DEATH OF L. S. IVES, L. L. D.

With heartfelt sorrow we record the death of this great man. We knew him well and intimately. And we can say with the New York Freeman's Journal, 'that a good man and a gallant gentleman, has departed full of years, and full of honors.'

Doctry. KING-AUTUMN. Come not with sudden rage, With flying leaves from straining woodlands hurled...

Come like the friend we love, Like sleep, like evening from the unknown west. Our eyes are raised above, Far off we see thy skirts in splendor drest...

Lo! deep in yonder wood, A throne of gold, th' umbrageous linden shines; And, drenched in summer's blood, The chestnut blazes next the dark tall pines...

The wheat fields shake their spears Where uplands reddens in the sunset glow; The valley far below Red as a mighty battle field appears...

What stream of amber light Pierces my dreams and leads the vapors home? 'Tis harvest moon to-night! The starry horse rides high in Heaven's blue dome...

King of a peaceful land, We linger charm'd where thy corn-crops wave, Or by the brooklet stand And hail the scatt'ring o'er the year's ripe grave...

And then, 'neath Autumn's spell, What fruits our lives bear as the years grow old? Else harvest rings our knell, Bess harvest we when all around is gold!

MISCELLANEOUS. TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUE WITNESS. CHARLOTTETOWN, P. E. I., Sept. 10, 1867. MR. EDITOR:—It is a common practice with newspaper writers, at this season of the year, to apologise for the dullness of their remarks...

Let us enter her room. She sits at her writing table, for she is likewise at work upon a novel. Her corpulent form, her round face, her radiant deep blue eyes, her raven hair, everything forms a striking contrast with the appearance of her husband...

that there are scarcely any better water-places to be found in British America than in this Prince Edward Island of ours. The invigorating salt water which surrounds the Island is accessible at all points, whilst we are never visited with these dull, heavy days, with the thermometer in the neighborhood of 90°...

Whilst you of the New Dominion are passing through one of the most furious Election contests on the record of British American annals, the inhabitants of this little Island 'left out in the cold,' as some Confederates very charitably put it, are pursuing in peace and contentment their happy avocations of sturdy, independent farmers...

I have lately visited several settlements in this flourishing little Colony, and I have been highly pleased to observe that not the least attractive feature in many of them is a large Church, which would be a credit to the wealthiest country parish in Canada. On my enquiring what denomination the largest of a hundred was, the Church belonged, I was invariably told that they were Catholic Churches and that they owed their existence mainly to the untiring zeal of the present energetic Bishop of Charlottetown, Rt. Rev. Dr. McIntyre...

By the late German writer, "Walter and Weir," appears the following interesting gossip on several literary celebrities of England. Bulwer lives in his beautiful villa in Fulham, a quiet, lovely village above London. A tranquility undisturbed by nothing, reigns in the house. Notwithstanding the warm spring day, Bulwer sits near the fire-place, where a bright coal fire is burning. Outside, the branches of a cherry tree, covered with an exuberance of blossoms, hang down on the window, and the low, chirping notes of the birds penetrate into the room...

BULWER, CARLYLE AND DICKENS. In a late German work, "Walter and Weir," appears the following interesting gossip on several literary celebrities of England. Bulwer lives in his beautiful villa in Fulham, a quiet, lovely village above London. A tranquility undisturbed by nothing, reigns in the house. Notwithstanding the warm spring day, Bulwer sits near the fire-place, where a bright coal fire is burning. Outside, the branches of a cherry tree, covered with an exuberance of blossoms, hang down on the window, and the low, chirping notes of the birds penetrate into the room...

What fruits our lives bear as the years grow old? Else harvest rings our knell, Bess harvest we when all around is gold! You dead leaf, as it fell, Warns us how soon our working days are told!

Let us enter her room. She sits at her writing table, for she is likewise at work upon a novel. Her corpulent form, her round face, her radiant deep blue eyes, her raven hair, everything forms a striking contrast with the appearance of her husband. But let us pass on. We reach another quiet village, Chelsea. On the lawn, in one of the small gardens sits Scotland's author, Thomas Carlyle. He has a book on his knee, and gazes thoughtfully into vacancy. His is a dry giant form; he wears a morning gown and cap, and draws heavy clouds of smoke from his short clay pipe; he is the Diogenes of Chelsea. If you converse with him, he is at first dry and laconic. He conducts you then to the pretty sitting room of his wife.

MR. CARLYLE is a lively, pleasant creature, and a world of thought beams from her dark eyes. She has learned a great deal; her father gave her a superior mind, education, and she is possessed of a keen yet mild judgment, of which her husband himself is afraid. But there she sits now, sewing with her handsome fingers a new cravat for her Diogenes. She wears an elegant morning costume.

In these surroundings we begin to feel at ease. The portraits of Goethe, young and old, and Jean Paul are looking down upon us. Carlyle becomes talkative and writes and displays his famous eloquence. But he is decidedly one-sided. You like to listen to him, but you must beware of interrupting him, and, above all, of contradicting him. He remembers a clear sounding bell; you touch it and it responds, but only to itself. Nevertheless we Germans are always well at ease in Carlyle's presence, for if there is an Englishman who catches or reveres our points it is Carlyle.

Let us go now to Charles Dickens. There are several aristocratic carriages and plain houses in front of his elegant residence, where a numerous party is assembled. The celebrated romancer has recently returned from an extended trip to Switzerland and Geneva, and gives a lecture, such as we are of the order of the day, at his hospitable house. He is blond, his eyes are light-blue, his face flushed with wine, neither meagre nor round, but brimful of good humor and kind benevolence. He is conversing with two ladies, who cannot refrain from bursting into loud laughter. You can tell at once, by looking at his face, which is by no means expressive in itself, when Dickens describes, recites, or entertains. Dickens is precisely as he writes—lively, sanguine, a keen vision, now in a political mood, now observing all around him, superficially, and yet with a deep heart in concealed pride (this less so) at what he says. It is said that the currents of the world are injurious to genius. Dickens' example proves the contrary; for his creations spring from the observations of life; he would get nothing without seeing, observing, and living with what he beholds.

In former times his wife, a stately lady, was to be seen on such occasions. Her black eyes, her full form, her measured conduct were in striking contrast with those of her husband, and we regret to say that the quarrel which disturbed their relations many years ago has not yet been settled. They are not yet reconciled. The husband drowsy his cares in his literary activity and in the noisy bustle of the world.
