The Mystery of Rutledge Hall

OR

"The Cloud With a Silver Lining"

CHAPTER IV.

"Will you come and speak to Dolly?" Stephen asked, gently, anxious to remove the anxiety from the fair young face; and Sidney turned her horse's head in silence, and then pulled up.

"I think—I think I ought to speak to Mrs. Rutledge," she said, hesitatingly, looking at Stephen with great pleading eyes.

"Yes, certainly," he agreed, readily, in an easy pleasant voice, and they rode across the field together.

Mrs. Rutledge's greeting was a very cold one. She did not put out her hand to Sidney, as she had done to her fiancée; she smiled coldly and bowed her head, and greeted Miss Arnold with a few languid words; and Stephen thought afterward that, if he had not loved Sidney already, he must have loved her then for the courteous, pretty grace of manner, so pleasant and cordial, which she showed.

"I have not seen you since your engagement, Miss Arnold," Mrs. Rutledge said, in her sweet but rather metallic voice. "I ought to congratulate you, I suppose, if marriage is a subject for congratulation, which I am inclined to doubt," she added, with a slight glance at her husband, who sat erect on his saddle, rigid and furious, gnawing at his stiff gray mustache.

"Whether it be so or not must depend upon circumstances," put in Frank, ironically. "Similarity of tastes, of pursuits, and suitability of age are generally considered—"

"Ah, spare us a homily on marriage!" Sidney said, with languid deprecation. "Nothing warns people when they are bent on self-destruction, you know—neither advice nor threats—with a peculiar glance at Frank—"nor persuasion—with another glance at Stephen. "One wants to find out for one's self, and one forgets that, should the discovery prove an unpleasant one, it will be too late to undo what is done."

She ended with a little shrug of the shoulders and a slight tuneless laugh. Mr. Rutledge, who had with difficulty suppressed his impatience, said sharply:

"Are we going to talk nonsense all day? Daunt, are you ready? Hunting is a thing of the past, it seems to me now!"

"Ah, hunting is not what it was throb of anger at his heart against Frank Greville.

"I would have taken better care of her than that," he said to himself, as he rode off to fulfill his promise to her. "Poor child, she deserves a happier fate!"

And late that afternoon Sidney, watching at one of the windows of the Gray House, looking out into the street in which the lamps were lighted and shone through a gray misty drizzle, saw the two young men riding slowly side by side up the center of the wide thoroughfare. They glanced at the Gray House as they passed, and Stephen saw the little watching figure at the lighted window, and lifted his hat and smiled. Frank pulled up.

"I will go and ask Sidney for some tea," he said. "Will you come, Daunt?"

"Thank you, no. My mother will be uneasy; it is late already," Stephen answered, and rode away homeward in the wintry twilight, thinking how cheerily the fire would be blazing in the charming old drawing-room of the Gray House, and how Sidney's face would brighten into such sweet welcome of her lover. And, as he thought, he sighed.

CHAPTER V.

"Do you quite understand me, Sibyl?"

There was no answer. Mr. Rutledge, standing before the wood fire in his wife's room, looking, as his wont was now, angry and moody, repeated his question in a louder tone; but it was received with the same indifference and inattention. His wife never raised her eyes from her book.

She was lying back in a low, deep arm-chair drawn up near the fire, looking wondrously beautiful, queenly, and negligent, a book in one hand, a hand-screen, delicately painted and elaborately carved, in the other, shading her face from the fire. It would have been difficult to find a more exquisite picture; but the anger in the squire's eyes only deepened as he marked her beauty and felt that, although she was his wife, he was powerless to make the color deepen in her cheek or the light sparkle in her eyes, and reflected that during the three months of their married life she had always shown him the same negligence and indifference almost bordering on contempt—she, the poor homeless governess, without connections or position, whom he had made mistress of Rutledge Hall, and to whom he had given his name—one well known and respected in the whole county.

It was entirely owing to his high position, he told himself, indignantly, that she had met with such a reception in the county. He had an uneasy feeling that he was not a popular man himself; but he had been generally respected as a good landlord and an honorable gentleman, and his wealth was great, his position undeniable. All the county people called upon Mrs. Rutledge, and came away impressed not only by her wondrous beauty, but by her perfect ease of manner and self-possession.

Move to Ban Horses in London

There are said to be indications that a move is in progress to ban horses in some of the streets of London.

Sir Walter Gilbey, chairman of the National Horse Association of Great Britain, in a protest against the "unjust" accusation that the cause of the present congestion of the London streets rests with the horse-drawn vehicles, mentions that proposals have been formulated to withdraw or curtail the use of the horse in London.

He protests against such a proposal "unjust in its incidence and of serious importance to thousands of firms and small owners. "No official steps have been taken to restrict the number of horses on the London streets yet," said Sir Walter Gilbey to a newspaper representative. "Any such move will be quickly nipped in the bud by our sending a strong deputation representing people with interests in the horse."

"The introduction of legislation in Parliament, obviously on the part of people interested in other forms of traffic, will not, in my opinion, stand a chance of going through if it aims at the complete elimination of the horse from the streets. "It is an impossible idea, and this is realized by a large number of the more sensible people interested in motors and motor production. They themselves have told me that it would be impossible for certain classes of traders to carry on without employing horses."

"The idea suggested in one quarter, of getting over the alleged difficulty of the horse by licensing these animals and as they die off refusing to renew the license, is too preposterous for words. A refusal to license certain forms of mechanical transport on our streets would certainly be more to the point, in my opinion."

The Pope and Girl Guides

Cardinal Bourne, Archbishop of Westminster, has received a letter from Cardinal Gasparri, Secretary of State at the Vatican, conveying the Pope's blessing on Roman Catholic Girl Guide companies formed by the Catholic Women's League.

Cardinal Gasparri writes: "The Holy Father has learned with pleasure that under the auspices of the worthy Catholic Women's League new companies of Girl Guides are being formed in your city side by side with the troops of Boy Scouts already flourishing, with the object of giving to the young girls a definitely Christian training. And as these new forms of inducement to do good, which at the same time stimulate sentiments of honour and loyalty in all human affairs, may well appeal to the special needs of that ingenious and generous age, the Holy Father with benevolent condescension gives his blessing to the timely spread of these organizations in your country. At the same time it is his wish that they should have deeply impressed upon them the special seal of Catholic faith and piety, preserving always their entire dependence upon the superior ecclesiastical authorities." ## Beauty Treatment Improves a Black Dandy

A clean shave with a chip of broken bottle-glass was an important part of the toilet of an aboriginal beau, in far-northern Australia, as described by Capt. G. H. Wilkins, who has been collecting specimens in that region for the British Museum. The New Zealand Herald quotes Captain Wilkins as follows:

The young man Yarra, who had until now been sporting a pointed beard, pendant from his chin, while the rest of his cheeks were shaven, decided to attend to tonsorial matters, so he uncovered a broken bottle from the sandy floor of the cave, and chipping small fragments from it with his tomahawk, he dry-shaved his cheeks with the sharp-edged pieces that were no bigger than a threepenny bit. This was done without the aid of a looking-glass, yet he miraculously escaped from cutting his skin. He felt his smoothed cheeks and stroked his beard, and then mixed a little of the white clay used for their drawings and painted an oval mark about his eyes and eyebrows.

While this was drying, Yarra sat up with his back against a stone while two other men pulled each joint of his arms and produced a cracking noise. First the shoulder, then the elbow—this was done by swinging the arm sharply downward—then the wrists, and every joint of the fingers. The men on each side endeavored to pull the joints so that they cracked in unison, and it is this happened there were bursts of laughter.

When each joint of the arms and hands had cracked, the attendants transferred their attention to the legs. Knees and ankles were twisted until they snap, and then each toe in turn was pulled. In order to get a better pull, the attendants placed their feet against the patient and pulled for all they were worth. With this semi-dislocating process finished, Yarra seemed quite content and lolled about in the manner of a duff fresh from a Turkish bath.

But he was not long contented. He decided to be clean-shaven, or at least clean-faced, and, after a short consultation with his attendants, they collected some of the beeswax he had gathered and rubbed it on his beard. Then one of them sat astride him and they called in the services of a third man, who held Yarra's head upon the ground. The other man rolled two or three hairs of the beard together with the wax and plucked them out by the roots. Each time required a considerable effort to remove it, and one would have thought it a most painful process.

The operators certainly enjoyed it, and Yarra kept up a stammering chant of "Jesus Loves Me," half-English, half-native, his voice smothering each time a jerk by the barber closed his lower jaw. The whole effect was most ludicrous, and every one, including Yarra, laughed heartily. The operation was completed in about twenty minutes. Yarra's chin was free from hair, and his mustache had been plucked from the ends until only a "Charlie Chaplin" effect was left. The attendants massaged the newly plucked skin, and the process was over.

The men then settled down to various occupations. Some painted designs on sticks, others smoked, and one man started to make a belt by spinning human hair on a primitive form of spindle.

I spent several days with these people. Each day we hunted "sugarbush," and ate the heart of palm-trees, but gathered no other food, and then Yarra and his friends accompanied me to within a mile or so of the mission station.

I was well pleased with the trip. I had gained the confidence of the natives so far as to be accepted into their camp and to meet and photograph their women. So far as I know, it is the first time that a white man has lived in the camp of Groote Eylanders, who had their women with them.

No Limit to Upward Tendencies of Life

LONDON, August 27.—(Canadian Press Cable)—A startling view of the future of mankind was expressed by Professor W. A. Parks, of the University of Toronto, addressing the Geological Section of the British Association for the Advancement of Science to-day. Prof. Parks said that earthquakes were really a blessing in disguise, for if the earth's crust were rigid enough to resist earthquakes, a universal deluge, geologically speaking, would be within sight as the power of erosion is great enough to reduce the land to sea level but for the opposing rejuvenating forces.

Upward Tendency of Life. Prof. Parks was confident that there was no limit to the upward tendency of life. He said that the future variation in climate would probably greatly affect human activities and that it was not impossible, within a measurable number of years, that the present sites of civilization would be buried under glaciers and that a new civilization would occupy the Polar regions under a genial climate.

The disappearance of such spirits he attributed to the professional agitators and politicians who were working the same destruction as professionalism has done in football. He declared that unless the public awakened to the cumulative handicaps under which engineering and other industries were suffering, there was no hope of the shipbuilding industry recovering its old supremacy. There must be radicalization of details in shipbuilding, he stated.

SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron

WHAT FAULTS DO WE HATE MOST?

Do we excuse in others the faults that we are most prone to ourselves? Or do we particularly dislike in others the faults that mark our own characters.

We were discussing the pros and cons of that the other day.

There is a familiar old couplet from "The Hunchback" which favors the latter idea.

Compounded for sins they are inclined to forgive those they have no mind to.

And, personally, I always held the view that we sympathized with our weaknesses in other people. But yesterday I was right.

Kind of Person She Can't Bear. I have a friend who, while very kind and very competent has one of those overbearing personalities. She has very strong opinions on every subject. She knows just how everything ought to be done. She can never let anything go on without wanting to take a hand in it. She can never be in a room without being the most audible and audible person in it. She is the someone I know calls persistent.

There is in our neighborhood a newcomer with a similar personality. Some people like her in spite of it and some don't. And of those who don't, my friend with the pervasive personality is the most pronounced in her dislike. "I don't see how you can stand her," she says. "I never saw anyone who thinks she knows so much about everything. And she always wants the center of the stage. She's the kind of person I can't stand. It's a person who always wants to be the center of everything."

"I really had to suppress a gasp when I heard that, because it so accurately described the describer herself."

What People Say About Her. Against I know a woman who really makes herself ridiculous by the way she worries over her husband's health. She coddles him. One would think she had every sympathy for this tendency. Does she? Not at all. She looks with the greatest air of superiority the other day how foolish her neighbor was about her little girl. "She makes that child's life miserable by the way she fusses over her," she said. And yet, I have heard people use that exact phrase "makes his life miserable" in regard to that woman's attitude toward her husband's health.

Positive people always have positiveness in others, of course. And prejudiced people hate prejudices, when it isn't one of their own particular pet prejudices, but runs counter to them.

Yet There Are People Who Learn.

On the other hand, one does know people who say of others' faults, "I understand how he feels. I'm timid myself"; or "I know what it means to be jealous. I don't blame her"; or "Of course he has a quick temper, but I know how hard it is to control a temper."

I suppose one should not try to make a generalization on this subject because it depends on the individual. There are people who are and then catch glimpses of themselves as they are and thereby get a deeper sympathy for other peoples' faults. And there are people who never catch even the faintest glimpse of themselves as they are, and therefore can calmly condemn in others their most glaring faults.

A Word to Women

A hundred and twenty-one thousand women would comprise a vast army. Yet a canvass was recently made among more than that number of women who had used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for feminine ailments. The result proved that ninety-eight out of every hundred reported benefit from its use. This is most remarkable evidence of the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over the ills of womanhood, and should induce every sick and ailing woman to try it.

"Lovers' Lane"

A Drama of Heart Interest—Opens Before Enthusiastic Audience at The Nickel.

It was a very pleased audience that left the Nickel Theatre last night after the showing of "Lovers' Lane," film version of Clyde Fitch's famous stage play.

Perhaps Phil Rosen was to blame, for he directed it. Then, again, it may have been the story, or even the cast. It is very difficult to determine which factor really was responsible for making this such a thoroughly enjoyable picture. Most likely, it was the combination of all of them.

"Lovers' Lane" is a heart interest drama of life, done with simplicity and reality, yet sparkling with a certain something that shows us more than the commonplace and the ordinary in the incidents that are portrayed. To one who appreciates the beauty of the country, the exterior scenes in this production are a real treat.

Robert Ellis and Gertrude Olmstead portray the leading roles of Dr. Tom Singleton and Mary Larkin with sincerity and unquestioned ability. Had these two well-known players never been heard of before, this picture would have brought them to the foreground. Under the circumstances, it simply sets them a little higher.

It is a Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen, directed by Phil Rosen, famous for his direction of "Abraham Lincoln" and "Being Respectable."

The marriage of Miss Clara Burry, of Greenspond, to Mr. William Kelly, well known employee of the railway baggage department, was celebrated at George St. Parsonage, 1 p.m. August 14th, by the Rev. C. H. Johnston. The costume of the bride was steel grey, with hat to match. The bride was attended by Miss Emma Collins, while the groom was supported by Mr. Burry, brother of the bride. After the wedding, the bridal party and their friends motored to the home of Mr. N. Way, John Street, where the usual toasts were made. The bride's going-away suit was of navy blue, with hat to match. They left by the express for Greenspond, the home of the bride, where the honeymoon was spent. The bride was the recipient of many gifts including a cheque from the groom. The bridesmaid was favored with a gold brooch, and the best man was the recipient of a stick pin. The happy couple returned by Saturday's express, and will in future reside at Franklin Avenue.

Star Movie Monday

An unending series of thrilling situations gripped the life of Jack Standish, virile young Yankee fugitive from crime in a remote Javanese port. Strong drink and fascinating tropical women swiftly made an outcast of him.

The fiancée he had left behind sensed his danger and hurried to him with her love, only to discover that another woman, a creature of the Javanese cabarets, had claimed him in mad infatuation.

With heroic self-sacrifice she pitted her heart against the wiles of the tropics. Risking all, even her honor, in a struggle to win her mate back to sanity and civilization, she daily saw him succumbing more and more to the languid lure of the lotus eaters.

Then came the wrath of the typhoon—the demoniacal wind storm that breathes destruction through the tropics. Trees, houses, people, whole villages were caught in its vortex. And with the typhoon came the most dreaded of all nature's catastrophes—the tidal waves.

In a mad rush of swirling waters, the whole earth seemed to be doomed. In its midst, a man feebly struggled for breath and safety, and a slim girl struggled too, for the life of a wastrel hardly worth the saving. In this cataclysm of human emotions and elemental fury is enacted the most dramatic scene of adventurous love ever shown on the screen. It is the climax of "Thundering Dawn," the Super Jewel picture to be seen at the Star Theatre next Monday, with J. Warren Kerrigan and Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading roles.

Rotary Club Dinner in Honour of Parliamentary Delegates

Smithville witnessed a function in the dinner given last night by the Rotary Club to the visiting delegates of the Empire Parliamentary Association that will long remain a memorable event in Newfoundland. Not only was it an outstanding occasion because of the presence of the distinguished guests from overseas but because it proved, in the spirit of fellowship which existed and in the sentiment expressed, the nearness of our relationship with the British representatives and the common ground on which both we in this country and they stand.

The banqueting room was most tastefully decorated in festoons of the Club's colours, blue and gold; on the walls were displayed its badge and the flag of Empire, and the hand of an artist was in evidence also in the table decorations.

In all, about one hundred and forty guests and Rotarians sat down to the dinner over which Rotarian Jim Ayre presided in a most able manner. The arrival of his Excellency the Governor was announced by the singing of the National Anthem, which was followed by the "Ode to Newfoundland." The menu, which was most admirably served by the management of the hotel, was as follows:—

- Pamplonouses.
- Potage des Ambassadeurs.
- Cabillaud de Terre Neuve.
- Petits Poussins Rotis.
- Pommes-de-Terre Nouvelles.
- Pottrons a la Saucis Blancs.
- Frankfort a la Creme.
- Oufs a l'Anchois.
- Cafe.

The toast to his Majesty the King having been duly honoured, President Ayre proposed the health of his Excellency the Governor. He thanked the Governor for his presence and referred to the keen interest he had always taken in the work of Rotary and in particular as it applied to the welfare of the boys in the city. He also paid a great tribute to the service his Excellency had rendered in promoting and encouraging the social and industrial development of the country and by the wholehearted manner in which he had made its many problems his personal concern.

In responding, his Excellency thanked the President for his references, and expressed the great pleasure it gave him to be present at such a gathering and to testify to the good work that Rotary was performing in the city.

Rotarian A. Williams followed with a song entitled "Take a Trip of Sparkling Eyes," which was thoroughly enjoyed. At this juncture, President Ayre introduced to the gathering the members of the Parliamentary Delegation and made a brief reference to each. As they rose in their places, they were received with hearty applause.

The Hon. John R. Bennett in proposing The British Empire referred to it as the toast of the evening, and in coupling with it the names of Mr. Ben Smith and Hon. E. Harney, who, he felt, were better able than he was to do justice to such a toast, he referred to their wide personal knowledge of the dominions and the important part they had played both at home and abroad with honour both to themselves and to the Empire. It was interesting to learn from the speaker that Mr. Smith had previously visited this country in a square rigger about 32 years ago. Newfoundland, said Mr. Bennett, gave place to none in her loyalty and devotion, and in the same spirit in which they had joined with the other parts of the Empire at the call to war they were ready to do whatever service they could in the interest of peace.

"We want," he said, "to see the Empire become more consolidated, more self-supporting. Economic conditions to-day have undergone great changes, and whereas formerly Great Britain controlled the markets of the world without any serious rivals, today competition was keen and means must be devised to meet the altered conditions. The principle upon which these plans must be based," he added, "is Empire unity, and the presence of the Delegation in Newfoundland is the best indication of the determination to preserve that unity." Referring to the wealth, resources, and virility of the Mother Country, he told of the wonderful effort she had made, and her costly sacrifices in human lives to win the war and which in the main were responsible for the victory. He told of the great example set by his Majesty during that period, and referred to the splendid achievements of the Prince of Wales as the Ambassador of the Empire in the Dominions and other lands.

Mr. Ben Smith's response to the toast was an admirable combination of rich humour and sound, practical ideas on the question of empire consolidation. Speaking of the attitude of the Labour Party in the matter, he said that whereas it might have its own views as to the best methods to be followed, it yielded to none in its desire for a closer unity and in its respect and regard for the British Empire. Knit together as it was by sentiment, he felt there should also be a better understanding with regard to economic questions at present, he said, there were negotiations conducted, particularly with regard to the floating of loans, which could only be regarded as economic warfare, a state of affairs which the Empire must at some time resist. Britain, he remarked, in spite of her trials was still financially sound, and she still possessed the greatest financial and the greatest productive brains, assets which he regarded as eminently superior to those of any country. In particular he referred with pride to the men and women who composed the Empire.

Speaking of his tour through the country, Mr. Smith expressed himself as agreeably surprised to find such prosperous industries as he had witnessed, and to see so many indications of the natural wealth which was only awaiting development. He could not speak too highly of the reception which the Delegation had received on all sides, and in concluding he said that by pulling together we should come through our difficulties safely and successfully. Mr. Smith's address was followed with close attention and he was greeted with prolonged applause as he took his seat.

Hon. E. Harney, K.C., whose brilliant wit and easy eloquence at once made his national unimpeachable spoke with feeling of the experience of the members during their stormy passage across the Gulf in the Kyle, his relief upon sighting the coast, and his delight when upon stepping ashore he recognized a uniform identical with that of the Royal Irish Constabulary and was greeted in "the dulcet cadences of Sligo."

Referring to the prevailing spirit of loyalty to which such admirable expression was given in the welcome extended to the Delegation everywhere, he said it was as significant as it was delightful. Not even the vast Atlantic had been able to drive a wedge between the mother country and the oldest Colony, which had preserved intact her best traditions and principles. Referring to the great industrial possibilities of the country, he trusted that before the landscape had been defaced by smoking chimneys the poet and palatour would record the grandeur and primal beauty of the scenery which had so favourably impressed him during his tour. In concluding, he said that nothing would ever allow the members to forget the hospitality they had received since their arrival, and that the spontaneous reception of the people along the road from Placentia to St. John's had deeply affected them all and had left an abiding impression.

Mr. Ruggles sang "Land of Hope and Glory," which was splendidly rendered, and in the chorus of which the gathering joined with spirit, was a most happy selection at this point in the programme as its sentiment was wholly in keeping with that which inspired the gathering.

Mr. Smith Carrington who proposed the toast, The Colony of Newfoundland, spoke with feeling of the hospitality extended to the Delegation since their arrival, and of the spirit of loyalty and devotion to the Motherland and the enthusiasm for the Empire, as indicated by the reception given them throughout their journey and particularly as they travelled over the road from Placentia to St. John's. The spontaneity of the greeting of the people, he said, showed that their loyalty was not of a temporary nature but was a deeply implanted tradition. He was delighted to find that not only were the two countries closely associated by sentiment and industrial interests but also in art, and he referred to the beautiful work of Sir George Prentiss, who was present, Peter Pan, which had recently been erected in Bowring Park and was a replica of the statue which stood in the centre of the capital of the Empire. Mr. Carrington also told the gathering that in the House of Commons there hung a Nid. picture representing Henry VII. handing to John Cabot and his sons a charter authorizing them to go in search of the land across the seas. Referring to the promising enterprise recently started at Corner Brook and the other industries they had seen, he trusted they would prosper and that before long new developments would be started. "The result of our visit," said the speaker, has been not only to make us aware of the industrial possibilities of the country, but to awaken a deep and lasting affection for the Oldest Colony and its loyal citizens.

The Prime Minister Hon. W. S. Monroe in thanking the proposer of the toast for his kind references to the country and the people said that he was particularly struck with the fact that while the members showed every desire to become fully acquainted with our trials and tribulations they spoke no word of their own difficulties, a spirit, he said, which was typically British and demonstrated the feeling of the Mother country for her child. He trusted that Newfoundland would not add to the burden Great Britain was bearing and said that he hoped to work out our own salvation. In thanking the Rotarians

Rotary's Successful Methods

Rotary since its inception in St. John's has performed many valuable services, but none can compare with the great service it rendered last night in affording a large and representative gathering of Newfoundlanders to assemble round its festive board in company with our distinguished guests from the Mother Country.

It was a privilege and a pleasure to hear the visitors express their views on the Empire and Empire matters, and to find them inspired by the same ideals as we ourselves hold.

Such gatherings lead to a fuller understanding, and a more intimate relationship, and do more to enable both sides to work together in close co-operation than any number of conferences or by the exchange of formal communications.

Education

When we have among us men who hold such views upon Education as those of our correspondent at Elliston, and the ability also to give expression to those views in such a manner that others may read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest them, there is hope for this country.

Our advance in that direction, dependent as it is upon the funds available for that purpose, rests primarily with the value and importance which the people themselves attach to it, and their attitude on the question will to a great extent be determined by those who may speak with knowledge and without prejudice of the importance of education.

We welcome our correspondent's valuable treatise and trust it will be followed by others of a like nature.

Loss of the Shenandoah

The destruction of the Shenandoah, one of America's giant steamships, together with the attendant loss of life will be learned everywhere with deep regret. These brave men have given their services in the attempted conquest of the air, in the interest of science, and in the further extension of civilization, and the disaster to another lighter than air machine is disappointing and discouraging. Nevertheless it is certain that it will but spur others to further effort, such is the indomitable spirit of the Anglo-Saxon race.

To Speak of Chinese Missions

At the R. C. Cathedral, on Sunday evening, Sept. 6th, Rev. W. C. McGrath, of the China Mission Seminary, Scarborough, Ont., will speak on the question of the Chinese Missions. Prior to his departure three years ago to take up missionary work, Father McGrath was attached to the Cathedral staff.

The New Season's Coats and Dresses are beginning to arrive in town. AYRE & SONS, LTD., are opening their first shipment to-day. The models are really smart, something entirely different. All grades and Prices are listed.

Problems of Overseas Trade

A large and enthusiastic gathering of members attended the Board of Trade meeting this forenoon, at which Mr. William Lunn, M.P., spoke on the Problems of Overseas Trade. Amongst those present was His Excellency the Governor. Mayor Cook presided and introduced the speaker, who in his opening remarks briefly referred to the sentimental relations existing between us and the Mother Country, as were amply demonstrated during their visit here, and then coming to the practical side of the question spoke as follows:—

I did not know I was expected to speak to you until I got over on this side of the Atlantic. Each of us on this delegation are anxious to do what we can to encourage and develop trade within the Empire, but we would rather have heard you than you listen to me. I suppose why I am asked to speak to you is because I was at the D. O. T. in the Labour Government of last year. This Department was created in 1917, before that Trade matters were dealt with by various Departments of State. The D. O. T. is a Department for Trade development and intelligence. It has officers in all parts of the world, and collects information regarding openings and opportunities everywhere. This is disseminated to all our business people through the Chambers of Commerce. It is able to supply the most complete and up to date information regarding overseas trade upon which we are, and have been so dependent for several generations. The Government of Britain does not regulate trade, but the policy of the Department is to render every assistance, without interference, and although the Geddes Economy Co. recommended its closing down in 1921, business men unanimously contested that idea successfully. Its success is proven by the fact that its objects and methods have been copied by our chief competitors, who now grant double the amount we allow for such a Department.

The D. O. T. was responsible to the nation for the part played by the Government in the B. E. L., which we hope will provide a great stimulus to Inter-Imperial Trade. The Palace of Engineering there last year was the most wonderful picture of the skill, technique and workmanship of British workmen ever shown, and we are proud enough to believe that there is nothing yet arisen in any country to equal it. In the quality of our coal, of our iron and steel, shipbuilding, and in our manufactures generally we have been, and are to-day, unrivalled in any country, and though we may not be in the future what we have been in the past, we are still "the Workshop of the World," we are confident that we will hold a pre-eminent position with any other country. To-day's markets are so scarce, it is difficult to get trade going as it was before the war. Every country is feeling the aftermath of the war, and may do so for some time yet. In Great Britain our national debt is about eight thousand million pounds. Our Chancellor of the E. this year had to budget for an annual expenditure of eight hundred million pounds. Our Income Tax is to-day 4½%—in the 2 with an additional graduated tax on large incomes. Interest tax was very heavy and we have more than one and a quarter millions of our work people unemployed. With all these difficulties, and though we are paying our debts, nobody seems inclined to pay us. We are, as I said, dependent on our Export Trade, but last year our total exports were of less than one thousand million pounds in value, whilst our imports were of a total value of one and a quarter million pounds. These figures should be reversed.

With regard to Dominion Trade, we import far more than we export to them. Take Newfoundland, and I invite you to take note of what I am now going to say. Our total imports from you in 1923 were to the value of £2,117,428. Our exports to Newfoundland were valued at $74,285 out of our total exports of $288,000, 000. You took from us less than one third of what we took from you. We bought from you:—

Fish at roughly $2,180,000 Wood Pulp at roughly 1,500,000 P. P. P. at roughly 400,000 Paper & cardboard, roughly 1,150,000 Iron Ore at roughly 70,000 With regard to Iron Ore and P. P. P. there seems to me considerable room for improvement, but I should be pleased to hear what you have to say. We imported $190,000 worth of Iron Ore from various countries. You have the best, I believe. To make the best goods we want the best raw material. We imported $4 million worth of value in pit props and pit wood. Here also is a field for trade development. You took from us in 1923:—

Spirit valued at $2,500,000 Coal valued at 70,000 Wearing apparel and woolen goods valued at 100,000 Iron and Steel valued at 100,000 Our total exports of iron and steel were valued at 76 million pounds to all parts of the world. You bought twice as much mining machinery from the U.S.A. and 48 times as much from Canada as you did from Great Britain. The same, I believe is true of clothing. The total value of goods bought from the States as they did from us, although Sheffield, one of the towns in your country, makes the best cutlery in the world you bought three times as much as from the Mother Country. Now, sir, take the figures for 1924. We again are your largest buyers. Out of a total of 41 million dollars in exports we took no less than 1 million dollars in value. Spain, Portugal, about 3 millions each. When we turn to your imports, we find out that 28 million dollars in value Great Britain only supplies 5 million dollars whilst the States supply 3 millions and Canada 12 millions. What is the reason for this position. How are these figures which are official to be accounted for? You can supply the answer.

Let me ask one or two further questions. Are our manufacturers sufficiently enterprising? Do they come over here? If not, they ought to do. Do they supply samples? We have no fear if they do. What is your opinion as to prices and quality of goods? And also what is there to say about their adaptability and suitability? It is not for me as one of this mixed delegation to deal with Government or any party's policy regarding Tariffs, but I believe you have not yet decided in favour of a preference being given to the Motherland. Although you may have a preference from us. In addition there are various preferences we give which might be called "invisible preferences," i.e., Interest on Loans.

Under the Colonial Stock Act, 1900 there are about 650 million pounds invested in the Dominions. I have no doubt that 2000 million pounds are invested in the Dominions, which means that over 1 p.c. means not less than 20 million pounds to the Dominions. It was also estimated in 1907 that the defence of our Colonies cost us 45 million pounds. What the estimate would be to-day I cannot say. There are others, but I might leave them, and beg to say I am not in the least satisfied, as we know the security given is better than what is offered by foreign countries.

Some of us though have our doubts whether sentimental consumption will be promoted by any preference, unless quality, suitability and prices are satisfactory. At the same time our people have an abhorrence of sweated goods, and we feel we can trust our relations in the question of wages, hours and conditions of labour to our Dominion friends. All our Dominion friends find their best market in the Mother Country. For greater need is to find markets and secure employment, and whatever our fiscal views may be we have no doubt about the potential value of Empire markets. The Imperial Economic Committee are now discussing how best to use the £1,000,000,000 a year which has been granted to advertise Empire goods. The Committee has been kind to you in natural resources, which need developing and distribution within the Empire.

We will have to organize consumers, but I think it is safe to say that provided quality, price grading and regular delivery are to be relied upon, we will have no difficulty in promoting a great increase in our imports from all parts of the British Commonwealth. I think though, you will agree that in these matters there should be reciprocity. At present there is too great a spread of prices between producer and consumer. We need something in our arrangements to bring these two parties closer, and as the Motherland is great in its manufacturing and has valuable raw materials, we are hoping some good will come from our visit to this old world Colony, both to you and to us. In our trade relations we hear your opinions on these questions and I am sure anything you care to say will be given sincere consideration. We will have to work together as we all desire the same end.

We have a great heritage, we are a great family and we must all try to bring into our trade relations with each other the best of what we believe family life means. A vote of thanks, proposed by Mr. R. G. Rendell and seconded by Mr. W. J. Ellis, was accorded the speaker by acclamation. Mr. Lunn made a plea for informal discussion on the points raised in his address and expressed his regret that it was so difficult to get business men to talk. He then proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, which was seconded by Capt. Douglas King, M.P., who took the occasion to explain some points raised by Mr. Rendell. The meeting adjourned shortly before 1 p.m.

Another Liquor Seizure

Sub-Collector Kerby and Customs Officer Willson, returned from Holyrood yesterday, where they rounded up six cases of whiskey which, it is alleged, had been recently smuggled into that place. Suspicion rested on a certain resident, and the officers, while making an investigation of the surroundings, found six cases of the stuff buried in a backyard. The liquor was brought to the city and placed in the Bond Store. It is likely that the matter will be aired before court in a few days.

PEPPY BEHIND THE SCENES

September 3rd.—At the office all this morning, mighty busy, and little time during the day to venture abroad. Comes Povey to see me and talks of the Conference of Parliamentarians that did take place this morning. Divers matters including the problems of industrial and agricultural development being discussed in brief. Indeed, it did seem that the need of this country is not immigration but capital, as Mr. Moring did make clear.

This night Mr. Cocker comes for me and takes me in his motor coach to the Rotary Dinner to the Parliamentary Delegation, where are high 200 guests and the greatest credit due the Rotarians that they did give a representative gathering of citizens an opportunity to meet the delegation. Two of the speeches, methinks, were of outstanding merit, that of Mr. Ben Smith from the practical standpoint, and that of Mr. Harney for beauty of phrase and excellence of delivery. Indeed, Mr. Harney's discourse may be likened to prose poem, as his reference to the "dulcet cadences of Siligo" do bear witness. Nor was his wit any the less graceful, and those that have suffered on the good ship Kyle may well appreciate his description of her as "playful and kittenish." Mr. Hunt, too, did do himself the greatest possible credit, and I have yet to see the man that might not smile at his dry humor, which has greater force since, upon which he smiles appears on his sphinx like face to warn his hearers of what is coming.

But lord, what did strike me most is the erroneous idea I have held of the members of the British Labour Party, that I do confess, at the moment from reading the English Press, for if those that did speak last night are typical of their party, then the Empire has naught to fear from a Labour Government in Britain.

I do not forget to mention as an example of Mr. Harney's wit, how when Mr. Lawson did say that Newfoundland has now obtained 12 disciples in the person of the visiting M.P.'s, did comment aloud, "Yes, not a Home at a little after 1 of the clock, mighty tired, but pleased in no small degree with the entertainment of the evening."

Leave Granted

TO TAKE CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST ADVOCATE. In the Supreme Court this morning Chief Justice Horwood granted leave that Criminal proceedings be taken against the Fishermen's Advocate, publisher, printer and proprietor on account of an article published under the caption "That Cigarette Affair," which appeared in the issue of August 14th. The order was applied for by Mr. L. E. Emerson, on behalf of Sir John Crosbie, Hon. M. P. Gibbs, K.C., with Mr. Barron appearing on behalf of the defendants.

In his motion for the order Mr. Emerson read an affidavit of Sir John Crosbie, Minister of Finance and Customs, in which the article in question was quoted and also a subsequent article on the same subject which appeared in the issue of August 24th. Mr. Gibbs contended that the affidavit was defective—in that the publication of the libel was not proved by production of document, and that statement of information and belief were not sufficient, and further that complainant did not depose that the charges were false. He submitted that an order for criminal libel should not go if civil action would meet the case. Mr. Emerson was heard in reply, after which the Chief Justice handed down judgment. As a next step in the proceedings, Mr. Emerson will apply to the Magistrate for summons.

Conference Between British and Nfld. Members of Empire Parliamentary Association

British interests and British authority in the early history of the Colony. Colonization of other possessions was encouraged and subsidized in many cases, but the design was to make this a fishing station, to be resorted to by fishermen from the British Isles. Later, privileges in our waters were conceded to the French, and still later to the inhabitants of the United States, and both of these concessions have in their time played a part in retarding the settlement of this Colony, and the development of its resources other than the fishery. We are even to-day paying a price for rights conceded to French and Americans in the bays and harbors of this Island.

Settlement was discouraged by the shipowners and traders of the West of England, whose crews fished in the waters of this Colony, as they wished to retain exclusive rights of the harbours and fishing coves for their servants. Stringent laws were passed prohibiting settlement within six miles of the shores, forbidding fishermen to remain behind at the close of the fishing season, and making it illegal to build or repair a house without a special license. A new era began in the history of the Colony in the latter part of the eighteenth century. Following the French revolution, Newfoundland attained great prosperity, no less than seven thousand immigrants arrived in 1814 alone. The first settlers of the Colony, in the main, were west countrymen, Devonshire men, but Irish immigration was large in the early part of the nineteenth century, and these Irish immigrants mainly settled around the Avalon Peninsula, with St. John's as a centre.

In 1854, the population numbered 1750; over a hundred years later it had only reached 7,000. In 1804 it was 20,000, but in 1832 it had reached 60,000. In 1836, 75,000, in 1857, 121,000, in 1869, 146,000, from which period the increase seems to have been by natural growth, and not to any considerable extent by immigration. By the census taken in 1921, the total population was 263,000. The census returns since 1874 would seem to indicate that the natural growth is about 12.5 per cent. per ten years, and the immigration about 3.4 per cent. per ten years, so that the average increase in population is about one per cent. per year. In 1921 the native born were 88.5 per cent. of the population. The emigration is chiefly to the United States and Canada. The opening of the mines at Bell Island does not appear to have caused any immigration, and the establishment of the Paper Mills at Grand Falls very little, and although the construction and preliminary operations on the Humber have brought a few hundred immigrants to the Colony, it is not likely that the majority of them will remain, but that they will be replaced by native born as soon as the latter have learned necessary special duties. It is noticeable that the increase in population have in industrial centres, such as St. John's and Grand Falls, and in the more Northern districts, amongst the fishing population, where the natural increase is large, and the emigration small. The districts in Conception Bay and Placentia Bay, where the shore fishery has slowly but surely declined, show no growth in population and sometimes a loss, either by migration to St. John's or to other industrial centres, or by emigration from the Colony. One would gather from these facts that there is a slow but sure contraction of the area in which the people are subsisting upon earnings drawn from new industries within the Colony, or from the fruits of labor outside the Colony. There has been no increase during the past forty years in the number of persons engaged in catching and curing fish, and the increase in population represents an increase of those engaged in other occupations. Fishermen are not increasing, laborers are. The loss of population from various districts has been, hitherto, in part, to the coal mining district of Nova Scotia, or to the United States, where the emigrants engaged in various occupations.

There is no need or room for immigrants to this Colony to engage in the fisheries now carried on, as carried on, and immigrants could only be successful in the fisheries if capital had been brought to the Colony to develop them in some way; indeed more men engaged in the fisheries as now conducted would, apparently, be injurious to those now earning a livelihood in their pursuit. The fishery now carried on upon the Grand Banks, by fishermen from Gloucester, Massachusetts, and from Lunenburg, N.S., might be more profitably conducted if this Colony were made the base of operations, and there is room and a pleasing prospect for the immigration of both capital and men to the Colony for the development of this fishery, especially for supplying fresh fish to the markets of the United States and Canada.

The number now engaged in and about the fishery of the Colony is about the same now as forty years ago, but the number has been kept up by the natural growth in the Northern districts, and there has been a decline of the number of fishermen residing in the Southern districts, particularly those connected with the Peninsula of Avalon. It seems as though the increase by natural growth in the Northern districts were being engaged in the fisheries, while the increase by natural growth in the Southern districts were being employed in skilled and unskilled labor, connected with the development of the Colony's natural resources of the soil such as mines or forests, and supplied the greater portion of the emigration from the Colony.

Having regard to the existing large labour-giving industries of the Colony other than the fisheries, one feels that as at present developed they are sufficiently supplied with labourers by the people of the Colony and do not offer an invitation to immigration; but an observer might conclude that any increase in these labour-giving industries here, by increase of numbers or of output, would create a labour situation which would have to be supplied to some extent, by immigration. There are always, of course, here as elsewhere, unemployed men, and, also, there will always be a large number of persons, temporarily unemployed because they do not care for particular occupations. The labour troubles in the mines of Cape Breton caused the return to this Colony of a number of men who had been employed there or a long time; and the termination of construction on the Humber project threw out of work a considerable number of men for whom other employment in the Island had to be found this year, but at the present time everybody who really wishes employment, and is prepared to take what is at hand, seems to be occupied, and there is no good reason to doubt that there will be continued employment, except, perhaps in the mid-winter season, for all in the Colony who really desire it. At present, immigration is not essential or even necessary for the labour situation, and the bringing in of any considerable number of unskilled laborers should be deprecated as likely to create an unpleasant situation here. But, on the other hand, the point seems to have been reached in this Colony at which, if the fishermen are to be kept at their industry, any large increase of industries or development of operations would have to be met by carefully-selected immigration. If, as we all hope, outside capital should flow to the Colony for the purpose of largely increasing its industries, by way of developing its natural resources or otherwise, with development from outside capital might also come outside people. We do not need immigration so much as we need more capital for investment, but we shall be prepared to welcome the immigration made necessary by investment. You can send your people to us, but first send us your money; the wide spaces are here, and the natural resources, we hope, but their development will largely depend upon outsiders, and the work which immigrants can find here must be created here by outside capital and outside initiative.

Compared with the prairie provinces of Canada, or with the fertile fields of Ontario or Prince Edward Island, this is not a farming country, but fishermen who fill the land add greatly to their income and comfort, and those persons who follow farming exclusively near good markets earn good livelihood. Growth is very rapid, and the quality of all root and fruit crops is especially good. Near St. John's, the chief market, dairy farming is chiefly pursued, and the farmers of the Codroy country, on the West Coast, have Grand Falls and Corner Brook as readily available markets. There is no market outside the Colony to which its farm products can be profitably sent, and conducted as at present the farming industry of this Colony does not hold out induc-ments to immigrants. But we import 400,000 barrels of flour, representing 1,800,000 bushels of wheat, which could be grown in this Colony, after proper preparation, and we import cattle, sheep, pigs and poultry, which could be raised here, and butter, eggs and cheese which should be produced here. The growth of wheat and its manufacture into flour, in the Colony, would furnish by-products as food for cattle, sheep and poultry, and the making of butter and cheese as good as the most of the articles now imported would be possible. Our climate is milder both in summer and winter than that of Canada, and the growing of wheat and apples, for instance, is feasible, and the keeping of sheep in winter would be easier here than in Canada. Our uncleared cultivatable land is not prairie, but woodland, chiefly, and it is not in large tracts, where its preparation for farming requires capital, time, hard work and patience, but there is room and free land for farming in moderate way by those who care to come to this Colony, bringing a reasonable amount of capital to live on while establishing their farms. The free fishing and shooting now permitted is making the Colony attractive to certain men retiring from active military or naval life and ready to farm, and their success and happiness constitute an inducement to men similarly situated. There is copper, coal and iron in the Colony, but only the iron is being mined. The chief market is in Germany, some is used in Nova Scotia, but hardly any in Great Britain. The export of iron ore this year will be about one million tons, employing about 2,400 men in mining and shipping operations. Great Britain could use about three million tons of our ore as a mixture with her own, in the place of ores now imported from foreign countries, if better terminal facilities for discharging from ships were provided in British ports, and some not very expensive alterations made in British smelting processes. In other words Great Britain could, if she wished increase our iron ore output to three times its present quantity, and we could then give employment to several thousand British miners and laborers, while giving all the year round employment to our own people who work at Bell Island. The Mother Country has not been generous to this Colony at any time in this matter of emigration. The first settlement of this Colony was in spite of the law, not aided by it, and the influx of the early days, practiced for the benefit of the old land, can now be remedied by a British policy which, while tardily aiding in the development of this Colony, will help to provide a home for those Britons who care to come to us, and at the same time help to establish a supply of iron ore within the Empire. Part of the money now spent in maintaining the unemployed might more wisely and profitably, perhaps, be aiding in establishing here those who can be healthy and happy life that this country affords to the industrious.

The kernel of the whole situation seems to be that we have population enough in the Colony for things as they are, and that until more development of the natural resources of the Colony has taken place, the immigrant, or must be precluded or create the conditions which require him. More money, more work, will require more men, and when more men are required, they can come from abroad, but until then it would not be good for them, or for the present population of this Colony, that any large immigration should take place. When immigration does take place, it must be selected; the immigrants must be fit for the occupations at hand at the time for them to engage in; we want no unemployed class; we want no foreign population, and the people who will be welcome when we are that for them must spring from the stocks which have populated this Island: English, Scotch and Irish, or by birth or descent, and English, Scotch and Irish will always be welcome when we have room or occupation for them. There is little admiration of foreign blood here, and we have no ambition to be a melting pot. The Colony prefers to remain a link, as it were, between the British Isles and the North American Continent, and to develop along the lines which have made it what it is, the humble, but safe and happy home of descendants of a British people splendidly cemented. We have here no racial, sectarian or class problems to divide and distract our people. We are loyal to the flag, proud of our place in the Empire, and we shall aim to continue as we have been and are, a blend of the best, we hope, in the Irish, Scotch and English races.

OTHER SPEAKERS.
Then followed a frank and interesting discussion to which the various speakers made valuable contributions. There was considerable divergence of opinion and of view, but the note struck throughout, was love of Empire, or, as some preferred to term it, of the great Commonwealth of British Nations.
Dr. Hayden Sweet, M.P. had listened with interest and profit to the admirable survey presented by Mr. Morine, which had confirmed him in his opinions originally conceived and in observations made. He spoke with reserve, inasmuch as his impressions were necessarily based on brief acquaintances. He, however, seemed clear that, at present, there was no great opening for immigration. It might be worth while making an experiment with farming and discovering what its possibilities are in Newfoundland. The raising of sheep seemed to offer inducements. As to mining he did not see immediate prospect of it attracting labour. All of Britain, irrespective of party, were anxious for Commonwealth development. He believed strongly in the British spirit for overcoming obstacles, and in co-operation, not only for the good of our respective countries, but for the commonwealth as a whole.

Mr. J. F. Galbraith, M.P. thought that in discussing Migration and Land Settlement, it was best to get down to "brass tacks," to employ a familiar expression. What capital must a farmer have, to assure reasonable success? What are the possibilities of the soil? What kind of farming is the land best adapted to? What are the prospects of carrying on at a profit, with special reference to markets? There was much information needed before discussion could be profitable, and many enquiries which awaited answer.
Mr. W. J. Walsh, Minister of Agriculture and Mines, complimented Hon. A. B. Morine on both his address and his optimism. From the farming standpoint the height of Newfoundland's ambition, heretofore, had been to supply her own needs. In that we have failed. Ours is not a farming population. The cost of land was 30 cents an acre, but no statistics were available as to potential acreage for agriculture, and no attempt had been made to delimit that portion of our 42,000 mileage which was suitable for agriculture. It was unfortunate, but a fact. Mining conditions were not unknown to him, and he was sure that they were deplored generally. At the present it was impossible to remedy them, but the hope was growing that the worst defects might be offset by British manufacturers taking the total iron supply of Bell Island. He was sure that the interests of the miners, as far as it could be done, would be safeguarded in any new contract or contracts that might be entered into.
Mr. Ben Smith, M.P. thought that if Hon. Mr. Morine had said anything definitely it was that Newfoundland did not need men, but did need capital. The country's desire on the economic side was for capital. He regretted that British capital was not attracted to the colonies. There were happy relationships existing between the various parts of the Empire, and loyal co-operation in many directions, but there was divergence in hours of labor, and rates of pay. At present there were 12½ million acres of land lying idle in the British Isles. The question of intending emigrants ask is "in what way shall I better myself?" These would not consider a 60 hour week as an inducement. Let us frankly reveal to each other our honest thoughts and opinions, get down to consideration of the factors which invite immigration. There is much to be said for Empire, but profession is not always performance.
Hon. A. B. Morine, K.C. briefly replying pointed out that conditions varied with countries. Farmers who demanded short hours would be no acquisition. Emigrants who were unwilling to work were not wanted. There was no El Dorado in agriculture, a moderate degree of comfort there was for farmers who were willing to work. There had been emigration from Newfoundland, but not abnormally so. It amounted to 3 per cent. of the population during the last ten years. The natural desire for new experiences and wider fields of activity accounted for it. This migration he did not regard as injurious, but, rather, as healthy. Many who go send back capital; others come back with it, and with new ideas. It is true that wages were not at present high, but with the greater output, which increased markets would assure, the prices would rise. Housing conditions

Circus and Society magnificently linked in a three-ring story of love, laughter and luxury.

Elaborately produced by the man who made "Spanish Dancer."

In the mining areas were not good, ought to be better and doubtless would prove so in time. There was extenuation for building a ship in Britain, when Bell Island was confronted by competition with the mines in Lorraine. If the Mother Country provided the market for our ore, which she could do without injuring herself, the situation would speedily improve. A considerable portion of foreign iron importations was due to the difficulties of internal transportation. Remedies were things and the wages trouble would cure itself.
Mr. W. Lunn, M.P. had heard that Mr. Morine was an able and clever controversialist and his reply fully justified that reputation. He had said that the Mother Country never had been generous to this colony in the way of emigration. It is a power that lies at the root of development. Mr. Walsh had said that Newfoundlanders had never been able to apply themselves to farming. The speaker thought that there were great opportunities for the production of foodstuffs in this country. He saw many good farms, and successful farmers of thousands of acres. He thought there was room. Why not take advantage of the British Government's scheme, as Canada and Australia had done. The spirit of adventure still exists; but it requires more for successful colonization. Reference was made to the Empire settlement scheme which provided a grant of £3,000,000 a year for fifteen years. In the late administration he had been chairman of the Committee entrusted with the working of the scheme, and was still a member. Despite the offer only half a million was being spent annually. Britain's desire was to keep her colonies within the Empire. Emigration had never been successful in time of extreme unemployment. There went to Canada in 1921, 100,413; in 1922, 70,423; in 1923, 137,320, and in 1924, 124,450. Yet within the same period 158,084 left the Dominion for the United States. If the policy of Empire Settlement were continued there could be no unemployment in Britain to-day? He was strongly favourable to family settlement. Who and children should go with the father. Even so far, the schemes had been successful in large measure. He wanted to go back and say that there were possibilities of emigration to Newfoundland. If it were possible, what better stock than British. Takes advantage of the Act, he advised, and adopt it.

Hon. J. R. Bennett rejoiced in Mr. Lunn's attitude. He had spoken with a sense of proportion and hopefulness. Newfoundland had been neglected in recent years. The delegates had seen for the most part the fringe of her coast, the railway line, and barren lands, but they had seen sufficient to convince them that there were great possibilities for development. They had also seen the developments in Grand Falls and the Humber. There are markets and they await local supply.
Mr. R. G. Clarry, M.P. appreciated the point of view taken by Mr. Morine as to the necessity for capital. This was a virgin land, full of possibilities. The view at home was of a million and a quarter unemployed, and on the dole. He could not think Mr. Ben Smith serious in expecting Newfoundland to assume the same conditions as in the old land; artificial as they were, and a cause of unemployment in many industries. Would it be possible for a pamphlet to be compiled for capitalists, detailing the possibilities of the colony. It might prove a preliminary step towards desirable immigrants. He suggested that some practical steps be taken in this direction.
Hon. W. J. Higgins said that Newfoundland was engaged in an ambitious attempt to attract incomers from a tourist standpoint. This could not be accomplished in a hurry. Newfoundland wanted capital, more than man power. Our own people look after the fishery. As the country develops it will require people to supply it with foodstuffs. Actual farmers were few in number. No land was being cleared to-day. The best of the land was the result of the toll and courage of our forefathers.

Capt. H. D. King, M.P. expressed his pleasure and interest in listening to the speeches. They had met together to discuss a question perhaps more important to the Old Country than to Newfoundland. The object was to see how each could help the other. Unemployment figures were now 1,350,000. British shipyards and steel industries were working short time. Newfoundland had natural resources—mineral and forest wealth and apparently agricultural possibilities. Now she was becoming absorbed in industrial development. The number of people for this was, he believed, available within her own boundaries. It was not quite fair that the lack of capital should be shouldered on the Old Country. The capital of the Paper and Paper Companies was largely derived from Britain. He was intrigued in the Rotterdam shipments; that was a matter for business men. Mr. Bennett in England has stated that steel rails were made of billets which Britain got from Germany. It was an extraordinary fact that despite Newfoundland's proximity Besco could buy Belgian bars cheaper in Sydney than she could manufacture them. The matter of finding a market in Britain for Bell Island ore was not so simple a one as it looked. We are independent. We must strive to get together and trade together.
Mr. W. J. Browne, M.H.A. said it was obvious that Newfoundland did not need an influx of industrial workers, unless these could be of real assistance. He disapproved with the statement of Hon. Mr. Higgins that no new land was being developed now. It is true that it was not to such an extent as in earlier years, but he has been pleased to see new tracts of land developed in the west end of St. John's even this year. Sheep raising he regarded as both possible and profitable. The French Canadian was, par excellence, the best settler, and these would materially promote advance in farming. What was needed was not the immigration of unskilled labor, but assistance on scientific lines. Mr. Smith-Carrington, M.P. stated that industrialists were coming from the fishing industry. He regretted that there was no advance in that direction, and that it should be organized so as to benefit them. Conditions were applicable here. Were there possibilities in the canned-fish States as to agriculture? He was essential, and estimates the cost of uncleared land, but of clearing it, he was not sure. Send over agricultural advisers who could give British ideas an idea of existing conditions such as would be worthy of both here and in Britain.

Brief discussion on routine followed after which the speaker returned until to-day at 11, when the subject—partially relevantly discussed yesterday—was "Newfoundland's external trade" to be introduced by the Minister.
At noon Mr. W. Lunn, M.P. delivered an address before the Trade Association.

Bolshevism in China

In all the industrial centres of China there are young men and women of the intellectual class who are drawn by the sense of common humanity into sympathy with the struggling laborers. To them the impulse seems not only natural but virtuous. But to people who dread any self-assertion on the part of the wage-earning classes it is most dangerous. During the strike here mentioned the anti-labor press constantly raised the cry that the strikers were receiving aid and encouragement from "outside agitators," and the open sympathy of the students of the mining college was considered plain proof of Bolshevism.

It would be hard to say where humanism ends and revolutionism begins. Certainly the conservative critics who class the two as identical promote the revolutionary tendencies among the more responsive and intelligent students. If humanism is Bolshevik, then Bolshevism must be humane—that was in effect the argument of Tangshan students. But there are other influences impelling them in the same direction.

Briefly stated, the outstanding feature of the situation in this Western industrialism has come to China, as to Japan and other Eastern countries, with a rush. Western revolutionary thought has come also, and it is proportionately vigorous in its reaction. I have been greatly surprised to find revolutionary thought as prevalent as it is among leading intellectuals in China. Whether they be Christian or heathen, the thinkers, those who are most concerned with interests beyond their daily rice and a handsome coin—boy students, professors, women also—these have drunk deep at the fountain of Western revolutionism. I am concerned here only with China, but may remark in passing that in Japan like signs may be seen, though police repression compels the thinkers to drink their draughts of radical thought more secretly, and therefore, by the usual paradox, more deeply. Assuredly the Foreign Devil from the West has got into the mind of the East. The Devil in the Chinese sense, of course. As this revolutionism is often closely associated with Christian education and Christian movements, it has obviously no relation to Bolshevism.—John Bratford in The Forum.

WEMBLEY SEARCH TO MATCH IT—ABDUL CAFOOR'S PROMISE.

Enthusiastic crowds who suddenly missed the Queen from the royal party when, with the King, she toured the British Empire Exhibition for five hours, little realised what very feminine reason had taken her away. She had gone to search for two pink sapphires to match one of rare colouring in a ring she was wearing especially. So she left the King to enjoy the more masculine joys of Canadian and New Zealand and Malayan sections presses roaring along through model Canadian plains and lakelands while she sought Ceylon.

Here she displayed the ring, and there were frantic efforts to match it for her. Everything failed. Then someone remembered that in Abdul Cafoor's special safe of his most valuable gems there were many sapphires. But where was Abdul Cafoor?

He could not be found. The Queen rejoined the King in the Canadian Pavilion and everywhere her eyes sought for the flash of a pink sapphire. But Abdul Cafoor was the only hope. After an hour of delight in the Australian and New Zealand and Malayan sections the Queen was inspecting grain in Southern Rhodesia's pavilion, when a swarthy and smiling little man in a fez rushed in, with an excited body-guard, from Ceylon. It was Abdul Cafoor, and he had brought the sapphires with him.

To be Cabled For.

Standing beside a bin of corn, the Queen looked at them with sparkling eyes. Not one quite the right pink, nor quite the right size.

"I will show you," said the Queen, and handed her hand. "Ah!" said Abdul Cafoor, and bowed and laughed. It could be done. They would be cabled for and in the Queen's hands within a week or two.

"And you will not forget the size," said the Queen when she shook hands. "Your Majesty, the size is all important," said Abdul.

violent end, it was inherited by his niece, a widow with a young daughter. Necessity obliged this lady to part with it, and it was eventually sold, with other articles of small value, to some antiquaries at the "Rastro"—the Petticoat-lane of Madrid. These men remained in ignorance of its value. The picture was then exposed for some time in a tavern frequented by speculators in antiques, until it was finally purchased by a police commissary, who took it to his flat. Here it seems to have been "discovered" by the present owner, Senor Pujol, who acquired it for 1,500 pesetas.

The work at that time was in a lamentable condition, being smeared with size and tar-smoke, probably to preserve it from the rapacity of the French soldiers during the Peninsula campaign. Senor Pujol has successfully restored it to something like its original condition. Several artists and critics who have seen the picture agree that it is a genuine Velasquez.

Senor Pujol states that he received an offer of one million pesetas for the picture, but believing it to be worth more, he handed it over for sale to a Zaragoza antiquary, who is now accused of wrongly retaining the work.

It is believed that the picture belongs to the artist's first epoch, and was painted between 1608 and 1620. The Virgin appearing in the picture is a likeness of Juana Pacheco, whose portrait also is preserved in the "Museo del Prado," at Madrid. She is wearing the same earrings as in this portrait. The Christ is painted from the same model used by Velasquez in "La Fragua" (The Forge), which also hangs in the Madrid Museum. It is one of the few canvases signed by the master, his name appearing in Arabic, Greek and Latin.

During the dispute as to the ownership the picture has been deposited in the "Museo del Prado," Madrid by order of the judge.

The Development of the Maritime Fisheries

(DR. A. G. HUNTSMAN, Director of Atlantic Stations, Biological Board of Canada)

The following address delivered by Dr. Huntsman before the Maritime Board of Trade, Moncton, is as applicable to our case as that of the Provinces and we have therefore taken the privilege of republishing it from the Canadian Fisherman.

The object of this conference is to discuss the matter of the betterment of conditions in the Maritime provinces through growth and improvement of the industries. We have been asked to speak on the subject of the fisheries. This industry might be the greatest one for these provinces. It shows capabilities of development as great as or greater than those of any other industry. The chief actual or potential asset of any particular portion of the world lies in the more or less peculiar or special services or materials that it can give to the rest of the world. The vast extent of present-day world trade and commerce makes it idle to discuss the future well-being and progress of these provinces without in relation to the part they may play in the economy not only of Canada, but of the world. The fisheries of the Maritime provinces are an important material asset of the world. The fisheries of the Maritime provinces are an important material asset of the world. The fisheries of the Maritime provinces are an important material asset of the world.

They may form, therefore, our principal asset.

Enduring prosperity is not based upon gifts in money, materials, or privileges. Giving tends to pauperize the recipient. Yet shortsightedly many individuals, and even large communities, look to attain prosperity by receiving something from others. Enduring prosperity can be based only upon the steady performance of valued services. By producing materials, by giving services, for which the world is prepared to pay, is the sure road to prosperity, to obtaining the goods that we require or desire, to improve living conditions, and so to retaining and increasing our population. In the fisheries we have a principal field for the steady production of valuable commodities. It is a field which has been only in small part exploited. It affords plenty of scope for the organization of an enormous industry or industries for producing food for man. No industry can have a more fundamental or more important task than that. The world is sure to come to the Maritimes, when they have a wealth of valuable food ready for sale, that is, in condition for shipment and consumption. It would be useless to expect the world to come unless we have that or something similar to offer. If we are unwilling to content ourselves with occupying a sidetrack, we should endeavour to get on some of the main lines by performing important services for the world. With an abundance of valuable goods to ship we can not only obtain, but also retain, important steamship services with the large ports of the world. Steamship is a very strong force, but it tends to evaporate in the face of a continuous, though small, financial drain. Abundance of goods is a much better guarantee of the continuance of satisfactory transportation.

If we consider the present condition of the fisheries of the world, we find us not merely treat symptoms to improve things on the surface and for a time. Rather let us get at the cause of the disease. Remove it, and so lay a firm foundation for future health. It is almost invariably the case that the patient is far more interested in palliatives than in effecting a cure by a change in habits. He desires to continue in the old courses and be given 'good medicine' to relieve the chief symptoms of which he complains. Many palliatives are offered to us as cures. We should not be deceived. Some individuals may, for a time, achieve prosperity by getting things from the Government. Not so a substantial portion of a country. Love laughs at locksmiths. And so in the end, a valuable trade and the disease is gone. Transportation will improve, and the population will increase. In the development of an industry, the development of a country.

pioneer work is required. To most people, perhaps, the rewards of pioneering seem altogether inadequate. If the people of our provinces think so, they do not deserve an improved situation. They must be content to walk in the tail of the procession. We know that is not the case. Where are the men then to do the pioneer work of developing the fisheries? There is scope here for the best material, the ablest men, in these provinces. Too frequently our best men are only known as such, only develop to be such, after they have been stimulated by, and inextricably incorporated in, the vast industrial machines to the south and west of us. Our most promising young men should be given an interest in the fishing industry, should be made to realize its possibilities, and at the same time should be assured early the stimulus of contact with the larger outside world. With numbers of such men coming along, the rapid development of the industry would be certain to follow. It is not one man's work, nor several men's work, but many men's work.

To some the fisherman's catch seems like a gift from the gods, costing nothing to produce and like finding bread or manna on the ground. This is very far from the truth. The fisheries are a great potential source of wealth, but until labour has been performed they are valueless. Most of them are in international waters and so free to the world, yet we are very far from seeing them fully utilized. The value of the product depends in large measure on the amount of work expended on it. The catching, the handling, curing or treating, the holding, transporting, and the selling involve 1 cur and for this le

APPLY "MECCA"

Only those who have suffered with boils (and that includes 'most everybody') know the pain and misery and inconvenience they cause. Boils keep you from work and seem to make you feel mean and ashamed.

Don't Cut—Apply "Mecca" twice a day in thick poultices. "Mecca" will relieve a case of boils in one-quarter the time of any cutting or lancing. Read what Mr. Rimmer says:—

Toronto. . . . . I had a nasty abscess on my neck and poulticed it with lincseed and in other ways, and nothing but black blood flowed from the wound. After two weeks of suffering and pain, a friend brought me a tin of "Mecca," and advised me to bathe with hot water and poultice with "Mecca." I did so and in 4 days it had drawn all the pus and inflammation out and avoided an operation. Yours faithfully, H. F. Rimmer.

is to the condition in which the fish is consumed, the more the fish for consumption be done in our provinces so that the money paid by the consumer for such labour may come to the Maritimes. The difference may be very considerable. The marketed value of British Columbia fish in 1918 was $10 per cwt., while that for Nova Scotian fish was only $5.50. In 1922 the figures were over $6.50 for the former and less than $4 for the latter. We would not claim that these figures are altogether accurate, although they are based upon the available statistics; nor would we claim that no other factors than that of degree of finish of product are involved. We believe however, that the latter is an element in causing the difference given, and that it is a most important element in lessening to the Maritimes the value of their fishery products. This involves many millions of dollars annually.

The value of a resource depends in the long run on its relative inexhaustibility. Stores of oil, coal, and the various minerals are definitely limited and exhaustible. Even the crops of the soil, and the animals fed upon these, though coming afresh year after year, will not continue indefinitely unless certain materials such as nitrates and phosphates are more or less constantly replaced in the form of fertilizers. Quite otherwise is it with the sea. Into it are poured regularly the waters that have leached the soils of the continents, so that it should not be a matter of wonder that it contains somewhat of nearly every substance, the supplies of which even when distributed over the continents by the agency of man, are regularly returned to its bosom. Even when the sea is so favored, certain things needful for life are at a premium in most parts of it. This is largely because these substances have been withdrawn from circulation by getting into some what useless living creatures like jelly fishes. That is all in our favor, however, for these jelly fishes and similar forms finally die, south; and those that require cold water come from the north, when the tropic and Arctic waters mix, both kinds are killed; they go to pieces, fertilizing our waters, and there follows naturally a great richness, first of minute plants, and ultimately of fishes. So far as we can see, we have in the waters along our coasts a natural resource, constantly and automatically renewed, which should never fail.

A most important feature in an industry is the having of a regular supply of the raw material. The fisheries are thought of as being characteristically uncertain, as shown by the phrase "fisherman's luck." More and more, however, the fisheries are becoming regular, not only from day to day during the season, but also in many cases throughout the year, and we can confidently expect that before long most of the fishery will be more regular than is the case for most other industries. Also with improvements in the methods of holding, the more intermittent supplies will be made available to the consumer in perfect condition throughout the year. No real barrier exists to making a large part of our fisheries an all-the-year-round industry.

What practical steps should be taken to realize at an early date some fair proportion of the possibilities in this industry? It is a business proposition, and, if a group of first-class men were definitely retained to work out the details and to see that they are properly carried out, there would be no doubt of the result. It is not a simple proposition. Little that is worth while is so. Our fishery resources are fairly well known. A close first-hand study should be made of the market demands throughout the continent and that of Europe that we might be able to supply from our sources. The methods of preparing the best grades in demand and at a low cost of production should be ascertained from other countries or worked out ourselves, as should prove feasible. The organization and development of the industry along new lines or the expansion of old ones would proceed as the details were available. Although sketched so briefly, an enormous amount of work is involved in this, but it will be well rewarded. It would be a mistake to suppose that the result could be attained merely by making a plan and assigning people to tasks. If other than the best men are selected for even some of the apparently minor links in the chain of work, failure will probably result. Too much emphasis cannot be placed upon this feature.

We represent a somewhat new venture in connection with the fisheries—an attempt to bring all sorts of scientific or organized knowledge to bear directly upon the methods of handling and curing fish with a view to the betterment of the product and a lowering of the cost of production. This work is in the initial stages, our Station at Halifax having been in operation only a couple of months. From the results that are already being achieved, we have not the least doubt but that a large measure of success will be attained, with a steadily increasing value to the industry. The possibilities are already seen to be enormous. With us as with the business end of the industry, the keynote for success is whole-hearted work by the best men that are available. The work of the Atlantic Experimental Station for Fisheries at Halifax at the present time is fish-smoking. Our staff is steadily engaged in obtaining the facts that will make it possible to produce any given quality of smoked fish at low cost and in any weather. We can obtain success only by constant and close operation with the industry, on the one hand by learning from it the methods in current use and the difficulties met with, and on the other hand in having it test out and adopt new methods or modifications of methods that we may propose. We are receiving very hearty support along these lines from the industry. The role of our Station in the course of the development of the fisheries that we have already given is to assist in getting these adopted and to assist in getting these adopted in the industry. It is not a small task and we hope that it will be worth while. Its ultimate success, however, depends upon its being part of a vast enterprise for the development of our fisheries, in which the various branches of the industry, and the many bodies connected with it, or less directly must all bear their share of the labour, as well as share in its rewards.

Honorably Discharging Their Debts

WILL MEET $500,000 LIABILITIES OF OLD FIRM.

Manchester, Eng., Aug. 35.—Two outstanding instances of financial integrity have just come to public notice.

Twenty-eight years ago, Ernest Senior, head of a small printing company, became bankrupt through having to fulfill a bond security for another undertaking. His liabilities were $5,700, and he received an immediate discharge from bankruptcy. But he told his creditors that he would not rest until he had paid everyone in full.

He went back to his work at a small wage, but he managed so that his total expenses were never more than £1 ($5) per week. The remainder of his pay he set aside for his creditors' benefit.

He has just met his 34 creditors and paid them in full, with interest.

Miss Eastwood, of Derby, has just performed a somewhat similar duty. More than a hundred years ago her grandfather started, in Digby, the firm of Eastwood & Swinger, engineers. A few weeks ago the company failed on account of the slump in engineering in Britain.

Although Miss Eastwood only had a very small holding in the concern, she has voluntarily taken on herself to meet all the firm's liabilities—$500,000.

Miss Eastwood wanted the matter to be kept private and, when interviewed, declared that her action was not one of public interest.

"There was nothing very noble about it," she said. "I was brought up to believe that if one did not act decently, one had better be dead. What I am doing is the only thing I could do. It was just up to me to preserve the good name of the family and of the firm."

Missioner Captive of Bandits Tells of His Experience

Father De Clippelle, the Belgian missionary who was taken prisoner by a band of Chinese outlaws, January 24 last, and remained in their hands until April 7 is on a visit to his native land, none the worse, he says, for his dreadful experience. After fifteen years of strenuous labors in the Celestial Empire, he is gathering strength for further apostolate there, dividing his days of repose between his people at Alost, in Flanders, and his confreres, the Scheutist Fathers, at their mother-house, near Brussels. Thither friends and admirers wend their steps to hear him recount the incidents of a seventy-eight-day wandering captivity.

Ransom Demanded.
His daily compulsory diversion during that time was to ride either horse or mule in the unsought-for companionship of brigands, now pillaging the villages scattered about the country, now skirmishing with the Government troops sent out in pursuit, or when outnumbered, fleeing before them. Ten days he spent in a wagon, by the side of the corpse of a captured and assassinated non-commissioned officer, conveyed along to serve as a trophy.

The bandits had demanded by mail from the Superior of the mission a ransom of either fifty Mauser rifles and twelve revolvers or of ten thousand American dollars. Failure to comply with the demand within ten days, they wrote, would mean death for the captive. Before the time specified had elapsed the troop had to seek refuge in flight without carrying out the dire threat of death. It continued to hang over the missionary, who was constantly made to realize the fate that awaited him by the sight of the murders committed under his very eyes.

Once he saw a boy, not ten years old, who had been led along as a hostage from one of the looted villages, frightfully tortured and finally killed. Another time he witnessed the cruel execution of a woman who had dared to protest against the kidnaping of her child.

At times the death penalty inflicted upon hostages assumed the character of a patriotic religious ceremony—of a sacrifice to the colours, as it were.

Saw Prisoner Decapitated.

Camping one day in large numbers upon a plateau, their standards planted about the tents, the cut-throats brought forward one of their hostages stripped him to the waist, and ordered him to salute the flag. As he did so, bending his head low in obedient submission, a soldier, at one fell stroke, severed it from its trunk. Whereupon the standard-bearers rushed forward and dipped their pennants in the slain man's blood.

The priest made several futile attempts to escape from his persecutors, but was delivered at last through the resident Ministers of the Foreign Powers at Peking. They dispatched

Berlin Wrath at Treatment From France
Berlin, Aug. 25.—Gustave Stresemann, the German Foreign Minister, late yesterday afternoon received from the French Ambassador M. de Margerie, the French reply to Germany's security pact proposals. Of the numerous diplomatic documents exchanged between Germany and the Entente Powers in recent years none probably has excited such a measure of impatience as this note, which, coming from M. Briand, the French Foreign Minister, in behalf of the Allies, finally reached Berlin after having made the circuitous route of the European capitals.

No concealment is made at Government headquarters of the dissatisfaction over the manner in which M. Briand's reply is alleged to have been handled about in the chancelleries of Europe before being formally transmitted to the Luther-Stresemann Government.

This procedure, it was declared by a government official yesterday gradually developed into a diplomatic episode which could not fail to create a most painful impression in German government circles in that it was not only unprecedented with respect to the non-observance of traditional diplomatic dignity, but also because, it is charged here, the French reply was submitted to "minor" circles of France, who are not concerned with the German proposals.

Advances press comment in Berlin assumes that the note will in all probability cause further delay because it will fail to suggest a tangible starting point for the proposed negotiations.

As they search through your years,

Wolvin Declares Cape Breton Lawless Place

HIS OPINION OF NEWFOUNDLAND

"I am sure Cape Breton is a most lawless place, and the Government of Nova Scotia must energetically look to full enforcement of the laws," so declared Roy Wolvin, President of the British Empire Steel Corporation, who returned to-day from a three weeks' inspection trip of the Corporation properties in Nova Scotia and in Newfoundland. He was accompanied by the corporation's executive committee, comprised of Sir Newton Moore, who is Vice-President of the corporation resident in London, England, and George P. Downs, Colonel Thomas Cantley, a director of the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, also accompanied them to Newfoundland.

While in Newfoundland they made representation to the Government with reference to means of further increasing the production of iron ore from the Bell Island mines. The Government is considering the suggestions made.

Mr. Wolvin said that the general condition in Newfoundland were much better than on any of his previous visits and that with the developments in the manufacture of paper, the re-conditioning of the railroad, re-building of the Dry Dock at St. John's, erection of a large hotel at St. John's, increased operation of the iron ore mines and the usual business of the colony, there seemed no excuse for unemployment.

The coal mines of Nova Scotia are gradually increasing their output. The colliers at Sydney Mines, Stellarton and Springhill will soon regain their previous capacity. The Dominion Coal Company's mines in the vicinity of Glace Bay and Watford will be producing 12,000 tons daily in September.

Britain to Have Farming Classes

MINISTRY OF LABOUR COURSE TO TRAIN UNEMPLOYED FOR DOMINIONS.

LONDON, Aug. 27.—(C.P.)—The Ministry of Labor, in conjunction with the overseas settlement committee, is establishing centres where a six months' residential course will be given to a limited number of unemployed young men for the purpose of enabling them to engage in farm work in Canada or Australia. The first to be opened will be at Claydon, near Ipswich.

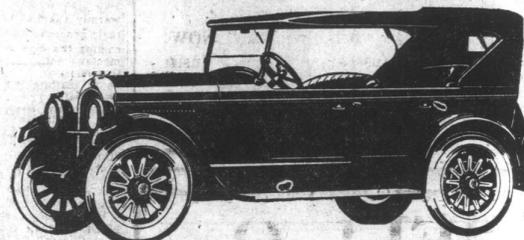

Applications from eligible young men from all parts of the country are invited. Those selected will be given free railway passes to Claydon, but they must undertake to remain in training there for the full six months' course and proceed direct to either of the two Dominions mentioned at the end of their term at Claydon. The applicants must be single men, between the ages of 19 and 25, but suitable ex-service men up to the age of 29 will be accepted. Only men who have no trade need apply.

During the period of training the prospective farmers will receive five shillings a week. Their hours of work will be the usual hours on well conducted farms. They must submit to strict discipline and they will be liable to be dismissed if they keep bad hours and their conduct is unsatisfactory in any way.

Before any of these men may emigrate to Canada or Australia they must be approved of by a representative of the Dominion to which they wish to go.

They are Content to Wait for a Four Like This

Uncommon eagerness to own the new Chrysler Four indicates how far this latest Chrysler achievement is an advance over the usual standards of four-cylinder performance, appearance and value.

Never, perhaps, in history has a four-cylinder car been so heartily welcomed or so greatly desired.

The first showing of the Chrysler Four has attracted thousands to our show-rooms. Scores have placed orders, without demonstrations, after a first view of the car. So instantaneous has been its appeal that, already, public demand exceeds scheduled production.

It is especially significant of Chrysler value that buyers everywhere express their willingness to wait rather than purchase a car of lesser quality than the Chrysler Four.

Every facility of the great Chrysler plants is concentrated today on meeting the public demand for the desirable new Chrysler Four. Production is now running more than 500 quality cars a day, the greatest output of four-cylinder cars ever attained in a Chrysler plant.

Chrysler dealers today are making delivery with a rapidity not anticipated by the thousands who placed their orders content to wait until delivery could be made, knowing that a Chrysler Four is well worth waiting for.

We are eager to give you an immediate demonstration.

Rotary Club Dinner

 The generous courtesy in acting as hosts for the speaker's reception upon which they worked before the dinner, was one of the many things which would be remembered by those who were present.

The Parliamentary Association, formed by Mr. C. E. Hunt, proved a most interesting feature of the evening, and the speaker's remarks on the subject of combining lofty ideals with practical ideas with a full play, and noted as he did in his after dinner addresses, that only by his speech at the dinner's gathering was a masterful attempt to reproduce which would be to court failure, extending a welcome to the members of Parliament, he was an honour and a privilege to have among us, and that their coming would help to enlarge our vision and to take a fuller interest in matters beyond our own country.

Captain Hope who responded to the toast said that as the "office boy" of the Delegation he had hoped that he would not be called upon to speak, but that it was an opportunity of which he gladly availed to express on behalf of himself and the other members the deep impression which had been made by the warmth of their reception, which began even before they had reached the country in Sydney, where they were met by Lieut. Colonel Sullivan. "We are here essentially on business grounds," said Captain Hope, "and it is not by lip service, but by plain outspoken discussions that a solution would be found for the many problems which confronted this country, Great Britain, and the Empire. We have done our best to enquire to the fullest possible extent into everything which concerns the welfare of Newfoundland and we trust that our visit will result to the mutual benefit of both countries."

Referring to the welcome extended on all sides, he said, they were delighted with the spontaneous outburst of loyal sentiment, which he regretted was not so noticeable except on momentous occasions in the Old Country where there was a tendency to suppress such feelings. Nothing, he added, more impressed them than the impulsive greetings of the people in the settlements as they drove over the Placentia road. "The effect of the visit, he said, had been to sweep away many of the cobwebs in their minds to give them a closer insight into the life and characteristics of the people and could not but lead to a fuller understanding of each other. The time was not opportune, he remarked to refer to the policy of his own party in Empire matters but this he would say that all parties in Great Britain with the exception of that consisting of a negligible few had the same ideas with regard to its importance, the necessity for unity and for the fuller development of its resources.

Hon. C. J. Fox on behalf of the Nfld. Branch of the Parliamentary Association expressed his appreciation of the courtesy of the Rotary Club in entertaining them and the members from overseas. He felt certain that as a result of the visit the Parliamentary delegates to the old Colony would receive that notice which she deserved but had so long been denied. In thanking the Delegates for their visit, he expressed the hope that it would not be long before they came again. The non-partisan character of the Association was, he said, its most striking feature, none were working for the party and all for the state. Reference was made to the various industries in the country, and Mr. Fox stressed in particular the mutual advantages which would result if Great Britain availed of our vast supplies of iron ore.

The Hon. Sir P. T. McGrath, K.B.E. who also responded to the toast, warmly thanked the Rotarians for their generous hospitality and in welcoming the members of the Parliamentary delegation he assured them that however diverse our views might be in matters which concerned our own affairs, in everything which related to the Empire we were as one, that in this the fullest confidence could be placed in this respect both by the Legislature and by the people. "Our aspirations and inspirations," said Sir Patrick, "are found in the words of the song that we have heard this evening, 'God who made thee mighty, make thee mightier yet.'"

Dr. W. Burke, who in the absence of Dr. Mitchell proposed the toast "Our Guests," extended a hearty welcome to His Excellency the Governor, the visitors from overseas, and the other guests, and paid a high tribute to Mr. J. L. Paton, the Principal of the Newfoundland Memorial School.

Mr. J. J. Lawson, who responded for the visitors said that the delegates had had many opportunities since their arrival to learn of the varied life of the Colony, his personal knowledge of which he frankly admitted had previously been distinctly foggy. The remarkable activities, the clear atmosphere, the golden sunshine, and the bracing air had been both to him and the other members a revelation. One feature stood out in particular, he said, in referring to their reception and that was that the welcome accorded them was not that of a host but was prompted by affection engendered by kinship. The impression they would take away with them regarding the country was that it was remarkably beautiful and that it possessed a great store of potential wealth. Speaking of Britain's part in the great war, he said that however different the views of the various parties might be on general matters their principles and ideals were identical. In closing, he paid a high tribute to Mr. Paton with whose work in England he had long been familiar.

Mr. J. L. Paton referred to the generosity of the Rotarians as Shakespearean hospitality, and made touching reference to the Peter Pan memorial in Bowring Park and the manner in which it was greeted by the children at the unveiling. There could be no mistaking the sentiment which they expressed and he stressed the importance of giving our attention to England's wealth of thought and mind and creative spirit as well as to material possessions. Education was not for the picked brains alone but should be shared by all to the best and fullest extent. England was great, he added, because she had always possessed a spirit of chivalry and a great generosity of soul.

Major L. C. Outerbridge in a brief address on behalf of the Newfoundland guests present, concluded the toast list by heartily thanking the Rotarians for their hospitality and expressing his appreciation of the visit of the Delegation to the oldest colony which regarded it as a great honour. "Our proudest boast," he said, "was that we were Britain's oldest colony."

President Ayre then brought the function to a close by expressing, on behalf of Rotary, his thanks to the guests for their attendance and by wishing the Delegation farewell and God speed.

TO-NIGHT'S FOOTBALL.
The final game of the first round of the series will be played to-night, and promises to be a thriller. Both teams have now a game to their credit and are anxious to win this contest. It is unlikely that there will be any changes in either team.

INTER-TOWN FOOTBALL.
The second football game of the Inter-town Series, between Grand Falls and St. John's, took place last night at St. George's Field, under perfect weather conditions, and after a hard fought game, the locals emerged victorious by a 1 to nil score. The attendance was one of the largest seen at St. George's Field this season, all of whom expressed their delight with the excellence of the exhibition.

Referee Coultas called the players together, promptly on time. The City winning the toss, elected to play from the western end leaving the Grand Falls team at a disadvantage on account of the strong sun. In the kick-off play centered around midfield, with neither team having any apparent advantage, and saw both forward lines getting in some good play. Try as they would the ball was kept from penetrating the back divisions, and for five minutes the game was of a give and take nature. The play at this stage grew very fast, when the City commenced to press hard on Grand Falls' goal. Three corners followed in quick succession, and although they were nicely placed, the paper men set up a solid defence and frustrated the locals from scoring. Crawley then got in some good work and with the assistance of Evans, the ball was nicely placed to the forwards, and a splendid piece of combination play by Cater, Nugent and Hannaford was witnessed as the leather was transferred up field. The City backs, composed of Quick and Duggan, were found unbeatable, and with the City forwards ready to make a run east, the opposing forwards were called upon to make a hurried retreat to clear the ball from danger. Elton and Young each had a try on Baird, the paper town goalie, only to find the pigskin nicely cleared. Grand Falls then put more pep into their work, a feature of which was the neat forward combination play. At times the City halves were given a very busy time. Foster, particularly, was kept working like a trojan, to keep the city forwards fed. Grand Falls, however, broke through the local defence line on many occasions, and a goal at any time looked almost certain. Grand Falls kept pressing and earned a corner kick. Knight, as usual, was in his proper position, and the ball was safely cleared. The City then took a hand in the play and made an attack on their opponents goal. In the play Young all but scored, the ball being driven a corner. Flynn placed a beauty across the play which followed called forth much excitement. Elton headed it to the goal, only to find Baird make a spectacular stop, and upon being headed by Young to the left side of the goal, H. Phalen was in a good position to beat the goalie with another header, which passed swiftly into the goal, thus drawing first blood for the City amidst tremendous applause from the gathering. After the ball had been recentered, Grand Falls made dangerous inroads on City territory, but the backs were found a tower of strength and hard to pass. The half time whistle then sounded with the City leading by one goal.

Second Half.
The second half was equally as interesting as the first, and the City team appeared to be the aggressors, and for most of the play kept the ball in their opponents' territory. On two occasions the City forwards swept west, only to graze the crossbar on the try for a goal, and another shot hit the upright. Play from then on transferred from end to end, with splendid forward play. For Grand Falls Evans, Cater and Crawley showed up well, while Quick, Duggan and Foster showed up to advantage for the City. In the last few minutes of play Grand Falls worked hard for the equalizer, but Knight was always found ready to respond to the occasion. The full time whistle then sounded, leaving the City victors by 1 goal to nil.

as from under the folds of Danny's loose coat dear Uncle Lucky's old wedding stovepipe hat fell to the ground. "Danny Fox is running away with Uncle Lucky!" she shouted, dear, lucky little mouse that she is!

With a bound the brave Policeman Dog jumped right over the crowd of people and sped after the fleeing Danny Fox.

"Oh dear! Oh dear! What shall I do!" sobbed Little Miss Mouse, dropping the spool of cotton, while rolled down the street after the good Policeman Dog. But he couldn't use spool cotton to lassoo the old fox with, so, indeed.

Wicked Danny Fox picked up Uncle Lucky and dashed away.

Now, although Danny Fox could run faster than the brave Policeman Dog, he found it hard work to run and carry at the same time a struggling, plucky old rabbit. Uncle Lucky hadn't stopped for one moment wiggling and squirming, pushing and shoving, and pretty soon his strong hind legs had pulled the old fox's waistcoat right down over his knees. The next minute to head over heels rolled Danny Fox, his feet all tangled up as tight as you please.

"Godness, gracious meebies!" exclaimed the plucky old gentleman rabbit, as the kind Policeman Dog slipped the handcuffs over Danny Fox's front paws. "That was a rough moult I appeared in the doorway of and tumble side," and in the next the Three-in-One Cent Store. But, stay you shall hear what happened, don't you give a frightened scream after that.

The Side Show of Life

Montebank, Wm. J. Locke's Famous Story at The Majestic.

There were times last night, as we were watching Herbert Brenou's production "The Side Show of Life" at the Majestic Theatre, when we were right out loud. There were times when we could not keep our eyes off the screen, and there were other times when we weren't at all sure whether we were laughing or crying. From this you will gather that it's a play of fundamental human emotion and human suffering, sacrifice and love. Life itself is a mixture of laughter and tears!

"The Montebank" by William J. Locke is the story from which the play was adapted by Willis Goldstone and Julie Herne. It deals with the adventures of a circus clown who becomes a general during the war, and who only to come to the bitter realization, when the war is over, that he is a clown, always a clown! In scenes of heart-tugging situations a wonderful climax is reached, and from this point on the picture marches on to a happy and triumphant finish.

There are lavish sets and circus backgrounds and dramatic content of the story. With it all Ernest Torrence's impressive portrayal of the circus clown dominates the picture. He is a role that affords a wider dramatic scope than anything he has done before. Torrence has a chance to be a real hero himself and the fact that he does it makes you love him. He is not only funny but human and tender and that is a hard combination to beat.

James Q. Nilsson is an ideal type in the aristocratic heroine. Miss Brown has a featured role with Torrence in the production. Louise Lagrange, Maurice Cannon, Katherine and others prominent on both stage and screen appear in support. "The Side Show of Life" will be shown again to-night, also to-morrow afternoon and night.

Dance at Grenfell Hall

Last night's dance in the Grenfell Hall in honor of the Grand Falls Jubilee, was attended by more than 300 people, and proved a most enjoyable affair. The hall was artistically decorated with tiny flags. The committee in charge had prepared a special programme which met with the hearty approval of all, whilst the splendid music, rendered by the Prince's Orchestra, left nothing to be desired. The dance was a feature of the programme. Throughout the whole evening a splendid feeling of good fellowship prevailed, and all were sorry this morning when the last dance had finished.

Pleasant Surprise Party

The residence of Miss Ethel Taylor Smithside, was the scene of a very happy event on Wednesday evening, when a large number of the friends of Miss Jennie Saunders assembled to bid her God Speed and to say adieu to her before her departure for Boston, where she will in future reside. Following a delightful repast, Mr. Harry Taylor was delegated to act as chairman, and in a very happy speech expressed the regret of all present in the departure of Miss Saunders, and in their behalf presented her with a purse of gold and a handsome bracelet as a small token of esteem and to serve as a souvenir of the happy associations of the past. Miss Saunders was visibly affected by the unexpected presentation, and in suitable terms expressed her appreciation of the thoughtful gifts which prompted their remembrance. A programme of songs and dances was then indulged in, and the gathering did not disperse until the "good-bye" hours of the morning.
