WINTER AND SUMMER

On Ontario's Shore.

WINTER ON THE LAKE SHORE.

The old Flost King has ta'en his seat Just where the Lind and water meet, And there maintains his legal state, 'Without a counsellor or mate, So potent is his sov'reign sway, We ne'er forget him, e'en a day, Stern and grave his disposition, Nought can charm him but his mission

With dull November's chilling breeze
He sweeps the foliage from the trees,
All nature clothes in sober hue,
He loves not her bright green and blue.
Now angry storm-clouds chase the sky,
And stricken birds in terror fly.
Old Boreas issues from his cave,
And tempest swells the sullen wave,
Mournfully wails and howls the blast,
Sailors cling to the icy mist;
Black is the lake, and black the sky.
The arr is filled with a piteous cry!
Sad's the fate of many a bark,
And, sadder, still, light hearts made dark

All is still with the last death gasp, But we're in winter's non grasp, The snow descends and cuipets o'er The tree-crown'd hill and barren moor,

援

Ic cles hang from ev'ry tree, And ree-clad is the flow'ry lea, Ice is floating on the water, Ice is seen in ev'iy quarter So we glide through bleak December, Fill we're gladden'd to remember Merry Christmas comes to cheer us, And that he is very near us Happy time of social meeting! When friends meet, with heartfelt greeting ! No matter how bleak the weather, Friendship's chains are link'd together, All are bent on muth and pleasure, Which is good in proper measure Now is the time for dance and song, And all sports that to youth belong, Sliding, cuiling, graceful skating, Girls and boys in pastime mating, Hark ! the merry sleigh-bells tingle A treat in which all can mingle

But lo! the old year wanes and dies, And thus it is that old time flies! Janus appears with happy face, And takes his antecedent's place Now, instead of tribulation, Nought is heard but gratulation Kings die.—all hall the successor, And few mourn his piedecessor.

A little thaw, a little rain,
And ice and snow are on the plain,
Again the stoim-wind wails and screams,
Like one waking from frightful dreams,
Now he comes like mighty thunder,
As the sky to rend asunder,
And then sinks into soft repose,
As weary eye-lids gently close

Winter grows old, but he's vig'rous.
And the cold is still more rig'rous.
( \sq tyrants 'bout to lose their pow'r
Grow steiner near their dying hour)
List to the storm-wind how it howls!
And see! the snow-cloud o'er us scowlDangerous is the driven snow,
That leaves no track where'er to go,
Woe to the traveller, belated,
Lest he to early death be fated!
Welcome now the humblest dwelling,
That of warmth and shelter's telling.
Many's the tale by fireside told,
Of marv'lous 'scapes from death by cold

After the storm succeeds the calm, Which to our senses is a balm. And we think of warmer seasons, Which I love for many reasons; But frost and snow return again, And teach us that our thoughts are vain

Bold March appears !- Winter's brave seron His crest the lamb and warlike lion, The winds now rave-now fondly kiss, Like buist of sorrow or soft bliss ! The white sail flutters on the lake, And birds are nestling in the brake We dream of Spring and sprcy gales, Of verdant lawns and flow'ry dales, Of blue-bild bright and tobin gay, Of show'ry April and blooming May, Signs of Spring to us delicious, But, I own, in part capricious, For many storms must come and go Before we lose our rcy foe, But Phœbus now, from hour to hour, Is gaining strength and quick'ning pow'r, And well nigh broken is the spell, Therefore I say-Farewell! farewell!

SUMMER ON THE LAKE SHORE.

Swfft summer is come! then rejoice with me, For all nature is joyous, bright and free, The lake is as blue as the azure sky, And the boatman's our does merrily ply, Gay brids are singing,

Flow'rets are springing.
All nature is joyous, bright and free.
Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

The wild bee is humming his song of glee,
As he culls the sweets from the flow'ry lea,
E'en the locust joins to swell the chorus,
And woiship the brightness 'round and o'er us,

Cow-bells are tangling,
Sweet sounds are mangling,
All nature is joyous, bright and free,
Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

Blossoms are turning to fruit on the tree, Laden with sweets is the air, like the bee, Bright flow'rs are op'ning their eyes from slumber Gay are their tints and countless in number,

Sweet is the evining breeze,
Perfum'd with linden trees,
All nature is joyous, bright and free,
Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

The fields are clad in Pomona's bright green,
The trees in 11ch foliage now are seen,
Flora is deck'd in her gayest array,
More beauteous is she than the Queen of May;

The cattle are lowing,
The bright sun is glowing,
All nature is joyous, bright and flee,
Then rejoice with me'—rejoice with me'

The waves of the Lake are sparking with foam, As briskly the summer gale wafts them home,

7 2

Music there is in the maintaining sound. Of the waters plashing the pebbly ground.

Gorgeous the sunsets are
In the bright West atar,
All nature is joyous, bright and free,
Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

How gracefully move the ships in full sail! Borne swiftly along by the balmy gale, Or tiny boats skimming the glassy wave, Like sea-birds rejoicing their wings to lave

Soft is the summer night,
In the moon's silv'ry light,
All nature is joyous, bright and free,
Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

Cover'd the fields are with their golden grain, The reaper is there with his busy train, The sun is glowing with heat and with pow'r, And glad are we now of the sunset hour,

Summer is in her prime,
"Tis the full harvest time.
All nature is joyous, bright and free,
Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

The air is sultry and the earth is dry, A storm is gath'ring in the distant sky, The wind comes in gusts, then big drops of rain, Now torrents descend and water the plain.

The bright hight'ning flashes,
The loud thunder crashes;
Nature, refresh'd, is joyous and free,
Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

The 11ch fruits are 11p'ning for autumn's store, Bounteous is summer in golden lore, Crown'd with success is the fisherman's toil, The lake's spathling tenants he make his spoil.

See the broad waters bright,
All in the starry light,

Nature is joyous, and bright and free.

Then rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

Though summer's not o'er, I'll finish my song, I see, with regict, she cannot stay long.
Gay is my theme, and gay is my measure,
Then how can I sing of aught but pleasure?
The sky is all brightness,
The air is all lightness,
While nature is joyous, bright and free,
Oh, rejoice with me!—rejoice with me!

BUNSLT

SUNSET

Sire! Day's bright orb now sinks to rest, Upon the Lake's resplendent breast! In a rich glow of ruby light, The earth, the air, the sky is bright

In vain we gaze at mid-day hour, Too great his splendom and his pow'r, But when at eve he seeks repose, And the day's toil is near its close,—

Then we see his parting glory, Gorgeous as an Eastern story! No earth-born king, in all his state, E'er sat enthron'd in pomp so great!

Though no jewels lend then aid, Nor flow'rs, alas! that too soon fade, The Day-god's form, like burnished gold, Sits thron'd, by mystic clouds enroll'd

Rich in beauty, ever changing. Through all tints of color ranging, Reflected in the Lake below, Behold a bright transcendent glow! From soft violet to purple, Each cloud fringed with golden circle, From rose blush to deep crimson dye, The grant forms that crowd the sky—

With ev'ry shade of lainbow hue, On firmament of azule blue, Varying each eve in ev'ry clime, And so 't will be to end of time

张

But when he sets to this our sphere And in the other doth appear After the day's departing knell, Then evining falls with mystic spell

A dewy stillness now pervades O'er rocks and fountains, hills and glades, 'Tris the hour when contemplation Fills the soul with adoration,—

For so great and wondrous beauty,
And reminds us of our duty,
To worship Him, our Lord and Maker
Of all good—the Great Creator!

MOONLIGHT.

Hair to thee, beauteous Queen of Night! Bathed in thine own soft silv'ry light; Gauzy clouds are round thee playing, Now encircling, now they're straying—

Veiling thy beauty like a bride, As calm thou sitt'st in modest pride, Shining upon us from above, Emblem of tenderness and love!

All is hushed by the gentle pow'r
Of the moon's bright and gleaming hour,
The soul entranced, as with a spell,
Is filled with dreams too vague to tell.

K 10

Beautiful the moonlit river!
Where the trembling aspens quiver,
Beautiful the lake—the ocean,
With its fearing waves in motion.

Graceful trees their shadows finging, Ghit'ring dew-drops round them clinging, Gems they wear to grace the night, When all on earth and sky is bright.

How beautiful the ruin'd tower!
The abbey, or the lady's bower!
Lit by the moon's pale, mystic glance,
The shadows wave like fairy dance.

Imagination paints full well
The tales those ivied walls could tell.
When knight, or page, or lady bright,
Rode forth to tournament or fight.

When monk or nun those cloisters trod,
Or press'd the dewy moonlet sod,
Ages since then have pass'd away.
And nought but mem'ries round them play.

Gentle the moon o'er hill and plain, But not so on the stormy main; She rules the waves with mighty hand— E'en manners oft sigh for land.

Where'er thou show'st thy face there's beauty, E'en when most rig'rous thy duty, In calm, in storm, in ev'ry phase, On foaming wave, in leafy maze.

Thou ever heauteous, ever young!
What myrrads thy praise have sung!
Bright day with all its dazzling light,
Cannot outvie the lovely night
