Makes Good Baking Easy

You will find that most of the experienced cooks and housewives of the West use Blue Ribbon Baking Powder.

Young Cooks will be saved much worry, disappointment and loss of time and good materials if they use Blue Ribbon Baking Powder right from the start.

It contains only the highest grade of pure materials, refined till the last trace of impurity disappears.

And every stage of the process of manufacture is under scrutiny of experts harder to satisfy than you yourself would be.

The result is a steady, even action in the "rising" process, which makes the biscuit or cake light and flaky, and of a nice even texture throughout.

The food is therefore Wholesome as well as Light.

Ask your grocer for Blue Ribbon Baking Powder. Don't let him put you off with any substitute.

Blue Ribbon costs you no more than the "just-as-good" kinds. 25c. a Pound. Ask for it.

Write for this Free Book of Selected Recipes

It is a nicely printed, handsome booklet of selected, tested recipes, conveniently arranged, for Biscuits, Buns, Rusks, Muffins, Griddle Cakes, Waffles, Doughnuts, Loaf, Layer and Small Cakes, Puddings, Cold Desserts, Etc.

small clearing on | a hillside, sloping up from the little traversed mountain road from the forest, upon whose edge, in the midst of stunted oaks and scraggy pines, stood a rude cabin, such as one here and there in comes upon the remote wilds of West Virginia. The sun, pausing just above the sharp summit of Pinnacle Mountain, threw slant rays across the rugged landscape, which spring was touching up with a thousand soft tints. A great swelling expanse of green, broken at intervals by frowning ledges, rolled off to the low-lying purple mountain ranges, whose summits still swam in sunset light, while their bases were lost in deepest shadow. Over all, a universal hush, the hush which thrills one with a sense of utter isolation and loneli-

The man and woman who were seated before the cabin door hardly perceived these things. What their eyes saw, doubtless, was the fair promise of the cornfield which stretched along the road for some distance, the white cow with her spotted calf, and the litter of lively pigs which occupied inclosures near the cabin, and—the tiny baby, who lay, blinking and clutching at nothing, across the woman's lap. was looking down upon the child with a smile upon her face. It was a young and handsome face, but there were shadows in the dark eyes and around the drooping lids, which the smile could not chase away-traces of intense suffering, strange to see in a face so young.

The man, a young and stalwart fellow, shaggy of hair and long of limb, had placed himself upon a log which lay beside the doorstep, and was lost in contemplation of the small atom of embryo manhood upon which his deep-set blue eyes were fixed. He had been grappling for three weeks with the overpowering fact of this child's existence, and had hardly compassed it yet.

"Lord! Molly," he exclaimed, his face broadening into a smile, "jess look at him now! Look at them thar eyes! People says as babies don't know nuthin.' Durned ef thet thar young un don't look knowinn'er'n old Jedge Wessminster hisself. Why. I'm mos' afeared on him sometimes, the way he eyes me, ez cunnin' like, ez much ez ter say 'I'm hyar, dad, an' I'm agoin' ter stay, an' you's jess got ter knuckle right down tew it, dad!' Lord! look at thet thar now!" And the happy sire took one of the baby's small wrinkled paws and laid it across the horny palm of his own big left hand.

'Jess look, Molly Now you ain't agoin' to tell me ez thet thar hand is ever agoin' to handle an axe or a

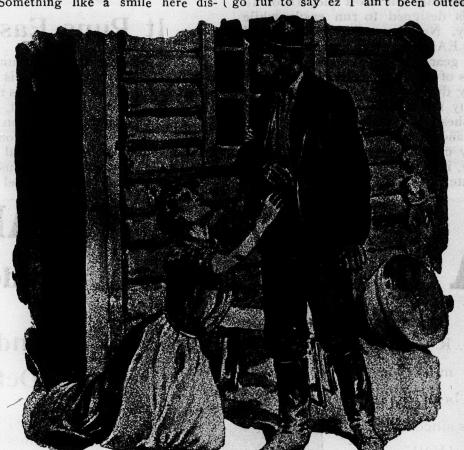

At this juncture, an inquisitive fly lit upon the small eminence in the center of the child's visage destined to do duty as a nose. Hardly had the venturesome insect settled when, without moving a muscle of his solemn countenance, that astonishing infant, with one back-handed gesture brushed him away. The enraptured father burst into a roar of laughter.

"I tole ye so, Molly! I tole ye so! Babies is jess a-puttin' on. They knows a heap morn'n they gits credit fur, you bet!

tended the child's uncertain mouth, more'n wunst, but thet's over'n gone; and something which might be construed into a wink contracted for an instant his small right eye, where-upon the ecstatic father made the welkin ring with loud haw-haws of appreciative mirth.

Molly laughed too, this time. "What a man you are, Sandy! I'm glad you feel so happy, though," she continued, softly, while a flush rose to her cheek and quickly subsided. "I ain't been much comp'ny for ye, but I reckon it'll be different now. Since baby come I feel better, every way, an' I reckon—"

She stopped abruptly and bent low over the child.

an' now, Molly," he continued, cheerfully, "things is a-lookin' up. Ez soon ez you're strong ag'in, I reckon ye'll be all right. The little un'll keep ye from gittin' lonesome an' down-sperited; now won't

"Yes, Sandy," said the woman, earnestly, "I begin to feel as if I could be happy—happier than I ever thought of bein.' I'm goin' to begin a new life, Sandy. I'm goin' to be a better wife to ye than—I have been." Her voice trembled, and she stopped suddenly again, turning her face

She was a strangely beautiful crea-Sandy had ceased his contemplature to be the wife of this brawny tion of the boy, and had listened to mountaineer. There was a softness in her voice in striking contrast to his own rough tones, and although the mountain accent was plainly observable, it was greatly modified. He, himself, ignorant and unsophisticated, full of the half-savage impulses and rude virtues of the region, was quite conscious of the incongruity and regarded his wife with gruity, and regarded his wife with something of awe mingled with his undemonstrative but ardent passion. He sat thus looking at her now, in kind of adoring wonder.

"Wall!" he exclaimed at last, "blest ef I kin see how I ever spunked up enough fur ter ax ye, anyhow! Ye see, Molly, Yd allers liked yeallers; long afore ye ever thought o' goin' down to Richmon'."

The woman moved uncerily and

The woman moved uneasily, and turned her eyes away from his eager face; but Sandy failed to notice this, and went on with increasing ardor:

"After ye'd gone I missed ye powerful! I used ter go over the mounting to ax after ye whenever I cud git away, an' when they told me how ye were enjoyin' yerself down thar, a-arnin' heaps o' money an' livin' so fine, it mos' set me wild. I war allers expectin' ter hear ez how ye'd got merried, an' I kep a-tellin' myself 'twa'n't no use; but the more I tole myself, the wuss I got. An home, Molly, when you come home, Molly, a-lookin' so white an' mizzable like, an' everybody said ye'd die, it—why, it most killed me out, Molly, 'deed it did, I sw'ar!"

Sandy did not often speak of those days of his probation; but, finding Molly in a softened mood—Molly, who had always been so cold and reticent so full of moods and fancies. eticent, so full of moods and fancies

—he felt emboldened to proceed.

"Lord, Molly, I didn't hev no rest night nor day! Bob'll tell ye how I hung around, an' hung around; an' when ye got a little better an' come out, a-lookin' so white an' peaked, I war all of a trimble. I don't know now how I ever up and axed ye. I reckon I never would a-done it ef it hadn't been fur Bob. He put me up tew it. Sez Bob, 'Marm's afeared as Molly'll go back to Richmon' a'gin,' an' that war more'n I could stand; an' so I axed ye, Molly."

Sandy's face was not one adapted to the expression of tender emotion, but there was a perceptible mellowing of the irregular features and rough voice as he went on:

"I axed ye, Molly, an' ye said
'Yes'; an' I ain't never hed no eall to be sorry ez I axed ye, an' I hope you ain't nuther—say, Molly?" and the great hand was laid tenderly on her arm.

no call to be sorry. You've been good to me; a heap better'n I have been to you."

Truly, Molly was softening. Sandy could hardly credit his own happiness. He ran his fingers through his beard before he answered.

Thet's all right, Molly. I laid

Get Five Cents More a Bushel For All Grain You Sell

Handles 1000 Bushels a Day Easily Cleans and Grades all Grain Perfectly. Has seventeen 33in. screens Saves its Cost Twice a Year. It is Positively Guaranteed to You.

HE Chatham Mill is built staunch and strong, with nothing about it to get out of order even under hard and steady usage. It is actually the most modern of all such machines, and is designed to run easily while doing its work perfectly. No other machine of the kind runs anywhere near so EASY as The Chatham Mill because of an ingenious multiplying gear that gives high speed with easy turning. A thousand bushels of grain perfectly cleaned, perfectly graded, is only an ordinary day's work for the Chatham; and this has been exceeded by many users. Fitted with seventeen screens and riddles, of various meshes, of specially galvanized wire of our own production, this Mill handles ANY grain, from millet or flax to Indian corn. It not only cleans, remember, -it grades; takes out the shrunken, immature, imperfect grains as well as the weed seeds, and keeps them separate.

EAN and grade your grain before you market it, using the Chatham Mill, specially designed and built for the farmers of Canada's Northwest, and any buyer will pay you a higher price for every bushel of it. Grain buyers know that grain run through this Chatham Mill is clean grain, free from ALL dirt, free from ALL weed-seeds, free from ALL cockle, and absolutely free from oats, wild or tame.

Positively Guaranteed to Separate Oats From Wheat

RAIN-BUYERS know, as thousands of farmers throughout the land know, that the CHATHAM alone can be positively relied upon to separate oats from wheat. And the Chatham not only cleans the grain right, but grades it accurately. Hundreds of your neighbors use this Mill, both before planting and at selling-time, simply because it pays so well to use it. TEST IT FOR YOURSELF. TAKE THE MILL ON THIRTY DAYS' FREE TRIAL. Test it at our risk, upon our binding guarantee that it will separate oats from wheat or oats from barley faster and better than any other machine on earth.

Try it a Month For Nothing Take Two Years to Pay for it in

END NOW for this Chatham Mill, which is a combined separator, grader and fanning mill, -not merely a fanningmill alone, like the others. Write for one to the shipping place nearest your home. The Mills are carried in stock at all my warehouses, ready for immediate shipment on shortest notice. Get one quick. Test it thoroughly in any way that seems to you fair. Then, when it makes good with you, pay for it in two years' time, -it will have paid for itself long before that, over and over again. Take it, test it, and let it prove to you that

It Runs Easiest and Fastest

E build special fanning mills for every farming region on earth; and this is the mill built specially for the Canadian Northwest. It is the one machine that perfectly separates oats from wheat,—it is guaranteed to do that to your entire satisfaction. The proof that it WILL satisfy you is put right in your own hands by the Thirty Day Free Trial we offer you. That trial will prove positively why and how this Mill adds fully five cents a bushel to the value of any grain you sell, and ten or more cents a bushel to the value of seed grain.

to be. Say, Molly," he continued. with a kind of pleading earnestness in his voice, "ye've done hankerin' arter the city, ain't ye? Kind o' gettin' used to the mountings ag'in, ain't ye, Molly?"

It was quite dark on the little hill-side now, and Molly could turn her face boldly toward her husband.

"What makes ye keep a-harpin' on that, Sandy? I ain't hankered after the city—not for a long time," and a slight shudder ran wer her. "Just put that idea out of your head, Sandy. Nothin' could ever tempt me to go to the city again. I hate it!"

She spoke with fierce emphasis, and rose to go in. Sandy, somewhat puzzled by her manner, but reassured by her words, heaved a sigh and rose also.

The stars were out, and from a little patch of swamp at the foot of the hill came the shrill piping of innumerable frogs, and a whip-poorwill's wild, sad cry pierced the silence. The baby had long since fallen asleep. The mother laid him in his cradle, and night and rest settled down over the little cabin.

Spring had passed into summer, and summer was already on the wane; an August morning had dawned over the mountains, and, although the sun shone warmly down upon the dew-drenched earth, the air was deliciously cool and fresh.

Molly stood in the doorway, holding in her arms the baby, whose look of preternatural wisdom had merged itself into one of infantile softness and benignity. She was holding him up for the benefit of Sandy, who, as he went down the red, dusty road, driving the white cow before him, turned now and then to bestow as grimace upon his son and heir. Mother and child made a fair picture in the twining green frame of the trumpet-vine, touched up with flame-like clusters of bloom—a picture which was not lost upon Sandy, who, as he passed out of sight of the cabin, shook his head, and said to himself again:

"Blest ef I see how I ever got up spunk enough to ax her!"

Molly watched her husband out of sight, and then let her eyes wander over the summer landscape. There was a look of deep content in her face, which was no longer pale and worn. The traces of struggle and suffering had disappeared. The past may have had its anguish, and its one!" and he burst into another cruel eyes.

sins, perhaps, but the present must have seemed peaceful and secure, for she turned from the doorway with a song upon her lips—a song which lingered all the morning as she went in and out about her household tasks, trying to make more trim and bright that which was already the perfection of trimness and brightness. When she had finished her work the morning was far advanced and the sun glared hotly in at door and win-

She had rocked the baby to sleep, and came out of the inner room with the happy mother-look upon her face. She turned to look back, to see, perhaps, if the fly-net were drawn carefully enough over the little sleeper. As she stood thus she was conscious of a human shadow which fell through the outer door and blotted out the square of sunshine which lay across the floor, and a deep voice

"I'd thank you for a drink of water, ma'am.

Molly turned quickly and the eyes of the two met. Over the man's face came a look of utter amazement which ended in an evil smile.

Over the woman's face came a change so sudden, so terrible, that the newcomer, base and hardened as he looked, seemed struck by it, and the cruel smile subsided a little as he exclaimed:

"Molly Craigie, by all that's holy!" The woman did not seem to hear him. She stood staring at him with incredulous eyes and parted lips, from which came in a husky whisper the words:

"Dick Staples!"

Then she struck the palms of her hands together and with a sharp cry she sank into a chair. The man stepped across the threshold and stood in the center of the room looking curiously about him. He was a large, powerfully-built fellow, and in a certain way a handsome one. He was attired in a kind of hunting costume which he wore with a jaunty, theatrical air.

"I swear!" he exclaimed, with a low, brutal laugh, as his eyes took in the details of the neat little kitchen, and came at last to rest upon the woman's white face. "I swear! I do believe Molly's married!"

The idea seemed to strike him as a peculiarly novel and amusing one.

laugh. His mocking words seemed at last to sting the woman, who had sat smitten mute before him, into action. She rose and faced him, trembling, but defiant.

"Dick Staples, what brought ye here only God knows, but ye mus'n't stay here. Ye must go 'way this minute, d'ye hear? Ye must go way!"

She spoke firmly but hurriedly, glancing down the road as she did so. The man stared blankly at her a "Well, now, if that ain't a nice way to treat an old friend! Why, Molly, you ain't going back on Dick you ain't seen for so long, are you? I'd no idea of ever seeing you again, but now I've found you, you don't get rid of me so easy. I'm going to make myself at home, Molly, see if I don't." And the man seated himself and crossed his legs comfortably, looking about him with a mocking air of geniality and friendliness.

Molly went nearer to him; the defiance in her manner had disappeared and a look of almost abject terror and appeal had taken its place.

"Dick," she cried, imploringly, "oh, Dick, for God's sake hear me! If ye want to see me, to speak with me, I won't refuse ye, only not here, Dick—for God's sake not here!" and she glanced desperately around. "What brought ye here, Dick? Tell me that, and where are you stayin'."
"Well, then," he answered, surlily, "I ran up for a little shooting, and I'm staying at Digby's."

"At Digby's! That's three miles below here." She spoke eagerly. "Dick, you noticed the little meetin'house just below here in the hollow?"

The man nodded. "If ye'll go away now, Dick, right away, I'll meet ye in the woods. Follow the path that leads up behind the meetin'-house tomorrow mornin' be-tween ten and eleven an' I'll meet ye

"None o' that, Dick Staples!" she cried fiercely.

"Spunky as ever, and twice as handsome, I swear!" exclaimed the fellow, gazing admiringly at her.

"Are ye goin'?" There was something in her voice and mien which compelled obedience and the man prepared to go. Outside the door he flung his rifle over his shoulder and looking back, said: "Remember now, Molly, 'meet me in the willow glen,' you know. Punctual is the word!" and mith tual is the word!" and with a meaning smile he sauntered down the slope, humming a popular melody as he went.

The woman stood for a time as he had left her, her arms hanging by her side, her eyes fixed upon the doorway. The baby slept peacefully on, and outside the birds were twittering and calling, and the breeze tossed the vine-tendrils in at door and window, throwing graceful, dancing shadows over the floor and across her white face and nerveless hands. A whistle, clear and cheery, came piping through the sultry noontide stillness. It pierced her deadened senses, and she started, passing her hand across her eyes.

God!' That was all she said. Then she began laying the table and preparing the midday meal. When Sandy reached the cabin she was moving about with nervous haste, her eyes gleaming strangely and a red spot on cither cheek. Her husband's eyes followed her wonderingly. The child awoke and she went to bring him.

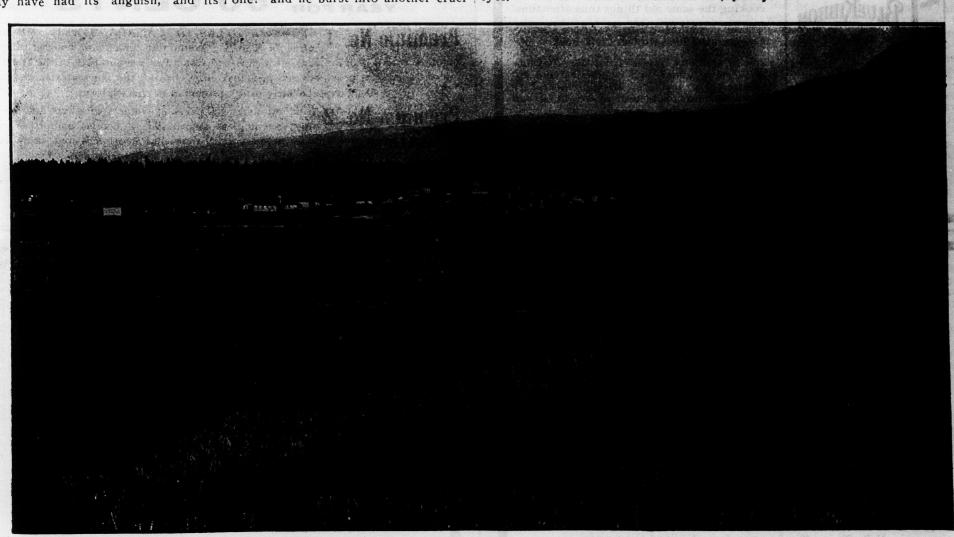

awoke and she went to bring nim.

"I wonder what's up now?" he muttered, combing his beard with his fingers as he was wont to do when perplexed or embarrassed. "Women is cur'us! They's no two ways about it, they is cur'us! They's no counting fur 'em no how 'deed they ain't!"

and after his usual frolic with him, during which he did not cease his furtive study of Molly's face, Sandy shouldered his hoe and started for the field. As he reached the door he turned and said: turned and said:

"Oh, Molly, I seen a man again' across the road down by the crick; one o' them city fellers, rigged out in huntin' traps. Did ye see him?" Molly was standing with her back toward her husband, putting away the remains of the meal. "A man like that came to the door an' asked for a drink," she answered, quietly.

WHO WILL SEND US

ONE NEW SUBSCRIBER FOR ONE YEAR at 50c.

VERY present subscriber to or reader of The Western Home Monthly can, if he (or she) will secure one new subscriber to the paper for one year. This may seem a broad statement, but we think it hardly possible that there is anyone who has not at least one friend, neightor or acquaintance who would subscribe for this magazine if shown a copy and asked to do so. It is a very easy and simple matter to secure one new yearly subscriber for The Western Home Monthly, and in order to persuade as many as possible of our readers to do it during this summer of 1908, we are about to make an exceedingly liberal and attractive offer. It is as follows:

To every present subscriber or reader who will send us one new subscriber to The Western Home Monthly for one year at Pifty cents, at any time before Oct. 31, 1908, we will send Pree by mail post part of the Beautiful Post Cards and a neat Post Card Album, bound in boards suitably printed cover, and, having spaces to hold 24 cards.

The twelve post cards are of fine ouality, beautifully printed, no two alike, and include views of schools, parks, public buildings, etc., etc., in Western Canada, a real nice post card to mail to your friends in the Old Country or Eastern Canada, and embrace the following groups of Winnipeg views:—

Each set of cards is entirely new, never before offered by us, all printed nicely and the subjects are the most attractive we have ever seen.

It is quite impossible for us to split up these groups and accordingly subscribers are debarred for selecting some cards from one group and some from another.

This is a wonderfully liberal offer, and no reader of The Western Home Monthly should fail to take edvantage of it. To secure twelve fine Picture Post Cards and a Post Card Album for the slight labor and trouble required to obtain one new yearly subscriber at 50 cents is indeed great pay for very little work. Such an offer is possible only from the fact that we make the cards ourselves in very large quantities.

To secure twelve post cards and album, all you have to do is to take a copy of a recent issue of The Western Home Monthly, show it to friends, neighbors or acquaintances, call attention to its merits, attractions, and v. ry low price, and ask for the subscription. As soon as you have secured it, send us the name and address with the 50 cents, and state that you want the twelve post cards and album as premium.

have secured it, send us the name and address with the 50 cents, and state that you want the twelve post cards and album as premium.

They will be sent you promptly, and when you receive them we are sure you will feel well repaid for your time and trouble. In your letter do not fail to say that the subscription is for The Western Home Monthly, and do not fail to give your own name and full address as well as that of the subscriber. Do not be discouraged if you do not get the subscriber at the first house you visit; keep on until the subscription is secured—the reward is well worth the effort. If you want more than one set of the cards and album, and can get more than one subscriber, do so; we will send you a set of twelve and an album for every new subscriber you send us.

We have mentioned a new subscriber, but if it should be one who has taken the Western Home Monthly at some time, and has failed to renew for this year, it will make no difference; anyone not now a subscriber to this magazine is eligible. Please bear in mind that this is a special limited offer, good only until October 31st. 1908, hence must be taken advantage of before that date. You may select any one of the four groups.

"No-I reckon not," replied his wife. "It won't be the first time I've been here alone."

Involuntarily the eyes of the husband and wife met, in his a furtive questioning look which she mct with a steady gaze. In the dusky twilight her face showed pale as marble and her throat pulsated strangely The man turned his eyes away; there was something in that face which he could not bear.

And at "sun-up" Sandy departed. Molly went about her work as usual. Nothing was forgotten, nothing neglected. The two small rooms shone with neatness and comfort, and at last the child slept.

The hour for her meeting with Staples had arrived, and Molly came out and closed the cabin door behind her—but here her feet faltered, and she paused. With her hands pressed tightly on her heart she stood there for a moment with the bright August sunshine falling over her; suddenly she turned and re-entered the cabin, went noiselessly into the bedroom and knelt down by the sleeping child. One warm, languid little hand drooped over the cradle's edge. As her eyes fell upon it a quiver passed over the woman's white face, and she laid her cheek softly against it, her lips moving the while. Then she arose and went away. Down the arose and went away. Down the dusty road, with rapid, unfaltering steps, and eyes that looked straight before her, she passed, and disappeared in the shadow of the forest.

When Sandy came home at night he found his wife standing in the doorway, her dark braids falling over her shoulders, her cheeks burning, her eyes full of a fire which kindled his own slow but ardent nature. He had never seen her looking so beautiful, and he came on toward her witn quickened steps and a glad look in his

"Here, Molly," said he, holding up to her face a bunch of dazzling car-dinal-flowers, "I pulled these fur ye, down in the gorge."

She shrank from the vivid, bloodred blossoms as if he had struck her, and her face turned ashy white.

"In the gorge!" she repeated, hoarsely—"in the gorge! Throw them away!" and she cowered down upon the door-stone, hiding her face upon her knees. Her husband stared at her a moment, hurt and bewildered; then, throwing the flowers far down the slope, he went past her into the house.

"Molly's gittin' on her spells a'gin," he muttered. "Lord, Lord, I war in hopes ez she war over 'em fur good!"

Experience having taught him to leave her to herself at such times, he said nothing now, but sat with the child upon his lap, looking at her from time to time with a patient, wistful look. At last the gloom and silence were more than he could

"Molly," said he, softly, "what ails

At the sound of his voice she started and rose. Going to him, she took the child and went out of the room. As she did so, Sandy noticed that a portion of her dress was torn away. He remarked it with wonder, as well as her disordered hair. was not like Molly at all; but he said nothing, putting this unusual negli-gence down to that general "cur'us-ness" of womankind which was past inding out.

The next day and the next passed away. Sandy went in and out, silent and unobtrusive, but with his heart full of sickening fears. A half-formed doubt of his wife's sanity—a doubt which her strange, fitful conduct during these days, and her wild and haggard looks only served to confirm—haunted him persistently. He could not work, but wandered about, restless and unhappy beyond measure.

On the third day, as he sat, moody and wretched, upon the fence of the cornfield, Jim Barker, his neighbor from the other side of the mountain, came along, and asked Sandy to join him on a hunting excursion. He snatched at the idea, hoping to escape for a time from the insupportable thoughts he could not banish, and went up to the cabin for his gun. As he took it down, Molly's eyes followed him.

"Where are ye goin', Sandy?" she asked.

"With Jim, fur a little shootin'," was the answer; "ye don't mind, Molly "

She came to him and laid her head upon his shoulder, and, as he looked down upon her face, he was newly startled at its pinched and sunken aspect.

"No, Sandy, I don't mind," she said, with the old gentleness in her tones. She returned his caress, clinging to his neck, and with reluctance letting him go. He remembered this in after times, and even now it moved him strangely, and he turned more than once to look back upon the slender figure, which stood watching him until he joined his companion and passed out of sight.

An impulse she could not resist compelled her gaze to follow them-to leap beyond them, till it rested upon the Devil's Ledge, a huge mass of rock which frowned above the gorge. Along these rocks, at intervals, towered great pines, weatherbeaten, lightning-stricken, stretching out joint arms, which seemed to beckon, and point down the sheer sides of the precipice into the abyss at its foot, where a flock of buzzards wheeled slowly, and passed at length away, only to return, again and again, as the slow hours lagged and lingered. The sunshine crept across the floor never so slowly, and passed at length away; and just as the sun was setting, Sandy's tall form appeared, coming up the slope. Against the red sky his face stood out, white, rigid, terrible. It was not her husband; it was Fate, advancing. The woman tried to smile. Poor mockery of a smile, it died upon her lips. The whole landscape—the green forests, purple hills and gray rocks-swam before her eyes in a lurid mist; only the face of her husband—that was distinct with an awful distinctness. On he came, and stood before her. He leaned his gun against the side of the cabin, and placed the hand which had held it upon the lintel over her head; the other was in his breast. There was a terrible deliberation in all his movements, and he breathed heavily and painfully. It seemed to her an eternity that he stood thus, looking down upon her. Then he woman neither moved nor spoke. He drew his hand from his breast and held something toward her; it was the missing fragment torn from her dress.

This yer war in his hand-" With a wild cry the woman threw herself forward, and wound her arms about her husband's knees.

"I didn't go for to do gasped; "'fore God I didn't!"

Sandy tore himself away from her clinging arms, and she fell prostrate. He looked at her fiercely and coldly. "Take yer hands off me!" he cried. "Don't tech me! Thar's thet ez mus' be made cl'ar between you an' me, woman-cl'ar ez daylight. Ye've de ceived me an' lied to me all along, but ye won't lie to me now. 'Tain't the dead man ez troubles me," he went on grimly, setting his teeth; "taint him ez troubles me. I'd 'a' hed to kill him myself afore I'd done with him mos' likely—ef you hadn't.

"I do believe ye," he answered.

There was something horrible in his fierce repulsion of her touch, in the harsh coldness of his voice, and the woman shrank back and crouched at his feet, and neither spoke or

'Tain't that ez thoubles me—it's what went afore! D'ye hear? Thet's what I want ter know an' all I want ter know."

He lifted her up and seated himself before her, a look of savage determination on his face.

"Will ye tell me."

The woman buried her face upon her arms and rocked backward and forward.

"How can I tell ye—Oh, Sandy, how can I?" she moaned.

"Ye kin tell me in one word," said her busband. "When ye come back from Richmon' thar wuz them ez tole tales on ye. I hearn 'em but I didn't believe 'em-I wouldn't believe 'em! Now ye've only ter answer me one question—wur what they said true?"

He strove to speak calmly, but the passion within him burst all bounds, the words ended in a cry of rage, and he seized her arm with a grip of iron. "Answer me, answer me!" he cried, tightening his hold upon her insensible at his feet. There was neither tenderness nor pity in his face as he raised her, and carrying her in, laid her upon the bed. Without a glance at the sleeping child he went out again into the gathering darkness.

Far into the night he was still sitting there, unconscious of the passing hours or the chilliness of the air. His mind wandered in a wild chaos. over and over again he rehearsed the circumstances attending the finding of the dead man beneath the ledge, and the discovery of the fragment of a woman's dress in the rigid fingers; his horror when he recognized the man as the one he had seen crossing the road near the cabin, and the frag-ment as a portion of Molly's dress. He had secured this and secreted it in his bosom before his companion, summoned by his shouts, had come up. He knew the pattern too well he had selected it himself after much consideration. True, another might have worn the same, but then the recollection of Molly's torn dress arose to banish every doubt. There was mystery and crime and horror, and Molly was behind it all—Molly, the wife he had trusted, the mother of his child!

It must have been long past midnight when a hand was laid upon his shoulder and his wife's voice broke

"Sandy," said she, "I've come—to tell ye all. Ye won't refuse to listen?"

He shivered beneath her touch but did not answer, and there in the miserable darkness which hid their faces from each other, Molly told her story from beginning to end, told it in a torrent of passionate words, broken by sobs and groans which shook her from head to foot. "I met him in the woods," she went on. "I took him to the ledge, because I knew nobody would see us there, an' I then told him everything. I went down on my knees to him an' begged of him to go away an' leave me; for I couldn't bear to—to give ye up, an' I knew 'twould come to that! I begged an' I prayed an' hen—" wouldn't an' then-an' thenwouldn't hear; an' then—an' then—she sobbed, "he threatened me Sandy, he threatened to go an' tell you all. He put his wicked face close up to mine. I pushed him away an' he fell—he fell, Sandy, but God knows I didn't go fur to do it!" She stopped, her voice utterly choked with agonizing sobs, but the man before her did not move or speak. She threw herself down and clasped her arms about him.

"Sandy! husband!" she cried. "Do what ye please with me-drive me away-kill me, but remember this-I did love ye true an' faithful—say ye believe that!"

moved again until with the first twitter of the birds, the baby's voice mingling, the mother rose instinctively to answer the feeble summons. She was chilled to the marrow, and her hair and garments were wet with the heavy dew. Sandy sat with averted head buried in his hands. She longed to go to him, but she dared not, and she went in to the child. Weak and unnerved as she was, the heat of the room overcame her, and, sitting there with the baby on her lap, she fell into a deep, death-like slumber. She returned to consciousness to find herself lying upon the bed with the child by her side. Some one had laid her there, and drawn the green shade close to shut out the bright light. She started up and listened; there was no cound but the listened; there was no sound but the whir of insects and the warbling of birds. She arose, stiff and bewildered, and staggered to the door. Sandy was gone.

The day dragged its mournful length along and as night fell steps were heard approaching. Molly's heart gave a great leap, but it was not her husband's step-it was that of Bob, her brother, who came slowly up the path, a serious expression on his boyish face. She would have flown to meet him, but she could not stir. Her eyes fastened themselves upon him with a look that demanded everything.

The young fellow came close up to his sister before speaking.
"How d'ye, Molly, how d'ye?" he said, seating her and said, seating the said her and glancing curiously at her white, des-perate face.

"What is it, Bob?" she gasped;
"what is it? Ye can tell me—I can bear it."

"I ain't got nothin' much to tell," answered with a troubled air. "I he answered with a troubled air. "I war thinkin' ez you mought hev somethin' ter tell me. Sandy he come by an' said as how he mus' go down ter Gordonsville, he an' Jim Barker, on accounts o' the man es fell over the ledge."

The shudder which passed through the woman's frame escaped Bob's notice, and he continued:

"He said ez how he mus' stay till th' inquist war over, an' moughtn't be back for a day or two, an' axed me fur ter keep ye comp'ny till he comes back."

"Till he comes back!" she repeated in a whisper.

She hid her face in her hands, and Bob, who, like Sandy, was used to Molly's strange ways, did not question her further.

Days, weeks and months passed away, and Sandy King did not return. Jim Barker, who had seen him last, knew only that he had expressed an intention to remain a few days longer in the town, and further in-quiries revealed nothing more. Bob remained with his sister, and, after the first few weeks of excitement, settled quietly down in charge of the little farm—"until Sandy gits back," as he always took pains to de-

This stoutly maintained contingency was regarded by the scattered inhabitants of that region with doubt and disbelief. Sandy's mysterious disappearance excited much comment, and gave rise to endless rumors and conjectures. The current belief, however, was that being himself a man of peaceable habits, he had found his wife's temper too "cantankerous," and had gone in search of the peace denied him beneath his own roof, such an event having occurred more than once within the memory of the oldest inhabitant.

Molly knew nothing of all this. She never left her own door from the day of her husband's departure, and Bob, warm-hearted fellow—had stood valiantly between his sister and the prying eyes and sharp tongues which sought to pluck out the heart of her mystery or apply venom to her bleeding wounds.

That something very serious had occurred, he, more than any other, had cause to suspect, but he respected his sister's reticence, and watched with secret pain and anxiety her increasing pallor and weakness. The hopes he had at first cherished of Sandy's return died slowly out, but he hardly confessed it, even to him-

Autumn passed into winter, and winter into spring, and in the mean-time, as Molly faded, the little boy thrived and waxed strong. He could now toddle about on his sturdy legs, and his prattle and laughter filled the lonely cabin. His mother watched his development eagerly.

"See, Bob!" she would say, "see how he walks, an' how plain he can talk! What'll Sandy say when he sees him"

Then she would hold up before the round baby-eyes a distorted, shaggy likeness of Sandy, which he had once exhibited with great pride on his return from Gordonsville, and try to teach the baby lips to pronounce "Dad-dy."

"He'll know him when he comes, Bob; see if he don't. He'll know his own daddy, won't he, precious man? And he'll be here by corn-plantin', Bob, sure."

And Bob, who always entered with a great assumption of cheerfulness into all her plans, would turn away with a sinking heart.

"Ef he's ever a-comin'," he would say to himself, "he'd better come pretty soon, or —" And then something would rise in his throat, and he could never finish the sentence.

The gray-brown woods had changed to tender green and purple, the air teemed with the sounds, and the earth with the tints of early spring. The corn was not only planted, but was already sending up sharp-yellowgreen spikes out of the soft red loam, and yet Sandy had not returned.

A strange woman had taken Molly's place in the household, for Molly could no longer go about—could hardly sit at the window, looking down the lonely road or over the distant hills with her eager, hollow eyes. She had never com-plained, and up to this time had refused to see a physician. And now when one was summoned, he only shook his head in response to Bob's questions, and hinted vaguely at mental causes beyond his reach.

She lay for the most part with closed eyes, and but for the heaving of her breast one might have believed her no longer of the living, so white listening to another voice than his.

and shadow-like had she become. She seldom spoke, but not a night fell that she did not call Bob to her side and whisper with upturned, anxious eyes:

"I reckon he'll come tomorrow, Bob, don't you?"

One evening, after a restless, feverish day, she woke from a brief nap. Her brother was seated by her side, looking sadly into her waxen face. She started up with a strange glitter in her eyes and seized his

"Bob," she whispered, "he's com-in'! He's most here! Go and meet him quick, Bob, an' tell him to hurry, to hurry, mind, or I shan't be here!"

The wildness in her face and voice deepened.

"Go, I tell you! Quick! He's comin'!" and she would have sprung from the bed.

"There, there, Molly," said her brother, soothingly, "jess lay right down an' be quiet an' I'll go."

She lay upon the pillow as he placed her, panting and trembling, and he went hastily out, pausing, as he went through the kitchen, to say a few, words to the woman who sat at the table feeding the little boy.

"She's a heap wusser," he said, "an' out of her head. Keep a watch over few words to the woman who sat at her while I go for the doctor."

He ran quickly down the slope toward where the horse was tethered.

As he reached the road he saw a tall form advancing through the dusk with rapid strides. Something in the gait and ouline set his heart to throbbing; he stopped and waited. The man came nearer.

"Bob!"

"Sandy!"

The two men clasped hands.
"Molly?" said her husband, brokenly. For answer Bob pointed silently toward the cabin, and Sandy passed up the slope before him. As he entered the little kitchen the child stopped eating and stared with wide-open eyes at the stranger.

"Dad-dy! dad-dy!" he babbled.
Sandy saw and heard nothing, but went blindly on into the inner room. There was a glad cry, and Molly was in her husband's arms.

"I knew ye'd come!" she said.
"Yes, darlin', I've come, an' I'll never—" The words died upon his lips, for something in the face upon his breast told him that Molly was

After the cold water had brought her to, the cold water had been one of Mary's hingels.

The incident was unwelcome and incomprehensible, but none the less real. It had actually happened, and, of all persons, happened to him! To have she informed him, with even more firmness than sorrow, that she would never see him again until she had received from him in writing a proper explanation of the deplorable incident. Mr. Wilkinson was grieved at her decision. Nevertheless, he could but admire her for it. Having ascertained an unfair advantage of an unoffending that she did not suspect him of direct complicity in the unpleasant occurrence, he went away without remonstrance, of the room. This act left his mind carrying with him the uncanny object free for the moment to consider in a still in its delicate silk-lined receptacle. less prejudiced way that it was the

The name on the case was that of the sender of the object, rather than the prominent jeweler from whom the necklace had been ordered. Mr. Wilkinson was not a man to be carried away by passion, but he was determined to bring to justice the perpetrator of the trick-for he had no doubt that a cruel and ghastly jest had been he knew that blind anger would not rin. help him to this end. So he immediately took a cab and gave the address of a private detective whom he had met professionally and felt he could trust. To put the matter into the hands of the police would be to court instant publicity. The press would take hold of it, and a swarm of reporters would gather, like flies upon carrion, to his own annoyance and, what was much more important, to the great discomfort of his Mary. The detective was out, and after a few moments' hesitation Mr. Wilkinson went home, where he passed a sleepless night. The more he thought of the thing, the less possible it seemed to him that it could have happened. Thrice within the first hour or two he rose case. The first time he half expected mended that the business be turned

Only he did not know who they were. He could think of no enemy who would be likely to sacrifice a charming portion of wife played upon him and his fiancee—and or sister to cause him temporary chagrin. The sudden suspicion that the finger might be a momento some less reputable person filled him with disquiet. If it should be—if Mary should find. ... He became again dissatisfied with the present situation of the offending member. From its remote obscurity it appeared to his imagination to be pointing at him ironically, like some disagreeably incarnated finger of fate. A feeling of shame, such as he had never known before, began to creep and curdle in his blood.

Morning came at last, and breakfast, which still lay untasted before the pon-dering Wilkinson when the detective was shown in. He listened with much interest to his client's story, looked at the finger and its case, and passed from his bed, turned up the light and judgment on the whole affair in a word examined the gruesome contents of the of one syllable. ## STUBBORN DYSPEPSIA REMOVED.

Rev. Arthur Goulding, B. D.

Chaplain, The Pentlentiary, Slony Mountain, Manitoba, writes:—"It affords me very great pleasure in testifying to the merits of your invaluable medicine—K. D. C., which, if taken together with the pills is warranted to remove the most stubborn case of dyspepsia. I cannot say that I arrived at that stage when the disease had become chronic—but I have suffered intensely nevertheless. I had been under medical treatment for some time, with but little relief—when my attention was directed to your cure I tried it, and it has most effectually cured me.

over to him, including the package in which the finger had come-the case, which he unpleasantly referred tol as the casket—and the wrapper, which Wilkinson had had the presence of mind to save. Armed with these he set out, promising to report in the evening.

Mr. Wilkinson was not mistaken in his man. Night had hardiy fallen when the detective reappeared and offered the following satisfactory explanation of the curious incident.

"At 4.30 yesterday afternoon, Mr. Wilkinson," he began, "a man called upon you at your office. He looked seedy, but on the whole respectable, and you found it impossible not to listen to him on account of his melting eye and rich, sympathet:ic voice."

Mr. Wilkinson nodded. He was not so simple as to wonder how the detective knew this, but he did wonder what it had to do with the case.

"He said," proceeded the detective, "that he was poor, but—and-so-forth, a stranger in town, looking for a job, anything honest." The detective paused here and smiled pleasantly. "Had here and smiled pleasantly. "Had found a chance as waiter at Royce's, but must provide his own waiter's coat, price three dollars. Could you—and-so-forth? You couldn't; you weren't quite so easy. But you did the next best thing—gave him an order on your haberdasher for a waiter's coat. Wrote it on the face of one of your envelopes, and gave him one of your visiting cards. He got the coat on your order and then went to his uncle's and cashed in the coat. It only fetched a dollar, but every little helps."

The detective paused again and looked attentively at Mr. Wilkinson, who did not quite like his expression. "Very well, sir," he said, somewhat testily, "what of it?"

"This. When uncle came to examine the count of his laisures he found two the coat at his leisure, he found two rather unaccountable articles in ityour card and a woman's finger. He felt surprised, naturally, and a little grieved."

"I can understand that," said Mr. Wilkinson, appreciatively.
"In fact," resumed the detective, "the thing upset him considerably. A poco deals, sooner or later, in a great many shady articles, but he has to draw the line somewhere. Uncle had never had any call for odd fingers—worried him to have the thing in his place. So what does he do but stow the article in a does he do but stow the article in a jewel-case he had handy, and send it off to the address on your card?"

"I see," said Mr. Wilkinson with a sigh of relief. The thing appeared to sigh of relief.

be straightening itself out admirably.
"You have proof of these statements?"
The detective nodded.

"Then there is little more to be said I should think. I am greatly obliged. The detective rubbed his chin.

looked somewhat disappointed.
"Of course," he said, "if that is all you want to know it is no affair of ine. Twenty-five dollars."
Mr. Wilkinson did not like to feel that he had said or done less than might be required of a man in his position. He hastened to inquire what the detective meant.

"Well, Mr. Wilkinson," he said, "there are three questions which I should have said, would suggest themselves to a man of your inquiring turn of mind. First: what became of the which should have reached you, as you expected, about the time you received the little souvenir from uncle? ond: how did the finger get in the excellent company of your visiting card, in a pocket of the waiter's coat? to whom did the finger originally belong?"

"Very true," said Mr. Wilkinson, beginning to be a little ashamed of his premature satisfaction. The fact was he had been thinking of Mary, and the explanation he had already received seemed ample for his purpose. "Do you know the answers to these questions?"

"I do," the detective replied, "but I should prefer to have you hear the story from another person. He is due here now." Almost as he spoke the Almost as he spoke the bell rang and a young man was shown at Mr. Wilkinson's request he proceeded to tell his story, in a manly, straightforward manner.

"I am an utter stranger to you, Mr.

Wilkinson," he began, "but if you were to ask anyone who knows me you would be told that I have always borne a reputation for honesty. Yesterday, nevertheless, I was guilty of a forgery and two thefts. One of these offences was deliberate, the other two being forced upon me, as it seemed, by the urgency of circumstances.

He paused and shook his head in a melancholy way, but Mr. Wilkinson, who felt much attracted by his manner, urged him to go on.

"Yes, I am a robber, Mr. Wilkinson, Last evening, at half-past six, I stationed myself on your front steps and stole from the messenger's hand a package addressed to you and containing in a jewel-case a pearl necklace."

Mr. Wilkinson was startled. He felt somewhat less strongly attracted toward his visitor, but still encouraged him to continue.

"You will wonder why I did this," he went on, "when I tell you I am a man of good family and independent fortune. I had no possible use for your necklace, which is now in this gentleman's hands and at your disposal."

"What were you after, then?" cried

Mr. Wilkinson, much puzzled.
"A woman's finger," replied Mr. Blackall. Mr. Wilkinson's astonishment increased. "I had lost it and was very anxious to recover it, for a particular reason. You will think it a trifle to make so much trouble about, but it happened to be very important to me at the moment. I had carelessly dropped it in the street, in taking out my handkerchief. When I discovered my loss some moments later, and retraced my steps to look for the finger, I came upon a shabby person in the act of picking it up. He seemed embarrassed when he discovered what it was, but instead of dropping it he hastily secreted it in the pocket of a coat which he carried upon his arm. I naturally followed him to see where he was going with my property, which, for obvious reasons, I could not openly claim.

"When he entered the shop of Mr. Isaacson. I applied my face to the window and saw the wretch exchange the coat he carried-which I had no doubt he had stolen-for a few paltry coins. I would rather have given twenty times the sum than lose the valuable article he had disposed of so carelessly, and I had much ado to keep my hands off him when he came out. Prudence prevailed, however; I let him pass and turned to watch the pawnbroker, who had carelessly thrown the coat upon his counter. In a few minutes, his other customers liaving left the shop, he proceeded to make a systematic examination of the garment, turning the pockets inside out. I saw him start when he touched my finger, which fell upon the counter with a scrap of paper or card. A sudden impulse urged me to act, and with a half-defined purpose of recovering my property on the spot I entered the shop.

"At the sound of the opening door I saw him sweep the finger behind necklace, which was sent from your jeweler's by one of their uniformed employees yesterday afternoon, and afternoon, and appeared to me it would be even more appeared to me it would be even more toolish and unsafe to connect myself in his mind with the article I sought than it would have been to make a confidant of the tramp, and so, on the impulse of the moment, I merely took out my watch and laid it before him, saying, 'how much?'

"The pawnbroker took the watch nearer the window for better examination, and I instinctively seized the opportunity to inspect the card that had fallen from the coat with the finger and remained upon the counter. It was yours, Mr. Wilkinson, and I impressed the address on my memory.

"Then Isaacson turned toward me and offered a loan on my watch which, fortunately, was so absurdly small that I could consistently refuse in, whom the detective introduced as Mr. Blackall. The visitor appeared somewhat ill at ease at first, but presently his manner grew more easy, and and when outside paused and took another look at its chance possessor. He was staring steadfastly at the card I had just read, now and then shaking his head in an undecided way. In a moment, however, he seemed to reach a decision. From a shelf he took a small oblong morocco-covered box-a jewel-case, apparently-and into it put some objecet which he slipped from under the counter. I could not see what it was, but had very little doubt about it. He wrapped and sealed the box, and it was his action in addressing the parcel that interest-hand, and made his way, with me in his wake, to a District Messenger office in the next block. I only stopped to make sure that he left the parcel there for delivery, and then started for your house. I determined to be here before the package and to recover my property by making a direct appeal to your magnanimity. While one could not think of putting himself, even in a small way, into the hands of the pawnbroker, with a gentleman there could be no question of the result. And yet, when I had ascended your steps and was about to ring, I was seized with a qualm of diffidence and confusion. What excuse could I make for intruding upon a gentleman on such an errand. Could I say, "Mr. Wilkinson, my name is Blackall. There is a finger coming to you by special messenger which belongs to me!' Clearly not.

"I thought of several elaborate and round-about ways of introducing the subject, but none of them appealed to me as quite adequate. I had arrived at no conclusion when a uniformed messenger appeared at the foot of the steps, evidently looking for the number on the transom. Instinctively I drew back into the shade. I was standing in the vestibule between the outer and inner doors, and the cross-light from the gas in your hall and the electric light outside made a triangle of shadow in which I was invisible to the boy, while his every motion was plain to me. He took from beneath his coat a small oblong package. That decided me upon an instant plan of action. My soft hat I doubled and thrust into a pocket. The lad came leisurely up the steps, his attention fixed upon the address on the parcel, making sure that he had the right house. Calmly I stepped forth, bareheaded, partially closing the outer door. The boy closing the outer door. The boy looked up and said: 'Mr. Wilkinson?' "'Correct,' I answered, eagerly extending my hand for the coveted parwas added to my list of offences. 'In a short half-hour I was safe in my lodgings, free to unwrap the article that had caused me so much anxiety and effort. Imagine my consternation when, on opening the case, I found instead of the object of my search, a pearl necklace. For some time I sat and stared at it, as ridiculously confused as a clown in a Christ-mas pantomime. The case was, ap-parently, the one I had seen Isaac-son use, but the contents! Surely pawnbrokers did not keep pearl necklaces lying loose under their counters. es accidentally found in pledged articles of clothing. The more I ticles of clothing. whom I knew and made a clean breast of the matter. I assured him that it was hardly less important that the necklace should be restored, with some reasonable excuse, to the rightful owner than that my lost finger should be recovered. He agreed to attend promptly to both matters. And he has." Mr. Blackall bowed in the direction of the detective, who returned the compliment and said:

"Fact is, Mr. Wilkinson, I was looking up the case from Mr. Blackall's end when you called on me last ed me most, for he obviously copied the address from the card that had dropped with the finger from the coat.

"Presently he came out, package in hand, and made his way, with me in you see, so that I had an easy job for my money. And now let me restore to you gentlemen the missing articles, which, I dare say, you would neither of you care to exchange again."

The detective smiled, and produced from nowhere in particular two jewelcases. They were much alike and were marked with the name of the same jeweler.

"Well, Mr. Wilkinson," said Mr. Blackall, "glad to have met you, but sorry to have caused you so much inconvenience. I trust you appreciate my delicate position and the overpowering considerations which prevailed upon me to do a dishonorable thing." He offered his hand, which Mr. Wilkinson did not appear to see.

"You will excuse me, Mr. Blackail," he said, with dignity, "if, before I commit myself to complete acquiescence, I request some explanation of the manner in which this strange-er article-came into your possession."

Mr. Blackall smiled. "Certainly, my dear sir—but I thought I had made myself plain in the matter. Have I not?" He addressed the detective, who shook his head. "Then I shall be glad to do so. You will recall that I pleaded guilty to two thefts yesterday. The first article stolen was the finger. I had long coveted such a finger, and when the chance came to acquire one I was not strong enough to resist the temptation. So I stole it."

Mr. Wilkinson shuddered. He had a momentary vision of a young girl going about in search of the third finger of her left hand.

"Whose was it?" he asked involun-"I don't know, I'm sure," said Mr.

Biackall, "Bad lot, I dare say, but as pretty a subject for dissection as I ever saw."

Dissection! Mr. Wilkinson breathed more freely. An incubus of horror was lifted from his brain, and he was relieved to feel nothing more than a mild disgust.

"Ah," he said, "you are—"
"A student of surgery—didn't I say?" replied Mr. Blackall. Recently I have been making a special study of the structure of the hand. Yesterday, in the dissecting room I happened upon this finger—a very remarkable specimen. You will readily notice the peculiar form of the tendon; it is double." He drew the finger from the jewel-case and by means of his thumb and forefinger manipulated the tendon so that the member moved un-pleasantly. "There are," he contin-ued, complacently, "so far as I know, extremely few cases of this kind on record. I can hardly tell you what And, if they did, they would scarcely an attraction it had for me. I resend them off at random to address- selved, before communicating my discovery to the demonstrator, to take it home with me, and spend the night with it. Instead of which, Mr. Wilkinson," he continued—and here he and the detective both smiled—"it was you who—"
"Yes," said Mr. Wilkinson, "I cer-

Women's Extravagance often Men's Fault.

By Ellen Oldfield.

There are few attributes of the "eternal feminine" which are more strenuously insisted upon than that of cannot pay for honestly. feminine extravagance. Yet, for all that, it is to be doubted whether, in point of fact, the extravagance of women exceeds that of men, perhaps even whether it equals it. Indeed, it may justly be claimed that a woman, however levich of expenditure is more however lavish of expenditure, is more or less certain to demand a quid pro quo for her outlay, and rarely attains to the point of spending wealth with the recklessness which men "plungers" often display. Even Cleopatra, with her famous draft of dissolved pearl, had in view a definite end, the desire to impress and astonish Mark Anthony, even as many a woman since her day has sacrificed more or less in order to fix the attention of the man whom she has wished to attract.

From the beginning the "excuse of Adam": "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she tempted me," has been a favorite one with all mankind. "Cherchez la femme" is the old French proverb. "There is never a bit of mischief but a petticoat is at the bottom of it," says the old French version of the same maxim.

When a man covets the earth it usually is in order to give it to some woman; this is indisputable, according to both history and tradition. And when, having, with much pain and toil, secured a small part of the universe, he presents to the lady of his choice, it happens, to the happens, that the treats the gift perchance, that she treats the gift lightly, plays with it, breaks, perhaps even throws it away. Then, straight-way, he is indignant, and holds her sternly responsible for her carelessness, which may be due to ignorance; and forgets entirely that he himself is to blame in that he has made no effort to impress her with a sense of its value.

A woman, almost any woman, will take infinite pains, no end of trouble, to please the man whom she loves. No sacrifice is too great for his sake; she will do anything, bear anything, so long as she believes in his devotion to herself. Wherefore, if he chooses to treat her as a child, a plaything, he has no just cause to resent the fact that when he desires to find in her a helpmeet, counselor, and companion, she fails to rise to the occasion. It often is said, and truly, that with many men what are virtues in a sweetheart become grave faults when the sweetheart is a wife.

There is an ancient and threadbare conundrum which defines matrimony as a matter of money. There is more truth than wit in the sorry jest, not because there are mercenary marriages but because financial difficulties and squabbles over bills and expenses wreck so many matrimonial ventures.

Love of the genuine, permanent varand does battle with the wolf in behalf of its beloved. But what can a man expect when, instead of treating his wife like a reasonable human being, making her his confidant and co-worker, he keeps her in the dark as to his financial status, allowing her to run up bills blindly, and then blames her when, through ignorance rather than of malice, aforethought, she involves him in debts which he cannot pay?

It is to be feared that many men, marry upon false pretences in that the women whom they marry are more or less uninitiated to the precise amount of their incomes, and when a man who has conducted his courtship upon a scale equal to $5000.00 a year marries upon an actual salary of $1000 the result is apt to be unpleasantness, not to say trouble, in camp. It is all the luxuries of life; the shame con- wife, both for her sake and his own.

Nothing can be more foolish than for a young couple to start married life with a grand splurge, spending the few hundreds or so in the bank in unnecessary extravagances which will do them no practical service when the money is gone. Even where there is a solid reserve fund available it is ill advised to draw upon it heavily, or even to abstain from adding to it, if possible, at the outset of matrimony. When once the initial expenses of the wedding and house furnishing are over, the cost of living ought to be, and usually is, less for a time than it will be thereafter. Everything is new, and with ordinary care there should be no outlay in replacing or repairing for some time to come. A newly married couple, unless they are people of wealth, are not expected to entertain upon an expensive or lavish scale. Later on things may be different, and more money will be needed for all kinds of things; wherefore it is well that provision shall be made for emergencies. A wise old man used to tell his children that he had always found it much easier to do without a thing which he had money enough to buy at any time than to be deprived of it for lack of means to procure it. It is easy to pass from comfort to luxury, but when a luxury must be relinquished, the force of contrast makes the com-fort of yesterday the discomfort of today. Those who are content to begin life together in circumstances which are well within their means will be spared all the troubles and misfortunes of those who cannot pay their way. Better, a hundred times over, to begin in a five-roomed flat and end with a mansion in town and a place in the country, than to reverse this order of things.

In spite of the fact that when the bride has money it is apt to be a source of disagreement,, it is an excellent thing for a wife to have an assured income of her own. It ought also to be an infinite relief to a man to know that his wife has money which is beyond the reach of his own success or failure. And, that this may be so, a woman's property should be settled upon her and her children "as tight as the law can tie it." Otherwise she may be unable to refrain from surrendering it, should the occasion ever arise.

Whatever a man's income, be it large or small, his wife has a moral right to a certain portion of it, upon which she can depend, and this should be given to her regularly, without her being compelled to ask for it. It is a humiliating position for anyone to be left without a dollar to pay an expressman; nay, worse, not to have the small amount due on a letter delivered at the door! iety does not go out of the window when poverty enters the door. On the contrary, it stands its ground bravely amounts of money, but he rarely appreciates how galling it is to his wife's pride, her self-respect, to be obliged to make such requests. Let every man be honest enough, and loving enough, to give his wife a fair idea of his financial position, and trust her to conduct herself accordingly, nor leave her in ignorance when serious trouble is threat-ening to engulf her as well as him.

Moreover, it must be remembered that economy and extravagance are relative terms; what is proper and becoming in one woman may be nothing short of criminal in another. When a multi-millionaire's wife spends hundreds of thousands of dollars upon jewels she merely is making a safe investment; when a clerk's wife runs into debt for a brooch or bracelet she perhaps is taking a step upon the road to ruin. Women do not always know shameful, indeed, it is not always an what they stand upon, and it is the inconvenience not to be able to afford duty of a wise husband to enlighten his

Opportunity Key to Everything in World.

By JOHN A. HOWLAND.

When the possibilities of the business world have been canvassed, and the totals in whatever form have been totals. totals in whatever form have been demonstrated, it will be discovered that, after all, opportunity is the key to everything. In its practical bearings, however, opportunity is a many sided condition. It is conceived on the old principle of "now you see it and now you don't" sleight of hand performance: some people never do see it, others see it for a moment and it is gone, and only the few have the capacity not only to see and take its advantages but they create the condition itself. And, quite in the natural order of things, the person who has looked and failed to see is loudest in his complaints against the world's methods.

The other day one of these men wrote me a letter. It was a hard luck letter. "Instead of men with money wanting ideas, they want tangible goods," is the plaint of my correspondent. "If anyone doubts this fact, let him try it. The writer has tried persistently and faithfully to interest some man or number of men in a legitimate, conservative business proposition, acknowledged to be of the best, and yet which has its element of chance. One chance of failure to five chances of success has been admitted to the writer, and only $1,000 ought to put the thing on the road to millions. But those men 'looking for ideas' seem not to be in my list of acquaintanceship."

Evidently this man is an inventor.

Possibly he has all the inventor's absorption in his inventive process and the least tangible proportion of common sense, tact, and business ability. But, however, this may be, his case is typical. He is bewailing the absence of opportunity. He is sore and discouraged because he has not found in his case that men with money are on the "lookout for new ideas." He doubts that "business men, men with money, captains of industry, and the like, are anxiously and at all times looking for these 'men with

We will suppose that this complainant has the ideas which he can deliver. We concede that the thing which needs merely money to push it to success is all that he claims for it. But we must go further and concede also that there are 10,000 other inventors in the United States who are exactly in his position! Where did this one complainant go in search of the man with the money? What is that one element of chance against the five pointing to marked success? It ought not to be possible that this chance in the invention itself lies covert in his statement, "I think I have it near to the successful point now, only that the lack of funds is holding it back.

But laying the concessions aside, I fear that here is the trouble for this man to whom only $1,000 is necessary to start him on the road to millions. He has come to his full stop, not on the proposition of showing what a perfected contrivance will do, but to that fuller stop connected with shwoing how $1,000 might perfect the contrivance which, it perfected, can be demonstrated as capable of making millions. And this is one of the poorest propositions in the world to the average man who is seeking results. Distinctly he will not put up his good money in order to nurse a possible dream belonging to another man. But the man whose dream has been realized into shape may find thousands of willing partners in his venture. Yet even under these circumstances this man would need to know where to go. The bank which would loan him $100,000 on collateral with which to perfect an invention demonstrated as certain of making its millions could not give him a penny's use on the instrument itself. The man in a $50,000 seat on the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the incorporated as a second of the stock exchange might be glad to buy 1,000 shares in the second of the se porated company exploiting the inven-up in the fact that a millionaire manufacturer of shoes, for instance, does not care the proverbial rap for the idea of an employee which might bear upon the economic production of steel rails. Which is one of the plainest emphasizings of the fact that a young man who has ideas on rail making has no business in a shoe factory!

Right here comes in the question of opportunity and the making of that opportunity. One may go into an establishment employing perhaps a thousand men, and the canvassing of the em-ployees on a confidential basis would reveal scores and scores of young men who will say: "O, this is no place for me; I dont' care a continental about this work; it's all out of my line." Yet in these scores of indifferent ones will be dozens of protestants against the statement that the employer is "always looking out for ideas." Some of the brightest mentalities in such an institution are most likely to be in this in-different class. Which is an added reason why the employer has his eyes wider open than otherwise in search of those men of ideas whose "ideas" shall be in his particular line of industry. The plodder type, which doesn't know whether it is satisfied or not, is barren. And the dissatisfied brilliant man is as unproductive.

Opportunity in its bearings everywhere may be said to be the result of the exercise of judgment, and tact, and ability. Chance is something, but the other qualities are more. As an example of how tact may figure alone in opportunity's opening, a situation may be cited where just two men are applicants for a position where opportunity is conceded. One man has arrived at the office of application ahead of the other. But time is a vital factor in the decision. The man who is first seen and heard has the better chance for the

But on the basis of a plain, cold blooded business proposition, can the man who came late afford to attempt getting audience ahead of the other? Tact would decide this, provided the man of tact and intuition had seen the prospective employer. One type of business man for his purpose would find all the merit in the late man who could crowd in first to an audience. Another type for his purposes would take the man who might wait in patience on the aggressive one. Opportunity in thousands of cases hangs by still flimsier threads.

"Some mute, inglorious Milton here may rest.
Some Cromwell, guiltless of his country's blood."

These lines of sentiment from Grav's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" will live in Engilsh literature. But the man in modern business who misses his opportunity has no chance for another epitaph than "Failure."

Love's Victory.

HE, "Tell me, dainty lady mine, Will you be my Valentine? Long I've worshipped at your shrine, Everything I have is thine!"

SHE. "Truly, sir, I cannot say. How much is your income, pray?" HE,

"Income, dainty lady mine?
What of that? For you I pine
Night and day my heart is thine—Pray, then, be my Valentine." SHE.

"Hearts and pining touch me not. How much money have you got?" HE.

"Half a million, lady mine."

SHE. "Of course I'll be your Valentine!"

We present another batch of correspondence on the matrimonial question again this month. With the advent of shorter days and longer evenings, giving our readers more leisure time to write, the letters received at our office show an incsease over the preceding months. During the fall and winter period we will continue to print such letters as we can find space for. If you desire to form the acquaintance of any lady writer writing in the correspondence columns of this magazine address the Western Home Monthly, enclosing in a sealed envelope with stamp attached letter intended for such writer as you may designate and we will forward it through the mail to the party you so intend it for. When writing us, please give full name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith.

Black Hair, Brown Eyes and Shy.

Saskatchewan, Aug. 24, 1908.

Editor.—I am not a subscriber but have been reading your paper for some time. I like it exceedingly well, especially the correspondence column.

I think "School Girl," as she signs herself, is a real sensible girl; if all girls were of her opinion. (I am) the bachelors would come out pretty fair in the end. They will have something to be proud of if they get a girl like that. I feel very sorry for "Long John." It is a dreadful misfortune for a person to be shy and not a good talker.

I am 5 feet 6 inches tall, have black hair and brown eyes, am very shy and therefore do not have much to do with the boys, but would like awfully well to write to them for pastime. I am so much by myself that I am very lonely and I think it would be very pleasant to have a few letters to answer.

I would like if "Juggler" would write, but I suppose I will not suit him as I have no views to matrimony. Please write though, will you not, "Juggler?" Just until you find the one you want.

Two of a Kind.

Quill Lake, Sask., Aug. 25, 1908.
Editor.—We have been a subscriber to your magazine for some time and like your correspondence columns.

We have lived in the West for several years and like it very much, although find it very lonesome sometimes and would like to correspond with any young men who would care to write to us.

Belinda is 19 years of age, dark hair and blue eyes and height 5 feet 6 inches and weigh 125½ pounds. No one ever told me I was good looking.

Mandy Lou has brown hair and brown eyes, weighs 128 pounds, is 21 years of age, height 5 feet 5 inches. Would be handsome but for the squint in my left eye, but hardly think you would notice it. "Belinda and Mandy Lou."

A Young Miss a Little Cautious.

Manitoba, August 26, 1908.

Editor.—I have been a reader of your valuable paper for some time and have read the correspondence columns with great amusement.

I am a farmer's daughter, 20 years of age and have lived on a farm all my life. I am a little over 5 feet tall, weigh 120 pounds, have fair hair and blue eyes, am neither good nor bad looking, I have seen lots better looking and lots worse. I am fond of outdoor sports, skating, music and dancing. If any of the bachelors care to write to me they will find my address with the editor. Will correspond for mischief, but nothing else. I want to see my man if ever I am lucky enough to get one before I take him; no sight nor seen man for me. I would prefer a dark man, with a jolly, fun-loving disposition, strong and well built, not necessarily pretty faced, one who can sing a little and play the Jews harp, but one that won't be harping while I am feeding the pigs or milking the cows, but sooner harping than chewing the rag.

"Jolly Elf."

Sympathy Akin to Love.

Sasatchewan, Aug. 25, 1908.
Editor.—and to all whom this may concern. Being very much impressed by your interesting paper, especially the correspondence column, I take great leasure in anticipating a small space

As the blow almost killed father, pre-As the blow almost killed father, prepare to bear the description. I am 19 years old and am one of those unfortunate school ma'rms. I have a fair complexion, a round face about the size of a silver dollar, with a golden crown. I am 5 feet 4 inches high. My disposition is like my hair—always sunny. I can keep house, but I will not guarantee my cooking as a cure for indigestion.

I believe I have already taken up too much of your valuable paper so I will close, hoping to hear from many readers, including "Lonely Bill No. 6," "A Juggler," and "Ham and Eggs."

I will leave my address with the editor who I believe will forward all correspondence. "Maple Sugar."

Has Some Good Faults?

Buffalo Plain, Sask., Aug. 22, 1908.
Editor.—As I have written a letter or two to your magazine and not seeing it come out in print, I thought I would try another one. I take great pleasure in reading some of the letters written by the girls and am surprised to think that some of them are looking for a husband so young; they must be ashamed of their name that they want to change it so soon. It may be all right for a young girl to do a little flirting or write a kind letter to some of the lonely bachelors just for pastime, but I do not think that a girl should marry, under 18 or 19 years of age. I know for my part I like to go with a nice young girl for a while and then change off to another, as the old saying a change is as good as a rest.

I should like to correspond with some of the girls just for pastime, at first, any how. Would like to exchange postcards or receive a letter as long as her arm. Old maids not wanted as I am young myself. I have some good faults as I do not drink or use tobacco or strong language, am strictly temperance, always was and always will be. I would never think of marrying a girl that could take a drink or leave it alone, for if we are to have prohibition in this great West we have got to quit this drinking habit.

If the editor will please forward letter addressed to "Handsome Gent he will be very much obliged, as I think that girl will think he is a nice fellow not to answer her letter.

Hoping to get a few letters from some of the lassies and wishing you all success, I remain, yours truly

A "Spicy Gent."

Bachelors Backward and Bashful.

Riding Moustain, Aug. 27, 1908.
Editor.—I have been reading the letters in the W. H. M. for some time but never had courage to give my opinion of the bachelors. In my part of the country bachelors are plentiful, but none of them seem to have left their mother's apron-string, even though they range from thirty to forty years of age.

A lot of girls do not like smoking, drinking and so forth. Well, I see no harm in smoking, and a drink now and again might help, if kept in its place.

Likes Tall, Dark Girls.

Editor.—I have not been a subscriber to your paper very long but I think I have missed a good thing. I saw a copy of it at a friend's where I was visiting and so decided to get it as soon as possible. I think the correspondence column is a great benefit to all young backelors. bachelors.

bachelors.

I am not a young farmer nor am I looking for a wife, but would like to correspond with some of the fairer sex if any wish to do so. I see that every one describes themselves and their ideals. I am 5 feet 10½ inches tall, weigh about 152 pounds, fair complexion, with blue eyes and a good understanding. I am very fond of music, dancing and outdoor sports, although I cannot play any music myself. My chief fault is Scotch temper. I don't use liquor of any kind although I smoke once in a while. I think a tall, young lady with dark hair and eyes and

I think that "Starlight," from Saskatchewan, and "Polly Ann." in your June number are both about all right.

I will enclose a letter to each, numbered 1 and 2, as they are mentioned; please forward them. "Moxie."

The Girl with the Apron On.

Carnduff, Sask., Aug. 24, 1908.

Editor.—For a short time I have been an interested but silent reader of the W. H. M., especially the correspondence columns. It is amusing to read some of those bachelors' ideas. They want a partner, experienced, and a good housekeeper and good cook, good looking, know all about music and so forth. Well, do they ever stop to think of any of their own shortcomings, do they intend to have everything full and plenty to cook with and work with also?

My idea is to have a comfortable, good sized house and well furnished. I think if any place should be made cheerful it is the home.

Some bachelors think a girl should go into their cabins and live there and put up with all inconveniences and think to themselves she was mighty lucky to get me for I have a little cabin and a claim.

to themselves she was mighty lucky to

While some fellows refused years ago to look up a wife, years ago is not today. A girl can make her own living and live comfortable. However, I think outdoor work is man's work, such as milking cows, etc., except when he may be absent at times.

Now, I wonder if those interested bachelors ever think that their work is not hard as they generally ride while in the field and their horses do all the hard work. On the other hand their better-half is continually on her feet all day long in the house. I think some of those member bachelors are a number of years younger when they are engaged in writing to this column, but write the truth, boys.

I think some of those fellows say they want a pantner but their letter ends up as if it is a chore boy they mean, but just have a polite way of speaking it.

Now, as for myself, I would like to make it comfortable for all those lonely bachelors, such as having a good hot meal ready for them when they come in hungry and a nice warm fire to sit beside. I think man and wife should be cheerful companions and do their best to make a happy home.

I am just a farmer's daughter, very fond of driving a nice quiet pony, I like dancing and card playing. Before closing I beg to say I don't think I shall take up space with a description of myself; time enough to give that when someone writes and asks for it.

I will leave my address in the editor's care and if any one wishes to write I will try and answer all letters.

A Nice Young Man, About 25.

A Nice Young Man, About 25.

Tullymet, Sask., August 18, 1908.

Editor.—I am not a subscriber to your paper but always read at least the correspondence column, and thought I would like to write.

I am a nice young man about 25 years old, 6 feet 3 inches tall, and should have been taller if so much had not been turned up in feet. I weigh 150 pounds and my hair is black and curly when it's cut that way. I have one blue eye and one grey, and go by the name of "The Blue and the Grey." I am not exactly beautiful but rather good-looking and smoke once in a while; that is, as often as I get time to fill my pipe. I like music and singing and driving oxen yery much.

I was very much interested in "Goldy's" letter and would like to hear from her if she will write first. I hope this escapes the waste paper basket and is printed. Best wishes for the club. "The Blue and the Grey."

"Maple Leaf" Branches Out.

Saskatchewan, August 18, 1908.
Editor.—I am a subscriber to your valuable magazine and like reading the correspondence pages. I think some of the letters are very funny, some conceited and some sensible, but it would not do for every one to be the same. I notice some of the writers give a description of themselves, so here goes for mine, for mine,

I am 6 feet tall, black hair, blue eyes, and weigh 160 pounds. I am 29 years old and would like to correspond with some young lady between 24 and 30 years of age. I have a homestead in Saskatchewan. I got the patent some time ago and am in another line of business now. This is my first letter to the W. H. M. and I would like to see it in print. Any person wishing to write to me will find my address with the editor. Wishing your paper every success.

"Maple Leaf."

Interested in Correspondence Columns.

Coleridge, Alta, August 10, 1908.
Editor.—That I am interested in the correspondence columns of your valuable magazine will be evidenced by this letter, at least I fancy you will think so when I have finished.

I am not a subscriber as yet, having casually and lately met your paper at the home of a friend, and must assert that I esteem it an ideal medium of literary recreation for this western country.

I very much enjoyed reading the letters of some members, and will endeavor to acquire all letters published in future.

Now, I must say that I fancy "Airy Fairy Lillian," who I also note is a native of my dear old Ontario, is rather Quixotic in her tastes as regards a man not being allowed to use sugar in his tea without incurring her displeasure, but, of course, this is a small detail. I myself perfectly agree with her that chewing tobacco is an undesirable habit, but smoking—well, I smoke moderately a pipe myself and it has not discounted me as far as I know in any way. Comforts and pleasures, you know, when temperately enjoyed, cannot be detrimental to nature's laws.

way. Comforts and pleasures, you know, when temperately enjoyed, cannot be detrimental to nature's laws.

However, as it is a favor indeed to grant inserting this letter in your magazine I must "pull in." after giving—can I find flowery phrases enough—a personal description of myself.

I am 24 years of age, minus 3 days, fair complexioned, and I'm told I have laughing blue eyes, dark auburn hair—quite "wavy"—stand 5 feet 10½ inches and weigh 175 pounds.

I can boast of being exceedingly goodnatured, and, vide, confidential information, am reputed to be good looking. Furthermore, I am very fond of music, carising and play the piano, also abstair from alcoholic drink.

Now, girls, the reason these patent possessions have not been the means of ensnaring me ere this must be that my affinity has not yet appeared before me though I am partial to the society of personnel of this neighborhood is limited, as yet, to school children and mesdames, hence, you see, it will be a charitable act to relieve my monotony by writing me, all of which re-ceived I will reciprocate. Thanking the editor very kindly in anticipation, I beg to remain, sincerely,

Come Again, Sweet One.

Manitoba, August 21, 1908.
Editor.—Kindly permit me to a small corner in the correspondence column of your valuable magazine.

First, I would like to say it contains a lot of valuable reading matter which I find both profitable and pleasant. I am a new comer to the page but promise not to trouble you very often. One or two of the letters in this month's issue appear to be quite above the average, so that is why I have come into your circle for this once. Wishing both editor and readers every success.

"A Voice from Manitoba."

Not a Fully Qualified Bachelor.

Three Hills, Alta., August 17, 1908. Editor.—I have been reading your interesting magazine lately with much interest, especially the correspondence columns.

I would like to correspond with any I would like to correspond with any young ladies. I could hardly call myself a fully qualified bachelor yet as I don't think I have been at it long enough yet as I am only 18. I came from Ontario two years ago, am 5 feet 54, inches tall, dark blue eyes and brown hair. Am a real angel in habits. Thanking you very much for your space and valuable time I remain. "Dante."

Who Will Write to "Nobody's Darling?"

Cupar, Sask., August 18, 1908.
Editor.—As I was reading that interesting correspondence column in the W.
H. M. I, like most all other readers, decided to write. Although we do not take this magazine ourselves, one of our neighbors is a subscriber, therefore we have every chance of reading it and I am deeply interested in the correspondence column.

I am deeply interested in the correspondence column.

First of all I must describe myself. I can't wait any longer. Am a girl 16 years of age, fair complexioned, brown hair, blue eyes, height 5 feet 4½ inches and weigh between 130 and 134 pounds. Oh, boys, I'm a dandy, neat as a pin. The fellows round here try to chase me up, but I don't like very many of them so don't have anything to do with most of them.

My home is not here in Saskatchewan but in Alberta. I am here visiting, but expect to return home before very long. Before I left Alberta one of the store-keepers asked me why I was leaving, if the boys were not good enough, and I said "No," and came here, thinking they would be more plentiful and better, but they don't seem to be so. Perhans all would be more plentiful and better, but they don't seem to be so. Perhaps all the boys in the West are alike, but I hope not. If so, back east I will go. I came from the east just last August and I find a great difference in the West. I am a girl fond of pleasure, but I don't find much here in the West. The only sport I have had since I came West was skating, and I am very fond of that, I guess it is because I am such a good skater and everyone admires me on ice.

Well, this is my first letter and if I write any more it will take up so much space that the editor will not print it, so if the editor will kindly send this letter I have enclosed to "Ham and Eggs for Two" I will ring off.

"Nobody's Darling."

Very Fond of Work?

Snowflake, Man., August 15, 1908.
Editor.—This is my first letter to the W. H. M. I enjoy reading the correspondence very much. I would like to correspond with some nice young lady about 18 to 20 as I think they begin to have some sense at that age.

I am 23 years old, blue eyes, 5 feet 10% inches high, weigh about 165 pounds and am fond of work; I could not live without work. I do not want to correspond with some old crank. "Pennistone."

and have come to the conclusion that since there are so many bright, intellectual, refined and beautiful damsels only waiting for the door of their heart to be opened by one of us young men, I have decided to join the merry throng of eligible young bachelors.

I am 25 years old, with beautiful brown curly locks, violet blue eyes, and a fairly good singer. Am 5 feet 8 inches tall, weigh 145 pounds and take a number 7 shoe. A total abstainer, with an excellent and permanent position.

Would like to correspond with some young lady between 18 and 23 years of age. Triflers need not correspond.

Kindly forward enclosed letter to "Kipling No. 2," and I would like to hear from "A Farmer," if he will write first. My address will be safe with the editor. Editor.—Kindly forward the two enclosed letters as per names upon the envelopes and oblige.

The correspondence column is surely the "right thing in the right place," especially for a lot of us old bachelors and older maids. What's the use to live alone anyway? Our lives are what we make them. No sour bread, muddy coffee or shirts without buttons for me. I'll spend my money without stint on a woman every time but I want a pleasant smile and a sweet voice when coming in from a hard day's work.

Getting His Money's Worth.

Borden, Sask., Aug. 16, 1908.
Editor.—I like your paper very much, it is always full of good things and suitable for all classes of people. I read it from one end to the other and often read articles several times. I wish I had taken it long ago. I have only taken it three months and think I have got the worth of a year's subscription out of it already.

I am also interested in the correspondence department and have written and received several letters from correspondents and would be pleased if you will kindly address and forward enclosed letters; you will find each one marked on the back of the envelope, so you will not make any mistake in the one each is intended for.

I see that "Alixy Ann" has given you permission to send her name and address to anyone asking for it. I would be greatly pleased to get it from you. I enclose stamp to pay return postage, etc. "Sage Brush Pete."

Charlie of the Auburn Locks.

North Portal, August 16, 1908.
Editor.—I have been reading your correspondence column for some time and decided to join the happy circle. Nearly all the contributors start by giving a description of themselves. I am too modest to give definite particulars as to looks, etc., but will pass in a crowd, if the crowd is a large one.

I have been amused by the variety of letters which appear in your columns. Some of those lonely bachelors that want a better half to look after them do not seem to think of the lonely, lonesome time a bright, popular, happy young lady would put in after pledging to stand by them through better or worse The mere reading of some of the letters would make a person feel sad. As for the ladies, I do not approve of young girls corresponding with all sorts of young fellows who send them a card. This matrimonial question is too serious to be trified with. Now, I don't want all the young ladies to think I am ugly or stupid because I did not give a fine description of myself. I am popular and can trip the light fantastic with the best of them. I like the style of "Blythe Bridget," whose letter appeared in the April number. Please forward enclosed letter to her.

Glen Robertson, Ont., Aug. 13, 1908. Editor.—I have read with interest the letters in the W. H. M. and have decided to join with the rest. I have taken the magazine for some time and think the correspondence column very interesting. I am 5 feet 2 inches tall, weigh 105 pounds. I have dark brown hair and brown eyes. I would like to correspond with some nice young men for pastime. I am 23 years old and would not like to hear from anyone over 30. I will stop, hoping to see this in print, wishing the paper every success.

Tired Batching, Want Helper.

Quill Lake, Sask., Aug. 18, 1908.
Editor.—Kindly permit me to a small space in your correspondence column of your valuable magazine, of which I am an interested reader.

I am a bachelor, 21 years of age, height 5 feet 9 inches, weight 175 pounds, brown hair and hazel eyes. I am good at music and always like to have a good time. I do not use tobacco and never drink liquer. I have a homestead two miles from town and have 120 acres broken and 40 acres pasture. I own 4 horses for working and a team of drivers. I would like to correspond with any young ladies between 18 and 30 who do not object to matrimony. I am tired of batching and want a helper, not a slave. I would not ask or expect any woman to milk cows or do any of the outside chores. I will now conclude, with best wishes to the W. H. M. and also to the girl looking for me. "Prairie Schooner."

Not in Matrimonial Market, But_

Falk, B. C., August 16, 1908.

Editor.—For over six months I have been an ardent though silent admirer of the W. H. M., particularly interested in the cupid correspondence.

May I give some of my impressions of Canada to your readers I have been in Canada over two years. Am a native of the great commercial centre of Scotland, Glasgow.

There seems to be a great many difficulties between English settlers and native Canadians. I myself think it is pure incompatibility of temper. However, I don't mean to dwell on this subject. Allow me only to say that there are grumblers everywhere in this world and in every nationality.

Having been around quite a bit, I have seen much and learned a little, I hope, and gained some experience though it has been at my own expense often.

Tiring of the many and tedious conventionalities in the Old Country, I decided to come to Canada, and can't say I regret doing so. I am quite happy and contented in Canada, though there is often just the faintest suspicion of homesickness when I chance to meet a Glasgow Westender from my old home. However, I hope soon to make a trip to "Auld Scotland." I have no parents to go home to and see but many sincere and valued friends.

I think when a person emigrates to another land their first duty is to do their best to assimilate themselves to the natives so far as it does not hurt their feelings or their dignity. One can be proud of one's country, of its various good institutions and at the same time respect other people's usages and method of living. Now, to conclude I must say I have found the native English speaking Canadians very kind and broad minded.

A few months ago I was a stenographer in Calgary but since then I have ventured further into the Golden West. I may say my designation is somewhat altered, but am pleased to say for the better. I like my new home and environments. It is all a very delightful change after Calgary. Though the place is small, one need not tire or feel dull. There are innumerable pastimes, such as boating, riding, sho

Farmer's Daughter, Likes Parm Life.

Manitoba, Aug. 20, 1908.
Editor.—I have been a silent reader of your splendid magazine for some time and have become interested in the correspondence columns. I think some of the girls are rather hard on the bachelors. Some girls say they would not like a man that smokes. I have no objection to a man smoking a little after like a man that smokes. I have no objection to a man smoking a little after he has done a hard day's work.

I am a farmer's daughter and like farm life very much. I have had my turn at mowing hay and driving the binder, but I think it's very tiresome to be out in the hot sun all day. I don't see any harm in a woman doing a little work out of doors when she has finished her housework, such as milk a few cows, attend the chickens and weed the garden.

I notice it is the custom to give a 6 inches tall, am fair with brown hair and charming brown eyes, and am considered good looking; as for my age, I am in the 'teens. I am a splendid cook and good housekeeper. Am fond of dancing, horseback riding and all kinds of sports. If any good looking young farmer wishes to correspond with me my address is with the editor.

keep the kidneys well and strong. Even when there are no severe pains or dizzy spells, three or four Gin Pills a day will keep the Kidneys flushed and free from accumulations and in perfect order so that they can perform their work of filtering the impurities from the blood, and thereby keep up the vigor and vitality of youth.

HALIFAX, N.S., Feb. 12.

"I have suffered from sick kidneys for about five years and had got very little relief from various medicines I had taken, until I tried Gin Pills which gave me instant relief. I cannot speak too highly of them and will recommend them to my friends."

MRS. M. LAWRENCE.

Don't make the mistake of neglecting your kidneys. Pains in the back and limbs are not "signs of old age." They are signs of kidney trouble. Get Gin Pills to-day and see how quickly you improve.

Gin Pills are guaranteed to cure or money refunded. For sale by all druggists and medicine dealers at 50c. a box or—6 for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your dealer does not handle them.

We have such unbounded faith in the curative qualities of Gin Pills that we will let you test them free. Mention this paper and we will send you a sample box free of change.

"She was a mite taller than Harriet, and as pretty as a picture, with them big Lee eyes, brown as chest-nuts, But I see right off there was a worn place in the rug before her glass, and she was dreadful high-falutin' at first. But pretty soon she melted and took Mary Ellen up-stairs.

fourteen. I was feeling I needed something, and thought it might be a change. Cousin Harriet had always said to pack right up and come along any time. So I put my butter-money in a black silk, and plaid collar and cuffs on Mary Ellen's gray delaine, and went down to Willsburg.

"It'd been ten years since I'd visited Harriet, and I was mighty glad I had that black silk when I see where she lived. 'Twas a white house setting back in a yard that looked like the grass was shaved with a razor. Harriet come to the door, looking pretty and blooming. Them Lees always did wear well. She was dreadful glad to see us, and we had a cup of tea in

"I hadn't seen Carrie since she was a little girl, and I was wondering how she looked and why she didn't come visiting Harriet, but I hadn't been there a day this time before I see she had something on her mind. I knew 'twasn't money matters, 'cause Phi ander had left forty thousand divided even 'twixt 'em, and Harriet was always a master hand at managing. So I guessed right off 'twas Carrie, and that night I gave her a chance to relieve her mind.

"'I s'pose Carrie's got lots of beaus," says I. ""Twould be only natural, says

Harriet, kind of sighing.
"'Natural,' says I. 'The prettiest girl in town, with twenty thousand dollars, and more coming from her mother. It's the naturalest thing in the world. You ain't sighing about that, are you?' says I.

"'Well, to be plain, Cousin Eudora,' says she, 'Carrie's what you might call half engaged to a Harold Kent,

JOHN A. HERRON, P.O. BOX 811, Winnipeg, Canada

a bank-clerk. I never liked him from the first,' says she, 'though I could'nt really tell why, and he'd been waiting on Carrie some time before I found out that he was unfit to be trusted, and holds his place only through his father's influence. He's handsome, and Carrie thinks she loves him. I'm trying to use discretion,' says she. 'So I'm not saying he's not nice, but just that she's too young, and to wait a while; for though Carrie can't be drove an inch, she's got lots of common sense, and I'm depending that in time something will happen to show her what he really is.'

"'Ain't there anybody else?' says I.
"'Yes, there is,' says she, 'and I'd like him for a son the best kind; but his name is John Smith, and the very idea seems to make Carrie faint. She'll get over it in time, but now Carrie writes her own name with a 'y," and lives up to it strictly,' says she.

"Well, I soon got acquainted with them young men. John Smith showed pain enough he was the kind that would help in a pinch on wash-days; but the other one would have been standing on the corner, smoking cigarettes bought with Carrie's money, in less'n a month. 'Twas just sticking out all over him, though he was mighty pretty. He had the whitest teeth and the reddest cheeks and the blackest eyes ever I see on a man. I didn't blame Harriet for being worried. It must be real disconcerting for a girl to have such languishing eyes turned on her.

"Well, Harriet kept us on the jump having a good time, and one night we was all going to a G.A.R., where there was to be speeches and singing first and dancing afterwards. At the last minute Harriet gets a headache, and sent me and Mary Ellen with Carrie and Harold Kent.

"While I was waiting in Harriet's room for Carrie to get ready, she comes in and begins to turn kind of dissatisfied like before the glass.

"'I need more fullness behind, don't nuther?' says she.

'Why, dear, I think there's plenty,' says Harriet. "But bustles was all the style, and Carrie a-setting so much by the style, she goes out and comes back sticking out in the rear more amazing than before.

"'Carrie,' says Harriet, 'be sure youv'e got that thing fastened well. I can't get used to 'em, Eudora,' says 'They are as bad as the she to me. hoop-skirts you and me used to wear.'

"Just then Mary Ellen came in with her skirt hiken up at the bottom from having to stick out so far further up. Mary Ellen was wanting me to call her Maree Elaine by that time, same as Carrie did.

"'Mar-ee Elaine,' says I, 'there's something that'll have to come off before we appear in public.'

"And when she took it off I see twas a lot of newspapers bunched up and tied with red tape.
"Well, the songs and speeches at the G.A.R. was real interesting, but the young folks could hardly wait to get to dancing. Mary Ellen and me sat and watched 'em. Carrie was looking as pretty as a pink, with her hair frizzled a mite more, and she sticking out a mite further behind, than any girl in the room.

"'Cousin Carrie's the prettiest, and she's the stylishest, too,' Mary Ellen whispers; which was true.

"Well, they had just finished what they call a gallup, when they go scootand hopping across the room like all possessed, and they was a-panting and a-fanning and a-giggling, the girls a-pushing in hair-pins that was a-dropping out, while they rushed for seats, when what should I see right in the middle of the floor but a bigpaper bustle with red tape strings.

'It's the judgment of the Lord,' thinks I.

"Well, when the crowd got set down and seen it, too, every girl looked scared to death, and there was the loudest hush you ever heard. Then up umps Harold Kent, and with a whoop he goes skating across the floor and grabs up that bustle. 'Somebody's dropped their mail, says he, with a big horse-laugh, a-tossing the bustle up in the air. In a minute some of the others rushed out, and they commenced a-pitching that thing around, with everbody a-sniggering.

"Carrie had set down side of me, and I see her give one desperate feel behind and then begin to turn red and white by turns. But all them Lees has got grit as would polish emery.

"Just then that bustle dropped right before us, and I see that one of the papers had the yellow name-slip on. I seen Carrie see it, too, and she looked like Belshazzar couldn't tell her nothing about handwriting on the wall. They had been too busy apitching it around to notice the owner's name.

"Just then I see John Smith get up and go out into the crowd, and pretty soon the bustle disappeared and things settled down.

"By that time Carrie was as cool as a cucumber. 'Don't give up your seat to anyone, Cousin Eudora,' she whisperered to me, 'and keep close behind me when we go home." "Pretty soon a young man comes up and asks her to dance.

"'Iv'e sprained my ankle a little, but maybe I can,' says she, standing up, giving a little scream, and setting right down again. 'Well, you see I can't,' says she. "Me a-being on one side and an effset in the wall on the other, no-body could see what Carrie'd lost when she stood up. "When we was ready to go, Harold brought her things, and Mary Ellen and me slipped out so close behind we got out on the street without anybody noticing. "Carrie would not have a carriage. 'cause he would have to help her in, but limped along as talkative and pleasant as a basket of chips; but I noticed she began to call him Mr.

"That was a ridiculous happening to-night, says he.

"'Disgusting, says she. I was sorry to have Cousin Eudora see such an exhibition.

"'Oh, you need'nt mind me,' says 'I've seen ill-mannered folks be-

"Well, I could just see him settle in his collar, and pretty soon he begins to try and look over his shoulder. Every time he'd try to look, Carrie'd turn quick as a flash and kind of walk sidewise while she talked to me. And once in turning they bumped heads.

"'Oh, excuse me, says he.
"'You're excusable, Mr. Kent, says

"Well, then I guess he got kind of deperate to know the worst, for he said he'd dropped his watch-charm. I mistrusted he had it in his hand ail the time, but we all helped look while he pawed around on the ground and tried to get in the rear of Carrie. which, howsomever, he couldn't do, she being a little lame, but as hoppy as a sparrow. When we got to the gate, he swings it open and stands back for her to pass.
"'Would you mind helping me to the lounge in the hall?' says she, as sweet as sugar, and holding tight to his side till she got set down there. 'And now a thousand thanks for your kind and thoughtful protection to-night, says she, in a voice that kind of pushed him out of the door.

"Cousin Harriet come down the stairs in her wrapper while Carrie was a-setting there on the lounge, staring at the wall.

"'Carrie's sprained her ankle,' says Mary Ellen, as innocent as could be. "In a minute Harriet was on her knees, taking off the shoe and stocking from the foot Carrie held out.

"'Oh, come, it ain't her foot that's hurting her, it's her bustle,' says I

Have You Rheumatism?

A Home Treatment Made Up of Simple Remedies.

Costs Nothing To Try.

Try Like I Did Under Like Conditions. John A. Smith.

For rheumatism, that horrible plague, I found a simple remedy and in order that every suffering reader may learn about it, I will gladly mail him a box free. This marvellous remedy I found by a lucky chance while an invalid from rheumatism, and since it cured me it has cured hundreds of others, among the cases of over 30 or 40 years standing. In Fountain City, Wis., it cured an old gentleman who had suffered 33 years, and after seven doctors had tried in vain. In Marion, Ohio, it cured a lady who had been bedfast for thirteen weeks. In Palmer, Nebr., it cured a lady 64 years old. In Bennington, Vt., it cured an old gentleman who had been lame for 20 years. In Stayner, Ont., it enabled a lady to abandon her crutches. In Englewood, Ohio, it cured a gentleman of 67, who had suffered 18 years.

Never before has a remedy for rheumatism Never before has a remedy for rheumatism been so highly endorsed as this. Among the eminent people who have endorsed it are Eugene H. Plumacher, United States Consul, Maracaibo; Publisher of "Health," London, England; Doctor Quintero, of the University of Venezuela; Stevenson Mac Adams, F.J.C., F.C.S., of Ana vitical Laboratory, Surgeons' Hall, Edinburgh, Scotland, and many others. dying to laugh, but knowing by Carrie's looks 'twas best not to.

"At that Carrie dives her head for the sofa-pillows like a duck after a fish. 'Oh, mother,' says she, 'it was awful, perfectly awful!' Then she commenced to cry, so I had to explain past happenings. 'I hate him, mother,' sobs Carrie. 'The ungentle-

"'Why, dear,' says Harriet, 'it was just thoughtlessness. "'Thoughtlessness!' says Carrie.

Well, he'll get over it with some other girl. Suppose it had been his own sister, mother: suppose it had been me, and it was me, says she,

"'But Carrie,' says Harriet, 'he "'Never!' says Carrie, a-setting up as straight as a pine. 'Jack Smith is too chivalrous to shame any girl like that. It was he who got it, mother, and he couldn't have known it was

"'Harold is so handsome,' says Harriet, kind of meditative-like. "'Handsome' says Carrie. 'I wish, mother, you could have seen him as he stood there tossing up that bustle.'

And with that she run up-stairs.
"Well, when I was in bed, Harriet come in soft-like, and she knelt down by the bed, kind of laughing and cry-ing. 'It's a small thing, Eudora,' says she, 'but small things are what turn the scale in such affairs, for she never really loved him. I was often provoked at the extremes to which Car-

"Well, Harold Kent began to call oftener than ever after that. Sometimes Carrie would see him and have some tea."

sometimes she wouldn't, and most of the time John Smith was there when she did.

"It wasn't long before I see how things was drifting, and one evening Carrie and John Smith went out to walk, and they took Mary Ellen along. When they got back they come into the room where Harriet and me was setting.

"'Mother', says Carrie, a-blushing and dimpling, 'I am Mrs. Smith now.'

"Harriet gets right up and puts her arms around John Smith's neck.'

'Jack,' says she, 'I've known you ever since you first opened your eyes, and there ain't a minute of the time I wouldn't have been proud to have you for a son.' Then she and Carrie went out, and having a chance I see no harm in settling a few points that was a-bothering me.

"'Ask anything that you like,

"'Did you get that bustle?' says I, plump out.
"'Did you know 'twas Carrie's?'

he, 'I believe I did.
"'Cousin Eudora,' says he, his eyes a-twinkling, but otherwise looking as sober as a judge, 'in answering that question I must depend on your discretion, for if my wife should know, I mistrust our domestic peace would be ruffled; but the truth is, that bustle was so all-fired big I knew at

Visionaries Encourage Progress of World.

By JAMES W. THOMPSON.

not hold the mirror up to nature, as can the dramatist, for the dramatist, for the society he portrays has not its like in the earth. He is an encourager of progress. He teaches men that they may "rise on stepping stones of their dead selves to higher things." Or, in the admirable words of Mr. Hobson, "If we are to take a scientific view of his we are to take a scientific view of human efforts and satisfaction, such as shall furnish a basis of social reform, we must have a social ideal constructed of human facts and human possibilities, but transcending existing facts and furnishing a test for conduct."

The French philosopher, August Comte, in the middle of the last century, thought that Utopian literature was a thought that Utopian literature was a species of inventive art likely to be much employed. Every great political change, he claimed, had been ushered in one or two centuries beforehand by some corresponding Utopia which he defined as "the esthetic genius of humanity working under an imperfect sense of the circumstances and requiresense of the circumstances and requirements of the case." Ideal politics, then, teach men to hope for and to strive after a better order of things. The practical value of cherishing a social or political ideal is that the ideal becomes a standard of judgment of the actual, a criterion of conduct, a source of inspir-

The cherishing of an ideal has a practical value. Without ideals the future would hang before men in tatters. It will never do to attempt to draw the line sharply between the ideal and what the man-in-the-street may coldly regard as "practical." Witness Robert Owen, who established in England the ideals of a first rate business man, and Lord Shaftesbury, the "organizer of social sympathy." The relation of the social ideal to any existing social condition is this: that the ideal is latent in the actual. The unapprehended aspirations of ual. The unapprehended aspirations of one age may become the realization of the next. The mission of the idealist is that of the prophet and the poet.

The moral standard is determined by social requirements. The criminal or "unsocial individual," to use the technical language of the sociologist, who regards crime as a pathological manifestation, adheres to standards below

HAT is the function of the Utopian philosopher? He canstate of things, else there would be no progress. The need to promote the advancement of moral, social, political ideas is, therefore, the function of the Utopian philosopher, the duty of the dreamer. The ideal state of society implies harmonious relation between the highest degree of social intelligence and the perfect adjustment of social tasks. These two conditions are logically and morally inseparable. Primarily, social questions are ones of conscience and method method.

There is a wide difference between old fashioned Utopias, like Plato's "republic" or More's "Utopia," and modern Utopian literature. With few exceptions, modern Utopias deal with natural society. The Utopias of ancient days dealt with an imaginary or artificial society. But this difference is not all Lieber in his work on civil liberty all. Lieber in his work on civil liberty has made the keen observation that "nearly all political writers who had indulged in creative Utopias" (he was writing fifty years ago) had "followed so closely the ancient writers that they rose no higher than communism." In other words, until recent years, political and social visionaries, though they look towards the future, steered by the stars towards the future, steered by the stars of the ancient world, heedless of the fact that even stars of the first magnitude may become insignificant lights in the firmament in the course of ages.

Utopian ideals may not be a feasible method of bettering society, but Utopian ideals certainly will always be in the moral world what oxygen and nitrogen, salt and water are in material nature salt and water are in material nature—the saving elements. The present expectations of the historian and the sociologist do not look ahead for a Utopia like that of More, or Plato, or Campanella. But scientific, progressive reform, enough to stir men to larger action, transcending human conditions as they now exist, but not divorced from them, may be the common meeting ground for co-operative work by both conservative and radical, the matter of fact and the dreamer, the practical man and the doctrinaire. This is, in fact, the highest sort of practical politics. As Huxley said, "The organization of society upon a new and purely scientific basis is not only practicable, but it is the only political object much worth fighting for." Have we no need ever of the eternal vigilance of the political dreameternal vigilance of the political dreamthe plane of the people among whom he lives and upon whom he preys. pessimism about everything just now. The Jeremiahs have been on the rampage; the dismal and doleful would-be experts have all been regarding other people as melancholy and things as de-cadent as themselves. With them cadent as themselves. everything is wrong, from latitude and longitude to the government. Not content with their universal wailing at the decay of home life, of mere man, of all conquering woman, they have started a crusade against the babies, actual, potential, and to come.
Now babies are what their mothers make them. A man's reformation must begin with his grandmother.

The current standards of judgment of men-territory and birth rates-are wrong. Megalomania is a disease. Now size is everything; numbers the supreme test. This is nonsense. Bigness is not greatness; numbers are not quality, mere avoirdupois not strength—look at Russia. If so the Japanese, the Goorkhas, and other small but virile people are doomed, and in the megalomaniac's balance are tried and found wanting.

Personally, I am not, under all circumstances, for a desolating flood of babies. The number of a family is to me less than their quality. What is more, some regard should be paid to the mother, who too often pays need-lessly for the price of excessive maternity, either by her enfeeblement or by her death. On the other hand, every healthy, marriageable woman cught to marry. Better a baby in her arms than a dog in her lap, bottles in her boudoir and vain regrets in her lonely childless life. Every married woman ought to have some children; but I disagree entirely that she ought to rear indiscriminately and without regard to fitness, means, home and environment, all the children that, apart from choice, disposition, and sustainable capacity, she is capable of being maternally responsible for. I knew an instance of a man whose wife bore to him nine children in ten years. The mother died with the arrival of the ninth. He was a brute; she was his victim.

On the other hand, there are too many women here, and it is the same, or worse, in other countries, to whom sacred, enviable, necessary maternity is a burden, a social handicap, a domestic convenience. Poor, silly, foolish creatures! As the years go inevitably they will find, to their loss, cost, ill-health, unhappiness, and shame, that they who never gathered, never garnered, never will enjoy. There is no human joy on earth equal to the maternal instinct, duly satisfied, properly enjoyed. I never realize how much man has lost in perfect happiness than when I see, enjoy and frankly envy the all absorbing ecstasy of a happy mother fondling a healthy child. And this joy to the individual, this duty to the race, this profitable investment for a healthy, Lovely colored Views of Winnipeg and middle, and happy feminine old age, is thrown away for the transient caprice of fashion, the dead sea fruit of society, and to preserve for a few fleeting months the mold of human form, the artificial symmetry of waist, and be the cynosure of silly eyes.

But we must be careful in generalizing about the birth rate. We cannot dogmatize about the number there should be in a family—that is governed by the individual case of mother. And we cannot determine the number of children a woman should rearthat is governed by a good many things, mostly impersonal. The cheerful thing to note is that the marriage rate is either steady or slightly rising; and where it occasionally falls it is often due to economic and commercial, rather than social or personal reasons. The illegitimate births show a substantial decline, and there is a serious increase of births over deaths, and the fact is, a falling birth rate often indicates a rising increase of population.

There is a shameless spirit of I believe that the small reduction in birth rate has been exaggerated, attributed often to wrong causes, is not the evil "large family" advocates assert, is, under certain circumstances, as beneficial for individuals as it is prudent for nations. The decline is a consequence inseparable from the townward drift of the populations of the world. I am afraid it cannot be resisted.

The causes for this reduction are numerous and difficult to define. The disproportionate growth of pleasure, properly disciplined, in itself is not bad. The economic emancipation of woman, her entrance into work prevwoman, her entrance into work previously done by men, mistaken views about matrimony, that wiser education will correct; in many cases it is a social misfortune, as the great quality there displayed would, if diverted to matrimony and motherhood, be a great gain to all children and the community. But it is foolish to blame these good women for a really gen-

The neurotic tendency of some women, the pernicious habit of drinking, among others, the housing, and other restrictions inseparable from congested urban life, all these are contribut-ory causes. The general raising of the standard of comfort is partly responsible, as "a rich man for luck and a poor man for children" expresses a social fact as well as a physiological law.

It is not an accident, nor due to personal regulation that a wealthy London district should have an infantile mortality of 80 to 100 per 1000, and its poor district ranging from 274 to 400 per 1,000 per annum; and that a similar difference in the same districts at the end of life at the same ages should prevail between rich and poor.

I believe that as the poor in that district socially improve and approximate towards their wealthy fellows, its infantile mortality will decrease, its age mortality lengthen; but its birth rate will correspondingly diminish; and I believe the three conditions go hand in hand and are good.

The reduction in the birth rate concerns me less than the salvation of the babies that arrive. The regrettable and criminal infant mortality after the lowering birth rate has been achieved must be stopped. It is a cruel, wasteful and deplorable condition that is responsible for poor people marrying more than the rich, rearing up to a certain age double the children, and then, after the risk and burden of maternity has been incurred, having to lose from two to four times the number of their offspring up to the age of 5, as compared with their richer neighbors.

Celibacy is the crime, not the lower birth rate of a healthier, stronger, wiser, yet smaller family. Marriage is the virtue, not the greatest progeny. The punishment for celibacy is exhaustion, and worse in the man. The penalty to the woman for loss of maternity is loss of health, a diminished fund of dutiful enjoyment, a limitation of that inherent power to sacrifice that maternity gives, but also takes, and, in taking perpetuates the race, ennobles the mother, and exalts her to the highest pinnacle of social admiration.

To the bachelors, my charitable pity. To the spinsters, my commiseration and regrets.

To the glorious mothers of not over large families, my compliments, respects, and everlasting homage.

Men and Women Boomerang Targets

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

How often we hear the phrase, rest assured, the boomerang of ad-But no truer words were ever inspired by the divine sources of all truth. whether your bread is sweet or sour, wholesome or poisonous, it shall return to you "after many days." Thought is a boomerang. It sometimes is long in proving itself to be of this reacting nature; but the greater the delay the stronger will be its force when the backward swing begins.

There was a man who set forth early in life to accumulate a fortune. He said to himself: "All is fair in love and war." The love of gaining an independence for my mature life and the warfare such an effort necessitates must be included in that aphorism. No man can be blamed for selfishness in business matters-it is a part of financial acumen. But I must not antagonize the moral world. I will join a church, and subscribe to charitable organizations. Then I will go forth and get the better of my fellow men who are scrambling for the almighty dollar. 'To the victors belong the spoils, to the swift the race.'" So he spares neither friend nor foe as he proceeds on his way. He considers friendship and business as two distinct relations! No man, from whom he can squeeze a dollar by any process, however objectionable, is to be leniently treated because he is a friend.

"Let each man look out for himself. Self-preservation is nature's first law." This is the way he reasons. He makes his millions; he builds a church and endows a hospital.

But he finds life unsatisfactory and wealth disappointing. At middle age, when contentment of achievement should be his, his heart is filled with dissatisfaction and loneliness. He com-plains that humanity is selfish, and that no one cares for him save for what he can give in a material sense. His own children are mercenary and ungrateful, and he finds the world a cold and dreary place as he gazes down the valley of old age. His boomerang has struck him! The thoughts he sent out secretly all through early life-loveless, selfish thoughts-have surrounded him with loveless, selfish people, who regard him in the light of a money bag—the thing he sought to be.

Two men start together in life, and one makes a deity of his appetite; the other starves himself, and goes without the necessities of a comfortable existence in order to save his pennies and gain wealth. The one who gives full license to every appetite finds his gold turned to a demon before he has proceeded half way on his journey-and the boomerang strikes him with stunning force. He is a wretch, his life a

The one who has taken the other extreme waits longer for the same result, but it comes inevitably. When he has obtained the prize of wealth he sought, and endeavors to enjoy himself, he discovers that he has lost the power of enjoyment. He denied himself books music and social relationship so long that the brain cells, intended by nature to give intensity to those methods of recreation, have dried and withered away. He canot concentrate his mind upon a book, and his ear has lost the art of conveying pleasure to the senses through musical sounds. Absence from social gatherings has given him a consciousness of unfitness when he attempts to associate with his friends and discuss anything but business; and his digestive organs, for years accustomed to a monotonous diet, refuse assimilate more nutritious food. He has wealth, but it is useless to afford him happiness. His boomerang of avarice and miserly economy has struck

Are you constantly criticizing your associates and your neighbors, even to yourself? Are you thinking how many faults they display, and dwelling upon their shortcomings and errors? Then,

"Cast thy bread upon the waters; for verse criticism will strike you, by and thou shalt find it after many days." by, and you will be grieved and wounded by the comments of people on your own conduct.

The habit of restless discontent and unhappiness is the worst boomerang of There is a discontent which is wholesome and creative of better things. But the discontent I refer to is that which causes a man or woman to be forever despising to-day, regretting yesterday, and longing for an imaginary to-morrow, when dreams will come true. For such a person there is no to-morrow. There are men who, as boys, hated school life, and longed to get into business; yet, once in business, they complain of its hardships and sigh for the lost days of boyhood, but work on, doggedly, in the hope of being able to retire in time, and enjoy life in travel and social relaxation and domestic contentment. They do not realize the truth that happiness must be practical all along the journey of or it never can be put into exercise

Unless we find something every day to be happpy over, we never shall be able to enjoy fully any blessing which may come to us. Continual discontent shapes the mind for unhappiness, and no amount of good luck can twist it back into harmonious proportions.

The man who never has learned the lesson of contentment and happiness in some degree in his hard days never will find it in his easy ones. When he undertakes to enjoy travel, society, or home, he will find the only demon of unrest is with him—his relentless boomerang.

This special order of boomerang more frequently strikes women than men. Women are more restless and discontented than men, as a rule. A man's discontent more frequently is constructive a woman's destructive. I have known many women who made a constant outcry against the cares of housekeeping, and who, as soon as they abandoned these cares, mourned for the lost comforts of the home; women who craved travel, and hated its discomforts the moment they set forth; women who craved the mountains when they were at the seashore, and the seashore when on the mountains. What pitiful targets for their own boomerangs they will be in their old age! for what is more dreadful than old age which has not learned repose or calm, or the contentment of patience?

There is another boomerang-of disloyal thought-which many people, both men and women suffer from. They blame fate instead of their own minds for their bruises. The disloyal friend or the faithless lover, sets currents in action which inevitably must bring disaster in time. I do not mean the friend who outgrows the other, the lover who finds it impossible to continue loving. Those sad experiences sometimes occur with the most loyal! But I refer to those who repay trust with trickery, confidence with deceit, yet who cry out against cruel destiny when they are forced to suffer from the same qualities in others. It is in the nature of human events that every mortal must pass through trials and sufferings of various kinds during a lifetime; no one is exempt. Sorrow is the soul's gymnasium.

But, whatever forms the main features of our earthly lives-success of failure, usefulness of uselessness, health or sickness, peace or discord, comfort or misery—can be traced back to our own mental emanations, which persistently have gone forth to create conditions and bring natural results.

It may hurt one's self-love to acknowledge this, but it is true.

Our thoughts are shaping unmade spheres, And, like a blessing or a curse,

They thunder down the formless

A Talk about Yourself

Now just sit down with me, so to speak, and let us have a short, plain talk about Stomach Troubles and Dyspepsia. If you have that ailment, or have any friend who suffers from it, you will be glad to know just what it is, and what it isn't. Most people have no idea what is inside of them, or how they are made. To them disease is simply a name for various kinds of pains and aches. They have no better knowledge or idea of the operations that go on inside their own bodies than they have of the interior of the moon. They swallow medicine as blindly as men follow the politicans, and women follow the fashions. The pro-prietors of Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup desire that people should use this medicine, not in the dark, but with a clear understanding of why they use it, and the process by which it helps them. And this is why we are going to make this talk as short and as plain as we can make it.

All the food you eat goes down into a little bag or sac, called the stomach. But it must not be allowed to lie still there. It must be disposed of somehow, for the object of food is to build up your body and to give you strength and life. So your stomach begins to work at the mass of food it holds in this way. By its power of contraction it begins to turn it over and over, and churn it up, and mix into it a fluid, formed in the walls of the stomach, called the gastric juice. After a few hours of this process, the contents of the stomach look much like a thick broth. Then all that part of it that is good for nourishment is absorbed into the walls of the stomach, and is changed into blood, and in that form is carried to every part of the body. Remember that all there is of you-every bone, every muscle, every ounce of flesh—is made out of the blood, which is merely another form of the food that was churned up in the stom-

That is digestion, and all there is of it. But how mysterious, how wonderful it is! Nature alone comprehends it. When digestion ceases the child ceases to grow, and a man declines so fast that in a few days he is dead, starved to death. What a simple and yet what a terrible thing! One point more; please fasten it in your mind: everybody who dies of any long sickness, dies of starv-ation. The doctors call diseases by a hundred hard names, but when we get down to the bottom facts, nearly every one of them is, in reality, or arises from Indigestion and Dyspepsia, or in plain words, stomach troubles. When for any reason the stomach is not able to change the food into the proper fluid mass, but lets it lie sour and rot, that is indiges-

When this becomes a habit, and is kept up for a long time, the trouble, whatever it is, has become fixed, or as it is called "chronic."

Here are some of the symptoms: Depression of spirits; a sense of heaviness in the stomach after meals; a sour taste in the mouth; belching of wind; gas, or wind in the bowels; irritable or impatient disposition; nervous alarm, worry and weariness; costiveness, or irregularity of bowels; nausea, sick-headache, dryness of skin, changeable appetite, bad dreams, and restless sleep.

Now, why should these miseries result from the mere fact that the food lies dead and useless in the stomach? Here is the reason: all this quantity of meat, bread, potatoes, and whatever else you have eaten, ferments, becomes putrid and corrupt, as it would if it stood in an open pail exposed to the sun's rays, or to the air. Presently poisonous acids and gases arise from it, which penetrate to the blood, and are thus carried to every part of the body.

Rheumatism, gout, liver complaint, kidney disease, bronchitis, consumption, eruptions on the skin, bilious disorders, and a whole string of lesser maladies arise from, or are aggravated by, this very indigestion that many people are careless and ignorant enough to think is not dangerous. The fact is that, considered in itself and as to its far-reaching effects, indigestion is responsible for more suffering and a greater loss of life than all the other so-called "diseases" put together. It has killed more people than were ever slain in war, or destroyed in epidemics, floods or accidents. It is the terrible danger, menace and fatality of our civilization. Stick a pin through that fact and study it at your leisure. If you are sick, whether you think you you are sick, whether you think you know what ails you or not, you can do no harm, and are pretty sure to do good by taking a course of the right medicine for Indigestion and Dyspepsia.

What is the right medicine? We know what we are talking about when we say the right medicine in Mother Seigel's Syrup. It is a purely vegetable compound, and will not injure the tenderest child, nor the most delivered to the same of the same cate and confirmed invalid woman. quickly relieves constipation, stimulates the torpid stomach to action, opens the pores of the skin, promotes the prop flow of bile from the liver, expels waste matters by way of the bowels, and makes life a pleasure instead of a bur den. It there is any other remedy in the world which will do this as gentland surely as Mother Seigel's Syrup wi do it, we do not know what that other remedy is, nor where to look for it.

And so ends our talk. We hope it will be of benefit to you.

NDIGESTION

AND ALL STOMACH TROUBLES Indigestion means torturing pain, intense weariness, wretched days and wakeful nights. It means starved blood, starved muscles, a starved body and a starved brain; in short it means shattered health and a broken constitution unless you root it out without delay. Mother Seigel's Syrup has no rival as a remedy for Indigestion, biliousness, and all disorders of the stomach, liver and kidneys.

One Day at Arle.

By Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett.

One day at Arle—a tiny scattered fishing hamlet on the northwestern English coast—there stood at the door of one of the cottages near the shore a woman leaning against the lintel-post and looking out; a woman who would have been apt to attract a stranger's eye, too—a woman young and handsome. This is what a first glance would have taken in; a second would have been apt to teach more and leave a less pleasant impression. She was young enough to have been girlish, but she was not girlish in the least. Her tall, lithe, well-knit figure was braced against the door-post with a tense sort of strength; her handsome face was just at this time as dark and hard in expression as if she had been a woman with years of bitter life behind her; her handsome brows were knit, her lips were set; from head to foot she looked unyielding and stern of purpose.

And neither form nor face belied her. The earliest remembrances of the coast people concerning Meg Lonas had not been over-pleasant ones. She had never been a favorite among them. The truth was, they half toored her even as the silent half feared her, even as the silent, dogged, neglected child who used to wander up and down among the rocks and on the beach, working harder for her scant living than the oldest of them. She had never a word for them, and never satisfied their curiosity upon the subject of the treatment she received from the ill-conditioned old grandfather who was her only living relative and this was her only living relative, and this peculiarity had rendered her more unpopular than anything else would have done. If she had answered their questions they might have pitied her; but as she chose to meet them with stubborn silence, they managed to show their dislike in many ways, until at last it became a settled point among them that the girl was an outcast in their midst. But even in those days she gave them back wrong for wrong and scorn for scorn; and as she grew older she grew stronger of will, less prone to forgive her many injuries and slights, and more prone to revenge them in an obstinate and bitter fashion. But as she grew older she grew handsomer, too, and the fisher boys who had jeered at her in childhood were anxious enough to gain her good-

The women flouted her still, but she defied them openly; the men found it wisest to be humble in their rough style, and her defiance of them was more scornful than her defiance of their mothers and sisters. She would revenge herself upon them, and did, until at last she met a wooer who was tender enough, it seemed, to move her. At least so people said at first; but suddenly the lover disappeared, and two or three mont's later the whole community was electrified by her sudden marriage with a suitor whom she had been wont to treat worse than all the rest. How she treated him after the marriage after the marriage nobody knew. She was more defiant and silent than ever, and gossipers gained nothing by asking questions. So at last she was left alone.

It was not the face of a tender wife waiting for a loving husband, the face that was turned toward the sea. If she had hated the man for whom she watched she could not have seemed more unbending. Ever since her visitor had left her (she had had a visitor during the morning) she had stood in the same place, even in the same position, without moving, and when at last the figure of her hysband came slouching across the sands homeward she remained motionless

And surely it was not the face of a happy husband. Not a handsome face at its dull best, it was doubly unprepossessing then as, pale and breathless, he passed the stern form in the door-way, his nervous, reluctant eyes avoiding hers.

"Yo'll find yo're dinner aw ready on th' table," she said to him as he passed into the house.

Everything was neat enough in-de. The fireplace was clean and bright, the table was set tidily, and the meal upon it was good enough in its way; but when the man entered he cast an unsteady, uncomprehending glance around, and when he had flung himself into a chair he did not attempt to touch the food, but dropped his face upon his arm on the table with a sound like a little groan.

She must have heard it, but she did not notice it even by a turn of her head, but stood erect and steadfast until he spoke to her. She might have been waiting for his words-perhaps she was.

"Tha canst come in an' say what tha has to say an' be done wi' it," he can't at last in a sullen work of the said at last in a sullen work of said at last, in a sullen, worn-out fashion.

She turned round then and faced him, harder to be met in her rigid mood than if she had been a tempest.

"Tha' knows what I ha' getten to say," she answered, her tone strained and husky with repressed fierceness, "Aye! tha knows it well enough. I ha' not much need to tell thee owt. He comn here this morning an' he towd me aw I want to know about thee, Seth Lonas—an' more, too."

"He comn to me," put in the man. She advanced toward the table and struck it once with her hand.

'Tha'st towd me a power o' lies," she said. "Tha's lied to me fro' first to last to serve they own eends, an' tha'st gained on 'em-tha'st lied me away fro' th' man as wur aw th' world to me, but th' time's comn now when thy day's o'er an' his is comn agen. Ah! thou bitter villin! Does ta mind how tha comn an' towd me Dan Morgan had gone to th' fair at Lake wi' that lass o' Barnegats? That wor a lie an' that wor th' begin-Does ta mind how tha towd me as he made light o' me when th' lads an' lasses plagued him, an' threeped 'em down as he dinna mean to marry no such like lass as mehim as wor ready to dee fur me? That wor a lie an' that wor th' eendin', as tha knew it would be, fur I spurned him fro' me th' very neest day, and wouldna listen when he tried to straighten out. But he got at th' truth at last when he wor fur fro' here, an' he browt th' truth back to me today, an' theer's th' end fur thee -husband or no.'

The man lay with his head upon his arms until she had finished, and then he looked up all white and shaken

"Wilt ta listen if I speak to thee?"

he asked.

"Aye," she answered, "listen to more lies!"

And she slipped down into a sitting posture on the door-step and sat there, her great eyes staring ou seaward, her hands lying loose upon her knee and trembling.

There was something more in her mood than resentment. In this simple gesture she had broken down as she had never broken down in her life before. There was passionate grief in her face, a wild sort of despair, such as one might see in a suddenlywounded, untamed creature. Hers was not a fair nature. I am not telling the story of a gentle, true-souled woman—I am simply relating the incidents of one bitter day whose tragic close was the ending of a rough ro-

Her life had been a long battle against the world's scorn; she had been either on the offensive or the defensive from childhood to womanhood, and then she had caught one climpse of light and warmth, clung to it yearningly for one brief hour,

Only today she had learned that she had lost it through treachery. She had not dared to believe in her bliss, even during its fairest exist. ence; and so, when light-hearted, handsome Dan Morgan's rival had many a turn as yo knowed nowt worked against him with false stories and false proofs, her fierce pride had caught at them, and her revenge had been swift and sharp. But it had fallen back upon her own head now. This very morning handsome Dan had come back to Arle, and earned his revenge, too, though he had only meant to clear himself when he told her what chance had brought to light. He had come back-her lover, the man who had conquered and sweetened her bitter nature as nothing else on earth had power to dohe had come back and found her what she was-the wife of a man for whom she had never cared, the wife of a man who had played them both false, and robbed her of the one poor gleam of joy she had ever known. She had been hard and wild enough at first, but just now, when she slipped down upon the door-step with her back turned to the wretched man withinwhen it came upon her that, traitor as he was, she herself had given him the right to take her bright-faced lover's place, and usurp his tender power—when the fresh sea-breeze blew upon her face and stirred her hair, and the warm, rare sunshine helped her to the end, so that she broke down with a sharp sob, as any other woman might have done, only

She rocked herself to and fro for a minute, wringing her hands in a passion of anguish worse than any words, but a minute later she turned on him all at once.

"All's o'er between yo an' me," she said, with fierce heat; "do yo know that? If yo wor half a mon yo woud."

canst get thee gone or I'll go mysen. Tha knows't me well enow to know I'll ne'er forgie thee for what tha's done. Aye"-with the passionate hand-wringing again-"but that wunnot undo it."

He rose and came to her, trembling like a man with the ague.

"Yo dunnot mean that theer, Meg," he said slowly. "You dunnot mean it word fur word. Think a

"Aye, but I do," she answered him, setting her white teeth, "word fur word."

"Think again, wench." And this time he staggered and caught hold of the door-post. "Is theer nowt as'll go agen th' wrong? I've lived wi' thee nigh a year, an' loved thee twenty—is theer nowt fur me? Aye, lass, dunnot be too hard. Tha was ullus harder than most womankind; try an' be a bit softer like to'rd th' mon as risked his soul because he war a mon an' darena lose thee. Tha laid thy head on my shoulder last neet. Aye, lass—lass, think o' that fur one minnit."

Perhaps she did think of it, for surely she faltered a little—what woman would not have faltered at such a moment?-but the next, the memory of the sunny, half-boyish face she had clung to with so strong a love, rushed back upon her and struck her to the heart. She remema bered the days when her life had seemed so full that she had feared her own bliss; she remembered the gallant speeches and light-hearted wiles, and all at once she cried out in a fierce impassioned voice: "I'll ne'er formie thee," she said "I'll ne'er formie thee, and she said the said forgie thee," she said—"I'll ne'er forgie thee to th' last day o' my life. What for should I? Tha's broke my heart, thou villin!" And the next minute she had pushed past him and rushed into the house.

For a minute or so after she was gone the man stood leaning against the door with a dazed look in his pale face. She meant what she said; he had known her long enough to understand that she never forgave-never forgot. Her unbroken will and stubborn strength had held her to enmities all her life, and he knew that she was not to be won by such things as won other women. knew she was harder than most women, but his dull nature could not teach him how bitter must have been the life that rendered her so. He had never thought of it—he did not think of it now. He was not blaming her, and he was scarcely blaming himself. He had tried to make her happy and had failed. There were two causes for the heavy passion of misery that was ruling him, but neither of them was remorse. His treachery had betrayed him, and he had lost the woman he had loved and worked for. Soul and body were sluggish alike, but each had its dull pang of weight and wretched-

"I've come to th' eend now surely," he said, and, dropping into her seat, he hid his face.

As he sat there a choking lump rose in his throat with a sudden click, and in a minute or so more he was wiping away hot rolling tears with the back of his rough hand.

"I'm forsook, somehow," he 'aye, I'm forsook. I'm not th' soart o' chap to tak' up wi' th' world. She wor all th' world I cared fur, an' she'll ne'er forgie me, for she's a hard un—she is. Aye! but I wur fond o' her! I wonder what she'll do—I do wonder i' my soul what she's gettin' her mind on!"

It did not occur to him to call to her or go and see what she was doing. He had always stood in some dull awe of her, even when she had been kindest, and now it seemed that they were too far apart for any possibility of approach at reconciliation. So he sat and pondered heavily, the sea air blowing upon him fresh and sweet, the sun shining soft and warm upon the house, and the few common flowers in theastrip of garden whose narrow shell walks and borders he had laid out for her himself with much clumsy planning and slow

Then he got up and took his rough working-jacket over his arm.

"I mun go down to th' Mary Anne," he said, "an work a bit, or we'll ne'er get her turned afore th' tide comes in. That boat's a moit o' trouble." And he sighed heavily.

Half-way to the gate he stopped be-fore a cluster of ground honeysuckle, and perhaps for the first time in his life was conscious of a sudden curious admiration for them.

"She's powerful fond o' such like bits o' things—posies an' such like," he said. "Them's some as I planted to please her on th' very day as we were wed. I'll tak' one or two. She's most fond on 'em-fur such a hard un.

And when he went out he held in his hand two or three slender stems hung with the tiny, pretty, humble bells. Who knows whether some subtle influence at work in soul or body, or even the air he breathed, did not prompt the novel mood.

He had these very bits of simple blossoms in his hand when he went down to where the Mary Anne lay on the beach for repairs. So his fellow-workmen said when they told the story afterward, remembering even this trivial incident.

He was in a strange frame of mind, too, they noticed, silent and heavy and absent. He did not work well, but lagged over his labor, stopping every now and then to pass the back of his hand over his brow as if to rouse himself.

"Yo look as if yo and th' missus had had a fallin' out an' yo'n getten th' worst o' th' bargain," one of his comrades said by way of rough jest. They were fond of joking with him about his love for his handsome, tacitum wife. But he did not laugh this turn wife. But he did not laugh this time as he usually did.

"Mind thy own tackle, lad," he said, dully, "an' I'll mind mine."

From that time he worked steadily among them until it was nearly time for the tide to rise. The boat they were repairing had been a difficult job to manage, as they could only work between tides, and now being hurried they lingered longer than usual. At the last minute they found it must be moved and so were deit must be moved, and so were detained.

"Nay," they argued, "it'll be all to do o'er again if we do that. Theer's plents o' time if we look sharp enow. Heave again, lads."

Then it was that with the help of straining and tugging there came a little lurch, and then it was that as the Mary Anne slipped over on her side one of the workers slipped with her, slipped half underneath her with a cry, and lay on the sand, held down by the weight that rested on him.

With his cry there broke out half a dozen others, and the men rushed up to him with frightened faces.

"Are yo hurt, Seth, lad?" they cried. "Are yo crushed or owt?"

The poor fellow stirred a little and

then looked up at them pale enough.
"Bruised a bit," he answered them, "an' sick a bit, but I dunnot think theer's any bones broke. Look sharp, chaps, an' heave her up. She's a moit o' weight on me."

They went to work again one and all, so relieved by his words that they were doubly strong, but after toiling like giants for a while they were compelled to pause for breath. In falling the boat had so buried herself in the sand that she was harder to move than ever. It had seemed simple enough at first, but it was not so simple after all. With all their efforts they had scarcely stirred her an inch, and their comrade's position interfered with almost every plan suggested. Then they tried again, but this time with less effect than before through their fatigue. When they were obliged to pause they looked at each other questioningly, and more than one of them turned a trifle paler, and at last the wisest of them spoke out.

"Lads," he said, "we canna do this oursens. Run for help, Jem Coulter, an' run wi' thy might, for it wunnot be so long before th' tide'll flow."

Up to this time the man on the sands had lain with closed eyes and set teeth, but when he heard this his eyes opened and he looked up.

"Eh!" he said, in that blind, stupid fashion. "What's that theer tha's sayin', Mester?"

"Th' tide," blurted the speaker. "I wor tellin' him to look sharp, that's aw."

The poor fellow moved restlessly.
"Ayel aye!" he said. "Look sharp—he mun do that. I didna think o' And he shut his eyes again th' tide." with a faint groan.

They strove while the messenger was gone; they strove when he returned with assistance; they strove with might and main, until not a man among them had the strength of a child, and the boldest of them were blanching with a fearful, furtive excitement none dared to show. A crowd had gathered round by this time-men willing and anxious to help, women suggesting new ideas and comforting the wounded man in rough earnest style, children cling-ing to their mother's gowns and looking on terror-stricken. Suddenly, in the midst of their mightiest efforts, a sharp, childish voice piped out from the edge of an anxious group a brief warning that struck terror to every heart that beat among them.
"Eh! Mesters!" it said, "th' tide's creepin' up a bit."

The men looked around with throbbing pulses, the women looked also, and one of the younger ones broke into a low cry. "Lord ha' mercy!" she said, "It'll sweep around th' Bend afore long an'—an'—" And she ended with a terror in her voice which told its own tale without other words.

The truth forced itself upon them all then. Women began to shriek and men to pray, but, strange to sav. the man whose life was at stake lay silent, though with ashen lips about which the muscles were tensely drawn.

His eyes searched every group in a dead despair that was yet a passion, in all its stillness.

"How long will it be?" he asked slowly at last—"th' tide? Twenty minutes?"

"Happen so," was the answer. "An' lad, lad! we canna help thee. We'n tried our best, lad," with sobs from the uncouth fellow who spoke. Theer is na one of us but ud leave a limb behind to save thee, but theer is na time-there is na-'

One deep groan and he lay still again—quite still. God knows what weight of mortal agony and desperate terror crushed him in that dead, helpless pause.

Then his eyes opened as before. "I've thowt o' deein'," he said, with a queer catch of his breath. "I've thowt o' deein', an' I've wondered how it wor an' what it felt like. I never thowt o' deein' like this here." Another pause and then:

"Which o' yo lads'll tell my missus?"

"Aye! poor chap, poor chap!" wailed the women. "Who on 'em will?"
"Howd tha noise, wenches," he said, hoarsely. "Yo daze me. Theer is na time to bring her here. I'd ha' liked to ha' said a word to her. I'd ha' liked to ha' said one word; Jem Coulter"-raising his voice - "canst tha say it fur me?"

"Aye," cried the man, choking as he spoke, "surely, surely." And he knelt down.

"Tell her 'at if it wor bad enowthis here-it wor not so bad as it mought ha' been-fur me. I mought ha' fun it worser. Tell her I'd like to ha' said a word if I could—but I couldna. I'd like to ha' heard her say one word as happen she would said if she'd been here, an' tell her 'at if she had ha' said it th' tide mought ha' comn an' welcome—but she didna, an' theer it stands." And the sob that burst from his breast was like the sob of a death-stricken "Happen"—he said next— "happen one o' yo women foak say a bit o' a prayer-yo're not so fur fro' safe sand but yo can reach it—happen one o' yo ha' a word or two as vo could say—such like as yo teach yo're babbies."

Among these was one who had-thank God, thank God!-and so, amid wails and weeping, rough men and little children alike knelt with uncovered heads and hidden eyes while this one woman faltered the prayer that was a prayer for the dying man; and when it was ended, and all rose glancing fearfully at the white line of creeping foam, this dying man for whom they had prayed lay upon his death-bed of sand the quietest of them all—quiet with a strange calm.

"Bring me my jacket," he said, "an' lay it o'er my face. Theer's a bit o' a posie in th' button-hole. I gettin it out o' th' missus's garden when I comn away. I'd like to hold it i' my hand if it's theer yet."

And as the long line of white came creeping onward they hurriedly did as he told them-laid the rough garment over his face and gave him the humble dying flowers to hold, and having done this and lingered to the last moment, one after the other dropped away with awe-stricken souls until the last was gone. And under the arch of sunny blue sky the little shining waves ran up the beach, chasing each other over the glittering sand, catching at shells and sea-weed, toying with them for a moment and then leaving them, rippling and curling and whispering, but creeping -creeping-creeping.

They gave his message to the woman he had loved with all the desperate strength of his dull yet un-changing nature; and when the man who gave it to her saw her wild, white face and hardened lips, he blundered upon some dim guess as to what that single word might have been, but the sharpest of them never knew the stubborn anguish that, following and growing day by day, crushed her fierce will and shook her heart. She was as hard as ever, they thought; but they were none of them the men or women to guess at the long-dormant instinct of womanhood and remorse that the tragedy of this one day had awakened. She had said she would never forgive him, and perhaps her very strength made it long before she did; but surely some subtle chord was touched by those heavy last words, for when, months later, her first love came back, faithful and tender, with his old tale to tell her, she would not listen.

"Nay, lad," she said, "I amna a feather to blow wi' th' wind. I've had my share o' trouble wi' men foak, an' I ha' no mind to try again. Him as lies i' th' churchyard loved me i' his way—men foak's wav is apt to be a poor un—an' I'm wore out wi' life. Dunnot come here courtin'—tak' a better woman."

just where we were to have had our picnic ground! Oh, Ernest, was there ever anything so provoking?"

Miss Maurand clasped her pink-gloved hands in tragic despair, as she stood at the entrance to the woods, in a bewitching summer costume, pink and white muslin, with a lace parasol lined with the sofest rose color, and a jeweled smelling bottle swinging from her belt by a slender gold chain.

"Hush! said Ernest Vail, who stood beside her, looking romantically handsome under the shadow of a palm leaf sombrero. "Look there!"

Just beyond them, in a glade where the turf was smooth and level as a floor a man in a coarse velveteen suit floor, a man in a coarse velveteen suit lay along the ground, listlessly supported on one elbow, while a black pipe, between his lips poisoned all the summer air—and opposite to him, a girl of twelve or thirteen was laboriously go-ing through the steps of an elaborate pas seul-a girl of gipsy darkness, with long black hair floating behind her, and arms waved picturesquely above her head, while her short spangled dress displayed the symmetry of her feet and ankles. Again and again she went through the wearisome details of the lesson-again and again the man interrupted her with bursts of angry profanity.

"Isn't that right?" said the girl, stopping short.

"Right! You grow stupider and more clumsy every day," snarled the preceptor.
"Then I'll try no longer!" said the girl, angrily throwing down her battered tamborine. 'You won't, eh?"

The man started up, with a muffled oath, and seized her savagely by one shoulder.

"Oh, Dominique," she cried, shrinking back, with a cry of mingled pain and anger, "don't beat me!"
"Stop!" Earnest Vale sprang into the glade, with eyes asparkle with indignation. "Ruffian! take you hand off that child!"

"What'll I take my hand off her for?" sullenly demanded the circus proprietor, for he it was. "The gal's mine."

"It's a lie!" flashed out the child. "I

"And all children need a good beating once in awhile," added the man, his tone softening into an obsequious whine, as he noticed the elegance of the young aristocrat's dress, and the glitter of a diamond upon his finger. "Celestine's well enough; but she gets stubborn streaks. Now, then, Fina, don't be a fool! Try it again, and p'r'aps the gentlemen'll be willin' to pay liberal for a private view, him and his pretty lady, bless her sweet face!" Violet Maurand laughed.

"Oh, yes, Ernest," said she, "make her dance. Let's have an impromptu ballet. I declare, this is quite an adventure."

'Donna Celestine," said the circus owner, scenting money in the distance, "the Tarantula! Quick!"

But Celestine's tropic face had gloomed over. "I won't! I won't! I wont!" she exclaimed, savagely. bad enough to dance in the tent before all those people. I won't dance here!"

"Didn't I tell you?" said the man to Vail, with a shrug of the shoulders. "When she gets a fit like this, no one living can stir her—no, not even if you beat her to a jelly!"

Miss Maurand turned away scornfully.

"I hate a scene," said she. "Come, is put on to extort a little more money from you?"

And slipping her hand through Ernest Vail's arm, she led him away.

That evening as Mr. Vail sat smoking in his studio, vaguely dreaming over an age," a knock came to the door, and the be his wife.

CIRCUS tent! and black-eyed circus dancer stood, eager and panting before him.

"Hello!" he exclaimed, scarcely believing his own eyes, "it's Celestine!"

"I've run away," said Celestine resolutely controlling her sobs. "Look!

See how he has beat me! And I ll

And pushing up the tattered sleeves of her dress, she showed livid black and blue welts on her arms.

Ernest uttered an involuntary expression of surprise and anger. "Did he do that?" he asked.

"Yes, and he does it often. He says he'll kill me if—if I don't bend to his will in everything. And I won't stand it. So I've run away."

"Have you no friends?" questioned Vail.

"No."

"No one to go to?"

She shook her head.

"You were kind to me," she said in a low voice. "You interfered when he was going to strike me. And I thought, perhaps, you could keep me!"

"And so I will," said Ernest, flinging away all scruples and conventional doubts. I'll go to Miss Maurand. She shall take you in as her little maid. Stay here until I come back.'

But Miss Maurand looked coldly on this plan, when it was broached to

"I never heard anything so Quix-otic in all my life," said she. "I take a thievish gipsy child like that for a maid! I'm surprised that you should propose it."

"In that case," said Vail, quietly, "I must have her boarded out somewhere.'

"But I don't see the necessity. What is she to you?" urged Miss Maurand. "A helpless creature, who has come to me in her straits, and who shall not appeal in vain."

So Celestine Chantal went to boarding-school.

It was fortunate for Ernest Vail that he was not entirely dependent on his profession for support, else he would hardly have been able to indulge in such an expensive luxury as this piece of charity. A rich and childless old uncle announced his intention of making Ernest his heir, and had already afforded him a liberal allowance. Perhaps, had such not been the case, Miss Maurand would have hesitated ere she engaged harself to the handsome young artist. For Violet had a very keen eye to busi-

"A charity child," said Miss Ignatia Livingstone, scornfully. "And a gipsy at that! I wonder—and all the girls wonder, too-how you can live on alms?

Celestine Chantal's great dusk eyes flashed with fire.

"How dare you speak so to me?"

said she. "Because it's the truth," contemptuously retorted Miss Livingstone.

You are living on charity! My aunt says so, and my aunt knows all about The next day Miss Chantal's little white bed in the south dormitory was found vacant. And Mrs. Liscombe, the principal, wrote a reluctant note, informing Mr. Vail that his young ward had "mysteriously disappeared!"

"I can sing," said Celestine to her-lf, "and I can dance! And no one shall ever twit me again with living Four years afterward Dr. Kent Wallace was called in to attend the prima donna of a little traveling opera troupe, who had contracted a sore throat. Dr. Wallace was seventy, the prima donna was only seventeen; but Cupid laughs at such discrepancies. The doctor idea of "Dido on the Shores of Carth- cured her first-then he asked her to

To be sure the old gentleman was not exactly Celestine's idea of a lover, but she was tired of singing for a beggar's pittance, sick of battling with the world, so she said "yes!"

Dr. Wallace only lived three months after he married the young singer, and Celestine found herself a widow, with an immense fortune, before she had become accustomed to being call-Mrs. Wallace."

"Two hundred thousand dollars!" said Celestine, vaguely. "What shall I ever do with so much money?"

"Your uncle dead at last?" said Mrs. Ernest Vail. "Then we shall come into our fortune, sha'n't we?"

For the late Miss Maurand was a miser at heart, and longed for wealth beyond all other things.

"I'm not so certain about that," said her husband, knitting his brows over the packet of legal documents that had just been forwarded to him. "He has left us five hundred dollars to buy mourning and that is all. For it seems the old gentleman has been married for three months, and all his property is willed to his wife!"
Whereupon Mrs. Vail went into hysterics. And Ernest was still hunting about, in a blind, masculine fashion, for the camphor bottle, when the maid announced:

"Mrs. Dr. Wallace!" Mrs. Vail sat up on the sofa and left off shrieking. Ernest stared blankly at the tall, beautiful creature in her deep weeds and liquid, questioning eyes.

"Yes," said she, with the utmost self-possession, "I am your uncle widow. But I did not know until yesterday that you were his nephew, and—until he married me—his prospective heir."

Mr. Vail bowed.
"And so," said Celestine, quietly.
"as I dont' know how to dispose of so much money, I am going to give you half of it. My lawyer has already, executed the deeds of transfer, and—"
"Stop!" said Ernest Vail. "Do you know, madam, how much money you are alienating from your own possess-

"Something over a hundred thousand dollars, isn't it?" said Mrs. Wallace. "Well what then? I shall be rich beyond my wildest anticipations even then."

"But I cannot consent to receive such a costly gift!" cried Vail.

"Ernest," interposed his wife, pulling the skirt of his velvet painting coat, "don't be a fool! We shall starve if you don't receive it!"

"And," added Mrs. Wallace, slightly hesitating and coloring a little, "it—it isn't altogether a gift. It is partly payment of an old debt."

"A—debt!"

A—debt!" "Oh, Mr. Vail, don't you remember me? Don't you remember Celestine Chantal?' He looked at her a moment-then the whole thing came back to him like a suddenly revealed vision.

"Celestine! the little circus dancer that ran away from the boardingschool! Of course I remember her! And you are Celestine?"

She placed her hand in his with a soft, radiant smile.

"You were my friend and benefactor when I was all alone in the world," said she, "and now I can pay you back a little something of the debt I owe! Oh, I am so glad—so glad!" Ernest Vail had cast his bread upon the world's waters five years agoand, verily, it had returned to him again! For no good work is ever wrought in vain!

The following fact concerning the famous Rufus Choate illustrates just what we mean.

Rufus Choate once spoke four hours. After the verdict one of the jurors said to him: "Why did you speak so long? We were with you, all but one, before you had spoken a half hour." "I knew that," said Mr. Choate, "it was after the one I was talking the last three hours and a half."

mining was the fashion; it seemed reasonable to suppose that the gold must lie deep, and be difficult to acquire; yet, in the end, deep-level mining proved an expensive failure. A more careful exploration nearer the surface was then tried, and in almost every instance bodies of ore were found that had been overlooked in the eagerness to penetrate to unknown depths—the searchers missed the gold by getting below it."

I have been "ROCKEFELLER I LIKE reading a vol-YOUR LOOKS." ume of spicy sermons by Dr.

Quayle, the new bishop of the Methodist Church in the United States. He speaks about John D. Rockefeller getting his first loan from a bank. It was a question of character and the banker thought he could judge of the young man's character by his looks. Here is the way Bishop

Quayle puts it:

"Did you read about Rockefeller who one day tried to get the incredible loan of $2,000 from a bank. He was as scared as I would be if I And the people went to ask for that much. And the people didn't much more think of lending to him than they would to me. Two thousand dollars! And the shrewd business man, the bank president, looked him over and said, 'Look here, Rockefeller, I like your looks, and I will loan it to you,' and he went away with the check in his fist and his fist in his pocket, and feeling as frisky as a colt on a spring morning with fresh pastures colt on a spring morning with fresh pastures before him and his appetite keen."

That was a splendid investment in character. How the years justify it.

"I remember," says an early biographer of Ralph Waldo Emerson, "that a pushing and vain young lecturer, who came to Concord, asked an acquaintance with whom he stayed for an introduction to Mr. Emerson, who had attended his lecture the night before. While his friend, having presented him, went out to fasten his horse, the young man asked my father to 'endorse him,' as he expressed it, 'as a lecturer.' saying that various noted literary men had done so. 'My young friend,' said Mr. Emerson, 'do you not know that there is but one person who can recommend you?' is but one person who can recommend you?" 'Why, who is that, sir?" 'Yourself."

MAKING THE MOST OF NECESSITY.

There is no circumstance in life which may not be turned into a virtue and victory. The dark hours may furnish brilliant if we only use them. When God shuts you in by limitations which are beyond your control, it may be that the Gates of Destiny are soon to open wider for you. Here is a view from the Garfield family:

Mrs. Garfield, in a letter written to her husband some years previous to his election to the Presidency, gives us a glimpse of how humble household service may be illumined by the spiritual uplift of such fellowship. She says: "I am glad to tell you that out of all the toil and disappointment of the summer just ended I have risen up to a victory; that silence of thought since you have been away has won for my spirit is a triumph. I read something like this the other day: 'There is no healthy thought without labor, and thought makes the labor happy. Perhaps this is the way I have been able to climb up higher. It came to me one morning when I was making bread. I said to myself: 'Here I am, compelled by an inevitable necessity, to make our bread this summer. Why not consider it a pleasant occupation, and make it so by trying to see what perfect bread I can make?"

"It seemed like an inspiration, and my whole life grew brighter. The very sunshine seemed flowing down through my spirit into the white loaves, and now I believe my table is furnished with better bread than ever before; and this truth, as old as creation, seems just now to have become fully mine—that I am not the shrinking slave of toil, but its regal master, making whatever I do yield to me its best fruits."

NAPOLEON'S able in the great. Why should a general who of a million men worry about such a small thing as his style of penmanship? And yet if the historian is correct, Napoleon lost his greatest battle because he could not, or would not, write plainly. We quote the following:

"Atlanta News quotes a 'European Investigator' whose statements should be remarked."

gator,' whose statements should be remembered. Says this authority: 'The handwriting of Napoleon I, we are assured by historians, lost him Waterloo.

Waterloo.

"'Grouchy could not read with exactness the message of Napoleon. Was it 'Bataille engagee' (battle is on) or 'Bataille gagnee' (battle is won)? Grouchy chose the latter significance, and not believing it necessary to press forward, arrived too late. So much for the curl of a letter, a penstroke or an illegible swell to an 'a.'

"This question was brought forward by the writing master of Alexander Dumas. 'Remember, Alexander,' the master said to him, 'the great defeat of the emperor was due only to his scrawling hand. If you wish to succeed in the world, be careful of your heavy and your light strokes.'

If Napoleon had known how to write legibly his descendants would reign today, doubtless, in France. It is the little thing oftentimes that loses or that wins."

No man can afford to ignore the small things in life. Detail determines destiny.

CARNEGIE ON "SUCCESS."

The Chicago Advance is full of good things for young men. The following article is too good to abbreviate; we give it in full.

Before an audience of graybeards at a dinner not long ago in the ball-room of the Waldorf-Astoria, Andrew Carnegie gave an address which he said he had prepared for a sort of Sunday-school class of boys who parted their hair in the middle. Said he:

"I was going to tell this Sunday-school class that a man must not be content with simply do-that a man must not be content with simply doing his duty; he must do more than his duty. He should be at his work earlier than he is required and stay later. That's the way to attract attention, which is the beginning in success—the turning point. "I remember I attracted attention that way one day. It was an attention that made me think pretty hard for two or three days afterward. I was a telegraph operator down in Pennsylvania. Over my head was T. A. Scott, that great and good railroad man. He was supposed to direct the movements of the trains on that division, I giving orders at his command. I signed his name to the orders—T. A. S.

"One day he was away. The trains were all late. The Eastern express was three hours late. The freight boys were lying about the yard waiting for orders. Remembering Nelson, I said to myself, 'Death or Westminster Abbey.' I began getting out the trains, signing all orders 'T. A. S.' Then the chief came in.

"Come, come, Andy, how did these trains get

Why, I gave the orders. I couldn't sit here like a dummy, with things getting behind and all mixed up. I have given the orders many a time with you standing over me. I knew what you would have done.

"Well, he didn't approve at all of my action to me. But I heard him say a day or so after to a big man, with little disapproval in his voice: "'Do you know what that little white-haired Scotch devil did the other night? He ran every train on the division by himself.'

That was the turning point in my career." He told of the marriage of a worthy young workingman to a rich man's daughter, exclaim-

"How does a marriage like that compare to the union with a worthless duke?"

"I was going to tell this Sunday-school class from the Genesee Valley," went on Mr. Carnegie, "that they needn't expect to weave a perfect web over. Many a time they will lie in bed and say that if they had the day's work to do over they would do something they hadn't done, cut out something they had allowed themselves to do. If any of this class of mine should ever be discouraged because they find themselves finding fault with this or that thing they have done, they must recollect that none of us is perfect."

One Man's Story of A CURE.

Had Kidney Trouble For 20 Years, Also Rheumatism and Bladder Trouble.

Franklin, Mass.—I had a bad Kidney Trouble hanging about me for over 20 years and two years ago was taken down with Rheumatism. I also had a severe Bladder Trouble come on with my sickness. I am 66 years old, and I suffered more pain that winter than I have suffered in all the rest of my life. I lost 27 pounds of flesh in three weeks and my Doctor told my wife he did not think I could get well; he thought I had Diabetes, I could walk only with the greatest difficulty. I could not dress myself or hardly turn myself in bed, and when I did itseemed as though it would about take my life. The Doctor helped me a little in some ways, but I was a very sick man when I commenced taking a trial package of Vitæ-Ore.

The Doctor helped me a little in some ways, but I was a very sick man when I commenced taking a trial package of Vitæ-Ore. I passed urine so bloody it looked almost like blood. I dropped the loctor's medicine entirely and went to taking Vitæ-Ore. The trial package helped me so much that I sent for three more packages. I gained steadily until I felt myself to be a well man, but to make sure, I still took Vitæ-Ore long after I did not feel the need of it. I don't know that I have ever in my life felt better than I have this winter. I have been in the woods and have cut wood and drawn it to my house, sawed and split it for the stove, enough for a year's stock, and feel no bad effects from it. I have got all my fiesh back, and have a splendid appetite. I do not think I would have been alive today, if it had not been for V.-O. and when I see any one troubled with Rheumatism, Kidney or Bladder Trouble, I tell them my experience with Vitæ-Ore. I took no other medicine but it in the last two years and am thankful that I need no medicine now. R. H. Holbbook.

Only a Beginning.

The six million acres of Western Canadian land under wheat this year is spread over a region eight hundred and fifty miles long—from the eastern boundary of Manitoba to the Rockies—and three hundred and fifty miles wide from the international boundary northward. And this is only a beginning of what is to be.—Manchester Guardian.

Rapid Transit in the Future.

After flying machines become perfected and flying machine factories have been built in every city doubtless some way will be discovered by which travellers can be shot across the country safely and expeditiously from the muzzles of air guns or transported in a flash by some new application of electricity. Who shall undertake to place a limit to inventive genius?—London Spectator.

Fort William Pushing Ahead.

Building permits in Fort William this year already amount to $1,250,000. The new buildings include several large business blocks, a Canadian Pacific elevator, a fire hall, a Presbyterian church, hospital addition, addition to a Methodist church, one new school, and additions to several others. Fort William is feeling the expansion of the West.—Correspondent of Duluth Herald.

Faith Translated Into Enterprise.

In the Canadian West two hundred towns have been established this year. A few years ago one could not see a farm from the train anywhere in the Regina district—it was said to be too dry to grow wheat. What does one see now The estimate is that the whole district will produce from twenty-three to twenty-five bushels per acre. What made this district to blossom as the rose? Faith, translated into enterprise.—Correspondent of London Standard.

A Promising Youngster.

Probably no Province progressed so rapidly in the first three years of Provincial status as this Province of Alberta. Its population has doubled, its larger cities have trebled in population. Its organization has been perfected, and now, according to independent critics from abroad, it is the best behaved, most law-abiding Province in the Dominion.—Correspondent of Detroit Journal.

The Meandering Saskatchewan.

The Saskatchewan is none of your little provincial rivers. It requires three big Provinces to find room to turn about in. From Prince Albert you can go up river seven hundred miles to Edmonton, or down river six hundred miles to Lake Winnipeg. That is not all of the river. There is another big branch navigable seven hundred miles more to Medicine Hat, besides various lake expansions and connections.—Montreal Gazette.

The Railways Will Be Kept Busy.

The line from Calgary to Edmonton runs through only a small corner of the West, but a resident has figured out that if fifty per cent of the land in a strip nine townships wide along this line were under crop that strip would produce 86,000,000 bushels of grain of all kinds. The country is rapidly filling up, so that in a few years this condition will be realized, and what will the railways do then, poor things?—Hamilton Herald.

A Minnesota Editor's Remarks.

A party of Minnesota editors has just been over the West. One who made an extensive trip ten years ago, writes of his journey: "Where ten years ago there was nothing but unbroken prairie for miles and miles there are now towns of five hundred, one thousand, twenty-five hundred and even five thousand "" leto-do and prosperous inhabitants, the country between the towns being dotted with good farm buildings where the 'pioneers' are contented and happy and doing well, many of them getting rich in wheat raising and mixed farming.—Toronto Globe.

A Sensible Organization.

A ladies' Short Skirt League has been formed in London. The members bind themselves to wear dresses which will not sweep the floors and pavements, and so gather up dust and microbes. This is not a new idea. In the United States they have a similar organization called the Five Inch League. Every member is pledged to at least five inches of clear space between skirt and floor. The plan is commendable in many ways, for it is appalling the way in which some women sweep the pavements with their gowns.—Vancouver Province.

New Towns by the Dozen.

Towns are springing up like mushrooms all over the West these days. Names have to be found by the dozen, but as a rule they are selected with care and the effort is to make each name local and historic as far as possible. One of the newest towns is Laird on the Dalmeny branch of the Canadian Northern Railway in the Rosthern district. This is named after the Hon. David Laird, the first Governor of the Northwest Territories, and it marks the site of the camp where one of the first indian treaties was made while he was Indian Commissioner.—Montreal Herald.

The Growth of the West,

You never heard of Granum! That just shows how many thriving towns there are in Western Canada that you do not know about. It has four grain elevators, and the fifth is under construction. It is located between Macleod and Calgary, in what used to be wholly a cattle country. Now the people have more cattle than ever, while they are shipping grain by the trainload. There are a score of Granums in Alberta that are shipping wheat this year, and which will requre in return trainloads of manufactured goods. It means more business for Canada East and West.—Hamilton Spectator.

Weird Ideas of "Colonial Life."

Nothing is more surprising to the man who goes to England from one of the colonies than the weird ideas prevailing in that country as to colonial life. He is generally supposed by the people whom he meets to have spent his life "roughing" it in a log cabin, and although his hosts may be polite enough to show no surprise when he knows what a napkin and finger bowl are there for, he will perceive, at any rate, that he is expected to consider himself in the midst of unwonted luxuries.—Quebec Telegraph.

A Lament from the East.

Elgin County, Ontario, has a problem; something of an old one, but in many respects always new. The boys and girls are leaving the farm. One of the finest and most prosperous counties in America is being destituted of its young folk by the business college and the correspondence school and the glamor and glare of city life. This is worth a lament. Goldsmith will have to arise in Elgin and sing the dirge of the deserted village. Farmers in that beautiful Garden of Eden county are more prosperous than ever before; they have more cattle and clearing and crops and huge barns worth thousands of dollars each and brick mansions, and money in the bank. But what they lack is what their ancestors had most of years ago—young folk to take up the land and do the work on the place. Great crops and no man to harvest them; hired men hard to get and harder to keep; son and daughter heir to a good farm worrying along somewhere at a few dollars a week clerking or banging a typewriter. This is the plaint of Elgin in a day when farming by machinery has lost most of the drudgery it had in the old hand days.—Canadian Courier.

The world does not produce a surplus of food products in any one year. Such accumulations of breadstuffs as exist in advance of the demand are due to various causes other than the com-plete satisfying of the world's actual need of breadstuffs.

Every continent has its as yet possibilities of productiveness, but upon a review of them all, the advantage is found to rest with the northern portion of this continent. The other continents have disadvantages with their advantages. South America, for instance, is already a great producer of food, and will be a greater; but it is remote from the great markets of the world, and the political conditions of its countries, as well as the character of the native population, are a handican. But Canada with its millions of acres handicap. But Canada, with its millions of acres of fertile land, lying between Europe, with hundreds of millions of people, and Asia still more populous, has a combination of advantages unpopulous, has a combination of acres of the company of the com matched on any other continent. The climate is in itself an incentive to effort, the transportation system is being rapidly extended, there are no difficulties to contend with on account of aboriginal population, and Canada has institutions that are tried and settled and make life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness secure. It is these facts and conditions that constitute the guarantee of Canada's rapid development and progress and prosperity.

During the past month the British Association for the Advancement of Science held its annual meeting in Dublin. Next year it will meet in Winnipeg. Ten years have elapsed since Sir William Crookes, then the President of the As-

THE WORLD satisfaction, at least, that in less than forty years the entire population of the globe would be face to face with starvation, or, at least, short rations. And this because the production of wheat could not possibly keep pace with the progressive increase of the world's population; the fact being then, as now, that the population; the fact being then, as how, that the population of our planet increases faster than the increase of the area of land under cultivation. That dire prediction of Sir William's turned inquiring minds to other food supplies. We used to read in those years of the food value of various forms of ocean vegetation, commonly known as sea-weed. Curious that the man who has devised some wholesale way for taking human life, some highly perfected means of hideous and wholesale slaughter, has always been honored as if he were a benefactor of the human race, and that conquerors who have sacrificed the greatest number to their ambition should occupy the largest part of history. Of all sports and games, that of killing was the first; and to effect the complete disappearance of that primal instinct there will have to be a complete ethical change in human nature. The speed mania of the scorching automobilist is but a manifestation of the primal instinct to rend and tear. Why should two prize-fighters be given thousands of dollars for pounding each other until one or the other is "knocked out," the affair being reported at great length in the newspapers? The same two men could not in a lifetime of honest work eart as much as they get for pounding each

What a significant saying is that of the Japanese diplomatist who remarked: "For two thousand years we kept peace with the rest of the world, and were known to it by the marvels of our delicate ethereal art and the finely wrought productions of our ingenious handicrafts, and we were accounted barbarians. But from the day in which we made war on other nations and killed many thousands of our adversaries, our claim to rank among civilized nations is at once admitted." Start James I. THE MALE the same motive that scandal-monger has. He wants to be listened to, or he has wanted to grind his axe on somebody's grindstone, and failed, or he wants to drag down to his own low level those whom he knows to be above him; in a word, he is mean, vindictive and a liar. The female gossip deserves most of the obloquy that has been heaped upon her; but at her worst, she falls far short of the male gossip as an embodiment of a working alliance between spite and ignorance, or thoughtlessness and malice.

No advocate of woman suffrage, or the other side of the Atlantic, able to controvert the assertion t reason why women do not have vote is that women do not want it.

WOMEN WHO DO NOT WANT TO YOTE in the world which has representative government make up their minds that they want the ballot, that moment it is theirs. Against the "suffragette" movement in England has arisen a formidable feminine party of protest, among the leaders of which is Mrs. Humphrey Ward. In a single fortnight 37,000 signatures were obtained to the petitions to Parliament against the granting of woman suffrage, circulated by this organization. One effect of the launching of the new movement has been the proposal that the British Government provide for a referendum of the women of Great Britain on the question. Significantly enough, the militant suffragists object strenuously to this proposal. The plan to enfranchise men, they urge, was never the subject of a referendum of men. They urge further that it would entail unnecessary delay in degling with a just claim; and they point out, moreover, that to hold such a referendum as is proposed would establish an unfortunate precedent. These are the main reasons they give for objection to a referendum of the women of Great Britain on the subject of the suffrage; but it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that the real reason is their belief as to what the result of such a referendum would be.

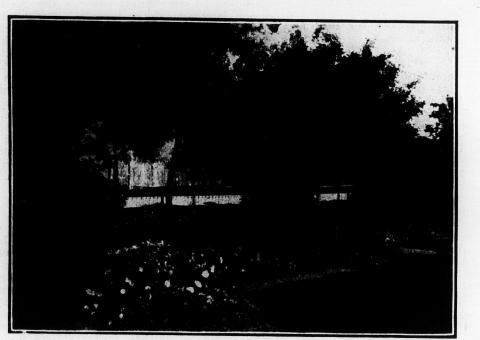

A country which bases its prosperity upon feathers might seem to be even more unwise than the man who built his house upon the sands. But Cape Colony's ostrich industry has recently experienced a revival which wealth shows that even so light IN FEATHERS. and inconstant a thing as women wear in their hats is subject to the same economic laws that control more ponderous commodities. Ostrichfarming in the seventies of the last century yielded such enormous profits as to give rise to a world-wide ostrich boom. California, Australia, South Africa and Algeria all went into the business; with the result that prices went down. And just when it was becoming possible for the humblest lady in the land to sit under her own ostrich feather, the boom burst—ostrich feathers passed out of style. In 1883 the Cape Colony growers petitioned Queen Victoria to exert herself in their behalf. But still ostrich feathers continued out of fashion. Only generals wore ostrich feathers until, a few years ago, the cycle closed and the plumes came into high favor again for women's hats. Since then Cape Colony has prospered. In 1907 it exported $7,000,000 worth. But to guard against future competition. women wear in worth. But to guard against future comp the Government has laid an export tax on every ostrich, and $25 on every ostrich egg.

of the On many Wanted-Ice. farms this hot September, I am sure that has been the cry of the busy housewife, who, with threshing gangs to feed, could not make the preparation ahead that she would have done had there been ice to keep the food in good condition. On very many farms ice is put up each winter as part of the routine work, but on far too many this provision for the comfort of the housewife and the well-being of the entire family is neglected. It is a very simple mat-ter to preserve ice. It can be done -without any building at all if it is well covered with sawdust and then a heap of straw thrown on it. The best way, however, is to make a little house of two thicknesses of boards with paper between and fill the space between the uprights with clean dry sawdust. If this is done and a drain dug so that the drip can run away the ice will keep perfectly all summer and milk cans, fresh meat, etc., can be set upon it and no refrigerator has to be provided. would suggest to the housewife who has been going without this convenience for years, that now is a very good time to agitate for it. On farms where there is neither pond nor stream from which ice can be cut it is quite possible to provide a supply by constructing an ice house in the ground and filling it by pumping water in and letting it freeze. I described this method at length in these columns once before, but if anyone, who did not see it before, wants the description, if they will write to the column I will send it to them personally. This matter of ice is a most important one and should not be overlooked. If a little house is built for it, now is the time to plan for it and then when the time comes to build the good man can go right ahead and get the work done. Where lumber is dear and poplar poles are to be had a very efficient icehouse can be constructed by making two studdings of the poles, one within the other with a ten inch space between and stuffing this space tight with straw or hay and then covering the ice inside this house with a good coating of saw-dust. I saw one of this type this summer and it worked well and was very cheaply constructed.

It has been A Pleasant Greeting. my lot to travel up and down the West for years and in my memory bag are many scraps of kindness shown to me at different points and under widely varying circumstances, and to these I added another during August when I was driving through the country inspecting wheat. It was a hot and windy August day and we had been out for some hours in the district of old Cannington Manor. Getting in and out of wheat fields is tiresome work at any time and especially so in the wind. As the afternoon advanced I grew very thirsty and finally said to the gentleman who was driving me, "Do you think we might ask for a drink of water at this house?" was a white log house with a flower garden in front and a rustic porch covered with wild hop vines. While he held the restless bronchos I walked up to the door. In reply to my rap a gentleman came and when I asked for a drink of water he said, surely, and turned to get it. but a pleasant English voice from the room beyond said, "Wouldn't you rather have a cup of tea?" and a fine looking Englishwoman came refused, so, calling to my friend to tie the horses, I entered. The room was large and cool, with a wide oldfashioned sofa, easy chairs that looked as if they were used every day and books that looked like the companions of every leisure hour. There was a great glowing bowl of nasturtiums on a little table in the centre of the room and from a corner of the sofa the most magnificent yellow cat I have ever seen rose up and made us welcome. A few moments after our hostess came in with a daintily spread tray; there was tea fresh and fragrant in a silver teapot, cream in a silver pitcher, and sugar in a silver basin, and a plate of the most delicious thin bread and butter cut from a home-made loaf. Never have I tasted tea that was so refreshing. We had a delightful half hour's chat and then it was time to be on the way again. But always there will be in my mind the picture of that homelike room and its gracious chatelaine who offered her hospitality so freely and cordially to the stranger within her gates. Her husband paused for a few moments in his work of hauling hay to chat and to pass the teacups, making a laughing apology for his coatless condition, but performing the little courtesy with the unmistakable air of one "to the manner born." This was a home of culture and refinement where the amenities of life were daily practiced and hospitality was as spontaneous as it was beautiful.

I am reminded by a friend Bulbs. who has a great deal of experience in growing bulbs that now is the time to secure and plant them. Further, she tells me that an excellent method is to plant the bulbs in the pots in which they are to be grown and bury the pots in the ground, heaping earth right over them and let them stay there until the first frost, that is, a frost sufficient to slightly freeze the surface of the ground, then take them up and gradually accustom them to the light and in a few days put them in the windows. If planted right away, they should be able to remain in the ground three weeks before there is a sufficient frost to do them any damage. Personally, I have never grown bulbs but have a number of friends who are quite enthusiastic over them and they really seem to take very little care and attention, and the results are really charming. What is more delightful than a pot of hyacinth in full bloom in the dark, dull days of December, and what could be a more acceptable Christmas gift? Now, for aught I know there are a dozen seed houses in Winnipeg supplying reliable bulbs, but my friend tells me she always gets hers from Philpots and has yet to record a failure. To the woman in the country, no matter how busy she may be, the raising of a few bulbs is possible, so long as the house does not go down to freezing during the night, and the watching of the development would sore many a woman who is far from neighbors from that feeling of utter desolation which must often overtake the woman without near neighbors. course, it is possible to go to a very high price for bulbs, but a few are within reach of almost everyone. If you do not want to try the outdoor process, place the bulbs in the pots and put the pots in the cellar in a cool, dry place and allow them to remain there for six weeks, then bring them up and start them in the windows.

The West is being Mrs. Cran. favored, at the present time, with a prolonged and careful inspection of conditions relating to women. This is being done by Mrs. Geo. R. Cran, of London, England, a member of the Society of Women Journalists and who is making the trip under the auspices of the Immigration Department of the Dominion Gov-ernment. The object of Mrs. Cran's visit is to see what class of women have a chance to succeed out here in the West. She is closely in touch with the woman question in the Old Country and knows of many educated and specially trained women who can find no opening for their talentsin the home land. She is going to try and see whether or no they could not succeed out here, and in that way make a living for themselves and at the same time lessen the burden for the women on the farms all over the West. If Mrs. Cran succeeds in solving this knotty problem she will deserve the gratitude not only of the women at home in the Old Country, but of the women on the farms of the West who are completely worn out because it is impossible to get help. There are thousands of women in the old land, who are eking out a miserable existence there, who would be a averitable Godsend to this country if it were only possible to get them into the right places. Mrs. Cran is thoroughly familiar with the Old Country side of the question and is making an posed a lasting debt of gratitude un-earnest effort to grow familiar with on the women of the Canadian West.

conditions here, so that when she writes to the "Bystander" and the "Field" and other well known publications, she will be able to set the situation clearly before intending emigrants. In this way it is hoped that she will be the means of bringing out a desirable class. Mrs. Cran is a very bright woman and assimilates facts and figures readily. Of course, it will be only possible for her to visit a limited number of places in the West, but these have been carefully selected with a view of giving her a chance of studying conditions as they exist in the various parts of the West. The Winnipeg branch of the Canadian Women's Press Club has done all in its power to assist Mrs. Cran in getting at the facts of the case. They entertained her at luncheon while she was in Winnipeg and have given her the benefit of facts and figures within their own personal knowledge. The West is starved for women workers on the farms and there are thousands of women workers in the old land who, in spite of special training and an honest desire to earn a livelihood, are unable to do so. If Mrs. Cran succeeds in ever such a small way in making a junction be-tween these two she will have im-black hair, and one o' these here musstashes that curled up at both ends," said Mr. Milo Bush. "Home-made curl, I took it. Said his name was Williams; and he was from the East, but of course he wasn't to blame for that. We was all willing to do what we could to help him to forget it and make a man of him. This here coming from New York or Boston is a drawback-itt's a drag on any man-but he can live it down if he really wants to. You may doubt. it, but I've seen it done.

"Well, we was helpful to the fellernever asked him what he had to leave the East fer, and planned to try to learn him our ways. We decided that it was our first dooty to learn him to ride Jim Doty had a bronco named Walking-Beam which we had used on sev'ral occasions before for instructing the Eastern pilgrim. In fact, Walking-Beam wa'n't used fer anything else, since he was a little too tough fer even the boys to enjoy riding. We made it a rule never to give a tenderfoot a lesson on Walking-Beam without at least two doctors right on the ground; and even then sometimes they didn't get the feller put back together right, though they had been there and seen him shook to pieces and scattered around. Walking-Beam was just the buckingest hoss that ever riz and fell. Why, you might turn him out loose, and s'pose a fly lit on his back. Did he switch his tail or wag round his head? Not much he just bucked that fly off. All the flies in town got so they knowed him, and fit shy of him. Riding him was just riding him-there was getting on and getin climbing on and regaining conscious-

"Well, the second morning says Jim to the feller, 'Stranger, might I ask if little, and turn a couple o' handsprings you're fond of equestrianeous excercise and stand on his head. And then he you're fond of equestrianeous excercise -hossback riding, as we say here?' Ye-as,' says Williams, slowlike; 'I've rid some. But I understand you have these here buckers? 'We do,' says Jim, turning his horest bloo eyes straight on the feller. 'Many of 'em, I regret to say. It comes through ignorance—they ain't broke right, Mr. Williams. Now I've got a hoss I call Feather Bed. He's Make a good fambly nag;' and he walks a saddle hoss—that's what he is. You over to the hotel. can depend on him. He's always the same. His gait-now, see here, I ain't no hand to brag, and I won't say a word about that hoss's gait. But if you would like to take him and have a look at our held a sort of an otopsy on him, and bootiful country this morning, you're more'n welcome. There ain't no better hoss west o' the Missouri River fer looking over the country with,' and he Magazine.

"He was a middle-sized man, with winked at us, meaning, of course, that you got throwed so high that you had a good view.

"The feller seemed pleased, and said he'd be glad of the chance; so Jim went down and saddled up the Beam and led him out. He never had no objections to a saddle when there was a prospect that a man was going to get on it, so he came along, 'pearing sleepy like. Jim says: 'Here you be, Mr. Williams, walking up. The doctors pushed to the front, there being a passel of about a hundred of us idjits, and the feller put his foot into the sturrup and swung on him easy and graceful.

"I'd saw Walking-Beam in a state of eruption before, but I must say I never seen him make such a savage start as he did this time. When his back went up it was like the explosion of a powder-mill. And that feller-well, there wa'n't no way of measuring how high he did go, but if anybody had had their watch out they might of timed his fall. But immejitly after he did get down you could of knocked us all over with a mint-julep straw. That feller lit on his feet—and where? On the hoss's back! Lit there like a bird. Folded his arms and stood there like a statue. Smiled, and done as he had been told-spoke to that fiving yearthquake-'Steady, there, boy, steady'-just like that. Well, at first we thought Walking-Beam was too dumfounded to move again; but he wa'n't. He looked up and seen that smiling image on his back, and then he just unlimbered and made the effort of his life. For 10 minutes his like—why, there wa'n't no such thing as | motions just simply jarred the winders in the whole town and all the time that ting off-mounting and dismounting, and feller loafing around on his bare back, that's all. Riding that hoss consisted the saddle having gone up at the first hist, and not, so far as I know, having come down yet. And not satisfied with standing there, but he must dance a took out some tobacker and rolled a cigarette, and lit it, and began to smoke, and to blow rings-you may pizen me with ice-water if he didn't. And when the hoss fell down from being exhausted, he steps off, and says he to Jim: 'Mr. Doty, that's a fine beast you've got there. Sort of a lady's hoss, I take it.

> "Circus man? That's what he was. And it broke up our sport with Walking-Beam, too, 'caus when Jim went to him he was stark dead. The doctors found his organs all right, so they just reckoned he died of grief and mortification."-Hayden Carruth, in Harper's

The effects of the anti-toxin treatment for diptheria is noticeable within a few hours, so that everyone must believe in its virtue. In a similar way the treatment known as ORANGE LILY gives a practical proof of the progress it is making in curing women's disorders, and that, too, within a few days after commencing its use.

All authorities agree that in every case of women's disorders there exists a congested condition of the womanly organs. The circulation of these parts is sluggish or stagnant, and the result is that the broken-down tis sue or waste matter which should be carried off if the blood was circulating freely, remains in these parts, causing inflammation, irritation, oppression of the nerves, etc. ORANGE LILY is not taken internally, but is applied direct to the suffering organs. It is absorbed into the circulative of the suffering organs. tion, and its antiseptic properties at once act on the waste matter referred to above. The consequence is that this waste matter which is causing the inflammation, ulcers, nervous troubles, etc., begins to be discharged, and it continues to be discharged until all the foreign matter is renoved from the circulation. At the same time the blood vessels and nerves are toned and strengthened, the nervous trouble disappears, the circulation is restored and good health follows.

Dear Mrs. Currah,—I wish to tell you that Orange Lily is doing me a great deal of good. Those ulcers come away one or two every week, and I have less pain and fewer headaches, feel sure I will be perfectly cured in a little longer time.

The explanation of the wonderful cures performed by Orange Lily is very simple. It is a scientific remedy based on the discovery of Pasteur and Lister. The conditions existing in all female troubles are alike in character, differing in degree and development only, so that a positive remedy, as Orange Lily is, acts with all the certainty of a chemical experiment. In order to convince every suffering wo man that Orange Lily will cure her, I make the following

The T. EATON CO. LTD., (Drug Dept.), Portage Avenue.

The fine weather of September has been a boon to many women who have little time and little money to devote to dress, for it has been possible to go right along wearing summer garments and particularly the wash dresses that always look so fresh and pretty, without feeling that it was anything but the right thing to do. Indeed it would not have been comfortable to wear anything but the lightest summer dresses, for many of our September days have been warmer than anything we had in August. On the farm where threshing has been the all important matter I am sure it has enabled many a woman to start her children to school without the worry of providing a new frock for fall and once started I have faith to believe the mothers will keep the children there at no small inconvenience to themselves.

Though the Childrens Clothing. change styles for women is so extreme this season there is nothing so marked about the styles for children and the pretty frock of last winter, if it has not been outgrown, can be worn again this year without fear of the child being uncomfortably conspicuous. children's hats there is a preponderance of the wide felts and beavers. These are pretty and becoming but are little use in the country where the smaller felt hats and little Dutch bonnets of plush or velvet are really better and they are quite in the mode, while unless I fail in knowledge of my country the good old fur cap will lead as headwear as the season ad-

Though it is im-Knickerbockers portant that the children be provided with something to wear upon their heads and their backs, I would like to say a word once more to the mothers of growing girls as to the need of warm knickerbockers for them for fall and winter. The woman who has been in the west a couple of winters knows this for herself, but for the woman who is preparing for her first winter here let me repeat what I have many times written before. The long walks to school across the prairies and the long rides often leave young girls much exposed to cold. The black woolen tights or bloomers which can be bought ready to put on are good in themselves but from experience I have found that they do not turn the wind like knickers of light cloth. If cloth has to be bought for these garments let me recommend cravenette as it will not only turn the wind, but to a very great extent wet also. however there is cloth about the house that is not too much worn it will do very well. In houses where there are girls and no boys it is a good scheme to utilize the parts of pants that have been discarded by their father. The cloth is generally good and if picked to pieces and washed can readily be cut to the correct fit and size. Patterns for these knickers can always be got through the pattern department. It is better to choose a pattern that is fairly wide at the knee and pretty closely fitted with darts at the top, especially in the front. With a pair of these garments to wear over her ordinary woolen drawers a girl will only need a very light petticoat if her dress is of light weight material and none at all if her skirt is of cloth. With a pair of good gaiters reaching to her knee she will be well equipped to stand the cold and to resist damp from snow in walking to and from thread, but should always be of good school and will avoid many of those evils that damp and cold suffered in her development period so frequently bring upon a girl, making her a semiinvalid for life.

Having dealt with the useful it is now in order for a word about the ornamental. The wise girl who has time to do her own sewing, makes her own underskirts rather than buys those much befrilled and beflutted garments that are for sale in the stores and which in nine cases out of ten, go to pieces on the slightest provocation and with the least amount of wear. Unless your purse is a long one or you have an old silk dress that you wish to utilize in that way, let me advise you not to try to have silk petticoats. They are delightful, I know, while they are whole and fresh, but that is never for long and when they begin to go to pieces they are a constant source of annoyance.

Silk moreen is not very much more expensive to buy by the yard than the cotton variety, it has much of the delightful rustle of silk and it wears well. This season there should be no fullness in the back of the petticoat at the waist line, it should be taken up in darts just as it is in the front. This is to accommodate the new skirts that have no fullness behind. Again the frill should begin just below, rather than above the knee, as the appearance of fulness is all at the bottom of the skirt. Four yards round the bottom is plenty for the frill to measure this season. Now presuming that you have a petticoat that is going to answer for everyday and that you want one for high days and holidays, choose a moreen that will either match or contrast prettily with your principal gowns. Greys, lavenders, purples, blues and greens are all much in evidence this season. In addition to the moreen get a vard of the best quality of furniture sateen, the kind that is closely woven and looks like satin. Choose it with a design that is distinctive and can easily be cut out in motifs. Having cut out the frill for your skirt and finished with an inch hem and two or three small tucks above it to give it substance, cut out the design from your sateen carefully, leaving a little margin around each leaf or flower if possible and proceed to applique it round the middle of your frill. This work must be done carefully, the edges cannot be turned in much or the shapes of leaves and flowers will be spoiled. but if closely tacked all round they will then hold while being stitched down by the machine. When this is done it shoud be chain stitched round with shaded silk having the same colorings as the design from the sateen. It is really not so much trouble to do this as it sounds and when done the effect is charming. Skirts of this style are worn under thin voiles and crepes of the same color as the petticoat, and the little gleams of color through the thin material are most attractive. I am sure any girl who has time to make one of these skirts will feel repaid for her trouble.

The craze for hand made Irish crochet has Handmade increased rather than Insertions diminished with the passing months and this fall there is a veritable rage for the narrow crocheted insertions and women with a little leisure and a taste for fancywork are making them by the yard for their fall gowns. They may be made either in dead white of cream crochet cotton or linen, it does not pay to make them with spool thread as it does not wear well and has not a good effect. Many of these insertions are not more than an inch wide and are used on the cuffs and collars of suits and on expensive cloth gowns, and very frequently in conjunction with black satin finishings, and the result is decidedly good. This is an opportunity for the girl with clever fingers.

For evening wear this winter there will be Fancy Hose a rage for fancy hose of all kinds, but black embroidered with colors will lead. These hose are very expensive to buy, but the girl who can embroider quickly should have no difficulty. A fine grade of cashmere should always be chosen as the work never looks well on the coarse weaves. The design may be as simple or as elaborate as you like, a pretty one I saw the other day was a small golden cornucopia from which was falling a bunch of forget-me-nots. Tiny rosebuds scattered up the instep of the hose is another favorite. The craze for fancy hose is not confined to women, men will wear them with their evening clothes and it will be quite in order for the engaged girl to present her lover with a pair of black or grey cashmere hose embroidered on the instep with a true-lovers-knot and a dainty spray of valley lily or a few forget-me-nots. If a man has a well shaped foot and good pumps these little decorations look quite fetching when he crosses one knee over the other and gives his trousers the time honored hitch that prevents them bulging at the knee. If there is a brother in the house that is just budding into manhood and has reached the stage when neckties are all important, just make him a pair of these embroidered hose and see if he does not appreciate the little attention. He is a very remarkable boyman if he does not.

The made collars on a frame are again with us, Collars very much with us indeed. They are high, they are deep, they are much beruffled, and with all they are hugely becoming to anyone with a neck of decent length but should be avoided with care by the woman who is short and broad and whose head is almost set on her shoulders. The leaders in these collars all have the high points coming up behind the ears, blessed disguise for wrinkles in the neck. Every collar has a frill round the top and the fuller the better and many of them have a frill round the bottom also, the centres being made of lace and applique.

To the girl who likes to be fore-handed with her Christmas presents let me say that this year there will be nothing more acceptable than a collar, no girl will have too many, it is not possible. They can be made up at very reasonable prices and put up in a dainty box with a little colored tissue paper there can be no more acceptable gift. Many of the collars are decorated with bows of contrasting velvet with pointed ends finished with gold or bead tassels and are extremely smart. Gold beads for the tassels can be bought by the ounce and though these are not as good as the ready made tassels of bullion they answer very nicely and look well for a long time.

This is a season of revivals in styles and among them is that of the satin tibbons with raised designs of wheat in the color of that cereal on grounds f blue, green, pink and crimson. These ribbons are used sparingly on hats but are much in vogue for the centre of the collars just written of and for belts. They are beautiful and being closely woven of a heavy make of satin will wear well. All kinds and conditions of the Dresden ribbon are worn.

Now that the harvest is ir., and you're counting upon buying this and that with the proceeds, it's worth your while to

Women in Rural Communities.

By Mrs. B. J. Livingston.

Her Education in Finance.

Nothing in her education had been neglected, except the knowledge of the purchasing value of one dollar. She was an industrious girl, born of an industrious race. All her life she had been earning money, but it had never been paid to her, cash in hand.

Instead of cash, she had received its equivalent in all that makes for happiness in a young girl's life. She was eldest in a goodly family of brothers and sisters. She had been her mother's right hand-nurse, maid, governess, second cook and housekeeper. She had prepared the children for school and gone to school with them. Then, when old enough to attend another and more advanced school, she had the privilege of being fitted out with loving care.

Her bills were all paid for her, and although her father sometimes growled at the size of them, he was proud of her school record; and the old farm was yielding a fine income.

When her school days were over, her mother needed a rest, and this girl lifted the household cares from her shoulders for two or three years. Her friends were very proud of her accomplishments. What bread she could make. How orderly the house -how bright the milk cans that as yet in a glass darkly. passed on their way to the creamery; -and with what seeming cheerfulness of nature.

There came a time when another sister could take her place in the parental home. When farmer B. captured this girl, every one was satisfied that it was an excellent match. He had a fine farm nearly paid for. It was well stocked and under good cultivation. The young bride was very happy, for she had married for love and every one approved.

Her housekeeping was a delight. Finding many conveniences lacking, that were in the old established home she had just left, she had planned simple improvements without thought of cost.

Her husband smiled indulgently and paid the bills.

When she wished to drive into town he would ask her if she didn't wish to buy something for herself. She often did, and he gave her the purse. She said she would like about five dollars, but it was more often fifteen or twenty. That year and the next, no payments were made on the farm. The young man looked grave.

When baby number one came, his arrival brought relief and comfort, for what could not a happy father do, with such a boy in his home?

The experiences of maternity kept this mother occupied as is the habit of such experiences. When the baby was about a year old, a puzzled look began to creep into her eyes. One day she put her arms around her husband's neck. "Tell me what is wrong, What is it?' dear. Are you sick? why, no, sweetheart, I'm not sicknothing is wrong." But her insistence got the truth. "It is the mortgage, dear; you see, I have paid nothing for three years." three years."

"The mortgage!" she cried, with paling lips. "I did not know."
"Why," said he, "you knew our home was not all paid for." "Yes," she was not all paid for." slowly admitted, "but papa and everyone said you would soon have it paid for—that you were paying several hundred each year." "That was true," said he, "at first. But I have paid nothing on it for three years." "For three years," she gasped, "not since our marriage." "Well, you see I had you," said he, trying to smile, "and I must have played when I should have been at work.

No sleep visited the young wife that night as she tossed on her pillow or lay staring into the darkness.

She saw glimpses of the truth, but "I meant to be such a help to him," she moaned in her heart. "How have I failed, nothing paid on the farm since I came," she said over and over again to herself.

She had noticed that he had not given her his purse for a long time, and only gave her money when she told him her need. But she had thought it only an oversight, and she did not rush into the newspaper with complaints, because she had to ask him for money whenever she wanted "Our home is comfortable," thought she; "yes, it is beautiful. But surely I have not wasted money. I have not spent it foolishly. The reproof of a thrifty Scotchman to his nephew came to Mrs. B. Said he, "Jean and I began with parritch; now we can afford chicken. You, Jamie, began with chicken, and now you have to come down to par-fault somewhere in this woman's training, can I show how she could have been better fitted for her husband's helpmeet.

A physician must diagnose a disease before he can find a remedy. I gave the clue to my theory in the first sentence. This girl had never earned a dollar and had it paid into her hand for value received.

How could she know the purchasing power of one hundred cents? One must see both sides of a dol-lar to fully understand it. The coming dollar has a very different look from the departing dollar.

You cannot censure the husband for not taking her into his confidence.

Every one knew just how his affairs stood.

Besides, he trusted his wife fully. He could not see that she had a fault. Neither could he deny her an expressed wish.

But the wife was wiser after many days of painful thought, and she saw that she should have had a part in earning the money that she had always so freely spent. For a time this caused her to lose her nerve. She began to practice penny economies. She went to the extreme-going without many things that were really needed.

She swept with the stub of an old broom until her back gave out. Used a crippled tea kettle until she scalded her foot,—sat up nights to do her family sewing.

But she was pondering all these things in her heart. An article entitled "How a woman can make money on the Farm," had no charm for her. "There is a lot of money made on this farm every year," she said to herself. "How to spend it wisely is what I need to learn."

And so this woman struggled on for years, handicapped by a flaw in her training, and losing much of the sweetness of life.

The farm was finally paid for, and beautified, while sons and daughters came to add to their happiness.

In the training of her children, this mother first heard the musical clink of money of her own earning. She had early resolved not to make the mistake with her children from which she had suffered.

So she eagerly watched for indication of any natural inclination in their young minds.

The daughter who was always making doll dresses and dresses for the kitty, earned money as a dressmaker, even before she graduated from High School. The one who cuddled the chicks up to her cheeks, and who always knew where the hens' nests were, and declared that the turkeys looked just like Uncle John when he laughed, went into partnership with mamma raising poultry.

The son who caught some honey bees and shut them up in a box with some flowers which he had plucked for them and who covered the box with glass and then lay down on the floor on his stomach to watch them make honey,—that boy became a beekeeper, and also worked two of his sisters into interest in the business.

His mother subcribed for a bee journal to come to his own name and when he became so fascinated as to work for a bee-keeper and take a swarm for pay, mamma also became a partner to her own subsequent

"They all know as much as I did," declared the mother, "and each has a money-getting occupation beside."

They had hired help at times, to allow the young people more freedom of action, but it was not done till the habits of industry had been formed, and the child first showed true and steady in the work in hand. Farmer B. looks with pride on his happy, busy family, and he says his wife is handsomer than when she first married him. The children use their mother as a safety deposit, and all know the cheery bright looks of the face of the coming dollar, with its

EXPERIENCE ARGUMENT

The world-wide fame of Mother Seigel's Syrup is based on the evidence of men and women whom it has cured of indigestion, biliousness, constipation, headaches, sleeplessness, flatulence, nervous depression, anæmia, and other disorders of the stomach, liver and kidneys. Compounded of roots, and herbs, Mother Seigel's Syrup contains digestive ferments and gentle tonics for the stomach, liver and kidneys. These qualities render it invaluable to all who, through unhealthy surroundings, sedentary occupation, worry, overwork, or climatic changes, lack the vitality which only good food, well digested can supply. When you are tortured with indigestion, so that you can't eat, can't work, can't think, can't sleep, you should at once give Mother Seigel's Syrup a trial. Tens of thousands of people testify to the curative qualities possessed by Mother Seigel's Syrup because it has cured them. Profit by their experience!

Here is some proof: - Mr. Christy Battersow, Mabou, Inverness Co. N.S., writing on August 13th, 1908, says :-About eighteen months ago I took a severe cold, while at work near Marble Mountain, C.B. Neglect brought on frequent headaches, a racking cough and a sore side. While visiting a friend at Lake Ainslie, I was induced to take Mother Seigel's Syrup. In a short time my cough vanished and apart from obtaining a cure, I increased my weight by thirteen pounds.

IN THE BUSINESS WORLD.

Of Interest to Investors.

Our readers' attention is directed to page 17 of this issue, on which appears a proposition that in our estimation seems to be something beyond the ordinary to those interested in that wonderful camp of Cobalt.

Advice to the Thrifty.

Those of our readers who have not received Messrs. Wingold's new stove catalogue should at once write to 249 Notre Dame Ave., Winnipeg and request one. This is an old established firm and we heartily commend it for its integrity. Be sure and mention the Western Home Monthly when writing.

Drugs by Mail.

People in remote towns and villages often experience difficulty in obtaining drugs locally and even when they are procurable, they are often found to be of inferior quality. We draw particular attention to Messrs. Vrooman & McCullough's advertisement on another page of this issue. This enterprising firm have completed arrangements whereby they can supply by mail the very best drugs at the lowest possible prices. No doubt the majority of our readers will find the prices worthy of consideration.

Messrs. Cassells' Publications.

English publishers are ever paying special attention to the Canadian markets. Since the new regulations introduced by the Canadian Government affording English publishers improved facilities for introducing their books into Canada the British publishers have not been slow to take advantage of the opportunity. Among some of Messrs. Cassells' publications that we have had the pleasure of perusing lately are Cassells' Magazine, The Girls' Realm, Little Folks, Chums, Musical Home Journal, and The Building World, all of which are of a very high literary standpoint and nicely printed on good paper. Any one of the above magazines may be tlubbed with the Western Home Monthly at $1.65 for a year.

The London School of Oratory and European Arts.

Mr. Gilbert Shorter, the director of the above institution has had many years experience in London (where he appeared under Royal patronage) and in New York. Both the English and American press were unanimous in their eulogies of his ability and since coming to Winnipeg the local press have been equally complimentary. Professor de Mandeville, who takes charge of the Art department is a pupil of the famous Edmund Dyonnet. In both Europe and America he has been commissioned to paint pictures for public institutions. Another interesting branch is the teaching of reading to musical accompaniment under Madame Lillian Adams. Our readers are recommended to write to Mr. Shorter for his prospectus, which is most interesting. Please mention the Western Home Monthly when doing so.

A Good Opportunity to Buy a Gun.

In this issue that well known sporting goods house The Hingston Smith Arms Co., Limited, announce a sacrifice sale of guns. The receipt of a large shipment long after the contract date is we understand the direct cause but to make the sale more popular the Company have decided to include in their bargain list their entire stock of guns, which unquestionably is the largest and best assortment in Canada. Sales of any kind are not in accordance with the policy of the house and only the exceptional circumstances mentioned could warrant the one announced. The firm has just issued an illustrated catalogue of fall and winter sporting goods in which their entire line of guns is listed and on request will mail copies to those interested.

Of Interest to Every Farmer.

There is nothing can handicap the farmer and tiller of the soil as much as personal bodily ill health. Every farmer has troubles which are natural and unavoidable and which he is prepared to cope with by the ordinary methods of scientific farming, but when ill health is coupled with these evils, the condition is indeed deplorable. It frequenty seems much easier for a farmer and stock raiser to cure a disease in his horses and cattle than to cure some bodily trouble which afflicts him personaly or some member of his family. It is indeed a trial to have a wife or daughter ill on the farm, as no farmer can do good work in the fields when he is continually tortured by the knowledge that someone is ill at home.

Constant readers of the Western Home Monthly will remember the Vitae-Ore advertisement which has appeared in these columns from time to time, and which is published on page 27 of this issue. Those who have never tested this remedy should do so by all means. It is advertised very fairly to cure a great many of the ills to which flesh is heir and anyone who needs it can secure a full month's treatment on trial, without paying one

The Theo. Noel Company, Limited, the proprietors of this valuable remedy offer to send a $1.00 package on trial to every reader of the Western Home Monthly, who will write them, mentioning this paper, the user not paying one penny for the medicine un-less it proves of benefit. This is certainly a very fair offer, and if all medicines were sold in this manner, the farmer would be the gainer by a great many dollars. The Noel Company must have a valuable remedy or they could not offer to send it out in this manner, which is the best possible proof that it has real merit. When you write for Vitae-Ore do not forget to mention this paper and address your letter to Theo Noel Company, Limited, Dept. H.M., Vitae-Ore Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Vitae-Ore is especially recommended for blood, stomach and kidney troubles and female complaints. It has proven itself a very valuable treatment for Rheumatism, Lumbago, LaGrippe, Anaemia, Dropsy, Functional Heart Trouble, Catarrh, Nervousness, etc.

Verily the luxuries of one generation become the necessities of the next. A recent report states that the actual value and working capital of Bell telephone plants to be five hundred and eighty-nine millions of dollars and that the gross earnings of the various exchanges for last year were one hundred and twenty million dollars. In addition to this a number of independent companies also showed very large earnings. Twenty years ago the telephone was regarded as a luxury, today we wonder how business was ever conducted without it.

A decade from now the present figures will look small, because by that time the telephone will be as common and as indispensable to the farm as it is now in the cities and towns. This will doubtless be accomplished largely by the establishment of co-operative or independent lines connecting the farms in any given community and furnishing efficient service at small cost.

the Electrophone is the complete, lasting restoration of your hearing.

Next to that in importance is the certainty that the moment you apply this marvellous little instrument you will be able to hear clearly and distinctly, either in public or in private.

This scientific electrical sound-conducting instrument fits snugly over the ear, as shown in cut. Its purpose is to magnify sound waves and throw them directly on the ear drum in a manner according to nature. The result is your deaf ear is exercised just as well ears are, and after a while most people find their hearing has become as good as ever. Meanwhile, however, with the Electrophone attached you can hear even the faintest sound without strain, effort or embarrassment, and your pleasure is vastly increased by the assurance that no harm is being done, as is the case with artificial ear drums, trumpset etc., that poison and ruin the ears of all who use them. ## Humour is an Element of Life.

By JUSTICE McCARTHY.

SHAKESPEARE has declared that "the man that hath no music in himself, nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds, is fit for treasons, spoils," and asstratagems, and sures us that "the motions of his spirit are dull as night." It seems to me that the man that hath not humor in himself deserves much the same sort of description. I am of the opinion that a quick and abiding sense of humor is a great element of success in every department of life. I do not speak merely of victory in the more strictly artistic fields of human work, but am ready to maintain that, even in the prosaic and practical concerns of human existence, the sense of humor is an inciting and sustaining influence to carry a man through to the full development of his capacity and the attainment of his purpose. It is so in the art of war—it especially is so in the business of statesmanship.

Mortal life, at the best, is so full of perplexities, disappointments, and reverses that it must be hard work indeed for a man who is endowed with no sense of humor to keep his spirits up through seasons of difficulty and depression, and maintain his energy-living despite the disheartening effects of commonplace and prosaic discourage-ments. A man who is easily disheartened does not appear to be destined by nature for the overcoming of difficulties and nothing is a happier incentive to the maintenance of good animal spirits than the quick sense of humor which finds something to make a jest of even in conditions which bring but a sinking of the heart to the less fortunately endowed mortal. In the stories of great events and great enterprises we are told of some heaven born leader who kept alive, through the most trying hours of what otherwise might have been utter and enfeebling depression, the energies, the courage, and the hope of his comrades and his followers.

One can hardly read the story of any escape from shipwreck, any drifting about in an open boat over wintry seas, without learning of some plucky and humorous mortal who kept his comrades alive and alert through all the dangers and troubles by his ready humor and animal spirits. Read any Read any account of a long protracted siege, when the besieged had to resist assault from without and hunger within, and you will be sure to be told how the humorous sallies of some leader were able to prevent those around him from sinking into the depths of despair. There are times when no good whatever is done by taking even the most too seriously, and a sudden flash of humor often lightens up the atmosphere as the blast of a trumpet might give new spirits and new energy amid the deepening gloom of some almost desperate day. Most of the world's great military leaders have been distinguished for their keen sense of humor. Even if we go back to the distant historic regions where fact and fable are blended beyond the power of modern analysis, we shall find that the supreme leaders of men were endowed with the keen faculty which can brighten a trying situation by a timely jest. Homer's Achilles had, perhaps, a little too much of a cruel humor in some of his practical jokes, but we cannot help seeing that he was-a man who, at a moment of deepest depression, found the means of appealing in congenial fashion to the livelier qualities of his companion Greeks, and saved them by some happy phrase from the creeping paralysis of working faculty, but I always have regarded Agamemnon as a solemn and pompous person, who had no sense of humor to season and qualify his all pervading sense of personal importance. Thersites, of course, was a mere buff-con, and mere buffoonery is incompatible with a keen sense of humor. Ulysses, we may feel well assured, must have pulled himself through many of his difficulties and dangers by his happy faculty of discerning whatever was humorous in a situation, and keeping the spirits of himself and those with him up to the mark by some lively and inspiring illustration. Hector of Troy always has been one of my favorite heroes, but I regret to say that I cannot seen any evidence which authorizes me to credit him with a keen perception of life's humorous side, and we know that the brave and serious husband of Andromache came to utter failure in the end, and was made unseemly sport of by his rival among the hostile gods.

Julius Cæsar, as we all know, had a keen sense of humor. Some of his jests and his odd jocular sayings have been recorded in history and still may be appreciated, and the few relics we have his poetical ventures give evidence of his refined and delicate humorous perception. Only to a man blessed with a sense of humor would any one have ventured on the eccentric method by which Cleopatra's first presentation to him was so oddly accomplished. Was there not even a certain melancholy in those last words recorded of him when the stab of Brutus' dagger brought his life to a close?

It commonly is said and believed that George Washington was wanting in humor. I never have seen any reason to concur in this belief, and I lately have been reading the biography of Washington, by Norman Hapgood, many passages of which confirm me in the opinion that the stereotyped description of Washington's character is defective on this point, and that a sense of humor was one of his characteristic qualities. A passage from one of his letters, quoted by Hapgood, seems to 'me to contain some delightful touches of humor. In it Washington, who is writing about the army of painters and sculptors who were, as Mr. Hapgood puts it, "busy seeking his and their own immortality," says:

"I am so hackneyed to the touch of painters' pencils that I now am altogether at their beck, and sit like Patience on a monument whilst they are delineating the lines on my face. It is proof, among many others, of what habit and custom can accomplish. At first I was as impatient at the request, and as restive under the operation, as a colt is of the saddle. next time I submitted reluctantly but with less flouncing. Now no drayhorse moves more readily to his thills than I to the painter's chair.'

Turn to the extraordinary career of Abraham Lincoln. Here we have a man who could apply his gift of humor to the most practical purpose of political life. He could put new heart into discouraged followers by some suddenly appropriate jest; he could throw light on some obscure problem in statesmanship by a humorous anecdote; he could reduce some opposing proposition to mere absurdity by a ludicrous comparison; he could dispose of some pretentious objection by a jocular phrase. We know, from all we have read of Lincoln, how his marvelous gift of humor sustained and comforted those around him in the darkest season of what seemed to be almost hopeless gloom. The whole career of the man would have been different if he had not been endoweed with this success.

I might quote many other evidences Diomedes, too, appears to have been taken from the same volume which endowed with the same wonderful show that under the gravities of Washington's expression of face, and under occasionally shot forth burned which its flashes to those around. One can well understand how such a light must have cheered its owner through the long strain upon his patience and perseverance to which he had to submit during many of the campaigns which seemed, from time to time, almost hopeless of happy result, but which, under his guidance, ended in complete marvelous possession, and, indeed, it hardly seems possible to form any conception of Abraham Lincoln without his characteristic and priceless endowment of humor.

The more earnest a man is the more thoroughly pervaded and inspired he is by this humorous instinct, if he happens to possess any faculty of humor at all. Some of the most powerful preachers the world has known are blessed with this gift, and were able to use it for the noblest ends without seeming to lower the sacred dignity of the cause they had at heart.. I have not said anything in this article about the men who merely were humorists and achieved success as such; for, of course, to affirm that the gift of humor is essential to the success of a mere humorist would be as vapid a truism as .o declare that a great musician must have a sense of music, or that a great painter must have an eye for outline and color. Even Sydney Smith, who always employed his gift of humor for the exposition and maintenance of purposes and principles essential to the progress of humanity, does not come within the scope of this article, the main object of which is to maintain that humor may be one of the main elements of life in any manner of career, and, if it does nothing better, may help its possessor to bear up cheerily against difficulties, and find new courage to sustain him in his further efforts.

I am confident that the more closely and deeply the question is studied from the history of any time, and from all that we know of the lives of great men, the more clear it will become that humor may be considered one of the elements of success, along wth perseverance, intelligence, clearness of purpose, readiness of resource, and enduring hope.

The Wheat Market.

A month ago it looked as if the foreigners would soon have to come into the markets and raise their bids for American wheat if they wished to increase their stocks, but they continue as obstinate as ever and so far very little new business has been worked with the United Kingdom. Fortunately for Canadian farmers who have been able to get their grain forward, the United States markets have shown an unexpected firmness and the Canadian dealers have been selling through New York at better figures than they could draw from foreign buyers, consequently our prices advanced in sympathy. Exporters were good buyers of wheat arriving at the lake front in time for early shipment as many had September contracts to fill and had arranged for freight so that it was necessary to pay premiums in order to get the wheat. The strength in United States markets way due largely to manipulation and it seems incredible that there can be any important advances in prices at the tail end of an abundant harvest.

Reports from other large wheat countries are favorable, both Argentine and Australia showing indications of excellent crops. Russia continues shipping freely and although there were reports of cholera there these had little foundation or were at least exaggerated and as a bullish feature were ineffective. If such a plague should become a reality it would undoubtedly have a noticable effect on prices as further shipments from Russia would be prohibited.

ington's expression of face, and under his quiet restrained manner there are fairly heavy and will likely continue so for some time. On the whole the situation is bearish and with stocks increasing at many large grain centres there is not much prospect of higher prices.

A Handsome Street Suit.

Directoire coats are among the smartest of all things for the coming season and are to be noted made from Ottoman silk and from satin with skirts of cloth quite as well as from material to match, making an entire suit. This one is adapted to both treatments but in this case is made of London smoke satin and worn with a skirt of broadcloth. The big characteristic revers, the high military collar, the cuffs and the pocket-laps are trimmed with soutache but otherwise the coat is quite plain. The skirt is made in five gores and can be cut with the high waist line or finished with a belt as liked. In this case it is lined throughout with thin silk and no stitching is visible, that treatment making one of the features of the incoming season. Skirts worn over separate foundations and with stitched hems, will, however, continue their vogue and this one is adapted to both treatments. All the fashionable suiting materials are appropriate for this design. The skirt can be made either in walking or round length and the longer skirts will be much noted for dressy costumes.

For the medium size will be required, for the coat 5½ yards 27, 3½ yards 44 or 27 yards 52 inches wide with 7 yard of silk or velvet for revers and trimming; for the skirt 7 yards 27 or 44 or 51 yards 52 inches wide for broadcloth or other material with up and down but if there should be no figure nor nap 53 yards 27, 41 yards either 44 or 52 inches wide will suffice.

The coat pattern 6125 is cut in sizes for a 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inch bust measure; the skirt pattern 5929 is cut in sizes for a 22, 24, 26, 28, 30 and 32 inch waist measure.

A Simple Gown and a Girlish Frock.

A practical, plain woolen skirt to be worn with odd waists is one that no wise woman allows herself to be without. Here is a model made after the latest style that can be finished either with the high waist line or with a belt and made either in walking or in round length, while with it can be worn any contrasting blouse or shirt waist. In this instance the skirt is made of one of the novelty wool fabrics with trimming of buttons and the blouse is of soft finished satin in matching color, satin making one of the notable materials of the autumn for the handsome blouse. But taffeta also is a standby, fine flannels are much in vogue and washable materials are worn by many women throughout the entire year while the model suits one and all. In this instance it is embroidered but it can be left plain or banding or applique can be made to take the place of the embroidery if the latter involves too great an amount of labor. The eight gored skirt is made with a box plait in the back and with a front gore that is laid over onto the side gores to give a box plait

For the medium size will be required, for the blouse 3½ yards of material 24, 34yards 32 or 2½ yards 44 inches wide; for the skirt 9½ yards 24, 7½ yards 32 or 43 yards 44 inches wide if there is no up or down; 12 yards 24, 10½ yards 32 or 5 yards 44 inches wide will be needed, however, if there is any figure or nap. The blouse pattern 6088 is cut in sizes for a 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inch bust measure; the skirt pattern 6089 is cut in sizes for a 22, 24, 26, 28 and 30 inch waist measure.

The girl's dress shows one of the pretty checked wool materials that will be so much worn with trimming of velvet ribbon. It is simple and girlish yet attractive withal. The blouse and the sleeves are cut in one but there are plaits over the shoulders that allow effective use of banding and the skirt is nine gored with two plaits at each seam. Cashmere, henrietta cloth, light weight serge, the novelty mixtures and all materials of the sort are appropriate with trimming or any banding that may be liked. But if a very plain dress is wanted the skirt can be finished with the stitched hem only and the banding can be omitted.

For a girl of sixteen years of age the blouse will require 3 yards of material 27, 2 yards 44 inches wide; the skirt 71 yards 27, 4½ yards 44 if there is no up and down, otherwise 91 yards 27, 51 yards 44 inches wide will be needed with 224 yards of velvet ribbon to trim the entire dress. The house pattern 6115 and the skirt pattern 6104 are cut in sizes for girls of 14 and 16 years of

One of the New Plaids.

Plaid materials are exceptionally attractive this autumn, many of them being shown in variations of one color with occasional threads in contrast to brighten the whole. This one shows one such in shades of blue with threads of tan color and is trimmed with bands of dark blue silk and buttons while the chemisette and undersleeves are of all-over lace. The blouse is one of the few which open at the left of the front and the skirt is trimmed over the left front seam so that there is the effect of the semi-princesse dress, but whether the two shall be joined or left separate becomes a matter of individual preference. If joined the skirt can be opened at the left front seam and the back closed to the belt or if the trimming, only is used the opening can be made either at the front or the back as liked. The blouse allows a choice of long or three-quarter sleeves. Almost all' the pretty simple silks and the wool fabrics that are so exceptionally lovely are appropriate for the gown and the trimming either some contrasting fabric or banding. Chiffon broadcloth on taffeta is much to be noted and the gown made of such simple silk with trimming of the cloth would be exceedingly hand-

2½ yards 32 or 1½ yards 44 inches wide with 1½ yards of all-over lace, ¾ yard of silk; for the skirt 9 yards 24. 8¾ yards 32 or 5 yards 44 inches wide when there is figure or nap but if there is no up or down 6¾ yards 32 or 3½ yards 44 inches wide will suffice with ½ yard of silk for trimming.

The pattern 6109 is cut in sizes for a 32, 34, 36, 38, and 40 inch bust measure; the skirt pattern 5622 is cut in sizes for a 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34 and 36 inch waist measure.

Music and the Drama.

November will see a new step forward in Canada's musical progress, when the famous Sheffield Choir comes over the seas to tour the Docomes over the seas to tour the Dominion. This event is unique in the annals of musical history, and possesses a double significance to this country. It will serve to strengthen both art and trade relations between the two countries, for many of the members of the choir are also among the leading business men of the Midlands, and the fathers of many of the ladies who are coming out with them are men who stand at the top of the commercial ladder. It is hoped that the mutual accumulation of knowledge which must inevitably follow the meeting between leading men on both sides of the Atlantic will have for its eventual result a material defor its eventual result a material development in trade such as Sheffield and the environs can serve and be served by. And with this object in view, it is essential that there should be active co-operation between commercial and musical bodies in every town visited by the choir, in order town visited by the choir, in order that nothing may be left undone to afford both sides every facility for becoming better acquainted. Some idea of the importance of the visit of this choir, apart from its musical significance, which will be touched upon later, may be gauged from the fact that among those coming are men of the calibre of E. Willoughby Firth director of the great firm of Firth, director of the great firm of Thomas Firth & Sons; H. P. Marsh, head of the equally celebrated firm of Marsh Bros., the Ponds Steel Works; Marsh Bros., the Ponds Steel Works; W. S. Skelton, of Messrs. C. T. Skelton & Co., one of the largest manufacturers of agricultural and mining implements in the Old Country; Edgar T. Woofhead, a great educational expert; J. H. Lawson, of the firm of T. S. Smeeth, iron merchants, metal brokers and mineral agents, who do a very large business with steel and iron manufacturers; P. M. Hunter, ex-President of the P. M. Hunter, ex-President of the Liverpool Cotton Association, and H. M. Leah, of the stamping firm of Henry Leah & Sons,—to mention a few at random out of dozens. It will be clear that this is no ordinary event, but that a great pacific invasion is in progress, whereby great singers and leading commercial men will combine in a mutual endeavor to become better acquainted with Canadian conditions, and prospects in the relative spheres to which they belong. Should the tour prove a success, it is intended that the Mendlessohn Choir of Toronto shall be invited to pay a return visit to England next year, with a similar object. So far as the choir itself is concerned, Dr. Coward, the conductor needs no introduction the conductor, needs no introduction to any musical people. He is well known the world over, and his work with this choir has won for him especial recognition. German critics say of him that he is to the chorus what Leschetiszky is to the piano and Sevick to the violin. The work of the choir itself has quite recently been praised by the leading and severest of German musical critics in language very far removed from their usual coldly dispassionate phrases—proof conclusive that it is upon an exceptionally high level. The word's grleatest conductor-men such as Richter, Nickisch, and Weingartner -declare the choir is the greatest in

The reopening of the Winnipeg theatre with a season of comic opera promises to prove a most popular move upon the part of the manage-ment of this theatre. The Winnipeg under the regime of stock perform-ances of the past three years, has become the home of a clientele of pat-rons that might well be the envy of any play house in the land, and with the remarkably artistic productions of "Robin Hood," "The Wizard of the Nile," "The Pirates of Penzace," and "The Geisha" as forerunners of what is to come this season, there is little doubt but that the Winnipeg's patronage will increase in proportion with the increased size of the house. The company is an excellent one and many of its members have already won very high favor with local theatre-goers for their clever acting and singing.

The Walker Theatre has been to the fore during September with a series of dramas, comedies and musical comedies, all of which proved strong drawing cards. The most prominent pieces were undoubtedly "The Rivals" and "The Clansman," both of which in their different styles are masterpieces, especially Sheridan's witty comedy in which the leading roles were taken by the Jeffersons who seem to have inherited fersons who seem to have inherited all the histrionic talents of their

Some months ago it was remarked that music was not included in the curriculum of the University of Manicurriculum of the University of Mani-toba. Perhaps the senate did not deem the cause of music sufficiently important or needful to justify itself in seeking legal powers to confer de-grees in music. And apparently the colleges have not seen fit to incur the expense of preparing candidates for the musical examinations of other uni-versities. It seems that St Boniface versities. It seems that St. Boniface College is the only one that recognizes music in its calendar, though it does so outside its regular subjectsthat is, it at least extends the opportunity to students who are musical of studying music as a pastime and pleasure; and this college can boast one or two professors of music on its staff. But be that as it may, there is in Winnipeg and throughout Manitoba and the North West an overwhelming evidence pointing to the need of putting music educationally on the same basis as the other arts. Take, for instance, the large number of people in Winnipeg who get their living from music alone, and the larger number who get a material part of their living from the same source. Take again the grand aggregate of such persons in the whole province of Manitoba. That alone, without going more into details or further afield, should be ample evidence for enlarging the technical field of music and for widening the foundations upon which the principles of the noble art should stand.

Sister Annie and Chopin.

The Black Key Study and What Was Wrong With It.

When sister Annie plays the Black Key Study the family may express wonder why she does not give it the whirling abandon which Josef Hof-mann gives it. The reason is plain.

Sister Annie has not been studying long enough to have fingers as strong as steel and as quick as lightning. She knows how the study should be played, but it may be ten years hence before she is able to even approximate to Hofmann's performance. In other words, she has musical insight and appreciation, but her mechanical equipment is not adequate to her requirements. What is a mechanical equipment? It is merely the means to an artistic end. There is nothing artistic in piano technique. Yet there are many artists who are debarred from music because they have no technique. If some good angel could grant them that technique they would be full grown, poetic artists. A good angel has done so. The Angelus is a piano player operated on the pneumatic principle. But it is not like other players. It is so devised that the operator can bring out the melody of any composition as definitely as any great artiste, the accompaniment remaining unobtrusive. Instant ritard or accelerando are possible, the touch can be strong and virile, or delicate, indeed, everything that the fingers of a virtuoso can do the Angelus can do. This marvelous player, unquestionably the best on the market as it was the first, has been secured by Messrs. Gourlay, Winter and Leeming, and can be purchased as an interior part of their magnificent Canadian piano, the Gourlay. There is no finer piano in this country, and there is no finer player than the Angelus in any country. The Gourlay-Angelus is no larger than an ordinary Gourlay piano, nor can the presence of the mechanism of the player be seen until the time comes to use it. It must be seen to be appreciated. If interested write for catalogue to Gourlay, Winter & Leeming, 188 Yonge St., Toronto.

CAUTION.

Put a strong glass on the label and examine it closely every time. Always look for the name "Gillett's."

Like all good articles, which are extensively advertised, Gillett's Lye is frequently and very closely imitated. In some instances the imitators have actually copied directions and other printed matter from our label word for word. Be wise, and refuse to purchase imitation articles for they are never satisfactory.

Insist On Getting Gillett's Lye and decline to accept anything that looks to be an imitation or that is represented to be "just as good" or "better," or "the same thing." In our experience of over fifty years in business we have never known of an imitation article that has been a success, for imitators are not reliable people. At the best the "just as good" kinds are only trashy imitations, so decline them with thanks every time.

the long, silky-fibred Nova Scotia wool.

The founder of the Stanfield mills did more than anyone else to develop the wool industry throughout the Maritime Provinces. For half a century, the farmers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island have saved their best wool for the Stanfields-first for C. E. Stanfield-and now for his sons, John and Frank, the President and Treasurer of Stanfields Limited.

The wear of a garment depends on the quality of wool from which it is made. Underwear may be PURE WOOL, and ALL WOOL—and still shrink, ravel and wear out in a single season. Because the underwear is not made of good wool in the first place.

There are seven grades of wool in the fleece when clipped from Nova Scotia sheep. Only the first three grades of this best wool are used in making Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear for men and women.

There are no weak spots in the sibre to break in the garments.

There can be no unraveling, because every stitch is locked. Garments can't shrink, because of our perfected process of treating the wool BEFORE garments are woven, thus insuring absolutely Unshrinkable Underwear.

Stanfield's Underwear is right from start to finish. It is planned right, made right and wears right. In all sizes from 22 to 70 inch chest measure. In three winter weights—RED label for light weight—

BLUE label for medium weight-BLACK label for heavy weight. Your dealer probably has all sizes and weights in stock. If not, he can easily get whatever you wish.

Eyesight Restored

Eyeglasses May Be Abandoned

A Wonderful Discovery That Corrects Afflictions of the Eye Without Cutting or Drugging.

There is no need of cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no lisk or necessity of experiment as many people report having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

Amanda G. Dunpley, Nastuvaak Village, N.B., Canada, writes: Actina has done more for my eyes than I expected. Since using Actina I do not wear glasses.

Mr. Jules Gagne, Jack Fish Lake, Sask., Cab ada, writes: "I am well satisfied with Actuna. I was not able to read without spectacles before— but now I can read and write with ease."

Louis Meyer, 93 Herman St., Rochester, N. Y. writes: "Actina' has effected a wonderful cure in my wife's case, curing her of a severe eye trouble, and I would not be without it."

Hundreds of other testimonials will be sent on application. "Actina" is purely a home treatment and is self-administered. It will be sent on trial, post paid. If you will send your name and address to the Actina Appliance Co., Dept. 84 B. 811, Walnut St., Kansas City. Mo., you will receive, absolutely free. a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Treatise on Disease.

this enjoyable affair. Six tables were distributed through the rooms, at which six guests were seated and served, and stringed instruments played softly during the repast. The place cards bore a musical quotation, and a violinist, a pianist, a soprano, and a baritone took part in the program. They were all good friends of the hostess. Each table had a different flower, with candle and shade to match; for instance, one table had a long stemmed American beauty rose at each place, with the candle shade of the same beautiful crimson; one table had snow white lillies, another yellow roses, and another carnations, etc. The menu was simple, but exquisitely served. Thirty-six persons were invited to | miniature trunks, and the place cards were dress suit cases with the name of the guest written and painted on the side. A silver traveling cup in a case of leather was the favor at the guest of honor's plate. After the luncheon had been served the maid brought in a pile of steamer letters, one from each person; they were read "en voyage." When the dessert was served the maid appeared with telegrams, and one by one they were read by the favored guest. Of course, these had all been previously prepared and sent to the hostess. At the finish of the menu, before the guests left the table, the little dray, with its horses, was helped to go the rounds of the board, and a trunk was unloaded at each place; they were filled with after dinner mints. The trunks and dress suit cases were candy boxes, and the dray was borrowed for the occasion from a small boy in the neighborhood.

> After the luncheon the hostess passed envelopes, each one containing a souvenir postal card cut into odd bits, puzzle fashion. The person who succeeded in putting together her card first was awarded a souvenira foreign photograph plainly framed.

DRIVE OUT SICKNESS.

Diseases attack the body, and if the vitality is low they get a hold on it. But OXV-DONOR comes to the rescue.

OXYDONOR gives the system a strong affinity for Oxygen. The additional Oxygen which is then instilled into the body from the air—through skin, membranes and tissues—creates in every part an abounding vitality. The result is that whatever may have been in the body is driven out, and the system is fortified against further attacks.

Read what Mr. E. Turner, Grain Exchange, Winnipeg, writes about OXYDONOR:—"The OXYDONOR I bought from you I consider invaluable, It cured my wife of a very bad case of Rheumatism. I loaned it to a young man who left the Winnipeg Hospital as incurable, and after using it, inside of a week he was able to go to work. I cannot say too much for it."

You apply OXYDONOR at home, while you sleep, without loss of time from work or business. It is perfectly safe, always ready for use, and easily applied. It will serve a whole family, and never loses its force.

The Home Doctor.

HEALTH NOTES.

Raw white of egg is the best food in dysentery.

The eyes should be protected from dust or any foreign matter when riding.

Fruit acids are excellent to relieve a rheumatic condition of the system.

Red hands and prominent veins on arms and hands due to poor circulation may be much helped by breathing exercises, if practiced regularly.

When blackheads refuse to come to the surface, a paste of barley meal and honey left on all night will frequently draw them out.

If about to take a long walk, soaping the inside of the stocking feet will prevent blisters on the feet. A paste made of soap and water will cure a blistered heel.

"A first aid" for a sprained ankle after removing shoe and stocking, is to apply fiannel cloths wrung out of very hot water, changing often; this will bring about a healthful recovery when bandages are thoroughly applied.

If there is discoloration of the skin caused by a bruise, soak a little absorbent cotton in olive oil, preferably warmed, and apply it to the bruised spot at once, and it will prevent the various shades of coloring from blue to a greenish yellow that so often results.

A simple way to strengthen the voice is to bathe the chest and throat with cold water and rub with a bath-towel before going to bed. To carry out this recipe regularly through cold weather will be an effort, but it certainly has its reward. Many people add sea-salt to the water, and find it very invigorating.

Unripe fruits contain too large a proportion of acid to be wholesome; overripe fruit is on its way to decay and develops a fungus growth, and often a large colony of bacteria, which may prove injurious to the stomach, in fact, either condition of fruit generally causes diarrhoea or dysentery.

Boracic acid is a valuable remedy to keep on hand for wounds, cuts or bruises where the skin is broken. A dry dressing of the powder is the best application. A saturated solution may be used for inflamed eyes or as a gargle for a sore mouth.

Toothache—Certain kinds of toothache can be relieved by painting the gums with a solution of one-half iodine and one-half glycerine. If there is a cavity in the tooth, and the tooth can be saved, why it should be filled without delay, but relief from pain can be obtained by saturating cotton with oil of cloves or tincture of myrrh.

When manicuring the nails the cuticle around them should not be cut, but pressed back lightly with an orange-wood stick. Five minutes' attention daily to the nails when soft from the use of soap and water is all that is needed, with a weekly manicuring, to keep the nails in good condition. Use lemon juice in preference to any other acid for removing stains from the nails.

A Simple Remedy for Neuralgia.—
Women who suffer from neuralgia will be interested in the simple remedy suggested and might try it. If the neuralgia is on the left side, dip the right hand in water as hot as can be borne, and if it is on the right side, dip the left hand. As the fibers of the fifth and median nerves cross, the theory is that any impulse applied to the right hand will affect the left side of the face, and vice versa. of the face, and vice versa.

Fruits are especially good as a summer food, for the reason that they furnish a liberal proportion of the organic salts needed by the body, they also supply a large amount of water in the purest form, they aid digestion, and many of them have a laxative effect. Among nutritious fruits, bananas, dates and apples take a front rank, the apple being less nutritious, but valuable because of the malic acid which it contains.

For convalescents who are allowed to eat fruit there is nothing more dainty or refreshing than the following recipe for tutti frutti: Take one box of blackberries, one-half pound of cherries, peel and cut up four bananas and powder with white sugar to taste and mix thoroughly. Do this early in the morning and set on ice to get good and cold, then serve. At the present season, when a variety of fruit can be had, this can be changed to suit the invalid's taste. For instance: Mix peaches, bananas and strawberries, huckleberries and currants; raspberries and currants; pineapple, oranges, strawberries, cherries or raspberries.

If a fish bone lodges in the throat, eat a marshmallow; the bone becomes imbedded in the sticky substance and is safely carried down.

Do not sleep with the arms above the head, which causes additional strain on the circulation of the blood toward the Sleeplessness is frequently due to want of food; a glass of warm milk and a bit of bread will often send the restless one to sweet slumbers.

A bilious attack may soon be over-come by taking the juice of one or two lemons in a goblet before retiring, and in the morning before rising.

The tendency to hair growth on the face, which is fostered by the use of grease, may be checked by using some spirits of camphor with it.

An "onion breath" may be gotten rid of by eating a small piece of charcoal after the meal. This is also an old-fashioned remedy for purifying the

Put the children out of doors to run and play. Let them dig and delve in mother earth and absorb the pure air and bright sunshine, and they will defy

Women do not attach half enough importance to sleep as a beautifier. One cannot look well nor healthy nor at one's best except when the body has been refreshed by healthy sleep.

Two drops of camphor on your tooth-brush will give your mouth the fresh-est, cleanest feeling imaginable, will make your gums rosy and absolutely prevent anything like cold sores or af-fections of your tongue.

Keep the hair and scalp as clean as the rest of the body. An egg shampoo is very beneficial both to the hair and the scalp, as the yolk contains iron and sulphur, and these ingredients are excellent for the scalp.

Pimples and tiny boils or sores on the skin are always due either to indigestion, to weak health, or to the system being out of order. The only way to cure these is to find out what causes them and remedy that, and your skin will soon be as good as ever.

To remove pimples, take plenty of fresh air, eat plain food, avoiding greasy or sweet things, and be sure that you care for your face properly when washing it. Bathe the neck and bust in cold water every morning, and try in all ways to stimulate the action of the blood in the face.

If your eyes ache and get tired, tryiclosing them two or three times a day for five minutes; frequent bathing in a solution of boracic acid (made by dissolving one ounce of boracic acid in one pint of water) and water also helps to give relief; add enough hot water to the boracic solution to make it comfortably warm, and be sure to dry your eyes thoroughly afterward.

Rheumatism — Very little medicine that a doctor prescribes to give relief to the pains of neuralgia or rheumatism can be taken without seriously deranging the digestive organs. These prescriptions in nearly every instance call for certain mineral acids, which relieve the pains in the joints and muscles but will create others equally as hard to hear in the stomach. Fruit as hard to bear in the stomach. Fruit acids are excellent, as they are very digestible; it is the mineral acids that should be avoided. Apples are especshould be avoided. Apples are especially recommended, if properly masticated. Oranges can always be taken with good results and usually grape fruit is followed by good results.

Earache—Very serious pain in the ear can be cured by the proper use of very warm water. Do not have the water too hot, for the patient, if a child, will be unwilling to have the remedy administered. Let the patient lie on the bed with the aching ear uppermost. Fold a thick cloth and tuck it closely round the neck and chin, then pour the warm water into the ear, a teaspoonful at a time. Continue this for several minutes, then let the water all run out and time. Continue this for several minutes, then let the water all run out and fill the ear with warm oil, glycerine or something of like nature, on cotton. If the first application does not relieve the pain, repeat several times. You will find that it will in nearly every case wield in the end. yield in the end.

A Prime Dressing for Wounds.—In some factories and workshops carbolic acid is kept for use in cauterizing wounds and cuts sustained by the workmen. Far better to keep on hand a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It is just as quick in action and does not scar the skin or burn the flesh. There is no other Oil that has its curative qualities.

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn beny growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all eurable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those sand-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. And then, when dissolved, these poisonous wastes freely pass from the system, and the cause of Rheumatism is gone forever. There is now no real need—no actual excuse to suffer longer without help. We sell, and in confidence recommend and in confidence recommend

She says, sharp an' awful cross. "W'y," Bob says, "I giv 't a toss Jest as soft—not hard a-tall. But that baby had ter bawl!"

"You're a liar!" I yelled out
'Fore I'd time ter think about Where I 'uz at. Teacher she Turned an' looked right clear through

"Nen she says: "Now both of you Do jest what I tell you to— Take yer books an' go an' set With the girls!"

Gee! but you bet
We felt awful cheap, becuz
We thought 'at a lickin' wuz Easier to stan' 'an that!
But I went acrost, an' set Down by Lizzle Smith—an', say!
She jest looked the' other way
Like she didn't notice me.

That wuz jest at first—an', gee! I don't blame her, 'cause, you see, All the girls laughed, an' the boys Groaned an' made a kissin' noise With their mouth. But after while With their mouth. But after while Lizzie she begin ter smile 'Nen she gave a little quick Shove to her er-rith-ma-tic To'rds me. An' there was about All th' 'xamples, all worked out With the answers right. #### Keep Away.

There is a land of Grumbles,
And in Disagreeable Town
The children just do nothing
But grunt and scowl and frown.

I shouldn't think it pleasant
To live there long, would you?
Where grunting, scowling, frowning,
Is all that they can do?

So if ever you should travel
And stop at Grumble City,
And not come back, I think 'twould be A most amazing pity.

On the Ferryboat.

'Twas just an average little boy
Of six or thereabouts;
I left him full of picnic, and
He left me full of doubts.

He ate bananas, sandwiches, Sweet pickles, cake and jam, Fried chicken and potato chips, Ice cream and tea and ham.

To these he added pink pop corn And quarts of lemonade; Of what, then, was his little tum So wonderfully made?

With bated breath I watched that child, Expecting him to burst,
But presently, though still I gazed,
I ceased to fear the worst.

For after endless candy from A green and sticky heap, That sated infant sighed and yawned, Then, smiling, fell asleep!

A Life Lesson.

There, little girl, don't cry!
They have broken your doll, I know;
And your tea-set blue,
And your play-house, too,
Are things of the long ago;
But childish troubles will soon pass by—

by-There, little, girl, don't cry!

There, little girl, don't cry!
They have broken your slate, I know;
And the glad, wild ways
Of your school-girl days
Are things of the long ago;
But life and love will soon come by—
There, little girl, don't cry!

There, little, girl, don't cry!
They have broken your heart, I know;
And the rainbow gleams
Of your youthful dreams
Are things of the long ago;
But heaven holds all for which you sigh, There, little girl, don't cry!

No Time Like the Present.

If you're told to do a thing, And mean to do it really, Never let it be by halves; Do it fully, freely.

Do not make a poor excuse, Waiting, weak, unsteady; All obedience worth the name Must be prompt and ready.

When father calls, though pleasant be
The play you are pursuing,
Do not say, "I'll come when I Have finished what I'm doing."

If you are told to learn a task,
You should then begin it;
Do not tell your teacher, "Yes,
I'm coming in a minute."

Waste not moments nor your words In telling what you could do Some other time; the present is For doing what you should do.

Don't do right unwillingly, And stop to plan and measure; 'Tis working with the heart and soul That makes our duty pleasure.

Playmates.

A little red house with earthen floor, Just one small window and one small door; A cow and pig, and a boy to play, And a tide to rise and fall each day.

A tide that gurgles and laughs with glee— The jolliest tide that one could see— That chases the boy, and wets him, too, As a tide is very apt to do.

But after a time the tide goes out. And the boy is quick to turn about, And he follows it, and shouts with glee As the tide retreats into the sea.

And he wanders up and down the shore. Or seeks his couch through the small, red, door.
And out again with the light of day
To wait for the tide to come and play.

The Story-Book.

"It's all full of lions and old grizzly bears
And tigers and elephants, too!
And lots of things, never seen any wheres But just in the Ark or the Zoo!

There's kittles and doggles and dear little mice
And little girls playing just look!
I guess by the time I have read it through twice
I can say it right off of the book!

"There's rhymes about fairles and brownies and such,
With queer little pictures in black;
And dear little children with shoes that are Dutch Go clickety-clackety-clack.

"All over the pages—beginning to end!
It's all just brimful of their tricks Oh, wasn't my auntie just lovely to send This book for the day I was six!"

I'm Hungry.

There's my Aunt Louise,
She never finks
Only of roses and Pansies and pinks.
A-holdin' 'em up
And paintin' 'em fine,
An' eatin' her meals
A'most any time An eath ner means A'most any time.
Now she's a-paintin'
A lubly verbener,
And I'm jes' as hungry
As a hyener.

There's my Aunt Eva,
She's bakin' a pie
Any big boy could Stick in his eye.
W'y don't she make it
'Normous and fat,
Round as the moon is
And high as my hat,
And say in a voice
So soothin' and mild,
"This is the pie that I baked for the child?"

SUFFERING FROM WOMEN'S AILMENTS.

I am a woman.

I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourselves at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrheas or Whitish discarges, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down feelings, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weaknesses peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete 10 days' treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfer with your work or occupation. Just send meyour case, entirely free, in pain wrapper, by return mail. I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in pain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER" with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it, and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says—"You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy, it cures all, old or young. ## Woman and the Home.

The Merry Heart Goes all the Way.

When you come to a wearisome bit of

Where the stones are thick and the path is steep,
And the back is bowed with the heft of the load,

As the narrowing way is hard to keep, Don't stop just then for a wasteful sigh, But challenge the worst with steadfast cheer; If nowhere else, there is help on high—God's angel will hasten your pioneer.

When you reach a lonesome bit of road, Curtailed about with mist and murk, And you hear faint sounds from the dread abode,

Where shivering grim hobgoblins lurk, lost laugh to scorn their doleful cries—

Just laugh to scorn their doleful cries—
This is the place to whistle and sing;
Brush the fog from your fearless eyes,
And close to the faith of your fathers

When you stand at a sorrowful bit of road, And a hand you loved has lost its clasp;

And when streams are dry that in sweetness flowed,
And flowers drop from your listless grasp;

E'en now take heart, for farther on
There are hope and joy and the dawn of day;
You shall find again what you thought was gone;

'Tis the merry heart goes all the way. Margaret Sangster.

Trained Nursing.

I frequently have letters asking if it pays to take the course of training necessary in this line. Many think it a long time to spend three years out of the best part of one's life in a hospital training school, surrounded by sickness and suffering, and in addition, the three months on probation with no compensation, during which time the hardest, most disagreeable work is generally exacted. In many training schools one gets board and five or six dollars a month for two years, with a raise of a few dollars more the third year, and from this meager sum clothes and books must be furnished, and it is well if the pupil can so manage her affairs as to keep out of debt. But where one is determined to win out it can be done, and is being done every day by girls who have only their own labors to look to for support. But is it any different in going to school to the various institutions, if one is in earnest in trying to get an education? There is no royal road to success in any trade or profession, and we are assured that "genius" is only another name for hard, systematic work.

A young woman who is adapted for this kind of work soon forgets the hardships in her interest in the conditions about her, and there are few dull days in her life, if she is really in earnest and loves the work. As soon as the probation period is over, she commences to earn from $20 to $36 per week, all expenses paid, and if she be faithful in her profession, she is rarely without employment, for with every year the demand for the trained nurse becomes greater. In this profession, as in all others, much depends on the girl herself. The lessons are there; she must learn them herself. To succeed, herself. The lessons are there; she must learn them herself. To succeed, the work must be taken up as a life employment and the mind must be given up to it to the exclusion of all outside interests. It is like any other profession. Much can be acquired in the way of fitness for its duties, but the "born nurse" is the one who will make the largest success of her work.

When Doctors Disagree.

When Doctors Disagree.

It is awfully hard work to live up to all the new knowledge we have gained in the past few years about ourselves and the ways in which we should "live, move and have our being." We have made the acquaintance of germs and bacilli and bacteria and appendicitis and all kinds of breakfast foods. We have had advice of every kind and degree of beauty doctors—have been told how to grow fat, how to grow thin, how to add to our height, how to make our hair grow seven feet long, and how to take away wrinkles, how to always appear young, and many other things a woman especially desires to know.

We have also been told to live out of doors or to keep our windows wide open all winter; to drink hot water every morning before breakfast; to drink cold water every morning; never to use cathartics; to take a dose of castor oil once a week; to eat rare meat; to eat no meat at all; to eat breakfast foods; to eat no breakfast foods; to avoid fats of all kinds; to eat fat meat—and so on down the whole list of do's and don'ts.

One thing the doctors and books on physiology and hygiene have always insisted on, and that is that we should chew all our food until-reduced to pulp. Children are constantly chided for "swallowing their victuals 'whole." and the American peeple have always been criticized for "bolting their food."

But now comes Dr. Wiley, head chemist of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, to whom we have been

Agriculture, to whom we have been pinning our faith in regard to things eatable and drinkable, and he says that we should not chew our meat at all; that we should gulp it down whole as the dog and some other animals do. But in the language of Hazael, "Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?" There are lots of things a dog does that we don't want to do. He breathes through his tongue and generally keeps his mouth open and his tongue lolling out. We would be taken for idiots if we were to do that. He eats grass when his food disagrees with him; we couldn't do that very well, in fact, we prefer warm water and salt. He licks the hand that strikes him while we generally fight back. He turns around three times before he composes himself to sleep—well, some people do that. And there is one thing in which we might well pattern after the dog and cat. When they are ill they fast until they are better.

We imagine Dr. Wiley will not find it easy to introduce this new cult into refined society. Imagine a table full of ladies and gentlemen gulping down chunks of steak or roast or fish, at the imminent risk of swallowing a bone or being choked on a bit of gristle. It would not be a pretty sight, to say the least.

Years ago people lived and loved and

Years ago people lived and loved and married and died and had a good time through it all—ate when and what they pleased, slept wherever they could find a bed, asked no questions about their food, did their work in eight, ten or twelve hours without any fuss, and were, as a rule, healthier and happier than the generations which succeeded them. "What you don't know don't hurt you," and as they knew nothing of all these fads and fancies they probably lived longer and had less trouble in doing it, than we with all our scientific knowledge. Of course, to go back to the question of mastication, it would b much easier to swallow whole most of the meat furnished us today at the present appalling prices, than it is to chew it, but nevertheless we will probably go on in the same old way, unheeding the facts of chemical research with which Dr. Wiley supports his advice.

"To chew or not to chew," may yet vice.

"To chew or not to chew," may yet be the burning question discussed in our intercollegiate contests. Post your-self on it.

Thanksgiving.

Thanksgiving.

The harvest in most sections of the country is said to have been a bountiful one, giving abundant occasion for the general observance of the national day of thanksgiving to be designated by the nation's chief executive.

Few there are but will find they have some causes for special thankfulness if they will but look for them, no matter what the year may have held of sorrow or adversity. At least friends have been raised up in time of need and the true friendship manifested at such a time is one of the greatest blessings known to humanity.

A year ago the origin of Thanksgiving Day was dwelt upon at some length in these columns, so that today we are more interested in securing its observance.

To many families, where it is made the occasion of the gathering of all kinsfolks within reach of the home roof tree, Thanksgiving Day is the happiest and most soul-satisfying day of the year. And such it should be to all of us, as we enumerate our many blessings of home, family and friends and the fruit from bounteous fields or sustained daily effort, for all of which it is our duty and should be our joy to give thanks to the Giver of all good. To many families, where it is made

An Easy Way to Clean Wndows is to use chamois skin. Soak it thoroughly in cold water; hot water would spoil it. Wash all the windows in a room with the wet chamois skin; then rinse the skin and squeeze it as dry as possible. After this wipe the windows again with the damp skin, leaving what little moisture remains on the glass to evaporate. If the windows are washed every week it will only be necessary to use the damp, squeezed skin once. To clean the chamois skin itself, after using, lay it flat and rub with soap and plenty of cold water. The skin must be kept very clean, dr the windows will be streaked. #### COOKING RECIPES.

Apple Salad.—Pare and slice mellow sour apples very thin, and to two-thirds apples add one-third chopped English walnut meats. Cover with mayonnaise, to which has been added one-third Cracker Pudding. — One cupful of cracker crumbs, one pint of milk, yolks of two eggs beaten with milk, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of lemon extract, three tablespoonfuls of cocoanut. Bake ten minutes, take out, put on top the whites of eggs beat in one cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of lemon extract; keep in oven long enough to brown.

English Fried Cakes.—Two cupfuls of sugar, two dessertspoonfuls of melted lard, three eggs, one cupful of sweet milk, five teaspoonfuls of baking powder, two and one-quarter cupfuls of mashed and sifted potato, six and one-half cupfuls of flour, also salt and nutmeg or other spices to suit. This will make six dozen fried cakes, and they will not soak up the lard when frying.

Beef Loaf.—Take two pounds of chopped beef, two eggs, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of pepper, pinch of allspice, two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley and a little chopped onion; mix well and make into a loaf. Then butter a piece of paper (waxed paper being the best), roll the loaf up in same and bake for about forty minutes. Serve with tomato sauce. You will also find this very fine cut up cold.

Sweet Potatoes Scalloped.—When the dry, yellow variety of sweet potatoes must be used, boil in their skins until tender; bake the moist variety. In either case let stand for a few moments, then skin and cut in quarter-inch slices. Arrange in layers in a buttered baking dish, sprinkling each layer very liberally with sugar and dotting with bits of butter. Over all pour about one-half cupful of boiling water, and bake for an hour or more in a hot oven.

Cream of Chestnut Soup.—Take the shells off one pint of chestnuts and cover with boiling water. After five minutes rub off the brown skin. Cook until tender in boiling salted water to cover, then mash through a colander and return to the water in which they were cooked. Add one pint of hot milk or veal stock, one tablespoonful of butter and salt and pepper to season. Simmer ten minutes. Take from the fire and stir in a beaten egg and serve at once with croutons.

Ham Canapes.—Take slices of bread one-half inch thick and cut them into rounds with a biscuit cutter. Put a little butter into a frying pan and brown the bread on both sides. Chop cold cooked ham fine and rub it through a coarse sieve; add a little cold milk and a dash or two of cayenne pepper. When mixed and smooth spread it on the fried bread, then sprinkle with grated cheese. Place in a quick oven until cheese is melted. Arrange the canapes on a hot platter and garnish with hard-boiled eggs.

Almond Junket. Take one pint of milk and two ounces of Jordan almonds; blanch, dry and grind or finely chop the almonds, finally pounding them well. Put a very little of the milk into a saucepan, adding to it the almonds. Simmer these together until the milk is strongly flavored with the almonds, and add while hot to the cold milk, which will thus be rendered sufficiently warm for the addition of the rennet. The almonds may, if wished, be removed by straining the hot milk through a piece of muslin, or they may be left in, as preferred.

Baked Oysters.—These have a different flavor from scalloped oysters, and are nice for a change. Butter a common granite pie plate and cover to a depth of one-quarter of an inch with fine bread crumbs; moisten slightly with oyster liquor, then place large oysters upon the crumbs, dotting plentifully with bits of butter and adding salt and pepper to taste. Dip a few spoonfuls of cream over them and bake ten minutes. Serve them in the dish they were baked in, wrapping the edge in a folded napkin. A small plate of sliced lemons should accompany this dish.

Baked Quinces.—These make a delicious dessert served with whipped cream. Remove the cores, fill with sugar, thrust cloves into them and put in a baking pan half filled with boiling water, laying the cores and more sugar in the pan. Cover with inverted pan and steam for half an hour in the oven; then remove cover and bake till tender an hour or more in a moderate, even oven. When done, remove quinces and boil the syrup briskly, adding more sugar if necessary. Strain this syrup over the fruit and it will form a jelly-like sauce. Serve cold with whipped cream.

Mutton Pie.—A mutton pie may be made equally well with cooked meat, but will not have to cook more than thirty to forty-five minutes so as to bake the pastry. Take a couple of steaks off a leg of mutton and cut the meat into square pieces, removing all skin. Have on a plate a heaped table-spoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of chopped onions, the same quantity of chopped parsley, with pepper and salt to taste. Dip each piece of meat in the flour and pack it lightly in a pie dish, scattering over all the remains of flour, etc. Fill up the dish with stock, water or gravy. Cover with a good crust and bake steadily for one or two hours. Let the oven become cooler after the pastry is done.

Prune Pudding.—Soak one pound of best prunes over night in water to cover. In the morning stand them over the fire in a saucepan and let them simmer till very soft; then crush them with a fork and remove the stones. Whip this pulp well with a fork, add the juice of one large lemon and enough sugar to season palatably, stirring the sugar through the fruit pulp till it is all dissolved. Beat the whites of three eggs to a stiff froth and whip briskly through the prune pulp. Pour the mixture in a pudding dish; stand it in a quick oven and bake four or six minutes; then remove and put in a cool place. When quite cold stand pudding in the refrigerator. When ready to serve, cover the pudding with whipped cream.

Rhubarb and Fig Jam.—I am sending a recipe for rhubarb and fig jam, which I hope some of your readers will try. I am sure if they do they will be delighted with the jam. Cut the rhubarb into inch lengths and spread on a board to dry for two days. Allow one pound of figs to six pounds of rhubarb. Weigh it, and to every pound of fruit allow one pound of sugar. Boil the sugar with about half a gill of water for twenty minutes, then add the rhubarb and figs (cut into small pieces). Boil for half an hour, and place in jars.—J. S.

Orange Sandwich.—Ingredients: Eight ounces of flour, three ounces butter, grated rind of two oranges, five ounces sugar, two eggs, juice of one orange, one teaspoonful baking powder. Mix flour and sugar in a bowl. Rub in the butter, add baking powder, orange rind, eggs well beaten, and lastly the juice. If necessary add a little milk. Beat the mixture well, and put it in a well-greased sandwich tin. Bake about thirty minutes in a moderate oven. When cold split and spread with way to use up old potatoes left over from dinner. Rub them through a sieve. Mix them with a little pepper and salt, one ounce of butter, and make into a fine paste with two eggs, or one egg and a little milk, and a little flour. Roll out the paste to about half an inch in thickness, and stamp into round cakes a breakfastcup size. Mince some beef or mutton with a little chopped onion, a tablespoonful of savoury herbs, and a little pepper and salt. Moisten with a tablespoonful of Yorkshire relish, and enclose a little mince in each of the cakes. Fold them round, and press together. Fry in deep boiling fat until a nice brown, and serve on lace paper, with a little parsley here and there.

Tasty Pudding.—For the pudding you require one quarter of a pound of macaroni, stewed fruit or jam, and a thick custard. Wash and break the macaroni into small pieces. Put it on to cook in fast-boiling salted water, and let it boil until quite soft. Stew any kind of fruit that may be in season, or jam may be used if liked better. Put a thick layer of fruit or jam at the bottom of a glass dish. Drain all the water from the macaroni, and lay it on top of the fruit. The pieces should not be more than one and a half inches long, as they are more easy to serve. Next make a nice thick custard. Let it stand until cold, then pour over the macaroni and sprinkle with a little grated nutmeg. The custard may be made with eggs or with custard powder.

About the Farm.

A Year of Jubilee.

Have you heard the news
That's going around
The farmers all are going to strike
And move their folks to town.

There'll be no plowing done next year, No turning of the sod, And like the lilies of the past, We'll live and trust in God.

The year of juffilee has come;
A rest year for our soil;
And the farmer now will leave his plow,
And spend a year from toil.

Our mother earth can bathe her brow With the dew-drops as they fall; No wanton hand will disturb the land, And there'll be rest for all.

Oh, who will envy her this boon, This holiday at last, Who will say it has come too soon, Who'll forget the past.

For ages she has given out
Her treasure to great and small,
And now the farmers are about
To listen to her call.
To stack up tools for one whole year,
And give a rest to mother dear. -Uncle Ros.

POULTRY POINTERS.

In October always thoroughly clean and disinfect the poultry house, giving the interior a thorough coat or, what is better, two coats of whitewash.

Dry picked fowls sell best in most markets and certainly the carcass looks much better than when the skin is parboiled in the scalding process.

One of the best aids to proper digestion is a good supply of granulated charcoal. This may be secured from dealers in poultry supplies for a very reasonable price and is worth more than it costs.

Kill and market all the cockerels that are large enough, except those which are to be kept for breeding next spring. They will bring higher prices per pound now than they will later in most markets and will be out of the way.

Do not fail to keep a good supply of prepared grit where the fowls and chicks can reach it. If on free range, they will probably find a considerable quantity of grit, but since good digestion depends upon a sufficient supply, it is always safer to furnish it. is always safer to furnish it.

If you have not already done so, separate the pullets from the cockerels, giving them a run by themselves on a different part of the farm. If this is impossible, place the males by themselves in a yard of good size and give the future egg producers the freedom of the premises.

Ducks should be marketed when they are not much over ten weeks old. At that time they ought to weigh four to six pounds each if properly fattened. When they are eleven or twelve weeks old they begin to grow another lot of pin feathers and it will be almost impossible to remove the feathers and pin feathers and leave an attractive looking dressed bird. They will begin to lose flesh, also, and cannot be fattened again until the new plumage is mature.

Feeding Growing Chicks with Hoppers.

The method of feeding known as hopper feeding is rapidly taking the place of the time-honored method of three or four meals a day, especially for growing stock which is on free range. These hoppers, as they are called, consist of a receptacle or storage compartment for the grain and a trough at its base into which the grain falls as rapidly as the chicks consume the supply in the trough. Some of these hoppers are divided into several compartments for various kinds of foods while others are made without divisions and all the foods including grains (whole, cracker and ground) beef scraps, grit, etc., are mixed together. The idea is, the fowls will select as much of these grains as they require to properly balance their strips coach bird according to its indithey require to properly balance their ration, each bird according to its indi-ration, each bird according to its individual needs.

It is claimed that chicks will not overfeed by this method for they can obtain grain at any time that they want and do not stuff themselves as they frequently do when the food is furnished at intervals. Certain it is that they need never be underfed for they can go to the hopper and eat at any time, then go for a run on the range, seeking the toothsome bug and worm. The older, strenger chicks do not get most of the food, to the detriment of the younger and weaker ones, for the latter can satisfy their hunger when the former have finished eating and left the hopper.

The use of these utensils saves fully half the time required to care for chicks fed in the ordinary way. If the storage compartment of the hopper is large enough, it will not be necessary to replenish its supply more frequently than twice each week. Some poultrymen do not find it necessary to furnish a fresh supply oftener than once a week. The best mixture to feed in these hoppers consists of oats, wheat, cracked corn, wheat bran, beef scraps. It is better to place the grit and charcoal in dishes or boxes separate from the hopper.

If placed in the open these hoppers should have some sort of shelter to protect them from the rain which will get into the trough and dampen the food. A large drygoods box, with two sides removed and the top covered with tar paper, makes an excellent place to put a hopper, for chicks can readily get at the food which will be protected from rain by the box.

If these hoppers are used when the chicks are confined in yards, they should contain bran and beef scraps only and the hard grain should be fed in such a way that the chicks will obtain exercise in securing it; for example, in a deep litter of straw.

IN THE DAIRY.

Opportunity for dairying appears in the increased demand for pure milk for the large cities.

A money-making combination is the cow and the sow. Give the latter warm skim milk.

On many of the farms near cities and summer resorts there is a profitable business in supplying ice cream.

The best time to salt butter is before it is taken from the churn, and just as it is gathered in granules.

The furnishing of fancy farm-made cheese affords an opportunity of making great profits from the dairy if properly conducted.

Winter dairying pays. Better prices for butter. More time to care for the cows. Breed and buy with that end in

Dairying is a ready money business, and no other branch of live stock keep-ing can compare with it for enriching

The improvement of dairy cattle so that they will be able to produce dairy products more economically offers a great opportunity to the breeder of dairy cattle

Read current dairy literature and keep posted on new ideas.

Breeding at too early an age dwarfs the size and thus greatly injures the future use of the cow.

Never allow the cows to be excited by hard driving, abuse, loud talking, or unnecessary disturbance. Do not expose them to cold or bad storms longer than is absolutely necessary.

Make a study of your herd of cows. Test them. Sell the poor ones, buy or raise more good ones. Make the cows keep you, instead of you keeping the

It is a waste of good material to sell a calf for veal. If the calves that were slaughtered in their infancy were kept and made into beef, the profits of farming would be largely increased.

The growing of first-class high-grade dairy heifers to sell to the best dairymen affords an apportunity for the grower to make a good profit.

Milk fever is a common occurrence. We advise our readers to get a milk fever outfit; the cost is light and the lives of many of your cows may be saved by its use.

Three common faults in butter making are overripe cream, overchurning and overworking. The first means strong butter, the second and third soft Success awaits the dairymen who fit their work to meet the conditions of the place in which they conduct their business. They must know the value of a good cow and how to treat her.

There is always the opportunity to rnere is always the opportunity to sell first-class dairy butter for fancy prices. Success in this line of the dairy business must be brought about by studying and practicing the most improved methods that are employed by the best creameries.

The growing of a balanced ration of food for the dairy affords the dairyman an opportunity to practice a rotation of crops that will improve and build up his fields for future crops instead of exhausting his fields.

The first requisite for healthy milk is healthy cows. When a herd is known to be sound, every precaution should be taken before adding new animals. Have the latter tested for tuberculosis. Have your herd examined at least twice a year by a skillful veterinarian.

Care of the Separator.

A reader of the Western Home Monthly writes: We used a separator ten years and found it a labor saver, With it you can get a uniform amount of butter in cold or hot weather. The butter, cream and milk are purer than with pans and of much better flavor. Except in hot weather, once a day is often enough to scald it. Some makes are too expensive for small dairies, The milk should be run through while warm and in this condition is fine feed for calves, pigs and people. Be sure to use the best separator oil and keep all warm and in this condition as the for calves, pigs and people. Be sure to use the best separator oil and keep all the bearings well oiled. Place on a solid foundation and keep it well bolted J. H.

Experience with a Separator.

H. C. S. writes: I wish to give our experience with a cream separator. We have five cows; one had given milk eight months, two six months and two three months. We commenced using a separator September 27, 1906. During the rest of the year we sold $19.42 worth of cream besides what a family of four used in butter, milk and cream, During the year 1907 we sold $63.00 worth of cream, raised five calves and were five in the family. The calves did better on the separated milk I think because it is always warm and sweet. The milk is as good for cooking as any milk. My husband turns the machine. It takes about fifteen minutes when the cows are doing the best and about the same length of time to wash and wipe up the machine, and then you are done, In spite of what agents say it is heavy work to turn a machine, about like turning a washer, but we would not be without it.

The Cream Separator a Labor Saver.

The Cream Separator a Labor Saver.

My father had a small but very good separator and for three years it was my chore to run the milk through the separator, feed the calves and care for the cream. I think it is the only right way to attend to milk on the farm. We had three very good cows and my father said the separator paid for itself in one year. It took six or seven minutes night and morning to run the two larger pails of milk through. Then I brushed the foam from the milk and carried it to the calves still warm and I must say I never raised finer calves. They were kept in a small pasture, and just had good grass and the milk. We had tried cans and crocks, etc., until I thought caring for milk the greatest drudgery. When we got the separator it seemed as a load removed as it did away with a lot of fussing and lifting the milk so many times. Now since I am married I had to go back to cans, but it is needless to say I shall have a separator at the earliest opportunity. The separator above mentioned has been in use eight years now and has not had any repairs yet outside of a good cleaning of machinery once and lots of first-class oil applied often.

Common-Sense Ween.

Common-Sense Views.

Isn't it about time the country had a rest from all this talk about bables being poisoned by drinking cows' milk? Anyone who knows anything about it at all, knows that milk produced today is much better than it was a decade ago. Each year producers have been improving their methods and turning out a better product, far better than consumers have met, with a proportionate increase in prices paid. Our dairymen will continue to improve conditions as time goes on, but how unfortionate increase in prices paid. Our dairymen will continue to improve conditions as time goes on, but how unfortunate it is that consumers must be scared half out of their wits and led to believe that every quart of milk carries a certain amount of poison! They are not likely to use as much milk under these conditions, and the market today shows they are using much below the normal amount of milk. For instance, the official figures of the Massachusetts board of railway commissioners show that there was received at Boston the past six months much. less milk than for the same period one year ago and yet there has been an unusual surplus. Why not talk for a while about the food value of milk as compared with other food products and dwell upon the economy and health of using more milk? The sooner this muck-raking business in the dairy industry ceases the sooner will we have a better condition of the milk market for consumer, for dealer, and for dairymen alike.

You can make a beefsteak of inferior You can make a beefsteak of inferior quality as tender as the more expensive cuts, by treating it to a bath of the best olive oil—a tablespoonful is sufficient. Add a few drops of vinegar to the oil, pour over the steak and rub in. Put into a cold place and turn once or twice. Leave for several hours, or until the next day, if necessary.

Dead Leaves.

I heard a sound like the noise of a small stream,
At the ashen end of a bleak November day, for the leaves, grown old, had come to the end of the dream;

The feast was over and now was the price to pay.

The wind that served them with dew in the year's sweet youth,
And whispered and sighed in the night with the gentlest voice,
Now mastered and drove them on without pity or ruth,
O'er the sludge of the street to the Desolate House of Death.

I sighed for the leaves that had given me shelter in Spring,
But the rose in my heart still blows,
and the secret song
A gray bird sings to the rose, that shall always sing;
And the Spring's so near the Winter shall stay not long.

Miss Muriel Million was sitting alone, With a very disconsolate air; Her fluffy blue tea-gown was fastened

And frowzy and rumpled her hair.
"Oh, what is the matter?" I said, in alarm,

But refusing all comfort she pushed me away,
While she cried, and she cried, and she cried.

Had Good Memory.

"Be you Dr. X?" asked a tall, lean man, walking into the office of a practitioner.

"I am," replied the doctor.

"Well, look a-here, old feller," remarked the visitor, "I am glad to find yer at last. D'ye remember how yer set a feller's arm, and didn't charge

"Yes," said the doctor, with the prospect of a big fee rising before

"I'm that feller, an' I've broke the other arm, so I've come to have it set on the same terms."

Clever Ponto!

"Talking about the intelligence of animals," said young Kanebiter, "why, I have a dog up at the farm that's simply wonderful."
"How so?" said Pitken.

"Why, you see, I was out shooting one day when I found a large, handsome dog lying on the ground moan-ing with pain. Some ruffian had shot it in the leg. I carried it home, bandaged the wound, and finally cured the poor beast. Some months after that I was compelled to travel a lonely road after dark, when suddenly Ponto, who accompanied me, growled warningly. The next moment a warningly. The next moment a highwayman stepped out of the bushes and put a pistol to my head." "Ah!" cried the listener, "I see.

Thereupon the grateful dog seized the robber by the throat."
"Not at all. The man robbed me easily enough—took watch, purse, everything." 'But Ponto?"

"Ran off as fast as his legs would carry him. That's the point—don't you see? Animal instinct—didn't wan't to get shot again."

From a Good Family.

He was a gentler specimen of his class than one usually meets, and when he made his appeal for something to eat at the kitchen door he was asked by the good-natured cook to come in by the fire. As he satthere she said:

"You don't look as though you had always been a tramp."
"I haven't," he replied, without offence. "I came from a very good family.

She let him eat on without interruption, but after he had finished she said:

"You say you came from a good family. May I ask the name?"

"It was Blankleigh," he responded.
"why," she said, in surprise," that's the name of the occupier next door to us."

"Yes," he replied. "I noticed it on the door-plate. That's who I came from. He set his dog on me just be-fore I called here."

Just to Remind Her.

Conductor—" All right, lady."
Lady—"Don't forget to tell me when Conductor-"I'm sorry, but we have passed Brownsville. But we can go back.

Conductor (at door)-"Come on, now, if you want to get off, we are at Brownsville."

Lady—"Oh, I didn't want to get off, my husband just told me to take a pill when we got to Brownsville."

M'Corkle: Is it right to speak of a man as 'of the male persuasion'? M'Crackle: It is if the subject is unmarried.

M'Corkle: What has that to do with it?

M'Crackle: Why, if he is married his wife persuades him.

Made it Quits.

It was a plain, every-day case of mutual admiration. He admired the girl and she admired him. It was much more than admiration—they were in love with each other. Of course, one was more so than the other, for it cannot be otherwise, seeing that Cupid is born with one leg shorter than the other; but that is not an insuperable obstacle to matrimony. It it were, the marriage license clerk would be compelled to retire from business. So it came to pass that he proposed to her. That seemed natural enough, but when she burst into tears, he was greatly disturbed.

"My darling," he exclaimed, as she came to his arms, "what is the mat-ter?"

"I am so superstitious," she sobbed.
"What has that got to do with your loving me, as I love you?" he asked, wonderingly.
"Nothing, dear," she wept.

"And you do love me, don't you?" "More than all the world; but I cannot marry you; at least, not

'Why can't you?" he asked, very tenderly.

"Oh, I can't tell you," and she burst into a fresh flood of tears.

For a long time he coaxed and urged her to impart her fatal secret, and for a long time she resisted all his importunities. At last she yield-

"You will not put me out of your" heart entirely if I tell you, will you?"

she pleaded.
"Certainly not, my darling," was his brave reply, for men under such circumstances are not always in a hurry to take risks, even if they do

"It is this, darling," she said, hiding her face on his manly bosom; "you are the thirteenth man who has proposed to me, and I'm afraid to accept you with that unlucky number's baneful influence hanging over

With a ringing laugh, in which there was only sunshine and happiness, he kissed her eighteen times and folded her in his strong arms. "That's all right, my own," he almost shouted; "you are the thirteenth girl I have proposed to, and that makes it quits."

And they lived happily ever after.

Origin of Coffee.

The use of coffee originated in Abyssinia and from there passed to Arabia several centuries later. The bean was introduced into Europe by Leonhard Rauwolf, a German physician, soon after which the introduction of coffee houses arose nearly everywhere. The first in Europe was s-tablished in Constantinople in 1531. The first London coffee house was opened in Newman's Court, Cornhill, in 1652, by a Greek named Pasquet, who was the servant of an English merchant by the name of Edwards, who brought the coffee with him from Smyrna. When the fact of his having the coffee became known, his home was so thronged with friends and visitors anxious to sample the new beverage, that Edwards estab-Be wise, and deal direct with us. #### Parrot That Kills Sheep.

The kea is a mountain parrot found only in the south island of New Zealand, where it lives among the peaks and valleys of the Southern Alps. When it was discovered, in 1856, its chief food seemed to be berries and the larvae of insects, but in 1863 the report spread that it was a meat eater and a bird of prey of no mean order.

A few years later, when sheep were brought into the mountain valleys, keas had been seen to descend the mountains, attack sheep in the pastures and kill and eat them. There were similar reports in later years, but they were generally discredited.

A while ago George Marriner, assistant in the biological laboratory of Canterbury College, was assigned the task of collecting evidence and find-ing out the real facts. His report is printed in the latest annual of the New Zealand Institute.

He has proved that the kea actually lights on the backs of sheep and kills them. He quotes the testimony of thirty-five eye witnesses who have seen the occurrence, and his map shows that instances of the killing have been observed in nearly all parts of the Southern Alps.

All the witnesses are the owners of sheep stations, their managers or shepherds in their service. Marriner shepherds in their service. Marriner says that in 1900 it was denied in scientific papers that the kea killed sheep, and the fact was never satisfactorily proved before 1905.

Usually one or two birds do the killing, and the others share the spoil. The testimony is unanimous that the kea does not attack sheep in poor condition, but usually takes the pick of the flock.

of the flock.
The bird settles on the ground, near its quarry, hops around a little, and then lights on the sheep's rump, where it can get the best foothold. It at once begins to tear out the wool with its powerful beak and at last gets its beak into the flesh.

The sheep vainly tries to shake its tormentor off, and at last, frantic with pain and fright, it runs blindly about at its highest speed. Down-hill it usually rushes, heedless of rocks and pitfalls, the kea holding on and balancing itself with outstretched wings.

When the beast stumbles the relentless bird rises on its wings, and settles down again as the sheep regains its feet. The race continues, until the frantic animal, bruised by falls and maddened with pain, stumbles to rise no more, and becomes an easy prey to the kea.

Mr. Marriner says that in most of the kea infested country the annual damage to the flocks is under five per cent. though at a few stations the cent., though at a few stations the loss has been as much as ten per cent. Some of their victims are almost untouched at the time, but the birds return later and feed on the bodies until they are consumed.

His Clothes.

The seaman of Nelson's time had few pleasures save the prospect of hot fight and his daily pint of rum. But to these must be added the vainglorious satisfaction he took in his clothes. The Admiralty in those days had not descended upon him with the tape measure and a stern insistence as to uniformity in cut and color, so his naturally lively taste ran riot.

When rigged out in his best he and visitors anxious to sample the new beverage, that Edwards established his servant in the coffee house as a means of relieving himself of the bons sewn down the seams to give an additional gaiety; his waistcoat might be red or canary yellow, and a black silk handkerchief would be knotted loosely round his throat; while, as the finishing touch, his hair would be hanging in a queue down his back, for, as Captain Brenton said, this was "the distinguishing mark of a thoroughbred seaman." The broad collars, so familiar on the bluejackets of today, were first worn as a protection against the grease and pomatum used in dressing the pigtail.—From "Sea Life in Nelson's Time," by John Masefield.

KYRIH BROS ODD NUMBERED SECTIONS 12 opnov 861-961-461

As already publicly announced, odd numbe sections remaining vacant and undisposed will become available for homestead entry the coming into force of the Dominion La Act on the lst September next.

As the records of only the even numbered sections have hitherto been kept in the books of the various land agencies in the western provinces and the time having been very limited since the passing of the Act within which to transfer the records of all odd numbered sections from the head office at Ottawa to the local offices, it is possible that the transfer of record in some cases may not have been absolutely completed by the 1st September. In any case where the record of any quarter section has no been transferred, application will be accepted but will have to be forwarded to head office to be dealt with.

As it has been found impossible as a section has no content of the section has no content of the section has no content of the section has no been transferred, application will be accepted but with head office to be dealt with.

As it has been found impossible as yet to furnish sub-agencies with copies of the records of odd numbered sections and in view of the large probable demand for entries, all applicants for entry upon odd numbered sections are strongly advised to make their applications in person at the office of the Dominion Lands Agent and not through a Sub-Land Agent, Applications for even numbered sections may be dealt with through the Sub-Land Agent as before if desired.

THE FRUITS

Seem To Be Nature's Provision For Keeping Man Healthy and Warding Off Disease.

Cereals, vegetables and meat supply the elements needed for man's nourishment. Yet fruit - though it has very little food value—has proved to be absolutely necessary for perfect health.

careful investigation has shown that all the common fruits act on the Liver, Kidneys, Bowels and Skin. These are the organs that rid the body of dead tissue and waste products, and the fruit julces stir them up to more vigorous action, thus keeping the whole body clean and healthy.

But few people eat enough fruit. Realizing this, after several years of experimenting, a prominent Canadian physician succeeded in combining the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes in such a way that the medicinal action is many times multiplied. Then he added valuable tonics and made the combination into tablets callade the combination into tablets called "Fruit-a-tives." ## TEMPERANCE TALK.

Pour-Leaf Clover.

I know a place where the sun is like gold, And the cherry blooms burst with snow;

And underneath is the loveliest nook,
Where the four-leaf clovers grow. One leaf is for hope, and one is for faith,

And one is for love, you know;
And God put another one in for luck;
If you search you will find where they grow.

But you must have hope, and you must have faith;
You must love and be strong; and so, If you work, if you wait, you will find the place Where the four-leaf clovers grow."

Carnegie Hits Drink.

The curse of drink is the cause of more failures in life than anything else. You can surmount every other faulty habit, but the man who is a confirmed drinker has not one chance in a million of success in life.—Andrew Carnegie in Address at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, March 28, 1908.

Charity Thinketh No Evil.

Remember that charity thinketh no evil, much less repeats it. There are two good rules which ought to be written on every heart—never believe anything about anybody unless you positively know it is true; never tell eyen that unless you feel that it is absolutely necessary and that God is listening while you tell it.—Henry Van Dyke.

Decline of Beer Drinking in Munich.

Local patriots in Munich are dejected Local patriots in Munich are dejected at the latest statistics concerning the consumption of their famous beer within their own borders. Only a few years ago they proudly boasted that the annual consumption per head of the population was 115 gallons. This has now sunk to the mere bagatelle of 65 gallons. The shrinkage is attributed to the gradual spread of temperance principles, to the anti-beer propagands in public schools, and to the fact that employers of labor are ceasing to give the free beer to their work people.—London Telegraph.

Passing of the Moderate Drinker.

Most of us can remember, for it is not so very long ago, that while the drunk-ard was frowned upon and condemned as a criminal, the total abstainer was nevertheless regarded as a crank. A well-known physician stated in our presence at one time that he did not "believe in total anything." These ideas have been relegated to the rear, because it has been found that moderate drinking, in most cases at least, leads to drunkenness, and that drunkenness unfits a man for any kind of duty. Twenty-five or thirty years ago it was a common thing for the average Most of us can remember, for it is not enness units a man for any kind of duty. Twenty-five or thirty years ago it was a common thing for the average business man to go out at eleven o'clock, visit a saloon and get a drink. This might be repeated in some cases several times a day, but the odor of whisky from a man's breath did not interfere with the man's standing, either business or social, and was considered in many respects a matter of course. Now all this has changed. Business men are suspicious of the man who Now all this has changed. Business men are suspicious of the man who takes a drink. He is cheapened in the business world, not so much because of what he is as of what he may become. Moderate drinking is recognized as not being good for the health, good for business, or for the reputation, and it certainly is not good for the pocket-book.

Over-Sensitiveness.

Pride is a queer thing. It is hard to understand and follow the reasoning of those who yield to it. We find people about us proud of different qualities or achievements which are not a source of pride to people in other circumstances. "Foolish pride" is coming to be recognized as a distinct weakness or evil in every community. One of the most nized as a distinct weakness or evil in every community. One of the most common forms is the pride which impels a man or woman to live beyond their means, in the effort to make an impression, usually upon people for whom they care nothing. They know that their friends do not require them to make a display and it is consequently done to impress those outside of the friendly circle.

Another indication of the peculiar variety of pride is observed by those who are engaged in the Keeley work. It often happens that a man who has established a reputation as an excessive drinker, and who has been remonstrated with by his friends, pleaded with by his family, abused by the world in general because he is a drunkard, will refuse to take treatment because he feels it is a disgrace. Perhaps the reason for this is that in spite of what is obvious to everyone else, he thinks the fact that he is an excessive drinker is known only to a few people, and that going to a sanitarium will advertise it to all the world. This is a pernicious form of self-deception. No matter how secretly a man may drink, it is known to his friends and certainly to his enemies. If a man wishes to please his friends and confound his enemies he cannot take a wiser course, if he is an excessive drinker, than to take treatment to remove the appetite for strong drink. There is some reason for being proud of achievement in the right direction, but no reason for being proud of one's obstinacy or perversity.

Two Classes of Inebriates.

There are many kinds of inebriates. But for the purpose of this article we will consider only two classes—the men who, but for drink, would have been reputable and useful citizens, and the ones who would have found some other road to ruin if they had let drink road to ruin if they had let drink alone.

To the first class belong men of all positions in life and all degrees of mentality. Men who might have reached the highest places in the business and professional world, and men who would have been plodders in the treadmill of industry. To the second class belong men whose tendencies were naturally evil; moral perverts, degenerates, to whom drink was an accompaniment rather than a cause of downfall.

It is a common error to attribute all naturally evil; moral perverts, degenpaniment rather than a cause of downfall.

It is a common error to attribute all evil doing, all failure among drinking men to their drinking habits; and while it is true that the frenzy of alcohol renders good men irresponsible, and leads to dishonor among those who are reliable when sober, it cannot be too strongly emphasized that drink is not the only cause of failure.

There are men who would have amounted to nothing even if they had never touched liquor. There are men who would have broken every law of respectability, every requirement of honor, even though alcohol had never been manufactured. They were naturally depraved; and while strong drink undoubtedly made them worse, it was not the only thing to be reckoned with.

It is natural to seek for excuses for the shortcomings of those who are bound to us by ties of blood or affection. When they forget their obligations and ignore their responsibilities we like to have something to blame for it, and so we lay it to strong drink.

Whiskey is the greatest cause of poverty, wretchedness and crime, but it is not their only cause. There are paupers and tramps who never drank liquor; there are men who have broken women's hearts, but who were models of total abstinence; there are criminals who owe the success of their worst enterprises to the fact that they never lost their wits through drink.

Nothing is gained by false estimates. A just discrimination between the men who drink is necessary to a correct solution of the liquor problem.

Probably no physician could be found so far behind the times that he would not admit that the continued use of alcohol causes a diseased condition. In other words, inebriety is a disease, and whether a man is sick with typhoid, pneumonia, or inebriety, he requires physical remedies. But the kind of a man who suffers from typhoid or pneumonia determines what he will be after he is cured; and in the same way the character of the man who is cured of inebriety decides what he will afterward become.

Results Always the Same.

It makes no difference why people begin to drink, the result is inevitably the same. If continued long enough the victim becomes an which indicates a diseased condition of the nervous system. Doctor Keeley defines it to be "a condition wherein the nerve cells have become so accustomed to performing their duties and functions under the influence of alcohol that they are dependent on it and will no longer perform those duties and functions properly and painlessly except when under its influence." This explains the craving for drink which was understood. When never before understood. every nerve cell in his anatomy is crying out for whiskey, is it any wonder that the victim yields? To bring about a cure, therefore, it is necessary to overcome this condition.

Medium (who is giving a private seance, in sepulchral tones)—"The spirits are about us"—sharp rat-tat heard in the direction of door, shiver runs through audience, and—
New Servant—"Please, mum, am I to cook all them sausages for supper?"

"Oh, Edgar, did you see in the paper the description of that new house where everything goes by electricity? Wouldn't it be fine if we could live in a house like that? All you have to do to get anything you want is to touch a button."

"That wouldn't interest you, my dear. It would be no improvement. Nothing could induce you to touch a button. Just look at this coat of mine!"

Mrs. Newlywed—"Before we were married you said that my slightest wish should be your law."

Mr. Newlywed—"Exactly, my love; but you have so many vigores and well-developed wishes that I am as yet unable to decide as to which is the slightest."

Jones—"I say, Smith, you are a good hand at arithmetic?"
Smith—"Yes, I am considered very good. Why?"
Jones—"Well, here is a little problem for you. There was a man named Little, living in Dublin, who had a daughter. Now, she was in love with a chap she knew her pater did not approve of, so one day she eloped with him. When the old man found out he was very angry, and at once followed them. Now, then what time was it?"
"Smith (angrily)—"What time was it? How on earth do you suppose I can tell you? I give it up?"
Jones (trimuphantly)—"Why, a Little after two, of course."

Photographer-"You are all right now except your expression.

Jay Green—"Hang it, man, I can't!
I'm bowlegged, an' am trying to hold my knees together so's it won't show.
When I smile I forgit all about my knees, an' when I pay attention to my knees I forgit to smile."

A friend wrote to Mark Twain, asking his opinion on a certain matter, but received no reply. He waited a few days and wrote again. His second letter was also ignored. Then he wrote a third note, enclosing a sheet of paper and a two-cent stamp. By return mail he received a postal card, on which was the following:

following:
"Paper and stamp received. Please send envelope."

"Sir," began old Moneybag's bookkeeper, "I have been in your employ now six years. I have worked diligently, and have taken the liveliest interest in the welfare of the firm. My salary, however—"
Here Moneybags patted him on the shoulder and smiled in kindly fashion.
"Have no fear, Quill," he interrupted.
"If you continue to do your duty faithfully, your salary will not be reduced."

Deduction by Analogy.

"Mamma, I'se got a stomach-ache," said Nelly Bly, aged six.
"That's because you've been without lunch. Your stomach is empty. You would feel better if you had something in it."

in it."
"That afternoon the minister called, and in the course of conversation remarked that he had been suffering all day with a very severe headache. "That's because it's empty," said Nelly. You'd feel much better if you had something in it."

Chunkly—Did you ever hear her sing "On the Hins of Old New Hampshire Far Away?"

Lankly—No; but I think I could if I was anywhere in New England at the time

In the Land of the Sultan.

"Well," said the sultan of Turkey,
"what have we got to be thankful for?"
"We might be thankful because there are two kinds of turkeys," responded the grand vizier.

"We sultanly should," retorted the ruler, who was so pleased with himself that he summoned his 438th wife and told her the story of a turkey who had a feather beau, but didn't know enough to wear it around her neck during the thankful season.

A little boy was taught the Lord's Prayer, and found it much to his taste. For a few days he kept it going with great faithfulness, but then he announced to his mother in disgust: "I heard another fellow say that prayer, today, mother. It's going to get all around town."

It is told that a grandfather, well known in the English House of Com-mons, was chatting amicably with his little granddaughter, who was snugly ensconced on his knee. "What makes your hair so white, grandpa?" the little miss queried. "I am very old, my dear. I was in the ark," replied his lordship, with a painful disregard of the truth.
"Oh! Are you Noah?" "No." "Are you Shem, then?" "No, I am not Shem." "Are you Ham?" "No." Shem." "Then," said the little one, who was fast nearing the limit of her Biblical knowledge, "you must be Japhet." A negative reply was given to this query, also; for the old gentleman inwardly wondered what the outcome would be. "But, grandpa if you are not Noah or Shem or Ham or Japhet, you must be a beast!"

Appropriate Epitaph.

Appropriate Epitaph.

The following is a copy of the epitaph of a watchmaker, written by himself, in which he is compared to a watch that has run down:

"Here lies, in horizontal position, the outside case of George Ritter, whose abiding place in that line was an honor to his profession. Integrity was his mainspring, and prudence the regulator of all the actions of his life. Humane, generous and liberal, his hand never stopped till he had rerelieved distress. He never went wrong, except when set a-going by people who did not know his key. Even then he was easily set right again. He had the art of disposing of his time so well that his hours glided by in one continual round of pleasure and delight, till an unlucky minute put an end to his existence. His case rests and molders and decays beneath the turf, but his good works will never die."

Aroused Emotion.

An unfortunate man once obtained access to a certain millionaire, and he started to lay before him his woes. He depicted his wretched poverty in most vivid colors. Indeed, so graphic was the man's sad story that the millionaire himself felt affected as he had never been before. With tears in his eyes he summoned the servant, and in quavering voice said:

"John, put this poor fellow out. He is breaking my heart."

The reputation of the Gourlay piano is due to the achievements of a former generation. There are pianos that have been known longer than the Gourlay but none that will wear or last as long.

Hints for the Housewife manu

Alarm-Clocks as Alls When Cooking.

Alarm-clocks may be used in ways which do not ordinarily occur to the housewife. For example, it is often the misfortune of some women to forget something they have put into the oven until it is quite overdone. One morning it occurred to me that if I should set the alarm of my little kitchen clock at the time when the bread or cake should be done I could give my whole attention to another task without fear of forgetting the baking. This little reminder is particularly helpful in the case of a last loaf or any task to be done out of season.

A Stick for Drying Clothes Quickly is described as follows: Get a stick two inches square by two and a half or three feet long; drive three-inch wire mads at intervals along each of the four sides; suspend, when needed, by a ring driven in one end, from a hook in the celling over the kitchen rance, where much heat can be obtained without scorching the articles to be dried, and without the contrivance being in the way. Small articles only may be hung on the "banana stalk," but children's stockings and little garments may be quickly dried to prevent shrinkage.

A Good Place for the Bolling-Pin may be made by screwing two curtain-pole brackets to the inner side of the kitch-en closet door just far enough apart to hold each handle of the pin.

When There is an Invalid in the Famlly china should be bought now and then so as to vary the appearance of the sick-room tray. With the pretty china, which need not be expensive, and flowers and little dollies the tray may be made most attractive. Color-schemes may be carried out for certain days, and holidays be observed by appropriate decorations. Such attention will often tempt an appetite that may be capriclous, and arose an interest in meal times that would flag if nething new were to be expected.

A Satisfactory Pillow-Sham Rolder may be made of laths covered with white muslin. It will prove to be an ideal support for the shams, which may be pinned to the muslin. At night the frame may be lifted off, shams and all.

Save Some Broomsticks for Table-Legs.—Take a board of the size needed for the surface of the table and nail a broomstick to each corner, the broom-sticks being sawed the desired length. Such a table or stool may be used in many ways. For a washstand it may be covered and curtained, and a second shelf added, where small articles may be kept. For the children's playroom a little table made as above would be useful. It could be stained any desired color.

Flower-Vases Will Not Topple Over from the flowers being too hop-heavy, or from a strong breeze if the bottom of the vase is covered with small shot.

"Memory Books" for Children are suggested by one mother. Take for such a purpose a large scrapbook into which anything of interest to the child can be pasted. One of these books began with dispatches and letters received at the time of the child's birth; then followed postal-cards, valentines, pictures, letters, first invitations, party placecards, etc. In this way there can be kept together little remembrances which otherwise would be lost, yet which the child will appreciate highly when older.

To Keep Veils in Shape a pasteboard roll, such as is used for sending photographs and other prints, is excellent. The roll may be padded and covered and the veils be rolled neatly on without folding and then pinned securely. If veils are cared for in this way they will last much longer than when they are folded.

Do Not Neglect the Plower Pots when the plants are being lifted for winter indoors. Before new pots are used they must be well soaked in water or the plants will get but little moisture, the dry pots absorbing it all. Old pots should be washed before they are used again.

A Belt for Stove-Cover Holders is a A Belt for Stove-Cover Holders is a convenient article that may be provided as follows: Make a belt of firm tape long enough to button easily around the waist over the work-apron. On each side of the belt, about five inches from the centre, attach a piece of tape the length of the arm. To the end of these tapes fasten a holder. The woman who wears such a belt when at work about the stove will not burn her fingers or waste time hunting for a cloth or holder.

Plants can be made by buying door "bumpers" and screwing four to the corners of a piece of board of the desired size.

house by putting calcride of lime in the places where they run, for the lime will burn their feet and frighten them away.

when Making Jelly with Geletine be sure to cover it while cooling. That this is important is shown by the fact that gelatine is used by bacteriologists for collecting germs.

A a Substitute for Paste a cold boiled potato has some value. With it papers may be fastened together, a bit of torn wall-paper fatsened down, or a picture mounted. Simply rub the edges with the potato and press firmly together.

First the Flumbing with Ect Water, Keep's piece of garden hose about two feet long in the bathroom closet, and on ironing and baking days, when there is plenty of very hot water, take a little time to flush the water closet better than can be done at other times. Push one end of the hose over the hot-water faucet of the bathtub and hold the other end over the water-closet outlet; then turn on the hot water.

A Boll for Centrepieces can be made from a piece of wooden curtain-pole about one inch and a half in diameter, and a little longer than the width of the widest centrepiece to be rolled. First cover the pole with wadding; then make an outer covering of white linen or muslin, having this longer than the largest piece. Roll the centrepieces smoothly on the pole and the with ribbon. This pole will keep the articles in order when they are too large to be laid flat in an ordinary drawer.

Emery-Cloth and Sandpaper are Useful in many ways in the house. A small board to which sandpaper has been glued flat is good for rubbing flat-irons upon, to take off any roughness. Emery-cloth of different grades of fineness may be glued to narrow strips of wood for use in sharpening knives or scissors, putting a better point upon a pencil, or cleaning a rubber eraser. When sharpening scissors in this way be careful to push the blade in firm, even strokes, always from you.

To Make a Dustpan More Useful. The ordinary tin dustpan can be made the source of great comfort to the housewife by the use of the handle of a discarded broom. Saw off the handle from the broom and insert the end in the hollow tin handle of the dustpan after bending it perpendicular to the pan. This enables one to use the dustpan without stooping.

A Frunk in a Bedroom May be Con-cealed by having a light wooden frame built around it, with a top as well. This may be converted into a pretty dressing-table by appropriate coverings. The trunk is hidden underneath, but may be readily pulled out when needed.

To Make Linen Fold Evenly When Ironed. Sheets and pillow-cases should be torn by a thread the size desired, but tablecloths and napkins should be cut by a thread. If, after tearing the sheets and pillow-cases and cutting the table linen, the material is shrunken before hemming it will always hold evenly when ironed.

Use Ordinary Burlap to Cover a Screen and you will get a pretty effect if you first have the stuff dyed some appropriate color. When fastened to a frame the burlap will look as artistic as a more expensive material.

When the Ironing is Being Done try using two clothes-bars. Hang on one all the clothes that are in perfect order, and on the other any that need mending, are folded those needing no attention. all the clothes that are in perfect order, and on the other any that need mending, darning or buttons. When the clothes are folded those needing no attention may be put away at once, while those that need mending may be put in the clothes-basket and placed in some convenient place until there is time to mend them.

Peach Cup.

Grate the yellow rind of one orange in half a pound of sugar. pare and stone six very ripe peaches and press them through a colander; add them to the sugar and orange. Put this into a jar; add the juice of the orange, five or six slices of cucumber and a quart of water; mix and stand on the ice for five or six hours; strain and add a quart bottle of plain soda or seltzer-water. Serve in small glasses, into which you have dropped a rose geranium leaf. If the peaches are large and the "cup" seems thick add another pint of effervescent water. All sorts of fruits may be made into "cup" after this recipe.

A clever, popular Candy Cold Cure Tablet—called Preventics—is being dispensed by druggists everywhere. In a few hours, Preventics are said to break any cold—completely. And Preventics, being so safe and toothsome, are very fine for children. No Quinine, no laxative, nothing harsh nor sickening. Box of 48, 25c. Sold by all druggists.
