with the Montreal Ocean Steamship Company. Such was not the case in the Act authorizing the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, and many other public works. Take for instance the Examining Warehouse at Montreal, an important work, costing two or three hundred thousand dollars. Any one could see that vexatious delays would arise if the contract for a work of that kind could not be let till Parliament assembled. He was quite certain the hon. gentleman was mistaken if he supposed that he (Mr. MACKENZIE) ever led the country to expect he would pursue such a policy. It would be utterly impossible to do so.

Mr. WHITE said one of the most formidable difficulties he had to contend against in his canvass was the charge that the late Government had given out the contract for the Pacific Railway without the consent of Parliament and the assertion that the then Opposition were opposed to such a policy. Mr. RATHBURN, a large mill-owner, and a very influential man in his county, though a Conservative, opposed him on the ground that the present Government had by their public utterances led him and the country to believe that it was their policy to submit all large contracts to Parliament for its approval or disapproval. He had told that gentleman that it was impossible for the Government to submit all such contracts to Parliament; and he was glad to find that that statement was now admitted to be correct by the First Minister himself. The railway which the Bill now before the House was to authorize was a part of the Pacific Railway scheme.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—No.

Mr. WHITE—It is a part of the arrangement entered into by the Government with British Columbia and would involve the expenditure of several millions, and it was a work which the Government should never have undertaken to perform. If we were true to ourselves we would build no branch lines; we would build the main line and let the Provinces, specially interested in them, build the branch lines. It was one thing to be in opposition and quite another thing to be members of a Government; and the people were beginning to see the insincerity of hon. gentlemen who, when in opposition, preached economy which they ailed to practise when in power, and who laid down very stringent rules respecting the submission of contracts to Parliament which they found it utterly impossible to carry out when they came into office.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he agreed with the statement that the country had certainly been led to expect that one of the great points of difference between the policy of the present Government and that of the past, was that all contracts for works of an important nature should be submitted to Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—When did I say that?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I did not say that you said so. The hon. gentleman has stated that he did not say so, and he (Mr. TUPPER) was prepared to accept the statement because he was not in a position to controvert it. However, he believed that the country had received the impression which had been indicated by several gentlemen who had spoken. He wished to draw the attention of the House to a very curious exception which the First Minister had made. The hon. gentleman had stated that it was specially with reference to the Canada Pacific Railway contract that he had held that it should be submitted to Parliament; but that with reference to other large public works such as the Intercolonial Railway, and the canals, he had not said the contracts should be laid upon the table. If there was a contract which did not require to be laid on the table of the House it was the Canada Pacific Railway contract of the late Government because Parliament had deliberately fixed the quantity of land and the amount of money which should be given to the contractors as well as the terms and conditions, all of which were rigidly adhered to in the contract with a single exception, with reference to lands other than those along the line—an exception which the present Government had found it necessary keep verbatim et literatim. With reference to that point, and that point only, the contract required the approval of Parliament. The Intercolonial Railway was in quite a different position. In that case the contracts were to do a certain public work for the Government, and none of the terms and conditions thereof were fixed by Parliament beforehand Therefore there was strong reason why such contracts as that of Mr. FOSTER should have the approval of Parliament; which did not exist in the case of the Canada Pacific Railway contract. Apart from that, however, there was another very important reason why Mr. FOSTER's contract and the contract for the work now before the House should be submitted to Parliament. He believed that at this moment the eastern portion of what would be the connection between the Railway System of Canada and the Canada Pacific Railway proper was in the hands of Americans. It was an American contractor whose tender was accepted by the Government—Mr. MUNSON, of Boston. The 120 miles from Douglas up to Renfrew he held to be a part of the Georgian Bay Branch, and he believed the capital would all be negotiated for by the same parties, and those parties were Americans. He believed that the money deposited with the Government came from the United States, and that the security was also American. He was stating what he solemnly believed when he said that at this moment the eastern link of the Canada Pacific Railway was in the hands of Americans. He would say further that under this Bill he had not the slightest doubt that the contract for the construction of the road from Esquimault—the Pacific terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway—to Nanaimo, for which this country would have to pay between three and four millions at the very least—would also pass into the hands of the Americans. What was to prevent it? There was a Bill before the House for the incorporation of a British Columbia Company, but no person would imagine that the capital necessary to build that road could be found in British Columbia. He belived that the capital would come from the United States, and that under these two contracts we would have the intervening portion of the great national highway of Canada hemmed in by American contractors and American capitalists who would own both ends of the line. These railways would not become the property of the Government like the Intercolonial Railway or the canals, but under these contracts the work itself would become the property of the contractors. He understood the hon. Minister of Public Works to say that although the Pacific Railway Act did not oblige him to lay Mr. FOSTER'S contract upon the table, he intended to take that course for the purpose of obtaining the sanction of Parliament. He (Mr. TUPPER) had put a motion upon the table which the House was not likely to reach owing to the near approach of the end of the session. He hoped that if he (Mr. TUPPER) would not be able to reach that motion, the House would have an opportunity of passing an opinion upon that contract, though he must say that after the opinion expressed by the First Minister he had very little expectation that the House would be allowed that opportunity. He repeated that he believed that the two ends of the Canada Pacific Railway would pass into the hands of foreign capitalists and those men who have the deepest possible interest in preventing the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway for the next fifty years because they have money invested in a railway that is likely to be unproductive if a railway through Canada is constructed.

Hon Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman for more than one moment. I will just refer to the insinuation that the Government is under some unseen influence of citizens of the United States. I do not use the term American citizens, because I claim we are as much Americans as they are. The insinuation is not new. The organs of the hon. gentleman's party have been singing that song for the last year and a-half. They have on every conceivable occasion brought up a statement to that effect, and the hon. gentleman's statement to-night is only a repetition of what he said the other night and on other occasions. I tell the hon. gentleman I have no knowledge of any influence whatever from the other side of the line being so exercised. I have no knowledge of any connection of Mr. FOSTER with United States citizens of any kind, good, bad or indifferent. I never was spoken to, never was approached, nor do I know any one that was spoken to or approached by any one from the United States in reference to railway matters in Canada, and I claim that the hon. gentleman must produce proof and his organs must produce proof in support of the insinuations in which they continually indulge regarding the motives and objects the Government have in view. I challenge the hon. gentleman and the whole country to produce a particle of evidence in support of those insinuations. I do not deem it consistent with my own honor or dignity to say any more than that I invite the hon. gentleman and all who have anything to say in the matter at once to proceed with the production of some evidence to justify these repeated insinuations.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I think the hon. gentleman is very wrong to answer such arguments as I have advanced to the House, in such a manner. I am prepared to produce proof satisfactory to my own mind and I believe satisfactory to every member in this House, that there is great reason to fear that American influence is being exercised in this matter. We undertook to construct a Canadian Pacific Railway in this country and American capitalists connected with the Northern Pacific Railroad exhibited an intense desire to get control of that work. They approached the late Government and approached it in vain. They went to Sir HUGH ALLAN and went to him with success. Sir HUGH ALLAN made arrangements with the promoters of the Northern Pacific Railway by which they were to furnish all the capital, I believe, that was required for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. If that is not evidence to the House of the existence of parties in the United States who felt a deep interest in obtaining control of our Canadian Pacific Railway, then I do not know what would be held to be a deep interest. Sir HUGH ALLAN and Mr. FOSTER were associated with these gentlemen, and Mr. FOSTER who was a strong supporter of the late Administration, abandoned his support of them and joined with JAY COOKE & Co. in bringing about the downfall of the late Government because we shut the door in their faces, and because we said the Canadian Pacific Railroad should not fall into their hands. I ask the hon. gentleman if he supposes that anybody in this House or outside of it can be blamed—I put it in no stronger terms—for indulging a fear that those same interests which were so active and accomplished so much in relation to this work show the same anxiety now. It is known that the Northern Pacific Railway Company have built a line of railway from Duluth to the waters of Red River, and have extended their connection down in the direction of the Dominion. It is known that these people are deeply anxious to make that road profitable. They would not be keen and enterprising capitalists as they are if they were not anxious. It is well known they are projecting carrying a railroad from the Missouri to the Pacific, and hence their deep anxiety and great interest in obtaining such a position as will enable the parties, who have sunk their money in constructing the Northern Pacific Railway, to obtain a dividend from their railway. We find Mr. FOSTER, who abandoned the late Government because we would not entertain the proposal of himself and of his American associates, getting an assignment of this contract for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch from a Mr. MUNSON, of Boston, whose tender it appears that Government accepted. I say accepted; because unless they accepted his tender, how was he in a position to assign his contract to Mr. FOSTER. The papers laid by the Government before this House definitely showed that the Americans obtained the contract and that Mr. FOSTER, who is associated with the Northern Pacific Railway, obtained an assignment of it, and I say, therefore, there is reason for fear. I do not mean to say it is evidence, such as is required in a Court of Law, to establish a case; but we are not dealing with a Court of Law, but with the Parliament of Canada and the intelligent public sentiment of this country, and I say it is time the people of Canada looked into it. As the hon. gentleman has challenged me in such a manner I give the grounds on which my fear is based. When I find the Government proposing to build a branch of the railroad instead of carrying on a great highway through British territory, and diverging from the route to the Georgian Bay, expending millions of the people's money, not in building the Pacific Railway, but in constructing lines which are no part of it, and which will actually compel us to use the Northern Pacific Railway—when I say after throwing away our money in that way it increased my fear that the same parties who exercised their influence in the most potent form to endanger the Canadian Pacific Railway before, are exercising it now. It is a most vital point to us to know where the capital, to build this road on Vancouver Island, is to come from. There are peculiar circumstances attending this contract. It comes before us involving an unknown sum to be given to unknown parties. I am not going to endorse what is said by other persons, but I do repeat what I have said here, and I give grounds which I think are sufficient to excite apprehension in the minds of the people—that American influence has something to do with the construction of this railroad.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman thinks that his fears justify him in disputing my words.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he would be very sorry to question the words of the hon. gentleman. He had not put it on that ground. He accepted the hon. gentleman's words to the fullest extent. All that he (Mr. TUPPER) said was that there were grounds for apprehension that the Northern Railway interest would obtain the contract on Vancouver Island as he feared they had already got the Georgian Bay section.

It being six o'clock, the SPEAKER left the chair.

AFTER RECESS,

Mr. BLAKE said he did not understand the Bill to be presented to the House in pursuance of a policy on the part of the Dominion Government to construct a railway from Esquimault to Nanaimo if their hands were free ; but he understood it to be brought down in order to give effect to an engagement which had been made with British Columbia, through the medium of the Colonial Secretary, with respect to certain terms of relaxation of the original bargain agreed upon at the time of union with that Province, and one of those terms of engagement, which the House was asked by passing this Bill implicitly to ratify, was, that there shall be constructed immediately or forthwith a railway from Esquimault to Nanaimo. His hon. friend the First Minister had explained that it was because that was the term of the engagement with British Columbia that he asked authority to enter into the contracts for the construction of that railway, and to proceed upon those contracts without obtaining the assent of Parliament thereto, or rather without giving Parliament an opportunity of disapproving of the contracts. Those who were prepared to assent to and to implement those engagements could hardly consistently object to that proposal, simply because it was essential to the complete fulfilment of the engagement. If they were to wait till next session of Parliament before work was commenced, that meant to wait, of course, a whole year, till the next season for work, and that would not be fulfilling either the spirit or the letter of the engagement. He did not understand the hon. First Minister to attempt to justify the proposal he had made to Parliament upon any other ground than that the Government made an engagement to commence work immediately, and in pursuance of that agreement he asked the House to give authority which, whatever might be the general principle which ought to govern the making of such contracts, and whatever might be the principle to which the party of which the hon. First Minister was the head was committed on that subject, it was clear that no ordinary circumstance could apply to this case. Parliament was asked by the present Government last session to give power for the construction of the Pacific Railway itself, and the Act passed contained provisions with respect to the contracts for the work especially declaring that no contracts for the construction of any portion of the line should be binding until they were laid before Parliament for one month, or a shorter time if they were approved by resolution. The same Act contained a provision as to certain portions of the line which were to be exempted from that provision, and with respect to the branches the assent of Parliament was not stipulated to be obtained. His hon. friend the First Minister justified—and he received the unanimous assent of the House to his justification—his departure from the general principle and from the application of the general principle in the Act of the Government upon the ground of public necessity, upon the ground that it was expected and believed that arrangements could be made for the prosecution of the work of constructing those branches during the season, and that the public interest required they should be prosecuted during that season. And, therefore, he asked Parliament so far to depart from the general principle he had asserted and maintained with respect to the main line, and that the House assented to. His hon. friend the First Minister acted in the spirit of the main provisions of the Act, and as regarded the Georgian Bay branch he did not avail himself of the power thus conferred on the Government, but provided that the contract for the construction of the road should be liable to the same conditions as contracts for the main line, and be laid on the table of the House during one month, and it did lay on the table nearly that period. Therefore the only question the House had to consider with respect to this point of the Bill was, whether the justification for departing from the recognized rule, as established and embodied in the statute book, was sufficient. The whole policy of this measure depended upon the engagement made with British Columbia, and if the House was prepared to implement that engagement in its entirety, it must be prepared to give the exceptional authority asked by the Government. As he understood the general principle with reference to the expenditure of public money which had been advocated by hon. gentlemen who sat near him, it was that the House ought as far as possible to retain and maintain the control of Parliament over the expenditure of the public funds. That was the general principle, and it had been asserted by them at all times and in all seasons whether they sat on the Opposition or on the Government side of the House. They always admitted, however, that there might be cases in which the executive might be called on to ask Parliament to give it a greater measure of confidence and of control than the assertion of that general principle would involve, and that was to be considered in each case. He understood it to be clear that all cases of contracts by which Parliament might be pledged, if they were implemented, to expend more money than had been actually voted for the service must contain a provision that the money was to be applied or to be paid out of monies to be voted by Parliament, and would contain a provision that the contract was not binding unless it was laid on the table of the House. Whenever the House voted a sum of half a million or a million dollars for the construction of a public work, whenever it had been provided with the information which was necessary in order to enable it to reach a conclusion as to the exigency of constructing the work, and was also provided with details as to the cost of the work, the work was expected to be completed before next session, a whole vote was taken on it. The House had then before it the whole subject, and knew the maximum amount to which it was committed. The money so actually voted the Government was empowered to expend during recess under contracts. That when the expenditure required was more than Parliament had voted, then it appeared to be the rule that no attempt should be made to pledge the House for the expenditure of the larger sum under contracts unless they were first approved by Parliament. It was said by Mr. TODD in his work on Parliamentary Government :—

"An important question has arisen of late years with regard to contracts, to be entered into between any department of the Executive Government and other parties, for the performance of any work or service which has been authorized by Parliament to be undertaken, It is manifest that the responsibility of entering into such contracts properly rests upon the Executive alone. But it is equally clear that the Government have no constitutional authority to make a contract which shall be binding on the House of Commons, by whom the necessary funds for carrying on the contract must be supplied ; and that if any contract be entered into by any executive department for work to be performed, the cost of which will exceed the amount already voted by Parliament for the service to be contracted for, such contract should expressly state that payments on behalf of the same would be made 'out of moneys to be voted by Parliament'; and, in addition thereto, a copy of said contract should be laid upon the table of the House of Commons for one month previous to its going into operation, in order to afford an opportunity to the House to express its disapproval thereof, if it should think fit to do so."

That appeared so be the general rule laid down, and it was a wholesome rule, one which he desired to see observed in all cases in which it was consistent with the public interest that it should be observed. Therefore he was not disposed in the slightest degree to complain that this, which in some respects of the case might be regarded as a mere detail of the Bill and capable of being remedied as no doubt it would be at a subsequent stage, should be dealt with upon the second reading. He was not disposed to complain for two reasons. First, because he conceived that one of the great errors into which the House fell was the absence of repeated discussions on questions, and it was important if objections were objections of detail they should be taken at one stage and subsequently discussed at another stage. Second, because on the principle on which the Government asked the House to assent to that measure, this detail was a part of the principle. They said to hon. members that it was true in the Bill itself, but in the ground work of the measure, "we have entered into an engagement with British Columbia by which we pledge ourselves to forthwith commence the work. We ask you for authority to provide for the engagement, and in order to make that provision we must make contracts which shall go into operation at once. We cannot expect contractors to proceed with work if the contracts are subject to the disapproval of Parliament after the work had been entered upon, and on this special ground we ask you to make an exception from the general principle and determine that the contracts shall be binding without the assent of Parliament." Of course this was a very grave question, and its solution depended on whether the House was determined to implement the engagement with British Columbia in its entirety, or whether it was determined to say, "Although prepared to implement the engagement with British Columbia in substance, we think the question of Parliamentary control is so important that, while we are prepared to make the necessary contracts, we are only prepared to do so subject to the approval of the House of Commons." That was the position, he apprehended, of those who were prepared to implement the engagement. The House was aware he was not of that number, that he had not felt it consistent with his duty to do otherwise than to express disapproval of the engagements made with British Columbia. His opinion had been and his opinion was that those engagements were inconsistent with the policy of Parliament, as declared last session, and were such as conflicted with the recitals of the Canadian Pacific Act of last session. The declared policy of Parliament last session was that the railway should be constructed as rapidly as the resources of the country would permit, without adding thereby to the burdens of taxation on the people. He had never objected, on the contrary, he had always, privately and publicly, advised that the people of British Columbia should be invited to consider the question of a relaxation of the terms of union. He had always been prepared to sustain any proposition to give to British Columbia a consideration, if consideration were required for that relaxation, and if the reasonable relaxation were the construction of a local work, not of Dominion importance, but of importance to the people of that Province, he would be prepared, on obtaining that reasonable relaxation, to allow a reasonable expenditure to be made on a local work, simply on the ground that he believed the engagement made at the time of union was ruinous to the people of Canada, and in order to obtain relief from the terms of that bargain, he was willing to pay a reasonable price. He did not believe that the price proposed to be paid was otherwise than a very considerable one. The construction of sixty-five miles of railway was a local work which would involve an expenditure of two or two and a half millions of dollars, which was certainly a large price to pay for a relaxation of terms. It was a local work which, it might be assumed, was important to the locality, since it was what the locality asked, but a local work which was not likely to yield a large amount of profit, even as a local work. The line from Esquimault to Nanaimo was supposed te be important because it would serve to convey large quantities of coal from valuable coal beds lying along that line, but, as he understood it, there were also numerous harbours along the route, where vessels might have easy access to those coal beds, and he believed a large portion of the coal would be shipped by sea and not by rail. Nor did the large agricultural resources of that portion of Vancouver's Island lead him to believe that there would be any extensive development of other industries besides coal mining. He would not enter into those details, because they were points to be settled by the people of the locality who had obtained the road as a consideration for relaxing the terms of union.

Mr. DE COSMOS asked what grounds the hon. gentleman had for saying this road was a compensation given to British Columbia for consenting to relax the terms of union.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said this House was asked to vote it as the price. If it were to be a part of the Pacific Railway itself this Bill was unnecessary, because there was authority to construct the Pacific Railroad. This Bill itself would be an authoritative statement on the part of Parliament, if it passed, that this line was something beyond the Pacific Railway unless the hon. member for Victoria regarded it as a free gift. Although the hon. gentleman had an exalted idea of the generosity of the Parliament of Canada, he would hardly say that it was a free gift, and if it was not, then it must be the price of something obtained. Under the circumstances in which the country stood it was a question whether it wise to agree to expend $2,000,000 annually in British Columbia, and to agree to a time limit for building the main line of the Pacific Railroad when the Georgian Bay branch and the Vancouver Island branch were to be put under construction. It was a question whether this Parliament was not running a risk in assenting to those terms, and breaking up the policy which was laid down last session that the burden of this country should not be further increased in constructing this railroad. In assenting to this Bill the House was practically endorsing those terms and because he was not prepared to endorse those terms he was not prepared to assent to this Bill.

Mr. MASSON said one of the terms on which British Columbia entered the Dominion was the construction of a railway from the Pacific to the Atlantic. That was severe enough to Canada, but the completion of the Confederation was a consideration sufficient to induce us to make the sacrifice. The hon. gentlemen opposite at that time objected to the terms because they were too severe to Canada. And what did those same gentlemen ask this House to do at this day? They proposed to build the Pacific Railroad, and also railways in British Columbia and Ontario which were not parts of it. Whether the road from Esquimault to Nanaimo was the price relaxing the terms of the union or not, it was a boon to British Columbia.

Mr. DE COSMOS no, no!

Mr. MASSON — Well that was the impression of those who paid for it. He (Mr. MASSON) held that the Government should submit it to the people's representatives for their approval. That was the opinion he had always held. This country was willing to build the Pacific Railway, but not to expend $11,000,000 as was proposed on lines which are no part of it. He did not think the country would approve of the policy of the Government when it had time to reflect on it. The Thunder Bay Branch was no part of the Pacific Railway, and he held that all the contracts involving the expenditure of money on the Georgian Bay Branch, Thunder Bay Branch, and the Esquimault and Nanaimo road, should be submitted to this House for their approval.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — Hear, hear!

Mr. MASSON supposing the Premier had in view the policy of the late Government; well, the House would remember that when the late Government introduced the Pacific Railway Bill they stated exactly the amount of money and land that would be required for its construction. At that time he held that the contracts for building the road should be submitted to Parliament. He held the same view in 1868 when the House was asked to expend money on fortifications. The hon. member for Chateauguay and the hon. Premier, on that occasion, moved an amendment declaring that, whenever a contract was entered into by the Government involving the expenditure of a greater amount than the actual grant for such contract, it should be binding until it had run for at least one month on the table of the House of Commons without disapproval, or was formally approved of within that period. Now, that was sound English constitutional policy, and he voted with Messrs. HOLTON and MACKENZIE on that occasion, and against the Government of which he was a supporter. Hon. gentlemen opposite might contend that this was an agreement with British Columbia and that there was a necessity for hurry. Well, was not the Fortifications question in 1868 an agreement with the Imperial Government, by which they were required to vote a certain sum of money for the construction of fortifications? Notwithstanding that fact, Parliament affirmed the sound English constitutional principle that contracts involving an expenditure of money should be submitted for the approval of the people's representatives. He (Mr. MASSON) had looked for more consistency from hon. gentlemen opposite, but was disappointed; and this was not the only disappointment he had experienced since this session began. For instance, he (Mr. MASSON) had opposed the late Government policy towards the Northern Railway, acting with the then Opposition; nevertheless, hon. gentlemen opposite, on coming into power, adopted that very policy—showing that they must be under the impression that they were wrong before. Their policy with regard to the Supreme Court Bill was the same. They opposed it when in opposition—they adopted it after coming into power. But there was this difference between the present Government and the late one. Out of consideration for Quebec the hon. member for Kingston did not press the Supreme Court Bill. But it seemed Quebec was no longer strong enough to prevent its becoming law. With regard to the Bill before the House he contended that it was not an agreement with the people of British Columbia and there was no hurry in pressing

it. If it was an agreement with the people of British Columbia the Government had no right to make it without inserting a clause as had always been done before in such agreements, declaring that it should not be binding on the people of Canada unless approved of by their representatives.

Mr. DECOSMOS said this Bill included the same principle as that of the Pacific Railway Act passed last session, namely, that the Government might either construct the road by private enterprise or as a Government work. He was one of those who held that all the railroads within the Dominion should be constructed, owned and operated by the Government, because the people had to provide the funds by one means or another. It would do away with the large corruption funds for influencing Local Legislatures, Municipalities and Dominion Parliaments. The Government by adopting this principle were running counter to the experience of the people of the United States, who had found that railroad corporations were springs of corruption. If the Government consented to the construction of the Vancover Island section by private enterprise, they could not prevent the use of Asiatic labor. The company would employ Chinese, who would move through the land like locusts, and when the road was completed would leave the country If the Government, in the interests of the Dominion at large, would undertake the construction of the road themselves, they would employ white men, who would be likely to settle in the Province after the road was built. He objected to section six of this Bill because no time was fixed for the completion of the road. Supposing a company should get the contract for constructing, owning and operating this road at $10,000 per mile, and a subsidy of 20,000 acres per mile, and a guarantee of interest on their expenditure for a certain number of years, they would sell their bonds at 60 or 70, and instead of the road being built for $30,000 per mile, it would be found in the end that it would cost, through the manipulations of the country and through water and stock, $50,000 or $60,000 per mile. There was another point to which he wished to draw the attention of the First Minister, because it appeared to have been overlooked by him. Section ten stated that there should be twenty miles of land granted on each side of this road. That was a physical impossibility, because the line from Esquimault to Nainimo would have to pass within sight of the shore almost the whole distance. The expression therefore in section ten was nothing better than nonsense. So far as the land was concerned, he believed the Government of British Columbia would be perfectly willing to grant forty miles of land; but he had his doubts as to their taking the view of the First Minister and the member for South Bruce, that this line was not a part of the Pacific Railway. If it was not a part then the Government had no right to ask for the same portion of land along the line as in the North-West Territory. Probably the member for South Bruce, who had acted the part of special pleader in this matter, would explain how, if the Government accepted the award of Lord CARNARVON, they had the audacity to come down and ask for twenty miles of land on each side of this line, if it was true that this line was to be built as a compensation to British Columbia. But the hon. member for South Bruce had evidently dictated to the Government the policy they should pursue in this matter, and having done so he was bound to rule them in this as in other matters. The member for South Bruce had spoken of British Columbia getting a large consideration for relaxation of the terms. On a former occasion he had challenged the hon. gentleman to show a single word in the correspondence of British Columbia, or in the utterances of Lord CARNARVON that would indicate that this road was to be built as an act of compensation to British Columbia on account of the non-fulfilment of the terms of Union. He repeated that challenge now, because he did not wish the people of Canada to be deceived by an erroneous statement that could not be supported by evidence. However, in this matter, like the commander of a powerful force, believed they could demand a surrender. For his part, he was not prepared to offer any factious opposition to the carrying out of the award of Lord CARNARVON, but he would continue to denounce what he regarded as an erroneous statement calculated to create a misconception of the real state of things between the Province of British Columbia and the Dominion.

The member for Terrebonne also took the view that this road was not a part of the Pacific Railway, but that hon. gentleman looked at the matter from a party standpoint, and he could easily understand his position. On that point he would remind the House that in 1872 the Government of that day decided unequivocally that the road should continue to Esquimault, and that the continuation should be considered a part and parcel of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was proved by the report of the Chief Engineer, on which the Order in Council was based of the 7th June, 1873. They did more than that. They ordered their Engineer to commence the survey and to break ground. Moreover, taking the whole line from Mattawan to the Pacific it was necessary to take a reasonable view as to the course the road should take, and on reaching the Pacific coast it would be the height of folly to say that the road shall end on the top of a mountain simply because it was the Pacific coast—that it should end in other words at a harbour where there was no anchorage and which was not approachable. The true meaning of the Act was that the Canadian Pacific Railway should end at such a part on the Pacific as would best promote the shipping and commercial interest of the Dominion, and he would take this occasion to repeat that we had only one port on the Pacific coast where vessels might approach night and day at all seasons and find a safe harbor, and that place was Esquimault. That fact could be established by Admiral RICHARDS, by the British navy, and by all nautical people whether of the National service or of the merchant marine. That being the case, it was special pleading, if not worse, on the part of any gentleman, to say that this country was only bound to build the road to the shores of the Pacific Ocean. It was a reasonable interpretation of the agreement to say that Canada was bound to extend the line to such a point as would enable her to compete successfully with the American railways. Before concluding, he would say that he was glad that the Government had agreed to commence this work, and although it was not to be built as a Dominion public work, yet the people of British Columbia would be glad to see the work going on, not merely in their own interests but in those of the Dominion. He believed that the Premier would best consult the interest of the Province as well as of the Dominion by building not only this road but the whole Pacific Railway as a Dominion public work instead of giving it out in large contracts to great corporations. If he had one objection more than another to make to what had already been done, it was that the Government had agreed to give the building of the Georgian Bay Branch to a company who would receive public money and public lands, and after the road was built would own it. Before sitting down he would again say that he hoped his hon. friend from South Bruce would lay before the House some evidence in support of his statement that this road from Nanaimo to Esquimault was a compensation for the relaxation of the terms of union with British Columbia.

Mr. BUNSTER said it surprised him to hear the comments of some members of the House upon this great national work that was the only thing that could make a nation of us. He denied that the people of British Columbia had ever agreed to a relaxation of the terms of union. When British Columbia entered into Confederation she did so upon the solemn pledge that the Canada Pacific Railway would be built within a certain time. Nevertheless, if the Dominion was not able to build the road within that time, she was not disposed to demand the pound of flesh, but were willing to extend the time. He objected to the disparaging way in which some hon. members had spoken of British Columbia, and claimed that that Province had now nearly 100,000 people within its borders; and if some of them were not white people they were a great deal better than the Chinese, and perhaps he might say that they were better than some people who were so fond of abusing their own country. As to British Columbia granting twenty miles of land on each side of this road he thought that was scarcely fair. He himself knew of one hundred acres on the line of that road being sold lately for $25,000. With the exception of a few merchants and perhaps a few others, he contended that the people of British Columbia were not in favor of accepting the new terms. What they wanted was that the whole terms should be carried out, though they were willing to extend the time in order that that might be done. They wished to see a great national highway built across this continent so that this country might be in a position to command the traffic of the East as our road would admit of a shorter passage between Europe and Asia, by six days and nine hours, as compared with the American roads. He regretted to see so much politics mixed up with the Canadian Pacific Railway; if there was less there would be fewer obstacles in the way. It was also to be regretted that some hon. gentlemen had seen fit to cast discredit upon British Columbia. If the people of that Province had not been loyal to the old flag they might have had a railway from the United States in return for their allegiance to that country, but they preferred to cast in their lot with the Dominion, and they looked to the Dominion to fulfil its obligations to them. He held that Canada was amply able to build the road, that fifty million acres of land and thirty million dollars would build it; and if there had been less haggling about terms and a sincere determination to prosecute the work with energy it might have been half built by this time, as was evident from the fact that the Americans in the midst of their war built their road over a more difficult territory than ours in three years and a half. If the interior of British Columbia was opened up by railway the people could send their produce to the European markets, as California was doing. He hoped this work would be prosecuted with vigor and that we would soon have a railway across the continent.

Mr. PALMER said this Bill involved questions of very great importance to the Dominion. He took the position that it was unsafe for the Government of this country to make any agreement or adopt any policy which involved the expenditure of large sums of public money without the sanction of Parliament. The hon. member for South Bruce said the reason why the Government should depart from that principle in this case was because they were trammelled by some arrangement made with British Columbia by the former Government, and that to enable Canada to keep faith it was necessary for them to enter into a new agreement. A practical difficulty rose from the fact that under the old agreement the railway had to be built within ten years; whereas under the new engagement entered into by this Government the time is extended to fifteen years. But that late arrangement had never received the sanction of Parliament. If the Government were not authorized to make such an agreement, then its terms could not be binding until they were sanctioned by Parliament, and the Government could not go forward until they were able to do so in a constitutional manner. He was an advocate of the policy of carrying out in its entirety the arrangements made with British Columbia for the construction of the railway in ten years, because that engagement was entered into at the time of union, and he believed if the Government had faithfully prosecuted work, the people of that Province would not have complained if it had not been completed at the end of the period allotted for its completion. It was very desirable that the utmost precautions should be taken to prevent the railway referred to in the Bill falling into the hands of private members; but under the Government proposal the Americans could obtain control of the road by purchasing a majority of the stock. He was in favor of an all rail route through Canadian territory, apart from an arrangement made with British Columbia because we had not only the shortest route by land from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but also the shortest water route. He was entirely opposed to building local lines, but favored the construction of a line from the easterly point to which private enterprise would carry the railroads to the Pacific, but he was entirely opposed to any proposition made in lieu of the original agreement with British Columbia.

Mr. WALLACE said he was intended to the Government policy by which it was contemplated to build a road from Esquimalt to Nanimo under the Bill proposed. If the railway were to be built at all, it ought to be constructed and owned by the Government of the country, inasmuch as our commercial highways ought not to be controlled by private individuals. He was opposed, moreover, to locking up in the hands of stockholders large portions of the public lands of the Dominion. It was true that those companies would act as good emigrant agents up to a certain period, but there would come a time when the interests of the company would be antagonistic to the interests of the country, because land would be held for speculative purposes, whereas it was to the interest of Canada that land should be occupied and settled. It had always been contended by the hon. gentlemen now sitting on the Treasury Benches that it was contrary to correct principles to give out contracts for building railways until the necessary surveys had been completed. This was one of the charges brought against the late Government—that they had entered into contracts for the building of the Pacific Railway without knowing where the railway was going to run, or what it would cost. But the hon. members themselves were now violating the principle for which they had contended when in opposition, because both in the case of the railway provided for by the Bill, and also in that of the Georgian Bay Branch, there had been no proper surveys carried out. In the latter case one or two surveyors had walked over the line, but they could not tell within several miles where the road would be located. He was an advocate for constructing the Pacific Railway from ocean to ocean, as a work in the interest of the country; but he was entirely opposed to it if it was to be built, owned and controlled by a company, because that was locking up lands of sufficient magnitude to comprise kingdoms. Already, fault was found on the ground that the Canada Central Company would exercise a land monopoly, but that would be as nothing compared with the monopoly that would be created in the Pacific Railway Company. He moved in amendment, seconded by Mr. STEVENSON—"That this Bill be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day three months."

The House went into Committee of the Whole, Mr. YOUNG in the chair.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said although this road from Esquimault to Nainimo was outside the obligations entered into by the late Government with British Columbia, he regarded it as an effort made in good faith to arrange for the redemption, as far as possible, of pledges made with British Columbia, and such being the case he felt obliged to give what support he could toward carrying out those arrangements. He was driven to the conclusion that no surveys were made on this line, and that the Government were entirely in the dark at this moment as to the information which on it was absolutely necessary that contracts should be based. The Government would be obliged to supply the means for building this road—means which the hon. member for South Bruce would find he had altogether under-rated. The Bill provides that the parties obtaining the contract should have a subsidy of land of fair average quality, along the line of the Pacific Railway or in some other part of the Dominion where the Government owned public lands. It would be seen at a glance that it was not the intention of the Government to give lands on Vancouver Island, because the Esquimault and Nanaimo Railroad was not a part of the Pacific Railroad.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE explained that the Government believing that the lands between Nanaimo and Esquimault were mostly valuable mineral lands, were not willing to give 20,000 acres of them to a contractor. They had therefore, taken power to give lands wherever they pleased along the line of the Pacific Railway or elsewhere. This clause was prepared explicitly to prevent speculators getting hold of most valuable mineral lands under the guise of contractors. With reference to the surveys, there had been a preliminary survey, that is, engineers had gone along the coast to ascertain the general lie of the land and the points at which water could easily be touched. He proposed within a few days to have a trial survey made, which would be completed by midsummer when steps would immediately be taken to put the line under contract.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the Government were absolutely bound to construc this line immediately. Every contractor knew that, and also knew it would cost four times as much to do the work in British Columbia than it would in any other part of the Dominion. This being the case the cost of building this line of 65 miles would be enormous and would be much greater if the contracts should be let without the Government being in a position to furnish the contractors with information as to the nature of the country on the route.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — We will be.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER contended that it was impossible in the present state of information in regard to the route, to furnish the necessary information as to the amount of work required to be done and which the contractor must be furnished with in order to get the contract taken at the lowest rate and the least risk.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—If it will be impossible then it will not be let. I pledge myself to the House that until it is definitely known the contract will not be let.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman had passed a Bill through Parliament last session giving the Government the same power they asked for in this Bill, and the Government let the contract without the consent of Parliament and without having a survey of the line. With such facts before the House and with the information that the survey could not be completed before midsummer there was no necessity for taking this power asked for. The engagement with the Imperial Government and British Columbia would be honorably and fairly redeemed to the letter, as well as in the spirit if the Government would provide for letting contracts subject to the approval of Parliament, and for this reason, the very moment the location of the road was commenced the construction was also begun. It was so in the case of the Intercolonial Railway. The late Government regarded the work of construction as commenced when they proceeded to locate the line. He therefore moved in amendment to the 8th sub-section of the 9th clause that the following words be added :—"Provided always that any such contract shall have the previous approval of Parliament."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he could assent to nothing that would place the Government in such a position as would enable either British Columbia or the Imperial Government to impugn their good faith, and the amendment would have that effect, and could only have that effect. It was quite open to Parliament to reject the arrangement made, and those who voted against the second reading of the Bill objected to that arrangement. The second reading having been carried, he asked the House to place the Government in a position to keep good faith with British Columbia and the Imperial Government.

Mr. PLUMB said he did not find such great sensitiveness on the part of the Government in keeping good faith on other occasions. He wished to know the meaning of the clause providing for the payment of four per cent. interest for 25 years on the "remainder of the contract." Would the Minister of Public Works give the House an idea of what the "remainder of the contract" would amount to?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We will have an idea when the tenders are received.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said his estimate was purely conjectural. He concluded that $10,000 and 20,000 acres per mile, with a guarantee of four per cent. on $15,000 per mile (which upon the calculation made with reference to the Georgian Bay Branch would amount to $8,000 per mile) would make $38,000 per mile, giving $2,500,000 as the cost of the road. If it would cost a great deal more it would only add to his objection.

Mr. DE COSMOS said before coming here he had crossed to Washington Territory and travelled with General SPRAGGE over 105 miles of the road which terminated at Puget Sound. The General informed him that the cost of that road, which ran through a country similar to that through which the railroad from Esquimault to Nanaimo was to be constructed, did not exceed $44,000 per mile in greenbacks, and they worked under great disadvantage. The line in South Oregon, some 200 miles in length, he was informed, cost only some $18,000 for roadway, rolling stock and stations, but then a large portion of it ran through a prairie country along the banks of rivers. He mentioned these facts to show that railways on the Pacific did not cost so much as was stated by the hon. member for Cumberland. The line could be built for $33,000 per mile. If the survey could be completed by midsummer, there was no reason why the construction of the road should not be commenced this year. If the amendment of the hon. member for Cumberland were adopted the road would not be commenced for a year longer. He (Mr. DE COSMOS) believed it was sufficient for the Government of this country to get Parliamentary sanction for the general policy and then it was the duty of this House to give a liberal and generous support to the Government carrying out that policy.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he understood that contractors would be asked to tender for this road. Suppose there should be a combination of contractors and they should say we will not accept less than four per cent. on $100,000 per mile, would the Government refuse to let the contracts?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Certainly.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said if the Government should take power to refuse letting the contracts, it could be regarded as a breach of faith. There was no way of getting over it. The hon. Premier contended that if Parliament should refuse it would be a breach of faith, but it would not be a breach of faith if the Government refused. The consequence of the hon. gentleman's statement was this—he was obliged, under the penalty of committing a breach of faith both with the Imperial Government and with British Columbia, to accept the lowest tender, no matter what ground it might cover. The statement that it was a breach of faith was a fallacy. It was quite clear that it could not be a breach of faith to refuse to let a contract which was an improbable one, a collusive one, or an imprudent one for the country to enter into, There could be no reason why Parliament should not have control over the whole of these contracts. It was the hon. gentleman's own principle offered by himself on former occasions.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman's words had carried him a little further no doubt, than he had intended to go. If he had read the Bill he would not probably have spoken as he did. The Government took power in the Bill to work the road themselves if they found it more advantageous in the public interest to do so. If they found that such a combination as suggested—which he did not think at all probable—would occur, they had power to proceed with the execution of the work themselves. That, he apprehended, would be keeping good faith. He knew that the hon. gentleman had made his remarks without looking at that section of the Bill, and if he had done so he would have saved himself a somewhat awkward speech. The hon. gentleman and his late colleague voted for the second reading of the Bill as they were bound to do. The fact was that the extraordinary and imprudent arrangement made by the late Government with British Columbia, was one that he (Mr. MACKENZIE) had opposed as long as it was possible to oppose it. When he assumed the leadership of the Government he had to deal with this subject. He had to allay feelings of discontent and inquietude in that Province, and to do what he could to restore that feeling between the Province and the rest of the Dominion which was essential to the continuation of the Union. Finding themselves in that position, the Government had to make the best arrangement possible under the circumstances. They did their best to economize the public funds, and at the same time to give reasonable satisfaction to those with a home the late Administration had made a special agreement. But supposing that the hon. gentleman's argument was conclusive, which it was not, how would it apply to those who made a bargain to build the entire road in ten years? Supposing such a combination were formed under that bargain, how could faith have been kept? Of course, we know it was never intended to keep faith, because that was impossible, and every member of the then Administration and Parliament knew it was impossible to keep faith. He did not propose to do anything but what he believed they could do, and he had not proposed to do anything but what he believed to be within the preamble of the Bill of last session, which was to the effect that the taxation of the people as it was when the original bargain was made should not be increased. It would be found that he so informed the Imperial Government in the last despatch sent on this subject. Believing that they would be able to keep their obligation with the public not to increase the taxation, and at the same time restore harmony between British Columbia and the rest of the Dominion, they had adopted the course they did, and they had introduced this Bill as an evidance that they were determined to proceed as rapidly as possible with the fulfilment of this part of their obligation. It might be that in some details the Bill might be improved, and if this could be shown he would willingly make any modification, but he could not consent to change the principle of the measure.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman had given no answer to the point he had raised, namely, that the location of the road was a commencement of the work; and that therefore in order to keep good faith it was only necessary to proceed with the location of the line before next session.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE wished to ask one question—would the right hon. leader of the Opposition say that the commencing of a survey was the commencement of the construction of the road, within the terms of the agreement with British Columbia of 1872. He was perfectly aware that the hon. gentleman had sent a telegram something to that effect, but it was well known that the Government of British Columbia refused to recognize that as a commencement of the road. Now he would like to get the legal opinion—not the Parliamentary opinion—of the hon. gentleman upon the point as to whether the beginning of a survey was the commencement of the construction of the line.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he had no doubt that a location survey was as much a commencement of the construction of the railway as the actual breaking of the ground; but he would not consider that preliminary surveys were the commencement of construction.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that the hon. gentleman when he was leader of the Government had applied to have the land on Vancouver Island set apart for the railway upon the ground that the survey had commenced. The Local Government refused the application, and the gentleman made no further attempt to get the law carried out which he was bound to do if it were true that the beginning of a survey was legally the beginning of the construction of the line.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said the circumstances were these:—The Government were informed that the lands of the Island were eagerly sought after by speculators and were afraid that the lands for the railway would be handed over to other parties or pre-empted; and they therefore applied for the conveyance of these lands to them by British Columbia. The answer of the British Columbia Government was that they would not convey them but would reserve them.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They were bound to reserve them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Only for two years. They claimed that the work was not commenced until the actual work of construction was begun, and they agreed, if the Government of Canada were afraid that at the end of two years the land would be gone, to reserve it. That was all the Government wished and, therefore, they agreed to that arrangement.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said that he hoped that the First Minister having taken the legal opinion of the gentlemen of his own selection, he would now abide by that opinion. He was glad to have that point disposed of, because it was important. He was disposed to do anything towards assisting the First Minister to carry out in good faith the engagement of this country. But apart from all that he contended that the actual progress of the work would be advanced by the Government spending the whole of the ensuing season in procuring an exhaustive survey of the line. No man, who had the slightest knowledge of Railway construction, would deny that the utmost care should be taken in the location of the line, and even after all the care that could be bestowed upon it, it was frequently found that very large sums of money could be saved by making changes in the location as the road progressed. He held that if this plan was adopted no time would be lost. In the first place, if the Government carried out their own plan, tenders would have to be asked for. Now, as this work was 3,000 miles away from headquarters, and from the places where most of the large contractors live, it would be necessary that the Government should be in a position to lay before the parties who desired to tender the fullest information respecting the work that would be required of them. Even in the case of a railway that was at our doors, this was necessrry; but it was far more necessary in the case of a work at such a great distance away. The Government were, therefore, bound in the public interests to obtain the fullest information about the work before they asked for tenders.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They intend to so.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—Then every person familiar with railway construction must know that in view of the fact only an exploratory survey of this line has yet been made it will take the whole of next season to obtain the information which it was necessary to have in order that contracts could be let at the lowest possible rates. It was quite true that this Bill contained a clause that the work might be undertaken by the Government, but if this were done there would be even a greater necessity for the Government to obtain very full information before they commenced the construction of the road. Before he sat down he would remind the hon. gentleman from British Columbia that there was no inconsistency in this matter. The contract in this case was different from those to which the Government did not require the assent of Parliament. The original contract was one with regard to which the means which the company were asked to give were distinctly specified by Act of Parliament. There was therefore no inconsistency in requiring that the contract in this case, the amount of it being as yet entirely unknown, should be submitted to Parliament.

Mr. BUNSTER said he had been all over the country through which this road would pass. The gradients were easy, the road would run from one good harbor to another and would have a traffic of three hundred thousand tons of coal per annum, which of itself would be sufficient to cover the working expenses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said the Premier had stated he expected to be in a position to ask for tenders by midsummer. That was very early, but supposing that were the case, and that after tenders were received they were such that the Government could not accept. The Government would then have to proceed with the work themselves, but before doing so they must under the Bill submit it to public competition. He supposed at least six weeks would be given for the receiving of tenders in the first instance, then more time would have to be given for offering the work to public competition and the time for the meeting of Parliament again would be round before very little could be done. Therefore no time would be lost if Government would during the recess obtain complete surveys and have the contract ready for submission to Parliament at its next session. If this proposition was not accepted the hon. gentleman would find from bitter experience that he had assumed a responsibility which he would regret.

Mr. DE COSMOS said it had been stated that the work of construction could only be carried on for three months in the year. That was entirely incorrect as the work could go on for the whole year.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said that was an additional reason why Parliament should be allowed the opportunity of passing upon the contract because immediately after the contract was confirmed the parties could go to work.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the leader of the Opposition had assumed that they did not intend to have a complete survey. They did intend to have a complete survey; but if contrary to the opinion of the engineers it could not be completed in time to have the work begun before the meeting of Parliament he would, as he had done with the Georgian Bay Branch give Parliament an opportunity of pronouncing upon the contract. But if on the other hand they were obliged to lay on their oars and do nothing, waiting for the meeting of Parliament, he knew what the cry would be and it would come from more than one quarter.

The amendment of hon. Mr. TUPPER was then put and declared lost.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER called attention to the absence of a clause which was contained in the Georgian Bay contract, which provided that the railway would be forfeited to the Government if the parties constructing it failed to work it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That will be put in the contract.

The various sections of the Bill were adopted with slight alterations and the Committee rose and reported the Bill with the amendments, which were read the first and the second time.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to add the following words to the 8th sub-section of the third clause, "provided always that any such contract shall have the previous approval of Parliament."

A division was taken on the amendment with the following result:—

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER stated that it had been currently reported that the hon. President of the Council had stated that at the time of the Northumberland election, when Mr. COCKBURN was SPEAKER of the House, he had declared it to be six o'clock when it was only half-past five o'clock, at the suggestion of the hon. member for Kingston.

Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON said he was not surprised that gentlemen without Parliamentary experience had misunderstood the statement, but hon. members would have no difficulty in understanding that he meant that the SPEAKER left the chair before six o'clock because he was asked to do so, and because the Government wished time to consider certain matters.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he was glad the matter had been brought forward because he never asked the late SPEAKER to declare it six o'clock when that hour had not arrived.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the only point he wished to raise was whether the hon. President of the Council wished to reflect on the impartiality of the late SPEAKER, for he believed the hon. gentleman had no such intention.

THE SUPREME COURTS.

On motion of the hon. Mr. FOURNIER, the House went into Committee on the Superior Court Bill, Mr. CASGRAIN in the chair.

The Bill was reported with amendments, which were read and concurred in.

PRIVATE AND LOCAL BILLS.

The following Bills passed through committee, were read a third time and passed:—

To provide for the amalgamation of the Niagara District Bank with the Imperial Bank of Canada (from the Senate).

To incorporate "The Canada Land Investment Guarantee Company (limited)."

To incorporate the Pictou Iron and Coal Company.

To incorporate the Canadian Gas Lighting Company (from the Senate).

To incorporate a company to construct, own and operate a railway from Red River, in the Province of Manitoba, to a point in British Columbia, on the Pacific Ocean.

To legalize and confirm certain agreements made between the Niagara Falls International Bridge Company, the Niagara Falls Suspension Bridge Company, and the Great Western Railway Company.

To authorize the Canada Southern Railway Company to acquire the Erie and Niagara Railway, and for other purposes.

The amendments made by the Senate to the following Bills were concurred in:—

Act relating to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company.

Act to incorporate the Lower Ottawa Boom Company.

Act to incorporate the Industrial Life Insurance Company."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House. The House adjourned at 1.20.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, March 30th, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WRIGHT (Ottawa) introduced a Bill to incorporate the Canadian Lumber and Timber Association.

APPOINTMENT OF HARBOR MASTERS.

On motion of Hon. Mr. SMITH the House in committee resumed consideration of Bill to amend the Act 37 Vic., Cap. 34, appointing harbor masters; Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury) in the chair.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he had considered the suggestion of the hon. member for Chateauguay made yesterday, and would agree to the insertion of a clause giving the GOVERNOR GENERAL in Council power to appoint harbor masters at ports on the Lower St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said the Bill provided that a ship should not have to pay the fees more than twice a year, no matter at how many ports or how often it called. Take the Gulf Ports' ships for instance. They called at eight ports every trip. He wished to know if they paid at any two of these ports they would have to pay again.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said they would only have to pay twice, and they might pay both times at one port.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Have they their choice of where they will pay.

Hon. Mr. SMITH—They pay where they first call.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Had not my hon. friend better put that in the Bill so as to prevent any difficulty?

The Bill was amended so as to provide that a ship shall pay the fees at the first and second port it calls at.

The committee rose and reported the Bill with amendments, which were read a first and second time, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

SUPREME COURT.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved the third reading of the Bill to establish a Supreme Court and Court of Exchequer for the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. WHITE moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be read the third time this day six months. His reasons for making this motion were, in the first place there was no petitition from any of the Provinces asking for this Bill; in the second place when this Government came into power they thought it necessary to tax the people of this country to the extent of $3,000,000 in order to meet the requirements of the Dominion; and, in the third place, all the public money of this country was more required for public works than for a Supreme Court. During the time the late Government was in power, the Ministerialist representatives from Quebec declared that they would not support the Ministry in this measure. In Ontario, as the hon. member for Leeds had remarked, there were enough courts to meet the requirements of the people without establishing another court which would cost this country $100,000 a year. Petitition after petition had been presented in this House asking that the canals be deepened to 14 feet. Why not apply this money in that way? This House should not forget that the country was pledged to build the Pacific Railroad, and that the Premier was bringing in Bills to construct branches of that road. Some of the Ministerial journals claimed credit for the Government because they had dismissed public officials and saved $30,000 to the country, but they omitted to mention that the same Government was imposing an unneceessary burden of $100,000 per annum on the people. For these reasons he submitted his motion.

Mr. JONES (Leeds), in seconding the motion, said he did not look upon this Bill as a party measure because it was a bantling of the old Government which the present Ministry had adopted. As he had remarked on a former occasion, our judiciary was in a very good state; justice was at every man's door, and he did not approve of expending $100,000 for something that the country did not need.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he was not in the House when this Bill was under discussion. He merely rose now to say that while not approving of some features of the Bill, its general principles met his approval and would receive his support.

The House divided on the amendment, with the following result: yeas, 38; nays, 121.

The amendment was therefore declared lost.

Mr. OUIMET moved, seconded by Mr. MOUSSEAU, That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend it so as to exclude from the appellate jurisdiction given to the Supreme Court of Canada all cases involving questions relating to property and civil rights and civil procedure.

Mr. TASCHEREAU moved in amendment to the amendment, seconded by Mr. SCATCHARD, That all the words after "House" be struck out and the following substituted: to amend the same by striking out all provisions conferring upon the proposed Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction in suits arising under Provincial law and within the Legislative jurisdiction of the Provinces, so as to make the proposed Supreme Court a General Court of Appeal for Canada solely.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) said it appeared to him somewhat extraordinary that when they were endeavoring to establish a Court of ultimate appeal they should find arrayed against it the legal talent of the Province of Quebec. As an humble member of the profession, he was at a loss to understand how any lawyer in the Province of Quebec could have more confidence in the ultimate appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council than to a court constituted as this would be. He hoped the Bill would pass in its present shape; and he could only express his astonishment that any Quebec lawyer would seek to oppose it.

Mr. OMIMET said that the amendment to the amendment covered the same ground as his motion, and, as it was more explicit, he had no objection to accept it. The opponents of this Bill had never said that they had more confidence in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council than they would have in this proposed Supreme Court. On the contrary, for himself, he would be very glad to have the appeal to the Privy Council abolished. But that was not the question now before the House. Certainly this Bill did not propose to abolish that appeal. If the hon. member for Pontiac wished to get rid of that appeal, he should have moved an amendment in that direction. For the reasons which he had expressed the other day, he would support the amendment now before the House. If they could not get justice from the Provincial Courts of Quebec, they certainly would not get justice from this Supreme Court. Very probably two of the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench would be appointed to the Supreme Court, and the result, practically, would be that there would be an appeal from five Judges to two. It was quite true that the other Judges of the Supreme Court might study up the civil law of Lower Canada; but it was a generally admitted principle that a Judge should be familiar with the practice of the law. That principle was embodied in all our Acts relating to the appointment of Judges, including the Bill now before the House. That Bill provided that no one should be appointed a Judge of this Supreme Court excepting a lawyer of ten years practice, or a Judge of one of the Superior Courts, thereby admitting the principle that a Judge should be familiar with the practice of the law which he is to administer.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment which was rejected on the following vote :—Yeas, 40 ; Nays, 118.

The amendment was declared lost on the same division.

Mr. LAFLAMME moved that this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole to be amended by adding the following words after the word "court" on the 18th line of the fourth section of the said Bill :—"Two of whom at least shall be taken from the Judges of the Superior Court or Court of Queen's Bench, or from amongst the Barristers or Advocates of the Province of Quebec." He said this motion was merely to carry out the idea which he had expressed the other night—that he believed under the peculiar circumstances in which the Province of Quebec was situated, and its special system of laws, of which the Judges from the other Provinces who might be selected for the composition of this court would be entirely ignorant—it was essential in order to arrive at a good and sound interpretation of the laws of that Province, that two of these Judges, at least, should be selected from the bar of Lower Canada. He believed there was no Province in the Dominion which stood in this peculiar position. If their laws had been the same as those of the other Provinces, certainly no one in Quebec would have pretended to demand this representation, but he believed a sense of fair play and of justice would commend this amendment under the circumstanees to the House. He might refer to the fact that it was generally remarked amongst the barristers in London at the time cases from the Province of Quebec were argued that it was essential since the English Judges could not render justice in cases arising in Lower Canada that HER MAJESTY should add to the Privy Council one Judge from Lower Canada who understood the laws of that Province, consequently he believed and in fact was perfectly satisfied that no member in this House, and no man in the country, would doubt it, that Judges selected from the bar of the Province of Quebec would be as competent to administer justice as those selected from the bar of any other Province. It struck him that as their training and education was more in the sense of equity than of com mon law jurisdiction their appointment would be no disadvantage, but rather an advantage to this court. He believed this amendment, owing to the peculiar position in which Quebec stood would meet with no objection from any hon. member in this House.

Mr. McKAY WRIGHT did not approve of any sectionalism whatsoever in this Bill. Whilst he admitted the peculiarities in the laws of the Province of Quebec as distinguished from the apparent similarity which the hon. member supposed existed in the laws of the other Provinces, he thought it would be unadvisable to adopt this amendment. Under the Act it was provided that the Judges of Quebec should always be taken from the Bar of that Province. In the Constitution of the Supreme Court the Government could not do otherwise than recognize the rights guaranteed to Quebec by the Constitution, and, therefore, he saw no reasen why such a proposition as that submitted should not be embodied in the Bill. He was opposed to sectionalism, but in an important measure of that kind the Government would give to Quebec the security that its laws should be respected in the Supreme Court as well as in the Provincial Courts. No doubt the court would be so constituted that the interests of the Province of Quebec would be guarded, or as a resident of that Province, he protested against any sectional legislation in respect to the Constitution of the Court in favor of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER thought there was no difficulty in meeting the proposition of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. No administration would undertake to put the law in force without giving due regard to the special circumstances of the Province of Quebec, for every one knew the great difference that exists between its laws and those of the other Provinces. The rights of Quebec were recognised in the Constitutional Act, which also contained a provision that the Judges for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should be taken from the Bar of those Provinces until an assimilation of those laws with the laws of Ontario had taken place.

Mr. OUIMET said the admission of the Minister of Justice was the strongest argument that could be advanced in favor of the proposition he (Mr. OUIMET) had made the other night. If the argument of the Minister of Justice was sound that under the 90th section of the Constitution which provided that the Judges of the Quebec Courts must be taken from the Bar of that Province, there must be two Judges of this Supreme Court from that Province, then upon the same argument this Court was either unconstitutional or it should be so constituted that all the cases from Quebec should be tried by Quebec Judges.

Mr. PALMER said he was quite willing to admit that two of the Judges of the Supreme Court should be taken from Quebec, but he would be sorry to see that made a part of the Act. If Quebec was not content to be governed in this matter at any particular time there was nothing in the Act to prevent all the Judges being taken from that Province. If it was necessary to make a provision in the Act with the end indicated, he would suggest that it be made in such a way that only two Judges could be appointed from Quebec. If we must have this sectional legislation, we should try to have it in such a way as not to do injustice to the other Provinces.

Mr. MILLS said he deprecated sectionalism as much as any hon. gentleman; but it seemed to him that it was no indication of sectionalism to ask that Quebec should have some members of the Supreme Court who would be acquainted with its laws. If the Supreme Court Bill had not been extended, but had been confined to cases arising out of Canadian Laws only, there would be no necessity for such a provision as the one proposed, but, when it was proposed to give this Court jurisdiction over all local laws, and as Quebec had an entirely different system of jurisprudence from the other Provinces, it was only reasonable that she should have security that a portion of the Court would understand the system of law which it would be called upon to administer. That remark did not apply to the other Provinces, because they had all the same system of jurisprudence.

Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he quite agreed with the statement that considering the duties that were thrown upon this court, and the fact that Quebec had a different system of jurisprudence from the other Provinces, that at least two of the Judges should be taken from Quebec. The Minister of Justice was quite right in stating that no Government could ignore that fact. The only question was whether it would be introduced into the Bill or not. This was one of the many instances of the very great import- of a Bill having several stages to pass through. The hon. the Minister of Justice had introduced this Bill without this provision—he had passed it through the second reading without adopting it, and even in Committee of the Whole he was still unconvinced of its necessity; and when the member for Jacques Cartier proposed it the hon. the Minister of Justice said it was quite inadmissable. At the last moment, however, as he had a right to do, he changed his mind and agreed to the proposition. The only possible objection that could be raised to it was that it might give rise to claims being made by the Bars of the other Provinces, to be secured in the same way. However, in the other Provinces they had the same system of jurisprudence, and there was not the same necessity for such a provision in respect to them; therefore, unless it would be to avoid exciting sensitiveness in the other Provinces, he saw no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MASSON said the amendment of the member for Jacques Cartier and the speech of the Minister of Justice proved that the country was not ready for this court. The court could not have the confidence of the country unless its members were conversant with the laws of all the Provinces. Now, under the circumstances it was impossible to establish a court for the whole Dominion, which should have jurisdiction over local laws in which the Province of Quebec could be properly protected. The Government admitted that in admitting that two of the Judges should be from the Province of Quebec. Why should the Province of Quebec have more right than the other Provinces to have two of its Judges in this court? It was because the other Judges, although very able men, would not be so familiar with the Quebec laws as to be able to do justice to Quebec litigants. If they were able to do so why should provision be made that two of the Judges must come from Quebec? The Minister of Justice in admitting that two of the Judges must come from Quebec admitted that the other Judges would be incompetent to properly administer the Quebec law. What would be the result? The two Judges from Quebec would have to adjudicate alone upon Quebec cases, for if the other judges could adjudicate upon cases from that Province, this amendment was unnecessary. He had objected to the Bill as a whole, but as the majority of the House had agreed to adopt it, he was willing to accept this amendment so that the court would at least have two Judges that knew something of the law of Lower Canada.

M. BARTHE :—Je n'en ai qu'un mot à dire. Toute la députation de notre Province devrait voter pour la motion faite par le député de Jacques Cartier. Car elle est nécessaire pour la conservation de nos lois et de nos institutions, et pour l'autonomie de notre Province. Les autres provinces n'ont pas la même raison d'exiger des garanties de cette nature, parce qu'elles auront des hommes éminents, connaissant bien leurs lois et qui sauront les protéger devant ce tribunal. Tandis que nous, de la Province de Québec, régis par des lois toutes particulières et que nous chérissons et tenons à conserver, il est de toute justice que nous ayions deux juges de notre province dans la Cour Suprême. C'est pourquoi je voterai pour l'amendement du député de Jacques Cartier avec l'espoir que toute la députation de la Province de Québec votera dans le même sens.

Mr. CURRIER said if the hon. member would carry out his idea to its logical conclusion, he would provide that the decisions of this court, in cases coming from Quebec, should be decided solely by the two Judges from that Province. As he (Mr. CURRIER) did no t think this would be either right or reasonable, he would oppose the amendment.

The motion was carried on a division and the amendmen , having been made in Committee, was concurred in.

Mr. PALMER said the features of this Bill had been very considerably altered in Committee, in respect to the jurisdiction given to this court. It would have no original jurisdiction as at first contemplated in the matters provided for in the sections from 55 to 70. The work being thus diminished, the salaries should also be decreased to the amounts specified in the Bill introduced by the late Government, viz, $7,000 for the Chief Justice and $6,000 for each of the Puisne Judges. The Judges of this court would, no doubt, be taken from the benches of the Provinces. Under the superannuation Act they would be allowed, on retiring, if they had served for any length of time, about two-thirds of the amount of the salaries. The result of this would be to impose a very large charge on the country. This House should remember that at this session a large number of new offices had been created under the Insolvency Act, the Insurance Bill, and the North-West measure. Care should therefore be exercised in imposing these large burdens on the people. He believed in paying liberally for services rendered, but could not approve of extravagence. He therefore moved that this Bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions so to amend the 7th section as to provide that the salaries of the Chief Justice and the Puisne Judges of the Supreme Court shall be $7,000 per year for such Chief Justice and $6,000 for each Puisne Judge of said court, instead of $8,000 and $7,000 respectively.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said no jurisdiction had been cut off by the amendments, but on the contrary jurisdiction had been added. One amendment empowered the GOVERNOR in Council to refer to the Judges private Bills for examination. Then again the number of cases would be very considerably increased by the reduction of the amount for which an appeal could be taken, from $1,000 to $500. As to the amount of salary, it was deemed best to secure the most competent men for this court, and a salary about equal to that which the Chief Justice of Ontario received was to be paid to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The former received from the Dominion Government $6,000, from the Ontario Government $1,000, and for the trial of controverted election cases at least $500. There was no reason to complain of the amount of salaries to be paid to these Judges.

The House divided on the amendment with the following result :—

Jodoin,

Mr. IRVING said that a few days ago he expressed his views to the House in respect to the Privy Council hearing appeals from Provincial Courts, and he was now prepared to submit an amendment on the subject. By the Imperial Act of 1867 power was given to create a General Court of Appeal, the effect of which would be to enable the Dominion to deprive the Provinces of their right of appeal except to that court in the first instance. He moved, seconded by Mr. LAFLAMME :—

" That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House with instruction to insert in the Bill, in the 40th Section, the following words :—

' No error or appeal shall be brought from any judgment or order of any Court of any of the Provinces, subsequent to the commencement of the said Act, to HER MAJESTY in Council, but every decree and order of all Courts of final resort within the several Provinces, in respect of any subject matter or proceeding wherein appeal now lies from any such Courts to HER MAJESTY in Council, shall and may be appealed to the Supreme Court.' "

The amendment was lost on division.

Mr. BUNSTER said that there should be, in the Supreme Court, a Judge from British Columbia, where there was excellent legal talent. It was desirable not only in the interests of the Pacific Province, but also of the Dominion that such a Judge should be appointed, inasmuch as the Judges of the other Provinces knew little about the management of Indian lands or of mining affairs. He hoped that this concession would be made and justice done to British Columbia, inasmuch as injustice had been done to it in many other matters. He moved, therefore, seconded by Mr. CUNNINGHAM " That this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of inserting a provision that at least one of the Judges of the Court shall be selected from the bench or bar in British Columbia. "

The amendment was lost on division.

Mr. IRVING said that some charges had been made last night on the Bill when in committee to which he was entirely opposed. The 16th Clause was made to read, " That issues of fact in cases arising under the 63rd section shall be tried by the Judge without a jury." On turning to the 63rd section he found that all our matters of law relating to revenue were included under that heading. So extraordinary a proceeding had never before been attempted to be enacted by any British legislation, and that so soon as the country awakened to the sense of the danger involved if the Judges were allowed to decide on matters of fact in important cases of that character, the law would be strongly opposed. There was another point in the 69th clause which was very objectionable, and which provided that in the trial of issues of fact, arising out of cases under the 64th section, a writ shall be directed to the Sheriff commanding him to summon and empanel a jury. He proposed that the Act should be so amended as to require the Sheriff, not to summon or select a jury of his own motion, but that he should be compelled to act according to the laws of the Province in which he had jurisdiction, the object of which was to prevent the Sheriff selecting a packed jury. Questions would be tried in which the Crown would be plaintiff, and important interests would be involved, and yet, under the Act, they were to be disposed of by a single Judge. Nothing contrary to British legislation could be attempted to be passed by Parliament. He moved that the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole to reconsider the 68th and 69th sections with instructions to strike out the enactment which provides that issues of fact in cases arising under the 63rd section of the Bill shall be tried by the Judge without a jury and to insert a provision for the summoning of jurors by the Sheriff or Coroner according to the laws of the Province in which the Sheriff and Coroner are officers.

AFTER RECESS,

Right hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he hoped the amendment of the hon. member for Hamilton would not be entertained. This clause applied to revenue cases, and it must be obvious that a Judge sitting between the Crown and a person charged with a breach of the revenue laws was a much better tribunal than a jury. If a case of that kind were referred to a jury it was nearly always decided against the Crown. The jury forgot that in doing so they decided against the country, against themselves, and against the revenue, and he was quite sure on every ground, that the only way to protect the public revenue, and the Crown, from unjust judgments, was to leave the decision of such cases to the Judges. He was quite satisfied it would be a very great mistake to adopt this amendment.

Mr. MOSS said the amendment consisted of two parts—one he thought was pernicious and the other unnecessary. He thought it would be extremely unfortunate if at the instance of the hon. member for Hamilton, or on the strength of any arguments he had advanced, that this House should make a change as was proposed. The hon. member for Kingston had shown from his great experience that in these cases the jury were not apt to do justice to the Crown. But the hon. member for Hamilton stood upon the palladium. He was struck with the outrage proposed to be put upon the liberties of the people by this legislation. The hon. member for Hamilton had declared that no such legislation had ever been heard of in the world. The hon. member forgot that it was the rule in Ontario to have the trial in all cases by the Judges without the intervention of a jury.

Mr. IRVING—By consent.

Mr. MOSS said the consent had nothing to do with it. In every case where an equitable issue was raised the law declared it should be determined by the Judge without the intervention of a jury, except in certain cases such as libel, where a Judge could direct that a case should be tried without the intervention of a jury. The hon. member for Hamilton evidently had not read the last Act on this subject. But there was an argument that had great weight on this point. He learnt from an hon. friend in Quebec that it would not answer their system at all if the trial were to take place before a jury. The people of the Province of Quebec were satisfied the trial should be before a Judge. They desired there should be no departure from the system which already prevailed in their Province. It was impossible to secure uniformity of procedure in this case, and he trusted the House would see the propriety of rejecting the motion, so far as it related to this branch. The other part of the motion was unnecessary. It provided that the Sheriffs should summon juries in accordance with the laws of the respective Provinces. The hon. member for Hamilton might have apprehensions that the juries would not be summoned according to law. He (Mr. Moss) had no such apprehensions, because this Act provided that all procedure was to be regulated by rules of practice to be settled by the Judges. Could any one doubt that when the Judges came to settle the rules, they would not do so in the wisest manner? He was satisfied to leave this matter to the Judges, and was certain the object would be attained by the adoption of this motion. He trusted the House would vote down the amendment.

Mr. SCATCHERD said there was certainly something very mysterious about this Supreme Court Bill. In the first place, it provided for salaries for the Judges higher than those of the Judges of any other courts. Now we had a new principle introduced into it, namely, that in cases where a man's goods were seized by a Custom House officer, he shall not have trial by jury. It appeared to him that if there ever was a case when a man should have the right of trial by jury, it was such a case. He was willing that it should be left to the option of the party whose goods were seized to say whether he should be tried by a jury or not. If he wished to leave the case to the Judge, then it could be done, but certainly, if he wished a jury, he should not be deprived of that right. He did not think the Crown would suffer any injustice if such cases were left, so far as issues of facts were concerned, to a jury of twelve men.

The House then divided upon the amendment, which was lost. Yeas 10, nays 123.

Lajoie,

Mr. Scatcherd.

Mr. IRVING moved, seconded by Mr. LAFLAMME, that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to insert the following section : "The judgment of the Supreme Court shall in all cases be final and conclusive, and no error or appeal shall be brought from any judgment or order of the Supreme Court to any Court of Appeal established by the Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, to which appeals or petitions to HER MATESTY in Council may be ordered to be heard, saving any right which HER MAJESTY may be graciously pleased to exercise as her royal prerogative."

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said he was willing to adopt this amendment.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD said this amendment was the first step towards the severance of the Dominion from the Mother Country. He might add that it almost, if not quite insured the disallowance of the Bill in England. The Minister of Justice by assenting to this amendment defeated his measure. He would find that within six months it would be thrown aside in disgrace.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the House would hardly submit to be menaced by the hon. member for Kingston. The rights of the Colonies had been sufficiently lost sight of by the hon. member while he was in power. The reason which the hon. member gave why the Colonial Minister in England would advise the disallowance of a measure conceived in the interests of the people of this country was a very strong reason for our ascertaining where we stood with regard to our local legislation. No man in this House would go further than he (Mr. HOLTON) would to maintain the proper constitutional connection between this Dominion and the Mother Country, but no man would go further in the assertion of the rights of British freemen on this floor. The hon. member for Kingston, true to his old Tory instincts—he figured occasionally as a Liberal when it suited his purpose—whenever a truly liberal measure was proposed threatened the House with the contumely of the Tory Ministry in England. He (Mr. HOLTON) had no fear that even the Conservative Ministry in England would pursue the course which the hon. gentleman had indicated.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD rose to reply to a remark which referred to him personally. The hon. member for Chateauguay asserted that he (Sir JOHN) had threatened the House. He had done nothing of the kind and the hon. gentleman knew very well how unjust such a charge was. He (Sir JOHN) had merely stated what he thought would be the inevitable consequences of adopting this amendment. If there was one thing which we should preserve more than another it was the right to appeal for final judgment to the foot of the Throne. This was a mere brutum fulmen and had no effect save to show disrespect to HER MAJESTY. The hon. member for Chateauguay was pleased in the most unparliamentary style to refer to him (Sir JOHN) as holding Tory principles. It was not very long ago since the sweet sound of the hon. gentleman's voice rang in his ears when that hon. gentleman said that the member for Kingston was not only a Liberal but an excessive Liberal, the least Conservative of men, a Communist, and an Agrarian. And now the hon. member held him (Sir JOHN) up as a Tory. He was not ashamed of being a Tory or a Conservative. It was an honest and respectable name, in the ascendaney on the other side of the water; and, thanks to the policy of the hon. gentleman it would soon be in the ascendency again in Canada.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON observed that the law in Quebec limited appeals to the Privy Council to cases of £500 and in Ontario to cases of £1,000, so that it appeared according to the argument of the hon. member for Kingston that the question of preserving the tie with the Mother Country was one of money. That was a poor tie, but the connection with the Mother Country rested upon something much stronger. We had received too many despatches, as if we were only children and did not know how to deal with our own affairs. There must be an end to that, though we were determined to maintain the connection. The appeal to the Privy Conncil afforded the rich man the means of oppressing the poor man and it should be abolished. Of course there would still remain the appeal for any amount by way of address to HER MAJESTY, and he did not wish to disturb that, as that was the true tie between us and the Mother Country.

Mr. MILLS said the argument of the hon. member for Kingston was somewhat surprising because if it was worth anything it was good against the Bill. The hon. gentleman supported this Bill which would prevent a large number of appeals going to the Privy Council that are now taken there. He was therefore according to his own argument seeking to weaken the connection between this country and Great Britain.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK considered the amendment most objectionable and, if adopted, it would very seriously impair the usefulness of this court. This amendment would prohibit appeals to the Privy Council from the Supreme Court, but permitted them from the Provincial Courts. The result would be that appeals would be taken direct from the Provincial Courts to the Privy Council, and the Supreme Courts would be passed by. For this reason and also for the reason that it would tend to weaken the tie between this country and England, he would vote against the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG hoped the House would not be diverted from the merits of the amendment by these references to the weakening of the tie that binds us to Great Britain. The reason why he would support the amendment was that he believed that our own Judges were in a better position to administer justice to our people than men three thousand miles away. The appeal to England had been used again and again by wealthy corporations and individuals to prevent others who were less favoured from getting justice. He hoped the House would not be led away by the cuckoo cry that this amendment would weaken our connection with the Mother Country.

Mr. CARON said that, in view of the position of Quebec and the manner in which this court was to be organized—in view of the fact that cases would be decided by it that had been decided by nine Quebec Judges—he considered it would be increasing the danger of their position in Quebec to abolish the last appeal to the highest tribunal of the Empire. For this reason he would vote against the amendment.

Mr. PALMER said he would like to see the decisions of questions of law in this country made final if it could be properly brought about. The proposition now made was one which should have been brought forward at an early stage so that hon. members could have had an opportunity of considering the questions it involved. It was an attempt made to go entirely beyond the power of legislation possessed by this Parliament. It was improper that the House should be called on to decide on the question raised in the amendment at that late hour and late period of the session, and such a proposal should have been made a part of the policy of the Government. If its object was to prevent the necessity of going with Civil appeals to England, he would do everything within his power to bring that about. But hon. members were attempting something which they could not achieve. By the law of the Imperial Parliament appeals in each Province could be carried through the Court of Appeal direct to the Privy Council, and he could not imagine how it was possible for the Dominion Parliament, although it might create an intermediate Court of Appeal by the British North America Act, to deprive suitors of the right of appeal to HER MAJESTY. He had endeavored to discover any way by which that difficulty could be overcome, but failed to ascertain any. But if the proposed provision were embodied in the Bill, it would, for the reason he had stated, utterly defeat the Bill. He apprehended that so long as Great Britain occupied its present position towards Canada that the Imperial authorities must decide with respect to legislation between an attempt of the Federal Parliament to breach upon the rights secured to the people of the respective Provinces, and also when the Local Legislatures sought to exercise powers that belonged to the Federal Parliament. The power of allowance and disallowance of Acts therefore belonged to the Imperial authorities, and if the measure now before the House was shown to deal with questions which were beyond its province, it would be disallowed. If an attempt were made to abolish appeals to the Privy Council in the manner indicated in the amendment, suitors would step over that Government and go direct to the QUEEN in Council. The effect of that would necessarily be to reduce the amount of business taken before our Supreme Court, and a large expense would thus unnecessarily have been imposed on the people. All thinking men were desirous of having a court common to all, in which justice would be fairly, justly and ably administered by Canadian Judges, and then the laws might be compared, and the time might come when the whole laws of the Dominion would be assimilated by selecting either the Civil Law or Common Law system, whichever might appear best suited to our wants. He entertained a strong opinion that while he was willing and anxious to see the Supreme Court constituted—and hon. ministers would admit that the Opposition had endeavored to make it a correct Bill—he held that the Government should submit a separate Bill to carry out the design of the amendment, if it were to be attempted to be carried out. He, therefore, submitted two points for the consideration of the House: first, that it was improper to submit an important subject of that character to the tail-end of the discussion, when no hon. members would be able to give it full and proper consideration; and second, that it was questionable whether it was expedient to endanger the Bill by submitting the amendment.

Mr. MOSS said that no one would doubt that this was a serious question—to be considered especially serious in view of the declaration made in reference to its effect upon the Bill. But he ventured to think when the true position of the matter was considered, that this clause might be adopted without any danger to the Bill. The effect of the law, if this law was passed, he took it would be that any person who was aggrieved by the decision of the highest court in any Province could go directly to the Privy Council. That right would not be taken away if the proposed clause was passed. The suitor would still possess the right which he prized so much of going to the foot of the Throne. The whole effect of the clause which the House was asked to pass was this—that if the suitor chose to avail himself of the right to go to the court which was now being constituted, he would not thereafter have the right to go to the Privy Council, except HER MAJESTY exercises the prerogative upon special application being made. He quite agreed with this. He thought that this was an object to be desired. There were certainly appeals enough. There would be one too many if after an appeal had been taken from the highest court of the Province to the Supreme Court, there still remained an appeal to the Privy Council. If it could be done consistently with principle, and he believed it could be, a valuable object would be attained by preventing suitors carrying appeals any further than to the Supreme Court. In a word: if the suitor chose, he could go to the Privy Council, because he had the right of appeal from the highest court in the Province; but if he did not chose to go to the Privy Council, but preferred to go before the Judges of our own Supreme Court, he could not complain that by an Act of Parliament he was prevented from going further.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE desired to say a word before the amendment was put to the vote. He thought the hon. gentleman for St. John took an exaggerated view of the effect of the passage of the amendment, and if he thought the hon. member was at all correct in his statement he would not assuredly be a party to the adoption of any such principle in the Bill. He was unable, however, to see the matter in the same light as the hon. gentleman. He could not conceive that any person would imagine that because they desired to make the Supreme Court a final court of resort that it could be fairly or reasonably inferred that the Government was desirous, or that it could possibly have the effect of weakening the political connection existing between England and this country. No hon. member would desire that for one moment, and the mere fact that the hon. member for St. John had given expression to that idea would not influence any person's mind either in voting for or against the amendment. It should be voted upon on its merits. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had heard several members of the bar in the course of the debate express their opinion that appeals to the Imperial Court at present were of comparatively little use from the want of knowledge on the part of the Judges, particularly in reference to the laws of Lower Canada. He had heard the opinion expressed by the highest legal authorities in the House that suitors presenting such appeals would have a much better chance of justice in our own Supreme Court than in an English one; and if this was the case the only object the amendment would have would be to lessen the amount of litigation that at present took place in the form of appeals to the Privy Council in England. As stated by the hon. member for West Toronto there would still remain as a final resort the Privy Council, by petitioning in the usual way if any one should desire to go there. He could not imagine that the passing of the amendment would have the effect some hon. members anticipated, and he did not himself at all fear that it would have that political influence that some appeared to dread. He had no doubt the hon. member for St. John was sincerely desirous of maintaining the connection which exists between England and Canada, but he was not more sincere in that desire than hon. members on the Government side of the House, and indeed, hon. gentlemen all over the House. In a question of that kind we must now be prepared to judge for ourselves what would suit our people best, so long as we do not trespass on any Imperial right, or deprive HER MAJESTY'S subjects in this country of a final resort to HER MAJESTY'S highest court. This would not be done by the amendment, and it would have the effect beyond all doubt, if the representations of legal gentlemen in the House were to be believed, of lessening the number of appeals, of reducing the cost of litigation, and preventing a great deal of trouble and difficulty incident to appeals to England at the present time.

The House then divided on the amendment which was adopted on the following division :—

The House went into committee, and having made the amendment, rose and reported the Bill.

On the motion for concurrence in the amendment.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD rose to enter once more his solemn protest against the incorporation of such an unhappy and essentially unfortunate principle in this Bill. He might be right and he might be wrong in that idea. He had given some time and labor to endeavor, in his humble way, to perfect this measure and he regretted to see its defeat insured by this amendment. Believing, as he did, that it involved far higher questions, he entered his solemn protest against it. He believed it would be hailed as a great triumph by the enemies of the Colonial connection. The Premier had stated, and stated truly, that he was as strongly in favor of the maintenance of that connection as any one in Canada. He (Sir JOHN) gave the hon. member credit for that, and if he believed differently he would have pursued a different course towards the hon. gentleman after he (Mr. MACKENZIE) came into power. One of the safeguards that we possessed for our connection with the Mother Country was having such an hon. gentleman as Premier in our country. He (Sir JOHN) believed the hon. member was as much taken by surprise by this amendment as himself (Sir JOHN) and only yielded to the suasion of the Minister of Justice. The amendment was a surprise to the House, and forced upon it with indecent haste. What was the object of having so many stages for every measure if at the last moment such an amendment could be sprung upon the House without debate when its importance was admitted by the Premier? He (Sir JOHN) might be mistaken in his feelings and in his prognostications, but he believed it would be held in England as one of the evidences which were alleged to exist of a growing impatience in this country of the connection with the Mother Country. When the Minister of Justice introduced this Bill he said that while his own opinion was in favor of doing away with the right of appeal to the foot of the Throne, it would not form a portion of this measure. During the lengthened debates on the measure the hon. gentleman did not intimate until the last moment that such a principle would be incorporated in it. If he (Sir JOHN) had known of this he would not have taken any trouble with the measure, because he believed it would be abortive. Great as would be the benefit of a Supreme Court to the Dominion, it would not compensate for the injury that would be inflicted on the country in wounding the loyal sentiment of the people, and the feeling of uncertainty it would excite in England as to whether there was not an impatience in this country of even the semblance of Imperial authority. Those who disliked the colonial connection spoke of it as a chain, but it was a golden chain, and he, for one, was glad to wear the fetters. The House had not been given a fair opportunity to consider this amendment calmly, and he hoped, at the last moment, that the Premier, in whose loyalty and devotion to the colonial connection he (Sir JOHN) had every confidence, would find some means to avert this danger. The hon. member for West Toronto had contended that after all the appeal to the foot of the Throne amounted to nothing. The prerogative of the Crown, which this House could not interfere with, was saved, but the right of a British subject to appeal to the foot of the Throne was cut away in effect. The amendment provided, so far as it could, that the judgment of the Supreme Court should be final, and the moment it was rendered, then immediately, like the hammer of Thor, down came the judgment and execution, and away went the property of the party, who could then go to England and appeal to HER MAJESTY when it was too late to do anything. While we had the right of appeal to England under our law there was a delay of execution to allow an appeal to be taken. He felt that this amendment was an unfortunate mistake, and believed that it would be felt as a deep wound on the loyal sentiment of men in this country that the Premier would be the last to wish to wound, and that it would be held up in triumph by those who were no friends of the colonial connection.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman appeared to be speaking under some unusual excitement. He could not conceive how the hon. gentleman could form such an exaggerated idea of the effect of this Bill. But this was not the first time that exaggerated predictions had been made which were never fulfilled. We all recollect the graphic and alarming description that Sir FRANCIS BOND HEAD gave of the municipal institutions of Upper Canada, when they were first established. He characterized them as Republics and prophesied that they would lead to a Republic in this country. He declared that these institutions, which were the germs of self-government in this country, were intended to pervert the loyalty of the people and drive them into another political channel. We all know that those prognostications meant nothing, and he was sure that the hon. gentleman's predictions to-night, as to the effect of this Bill would be equally in vain. It was evident that the sentiment of this House was strongly in favour of preventing that resort to England which the hon. gentleman seemed to think was the very essence of loyalty and devotion to the Throne. If that were so, he would ask the hon. gentleman whether all those who were prohibited from appealing to England by reason of the amount involved not being large enough were to be declared disloyal and unworthy of attention. Did loyalty depend upon whether a man's case was above or below $4,000 ?

Sir JOHN. A. MACDONALD—There is no such exception, except with regard to the Province of Quebec.

Mr. MOSS—I beg pardon, it is so in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that in Ontario no case under $4,000 could be appealed to England. It was quite consistent with our loyalty to prevent all cases under $4,000 from going to England, but it was quite inconsistent with our loyalty to prevent those above $4,000 being appealed! Such was the illogical position of the hon. gentleman. He could not understand the extraordinary alarm manifested by the hon. gentleman at the supposed effect of the passing of the resolution that had just been carried. When responsible government was first established in this country it was prophesied by many alarmists that it would inevitably lead to separation from England, but instead of that, the connection only became more intimate and cordial, in proportion as the people enjoyed the privileges of self-government. So it would be, he had no doubt, in this instance. Instead of this Bill having the effect anticipated by the hon. gentleman, he had no doubt that the public sentiment of this country would become still more attached to Great Britain, from the knowledge that they had a court which would be to our people what the new court in England was to British subjects there—a final court of resort. It was not unreasonable to expect that we had men here equally as capable of administering our laws as the Judges in England, and speaking from a political point of view, he did not think his hon. friend was at all justified in the alarming predictions he had indulged in.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said that when he introduced this Bill he was of opinion that it was very desirable to restrict appeals to the Privy Council. The right of that appeal had been very often abused. Wealthy men had made use of it to force their opponents to accept an unjust compromise. He could mention an instance where a man who had succeeded in the three courts of the Province of Quebec, the Judges in each being unanimous, and who was compelled by the adverse party to renounce his rights by a threat of taking the case to the Privy Council. He might mention other cases of the kind. It was true that when he introduced the Bill there was no provision in it for the abolition of appeals to England, and there was, also no provision in it providing that the execution of judgment should be stayed in cases of appeal to the Privy Council. Under the Bill, as he introduced it, the judgment of a court would be executed no matter whether an appeal from or not. It was evident, therefore, that it was the intention of the Government, by this Bill, to restrict as much as possible the exercise of the right of appeal to England. The discussion of the measure before the House had increased the feeling in favor of abolishing the appeal altogether. He protested against the idea that the effect of the Bill as amended would be to weaken the connection with the Mother Country. Had he believed that the amendment would be taken in that sense either in this country or in England, he would not have accepted it; but he did not believe that it would have any such effect. He deprecated the raising of the loyalty cry and hoped it would not be repeated; because there was no one in the House against whom such a cry could be raised with any shadow of truth or reason. As to the House having been taken by surprise in this matter, that could not be because the notice of this amendment had been on the paper for several days.

Mr. LAFLAMME said he was much surprised at the gush of loyalty which had been exhibited by the hon. member for Kingston because two suitors from the Province of Ontario, in the course of five years, had thought proper to bring their cases before the Privy Council and to pay the solicitors in England the sum of £1,200 sterling; and because perhaps five Lower Canadian suitors, amongst them probably four French Canadians, also took their cases to the Privy Council and paid a similar amount, therefore we would be breaking the connection with the Mother Country if we abolished appeal to England. It was really surprising to hear such utterances from rational men, especially in this case when the Royal prerogative would still permit of appeals being made to the foot of the Throne. Would it tend to sever the connection between Great Britain and Canada to establish a court in this country for final appeal, just as a court was established in England for the final appeal of cases arising in England? He could not understand it in that way, and he did not believe any reasonable man in the country would so understand it. But there was certainly something which might give rise to anxiety in the threat of the right hon. gentleman when he seemed almost to declare that this Bill would be vetoed on the other side of the water. He seemed to have the key to the councils of HER MAJESTY in Great Britain which nobody had as yet discovered on this side of the House. We all cherished the institutions of the Old Country, but we believed that we were entitled to the same privileges as were enjoyed by British subjects residing in the British Islands. He deprecated the raising of the loyalty cry, and believed that the country would look at this question in a common sense way.

M. MOUSSEAU :—J'ai été étonné d'entendre l'hon. Ministre de la Justice dire que le public du Bas-Canada et du pays entier serait satisfait de voir que l'appel au Conseil Privé était aboli. L'abolition de l'appel au Conseil Privé n'a jamais été démandée par le Parlement Local ou par la Province de Québec. Pas une seule voix ne s'est élevée pour faire cette demande. Pas un seul député d'un parti ou l'autre n'en a jamais le désir. Les sources auxquelles on peut s'informer sont donc toutes adverses à cette prétention de l'hon. membre que la Province de Québec a demandé et accueillera avec joie l'abolition de l'appel au Conseil Privé. Je pars de là pour dire que ce Parlement n'a pas le droit de dire au Bas-Canada qu'il va le priver de son droit d'appel au Conseil Privé, sans son consentement. Le Bas-Canada possède ce droit de trois manières 1° c'est un droit inhérent au sujet anglais ; 2° c'est un droit garanti par la législation impériale ; 3° c'est un droit garanti au Bas-Canada par un statut passé en '41 et au Haut-Canada par un statut passé en '49. Ce droit est devenu une partie de notre Code, qui pourrait par ses dispositions au montant suffisant pour interjeter appel et à la procédure. Cet amendement n'est rien moins que la révocation d'un grand nombre des articles de notre procédure civile. Nous n'avons pas ce droit là. Bien plus, d'après la Clause 101 sur laquelle ou se fonde pour nous imposer cette mauvaise loi de la Cour Suprême, le Gouvernement a bien le droit d'établir cette cour et des cours de justice, mais il n'a pas le droit d'abolir aucun tribunal existant. Je répèterai donc avec l'hon. député de Kingston que le droit d'appel au Conseil Privé est un droit inhérent au sujet britannique et que personne ne s'en plaint, sauf quelques plaideurs malheureux. Il est tout-à-fait en dehors de notre compétence d'abolir l'appel au Conseil Privé, et je proteste contre la manière dont on nous enlève un des droits du sujet britannique.

The amendment was lost on division.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved, seconded by Mr. CIMON :—That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to a Committee of this House, with instructions to amend it to the following effect :—

"The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice who shall be called 'The High Chancellor of Canada,' and of two Judges of each of the Provinces in the Dominion, namely, the Chief Justice and the Chancellor of the Province of Ontario ; the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of the Province of Quebec ; the Chief Justice and the Puisne Judge first in rank by seniority of appointment of the highest Court of each of the other Provinces.

"The High Chancellor and one of the said two Judges of each of the said Provinces shall constitute a quorum to take cognizance of a case, matter, or thing with reference to which jurisdiction is given to the said Supreme Court.

"The jurisdiction of the said Supreme Court shall extend to the Constitutional question indicated in sections 55, 56 and 57 of the said Bill and to those in relation to which any Province may give to the said Court cognizance and jurisdiction in the manner prescribed by Section 58 of this Act.

"The said Supreme Court shall also have cognizance of appeals in matters of Controverted Elections, in cases and in the manner provided for by Section 50 of this Act," and in all cases relating to the revenue, and other matters set forth in Sections 63 and 64 of the said Bill, adjudicated upon by the Courts of the several Provinces of Canada.

"The jurisdiction of the said Supreme Court shall extend only to the matters aforesaid and to no other matter or thing whatsoever.

"The said Supreme Court shall hold one Term each year, and the beginning and duration thereof shall be determined by an Order of the Governor in Council and published in the Canada Gazette.

"The said Supreme Court may further adjourn from time to time, and be convened in the manner directed by Section 15 of this Act.

And that the Courts of the several Provinces of Canada having both original and appellate jurisdiction (in the same manner as those of Manitoba and British Columbia) in cases relating to the Revenue and other matters set forth in Sections 63 and 64 of the said Bill, the said Sections 63 and 64, the Section 72, and all the words after 'Supreme Court of Canada' in the first section of the said Bill, and all provisions relating thereto, be struck out ; that all and every thing in the said Bill contrary to the foregoing be struck out, and the whole Bill so changed as to accord with this amendment."

M. GAUDET—M. L'ORATEUR, je demande à cette honorable Chambre de me permettre de dire quelques mots à ce sujet. Jusqu'à présent, je n'ai eu en vue que le côté économique de la question ; les hons. membres ont bien traité la question au point de vue légal, mais on a semblé oublier que c'était le peuple qui payait les frais de cette organisation. Les dépenses, sous ce Gouvernement, augmentent tous les jours de plus en plus. On évalue les dépenses de cette cour à $75,000.00 ; bientôt elles seront de $100,000.00. Les hons. messieurs qui sont maintenant du côté ministériel, quand ils étaient dans l'opposition, criaient à l'économie. Etaient-ils sincères ? Jugez-en, M. l'ORATEUR, par le fait que, dans un an, ils ont dépensé pour le service de cette Chambre, $34,000.00 de plus que du temps des conservateurs. En 1872, dans la grande ville de Montréal, nos rouges ont formé un parti prétendu nouveau, qu'ils ont appelé " Le Parti National."

M. TREMBLAY.— Question ! Question ! !

M. GAUDET.— L'hon. membre pour Charlevoix me laissera-t-il parler ? Il me semble qu'il pourrait, dans cette Chambre, nous dispenser des sons harmonieux de sa voix. Eh bien ! M. l'ORATEUR, ce parti national a inscrit dans son programme qu'il devait diminuer le nombre des ministres. Si je regarde sur les bancs ministériels, il me semble que j'en compte un bon nombre, si je vais au Sénat, j'y retrouve la balance, et je compte treize ministres. Un autre article de ce programme était de réduire le salaire de l'Orateur et des membres de cette Chambre. Eh bien ! M. l'ORATEUR, vous n'avez rien à craindre ; vous retirerez, comme moi, jusqu'à la dernière piastre de votre salaire. Tout devrait nous porter à être économes, et cependant les dépenses augmentent. Le parti nationard s'est fondu avec le parti rouge et le parti grit, et, comme le cri constant de ceux qui composaient ces différents partis, était l'économie, on s'attendait, qu'en unissant leurs forces, ces partis mettraient leurs projets à exécution, et que les dépenses diminueraient. Cependant rien n'a été fait dans ce sens ; au contraire, on a mis de côté les principes d'économie. J'ai entendu discuter la légalité de cette cour ; cela appartient aux avocats et c'est bien. Mais, comme ce sont les comtés ruraux qui paient en grande partie les taxes de ce pays, ils ont droit aussi d'être entendus sur ce sujet. Je n'ai pas oublié les trois millions de taxes nouvelles imposées l'année dernière, sans nécessité, et je ne voudrais pas cette année employer cet argent pour encourager les fabricants de chapeaux à trois cornes. Si, encore, il n'y avait que le chapeau à acheter, çà ne couterait pas chère ; mais ce sont ceux qui les portent qui coûtent le plus. Le législation de cette année est féconde en situations. L'organisation du Nord Ouest, l'Acte de Faillite, la Cour Supreme, l'Acte des Mésureurs de Bois, l'Acte des Poids et Mesures, —toutes ces lois donnent quelques cents situations. Ainsi, il doit y en avoir assez pour satisfaire tous ceux qui sont en quête de places ; ou bien il y a plus de " demandants" que je pensais. L'hon. membre de Montmagny, dans son discours, nous a dit qu'il était question de cette cour depuis 1869, et que le discours du trône en parlait alors. Mais pourquoi n'a-t-elle pas été adoptée alors ? C'est parce que les conservateurs du Bas-Canada n'en voulait pas, et, comme ils exerçaient une influence, ils ont empêché leur Gouvernement de la faire passer. Mais le Gouvernement actuel comptant sur une majorité plus docile, il a résolu d'établir cette cour, et aussi il y a réussi.

M. TREMBLAY. — Question ! question ! ! question ! ! !

M. GAUDET.—L'hon. membre pour Charlevoix voudra-t-il se tenir tranquille ! En cherchant à m'empêcher de parler, voudrait-il nous faire oublier la honte qu'il nous a faite dans un autre législature, où on lui a prouvé qu'il aurait fait une déclaration sous serment qu'il était " pauvre et nécessiteux," et cela pour avoir quelques piastres comme témoin dans une cause de Sa Majesté. Il a été dit que quand l'hon. membre se levait, tout le monde " tremblait ; " quant à moi, quoiqu'il porte le nom de " Tremblay," il ne me fait pas " trembler." Si j'ai voté pour empêcher l'appel en Angleterre, c'était en vue de l'économie.

The amendment was lost on a division.

Mr. LAFLAMME said that as the Supreme Court was intended to serve as a substitute for the Privy Council in cases of Canadian appeal cases, and as appeals could not be taken from Ontario in cases where the amount was not less than £1,000 and in Quebec not less than £500; appeals to the Supreme Court should not lie for sums less than $2,000. He therefore moved :—" That the Bill be not read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend the seventeenth section by substituting $2,000 for $1,000."

Mr. MACDONNELL (Inverness) thought the amount should be retained at $1,000.

Mr. BLAKE explained that the provision only had reference to Quebec.

The amendment was carried, and the House went into Committee, Mr. CASGRAIN in the chair.

The Bill was reported with amendments, which were read and concurred in.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved that the Bill be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to substitute for section 83 the following :—" This Act or any part thereof shall take effect and be exercised only at and after such time or times as shall be appointed by proclamation under order of the Governor in Council, but no such proclamation shall take place nor be issued in any case unless and until this Act is adopted and approved of by the Legislature of each Province of the Dominion."

The amendment was lost on a division.

Mr. MILLS said it seemed to him that while this House was extending its authority on one side, it was withdrawing it on the other. Under the British North America Act this Parliament had a right to legislate on the subjects of shipping and navigation. Now, it seemed to him that this embraced every civil matter over which the ordinary Courts of Admiralty had jurisdiction. This House had a right to do all that a people in time of peace could do to extend and regulate commerce by legislation. If this Parliament were to constitute courts for the purpose of giving effect to our Maritime commercial legislation, and to provide for the settlement of disputes arising in connection with our shipping interests, it would be, in effect, establishing courts of admiralty jurisdiction, and though our Government had not yet taken any steps for establishing courts of original jurisdiction in admiralty, there could be no doubt, whatever, that they had the power. Before the British North America Act was passed, the Merchants' Shipping Act of Great Britain, was in force in this country. After that time a new Act was passed in Great Britain, which was not extended to this country—the old Act remaining in force in Canada as a Canadian Act, until superseded by another one enacted here. It would be very unwise on our part to deny that we possessed such powers as had been actually conferred upon us by the British North America Act. He believed that this Parliament should assume that they possessed them, and that they had the right to establish a court for the administration of such laws. We could recognise the Courts of Vice-Admiralty established here by the Imperial authorities as Courts of original jurisdiction ; but we could, also, very properly, in the Bill before the House, give the Supreme Court appelate jurisdiction over these courts. With a view to giving effect to this opinion he proposed putting a resolution in the hands of Mr. SPEAKER. If it did not meet with the sanction of the Minister of Justice and the House, he did not desire to press it ; because he did not wish, by an adverse vote to have the declaration made that we did not believe we possessed the right conferred upon us by the British North America Act : he did not want to prejudice our rights by such a result. He moved " That the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole to be so amended as to confer upon the Supreme Court appelate jurisdiction in Admiralty cases."

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said that the hon. member had inquired at the beginning of the session whether the Government were taking any steps towards securing the necessary legislation to give to this Parliament the power of extending the Admiralty Courts to the inland waters of the Dominion. The House was informed, on that occasion, that correspondence had been going on for five or six months past in relation to that subject, and that it was not yet closed. The House was also informed that the Government had asked legislation from the Imperial Parliament in relation to the subject. He (Mr. FOURNIER) did not think it would be proper, now, for this House to decide a question which the Government had thought proper to submit to the consideration of the Imperial Parliament. In the state the question was at the present time, it would not be proper to press this motion, and the hon. member for Bothwell would best serve his purpose if he would withdraw it. It was dealing with a delicate question in a very summary way.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said this Parliament could not oust the Imperial Admiralty Courts of their jurisdiction. They were Vice-Admiralty Courts, and had the right of appeal to the High Court of Admiralty in England. This House might propose for concurrent jurisdiction over vessels within three miles of the coast, but not beyond the limits of the Dominion. He had grave doubts whether any courts this House could establish in any way by a Dominion Act, and under the appointment of the Great Seal of Canada, could deal with this question. This subject was worthy of all consideration, and he had no doubt the Minister of Justice would give it that consideration between now and next session. With regard to the navigation of the lakes, it was a question whether this Parliament had the right of dealing with ships on the Upper Lakes. He was afraid Ontario would be very apt to advance a claim on the subject and assert that they came within the jurisdiction of Ontario. This was also a subject of very great importance, and no doubt the hon. gentleman, having called the attention of the House and the Government to the matter, would be satisfied to drop his motion.

Mr. MILLS consented to withdraw the motion and trusted the Government would give him an opportunity of moving a resolution on the subject before the close of the session. He thought we should maintain the rights that were conferred upon us by the British America Act, without going to England to ask whether we possessed them or not.

The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. GORDON moved the previous question.

Mr. IRVING thought it was unfair to shut off all amendments in view of the rapid manner in which the Bill passed through the committee.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said this motion was in effect introducing a system of cloture.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE hoped the motion would be withdrawn.

In accordance with this request the motion was withdrawn.

Mr. MOUSSEAU moved in amendment: That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend it by providing as follows:—This Act or any part thereof shall take effect and be exercised only and after such time or times as shall be appointed by proclamation under order of Governor in Council, but in so far as this Act concerns the Province of Quebec, no such proclamation shall take effect unless and till this Act is adopted and approved by the Legislature of the Province of Quebec as to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in cases relating to property and civil rights and civil procedure in the said Province of Quebec.

M. CIMON :—J'ai opposé le Bill de la Cour Suprême à l'encontre du Gouvernement et de certains messieurs pro-éminents de ce côté-ci de la Chambre, et je suis plus opposé à cette loi ce soir que je ne l'étais, depuis qu'on nous a ôté le droit d'en appeler au Conseil Privé—ce qui rendra cette loi beaucoup plus funeste aux lois civiles de Québec. C'est ce qu'ont admis les députés de Jacques Cartier et d'Arthabaska en mettant sur le papier un amendement par lequel ils devaient proposer qu'il n'y eut pas droit d'appel à la Cour Suprême dans le cas où la Cour d'Appel de Québec aurait unanimement confirmé le jugement de la Cour Supérieure. Cependant ces messieurs ne parlent plus de cet amendement. Il me semble que puisqu'on n'a pas confiance dans la Cour Suprême on ne devrait pas nous priver de pouvoir aller de l'autre côté de l'océan pour obtenir la justice que l'on pourrait obtenir ici. J'en appelle aux députés des autres provinces et les prie d'accorder à nos lois civiles la protection dont elles ont toujours join sous le drapeau anglais.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved that the SPEAKER do leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said he proposed putting a motion into the hands of the SPEAKER with a view of placing on record his own opinion on a very important subject, for which no other opportunity would offer this session. He begged to move, seconded by Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin)—

"That the SPEAKER do not now leave the chair, but it be resolved that in the opinion of this House it is desirable that steps should be taken to ascertain the feasibility and cost of adapting the Welland Canal to vessels drawing fourteen feet of water before the Government is irrevocably committed to plans involving a less depth."

His reason for offering this motion required only a few words of explanation. Preparation for the enlargement of the Welland Canal was going on and we had had a good deal of discussion upon the propriety of having a greater depth than that contemplated by the Government. He thought the balance of argument was in favor of a greater depth. Of course his hon. friend understood perfectly well that this was not put as a motion of want of confidence. They had contended too long when on the other side for the privilege of putting such motions in accordance with English practice, with the distinct understanding that they were not to be considered as motions of want of confidence, or as in any way tending to thwart the policy of the Government, to render it necessary that he should offer one word in explanation of his position. As the question had already been very fully discussed, he would not detain the House, but would place his motion in the SPEAKER'S hands.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the importance of obtaining a depth of 14 feet of water in the Welland Canal could scarcely be over estimated, and it was apparent that that work could be done with much less cost now while the work was going on. At this late period of the session, he would imitate the admirable brevity of the mover of this motion; but he wished to take this opportunity of expressing his great anxiety to see the object attained if possible, and to add his opinion to that already expressed of the great importance of making the fullest examination into this matter, with a view to carrying out the work referred to, if it was at all practicable.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said if the hon. gentleman had made his motion more general, he might perhaps have supported it. If it was necessary to make this examination with regard to the Welland Canal, it was also necessary with regard to the St. Lawrence Canals.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said he did not rise so much to give his opinion upon this subject, as that was pretty well known, but merely to say that he cordially approved of the motion of the hon. member for Chateauguay. With the permission of the House he would read an extract from a letter which he had received, without any solicitation on his part, since the last discussion on this subject, from a gentleman of very high authority in this country, Mr. SHANLY. In this letter Mr. SHANLY said:

"The Welland Canal never can perform its "proper functions so long as larger vessels "can put in at Buffalo than can come down "to Kingston, and it seems really too bad, "with our long canal experience in Canada, "the 'improvements' now entered upon should "be deliberately planned on an impefect and "insufficient model. I have always contended "that until the foot of Lake Ontario be made "for Montreal what the foot of Lake Erie is "to New York—the great transhipping point "from lake to canal (and river) craft—we "never will be in a position to compete on "equal terms—where we should be able to do "so on much better terms—with Buffalo."

He considered it right to read this letter to the House, coming as it did from an engineer of so high a standing as Mr. SHANLY. In answer to a deputation which waited upon the Minister of Public Works recently on this subject, that hon. gentleman had stated that he thought it would be better to proceed with the contemplated enlargement at present, and afterwards, if it was thought desirable, to deepen the canal to fourteen feet. He (Mr. KIRKPATRICK) wished specially to point out one reason why such a course was undesirable. It would have the effect of paralyzing the shipping interests. Ship-builders and ship-owners would not know what class of vessels to build or buy, and for the next five years or so this uncertainty would have a very bad effect upon our shipping. If it was found advisable to proceed with the work of getting fourteen feet he hoped there would be no delay. If the opinion of the House was expressed in the direction of this motion he would be quite satisfied to leave this matter in the hands of the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he hoped it would not be found necessary to have a discussion upon this question again, as they were anxious to get on with the business. He understood the object of the hon. gentleman was to place his motion on record. That could be done by allowing it to be lost on division, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) giving the House the assurance that the Government were taking steps and would take steps during next season to ascertain the cost of deepening both the Welland, and the St. Lawrence Canals. He hoped that assurance would be enough in the meantime, and if the motion was lost upon a division it would go upon the records.

Mr. NORRIS said he was pleased to see that the petitions pouring in from all parts of the country on this subject had produced their effect, and he was sure the country at large would have the fullest confidence in what the Minister of Public Works had said to-night; and he was quite satisfied that it would be found that it was quite practicable to procure 14 feet of water in the Welland Canal. He agreed with the hon. member for Frontenac that if this was to be done at all it should be done now so as not only to prevent expense, but obviate the necessity of different classes of vessels having to be built at different periods.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked why it was necessary that this motion should be lost on a division. He understood the First Minister quite approved of it, and if passed would strengthen the hands of the Government in dealing with this question. It would be as well therefore to allow it to pass.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was not usual, and it would be inconvenient when the Government practically complied with what was understood to be the view of the House to bind them by formal directions.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER observed that he only wished to draw the attention of the First Minister to the difficulty that would arise by the Government negativing this resolution, and then going on with the work. It would be almost better to withdraw the resolution than to have it lost on a division because that would seem to erect a barrier in the way of going on with the work.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) said this question should not be regarded as a party one, and therefore he saw no reason why the sense of the House should not be taken on it.

Mr. McCALLUM pointed out that it was very important that the House should pass upon this question now, because if they delayed till next session a great deal of the work would be done which would have to be gone over again if it was then decided to have fourteen feet.

Mr. YOUNG said he had expressed an opinion favourable to the deepening of the Welland Canal to fourteen feet, and he thought those who were favourable to that view should be content with the statement of the First Minister. So far as he was concerned, he was not prepared to tie the hands of the Government before they fully examined into the question, and those who took an interest in this work would, he thought, consult its best interests by accepting the assurance of the First Minister.

Mr. WOOD expressed his gratification that the First Minister had promised to obtain full information not only in reference to the deepening of the Welland Canal, but the St. Lawrence canals also.

The amendment was then lost on a division.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK rose to move a resolution which he had had upon the notice paper for some time.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was out of order to do so.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK quoted from May in support of his position.

Mr. SPEAKER read an extract from May to the effect that an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply having once been negatived no other amendment could be moved.

The House went into Committee of Supply—Mr. SCATCHERD in the chair.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that the large item of $800,000 which appeared in the supplementary estimates was for the change of the guage of the Intercolonial Railway, but inasmuch as hon. members were cognizant of the circumstances under which that expenditure became necessary they would not be disposed to object to it, although they might regret that the change had not been effected at an earlier period. The greater proportion of the remaining amount was made up of unexpended balances brought forward by Order in Council in the usual manner. They had not usually been brought forward in the Supplementary Estimates, but last year and on the present occasion, it was deemed best to pursue this course, and thereby more fully comply with the law. Exclusive of the change of guage and the unexpended balances, the principal charges, &c., consisted of expenditures incurred in connection with the expedition of the Mounted Police. When the House remembered that that force travelled 1,000 miles through an almost desert country, and that the greater number had to return, they would easily understand that a very considerable expenditure was necessarily incurred. A large portion of the amount was expended for transport, and the purchase of stores, which were deposited at a point near Swamp River, and still remained in possession of the Government. Another large expenditure was that connected with the provision of winter quarters at the Rocky Mountains, together with the construction of barracks at Fort Pelly. Other leading items were amounts paid for dredges for Prince Edward Island, taken from the Prince Edward Island Government in accordance with the terms of Union, and for repairs to the steamers "Napoleon III." and "Sir James Douglas." There were also certain additional allowances to British Columbia, which hon. members would observe were about equal to those which the House found it necessary to vote for the year 1875-6.

He moved the adoption of the first item.

The first item was passed without discussion.

On item, No. 2, for Mounted Police in Manitoba, $126,910,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked what was the number of the force, and the estimated annual charge when the force should be fairly established.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT replied the force was fixed at 300 men. The expenditure, as near as they could estimate it, excluding the cost of the expedition and winter quarters, would be some $200,000.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand) asked how many guides and ox-drivers there were attached to the force, and what their pay was.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that about 200 of those men went up with the expedition, but the exact rate of wages paid them he did not at present know. He would, however, be glad to furnish details before concurrence was taken.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked if the $25,000 placed in the estimates for the erection of winter quarters at the Rocky Mountains, were expended as far west as that point, or did that sum cover expenditures between Manitoba and the Rocky Mountains.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the structures in which this sum was expended were somewhere near the Belly River, at a spot where Assistant Commissioner McLeod had a force of ninety men.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—What is the number of men you propose to retain there?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT —Somewhere between 80 and 90.

Mr. SCHULTZ objected to these items being placed under the head "Manitoba," when they should be placed under that of the "North-West Territories," a fact which was calculated to mislead, and which he believed had misled the country in regard to the amount expended in the Province of Manitoba. It was generally supposed in the House and the country that Manitoba had been drawing large sums of money from the Dominion Treasury, while in reality it had received a very small sum indeed in proportion to what he believed it was legitimately entitled to.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the greater portion of the amount was expended in Manitoba the principle part of the supplies having been bought there.

Mr. SCHULTZ did not think it would be found on inquiry that a great quantity of stores had been purchased in Manitoba. He did not believe that one single dollar's worth of the goods set down in the Esti mates was purchased in that Province or that Manitoba derived the slightest benefit from the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER denied that the fact of stores being purchased in Manitoba, if they were so purchased, was any justification for placing the expenditure under the head of that Province, any more than if the stores had been purchased in Toronto, it would have been correct to have charged the expenditure under the head of "Toronto."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the force were quartered in Manitoba during the greater portion of the winter.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said the point made by the hon. member for Lisgar was correctly taken, and it was natural that he should not desire that amounts expended on the minor Provinces of the Dominion should appear larger than the amount actually received by them. The Mounted Police was not organized for service in Manitoba. They might make their winter quarters there, but that did not constitute it a Manitoba force, although, too, it were true that their services might be used in some portions of that Province to a limited extent. The force was organized for duty in the North-West Territories, and therefore the charge ought be to made under that head.

Mr. SCHULTZ said that the fact of the Mounted Police coming to Manitoba in the winter was a mere accident, and was not contemplated either by the Government or the Commander of the force.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE agreed to strike out the objectionable word "Manitoba."

The item was then passed.

On item 3, $15,000—Penitentiaries, maintenance of prisoners, Manitoba, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked for an explanation of the item.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said both the number of prisoners and the expenses had increased over what they were in 1874. The public accounts showed that the expenditure for Penitentiaries had assumed considerable proportions. The largest outlay had been in British Columbia where the comparative expenditure for maintaining the inmates of the prison, was nearly four times greater than that in any other Province.

Mr. BUNSTER declared that there were very few inmates of Penitentiaries in British Columbia, and that they were maintained as cheaply as in any other Province.

Mr. SCHULTZ asked what arrangements, if any, had been made with the Manitoba Government in respect to the maintenance of prisoners in that Province.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the Government were obliged to pay for the maintenance of prisoners, the money being re-couped by the Provincial authorities as far as possible.

Mr. SCHULTZ asked what check the Government had on the expenditure, adding that he believed that the Penitentiary in Manitoba, which was an institution under the control of the Local Government, had been grossly mismanaged in the matter of the purchase of its supplies. If the Government had passed the accounts from that Penitentiary without any sufficient check as to their correctness, then there would be an objection to the passing of the item.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the vouchers were checked by the assistant of the Receiver General in Manitoba, Mr.

McMICKEN, and by the officers of the deparment. If the hon. member had any specific charge to make, or desired any special information, he would cause the papers and details to be brought down. The total expenditure in the Province had not been quite so heavy, in proportion, as in some other Provinces, but still it had amounted to a considerable sum. He could give the hon. gentleman details on concurrence if they were desired.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I desire them very much.

The item was passed.

On item 4, $21,105 for St. Vincent-de-Paul Penitentiary.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK asked if the Government intended to carry out the policy of building tenements to be occupied as dwellings by guards at all penitentiaries.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Certainly not.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK—Why were they built in this case?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It was necessary to get some cottages erected, as accommodation for the jailors could not be found there, and on that representation the money was spent last spring.

The item was passed.

On item 5, $2,000 for Library of Parliament (additional).

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand) asked when the Library building would be ready for occupation, and if $2,000 would complete it.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the amount of the item was for books; he only agreed that such an amount would complete the building.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) inquired whether arrangements could not be made whereby the Library building could be used as the Chamber of the House of Commons and the Library be transferred to the present chamber.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that such a change could not be made without demolishing the library and erecting a new one.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE reminded the House that the Senate would have one-half of the Library building, and if the suggestion of the hon. member for Pontiac were carried out, the Senate would occupy one side of the House.

On item 7, to pay expenses in connection with the revision of electoral lists, $4,000,

Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked what this House had to do with the revision of the electoral lists? That was the business of the Local Government.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said information on the subject would be furnished on concurrence.

The item was allowed to stand.

On item 8, towards the purchase of ballot boxes, $2,250,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained that the cost of these ballot boxes was divided with the Local Governments, and they could be used in elections for the Local Legislatures as well as for the Dominion Parliament.

The item was passed.

Items 9, 10 and 11 were passed.

On the items under the head of Militia, amounting to $165,000,

Mr. DEVLIN expressed surprise that no provision was made for the payment of the volunteers who were called out during an election in Montreal some three or four years ago, by two magistrates residing in that city. The matter had been brought under the notice of the Minister of Militia, but no compensation was allowed to the men for their services. Neglect of this kind was calculated to injure very materially the esprit de corps of the volunteers. The Minister of Militia should give some reason for not paying their demand.

Mr. BOWELL asked why the local authorities should not pay the moneys.

Mr. DEVLIN said the corporation of Montreal had very properly refused to do so, as they had nothing to do with calling out the men.

Mr. BOWELL wished to know upon what legal advice the corporation acted in this matter, and hon. member for Montreal Centre was not that adviser.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the hon. member for Montreal Centre did not become the legal adviser of the corporation of Montreal until after the occasion referred to. The volunteers were ordered out very improperly in an election in which Sir GEO. CARTIER was a candidate. They were ordered out by two partisan magistrates without the authority of the Mayor or the advice of the city attorney of the day. The men went out on authority which they considered legal and earned their money. They should be paid either by the city of Montreal or by the Government, whose orders they were bound to obey. As to the validity of their claim there could be no doubt.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said there was every doubt on the subject. The law was very plain and precise on the subject. In certain specified cases, and by command of certain persons prescribed by the law to call them out, the men were required to turn out. It would not do for the hon. gentleman to say that the men did not know the law. They should know it. They were an armed force, and it was of very great consequence that the militia should turn out for no one who had not the proper authority to call them out. Their officers, at all events, should see that they were not called out except by the proper authorities.

Hon. Mr. VAIL said soldiers were bound to obey every commanding officer. He had looked into this matter, at the earnest request of the hon. member for Montreal Centre, and at first took a very favorable view of it, but found that his hands were tied by the action of his predecessor in the former Government, and consequently he could not move in the case at all. The men who turned out and performed their duties should be paid by somebody. There was one reason why the Government should not pay them, and it was this: it would establish a precedent for further demands upon the treasury; but there was no question the money should be paid by somebody. It was a matter between the city authorities and the commanding officer.

Mr. DEVLIN asked if the Government absolutely refused to pay the men.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government had no right or power to pay these men under the law. That was quite clear, and the hon. gentleman must know it.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the Minister of Militia was altogether mistaken in supposing that volunteers were bound to obey the commanding officer, whether they were legally or illegally called out. For instance, if they were called out to serve sixteen days instead of eight, they could, at the end of eight days' service return to their homes. They were a civic force, and if they were called out against the law, and should fire upon and kill men in violation of the law, they would be placed upon trial for murder. The Minister of Militia would bring the volunteers into a great deal of difficulty, and cause much trouble if he held that they were bound to obey their officers' orders whether legal or illegal.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there could be no doubt the hon. member for Kingston had stated the law correctly. What the Minister of Militia had endeavored to point out was that the rank and file could hardly be supposed to know whether they were called out in accordance with law or not.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) said ignorance in the law was no excuse. Under any circumstances the commissioned officers of the volunteers ought, at all events, to have sufficient knowledge of the law to know when they could legally call out their men.

Mr. BOWELL said he did not wish it to be understood that he objected to the men being paid, particularly as they had been called out for service. The moment they were called out they were put under the Queen's Regulations, and were subjected to all the penalties imposed on soldiers of the line when on duty. When men were called out by their officers they did not stop to question whether the command was legal or not. They trusted to their officers, who should be held responsible for any illegality. He understood that the member for Montreal Centre had been appointed legal adviser to that City, in 1871, and that the election took place at which the volunteers were called out, was in 1872, so that the advice must have been given by the gentleman who now wishes the debt paid by the country.

The item was carried.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT gave some explanations with reference to the item of $5,000 for drill sheds and rifle ranges.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) said there was also an item of $40,000 in the Supplementary Estimates for next year for drill sheds, and he suggested that these two sums be appropriated as an additional grant to the veterans of 1812, as it was now apparent that the vote of $50,000 already passed for that purpose would be altogether inadequate. Instead of there being only five hundred of these veterans living now as was estimated, he found by enquiry at the Militia Department, day before yesterday, that 1,150 had already applied, and he had no doubt that the number would reach 1,500. This would only give $33.33 to each veteran; and it would be an insult to these brave and loyal men to offer them that miserably small amount. He hoped the Government would take this matter into their serious consideration.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) suggested that the headquarters of the district in which Ottawa was situated should be fixed at Ottawa.

Mr. BROUSE thought the suggestion of the hon. member for Prince Edward was worthy of consideration. If the Government intended to provide for these veterans, an additional sum should be placed in the Supplementary Estimates. It would be a mockery to offer them $40 each. They should at least be treated with as much consideration as the regular soldiers received from Chelsea Hospital.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government had no reason to believe that the number would reach that mentioned by the hon. member for Prince Edward. What the Government intended was that these men should receive the maximum amount paid to the pensioners under a a former Act, namely, $80 a head.

Mr. BROUSE said he was glad to hear that, but the Government would find that the number of these veterans was very large, our climate being conducive of longevity.

Mr. THOMPSON (Haldimand) said that many of the drill sheds throughout the ccuntry were fast going to destruction, and some steps should be taken to preserve them.

Mr. STEPHENSON asked if any portion of this grant would be allotted to the rural battalions.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) said he had received his information about the number of veterans at the Militia Department. There were 1,150 applicants and he had no doubt they would reach 1,500. Supposing 50 per cent. of those were not entitled to anything there would still remain so large a number that the vote of $50,000 would not give them $80 each.

Mr. BOWELL—There are a great many that may probably not be recognized by the Militia Department.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—A very large number.

Mr. BOWELL said there were some such within his knowledge. There were some who had served in the transport service and in other ways for six months and then gone home; and it would be a question whether their claims should be recognized.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had been asked by several volunteers in Montreal to inquire of the Government what accommodation would be provided for the volunteers of Montreal now that the barracks had been sold, St. Helen's Island transferred to the city, Logan's Farm gone, and the roof of the Drill Shed fallen in.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied that, as he had informed the hon. member for Montreal Centre when he asked a similar question; he would give information on this point when they came to the item for Drill Sheds in the supplementary estimates for 1875-6.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he might not be in the House then and he was entitled to the information now.

Item passed.

On item 16, pay, maintainance and equipment of A and B Batteries and Schools of Gunnery, $15,000,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK called attention to a cable despatch in a prominent journal in this country announcing that a large force of regular troops would be sent out to drill the Canadian volunteers, and asked if the Government had received any information on the subject.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he was afraid somebody had perpetrated a hoax upon the journal in question.

Item passed.

On item 17, Barracks at Fort Pelly, $30,000.

Mr. YOUNG—What kind of buildings was it intended these should be; were they to be permanent or only of a temporary character?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the buildings were already erected. They were permanent buildings, some of them of square logs, and some frame, some two stories high and some only one. Two of the buildings were each about 280 feet long, and there was a commandant's house, a hospital and other ordinary buildings, and a stable with accommodation for two hundred horses. The Government had sent a saw mill up there, and about a million feet of lumber was sawn, and shingles enough made to cover all the buildings. There was a force of about ninety or a hundred men sent up there in September, and they finished the buildings about the first of January. They were intended to be a permanent accommodation for the police force in that quarter, and they would also furnish a residence for the officers connected with the North-West Government.

Mr. SCHULTZ wished to have more specific information with respect to these buildings in consequence of a report having reached Manitoba that the force from the Rocky Mountains did not remain at Fort Pelly because of the unfitness of both the barracks and the stables for the accommodation of the men and the horses. He asked the Government whether they were in receipt of any official information on that point.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the reports of the officers showed that they only left a portion of the force at Fort Pelly when they should have left them all there. It was not in consequence of the unfitness of the buildings that the men were not all left there.

Mr. SCHULTZ—Why did not the whole force stay there?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They came away as I think very improperly, but one reason assigned was that a considerable quantity of hay had been burned through the carelessness of those in charge, and they believed there was not sufficient left to maintain all the horses through the winter.

Hon. Mr. BOWELL noticed that this item was placed under the head of Public Works and Buildings, whereas another item for erection of winter quarters at the Rocky Mountains was charged under the head of the Mounted Police.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Public Works Department erected the buildings at Fort Pelly and took entire charge of them; whereas the others were erected by Col. McLEOD, who had charge of the police force there.

Hon. D. A. SMITH said the reason referred to by the Premier why the police force did not remain at Fort Pelly, namely because a large quantity of hay was destroyed by fire, was correct. Nearly all the hay they had up there, as well as a large quantity belonging to the Hudson Bay Company, was destroyed.

Mr. SCHULTZ asked whether the Government had or had not received any information from the officers of the Mounted Police in regard to the fitness or unfitness of these buildings for winter quarters.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not think anything was said about the buildings being unfit. The report detailed various circumstances, but I do not think it was alleged that the buildings were unfit.

Hon. Mr MITCHELL—I do not know whether the attention of the First Minister has been called to a letter, purporting to come from an officer of the force, in which these buildings were described as put up in a shameful manner, and the men were stated to be freezing in them.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I have not seen the letter.

Item passed, also items 18 to 20 inclusive.

On item 21, for winter steam service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, $10,000.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, in reply to Mr. TUPPER, said the Government had been quite unable to arrive at any definite conclusion as to what could be done. They had advertised for tenders. Some builders contended that a steamer could be constructed for this service, and it was hoped that some arrangement could be made to secure one. The sum of $10,000 had been placed in the estimates, but the Government could not tell what the vessel would cost.

The item was passed.

Items 22, 23, and 24 were passed.

On item 25, for fishery overseers, $2,300.

Mr. HAGGART asked if it was part of the duty of those overseers to prevent sawdust being thrown into the river.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said it was a part of their duties, and the Government intended to enforce the law against obstructing streams, more rigorously in future.

The item was passed.

The following items to the 30th inclusive were also passed.

On item 31, to pay the cost of missions to the Blackfeet and Plain Cree Indians, $2,548,02.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked for explanations.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said it was considered advisable last summer to send certain parties in advance of the commissioners to propitiate these Indians who were warlike and very much exasperated by the outrages perpetrated by American traders.

Mr. SCHULTZ wished to have some information in regard to treaties generally in the North-West. There was very little to be obtained from the report of the Minister of the Interior. The treaty negotiated at Qu'Appelle Lake occupied several days and many matters were brought up. It was understood that dissatisfaction was expressed by nearly every one of these Indians with the Hudson's Bay Company's rule in the North-West, and fear was expressed that the company or its officers exercised undue influence over the Government. If such were the fact, it was a very important matter for the Government to keep in view in making choice of officials in the North-West and in the Government of that territory.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the objections which the Indians took to the Hudson Bay Company were very fully stated in reports published in all the newspapers of Manitoba and in some newspapers in the Eastern Provinces. A reporter accompanied the commissioners and reported the objections taken by the Indians and the replies thereto which satisfied them in regard to the treaty. These reports had been published so fully through the press that he did not think it necessary to incorporate them in his report to the House.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said the objection referred to was in regard to the reserves held by the Hudson's Bay Company under the provisions of the surrender of the territory. Otherwise there was very little fault found but it might be interesting to the House to know that a speech delivered by the hon. member for Lisgar, in which the Hudson's Bay Company were not spoken of in the most complimentary terms, had been translated into the Indian language and distributed among the Indians.

Mr. SCHULTZ said the hon. member had misconceived, to say the least of it, the objections raised by the Indians on the occasion referred to. These objections were simply the distrust engendered by their long experience in dealing with the Hudson's Bay Company's officers, and, if his information was correct, that distrust was very strongly expressed day after day. With regard to the alleged translation of his (Mr. SCHULTZ) speech, if the statement were true the translation must have been done by the Hudson's Bay Company themselves. It was a very unlikely story, however, inasmuch as there was not in the whole of the North-West a font of type capable of printing a document of that kind.

Mr. SMITH said he had been informed on very good authority that such a document was circulated among the Indians. The peace and quietness which prevailed in the North-West was sufficient evidence of the good relations which existed between the Indians and the Hudson's Bay Company's officers.

The item was passed.

On item 32, $6,000 under the head of Indians.

Mr. BOWELL desired to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Interior to the fact that there were Indian claims demanding settlement nearer home than the North-West Territories. The Mohawks in the district in which he resided had a long standing grievance in that they had been deprived for many years of a large annuity to which they were entitled. He had brought the case before the late Government repeatedly, and in the House moved for and obtained papers respecting it, and had ever since been endeavoring to obtain justice for that tribe. The facts were simply these : a large proportion of the lands in the township of Tyendinaga were ceded to the Government in 1834 or 1835. Subsequent to that transfer one-seventh was set apart for Clergy Reserves. It was distinctly provided that the amount obtained from the sale of the lands should be invested and the interest paid annually to the tribe ; but this had not been done. The matter had been reported on by the late Minister of Justice, and his predecessor, and they declared that the tribe were equitably entitled to the full amount realized, and as the case caused much dissatisfaction among the Indians, he hoped it would be considered by the Government, and that justice would be meted out to those people.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said no complaints had been made to the Department during his occupancy of office that had been brought to his notice. He would, however, inquire into the circumstances of the case.

Mr. BOWELL said the hon. Minister had been misinformed, as he had called on the Department on the subject, but not on the hon. Minister. There was a deputation of Chiefs from the Reserve now in the city for the purpose of waiting on the Government in regard to their claims.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said no complaint had been made to him personally.

The item was passed.

Item 33 passed without discussion.

On item 34, $21,692, unexpended balance of 1873-74 for survey of boundary between Ontario and the North-West, Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, in reply to Hon. Mr. MITCHELL, said the unexpended balance of the previous vote was brought forward, but it would not probably be all expended.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said that until the principle on which the boundary was to be settled was determined there could be no survey and no expenditure of money. The question was referred to arbitrators, as he understood it.

The item was passed.

On item 35, $850 for Canada Gazette, (additional),

Mr. BOWELL asked for explanations.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT replied that extra expense was incurred in having Parliamentary documents printed for the use of the departments.

Item 36 and 37 were passed without discussion.

On item 38, $1.000, to pay a gratuity to Mrs. CATHERINE TODD, widow of the late ALFRED TODD, for forty years in the employ of the Canadian Legislative Assembly and House of Commons, in recognition of the long and faithful services of her deceased husband,

Mr. COSTIGAN called attention to the case of a young Frenchman residing in Victoria, N. B., who was accidentally shot and disabled by the guardian of the fisheries of the Restigouche river, while spearing salmon in July or August last, and asked the Government to consider whether they could not exercise liberality by giving the unfortunate man a gratuity.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT regretted that no such claim could be entertained, for if such a precedent were established the Government would be called upon to consider hundreds of claims of like character.

The item was passed.

On item 39, $31,764, unexpended balance of 1873-4 of vote for expenses of removal of depreciated coin, Province of Nova Scotia,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained that the full amount placed in the estimates would not be required. A portion of the amount would be expended in withdrawing twenty cent pieces. The item was originally placed in the estimates for the purpose of removing the silver nuisance of Nova Scotia.

On item 40, unexpended balance of 1873-4 of vote for compensation for losses to sufferers in the North-West Territory, $656.55,

Mr. BOWELL asked if this included all the claims for compensation.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—I am not aware of any other claims.

Item passed.

On item to pay the municipalities of Lower Canada who withdrew their capital prior to the 30th June, 1874, the discount of 25 per cent. deducted from them, $46,697.37.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said as this was a liability of the old Province of Canada it should be kept as a separate account and charged to the old Province of Canada.

Mr. WRIGHT (Ottawa) said the Government saved a large amount by this operation. Originally they were bound to pay six per cent., but by borrowing money at five per cent. they saved about $150,000.

Item passed.

On item 42, to pay to the Hon. D. A. SMITH, M. P., the sum of £600 advanced by him on the 6th Feb., 1872, together with interest thereon, $3,562.50.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) wished some explanation with regard to this item. If he understood it it was a vote to reimburse an hon. gentleman for money paid to RIEL and LEPINE to get them to leave the country. He would never be a party to paying these men a single dollar, and if the hon. gentleman advanced this money without the authority of the Government let him look to those parties that requested him to pay it. He moved that this item be struck out.

Mr. WHITE said that in the light of the letters of Sergeant MULLIGAN and O'DONOGHUE this money should not be paid. If what O'DONOGHUE said was true the Hudson Bay Company had a good deal to do with keeping the Canadian Government out of the territory. If there was not something wrong in the Hudson Bay Company's connection with this matter how was it that the chief man of that company was willing to give this amount to get those men to leave the country, and give it without any authority from the Government? A great deal had been said about this whole business, but very little had been said on behalf of O'DONOGHUE. He certainly thought the Government should treat him with the same consideration as they did RIEL and LEPINE. He seconded the motion to strike out the item.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said every one was familiar with the details of this matter as set forth in the report of the North-West Committee. He could simply say that this was a sum advanced by Mr. SMITH at the request, as was clearly shown, of the gentleman who was entrusted with the task of preserving peace in that country. It appeared that this money was paid to strengthen the hands of those who were responsible for the peace of the country. He did not think therefore that it would be creditable to the Dominion to allow an individual to pay out of his own pocket a considerable sum of money for what was apparently a public object.

Mr. DEVLIN said he was indebted to the hon. member for East Hastings for the deep interest he took in Mr. O'DONOGHUE. The credit of bringing the case before the House, however, was due to the hon. member for North Hastings, and the hon. member for Kingston also had referred to the fact that it seemed very extraordinary that the name of O'DONOGHUE had been omitted from the amnesty.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—I did not say a single word about O'DONOGHUE or the amnesty.

Mr. DYMOND rose to a point of order. The question before the Chair was whether the sum of money mentioned in the estimates was due to the hon. member for Selkirk or not.

The CHAIRMAN ruled that every circumstance connected with the payment of that sum of money could be fairly discussed.

Mr. DEVLIN said it was a fact which admitted of no contradiction, that there was a feeling of dissatisfaction at the omission of O'DONOGHUE's name from the amnesty. From all that had transpired up to the present moment, O'DONOGHUE was the least culpable party concerned in the difficulties in Manitoba. The question was asked among the people, why every person bearing a French name was treated with kindness and consideration, while the only Irish Catholic was excluded from the amnesty. He desired to record his protest against this injustice towards his countrymen. There was no evidence that he had seen to show that O'DONOGHUE was in any way connected with the death of SCOTT, and he was not aware of any other circumstance which justified the Government in excluding Mr. O'DONOGHUE from the amnesty. It was said that he organized a Fenian raid upon Manitoba. If that was true, he (Mr. DEVLIN) would have nothing more to say on his behalf. Any Irishman who could be so ungrateful to a country where Irishmen enjoyed every right and privilege denied them in their native land, deserved any punishment he received. But O'DONOGHUE denied that he organized a Fenian raid, and contended that he was prepared to show that everything he did was in accordance with the orders given by the provisional Government of Manitoba. He felt confident the Government would do justice to O'DONOGHUE and he hoped they would deal with the case forthwith.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said he had no desire at this time to say one word against O'DONOGHUE, but he would simply remind the hon. member for Montreal Centre that the Provisional Government at Fort Garry was not in existence in the autumn of 1871 and September 1870 when O'DONOGHUE alleged he acted under their instructions.

Mr. MASSON said he was always of opinion that the amnesty should be extended to all persons implicated in the troubles in Manitoba. When the amnesty measure was before Parliament the member for Bagot moved "that it would be proper that a full amnesty should be granted to all persons concerned in the North-West Troubles for all acts committed in said troubles." That was the proper time for the hon. member for Montreal Centre to befriend O'DONOGHUE, but instead of doing so the hon. gentleman had voted against the amendment. He could hardly find fault with the Government for doing that for which he (Mr. DEVLIN) had voted they should do. The hon. member for Bagot knew what he was doing, and his object was to extend the amnesty to all persons implicated in the rebellion, irrespective of their nationality. They failed to accomplish that, and they had to thank the hon. member for Montreal Centre and those who voted with him for that failure.

Mr. DEVLIN said he would hesitate long before joining hands with the hon. member for Terrebonne and the half-dozen who surrounded him.

Mr. WHITE said the Opposition had no desire to include in their numbers such characters as the hon. member for Montreal Centre.

Mr. COSTIGAN said the hon. member for Montreal ought to prove his sincerity in this matter by taking some more effective steps to secure justice to O'DONOGHUE. If there was only to be discussion on the matter and then allow it to drop, it would have been better it had not been brought up at all. The hon. gentleman had assumed the responsibility of bringing up this matter, and he would have to be held responsible for carrying it out.

Mr. SCHULTZ said he had two or three objections to this item. First, if it was passed he did not believe his hon. friend from Selkirk would accept the money. His fine sense of honor would prevent him from accepting it. When the troops were arming at Fort Garry, and RIEL and his friends were leaving, they threw a lot of documents into a well. These were fished up again, and that same fine sense of honor dictated he believed the order that these should be burned. It was difficult to say whom they might implicate, and that had something to do with the burning of these papers. The second objection he had to this item was that the amount of interest was very large. He took it for granted that this £600 was paid in Hudson Bay Company's notes, which were worth then in Canadian currency about $2,946. This would leave $616 set down for interest, which certainly made that payment a good investment. A third objection he had was derived from the statement made before the North-West Committee by Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD; That gentleman in his evidence stated :—

"The whole matter was talked over before DONALD A. SMITH, M. P., who entirely agreed as to the soundness of the policy, and then the question arose as to how the funds were to be raised. Mr. SMITH said that if I directed it, he would find the funds. I said I could only do that as a private individual, and although I took it for granted that the Government of the Dominion would not willingly make me a victim, they might not see their way clear to make it right. Mr. SMITH said he had no doubt of the view they would take of it, and if there was any risk he was willing to share it with me."

Hon. D. A. SMITH asked the hon. gentleman to refer to the evidence of Archbishop TACHÉ on that point.

Mr. SCHULTZ said he was reading the evidence of a gentleman he knew the most about the transaction except the hon. member himself. It seemed to him that this evidence plainly showed that the hon. member for Selkirk paid this money, well knowing that he was running a risk of ever getting it paid back. In view of this fact, and in view also of the statements made by an officer of the late Provisional Government in regard to that hon. gentleman's connection with the insurrection, it would occur to most people that there might be reasons for his advancing this money other than State reasons, other than a wish to oblige the then Government of Canada. If the important statements made by O'DONOGHUE had even the shadow of truth in it, it could easily be seen that the hon. gentleman from Selkirk was as much interested as the Government, or as Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD, in securing the absence of these men. He did not see that this money was promised to be paid by the late Government, and therefore he would vote against this item.

Hon. D. A. SMITH said that with respect to his accepting the money, he would not say much about that ; but he would appeal to members of both the present and the late Government to say whether he had ever been pressing for this money. He had never urged either Government to pay it. With reference to the documents that had been thrown down a well and fished up again and destroyed, as referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk, he explained that a trunk belonging to an officer of the Hudson Bay Company had been thrown into a well and fished up again. The only papers it contained were that officer's private papers, and as they were rendered useless by the water he destroyed them. Nothing could be more untrue than the statement that the Hudson Bay Company destroyed any papers connected with the Provisional Government. As the hour was very late, he would take another opportunity of referring to the accusations of Mr. O'DONOGHUE, with regard to himself.

Mr. SCHULTZ read the following extract from Lieutenant Governor ARCHIBALD'S evidence :—

"I never told Mr. SMITH that the Government had undertaken to make good the £600 he advanced. In my conversation with him to which he refers, I spoke only of another sum, respecting which he has spoken in his evidence, namely, some compensation to the loyal French."

If the evidence of Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD then could be believed, the member for Selkirk must have deliberately advanced this money, knowing that the chance of his getting it back was very slim indeed. In view of that fact, and of the fact that the money was applied to so bad a use, he thought the House would be justified in refusing to pass this vote.

Mr. D. A. SMITH said he did not desire to question the evidence given by Lieutenant Governor ARCHIBALD, but it was always found that when two or three gentlemen were witnesses of the same circumstances, they did not exactly agree respecting them when called upon to give evidence. Archbishop TACHÉ, in his evidence before the North-West Committee, made the following statement :— "It was then that I saw Lieutenant Governor ARCHIBALD on the subject of money. There were many conversations between the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba and myself on the subject. The Lieutenant Governor called on Mr. SMITH, and in my presence, asked if he could furnish the funds, which, of course, he said would be reimbursed by the Canadian Government. I named at first £800 sterling to the Governor as the sum required by RIEL and LEPINE for themselves and their families. The Governor asked Mr. SMITH to lend £800 sterling. I mentioned that I had $1,000 at my disposal, without mentioning the source, and thus the sum to be furnished by Mr. SMITH was reduced to £600 sterling." This evidence conflicted somewhat with that of Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD, but he (Mr. SMITH) always understood that the money matter was settled between Lieutenant Governor ARCHIBALD and Archbishop TACHÉ before he was called upon. He was attending to his duties in the Local House at the time. A message was sent in to him, but he did not desire at that moment to leave the Chamber, as pressing business was before it ; but he shortly afterwards received a pressing note from Lieutenant Governor ARCHIBALD, requesting him to go up to Mr. ARCHIBALD'S office. He did so, and met the Archbishop and Mr. ARCHIBALD, and he was then asked to advance the money on the terms spoken of by Mr. ARCHIBALD. The hon. member for Lisgar had referred to the currency of the Hudson's Bay Company ; the sum was, however paid in good Canadian currency. He was not aware what sum was placed in the estimate on account of this payment until he entered the House that evening. He had not spoken to any member of the Government about paying that money with interest up to that moment.

Mr. LANDERKIN hoped the item would be voted upon without further discussion.

Mr. BOWELL desired the hon. member for Selkirk to read his own evidence given before the committee. It was to this effect: that in an interview he had with Mr. ARCHIBALD they expressed great fears that a raid would be made on the territories, a new insurrection might result therefrom, as the troops could not enter the territory during the winter season Mr. SMITH agreed to pay £600 which Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD asked to induce parties to leave the country. They agreed between themselves that if the Canadian Government refused to recognize the payment they would each sustain one half of the loss. Mr. ARCHIBALD in his evidence said he could not afford to lose that sum of money, and hoped he might get it out of the Canadian Government., but that he had not the slightest doubt that the payment would be recouped. Archbishop TACHÉ in his evidence thought that when Mr. ARCHIBALD asked for the money from the banker of the Hudson Bay Company, that it would be reimbursed by the Dominion Government. There was not one word in all the evidence to justify the assertion that Mr. ARCHIBALD or Mr. SMITH had authority to pay a single cent.

Mr. D. A. SMITH said he had already mentioned that he found Mr. ARCHIBALD and the Archbishop together, and took it for granted that the money matter had been settled beforehand. It was true that after he was asked to advance the money, Mr. ARCHIBALD said :—" For that matter I would guarantee it myself,"—to which he (Mr. SMITH) replied, "If it comes to that I will go halves with you." That occurred after it was understood the money was to be paid by the Dominion Government. His (Mr. SMITH's) evidence was not properly taken, and was not signed by him, in fact when it was sent subsequently to him he was unable to read some portions of the manuscript.

Mr. FARROW said that the transaction was a speculative one, and he could not conceive why the Government had placed the amount in the estimates, for it did not appear that the hon. member for Selkirk was anxious to have the money repaid.

Mr. SMITH begged the hon. member's pardon. What he stated was that he did not know the extent of the amount which would be placed in the estimates before he saw the paper. He had not been importunate with one Government or the other regarding the payment of the amount.

Mr. FARROW thought the explanations of the hon. member were not satisfactory. He understood that that gentleman had not pressed the Government for repayment, and yet the estimates proposed not only to repay the principal, but, also the interest, which seemed to be calculated to a nicety. He held the opinion that there were plenty of channels in which the money of the country could be spent without devoting it to such a purpose, and if the hon. gentleman had incurred such risk, he knew that he would probably lose the money. If the House was desirous of exercising economy, hon. members should vote against the payment proposed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the question was simply this : that the evidence contained in the Blue Book established beyond question that the money was borrowed from Mr. D. A. SMITH by Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD ; that the transaction was recognized by the hon. gentleman opposite, then at the head of the Government ; and this, therefore, was a debt due the hon. member for Selkirk by the country. If the principal—£600—was due, then the interest was due also ; and if the money was not due there should be no payment. The question to be determined was simply whether the House would recognize this debt which was clearly established to be such. The hon. member for Kingston, who, as leader of the late Government, was bound to state to the House the views he presented to the North-West Committee before which he gave evidence.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said there was no dispute as to the facts of the case, and he failed to understand why the hon. member for Selkirk was afraid to admit the exact truth of the evidence of Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD. What Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD stated, as appeared from the Blue Book, he had previously heard from the hon. member for Selkirk. It must, therefore, be true, because that hon. member told him (Sir JOHN) the very words long before the evidence was given, and that, indeed, was the first intimation he received in any way of the transaction. The facts, as they appeared on the face of the evidence, were these :—It appeared that a reward was offered by the Government of Ontario for the apprehension of Riel, that the news of that reward was sent over the wires to Manitoba, that the French Metis resolved to make common cause with Riel, and formed a body-guard for his protection, and then the Archbishop, the Lieut. Governor and the hon. member for Selkirk met and came to the conclusion that there was a great danger of a rising of the Metis which might assume the proportions of another insurrection and produce bloodshed. Whether the danger was exagerated or not he (Sir JOHN) did not know. But when three rather elderly gentlemen met together they alarmed each other, and from the circumstance that some of the Metis had determined to gather around Riel, they inferred that there was going to be another insurection and that the country would be ravaged. They thereupon agreed to raise a sum of money to send some of the leaders out of the country as appeared by the evidence. Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD said that he had no authority from the Government at Ottawa to pay a six-pence, but he considered the danger was great, that while he could not afford to run the risk of losing the whole amount if the Dominion Government did not recoup the payment, yet, as it was absolutely necessary to have the leaders sent out of the country for one year, he was willing to pay one half of the amount and Mr. SMITH the other half, and the agreement was so made. When Mr. SMITH subsequently came to Ottawa he told him (Sir JOHN) the facts, to which he replied, "that of course the Lieut. Governor had no authority and no instruction to make any payment, because the facts arose so suddenly that he could not have any communication with the Government." He also told Mr. SMITH that if Mr. ARCHIBALD, as the representative of Canada in the North-West, took the responsibility of making a promise of payment on the faith of its repayment by the Dominion Government, Parliament would not allow the Hudson Bay Company or Mr. SMITH to lose the money. He (Sir JOHN) made that statement before the committee and he now repeated it.

The amendment was negatived on the following vote :—Ayes, 18 ; Nays, 49.

The item was then passed.

On item 43, to pay the sum agreed to be paid to certain parties for services during the troubles in the North-West Territories, $2,500,

Mr. BOWELL asked for explanations.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said this was the £500 that Mr. SMITH was authorized to pay some of the loyal French inhabitants of Manitoba when he went up there on behalf of the Government of Canada. The evidence clearly showed that the repayment of that sum was promised.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD.—There is no doubt about that.

Mr. RYAN asked whether these claims would be submitted to arbitration, as were the claims of other loyal men.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.—We have not yet decided about that.

The item passed, as also items 44 to 47 inclusive.

On item 48 to pay the cost in connection with the change of gauge of Intercolonial Railway, and for rolling stock—$800,000,

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked if this money was to be expended for the change of gauge on the part of the road now in operation.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was. There were 37 new engines being built which would be delivered by the time the gauge was changed, about the 1st July, or probably earlier ; and the trucks and cars necessary were also being constructed. For the mere moving of the rails a comparatively small amount would be necessary. The Government would also have to fear some expense on the Windsor branch. The would have to put that part of the road in repair and change its gauge.

Mr. BOWELL asked if any part of this money was for the change of gauge on the Intercolonial Railway proper.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE replied that this money was for the change of gauge between St. John and Shédiac, between Moncton and Halifax, between Truro and Picton, and between the Junction and Windsor.

The item passed.

On item 49, Post Offices (additional)—$58,000 in anwer to Mr. MACMILLAN,

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that the contract for the London Post Office had given out by the architect without tenders having been advertised for, to the contractors who previously had the work. This was done without his (Mr. MACKENZIE's) knowledge at the time, and without his authority, and it was the only instance of the kind that had occurred. The architect did this at the instance of the sub-architect in London who had charge of the works, who the hon. gentleman knew was no political friend of the present Government.

The item passed, as also item 50, and the committee rose and reported.

The House adjourned at 3:30 a. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Wednesday, March 31st, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

HARBOR MASTER FOR THREE RIVERS.

Mr. BARTHE asked whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint a Harbor Master for the City of Three Rivers, and when ?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—There is a Bill now before the House with reference to the appointment of Harbor Masters. If it should become law the appointment will be made.

A JUDGE FOR NORFOLK.

Mr. WALLACE (Norfolk) asked whether, and when, it is the intention of the Government to appoint a Judge for the County of Norfolk?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—A Judge for the County of Norfolk has been appointed.

A PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAW.

Mr. WALLACE (Norfolk) asked whether, in consideration of the petitions that have been presented to this House, praying for the passage of a Prohibitory Liquor Law, it is the intention of the Government to initiate, sanction or aid legislation to prohibit the manufacture, importation or sale of wines and spirituous and malt liquors?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The Government will always be prepared to sanction all abstinence from drinking intoxicating liquors.

A RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. WALLACE (Norfolk) asked whether, during the Parliamentary Recess, it is the intention of the Government to renew negotiations for a Reciprocity Treaty with the United States?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We will always be glad to negotiate for a Reciprocity Treaty with any nation.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. WALLACE (Norfolk) asked whether it is the intention of the Government to re-arrange the Tariff, so as to provide for the imposition of duties on all articles, the product of the soil or of the farm, when coming into Canada from the United States, so long as duties are levied by the United States upon similar articles going from Canada into the American market?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We never like to give information on so confidential a subject as the Tariff in advance of bringing it down.

SOREL HARBOR MASTER.

Mr. CARON asked for what reason GEORGE HENRY BRAMLEY, Esq., of the town of Sorel, has been dismissed as Harbor Master of the port of Sorel, and PIERRE BELLEFEUILLE appointed in his place; and for what reason the Government refuses to pay the said GEORGE HENRY BRAMLEY the sum of $212.50 for services as Harbor Master of Sorel from 1st January, 1874, to 15th September of same year, and $100 for services in superintending repairing and rigging Floating Lights Nos. 1, 2 and 3, Lake St. Peter?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—GEORGE HENRY BRAMLEY was appointed by the late Government at a salary of $300 a year, as an officer of the Trinity House of Montreal, which was abolished in July, 1873. The office was therefore practically abolished. Mr. BELLEFEUILLE was appointed in July, 1874, and was paid by fees. Mr. BRAMLEY is entitled to $166, which the Government have always been ready to pay, but he claims $100 for services connected with Lights Nos. 1, 2 and 3, which the Government do not recognize nor do they recognize his claim for two months' salary after his ceasing to hold office.

TERMS OF UNION WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. DECOSMOS asked whether the Hon. the Premier is aware that the letter found on page 11 of the "Message relating to the Terms of Union with the Province of British Columbia, viz :—

"Feb. 21, 1874.

"Sir,—The bearer is JAMES D. EDGAR, Esq., Barrister, Toronto, who visits Columbia as the Agent of the Dominion Government, to consult with your Government with reference to the late agitation concerning an extension of time for the construction of the Pacific Railway beyond that provided in the Terms of Union. Mr. EDGAR will explain to YOUR EXCELLENCY our anxiety to do everything in our power to meet the views of your people.

"He will be glad to receive your suggestions concerning matters which require attention.

"I am, Sir very respectfully,
"Your obedient servant,
"(Signed) A. MACKENZIE.

"His Excellency T. W. TRUTCH,
"Lieutenant Governor,
"Victoria, British Columbia."

was never delivered to Governor TRUTCH by Mr. J. D. EDGAR, nor any one else.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I became aware of it a week ago.

DISALLOWANCE OF PROVINCIAL ACTS.

Mr. DECOSMOS asked what are the reasons why HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL disallowed "An Act to amend and consolidate the Laws affecting Crown Lands in British Columbia;" and also "An Act to make provisions for the better administration of Justice in British Columbia."

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER in reply, read a lengthy statement showing that the Acts referred to were disallowed because no reservation of lands had ever been made for the Indians in British Columbia, and because the Indian title had never been extinguished in that Province. It had always been the policy of England to treat with the Indians to acquire their territorial rights and to compensate them for such lands as they obtained from them by treaties.

THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY'S CLAIMS.

Mr. SCHULTZ asked whether it is the intention of the Government to recognize and pay the claims of the Hudson Bay Company for alleged losses incurred during the Red River Insurrection of 1869-70?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to recognize any alleged losses. If the Government find any real losses that they should recognize, they will come to Parliament and ask Parliament to sanction their payment.

A GEOLOGICAL MUSEUM.

Mr. GOUDGE asked whether it is the intention of the Government during the Recess to take steps with a view to the establishmet of a Musenm in the City of Ottawa of a character similar to those established in Washington and London, England, embracing Geological collections, and collections of agricultural produce, analysis and implements, manufactures, machinery, &c., &c?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It is not the intention of the Government to do this.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD SURVEYS.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) asked when will the several surveying parties, required to complete the surveys for the Canada Pacific Railway, on the Mainland of British Columbia, be despatched to that Province.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Most of the parties have been there all winter and some of them have been at work all winter. Only those whose presence was necessary in order to work out the results of last summer's surveys, have come here. They will all be at their posts very soon.

REPORTS OF THE C. P. R. SURVEY.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) asked whether the Reports of the Engineers employed during the year 1874 on the survey of the Canada Pacific Railway, will be published during the present Session; and if the Report of Mr. HORETZKY, as to his explorations on the Peace River route, will be published?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—It will be impossible to publish those reports this session, but all the reports conveying information will be published as soon as possible. The maps are in course of preparation.

MONTREAL VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. DEVLIN—The Government having sold to the City Corporation the Quebec Gate Barracks, having handed over the Logan Farm, St. Helen's Island, and other Government property—while the Drill-Shed is a ruin and the Volunteers only occupy a portion of it on sufferance from the Corporation, has any, and if so, what arrangement has been made for the accommodation of the Volunteers and City Corps for drilling purposes.

Hon. Mr. VAIL was understood to say in reply that the Government were not in possession of sufficient information to be able to give a reply on the subject, but they would attend to the matter.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

That by the 56th clause of the British North America Act, 1867, it is in effect enacted that when the GOVERNOR GENERAL assents to a Bill in the QUEEN'S name, the QUEEN in Council may within two years after its receipt disallow such Act.

That by the 90th clause of the said Statute it is enacted that the above provisions shall extend and apply to the Legislatures of the several Provinces as if re-enacted, with the substitution of the Lieut. Governor for the GOVERNOR GENERAL, of the GOVERNOR GENERAL for the QUEEN, of one year or two years, and of the Province of Canada,

That in the opinion of this House the power of disallowance of Acts of a Local Legislature conferred by the said Statute is thereunder vested in the GOVERNOR GENERAL in Council, and that HIS EXCELLENCY'S Ministers are responsible to Parliament for the action of the GOVERNOR GENERAL in exercising or abstaining from the exercise of the said power.

That by a letter dated 13th December, 1872, the Registrar of the Privy Council of the United Kingdom conveyed to the Colonial Office the opinion of the Lord President of the Council that the power of confirming or disallowing local Acts is under the said Statute vested in the GOVERNOR GENERAL acting under the advice of his constitutional advisers.

That notwithstanding the premises by a despatch dated 30th June, 1873, the Secretary for the Colonies in response to an application from the GOVERNOR GENERAL for instructions on the subject informed HIS EXCELLENCY that he was advised by the Law Officers of the Crown that the question of disallowance or allowance of Local Acts is a matter in which HIS EXCELLENCY must act on his own individual discretion, and in which he cannot be guided by the advice of his responsible Ministers.

That this House feels bound in assertion of the constitutional rights of the Canadian people to record its protest against and dissent from the said instruction, and to declare its determination to hold HIS EXCELLENCY'S Ministers responsible for his action in the exercise of the power so conferred by the said Statute.

He said—I ask the House to affirm the principle contained in the third resolution. It is hardly necessary to observe that no more delicate function could be discharged by the Executive authority than the function which entrusted to it by this 90th clause. I can conceive of no function which has to be exercised with greater caution, under greater restraint or with a more careful prevision of its consequences to the future of the confederacy than the power of disallowing acts of the Local Legislatures, and the higher the degree of caution, and the more delicate the duty, the more obvious it must be that the case is one in which the constitutional doctrine with reference to the responsibility of the Government, ought to be strictly applied—ought to be implied if they be not on the face of the Act, but being on the face of it, ought to be rigidly and amply enforced. Therefore, I ask that the House affirm the proposition that this power of disallowance, which is expressly vested, not in the GOVERNOR GENERAL, but in the GOVERNOR in Council, is so vested, and that his Ministers are responsible for the exercise of that power. At a very early period in the history of the Confederation, the hon. member for Kingston, occupying the position of First Minister and Minister of Justice, thought it proper—and no man can dispute the propriety of that course—to propose to the Council and through it to HIS EXCELLENCY, to assent to certain general rules relative to the exercise or abstinence from exercising this power. I am not called upon to discuss the policy of those rules but simply to direct the attention of the House to the fact that it was then declared to be the opinion of the Council, sanctioned by HIS EXCELLENCY and adopted not merely tacitly, but I may say expressly, by Parliament (having reference to the various transactions which have taken place in Parliament) that this power was to be exercised through the Council and that for the exercising or abstaining from exercising of which the Ministry must be responsible to Parliament. At an early period in the history of the Confederation, my hon. friend from Chateauguay, with reference to a Bill passed by the Legislature of Quebec, having reference to the navigation of the St. Lawrence, invited the attention of the House by a motion, to the course which he thought fit HIS EXCELLENCY'S Ministers should advise HIS EXCELLENCY to take with reference to that Act. Though the motion was withdrawn, there was no dissent from the opinion that the power should be exercised by HIS EXCELLENCY on the advice of his Ministers. The uniform course of practice since that time has been in accordance with that view. From time to time we have had returns brought down to us of correspondence that has taken place, and Orders in Council, with reference to the disallowance of Acts passed by the Local Legislatures, and I was going to say allowance of them, but that is not a strictly correct phrase. They have vitality from the assent of the Lieut. Governor, and their life is not dependent upon no affirmative action of HIS EXCELLENCY in Council. He can destroy but his assent is not necesary to life. . So we find repeated reports from the Minister of Justice of the day, on rare occasions, recommending the disallowance of Local Acts, and, in the vast majority of cases, recommending that it should be left to the courts to determine whether the Acts were beyond the power of the Legislatures. Upon an occasion not very far removed, the same view was held by the Imperial authorities, as the resolution which I move alleges. You will find in the sessional papers of 1873, at page 64, a letter dated 13th December, 1872, in which the Lord President of the Privy Council makes a communication with reference to the same subject matter, out of which this present motion arises. That communication reads thus :

"It appears to His Lordship that as the power "of confirming or disallowing Provincial Acts "is vested by the Statute in the GOVERNOR "GENERAL of the Dominion of Canada, acting "under the advice of his constitutional adviser, "there is nothing in this case which gives to "HER MAJESTY in Council any jurisdiction "over this question."

Thus there is a clear declaration which being transmitted from the colonial office to the GOVERNOR GENERAL of this country and being by the advice of his Privy Council, without remark laid before Parliament and acquiesced in, as it naturally would be, by Parliament, may be taken to be the accepted doctrine with reference to the theory of dis-allowance of local Acts, But a new state of things arose with reference to the same matter. In the Session of 1873 the House of Commons passed a resolution in which they did not, as I recollect, address HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, but declared it to be, in the opinion of the House, the duty of HIS EXCELLENCY'S Ministers to advise HIS EXCELLENCY, under certain circumstances, to disallow certain acts of the Legislature of New Brunswick. The House of Commons made no communication to HIS EXCELLENCY on that occasion, but they declared, as it certainly was competent for them to do, their opinion as to what the duty of the Ministry was in a certain emergency. It was competent for those Ministers, of course, to act upon or decline to act upon the resolutions of the House of Commons —to tender the advice, or refuse to tender it. They did not tender the advice, but neither did they tender advice to the contrary. As appears from sessional paper No. 25, of the session of 1874, the course which they recommended HIS EXCELLENCY to pursue was to refer the matter to the Imperial authorities for their instructions and guidance. The letter of HIS EXCELLENCY is dated May 27th, 1873, and in it he says :—"I have the "honor to enclose copy of a resolution, "carried in the House of Commons on "the 14th of May, by a majority of 35 "against the Government, urging the "disallowance by the GOVERNOR GENERAL "of certain Acts passed by the New "Brunswick Legislature, with a view of "legalizing a series of assessments, made "under the Common School Act of 1871, "and in amendment of that Act." Then His Lordship says he has been instructed by despatches from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, that the New Brunswick School Act of 1871 was within the competence of the Provincial Legislature, and that he was further advised by the Minister of Justice that the Acts recommended to be disallowed were equally within its competence. Then His Lordship goes on to say :—"Under these circumstances Sir JOHN MACDONALD has "announced to the House of Commons "that I am not at present prepared to "comply with the terms of the resolution "which has been passed in favor of the "disallowance of these Acts, but that it "is my intention to submit the circumstances of the case for the consideration "of HER MAJESTY'S Government, and to "await your further instruction. In "taking this step, I have followed the "course recommended to me by my responsible advisers." His Lordship also states that a considerable sum was voted for the purpose of defraying the legal expenses of those who proposed testing the legality of the School Act before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. He also subjoins a copy of a remonstrance addressed to him by a delegation from the Government of New Brunswick. That remonstrance is appended and contains in the 4th paragraph the following doctrine : —"The right of disallowance of Acts "passed by any of the Local Legislatures "is a statutory as well as a constitutional "power, vested in Your Excellency by the "British North America Act, and for "the exercise of which there is no responsibility to the Parliament of Canada." That is the statement of certain members of the Government of New Brunswick. The communication which is also enclosed —says :

"The resolution adopted by the House on the 14th of May, was duly laid before HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, and I have it in command to state that he is asked by one branch of the Parliament of Canada to exercise the royal prerogative by disallowing certain Acts of the New Brunswick Legislature. It is stated that these Acts were passed for the purpose of legalizing certain assessments made under the Common School Act of 1871, and in amendment of such Act, the object sought in getting these Acts disallowed is to give the parties complaining of the School Act an opportunity of bringing such Act judicially before HER MAJESTY'S Privy Council.

"Now HIS EXCELLENCY has been already instructed by HER MAJESTY'S Government, in the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in England, that the Act in question was within the competence and jurisdiction of the New Brunswick Legislature. Such being the case, HIS EXCELLENCY deems it his duty to apply to HER MAJESTY'S Government for further instructions in the matter.

"I further desire to state that considering the gravity of the question, and the number of HER MAJESTY'S subjects complaining of the School Act, the Government will be prepared to ask Parliament for a vote of money to defray all the expenses of the appeal."

Those instructions were received by a letter dated 30th June 1873, from the Secretary of State for the colonies, in which the following occurs :—

"I referred to the Law Officers of the Crown your Lordship's despatch of the 27th May last, in which you requested instructions as to the course you should take with regard to the resolution of the Canadian House of Commons. I am advised :—

"1. That these Acts of the New Brunswick Legislature are, like the Acts of 1871, within the powers of that Legislature.

"2. That the Canadian House of Commons cannot constitutionally interfere with their operation by passing a resolution such as that of the 14th of May last. If such a resolution were allowed to have effect it would amount to a virtual repeal of the section of the British North America Act, 1867, which gives the exclusive right of legislation in these matters to the Provincial Legislatures.

"3. That this a matter in which you must act on your own individual discretion, and on which you cannot be guided by the advice of your responsible Ministers of the Dominion."

The House will observe that the resolution which I have the honor to submit does not at all interfere with the opinions expressed by the law officers of the Crown as to the competency of the Legislature of New Brunswick to pass the Acts in question. Its root is deeper than that altogether. The point is that the instruction given with reference to a particular case—given with reference to a particular case as to which the local executive of one of the Provinces had asserted the Imperial Government was aware that this Act of disallowance was an Act which the GOVERNOR GENERAL was to exercise free from any responsibility to his Ministers of the Parliament of the Dominion. It was given with reference to a question of disallowance, with regard to which his Canadian Ministers had advise him to draw his inspiration from across the water. This instruction is that the question of disallowance is a matter in which HIS EXCELLENCY must act on his own individual discretion, and on which he could not be guided by the advice of his responsible Ministers. It appears to me that it is impossible such a doctrine can be maintained consistant with the spirit and letter of the Constitution, I am not here to deny for a moment that there is that portion of the executive power and authority in the GOVERNOR GENERAL that he may at any moment, in reference to any of those matters on which he is called upon to concur or disagree with his Ministers, take the responsibility of disagreeing, but what this House is called upon to say is that in this matter especially a grave mistake has been made. The GOVERNOR GENERAL has no such power. Under the British North America Act that power is vested in the GOVERNOR GENERAL in Council, and the GOVERNOR GENERAL can not act on his own individual discretion. He cannot disallow except on the advice of his Ministers. Such advice being tendered it is competent for him to take the responsibility of saying, "I believe I ought not to follow your advice." It is for his Ministers to withdraw that advice or withdraw themselves from his service, and then the issue is, whether the Ministry or the GOVERNOR GENERAL is right. That is the question which arises in a disagreement between the Sovereign or the representative of the Sovereign and responsible Ministers. But that is not the point here. The point here is that there is an assertion that the power lies with the GOVERNOR GENERAL of disallowing Local Acts, to be exercised by him individually, at his individual discretion, and in respect of which he cannot be guided by the voice of his responsible Ministers. I maintain that there is no such power. I maintain that the language which is contained in this instruction is of such a character that if it were acceded to by this Parliament, it would be destructive of the principle of responsible Government. That being the case, I conceive it to be the duty of this House, in some way or other, to re-affirm, as was often done in earlier days, the doctrine of responsible government, and to declare in the particular instance which has brought this subject before the House, that the power of disallowing Local Acts is vested, not in the GOVERNOR GENERAL, but in the GOVERNOR GENERAL in Council, and that his action when he takes the responsibility, which he has the right to take of disagreeing with the advice of his Council, is action to be taken by him under that sense of responsibility, which in all cases under our constitution must attend such action—the responsibility that he thereby places an issue between his Ministers and himself before the country. That is the whole of my proposition. I do not think it would be useful to add words to it. It appears to me that we ought to record our protest against, and our dissent from, the instructions contained in the despatch I have referred to.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—With the general scope of the remarks of my hon. friend from South Bruce, I entirely agree. I think there can be no doubt of the fact that the Constitutional Act provides that the Executive Council must necessarily advise the GOVERNOR GENERAL in relation to the disallowance of Local Acts. The 50th, 57th and 90th Sections of the Confederation Act provide explicitly for that, reading them the one with the other, and there has not been, so far as I am aware, any case in which a different course has been taken; in other words, that has been the invariable practice, in accordance with the recognized constitutional usage. Why such a despatch was written I cannot well understand, but, at all events, the doctrine enunciated therein cannot possibly be recognized in this country, nor can it be recognized in England, or any other country where free Parliamentary Government exists. But while I think that there can be no question about this, and while I entirely believe in the assertion of our rights whenever those rights are assailed —while I believe that it is the duty of the Government to make that assertion in the first place and that Parliament through the Executive, or the Executive acting upon Parliament, should take such action as would vindicate the rights of the Government and of the people—while I admit all this, I think it is perhaps not convenient that we should, by formal resolutions, place on the journals the assertion of a doctrine that can hardly be gainsaid—the assertion of a self-evident principle in regard to Executive action under our Parliamentary system, because it might lend color to the idea that there may possibly be some party who doubted that those constitutional rights which my hon. friend has asserted so properly did exist, or were strictly in force by Statute Law. The discussion is of course perfectly proper, but I would strongly advise my hon. friend, having asserted the principle as he has done—having placed his views on record by making the motion he has—not to press the matter any further by having a formal resolution passed. As I have said it is really admitted on all hands, in this country at all events, and I think also by all those in England who have carefully read our constitution. I can only account for the observation made in this despatch by supposing it to be some hasty expression of opinion made without considering its effect. At all events I strongly recommend that this motion be not pressed any further. It will of course go upon the records, and my hon. friend will have had the opportunity of expressing his opinion which I am sure is the opinion that must prevail with every one in this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Since 1841 the principle of responsible Government has prevailed in Canada, and although at first it was not always carried out, yet it was and is as firmly fixed in Canada as it is in the Mother Country, so far as is consistent with our relation to the paramount authority. That responsible government ought not to be infringed upon for a moment. It is the birthright of many of us, as well as the right of those of us who lived before the doctrine was acceded to and established. There can be no doubt about that. The principle is affirmed in the preamble to the Confederation Act, where it is said that the Provinces have expressed a desire to be Federally united, with a Constitution similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom. Therefore the doctrine as laid down in the resolution and clearly enforced by the hon. member for South Bruce can not and ought not to be contravened, and any serious infraction of it would be strenuously resisted. The right of disallowance of any Act of a Colonial Legislature by the QUEEN herself, in her personal capacity and by virtue of her royal prerogative, separate from the advice of her advisers, has long since passed away. The American revolution had pretty well settled that question.

But besides that, it is expressed in the Confederation Act that no Act passed by this Parliament can be disallowed except by the Queen in Council. Any instrument signed by the Sovereign herself, no matter how formal or how strong, by which she declares that by her own royal will she disallows any Act of this Parliament would have no effect whatever unless it was the act of HER MAJESTY in Council. If the Order in Council is not made, the Act will remain in force, no matter how strongly HER MAJESTY might express her personal desire and will that it should be disallowed. The 90th section of the Confederation Act is identical quoad the Acts of the Provincial Legislatures, with the 56th section, merely substituting the GOVERNOR GENERAL for the QUEEN, so that it should read GOVERNOR GENERAL in Council, and therefore, of course, the GOVERNOR GENERAL alone cannot disallow an Act. If he attempted to do so his attempt would be in vain; it must be done by the GOVERNOR in Council, that is, by the GOVERNOR and his Council, and they are of course responsible for the issue of the order. Their legally, constitutionally and politically responsible for it. With respect to the two Acts which gave rise to the despatch in question, the late Government were responsible, they held themselves responsible, they could not avoid being responsible, and they now consider themselves responsible. In the first instance the question of the disallowance of the School Act of 1871 came before the Government, and of course it had to be dealt with. My hon. friends opposite have had a painful experience of the delicacy of that subject, and it was pressed upon us as seriously then as it has been pressed upon them since. The GOVERNOR GENERAL, by advice of his Council, invoked the opinion of HER MAJESTY'S Imperial advisers, and the Government were responsible for recommending the GOVERNOR to take that course, and they were also responsible for not disallowing the Act, but allowing it to remain in operation. Then when that resolution which I may say I think my hon. friends opposite will now admit was rather ill-advised, but it was a political move, and it had its success, and I do not complain of such political moves, especially if they are crowned with success—when that resolution was passed by this House, expressing their regret that HIS EXCELLENCY had not been advised to disallow these acts, of course it was conveyed by myself to the GOVERNOR GENERAL and I was responsible for laying that resolution before him. It was suggested and advised by the Government of the day that as the Imperial Government had been advised as regards the original Act they should be advised with respect to the other Acts which were assailed by that resolution of the House. The Government were responsible for that advice and for deferring or refusing or omitting to carry out the expressed views of this branch of the Legislature. I must say that when the despatch which has been commented upon by the hon. gentleman arrived here it rather surprised me; it went infinitely farther than I had idea it would go, and I say at once that I think the Minister who sent that despatch made a grave error in constitutional law. There is no doubt that the GOVERNOR GENERAL can only disallow Provincial acts by consent of his Council and they must assent in the most formal manner; their assent must be made an Order in Council. I can have no doubt about that question. As the hon. member for South Bruce has truly said, the GOVERNOR GENERAL or the Sovereign may refuse to accept the advice of his Ministers, and then it is for the Ministry of the day to yield their opinion to the GOVERNOR GENERAL and adopt his opinion and make it their own and be held responsible for it or say they will not be responsible for it and therefore HIS EXCELLENCY must find other advisers. There is no doubt that this is the constitutional principle, and there is no means of avoiding that responsibility. The question now is whether the hon. member for South Bruce will press his motion or be satisfied with the discussion and expression of opinion and accept the advice of the First Minister. Upon that point I can make no suggestion; it would be out of place for me to do so, but no doubt the hon. gentleman will be guided by his sense of what is right. I can only say if the resolution is pressed I shall vote for it.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON — Of course responsible Government has been established in this country since 1841, but it was only a principle affirmed by our Legislature assented to by the Governor. It was not a part of our written constitution.

There was nothing in the law to that effect, and the result was that two or three years, afterwards a Governor whose honesty and ability were undoubted, but who came from a country where despotism prevailed, where there was no responsible Government, was not disposed to accept that principle, as he came to this country with the notion that there could be no other Government than a despotic one for a colony. That was Lord METCALFE whose honesty and ability, I respect as much as any man. We had to affirm the principle of responsible Government over and over again ; we fought for it at the polls, and we carried it after a great struggle with the Governor. The battle was in the colony and not in England. Now, we have a written constitution, modelled after that of England, but of late there appears to be a tendency in England to deny this principle. It had been affirmed by resolution, and adopted in practice, but there is no express statutory provision on the subject. That being the case, when we find the principle denied by a Colonial Minister it is for us to express our opinion upon the subject, and to declare most explicitly that we intend to maintain our constitution intact and not expose it to be changed by the whim of any Minister in England. I think therefore that we should pass this resolution and let the Government of England understand that while we do not wish to infringe the privileges of the Crown we are determined to stand by our rights.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—The declarations of the gentlemen who have spoken upon this question are so uniform and so satisfactory, that there really seems to be very little to be said on the merits of the question. I simply rise to say a word upon the point referred to by the First Minister as to the expediency of withdrawing this motion. Of course if the hon. member for South Bruce sees his way to withdraw this motion, I can have no possible objection, and if after this conversation the First Minister remains of opinion that the motion had better be withdrawn, I would unite with him in asking my hon. friend from South Bruce to withdraw it. But I desire to point out what I think are valid reasons in favor of a contrary course. We are led to the discussion of this matter by a certain despatch—the despatch of June, 1873. We have heard the main doctrine of that despatch challenged by hon. gentlemen on this side, and denounced even in stronger terms by my right hon. friend opposite. This despatch is in our Journals. It has so far as we know never been answered. If my right hon. friend, taking the view which he now takes of this despatch, had formulated an answer to it by Minute of Council and brought the matter in some way to issue, it might not be necessary for us to take any action now. If the First Minister has brought, or if he will now say that he will bring this matter to issue in a friendly way by means of a Minute of Council and a despatch that he will put this matter in the way of reaching a proper understanding, then I think we shall have some valid grounds for sustaining him in urging the withdrawal of the motion of my hon. friend from South Bruce.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I have only to say one word with reference to what my hon. friend from Chateauguay has said. He has raised one point which I did not think of alluding to, but there is, however, no harm in saying that the Government did feel it their duty to call the attention of the Imperial Government to this matter in the usual way ; and having said what I did to my hon. friend from South Bruce, I do not feel disposed to say anything more on the subject. The principle has been so well established in this country, and always has been since the close of the long and successful struggle of the party to which I belong with Lord METCALF when he set the principle at defiance and caused the retirement of the then Liberal Administration. The principle I say has been so thoroughly established that no one now—my hon. friend opposite then be longed to the party that assisted Lord METCALF in his attitude of hostility to this principle—no one now on either side but will frankly state that it is impossible to endorse the doctrine laid down in the despatch in question. But I do see an objection to placing on the Journals of the House anything affirming an established principle in our system of Government.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—Unless it is challenged.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—No doubt it has been challenged in this despatch, and to that extent the issue has been raised, and the issue would have been complete if the GOVERNOR GENERAL had acted upon the recommendation in that despatch, and the Ministry of the day had yielded to it and sustained him in that position, or had resisted it and taken the natural consequences, namely, of resigning. As it is, it is raised to a certain extent, but I am quite sure the unanimous expression of opinion in the House, which must represent the unanimous opinion of the country, will be abundantly sufficient without our inserting a truism upon our Journals. As I stated the Government felt bound, their attention having been called to the matter sometime ago, to take such action as the Executive alone can take.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Had my hon. friend not made the last satisfactory observations he has made I should have felt very great reluctance to withdraw the resolution temporarily, but his last observations have removed any feeling of difficulty on that subject. If the late Government did not think fit to take any action upon this despatch, which struck my hon. friend from Kingston with surprise when he received it, we must remember that the despatch was received at a comparatively late day, and when he was otherwise much engaged. If I found that a Liberal Government had remained in office up to this time with this despatch before them without taking any action upon it, I should not find the same excuse which I readily accord to the member for Kingston, both with reference to his principles and his position, for not having taken any steps with reference to this matter. But I must express a moderate measure of dissent from the doctrine that it is not fitting that this resolution should go upon the Journals because it happens to be true. I could only wish that all the entries in our Journals possessed the same admirable quality. I do not think that under other circumstances there would have been any impropriety in our placing on record an assertion of the general principle of responsible Government. But it having been announced that the Executive has taken action I cannot doubt that my duty is to withdraw the motion. Parliament will meet again in a short time, and though I have no doubt what the result of the Executive action will be, yet, if it should be unsatisfactory it will be competent for Parliament to deal with the subject unembarrassed by any such considerations as these addressed to us to-day. I cannot doubt that the happy unanimity of this discussion will tend to strengthen the hands of my hon. friend and to produce that result which we all desire. I am glad the views contained in this resolution have met such unanimous acceptance. I endeavored to present it to the House in such moderate terms as would expose the constitutional doctrine without challenging any reply. I might have referred to other topics and have used stronger language, and I would have done so had I expressed fully my sentiments. With the leave of the House I will withdraw my motion.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—My hon. friend must not suppose that I objected to placing his motion upon the journals because they were true, but I thought it inadvisable and unnecessary to record a truism upon our journals.

Mr. IRVING—I hope my hon. friend does not mean that any gentleman will be estopped from taking another view upon the subject on another occasion.

THE SALT INTERESTS OF THE DOMINION.

Mr. FARROW moved the order standing in his name for a Special Committee on the Salt Interests of the Dominion be discharged, remarking that he would take the earliest opportunity of submitting the motion next session.

The order was discharged.

RECIPROCITY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. PLUMB moved an address to His EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, praying that he will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a statement showing the total amount expended and disbursed or agreed to be paid by this Government, for the furtherance of the recent negotiations with the United States for a Treaty of Commercial Reciprocity. He desired to offer a few remarks in order to refute certain statements which had been made, which were exceedingly prejudicial, not only in regard to the negotiation of a Commercial Treaty with the United States, but also in respect to the interests of the Dominion. The condition of the country since the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty had never been such as to warrant the employment of negotiators to frame a treaty with the United States.

different to that which was abrogated. It had been stated that the prosperity of this country, since the abrogation of the treaty, had not been satisfactory, and he desired to show that such was not the fact. It was said that our population, which was the touch-stone by which we were to ascertain our prosperity, had increased only 13 per cent. during a certain period, whereas during the same period the population of the United States had increased 23 per cent., as given by Mr. JENKINS in a recent speech at Manchester. It must be remembered that that increase of population in the Republic was due to immigration and to the exceptional condition of the country at the time. Owing, in fact, to the large wages commanded by artizans and the large bounties given to soldiers during the war, the effect of that excessive immigration was now seen in the commercial reaction which has set in, and the population of the United States was now rapidly decreasing. There never had been a time in the History of Canada when its commercial prosperity was more marked than at the time when the negotiations for a new treaty were recently opened at Washington as was shown by the following statistics :—In 1873 the shipping of Nova Scotia amounted to 430,000 tons, New Brunswick 300,000, and Prince Edward 40,000 ; the city of St. John owned 250,000 tons, and was the fourth town in regard to shipping in the Empire. The Dominion Fisheries produced in 1870 $6,577,392, and in 1871 $9,570,-116. Our debt of $120,000,000, was an average of £6.3.3 per head, and more than half of it was represented by public works, canals, harbors, light-houses, river improvements and railways, and over $40,000,000 by railway and Provincial securities. The trade in 1869 was $128,000,000, and increased so rapidly that in 1873 it amounted to $217,000,000. Our bank capital which was $30,000,000 in 1870, aggregated $55,000,000 in 1873. The bank circulation of Ontario and Quebec was $9,000,000 in 1864, and $33,000,000 in 1873 ; the deposits in 1864, amounted to $24,500,000, and in 1873, $76,000,000. During late years the Dominion had added British Columbia to the Confederation, a Province which would prove an El Dorado. Its coal fields were capable of yielding 16,000,000 tons to the square mile, and the coal measures of Nanaimo were 2,500 feet deep. It was argued that in the treaty Canada would derive great benefit from the trade flowing through the impossible Caughnawaga Canal ; but it was forgotten that we had never secured the right of the navigation of Lake Champlain. It was moreover said that we would secure the American Coasting Trade by obtaining the right for Canadian vessels, of being nominally placed on the American registry ; but that idea was entirely incorrect. Undoubtedly, if such a treaty as that proposed were to come into force, it would destroy our manufacturing industries, which could not compete with the manufactories of both England and the United States. With respect to our manufactories of agricultural implements, if we were able to compete with American manufactories it would be found that we could not send our machinery into their markets in consequence of the operation of the Patent Laws. He considered that the selection of the commissioner sent by the Government to the United States was eminently proper under the circumstances ; but that gentleman should have possessed sufficient political astuteness to have known that the Government, with whom he was attempting to negotiate a treaty, was not in a position to make such a treaty ; because it was on the point of dissolution and that party found itself during the last elections no longer able to retain power. A still more serious objection to the treaty was that while Canada was committed to its provisions, the American Government remained free, and they had deposited it in their archives to bring it forward on the next occasion when Canadian Commissioners endeavor to negotiate a reciprocity treaty. Canada had, to use the expression of the commissioner himself, flung concession after concession at the heads of the Americans until we had nothing left to offer them in return for negotiating a treaty. He hoped that some statement would be made by hon. members on the Government side of the House on this question.

The resolution was carried.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY TELEGRAPH.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved an address to His Excellency the GOVERNOR GENERAL for copies of all specifications and contracts for any portion of a Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph, with all correspondence thereto. He regretted that the course of public business rendered it impossible to reach the motion at an earlier date; and he had entertained a hope that the fact of that motion appearing on the paper should have been sufficient to have induced the Government to discharge what he would endeavor to show was a plain duty. The hon. the First Minister had stated to the House that the Government during recess had made contracts for the construction of the line of the Canada Pacific Railway Telegraph extending from the shores of Lake Superior across to Red River, from Red River to Fort Pelly, and from thence across the Rocky Mountains to Cache Creek, a very short distance from the Pacific coast. The Government, no doubt, were invested with large powers, but they held these powers under certain constitutional restrictions and they could not disregard, however important were the public interests to be served, the restrictions imposed on them by constitutional practice without infringing the privileges of Parliament and establishing precedents that were very dangerous in the conduct of public business. He would endeavor to show, that these contracts in the first place, were made without any authority of law, that the Government had not power to make any contract for the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph, and in the next place if they had had a law providing for such construction they had not the power to make the contract, because the money was not voted, and it was laid down in clear and express terms that a Government could not make an absolute contract without an appropriation from the House or the contract must be subject to the approval of Parliament. If the Government had laid the contracts on the table as he held they were bound to do, the House would have been in a position to judge whether these contracts should or should not have been made. There was no law providing for the construction of a telegraph, for the Act simply provides that the laws of electric telegraph shall be constructed along the railway over its whole extent, so soon as practicable after the location of the line shall have been determined upon The policy of that law was expressed on the face of it. The successful operation of a line of railway could only be carried on in connection with a telegraph line alongside the railway. If the telegraph were a few miles distant from the road it would be of comparatively little value. The law provided, and it was in accordance with common sense, that the telegraph should not be in advance of the location of the railway, and it might be in advance of the construction of the road because it would be useful for construction purposes as well as for operating the road. The contracts entered into by the hon. First Minister during recess of Parliament involved an expenditure of one million dollars of the public money. It was desirable that the House should consider the matters involved by making such an expenditure on telegraphs before the railway was located. In one of the settled and well known districts the Government had changed the location thirty miles from the point originally proposed; at Lake Superior a change of sixty miles had been made; and if the road in British Columbia were located as indicated by the hon. First Minister in his recent speech, the telegraph would be one hundred miles from the railway. He asked the House if it was common sense policy, assuming that the Government had a law authorising their action, which they had not, and had an amount voted for the work, which they had not,—that the Administration should expend one million dollars on a line of telegraph which was located so as to be utterly useless either for the construction or operation of the road. He would now show that the road had not been located when the contracts were let. The hon. First Minister had himself stated to the House that one of the objects of constructing the telegraph line was to facilitate the successful prosecution of the surveys. He (Mr. TUPPER) did not approve of the expenditure of a million dollars for the purpose of facilitating surveys, but the explanation afforded proof that the road had not been located, otherwise surveys would be unnecessary. The hon. First Minister stated that the Government had given out contracts from Lake Superior to Fort Garry to Messrs. OLIVER, DAVIDSON & Co., from Fort Garry to Fort Pelly to Messrs. SIFTON, GLASS & Co., from Fort Pelly to Fort Edmonton, to Mr. WM. FULLER, from Fort Edmonton to Cache Creek to Mr. F. J. BARNARD. He fully approved of the constitutional doctrine laid down the other night by the hon. member for South Bruce, and found in Mr. TODD'S work on Parliamentary Government, and yet, notwithstanding constitutional authority, notwithstanding there was no vote of money for the purpose, notwithstanding that the law required that the railway should be located before the telegraph line was constructed, the House was coolly told by the hon. First Minister that he had made contracts with friends of the Government to the extent of one million dollars for a telegraph line. The hon. First Minister by constitutional practice and by the practice of previous Governments, was bound to lay on the table the contracts, and obtain after the fact what he ought to have obtained before it, the approval of Parliament thereto.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was no objection whatever to the motion. He had intended to bring the contracts down before now, but the last of them was only executed two or three days ago. He would lay them on the table without any further delay, and also the contracts entered into for the steel rails, though some of them were not yet quite completed.

Mr. BOWELL said before this motion was carried something more than the Address should be put upon record. The hon. member for Cumberland had shown that the Government had exceeded their powers. From the speeches made during the present session the House was aware of this fact—that the route of the Pacific Railway, even through the prairie portion of Manitoba, had not yet been located, and if it were not located, it would only be an act of courtesy if the Premier explained on what authority he had entered on a contract so directly at variance with the provisions of the Canada Pacific Railway Act. He (Mr. BOWELL) therefore moved that the following words be added to the Address: "and this House regrets that contracts have been made by the Government for the construction of a line of telegraph from Lake Superior to Cache Creek before the location of the line of the Canada Pacific Railway has been determined upon." He did not propose to occupy the time of the House in discussing the motion or by enlarging upon the subject. He moved this amendment upon the broad principle that the Government, however strong they might be, had no right to enter into contracts from which very large expenditures of money must necessarily flow, without having at least a semblance of law to justify their acts, or before having submitted these contracts for the approval of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the line had been located where the contracts were let and he conceived that the Government were acting acccording to law. They had asked the House for money to carry out what was provided for last session in the Act which declared that a line of telegraph should be constructed in advance of the Canada Pacific Railway.

Mr. BOWELL—But after its location.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Then I contend we are constructing after the location of the line, where they are erecting the telegraph at present. The line is located by the Chief Engineer and his assistants.

Mr. BOWELL asked if the line was located from Lake Superior to Cache Creek.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was located from Lake Superior to a certain point, and from that point to Rat Portage it was not located. Then from Rat Portage to the Red River it was located; and from there westward it was being located.

Mr. SCHULTZ said the only portion of the work that had been done was that under of the Pacific Railway to be useful in the construction of that work. He wished to know if the route of the railroad had been so far established as to admit of the contract of Messrs. GLASS, SIFTON & Co., about 23 miles, and that had not been placed where the line was completed by any means. No location had been made there, and so far as he (Mr. SCHULTZ) could understand, no location was intended to be made where that line was put up.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman's statement was incorrect.

Mr. PLUMB said the line must be put up along the route of the location of the telegraph line, or were the contractors to locate the line for the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had already stated the line was to be put up where the road was to be located (these being the Engineer's instructions based upon his original suggestion) and he did not know that a single mile of telegraph line was being erected anywhere except on the line of the road.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK asked the Premier if he could tell the House whether the line was erected from Fort Edmonton to Cache Creek. Unless this had been done, and it was known definitely where the line of railway was to run the contracts had been improperly given out. He also wished to know in reference to this contract for number one section given to OLIVER, DAVIDSON & Co., whether their tender was the lowest, and if not who were the lowest tenders, and why the contract was refused to them, because he had been informed by letters received within the last few days that the parties who claimed to be the lowest tenders offered a cash security on their contract. One of their sureties was a bank in Western Canada, and the other a responsible merchant in Toronto. He (Mr. KIRKPATRICK) was informed that they offered to deposit a cash payment if necessary but the offer was nevertheless refused.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman's information was incorrect. The contract was first assigned to SMITH, WADDELL & Co., whose tender was the lowest thereon. After waiting some weeks they were unable to comply with the terms —that was—to give security. The next lowest tenderers were then informed that the contract would be given to them on their furnishing security. They were not able apparently to furnish it, but made arrangements with the parties whose names were now in the contract, to furnish security.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said he was aware that SMITH & WADDELL'S tender had not been accepted, but was informed that they had offered good security.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said after the other parties had been informed that their tender was accepted, some persons came to the Department on behalf of SMITH, WADDELL & Co., and stated that if they were given an opportunity they would be able to furnish security. It was then too late.

Sir. JOHN MACDONALD said if the contracts were let before the the line of railway was located, a gross violation of the privileges of this House had been committed, because the Government had no authority to let contracts until after the line was located. They all knew what the location meant. It meant that the road should be marked out just as was the foundation of a house before it was built. Yet without any such location being made in this instance here were the contracts let, by which the contractors bound themselves to finish the line before the 1st Oct., 1875, and he understood they were now actually engaged at work between Forts Garry and Pelly.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That portion of the route is located.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—What! located from Fort Garry to Fort Pelly?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Yes.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the line of railway he understood was to be located 30 miles north of Fort Garry.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there were two Fort Garrys. The place referred to by the hon. gentleman was Winnipeg. The Fort Garry to which he (Mr. MACKENZIE) referred was the lower one.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD—That is the Stone Fort—the one Mr. MULLIGAN had offered to defend against Riel. The hon. Premier, in his speech of the 5th March, stated that it was proposed to cross the Red River some 23 miles north of Winnipeg, and in the same speech the hon. gentleman stated that the line was not located for which these contracts were now given out. The hon. gentleman was therefore guilty of a gross illegality, and serious breach of the privileges of Parliament. Contracts had been let where not a single stake had yet been driven, and the work was to be completed by the 1st Oct. next. It was quite clear from the hon. gentleman's own words that these contracts were let in advance of the location of the road.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That is the hon. gentleman's interpretation of my words.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said they were the hon gentleman's own words, as found in the Hansard. It was clear that a survey was not made, because he stated in his speech of the 5th March that he felt from the first it was absolutely indispensable to have telegraphic communication with the various points on the line in order to prosecute a successful survey and to lay out the line upon which the road should ultimately be built. These contracts were therefore illegal, and if the hon. gentleman spent a single farthing on them the Government would be putting their hands into the public treasury without the authority of the law, and would be guilty of a great illegality. This House would be bound to do what had been done in the case of the CHURCHWARD contract, in order to vindicate the rights of Parliament, and declare all these contracts absolutely void and illegal, without any binding effect or obligatory force whatever,

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the language he had used was quite clear. There was nothing more important for the survey between Fort Edmonton and the Rocky Mountains than to have a telegraph line built to Fort Edmonton, and a party of surveyors had been locating a line for months back from the Red River westward, and when the hon gentleman raised a quibble about Fort Garry, it was unworthy of him. He knew very well that Fort Garry had been used as designating the whole of that section of the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—It is entirely unworthy of the hon, gentleman to give out contracts contrary to law.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman has no proof of what he states, and his assertion is not law. I am prepared to discuss the question with him at any time. He ought to be the last to charge any one with doing things contrary to law. If we were to trace back the history of the hon. gentleman there would be no denying that fact. These contracts were given out in accordance with the very letter of the statute, and the House has moreover voted money to carry them out.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

BRIDGE OVER RIVER L'ASSOMPTION.

The House went into committee on Mr. BABY'S Bill to authorise FRANCOIS XAVIER GALARNEAU, and others to build a bridge over the river L'Assomption in the Parish of L'Assomption (Mr. DEVLIN in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passsed.

CANADA CAR COMPANY.

The House went into committee on Mr. MCLENNAN'S Bill to amend the Act incorporating the Canada Car and Manufacturing Company (Mr. HAGGART in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

QUEBEC AND LAKE HURON R. R.

The House went into committee on Mr. CARON'S Bill to incorporate the Quebec and Lake Huron Direct Railway Company (Mr. BABY in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

MONTREAL NORTHERN COLONIZATION R. R.

The House went into committee on Mr. DESJARDIN'S Bill respecting the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway Company (Mr. CARON in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was fixed for a third reading to-morrow.

RAILWAYS EQUIPMENT COMPANY.

The House went into committee on Mr. BLAIN'S Bill to incorporate "The Dominion Railways Equipment Company" Mr. DEVLIN in the chair.

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME.

The House went into committee on Mr. CARON'S Bill to change the name of the St. Lawrence Steam Company (Mr. BABY in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

HURON AND ONTARIO SHIP CANAL.

The House went into committee on Mr. BLAIN'S Bill respecting the Huron and Ontario Ship Canal Company (Mr. MACDOUGALL, East Elgin, in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The amendments made by the Senate to the Bill to amend the Act incorporating the Montreal Board of Trade, and to the Bill to incorporate the Canadian Steam User's Association, were read a first and second time.

SHORTEST ROUTE TO EUROPE.

Mr. GILLMOR wished to called attention to the fact that he had just seen the report in print of the Committee on the Shortest Route to Europe, and he wished to say that he had never assented to it. As a member of the committee he understood that it was agreed only to report the evidence, and give no opinion. He therefore dissented from this report.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) suggested that it would be well for the Chairman of that Committee to make some explanations.

Hon. Mr. ROBITAILLE said he did not know whether the hon. gentleman referred to the report of last session or to some report of this session. If reference was made to the report brought in by him last session as Chairman of that Committee, he could only say that every word of that report was read over to the committee. and adopted by the whole committee. Moreover, the committee authorized him as the Chairman to send out questions to various parties, which he did, and the answers that were received were now in the hands of the printer.

Mr. GILLMOR said he attended what he supposed was the last meeting of the committee, and not one word of this report was read at that meeting. The Chairman stated to him that the report would be merely the evidence taken, and that no opinion should be expressed in it.

Hon. Mr. ROBITAILLE said the meeting of the committee was put off from day to day till the last day of the session, but the report was regularly adopted.

Mr. MACKAY observed that so far as he remembered the report was read over to him, and he assented to it, but with reference to any formal meeting at which the report was adopted his memory did not serve him. He thought the report was brought informally before some members of the Committee, and that they were individually asked to look over it.

Mr. CARON said that so far as he remembered the report was read over to every member of the committee. He was present and heard it read, and if any member agreed to it without hearing it read he had no right now to object to it.

Mr. GILLMOR remarked that the report might have been adopted after he left Ottawa, as he left a few days before the close of the session. But he certainly never assented to it, and he understood from the Chairman before he left that he was only going to report the facts.

Hon. Mr. ROBITAILLE—I suppose the hon. gentleman was not at the committee meetings more than three or four times during the whole session.

SUITS AGAINST THE CROWN.

Mr. IRVING'S Bill to provide for the institution of suits against the Crown by petition of right and respecting procedure in Crown suits, was read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION OF STAPLE ARTICLES.

The House went into Committee on Mr. FORBES' Bill to amend the Act to make better provision for the inspection of certain staple articles of Canadian produce, (Mr. GOUDGE in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was then read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT.

Mr. JETTE'S Bill to amend the Railway Act of 1868 was read the second time and referred to the Railway Committee.

INTEMPERANCE.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON suggested that the House now proceed to the consideration of Government orders, as they had now finished the serious business on the order paper under the head of Public Bills and Orders.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex) said he had an order on the paper which he did not wish passed over, namely, the order for the House to go again into committee to consider as to measures best calculated to diminish the evils of intemperance. This would not take up much time, as all he wanted now was for the House to affirm the principle of prohibition. That being done, he would be content to allow the question to rest for this session.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I do not think my hon. friend can make any useful progress with this order this session. If he got the House into committee on his resolution the balance of the evening would be spent and no good would be done.

Mr. ROSS—All I want is to pass this resolution through committee. After the full discussion we have already had on this subject I presume the House is not disposed to take up much more time with it, but is prepared to deal with the resolution without further debate. I move that you do leave the chair for the House to go into Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER — The member for Centre Wellington has a notice which takes precedence on the Order Paper.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I move that the House do now pass to the consideration of Government Orders.

Mr. ROSS—This is treating this important question very cavalierly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—It is throwing cold water upon it.

Mr. ROSS—I beg to offer an amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER—The motion to proceed to Government Orders is equivalent to moving the previous question and does not admit of an amendment.

Mr. ROSS said he would then speak to the motion. The question of a Prohibitory Liquor Law was attracting a very considerable amount of public attention, and in his judgement the proposition that the House affirm in a very general way the principle of prohibition was a reasonable one. It was a step which might have been taken earlier in the session had it not been for the resolutions moved in amendment to his resolution. They were now asked to stave off this question for this session. He could assure his hon. friend that this course would avail very little, for he proposed next session to take this matter up again. It would not be allowed to rest in this way. He had hoped to have got Parliament to affirm the principle this session, and he was free to admit that had this been done it would have been agreeable to himself personally. because some people supposed that on account of some alliance, that he need not refer to here, he had willingly and rather dishonestly to his temperance friends in the country allowed this matter to be covered up. He would take this opportunity to repudiate that insinuation. It was no fault of his that they had not made greater progress with this question. However, if it was to be disposed of in this cavalier style, if, as the right hon. member for Kingston said cold water was to be thrown upon the movement, he must submit to the inevitable with the assurance that perhaps the question would be in such a position next session that cold water would not so very easily stifle it.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) said he hoped the House would assent to the proposition of the hon. member for West Middlesex. He was proceeding to discuss the question when,

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said if there was to be a discussion he would withdraw his motion if the House desired it. (No, no.) He simply wanted to get on with the business.

Mr. SPEAKER said the motion could not now be withdrawn without the consent of the House.

The motion was then carried.

On motion of the Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT the House went into Committee of Supply on Supplementary Estimates for the financial year ending 30th June, 1876; Mr. SCATCHERD in the chair.

Items 1 and 2 were passed without discussion.

On item 3, $60,000 to provide for further amount estimated to be required in connection with the Philadelphia Exhibition,

Mr. JONES (South Leeds) said that the Imperial Parliament only voted £28,000 for the Vienna Expesition, £50,000 for the Paris Exposition, and were discouraging as much as possible expenditures on exhibitions, and yet the Government of this country were prepared to expend $100,000 on the Philadelphia Exhibition. As a manufacturer, he did not think that the fact of Canadian manufactures being represented there would benefit our industries. The Government was launching out into expenditures beyond those made by any previous Government of this country.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said it was important that Canada should be represented in a satisfactory manner at the American Centennial Exhibition, as undoubtedly an immense number of people from all quarters of the world would assemble at Philadelphia. He would prefer that the Dominion should not be represented at all than that, being represented, it should be represented in such a manner as to appear to great disadvantage with the States of the neighboring Republic. The general policy as to whether this country should or should not be represented at that exhibition was a fair subject for discusssion, but every one would attach importance to our presenting a good appearance before the eyes of those who attended and in the eyes of England, and if, therefore, we put in an appearance, the Government must take powers which would enable us to appear creditably. The Local Legislatures would co-operate with the Government in making a successful representation of Canadian industry.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said that we could only send to the Philadelphia Exhibition agricultural products or manufactures. We did not need to send the former, because everybody knew exactly what Canada could produce. Certainly every one in the United States knew all about the agricultural products of the Dominion; and as to sending our manufactures, this, a young manufacturing country, could not by any possibility assume a satisfactory position among the manufactures of the United States. It occurred to him that we would be altogether throwing away our money. If we did make a decent show of manufactured goods in spite of the protection duties of the United States which acted as a prohibition to the importation of Canadian goods, the circumstance would operate against the Reciprocity Treaty which his hon. friends opposite still intended to negotiate whenever they could do so.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the hon. member for South Leeds did not represent the feeling of manufacturers generally, in relation to this matter. He was quite satisfied that the manufacturers of Montreal were exceedingly anxious that the manufactures of Canada should be well represented at the Philadelphia Exhibition. He was aware that the Government had been exposed to very strong pressure from that class in Montreal, which every one would admit was the chief manufacturing city of the Dominion; but he had also reason to believe that manufacturers in Toronto, Hamilton, Bowmanville and other towns had made similar representations to the Government. The propriety of having Canada well represented at the Philadelphia Exhibition had moreover been strongly urged in the House. It would be altogether a mistake if we, occupying the position we did on this continent, failed to fyle an appearance at that Industrial Exposition.

Mr. JONES (South Leeds) desired to hear from the Government how they proposed to expend that sum of $100,000. Were manufacturers to be paid for sending their goods to Philadelphia, or was the amount to be expended in paying Commissioners. If manufacturers desired to be represented they would forward their goods without being paid for doing so by the Government. If he, as a manufacturer, intended to send goods, he would not ask that the freight be paid out of the Dominion Treasury. As to Montreal being the head and front of our manufacturing interests, he thought it was not exactly the Hub of this country. It was proposed to hold an exhibition in that city, and the manufacturers of Ontario were asked to send their goods there. This, however, they did not desire to do, and the people of Ontario had a right to be consulted in this matter.

Mr. DYMOND said it was very strange that the hon. gentlemen opposite, who especially claimed to be the friend of the manufacturer, should attempt to deny him this, perhaps the best opportunity that would be afforded in our own time to advertise his products to all the world. Two and a half years ago the right hon. member for Kingston stumped Ontario as the friend of manufacturer. Where was he now? Why denouncing a grant of money which the country would not miss, in order to allow those very manufacturers an opportunity of placing themselves in competition before the whole world with the manufactnrers of other countries. He (MR. DYMOND) ventured to think that the manufacturers of this country would not at all thank the right hon. gentleman, or the hon. member for South Leeds for the speeches they had delivered to-night. In agricultural implements, tweeds, sewing machines, boots and shoes, and many other articles it was notorious we would be able to compete with American manufacturers. He (Mr. DYMOND) was a friend of manufacturers, although they did not always know it, and in that respect a humble follower of his hon. friend the member for Hamilton (Mr. WOOD) who would tell the hon. gentleman what the manufacturers wanted. It must always be remembered that we were not going to Philadelphia merely to show American manufacturers what we could do, but to show the whole people of America what we could do. And who ruled America? Was it the manufacturers, or the "rings" at Washington who labored to prevent the free introduction of our manufactures into the United States, that governed that great country, or was it the people of America, every man of whom had a voice in the affairs of the nation? He desired to send to the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia those products of Canada which would convince the people of the United States that there was no country in the world with which it could trade to greater advantage than with this Dominion. That was the view of the Government, he imagined, in asking for $100,000 for that purpose. The amount asked was trifling, when compared with the results which would be obtained, and those manufacturers—distressed brethren as they professed to be would obtain a first class advertisement for their goods, while the expense would not be felt when divided over the whole Dominion. He imagined there would come from England and the Continent buyers representing all the great importing houses, and the $100,000 spent by Canada would be recouped in the shape of advantages to this country to an extent beyond computation. A wise liberality was after all the wisest sort of economy. It was very easy for gentlemen to return to their constituencies, especially when rather hard run at an election, and endeavor to secure a few votes by professions of economy; but he believed the country would not lose much if it spent an equal sum to be rid of such economists.

Mr. WOOD desired on behalf of the manufacturers of Hamilton to thank the Government for the wise and liberal measure which they had introduced to-night. He was surprised that the hon. member for Leeds, himself a manufacturer, should have objected to it, especially when, if the vote had not been asked, he would have been foremost in complaining of the omission. Merchants advertised in newspapers in order that the people of Canada might know what they had to dispose of, and manufacturers would send their goods to the American Exhibition to show the world what the Dominion can do in manufacturing. If some manufacturers did not desire other countries to know what we were doing, the manufacturers of Hamilton held the opposite opinion, and in the article of sewing machines they would astonish the Americans with the remarkable progress made during the last ten years.

Mr. JONES (South Leeds) pressed for ah answer to his inquiry as to how the Government would expend the money.

Mr. WOOD said the Government would not appoint paid Commissioners to attend an exhibition at which Canadian products were not represented, as did the late Government in the case of the Vienna exhibition.

Hon. Mr, MACKENZIE said in reply to the hon. member for Leeds, that the Government did not expect to expend any considerable portion of the amount in paying Commissioners, but they did anticipate having to spend a considerable sum in fitting up the Canadian Department. England had taken a large space, and Canada was invited to occupy space next to England, and if the Government had refused to acquiesce they would have severed one of the last links which the hon. member for Kingston was charging the Government with being always about to sever. That hon. member when driven into a corner always said something about the last link having just been broken: and this would have been one of the links. The Government had accepted the invitation so that it would not be possible to impugn our loyalty, and the Government proposed to expend whatever might be necessary in order to procure a creditable exhibition of Canadian products. It would be a mistake to make any exhibition unless we did it well; and he was satisfied it could be well done. The Government were very modest in asking the first vote and were pressed by hon. gentlemen to take a larger grant if they expected to do any good with it. They, therefore, asked for a supplementary vote, but if the House thought it should not be granted hon. members had only to state the fact.

Mr. JONES (South Leeds)—Is it intended to purchase articles from manufacturers?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We won't purchase a spade or shovel.

Mr. BOWELL said that the intention of the Government appeared to be to pay the expense of sending articles to the exhibition.

to be placed in competition with the goods of other countries, and he had no objection to that expenditure. On the contrary, he thought the action of the Government was such as the people would justify. He understood the position taken by the hon. member for Leeds to be this, that he was prepared, as a manufacturer, if he desired to exhibit his goods at Philadelphia, to do so at his own cost. The difference in the two principles was this —some hon. members—Liberals—wanted the Government to be liberal enough to take money out of the public treasury to pay the expense of advertising their articles at the Philadelphia Exehibition, while the hon. member for South Leeds, a Tory, was prepared to do his advertising at his own cost.

The item was passed.

Item 4 was passed without discussion.

On item 5, $30,000 for drill sheds for militia,

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT explained that the vote was taken to enable the Government to meet the wishes of a considerable number of persons who were interested in drill sheds throughout the country, some of whom had offered to contribute liberally towards the erection of such buildings, if the Government would meet them half way. The amount asked to be voted would prove sufficiently large to assist in most of those cases where persons were prepared to contribute liberally towards the erection of those buildings.

The item was passed.

On item 6, $13,000 for improvement of navigable rivers,

Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked for explanations of the sum of $5,000 for the removal of rocks in Detroit River, which was included in the item.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, in reply, said that at a point fifteen miles below Detroit the channel was purely on the Canadian side. An American Engineer had examined the river during the last two seasons, and in his report recommended that application should be made to the Canadian Government to join the United States Government in improving the rivers at a cost of three millions of dollars. The Government replied that they would have no objection to spend a small sum to obtain the depth of water required for our vessels at the present time, and as the Engineer had recommended that a depth of sixteen feet should be obtained, they would have no objection to the United States Government operating in our channel, as it was the only channel available at that particular place. He had asked for that vote to pay the proportion payable by the Dominion, towards the cost of deepening the river at the place indicated.

The item was passed.

On item 7, $25,000 to aid in building a bridge at Winnipeg,

Mr. SCHULTZ asked when the amount would be expended, and where ?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said a sum of $50,000 appeared in previous estimates for building a bridge at Fort Garry, which amount was not expended by the Government because they doubted whether the propriety of making the expenditure. If the Government built a bridge over the river at Winnipeg, it must have a draw and they would be under the expense of working the bridge in the future. Instead of adopting that policy, the Government proposed to vote $25,000 in aid of building a bridge at that point, and if the local authorities, either the Local Government or the Municipality, would build the bridge that sum would go towards paying the cost of the work.

The item was passed.

Items from 8 to 12 inclusive were passed without discussion.

On item 13, $27,500 for Harbors and Break-waters in the Province of Quebec,

Mr. MASSON asked for explanations.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE explained that the works included in the item were all recommended by the Engineer as necessary for the safe navigation of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. MASSON remarked that the item must be cortect for it was seldom such a large sum was voted for works in the Province of Quebec.

The item was passed.

On item 14, $30,000 for Harbors and Break-waters in Ontario,

Mr. PLATT called attention to the amount of $20,000 for Toronto harbor appearing under the item, which would not go far towards the construction of the necessary works. He found that other harbors on the Lakes had obtained large grants, while Toronto obtained nothing, notwithstanding the fact that it was a harbor of refuge in which vessels sought shelter during storms. It was, therefore, desirable that the harbor should be improved by the carrying out of the necessary works. Toronto, he thought, had not obtained justice and fair play in the expenditure of public money.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had been reminded by an hon. member that the representative of East Toronto had been talking platitudes. The appropriation of $20,000 for Toronto harbor was intended for experimental purposes in order to ascertain in what way the east passage could be kept open. The engineer had shown that it would be a most expensive and difficult operation, costing from $300,000 to $400,000. He was not willing to enter upon an expenditure of that extensive character until the Government had at least ascertained how the work could be carried on, and in what manner such a burden could be sustained by the port. Some of the harbors yielded a revenue, one of which was Cow Bay, for which the Government was about to ask a vote of $25,000. They were paying under the contract for returns and for dredging of the harbor $75,000, but it yielded an annual revenue of nearly $4,000. The harbor of Toronto paid no revenue except to the harbor commissioners. If the hon. member would peruse the return which was brought down a few days ago he would observe the amount of money which had been expended in the first place by the local authorities on harbor works. It showed that the important port of Hamilton had expended from local sources $200,000 in improving their bay, and they expected the large ports like Quebec, Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton to do much towards maintaining their own commercial position by imposing charges on shipping frequenting these ports. In the sense of being a general harbor of refuge, while Toronto harbor was undoubtedly a good one, it could not be compared with Southampton on Lake Huron, and some other harbors where vessels sought refuge during storms. The improvements on Toronto harbor must be met partly, no doubt, with the assistance of the Government, and ultimately, to a great extent, in connection with local taxation on shipping calling at the port. At the same time the Government propose to ascertain in what manner the entrance to the harbor and the harbor itself could be most effectually secured from injury by the execution of harbor works.

Mr. MOSS said the observations of the hon. gentleman from East Toronto were well worthy of the consideration of the House. Long before the present Government came into power, the importance of improving Toronto harbor had been brought to the attention of the late Government, but without any result. He trusted that the present Government would take some effective steps to improve the harbor, though they would not be expected to do all that was wanted at once. While he admitted that the local authorities should contribute and would contribute their fair share, yet it was clearly the duty of Government to assist, more especially as the harbor was a valuable place of refuge for vessels in distress.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The first thing to be done is to ascertain in an experimental way what plan was best to be adopted.

Mr. MOSS—I quite agree to that.

Mr. WOOD said he was glad to hear the Minister of Public Works state that a large amount of this expenditure must be met from local sources. If the people of Toronto had taken prompt means to preserve their harbor in the first instance a large expenditure would not now be necessary. They had neglected, although they collect harbor dues from the shipping, and now it would take a large amount to make the harbor efficient. If the people of Toronto wished an outlet at the eastern end of their harbor they should pay for it themselves, for that was a local work.

Mr. WILKES objected to improvements in Toronto harbor being regarded as a local work. With regard to the remarks of the Premier that it could not be regarded as a harbor of refuge in the same sense as some harbors on Lakes Erie and Huron, he held that if it was inferior in that respect it was only because of there being no opening at the east end—it was in fact a sort of cul de sac. If the east end was open it would make the harbor a good harbor of refuge, and he therefore maintained that this would largely benefit the whole trade of the Lakes. He believed the statement was correct that if a judicious expenditure had been made on the harbor several years ago a great deal of money would have been saved. If some of his friends on the Tory Press who were now so anxious in this matter had evinced a little of the same anxiety when their friends were in power it might not now be necessary to spend so large a sum of money to make up for the neglect of the past. He had no doubt that the Harbor Commissioners of Toronto and the city authorities would do all in their power to aid the work; even now the Harbor Trust was spending $10,000 or $12,000 a year for the removal of sand bars, which were formed anew every year. It was in the public interest that the public money should be spent on some permanent work in connection with the improvement of the harbor, and therefore he approved of the plan proposed by the Government.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. member for Hamilton must recollect that while the local authorities spent a very large sum on Hamilton harbor, yet the entrance to the harbor was made by the Government of the late Province of Canada at a cost of nearly $400,000.

Mr. WOOD—And they have collected on the Burlington Canal over $200,000 within the last ten years.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE proceeded to say that the Harbor Commissioners of Toronto had already expended a very large amount. The harbor was the outlet for a vast tract of country, and it was one which no Government would be justified in neglecting; and they were now asking this vote with a view to ascertain how it could be best permanently improved. There should be no jealousy between one place and another. He hoped that all their expenditure was made with a view to serve the public interest and not to benefit any place in preference to another.

Mr. McCALLUM said the people of Toronto were very much to blame for neglecting their harbor so long. If they had taken proper steps in time a large amount of money would have been saved. The people of Toronto wanted the eastern passage because it would create a current past the city, and thus promote the health of the city. The opening of the eastern passage was therefore a local work. He did not believe it would cost anything like $400,000 not even $100,000 to make the harbor as good as it was before. It would be much better as a harbor of refuge without the eastern passage. It could not be compared as a harbor of refuge to those on Lakes Erie and Huron; but at the same time he would admit that Toronto harbor should be made a good harbor.

Mr. WOOD disclaimed any feeling of jealousy in this matter. He proceeded to say that the Burlington Canal cost $432,634, and in ten years the tolls collected amounted to $205,302 besides $7,900 which was spent for removing a vessel which went down in the canal thirteen or fourteen years ago. Thus half of the whole cost was paid in ten years. So far as Toronto harbor was concerned, he wanted it preserved, but he wanted the Toronto people to pay a fair proportion of the cost.

Mr. MOSS said the hon. gentleman from Toronto had a mission in this House, and that was to combat every proposition that was for the benefit of Toronto. Whether it was a railroad or a harbor or anything else that was likely to benefit Toronto, the hon. gentleman immediately saw grass growing in the streets of Toronto. Speaking for Toronto, he (Mr. Moss) would say that the people of that city did not ask—at any rate they would not ask through him—for any more of public aid than they were reasonably entitled to. So far as the improvement of the harbor was a work of general public utility he expected the Government to assist, but beyond that he did not expect them to go.

Item passed.

On item 15, Grand Anse, Baie des Chaleurs, (Local authorities contributing an equal sum), $3,000; Campo Bello (Local authorities to furnish $1,000,) $600; Shippegan, $11,000,

Hon. Mr. BOBITAILLE said he had no doubt that these improvements were required, but he would like to know the principle that was followed in making these appropriations, and also the purpose for which the money was to be spent in those places.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the work at Shippegan was a pier or breakwater about 1,800 feet long at the entrance of the harbor. At Grand Anse the appropriation was for a breakwater to protect fishing vessels.

Hon. Mr. ROBITAILLE said he hoped the same protection would be provided on the North side of the Bay Chaleurs.

where much more fishing was carried on than on the South side.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL differed from that view, as he believed the South side was much more entitled to the grant.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The principle that we have acted upon in regard to these local works, that is those which are for the protection of local vessels, is to make the appropriation upon condition that the local authorities contribute an equal amount.

Hon. Mr. ROBITAILLE—I venture to say that at Grand Anse you will not find ten fishing boats. The population is chiefly a farming population, or engaged in the manufacture of grind-stones.

Hon. Mr. ANGLIN said the hon. gentleman must refer to a point farther up, as there were a great many fishing boats at Grand Anse. There was a large population there engaged in fishing, and they were very much in need of some protection for their boats. He did not object to any improvements being made on the north side of the Bay, but the fact was that storms usually came from the north, and the south side was therefore much more exposed. Very great loss both of life and property occurred there for want of some protection, and he had felt it his duty to press upon the Government the necessity of their assisting the local authorities in procuring the needed protection. Hundreds of vessels passed through there to the fishing grounds every week, and when storms arose frequently lives were lost. Last year, on one occasion, seven lives were lost for the want of sufficient protection. With regard to Shippegan, he was satisfied the proposed improvement was much needed, and the Government would be justified in making a much larger expenditure than was now proposed.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL confirmed the statement of the honorable the SPEAKER as to the necessity and importance of making improvements in Shippegan Gully.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD called attention to the necessity of making these items more explicit in the estimates, as they really, as they now stood, afforded no information whatever with regard to the character of the work.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he believed they were prepared in the usual form, but he admitted they should be more explicit, and would see that they were properly expressed in the Supply Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE gave some explanations upon item 15, being an appropriation of $91,000 for certain harbors and breakwaters in Nova Scotia.

Item passed.

Also, items 17 to 24, inclusive.

On item 25, to provide for the purchase of two steamers for light-house and fisheries services, $85,000,

Mr. YOUNG asked for information. These vessels had always been a serious source of expense in addition to their first cost.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said the service on the River and Gulf of St. Lawrence, which would be required of one of these steamers, had been done in the past by the schooner Canadienne. It was a sailing vessel, and it was very desirable to have a steamer for these services. They could purchase a steamer suitable for that service for $20,000. The other steamer would cost about $60,000, and it would be necessary to go to England for it. It was intended principally for the Bay of Fundy, and perhaps some portion of the north shore of Nova Scotia. Vessels were cheap now, and it was therefore a good time to purchase. In the Quebec district there were at present 94 light-houses, in the New Brunswick division 52, in the Nova Scotia division 82, above Montreal 92, and between Montreal and Quebec 41. In all there were nearly 400 light-houses, and some 30 or 40 fog-whistles. All these had to be inspected, and to perform that service it was necessary to have steamers in preference to sailing vessels.

Item passed.

On item 27, towards providing telegraphic communication between Matane and Magdalen River, furnishing instruments and equipping stations, $5,000,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had already called the attention of the Government to the necessity there was for a telegraph line from Escuiminac to Chatham. It was of great importance to the commerce of that place and still more important in affording security to life and property, as numerous wrecks had occurred at the former point. He urged the Government to take immediate steps to establish the line.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said he was now negotiating with the Montreal Telegraph Company in relation to this matter, and as very satisfactory arrangements had been made for that one service, he had no doubt this could also be arranged. He realized the importance of the work.

On item 28, to aid Indian schools where most required, $2,000,

Mr. SCHULTZ said that he desired to bring up a matter connected with the extinguishment of the Indian title in Manitoba. For that purpose the Manitoba Act of 1870 granted to the half-breed population one million four hundred thousand acres of land, not one acre of which, he was sorry to say, had been received by them. It would be remembered that every year for the past four years he had brought the matter up in the House. For five years the intended recipients had waited, first with patience, lastly with impatience. Now their patience was exhausted, and he must take this chance, which seemed likely to be the last afforded to him, to protest against any further delay. He regretted to see that the whole matter was dismissed in the report of the hon. Minister of the Interior in seven lines under the heading of disputed claims. He denied that these disputed claims affected more than two or three parishes and that that fact should not interfere with the distribution in other parishes. There was also a grievance in the matter of the land to which the heads of half-breed families were entitled. An Act passed subsequent to the Manitoba Act ensured to the heads of half-breed families the issue of scrip for one hundred and sixty acres of land each. There was no reason why this issue of scrip should have been delayed as it has. Five or six months would have been ample for the necessary printing and distributing of this scrip, but as yet, not one person had received it. He begged briefly to point out the injustice occasioned by this. Had the heads of families received this scrip in a reasonable time, they might have taken up land for their use which is now locked up in the hands of speculators. In the county he had the honor to represent a special injustice was occasioned by this delay. Had the scrip been issued within a reasonable time after the passage of this Act, land might have been located with it in the vicinity of their existing holdings on the river, but the land so desirable to them was now withdrawn by the Government from sale or settlement to supply the land for railway purposes, to their great detriment and disadvantage. It was not the half-breeds alone who were dissatisfied at the delay in dividing these lands. It was a serious matter in a Province so small, to lock up so much of its land in this way, useless at present to the owners of it, and a nuisance to those, who coming to the country to settle, were compelled to go beyond it to settle. Had the people received it before, they would have improved it, or sold it to those who would have done so. They had not even power to protect it, and the consequence was that its wood was being robbed and its value yearly deteriorated. There was again the grievance of the hay question. The Manitoba Act had guaranteed all existing rights and when this claim was preferred by the people, it had first been pooh-poohed by the Government, but when they appointed commissioners to investigate it, it was found after evidence being taken in two parishes, that it was expedient to grant the whole claim in fee simple. That was fair and equitable, but the injustice lay in this, as in the other cases, he had mentioned, in the great delay which had been caused by the action of the Department in this matter. The principle once conceded the grant should have been made at once and prevented the general and just dissatisfaction which prevailed. The last grievance of which he would speak in this connection, was that of the delay in the issue of the patents for lands in the settlement belt. The hon., the Minister of the Interior stated in the report which he had recently submitted to the House that "the legal and equitable "bearing of certain reputed claims to "lands in Manitoba had been under care-"ful consideration. That some of them "had been disposed of and it is hoped that "an adjustment of the remainder of all "such questions will be effected at an "early day." He thought that too long a time had been taken for these decisions and if decisions had been arrived at there was now no use for further delay. He could not understand why it was that a certain favored few, could get patents for lands in the settlement while the holders of undisputed titles generally had received no patents. The discrimination was most unfair. Again he must protest against the patent for the land around Fort Garry made in such an extraordinary manner over two years ago. This patent was granted in contravention of a regulation which required the posting of all lands for which a patent was asked at the office of the County Court Clerk for a certain term. These conditions had not been complied with. He had stated before and he stated now that this land was worth over two millions of dollars and though the present Government was not accountable for the issue of the patent, yet they should examine into the matter while yet it was possible to rescind the patent. Having get to the end of these special and deeply felt grievances he begged to be allowed to say a few words in regard to the new Canadian settlements of the Province, and thought that the Government should assist such settlements in making roads and bridge at least on main and connecting lines. He was aware that in the other Provinces this aid came from the Local Governments, but Manitoba alone af all the Provinces did not own her public lands, and settlers had a right to expect assistance from that source which derived a revenue from their sale and their settlement. If the Province owned the land, to that source they would naturally apply for relief, but as the Dominion retained the lands, he felt that the people had a legitimate claim in that direction, and trusted the matter would receive the attention of the Government, especially as they had forced settlement in places remote because of the large blocks of land reserved. The last matter of which he wished to speak was that embodied in a notice of motion which he now saw would be crowded out by the early prorogation. This was an amendment to the Dominion Lands Act, which would prevent the present locking up of lands in the hands of speculators. It was a fact, he was sorry to say, that in the whole Province of Manitoba to-day there was scarcely an eligible homestead left for occupation by the actual settler. Every desirable quarter-section had been either bought up or located. The clause that limited purchase to 640 acres was so easily evaded as to be practically useless. The American system of preventing this was a good one. In the United States the law provided that for a term of years after their survey the public lands should be open only for homestead settlement, and only after that term had expired, and the actual settler had had his choice, could the speculator purchase, and in too many cases lock up the land which the good of the country demanded should be used.

Mr. COSTIGAN called the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the fact that a change should be made in the appointment of Commissioners for the Indians of New Brunswick. The Commissioner of the Tobique Reserve resided at Fredericton, 90 miles distant from that reserve and 150 miles from the other reserve with which he was connected. This was not only a great inconvenience, but as the Commissioner was allowed travelling expenses, it was a heavy drain on the limited funds of the Indians. He suggested that instead of continuing this commisioner at Fredericton, at a salary of four or five hundred dollars and travelling expenses, some one living on the reserve should receive the appointment. A competent man could be secured for about $150 a year. He did not hold the Government responsible for this state of affairs, but blamed them for allowing it to continue after their attention had been called to the subject.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the Government had made no change in this direction, but allowed matters to remain as they found them when they came into power. Besides the cost of these Commissioners, the Indians were paying four Missionaries to attend to their spiritual wants. Three of the latter received $100 a year, and the other $200. This was a legacy left by the late Government. He was fully persuaded that there was quite enough paid for Indian agents in New Brunswick without increasing their number. When this matter was under discussion on a former occasion, he had taken occasion to say that the Indians of New Brunswick were less numerous than those of Nova Scotia, and that the revenues arising from their reserves was invested for their exclusive benefit. He found after investigating the subject that this was quite correct. There were 300 more Indians in Nova Scotia than in New Brunswick, yet they received exactly the same Parliamentary grant. And besides the Nova Scotia Indians had no fund of their own, while the New Brunswick Indians had a fund of their own invested for their benefit. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Lisgar, it would be difficult to follow him through the whole of his speech. He (Mr. LAIRD) had already explained the reason why the lands reserved for the half-breeds were not distributed. Certain parties claimed that they had a right to these lands under the Manitoba Act, apart from the half-breed distribution. It was necessary to decide these claims, which was a delicate matter, before making the distribution. Legislation had taken place this very session, with a view to enabling the department to proceed more rapidly with the adjustment of those claims. The department considered it best to treat all the half-breeds alike, and make no distribution until all the lands could be distributed at once. This would prevent the heart-burnings which would be certain to arise if some of them received their lands before others.

Mr. SCHULTZ—Why have you issued patents to Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD, Mr. MCMICKEN, and the Hudson's Bay Company, and to no one else?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the only distribution to the Hudson's Bay Company was in the neighborhood of Fort Garry, and that was given before this Government came into power. As the House was aware the Company had a right to certain sections of land in every township. In surveying the townships it was found that parties had settled on sections belonging to the Company. The Government had either to turn out these settlers or give the Company lands in lieu of what had been taken up. They pursued the latter course, and some of the patents for lands thus given to the Company might have been issued, but all were treated alike. There was no partiality.

Mr. SCHULTZ said that he regretted to find in the Hon. Minister's reply a want of knowledge of the affairs of his own department which amounted almost to gross ignorance on his part. He understood the hon. gentleman to give as a reason for dealing in distribution the disputed claims in some of the parishes. Now, had the hon. gentleman known the details of his department, he would have been aware that each parish took its block of land separately, and the allotment was ordered by parishes so that disputed claims in St. Norbert no more affected the parish of Poplar Point in St. Andrews than it did other parishes fifty miles away. There was no connection in any way between the different parishes, and there was no excuse for delay of the allotment in parishes where such conflicting claims did not exist. He would like to know by what principle of equity the hon. gentleman made the half-breeds of Poplar Point for instance a parish fifty miles away, suffer for the delay occasioned by stake claims in St. Norbert. The principle was absurd. He had entered his protest against further delay and trusted the Government would not necessitate his having to bring the subject up again.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the Government believed they were pursuing the wisest course. It would not be right to give the half-breeds of one parish possession of their lands at once, while those of another parish might be obliged to wait a year or two longer.

Mr. COSTIGAN wished it to be distinctly understood that he did not advocate an increase of payments to Indian agents in New Brunswick, but that, on the contrary, he recommended a decrease.

Mr. BORRON called attention to a grievance of which the Indians in the District of Algoma complained, and which involved a claim amounting to about $50,000. Twenty-five years ago they entered into a treaty to surrender the territory extending from Penetinguishene to Pigeon River, embracing nearly the north half of the Province of Ontario. They surrendered that territory for a payment of $6.50 for each member of the tribe cash down, and an annuity of $1.25 each. The treaty contained the following clause:—"The "said WILLIAM BENJAMIN ROBINSON on "behalf of HER MAJESTY who desires to "deal liberally and justly with all HER "subjects, further promises and agrees "that in case the territory hereby ceded "by the parties of the second part shall at "any future period produce an amount "which will enable the Government of "this Province without incurring loss, to "increase the annuity hereby secured to "them, then, and in that case, the same "shall be augumented from time to time, "provided that the amount paid to each "individual shall not exceed the sum of "one pound, Provincial currency in any "one year, in such further sum as HER "MAJESTY may be graciously pleased to "order." Now, the territory had yielded a very large amount of money. From mineral and timber lands as well as from agricultural lands it had produced little short of a million dollars and not one cent had been paid those Indians although they were entitled to the full annuity of $4 per head. They had endeavored to bring their case to the notice of the Government in every way that was open to them, but as yet nothing had been done to remedy a long standing injustice. They were peaceable and law abiding; perhaps if they had not been so peaceable their interests would not have been so long neglected.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the very conditions of the treaty referred to showed that the money should be paid by the Government of Ontario. They possessed the lands, and whatever revenue was derived from them went into the treasury of Ontario. It was clear, therefore, that the money should be paid by that Province and not by the Dominion. The matter had been brought under the notice of this Government and a correspondence had been entered into with the Government of Ontario with a view to adjusting the cloim of the Indians. No solution had yet been arrived at, but he hoped to have the claim settled after the close of the session.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said the treaty was made with the Indians at a time when these lands became the property of the Province of Canada. By the Confederation Act these lands became the property of the Provinces, but the guardianship of the Indians and the obligations entered into with them were handed over to the Government of the Dominion, and he apprehended that the lands out of which these annuities were to be paid were also handed over. While this was the case, all that the Indians had to say was that the lands having produced a certain amount, they were entitled to the annuity provided for by the treaty, and the Government of Canada must pay it. The rights of the Indians should not have a doubt cast upon them.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was a legal doubt about the matter. This Government held that the Province of Ontario should implement the engagement entered into with the Indians. They did not deny the justice of that, but insisted that Quebec should take part of the obligation.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD did not see what legal doubt there could be as to the right of the Indians to receive their annuity. The Dominion Government held the assets of the Indians. He did not remember that the late Government had any difficulty about this matter, or that it was brought up in Council.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Dominion never became possessed of these lands. The Province received the equivalent and the Dominion was expected to pay the price.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE contended that the Dominion Government was bound to see that the Indians were paid whatever they were entitled to receive.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the Government had not yet been put in possession of information as to what amount the lands had yielded They were now in correspondence with the Ontario Government on the subject.

Mr. BUNSTER called the attention of the Government to the fact that the Indians of British Columbia were growing dissatisfied at the treatment they received. He urged the Minister of the Interior to send somebody to British Columbia to look after them and redress the grievances of which they complained.

The item was passed.

The remaining items having passed, the committee rose and reported progress.

The House adjourned at 12 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Thursday, April 1st, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three P. M.

QUEBEC TRINITY HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. SMITH moved the third reading of the Bill respecting the Trinity House and Harbor Commissioners of Quebec.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said if he had any hopes of carrying an amendment quoad the governing body provided in this Bill he would oppose the third reading, but he supposed that was hopeless.

The Bill was read a third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT.

Hon Mr. MACKENZIE moved the second reading of the Bill to further amend the general Act respecting railways. —Carried.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the House go into committee on the Bill forthwith. He said he proposed to amend the Act by incorporating the clause from the English Railway Act, relating to passengers attempting to travel free.

Mr. MILLS objected to the sub-sections of section 4. Sub-section 3 empowered the various railway corporations to legislate on a very important subject. It was in fact allowing them to legislate on the subject of police, and to inflict punishment for certain offences. These provisions it was true, were subject to ratification of the GOVERNOR GENERAL in Council. That body might be a very proper one for the purpose of ratifying mere administrative subjects. He thought the rights of the subject should in every case be under the control and direction of the people's representatives in Parliament assembled. What ought to be done in this case was to incorporate these by-laws in the Bill, and let them be enacted by the Parliament of Canada if necessary. As the clause stood it was placing the liberty of the subject at the mercy of railway corporations.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said this sub-section was taken verbatim from the English General Railway Act.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER wished the Premier to explain the necessity for the proposed amendment, as very great danger might arise from the adoption of the principle therein contained. Conductors now possessed very extreme and despotic powers, and to give them these additional powers would give them the means of greatly harrassing innocent parties. He did not himself see the necessity for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said railway companies complained of the difficulty they had in reference to irregularities attendant upon travelling. In England very stringent regulations prevailed on this subject. However, he was not at all wedded to these amendments if there was any serious objection to them. The main clauses of the Bill were the second and third, putting all railway companies upon the same footing with regard to expropriation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD differed from his hon. friend for Cumberland. The proposed clause was a good one, and necessary to protect railway companies from fraudulent attempts to obtain a free passage. It would only effect those who were attempting to commit or had committed fraud, and the onus of proving the fraud would fall upon the railway officials.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he was opposed to giving any railway company such extreme powers as would enable them to interfere with the liberty of the subject. Supposing he was late reaching a station and a crowd was around the wicket so that he could not get his ticket without losing the train, and was to get on board without his ticket he would then be at the mercy of the railway officials who might bring him before a magistrate at the nearest station.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the objection of the member for Bothwell, in which he shared, was not to the regulations, but to giving legislative powers to railway companies. If the regulations were necessary let them be enacted in an Act of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that this sub-section which he proposed to add did not relate to passengers at all. It was an amendment to the 50th section of the Act which had reference to the regulations to be observed by the officers and servants of a railway company. A railway company had power to impose a fine upon any of their officers or servants for violation of their regulations, and the proposed additional sub-section was only to make that power more explicit, and to increase the fine from $30 to $40. The provision that referred to passengers was another section altogether, and was to the effect that any passenger refusing to pay his fare might be put out of the car with his baggage at the usual stopping place or near a dwelling house. To this section he proposed to add the following sub-section taken verbally from the English Act: —"If any person travels or attempts to travel in any carriage of a railway company without having previously paid his fare or with intention to evade payment thereof; or if any person having paid his fare for a certain distance knowingly and wilfully proceeds in any such carriage beyond such distance without paying the additional fare for the additional distance and with the intention to evade payment thereof; or if any person knowingly or wilfully refuses, on arriving at the place to which he has paid his fare, to leave such carriage, every such person shall for every such offence, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $— as penalty for such offence; and if any person be discovered either in or after committing or attempting to commit any such offence, the officers and servants on behalf of the company, and all constables and officers of the peace may lawfully apprehend and detain such person until he can be conveniently taken before some Justice of the Peace or until he be otherwise discharged by due course of law; and the penalty under this section shall be recoverable under the provisions of the Act 32 and 33 Vic., entitled 'an Act respecting the duties of Justices of the Peace out of session in relation to summary of convictions.' "

Hon. Mr. TUPPER did not see the necessity for including such a stringent provision. The most abundant powers for railways to enforce charges against passengers already existed. For the parties who were to be entrusted with this power, unfortunately, the tendency to abuse power was all but universal, and if parties, not railway managers or directors, and a thousand railway conductors were to be entrusted with the power to institute the most vexatious proceedings against persons travelling, there would be no end to the trouble it would create. Suppose, for instance, a party arrives at a station just before the departure of a train and finds a crowd around the window he has either to lose his passage or go without a ticket, and is open to be charged with intent to commit a fraudulent act. He denied the right of Parliament to put it in the power of five hundred people, who had very small means of judging and had very little responsibility, of exercising such power. Suppose a passanger on a train receives a telegram requiring him to go further on, the moment he passes the point for which he has purchased his ticket, he is open to be charged with fraudulent intent. The railway authorities already had the power to stop a train and put a man off if he did not pay his fare, and he did not see the necessity of adding this clause. He trusted it would not be pressed.

The House went into committee—Mr. YOUNG in the chair.

The first three clauses were passed without discussion.

On the 4th clause Mr. MILLS said notwithstanding the explanations which had been made by the Premier, he thought the provisions contained in this clause were very objectionable on the grounds he had already stated. This House should rather undo something that had been done instead of adding to the powers of railway corporations, and undertaking to increase their already large powers. This House should limit and define those powers. Such legislation as it was proposed to entrust to railway corporations should be made part of the law of the land which everybody understands. Under this clause one railway company might lay down one rule and another a different one. The proper course to pursue would be for the Government to invite railway companies to state what rules and regulations, for the government of those in their employ, they considered necessary, and then the Government might put this provision in an Act of Parliament. The liberties of the employees of a company should be as much regulated by the law of the land as any other persons in the country. As the people's representatives it was the duty of this House to guard the rights of the people.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said the powers proposed to be conferred on railway corporations by this Bill was already a principle admitted in our legislation. Railway Companies could not be considered in the light of private corporations. They were public corporations to whom were conceded by this Parliament public powers, and in conceding them such powers, as a necessary consequence they should be invested with authorities to make by-laws to enforce those powers. He thought the public interest was sufficiently guarded by requiring the companies to submit their by-laws for the ratification of the GOVERNOR in Council. If the arguments of the hon. member for Bothwell were correct it would apply also to municipalities. They possessed powers delegated to them which they exercised in the public interests and they had the right of enforcing their by-laws by penalties.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said there was no analogy at all between private corporations established for the purpose of private gain and municipalities which are worked under direct responsibility, to the communities in which they exist, and on whom their by-laws are to operate. Our municipal councillors are given powers to make certain by-laws within certain prescribed rules, carefully guarded by Act of Parliament, and any violation or infraction of those by-laws is punishable in a moderate degree. But to say that because these small Parliaments, exercising their powers under direct responsibility to that portion of the community in which they live, are invested with certain powers of self-government, that therefore private corporations, with the sanction of the GOVERNOR in Council should deal not only with their employees, but also with that portion of the public using their trains and stations, was to propound two very different propositions. The railway company is not responsible to the people. Its Board of Directors is not elected by the public, and cannot be displaced by the people. The Municipal Corporation is elected to look after public matters; the Board of Directors to conduct the affairs of the Company, so as to produce the greatest profit to the shareholders. The provisions in our Statute Books were not the same. They empowered a railway corporation under certain circumstances, to punish an employee by the forfeiture of not more than thirty days' pay to the company. This condition was known to the employee before entering the service of the company. The existence of such a provision was no reason why it should be extended as proposed in this Bill. This was a matter with which this Parliament should deal, All railroads could not be dealt with alike by this measure. It did not refer to local railroads, and all companies coming under its provisions might not enact the same by-laws. The initiative rested with them, and not with the GOVERNOR in Council, whose power was confined to allowing or disallowing the by-laws of the companies. By consequence, there might be one Criminal Law on one railroad and another on the next road At some cities there were different railway stations of different companies, and a man going to one station might be exposed to a fine an imprisonment for an act which was perfectly lawful at the station of another company. Those considerations led to the conclusion that the question should be dealt with by a general law applicable to HER MAJESTY'S subjects, and not in the special and partial manner in which it was proposed to deal with it by that clause in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the General Railway Act gave authority to railway companies to impose a fine of not less than thirty days' pay upon any of the class of persons referred to in the clause under discussion, and it was only that class which would be subjected to a fine of $40.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said that the clause said "any person using the railway of the company."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was not intended to apply to passengers, and if there was any ambiguity in that respect it might be removed. He concurred in the opinion that it was not desirable to place the trial of those cases in the hands of Justices of the Peace, as they would be enabled to deal with them in a criminal way.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said that if the operation of the clause was restricted to officers and employees of railway companies, and not entrust the trial of the cases to Justices of the Peace, he felt that the principal objections were, if not wholly removed, so far mitigated that he would not further press his opposition.

Hon. MALCOLM CAMERON said that railway companies now exercised greater powers than were conferred on them by law, and he had seen passengers put off a train on a plain at night, and a woman and four children threatened to be put off the cars, having lost their tickets, and were only kept on board by other persons paying their fares. The companies already possessed all necessary powers.

The section was amended by expunging the word "persons." and inserting the following: "Any of the conductors, engine-drivers or other officers and servants of the company or other companies using the railway of such company."

Mr. KIRKPATRICK suggested that a clause be added to extend the application of a clause in the Act of 1871 which was intended to apply to all companies, but which the Courts had decided did not apply to all. The clause of the Act of 1871 to which he referred provided that a railway company shall not be relieved by any condition or declaration that they will not be responsible for any damage to goods caused by the negligence or fault of the company or its servants. It was supposed that this would apply to all railway companies, but this section was an amendment of a section of the general Act which did not apply to all railways, and consequently in the case of SCOTT vs. Great Western Railway the court decided that this clause did not apply to all railways. He would suggest an amendment making it apply to all railways so that no company could make a condition in their contracts that they would not be liable for damages caused to goods by the negligence or fault of the company or its servants. The suggestion was agreed to and the clause changed accordingly.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved to add the following clause to the 4th section :—" All goods, wares, merchandise, commodities and supplies of every kind, required for the use or purpose of any Government railway of a greater value than $— shall be purchased by public tender and contract."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We cannot accept that amendment.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER proceeded to give his reasons why such a course should be adopted. The committee was aware that the current expenditure last year on Government railways in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was $1,300,000, and a similar sum was asked for this year for the same service. It was not easy for the Government to carry on such works with the same amount of economy as private companies, and experience amply estab lished that fact. He might say that, finding the annual current expenditure of these railways was so large, the Minister of Public Works of the late Government appointed a railway expert to go down and examine the condition of these railways.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE rose to a point of order. It was evident that this amendment was moved for the purpose of giving the hon. gentleman an opportunity of raising an irregular discussion upon the Lower Provinces railways. If the hon. gentleman wished that discussion, he could bring it up on another occasion in a regular way, but the amendment he proposed had nothing to do with the General Railway Act, and was therefore out of order.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I trust before this amendment is ruled out of order I may be allowed to state the reasons why I propose it.

Mr. Kirkpatrick.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I ask for your ruling.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he would speak to the point of order. The First Minister himself had violated one of the first rules of Parliamentary discussion by imputing motives to him as the ground on which he proposed his amendment. The last clause of the Bill before the House related to Government railways, and his amendment had a direct connection with that clause.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE pressed the point of order, contending that the amendment had no relation whatever to the Act, and could not therefore be put. If the hon. gentleman wished to bring the subject up again he could do so in the regular way by a resolution, and if he carried his resolution it would go into force.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he had had a very important notice on the paper for some time, but the House had yet been unable to reach it, and the First Minister knew very well that the only result of preventing his bringing the matter up now would be to prevent his bringing it up during the present session.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said if the hon. gentleman had not placed his motion on the notice paper early enough in the session, it was not his (Mr. MACKENZIE'S) fault.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said a report laid upon the table of the House to-day was the basis upon which he offered his amendment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD contended that it was quite competent for Parliament to place clauses in the same Act relating to entirely different matters. All the Acts of one session might be embodied in one Act of Parliament, and it was only as a matter of convenience that the legislation of a session was divided up into different chapters. Aside from that view he held that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cumberland had a relation to the Bill before the House, and, therefore, even if the point of order was good, it did not apply in this case.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON rose to another point of order. This was a money resolution, and should originate in Committee of the Whole, specially ordered for that purpose.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said the hon. gentleman could not be serious in raising such an objection.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said whatever doubt hon. gentlemen might entertain as to his point of order, there could be none as to the question raised by the hon. member for Chateauguay.

Mr. CHAIRMAN said he was not prepared to decide these questions of order, and he suggested that the SPEAKER be called to the chair.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD moved that the committee rise and the SPEAKER take the chair to decide a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER ruled that the first objection was not well taken. It was quite possible to amalgamate any number of Bills of the most inconsistent and incongruous character, if the House deemed it expedient to do so. With regard to the other question of order, he was not quite so clear on it, and would like to hear it argued.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said this was not putting a burden on the people, but, on the contrary, a proposition to keep prices down. It was directly in favor of reducing the charge on the public. It in no way affected trade and commerce, and was, therefore, clearly in order.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said he did not take the point that it affected trade and commerce, or that it required a message from the Crown, but simply that it was a money resolution of which notice, must be given and which must be considered preliminarily in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. CAMERON (Cardwell) said this was not an appropriation. The appropriation was already made, and to say that this motion was out of order was going beyond anything ever heard in Parliament before.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was quite possible that there might be a combination of tenderers. In that case the Government being obliged to purchase the supplies, would be compelled to expend a larger sum than if they procured them without calling for tenders. The resolution directly encouraged a scheme by which the taxes of the country might be increased.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said the proper time to move this resolution would be on concurrence in the report of the Committee of Supply.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK pointed out that the Bill for constructing the Esquimault and Nanaimo Railroad contained a clause similar to this, yet it did not originate in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON—That was an error and should not be repeated.

Mr. SPEAKER said his impression was that the clause, if added to the Bill, would be restrictive in its character. Its tendency was to decrease and not to add to the burdens on the public. He did not think the objection of the hon. member for Chateauguay was well taken and he would, for the present rule that the motion was in order. He would look into the question carefully before the Bill reached its final stage, and give his decision to the House.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole; Mr. YOUNG in the chair.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER regretted the hon. gentlemen opposite were so opposed to the principle of purchasing supplies by tender that they occupied so large a portion of time in discussion of a question of order. He would state as briefly as possible the grounds on which he proposed that so important a clause should be inserted in the Bill before the House. As he was stating to the committee when the question of order was raised, the late Government, finding that the expenditure on the Government railways was very large, felt it to be their duty to have the whole question of expenditure thoroughly investigated. They appointed a railway expert, a man of extensive information, and much experience in such matters, to inspect the Government railways in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. That gentleman made an elaborate report on the subject, which report was now in the possession of the Government, and in it he recommended that supplies for the Government railways in those Provinces should be obtained by tender and contract, instead of the system, which up to that time prevailed, of entrusting the purchase of these supplies to the Manager of the railways. The late Minister of Public Works, Mr. LANGEVIN, submitted the report to the Council, and upon that a Minute was prepared by the late Government and passed adopting the principle of having all purchases made by tender and contract. That Minute of Council instructing the Manager of the railways to adopt that system, was transmitted to Mr. CARVELL by the late Government, and was in his possession when the change of Government took place, and that policy, it should be remembered, was adopted long before the Government had any reason to anticipate they were going out of office. The change which took place in November, of course, deprived the late Government of any authority or control in that matter. But upon the change of Government taking place, the present Minister of Public Works caused his Secretary to send an official letter to the Manager of the Railways directing the Manager to obtain all supplies, not otherwise provided for, from Black Brothers & Co., hardware merchants, at Halifax. Under the authority of the Minute of Council which the late Government had previously sent to the Manager of the Railways, tenders were invited for railway supplies and they were sent in on the 1st January, 1874. But no action was taken thereunder, and from the time the present Government came into power in November, 1873, until March 1874, that firm enjoyed the monoply of furnishing supplies, that being done under the direct authority of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Tenders were called for and were given out for the purchase of certain supplies, but it was given in evidence before a committee, which had to-day reported to the House, and whose report was on the table and contained a copy of the letter sent by order of the hon. Minister of Public Works,—that in July 1874 those tenders had expired, and that Messrs. Black Brothers, & Co., were furnishing the whole supplies to the railways as far as Nova Scotia was concerned. It was not satisfactory that the Government should have the power of ignoring a Minute of Council thus passed, and it was necessary that some authoritative action should be taken by the House. Moreover, notwithstanding the fact that the principle of tender and contract was adopted by the late Government. The present Manager of the Railways, Mr. BRYDGES, who had control of the purchase of supplies, had made purchases to the amount of $200,000 without any public tender or contract, and that in the matter of supplies to the railways he was advised—he did not say the circumstance influenced Mr. BRYDGES—that the father-in-law of the gentleman who was formerly the Manager's Private Secretary, obtained a contract for supplies to the amount of 200,000 for the Intercolonial Railway from Mr. BRYDGES. When that fact leaked out and became a matter of notoriety, and complaints were made by the Star Manufacturing Company of Halifax, that, although they had sent in the lowest tender for similar work on a former occasion, and were prepared to do the work in a satisfactory manner, they did not receive it, they were solaced by having a private bargain made with them to furnish two hundred cars additional. He asked the House whether in view of transactions of that nature it was not time that some authoritative action was taken by the House for the purpose of preventing undue favoritism, either on the part of the Government or on the part of Mr. BRYDGES, the Manager of the Government railways. Those circumstances should be quite sufficient to induce the House to pass the motion he submitted, which would carry out the policy adopted by the late Government, and which they directed the Manager of the railways to enforce. He concluded by moving the motion, and fixed the amount at or above which contracts must be obtained at $1,000.

The amendment was negatived on the following vote :—Ayes, 34 ; nays, 72.

The Bill was reported, and amendments read and concurred in.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the second reading of the Bill to amend and consolidate the laws respecting the North-West Territories. He explained certain changes he proposed to make in the Bill in committee. It would be observed that the 7th, 8th and 9th sections, contained provisions respecting certain ordinances for the administration of the laws of the North-West Territories. These sections were simply a recapitulation of the existing laws and practically simply continued the power vested in the Lieutenant Governor and Council of the North-West by the present law. He proposed, however, to remove some objections taken on the introduction of this Bill by some hon. members to the effect that we had no right to generally delegate subjects of legislation to another body in the way it was done by the existing law. He did not himself see much force in that objection, as the Territories were practically constituted a Crown colony under our own immediate surveillance instead of under the Crown. He proposed to substitute for the seventh and eighth sections the following :—

"The Lieutenant Governor by and with the consent of the Council of the North-West Territories may make, ordain and establish ordinances as to matters coming within the subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say :

1. Taxation for local and municipal purposes.

2. Property and civil rights in the Territories.

3. The administration of justice in the Territories, including the maintenance and organization of courts, of civil and criminal jurisdiction and including procedure in civil matters in these courts.

4. Public health, the licensing of inns and places of refreshment, landmarks and foundaries, cruelty to animals, game and the care and protection thereof, injuries to public morals, nuisances, roads and bridges, the protection of timber, jails, lock-ups, and generally all matters of a merely local and private nature.

5. The imposition of and punishment by fine or penalty or imprisonment for the violation of any ordinance of the territory made in relation to any matter coming within any class of subjects herein enumerated.

6. Provided that no ordinance so to be made by the Lieutenant Governor with the advice and consent of the Council of the said Territories, shall be inconsistent with, or alter or repeal any provision of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, or schedule of this Act or any Act of the Parliament of Canada which may now or at any time hereafter expressly refer to the said Territories, or which may be, at any time made by the GOVERNOR in Council, applicable to and in force in the said North-West Territories, or impose any fine or penalty exceeding $100.

7. And provided that a copy of every such ordinance made by the Lieut. Governor in Council shall be mailed for transmission to the GOVERNOR GENERAL within ten days after its passage, and may be disallowed by him at any time within two years after its passage, and all such Orders in Council and all ordinances so made as aforesaid shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as convenient after their passage.

8. The GOVERNOR in Council may by proclamations made from time to time, direct that any Act of the Parliament of Canada, or any part or parts thereof shall be in force in the North-West Territories or in any part or parts thereof."

The 9th section he proposed to amend to read as follows :—

" Provided further that when and so soon as any electoral district shall be established as hereinafter provided the Lieut.-Governor by and with the consent of the Council or the Assembly as the case may be, shall have power to pass ordinances for raising within such district by direct taxation or by shop, saloon, tavern, or any other such licences a revenue for local and municipal purposes for such district and for the collection and appropriation of the same."

The tenth section he proposed should read as follows :—

" Whenever any electoral district shall be found to contain not less than —— inhabitants, the Lieut. Governor by and with the consent of the Council or Assembly, as the case may be, pass ordinances creating municipal corporations, and thenceforth the power of the Lieut. Governor in Council in respect of taxation for municipal purposes shall cease, and every such municipal corporation shall thenceforth have the right to pass by-laws for raising within such municipality by taxation a revenue for municipal purposes, and for the collection and appropriation of the same.

11. When and so soon as any system of taxation shall be adopted in any district or portion of the North-West Territories the Lieut. Governor and Council or Assembly, as the case may be, shall pass all necessary ordinances in respect of education, and it shal therein be always provided that a majority of rate-payers in any district may establish such schools therein as they may think fit and make the necessary assessment and rates therefor, and further that the minority of rate-payers therein whether Protestants or Roman Catholics may establish separate schools therein.

The only other important amendment that he proposed was to make the provision for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the territory more stringent.

The Bill was read a second time, and the House went into Committee on it forthwith (Mr. Moss in the chair.)

It being six o'clock the committee rose.

——:++:——

AFTER RECESS,

The House again went in Committee on the Bill (Mr. Moss in the chair.)

The first 44 sections were adopted.

On the 45th section, relating to the separate rights of married women in real estate,

Mr. MILLS suggested that the courtesy of the husband should be the same precisely as the dower of the wife, and that he shall have an interest during life to the extent of one-third of his wife's property. He moved an amendment to that effect.

Mr. PLUMB said the wife should have some advantage to compensate for the loss of the ballot unless the hon. member for Bothwell would propose to introduce woman suffrage into the territory.

Mr. SCATCHERD hoped the clause would remain as it is. It was the same as Ontario Law, and they should not introduce new principles of law into the territories.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD was of the same opinion, especially as this Bill gives the people of the territories power to change the law in this respect if they desired.

The amendment was declared lost and the section was adopted.

Certain amendments were made to render the provision for the prohibition of intoxicating liquors more stringent. The remaining sections of the Bill were passed, and the Committee rose and reported the Bill with amendments, which were read a first and second time, and the Bill was fixed for the third reading to-morrow.

INSURANCE.

The amendments made by the Senate to the Bill to amend and consolidate the several Acts respecting Insurance, in so far as regards Fire and Inland Marine business, were read the first and second times.

The amendments made by the Senate to the Bill respecting Life Insurance Companies and Companies doing any Insurance business other than Fire and Inland Marine, were also read the first and second times.

CAPE RACE LIGHT-HOUSE TOLL.

The Bill to repeal an Act of the Legislature of the Province of Prince Edward Island for the collection of the Cape Race Light-house toll was read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole forthwith. (Mr. FORBES in the chair).

The Committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read the third time and passed.

COASTING TRADE.

The Bill to amend the Act 33 Vict., cap. 14, respecting the coasting trade of Canada, was read the second time and referred to the Committeee of the Whole forthwith. (Mr. COLIN MACDOUGALL in the chair.

The Committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read the third time and passed.

PENITENTIARIES.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved that certain amendments be made to the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill respecting Penitentiaries and the inspection thereof, and for other purposes. —Carried.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Criminal Law relating to violence, threats and molestation.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the only objection he had to the Bill was that it deprieved his right hon. friend from Kingston of his laurels of 1872.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I have had my laurels.

Mr. MOSS was glad that the Government had adopted a measure which would do away with some very harsh provisions in the existing law. At the same time he was not disposed to find very much fault with the right hon. member for Kingston, as he had only adopted a measure which had then recently been enacted in England. However, he was still more pleased that it fell to the lot of this Liberal Government to amend an Act which pressed hardly upon workingmen.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he had gained the laurels of passing a law which made Trades Unions legal, which was a great benefit to workingmen, and in order to prevent any possibility of opposition being made to that law on the ground that it went further than the English Act, he agreed to accept the other Act which had been introduced, and the two were accepted by the House. They all remembered the occasion of that law, namely the harsh treatment of a certain prominent gentleman towards his employees. With regard to the Liberal Government being entitled to any credit for this measure, he thought the whole credit was due to his hon. friend from Hamilton, who, in anticipation of having to go back to his constituents after the prorogation of the House, felt called upon to press this measure upon the Government. It was true that the Government did not go so far as his hon. friend had proposed; but they had, no doubt, with his hon. friend accepted the Bill on the principle that a half-loaf was better than no bread. He hoped that the hon. gentleman would tell his constituents that when he came back to this House next session, as he no doubt would, that he would seek to obtain the repeal even of this Act.

Mr. IRVING thanked the right hon. gentleman for his remarks, and said he was willing to acknowledge that since the utter failure of the present law had become apparent that hon. gentleman had heartily co-operated in getting it amended.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole forthwith (Mr. Moss in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read the third time and passed.

THE FISHERIES ACT.

Hon. Mr. SMITH moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Fisheries Act. He explained that the object of the measure was to abolish the old Fishery laws of Nova Scotia and make the general Fisheries Act applicable to that Province.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL expressed his approval of the Bill.

The Bill was read the second time and referred to the Committe of the Whole, Mr. MILLS in the chair.

The Bill was reported, read the third time and passed.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of amendments made by the Senate to the Bill, to amend and consolidate the Statute Law for the regulation of the Postal Service.

Mr. BOWELL asked if letters addressed to the Government or members of it, and unpaid, would reach their destination.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD replied that there was no exception to the law. All letters must be prepaid, whether on public business or not.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL expressed his disapproval of this feature of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

THE MANITOBA ACT.

Order No 11 being called—House in Committee on Bill to amend an Act to amend and continue the Act 32 and 33 Victoria, Chapter 3, and to establish and provide for the Government of the Province of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said some doubts having been expressed as to the power of this Parliament to pass the first section of this Act, and the Government having the power to do by Order in Council what was contemplated by the second section, he would move that the Order be discharged. With regard to the first section the Government were in this position—the late Administration had passed an exactly similar law in 1873. That Act was now on the statute book. Of course it was there without due consideration and was void, he presumed, as being in contravention of the Imperial Act. He thought it better, therefore, to discharge the Bill.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he was very glad the hon. gentleman had taken this course for the reasons given. He acknowledged the fact that the Act of 1873 was ultra vires, but the present Government had passed, last session, a Bill precisely similar to that Act.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I forgot that.

The order was discharged.

ORDERS DISCHARGED.

The following Bills were discharged from the Orders of the Day :—

To amend the Acts 36 Vic. Cap., 9, and 37 Vic. Cap. 34, respecting the appointment of Harbor Masters.

To remove certain difficulties in the Administration of the Criminal Law.

SUPPLY.

The report of the Committee of Supply of March 30th was taken up.

Items 187 to 200 inclusive were concurred in.

On item 201, Drill Sheds and Rifle Ranges, $5,000,

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had been requested by several parties in Montreal to enquire whether any provision was likely to be made for the accommodation of the volunteers of that city.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was well known to residents in Montreal that the drill shed was partly the property of the city and partly of the Government. The Government had expected that the city authorities would take steps to have that building re-enclosed. As to out-door accommodation, LOGAN'S Farm was rented to the city at the nominal price of $200 by the late Administration, and it was now leased for $2,000, subject to be taken up at the pleasure of the Government. Under the lease, as under the former lease, it could be used by the volunteers. Part of St. Helen's Island was enclosed for a similar purpose, although the public had the use of the Island under certain limitations. He thought there was nothing in the way of the volunteers using both places.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he wished more particularly to inquire whether the Government intended to provide the volunteers of Montreal facilities for drill under cover during the season, when it was impossible to drill in the open air.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was the sum of $30,000 in the estimates for 1875-6 for drill sheds. He believed that in Toronto, as well as Montreal, and probably also in St. John, there was a desire to have a good drill shed, and the Government proposed with that appropriation to render some aid. He hoped some arrangements would be made with the local authorities whereby that could be done.

The item was concurred in; also items 202 to 206, inclusive.

On item 207, for winter service between Prince Edward Island and the Mainland, $10,000, in answer to Hon. Mr. MITCHELL, Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government were at present in negotiation with some parties for the purchase of a steamer for this service. It was intended to have a powerful steamer, so that a thorough attempt might be made to run a steamer between the Island and the Mainland in winter.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I have very little doubt it can be accomplished.

Mr. SINCLAIR said he hoped the Government would procure an efficient boat, as last year the boat was not fit for the service. If an efficient boat made the attempt, we would then know whether the service could be performed or not. This spring the Island had suffered greatly on account of the irregularity of the mails.

The item was concurred in; also items 208 to 217, inclusive.

On item 218, $6,000, to pay first payment to such Indians as were absent when Treaty No. 4, was negotiated, and to provide them with presents, and seed and grain, in accordance with the treaty,

Mr. RYAN desired to call the attention of the House to the fact that Indian agents in Manitoba usually paid the Indians their treaty money at trading places, and sometimes at stores. If there was only one store in the place where the treaty money was being made there was no objection to the practice; but where there were two or three stores, it was evidently unfair that the payment should be made at only one of them. In the village of Portage du Fort there were three stores, one belonging to the Hudson Bay Company, others to private firms. It had been the custom to pay the Indians at the Hudson Bay Company's store, which was prejudicial to the interests of the other traders. The Indians generally contracted debts at some of the stores before treaty-money became payable, and under these circumstances the store where the payment was made usually obtained repayment of any debts, whereas the other stores obtained nothing.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the Indians were paid in money and not in goods, and when the cash was handed over to them, they could trade either with the Hudson Bay Company or any other parties, for the Government had no right to interfere in the matter. It appeared essential that local agents should shortly be appointed in districts where large numbers of Indians congregated, and these agents would appoint the place where the treaty-money would be paid.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said there was a great deal of force in the objection raised by the hon. member for Marquette, for it was well known that so soon as an Indian received money, he went to the nearest store and got rid of it.

Rt. Hon. Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said his experience was, generally, that the Indians knew where to buy to advantage.

Mr. D. A. SMITH said the plans suggested by the hon. member for Marquette would remove all cause of jealousy, and it was desirable that the money should not be paid in any trading store, when it could be otherwise arranged.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said the agents in Manitoba had no instructions to the effect that the money should be paid in stores, and if such was the practice, it was of their own choice.

Mr. SCHULTZ said the principle involved was one to which he had previously called attention. The Government for some reason had seen fit to do all the business in the North-West Territory either directly or indirectly through the Hudson Bay Company's officers. At Portage du Fort there was a court-house and other public buildings where payments could be made, but for some extraordinary reason they were made at the Hudson Bay Company's post. The consequence was that these posts being removed from localities where supplies could be purchased, the Indians on receiving their treaty money purchased goods in those remote parts at an extravagant rate of charges: and it was desirrble that the department should direct their agents in Manitoba to make the payments if necessary in an Indian tent rather than in the stores of the Hudson's Bay Company, or of other merchants.

The item was concurred in.

On item 219, $4,000 to pay to R, S. M. BOUCHETTE for himself and the other heirs of the late JOSEPH BOUCHETTE, Esq., in recognition of the value and importance to the country of the Geographical Works of the latter, and in furtherance of a recommendation of a Committee of the House of Commons held on the 14th May, 1873.

Mr. SCATCHERD said that by reference to the journals of the House it would appear that this claim of $4,000 was more than 60 years old, and had been rejected by every Parliament from that time down to the present. The House was now asked to concur in the item because it was recommended by a Committee of the House on the 14th March 1873. Hon. members would be aware of the opinion which the country entertained of the House of Commons of that date. It was stated that their recommendation ought not to be considered as of sufficient importance to warrant Parliament in paying that claim. If there were any justice in the claim it would surely have been settled before now. The debt was incurred, and ought to have been paid, if paid at all, by the Legislature of Lower Canada. Instead of that its settlement had been successively postponed and rejected by that Legislature. Singularly enough, although a majority of the committee of this House, who instigated the claim in 1873, were Government supporters and reported in favor of its payment, the claim was not entertained by the House. He considered that this was not the time to make this claim and that this was not the place in which it should be preferred.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON said this item was not proposed simply because the committee of 1873 recommended it, but because that recommendation was founded upon facts establishing the justice of Mr. BOUCHETTE'S claim. He only failed to receive his dues in consequence of the political difficulties culminating in the rebellion of 1837-8. The claim had been laid over from time to time, but never given up by the heirs of Mr. BOUCHETTE. As a matter of simple contract, if not of gratitude, he was entitled to this money. The late Province of Canada inherited the liabilities of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and the Dominion inherited the liabilities of the Province of Canada, He (Mr. HOLTON) believed the money was honestly due, and should be paid by the Dominion of Canada. He never had a clearer conviction of the justice of any claim submitted to Parliament than this.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said this was the first item of the liabilities of Old Canada which had come up in this way since confederation, that he as a representative of the Maritime Provinces, was willing to assume the responsibility of voting to have paid. He looked upon the services rendered by Mr. BOUCHETTE as an inheritence which accrued to the whole country and not to the Province of Old Canada alone.

Mr. YOUNG felt very strong objections to allowing this item to pass. The fact that for nearly sixty years this claim had not been recognized by any Government of the late Province of Canada or Lower Canada before the union or the Dominion since Confederation, was prima facie evidence that the case was not sufficiently strong to induce the representatives of the people to settle the claim. Political difficulties might have been the cause of this between 1834 and 1838, but the union did not take place until some time after that. The claim was constantly pressed during that period, but no Government was willing to recognize and pay it. If the claim was a valid one, Quebec should settle it.

Mr. RYMAL said Government after Government, Conservative and Reform, had failed to pay this claim, and it remained for this Liberal Government to take up refused accounts and settle them. He for one would vote against the item,

Mr. DAVIES said it seemed to him if this was a valid claim it would not have been allowed to stand over for sixty years unpaid.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said it was not quite correct to say that the justice of the claim had never been recognized by any Government. Had there been any means of taking legal steps against the Government, the case would have been tested in a court of law.

Mr. SCATCHERD asked if this claim was not contracted in 1814?

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said it was.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the mere fact that the claim was long unpaid would not invalidate its justice, if it was just otherwise. The late WILLIAM LYON MACKENZIE had a claim against the old Province of Upper Canada from 1835, and that claim was ultimately paid by the Province of Ontario in 1868, nearly forty years after it was contracted. The question with regard to this demand was whether the services rendered by Mr. BOUCHETTE were of such value and of such a general character that the Legislature should recognize it at the present time. He had looked into the claim, and could not discover whether it had not been paid. He quite admitted there was no legal obligation on this Parliament to pay it; but the question was whether the sum should be paid by any party at all representing the old Province of Quebec. The Dominion was in one sense the legitimate successor of the Province that originally contracted the debt; no doubt Quebec was still more legitimately the successor; but on the other hand, there could be no doubt that the maps of Mr. BOUCHETTE were the foundation of all the maps we had of British North America. The Government felt bound, on the retirement of Mr. BOUCHETTE, to place this sum in the estimates for the judgment of Parliament.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) did not admit the similarity of the claim of WILLIAM LYON MACKENZIE and this. This appropriation was for services which Mr. BOUCHETTE had rendered to science, the other was a payment to a man who had taken up arms against his QUEEN and country.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said some years ago the question was raised with regard to claims of this kind against the old Province of Canada, and the policy adopted under the financial administration of Sir JOHN ROSE was this—inasmuch as by the Confederation Act Canada had assumed the debts and liabilities of the various Provinces, Canada would proceed to pay those things which were clearly debts, obtaining, of course, when possible the assent of the Province to obviate the difficulty, but not binding itself to obtain that consent preliminarily. With reference to such matters as might be considered claims, and which could not be called debts or liabilities in the true sense of the term, no arrangement should be made by the Government of Canada, except with the assent of the Provinces that were to be charged. Under that policy several claims were postponed, and never disposed of. There was one claim which came before a committee of this House, and which was reported upon unfavorably by that committee. He referred to the claim of Mr. DENNISON, jr., in connection with the seizure of the steamer Georgian. That was a claim, if it existed at all, against the late Province of Canada. At that time he (Mr. BLAKE) occupied a position in the Government of Ontario, and had communication with the hon. member for Kingston, who was then First Minister of Canada, on the subject. The rule was then then laid down by him (Sir JOHN) that as this was not clearly debt, he would require the assent of both Provinces before paying it. He (Mr. BLAKE) believed that with reference to that very claim the same view had been adhered to by the present Administration, and that was the condition of the case some months ago. Now it appeared to him that the claim before the House was clearly one which should be charged against the Province of Quebec, and the Government should be guided by the principle referred to, viz., the assent of that Province should be obtained before settling it. He did not think that this Government could fairly be called upon to pay this amount, if they choose to settle the claim without the assent of that Province. The Province of Ontario had undertaken to discharge its debts of honor, and it seemed to him that Quebec should also discharge its debts honor.

Sir A. JOHN MACDONALD said the statement of the rule agreed to by Parliament was correctly expressed by the member for South Bruce. The rule was that a debt positively due by any Province should be assumed by the general Government and charged to that Province. But if it was a mere matter of favor or a mere moral obligation it was understood that it would not be paid and charged to the Province without the consent of that Province. The only question was whether this was a debt of the late Province of Canada. He believed it was a debt originally of Lower Canada that that Province owed Mr. BOUCHETTE for services performed. He belonged to the Family Compact party, and on that account it was impossible to get the popular branch of the Legislature to recognize his claim, and Mr. BOUCHETTE would not accept payment unless it was voted by Parliament. Mr. R. S. M. BOUCHETTE, his son, on the other hand, took up arms against the Government in 1837, and on that account his claim was not recognized by the Legislature in the early history of the United Province of Canada. Afterwards if any attempt to vote money for Lower Canadians the leader of the then Opposition, now a member of the Senate, would have raised the cry of French domination. So that Mr. BOUCHETTE had been kept out of his claim all this time.

Hon. Mr. VAIL observed that the right hon. gentleman had not followed the principle laid down by him to-night when he kept back from the Nova Scotia Government $24,000 of interest on the cost of the new Provincial buildings.

Mr. MOSS said it was clear from the Confederation Act that the Dominion should assume all the debts and liabilities of each Province, but not their mere moral obligations. He entered into the history of this claim to show that it was not a debt or liability which the Dominion should assume.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON disagreed with the hon. gentleman, and held that this claim was really a debt. At the time of the union of Upper and Lower Canada, the latter Province had money on hand, while Upper Canada was deeply in debt.

Mr. SCATCHERD said if that was the case why did not Lower Canada pay this debt? The member for Quebec Centre had been in the Government since the union, and if this was a just debt, he ought then to have seen that it was paid.

Hon. Mr. CAUCHON said if the hon. gentleman could show that while he was in the Government this claim was made and refused, then his statement might have some force in it.

Mr. OLIVER said if this was a just debt it should be paid in full, but this vote was a compromise, which of itself was an evidence that the claim had no legal foundation.

Mr. DYMOND said the logical result of that reasoning was that the vote should be increased. It was no argument against the justice of this claim that it had remained unsettled so long, because it frequently occurred that just claims for compensation were not paid till after long delays. He referred to the claim of the family of Mr. JOHN MONTGOMERY which had not been paid until thirty-seven years after it originated. He had done what he could to induce the Premier of Ontario to recognize, and ultimately it was paid. The fact that recognition of this claim had been delayed so long should be no bar to its payment. Another reason why this claim should be paid was the fact that two years ago a Committee of this House reported it to be a just one; and another reason was that this House was now deriving advantage from the labors of Mr. BOUCHETTE.

Mr. BOWELL stated that the hon. member for North York had not properly placed before the House the facts in relation to the payment made by the Legislature of Ontario to the estate of JOHN MONTGOMERY. The grounds on which he was prepared to vote for the item now before this House were that after long consideration the payment had been recommended to be made by a committee of the House, and there was a wide distinction between this case and that of MONTGOMERY. The payment to MONTGOMERY'S estate was not based on a report made thirty years ago, but the report recommended payment to be made to Mr. MONTGOMERY for provisions, fodder for horses and other articles for the use of the troops, and for the destruction of property which ought to have been destroyed under the circumstances.

The item was concurred in on the following division :—

Items 224 to 227 inclusive were passed without discussion.

On 228, $3,562.50 to pay to the Hon. D. A. SMITH, M.P., the sum of £600,

Mr. WHITE (East Hastings) moved, seconded by Mr. BOWELL "that this item providing for $3,562.50 to be paid to the Hon. D. A. SMITH, M.P., in settlement of the amount advanced by him on the 6th February, 1872,—£600 together with interest thereon, be not concurred in, the said sum of £600 having been applied to a purpose of which this House cannot approve." He said that if what they had read lately in the newspapers of the action taken by the Hudson's Bay Company, was true, it was certain that this sum of money ought not to be paid to that Company. He knew there were many parties in this House, and in the country, who maintained that the hon. member for Kingston when in office should not have advanced $1,000 to get troublesome parties out of the territory, but on this occasion he (Mr. WHITE) had nothing to do with that question. He did not approve of that advance at the time, nor did he approve of it now. But though that had been done, it afforded no reason for this amount of $3,500 being paid. The Hudson's Bay Company received from this country, as payment for its rights in the North West Territories, one and a half million of dollars, besides getting one-twentieth of all the land, and having the benefit of all the improvements that were effected, and which put so much money into the Company's pocket. Nothing could be done in that country but it must enrich the Company. Even the annuities given to the Indians had to be paid in the Company's stores, so that it might reap any advantage that might accrue therefrom. When they came to observe the action of the hon. member for Selkirk in the matter of the North-West difficulties, they must feel satisfied that there was some truth in the letters written by Sergeant MULLIGAN and O'DONOGHUE. He hoped hon. members who condemned the act of the hon. member for Kingston in sending the $1,000 would be equally ready to stand up and condemn the payment of the money which was advanced by the hon. member for Selkirk under the circumstances stated. He sincerely hoped that the item would not be concurred in by the House.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) said that to be consistent he must vote against the item as he had done on a previous occasion. Adverting to the sum proposed to be paid to the BOUCHETTE family, it had been stated that Mr. BOUCHETTE was a rebel in 1837. [Cries of No.]

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—That is the case I believe.

Mr. ROSS said he felt it his duty to vote against that item also as he had done against the other, and he hoped the hon. member for East Hastings would pursue the same course. He felt he could not be a party to the payment of any money to one who had been in rebellion against his country.

Mr. BOWELL said the hon. member for Prince Edward had evidently misunderstood the statement of the hon. member for Kingston, for he had reversed the order of facts. The Mr. BOUCHETTE, of the product of whose labors the Government now proposed to show their appreciation, was one of the old Loyalists of Lower Canada, and not a rebel. It was one of his sons who was a rebel, but not the Mr. BOUCHETTE to whom the debt was due, which was an important distinction to draw.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) remarked that the major part of the money would be paid to M. BOUCHETTE'S son, who had been in the employ of the Government for many years, and was well paid for his services. He understood he had been wounded during the rebellion of 1837.

M. CIMON: Je voterai pour que la somme dont se compose cet item, soit payée au membre pour Selkirk, pour la seule raison que c'est à la demande de Mgr. TACHÉ que cette somme a été mise dans les estimés, et non pas parce que je sympathise avec la position de l'hon. membre. Si Mgr. TACHÉ n'avait pas demandé que ce remboursement fût fait, je croirais devoir voter contre.

Mr. ROCHESTER hoped the House would adopt the amendment of the hon. member for East Hastings. The question had been before the House on a previous occasion, and he regretted that it should have again been introduced. Subsequent revelations had shown he was correct in the criticisms he had offered during last session in respect to the course that the officers of the Hudson's Bay Company had pursued in the North-West troubles. If there was any reliance to be placed on the reports and letters published in the newspapers, they were now likely to get at the bottom of the difficulties, and that power behind the Throne, of which he had spoken last session, was about to be unveiled. Sergeant MULLIGAN, it would be seen by his statement, was ready to swear to the truth of everything he had written; and if that was the case, was it right or proper on the part of the House to give this money to parties who were plotting against the Dominion, and endeavoring in every way they possibly could to injure the country, and who were, he believed, the instigators of all the troubles in the North-West? Those persons who had recently been amnestied for the murder of Scott were not so much to blame as other parties, for they were simply tools in the hands of those individuals who held the reins of power, and controlled their actions. That was fully shown both by the letters of O'DONOGHUE and Sergeant MULLIGAN. Under those circumstances he hoped the House would not for one moment think of sanctioning the expenditure of money as was proposed in this vote. In respect to the hon. member for Kingston having sent $1,000 to the North West to be paid to some of the leaders of the rebellion in order to induce them to leave the country, it was an act which he could not justify, although he thought it was done with the best intention, as was supposed, in the interest of the country. He hoped the Government would withdraw the item, or that the House would vote it down.

Mr. CASEY said the question before the House was simply whether the Government were under obligations to reimburse a gentleman who, acting for the Hudson's Bay Company, advanced money to a former Government, for what was said to be in public use, to assist the Government in acting in what they considered to be for the interest of the country. It was ungenerous for any supporter of the late Government to endeavor to break faith when their leaders had pledged themselves for the money advanced, and the then leader of the Government stated on one occasion to the hon. member for Selkirk that it would be quite sufficient to put in a vote, stating the money had been advanced to Lieut. Governor ARCHIBALD for the purpose referred to, and he would receive the money next morning. Although this promise of repayment was never carried out, the leader of the Government had pledged the faith of the country to it. If the question of the policy of giving this money were open for discussion, he could say something about it as strong as what had been said by the hon. member for Cardwell. The question was now whether Mr. SMITH should be paid or not. He would most heartly support the Government. The amendment would only create an impression that the Opposition were endeavoring to obtain cheap popularity, but it would also be seen that it placed their chieftain in a delicate position. He hoped the hon. member for Kingston would exercise his influence with his supporters to induce them to vote for the item in the estimates.

Mr. PLUMB said facts had recently been brought to light which forced him to vote for the amendment.

Mr. JONES (Leeds) said he would vote for this appropriation because he believed the Government were in honor bound to redeem the promise of the Lieut. Governor of Manitoba.

Mr. BROUSE was not satisfied at having to pay the price of disloyalty, and he would, therefore, vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said he had no doubt this was a very unpopular vote, but it was also just, and he would vote for it. What the hon. member for South Leeds had said was strictly true. Mr. ARCHIBALD, as GOVERNOR of that territory had apprehension for the safety of the country and those apprehensions were shared by others qualified to judge of the danger. It was deemed proper in the public interest that this money should be advanced and it was procured from the hon. member for Selkirk. The right hon. member for Kingston took the same view when the circumstances were stated to him, as would be seen by the evidence of that hon. gentleman before the North-West Committee. The right hon. member deposed :—

"The largeness of the sum rather staggered me, especially as I had not heard the result of the previous payment ; but I did not hesitate to at once tell Mr. SMITH that if the Lieut. Governor, in the presence of such an exigency, had pledged the faith of the Dominion Government, and the money was advanced on that pledge, that he, Mr. SMITH, or the Company, should not be losers, and should be repaid. I stated that there might be a difficulty as to the means or fund out of which he would be repaid ; that it would be very embarrassing, if not impossible, to go to Parliament at that time for the money, and I asked him to allow the matter to stand over, repeating the assurance for myself that it must be repaid him in some way or other. I cannot remember any interview or conversation with Governor ARCHIBALD about it, although I have taxed my memory on the subject. I of course accepted Mr. SMITH'S statement. It then became simply a question of when and how. I took no other steps for ascertaining how the matter stood. I remember reference being made by Mr. SMITH to a sum of £500 sterling which it was desired to pay to the loyal French. The GOVERNOR may have spoken of this and of the £600 also, but I cannot remember. I have never had any doubt in my mind that this money should be paid. I intended that it should be paid. The subject was not formally brought up in Council because I was exceedingly unwilling to bring up the discussion of the RIEL affair at all, in consequence of the embarrassment I felt as to the position of my Lower Canadian colleagues. I was anxious to avoid discussion lest the result might be a claim for amnesty, and, in the event of the Cabinet not agreeing upon action, resignation. The consideration of the payment was therefore postponed, as I thought it made little difference to a Company like the Hudson's Bay Company. Early last November Mr. SMITH was very urgent, and I asked him to write me a letter stating the particulars (as he had done before) of the claim, that I might bring it up before Council. He wrote such letter, but this being a few days before resignation no action was taken upon it."

That was the statement made by the hon. member for Kingston after having communication with Governor ARCHIBALD, as appeared further on in the evidence. The hon. gentleman was recalled and after having his evidence read over to him, had nothing to add to it. No doubt Governor ARCHIBALD intimated to Mr. SMITH that he had no authority to pay this money, but there was equally little doubt that he pledged the faith of the country as far as he could to its repayment to the hon. member for Selkirk. This House should respect that pledge and vote the money. The hon. member for Kingston would have been unworthy of his position it he had failed to respect that pledge, and this House would be equally unworthy if it refused to repay this money.

Mr. SCATCHERD thought if any payment was wrong it was the first one of $1,000 and not the second amount advanced by the hon. member for Selkirk. The claims of every one else had been settled. This Parliament had voted large amounts of land to parties implicated in the rebellion, yet no one objected to it. The claim of the hon. member for Lisgar had been settled, and why should this one be opposed? There might have been a mistake as to the necessity of this payment, but the money was paid in good faith, and it would be most unfair to refuse to refund it to the hon. member because it was asserted by some one that he had been implicated in the rebellion. There was no evidence to prove that assertion, and the money should be paid.

Mr. ROCHESTER observed that the $1,000 was sent up for the purpose, as was believed, of preserving the peace of the country during the winter season when it was impossible to send up troops.

Mr. LANDERKIN said it was quite clear that the hon. member for Selkirk had paid this money on the understanding that he would be repaid by the Government of Canada, and we should not shrink from discharging a debt of honor of that kind through fear that political capital would be made out of it.

Mr. FARROW said he could see no hurry for paying this money, especially in view of certain very curious revelations that had been recently made—revelations which he thought it the duty of this House to take notice of. The hon. member for Selkirk had promised to make some explanations to the House, but he had not yet done so, and before one cent of this money was paid there should be a thorough investigation of the charges made against him. If the hon. gentleman cleared himself, then he should be recouped this money, either by this Government or the Manitoba Government. The hon. gentleman could without suffering any hardship wait for this money till an investigation was had, which might take place in a week, if the House sat that long, or next session—especially as the money would be drawing interest all the time. He did not approve of this way of spending the public money, as he had not approved of the payment of the $1,000. The passage of this vote would forever stop the mouths of gentlemen opposite from saying anything against the payment of the $1,000, because if the payment now proposed is right, the first payment is equally right.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said the statement which the hon. gentleman was so anxious for would be made in due time. He, however, wished to say that if in the opinion of any member of the late Government this was not a debt owing to him which ought to be paid, he would be perfectly satisfied if the House refused to pay it.

Mr. BOWELL wished to say in justice to the hon. member for Selkirk that he had expressed the most earnest desire before the North-West Committee to assist him (Mr. BOWELL) in entering into a full examination of the connection of the Hudson Bay Company with the troubles of the North-West, but the Committee had refused to go into that investigation.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER, in the absence of the leader of the Opposition, said he felt bound to state that if that hon. gentleman was in the House he would at once declare that the Government were bound to discharge this debt, and the late Government were prepared to do so as soon as it could be done.

The House then divided on the amendment, which was lost; yeas, 27; nays, 89.

Mr. FARROW rose to move another amendment. As he had before stated, he was in favor of the hon. gentleman being paid this money, provided the charge made against him was not true. In view of that charge the hon. gentleman should take the first opportunity of clearing himself. And he should wait a week or till next session until he proved his innocence of the charges preferred against him before he received this money.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—Who makes this charge? Do you?

Mr. FARROW—The charge is circulated throughout the country.

Mr. SPEAKER—I think this has gone almost too far. My impression is that it is not fair to speak of charges made against any hon. gentleman which are not made in this House. Mere newspaper report or rumors afford no justification for such a course. If any hon. gentleman is prepared to make a charge let him lay it upon the table and the action of the House could then properly be taken on it. But where there is nothing of that kind I do not think it is fair to constantly speak of an hon. gentleman as lying under charges.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I quite agree with the opinion you have now expressed, but remember that these charges were distinctly brought before this House by the member for Selkirk himself, who said he was going to reply to them.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—They were referred to by a gentleman opposite in the first place, and it was quite naturally that the hon. member for Selkirk should reply to the accusation, although if I was in his place I would pay no attention to Sergeant MULLIGAN's charges.

Mr. BOWELL—If I recollect rightly the first time the name of Sergeant MULLIGAN was mentioned in the House was by the hon. member for Selkirk himself. He mentioned the name, and afterwards I rose and asked him if it was the same Sergeant MULLIGAN who had written a certain letter.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—It may be quite competent for an hon. gentleman to take notice of charges made against him in a newspaper, but until some hon. gentleman chooses to adopt these charges and assume the responsibility of preferring them in this House I quite agree with you, Mr. SPEAKER, that they should not be made the ground of any action by the House, I call the attention of the House to an observation of the hon. member for North Huron, which I was not surprised at coming from him, that this money should not be paid till the hon. gentleman from Selkirk proved his innocence. That is his notion of the rights of a British subject. How would the hon. gentleman like to be assumed guilty of any charge that might be made against him until he had proved his innocence ?

Mr. FARROW — He volunteered to prove his innocence. I will not take up the time of the House, but will move in amendment: That this item be not now concurred in but that a commissionbe appointed to investigate the charges against officers of the Hudson Bay Company of having encouraged the insurrection in the North-West.

Mr. SPEAKER—I do not think I can put that amendment, as there are no charges before the House.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I think my hon. friend is rather injudicious in making that motion at the tail end of the session. If a Committee to investigate so important a matter as the charges referred to in the motion is to be appointed it ought to be appointed at an early period of the session. I suggest to my hon. friend that he withdraw his motion and make it again if he chooses when Parliament meets again. For my own part, as a member of the late Government I am prepared to support the vote asked for by the Government.

Mr. FARROW—With the leave of the House I will withdraw the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn and the item was concurred in on a division.

On the next item, to pay the sum agreed to be paid to certain parties for services during the troubles in the North-West, $2,500,

Mr. WHITE said I am glad to see this sum placed in the estimates. We have to-night seen the lion and the lamb lie down together; the member for South Bruce after all he has said on this subject throughout the country has to-night acknowledged that this payment to RIEL and LEPINE was right. He told a different story throughout the country, and when he comes again before the people he will be in a peculiar position. If the hon. gentleman had been on this side of the House this item would not have passed with so large a majority. It makes all the difference in the world which side the hon. gentleman is on. But we have succeeded in one thing; we have succeeded in forever closing the mouths of the Grits of Ontario on this subject. They got into power on the cry of the murder of THOMAS SCOTT, but once in power they take quite a different position. I was proud of the hon. member for South Bruce when as Premier of Ontario he offered a reward for the apprehension of those who took the life of THOMAS SCOTT; but he has forgotten all that now and is willing to say that the member for Kingston is one of the most upright and conscientious men in the country. If it be true that coming events cast their shadows before, the first thing we know the member for Kingston and the member for South Bruce will be forming a new Administration, and the members of the present Government will have to give place to those gentlemen opposite who are so anxious for a seat in the Cabinet. If we are to judge from the remarks of the hon. member for South Bruce to-night we must come to the conclusion that something of this kind is to take place. I hope the hon. member for Selkirk will be able to give satisfactory explanations to this House, for certainly the question of the North-West troubles is not yet settled. I was pleased with the remarks of the member for Grenville, and I agree with him that if the payment of this money had been made an issue in the last election, that item would not have been placed in the estimates, or if placed it would not have been passed.

The item was concurred in; as also items from 230 to 236 inclusive.

On item 237, law books for the Supreme Court, $3,000, in answer to hon. Mr. BLAKE, Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it was intended by this vote to supplement the law books in the Parliamentary Library. From all the information the Government had received from legal gentlemen the Library was singularly deficient in that respect.

Item concurred in.

Items from 238 to 251 inclusive were concurred in without discussion. On item 252, $25,000 for purchase of Cow Bay Breakwater, Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE repeated the explanations previously given in respect to the purchase.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL thought the purchase of the work for $25,000 when $50,000 would be required to improve the harbor, was a bad investment, when the annual return was only $3,800.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said the harbor was one of the best in Nova Scotia, and during one of the most severe gales between sixty and seventy vessels were saved from disaster by obtaining shelter in the harbor.

The item was concurred in. Items from 254 to 266 inclusive, were also concurred in.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The Bill respecting the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway Company was read a third time and passed.

The Bill to change the name of the Mutual Insurance Company of Canada to "The Dominion Life Assurance Company," and to amend their Act of incorporation, was considered in Committee of the Whole, reported, read a third time, and passed.

The House then adjourned at 1:20 A. M.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Friday, 2nd April, 1875.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex) moved the adoption of the report of the committee appointed to make arrangements for the reporting of the debates of the House for the next session.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked the hon. gentleman to explain the arrangements that had been made.

Mr. ROSS said that the arrangements for reporting were based on the same principle as that adopted by the Committee of Internal Arrangements for the present session. The present editor was engaged at the rate of $5,000 per session. His engagement for the present session was at the rate of $500 per week, and his contract was based on the expectation that the session would last ten weeks. The committee had made arrangements with him to prepare the reports next session for a lump sum, and had imposed upon him the additional duty of preparing a very careful index after the model of the index to the English Hansard, and also of revising the proofs. They had made arrangements for the printing, after having notified all the printers of the city that they would receive tenders, with the Parliamentary printers, Messrs. MCLEAN, ROGER & Co. They had also arranged for the translation of the reports into French through the official translators of the House. The cost of the translation would be at the rate of $1.25 per page of 800 words, the usual price being $1.60. It was estimated that they would save on the whole book $300 as compared with the usual rates. The whole cost of the Hansard for next session, including the reporting, printing and translating, would not exceed $9,000. The committee had practised the utmost economy consistent with the production of a good report.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE asked if the official translators were to be paid $1.25 per page in addition to their present salaries.

Mr. ROSS said the official translators would get extra translators to do the work. The arrangement was made through them for the sake of convenience.

Hon. Mr. POPE—As far as I can learn the French speeches will appear in the English edition in French.

Mr. ROSS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE said it was unfortunate that the English edition was not to be completely in English just as the French edition was to be completely in French.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD quite agreed with that view. It seem to be absurd that one volume should be entirely in one language, and the other a polyglot. The additional expense would be very insignificant.

Mr. ROSS said the committee would be happy to adopt the view suggested, but there had been such an outcry on account of the expense that they were very anxious to economize as much as possible.

Mr. YOUNG regretted very much that the original proposition had not been adopted of having the speeches reported and published in the language in which they were uttered on the floor of the House. He was afraid that a departure from that economical system would lead to a large additional expenditure. The House was aware that heretofore the great obstacle in the way of establishing a Hansard was the expense of having the speeches reported in both languages, and as a compromise the plan of this session was adopted. He wished to add that he was sure the House would agree with him that the Hansard this session had been found to be of great service, and he believed it would contribute very much to the usefulness of the debates. He was very glad to hear the Chairman state that the whole expense would not exceed $9,000.

Mr. MILLS said that the proposition of the committee was a very great improvement upon the present plan. They could all understand how very anxious hon. gentlemen who spoke in the French language were to be fairly reported, and on that account they were obliged in many instances to speak in English, when they could speak with more facility in their own language. He did not think the present arrangement was a fair one, as French members were obliged to send to their constituents reports of the debates, printed in a language which many of them did not understand. One great advantage of a Hansard, in addition to its being a correct record of the debates, was that it would relieve members from absolute dependence upon the newspaper reports. He was sorry that the committee had not gone one step further, and provided for a complete English edition, as well as a French one. The cost of the Hansard was, he believed, money well expended.

Hon. Mr. POPE approved of the suggestion, that the English edition should contain a report of all the speeches in English, just as the French edition would contain a report of all the speeches in French.

Mr. ROSS said he was quite willing to act on this suggestion.

The report was then adopted.

THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD said the House would remember that the provisions of the Act to regulate the Postal Service, relating to newspapers would not go into operation until the 1st of October next. He had received communications from several newspaper publishers asking that they might be enabled to take advantage of the new system at once. With the permission of the House, he would therefore move an address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL praying that he will be pleased to authorize the Postmaster General to make arrangements with all proprietors of newspapers and periodicals published in Canada, who may apply for the transmission thereof by Post, during such period prior to the 1st of October next, as may be agreed upon, at the rates of postage and on the conditions, at and on which, under the Bill in that behalf now awaiting HIS EXCELLENCY'S sanction, they will be transmissable on and after the said 1st day of October next; assuring HIS EXCELLENCY that this House will concur in any measure that may be requisite for making good any expenditure or loss of revenue involved in such arrangements.

The motion was carried.

THE RAILWAY ACT.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the third reading of Bill further to amend the general Act respecting railways.

Mr. BLAIN said he had given notice that he would move an amendment to this Bill, but at this late hour in the session he would not press this motion unless the Government were willing to accept it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE thought it would be inconvenient to attach the amendment to this Bill, as there was nothing in the latter affecting passengers or the rates to be charged. It would be much better that any legislation of this kind should be brought up in a distinct and definite shape next session.

Mr. BLAIN withdrew his amendment.

The Bill was read a third time and passed.

THE NORTH-WEST GOVERNMENT.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the third reading of Bill to amend and consolidate the laws respecting the North-West Territories.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said he did not object to the third reading and passage of this Bill, but he would again impress upon the leader of the Government the expediency, from an economical point of view, of governing the North-West Territories from Fort Garry. A commission could be issued to the Lieut. Governor of Manitoba to act for the present as Lieut. Governor of the North-West. He had plenty of time on his hands, and there was no reason in the world why he should not direct his attention to the government of the whole of the North-West for the present. The objection of the hon. Premier that the North-West Council had proved a failure, because none of its members residing west of Manitoba was fully answered by the hon. member for Selkirk who stated that at least six of these gentlemen were scattered through the territory and knew all about it.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE received the suggestion of the hon. member, in the spirit in which it was offered, but could not adopt it. If he had not regarded this measure as a necessity he would not have introduced it. The Lieut. Governor, as one of the commissioners who accompanied the Minister of the Interior to negotiate a treaty with the Indians, although only absent three weeks from Manitoba and distant about 250 miles from that Province was, obliged to issue a commission to the Chief Justice to act as Lieut. Governor of Manitoba in his absence. That was, to say the least, inconvenient, and the inconvenience would be increased, of course, in proportion to the length of absence required in administrating the affairs in the North-West.

The Bill was read a third time and passed.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT.

On the order being called for the third reading of the Bill to prevent enlistment in the service of any foreign State, in certain cases not provided for by the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE stated that in the absence of the hon. Minister of Justice, who was detained at his office, he would beg to announce to the House that it was not the intention of the Government to proceed with the measure during the present session. Whilst they adhered to the general provisions of the Bill, they admitted that it was perhaps not very urgently required at the present moment, and as some of its provisions appeared to some hon. members to conflict with the Imperial Act published in our Statutes of 1872, they had decided to drop the Bill for the present, and consider the objections which had been made to it during the coming recess. He moved that the order be discharged.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD said he was very glad that the Government had decided to adopt that course. If the Act had been in force at the time the war was going on between the North and South, every man who went from Canada to fight for the Northern cause—and they went by tens of thousands—would have been liable to have been marked as criminals. If such a law had been in operation in England some of the most conspicuous men in its history would have come within its provisions, including Sir GEORGE NAPIER, Lord BYRON and others. The whole of the officers serving, during the Peninsula War, by the consent of the Sovereign, with the Portugese army, although they were auxiliaries of England, would have come within the scope of such an act, had it been in force in England, and they would have been liable to be treated as criminals. The Bill submitted by the Government went too far, and would introduce into our legislation as a crime that which was allowed by England and all other nations. The men who left England to fight in the cause of liberty under GARIBALDI, and the Papal Zouaves, who went to fight for what they considered the holiest of all causes—that of the Pope, when he was a temporal Prince—would all be liable to be indicted for misdemeanor on their return. It would never prevent a single man joining such expeditions, because only earnest men would join them; but it would have prevented them returning.

The order was discharged.

SUPPLY.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT introduced a Bill for granting supply to HER MAJESTY, which was read the first time.

DUTIES ON OAK LOGS AND STAVE-BOLTS.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT, the Bill to amend the Act 31 Vict., chap. 44, was read the second time.

The House then went into committee on the Bill. (Mr. BROUSE in the chair).

Mr. McCALLUM regretted the Government did not see their way clear to removing export duties altogether, although at the same time he was not opposed to the Bill. He was opposed, however, to the principle of export duties, believing that the people should be allowed to go free to the markets of the world with their products, whether of the mine, sea, or forest. If the arguments in favor of export duties had any force, an export duty should be levied on wheat, and it was useless to levy such duty on timber exported from Canada, when we had such extensive forests in the country. If the export duty was removed only from oak logs and stave-bolts it would practically be class legislation. The retention of the duty resulted in a very small revenue to the country. The amount received last year, when oak-logs and stave-bolts were excluded, was only $11,545. Believing that the duty should be removed from all classes of timber, he moved in amendment—"That all the words after bolts be struck out and the following substituted: saw-logs and all kinds of timber cut on private property other than the Government limits of the several Provinces of the Dominion.

The amendment was lost, and the committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

CONTINUATION OF ACTS.

The Bill to continue for a limited time the Acts therein mentioned, was read a second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole forthwith—Mr. KIRKPATRICK in the chair.

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

LARCENY.

The Bill to amend the Act, 33 Vic., cap. 21, respecting larceny and other similar offences, was read a second time, and referred to the Committee of the Whole forthwith—(Mr. PALMER in the chair.)

The committee rose and reported the Bill, which was read a third time and passed.

DISCHARGED ORDERS.

The following orders were discharged:—

Receiving report of Committee of Whole on certain resolutions to increase the salaries of the Civil Service of Canada, as provided in the Act respecting the Civil Service of Canada.

Second Reading Bill (No. 74) An Act respecting the Civil Service of Canada.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 20) An Act to amend the law relating to Criminal Procedure.

Further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. ORTON for the appointment of a Special Committee on the Agricultural interests of the Dominion.

Second reading of Bill for the prevention of accidents entailing loss of life in Breweries and Distilleries,

Mr. McCallum.

PACIFIC RAILWAY TELEGRAPH.

The order was called for the further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. TUPPER, for an Address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, for copies of all specifications and contracts for the construction of any portion of a Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph, with all correspondence relating thereto; and the motion of Mr. BOWELL in amendment to the same.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said the motion and amendment did not go far enough. These contracts were clearly given out contrary to the statute, and therefore this House should state that fact as the ground for their refusing to approve of these contracts. The statute provided that Government should not have authority to let contracts for building a telegraph line in advance of the location of the line of railway. Now, it was evident from the reports laid before the House that the line of railway had not been located as far as the contracts, for the telegraph had been given out. He therefore moved to add to the amendment the following words:—"Contrary to the statute authorizing the construction of the said telegraph line, and therefore this House does not approve of said contracts."

The House divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division: Yeas, 48; nays, 101.

Jodoin,

Mr. PLUMB said that after the very significant vote just passed he supposed it would be useless for him to appeal for reconsideration. But he felt it due to himself and the gentlemen with whom he was acting to say a few words before the proposition of the Government was adopted. In looking over the speech of the First Minister on this subject he found this statement :—"He felt from the first "that it was absolutely indispensable to "have telegraphic communication with "the various points on the line in order to "prosecute a successful survey, and in "order to conduce to the settlement of the "North-West Territories as well as to lay "out the line upon which the road should "ultimately be built." The Premier further stated that the cost of the clearing of the timber lands along the line of the telegraph would be allowed as part of the expense of building the railway, and, therefore, it was evident that the lines must be chartered or that cost would be wasted. On the other hand, the Act required that a "line of telegraph should be constructed in advance of the said railway as soon as practicable after the location of the railway line." He believed the construction of the line of telegraph must in some measure fix the location of the line of railway. The First Minister said he had given out contracts for the telegraph lines from Fort Garry to Fort Pelly, from Fort Pelly to Edmonton, from Edmonton to Cash Creek and from Thunder Bay to Fort Garry ; and a large portion of the work had been proceeded with and the wires were being put up in the western division. Now, either the location of the railway was fixed by the letting out of those contracts or the money spent in building a telegraph line, not on the line of railway would be lost. He trusted the amendment of the hon. member for North Hastings would receive the favorable consideration, as the question now to be decided was one of the most important that could be brought before the House.

Mr. BOWELL'S amendment was then put and declared lost on the same division.

PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAW.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) moved that the House do again go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution :—That having regard to the beneficial effect arising from Prohibitory Liquor Laws in those States of the American Union, where the same are fully carried out, this House is of the opinion, that the most effectual remedy for the evils of intemperance would be, to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating liquors.

The motion was carried and Mr. BUNSTER was called to the chair.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) protested against the introduction of these fanatical ideas into the House when the Ministers themselves dare not attempt to repress what they all acknowledged was an evil. It was left to hon. gentlemen who went about this country as paid lecturers, probably making their living by agitating this question—it was left to them to come forward here and try to thrust their absurd ideas on this House; and the Government and their followers meekly swallowed all they had to say. He would be quite prepared to support a Prohibitory Liquor Law if he thought it would be carried into effect, but every one knew such a thing was impossible. It was well known, in the first place, that it would be ruinous to the revenue, and the smuggling that would be carried on across the frontier would make such an Act null and void. It had been a failure in the States, and therefore he regarded this as an attempt to perpetrate a fraud upon the community. It was nothing but an attempt to bring certain men prominently before their constituents and enable them to carry the temperance vote. He considered this measure a fraud, a mockery, a delusion and a snare.

Mr. BOWELL said he had moved an amendment and he wished to know if the hon. member for Cariboo referred to him. If so he would inform that hon. gentleman that he was not a temperance lecturer.

Mr. THOMPSON said he did not allude to the hon. member for North Hastings.

Mr. YOUNG said no one ought to attribute motives to any hon. member in this House in respect to any measure he might bring under its notice. There was no doubt the hon. member for West Middlesex was perfectly candid and sincere in every move he had made in this matter. Every one acquainted with him knew how earnestly he had advocated the temperance cause.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex) said it was true he had lectured on temperance, and was prepared to do so again, and he was only sorry that in his missionary tours through the country he had not visited British Columbia. Possibly if he had chanced to be in that hon. gentleman's constituency when an election was proceeding, and his (Mr. THOMPSON'S) success had depended on the temperance vote, he (Mr. Ross) and those who were of the same opinion as himself, would not have had such disparaging remarks addressed to them as the hon. gentleman had indulged in this evening. Was it not the business of a politician to elevate the moral status of society, and make it better than he found it if he had the opportunity. If that was not his business what was it? If this House was not now prepared to consider this question, it would some day be prepared to take it up. He did not usually venture any remarks of a prophetic character, but he would say that he believed the moral convictions of the people of this country were fast approaching that stage when, if the hon. gentleman valued his position in this House, he would not dare to speak of temperance men and the temperance cause in the way he had done to-day. He agreed with the amend ment of the hon. member for North Hastings, but he did not consider that it would add to the value of the motion before the House. Temperance advocates desired to advance step by step. His object this session was to get the opinion of this House, as the opinion of the Senate had been obtained. The Government could then consider the expediency of introducing a measure to prohibit the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors in the Dominion. If they would not do so, it would be his (Mr. Ross') duty to introduce such a measure himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Montreal) said the only data or statistics before this House were contained in the report the Commissioners who went to the United States to report on the working of the Prohibition Law in that country. He regarded that report as a mass of crude and undigested remarks on a very important subject. The editor of one of the leading papers in Montreal had well said that there was nothing in that report which would justify Parliament in passing a Prohibitory Liquor Law. It would be absurd for the House of Commons of Canada at this late period of the session to pass a law of that kind. The hon. member for West Middlesex evidently supposed that, weary as many members were of the length of the session, the House would pass the motion just to get rid of a vexatious and not, as now presented, an over-interesting subject. But he (Mr. MACKENZIE) trusted the House would show sufficient sense on that occasion as not to be led by the hon.

member, and that hon. members would pause before they committed themselves to the principle of prohibition, which would bind this country for all time to come. It was not fitting that representatives sent to Parliament should hastily pass a resolution which committed them in the manner the motion would commit them. There was no information before the House which would justify such action as some hon. members wished the House to take. It was a remarkable fact, one to which he desired to call attention, that Prohibitionists very frequently used political exigencies to make converts. The hon. member for West Middlesex admitted that, if he had been in British Columbia and the hon. member for Cariboo had been, as the Americans say, in "a tight place" in political matters, he might have made a convert of that hon. gentlman by force. Prohibitionists were like MAHOMET who went with the Koran in one hand and a sword in the other, and converted the people whether they wished it or not to the doctrines of his faith. The Prohibitionists were anxious and willing and always endeavoring to force people to vote as they wished whether the person's conscience or convictions were opposed thereto or not. Another great apostle of temperance was the hon. member for South Ontario, who carried out the principles of MAHOMET in other respects. That hon. member accused him the other night with being a Mohammedan from misunderstanding his remarks, and based his conception of him (Mr. MACKENZIE) on that misunderstanding. The hon. member accused him of wishing for a Mohammedan heaven. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) said nothing of the kind. In a little bit of banter he said that if that ridiculous law and similar sumptuary laws were to be passed in this country, all they could hope for was that they might get to another planet where there was no prohibitory liquor law. He said nothing about a future state, for be would not joke on such a subject, and every one would do him the justice to believe that statement. But an old politician like the hon. member for South Ontario, who dared to call him a Mohammedan should have reflected, as he was himself a Mohammedan, and while abstaining like Mohammedans from liquor, indulged in pleasures which they were only too fond of. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) knew that the time of the House was valuable, but it was more important that such a law of the character proposed should not disgrace our legislation, than that a short time should be occupied in discussing that serious question. He asked hon. members in considering the subject to reflect on the fact that there was not sufficient information before them on which to legislate. Why, therefore, should they be led to pass a motion which committed them to the principle of prohibition. If they once committed themselves to the principle we would see politics dragged through the mire for the sake of a good cause, — temperance, as had occurred in the United States. It was well known that in the States candidates of the very worst kind in other respects had been elected to prominent positions merely because they were whole-souled, total prohibitionists, and the advocates of that cause were introducing the same system into Canada. It was absurd that such a system should be sought to be introduced into a new country like this. We want honest, able men pledged to go to Parliament to do what is right according to their consciences; we do not want men pledged beforehand, for the sake of gaining a few votes, to go for prohibition, which had not been successful anywhere, and yet the measure proposed for this country was one to prohibit entirely the use of even the mildest descriptions of wines or liquors. Hon. members should pause before they allowed the Prohibitionists to enact such a law as they now sought to pass. An hon. member of the other branch of the Legislature very properly said the other day, that in Ontario where the people knew perfectly well that the Legislature of the Province could not pass a Prohibitory Law, they had the hypocrisy to petition the Dominion Parliament that it would enact such a law. The supporters of prohibition often signed petitions to Parliament ten or a dozen times, and induced their wives and children to sign. They even went so far as to sign for children yet unborn, and petitions so signed were presented to Parliament as an expression of the public opinion of the country. There never was a movement got up with so much noise and with so little in it. The proposition presented to the House was premature, to say the least of it. Whether hon. members agreed with his views or not, they would believe it was premature for Parliament to pass such a sweeping measure as that proposed, and commit themselves to the principle that such a law should be placed on the Statute Book. He trusted the House would show that it would not be led away by the clamor and noise of fanatics and bigots. He referred to the extreme wing of the Prohibitionists, for there were Prohibitionists for whom, as he did for total abstainers, he entertained great respect. There were, however, some few Prohibitionists who were such bigots and fanatics that it was useless to discuss with them, they could not be convinced, for, as MOORE said in a beautiful simile, "the mind of a bigot is like the pupil of the eye, the more light that is thrown upon it, the more it is contracted." Those men who were temperance men at heart, as well as all thoughtful people throughout the country would consider that the House had acted wisely if to-day they refused peremptorily to pass an Act which was based on insufficient data, which would be utterly ineffectual and bring law into contempt, and make good and honest men in other matters commit perjury, because they needed a stimulant, however harmless.

Mr. OLIVER repudiated the statement of the hon. member for Montreal West that the temperance movement was carried on in Ontario with hypocrisy. He knew the people of Ontario perhaps better than that hon. member, and he could tell him that they were sincere in this movement and the House and the country would know they were sincere in a short time. The Legislature of the Province on behalf of the people, and the various religious denominations had petitioned this House for a Prohibitory Liquor Law; and he could tell the hon. gentleman that the petitions presented to this House represented the feeling of nine-tenths of the people of Ontario. It was no disgrace for the ladies of Ontario to petition for this law. They perhaps more than any other class suffered in consequence of the liquor traffic. He believed that the affirmation by this House of the principle of prohibition would be of great advantage to temperance men in their struggle to put down the liquor traffic. It was important that the opposition to this movement should be developed, and the affirmation of the principle of prohibition by the House would effect that end at least. He never expected that a representative of the great wealthy metropolis of this Dominion would be the first to lead on the opposition to this measure. Temperance men would now know that they had to contend against. The adoption of the resolution before the House would show the country that this Legislature was in earnest, and would cause all those interested in the liquor traffic to take their stand publicly in its favor, and temperance men would then know the strength of their opponents. They now knew they had to fight against West Montreal, if that constituency was fairly represented in this House, and they also knew by the sentiments expressed by two hon. members from British Columbia that they would have opposed to them a large section of that Province; and he had no doubt there was also a pretty strong opposition in Ontario. The result of adopting the motion now before the House would be to develop all the opposition to prohibition that there was in the country, and the temperance men would then know just what they had to contend against. He might say with his hon. friend from Waterloo, that, having heard Mr. Ross lecture on temperance—though he was not a paid lecturer as insinuated—and from his personal knowledge of him, he knew he was perfectly sincere in this movement, and at all events, there was no hypocrisy about him. He trusted that the resolution now before the House would be carried almost unanimously.

It being six o'clock, the committee rose, and the SPEAKER left the chair.

AFTER RECESS.

The House again went into committee (Mr. GOUDGE in the chair.)

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) said there were few that would deny that intemperance is a vice, and that it should be suppressed. The member for Cariboo declared that there were some who were advocating the suppression of intemperance who were not strictly temperance men themselves. That might be the case; it might be that there were some who so long as the liquor traffic was legalized indulged in the use of liquor, and yet who were desirous for the suppression of intemperance. The charge had been made that those who advocated prohibition were insincere. He believed that accusation to be without foundation, and no hon. gentleman should accuse another of insincerity in the promotion of any measure simply because he did not approve of it himself. He was satisfied that those who advocated prohibition were sincerely desirous in the public interest to see it carried into effect. The question now before the House was the resolution of the hon. member for West Middlesex and the amendment of the hon. member for North Hastings. Now, the amendment did not controvert the principle embodied in the resolution; it did not deny that intemperance was a vice and that it should be suppressed. It in fact admitted the whole principle of the resolution and merely added that the Government should assume the responsibility of initiating legislation upon this subject. If, then, the principle of the resolution was admitted, then it was for those who did not approve of the plan suggested to propose some better mode of attaining the desired object. An insinuation had been made that those who advocated prohibition were paid lecturers. It might be that paid lecturers did advocate prohibition, but that was a matter of indifference. The important fact for this House to consider was that the subject had been very fully discussed throughout the country, and the people were well informed upon it in all its bearings. There could be nothing more unfair than to insinuate that the men who were advocating prohibition were narrow-minded bigots, incapable of judging intelligently as to what would promote the best interest of the country. It had been his happiness to be acquainted with the hon. member for West Middlesex for a long time. That hon. gentleman had long taken a deep interest in this question and had been the means of doing a great deal of good by his advocacy of temperance, and to whomsoever the charge of insincerity might apply it certainly did not apply to him. He hoped that the hon. member for North Hastings would withdraw his amendment and allow the resolution, feeling assured that by taking that course he would be best promoting the object he as well as the hon. member for West Middlesex had in view.

Mr. PLUMB said this resolution contained a reference to the salutory effects of prohibition in the United States. Now he had a personal knowledge of the effects of the prohibitory law in the State of New York. About 20 years ago that State was carried upon the temperance question by a majority of from 20,000 to 30,000. That Legislature passed a most stringent prohibitory law which was to go into effect on the 3rd July. The provisions of the Act were so stringent and severe that it was a dead letter from the first. It never was acted upon, no prosecutions were commenced under it that he was aware of, and the succeeding Legislature repealed it. At the next election the temperance movement was utterly defeated in the State by a majority of about 30,000. He thought that law stood to-day as the warning to this Parliament. He would say nothing against the arguments advanced to show the evils of intemperance. He only wished to say that from the effects which had followed such laws where they had been in force he could not vote for the passage of such a measure in Canada. He did not think a proper investigation had been made into the working of the liquor law in such States as Maine and Massachusetts. From what he had heard of the working of the law in these States it had failed utterly to prohibit intemperance, and drinking was carried on more extensively under cover of prohibition than ever it was openly.

Mr. BOWELL, in reply to the suggestions of the hon. member for East Elgin, said he would more willingly withdraw his resolution if he thought it would endanger the movement. When the hon. member for West Middlesex placed his resolution on the paper, he (Mr. BOWELL) stated his opinion of them. They affirmed an abstract opinion of which every one approved, and were inconsequential in their character, but could accomplish no good. Something more must be done and the principle laid down by the hon. member for Wentworth was the correct one. If prohibition was ever to be carried out in this country the people were as ready for it now as ever they would be. Ever since he (Mr. BOWELL) had the honor of occupying a seat in Parliament the table had every year been groaning with petitions in favor of prohibition, and Parliament had been in the habit of placing resolutions on the journals affirming the principle and burking them in some way or other, either by their own mismanagement or by other manœuvres attempted, and very often the committee rising and reporting without doing anything. If prohibition was ever to be carried out in this country, the battle must be commenced by enforcing the law after its enactment. Believing this and being quite sincere in what he was doing, he believed the time had arrived when the feeling of this House should be tested on the temperance question. If Parliament was opposed to prohibition the question would be settled, and no further time would be lost in discussing it. If his amendment would be rejected he would support the resolution of the hon. member for West Middlesex.

Mr. DYMOND said he was also of opinion that the time had come when this House ought not to rest satisfied with simply discussing this question as it had been discussed before, that was to say, without endeavoring to arrive at some definite result. He had suggested the other evening that the question should not be brought up again until the House was able to ask the Government to take legislative action on the subject, and he was convinced there was no one in this House who in his heart of hearts believed that the time had come when legislative action could be effective or possible. He was certain that the hon. member for Hastings regarded his amendment as a piece of political strategy.

Mr. BOWELL—Order ! Order !

Mr. DYMOND—Well, all was fair in war. The honorable member would agree with him that the amendment would be no more effective if it passed at the present time than the motion of the hon. member for West Middlesex. Many hon. gentlemen who did not suppose this subject would come up again this session were absent, those who really desired that a practical result would be arrived at, had since the last discussion conferred together, and steps had been taken to bring before the country the question in its political aspects, in order that at the next or some future session as discretion might guide them, they might be able to come to a final decision on the subject, therefore, no one who voted down the amendment would prove false to the principle of prohibition. He believed the House would act wisely in voting down the amendment and in affirming the principle contained in the resolution of the hon. member for West Middlesex. They could then set to work after the prorogation of Parliament to bring the subject before the country in such a light that they might be able to assist the Government in accomplishing what he had no doubt they were desirous of doing, at the right time.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE had no objection whatever to the hon. member for Hastings or any other person indulging in a little harmless political strategy. But suppose the hon. gentleman should carry his amendment—and of course he would not—it would be an affirmation of nothing. The House knew by reasons of decisions rendered by the highest legal luminaries of the Ontario bar that the Local Legislature was vested with the power to legalize or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors. No doubt a different decision had been given in New Brunswick, but that decision had been appealed from, and there was very little doubt that the power which was said to be vested in this Government and Paliament would ultimately be found to rest with the Local Legislatures, but in any case a formal decision had been obtained from the Courts of Appeal to satisfy the House and the country where the real power rested in the matter. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) had taken the ground frequently that had been taken by those who were in favor of prohibition. He had declared himself in favor of such a law, but he knew that any legislation which was not in accord with the views of the people generally was not only useless but harmful. As any law almost was better than a state of anarchy, he thought the country would be better under the license system until public opinion had reached that state which would fairly warrant a Government in imposing a law like this on the country. It was the custom, he was aware, to say public opinion had greatly advanced during the last few years. In one sense public opinion had advanced—that is to say there were at the present moment a larger number of hon. gentlemen, and among the religious classes of the community, in favor of a Prohibitory Liquor Law than perhaps at any former period ; but on the other hand our statistics showed there was a very much greater quantity of ardent spirits consumed per capita than at any previous period of our history. This showed that while their might be an elevated public opinion among the classes that guided the religious and political feeling of the community, there was among the strata of society—among those who were the bone and sinew of the country—sufficient opposition to any probitory system to make the law ineffectual no matter by what majority it might pass this Legislature. In the absence of public opinion—such as he believed was absolutely essential—it would be a piece of the merest folly to go through the force of enacting a Prohibitory Liquor Law. He would do his part cheerfully in carrying on that agitation, in which he had assisted for more than a quarter of a century in his own humble way; but at the present time, to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Hastings would be simply assisting that hon. gentleman, and those who were allied with him, in carrying out a piece of political clap-trap.

Mr. BOWELL said it came with an ill grace from the leader of the House, in view of the part that hon. gentleman had played in the recent discussion on this subject, to attribute improper motives to any hon. member in this House. In view of that little manœuvre on the Treasury Benches to frustrate an expression of opinion upon this question it ill became the Premier to rise in his place and tell him (Mr. BOWELL) that he was actuated by a desire to make political capital in moving this amendment. It was an easy matter to go into committee on a resolution which the hon. gentleman had well described as meaningless and harmless and to rise without even carrying it. Then these hon. gentlemen could get on the stump and say, "See what we have done in this matter! We have affirmed the great principle that intemperance is a crying evil." The Premier and those who dictated the course pursued on that occasion never intended to proceed any further in the matter. He (Mr. BOWELL) was quite prepared to listen to all the charges, insinuations and innuendoes of those who were leading the House in this matter. He was not in the habit of extolling his own virtues or delivering temperance lectures, but he was willing to compare his advocacy of the temperance cause with that of the hon. the Premier, and when he proposed to affirm a great principle he wished to see it met fairly and squarely without any humbugging. The hon. member for North York no doubt found it desirable, in the constituency which he represented, to prepare his way before returning to his constituents. Although this vote was to be taken in committee and there would be no record of it on the journals, he had made up his mind to be content with the expression of opinion thus obtained, and if his amendment were rejected, to support the motion of the hon. member for Middlesex and say nothing more about it. But after the speech which the Premier had just delivered, if any chance should present itself, that hon. gentleman and the hon. member for North York would be given an opportunity to record their votes either for or against his (Mr. BOWELL's) proposition. He did not accuse the hon. member for West Middlesex of any want of sincerity, but he still contended that the whole of this manœuvring on the part of the Government and their supporters had been to accomplish the very end of which he (Mr. BOWELL) had been accused.

Mr. ROSS denied that the course he had pursued had been dictated by the Premier or anyone else, and he would again repeat that if the Government did not see their way clear at an early day to propose some legislation he would either introduce such a measure himself or support any one who would do so.

Mr. WHITE (North Hastings) said if it were true that the Premier had advocated Prohibition for a quarter of a century, now was the time when he had a majority of from 75 to 80 to carry anything he wished to bring before the House and country, to accomplish the great object of which he expressed such hearty approval. There never was a time since that hon. gentleman's connection with the politics of this country when he could do so much for Prohibition as he could now. The time would never come again in that hon. gentleman's history, when he would have such a majority at his back, if he were to remain in public life for twenty years to come. His (Mr. WHITE's) humble opinion was that the very parties who were screeching for prohibition were trying to deceive the people. If the amendment was such a harmless one, why did the Premier oppose it? Why did the hon. member for North York ask the House to vote it down? If there was one thing on earth which he

(Mr. WHITE) despised and hated it was a hypocrite. If there was any man for whom he had profound contempt it was a person who would go into his cellar and drink liquor, and afterwards come up to the House and advocate prohibition. If there was one thing he hated more than another it was the man who would say he had for 25 years been an advocate of prohibition, and then when the opportunity was presented to pass a Prohibitory Liquor Law, refused to do it. He believed the hon. gentleman opposite would not succeed in deceiving the honest, independent, and conscientious electors of this country.

Mr. KERR rose to protest against the tone of the remarks of two or three hon. gentlemen who had spoken on this subject, who, instead of meeting arguments by reason, attempted to throw ridicule and contempt upon this important question. But those who ventured to assume that attitude would learn before long that they had made a mistake. He was not a temperance lecturer, much less a paid one, but he had been a life long advocate of temperance principles in an humble way. It was unfair for the member for Cariboo to impugn the motives of the member for West Middlesex, because those who knew that gentleman knew he was incapable of advocating this great question from personal or political motives. He would repeat what he had stated elsewhere that if that hon. gentleman did no more during his entire political career than collect the important facts and arguments contained in his magnificent speech of last session on this subject he would have done enough to deserve the approval and esteem of the whole country. With regard to the opposition to prohibition he was sorry to see that it was not opposed in this House by reasonable argument, but by rhetorical statements and abuse of those who favored the measure. He regretted that the hon. member for Montreal West had seen fit on a former occasion to speak of the temperance question as he had done. At that time he supposed the hon. gentleman was speaking under the impulse of some extraneous provocation, and that upon sober reflection he would repent of the line of observation he had taken, and he was exceedingly surprised to find that hon. gentleman after reflection, after visiting his constituency, pursuing the same line of remark to-night. He trusted that he did not in this matter truly represent the views of the people of Montreal. He had been credibly, informed that that gentleman when before his constituents specially courted the support and influence of the friends of the temperance movement. He (Mr. KERR) could not go the length of the amendment of the hon. member for North Hastings. He believed in advancing slowly, but at the same time surely, and a great step will he taken if we can induce this Parliament to affirm the principle of prohibition. It might be one or five or ten years before the measure could be passed, and when the time did come it would be the duty of all well-wishers of their country to unite regardless of party of political considerations to aid whatever Government might then be in power in carrying out this great reform. The advocates of every great social reform had been characterized as madmen and fanatics just as WILBERFORCE was when he commenced his agitation for the emancipation of the slaves. He would therefore say to the member for West Middlesex, and the other advocates of prohibition not to be discouraged by the opposition that was arrayed against them, but to press on their work until success crowned their efforts, and they showed the whole Dominion that the friends of prohibition were the true friends of Canada. He shared very largely in the opinion that the people of this country were not yet prepared for a Prohibitory Liquor Law. At the same time they were in a state of preparation; and he asked every friend of the cause to contribute his mite towards the accelera- of the good time when that preparation would be complete. He trusted that all the members of this House, regardless of every other consideration, would unite to do all in their power to assist this Administration or any future Administration to work out this great problem. He trusted they would not follow the course of one hon. gentleman he had heard of, who said he voted for a Prohibitory Liquor Law because he knew it would not carry, and then he went down to the saloon and took a glass on the strength of his vote. It was not by such men that they might expect a prohibitory measure to be carried, but by those who were in earnest like his hon. friend from West Middlesex.

Mr. F. MACKENZIE (Montreal West) said he wished to say only a few words in defence of himself in reply to the gross attacks upon him by the last speaker. That hon. gentleman hinted that he (Mr. MACKENZIE) in the last electoral campaign in Montreal West, had courted the support of the prohibitionists. This charge was based on one letter in the Montreal Witness, of the 31st of March, and on the same day that paper in an editorial article, said: "We are not prepared to admit that "Mr. MACKENZIE has been proved to have "deceived the prohibitionists. Mr. "MACKENZIE distinctly assured all who "spoke to him, of what his opinions were "on the question of prohibition. He did "not pretend to have changed them in the "least degree." After that he supposed he would hear no more of this particular accusation. Then the hon. gentleman went on to talk of his having spoken in the House under some extraneous excitement, or made some insinuation of that kind. He (Mr. MACKENZIE) neither knew nor cared what the hon. gentleman meant, but he could ask the House whether that gentleman had not appeared to labor under just as much excitement in his speech to-night whatever might be the source of it.

Mr. KERR—I disclaim any intention of insinuating anything against the hon. gentleman.

Mr. F. MACKENZIE said he was willing to accept the disclaimer. But talking of excitement he might remind the House that the gentleman who succeeded him in the former debate spoke in a strain of excitement far in excess of anything of the kind exhibited by him; and the New Light had attacked him in a way which, had the paper not been so insignificant, would have justified him in bringing the editor before the bar of this House. That paper had called him all sorts of names, winding him up by declaring that he had broken his pledges and calling him a liar and a poltroon. All he could say was that if the Prohibitionists were going to conduct their campaign in that way they were not very likely to be successful. Before he sat down, he might mention that he had noticed to-night a telegram from Boston to this effect: "The liquor "Bill, as a substitute for the present Pro-"hibitory Law, finally passed in "the House yesterday, and only requires "the GOVERNOR'S signature to become a "law. The Bill prohibits the open sale "of liquors over the bar, but provides for "licenses in connection with hotels and "restaurants." Some modified measure of this kind might be successfully carried out with the acceptance of the whole people.

Mr. THOMPSON (Cariboo) said he was as much in favor of temperance as any one, but as for prohibition, that was quite another question. We had certain inalienable rights which not even this Parliament could take from us. The gentleman who were calling out so loud in this House for prohibition knew whether they were guilty of hypocrisy or not, and he would leave that point to be decided by the public and by their own consciences. They were advocating in a hypocritical, religious-speaking way, principles which they knew could not be carried out, and the whole of them were a parcels of humbugs from beginning to end. He was one of those who called a spade a spade, and in calling this whole temperance movement a humbug he described it by its proper name. This question was forced upon the attention of Parliament from year to year merely to preserve the popularity of certain hon. gentlemen among a portion of their constituents. He would advise those who were so fond of advocating prohibition in a religious way to turn up their New Testament, and read of the Saviour of the world turning water into wine, and then let them turn their attacks upon Him for daring to encourage and countenance liquor-drinking.

Mr. BOWELL'S amendment was then put to the Committee and lost by a vote of 9 to 72.

Mr. ROSS'S resolution was then adopted, and the committee rose and reported it.

Mr. BOWELL moved, seconded by Mr. SCHULTZ, that the report be not now received, but that it be referred back to the Committe of the Whole for the purpose of adding the following:—

"That it is the duty of the Government to prepare a measure at as early a day as possible to carry the principle of prohibition into effect."

Mr. SPEAKER said this amendment was out of order as the report was now merely received pro forma and did not in any way bind the House till it was read a second time and concurred in.

Mr. BOWELL said he took the point that it was the privilege of any member to object or propose an amendment at any and every stage of a measure in its passage through the House.

Mr. SPEAKER cited the rule on the point from May, and maintained his former opinion.

ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER hoped the First Minister was not serious in proposing the adjournment of the House, as no proposition he could make could be open to so serious objection as this one was at the present early hour in the evening. We were told that we were approaching the last hours of the session, and yet there were a large number of notices of motion still upon the paper. He himself had a motion which he was extremely anxious to reach — a motion of the greatest importance, namely, one with reference to the contract with Mr. FOSTER for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch Railway. That contract was laid on the table some time ago, and he understood the First Minister to say that he intended to invite an expression of the opinion of the House upon it. It was not till his attention was called to the resolution relating to the subsidy that he found such was not the case. He then put his notice upon the paper. Under the rules of the House if a contract lies on the House thirty days without being disapproved it thereby became approved by the House. Under these circumstances, and in view of the large number of other notices upon the paper, the First Minister could not be serious in saying that upon the eve of the close of the session he intended to preclude hon. gentlemen from bringing these motions before the House. If he was serious in making that proposal, he trusted he would change his determination. No Government had received more assistance from the Opposition in expediting public business than had been accorded to the present Government this session. Not only was that the case, but three months' legislative duties had been crowded into two.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he did not leave the House till 4 o'clock Thursday morning, and this morning the House sat till 2 o'clock, and on an average for the last ten days till 1 o'clock, and he thought that deserved an adjournment at ten o'clock to-night. He thought the House had done as much work during the last seven weeks as was ever done by any Parliament in this country in the same length of time. He did not wish to hurry the House to a close, but the House was now half empty, and hon. members were very impatient to get away.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said his hon. friend had stated a very strong reason why the House should not now adjourn. What kept the House till four o'clock Thursday morning? It was the House assisting the Government to carry through their measures; and he thought the Government were now bound to give hon. members an opportunity to deal with business other than Government business.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) hoped the First Minister would not press the adjournment. Since the House met, engineer's had been sent up to survey the Georgian Bay Branch Railway, and it was highly important to certain contemplated enterprises that the public should know what these engineers had to report.

THE NORTH-WEST TROUBLES.

Mr. D. A. SMITH (Selkirk)—Before the House adjourns I desire to call their attention to certain allegations made in the Ottawa Citizen by a person named W. B. O'DONOGHUE to the effect that while employed on a confidential mission for the Government of Canada I betrayed the trust imposed in me, that I in that capacity while at Fort Garry conspired with others against the Government of this country and against the Government of HER MAJESTY the QUEEN. At that time I reported to the Canadian Government with regard to the measures I had taken while employed in their service. It is known to the hon. members of this House that then, as to some extent now, I was connected with the Hudson Bay Company, but it was not in that capacity that I then visited Fort Garry but as representing, as I have said, the Government of Canada in a confidential capacity. It is said by Mr. O'DONOGHUE that on that occasion I recognized the "Provisional Government" then in the country as the lawful Government of the country. Such, Mr. SPEAKER, is not the case. I will refer to a report I then made to the Government at Ottawa on 12th April, 1870. In that report I stated :—

"The Gate of the Fort we found open, but guarded by several armed men, who, on my desiring to be shown to Governor MACTAVISH'S house, requested me to wait till they could communicate with their chief. In a short time, Mr. LOUIS RIEL appeared. I announced my name; he said he had heard of my arrival at Pembina, and was about to send off a party to bring me in. I then accompanied him to a room occupied by ten or a dozen men, whom he introduced to me as members of the 'Provisional Government.' He requested to know the purport of my visit, to which I replied in substance that I was connected with the Hudson's Bay Company, but also held a commission from the Canadian Government to the people of Red River, and would be prepared to produce my credentials so soon as they, the people, were willing to receive me. I was then asked to take an oath not to attempt to leave the fort that night, nor to upset their Government, legally established. This request I peremptorily refused to comply with, but said that, being very tired, I had no desire to go outside the gate that night, and promised to take no immediate steps forcibly to upset the so-called 'Provisional Government,' 'legal or illegal, as it may be,' without first announcing my intention to do so.' Mr. RIEL taking exception to the word illegal, while I insisted on retaining it. Mr. O'DONOHUE, to get over the difficulty, remarked 'That is as he' (meaning myself) 'understands it,' to which I rejoined, 'Precisely so.' The above explanation, I am the more particular in giving, as it has been reported that I at once acknowledged the Provisional Government to be legal. Neither then nor afterwards did I do so.',

It charged by Mr. O'DONAGHUE against me, that while at Fort Garry I aided and abetted RIEL, for in his letter he says :—

"The insurrection was advised by Governor WM. MACTAVISH, who, with other officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, also aided and abetted in it from its inception up to the very hour it ceased to exist; that RIEL was in constant communication with Governor MACTAVISH, and acted on many occasions under his instruction; but he (Governor MACTAVISH) fully recognised the Provisional Government; that DONALD A. SMITH on arriving at Fort Garry recognised the Government also in my own hearing, and during his stay in the Fort; and that after the departure of both of these from the country, RIEL continued to hold council with JOHN MACTAVISH, who then represented the Hudson's Bay Company."

It is true, Mr. SPEAKER, that on several, indeed on many occasions while there I met RIEL and other members of the so-called Provisional Government; but those meetings were in pursuance of the duty I had undertaken as Commissioner for Canada. They were held solely and entirely with the view of inducing those people, the people of Red River, to come into the Confederation, and certainly not with the intention of advising them to remain, as they had been for some time, at enmity with the Dominion. I think I can best show to this House the position which I occupied by referring to documents and letters. The first occasion on which I had any communication with the Government at Ottawa with respect to the North-West, was with Sir JOHN ROSE, on 20th August, when it was intended that the Hon. Mr. HOWE should go there. I wish to show that instead of any difficulty being thrown in the way of Officers of the Government entering the North-West, every facility was afforded them, and I can do this by referring to letters in my possession. I a letter dated 20th August, Sir JOHN ROSE thanked me for the assistance and facilities given to Mr. HOWE. A letter sent by the Hon. Mr. WM. MACDOUGALL, not to myself personally, but to Mr. HOPKINS, who was supposed by him at that time to be acting for the Hudson's Bay Company, shows that the Company had done everything they could to expedite Mr. MACDOUGALL'S entry into the country. To show that after I arrived at Fort Garry I acted in good faith throughout, and endeavored to give what in my judgment was the best advice possible to the Government which sent me there, I will quote the following extract from my letter to Sir JOHN MACDONALD of 4th January, 1870 :—

"You are aware that upwards of sixty individuals principally from Canada have been imprisoned here for three weeks back, of these, seven have been liberated * * It is said that others will be allowed to go free shortly, and this I think is not improbable, but it cannot be taken as an indication of an intention to relax in the course already determined on by the moving spirits in the 'Provisional Government.' Bishop MACRAE called on me to-day, and he evidently has not the slightest hope that anything short of the introduction of a considerable body of troops can result in restoring order; and this appears to be the prevailing opinion of the well-disposed portion of the community. Some of the most intelligent and trustworthy men I have seen, and they are now more than ever impressed with the necessity of unanimity and perfect accord among the English speaking party, who with very few exceptions are well affected to the British Crown and a large majority to the connection with Canada. But in the present condition of matters, there cannot, and must not be any hostile collision between the different parties. Nothing is more to be deprecated than this, and any influence I can exert shall certainly be given to prevent it. I am, however, not altogether without hope that more moderate and rational counsels may prevail, and you may rest satisfied that if apparently paying little heed to the course of events, I am very far from being idle or indifferent. But while saying so, it is impossible with the outside influences at work, to say what complications may arise, and I feel it to be my duty to urge on you, and through you on HER MAJESTY'S Imperial Government, the necessity of being prepared at the earliest possible moment to throw in a sufficient force to crush an insurrection, even at the present moment, formidable, and which before many months hence may become so strong, as, looking to the position and circumstances of the country to offer little hope of the possibility of putting it down. Should life and property be in imminent peril, and no recourse to British protection possible, I am inclined to think that with hardly a dissentient voice the law-abiding and substantial portion of the inhabitants would call on the United States Government to come to their aid, and the effect of such a requisition it is needless for me to point out.

It is hardly possible that while I was writing in those terms to the Government of Canada I should at the same time have been working, as is alleged, with those who unfortunately at that time, were in insurrection against the Crown, or at all events were opposed to entering into the Canadian Confederation. Some time afterwards, for the purpose of saving the life of an officer, Major BOLTON, who had been condemned to death and to cause the return of the other persons held as prisoners, I undertook to go around into the settlements. At that time Mr. JAMES ROSS, called the Chief Justice, offered to accompany me. But on considering the matter he decided that it would be much better for the object of the mission that he should not do so. He wrote to me the following letter :—

Monday Morning, 20th Feb., 1870.

D. A. SMITH, Esq., Commissioner, &c.

DEAR SIR,—On further consideration I am satisfied that the mission projected for to-day will be much more successful if you alone undertake it. My course at the convention, which the people below highly disapproved of, as being too friendly to the French, would not only render valueless anything I might urge, but perhaps even help to intensify the feeling against Union. So satisfied am I of this, that in the public interest I must refrain from taking part in the mission.

I am, sir,
Yours faithfully,
(Signed) JAMES ROSS.

Now, if Mr. Ross considered that I was also favorable to them (the insurgents) at that time, it was hardly likely that he would have addressed me in those terms.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I desire to know whether at the time the people were in insurrection against the Provisional Government and under arms, the hon. gentleman did or did not advise at public meetings that they should submit to that Government, and strongly advised them in addition to send delegates to the convention which he proposed ?

Mr. SMITH—I did not advise the people to submit to the Provisional Government, if that is what the hon. member means to convey. In connection with this point I may say that the rev. gentleman who accompanied me, Archdeacon MCLEAN, now Bishop of Saskatchewan, at the trial of LEPINE, which took place last Autumn at Fort Garry, took occasion specially to point this out, and to say that on every occasion when speaking to the people throughout the settlement I impressed upon them that they were not under any circumstances to address RIEL, but to address in the shortest possible manner their notice of their choice of a delegate to Mr. BURN who really had been chosen by the Convention as the Secretary. Mr. BURN himself before the North-West Committee gave evidence to the same effect. More than that, on one occasion when at Heddingly, a petition was shown to me which it was proposed to present to the so-called President of the Government of Ruperts' Land. I told the person in whose possession it was it should not be presented, and thereupon it was torn up. I advised them simply to send their formal notices to Mr. BURN. What I did in going round the settlements is stated in my report. I may mention that at several of the parishes visited, I found that by the advice of the Bishop of Ruperts' Land and other clergymen who had been there, the people had already chosen their delegates. At the same time it must be remembered that while in Fort Garry I was virtually a prisoner, and was under strict guard, and during a certain length of time, I was not allowed to speak to any individual other than the guards. It was hardly likely that I, a prisoner, could be taking part with those persons who kept me a prisoner, and who were in insurrection. To show further I was acting in opposition to those who were in insurrection, I will read a letter, which is not of a private nature, received from His Grace the Archbishop of St. Boniface. It is dated 27th August, 1870, and is as follows :—

"I am told that special constables had "been sworn in the name of peace, for the "security and welfare of the country. I "humbly beg that these constables (as "well as the magistrates and Justices of "the Peace) will not be used except to "maintain the tranquility against actual "movements or disturbances, and that all "and every one will refuse to act in refer- "ence to anything previous to the arrival "of HER MAJESTY'S troops in Fort Garry. "I see a real danger in the gathering by "you of a number of the same men you "employed last winter; with the best "will in the world you cannot have a fair "idea of the disposition of the different "sections of the population." The men referred to were those called the "loyal French," and he was apprehensive that as those men had assisted me in getting up meetings throughout the country, and in enabling me to make the explanations which I was desired by the Canadian Government to make, that there would be danger of a collision, and the letter from the Archbishop, written early in September, was very much to the same effect. I desire now to read portions of one or two letters from Governor MACTAVISH of the Hudson's Bay Company. On the 9th November he wrote to Secretary SMITH of the Hudson's Bay House, London, as follows:—

"The position is undoubtedly serious and the "case will require very careful handling as any "collision between parties will lead to the plain "Indians being brought down on the settlement "next spring, as well as disturbances over all "the plain districts, which will not be put down "for years, long before which the whole business "of the country will have been destroyed."

On the same day GOVERNOR MACTAVISH further wrote to myself:

"I regret very much to have to inform you "that the Honorable WILLIAM MACDOUGALL "who had been warned by the Canadian half- "breeds of this settlement, not to come into the "Colony, on his arrival at Pembina, has been, "within the last week, driven out of the Com- "pany's establishment and forced to withdraw "within the American lines, by an armed party "of that same portion of our population. At "the same time that they sent to drive back "Mr. MACDOUGALL, a party was sent here to "occupy this establishment under the pretext of "protecting it, and though their protection was "declined they still remain, and it would appear "are determined to go to greater lengths than "they have yet done, as the nominal leaders "of the movement have invited delegates from "the other portions of the population to meet "them on the 16th instant to consider the condi "tion of the country as well as to express their "views as to the form of Government to be "adopted."

Again, on the 12th February, Governor MACTAVISH writes to Mr. SUNBURY SMITH:

"The outrages to which the Company's people "here have been exposed at the hands of RIEL "and his people are greater than you probably "would believe. His imprisonment of Dr. "COWAN and myself was doubtless meant to "intimidate opposition by holding us as host- "ages."

And again, on the 6th of April 1870, to the same gentleman:

"It is now fully three weeks since rumors first "reached me that the time had been fixed at "which in the event of non-compliance with the "terms to be proposed by RIEL, the Company's "people in Red River district were to be turned "out of their Forts, and all property, whether "personal to themselves or belonging to the "Company, confiscated. I feel that my com- "pliance with their demands on behalf of the "Company affords our only chance of avoiding "immediate inevitable destruction."

I have no desire to bring up these matters; I would much rather not have to do so, but these accusations have been brought forward, and I am obliged to clear myself and those who acted with me at the time. Besides this evidence there is a great deal more to the same effect I might give, but I will refrain from doing so. I might also refer to the discussions which took place in the convention held at Fort Garry, showing in an equally clear manner that there was anything but a friendly feeling towards the Hudson Bay Company on the part of those who were engaged in the insurrection. It will be seen that some of those men who acted with me at that time were in prison. These were some of the loyal French, as they were called, and I think this fact goes to show further than anything, that I did not conspire with those who were in arms against the Government of Canada. I have several letters here from officers of the Hudson's Bay Company, among them one from JOHN MACTAVISH and another from Mr. WM. LETT, written before HER MAJESTY'S troops reached Red River.

Mr. SCHULTZ—Is that the MACTAVISH mentioned in O'DONOGHUE'S petition?

Mr. SMITH—The same. This letter goes to show that the Company's officers did not take part in the insurrection. There was one matter brought up by the hon. member for Lisgar here the other day. He referred to documents belonging to the Provisional Government having been thrown down a well on the hasty exit of RIEL and his party from Fort Garry, and that these were fished up and burned by order of the Company's officers —that is by myself. I gave a denial to this at the moment, but at the time I did not recollect all the circumstances which had transpired. I recollect that the hon. gentleman called on me at that time, as he was in the habit of doing, in a friendly way, and as this charge was made in the Liberal, which was conducted or owned in part by him, I explained the circumstances, and showed that instead of any letters belonging to the Provisional Government having been found, it was simply a chest belonging to an officer of the Company, Mr. WM. H. WATT, who was removing from one district of the country to the other, and who came in with the troops to Fort Garry, and this box was taken hold of in the confusion which then prevailed, his clothes and other things were made away with, and the box was thrown down the well. It was necessary to have the well cleared out to get water for the troops. A fire engine was used for the purpose, and while this was being done that box was fished, and Mr. WATT's papers being wet and perfectly useless he determined to have them destroyed. At the time I explained this to the hon. gentleman, he said he would publish my denial of the charge in his paper.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I did not on that occasion nor on any other occasion call upon the hon. gentleman in reference to this matter, nor was I at that time or any other time connected with the Liberal newspaper.

Mr. SMITH—I did not say the hon. gentleman called upon me for that purpose, but that he called upon me then, as he had often done in a friendly way, and this matter came up. He promised me, as I have said, to publish my denial, but the letter which I sent to him never appeared in the Liberal, and I subsequently learned that it was suppressed by his orders. In proof of this I may state that I telegraphed yesterday to the gentleman who edited the Liberal at the time, asking whether my letter about this matter was suppressed by Mr. SCHULTZ's order. To this I received the following reply to-day:—"Your letter of September 1870 to the editor of the Liberal denying the company's officers finding or destroying Provisional Government's documents, was suppressed by Mr. SCHULTZ, the proprietor, after being set up by me as editor. Your letter, which I retained, is mailed to you to-day." That telegram is dated to-day, April 2nd, and signed H. J. LAURIE. Now, I take this occasion to reiterate my most emphatic denial of the assertion made by the hon. member for Lisgar, that papers belonging to the Provisional Government were found by the Hudson's Bay Company's people or destroyed. I further state that I have repeated correctly the substance of what was said by the hon. member for Lisgar when he called on me.

Mr. SCHULTZ—The hon. member is wholly incorrect. He is under a misconception of what I said, even with regard to the burning of the papers. What I did state was that papers supposed to be State papers of the Provisional Government thrown into a well from which they were fished out, were destroyed by fire by officers of the Hudson's Bay Company. I did not state that the hon. member for Selkirk gave that order. I had no reason to believe then any more than I have to believe now, that he gave that order, but this I did say, and I now repeat—It is the general belief, as the hon. gentleman knows, that papers of the Provisional Government were so destroyed, and I believe that statement to be correct..

Mr. SMITH—Since that statement appeared in the Liberal in 1870, I never heard or repeated until I heard it made the other evening by the hon. member for Lisgar, and I adhere to what I have said with regard to the suppression of my letter, and my statement is fully substantiated by the telegram from Mr. LAURIE, which I have just read. The letter itself is now being forwarded to Ottawa. I regret that I have had to detain the House so long on a matter which I would much rather not have referred to at all. It will at once be seen that the mission on which I went at that time was a most delicate and difficult one. It was one of no ordinary difficulty, and I felt the great responsibility at the time. I felt that the part I had to act was that of a mediator, and I believe that was the desire of the Government at Ottawa. It was not to raise up strife and bad feeling, but to assure them that they would be received into the Dominion on equitable, liberal terms, and to endeavor to keep the settlement quiet and peaceable until such time as the Canadian Government would be in a position to send a force into the country. This I endeavored to carry out. Not only would one rash or unguarded word have increased the difficulty, but even the pointing of a finger might on more than one occasion have been sufficient to put the whole country into a flame. The hon. member for Lisgar can well imagine what it would have been in such a country had the people once come in collision with each other. No one more than myself regrets what passed at that time in Manitoba. No one can deplore more than I do that one life should have been lost there, but I have often since returned thanks most fervently that it was not a thousand fold worse under the circumstances. I believe had a different course been pursued instead of us having to deplore the loss of three lives, we would have seen the destruction of hundreds, perhaps of a quarter or a half of the whole population. So that while what did happen was greatly to be deplored we have cause to be thankful that something very much worse did not happen. I wish to state further the opinion held by the then Government of the manner in which I discharged the duties that devolved upon me. [The hon. gentleman here read extracts from a letter dated in 1872, addressed to him by the Secretary of State for the Provinces, signifying the entire approval of the Government of the action he took as Commissioner to the North-West.] That letter was written, as I have observed, after the Government had had full opportunity of judging all the circumstances and finding out whether I really had acted loyally or not. I will go further on and show that I continued in the same spirit to give every assistance in my power to the troops, and I will read a letter to show what the commander of the forces, Col. WOLSELEY. [The hon. gentleman read an extract from a letter from a letter from Col. WOLSELEY in acknowledgement of the services rendered by himself and the officers of the Hudson Bay Company generally to the expedition under his (Col. WOLSELEY's) command in 1870.] These papers I should certainly be very backward in reading to the House had not the occasion, as I believed, required that I should show that the Hudson Bay Company and their officers throughout acted most loyally, from the very commencement of the insurrection till the authority of Canada was established in that country. It has been said that a person of the name of MULLIGAN, calling himself Sergeant MULLIGAN, a pensioner, had intimated to the officers of the company in advance that the Fort was to be seized. On that point I will read you the affidavit of Dr. COWAN, the officer then in immediate charge there for the Hudson Bay Company.

"WILLIAM COWAN, Chief Trader in the Hudson's Bay Company's service, at present resident in Scotland, on leave, maketh oath and saith :—That he the said WILLIAM COWAN was the officer in charge of the Red River District in the said company's service during the years 1867, 1868 and 1869. That said deponent was one of the Justices of the Peace for the District of Assiniboia, the district including the Red River Settlement. That during the summer of 1869, the news having reached the said settlement of the intended transfer of the Hudson Bay Company's Territory to Canada, meetings were reported to have been held by the French settlers for the purpose of discussing the said transfer, but so far as known to deponent, no serious trouble was apprehended in any quarter from these meetings. That about the end of August in the same year a party of surveyors arrived in the said settlement from Canada, authorized by the Canadian Government to proceed with a survey of the country. That on the 11th October, some time after the said survey had commenced, Colonel DENNIS, the gentleman in command of the said party, made before deponent a complaint that a section of the said survey proceeding behind a part of the French portion of the said settlement, had been stopped by a party of French settlers, headed by a man named LOUIS RIEL. That deponent, together with Mr. ROGER GOULET, one of the Justices of the Peace, resident in the French portion of the said settlement, had an interview with the said RIEL on the above complaint, at which interview deponent and the said Mr. GOULET, explained at length that the said survey could in no way affect the land, but to its advantage, and as consented to by te Hudson's Bay Company was perfectly legal; but to no purpose, the said RIEL insisting substantially that the Canadian Government had no right to survey the land without the consent of the settlers, and maintaining that their opposition should be continued. That deponent had another interview on the above complaint with the said RIEL, in the presence of the late Governor MACTAVISH. That at this interview the said Governor MACTAVISH, although in a very weak state of body, took a most active part in endeavoring to convince the said RIEL of the mischievous and illegal course entered upon by the said RIEL and his party. That this interview appeared to have no more effect than the former. That it was then thought advisable by the said Governor MACTAVISH, and the other magistrates to let the matter rest for a time in the belief that these people would soon withdraw their opposition, the survey being accepted and approved of throughout the rest of the said settlement, and so far as deponent can remember, this was agreed to by the said Colonel DENNIS. That about this time it was known in the said settlements from statements in the Canadian newspapers, that the hon. WILLIAM MCDOUGALL had been appointed Lieut. Governor of the Territory, to take office subsequent to the transfer of the territory to Canada. That soon after it was known, through the same sources, that the said WILLIAM MCDOUGALL, with some other gentlemen appointed to offices under him, had left Canada on their way to the said settlement, and should arrive about the end of October. That, in consequence of this information, the said Governor MACTAVISH called a meeting of the Council of Assiniboia, which was held on the 19th October. That deponent being a member of the Council, was present at the said meeting, that the said Governor MACTAVISH being very unwell, and for the most part confined to bed, Judge BLACK presided at the meeting. That an address from the Council to be presented to the said WM. MCDOUGALL on his arrival, was cordially agreed to, and although a full meeting of Council, no member, so far as deponent can remember, expressed any fear about the said WM. MCDOUGALL'S entry into the settlement. That on the 22nd October an information was sworn before deponent by a man named WALTER HYMON, to the effect that a large party of armed French settlers were assembling at Riviere Sale on the road to Pembina, headed by LOUIS REIL, with the avowed purpose of turning back the said WM. MCDOUGALL and party at all hazards. That deponent laid this information before Governor MACTAVISH, who ordered the immediate calling of a Council. That this Council was held on the 25th October—that deponent was present at this Council—that the said Judge BLACK presided as at the previous Council, and for the same reason—that RIEL, the leader of the insurgents, was present at this meeting, introduced by one of the members of Council to explain the position of the insurgents and to hear the opinion of the Council. That after a lengthened discussion the said RIEL left for the purpose of communicating with the insurgents. promising that their answer to the Council would be given in on the 28th. That on the discussion of the question as to what action should be taken, it was the opinion of the Council that the well-affected settlers would not respond to any call on the part of the executive to assist in bringing in the said Mr. MCDOUGALL and party, members of the Council stating that they had made inquiries in their respective districts, and that the people refused to act either armed or unarmed, alleging, generally, that the Canadian Government had been preparing for a long time to assume the Government of the country, and should be able to do so without calling on one portion of the settlers to take up arms against another. That the Council having been informed that a good number of the more influential French settlers were against the movement of the insurgents, it was decided that two members of Council, Messrs. W. DEASE and ROGER GAULET should visit the camp at Rivière Salé taking with them as many of the well affected French settlers, unarmed, as they could collect, and there use every reasonable effort to get the insurgents to disperse. That the said Mr. W. DEASE proceeded to act upon this, but two or three days after, the said Governor MACTAVISH, having been informed that the said Mr. W. DEASE'S party had gone up to Rivière Salé armed, and that from the excited state of both parties the peace and safety of the whole settlement was endangered, recalled the authority of Council given to the said Mr. W. DEASE. That a meeting of the Council of Assiniboia was held on the 30th October, at which deponent was present. That at this meeting a letter from the said Governor MACTAVISH to the said Mr. MCDOUGALL was read and approved of, conveying the opinion of the said Governor MACTAVISH, and of the Council, that the said Mr. MCDOUGALL should remain at Pembina, and await the issue of conciliatory negotiations in the hope of procuring a peaceable dispersion of the malcontents. That on the following day the views reached the settlement that the said Mr. MCDOUGALL and party had arrived at Pembina. That on the 1st November the report was circulated that the assembly at Rivière Salé was dispersing having appointed a party of forty men to proceed to Pembina to confer with the said Mr. MCDOUGALL. That on the following day, the 2nd November, the said RIEL entered Fort Garry with a party of 120 armed men, taking forcible possession of the establishment. That at the time these insurgents entered Fort Garry the said Governor MACTAVISH was confined to bed by serious illness. That deponent was then with the said Governor MACTAVISH in his bed room, and that the said insurgents were in possession of the Fort before their presence was known either to the said Governor MACTAVISH or to deponent. That deponent had in all about fifteen men, officers and servants in Fort Garry, engaged at the time in their usual avocations. That deponent received no information from any quarter of the intention of the said insurgents to enter Fort Garry. That deponent, although meeting daily with the best informed settlers, and the movements of the said insurgents being the constant subject of discussion, does not remember any statement, even by surmise, that the said insurgents would enter Fort Garry. That deponent has good authority for believing that the movement on Fort Garry was decided upon only a short time before the said insurgents started from Rivière Salé. That the said Governor MACTAVISH, both officially and personally, had great influence amongst the French settlers. That it is within deponent's knowledge that the said Governor MACTAVISH made use of this influence to the utmost of his ability to disperse the assembly at Rivière Salé, and to remove the opposition to the said Mr. MCDOUGALL's entrance into the country, and after the occupation of Fort Garry by the said insurgents, to procure the return of the said insurgents to their homes, and the restoration of order in the said settlement. That for some time after the entrance of the said insurgents into Fort Garry, provisions were issued to the said insurgents under protest, in the then reasonable expectation that tho endeavors of the said Governor MACTAVISH to procure the dispersion of the said insurgents would prove successful. That as soon as it was ascertained that these endeavors were frustrated, all provisions were refused to the said insurgents. That therefore the provision stores were broken open and all the provisions and other goods stored therein seized by the said insurgents. That deponent has seen an affidavit said to have been made by a man named JOHN FLETT, of the parish of Kildonan. That in the said affidavit it is stated by the said JOHN FLETT 'that during the fall of 1869 he was working in the vicinity of Fort Garry and slept occasionally at the house of his sister in same Fort, that on one occasion, just before the gathering of rebels at Stinking River to resist the entrance of the Hon. WILLIAM MCDOUGALL into the territory, in going out in the dusk of the evening he saw LOUIS RIEL and Chief Factor COWAN enter Fort Garry by the south gate, and, not wishing to be seen, he, the said JOHN FLETT, did enter the porch leading to the Hudson's Bay Company's store. That while in said porch the said RIEL and the said COWAN advanced and stopped about five yards from where he was. That he did distinctly hear this conversation which took place between the said COWAN and RIEL. That it appeared from the remarks he heard as the said COWAN and RIEL approached that said COWAN urged the said RIEL to go on with the proposed stopping of the Hon. WILLIAM MCDOUGALL at Stinking River. That said RIEL replied, 'What good will it do me? What will I get for it?' Said COWAN answered that Governor MACTAVISH would do as he had promised, and said COWAN also assured him, the said RIEL, that he would get what he had been promised. That said COWAN and RIEL then walked in the direction of said COWAN's residence. That said JOHN FLETT verily believes from the whole conversation that said COWAN, who was then in charge of Fort Garry, was inciting and encouraging the said RIEL by promises of payment to take active steps for the keeping out of the said Governor MCDOUGALL, which said RIEL seemed to hesitate about doing. That said JOHN FLETT did on several occasions see the said COWAN and RIEL in close conversation but could not hear what was said.' Deponent declares that the above statement made in the said affidavit by the said JOHN FLETT is untrue and without any foundation, in fact that before the interview on the above mentioned complaint of Colonel DENNIS, deponent met the said RIEL only once. That this meeting was in the summer or fall of 1868, that the said RIEL was then making enquiries in reference to a debt due by his deceased father to the Hudson's Bay Company. That from the first meeting with the said RIEL on the above mentioned complaint of Colonel DENNIS in the presence of Mr. R. GOULET, deponent had no communication with the said RIEL, but in the presence of third parties, and that deponent never spoke to the said RIEL but in the strongest terms of opposition to the course upon which the said RIEL and his followers had entered. That deponent has seen another affidavit said to have been made by Sergeant JAMES MULLIGAN, a pensioner of HER MAJESTY'S 17th Foot, and lately and for some time Chief of the Police Force in the Town of Winnipeg, understood by deponent to mean JAMES MULLIGAN, pensioner, and for some time one of the three constables stationed in the Town of Winnipeg. That the said affidavit contains the following statements: That hearing that the buildings of DR. SCHULTZ were threatened with a consequent danger of fire extending to the town, said JAMES MULLIGAN, then Chief of Police, proceeded at once to Fort Garry, and spoke to Chief Factor Dr. COWAN, who was a Justice of the Peace, and in charge of Fort Garry, told him what he, the said MULLIGAN, had heard, said MULLIGAN urged said COWAN to take steps to prevent such an outrage, and asked for instructions how to proceed. COWAN answered, what can we do? Said MULLIGAN replied that it would be advisable to call out the 300 special constables who had been engaged; said COWAN refused to do so, and said MULLIGAN returned to take what precautions he could with the two policemen under his charge; said MULLIGAN says that before the rebels assembled at Stinking River he gave due notice to said Justice COWAN, of their intention to do so, and that the said Justice COWAN seemed to take no notice of it. That repeatedly afterwards, up to the time of the Fort being occupied by RIEL and his men, the said MULLIGAN did urge upon the said COWAN the danger in which the Fort stood, and a short time before did inform the said COWAN that the rebels meditated doing so immediately, and again urged the said COWAN to call upon the said 300 special constables, but was in all cases distinctly refused. That he repeatedly warned Doctor COWAN of the rising and of the intention of the rebels to overthrow the Government and take Fort Garry, but that on all occasions he was rebuffed, and all his offers of services on behalf of himself and in the name of the loyal people who were willing to support the police authority, and anxious to keep down the rebellion were distinctly refused. Deponent declares that the above statements made in the affidavit of the said JAMES MULLIGAN are false. That deponent never received any information from the said JAMES MULLIGAN in reference to the movements of the said insurgents. That deponent never was urged by the said JAMES MULLIGAN to call out the 300 special constables. That deponent never heard of any offer of service made to the executive from any quarter, excepting the offer made by Sergeant-Major POWER some time after Fort Garry was in possession of the said insurgents.

(Signed,) WILLIAM COWAN.

Glasgow, Scotland."

Mr. SCHULTZ—Is that the Dr. COWAN who a person named JOHN FLETT swears was in conference with RIEL with respect to the delivering up to RIEL of Fort Garry?

Mr. D. A. SMITH—This is the same Dr. COWAN that was in charge of the Fort, and he made an affidavit to the effect that that statement is utterly untrue, and he also, I believe, gave the same testimony before the North-West Committee. I have also here a deposition of Governor MACTAVISH and Judge BLACK to the same effect, in which they declare that there is no truth in the allegation made by MULLIGAN, and I have again to express my great regret at having been under the necessity of bringing up these matters before the House; but I felt that these accusations against the Hudson Bay Company were made not because those who got them up believed them, but for the purpose of making this country believe what they themselves did not credit.

Mr. SCHULTZ—It is said that the wicked flee when no man pursueth. We have been occupied for the last fifty-five minutes in listening to the rebuttal or attempt of rebuttal of a charge which has not been made in this House, nor in any way that calls for contradiction by the hon. gentleman. However, I am very glad that the explanation has been made, because it will serve to show to any one who listened attentively to it that there is no relevancy whatever in any of the documents which he has read to the charge said to be made by W. B. O'DONOGHUE, saving the first one read by the hon. gentleman. It would be noticed that that document was written by himself to the Government of the day after his return to Manitoba in 1870. He simply quotes himself in the House to contradict the assertion said to have been made by Mr. O'DONOGHUE. I do not think the explanation was called for in the first place, and if it were called for I do not see that the hon. gentleman has shown us anything outside of his own statement to controvert the statements made by W. B. O'DONOGHUE. We have simply the statement of Mr. O'DONOGHUE on one side and of the hon. gentleman on the other. I am not going to express any opinion as to which of these gentlemen is correct. I willing concede to the hon. gentleman what he states in regard to the difficulties connected with his mission in 1870. I know that his mission was one which called for at least an ordinary degree of courage and competency, and I know also that it was particularly unfortunate that the hon. gentleman should have allowed himself to be chosen for a mission of that sort, the duties which he was so incompetent to perform. He must know as well as I do that on two occasions which I will presently specify, opportunities offered to him of at once breaking the power of the Provisional Government.

Mr. SPEAKER—I must call the hon. gentleman to order. He is making an attack upon the hon. member for Selkirk which is against the rule. If the hon. gentleman has any explanation to offer with regard to himself the House I am sure will indulge him, but he has certainly no right to attack the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I do not wish to make an attack upon the hon. gentleman. It will be in the recollection of the House that the hon. gentleman adverted to me several times and I was simply going on to make an explanation of my own conduct on that occasion. I was proceeding to say that I believed there were two occasions offered to the hon. gentleman on which, had he acted promptly, he might have at once ended the rule of the Provisional Government. The first of these occasions was when the hon. gentleman arrived at Fort Garry, and when he found there was a considerable dissatisfaction among the more intelligent of RIEL'S followers who felt that they had gone a little too far in the matter and they were beginning to fear the possible consequences of their action. There was then a favorable opportunity at the important meeting called by the hon. member for Selkirk, at Fort Garry. At that meeting nearly 500 persons assembled, most of them, I believe, armed. At that meeting when the QUEEN'S letter was read, and also the documents with which the hon. gentleman was entrusted, so strong did the feeling become that there was a general wish expressed that the hon. gentleman would allow them to put a summary stop to the insurection then going on. They said "say the word and we will raise the British flag where it has been torn down, and release the prisoners." Had this opportunity been acted upon, the hon. gentleman might have been able to make a different report from that which he has read to us to-night. The opportunity was not acted upon. It is not for me to say what reason the hon. gentleman had for not acting upon it. I am not disposed to believe with Mr. O'DONOGHUE that at that particular juncture the hon. gentleman had anything to do in connection with the Provisional Government. I am more disposed to attribute his conduct to an equal mixture of cowardice and incompetency. The other occasion to which I shall make reference was some time after that. It was when THOMAS SCOTT and a number of others had come from Portage la Prairie to join the force of which I was a member in the lower part of the settlement. It was an occasion when between five and six hundred armed men assembled, and when the demonstration made by them had induced Mr. RIEL to see the necessity of releasing the rest of the prisoners kept by him. On that occasion there was a disposition on the part of that force to go on at once and assert the authority of the Canadian Government, and drive out Mr. RIEL and raise the British flag. It was due to the efforts of the hon. member for Selkirk, aided I am sorry to say by a portion of the clergy of Red River, that that force was induced not to make the contemplated attack upon Fort Garry, on the plea that having forced Mr. RIEL to release the prisoners, it was not necessary to do anything further. These men proposed to take possession of the Lower Fort Garry and raise the British flag there. Why was that plan, so easy of accomplishment, not carried out? I will tell you why. It was because the hon. gentleman, aided by the Archdeacon to whom he has referred, came down to the place where the people had assembled for the purpose of taking the preliminary steps in the direction of that attack, and begged them not to take that step, and strongly advised them not only to submit to the Provisional Government, but to send delegates to the Convention which elected Mr. LOUIS RIEL as President. If that was the part for a competent and courageous delegate from Canada to play, then I have nothing more to say. I do not wish to say too much on this matter; I may feel too warmly upon it. I will merely add that it would have been better had the hon. gentleman tried in some way to repudiate directly the accusations said to have been made by W. B. O'DONOGHUE, besides simply giving his own statement to the House.

Mr. D. A. SMITH—The hon. member for Lisgar has been pleased to speak of me as having acted in a cowardly manner, and he has given his version of a meeting that took place at Upper Fort Garry. In doing so I am sorry to say that he has entirely mis-stated what occurred at that time. He has said that at that meeting there were some five hundred men who were willing and prepared to raise the British flag. The facts of the case are really these:—When about to commence the proceedings of that meeting I urged the Chairman and those on the platform to raise the British flag. They said "no, it is impossible for us to do so now but we shall do so afterwards." They did not raise the British flag then and the opportunity did not occur again. At that first meeting two loyal men were sent into the adjoining building for some papers and when they returned they said that building was full of armed men and that they were prepared for any emergency or for any attack that might be made. There was not one man at that meeting at upper Fort Garry that proposed to raise the British flag at that time except as I have already stated, and I feel confident that had it been attempted it would have resulted not only in bloodshed but in the loss of life and would have involved the whole settlement in civil war. The hon. gentleman says that on another occasion I went down to the lower part of the settlement with Archdeacon MCLEAN and advised those who were assembled there to disperse. Such is not the case. At that second meeting composed principally of English people with some English half-breeds from the lower settlement, the hon. member for Lisgar, I believe, was one of the principal leaders, and we could never find out why the hon. gentleman really did not come to Fort Garry on that occasion, except on the supposition that he thought it more prudent and safer to go back. Being at the time strictly guarded within Fort Garry, I was not then in a position to give any advice.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I will explain at once why the force of which I was an humble member—not the leader—did not go to Fort Garry. That force took possession of a church, school house and manse and encamped for the night. At daylight the next morning they sent a messenger to Mr. RIEL telling him that if he did not release all the prisoners in his charge he would at once be attacked. Within an hour the prisoners were released, and the question then came up as to whether to go on and attack Fort Garry or not. While a large number were willing after having accomplished the principal object for which they assembled, namely, the release of the prisoners, to go on and attack Fort Garry and drive RIEL out, many others said, "no, we will not pull a trigger for the sake of saving the Hudson Bay Company's rum and pemican which RIEL and his men are destroying." That is the reason why that force did not go to Fort Garry.

Mr. D. A. SMITH—Then how is it that the hon. gentleman said it was on account of the action taken by me that they were prevented from attacking the Fort?

Mr. SCHULTZ—I did not say so. I said you came to Kildonan where the people were assembled.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think we have had enough of this irregular discussion. The member for Selkirk saw fit to make a statement concerning a letter purporting to be signed by some one of the name of O'DONOGHUE, whom the hon. gentleman opposite seems to know all about. While it was quite proper for the House to hear that statement it is entirely irregular to have a discussion upon it.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I would like to know from the hon. Premier what words I used which indicated that I knew anything more about O'DONOGHUE than he did. The Premier has made that statement and I would like an answer. I am afraid it is like other reckless statements he has taken occasion to make in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER—The whole discussion has been irregular.

Mr. D. A. SMITH—I wish to say that I did not interfere with that meeting, was not present at it, but, as already stated, at the time a prisoner within Fort Garry.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I think there is one hon. gentleman we should hear before this discussion closes, and that is my right hon. friend from Kingston, with respect to the decided conflict of statement that there is between his present supporter, the hon. member for Lisgar, and his official envoy representing his Government during the troublous period of 1869-70 in the North-West. Of course the right hon. gentleman is responsible for the acts of the hon. member for Selkirk while acting as his envoy.

Mr. JONES (Leeds)—I rise to a point of order. The SPEAKER has decided that this discussion is irregular.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—I am speaking to the question of adjournment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—Who moved the adjournment?

Mr. SPEAKER—The First Minister moved the adjournment, but it was not seconded.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—Then I second the motion. I think this discussion having gone on so long it should not close without some light being thrown upon this subject by the right hon. gentleman, who of all members of this House is in a position to elucidate this whole matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I do not know what my hon. friend wants me to say. I only heard the fag-end of the speech of the member for Selkirk, and therefore I could not at all follow the reply of the member for Lisgar.

Hon. Mr. HOLTON—The hon. member for Lisgar charged the right hon. gentleman's envoy with treason, or something approaching to it, to the British flag while representing the Government of my friend the member for Kingston in the North-West. I think, therefore, it is the duty of my right hon. friend to say whether in his judgment, he being master of all the facts, the hon. member for Lisgar is, as the representative of his Government fairly open to the imputation cast upon him by my right hon. friend's present supporter, the member for Lisgar.

Mr. SCHULTZ—I would like to correct my hon. friend from Chateaugay as to my being a supporter of the right hon. member for Kingston. If I understand the meaning of supporter it is one who votes with his party through thick and thin, as I may say my hon. friend from Chateaugay does. If the hon. gentleman will look over the records he will find that the majority of my votes were given for the Government, and it is only on a policy which I think calculated to ruin the prospects of Manitoba. the North-West that I oppose them. The hon. gentleman should be more correct in his statements when he attempts to speak of the position of another member.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The hon. gentleman called my attention a moment ago to my saying that he seemed to know all about Mr. O'DONOGHUE. I supposed he did from his speech. I can only say that I did not intend to impute anything whatever to the hon. gentleman except a too intimate knowledge of the facts which he was controverting. I had no intention to impute to him anything disreputable in connection with his knowledge of Mr. O'DONOUGHUE.

The subject then dropped.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he hoped the motion for adjournment would now be withdrawn and they would be allowed to proceed with the Orders of the Day.

THE ANNUAL SUBSIDY TO MANITOBA.

Mr. BOWELL complained that while the Government had continued the sittings of the House until two and three a. m., to advance their own measures, they had sought to adjourn the House at an early hour when private members sought to press their motions. He desired to ask the hon. First Minister whether the facts contained in the published report purporting to be a summary of the speech of the Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba was correct, in which the following occurred :—"The income of the Province being wholly inadequate, negotiations with the Privy Council are in progress to place Manitoba on a better footing. As a result, the Privy Council have adopted a Minute of Council, providing for an increase of the annual subsidy until 1881, to the sum of one hundred thousand dollars." If the report was correct, he desired to to inquire whether it was the intention of the Government to lay the Minute of Council on the table of the House, and ask the approval of Parliament thereto.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE in reply said that no arrangement could be made except under the Act of last session, which enabled the Government to advance money to those Provinces who had not drawn the full quota of their subsidies, when of course they would cease to obtain the 5 per cent. interest on the balance. There were considerable balances due to Nova Scotia and Manitoba. The Government could not, without application to Parliament, increase the amount of subsidy to any of the Provinces.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL desired to read a letter addressed to the hon. member for Cumberland by one of the large colonial shipping firms in relation to the Merchant Shipping Bills before the Imperial Parliament. The letter was as follows :—

"Liverpool, 18th March, 1875.

"Hon: CHARLES TUPPER,

"Ottawa,

"MY DEAR SIR,

"I take the liberty of addressing you on the subject of the Merchant Shipping Bill now before Parliament which no doubt has come under your notice before this, and I trust your Government have taken some action to avert the passing of the Bill which would be a death-blow to the colonies. For the details I must refer you to the two Bills, viz., Sir CHARLES ADDERLAY'S and Mr. PLIMSOLL'S, both of them as bad as they can well be, and if by chance they become law, British shipping will be totally annihilated. The shipping trade of the Dominion will be ruined as completely as possible. I believe your Government have the power to stop the passing of either Bill if you take immediate action. Our Government are afraid of offending Canada, and will do a good deal to keep her quiet. Therefore the louder the noise the better chance we have of escape. The two Bills have been sent to Mr. PALMER. Kindly peruse them and you will see the blockheads we have in this country to manage affairs.....

"I remain, Dear Sir,

"Yours truly,

"JAMES R. DEWART."

He was informed that the Government were taking the necessary steps in regard to this question, and he read the letter only to show the necessity of such action being taken as would prevent Canadian shipping being legislated upon by the British Parliament without the advice or approval of the people of Canada.

The motion for adjournment was then carried, and the House adjourned at 11:30 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Saturday, 3rd April, 1875.

CORRECTION.

Mr. SPEAKER—Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to direct the attention of the House to a matter of some importance. A Bill was sent down from the Senate with certain amendments which were concurred in by this House. At that time the hon. member for Hamilton drew attention to the fact that a certain amendment which he told us had been adopted in the Senate did not appear among the amendments sent down to us.

The Clerk of the Senate has since informed the Clerk of this House that such an amendment did pass and that the omission of it was unintentional, and he has since written the amendment upon the margin of the paper containing the amendments. He concluded by citing from May the rule on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—If I understand the fact it is that the body of the of the Bill is not changed, but only the title.

Mr. SPEAKER—It is an unimportant change, but it is establishing a precedent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD—I think it is clear that we should have a message from the other House asking for the correction, and a memorandum to that effect could then go upon our journals. Because it is absolutely necessary that there should be no chance of a clause slipping into a Bill which is not authorized by both Houses.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE agreed that a message should be sent from the Upper House with the Bill and the amendments as really adopted by that House.

The subject then dropped.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved the second reading of Bill for granting to HER MAJESTY certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1875, and the 30th June, 1876, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.—Carried.

PACIFIC RAILWAY CONTRACTS.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE laid on the table two contracts, one for No. 13, being the distance from Fort William to Shebandowan, of the Pacific Railway, and the other No. 14 from Cross Lake to Red River. These contracts had only been signed to-day, and it would be impossible to do anything upon these sections, unless the approval of the House was got at present. The information that he could give the House respecting them was simply this, both contracts were those of SIFTON & WARD, the one for Number 13 amounting to $406,194, that being the lowest tender but one. One tender from New Brunswick was lower, but the tenderer declined to proceed. The length of this section was forty-five miles. The other contract was for $402,950. It was the third lowest tender. The other two declined to proceed. The tenders were made on the printed form, already laid upon the table in another case. The House was already very thin, and would be still thinner on Monday, and he therefore moved "That the House do now ratify the contracts laid on the table, proposed to be entered into with SIFTON & WARD for the construction of that portion of the Pacific Railway between Cross Lake and Red River, about 77 miles in length, at a cost of $402,950, the said parties having been the lowest tenderers willing to proceed with the work, and furnishing the required security."

Mr. PALMER asked how much of the work these contracts provided for.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—For the grading, bridging, and practically preparing the road for the road-bed, but they did not include rails, ballasting and ties. The first contract is for about forty-five miles, and the other 77 miles, and the price is nearly $5,500 per mile.

The motion was carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE then moved that the House do now ratify the contract now upon the table proposed to be entered into with Messrs. SIFTON & WARD, for the construction of that portion of the Pacific Railway extending from Fort William to Shebandowan, a distance of about 45 miles, at a cost of $406,194, the said parties having been the lowest tenderers willing to proceed with the work, and furnishing the required security.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said of course he could object to this motion on the ground of want of notice, but he did not wish to take that course. At the same time he could not allow this motion to pass without moving an amendment, and taking the sense of the House upon it. The objection he had to the motion was substantially this, it was either intended to make this a portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway or it was not. As he had stated before, the First Minister led the House to suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway was to run from Nipegon to Red River, and the hon. member for South Qruce admitted that he so understood the Premier. This was what the hon. gentleman said :—"I "quite admit that it was a general belief

"on the part of members with reference "to one detail of this policy to which the "hon. gentleman has alluded, that Nipe- "gon would be taken as the Lake Su- "perior terminus." The hon. gentleman could only have supposed that from the statement of the First Minister.

Hon. Mr. BLAKE—Will the hon. gentleman read the rest of what I said?

Hon. Mr. TUPPER—I will. "Not "that the Government committed them- "selves, as I recollect the assertions made "upon the point." The First Minister had not yet stated that it was his intention to make this line from Thunder Bay a portion of the trunk line, because if that were his intention it would involve the building of sixty miles of additional railway, and the making of the trunk line sixty miles longer. A proposition so monstrous as that could hardly be contemplated, and that was the reason why the First Minister had never stated that he intended to make this a part of the trunk line. He would read what the hon. member for South Bruce had said on the occasion he referred to:—"As I recollect the discussions, it was left to be decided upon by subsequent surveys, but there was certainly in my own mind, and, I belive, in the minds of others, an impression that it was more likely that Nipegon would be taken as the Lake Superior terminus." The hon. gentleman had been very careful to guard himself against stating that the line from Thunder Bay was to be a portion of the main line. The Government, therefore, had let these contracts without any authority in law to do so. This was either to be their trunk line or a branch. If it was a branch, Mr. FLEMING's map showed the distance to be 150 miles from Thunder Bay to the main line. But assuming it was only one-half of that, and the hon. First Minister had admitted himself that it would be seventy miles—that would involve an expenditure at the lowest calculation of $2,800,000. Therefore if this line was not to be a part of the maine line, the contract now before the House involved the expeneiture of that enormous sum of money without any authority for it in the Statute Book. And as he said before, if it was to be part of the maine line it involved the construction of sixty miles additional railway. The law only provided for two branches—one from Georgian Bay to a point south and east of Lake Nipegon, and the other from Pembina to Fort Garry—so that there was no authority for the building of the Thunder Bay line, if it was to be regarded as a branch. He therefore proposed the following resolution in amendment, seconded by Sir JOHN MACDONALD, "that the said contract be not approved."

Mr. SPEAKER—That is hardly an amendment. It is a direct negative.

Mr. PLUMB—Is the Mr. SIFTON mentioned in that contract the partner of Mr. GLASS of the Telegraph Company, who is surety for the contractor for the telegraph line.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think he is.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER moved in amendment "that the consideration of the approval of said contract be postponed to this day three months."

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said he had a few remarks to offer in reply to the hon. member for Cumberland, who thought that the line should be commenced at Nippissing and continue westward. The reason why the Government did not adopt that policy was simply that their object was to obtain the shortest and best summer route to the North-West country in the meantime. If they had gone to Nipegon a line between that point and Cross Lake would have been to construct, over a distance of 320 miles, with no water navigation available between those two points; but by the construction of 45 miles of lines of railway to Lake Shebandowan they obtained the advantage of that chain of water communication for a distance of 246 miles after some slight improvements were carried out at Fort Francis which were provided for in the Estimates. By these a means of communication would be established which would suffice for some years to come, and it would be obtained some years before the line proposed from Nipegon could be constructed. The plan adopted by the Government was approved by all who were acquainted with the country, and consulted the map, and especially by the Chief Engineer, their object being simply to obtain access to the country as soon as possible. He was somewhat amused the other day to find the principle organ of the Opposition declaiming against the Government selecting Thunder Bay as their terminus and imputing improper motives to him in making the selection, and that he desired to serve personal or political friends, thus enhancing the value of their property—in fact doing everything but what was in the public interest. How was it that last year when the Government proposed to begin at Nipegon that organ wrote as follows :—

"With such a concurrence of testimony in favor of Thunder Bay as the terminus, how comes it to pass that it is deemed necessary to petition Parliament, and to make the most pressing representations to the Government, in order to prevent the suitable terminus of Nipegon Bay being selected? In the absence of unreasonable explanations, it need not be surprising that people should say that Mr. MACKENZIE and a number of political friends have strong personal interests to serve in the Nipegon country, and that such private interests are likely to overide all considerations of public benefit."

But no matter what place had been selected for the terminus, the same kind of argument would be repeated, for it comprised almost the entire stock in trade of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER regretted that he had not been so successful in convincing the hon. Minister of Public Works as he had been with the newspaper editor referred to, who had not been ashamed to frankly acknowledge that his previous information was incorrect, and that he should advocate to-day a different policy from what he did a year ago. If the policy of the Government would accomplish what was anticipated, viz., provide at once a short, and easy and cheap line of communication through that country, even from Thunder Bay to Red River, he would not object to it. The Hon. First Minister had, however, stated that two and a half years would be occupied in constructing the line as proposed, and that the journey from Thunder Bay to the Red River by that road would take four or five days. Inasmuch as there would be an all-rail route from Duluth, even when the Government line was built and the large sum expended, it would not secure any passengers, because they would go by the Duluth route; whereas, if the route proposed by him (Mr. TUPPER) was adopted, and even a longer time was occupied in constructing the road, it would be a permanent work, and being a shorter route, could successfully compete with the Northern Pacific.

The amendment was lost on division.

Mr. SCHULTZ asked for information why the contract from Cross Lake to Rat Portage had not been completed. Tenders for that section had been asked for some time ago.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said his reason for not letting the contract was this : tenders had been received for this section, a distance of 37 miles, but the amounts were so enormous compared with his expectations, that he did not feel justified in accepting any tender that had been offered. He proposed having a review made of that 37 miles of the route, and he would ask the assent of the House to enter into a contract if a change for the better could be effected. The House would have some idea of the difficulty he experienced with this section when he informed them that the difference between the highest and the lowest tenders was $2,000,000.

The motion was carried.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved that the Government be authorized to enter into a contract during the recess with the parties sending in the lowest available tender for the construction of that portion of the Pacific Railway extending from Rat Portage to Cross Lake a distance of about 37 miles.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said that while he was prepared to give his hearty concurrence to this motion, he would just say that the statement made by the Premier afforded one of the most apt and forcible illustrations of the unwisdom of undertaking to let contracts without any such survey as would put contractors in a position to know anything like the amount of work required to be performed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said it so happened that a most elaborate survey had been made of this section. It would be impossible to have a more careful survey, a closer examination or a more careful calculation than had been made on these 37 miles. There had been no such survey on the Intercolonial.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said that made his statement all the stronger. If with such a careful survey, contractors differed to such an extent on a section 37 miles in length, hon. members could imagine how mild must be their calculations where there was no survey and no calculation.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman was never at a loss to make contradictory statements tally.

Hon. Mr. POPE wished to know what the word "available" in the motion meant.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—Whoever, from the lowest going upwards, enters into the necessary requirement by giving security, has the lowest available tender. The lowest will have it in all cases if he can furnish the security required.

The motion was carried.

NORTH WEST TROUBLES.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) asked the indulgence of the House to make a personal explanation with regard to the accusations made against him by the hon. member for Lisgar of acting in what certainly must be considered a very improper manner in the position in which he was placed at Fort Garry. That hon. gentleman had stated that at a mass meeting a request was made that the British flag should be hoisted—that he (Mr. SMITH) had declined to do so. That statement was the reverse of the fact. It was he (Mr. SMITH) who made that request at the meeting, and that fact was well known he believed by every one in Manitoba. In proof of this he might state that this matter was brought before his constituents by the hon. member for Lisgar, and there and then refuted, it having been proved that there was no foundation whatever for the hon. gentleman's charge. The hon. gentleman had asserted that the difficulties at Red River would have been got rid of but for his (Mr. SMITH's) cowardice and incapacity. It was true he (Mr. SMITH) went round to the different parishes to keep peace and quietness in the settlement and to save the life of one of the prisoners and insure the safety of the lives of others, but that was done simply with the view of impressing on the people the necessity of uniting together for the purpose of bringing the country into the Dominion, and of assuring Canada that they were ready at any moment to enter the Confederation, The hon. gentleman's statement was therefore wholly incorrect. The clergy of the country, seeing the necessity of keeping peace, had advised their parishioners to elect delegates, and half of them he believed were elected before he had an opportunity of seeing them. It was well known that in the autumn, Colonel DENNIS for a short time endeavored with a number of other persons to oppose the rebellion, but could make no head against it; and yet the hon. gentleman would have the committee imagine that the insurrection was a mere nothing. Everyone else in the Red River country knew that it was a most formidable combination for what those people believed to be a good purpose, namely, that of asserting and holding their rights. He hoped that as the hon. member for Lisgar knew that such were the circumstances of the case, he would not fail in his duty to the House to withdraw the expressions he used last night. The hon. member was well aware that a few months' afterwards he came to him (Mr. SMITH) and was quite desirous, indeed anxious that he (Mr. SMITH) should be returned as a member for the county he now represented.

Mr. SCHULTZ denied that he had ever so expressed himself.

Mr. SMITH said the hon. member had been willing to do so for certain considerations. The hon. member was quite ready, as he expressed it, to bury the hatchet as between the Hudson's Bay Company and himself, and that the hon. member and himself (Mr. SMITH) should for the future go hand in hand. If that hon. gentleman believed he was a poltroon and recreant to his QUEEN and country, would he wish to have it supposed that he, (Mr. SCHULTZ), a loyal man, came forward and desired to assist him in his election. The hon. member had never come forward from the time of election meetings, and made the assertions which he had made before the House. The hon. member well knew that such statements would not be believed in the North-West; but it was generally thought in that country where the hon. member was best known that the hon. member was capable of making almost any assertion.

Mr. SPEAKER called the hon. member to order and requested him to withdraw his last expression.

Mr. SMITH withdrew the remark. When he went to the North-West as Commissioner from Canada, (he continued) he did not go there for payment. To the credit of the late Government he said that they would have paid him liberally, but he would not accept, and did not accept a single dollar of the public money for his own use. As the House well knew, the insurrection had been a God send to the hon. member for Lisgar, he having had nothing at the time it arose, while he was now a comparatively rich man at the cost of the country.

Mr. SPEAKER called the hon. member to order, remarking that it was improper to make a personal attack on another hon. member when offering a personal explanation.

Mr. SMITH withdrew the expression and said he would content himself by saying that the hon member for Lisgar was now a rich man. While he did not question the propriety of the decision given by the commission in respect to the claim of that hon. member, but if there was one thing one thing more than another that had given dissatisfaction throughout the North-West, it was the large amount awarded to the hon. member for Lisgar, while other persons who had suffered severely had received a pittance.

The CHAIRMAN called the hon. member to order, and said that the House had nothing to do with the amount awarded to the hon. member for Lisgar.

Some discussion took place on the point of order, and the SPEAKER finally said that the hon. gentleman could proceed with any personal explanations which he had to make.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said it was quite evident that the time was being made a waste of time until six o'clock, in order to prevent motions being made.

Mr. D. A. SMITH said he had no desire to prevent any motions being made. He was proceeding to refer to certain invoices made by a certain gentleman, when

Mr. SPEAKER said he must call the hon. member to order, as he was plainly invading the rules of the House. If the hon. gentleman had any personal explanations to make, he could do so; but he must not attack any other hon. member.

Mr. SCHULTZ said he would confine himself to the subjects referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk. The first subject was the reference he had made last night to the occasion when after the release of the prisoners it was proposed to raise the British flag and take Fort Garry. What he stated last night, and what he was prepared to say before a commission, if the Government would consent to appoint one, as he thought they should investigate the whole cause of the insurrection, was that the hon. member for Selkirk had lost the opportunity for nipping the rebellion in the bud. That gentleman knew that a proposition to raise the British flag was made, and had he seized upon that opportunity the rebellion would have been stopped at that point before any property had been destroyed and blood shed. He had expressed last night as he did now his regret that the hon. gentleman had not seen fit to take that course, With regard to the other occasion to which he had referred, what he stated last night was that a force of which he was a member, threatened an attack upon Fort Garry, and succeeded in securing the liberation of the prisoners. They then raised the question whether they would not march to Fort Garry and put an end to the Provisional Government and restore authority, and the hon. member for Selkirk prevented that action from being taken. The hon. gentleman came to the general meeting of those who were desirous of securing this end, and who with arms in their hands had it in their power to accomplish it; and deliberately advised in his (Mr. SCHULTZ's) presence those men not to take that action, but to submit to the rule of the Provisional Government, acknowledged RIEL as the dictator of the settlement, and send delegates to the Convention which he proposed to be held.

Mr. SMITH—I ask the hon. gentleman to state when and where that meeting took place at which I was present.

Mr. SCHULTZ—It was held in the school house of the Parish of St. Andrews in the spring of the year 1870.

Mr. SMITH—I would ask the hon. gentleman if I was present at that meeting.

Mr. SCHULTZ—You were.

Mr. SMITH—Then, Mr. SPEAKER, I say most positively that I was not at any meeting where any such proposition was made. I was in the house of the Rector of St. Andrews, but I was not any meeting in St. Andrews where such a proposition was made. It was, I believed, at St.

Andrews that delegates to the Convention were elected before he arrived.

Mr. SCHULTZ repeated that the hon. gentleman was present. Moreover, the chairman of the meeting, addressing the meeting, stated on behalf of the hon. gentleman, and I believe also of Arch-deacon McLEAN that they both strongly wished the people to submit to the Provisional Government and elect delegates to the convention, on that occasion he (Mr. SCHULTZ) combatted that view. He said, "By the demonstration of this force you have shown you have the power to take Fort Garry whenever you choose; you have compelled RIEL to release the prisoners and the same force will restore British authority." He used that argument, but unfortunately for him and those who had lately been in arms with him; unfortunately for the Red River settlement and the whole country that proposition was voted down through the action which the hon. gentleman took when he, coming with the authority he did, advised the people to submit; they felt they would not be acting lawfully in attacking Fort Garry. The hon. gentleman is primarily responsible for the loss of that favorable opportunity, and certain clergymen were secondarily responsible. When he (Mr. SCHULTZ) found that the last hope of resistance was gone, he a few days afterwards left the country. What was the remote consequences of the advice of the hon. gentleman? Had the action which he (Mr. SCHULTZ) advised at that meeting been taken, he believed RIEL would have left Fort Garry without firing a shot; he had afterwards sources of information which led him to that belief. The cost of the expedition under Col. WOLSELEY would have been saved; the life of THOMAS SCOTT would have been saved, and the agitation and bad feeling created throughout the country would have been averted. That was why he said last night that he regretted his failure to seize those two opportunities which he had to put down the insurrection. With regard to the accusation made against him by the hon. gentleman that he had offered to work with him politically in Manitoba on the occasion of his first election, he would ask leave to say one word. The hon. gentleman said he had offered for a consideration to bury the hatchet, meaning by that in plain English that if that gentleman or the Hudson's Bay Company gave him so much money he would join with that body in the political objects which it was evident it had in view. Now he did not know how far the rules of the House would allow him to make a contradiction to that statement. He was aware that any strong expression of contradiction was out of order, and that being the case he would simply content himself with making the most positive contradiction of both those statements made by the hon. gentleman. In regard to the statement made against him that he was a very rich man in consequence of having received a certain amount of money as indemnity for losses from the Canadian Government, he had simply to say that the hon. gentleman not having been at Red River before the spring of 1870, could not have possibly known of the business carried on by him for nearly ten years previous to that time. It is safe to assume that without that knowledge, his statement that he knew, as a matter of fact, that many of the invoices which he (Mr. SCHULTZ) presented were false, was not worthy of the slightest credence. Now, he would refer the hon. gentleman to the report of the special committee appointed to investigate this claim. The members of that committee, who were favorable to the Hudson's Bay Company, took exception to the amount claimed by him (Mr. SCHULTZ). After investigating the matter, this committee, consisting of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, reported entirely in his favor, and that report was adopted by the House without a dissenting voice. He was quite willing at any time to enter into a discussion of the whole matter of the insurrection of 1869-70, but he knew it was a threadbare subject in this House.

Mr. D. A. SMITH said the hon. member for Lisgar had stated that at a public meeting in the Parish of St. Andrews, at which he was present, he gave expression to his views with regard to what ought to done in this position of affairs. He (Mr. SMITH) had tried to impress on the people that they ought not to go to Fort Garry or the Lower Fort, but on the contrary they ought to be peacable and go in with RIEL. He stated most emphatically that to the best of his (Mr. SMITH'S) knowledge and belief he never saw the hon. gentleman all the while he was at Fort Garry, or heard him give expression to one word. He believed that he never saw the hon. gentleman's face. If he had he would have recollected his countenance, and the hon. gentleman's statement was entirely without foundation in fact or truth. With regard to the other matters which the hon, gentleman alluded to, he (Mr. SMITH) did not think it was necessary that he should say anything further, and if it were not unparliamentary, he would throw back on the hon. gentleman the imputation of cowardice which was cast upon him.

The Bill to make further provision respecting the constituting and management of Building Societies in the Province of Quebec was discharged.

THE PLIMSOLL BILL.

Mr. PALMER asked whether any, or what measures have been taken by the Government, in view of the Imperial Legislation affecting Canadian ships, and the rights and liabilities of Canadian shipowners, to prevent Imperial Legislation on that subject, without the consent of the Parliament of Canada; and if so, what are the results of such measures?

Hon. Mr. SMITH—I may say to the hon. member that no decided step has yet been taken, but it is the intention of the Government to send a carefully prepared remonstrance against any legislation in the Imperial Parliament affecting shipping in this Dominion. It is our intention at once to make communication with the Imperial Government by cable on the subject.

THE MILITIA.

Mr. CARON asked whether it is the intention of the Government to allow Volunteer Companies to fill up to 55 men and 3 officers as formerly, instead of 42 non-commissioned officers and men per Company and 2 commissioned officers as at present; and whether men are to be paid according to rank?

Hon. Mr. VAIL—The Active Militia liable to be called out under law numbers about 45,000. It is very desirable that enrollment to that extent should be kept up. The number that will be called out this year depends altogether on the means at the disposal of the Government. The amount voted will enable us to call out only 28,000 men, which is equal to 42 men and two officers for each company. While in camp, officers are paid according to their rank, but while at home and drilling in drill sheds, they will all be paid alike about one dollar per head.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILROAD TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SCHULTZ asked whether Messrs. GLASS, SEFTON & Co., Telegraph Contractors have not completed twenty-three miles of Telegraph Line under their contract, and whether the Canadian Pacific Railway or any branch thereof has been located along or near the said line?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not know how many miles they have completed. I do not think that we have any exact information on the subject and I cannot answer the question.

SALE OF ORDNANCE LANDS.

Mr. CUTHBERT asked whether it is the intention of the Government to alienate the Ordnance Lands at Sorel otherwise than by sale at auction?

Hon. Mr. LAIRD—The Government have not yet decided how to dispose of the Ordnance Lands at Sorel. The policy of the Government with regard to the Ordnance Lands is to sell them by auction.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. YOUNG moved "That the House go into Committee of the Whole, on Monday, to consider the following resolutions:—

"That this House was pleased to learn from the despatch of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, of date the 3rd September, 1873, that HER MAJESTY received very graciously the Address of this House passed in the same year on the subject of the Naturalization of Aliens, and begs respectfully to represent as follows:—

"1st. That the extension of the Act passed in the 33rd year of HER MAJESTY'S reign entitled 'The Naturalization Act of 1870,' would not meet the just expectations of the Germans and and other naturalized foreigners in Canada inasmuch as the passports granted under the said Act, although permanent, are expressly declared to be invalid in the Foreign State of which the persons naturalized were formerly subjects—the place of all others in which they desired to be protected in their acquired rights and privileges.

"2nd. That by the Naturalization Act of 1870, aforesaid, it is provided that Great Britain will thereafter recognize and protect in any part of the world all persons legally naturalized as British subjects, provided they cease by the laws of their native State to be subjects thereof on changing their allegiance, or when a Treaty has been made between Great Britain and the said State to that effect.

"3rd. That such a Treaty was negotiated between Great Britain and the United States of America in the year of Our Lord 1871, and a further and supplemental Treaty in the following year 1872, both of which are working satisfactorily.

"4th. That a Treaty similar in character was negotiated between the United States of America and Germany, in the year of Our Lord 1868, and is now in operation.

"5th. That it would promote the public interests and afford much satisfaction to HER MAJESTY'S naturalized German subjects in Canada, if a Treaty under the provisions of the Naturalization Act of 1870, aforesaid, were entered into between Great Britain and the German States, so that such persons naturalized in Canada, after a residence therein of from three to five years (as may be agreed upon by the contracting Powers) may become entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities of British subjects in any part of the world, and in as full a measure as if they had been subjects of Great Britain by birth.

"6th. That an humble Address be presented to HER MAJESTY setting forth the foregoing resolutions."

The motion was adopted.

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, April 5th, 1875.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD called the attention of the House to a paragraph which had appeared in a Ministerial newspaper charging him with lobbying Bills in the Upper House. He had a perfect right to do so if he liked, and it was a matter of impertinence to refer to it at all, but as a matter of fact he had had no communication with any of the Senators on the questions they were discussing. It so happened the other evening, while the House was engaged in a very unprofitable debate on the Prohibitory Liquor Law, he went to the Upper House to listen to the discussion there, but he had no conversation with any member of the Senate with respect to any motion or other matter before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE was quite sure no person could object to an hon. gentleman going to lobby in the Upper House if he thought fit to do so. For his (Mr. MACKENZIE'S) part, he had never done so. It was no charge after all.

THE PUBLIC REPORTS.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked when the report of the Marine and Fisheries' Department would be laid on the table. A great deal of credit was taken by members supporting the Government this year for the remarkably early day on which they had laid the reports of the departments on the table, and so far as the Premier's and one or two other departments were concerned, they deserved that credit; but he was afraid that the praise would have to be balanced by the blame that was due to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for allowing the House to rise without furnishing it with the report of one of the most important departments of the service. He was not quite certain as to the law, but as far as he could recollect it was obligatory on each Minister to have the report of his department on the table within fifteen days from the commencement of the session.

Hon. Mr. SMITH said that all the law required him to submit to the House had been submitted within the fifteen days. The report of his department was ready two or three weeks before the House met, and in the hands of the printers, but he had been unable to get it published. He thought in the course of a few days the whole of the remaining part of the report would be issued. The printer was the party really to blame for the delay.

Mr. BOWELL said the same complain applied as regards the report of the Post Office Department. It was now about the end of the session, and the report had not yet been laid upon the table. The statistics furnished in that report would have been exceedingly valuable to the House, before discussing the important measure introduced by the Postmaster General.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the report had been ready some weeks before the House met, but the contractor was so crowded with work that it was found impossible to get it under way at the time, and the Postmaster General proposed to send it to another office. That he (Mr. MACKENZIE) declined to accede to, knowing that the contractor was entitled to the printing of all the blue-books of the year, and he requested the Postmaster General to endeavor to push it through the contractor's office as speedily as possible. If the Postmaster General had taken it to another office, the report would have been brought before the House before now, and it was in order to keep faith with the contractor that the delay occurred. As regards the Marine and Fisheries' Department, in order to expedite the work he directed the report proper to be sent to one office, and the appendices to another. The difficulty was very great where the facilities for printing were so limited.

Mr. BOWELL said he observed from the imprint on Bills that a large number of them had been printed by the Free Press office, and by Mr. TAYLOR, while Messrs. McLEAN, ROGERS & Co. had the contract for the Parliamentary printing.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the Government were not bound to wait for any contractor for Bills to be presented to Parliament.

Mr. BOWELL said his remarks also applied to the printing of the departmental reports.

The subject then dropped.

GOVERNMENT LANDS IN THE NORTH-WEST.

Mr. ARCHIBALD hoped the House would permit him to ask a question, although no notice had been given, namely, whether any steps had been taken to prevent speculations in land on the line of the Pacific Railway in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West, and also whether the Hudson Bay Company had any lands along the route of the railway.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—The only steps the Government have taken in connection with the Government lands is to pass an Order in Council prohibiting the sale or pre-emption of any lands on the line of the railway until the Government have time to consider the question of the final disposal of those lands in connection with the contracts; and that Order in Council embraces the entire route from Rat Portage westward to Fort Pelly. The Government thought it desirable that a very careful examination of the country should be had in the first place in order to ascertain where a town might be located, or where lands might be advantageously reserved, and to take such measures as would effectually prevent any land speculators from taking advantage of the location of the railway to the detriment of the public. With respect to the latter question, my hon. friend will find from the language of the treaty with the Hudson Bay Company that they have one-twentieth of the land reserved to them, and that they are entitled in the Saskatchewan country to choose land on the north side in preference to the south side in certain places that they desire it. We have considered the position they occupy relative to the Government with their lands. It is impossible that we can interfere with the rights they have under the agreement made and sanctioned by Parliament, but the Government have been considering and will consider further during the recess whether it is not desirable in these quarters, at least, to endeavor to extinguish the rights of the company to any of the lands.

Mr. PLUMB was glad to hear from the hon. the First Minister that the Government proposed to withdraw their land from sale, and that a full examination had been made. He hoped that when such examination had been completed the land would be put up for competition of which ample notice would be given—so that every one would have an opportunity of competing for the lands.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked for explanations of the expressions of the hon. the Premier in regard to extinguishing the claims of the Hudson Bay Company to the North-West lands.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—We cannot of course force the land from the company; but I have already taken the ground that it is extremely inconvenient to have a company the proprietors of a very large extent of land in the North-West, and if Parliament could make an arrangement for Canada to become the sole proprietors of the soil in that country, it would be of advantage. The question was one for Parliament to consider.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD said that while on the one hand, great dissatisfaction had been expressed at companies owning immense tracts of country, as was seen in the case of the Canada Land Company; on the other hand, it should be remembered that the Hudson's Bay Company, were a powerful body in England with large political influence and might become Emigration Agents for the settlement of the country.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that all those points would have to be considered by the Government, but the tendency of public opinion in Canada was wholly against land companies controlling very large portions of the public domain. He thought at the time the arrangement was negotiated with the Hudson's Bay Company, as he thought now, that it was not desirable that such a state of affairs should exist. It would be for the Government to consider whether any such advantage as the right hon. member for Kingston had suggested would be likely to accrue from the company owning large tracts of land in the North-West, and the Government would consider the propriety of submitting a measure dealing with the subject to Parliament at its next session.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD asked for explanations as to the arrangement with the Hudson's Bay Company in regard to the taxation of land.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said the company were liable to taxation after they had taken possession of the land. The Government must first survey the land, and then the company must take them up, after which the land become subject to taxation, but only to such taxation as was imposed on lands owned by other proprietors.

Mr. D. A. SMITH remarked that one of the provisions of the deed of surrender expressly set forth that the Hudson's Bay Company's land should not be liable to any exceptional taxation.

The question then dropped.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT.

On motion of Mr. IRVING, the order for the second reading of the Bill to repeal an Act to amend the Criminal Law relating to violence threats and molestation, was discharged.

ENQUIRIES CONCERNING PUBLIC MATTERS.

On motion of Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE, the Bill touching the true construction of the Act respecting enquiries concerning public matters was discharged.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS.

On motion of Mr. YOUNG, the House went into Committee of the Whole to consider the resolutions (of which notice was given on Saturday) on which to found an address to HER MAJESTY on the subject of the Naturalization of Aliens; Mr. GILLIES in the chair.

Mr. YOUNG said: Mr. Chairman, It will be remembered that I have on several occasions brought before this House the state of our naturalization laws and pointed out the desirability of some amendment being made with respect to them, and some progress has been made in that direction. I do not, therefore, propose this afternoon, as there is a feeling manifested that the House should adjourn at an early hour, to do more than state very briefly the present position of the matter and the action which I desire by these resolutions the House to adopt. It will be remembered that in 1873, two years ago, the House unanimously passed an address, founded upon resolutions which I brought forward, the prayer of which address to HER MAJESTY was principally, that Great Britain would negotiate a treaty with the German States by which persons naturalized in Canada, who owed allegiance first to the German States, would thereafter be recognized as British subjects in any part of the world. We received a reply from the Colonial Secretary, then Earl KIMBERLEY, which was laid before the House last session, and it embodied a letter sent by Earl GRANVILLE to the Colonial office, expressing the views which were entertained by the British Government with regard to the address. There is a serious want of information on the part of the public generally with respect to this question. I, therefore, may say that the Germans and other persons naturalized under our laws, while they are protected in their rights as British subjects so long as they remain in our territory, the moment they pass beyond the boundaries of the Dominion they cease any longer to have any rights whatever as British subjects. The result is they are placed in a very awkward and unsatisfactory position. It is difficult to say to whom, under such circumstances, they owe allegiance, whether to Great Britain or to Germany, and if they travel in a foreign country they have not the protection of any Government, being subject to the disabilities of a divided allegiance. Then again, if they return to their native State—I speak more particularly of the Germans who form a numerous body of our population, and many of whom have settled in the county which I represent—after having been naturalised in Canada, for twenty years, they may be called upon to perform military service or other duties as German subjects. They, therefore, feel that their position is a very unsatisfactory one, and there is a strong desire on their part that something should be done to place them in a more favorable position. Moreover, the Germans who settle in the United States, and thereafter become naturalized, are recognized as American subjects in any part of the world; they are protected in their rights as American citizens wherever they go, and this circumstance largely contributes to turn the stream of German emigration to the United States. There is no better class of immigrants than the Germans, who are of industrious and thrifty habits, and so long as they can go direct to the United States and, having become naturalized, be protected in their rights as American citizens in every part of the world, whilst if they come to Canada they are only protected in their rights as British subjects so long as they remain within our borders, we cannot expect to receive such a large flow of German emigration as we would receive if the Naturalization Laws of the Dominion were as liberal as those of the United States. I desire that the most efficient measures shall be adopted to attract as many of the people of Europe as possible to our shores. Within the last ten years our position with respect to the United States has relatively very much improved. There is no part of this continent which has been more prosperous during the last ten years, than Canada, and I wish to have our Naturalization Laws placed in such a position that emigrants from Europe will be attracted to come here and make the Dominion their abode, and give their help to develop our great national resources. The Government of Great Britain has always been loath to surrender the principle, once a subject always a subject. They have held to this principle with the greatest tenacity—with a tenacity which is characteristic of the British people; but in the Naturalization Law passed by the Imperial Parliament in 1870, they have to some extent waived that principle, and this is the first step that has been taken for very many years in the direction of liberalizing their legislation on this subject. In the law of 1870 it is provided that any person becoming naturalized in Great Britain will thereafter be protected in their rights as British subjects as if they had been born on British soil within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. But they added something further. They decided to give a permanent passport to persons who had become so naturalized. Under the present law, so far as the Dominion is concerned, passports are only given for one year and a sufficient time afterwards to enable persons naturalized to reach the nearest British port. Under the Act of 1870, it has been decided to give permanent passports to all persons naturalized within the bounds of the United Kingdom, but this exception is put on the passport, that it should not be valid in the State to which the person naturalized formerly owed allegiance. This is a very important exception—an exception which in fact many of those naturalized think of more importance than the benefits which the Act confers. Only in certain contingencies, in case the State to which the aliens formerly owed allegianae, has passed laws by which they can demand themselves of their allegiance, will the Mother Country recognize them as British subjects in every sense of the term; and also in case a treaty should be negotiated with the country to which they owed allegiance, to that effect. Here, there were two ways in which persons naturalized might become British subjects to all intents and purposes. I will read an extract from a letter of Earl GRANVILLE to the Colonial Office in respect to the address which I moved, and which was passed in the session of 1873, relating to this point:—

"An alien naturalized in the United Kingdom, under the Act of 1870, receives a passport, not limited as to time, but available for any time, or for any number of journeys; but with the qualification mentioned in the 7th clause of the Act, which is endorsed on the passport as follows:—This passport is granted with the qualification that the bearer shall not, when within the limits of the foreign State of which he was a subject previous to obtaining his certificate of naturalization, be deemed to be a British subject, unless he has ceased to be a subject of that State in pursuance of the laws thereof or in pursuance of a treaty to that effect."

Now, it is quite apparent there are two ways suggested in that Act by which persons naturalized can become possessed of rights and privileges such as native born subjects enjoy, and these are either by the foreign State passing an Act to enable them to throw aside their allegiance, or by a treaty with the State from which they come to that effect. In accordance with these provisions, the address passed by the House in 1873 prayed that a Naturalization Treaty might be entered into between Great Britain and Germany. Such a treaty was negotiated in 1871 between Great Britain and the United States, and the following year, 1872, a further supplementary treaty was agreed to between the two countries. The effect of these treaties is, that an American can become a British subject with the greatest ease, and thereafter be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a British subject, and a British subject going to the United States can become in a similar way a subject of that country. The whole process is so simple and easily understood that there is no danger of any complications arising between the two countries in regard to the matter. I therefore propose that what has been done so successfully in the case of Great Britain and the United States shall be done between Great Britain and Germany, in order that the large number of Germans who have already and may hereafter become naturalized in this country may not hereafter suffer the disabilities of a divided allegiance, but be protected in their rights and privileges like every other subject of Great Britain.

Mr. IRVNG—Has the hon. gentleman considered what are the relations between the United States and Germany in matters of this kind, and what treaty has been made between these two powers because it appears to me that the difficulty that is likely to arise is not by the Imperial Government of Great Britain intervening to make a treaty, but rather by the German Empire declining to make a treaty. Probably my hon. friend will be good enough to inform us what the position of affairs is in this respect at the present time.

Mr. YOUNG—I, of course, looked into that point as well, and I found that the coast—if I may be allowed to use that expression—is perfectly clear in that direction, for a treaty was negotiated between the United States and Germany to the same effect.

Mr. IRVING—When ?

Mr. YOUNG—My resolutions state when. It was in 1868, I think, that this treaty was negotiated between Germany and the United States, and it is now in existence. Both these treaties, so far as I am aware—that is, the treaty between Great Britain and the United States and that between Germany and the United States—have worked well. No difficulties have arisen on this subject, and, therefore, I cannot possibly see any serious difficulty in the way of negotiating a similar treaty between Great Britain and Germany.

Mr. IRVING.—I am rather under the impression there has been something more recent, and that the present condition of affairs is not satisfactory to Germans in the United States ; that in fact they are not released from military service on their return to their native country by becoming citizens of the United States. I have seen some general remarks in the newspapers within a year or two on this subject. Perhaps the hon. member for South Waterloo will be able to state explicitly what that treaty is ?

Mr. YOUNG—Some difficulties may, of course, have arisen. We know sometimes difficulties do arise under treaties of any nature. When the address from this House went to the Mother Country, it was received very graciously by HER MAJESTY, and Earl GRANVILLE stated in his letter to the Colonial Office that he was prepared to extend the Imperial Act of 1870 to the colonies. The principal objection which Earl GRANVILLE raises to a Treaty is, that the German Government would insist on five years residence, in the country of naturalization. Now, with regard to his proposition to extend the Imperial Act to the Colonies, I am of opinion that it would not meet the case. Under our present law a person going abroad, who has been an alien, is enabled to get a passport for one year, when, of course, his passport ceases. Under the Imperial Act of 1870, he would be enabled to get a passport permanently, but with the proviso already referred on to the back of it, that he would possess no rights or privileges of a British subject in the State to which he formerly belonged. This is a very great reservation indeed. I believe that the Germans throughout the Dominion would not consider it any boon or at most a very trifling one, if that Act were extended to the colonies. It would place them in a very little better position than they are already. I took the precaution to consult with some leading Germans in the West on this subject, and they said distinctly that it would not by any means meet the object they have in view. Their object would only be accomplished by their being placed in as good a position as Germans in the United States—viz: making them British subjects to all intents and purposes. Earl GRANVILLE raises the following objections to this course :—

"If, however, treaties were to be negotiated, "in which a fixed period of residence in the "country of naturalization (and five years would "almost certainly be insisted upon) were to be "made, the condition on which the naturaliza- "tion would be recognized, aliens, naturalized "in the Colonies would lose the benefit of the "present elastic rule of practice, and would be "liable to be challenged to prove that they had "complied with this condition before they could "claim any benefit from their British natural- "ization."

With regard to the first objection, you will see that it is not very serious. It is urged in the interests, apparently of the persons to be naturalized, and not from the standpoint that the Imperial Government had any objections to such a treaty. He says, in case a treaty were to be negotiated with Germany, it would require a five years residence of its former subjects naturalized in this country. At the present time they have to reside here three years before they can become naturalized. I have no hesitation in saying, you would scarcely find a single person in this country who would not rather wait five years before becoming naturalized, provided when that was done, he became a British subject and was recognized as such thereafter in all parts of the world to which he might go. I am quite sure there would be no difference of opinion on that point. Then again, Earl GRANVILLE urges that they would be deprived of the benefit of the present elastic rule of practice. I have examined this objection and I really cannot see the point of it. It is difficult to say what is meant by the words "present elastic rule of practice." If it is simply what is stated in the words that follow—that they would be liable to be challenged to prove that they had complied with the condition of five years' residence in Canada, I answer they would have to do that now under the law as it exists, the only difference being that the present term of residence is three years. Therefore, their position would be no worse in that respect than it is at the present time. In fact, I consider this no objection at all, and I feel sure, speaking the opinion as I believe I do of a very considerable portion of our German population, they would be quite willing that these conditions referred to by Earl GRANVILLE should be embraced in the treaty, and would be glad to accept it on these terms if such a treaty could be obtained. Since the last address was moved a new Government has come into power in England and it is quite possible, as we know new brooms sweep clean, that they may take even a more liberal view of this matter than the late Liberal Government. It is at all events worth trying. When I look at the attractions offered to the Germans in the United States in consequence of their naturalization laws being more favorable to them than ours, I think it is my duty to propose another Address to HER MAJESTY which will indicate that we are ready to accept the conditions referred to by Earl GRANVILLE, provided we can obtain such a treaty as will secure the great and important objects had in view. I believe the House will adopt these resolutions unanimously as they did the former Address when the hon. member for Kingston was in power. In proposing them, I am not asking the committee to do anything contrary to what is contemplated by the present Imperial Act on Naturalization, nothing contrary to what has already been done between Great Britain and the United States, and nothing, in my opinion, contrary to the welfare and honor of the Empire and its colonies.

Right Hon. Sir JOHN MACDONALD —The object of the hon. member is most praiseworthy, if it is only to set at ease the minds of the German settlers in this country. As he has said they are a most valuable acquisition to our population, their civilization, and the education disseminated among them make them a most valuable class of immigrants and, therefore, no steps should be left unattempted to increase their numbers and to satisfy them when they are here. The difficulty, however, is very great. We all know that in consequence of the general proscription that has taken place in the new German Empire, and especially in the Prussian States that the population is being rapidly depleted, and every attempt is made to throw obstacles in the way of their departure, and to retain what must be their main strength in the struggle that seems to be impending in Europe. I have no very sanguine hope, that if this address is adopted, as I fully expect it will be, as I can see no objection to it, that HER MAJESTY'S Government, no matter how it may be disposed, will be able to obtain a treaty with the Germans of the character asked for. However, there is no harm in trying. I think it is due to the Germans in this country to endeavor to satisfy their wishes and to show that everything we can do, we have done for the purpose of preventing their relatives in the country they have left from being annoyed or being interfered with in any way in consequence of their coming to this country, and not returning to do military duty in their native land. I presume my hon. friend at the head of the Government has seen that there is nothing in these resolutions contrary to the state of the law in the land. I have not, myself, looked into the exact position of the subject as it exists between Germany and England. I have not followed up the subject for a year or two, and do not know whether any new negotiations have been going on, and presume that the hon. gentleman is correct in what he has stated, that the Minister has seen that these resolutions do not in any way conflict with the present state of the law, and are not inconsistent with themselves. I see not only no objection, but think it is a very praisworthy attempt and I believe the resolutions should be adopted by the House.

Mr. PLUMB—It is well known that the great accession to the population of the United States has been due very greatly to the facilities that have been given to emigration to that country and to the easy naturalization laws by which they become part of the community. It may not be known to the House that no attempt was made to protect emigrants who had acquired the right of citizenship in the United States for a great many years, in fact not until a very recent period. I think one of the very first occasions upon which the attention of the Government was called to the automaton condition in which these emigrants were placed in regard to the allegiance they owed to their Mother Country was in the case of one MARTIN KOSTER who was arrested for acts committed by him against the laws of Austria. The Secretary of State entered into a correspondence with the Austrian Government which resulted in attention being called to the peculiar position of such emigrants. That position became still more apparent when the Mayor of a city in Iowa went to his native land to engage some railway hands, and was held their to discharge military service. That brought up an investigation which resulted in a treaty being made between the American Government and the Prussian Government. I suppose that no matter what kind of laws may be passed by the Mother Country it will be necessary to make special treaties having reference to the peculiarities affecting emigrants to this country. In regard to the Menonites, I believe they would be held liable to military service by the laws of Russia in case they found it necessary to return to the land of their birth, unless the Government of England should enter into special negotiations in reference to this people in order to protect them. I am very glad this subject has been brought up here, and I consider the thanks of the House are due to the hon. member for South Waterloo for the manner in which he has laid the matter before us. I trust the question will be brought before the British Government and in such a way as to result in negotiations for a treaty to protect those who come from the European States to settle in this country.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE — I have looked into this matter since the hon. member introduced his resolutions, and at the same time have endeavored to ascertain whether any correspondence took place with the Imperial Government subsequent to that alluded to. There is nothing at all in these resolutions but a statement of facts and a statement of what would probably suit the requirements of those adopted citizens of ours in Canada. The object is undoubtedly a good one, and if Germany is willing to make a treaty with the United States in this matter, I have no doubt she would be equally willing to enter into a treaty with Great Britain. If this can be obtained by the passage of these resolutions, I am sure we will all be gratified to do anything we can to forward them. There is nothing in them to which the Government does not cheerfully agree. It is quite possible that some feeling, such as that exhibited the year before last to the two Ontario Emigration Agents, may still exist, and cause some difficulty in the way of getting this treaty. Preparations seem to be made on a very extensive scale for possible complications again with some of the Powers of Europe, but we hope that will not interfere with the negotiating of a treaty such as has been referred to. There are a great many Germans in England as well as in Canada.

Mr. YOUNG—It is barely possible that the feeling against encouraging emigration from Germany may interfere with the negotiation of a treaty at the present time. Still, I am sure the existence of such a treaty would not interfere with the intention of any one to leave Germany. At any rate it is our duty to make an attempt to have such a treaty negotiated. It is according to precedents which have worked well, and I have no doubt that if such a treaty was made between Great Britain and Germany it would be found to work satisfactorily, and would probably relieve both nations from some embarrassing questions that might arise. The hon. member for Niagara has alluded to the facts of these resolutions applying only to Germans and not to aliens of other nations.

Mr. PLUMB explained that he alluded to aliens in general, including Russians.

Mr. YOUNG—I feel it would be rather too much to ask Great Britain to negotiate treaties with all the nations, some of whose inhabitants may come to Canada; but the Germans constitute a very large portion of our population, and therefore, I think we may fairly ask the Imperial Government to negotiate a treaty with Germany. I would point out to the right hon. member for Kingston, that there is no fresh ground taken in the resolutions for the Address, further than we assure the Imperial Government that the objections stated by Earl GRANVILLE would not be considered very serious here, and that we are heartily willing to accept a treaty even with the conditions referred to. The present Government in England may not see their way to undertake the negotiation of the desired treaty; if so, we have at least done our duty to one of the most deserving classes of the citizens of this country.

The committee reported the resolutions, after which a Select Committee, consisting of Messrs. SCATCHERD, ARCHIBALD, GILLIES, BOWELL and YOUNG, present the draft of an Address to HER MAJESTY, founded on the resolutions, which was ordered to be engrossed. An Address to HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, praying him to lay the Address to HER MAJESTY at the foot of the Throne, was also adopted.

SUPPLY.

On motion of Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT the Supply Bill was read the third time and passed.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE moved the adjournment of the House.

The House adjourned at 5 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday April 6th, 1875.

WAY OFFICES.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER asked the Postmaster General what the policy of the Government was with regard to Way Offices. He understood that they did not intend to establish any more such offices except where it was necessary to have Post Offices. In Nova Scotia there were a great many Way Offices in sparsely settled parts of the country.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD replied that it was found very difficult to manage the Way Offices in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and it was the intention of the Government not to do away with them but to establish no new ones. When Prince Edward Island came into the Union, the Way Offices in that Province were done away with altogether by his predecessor. The Department was making the Way Offices in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, Post Offices as fast as possible. This policy had been adopted during the last six months, and did not involve any increased cost. The Department was working them in as rapidly as possible without at all diminishing the number of offices, and consequently without subjecting the public to any inconvenience thereby.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he was afraid that to establish Post Offices instead of Way Offices, would have entailed a much heavier expenditure of the public money.

Hon. D. A. MACDONALD assured the hon. member for Cumberland that the change would be carried out in such a manner as not to annoy the people of those Provinces.

Mr. SCHULTZ hoped the Government would allow two motions that stood in his name, to be passed without discussion, in order that the returns asked for might be submitted to the House at as early a date as possible. The first of those motions was for a return of receipts from the sale of land in Manitoba, from 1st January to 31st December, 1874.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that if the motion was adopted the hon. member could not expect to receive the returns this session; and when it was prepared it would be simply to put away in a pigeonhole. No usefnl purpose would be served by moving the motion.

Mr. SCHULTZ remarked that it was generally thought that the Senate would occupy another week in its deliberations, and as the return would be a brief one, he thought it might possibly be brought down.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE in reply stated that the returns already asked for would occupy more than a week in their preparation, and they would take precedence over that moved by the hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. SCHULTZ said the second motion which he desired the Government to allow to be passed was for a return of papers connected with the trial of AMBROSE LEPINE. A considerable portion of the papers had already been published, and with a slight addition would afford a valuable historical record of the events connected with the North-West; and as matters connected with the insurrection there had occupied considerable attention in the House during the last few days, it was desirable that the whole of the papers should be printed, especially as important evidence would be derived from the documents of the LEPINE trial which would bear out certain statements he was called upon to make in connection with that insurrection.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that the documents were embraced in the last rereturn, which had not, however, yet been printed.

Mr. SCHULTZ said all the papers with the exception of one or two were there.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE said that if the hon. member wonld inform him what papers he desired added to the return, perhaps he could arrange for the addition to be made.

Mr. SCHULTZ thanked the hon., the Premier, for that intimation.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD desired to take that opportunity of giving notice that at the next session he would feel it his duty to insist on the Rules of the House being strictly carried into force, and that when the Orders of the Day were called the several items should either be moved or dropped. The practice of allowing motions to stand over from day to day was a very inconvenient one. He would also give notice that he would move next session, as had been done in England last session, that no new business should be taken up after 12.30 p. m. While the hon., the Premier, in the Imperial Parliament had declined to accept a motion to that effect, he stated that as a general rule the Government would meet the wishes of the House, and it would be understood that new business should be introduced after that hour.

DUTY ON TEA.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER said he had observed in a newspaper that a deputation had waited on the hon. the Minister of Finance regarding the question of tea and coffee duties. He would be gratified if the hon. the Minister would state to the House the answer he gave to the deputation, as it had been found on various occasions that the reports in the press could not be depended upon.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT—The subject of the deputation to which the hon. member refers was the question of the tea duties. The answer made by me on that occasion was this: I held out no hope to those gentlemen of any alteration in the policy of the Government, although I promised to submit all their statements, as my duty was, to my colleagues ; but I stated then that as regards cases of individual hardship, these might be dealt with by the Government under the existing laws, according to their respective merits.

The motion for adjournment was then carried, it being understood that the House would re-assemble at 9 p. m.

AFTER RECESS,

The SPEAKER took the chair at 9:15 p.m.

DUTY ON FISH.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL said he had received a letter from a merchant in New Brunswick stating that it was reported in that Province that the United States Government had imposed a duty of 1½ cts. per lb. on fresh salmon imported from Canada. He wished to know from the First Minister if he was aware that any such change had been made in the tariff.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I think there must be some mistake about it. It must be the duty of 1½ per cts. can on canned lobsters. I am not aware that any such change has been referred to has been made in the tariff of the United States.

THE INSOLVENCY BILL.

A message was received from the Senate notifying the House of Commons that they had passed the Act respecting Insolvency with certain amendments.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER moved that the amendment to the 84th clause be not concurred in as being contrary to the spirit of the Act in its other parts.—Carried.

Hon. M. FOURNIER moved that the amendment to the 120th clause disqualifying assignees from acting when related by blood or marriage to a creditor, be not concurred in on the ground that the assignee has now no judicial authority and also that it would be exceedingly inconvenient to carry out such a provision.—Carried.

The other amendments to the Bill were concurred in.

TEA DUTIES.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL, referring to a reply given by the hon. Minister of Finance to an enquiry made at the afternoon session by the hon. member for Cumberland, asked the hon. Minister if he could state in what way the Government intended to deal with special cases as they arose in order that the parties interested would know how to make their application.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the Government did not propose to invite parties to make such applications, but they had power under the existing law to deal with special cases of hardship. He could not answer the enquiry with sufficient definiteness to meet the object which the hon. member for Northumberland desired to attain.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL did not suppose that politics would enter into the consideration of such cases ; but several parties had asked whether or not any remission of duties would be made, for, if so, there might be some particular points which required to be presented in order that a case might receive favorable consideration.

Hon. Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he could not venture to lay down general rules for deciding the cases,

THE GASPE ELECTION.

Mr. TASCHEREAU asked why the report of the Gaspe Controverted Election Case had not yet been sent in. It was well know that the judgment was given early in January unseating the member for that constituency. He had appealed from the decision and his appeal had since then been withdrawn, but no report had been made to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER—I have not received any report.

Hon. Mr. FOURNIER said he had just been informed that the appeal taken by the late sitting member had been dismissed. That was the cause why no report had yet reached Mr. SPEAKER. After the member for Gaspe had been unseated he took an appeal. That might be considered a sham appeal because it was not followed up and no doubt the Judge would now send his final report without any delay.

THE MIRAMICHI BRIDGES.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL asked the First Minister if he could state what was the height of the Intercolonial Railway Bridges over the North and South West Branches of the Miramichi River, above the water. Fears were entertained by the owners of steamers plying on the river where these bridges were being constructed, that they would prevent this passage. He wished to know whether, if such should be the case, the Government would give any compensation to vessel owners for the expense of altering the funnels of their steamers.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I do not know anything about the height of the bridges, but I can promise there will be no compensation.

The House adjourned at 10 p.m.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

THE INSOLVENCY BILL.

Mr. SPEAKER read a message from the Senate stating that they did not insist upon their amendments to the Insolvency Bill, to which the House of Commons had disagreed.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

The amendments made by the Senate to several Bills, including those made to the Act establishing a Supreme Court, were concurred in.

ESQUIMAULT AND NANAIMO RAILWAY.

Mr. DECOSMOS—Mr. SPEAKER, a statement appears in one of the city papers to-day to the effect that a Bill which passed this House providing for the construction of a railway between Esquimault and Nanaimo has been thrown out by the Senate. If such be the case, I desire to know from the Government what course they intend to adopt; whether they intend to proceed with the construction of that railway during the coming year in accordance with the views of this branch of the Legislature, or whether they do not intend to proceed with its construction.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE—I have no answer to give: I cannot tell what the Government would do under any particular circumstances.

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

Hon. Mr. SMITH brought down the seventh annual report of the Marine and Fisheries Department.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. VAIL brought down the appendices to the annual report of the Militia Department.

At six o'clock the House rose for recess.

——:++:——

The SPEAKER took the chair at 9.20 P. M. Several amendments made by the Senate to Bills from the House of Commons were concurred in.

The House adjourned at 9.35 P. M. till to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER took the chair at two o'clock.

THE HALF-BREED LANDS.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) asked the Minister of the Interior, in view of the legislation that had taken place this session and the powers taken by the Government to deal with certain matters in connection with the North-West — the half-breed claims, the allotment of scrip to the heads of half-breed families, and to the Scotch settlers—he would like to know within what time a settlement of these questions might be expected. He wished to know when the distribution of lands would take place, when the scrip would be allotted, as well as within what time those having a right to the outer two miles might expect to have it opened for settlement.

Hon. Mr. LAIRD said with respect to the half-breed lands, the delay had taken place last season, owing to the fact that some of those claims in dispute had been referred to the Minister of Justice. The opinion had been obtained that some of those claims would probably have to be recognized. In view of this fact the Government had sent instructions to their agent at Winnipeg to make a return of all those claims to the department, in order that they might be withdrawn from the half-breed lands. As soon as th a return was received, the drawing of the half-breed lands would be proceeded with. Commissioners would be appointed as soon as possible to investigate the claims of those half-breed settlers, both young and old, to the lands drawn for. The hay claim would also be proceed with as rapidly as the plans could be prepared, which are required to furnish the descriptions for the patents. Though the legislation of this session did not deal with all these questions, still the powers the Government had taken with respect to conflicting claims of settlers with each other, would also be proceeded with and the same might be said with regard to the other claims. Although the member for Lisgar was absent he (Mr. LAIRD) wished to refer to the charge made by that hon. gentleman that the Government had favored the Hudson's Bay Company in issuing patents to them while the same privilege had not been extended to settlers on the settlement belt. He (Mr. LAIRD) had made strict inquiry in the department and found that since the present Government had come into power, not a single patent had been issued to the Hudson's Bay Company for lands of any kind whatever.

PACIFIC RAILWAY TERMINUS.

Mr. WRIGHT (Pontiac) inquired from the Hon. Minister of Public Works whether any information had been received from the engineers sent to examine as to the practicability of the Northern Colonization Railway crossing from Portage du Fort to a point somewhere in the vicinity of the village of Douglas. He believed that explorations had been going forward for some time, and it was rumored that a report had been made to the Government in regard thereto. His excuse for asking the question was that the subject was one of special importance to the people of the county which he represented, and that he was intimately connected with that railway. He had been also given to understand—at all events it was so rumored on the streets—that the terminus of the subsidized portion of the Georgian Bay Branch had been located in the village of Douglas. He had entertained the hope, as did the people of the county of Pontiac, and of the North Riding of Renfrew, that in consideration of the important position of Pembroke, that town would have been selected for the terminus, or if not selected, an instrumental survey would have been ordered before any other place had been chosen for the Eastern terminus of the Georgian Bay Branch. The town of Pembroke possessed many advantages as the terminus. It was at the head of navigation, the principle distributing point for lumber supplies for the Upper Ottawa region, and the point at which both the railroads and steamboats of Ontario and Quebec could meet with equal facility, and the point which would be acceptable to the extreme western men of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE called the hon. member to order. It was impossible that there could be a discussion on this question. The question was whether information of a certain kind had been received from the engineers. Though not bound to answer that question, he (Mr. MACKENZIE) could tell the hon. gentleman thet he had not received such information and no portion of the road had yet been located that he was aware of.

Hon. Mr. TUPPER.—Have the Government taken any measures, and if so, what measures to secure a connection between the Canada Central Railway, at the point where it now terminates, and Douglas, the point to which the Government are authorized by Parliament to grant a subsidy for the extension to Lake Burnt ?

Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE.—I am afraid the hon. member will have to give the two day's notice of his question. However, I will tell him we have taken no steps of any sort about it, good, bad, or indifferent, but what Parliament is aware of.

At three o'clock the Usher of the Black Rod appeared with a message from HIS EXCELLENCY, summoning the members of the House of Commons to the bar of the Senate.

HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL was pleased to reserve the following Bill for the signification of HER MAJESTY'S pleasure thereon:

An Act for the relief of HENRY WILLIAM PETERSON.

An Act respecting Copyrights.

Then the Honourable the SPEAKER of the House of Commons addressed HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL as follows:—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

In the name of the Commons, I present YOUR EXCELLENCY a Bill intituled:

An Act for granting to HER MAJESTY certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1875, and the 30th June, 1876, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which I humbly request YOUR EXCELLENCY'S assent.

To this Bill the Royal assent was signified in the following words:—

In HER MAJESTY'S name HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR GENERAL, was pleased to close the Second Session of the Third Parliament of the Dominion, with the following

SPEECH:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I cannot relieve you from your attendance in Parliament without thanking you for the assiduity and zeal, by which at an unusually early period in the season you have been enabled to bring the onerous duties of a laborious session to a close.

The session has been fruitful of measures fraught with great consequences to the country.

I have readily given my assent to the Act to establish a Supreme Court and a Court of Exchequer for Canada—a measure which has long been under consideration, and which is necessary to the completion of our judicial system.

The Act respecting Insolvency will promote the interests of commerce, by the wholesome changes introduced in the existing law. These changes will doubtless result in the more careful and economical administration of insolvent estates, giving due protection to the creditor, and at the same time shielding from harsh treatment the honest but unfortunate debtor.

To aid in the development and efficient administration of our great territorial empire in the North-West, an important step has been taken by the passing of the Act providing for it a form of government predicated upon its present requirements, and framed to meet the exigencies of the near future, by calling into existence representative institutions whenever sufficient population shall have been found for the exercise of the functions of self-government.

The Postal Service Act will by its liberal provisions and the removal of hindrances to free communication by mail tend greatly to the public convenience.

In like manner, much advantage may be expected to result from the passing of the Act respecting Ocean Telegraphy, preventing monopoly, and giving freedom of access to our shores to all Marine Telegraph Companies.

The Copyrights Act has been passed to protect the rights of authors and artists who may desire to avail themselves of its provisions, and to facilitate arrangements for the publication in Canada of the works of writers residing in other countries.

By the Insurance Act greater security has been given to the insured, by the adoption of an effective system of inspection.

The Act relating to Penitentiaries has brought these institutions more immediately under the direction and control of the Government; and the system of administration and inspection has been simplified and cheapened.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I thank you for the Supplies you have granted. They will enable my Government to prosecute the great public works to which the country has been committed, and will, I doubt not, contribute largely to the development of our resources, the growth of our commerce, and the extension into the interior of settlements of hardy and industrious pioneers.

Honorable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

I congratulate you on the adoption of many measures, in addition to those enumerated, calculated to add to the public comfort and prosperity, to increase the stability of our institutions, and to promote confidence and good will among the different classes of our people. They, I doubt not, will be found to appreciate your labors to these ends; and I trust that on their part, they will above all things cultivate an unselfish love of country and devotion to the general good.

That an Address be presented to Her Majesty, on the subject of the law respecting Common Schools adopted by the Legislature of New Brunswick in 1871, and praying for the passing of an Act making certain amendments to the British North America Act of 1867—(Mr. Costigan)—555
Debate Adjourned, 58
Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. Costigan, 609
Motion in amendment—
That all the words after "that" in the original resolution be omitted, and the following substituted—"In the opinion of this House, legislation by the Parliament of the United Kingdom encroaching on any powers reserved to any one of the Provinces by the British North America Act would be an infraction of the Provincial Constitution, and that it would be inexpedient and fraught with danger to the autonomy of the Provinces for this House to invite such legislation."—(Hon. Mr. Mackenzie)—611

Motion in amendment to the amendment—
That on the 29th of May, 1872, the House of Commons adopted the following resolution:—"This House regrets that the School Act recently passed in New Brunswick is unsatisfactory to a portion of the inhabitants of that Province, and hopes that it may be so modified during next session of the Legislature of New Brunswick as to remove any just grounds for the dissatisfaction that now exists." That this House regrets that the hope expressed in the said resolution has not been realized, and that an humble Address be presented to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen embodying this resolution, and praying that Her Majesty will be graciously pleased to use her influence with the Legislature of New Brunswick to procure such a modification of the said Act as shall remove such grounds of discontent.—(*Hon. Motion in amendment to the motion for concurrence—
That in view of the engagements entered into during the past year between the Government of Canada and the Imperial Government and British Columbia, to build a railroad without delay from Nanaimo to Esquimalt, on Vancouver's Island, and to expend not less than $2,000,000 per annum in British Columbia on the Canadian Pacific Railroad ; and to complete the construction of the line from the Pacific Ocean to the shore of Lake Superior in fifteen years, this House is of opinion that no time should be lost in beginning the Eastern portion of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and constructing it as rapidly as is consistent with a due regard to economy from the point fixed by Parliament at or near to the South of Lake Nipissing Westward to Lake Nepigon, and thence to Red River, commencing at Lake Nepigon and working Eastward and Westward; and that the Government should employ the available funds of the Dominion in the first place for the completion of that great national work—a continuous railway on Canadian Territory by the shortest route from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.—(Hon. Mr. Tupper)—696

The amendment having been lost, and so declared, and the question being again put, it was moved in amendment—
That this resolution be not now concurred in, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House no contract shall be entered into with any Company for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch of the Pacific Railway, nor any subsidy granted for the construction of the Railway from the Eastern terminus of said Pacific Railway to Douglas or near Douglas, until a thorough and complete instrumental survey shall have been made of the route proposed, and the route to the Matawan, to ascertain which would be the shorter and more economical of construction.—(Mr. Masson,) 697
