Any one visiting these rookeries, in which thousands of poor families are compeiled to live, can see for themselves. Down in the ravine below one can see the dusky chimneys of the furnaces and mills, which all summer long were idle, and are so still. It was upon these that these people depended, and now everything threatens that during the entire winter the, y will run only upon half time. There reside the men who for months and months have been idle, and there the abodes or many who, unless aided before Spring, must starve and die. There are seen grovelling in fifth and every condition of debased or debanched manhood thousands of people who in their despair are ready at all months and the sacredness of human life. Briefly, these poor people must be discovered, protected and fed, otherwise they will feed themselves over burning homes and mutilated bodies.
