FRIDAY, AUG. 20TH, 1886.

SCOTT ACT ADMINISTRATION.

The Ontario Government is being hailed over the coals by a number of fervid local prohibitionists because of its alleged slackness in the matter of Scott Act enforcement. There is a danger of placing too much responsibility at the door of the local Government. The administration has never been charged with laxity in the matter of administering the Crooke Act. Yet the same inspectors have been appointed to enforce the Scott Act as were administering the Crooke Act; and in this riding, at least, a most vigorous and effective line of action has been entered upon by the Government inspector. Although the Dominion Government has impudently and greedily claimed the revenue accruing from the fines, the Provincial administration has still permitted its officials to set with freedom and energy in enforcing the law. Where the inspectors have failed to prosecute, the Government is not to blame. Let the temperance people petition and complain against defaulting inspectors, and thus notify the Government of the recalcancy of any of its officials before condemning the administration.

WHAT'S UP?

Things That Are Happening Around Us.

More Park Preachers—About second and third Scott Act offences.—The one time only of "Bummer's" witnesses—Remarks in Temperance Rec.

There was another court-house square session on hand Saturday afternoon. There's a good crop of these specimens to the gentiles this season, and every one of them "blinks" he knows all about it, and the other fellows don't. I see there is an attempt being made to argue out that a conviction under the Scott Act is not a conviction until it has been so decided on appeal. In other words, John McBride, of the Algonquin hotel, has now been convicted, before justice of the peace on three different occasions for selling liquor contrary to the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act. The other day the public prosecutor, feeling satisfied that McBride would not be deterred from violating the law, so long as he could carry convictions to appeal, broached the question of making one of the cases against the liquor-seller a second offence, so that, if another case were brought up afterward and a conviction followed, the law-breaker would not get off with a fine, but would be sent to jail. The case was argued strongly by the counsel for the defence, but no definite understanding has been arrived at. To my unphilosophical mind, there is no doubt about the matter; and if I were the prosecutor, McBride would either stop selling or go to jail. It's about time that this placing the law at defiance was done away with, and the only way to do away with it is by making an example of some of the "bummers."

didn't insist upon having them up on bench warrants. This is wrong; and I hope the Inspector will hereafter take an old friend's advice, and rattle the "bummers" who thus seek to pit the law at defiance. There is no man in this town superior to the laws of his country, and the next time any witness is subpoenaed and fails to connect I want Brother Yates to jump on him with both feet and a bench warrant, and put him where the dog would bark at him until the adjourned court again meets. One night in the "cooler" would take the high and mighty airs out of these chaps. There's one thing certain: None of them would play "hide-and-seek" if he thought his testimony wouldn't insure a conviction. Lookways, that's how it looks to me.

—And right here is a good place to put a word in the ears of the temperance electors of this county. If there was a police magistrate duly appointed to sit on these cases, there would be no "moonkeying" about this business of first, second, and third offences—1 would be 1, 2 would be 2, and 3 would be 3, every time. And here, you Temperance Man, I want to do some straight talk to you: You did a lot of howling and hurrahing when the Act was carried nearly two years ago, and, then you thought the work was all done, and you went home and rested, and you've been resting ever since. And when the beer waders were being driven through the Act under the Dominion regime, you still kept your hands folded and thought your work was done. Then, when an effort was made to make the county council ask the Local Government to appoint a police magistrate, and Warden Pat Kelly last year barked the question, you still remained inert. When the matter was tossed over at the December meeting, you went to the polls at New Year, and, forgetful of your temperance principles, voted Grit or Tory, as the case might be, although you knew the reason for whom you voted were opposed to the enforcement of the Canada Temperance Act. When the January meeting was held and Lawyer Scott, of Clifton, was appointed police magistrate without salary, you thought that after all, it was just as well you hadn't run the elections of the municipality on strict temperance principles, and thereby created hard feelings with the neighbors; and then you were satisfied that everything was lovely, and at last the cause was in good shape. When, however, police magistrate Scott resigned his position without salary, you began to see that things were not likely to go on so satisfactorily; and when at the June meeting following, the proposal to have a salaried police magistrate was voted down by the county council, then you regretted that you hadn't adopted the temperance plank in the previous election.

BERLIN SANGEFEST.

A Canadian Town Becomes a Couple of Days to Music and Lager.

From Our Own Correspondent.

About ten thousand of us started off to Berlin last week to "take in" the truly Teutonic institution, the Sangefest, which was held at Toronto, Ontario, some from Buffalo, some from Rochester, some from Hamilton, and some from the remainder of the civilized world, including, of course, Goderich. We all wore medals, many of us badges, and we laid ourselves out in an earnest, though unostentatious manner, to do justice to those two products for which Berlin is so truly celebrated, namely, music and lager beer.

Like its namesake in Europe, Berlin might be truly said to be on the spree. We were not drinking lager or feasting to the music, we whiled away the time eating Bologna sausage, and talking sometimes German and sometimes English. By a merciful dispensation of an all-kind Providence whatever naughty talk (if any) that took place was directed in Dutch, so numbers of us could not understand it, and were not offended.

The town was prettily decorated for the occasion, with arches, evergreens, festoons of high-colored lanterns, and the German, English and American flags. The uttermost good humor and politeness prevailed.

The grand event of the fest was, of course, the production of "Haydn's Creation," and the greatest credit is due to the conductor, soloists, orchestra and chorus for the really fine rendering given that magnificent oratorio. From beginning to end not one hitch occurred, which was truly wonderful when it is remembered that not one of the soloists had ever sung the part. The singing of the solo parts was excellent, both in timbre and intonation, the basses also were very good, but the tenors and alto were a little weak.

The soloists were Mrs. Caldwell, who sang in her usual finished style, but did not seem able to sing D on the fourth line in tune; Mr. Warrington, who took the bass solos both easily and effectively; and Mr. Jenkins, tenor, whose rendering of the solos allotted to him was much appreciated.

A noticeable feature of the Festival was the absence of anything approaching rowdiness.

COMMUNICATIONS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions of our Correspondents. Contributors to this department must confine themselves to public questions, and be brief.

A Correspondent writes:

To the Editor of The Signal.

Sir,—I would like to prepose a problem for the ingenious among your readers. It is this: If the penalty is $300 for selling a glass of beer, and nothing at all for stealing a keg of the same; then, in the same ratio, what should a man receive for robbing Mr. Well's brewery of its entire stock? I will give a bottle of soda water as a prize for the best solution. Will some of our Scott Act friends kindly figure it out.

Yours truly,
Geo. E. Cox.

To the Editor of The Signal.

Goderich, Aug. 19, '86.

Dear Sir,—Through you I wish to ask all who grow fruit to bring some of the best specimens for the inspection and seedling, to our West Riding fall show, so that we may make up a large collection to send to England. I have made all arrangements for the transport, and I hope the growers will respond nobly so that our county may be brought prominently before the people of the old world as a fruit growing district.

Yours,
ALEX. MCD. ALLAN.

Some of the meanest men in town borrow this paper regularly. Don't let 'em get mad at once.

The Irish Times, a loyalist organ, announces the fact that Charles Stewart Parnell is about to become a Roman Catholic. Of course, Parnell has given special information on this point, to the loyalist organ.

Goderich air means health for some. A gentleman from Toronto, now sojourning in Goderich, put on 7 1/2 pounds of flesh in five days last week. His physician had ordered him to "eat fat," but he will hardly go there this year.

The temperance orators from the United States who spoke at Lansdowne Park called it "Pro-Hi-bition" every time. Some of them were also on the line of pro-Hi-bition where the other principle could not prevail. They were all unit against the Hi-dra-headed evil of alcohol drinking.

Jurors by the way the North of Ireland majority are treating the majority, we should think that Ulster is not at all Home Rule. "The conduct of the majority of the south of Ireland is most commendable, and stands out in marked contrast with the dilatory and turbidness of the men of Ulster."

One of the most peculiar of the results of enforcing the Scott Act is the age of those who take the witness stand, and the fact that many of them are old men and women, and some of them are old women and men.

It has the same effect upon the public follows here. And the fun of the thing is they are fighting and if you sympathize with them because of their dire affliction.

James G. Blaine, of Maine, ought to be in Chicago at the great Convention to help John Finney twist the British lion's tale, and by so doing angle for future Presidential votes. There are lovers of freedom in this world, and there are blathering politicians. Jas. G. Blaine, of Maine, and John F. Kennedy, of Chicago, are bright and shining specimens of the latter order.

HAMILTON PROHIBITION CAMP.

Wednesday and Thursday were interesting days at the camp. Whitefield and Miss Armstrong spoke ably in the afternoon; after which there was a Scott Act "experience meeting." Then McGillivuddy in the chair. Addresses were given by the chairman, by Police Magistrate Munro, who was dynamited at Orangeville, and by Rev. Mr. Brethour, formerly of Halton.

In the evening Prof. Dickey, prohibition candidate for Governor of Michigan, delivered an eloquent and logical lecture on "The Traffic," and he was followed by Miss Armstrong and Rev. Dr. Griffin in stirring speeches.

On Thursday afternoon about 4,000 persons assembled. It was "Children's Day," and young and old alike took in the proceedings with interest. The children sang hymns and temperance choruses with enthusiasm, and Edward Cartwright, in one of his humorous and instructive addresses, held the immense audience captive for an hour. Owing to a death in the family of F. S. Spence, he was unable to be present, and Thos. McGillivuddy, of Goderich, was sent for by the manager to take the place of the Toronto man, when he delivered an "impromptu address on the temperance question."

My purpose exactly, said Faulter. "Inf fact I've prepared to get off after tea: No treaty, you know, can be made retroactive. They never will extradite me."

So ever the border they skipped it together—these two with a treaty—no treaty, with their sang at their mortals as we."

Back there for such mortals as we."

We understand G. R. Pattullo, of the Woodstock Standard-Review, has been appointed Registrar of Oxford, and James Ingersoll, deceased. His appointment is an excellent one, and the Local Government deserves credit for selecting so energetic and capable a man. It is far better to appoint a man like Mr. Pattullo, who has the energy and ability to discharge the duties of the office with credit to himself and satisfaction to the public, than to throw it as a sop to some worm-worshiper, whose sole attribute consist in the fact that his name had appeared faithfully on the division list on all party votes. G. R., old boy, accept our congratulations.

Lord Randolph Churchill went to Ulster some months ago and sowed the seeds of discord and revenge. The consequence is that the streets of Belfast are being daily eroded with the blood of Irishmen. Michael Davitt, who has tasted British cruelty in British jails because of his faithfulness to Ireland; is now in America, and is speaking words of forbearance, charity and hopefulness in the name of the Irish Nationalists. Davitt today stands higher in the estimation of good men than does Michaelastat Lord Randolph.

STRATFORD'S BIG BONUS CARRIED—A $120,000 by-law was carried in Stratford Friday last for the Grand Trunk locomotive works and carshops by 868 majority, only 12 votes being polled against the by-law. There is great rejoicing there over the result, as this secures to Stratford all the above works west of Toronto. The vote was a very heavy one, but few available votes being left unrecorded.

EVERYBODY on the excursion to Berlin last Tuesday must have noticed how few instances of drinking there were in that town. Even if all we heard of the unblinking violation of the law be true, the traffic has become less obstructive, and sober people may go about with a safety and comfort not always attainable in licensed liquor times.—(Orilla Packet)

Prof. Vallance, the electionist, will pay a visit to Canada next month.

Many years ago a man offered a prize for Canada thistle seed, so sure was he that the plant does not increase in that way. It was fortunate for him that no one accepted the challenge. It is certain, however, that all thistle flowers do not mature seed. The London Free Press says that when growing in rich soil the seed is not perfected, because the extra root growth suffices for the increase. It also says that while the red flowers are sterile, the white ones are fertile. This we believe to be a mistaken opinion, seeing that the two colours are not produced on the same plant, and the white and red are merely varieties, such as occur in asters, dahlias, hollyhocks, and many other flowers.

THE TORRY PAPERS are exercised about the getting of a seat in the next Parliament of Canada for Sir Richard Cartwright, shows that the ability and talent of that gentleman are valued highly by his political opponents. Our Tory friends need not worry over the matter to any great extent. Sir Richard is more sure of getting a seat than any other man in the next House, but a large number of the Boollers are moving toward a political funeral.

VERY bad taste—that of anti-Scott witnesses in liquor cases.

JUST IN TIME.

BY ADELINE SERGEANT. AUTHOR OF "JACOB'S WIFE," "THE PALE PRISONER," ETC.

CHAPTER XXVI.

A MEETING IN THE WOODS.

Late in autumn with its glistening leaves still tinged in the woods about Glenberrie. Many of the trees, indeed, were bare, and others clad in threadbare robes of scarlet, russet-brown, and gold. Each breath of the October breeze robbed the branches of their glories. But the air was soft and sweet, as the air of a Scotch October can often be; there was no touch of frost in the air, no murky clouds upon the translucent crystal of the sky. As Beatrice Esilmont trod the spring turf and inhaled the dying broken and decaying heather she seemed herself to be drawing in strength and vigour and clear judgment at every breath. She loved the Scotch hills and woods far better than the Alpine heights, and as gazed around her she sighed for very satisfaction at the place in which she found herself and the path she trod.

It was the spot where she had last seen Anthony Lockhart a few weeks ago. She hardly knew why she had come. She stood by the little stream in the hollow: it was no mere trickle now; it had been swollen by recent rains, and rushed vehemently over every obstacle in its course—stones, pebbles, and projecting roots—spreading at intervals into a wider sheet impossible for any one to cross with a stride, as Anthony had then done when he wished to approach her. She thought of this as she stood looking down at the eddying water. In some way the fact seemed to her typical of the two lives. Was the separation between them destined to grow greater day by day?

Suddenly she started and looked up. There was a crackling sound among the underwood; a man's firm step made itself heard upon the little path traversing the plantation on the banks of the stream. For a moment Beatrice drew back, then she regained her composure and watched the intruder with a quiet eye. His stately figure and dark, bent head were recognizable from a good distance. Anthony Lockhart had walked forth for his customary morning's walk: it lay very often in this direction.

Once before, when he had met Beatrice at this point, he had had the advantage, inasmuch as he had seen her first. This time it was she who was on the alert. As she watched him coming, she noted all the signs in gait and countenance that should tell a man's mood and humor to keen observer. She was not reassured by any of these outward tokens. His face, she saw, was pale and thin; his mouth had a bitter look. She could not see his forehead, for his head was bent, but she felt sure that it was contracted into a frown. There was something of dejection in the air with which he walked—something almost of sullenness. Beatrice felt that he was changed—not, perhaps, for the better—said her heart went out to him with a sudden impulse of yearning pity and desire. If she could but help him—but as yet she knew not how.

perhaps with its contrast with Lord Morven's habits. Morven would have gone miles round rather than leap a brook.

He lifted his hat with some return to his usual formality as soon as he was beside her. She gave him her hand politely in return. For a few moments they spoke of trivial subjects, and all the time Anthony's eyes seemed to be devouring her, until at last he threw questionally to the winds and interrupted her in the very midst of a correct little speech about the weather.

"Look here, Miss Esilmont," he said, "why should we have any pretences? You have left Lady Lillias behind—you have come here suddenly, without warning—don't I know for what? You want to hear about Bertie."

She was silent for a moment. "Yes," she said after the pause, with a fine little smile, "I do want to hear about Bertie."

"I know it. Why should we beat about the bush? I will tell you all I know."

He turned his face with a momentary darkening of the brow. "Yes, tell me," said Beatrice. "You read my journal?"

"Yes."

"And you thought we harsh—prejudiced?"

"I thought," said she with some difficulty, "that there might be another explanation of his conduct than the one you attached to it."

"Did you?" he said eagerly. Then he drew back and looked a little hurt. What other explanation could there be? "You don't think that I would willingly condemn him. Have you any theory—any reason to think—"

"I would rather hear anything you have to tell me," she said. "I suppose that nothing much has transpired since I heard from you?"

"Nothing much," he answered, fixing his eyes gloomily on the ground. "I don't see any way out of the complication, for my part, except one, and that—"

Then he suddenly changed his tone. "Miss Esilmont, I ought not to keep you standing here. You will be tired. You may catch cold. Shall we walk on?"

"Who could catch cold in this soft, mild weather?" said Beatrice. "But we will walk if you like, a little further along the bank. There is an old wall which has often furnished a seat for Lillias and myself, and we can discuss the matter at our leisure."

A few minutes walking brought them to the wall of which she spoke. It ran down the bank to the water's edge, and marked the limit, at that point, of Lord Morven's estate. Near the water it had fallen a little into disrepair. A couple of stones had been removed either by accident or design, and a seat was thus formed in the natural embrasure. Here Beatrice seated herself, while Anthony leaned against the higher portion of the wall and looked down at her as if awaiting her invitation to speak. He thought that she looked paler and graver than usual. Possibly she was angry with him and anxious about Lillias. This conjecture lent his voice a somewhat apologetic turn when at last she asked for his story.

"But there is little to tell, Miss Esilmont. I have not spoken to Bertie since I wrote. I have seen him—once or twice. I have heard a good deal about him."

"What have you heard?"

"I have heard of another visit to Glasgow in company with Mrs. Drummond. I have heard of frequent interviews. There are not wanting persons to say that the marriage day is fixed—or that they are married already."

Beatrice frowned. "And you believe these allegations?" There was some sarcasm in her tone.

Anthony flushed darkly and ground his heel into the soil. "If I had not believed them," he said sullenly, "should I have acted as I have done?"

"You have had no authentic information? Neither Bertie nor Mrs. Drummond has definitely told you that he thinks of marrying her?"

"Bertie did not deny it," said Anthony sharply.

"Did not deny? What does that mean? If I were accused of a crime by my dearest friend, do you think I would take the trouble to deny it? I should reply, as Bertie perhaps meant you to understand his reply—if you cannot trust my actions, you will never trust my word. I am surprised that you, who are so proud yourself, cannot understand this form of pride."

"I, proud! I have no cause for pride, God knows!" said Anthony, very bitterly. "I've done what I swore I would never do—deserted and betrayed the man that I care most for in the world—and I cannot help myself. Do you think I want to take his house and land from him? And yet, I can't take back what I've said. Nothing would make him keep Glenberrie now—I know him well enough to say that—and I don't want it. I'll turn the ruins into a hospital and spend the rents in supporting it. Or else I'll leave it to him by will, and take care to disappear shortly afterwards."

Beatrice looked up at him with a new sensation. He must have been sorely tried indeed before he could bring himself to talk like this. She had never had before so clear a view of the depths of his passionate nature, or realized his capacity to be wounded through the affections which had only found an outlet during the four years of his barren life. She felt herself strongly seized by an emotion which drove her to speak when she would rather have remained silent. Her face grew pale, and quiet eyes gave evidence to her sensations.

"Mr. Lockhart," she said, "you are not going yourself, justice. You talk as though—as though—you were a weak man, and you are not weak. None but a weak man would really regret the doing of what he thought to be just."

"Ah, but was it justice?" she inquired.

"You have acted and spoken as if you thought so."

"That is exactly what makes the torture of it," said Lockhart, almost angrily. "I have done a thing that no personal motive would, I hope, have driven me into doing. I have seized an advantage at Bertie's expense—would I have done that if I had not thought that Bertie deserved loss and punishment?"

"So now your only peace of mind lies in considering Bertie guilty?"

"Exactly."

"And therefore you won't listen to your own heart that pronounced him innocent?"

"Oh, my heart! my heart!" said Anthony, contemptuously. "What has my heart got to do with the matter? That is the way women always talk. How can one judge by one's feelings?"

"You mean," said Beatrice, "not at all offended by this outburst, that your feelings do urge you to acquit Bertie?"

"Well," he said reluctantly, "what if they do? I am not likely to be guided by them. I go by facts."

"Oh, no," said Beatrice quickly, "you don't go by facts; you go by the village gossip."

He sprang from his leaning place against the wall and faced her with a flash of the eyes which made her heart beat faster, although her face did not change. When he spoke, his tones were low and uneven, and his broad chest heaved as though his breath had suddenly grown short.

"No one but you should say that to me," he began. "What a fool you must think me! But go on; say what you like. You are my friend; not mine."

"I am your friend, too, Mr. Lockhart," said Beatrice, very gently. "And it is because I am your friend that I do not like to see you making a mistake which can only end in misery. You are not happy, as you have said; I am sure Bertie is not."

"Happy! I should think not. Could you expect it?" But whether he referred to Bertie or to himself she could not tell.

"Then," she said, "you would be glad if Bertie could be acquitted of the charge you bring against him?"

"Are you sure you are not reserving something; are you sure you don't want to fight against the proof of his innocence, for fear you should have to own yourself mistaken?"

"You put my character in a very ugly light, Miss Esilmont," said Anthony, rather sternly, "but I am willing to acknowledge that past events justify you. I will even acknowledge that I know what it is to be tempted to wish myself right at any cost; but that you have shown me the danger, I will do my best to fight the temptation. Yes; God knows, with my utmost heart I do hope and trust that Bertie is better than I took him for?"

"I believe you do," said Beatrice softly. Then, with a livelier manner—"But what will satisfy you? Bertie's word of honor?"

"Yes," he answered in a gloomy tone. "I suppose so. I should have no right to doubt it. But he won't give it to me."

"No; you asked it in a wrong way. But suppose he had given it to me?"

"To you!"—Anthony looked at her in amazement.

"Yes, to me. I did what perhaps was a little rash," said Beatrice, trying not to meet his eyes; "but I did not know what else to do. Morven did not wish me to correspond with Bertie, and I allowed him to think that I would not do so. But Lillias was ill and anxious. I wrote to Bertie for an explanation; and I wrote to Morven too—telling him what I have done and why—for naturally I could not do what he disapproved without letting him know it."

"And Bertie replied?"

"Bertie replied in the most satisfactory way imaginable."

Anthony still stood looking at her, as if he did know how to believe his ears.

"How did he satisfy you?" he asked.

"To begin with, he said that he still considered himself engaged to Lillias, and that his love for her was as great as ever. The stories about his possible marriage with Mrs. Drummond were pure fabrications or mistakes which he had not taken the trouble to contradict. His long conversations with Mrs. Drummond and his going to Glasgow with her all related to the same thing—matters of business connected with her late husband, whom Bertie had known very well."

"Did he tell you what this business was?"

The Poet's Corner.

DEPARTURE
It was not like your great and gracious ways
Do you, that have none other to lament,

THE BARBER'S POLE.

A CRAFT WHICH REQUIRES SKILL,
COURTESY AND INTELLIGENCE.

The Barber as a Fraternal Philanthropist and Apostle of Cleanliness—None
But the Shaved Can Wear the Hair,

It used to be the fashion to laugh at barbers, because the barber's shop was the center of the village gossip.

It is the barber's rather than nature's touch that makes the whole world kin. Shaving is the emblem of civilization.

It is not alone Guibollard—the present but of the French wit—who thinks Columbus made a mistake in discovering America,

There is no greater mistake than to suppose that the trade of a barber is one of indolence and non-employment of intelligence.

Day and Night.

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a cessation of the work, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis.
It cools the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from acute attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,
I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stovall, M.D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases.—

How to Emotionally Seal Bottles.
A German writer recommends the use of paraffine in place of corks or other stoppages for the hermetic sealing of bottles containing liquids which have a tendency to ferment or otherwise deteriorate by contact with the air. This, he says, is particularly applicable to saccharine juices of all kinds. These are poured, while hot, into perfectly clean bottles, and the paraffine is nearly to the lip, they are then allowed to stand and rest until cold, during which time all air bubbles will rise to the surface, finally a small quantity of melted paraffine is poured over the top when it forms a firm, solid coat on cooling about the tenth of an inch thick. Such a paraffine stopper has the advantage of being easily removed when the contents of the bottle are required for use, and the paraffine can be used again.

Nervousness Betrayed in Penmanship.
The condition of a man's nerves is often betrayed in his writing, and also the size of his temper. If he is slow and methodical, he covers a page with characters laboriously drawn out and a copiousness of ink that is defacing. A nervous man will either contract his signature into the smallest possible or scribble it out in flowing lines and big letters or write it phonetically. In either of the three cases it is generally impossible to decipher it. Business men to a certain extent cultivate an original style of writing. Their correspondence is very large and their names often attached to valuable papers. A style peculiar to themselves, if regularly followed, is one of the safeguards against forgery. It is there are forgers as clever as business men who devise strange styles of penmanship.

Books of the Bible.
The books of the Bible, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, in answer to a correspondent, were written at dates far apart. For instance, Genesis is supposed to have been written by Moses B. C. 1541, while the book of Esther—whose author is unknown—was composed in B. C. 473. Malachi was written B. C. 410. Ezra collected the books of the Old Testament about B. C. 444, and Simon the deut. prophet about B. C. 291, added the books of the Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther and Malachi, and the closed the canon of the Hebrew Testament. The book of Matthew, in the new testament canon, was written A. D. 37 or 38. This canon was probably closed by St. John, who died nearly seventy years after the accession of Christ.

Always May Tell to Your Wife.
Half a century ago one of our former neck and harness makers had a wife for a wife. Being asked how he was able to live with her, he answered: "I have no troubles. When she says 'yes' I say yes. When she says it is odd I say 'yes, mother, it is odd.' Often she would come up in dark and stormy nights and would say: 'Just see how bright the moon and stars are.' I always said 'yes.' She would then turn on the light and as sure as fate he will go and sit up all night, smoke and chat with the watchman on duty, and say next day, with a dignified air: 'I was out—last night.'"

Why Men Should Wear Carrots.
We think we violate no confidence in saying that there are seen in Buffalo a few men who wear carrots, because they are afraid of a wife. Being asked how he was able to live with her, he answered: "I have no troubles. When she says 'yes' I say yes. When she says it is odd I say 'yes, mother, it is odd.' Often she would come up in dark and stormy nights and would say: 'Just see how bright the moon and stars are.' I always said 'yes.' She would then turn on the light and as sure as fate he will go and sit up all night, smoke and chat with the watchman on duty, and say next day, with a dignified air: 'I was out—last night.'"

Great Danger in Cigarette Smoking.
The great danger of cigarette smoking arises from the fact that the cigarette is so mild that the smoker sees one after another, smoking almost continually, and so gradually poisons himself with the nicotine. Besides generally the worst tobacco is used to make up the cigarettes. Excessive cigarette smoking causes palpitation of the heart, and finally kills the user of the weed. The doctor who cured in New York last week that was directly traceable to the cigarette vice. One of the deplorable features of the use of the cigarette is the fact that it is so easy to smoke them. There is a law preventing the sale of cigarettes to boys. The United States should have a similar law.

The Soured Man.
From "Huntington [Del.] Home Weekly."
Nobody loves the soured man. He is not an agreeable companion, his sympathies have been soured, his temper made surly, his disposition uncharitable—he is at odds with the world. No one very well remembers what he once was. All have forgotten the time when his pulse beat warm and high, when his hair had a firm and healthy gloss, when he loved and hoped. Everybody knows that he is cold, cross-grained, impractical and cynical now. The world pushes him aside, society votes him a bore, and his best friends shake their heads and wonder that they ever supposed that he would amount to anything. He is a failure, and everybody knows it as well as he does himself.

A Hint to Smokers.
From the London Lancet.
In Cuba, where smokers are probably better acquainted with the methods of manufacture than elsewhere, and where the scrofulous and other maladies is fully 27 per cent., it can be almost invariably noticed that a smoker before lighting his cigar will, instead of biting off the tip, carefully cut away half an inch before the end of the weed. The cheroot, which is made without a tip, is in more general use in Cuba than anywhere else in the world. General Grant, after visiting Cuba, never again bit off the tip of a cigar. He cut away a noticeably large section of the end.

Always Required—A good cathartic medicine. National Pills will not disappoint you.
Im
Noted by a Brooklyn Barber.
"What is the prevailing style of combing the hair at present?"
"You would hardly believe it, but the fashion of combing the hair changes constantly among a certain class of young men known as 'chicks.' Bangs are no longer popular with the gilded youth. It is the proper 'cap' not to part hair. By that I mean the hair should be allowed to fall about the head in careless profusion without the slightest suspicion of a part. Curly hair is better adapted to combing than pompadour—that is, brushed back from their foreheads. Some years ago it was quite the rage for drowsy men to part their hair directly in the middle. This fashion is now, however, but little affected. I have noticed a great falling off in the use of hair oil and cosmetics. A few years ago some of my customers would insist on having their hair plastered down over their foreheads. Plain vaseline has almost wholly taken the place of the highly scented cosmetics formerly in use."
—Brooklyn Barber.

CREAM OF THE PAPERS.
MARRIED WOMEN'S NAMES.
The following is a list of names in addition to the husband's name.
From London Society.
It is becoming the fashion among married ladies to keep their maiden name in addition to their husband's surname. This practice has long been in vogue among actresses and other ladies who have made a reputation for themselves before marriage, the benefits of which they are unwilling to lose. The names of Madames Goldschmidt-Lind, Trebelli-Bettini, Lemmas-Sherington, and hosts of others, will readily occur to anyone as cases in point. But lately the fashion was confined to actresses, singers, authoresses and other ladies whose loss at marriage through the change of name would have been so substantial a pecuniary one that it might be estimated in thousands of pounds. It is only now that ladies in private life have begun to realize the fact that their own names, in interchanging their name, and thus, to a great extent, losing their identity, is quite as real and quite as important to them as the actress would be to her, although possibly no one would go so far as to say it had a monetary value.
When a girl marries, it is usually only the favored few who see present at the wedding breakfast who really manage to remember her new name and address. How often we hear the question: "What is Mary So-and-so's name now, and where does she live?" How often the answer brings the rejoinder: "Dear me! I cannot remember quite close to her the other day; what party we did not know, we should have liked so much to go and see her." Hence the present movement on the part of married women. It certainly will have many advantages if it becomes general, not only to the ladies themselves, but to all their friends and acquaintances, especially if the double surname comes, in course of time, to be the distinguishing mark of a married woman, for, as it would form part of a lady's ordinary signature, which the title of Mrs. and Miss does not, many a correspondent would be relieved from the harassing doubt which now besets her as to whether it is to address his reply to Mrs. Miss or Esq.

Why She Ought to Wear Glasses.
From the New York Hour.
"How old would you take me to be, Mr. Snooks?" she asked, looking unutterable things at him.
"I dunno," he replied, twisting nervously about in his chair.
"In awfully old, I assure you. I've seen twenty-three summers!"
"Why, you ought to wear glasses," he replied, earnestly.
"Why, Mr. Snooks! glasses at twenty-three?"
"Yes, your eyesight must be bad."
"I'm sure I don't know why you should think so, she pointed.
"Because I'm afraid about twenty summers have gone by you that you haven't seen."
"I dunno," he replied, twisting nervously about in his chair.
"In awfully old, I assure you. I've seen twenty-three summers!"
"Why, you ought to wear glasses," he replied, earnestly.
"Why, Mr. Snooks! glasses at twenty-three?"
"Yes, your eyesight must be bad."
"I'm sure I don't know why you should think so, she pointed.
"Because I'm afraid about twenty summers have gone by you that you haven't seen."

William Was Headstrong.
A father at Sedalia, Mo., discovered a few days ago that his only daughter was in love with a New York drummer, and that the wedding day had been set. He had accordingly seen the man, and his consent had neither been asked nor given. He at once put his foot down and demanded:
"What do you know about this man, anyhow?"
"Why, father, he gets a salary of one hundred dollars a month, and can't live in expense account so as to bring it up to one hundred and twenty-five dollars. He is just as nice as can be."
"But he may have a wife already. Have you ever asked the question?"
"I never thought of it."
"Well, I've heard he had one at St. Joseph, and I'm going to see. No man can play bigamy on my family if this court knows her!"
In due time he reached St. Joseph and began his inquiries, and in a few hours was directed to a woman who acknowledged she was Mrs. Blank.
"Married for sure, and got a certificate?" he asked.
"Oh, yes. We have been married most a year."
"And do you know what he is engaged to my daughter, and wants to marry her next month?"
"No, I did not," was the reply. "I never seek to get into his affairs."
"Well, I'm telling you facts. The infamous appendage wants to marry my daughter! Just think of his cheek!"
"Yes, William was always singular," she remarked.
"Singular? Why, how can you take his conduct so coolly? I expected to see you faint dead away. You don't seem to care much about it."
"Well, to be frank with you," she replied, "William had a wife in Kansas City, and another in Chicago when he married me, and I have no right to complain. I think he means well, but it is rather headstrong."
"And you won't do anything to prevent this new marriage?"
"I can't under the circumstances, as I have concluded to leave him and marry a Philadelphia drummer and go east with him. I will write to William and advise him not to marry your daughter, but he is very headstrong."
"Great heavens! I grasped the father.
"Please don't! I have a headache, and you might upset my nerves. As I was saying, I will write to him, but I presume you will go home to find that she has already married him. William prefers clove mints to all other styles, and I presume that was what he wanted of the twenty-five dollars I sent him."
The old man rushed to the telephone office and wired home the inquiry: "Is Mary home?" In about half an hour she walked up and down, with the sweat of indignation on her face, and the answer came back: "Slid with the drummer two hours ago!"

A Dangerous Condition.

Too Long for a Stage Wait.
The following story is told of an eminent physician who watched Mary Anderson do the part of Juliet. The performance delighted him till towards the conclusion of the play, when his countenance wore a troubled expression. When it was over he went to the scenes. "My dear young lady," he said, "you are wrong in one of your effects. Didn't you know that a corpse doesn't stiffen for at least six hours after death?" "My dear doctor," responded Mary, slowly, speaking in deep, rich tones, and adopting a strong American twang, "do you think I'm going to keep my audience waiting six hours while I stiffen?"

THE ACT PROHIBITS.

Inspector Yates Gets Convictions on Two More Cases.

The Third Case Against John McBride—More Witnesses Who Did Not Know What They Drank.

Wm. Phillips, soda water maker, was called, and swore: "I know the defendant, Mr. McBride; he is a public house-keeper on the court square in the town of Goderich; it is called the Albion hotel; could not tell how long for two or three years any way; was in the hotel on either Wednesday or Thursday, 11th or 12th; I was there one of those days; had nothing to drink that I recollect; have no recollection of any one being with me on the occasion.

Mr Holt submitted that the witness had no right to go back 18 days.

After argument the magistrates decided the question was allowable.

Examination continued—I had something to drink within 18 days previous to the 13th inst.; yes, I had; I was in the habit of being in the hotel every other day; I had some lager and ginger ale; I suppose I had whisky, but it didn't go by that name; Mr McBride served me with what I drank; I asked for "bitters;" (Mr Holt—"Hop Bitters?") no, they were good bitters; there is alcohol in all bitters; what I got was paid for by myself or whoever I was with; I suppose if I asked for a drink I paid for it; yes, some of the drinks I took during the time specified were intoxicating; I never drank enough lager to find out personally that it was intoxicating; I suppose it is intoxicating however; the lager was on draught; there is a bar-room in the house kept by Mr McBride; it had been used as a bar-room before the Scott Act came in force; I got the drinks I had there; there was no secrecy maintained in connection with the sale; my business is pop and soda water, and I am necessitated almost daily to go into the public houses; the lager I speak of was kept on draught in a refrigerator at the end of the bar.

Mr Holt asked Mr Proudfoot what date the 18th day went back to.

Mr Proudfoot—To the 25th of July.

Cross examined—Can not swear positively that I had anything to drink on the 25th July; could not swear positively as to any particular day up to the 13th of August; I saw the beer tapped; I supposed it was lager; it tasted like it; as far as I could see it was lager; I was drawn out of a tap, which was in a keg or in a barrel, I suppose; my only reason for thinking it was lager was because it was called lager; I can't swear as to whether it is intoxicating or not; I did not take enough of it; the "bitters" I had were Augustina bitters; there is only a small quantity of alcohol in the bitters, such as in essences or flavorings; do not recollect paying any particular amount on any particular day in the Albion hotel; I must have paid for some of the drinks; can't place any particular day; I am in some days pretty often, on business; and other days not at all; I have been in there other days when not on business.

Mr Proudfoot—Have you any doubt in your mind that you had intoxicating liquor within 18 days of the 13th inst., and that you paid for it?

Witness—I suppose I had some between those dates, and if I had I paid for or somebody else did.

D. C. McKay, chief constable of the county, sworn, said: "I know the defendant McBride; he keeps the Albion hotel, in the town of Goderich; I was in the hotel on the 12th inst.; I had a glass of whisky and water there; McBride served me; it was paid for by Mr Radcliffe; the whisky I had did not make me drunk; a man can't tell by one glass whether it is intoxicating or not; it was whisky and water I got; it was taken out of a black bottle; I believe whisky to be intoxicating, but not one glass; it didn't "fizz" on me; it was either malt or rye I had.

To Mr Holt—I saw Mr Radcliffe paying for it.

John S. Platt, salt maker, sworn, deposed to the location of the Albion hotel, kept by defendant; I was in there the latter part of last week; I think it was on Thursday; I was in the bar-room; I was accompanied by a traveller; I had a drink; I have no idea what it was; it was taken out of a dark colored bottle; Mr McBride served me; I did not pay for it or see it paid; I don't know the taste of whisky; it might have been "Wizard Oil"; it didn't taste like the whisky I have tasted; it didn't seem to be intoxicating; Mr Dymont was in the bar at the time.

To Holt—I am not quite sure of the day.

Wm Dymont, sworn, testified to the location, etc., of the Albion hotel; I was in the Albion hotel on the 12th inst.; I had some kind of beer to drink there; it was not strong beer; the beer was taken out of a tap; it was the same tap as that referred to by Mr Phillips; if it was lager it was a poor kind; I don't know whether it was paid for; I think I ordered this drink, and went out without paying for it; I don't think the beer was intoxicating; cannot recollect having anything during the previous 18 days.

To Mr Holt—I cannot say that the tap in the refrigerator mentioned was the same as that mentioned by Mr Phillips.

The powerful voice of constable Yale then called out three times the names of the following witnesses:

R. C. Hodges.

D. C. Strachan.

F. W. Johnston.

but none of these persons responded.

(Considerable comment has been made on the fact that they were not brought up on a bench warrant subsequently.)

The court then held that sufficient evidence had been adduced to place the defendant upon his oath.

McBride declined to enter the box and give evidence in his own behalf.

The magistrates then found defendant guilty, but postponed sentence until Tuesday morning.

Before the adjournment the defendant was asked by the justices whether he had been convicted of a previous offence under the second part of the Canada

Temperance Act, and he replied "No," with a hearty laugh at those present.

Wm. Campbell, clerk of the mayor's court, then proved that a previous conviction had taken place.

TUESDAY, Aug. 17, '86.

After argument by counsel, the magistrates treated the conviction as a first offence, and fined the defendant $100, to be paid within ten days.

Nothing was said about appeal in this case.

THE CRAIG CASE.

Tuesday morning last Wm Craig withdrew his plea of "not guilty" on a charge of concealing the property of a bankrupt, and was fined $50 and costs by the justices of the peace Sheppard and Pollock.

Bluevale.

The Misses Wilson, from across the lines, are the guests of their sister, Mrs. Alex. Ross, of the boundary line.

Wm. McCracken succeeded in passing his second class non-professional examination successfully. Wm. Haggis also succeeded in his examination and took a third well done.

Wm. Mercer is away on a trip with which business as well as pleasure is combined. Meanwhile the genial countenance of John Farrow may be seen behind the counter, measuring off tape and silk dresses.

Jan. Tisminia, one of the successful merchants of this place, returned from a trip east last week. He informed your reporter that although he had seen more beautiful places, and also one or two large, yet he would rather live in Bluevale than any other large town he had seen. And so say we all.

Your Belgrade correspondent in last week's issue intimated that they have a number of teachers in that town. We may have mentioned before, but it will bear repeating that there are more teachers round Bluevale than any other town of its size. A. and G. Mosgrove, Wm. and R. B. Stewart, John and Thomas King, Jas. McCracken, Thos. Reid, P. Hartley, Jas. Thompson, our worthy teacher, and Mrs. Thompson, his estimable lady.

Worcester.

TEMPERANCE CONVENTION.—The temperance people of East Huron, having decided that the county of Huron was too large to be thoroughly worked by one organization, met at an announcement in Worcester, Tuesday, the 10th of Aug., at 10 a.m. An organization was effected, and the following officers were elected: President, Rev. A. Y. Hartley; Vice-president, D. W. Smith; Secy., J. W. Leach. A deputation from the convention met Thos. Gibson, Esq., M.P.P., at three o'clock, and asked Mr. Gibson to lay before the Ontario Government the desire of the convention; that Mr. Gibson, of Winthrop, be elected Police Magistrate for the riding. Mr. Gibson informed them that he would carry out their wishes and every encouragement was given the deputation that their request would be granted without delay.

Another deputation was appointed to meet on Thos. Gibson, Esq., M.P., and ask him to bring before the Dominion House the following, which seemed necessary in the eyes of the convention for the proper working of the Act:

1. That fines should go to the Ontario Government in Scott Act cases.

2. That in an appeal in Scott Act cases substantial securities should be given.

The subject of the Electoral Union was freely discussed, and it was unanimously decided to organize such in all parts of the Riding.

Arrangements were also made to hold a picnic as soon as speakers could be got and time and place announced, the executive to make final arrangements.

The riding was well represented, and the meeting was a decided success.

Why Quebec Has Changed.

Dr. Mousseau, of Soulanges County, Quebec, is a brother of the late Judge Mousseau, ex-Premier of Quebec, who was Secretary of State in Sir John Macdonald's Cabinet from 1890 until 1892.

The doctor, like his late brother, has been a life-long Tory, and has worked for his party; but recently he has been obliged to turn his back on his political chief. He explained his views, the other day, to a reporter of the Ottawa Free Press, declaring that he never had a great admiration for Riel, and believed that very few, if any, French Canadians who left the Tory party, did so simply because of Riel's execution. "That," said he, "was the excuse, the occasion, but not the cause of their leaving, but long before they had become convinced that the Government at Ottawa was unworthy of confidence. You must recollect that the Opposition won seats in Megantic, Logis, and other places before there was any Riel question. It is several years since we began to look to Mr. Blake as our coming leader. We read his speeches on Provincial rights, on the Franchise Bill and other questions, and though not of his party, we could not but admire the principles he enunciated as those which should direct the Government of this Confederation. The Franchise Bill gave much dissatisfaction in our Province. We have also read the speeches of Messrs. Blake, Cameron, Laurier, Mills and others on Northwest administration, and don't run away with the idea that we are not intelligent enough to understand the whole situation. No sensible man will believe that the Metis could have been induced to rebel if they had not been harshly and unjustly treated. It was the same with the Indians, and the conduct of the Government's officials in the Northwest has been shameful." He believes that the system of government which prevails at Ottawa is corrupt and dishonest, and, therefore, we cannot support it any longer.

The Best Fountain Pen in the World.

This "Wirt" fountain pen is the best thing yet invented in the way of a self-feeding pen. It has a gold nib, shades just as a dipping pen does, and never fails. It is a writing wonder. A sample can be seen at this office. Every lawyer, doctor, clergyman, school-teacher and business man should have one. Thos. McGillicuddy is the local agent.

"I speak within bounds," as the proverb said to the gaoler.

The Brantford Gazette tells the following story: "On Monday evening a Brantford man, residing in the bar-room of a Port Carling hotel, when a tourist walked to the bar and asked for nine-juice. On being served with what he asked for, the man swished around the room, and said, 'I will be the hand-off, I will be the hand-off, I will be the hand-off.' There isn't a drop in the house. Indeed, it doesn't pay to keep it. The people around here don't want any. Last fall an old man residing here at the Port fell into the water at the lock, and when he was taken out he was thought to be nearly dead. With the very best intentions, I proceeded to rub his limbs with brandy, thinking that I might thus assist to restore consciousness; but the sight of the brandy had the effect on the half-drowned man of the rapidity of a mad bull-hug, and he shouted, 'Take it away! Take it away! I would rather die than allow a drop of it to touch me,' and so he would. No, we don't sell whisky and call it nine-juice."

A total eclipse of the sun will occur on Sunday, August 29th, visible in this section, however, only as a very small partial eclipse. It will begin at 6:26 o'clock, a. m., and last 22 minutes.

The rains on Friday night and Monday morning were much needed. The first hail of August was to day.
