THE SITUATION.

With the fall of Zeebrugge the Belgian coast has been cleared of the foe and the Huns still continue their retreat in a disorderly manner. King Albert and his loyal subjects after more than four years of heroic resistance are thus coming into their own once more.
 The British army reports progress as far as five miles east of Donal, but the enemy is fighting desperately to protect his retreat to the north. In an all-day battle the Americans pushed back the foe and captured important points.
 The French have recorded a notable sweep in the Oise sector and have released many villages and their inhabitants.
 The Huns have commenced to withdraw from the Balkan States and are evacuating Serbia, Albania and Montenegro. Meanwhile the Serbs continue their onward march.
 It is reported that some Hun regiments have recently refused to fight and that although threatened with punishment by their officers they remained obdurate in this determination.

HARD HIT

The Spanish flu has certainly taken a very heavy toll of the Courier staff. At present, all of the linotype operators are down except two, there are three absentees from the office staff, and the job, delivery, Ad. and other departments have been equally hard hit.
 This establishment, of course, expects to take its share with the rest and is not whining, although the circumstances are such that in many other lines, production would temporarily cease. However, a newspaper is one of those things which has to get out no matter what happens, and once again we have to ask the indulgence of readers until matters again assume some kind of normal shape.

EMERGENCY HOSPITALS

As the result of a joint meeting yesterday of the Hospital Governors and Emergency Hospital Board, the net outcome is that the Emergency Hospital in the "Tabernacle Building" will be placed on the basis of an auxiliary hospital, with the special separate committee to act in co-operation with the Governors. At Warden Pkts' suggestion, it was also decided to include the special emergency hospital at Paris in the same category, as there is no regular hospital there, and the area of the Brantford institution covers that town. Under these circumstances, the emergency hospital cases in both instances will come in the report of the Brantford "General," and the Government grant will be available for all, thus helping in the very heavy financial burden suddenly placed on the municipalities.
 The charge for emergency cases will be 70 cents a day, the same as at Brantford General, and journey patients, who are now commencing to be brought to the city, will pay the existing county rate at the Brantford General.

TWO WORSEY CITIZENS

The passing of Mr. John Ker, of the firm of Ker and Goodwin, marks the departure of a member of an old and most highly esteemed county family. He was a man of very unassuming qualities, but the possessor of sound judgment, and business ability. His probity was proverbial. As a gentleman, closely associated with him in business remarked, "You could take his word at any time for anything and there was no need of any guarantee." That is a proud record for any man to achieve and the same high sense of honor characterized him in all the relations of life. He was in every sense of the word a Christian, both in thought and in deed.
 Dr. Lovett of Paris, who has also been called home, was not only an ornament to his profession, but also to the town in which he lived. Although suffering himself he continued in the work of helping to relieve the sorely afflicted in this present epidemic until forced to take to his bed. He was a man of noble and generous ideals and one whom it was indeed a privilege to call friend.

Your Problems Solved??

By Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.
 (All rights reserved.)
 Dr. Linscott in this column will help you solve your heart problems; religious, marital, social, financial and every other anxious care that perplexes you. If a personal answer is required, enclose a five-cent stamp. No names will be published, if you prefer, sign your initials only, or use a pseudonym.

YOUR PROBLEMS SOLVED

Weary in Well Doing.—"A discouraged business man" tells me his troubles and asks my advice. Perhaps you can find it in this paragraph. "A hen which was not without experience, was selected to sit upon thirteen eggs, the produce of prize leghorn fowl. She attended to business faithfully for seventeen days, but, being weary of waiting, refused to sit any longer and twelve almost perfectly formed chickens became stiff in death. This somewhat pictures your circumstances; you stop your efforts and cease advertising when your efforts were about to become fruitful. My advice is to stay on the job and keep up your advertising."

Covetousness.—"A Young Married Man" asks, "What is covetousness?" He states that he is striving to save money "for a rainy day" and asks whether that is right. Covetousness is an insatiable desire for money and this is always evil. It is right for you to try and have money, but it is wrong to worry because you are not making money as fast as you would like. If you, and yours, see fruit in your bonis, and if you are courageously industrious you will doubtless be able to, as you state, make provision for a rainy day.

A STEADY JOB

By S. B. HACKLEY.
 (Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
 "Stacy, I've got a new job."
 His thin dark face lit with his engaging smile, Kent Trallo pushed open the door of the shabby combination sitting room and bedroom in the Trallo's rented quarters.
 Mrs. Trallo sealed the letter in her hands before she spoke, and her voice was perky. "What is it, Kent?"
 He waved a yellow handbill and read aloud:
 "Six hundred acres hope ready for picking! Five hundred pickers wanted! Fine camp grounds, good water, free wood, a month's pleasant work in the open country at good pay. Apply to Bloom Brothers."
 "I applied this morning, Stacy, Bloom, the elder Bloom," he chuckled at the end, "says a fellow may go to to-morrow and live in one of the tents if he wishes, though the actual work doesn't begin until Monday. John Wharton says the money end ought to be good. Said he'd hope to see me and never failed to make as much as $4 a day. Said it wasn't hard work, and lots of women and girls made more than he did."
 He glanced at her indifferent profile a bit uncertainly. "How would you like to try the picking, Stacy? You were saying the other day you wished we could afford to go out camping."
 "We surely need money, her tone was soft and as cold as a snowflake, "and if you don't mind doing that kind of work, and it seems any sort of work appeals to you, you'd as well take it. I am going to Eleanor Meade's Monday. I haven't felt I could afford proper clothes before—I can't now—there's very little of my savings left in the bank, but I'm going down town now to buy some things. I've got where I'm going to let the to-morrow take care of itself."
 Kent, surprised into silence, colored darkly, and she went out.
 From the moment of her first acquaintance with Anastasia Purcell, Eleanor Meade had admired and loved her. Both were trained nurses, but Eleanor had hated the work and had eagerly seized her opportunity to marry a rich man. Then two years later, in the face of Eleanor's strong disapproval and insistence that she was "throwing herself away," Anastasia had quit the nursing which she loved for Kent Trallo, whom she loved even better.
 An attack of pneumonia had almost ended his life, but her fingers had held him back, and when he could sit up he had talked to her very confidentially. He had tried many things in his life, he told her, but school teaching—two years of it—then he had given up that and studied law a while; then he had inherited a little money and tried farming, but he'd lost money at that, and, trying stock-raising, lost the rest of it.
 "I've nothing to offer you," he had whispered, his dark eyes brilliant with feeling, "and so I don't dare ask you to marry me. But I want you to know I love you, and shall be loving you all my life—I want you to know that, Anastasia, dear!"
 And with his wasted hands holding her strong fingers, Anastasia had felt her better judgment swept away.
 "Oh, Kent," she had said, "I want you to ask me to take you for better or for worse."
 For five months after their marriage Kent had held his place as bookkeeper for a soap manufacturing firm, and Anastasia had made his salary go a long long way in their modest home. Then he thought he saw a better opening and left the bookkeeping, and it was weeks before he got the next job, clerking in a hardware store. After that he had retained his job for a shorter and a shorter time, and in the last year he had done anything he could get. Six weeks before he had given up carpenter's job, thinking something better would turn up. But nothing had turned up until he had seen the "top growers" advertisement. It would be more pleasant for Anastasia to be with Eleanor, he thought, and when the hop-picking was over he could meet her at the station near the Meades' and they could come home together. Then he'd try to get a job and keep it permanently; he was afraid Anastasia was getting out of patience with him. He was still sitting, planning, when Anastasia came back with her bundles.

A week in the Meades' luxurious home had not passed before Anastasia made up her mind to something she had contemplated for months—to leave Kent.
 She was weary of financial uncertainty, she had to draw out her savings in the interstices between Kent's jobs, until there was but a pittance left; he had never wanted her to work, but she would go back to the nursing for which her heart craved, and she was young while she was in her earning years, and let poor Kent go his foolish, unpractical way alone.

Early one morning at the end of the second week, Arnold Meade announced that he was going to take Anastasia and Mrs. Meade to see some hopyards twenty miles from their home. Anastasia sealed the letter she knew would be a knife thrust in Kent's heart, and slipped it in the pocket of her skirt for mailing in the next town.

They passed through one town, another, a third, but Anastasia still clutched her letter.
 "I'll mail it to-morrow," she thought, and happily, "there's plenty of time to break my heart!"

"Here we are, at the Blooms!" Meade called out as he drove into the wooded campyard. Anastasia caught her breath. Kent was there and she must not see him—she must not!

Suddenly, and without warning, a standing dead tree crashed across the side of the road. Anastasia felt her heart stand still, then skip a beat. Meade jumped down.

"Wait girls," he said, "I'll go see if anybody's hurt." After a considerable time he came back.
 "The top of the tree caught one of the pickers—he's badly hurt. I guess," he told them, "unconscious—looks as if he might be done for. They've got a woman say, saying the doctor'll be here directly—let me take you girls out of here!"

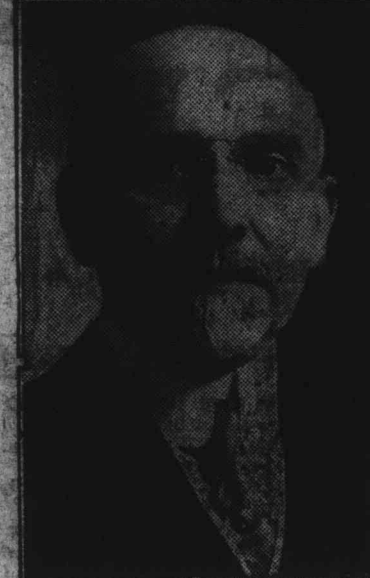

But despite Meade's protests, Anastasia pushed her way through the crowd that had gathered to the injured man. She knelt down by him and turned his face, ghastly white, the lips red with some blood drops, toward her.
 "O, Kent, don't leave me! I can't go without you—don't leave me, hear!" Meade heard her say in a sort of quiet agony, and saw her slide her trained nurse's finger to his wrist.

At the city hospital it was days before she could speak to her—days before she left him, even to sleep.
 "Why didn't you let me die, Stacy?" he called out bitterly, the day the doctor told him he would never walk again. "I had my life insured for you—the day I went to the hopyards. You would have had the money now, if you'd let me die! I know I've treated you beyond endurance, going from one job to another and making good at none, but I've got a permanent job now—something in a wheel chair. Stacy, why didn't you let me die?"

She held him close. "Hush," she whispered, "it's a lovely job, this one, you'll always be close by where I can get you, and would you, when I'm off duty nursing!"

The next day the Meades came in to see him. When they were leaving Meade handed Anastasia a sealed envelope.
 "I found it when I shook out one of the auto rugs this morning," he said; "you must have dropped it in the car the day of the accident."
 Anastasia's fingers trembled as she looked at it, then thrust it in her apron pocket. When the callers were gone, she flew out to the hospital kitchen.
 "You haven't read your letter, sweetheart," Kent reminded her when she came back. "It might be important."
 "Oh, it wasn't anything," she smiled, "that's foolish, better I forget to mail!"

A large quantity of rum was seized in a Pullman car which arrived at Montreal.

 the riot, and was enabled to do so by the measure taken by him.
 During these riots considerable damage was done to the restaurants kept by Greeks and a number of civilians were injured by the police in detaching the mob. Unfortunately some innocent citizens who became mixed in the riotous mobs were hurt but none permanently injured. Immediately thereafter on Aug. 6 the board instructed the acting chief to make a full investigation as to those who participated in such riots and to follow it up with prosecution. This was done, and a number of prosecutions were had. He was also instructed to make enquiries as to the whole question in order that a public investigation might be held by the board into the conduct of the police on the occasion.

AT THE JAIL.

There have been no cases of "flu" reported in the county jail since the outbreak of the epidemic in the city. This is probably due to the fact that the prisoners are isolated. There are at present eight prisoners in the jail.

WOOD CUTTING.

The work of cutting the city's wood at the civic yards, West Brantford, is progressing well. Already a large quantity has been cut and the men are engaged in cutting the remainder at the greatest speed possible. The impossibility of getting wood from other yards where the city had placed orders has made it imperative that this be done.

GET OUT YOUR CAR.

It has now been decided at Ottawa that next Sunday, October 20, need not be observed as a "gasless" day in Canada. The first announcement was to the effect that the restrictions were still on. Later, however, the fact controller received information from Washington indicating that present supplies of gasoline justified the termination of gasless Sundays.

To The Editor of The Courier

Grandview P.O., Oct. 18, '18.
Dear Sir,
Advance, Australia!
Those who were depressed by the army vaccination regulations of Australia may be cheered by the Commonwealth Parliament has abolished compulsory vaccination.

This is indeed glad tidings, and may serve as a reminder to the medical depots, which is making hay while the sun shines, that its line of communications is threatened, and that in the last resort its power and pretensions can be sustained only by the suffering of the people, who can cut it down as a rank and unwholesome growth even more swiftly than it grew. Congratulations to our Australian friends.
"Once more into the breach, dear friends, once more."
Yours truly,
REG. LISTER.

TRAFALGAR DAY.

Dear Sir, As the Navy and the Mercantile Marine have been largely responsible for the success of the Allied armies in the field, and therefore will be largely responsible for the ultimate defeat of the Central Empire, the one—the Merchant Marine—having transported troops, food, and munitions to the scene of actual hostilities, and the other—the Royal Navy—having conveyed the ships across, you will therefore readily see how indebted we are to the service of our gallant seamen, who "carry on" in the face of every resistive danger to maritime warfare. As "Trafalgar Day" marks the anniversary of our greatest sea victory in past years, the Navy League of Canada is making a special effort to induce the people of Ontario to observe this day as one specially dedicated not only to honor the memory of our great admiral, Lord Nelson, but also for the purpose of paying a just tribute to the fleet. If you see your way clear to devote some space to an article dealing with our indebtedness to these branches of the service, we shall greatly appreciate the favor.
Yours sincerely,
W. DOWELL,
Publicity Manager.

Emperor Carl Proposes a Federalized Austria Would Grant Local Autonomy to All Nationalities Within the Austrian Empire, Poland and Trieste Excepted

VIENNA, Oct. 18, via Basel.—Steps for the organization of Austria on a federalized basis were proclaimed by Emperor Charles to-day. The plan does not include the union of Austria with "the independent Polish state," the emperor declared. The city of Trieste and the Trieste region will be treated separately, "in conformity with the wishes of its population."
The manifesto follows:
"To my Austrian people:
"The emperor says: Since I have ascended the throne I have tried to make it my duty to assure to all my peoples the peace so ardently desired and to point the way to the Austrian peoples of a prosperous development unhampered by obstacles which brutal force creates against intellectual and economic prosperity.
"The terrible struggles in the world war have thus far made the work of peace impossible. The heavy sacrifices of the war should assure to us an honorable peace, on the threshold of which by the help of God, we are to-day.
"We must, therefore, undertake without delay the re-organization of our country on a national and, therefore, solid basis. Such a question demands that the desires of the Austrian peoples be harmonized and realized.
"I am decided to accomplish this work with the free collaboration of my peoples in the spirit and principles which our allied monarchs have adopted in their efforts of peace.
"Austria must become, in conformity with the will of its people, a confederate state in which nationally shall form on the territory which it occupies its own local autonomy.
"This does not mean that we are already envisaging the union of the Polish territories of Austria with an independent Polish state.
"The city of Trieste, with all its surroundings shall in conformity with its population, be treated separately."

The impressive services conducted by Rev. R. White, and the floral tributes as well as many other forms of expression of sympathy, both now and during her four months' illness, are appreciated by the family as the post capturing machine guns and ten prisoners. Having organized his position he repelled four heavy counter-attacks and then proceeded to capture by stealth three enemy machine guns. He fought his company until October 8 with great initiative and daring, inspiring his men to almost incredible exertion by his wonderful leadership and personal bravery. He was fatally wounded on the last day.

Holding the military medal, being promoted from the ranks, the lieutenant of a New Brunswick battalion personally led an attack in front of Inchy on September 27. The next day near Baillencourt, notwithstanding heavy casualties, he again led the battalion into action, storming his objective. Towards evening the enemy launched very heavy counter-attacks on brigade front. The lieutenant organized all the elements of the battalion and in co-operation with other units of the brigade counter-attacked and drove the enemy out, re-establishing the line and recovering our wounded prisoners in front. His gallant personal example inspired the men and contributed largely to the admirable spirit evidenced under trying circumstances, being cheered by his contempt, his initiative and fine leadership.

Appalling Conditions Among Belgian Children

Fate of Coming Generation Rests on Relief Work.

MANY people have thought that the United States loans to Belgium have financed all the Relief Work necessary. As a matter of fact the loans provide the minimum ration to sustain life in a grown person. The bowl of soup and two pieces of bread are totally inadequate to build bone and muscle for a growing child. The results are ghastly!

These cases, running into hundreds of thousands of sick and defective children... cannot be taken care of by the general funds... writes Mr. Hoover on July 26th of this year. There is an increasing need for funds for these cases... our last reports show that the soup-lines of Belgium have increased from one and a half to two and a half million persons... wish particularly to remove any doubt as to the acceptability of contributions to the Commission for Relief in Belgium for the special purposes above indicated.

Unless the sick and starving children of Belgium are given a chance for life, tuberculosis, rickets and kindred ills will claim the next generation. That is Belgium's outlook.

And yet a few dollars will restore health and strength to one of these tiny sufferers. Will you open your purse and help?

If you have called it that you should SEE these little victims, you would share your all with them. Most you SEE, before you will help!

By Courier Leased Wire Philadelphia, Oct. 18.—"It is true that we have reached an agreement over the disposition of Scott Perry," said Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics.
