Before I went into the question of this childish, transparent endeavour to intimidate, I called the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He has sat in parliament for many, many years. He is recognized everywhere as an authority on parliamentary government and the rules. This morning I asked him whether I was correct in my assertion that this type of childish threat had no basis in our parliamentary system. Fortified by his view, I think the majority of the members of this House will now agree that this matter has been brushed aside and no longer requires to be acknowledged even by way of childish condemnation.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, did you ever see such a hodgepodge of legislation together in one bill? This is indeed an example of the degree to which the government brings together a number of subjects which are in no way joined one to the other. This legislation contains some subjects with which the opposition will agree, and others in respect of which the strongest argument can be made to the contrary. Yet we are placed in the position that unless the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North is accepted, we must vote on a bill that contains everything from alpha to omega, all joined together without regard to similarity or any other basic reason.

I will deal with one or two of these matters in an endeavour to bring some light out of the darkness that surrounds that composition. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will agree with me that this is a wonderful government when it comes to covering up and concealing the truth. It is one of the most interesting phenomena that when members of this government produce their semi-truths and get caught, they fall over, they stumble, they get up and go on as if nothing had happened. That is the position they have adopted throughout. What is this legislation? What is the reason for it?

I have come to the conclusion it is a cover-up to divert the thinking of Canadians from matters such as the mess in which we find the economy, the waste and extravagance of this government which still continues unabated. There is the falling trade, to which reference was made this afternoon, the tremendous deficit in the balance of payments, the industrial anarchy which exists in this country with a government that does not want to act and a government which internationally is suspect all over the free world. In addition, there is the crime which is multiplying. One of the reasons for the dilettante manner in which crime has been treated by this government is the fact that it has been a continual lawbreaker ever since it brought in the legislation which divided murder into two types, non-capital and capital. The Prime Minister, the Solicitor General and others are opposed to capital punishment. They have made that clear.

I have strong views on the subject. When I was prime minister, if a verdict of guilty was rendered and there were no extenuating circumstances or a recommendation of mercy, then, much as I hated to sign what amounted to the death sentence, we followed the law. But this government continues to break the law. Showing the utmost cynicism, the Prime Minister the other day said something like this: "I guess we will have to hang somebody because of public opinion." Could any statement be more cynical?

How will the government implement the gun control sections? I say immediately that I am in entire agreement with the objective, reducing crime by gun. Anyone arguing to the contrary would not have much basis from which to argue. But the means whereby the objective is to be attained, as set out in the bill, indicates a wishy-washy attitude on the part of the government. This plan will not work, and cannot work. It will require a multitude of bureaucrats for registrations and considerations, almost judicial on the part of examining and licensing officers. They will need to discover if the applicant is an alcoholic, if his mind is not as it should be, and so on and so forth. Implementation will require a great deal of examination, and the government knows it.

On page 11 of the little booklet prepared by the combined intelligence of the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General we are told: "It is estimated there are about three million gun users in Canada. Because of this large number, it is intended to phase in the licensing scheme over a three-year period." Let us understand what that means. The government knows that it would take an army of bureaucrats to register. Mind you, thay are not registering guns; the government would not do that. The bureaucrats are to register the individual. The booklet goes on to say: "Various alternatives are being considered including implementation on a region by region basis." That is the first public recognition by this government of regional disparity. Then we are told: "For example, the first year, could see the scheme implemented in Ontario." The registration scheme is to begin here, in Ontario, not in any other part of Canada.

Then we are told that in the following year the scheme will be implemented in western Canada and the territories. Clearly, there is to be open season for guns for a whole year in the western provinces and the territories until the gun law applies to those parts of the country. We are told that in the final year the scheme will be implemented in Quebec and the maritimes.

I have just referred to the last paragraph on page 11 of the "Peace and Security" booklet. Did you ever hear such nonsense? What will be a crime in Ontario in 1976 and part of 1977 will not be a crime elsewhere because the law will apply in Ontario but not to western Canada through to the Pacific coast. There will be no registration requirement there for the first year. There is to be one law for Ontario and a different law for all the other provinces and territories. The paragraph ends with these words:

This breakdown roughly divides the national population into three regional groups. Any implementation scheme would be subject to consultation with the provinces.

I have never seen a more asinine division of responsibility under law than that set out in the pamphlet purporting to deal with questions and answers regarding proposed gun control legislation. The government knows how costly this scheme will be. At first, 900 inspection officers will be needed. Who will pay for them?

An hon. Member: Ontario.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is an imposition upon taxpayers and another way of imposing a tax. It is a way most indirect, yet it will directly affect all. The three million gun users must get licences. Sir, the government did not consult the Canadian game federations; they did not solicit the views of 200,000 members, decent, responsible Canadians who are anxious to support an effective law.

In this country there are ten million rifles and shotguns, 700,000 revolvers and pistols, and approximately 2,800,000 gun owners. How long will it take to register them and to secure that full information to which I have referred? This is a preposterous bureaucratic plan which cannot work. I have already said it will be brought in piecemeal. What is to happen to the man who carries a gun during the commission of an offence? That is where the government should strike. We are after the criminal who carries a gun. That is the man we are trying to go after. How will the gun law affect thugs? In February, 1975, I tried to bring before the House a bill to amend the Criminal Code. It was a simple bill and provided in proposed section 83.1 of the Criminal Code as follows:

Every one who carries or has in his possession a firearm for the purpose of or while committing an indictable offence, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for not less than five years.

That provision would suffice. Wherever similar provisions were brought in, the "gunsters" ran for cover—except the desperate ones; they are in a different category. The sort of plan now before the House has not worked in New York. Decent people register, but do you think thugs are going to register the gun and give names of two responsible citizens as references? Does that not show how ridiculous this proposal is? When I brought my proposal to the attention of the then minister of justice, who has since been promoted to a higher sphere as Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), he brushed it aside. It shocked his finer sensibilities. I point out that under my bill the five-year sentence would not be subject to parole. But the government would not accept that idea; they would not borrow it because that would have been taking an idea from the opposition.

If you let thugs know that they are going to get five years on top of any other sentence they may get, you will strike terror into their hearts.

An hon. Member: Remember what the Law Reform Commission said?

Mr. Paproski: Are you for the thugs?

Mrs. Holt: Don't forget what the Law Reform Commission said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has the floor.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I hope I am not interfering with any of the hon. gentlemen's friends. Thugs fear punishment.

Mr. Poulin: What does the bill say? Read the bill.

Mr. Korchinski: You had better read it in both languages.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have never seen so many on the Liberal side of the House protecting the wrongdoer. Such solicitude deserves special mention.

Mrs. Holt: You obviously don't know the bill.

An hon. Member: Simmer down, Simma.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The cost of the scheme will be tremendous. Do you know what the government has provided? It says that if you carry a gun in the commission of an offence, or attempted offence, you will be liable for from one year to ten in prison.

● (1530)

An hon. Member: Fourteen.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right, make it 20. But one year is the minimum. What terror that will strike in the hearts of wrongdoers! They would get a year. What is that in a life? Why does the government not act directly in accordance with the recommendation of game associations and also the experience in the United States that that type of legislation is ineffective?

I go from there to summarize this bill. I am not going into detail because I have already said that it has been well covered. I repeat, it will not work. It is an additional tax. It will not get the thugs. Has it any support from the mounted police and those in authority? I have spoken to one after the other, and I did not do it by dialling policemen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Without exception, including former RCMP commissioner Nicholson, they are all agreed that it is simply a joke. It is designed to allay public fear that crime is multiplying, and at the same time it brings in a system that cannot be effective. One may ask what can be done. The Fish and Game Association made a very reasonable and responsible presentation. This is general across the country of that great organization. I quote:

> The policy of the Saskatchewan Wildlife Federation as regards to firearms legislation, is to:
> 1. Oppose legislative programs that prohibit or unnecessarily discourage the ownership and use of firearms by responsible citizens.
> 2. Support legislative programs that provide stringent and mandatory punishment for the criminal misuse of firearms.
> 3. Encourage the development of programs concerned with gun safety and with legitimate recreational uses of firearms.

Going on from there, we come to the next phase dealing with the legalization of provincial crime commissions. The Quebec crime commission has done the most effective work that I have ever known, on the part of any commission, to meet the problem. What happened? The authority of the province of Quebec to set up the commission was challenged and it went to the Supreme Court. Where did the Government of Canada stand? Where did the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice stand? They joined with the thugs in arguing in the Supreme Court of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: They argued that what was done was not within the jurisdiction of the provincial government or the legislature of Quebec. A howl went up. It did not take long. The government then said it would bring in legislation to legalize that which it said was beyond the legislative authority of the province. In the meantime, the Quebec crime commission has virtually been made inert. This is not the first time they have done that. I have never known a government that can argue one way in the House of Commons and a different way in the Supreme Court of Canada. The first example was in the Drybones case. An order was made. Drybones had been discriminated against by that wonderful judge in the Yukon who is now about to retire.

Mr. Nielsen: Northwest Territories.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Northwest Territories judge. The government said it did not believe in discrimination. Lo and behold, when the case came to the Supreme Court of Canada the lawyers for the government of Canada argued that what had taked place was not discrimination and that in any event it did not come within the purview of the Bill of Rights. What manner of nonsense is this?

An hon. Member: Liberal nonsense.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Liberal nonsense? It is no longer a Liberal government; it is a Trudeau government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is tremendously interesting to see what stand the government took with reference to women. This has been women's year, when they were showing their best—and I am referring to the government. A woman in Alberta had worked for years building up for her husband a very tidy amount of land, cash and the like. She was foisted out. When she asked for a fair share, where did the Government of Canada stand? They argued in that case that she was not entitled because, constitutionally, it was not appropriate or proper. Where are we going, is the question I ask.

I have other things I could deal with, but I am not going to deal with them except to say this. No one of responsibility that I know in the Mounted Police is for this gun legislation in its present form. Goodness knows, this government does not like the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I know that argument will not gain any sentimental support because they tried to get rid of "Royal Canadian". When I raised this last year and said they were removing it, the Prime Minister said that was all wrong, they had never even thought of it. When it was pointed out by tens of thousands of people all across the country that mounted police barracks, detachments and the like had "Royal Canadian" removed, then even the government could see. They then decided that they would not remove the words "Royal Canadian".

However, there are still some ministers opposite who do not have that affection for the mounted police which one would expect. I think of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) when he was minister without protfolio last November. He has gone from transition to transition. After saying he was sure that the RCMP tipped off the press in advance that they would be meeting with him on Thursday—

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the House that we are debating Bill C-83. The hon. member is discussing quite a different matter.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there are none as blind as those who cannot see.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. member really wants a recommendation to be a minister, I will give it to him, because he has all the qualifications of many others around him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister said, last November:

> The RCMP are using public opinion to get a strength they would not get otherwise . . .
> I do not want to see another CIA (the U.S. Central Ingelligence Agency) in Canada.

That shows the attitude of some ministers of this government. To the credit of the Solicitor General, the next day he said, "My cabinet colleague was unfair and unjust in his allegations about the RCMP." But they do not like the RCMP—and that applies to quite a few who sit opposite. They are really deeply disturbed by Sky Shops and other shops of that kind. They do not like the RCMP, and that applies especially to two of the ministers; each of them is showing an interest in something else at the moment.

● (1540)

I have nothing more to add. I have tried to show that this legislation is wrong in its present form. I have not dealt with wire tapping. What happened there is that they smuggled in this wiretapping section. I could not find it in my search at first. Everything else has a heading. That wiretapping thing was turned down in 1974. We said it was wrong. The then minister of justice, now Minister of Transport, fought bitterly to have it included. He did not get away with it, so they brought it in along with the other stuff.

An hon. Member: Under the table.

Mr. Diefenbaker: From under the table, where it was hidden away, they produced this. As long as that provision is there, you have the danger of a police state.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The point was well covered by my hon. friend from Calgary North who I understand has an amendment he intends to bring forward to make the proposal acceptable. But, on the face of it, what colossal impertinence on the part of a government to put all this stuff together with no relationship between one thing and another, and to say to us, "You must vote for it because you believe in certain parts of it." Not at all. This should have been divided up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will say no more other than that I fear for my country when you have a government which so cavalierly tries to restrict the rights and freedoms of individuals. They will not put the noose around the neck of a criminal who is guilty of premeditated murder, but they are putting the noose around freedom whenever they have an opportunity.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, today is the last day under the provisions of Standing Order 75C allocated to the discussion of Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime. This legislation deals of course with the registration of firearms. Similar legislation has been enacted in several countries throughout the world, yet without bringing about any real change in the situation regarding crime. In North America, for example, one could read the following not so long ago, and I quote:

[English]

"The new Boston gun control law has little effect".

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of Bill C-83 is to have us swallow the next bill, Bill C-84. It is an attempt to convince the people that gun control will prevent or stop crime which is becoming more and more serious in Canada. If they can get enough citizens and members to agree on gun control, then they will have them swallow the abolition of capital punishment through the adoption of Bill C-84.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill C-83 does not surprise me. Two ministers are needed to support this bill, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). They act in collusion to have us believe that crime will be reduced if revolvers, guns, ".22's" and ".303's" are registered. It may be. However, Mr. Speaker, are we to believe that thieves and criminals will register their weapons before committing their crimes?

Recently, when the Brink's truck was attacked in Montreal by gangsters armed with a machine-gun, do you think they informed Brink's of the licence number of the machine-gun before stealing $2,800,000? As late as last night, murders were committed in Montreal. Are we to believe that bandits will register their weapons to put an end to crime? Those who will laugh at the government measures and the ministers involved in this bill are the bandits who do not care the least about the government and the ministers. For instance, if an honest man keeps a shot-gun in his car trunk, whether it be a ".22" a ".300", a ".303" or a ".410", a bandit will not go and get a licence before stealing it. He steals the gun and then uses it against honest people or to commit a crime, perhaps a murder.

We all have received numerous letters from the province of Quebec and from all the provinces that strongly oppose the passage of Bill C-83. I received letters from British Columbia, from the constituency of my good friend from—

An hon. Member: Kenora.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Kenora, that is in Ontario; I have also received some from there. I also received several from the Windsor and St. Catherine areas and from the Quebec City area. I should like to quote a few of the letters I received, including one from the Quebec Wildlife Federation, Quebec region, as well as a copy of a letter sent to the Prime Minister, copy of which has been sent to every party leader in this House. The leader of the official opposition, the two ministers concerned, the Solicitor General, the Minister of Justice, the leader of the New Democratic Party, the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and myself also received this letter. It is signed by Raymond Pelletier, the acting secretary of this association, the Quebec Wildlife Federation.

● (1550)

During the regular meeting, the executive of the Quebec Wildlife Federation (Quebec area) which represents 26 associations with a membership of about 25,000 unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Considering that the amazing increase in crime in the country is due more to a bad administration of the law than to a lack of legislation;

Considering that a forty year old legislation requiring the registration of handguns (pistols and revolvers) is not implemented, Mr. Allmand having stated a year ago that 40 per cent of these guns were not registered in the country;

Considering that it would be better to amend the act in order to remove criminals from society instead of worrying a whole group of sportsmen;

It seems to me that this makes a lot of sense. Criminals should be removed from society, but not by registering guns, revolvers, pistols and so on. Come on! The Solicitor

General (Mr. Allmand) never net any sportsmen or knows nothing about the use of firearms. Do you think a criminal will care about Bill C-83? He keeps on laughing while we discuss it here, and murders are committed in Montreal and all across the country. So instead of eliminating criminals they try to bother a whole group of sportsmen, not only sportsmen but honest people to boot.

Considering that we should never lay the blame on the object, but on the one who uses it;

This is what is important. The guy who uses it is the very one we should catch. The object in itself, registered or not, does not change anything much.

I resume the quotation:

We propose that the highest authorities in the land be asked to see to it that all bills introduced by Messrs. Ron Basford and Warren Allmand be withdrawn which are designed to amend the Criminal Code of Canada in such a way that all owners of sporting guns and rifles be required to have a permit to keep them, that said permit be renewed every five years, that to obtain a permit the applicant be required to produce the statement of two guarantors, that persons of less than 18 years be required to have a special permit signed by two guarantors, or otherwise, to restrict hunters and sportsmen generally.

The association recommends that those things be deleted in the bill.

In the hope that you will act to implement our recommendations, I am

Yours truly,

Acting Secretary
Quebec Wildlife Federation
Raymond Pelletier

I do not know whether the right hon. Prime Minister has replied to that letter, but I feel the letter is entirely proper and logical. The adoption is recommended of an act that would not create problems for sportsmen, hunters and other honest people, but would instead be designed to keep criminals out of circulation.

When one sees how justice applies to criminals today, one wonders. Fellows appeared before the Commission of Enquiry into Organized Crime, whose constitutionality has just been recognized by the Supreme Court of Canada, bandits, in Montreal, guys who admitted having killed. At one point, they were released on bail, they were allowed to go about freely in Montreal, to everybody's knowledge. Is that justice? We wonder then—

At any rate when I hear the Solicitor General declare that there are other ways to protect our society than capital punishment, I ask which are they? Is Bill C-83 supposed to reassure the public? The head of the Commission of Inquiry into Organized Crime, Justice Dutil, has even been heard tell witnesses: Do not worry, do not be afraid, you are protected by the commission. We shall protect you against any aggressor. Since that time, at least half a dozen people have been assaulted and killed, even though Justice Dutil had promised them the protection of justice.

The Solicitor General is an inconsistent dreamer who does not understand anything about the problems of public security. The people are shocked and rising against the irresponsibility of the Solicitor General of Canada. He has to hide to shun police associations as well as other groups of citizens who want justice to prevail. The Solicitor General declared: Before I give up, I shall resign. I held an inquiry in my riding recently, I have data which were made available last week end. On Bill C-83, as on other legislation regarding capital punishment, out of 813 answers from all kinds of people, Liberals, Progressive Conservatives, Social Crediters, 706 out of 813 favour restoring capital punishment and 87 are against.

Not too long ago on television, I watched on CBC or a private station an interview with the hon. member whose name of the riding I ignore, the one containing Mirabel not far from Montreal, Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes I believe, who said that the whole population there was in favour of maintaining capital punishment, but that he was against it. It is his business to be against, but when you represent a population, I think you must take into consideration the feeling of that population—

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member is giving his own summary of what I said, but they are not my exact words. If by any chance he was interested in receiving the complete account of the proceedings at the Liberal convention, maybe he could be invited in the future. I will take pleasure in sending it to him. His ideas might be broadened, and the report itself might tell him exactly what took place at that time.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I take the hon. member's word but I saw him being interviewed on television. People were being questioned on the street, voters of his riding who were categorically in favour of maintaining the death penalty. And, I saw the hon. member reply on the air that he was personally in favour of abolishing the death penalty and that he was going to vote according to his conscience and not that of the voters of his riding. That is what I heard.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out once again to the hon. member that I am very glad to see that he listens to me with so much attention when I speak. That is very nice; perhaps I should tell him that I personally made a survey and that on this side of the House we have members as hard working and valiant I think as those who follow the leadership of the hon. member and that in my riding the question that was asked was whether people were in favour of replacing the death penalty by a minimum term of imprisonment of 25 years. In my riding and several others, to the question put in that way, the percentage of people in favour of the death penalty was little over 50 per cent.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The parliamentary secretary might let me finish my speech and then say the trifle things he just used to suggest that he does not say what he is but admits nevertheless that a majority of people in his riding are in favour of maintaining it. We are outside the subject, and I will come back when we discuss Bill C-84. Mr. Speaker, I am out of order now because we are discussing Bill C-83, but I simply want to draw your attention to the fact that the registration of firearms does not bother me at all. It is mainly a harassment for honest people, those who practice a sport or those who may use a gun or a firearm, for instance, in self-defence. These people may be bothered.

But the criminal, as I say, will not be upset in any way. When a thug is determined to kill somebody, no need to worry—by the way, the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) recognizes there will still be criminals, since he wants to register firearms under the pretence of protecting society. What a nice way of protecting society! That is why Canadians are opposing this government's legislation.

I have another letter from a professional engineer, Lee G. Morrison, from Calgary, Alberta. I was astonished at receiving a letter in perfect French from Calgary; that is quite remarkable.

An hon. Member: This shows what the Liberals' policy is!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): No, it is rather our policy, that of the Social Credit Party. We have been advocating this way of understanding one another throughout the country for a long time.

Mr. Morrison stated in his letter, and I quote:

Dear Sir:

Though you are not my member of Parliament, I am writing to you in the hope, perhaps ingenuous, that the matter of gun control will be subject to a free vote following a rational debate, regardless of the political affiliation of each of you.

The proposal to give bureaucrats the authority to determine who may or may not possess a firearm is an alarming example of the philosophy that "all that is not compulsory must be prohitited." If this measure is to become law, it is not difficult to predict that within a few years firearms in Canada will be restricted to a privileged few and that these arms will all be registered with their serial number. Subsequently it would be easy for a megalomaniac government to seize all rifles under the pretence of emergency measures and therefore secure the submissiveness of the people. If you think that the present government's policy is indeed very moderate and my fears exaggerated and unjustified, or even paranoiac, let me remind you that facism is like cancer: if they are not restrained from the very beginning, they can completely destroy our system.

I do not want to suggest that this government is already on the way to dictatorship, however each time we take one more step towards a larger control by the government we are going towards a future where our children will have no hope.

There is no proof that firearm control can effectively reduce the rate of crime except in a totalitarian state. Of course, with a total lack of freedom and with the support of relentless police forces there is not much violent crime but having lived and worked in some of those peaceful paradises I do not hesitate to take the moderate risks and responsibilities involved in living in a free society even if it is armed.

In its Ottawa Report dated June 20, 1975, the hon. Otto Lang said clearly that

● (1600)

It would be a mistake . . . to initiate any legislation . . . which would impose unnecessary red-tape upon the law-abiding citizens.

[Translation]

If we force, without logical reason, three of four million Canadians to obtain firearm licences it will merely cause more red tape. In the same report, Mr. Lang admits that the registration of guns will not prevent criminals from obtaining one and will not save the life of those that could be murdered by people who, in the past, have demonstrated no criminal tendency. It seems that the hon. Warren Allmand also accepts such a reality. If the registration of firearms is not beneficial to law and order how, in the name of reason, could the issuance of licences to firearm owners help us? What is the government trying to prove?

I have not had a gun or a rifle for many years but I find it comforting to know that I can buy one as easily as a boy scout hatchet. If my government is not afraid of me, in return I will have no reason to fear that same government. If this moderately repressive measure becomes a law, I will begin getting afraid.

This letter is signed by Mr. Lee Morrison.

Mr. Speaker, I am not the only one here who has received statements of this kind. I repeat, almost all members of this House have received strong protests against that bill from fish and game associations. The government knows so well that I am right that it has to resort to Standing Order 75C to accelarate the passing of this bill because there are many other members who would have liked to debate this iniquitous bill which does not respect the population's views. In my constituency, for instance, I have received views from the Fish and Game Association of Temiscamingue of which Jean Routhier of Ville-Marie is the president. I quote:

The Temiscamingue's Fish and Game Association is anxious to tell you of its dissapproval of the new bill, that is registration of hunting guns and we invite all other organizations in this area to assist us in sending a petition to Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

We would like you to support us yourself if possible.

Of course, I support Canadians of all parts of the country who object to Bill C-83 being passed.

In my opinion, the government is making a mistake and the ministers do not take requests and people's opinions into account. It is time for the government to take its responsibilities. Once again, I say that if this bill convinced us that it would reduce the crime rate and eliminate murderers, bandits and criminals, then not one member of Parliament would vote against Bill C-83. But we are convinced that this bill will not prevent a single criminal, a single murderer from committing his offenses, and his crimes because it would seem that he has it in him, and then, be will gain even greater satisfaction out of the fact that he can steal duly registered weapons and use them to continue his destructive or criminal actions.

Mr. Speaker, if according to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), registration can ensure greater protection for society, if there are other methods to protect the population, I am convinced that it is not this method that will protect people in Montreal, people who want peace, justice and order. The vast majority of the people want this. Instead of becoming softer, instead of having a marshmallow backbone, Mr. Speaker, I believe that crime legislation should be stricter. We say: Instead of condemning this man to death, we shall put him in prison for 25 years. He will cost the country from $15,000 to $20,000 a year for 25 or 20 years, after which he will be released on the pretext that he will be rehabilitated. At that time, because nearly all the doors will be closed to him, he will have only one thing to do, the same thing that he did 25 years earlier.

When a minister or a government cannot clearly understand this issue, they should go where such things happen and they will see that criminals can rehabilitated in certain cases. But there are hardened criminals who will not be afraid and who do not fear Bill C-83. They will certainly enjoy stealing nice guns, duly registered with the registrar of firearms or with the mounted police and then, the criminal will not be bothered with the serial number. When someone holds up a bank, does the cashier ask him: "Show me your registration certificate." Nobody even asks him what kind of a handgun he has or what type of .22 he is using. All you can do is give up the contents of the drawer, and you shake like a leaf because you are afraid of being killed. Some holdups ended with murder, that is the point.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the government must take its responsibilities, it must stop beating about the bush, it must stop playing like a fool with bills such as this one. It must start devising for Canada a system which will respect justice and order, protect security but with individual liberty. And to secure all this, we must get rid of all the criminals in our country, in order, first, to promote justice, and then order, which is closely associated with justice.

[English]

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I welcome very much the opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-83. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who took part in the debate earlier this afternoon was at his parliamentary and political best. I would only comment on one reference he made to the effect there has not been consultation with the Wildlife Federation and other groups representing gun owners. The fact is, there has been input from the Wildlife Federation and other groups in respect of this bill. The question is, how much.

We all know very well that consultation today has taken on a somewhat different meaning, depending on who is using the word and what he is speaking about. What most groups are talking about when they say there has been no consultation, or inadequate consultation, is that the group, or whoever it is, has not talked long enough with the government to get it to agree with exactly that group's point of view. If that has not happened, then the charge, of course, is no consultation or inadequate consultation. As I say, that statement of implication by the hon. member was an incorrect one in the sense that there has been consultation, even though the legislation before us may nor coincide with the feelings or the express wishes of the wildlife people. As a matter of fact, in many respects there is not very much difference between the principle put forward by many of the wildlife groups, and others, and that of the government as expressed in this bill.

A great deal has been said—I will probably fall heir to that, too—and many good suggestions have been put forward in this debate. I think the interest displayed, not only by members of the House but as shown in the volume of mail that many of us are receiving from across the country, is indicative of the concern and interest of Canadians in the criminal justice system.

Much of the criticism which has been directed at the bill has been on two fronts: criticism for what is not in the bill, and criticism of some of the provisions that are in the bill, in this case the gun control provisions. The bill has been criticized because it does not deal with drug or alcohol abuse, television violence and half a dozen other fields of genuine concern to a good number of people. On the other hand, it has been criticized because of the seemingly restrictive, all-inclusive nature of some of the provisions relating to gun control. This bill is one of a package put forward by the government to try to meet the very legitimate expressions of concern by Canadians all across the country. In this respect the incidence of crime and violence in this country which, although not as great as, for example, in the United States, is certainly a matter of concern. The government is not using the fact that our crime rate is below that of the United States and other countries as an inducement for taking no action to meet the concerns of the vast majority of Canadians.

I think Bill C-83 contains some new approaches which our courts and law enforcement people may employ, for example, in dealing with dangerous offenders. I think the legal people in the House and elsewhere can deal with these provisions and, indeed, have dealt with them better than I can, but it seems to me that this is a new approach well worth the consideration and support of members of the House.

I am sure that my constituents are no different from Canadians in other parts of the country in that they are concerned about their own safety and security and that of their families and communities. Generally speaking, their knowledge of the workings of the criminal justice system in this country is based upon local experiences and what they hear and read in the news media as reported from other parts of this country. Here they only hear of the failures of the system. Successes are not reported because they do not make news. For example, the bail system was referred to by the hon. member who preceded me, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). I think the bail system we have in this country is a good case in point, although I realize that this bill does not deal specifically with it. The vast majority of people charged and subsequently released on bail live up to their commitment. They show up for their trial and stay out of trouble in the meantime. It is the 1 per cent or 2 per cent of people who do not which generates apprehension and concern about the entire system in the eyes of the great majority of the public.

In this respect, I am sure many hon. members noted with interest last week a question raised in the House by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds). His complaint—quite a legitimate one—related to a constituent of his being held in a Mexican jail without bail for some weeks before his case was even brought to trial. That is the other side of the coin, the other system under which there is no bail at all. Surely it is a much simpler system from the point of view of administration, but it does not constitute what we in Canada consider to be justice. Certainly, human judgment as well as the law itself is very much part of our system. Not only juries, but judges, prosecutors, psychologists and others are continually making personal judgments, not only in sentencing but in granting parole, in rehabilitation of accused persons, as well as in dealing with those already convicted. There are bound to be some errors.

There is a feeling, certainly among my constituents—and in this respect I think they are no different from Canadians elsewhere—that in order to ensure fair treatment of the individual charged with a criminal offence, and even of those convicted, the entire system over the last few years has leaned too far in the direction of protecting the rights of the accused as opposed of the rights of citizens, innocent victims, families thereof, law-abiding citizens, and so on. On the surface, they would appear to be correct in that assumption. I am no lawyer or sociologist, but in listening to and reading reports of people with more experience in crime control, I did not find that I was able to judge whether indeed that is the case. But, as I say, it is a very widely held view that the system does not pay enough attention to the victims of crime.

We have heard in this debate, also, that all we really need is stricter enforcement and application of the present laws. I do not accept that premise in its entirety. I believe, for example, that some of the changes contained in this bill are good and necessary. For example, the parole provisions, the strengthening of the Parole Board, the abolition of statutory parole, the inclusion of local people on the Parole Board when dealing with specific cases, and the inclusion of two people from the community where the offence was committed are good measures and ones that are long overdue.

The wiretapping provisions represent an effort by the government to try to combat organized crime that all of us talk about and all of us lament about; but on the other hand, none of us can really come forward with any specific answers. I am aware of the fact that opinion is divided on the question of expanding the wiretapping provisions, but it seems to me that the essential part here is that strong safeguards be maintained to protect the personal privacy of individuals in this electronic age. I believe that the bill provides that particular assurance.

Provisions dealing with guns have undoubtedly been the subject of greatest controversy. All the present sections of the act dealing with guns and gun control have been written and revised with major new additions in principle. What are the main provisions and principles with which we are dealing in this bill? On the other hand, what are the main concerns that have been expressed to me and other members by the majority of gun owners who are law-abiding citizens?

In his remarks, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) outlined the main provisions of the bill. Firstly, I believe everyone can support higher maximum sentences for most crimes involving guns. Secondly, a mandatory additional sentence of from one to fourteen years for those convicted of using an offensive weapon. I oppose the suggestion put forward earlier by the right hon. member for Prince Albert that a rigid, mandatory five-year sentence be imposed in all cases. I think that one to fourteen years, or two fourteen years—all owing some flexibility—is certainly desirable in a measure of this kind.

Third, the proposal that police have authority to seize weapons without a warrant in an imminently threatening situation deserves the support of all of us. Fourth, the list of prohibited weapons will be enlarged to include such things as sawed-off shotguns. Fifth, there will be a tightening of the present laws with regard to the registration of hand-guns, which we have had for many years. Hand-guns are known as restricted weapons. Sixth, a licensing system is proposed for gun owners which is similar to driver's licences, hunting licences and trapper's licences, which we have had for many years, except that in this case there will have to be two local guarantors, as is now the case with passport applications.

There are provisions and measures in the gun control section of this bill which need to be changed in committee. There are clauses which need to be clarified and clauses which need to be narrowed in their scope, and their broad application needs to be much more limited. I do not wish at this time to deal with all the clauses which require amendment, but I do not want to touch on some of them.

My major personal criticism of the bill is its structure. I am not satisfied that there is sufficient flexibility in the bill to acknowledge the different traditions which exist in various parts of this country. In this bill dealing with gun control which we will be, and should be, legislating is an umbrella type of law which can be adapted to the traditions which have been established throughout the years in different parts of Canada. It will take two or three years before some of these provisions will be implemented. I suggest that we should give the minister, his staff, provincial attorneys general and others adequate time for provincial and local involvement in the development of regulations which are sensible for every area of the country. In this respect, I suppose we are faced with the age-old and usual Canadian dilemma, namely, developing a bill which fits all areas of our country fairly, a bill which can be tailored to regional and local needs, and a bill which fits not only the north and the south but also the east and west and the rural and urban areas.

The people of my constituency and my province appreciate and understand the need for stricter controls, especially in large urban centres. That is true whether it be in Toronto, Vancouver or Regina. In many respects, guns are too easily accessible; so how do we go about the problem of screening out irresponsible gun owners or those who should not be allowed to buy guns? As hon. members from the province of Saskatchewan are aware, in rural Saskatchewan gun ownership has been part of the country since it was opened up before confederation, just as was the right to own land, to break it and to farm it. These were some of the main reasons many people came to that province from all over the world and from all over the rest of this country. Owning guns has been part of that tradition, whether they were owned for shooting coyotes, gophers, or the old herd bull—to which the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) referred today—with a broken leg out in the pasture. Guns were, and are, part of the normal tools of the trade, just as are plows, saddles and other equipment.

The people in my province and constituency want that tradition maintained. I, personally, believe that the principle of issuing a licence to a gun owner will give him the opportunity to maintain that tradition. In the same way that drivers' licences set out minimum requirements for operating a motor vehicle, surely this system and the principle embodied therein can be made to work. It must be made to work. I agree with the points made by many hon. members of this House, on both sides, that it must be made to work without any great additional bureaucracy and without any great additional expense. In this respect, I feel that the expense should not be borne only by gun owners. We are implementing this provision for the benefit of society as a whole, and all Canadians should help pay for it.

We need some assurances with respect to a number of the clauses in this bill. We need specific answers as to how some of these proposals will be applied. Modifications are required to ensure that some of the legitimate concerns of sportsmen and others are recognized and satisfied.

I should like to take a few minutes to point out that representations from gun owners and sportsmen's groups in this country have not all been entirely critical of this bill. Many have been quite constructive. The Saskatchewan Wildlife Federation is an example of such a group. It is a large, representative and widely dispersed group of gun owners and sportsmen from that province. It is a responsible organization and has already done a great deal to promote safety and training courses in hunting. It has worked to promote greater responsibility in the handling of firearms generally and in training youngsters. They work to promote good conservation practices and good land owner-hunter relationships.

The Saskatchewan Wildlife Federation has examined this bill and enumerated a number of specific objections. I should like to touch on the main ones. First, the federation objects to the licensing system largely because of the great possibility of red-tape. I believe the government can accommodate them in this respect. Second, the federation objects to granting wide powers to the governor in council. Third, with regard to the provision with respect to possible fines or sentences for careless storage and handling of firearms or ammunition, the federation is concerned about the implications and application of this particular clause.

Fourth, it objects to a clause which makes reference to the fact that citizens are bound, under penalty of up to five years, to turn in a report to the police or the local firearms' registrar upon finding an empty cartridge abandoned in a field. If there ever was a nonsense provision in a bill, this has to be it. If there ever was a provision in a bill which would make people uneasy about government bureaucrats, it would be this kind of provision. Certainly, changes must be made.

The fifth point raised by the federation is that under this bill we will not be able to teach or instruct youngsters the basics of gun safety until they are 14 years of age. It will be illegal for anyone under the age of 14 to handle a firearm under any circumstances. I sincerely believe that that limit should be lowered to at least 12 years of age. The 12-year limit is now applied in Saskatchewan and in other provinces. I have a son who took that course three years ago. For the past two years he has been taking cadet courses in this city. He will be 14 this month. It seems to me that we are being unduly restrictive. I support the federation in their objections.

At the same time, to demonstrate their responsibility and concern in the field of gun handling and gun controls, the Saskatchewan Wildlife Federation also spelled out its ideas of what would constitute a good, sensible gun control program. It has put forward alternatives to some of the provisions which are in this bill. I ask hon. members to note carefully the great similarity of principle in the points made by the Saskatchewan Wildlife Federation and the points aimed for in Bill C-83.

What are the alternatives? The federation suggests the following steps; first, that all persons convicted of violent crime be placed under a lengthy order of prohibition barring them from possessing any firearm; second, that all persons who pose an identifiable threat due to mental instability or alcoholism be placed under a similar order of prohibition; third, that persons on bail or suspended sentence following arrest or conviction for any violent crime should be prohibited from carrying a firearm, while a person on parole after imprisonment for such a crime might have a similar prohibition imposed as a condition of parole; fourth, that all new hunters and marksmen pass a provincial competence and knowledge test; fifth, that gun dealers be required to keep a record of firearms' sales and open it for police inspection.

The sixth recommendation is that any licensing system designed to cover the sale of firearms and ammunition should be a provincial system with authority to license business operations and sale and purchase transactions. The seventh recommendation is as follows:

That firearms or ammunition be sold, loaned, given, etc., only to a person in possession of either:

(a) a valid hunting or trapping licence, with several years experience, and competency in firearm's handling or

(b) a certificate of competency from a recognized firearms' safety course; or

(c) a membership card from a recognized marksmen's club, or

(d) a special police permit for a valid requirement not covered by (a), (b), or (c) above;

(e) land owners.

When one looks at the variety of membership cards and licences referred to there, it seems to me that in the seventh point put forward by the federation one of the alternatives may be some kind of a simplified, universal uniform type of licence.

There are features of this bill which this organization very much supports, such as the banning of fully automatic firearms, increased penalties for the illegal use of firearms, and extended authority to the courts and the police to seize firearms in the interest of safety when serious incidents arise from domestic trouble or mental instability. As I say, this is the kind of constructive criticism we receive from responsible sports and gun clubs in the country.

The Wildlife Federation of Saskatchewan does oppose Bill C-83 in its present form. I support the federation in most of its concerns. Yet it should be obvious to anyone who examines the government's objectives, the federation's objectives and the alternatives, that there really is not that much difference in principle. It is in the method of implementation of those principles that the differences occur. I think the bill has had ample time for debate at the second reading stage.

Mr. Korchinski: You are kidding.

Mr. McIsaac: Further study can certainly be handled at the committee stage: my hon. friend is well aware of that. I accept the minister's word that he is prepared to consider amendments at the committee stage. For that reason, I will certainly support the bill at second reading stage.

One final point in respect of this bill which I would like to repeat again is that we need flexibility in respect of the proclamation of the sections relating to the kind of licensing provisions. The proclamation should be on a provincial basis, despite the fun the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) made of that this afternoon.

They should be proclaimed in each province when the provincial, municipal and other governments within each province have indicated their readiness, and that full and adequate consultation has taken place with the interested groups to ensure that these provisions are adaptive to the best interests of the people of that particular province.

I think that in general Bill C-83 deserves the support of members and should be sent to the committee where further details can be studied and further very necessary amendments can be made to the several clauses of the bill which require consideration.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the strictest security failed to save the lives of several United States presidents, writes Frank Arnie from Preeceville, Saskatchewan, a constituent of mine. I think he summarizes in one little sentence what many of us think. I have followed this debate very carefully in this House.

The bulk of the concern in respect of Bill C-83 is with reference to the gun legislation. This is the particular section about which I am concerned. I would like to separate the other sections so far as surveillance is concerned. The people who live in rural areas know all about surveillance, having party lines. In many parts of my area the people do not even have a telephone; they still use the radio to communicate from one community to another, and everybody listens in.

This legislation which has been drafted by a bunch of city slickers for the conditions in the cities will do nothing but harass the rural areas. It may be valid in respect of the metropolitan areas of Toronto and Montreal. As my friend from the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) said, "My God; do I ever see a need for it in Montreal!" We must understand the real danger in trying to apply a set of laws drafted by city people who have probably never lived outside the city limits and who have no idea what rural life is like.

I think the government has lost its credibility in respect of running this country. It does not have the pulse of the nation; it does not know what the people really want. As the member who just spoke said, this is umbrella-type legislation. I know that time will never allow me to say the many things I want to say in objection to this piece of legislation, particularly as it applies to gun control.

As I said, I have listened to this debate very intently. I listened to the speech of the Créditiste member, the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau). When he made his remarks, I said to myself that I could endorse what he had to say. His concern had to do with the registration of guns and the affect this had had in central Europe and Cuba where governments have been overthrown because of the confiscation of weapons and because of registration. Perhaps I should also mention Russia, because I have been to Russia and I could tell a story that would make your hair stand on end about how I was treated by the bureaucracy there. Mr. Speaker, one might say that that cannot happen here. I know the type of concern the people have, because I have been to Russia. The local registrar could become the local commissar. This is the kind of thing I am concerned about because of my own personal experience, not because I have read it.

I have referred to the speech of the hon. member for Shefford. Now I should like to refer to the speech made by the member of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth). I wish to endorse entirely his comments. My area adjoins his territory. I have northern people in my riding; I have northern Indian settlements. The situation in my area is entirely different from the situation in the cities. I have trappers and I have fishermen. In the middle of the winter, if one goes ice-fishing one carries a gun.

Now I should like to go to the government side of the House and say that I endorse almost entirely the speech made by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) except for the one point where he came to the conclusion that perhaps this type of restriction would help curb the incidence of crime. I understand the situation in respect of the sad case we had here in Ottawa. I know the people of Ottawa are now pretty well convinced that gun control is required in order to prevent similar instances.

From a reading of the brief presented by the Alberta Wildlife Federation, I understand that that poor lad in his sad frame of mind broke at least four firearms' laws which presently are on the books. Will additional laws solve the problem? I tell you, in all sincerity, that additional laws would not have prevented that tragic incident. I mention it because the government emphasizes too much what additional laws may achieve.

This second reading debate is to end with closure. Why are the gun provisions wrong, Mr. Speaker? We have heard that you have to be a chairman, president, active or retired, to be considered. I tell you, not many farmers belong to gun clubs. Not many trappers belong to gun clubs. For them, the gun is an essential tool. You must distinguish between the man who uses his gun occasionally for pleasure and the man who needs it as a tool. Some people might take their guns out once a year to go trap-shooting. In my area we do not go trap-shooting; we shoot muskrat. Our youngsters learn how to use guns. I first used a gun when I was about 12. I was much younger than my counterparts in the city who might use guns. Occasionally I brought home supper, partridges or jackrabbits. Occasionally we had rabbit stew. I carried a gun when I was 12. Our youngsters learn to respect a gun. I earned my first 15 cents when I went into the bush near our pasture to shoot some bush rabbits. They were fetching five cents each. I walked four miles into town to make 15 cents. The situation in our rural parts is not the same as in the city.

The same bunch who drafted this bill will be responsible for drafting regulations. And do not tell me you can change a bill in committee. I remember what the former minister of Justice, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, did to some proposals I brought forward. I proposed some amendments in the agriculture committee and they were acceptable to the committee, but the minister who accepted them reversed his position. He would not accept the amendments I proposed in committee and they were voted down in the House. Therefore, do not tell me his committee members reverse themselves. How easy it is to change a bill in committee!

This situation reminds me of a child at table. The mother says, "Eat your borsch," and the child says, "But, momma, I don't like the beans." If the mother allowed the child to separate the beans from the rest of the soup, all would be well. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is saying just that. He is saying, "We like the soup, but don't like the beans. Why do you not let us put the beans to one side?" He wants the beans to be separated from the soup. In the case of the child, if the mother agrees and the beans are taken out, the child can eat the soup and absorb the nourishment. If she does not agree and makes the child swallow the beans, the child can bring up, and it will be pretty messy.

The government is trying to create a mess. We can eat beans, of course, but not everything is digested. We absorb what is good. We shall absorb the good parts of this bill and you will hear no more about it. But after we eat, there is some excretion. If I know this government, it will either leave it alone, or flush it down. This legislation reminds me of the digestive process, because just as hydrochloric acid does not break down all foods ingested, so the committee system as now set up will not enable us to extract from the bill what is bad and unnecessary. This little parable is meant to show you that it is impossible to refine; you will not end up with good legislation.

As I said before, the hon. member for Shefford made a fine speech. He was concerned about the registration program. All must register, but nobody knows the regulations. Nobody seems to be much worried about them. The government merely says, "Register." That brings to mind my experience in Russia. I could tell you stories that would make your hair stand on end. I was holed up in a little hotel in a small village. They had an administration there, and I was dragged before a kangaroo court. They tried to hold me there. That was all part of the workings of bureaucracy. Then the army was alerted at the railway station and soldiers ran up to my compartment with fixed bayonets. Yes, this all happened to me. I am not telling you something I heard; it actually happened to me.

I have a friend in Endeavour, Saskatchewan, by the name of A. J. Kobe. In May of this year he sent me a document which reads in part as follows:

> In May of 1919 at Dusseldorf, Germany, the allied forces obtained a copy of some of the 'Communist Rules for Revolution.' Nearly 50 years later, the reds are still following them. After reading the list, stop after each item and think about the present day situation where you live—and all around our nation—

The first item on the list is this:

> A. Corrupt the young, get them away from religion. Get them interested in sex—

Television is doing a good job in that area. I continue:

> B. Get control of all means of publicity, thereby:
> 1. Get people's minds off their government by focusing their attention on athletics . . .
> 2. Divide the people into hostile groups . . .
> 3. Destroy the people's faith in their natural leaders . . .
> 4. Always preach true democracy . . .
> 6. Incite unnecessary strikes . . . encourage civil disorders—

I draw attention particularly to paragraph C, which says:

> Cause the registration of all firearms on some pretext, with a view to confiscating them and leaving the population helpless.

That document came to light in 1919. Deny that what it recommends could not happen here. Will any say it could not happen here? Do you remember what happened in the Quebec crisis? All who owned guns were willing to give them up. All would have been willing to register if there had been provisions for registration. We were told there was an apprehended insurrection. Then we discovered that the trouble-makers were few in number and most of them ended up in Cuba. That is the place our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) visited recently and, boy, was he ever chummy with Castro. He was so close to Castro that you did not know which was the one with natural hair or which was the one who wished he had some. That shows how chummy they were. And you say it couldn't happen here!

I remember when the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) acted in a different capacity. He set up what was later referred to as the Goyer goon squad: he set up what amounted to a parallel police force. I know that the Prime Minister, despite the protests of the former minister of finance, set up a sort of parallel government. People tell me, "Watch this man." I am saying this because I have watched him and drawn my own conclusions. Yes, people tell me, "Watch this man; he is dangerous." Now the government wants a central registry of guns. I say, watch it! They say it could not happen here. Remember what happened in central Europe, Russia and Cuba? When I was in Europe I thought it was sad to have soldiers standing in front of public buildings. I thought, "Thank God I live in a better country." Several years later I found the same situation in this country. Ministers were being protected by military men with guns. Given the right set of circumstances, it can happen here.

My time is rapidly moving on. There are many things I would like to say. I will, however, make this proposal. If registration is necessary, it should be by enabling legislation, enabling each province to register. The provinces should be given that right. I know that provinces have given some rights to the federal government, the federal government has given certain rights to them, and so on. Therefore, it is possible to give the provinces the right to register. In that way there would at least not be a central registry. Even though there is a daily erosion, the preservation of democracy is important. By having registration in the various provinces it will be up to them to draw their own regulations and apply them as conditions warrant. Segregate the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Some of those people have had certain freedoms provided to them over the years.

The explanatory note is a farce; it is phony. It makes me sick to think that people are being led to believe there will be a measure of protection. For the record, I think the explanation should read as follows:

> A bill to provide for registration and confiscation of guns; the provisions for a licence for murder; the creation of a bureaucracy and for greater protection of the government;
> Further, to provide the illusion of security and the removal of certain freedom to natives provided under the Treaty of Paris;
> The implementation of certain laws to equate the law-abiding citizen with the criminal element;
> The implementation of laws which will guarantee an increase in lawbreakers.

That is the way the explanatory note should read, because that will be net effect. I have mentioned the Créditistes and the NDP. I endorse the speech made by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) as well as that made by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) with regard to the absurdity that will exist if this type of regulation is put into effect.

If you start with the wrong principle, I do not see how in the world it can then be improved by sending it to committee. I am going to have to make a decision with regard to this bill. I feel very strongly about it. In so doing, I want to remind every newspaper man and commentator in this country that I am not opposing my party. My party does not have anything to do with this bill. I am opposing a stupid piece of legislation. I want to be able to separate the beans from the rest. I have that right. As Richard Lovelace said:

Stone walls do not a prison make,
Nor irons bars a cage;
Minds innocent and quiet take
That for an hermitage;

My party does not inhibit me. That is the kind of thing that happens. Too many times there is a wrong answer by the wrong person on the wrong thing. Given the power of their persuasion in the media, they often make a big thing out of nothing, and nothing out of a big thing.

I said that this bill was drafted by a bunch of city slickers for city conditions. In all the years I have walked the streets of the city, outside of a police officer I have never seen a man carrying a gun. However, I have seen a lot of people in rural areas carrying guns. I have never seen a patrol car in the city stopping a series of cars, but in the rural areas they stop you to check your driver's licence, brakes, lights and that sort of thing. The only time that is done in the city is when there is a traffic violation. Therefore, you can see where the harassment will be. The cities want this legislation. It is the rural people who will be harassed by it.

I will sum up in a few words what I think is going to happen. I could draw several parallels. No one thinks that a gun is a necessary tool for the farmer. A gun is required for humane slaughter. City slickers have never seen a pig being slaughtered; they would not know how it is done. You take careful aim with a .22 and fire a shot at the middle of the pig's forehead. That stuns it. You can then proceed to slaughter. You leave your gun while slaughtering. You do not have time to carry the gun to relative safety. After 1½ or 2 hours you are finished a with a good job. You then go in to wash up. If a police officer had come along and seen the gun and the shells, in the course of his duty he would have had to charge the farmer because the gun was not carefully stored.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Labour Conditions—Proposed resumption of negotiations between Air Canada and finance branch employees at Winnipeg; the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—External Affairs—Canadian position on involvement of Cuba in Africa; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Royal Mounted Police—Sky Shops investigation—Role of officials of Department of Transport in granting lease.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the House leaders it has been agreed that with consent private members' business might be dispensed with today so that we may proceed with the debate. We are moved, as well, by the eloquence of the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski).

Mr. Paproski: We agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): There seems to be unanimous consent. The hon. member who had the floor may continue.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for this opportunity to continue. I was illustrating the kind of situation that could be found in a rural area and why it is absolutely essential to have a gun for humane slaughter.

I now wish to deal with another situation. If any kind of a licence is to be granted, it should be a family licence because at one time or another every member of the family will be expected to use that gun. Suppose the father owns the gun and you give him a licence. You don't give the father the right to murder everybody else, and you don't give the others an equal chance. He's got to have the key. A gun on a farm is a tool.

I don't know whether members have ever seen what happens when a fox or coyote walks in among a flock of turkeys or hens. He doesn't grab one and run off with it, as city fellows might think. He grabs one and jumps the next one, and cripples the next one and goes to 15 or 20 of them, crippling them. Then, having crippled them, knowing they cannot get away from him he proceeds to haul them out one by one and he buries them. That is something a lot of these city slickers don't know.

You've got to keep a gun handy. You need a gun on a farm, and every member of the family has to be able to use that gun at any time. Suppose an animal is crippled and the father who has the gun is away. He may be away and he is the only one who has the right to buy any shells. If you have an animal, a horse or a cow with a broken leg, nobody dare go into town and get any shells. First of all, it is illegal; you cannot buy shells if you haven't got a licence, nor should the store operator sell them.

Why shouldn't everybody have a licence? After all, it is a family gun. It is a possession necessary for the entire family. What do you do in a situation such as I have described? Do you let the animal suffer, or do you break the law? Obviously, you are going to break the law and there is an invitation to break the law.

A whole lot of farmers and ranchers travel from one farm to the other; their land is scattered all over the place and they carry their .22 in a half-ton truck. They do so because they know that coyotes have been known to attack calves. Then, again, our country is bear country and bears are known to carry off calves. That is why a gun is always carried around. There are predators. A skunk could get into a chicken-run. All kinds of situations could develop. I can visualize a situation in which a farmer, having made his rounds, goes home and sits down to eat dinner. He is in a hurry—farmers are always in a hurry because there is always work to do. While he is there, the hired man comes in and says, "There is a breakdown somewhere." The farmers says, "Take the truck quick and drive into town to get the parts. The hired man dashes into the truck and heads out. On the way to town he meets a patrol car with a bubble-gum machine on top. The officers stop him and asks to see his licence. They want to check his brakes. While looking around the truck, they see the gun. The following conversation takes place, "Can we see your licence for that gun?" "I do not have one". "Oh, you haven't got a licence." Trouble, trouble! Mr. Speaker, the people who drafted this legislation have no idea what rural life is like.

Have you ever seen a trapper come off the trap lines? Have you ever seen the fishermen come off the ice in winter after fishing? They carry their guns. The kids carry their guns. What is a trapper going to do? He carries his gear in, dumps it into one corner, and there is the gun. Do you think the first thing he does before he even shakes the snow from his back is to lock up that gun? How ridiculous can we be? You have to go into these rural areas to understand. The people who drew up this legislation have no idea what it is like. How are we going to improve on this sort of thing in committee, when it is all based on the wrong premise? You are drawing up legislation oblivious of the fact that there is a rural part of Canada.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

I say, Oh, my gosh, you can do that in the city areas, "though I don't know what good it is. "If you want it in the cities, you can have it. But don't tamper with us, don't tamper with our work." The Indian has a right, under the Treaty of Paris, to have that gun. The white man has done it once again—gone out there and tampered with his rights and freedom.

I shall go on to something else which ought to be considered. The Indian population of this country is 1.37 per cent of the whole, yet the percentage of the Indian population incarcerated in our jails is 8.37 per cent. Obviously, this is some sort of record. But what kind of prison record will make it impossible under this legislation for a man to own a gun? In many cases the sentences involved here are short sentences. We have to bear in mind that a large percentage of the native population is in and out of jail. Is the minister telling me, then, that he intends to deny the right of every one of those men to own a gun because of some sort of prison record? I don't know. Nothing is spelled out in the bill as we see it before us. How much leeway have we got? You ask us to buy a pig in a poke, or a cat in a bag—whatever it is—and then you turn around and say, "It is good, because for the sake of political propaganda this is what we are going to do."

I want to go on to one other thing. I said this bill will set up a bureaucracy. It seems to me that if you want to register guns, it ought not to be necessary to go back and do it again five years later. The only reason I can see for that is the need to pay for this bureaucracy once it has been set up. I am told it might cost as much as $30 for a gun licence; that is one estimate that has been made. Can you imagine a father with two sons having to pay $90 between them for these licences?

My .22 only cost me $11 to begin with. One of my constituents wrote to me saying that his father bought his .22 for $4.95. To pay licence fees at this level is ridiculous. Obviously, there have to be exemptions here. After five years, you have to go back to the same official to re-register. Why? What happens if you have one gun and three members of a family, for example, the father and two sons, register; or, for that matter, a mother, if she is inclined to shoot at all? Nothing is spelled out. Where do you draw the line? Suppose there is one member of a family who is unstable? Is that family barred from having a gun? I don't know. Nothing is indicated in the bill. The only justification I can see for going back after five years is that the government, having set up a huge bureaucracy, must somehow raise the money to pay for it. Of course, we all know who is going to pay for it. It is the gun owner—it doesn't matter if the gun only cost $5 to buy originally.

Mr. Speaker, I am told by my whip that I have only about one minute left. I wish I had more time. I can only say one thing. In the words of the Alberta Wildlife Federation, Bill C-83 is "One Basford of a bill".

● (1710)

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was speaking this afternoon he congratulated the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), who is the justice critic recently appointed by the new leader of his party and was also the justice critic of his party under the former leader, on his sixtieth birthday. Might I also add my congratulations. I have always found him to be co-operative and helpful when as chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs from time to time over a period of many months we were organizing the appearance of witnesses before the committee.

The hon. member for Calgary North, relatively recently—I believe on May 30, 1975—in a question directed to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) asked when the government was going to bring forth for examination a bill to restrict the ownership of certain guns and control others. This bill has been brought forth by the government as part of its peace and security package at the request not only of the hon. member and others but of attorneys general across Canada. Hon. members will remember that very recently the attorney general of the province of Ontario indicated that if legislation to restrict and control the ownership of guns in this country was not brought forward by this government, he intended to do so himself.

When speaking earlier today, the right hon. gentleman also complained of lack of consultation with certain important groups in this country before the legislation was brought forward. He mentioned the former commissioner of the RCMP, who I believe is now associated with the Canadian Wildlife Federation. As a matter of fact, the former commissioner, Mr. Nicholson, was consulted in detail when he presented a brief last June to the Solicitor General and to other interested parties at the time this legislation was being drafted. My understanding is that some 80 per cent of the matters raised by Mr. Nicholson on behalf of the Canadian Wildlife Federation were considered and in fact included in the legislation.

The justice committee has always been receptive to the representations of all parties who have interested positions to present on legislation before it. I would commend, as do many members on this side of the House, that we move this bill into committee for in-depth and detailed study of all its clauses.

As the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) said—and as is so obvious—there are, of course, differences in respect of controlling and using guns between rural areas of Canada and urban areas. I agree with the Canadian Wildlife Federation, other groups interested in the use and control of firearms and with the point of view of other members of the House that the committee could entertain, if the hon. member would so submit, the type of amendment that he feels would satisfy the complaints he made regarding certain incidents, such as having one gun in the family and perhaps five people having access to it in order to protect their assets on the farm, animals and so on. Such an amendment ought to be considered by the committee.

The minister also indicated that he is prepared to listen to any representations in connection with amendments which are put forward with reason and logic, so we can show that we can provide Canadians with some degree of protection against the misuse of firearms, not only the use of firearms to commit criminal offences but also in regard to the tragic accidents that have been occurring, in some cases through lack of understanding and knowledge of proper storage.

Unlike the hon. member for Mackenzie who has had the good fortune to live in the country, these people have had no training in the use of weapons. To the hon. member for Mackenzie these weapons are like any other tool that is used on the farm and in farming communities. People who live in cities and move to the country do not have this kind of familiarization with weapons. In their hands, they sometimes become very dangerous, not because of any intention on their part to commit crime but because of their lack of understanding of their use. Indeed, they have probably never had an opportunity to use a firearm.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert also said there were some on this side, though he did not name them, who do not like the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In my years in parliament, Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to detect any such feeling. In fact, I have detected, on the contrary, a great sense of pride and, yes, sense of security that we have in our Royal Canadian Mounted Police force, one of the most efficient police forces in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Poulin: I suggest they are one of the most respected international police forces. I would point out to the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert that an indication of this is the fact that the former commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is now president of Interpol. To indicate, or by innuendo suggest that there are some on this side who do not like the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is to cast an unfair shadow on the great work and integrity of that force, from their senior officers right down through the ranks, and I think that ought not to go unanswered.

I believe the Solicitor General—it is an honour for me to work with him—has a mandate to work on behalf of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in parliament and he has been doing that job effectively and well. I know he considers the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, in representing them in this House and in committees of the House, second to none and places them before many of his other concerns. One of the reasons for this is, of course, this peace and security package that is now before the House.

Several hon. members have spoken in the debate so far and made points to which I should like briefly to refer. For example, in his speech in this debate the hon. member for New Wesminster (Mr. Leggatt) made several important points about the causes of crime. One point which he stressed concerned the disproportionate number of native Canadians who are presently incarcerated in Canada. He went on to state that it is essential to approach the problem of crime at its roots in order to make progress toward preventing such an intolerable situation from persisting into the future. I cannot agree more with the hon. member. That is why certain initiatives have been taken by the federal government outside the context of this bill to approach the very problem which he mentioned.

In order to meet this problem, a major conference of native leaders and federal and provincial ministers was held in Edmonton just over a year ago. This conference of native people and the law explored the problem which was touched on by the hon. member and determined that a follow-up structure should be established in order to pursue solutions to these problems. The federal government is now moving ahead with the native advisory councils created as a result of that conference.

Just a few weeks ago in Montreal a meeting of the Canadian advisory council on native people and the law was held. This council consists of representatives of the federal and provincial governments and provincial governments and the leaders of the six major native organizations across the country. One specific project, which deals with the concerns expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster, is the program of the federal advisory council on native people and the law to work very closely with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to develop training programs for all recruits to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in order that a more effective approach to the policing of native communities in Canada can be implemented.

Within the ministry of the Solicitor General it is recognized that more native people are required within the criminal justice system and, as a result of that, a study has recently been completed examining ways in which this can be implemented. Within the penitentiaries we have expanded the use of native liaison officers and also made great progress in utilizing native service programs in order to help our native inmates. Furthermore, recommendations flowing from the Edmonton conference concerning the creation of work camps and the transfer of native inmates to provincial institutions closer to their homes have been pursued and will continue to be followed up.

Programs by other departments designed to get at the very roots of the criminal problem in our native communities have also been established. One of the important programs of this type is the joint program of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and National Health and Welfare. I am referring to the National native alcohol abuse program which has been funded at a level of $13 million over the next three years and is aimed at getting at the very roots of crime which so often are related to alcohol abuse among our native people.

In concluding then, Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure you that the government recognizes that the concerns expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster are very real and very important, and that the government is taking action designed to get at the problems which are the source of these concerns. If there are no specific amendments to this bill, that does not mean the federal government is inactive in this field.

As many authorities point out, including the Law Reform Commission, real changes in the criminal justice system do not necessarily come from changes in law alone but also from improvements in programs, training, administration, and so on. I think some of the examples I have mentioned show that the federal government is deeply concerned and is in fact actively pursuing solutions in this area.

The legislation has also been questioned by hon. members on the grounds that it does not contain specific provisions to deal with the hard drug problem in this country. The government fully appreciates the seriousness of this problem and places a high priority on it. It was pointed out that there is a strong statistical relationship between the traffic in hard drugs and violent crime in Canada. I agree with this. But it would be a mistake to look at the measures now before us for the ultimate solution to this serious and complex problem. The legislation cannot be expected to solve all problems of crime.

Strict provisions for dealing with illegal importation and traffic in hard drugs are in the Narcotic Control Act. The RCMP and other police forces across the country have placed a high priority on enforcing these provisions. When we discuss the treatment of heroin addicts, however, we begin to see the enormous complexities and the difficulties which must be faced. As hon. members know, the government did not implement the Le Dain commission's recommendation for compulsory treatment. Hon. members are surely aware, however, the recommendation concerning treatment was not directed at the federal government but at the provinces who are responsible for programs of this sort. The federal government has an important role to play in supporting and faciliting changes that might be introduced, but I think it is significant that no provincial authority has yet advocated the adoption of the commission's proposal.

On the question of a national drug maintenance system for addicts, which was also mentioned, a federal maintenance program designed to ensure the most effective use for methadone in the treatment of opiate dependence has been in operation for over four years now. In the Ministry of the Solicitor General funds are provided to assist community rehabilitation centres working in this field as well. No less than two chapters of the Le Dain commission's final report were devoted to this problem and the government has taken the benefit of much of the commission's advice in this respect.

Experience with deprivation of liberty as a means of facilitating treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts has not been encouraging. The experience with treatment in prison settings has been definitely unsatisfactory, with virtually all studies demonstrating a very high rate of relapse and recidivism. In response to this awareness, the proportion of persons found in illegal possession of heroin who have been placed on probation in the community on condition of compliance with a treatment program increased from 10 per cent in 1969 to 29 per cent in 1974. In many cases a condition of probation has been that the offender participate in and co-operate with a federally-approved methadone maintenance program. In this respect the government and the courts have been involved in the implementation of the Le Dain commission's recommendation for increased use of probation for heroin addicts on condition that they comply with an approved treatment program.

I have dealt at some length with these matters to show not only that the government shares the concern about these problems but also that it is moving on several united fronts to deal with them. Again, however, it is important that we separate the problems associated with the traffic in drugs and the treatment of drug addicts from the specific problems dealt with in the legislation now before us.

In this debate on the crime prevention bill, I could sum up my position in the following way. The government is proposing measures in this bill, and in another bill which will shortly be considered by the House, in order to further the goal in affording a better measure of protection for the Canadian public against crime and to make our laws more equitable and humane. The government is taking the approach that certain parts of the criminal law can be tightened up in order to effect that goal. At the same time, however, other proposals of a legislative, regulatory and administrative nature in this package, some of which have been touched on today and other days, help to humanize the criminal justice system. I am referring specifically to the measure to introduce more due process into parole matters, to widen the community input into the parole process, and so on. A central theme in all this is the stress that must be put on the "front-end" of the criminal justice system; on efforts to prevent crime from occurring in the first place. Our goal is the establishment of measures which will be more effective in protecting the public.

It is my contention that each and very one of the measures presented in this bill, and in the peace and security package generally, can stand on its own feet and can meet the test of effectiveness which has been proposed as the benchmark against which the peace and security package should be measured. Furthermore, it is most important that the House understand that this bill and the peace and security package as a whole be considered as part of an ongoing process.

I believe that this crime prevention bill presented by my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), is a worthy next step to the one taken by this House in passing Bill C-71, and that the bill currently before us should be seen in this light. It is also important to remind ourselves that efforts continue on other problems as well. I refer to the examination of the Law Reform Commission's reports on criminal justice matters and the current series of nationwide consultations upon new legislation affecting young offenders.

The measures in this bill and in the peace and security package as a whole are also the product of a lengthy process of study within the federal government and of consultation with the provinces and private groups. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) has chaired two full-scale federal-provincial conferences on corrections, one in December, 1973, in Ottawa and the other in May, 1975, in Victoria. The Minister of Justice also meets regularly with his provincial counterparts, and he and the Solicitor General met with attorneys general and provincial ministers of justice on two occasions last fall alone. In addition, there has been set up a continuing committee of deputy ministers on corrections which has met on several occasions in the recent past. The latest meeting of deputy attorneys general was held here in Ottawa a few weeks ago.

In outlining these continuing forums for consultation, I should also mention other meetings such as the meeting of firearms' registrars last June, the conference and follow-up meetings on native people and the law held in the past year, and continuing discussions with private groups such as the Canadian Criminology and Corrections Association and the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry societies. From this you can see that the federal government is most serious about consultation with other authorities responsible for the criminal justice system in Canada.

Some of the important measures proposed in this bill are the amendments with respect to electronic surveillance. The police experience since the bill was passed in 1974, the Protection of Privacy Act, is that each and every one of these proposed amendments is necessary in order to provide the police with the most up to date and modern methods to be used in detecting and combating crime and organized criminals. The bill provides that rather than those enumerated now, all indictable offences will be subject to wiretapping in the event a court order is obtained.

Also, the act, if these provisions are accepted by parliament, will be generally amended to provide and act which will be almost identical to those introduced by the government in 1973. The amendments which were advocated by hon. members opposite at that time, and which were adopted, I believe have been shown through police experience to be a mistake. By notifying the person whose conversation has been intercepted within 90 days after the tapping has been completed we are not doing anything to tamper with the civil liberties of individuals. What we are doing in a positive way is to place an alarm bell in the offices of individuals implicated in organized crime telling them that the police of this country, who have obtained a warrant to detect them in this manner, know where they are and what their operations are, but have not yet been successful in obtaining enough evidence to carry a case on to prosecution.

The ordinary, small time criminal will not be very impressed with the notification that his telephone was bugged, if information was obtained although there was not sufficient information to lay a charge, but people involved in organized crime look upon such an alarm bell placed in their office as a tremendous bonus to each of them in all their endeavours.

If this bill is accepted, the return of evidence, directly or indirectly obtained is, I believe, a proper restoration of the common law procedure which we have used in this country based on the English common law system that, if evidence is admissible in a court, evidence which indicates the truth of a series of actions, it ought to be admitted so that the jury and the judge will have all the credible evidence before them in order to determine the guilt or innocence of the prosecuted party. This is a proper step. If there is any illegality in obtaining that evidence, or any other evidence that is usually submitted to a court, appropriate action can be taken with regard to anyone who would resort to such a method to get evidence for a trial.

In closing I should like to commend to the House the bill before us as a reasonable piece of legislation and a necessary and effective step in ensuring that our criminal justice system is made a more responsive, more adaptive, and more effective tool to improve the quality of Canadian life. I would also like to stress again the words of the Minister of Justice when opening this debate when he made it clear he was open to proposals for improvements in the bill.

I think it is clear to all who have studied the criminal justice system that the criminal law is really only one of the control mechanisms in our society, and the criminal justice system is only one of several systems. But in its widest definition, the criminal justice system includes everyone in our society, and it is also a reflection of what we are and what we value.

Because this implies more than just law enforcement or crime prevention, the quality of the criminal justice system, which we all understand cannot be perfect, depends upon the quality of the individual and the quality of the community—upon the degree or integrity, self-respect, and the sense of public responsibility for which we all must strive. For this reason I am convinced that answers to the important problems of crime in our society will not be found by experts alone, and that it is the business and even the duty of all law abiding Canadians to bring their contribution to bear on this formidable task.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to you and my colleagues, and to my whip—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: —for this opportunity to participate in the second reading debate on principle of Bill C-83, "an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime," particularly since the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has seen fit to impose closure on this debate on principle.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Huntington: Why closure on the debate on principle of the bill? They know this is a bad piece of legislative writing. They know that they are playing a sinister and irresponsible game of politics with one of the most important issues facing Canadian society today—law and order—peace and security—issues that need attention if we are to preserve and improve the quality of life in Canadian society for its law abiding citizens.

An hon. Member: Then why don't you support it?

Mr. Huntington: I was utterly amazed at the Minister of Justice when he spoke on the closure motion lecturing us on the fact that he saw no need to continue the debate on principle—that the bill should go as fast as possible to committee where the Liberal majority could continue to play their political games, with a minimum of exposure and a maximum of control. The sad fact of the matter is that the committee system is being abused by the government to the point where the system is threatened.

We have examples in committees where the government majority on a committee votes for continuous sittings if they are not getting their own way; where with 11 members they can provide a quorum; where the steering committee can select those bodies or organizations it wants to hear and conveniently overlooks others that have a contentious point of view to express; where time limits are set which interfere with the full exploration of a good point. The block system interferes with progress on important issues. This is not just my statement, because I was fascinated to find in the Ottawa Citizen issue of April 9 the following comments of Charles Lynch:

> And this, in turn, bolsters the criticism that the committees of the Commons are no more than sandboxes for MPs to play in, make-work devices to keep them busy and lessen the boredom many of them feel sitting in the House of Commons.

And last night on "W5" I found another warning about sandboxes.

[Mr. Poulin.]

What is more important in a truly just society than a full and open debate on the principle of a bill that is as important to all Canadians as "an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime"? Bill C-83 and its companion Bill C-84 do not even consider measures that will get at the true and real causes of crime.

No society in history has survived the rising tolerance for law and order that Canada has experienced since 1968; tolerance that is caused by bleeding heart permissiveness in the management, or rather lack of management in our institutes of correction; tolerance that is caused by a failure to update our laws so that people in a society with changing morals and values can continue to relate to the rule of law which is the foundation of a free and open democratic form of government.

Nowhere in these bills do we see measures to attack poverty which is the womb of crime. All we have had under the rule of this Liberal government is a perpetuation of a reservation syndrome, and the evolution of a new welfare syndrome where we now have families that have been on welfare for three and four generations.

Where are the programs that would have to reach beyond the next election to start encouraging life goals and self respect in the progeny of these under-privileged families?

In this so called just society we see "leadership" where a lonely seaman is to be deported to a country and form of government he does not want while at the same time we shroud and apparently protect the likes of the wealthy General Quang, a man with a sinister and evil record of crime in the most heinous activities of slavery—the distribution of opiate based drugs. If Bill C-20 comes into force before that man has had his day, he will be a citizen of this country.

We saw $4 million spent on the LeDain Commission inquiry into drugs, and what has the government done other than to use these past years as a stall to do nothing about this rot and evil?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Huntington: Sit there and smile. It is not our shame but yours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: Where in this Bill C-83 do we see any measure that would remove the cause of 70 per cent of our violent crime by taking measures to eliminate the profit motive that is inherent in the narcotic malaise so prevalent in Canada and that causes so much misery and violent crime? I ask in all sincerity: is it callous indifference to the slavery, the suffering, the misery and the crime surrounding this evil? Is it a way of softening the strength of Canadian society for the imposition of a more totalitarian form of government that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) keeps hinting at?

● (1740)

Mr. Faulkner: You are a disgrace.

Mr. Huntington: I am not. Why don't you do something about the LeDain Commission recommendations?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member please address the Chair.

Mr. Huntington: Hon. members opposite are the ones who have to answer, not me. I am in the opposition. Is this illicit activity, which this Liberal government allows to grow like poppies in Turkey, an excuse for a larger and larger law enforcement bureaucracy? More bureaucracy on bureaucracy, and I ask, why doesn't an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime include legislation for the registration of narcotic addicts and remove from society those addicts who will not accept and abide by a proper, just, sensible, and humane rehabilitative program? This would remove the profit motive which is behind 70 per cent of all crime in Canada, instead of fooling around with this malaise of nonsense we have in Bill C-83. Nothing would make a more meaningful contribution to peace and security in Canada than legislation in this area of need.

In introducing this bill the Minister of Justice stated that "the central objective of Bill C-83, the government's peace and security program, can be simply stated—it is to counter rising violence in our society without resort to violence itself in response, this to the end that law abiding citizens will know a greater degree of security and safety while still preserving that critical balance in the scales of justice."

There are clauses in Bill C-83 which in fact, attempt to serve the central objectives stated by the Minister of Justice. I do not have the benefit of a formal education in law but I am from the street and have a concern which is shared by many out there.

There are five or six aspects of this bill which I favour, and in saying this I am perfectly content to entrust the examination and improvement of these aspects to the wisdom of my colleagues in the committee.

One of the aspects I refer to is the dangerous offenders category which repeals the existing section of the Criminal Code dealing with habitual criminals and dangerous sexual offenders. I welcome this new provision which will allow the courts to impose indeterminate sentences of imprisonment of dangerous offenders.

The second provision which I am in favour of is the maximum penalty for escape or attempted escape, and I particularly favour the repeal of statutory remission, which is to be replaced with earned remission.

The third provision I favour is that provinces will be given the authority to create special commissions of inquiry into organized crime which will give the provinces the legal power to call witnesses and documents from other provinces.

The fourth provision for which I have sympathy is the extension of wiretapping authority from the present 30 days to 60 days. I believe this is a valuable aid to law enforcement because statistics show that the average period of need has been 54.1 days. Most breaks in major crime, and particularly in narcotic distribution, have been through this valuable law enforcement aid.

A fifth aspect, which on the surface appears to go in the right direction, is the provision for the management of parole services to be transferred to the Commission of Corrections and for the number of board members to be increased to 26 permanent members. I am hopeful that the committee will give full consideration to allowing the sentencing judge discretion in the assessment of individual parole cases.

I am also sympathetic to the search and seizure provisions because I feel that the time is past for legislators to consider safety and other factors affecting the morale of law enforcement officers. It is my opinion that these six initiatives carried in Bill C-83 are valuable, and I have no difficulty agreeing with them in principle. As I stated, I leave their perfection and improvement to the wisdom of my colleagues who are trained in this regard.

This brings me to the point of concern and mistrust I have for the authors of this legislation. Rather than move forward with meaningful measures to correct our law and assist our law enforcement agencies, they turn this very serious subject into a three ring political circus by devoting 39 of 73 pages to the highly emotional subject of gun control.

Gun control is a subject which deserves full and open debate on its own, and that is why I urge hon. members on the government side to support the very wise amendment which was allowed to be put by Mr. Speaker to the second reading motion of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: Just in case hon. members opposite do not understand the amendment, I will read it. It proposes that:

> Bill C-83 be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for the purpose of considering a more proper legislative division thereof.

According to the Minister of Justice, the gun control measures proposed in Bill C-83 are of a "comprehensive nature directed both to those who would use guns for criminal purposes and to others who, in using them for legitimate ends, must learn to do so with greater respect and care." Yet the minister immediately tries to clarify the matter for us by saying that, "for those who use firearms as tools of their criminal trade no registration and licensing system will effectively curb continued access to and use of weapons." The minister admits that gun controls will not affect the availability of weapons to the criminal elements of society but instead will compel law abiding citizens to create another bureaucracy so that those who own guns can be licensed and their names kept on a list. For what purpose? It is not the gun which kills, it is the will behind the gun.

We have all been inundated with statistics, but I offer a few which show that anti-gun laws do not get at the real problem and do not affect homicide rates. One example is Switzerland where every man over 18 is trained and required to possess and maintain a firearm in his home. In 1968 the homicide rate in Switzerland was 0.7 per 100,000 population. On the other hand, in Japan, which prohibits civilian ownership of firearms, the homicide rate was 2.3 in 1968. It is interesting to note that in Switzerland there is a mandatory weapon sentence to be served consecutively with sentences for crimes. In addition, Swiss correctional institutions are self supporting, and when you are a visitor in them, you work.

Does licensing work? The same statistics, provided by the government, point out that 68.4 per cent of all firearm murders resulting from criminal acts are committed with handguns, and handguns are licensed under present laws. The fact is that crimes of violence will continue to be committed, with or without firearms. From 1961 to 1974, 44.2 per cent of all victims were murdered by firearms, and 55.8 per cent were murdered by other means.

It is my contention that crimes of passion will continue to be committed, because they are usually committed by people who are not chronic criminals. If guns are not available, other means will be used. It is my belief that many of the people involved in this class of tragedy would not have trouble being registered or licensed because before the event many would be considered normal citizens. Crime cannot and will not be controlled by placing undue restrictions on law abiding citizens, as the gun control measures in Bill C-83 attempt to do.

Why this new legislation when our present law, if enforced, would do the job? For instance, under the present code section 83 makes it an indictable offence liable to imprisonment for five years to carry a weapon for a purpose dangerous to the public peace, or for the purpose of committing an indictable offence. Surely people committing crimes while in possession of a firearm can also be charged with that, in addition to the offence committed under this section of the code. Why is it not being enforced? If there are problems of interpretation, why do we not amend this section?

Section 85 of the present code makes it an indictable offence, liable to imprisonment for five years, to carry a concealed weapon without a permit. What person who is going to commit a crime would not conceal his weapon, and how many of these weapons are actually registered? Again the person who has committed a crime while in possession of a weapon could also be charged under this section of the code. To my knowledge this is not being done. If it is being done, it is not being done consistently.

Under section 86 of the Criminal Code any one who, "without lawful excuse, points at another person a firearm, whether loaded or unloaded, or uses, carries or possesses any firearm or ammunition in a manner dangerous to the safety of other persons, is guilty of an indictable offence" and liable to two years' imprisonment or is guilty of on offence punishable on summary conviction.

Any person committing a crime while in possession of a firearm could be considered possessing a firearm in a manner dangerous to the safety of other persons. Why are criminals who are that the new proposed gun control measures are redundant and are merely duplicating the functions of the aforementioned sections of the Criminal Code. It is convenient, conventional wisdom that a multitude of unenforced statutes of the law leads to a disrespect of the law by the public, and that is one of the gun problems we have in Canada today.

It is my understanding that directives need only be sent to Crown prosecutors across Canada informing them that people found in possession of a weapon while having committed an offence should also be charged under either sectons 83, 84 or 86 of the present Criminal Code. Whether the sentence is served consecutively or concurrently will be left to the discretion of the judge. That is under the present law. If this does not work, then an amendment need only be made to those sections making the sentence mandatory.

One can only assume, from the lax and tolerant attitude of our present government to the present Criminal Code and from its past practice of not enforcing the laws therein, that any new legislation will be treated in the same manner, because during this debate over and over again we have heard that this bill will make law breakers out of many present law abiding citizens.

There are some points made in the paper submitted by the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police on gun control laws which I think are worthy of consideration during my participation in this debate. They point out that any improper type of legislation may cause more harm than good by imposing unnecessary restrictions on society. Years and years ago during the war I was told never to write a law that I was not prepared to enforce because, if I did so, I would have trouble on my hands. This is the best wisdom I was ever given, and I have carried it right through my life.

This paper lists three categories with which firearms are more and more frequently identified. The first is the sociopolitical movement which cannot be disregarded, and which historically has been associated with the manifestation of anti-establishment thinking that has accompanied the short or long drawn out process of government change. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, this is a major concern to many people in Canada today no matter what the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) says.

The second category deals with an element of society which will always choose to live off the avails of normal appetites but in a carrion fashion, with minimum personal effort and with total disregard of its effects toward society. This is the category of "crime for profit."

Then we come to the third category which is the crime passionel, that crime of violence which is committed in a moment of passion or temporary insanity.

The Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police in their paper on gun control point out that in any of these categories those dedicated to crime will not or cannot submit to any law, and already disregard existing legislation. I agree with this statement and analogy. The problem at hand is the high incidence of crime and the search for methods to reduce it. If this can be achieved by the elimination of a weapon, then so much the better, but this approach can be discarded from the very beginning because violent crime can be committed with any number of weapons.

The Association of Chiefs of Police also say that "the causes of crime must be sought elsewhere—in the greed, hatred, jealousy and general moral depravity—and the remedy, if there be any, is more likely to be found in morals and education, in improved police methods of detection", and I should like to add, in improved police methods of prevention. They conclude with the statement that "the prompt and certain imposition of punishment" is absolutely necessary. That is another thing we are not getting in Canadian society today.

I note with some astonishment that in both of these trade-off companion bills, C-83 and C-84, after years of the swinging door syndrome and permissive experiments in rehabilitation, we are now to enter an era of longer sentences. I ask: are our correction institutions now to become "vegetable farms"?

In this debate on principle where do we get a chance to review the very tragic and sad state of policy and management in our detention facilities?

The correctional services budget in 1960 was $19 million to $20 million, with a headquarters' staff of 50 people supervising a total penitentiaries' staff of 3,000 in Canada, overseeing over 6,000 inmates. The correctional services budget for 1975, according to the Blue Book, is over $230 million with a headquarters' staff and regional headquarters' staff of 620 people supervising a total penitentiaries staff in Canada of 7,000 people, looking after 8,800 inmates.

The measure of success in penal reform is the recidivism rate. In spite of the prolific growth in staff from 3,050 to 7,620 in 15 years, and in spite of the 1,100 per cent increase in expenditures in this service, the recidivism rate is still constant. Of all persons admitted to the penitentiaries in one year, about 80 per cent have had previous penal institutional experience, and 42 per cent to 45 per cent have had previous penitentiary experience. Where are the separate training facilities that are absolutely necessary if we are to start having proper rehabilitation measures in this area of first offenders? It is in this area that emphasis should be placed on rehabilitation programs.

I believe that for the objects stated by the Minister of Justice to be achieved, a rearrangement of priorities within this bill is needed. A separation of the gun control subject matter in this bill from the other aspects pertaining to peace and security would give this Thirtieth Parliament a chance to work up very meaningful legislation in this very important area of community need. When a government plays shallow political games with a subject as important as that covered by this bill, I guess it has no option but to hide its shame behind closure. I urge all members to support the important amendment of my friend and colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock I now leave the chair until eight o'clock later this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Francis Fox (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the subject with which Bill C-83 deals, the protection of society against crime, especially violent crime, is of paramount importance. The measures set out in the bill are part of a complex of measures the government has in mind for strengthening our criminal justice system. I believe, as one of the last speakers on the government side, that it is necessary to clarify a number of apparent misunderstandings about the measures we are putting forward.

The rationale for this bill, and for the other measures the government intends to introduce, is the need for a strong but reasoned response to the threat to our society posed by a pattern of constantly rising crime, in particular crimes of violence. There can be little doubt of the need for such a response. Between the first quarters of 1974 and 1975, for example, the incidence of robbery involving the use of firearms rose a staggering 74 per cent. Firearms are now used in 50 per cent of all murders; this proportion has been steadily increasing since the 1960's and is still growing. It is apparent that, to maintain and improve control of the situation, new initiatives such as those contained in the bill brought forward by the government are required.

The measures we are proposing in Bill C-83 are comprehensive. They affect dangerous offenders, special crime inquiries, changes in parole, changes in the penitentiaries and reformatories acts, protection of privacy, and measures to regulate firearms. These measures will receive searching examination in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and constructive commentary from the many organizations that have studied our measures. Both the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) will welcome their constructive submissions and suggestions. Before these measures are referred to that forum. Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a number of concerns that members raised in debate or that arose elsewhere.

I begin, Mr. Speaker, by reminding members who criticized the bill for being too comprehensive and including too many subjects that the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1969 and the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1975-76, Bill C-71, were also omnibus bills providing amendments to many different sections of the Criminal Code. Bill C-71, as members may remember, dealt among other matters with, drinking and driving, conspiracy, laundering money, protection of foreign diplomats, and cattle rustling. Omnibus bills of amendments provide a convenient and wholly appropriate method of keeping our laws relevant and consistent with changes in society, a method which this House has found acceptable before now.

Some members argue that Bill C-83 leaves too much to regulations and does not include sufficient legislative detail. It should be apparent that we cannot have bills both ways, both simple and complex at the same time. We believe Bill C-83 strikes the proper balance between statute and regulation, and that the regulations provided for in Bill C-83 are useful and necessary for lending flexibility to the implementation of some of the new measures put forward in the bill.

Other hon. members criticized the bill for omitting specific measures to deal with the hard drug problem and other causes of crime in this country. I fully agree with those hon. members; these are problems with which a minister of justice should be concerned and I trust that in the not too distant future the government will present the House with the fruits of its long consideration of these matters. Meanwhile I call the attention of those hon. members to the fact that specific measures of the bill, such as the special sentencing provisions for the use of guns in the course of crime, and the strengthening of police powers with respect to electronic surveillance designed to strike more effectively at the crime bosses who control hard drug trafficking, are intended to attack the manifestations of some of the problems they raised.

As these and other measures demonstrate, the basic aim of Bill C-83 is to maintain control in the face of rising violence in our society, to help to restore to Canadians a sense of security and safety while preserving a delicate balance in the scales of justice between society's right to security and the rights of the individual. Let me now turn to its specific measures, Mr. Speaker, with a view to clarifying some of the misunderstandings that have arisen over the last ten days.

There were those, for example, who mistakenly criticized the government for introducing measures to register all rifles and shotguns, and those who attacked the bill for being ineffective in taking firearms away from criminals. Let me remind those members that two thirds of the murders in Canada take place between friends and acquaintances, not in the commission of other criminal acts, and that two thirds of the murders in Canada involving firearms are committed with rifles and shotguns. These facts demonstrate very clearly that there is a basic and overwhelming need for legislation in the area of firearms control such as we are proposing.

The government believes that the measures for the control of firearms contained in Bill C-83 will go a long way toward reducing gun related violence in Canada. They are an inter-connected and interdependent package that, taken together, as a whole, will grapple successfully, we think, with the major issues of misuse and abuse of firearms in Canada.

First, there is a licensing system, not for the weapons themselves, but for owners, a system in which all who want to own a rifle or shotgun will be required to demonstrate their fitness to own one. In adopting this measure the government rejected harsh solutions, such as a total ban on all weapons, the setting up of repositories where guns would be locked up when not in use, and registration of every rifle and shotgun. These were rejected because the costs outweighed any expected benefits and because, in the case of the first option, the government recognized that there are legitimate reasons for gun ownership, such as target shooting, hunting for sport or food, or for the joys of collectorship. As gun users themselves have pointed out, it is the person who kills, the gun is only the instrument.

What the government is proposing, Mr. Speaker, is no more and no less than the measures already in effect in respect to other dangerous instruments, whose possession is nevertheless legitimate and even necessary, such as automobiles. The government proposes simply to require individuals who wish to purchase or use firearms or ammunition to obtain a licence first, like an automobile driver. One licence, valid for five years, will cover any number of rifles and shotguns, and any amount of ammunition. The sole test is fitness to possess a weapon.

Firearms will continue to be available to all responsible persons for all legitimate purposes, but persons with a history of violent behaviour or drug of alcohol abuse will be screened out. Surely members cannot object to that. Surely members cannot, as the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) stated the other day, endorse the present system whereby someone just released from prison or a mental hospital, or an individual in a sudden burst of emotion, can just walk into a store and buy a high powered rifle or shotgun, no questions asked.

That is one set of provisions of this bill, Mr. Speaker. The bill also contains stiffer penalties for criminals using guns while committing any indictable crime. Such a criminal will receive a mandatory, consecutive sentence ranging from one to 14 years in addition to any other penalty he may receive. Furthermore, he may be prohibited, by court order, from carrying or having in his possession any firearms or ammunition for any period of time specified.

As a further measure to deal with gun-related violence, Bill C-83 also provides greater police powers to search and seize firearms of all types wherever it is apparent that a crime is about to be committed, or that a person with a gun is a danger to himself and to others. This provision is primarily aimed at what the law euphemistically calls domestic quarrels.

We should bear in mind that two thirds of all murders in Canada arise from these household spats. They are the greatest source of danger to a police officer in the course of his or her duties. Common sense alone would seem to dictate that if a police officer is required to intervene, then that officer should be empowered to impound any weapon that presents a danger.

Finally, Bill C-83 tightens restrictions on importing and manufacturing weapons, adding Saturday night specials, sawed off rifles and shotguns, and all fully automatic weapons to the list of weapons forbidden in Canada. The bill also requires permits issued by the office of the Commissioner of the RCMP for the manufacture, wholesaling, and importing of firearms.

These then are the main provisions of our approach to the gun problem, a comprehensive approach including tighter regulations on private use to encourage private responsibility, more power to police to stop potentially dangerous situations before they develop, and the use of special additional prison sentences as a deterrent against armed crime.

In the near future, as a further measure, the government plans to complement the provisions restricting the general availability of guns by introducing across Canada a voluntary "turn-in-your-weapon program". There are more than ten million guns estimated to be in circulation in Canada at the moment. Although we rarely admit the fact, we have one of the highest per capita gun populations of any country in the world. Many of these weapons are not being used. Many are in all probability improperly stored in a closet or garage and represent a hazard. Brampton, Ottawa—the tragic shootings there prompted citizens to turn in their weapons by the hundreds. We are hoping to persuade many other Canadians to do the same, and so lessen the potential for such tragedies in other localities.

During the debate some hon. members called attention to the fact that Bill C-83 contains no provision for mandatory testing or safety courses. In considering the question of firearms handling competence, one should be clear that while fitness to own a weapon is no guarantee that it will be properly handled, competence in its use—even a high degree of competence—is no guarantee of fitness. However, the bill does recognize the importance of considering firearms handling competence, and authorizes the Solicitor General to enter into agreements with the provinces to co-ordinate the administration of our provisions with their programs encouraging hunting and firearms safety training. We hope to include competency tests through this arrangement and, as the bill moves through the standing committee, the minister will be interested in hearing representations and further suggestions on this point.

Another hon. member raised the somewhat technical question of vicarious criminal liability. In other words, if someone steals your gun and shoots someone, could you be charged with murder? This is a question also raised by responsible hunting associations like the Canadian Wildlife Federation which, I should point out after some of the references this afternoon, endorses some of the proposals in Bill C-83, such as the ban on automatic weapons and increased police powers to seize firearms in the interests of safety. The answer to the question is, no. If there is any doubt implied in the wording of the bill, I am certain we shall want to correct this in committee.

What Bill C-83 does in this regard is to make you liable to be charged with careless handling and storage if it could be shown that the weapon was carelessly stored and that reasonable precautions for the safety of others had not been taken. Someone, for example, who leaves a loaded rifle on the front porch could be convicted and, if so, become liable to a penalty ranging from a suspended sentence to five years. The actual definition of carelessness will be for the courts to decide in each case. The courts have been required for a long time to assess carelessness, careless driving, for example, and should have no difficulty adjusting to this requirement.

Other comments pinpointed some necessary areas of revision in the bill; questions of minors' rights to shoot, the definition of ammunition, the provisions regarding gun collectors, and the effect of the bill on certain native groups. In the light of members' and others' comments and representations, the government is considering amendments in these areas and these will be pursued in committee.

Other measures in Bill C-83 include reforms of the detention system, about which the Solicitor General has already spoken, and measures concerning special crime inquiries, dangerous offenders and protection of privacy. With regard to special crime inquiries, I should like to say we are still reviewing the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Di Iorio case which upheld the rights of provinces to hold inquiries into organized crime. We will be re-examining the provisions of Bill C-83 in the light of that decision and the Minister of Justice will have more to say on this during the committee hearings.

I should like to point out, while on the subject of crime inquiries, that our only interest here is to ensure that provincial governments have the adequate constitutional authority to proceed with those inquiries. As the bill indicates, our primary concern is to ensure that such investigation can be carried to completion. That is why our initial proposals give to the inquiring authority greater powers than a provincial authority could confer. As for the dangerous offenders sections of the bill, hon. members are aware that these provisions reflect the considered judgment of two committees, as expressed in the report of the Canadian Committee on Correction, known as the Ouimet report in 1969, and the Senate report on parole in Canada in 1974.

Both reports recommended changes in the criminal law so that criminals whose records of crimes of violence mark them out as constituting a serious and continuing threat to the physical safety of other people could be separated from society on a long-term basis. Indeterminate sentencing for offences of this kind is widely used in many countries whose penal practice is recognized around the world as progressive and enlightened. It provides an appropriate mechanism to protect society against dangerous criminals where it is virtually impossible at the point of sentencing to determine an appropriate length of sentence. The advantage of the indeterminate sentence lies in the fact that it postpones the decision on a release date to the point where authorities can more accurately judge the readiness of the dangerous offender to resume a normal life in the community without constituting a continuing threat to the safety and well-being of others.

Because of the gravity of this type of sentencing, the government has been careful to surround the provision with safeguards for the offender. The application for a sentence of indeterminate detention may be made by the Crown attorney only with the consent of the provincial attorney general. The offender can call any relevant evidence, including that of a psychiatrist, psychologist, or criminologist. The court may seek additional evidence by remanding the offender for medical observation for a limited period. Further, the indeterminate sentence must be reviewed within three years of the sentence, and every two years thereafter, by the National Parole Board.

I come now to the provisions that relate to the use of electronic surveillance. These provisions have raised concern on both sides of the House as to whether the bill strikes a proper balance between the need to provide effective protection for society and the need to safeguard the rights of the individual. The need for changes in this law to enhance our capability to attack the carefully protected bosses of organized crime in particular is evident, not least from the Solicitor General's report of 1975. In that report the Solicitor General explained that many of those convicted in the Quebec meat scandal might be free today if the present law had been in effect when the inquiry began.

The Minister of Justice also has the responsibility of protecting and upholding civil liberties in Canada, and he has welcomed the comments of civil liberties associations and other responsible groups and observers concerned with this area. The minister will wish to listen carefully to their proposals for change, notwithstanding that Bill C-83 presently includes a number of safeguards protecting civil liberties.

The changes in the Protection of Privacy Act that are proposed leave in place the already existing powerful guarantees against abuse of electronic surveillance. Judicial authorization continues to be a requirement. Unauthorized communications are themselves inadmissible in evidence. The act of illegal eavesdropping is punishable as a criminal offence. Full and free reporting of proceedings in open court is expressly permitted, thus ensuring the public right to keep fully informed of the way prosecutions are conducted and the way these investigative measures are being used. While we must ensure that the safeguards are adequate, we must not prevent our police forces from using the latest available technology in the fight against organized crime. Quite clearly, as long as the fundamental guarantees remain in place, the danger to the citizen is greater if we tie our hands needlessly in the fight against organized crime.

I should like to point out to hon. members that the proposed amendments carry the unanimous support of the provincial attorneys general who daily face the task of fighting criminals.

Admission of evidence derived from an unlawful surveillance is a similar problem, and its solution requires a similar perspective, Mr. Speaker. By deciding to admit such evidence and by repealing the suppression doctrine we have had in force, we are bringing wire tap laws into line with existing law on search warrants and more closely into line with our traditions of the common law. Some have argued that the measure rewards illegal conduct. In fact this is a narrow view of the issues involved.

As Wigmore, the great American authority on evidence, has noted, the exclusionary rule makes justice inefficient and coddles criminals by serving neither to protect potential victims nor to punish the offending officer. Rather, it punishes society by the release of criminals into our midst. Obviously, the solution to dealing with a case in which believable evidence has been illegally obtained by means of an unlawful wiretap lies in applying the existing legal sanctions rather than excluding the evidence. That is the balance that best protects the public and individual alike.

The measures contained in Bill C-83 comprise an over-all approach and they are part of a series of changes the government intends to introduce in the criminal justice system. Some commentators have mistakenly suggested that the proposals in the bill violate the spirit of the Law Reform Commission's recommendations. It is true that there are some specific items in the bill which differ from certain specific proposals of the commission, but the basic intent of our proposals is consistent with the commission's analysis of the underlying purpose of our common law. Indeed the latest report of the commission, which deals with this very subject, provides sound philosophical underpinning for that legislation.

Members of the House, particularly those who are also members of the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, may recall the remarks of the former head of the Law Reform Commission, Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt—

Mr. Alexander: An old classmate of mine.

[Mr. Fox.]

Mr. Fox: Then perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) will enjoy reading the remarks of Mr. Justice Patrick Hartt, who pointed out that there is no basic inconsistency between the approach of this bill and the principles the commission has tried to set out for the criminal law.

The influence of the careful studies and reports of the Law Reform Commission will also be apparent when the government brings forward, as it intends, measures to overcome the bottlenecks in the courts system, and measures to overhaul the laws of evidence and the system of sentencing. These are now being readied for presentation. This is a time for action. The public is ready for change. The public is insisting upon an updating of the law so that it more closely and adequately meshes with contemporary Canadian reality. Bill C-83 is an important step toward that goal.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have been looking forward to this debate on Bill C-83, but I have to ask myself right at the outset whether or not this is really a debate. Webster's dictionary says that to debate a subject is to discuss it by considering the opposing arguments, so it could hardly be called debate when the government has already made up its mind what it is going to do about the proposals in this bill.

The irony of this so-called debate is compounded by the government's determination to limit discussion on this extremely important and far-reaching legislation by bringing in closure, thereby disallowing the rights of many members to air their views. As you know, Mr. Speakers, the bill before us complicates the issue even further by dealing with so many different facets of crime, such as wiretap proposals, parole, prison breaks, changes in sentencing provisions, and other matters, some of which may have merit if they were dealt with on an individual basis. Instead we see them pooled together in an obvious effort to hide the inadequacies which exist in some of the individual proposals.

Because of the time restriction I will dwell on the one aspect of this bill that seems to be the prime concern of Canadians from coast to coast, and certainly a big concern of constituents in my riding, and that is the specific subject of the proposed firearms restrictions, registrations, and regulations, more commonly known as gun controls. We have seen clearly that the government is as totally disinterested in the weight of public opposition to the gun registration proposals in this bill as it is to capital punishment and other important issues.

I believe that it would be safe to say that every member of this House, including every member on the government benches, has received a great volume of mail on the subject of gun registration. I believe that it would be equally safe to say that the mail received by every single member has been overwhelmingly against the gun control provisions in this bill as they are written.

An hon. Member: What did you say, Simma?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) has the floor.

An hon. Member: $218 a minute.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the hon. members opposite—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley will please address the Chair.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad hon. members—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member will please address the Chair.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I stated "hon. members opposite" obviously have not been listening to the majority of their constituents. They should remember that they were put here in the House of Commons by a majority of those people, and they should abide by the wishes of their constituents.

An hon. Member: You are here by 200.

Mr. Jelinek: And that's better than losing by one.

To continue my speech, Mr. Speaker, that is not to say that the Canadian people are against gun registration of any kind, or that they are against control of the sale, use and storage of weapons. More than anything else, it means that the Canadian people are completely fed up with the manner in which the government attempts to legislate. In practically every instance when the government tables legislation to deal with a real or imagined problem, it resorts to over-kill. There is no doubt whatever, Mr. Speaker, that the gun control section in this bill is over-kill, pure and simple.

Let me make it clear at the outset that as an individual who is horrified at the continuing increase of crime around us while the government allows known killers to walk our streets only to kill again, I would more than welcome and certainly support any legislation which would attempt to deal with the problems of law and order which we are faced with on a daily basis. Unfortunately, I see no way in which this bill as it now reads will effect a reduction in crime, particularly that part which pertains to gun control.

I was interested in the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), in respect of the government's contention that registered guns will not be used to kill people. I cannot draw any other conclusion from the statements of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) that we can curtail deaths in Canada caused by long guns by the simple expedient of registering the owners of rifles and shotguns. So many analogies have been used to illustrate the fallacy of such an argument that I will not relate them all here. However, I would like to bring to your attention the fact that a high percentage of homocides in this country are committed by handguns, which have been controlled for 50 years.

In all of the cases of long guns referred to by the government supporters of this legislation, every one of the persons involved in the deaths would have qualified for registration certificates for the guns. Yet the government has the gall to include in this hodge podge legislation a type of gun control proposal that is only known to the deteriorating police states around the world. Let us not be so naive as not to realize that if a gangster is determined to commit a crime he will not need to register his firearm but rather obtain it through other devious ways and means which will exist even if these gun control proposals do become law.

Just think of the cost of administrating these controls on law abiding citizens. It will become a bureaucratic nightmare in more ways than one.

It would be ludicrous to suggest that any bureaucrat reviewing applications for gun registration could look into the future and, on the basis of what might happen, reject an application from an otherwise stable and law-abiding citizen. I will suggest to the hon. members of this House, though, that if we place too much authority in the hands of appointed bureaucrats to decide who can or cannot own a gun, it is going to lead almost automatically to abuse and, more than that, it is going to encourage the government, and its appointed bureaucrats, to extend this type of authority into other areas of lawful activity of Canadian citizens.

I would not pretend that I know more about what life is like in a controlled society, Mr. Speaker, but I at least know what it is like from personal experience. I know how easy it is for people in a society to accept the view that what a government is doing to them is for their own good. That is the way it happens. A government that is determined to assume control over a society that has known freedom will always adopt the manner of the great protector. "What we are doing is really for your own good, and it would be in your best interests to accept a certain amount of control in order to obtain long term benefits", it will say. Such governments are always the champions of human rights, civil rights, and all of the other rights that they plan eventually to curtail. That is what I fear the most from the government's assumption of control over our lives, Mr. Speaker.

The government pretends that it is doing all sorts of things for our own good, and I know where it can all lead. I have seen it happen. In view of the millions of people who are still living in the controlled society that I was able to escape from, I have to consider that I am one of the fortunate few. But I believed, as did millions of others, that I was comming to a country that offered a free society, freedom of all the things that communist countries in other parts of the world now control, and in fact that is what Canada has always been, a country exemplifying freedom to the rest of the world.

But what do we have today? We have a government in this country that wants the control over the means of production, over the ecomony, and over all aspects of human activity and endeavor. Like the governments in Eastern Europe its members are self-styled champions of civil liberty, individual freedom, and a wide range of human rights. It does not matter that these two philosophies are in conflit. It is what you can get the public to accept, and not necessarily what is right, that forms the basis of a philosophy that seeks to control people and societies. And that is precisely the type of society that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau is trying to have Canadians accept.

Allow me at this point to read a set of rules obtained by the allied forces after the war from the communist "Rules of Revolution." Hon. members here will know that these rules have been distributed to members and relate indirectly to Bill C-83, and I will get to that.

Before reading the rules let me point out that they have been taking effect around the world, not only just after the war but up to the present time, whether it be in Asia, eastern Europe, the Middle East, Angola, South America and, yes, even North America, whether we want to believe it or not. Quoting from the communist "Rules for Revolution" they are:

A. Corrupt the young; get them away from religion. Get them interested in sex. Make them superficial; destroy their ruggedness.

B. Get control of all means of publicity, thereby:

1. Get people's minds off their government by focusing their attention on athletics, sexy books and plays and other trivialities.

2. Divide the people into hostile groups by constantly harping on controversial matters of no importance.

3. Destroy the other people's faith in their natural leaders by holding the latter up to contempt, ridicule and disgrace.

4. Always preach true democracy, but seize power as fast and ruthlessly as possible.

5. By encouraging government extravagance, destroy its credit produce fear of inflation with rising prices and general discontent.

6. Incite unnecessary strikes in vital industries, encourage civil disorders and foster a lenient and soft attitude on the part of government toward such disorders.

7. By specious argument cause the breakdown of the old moral virtues, honesty, sobriety, self restraint, faith in the pledged word, ruggedness.

Then the final point which is the one that relates directly to this bill:

C. Cause the registration of all firearms on some pretext with a view to confiscating them and leaving the population helpless.

If you reflect on how many of the above points are already in effect in this country you must begin to wonder just how much longer our democratic way of life will continue.

Be that as it may, Mr. Speaker, the real key to what the government is attempting to do is its insistence that gun-related crimes can be controlled or curtailed by forcing law-abiding citizens to register as gun owners. It has been suggested a number of times by some of my colleagues in these debates that the logical next step is to register all owners of baseball bats, kitchen knives, hatchets and axes, and all other instruments and objects that are used to commit violent crimes.

The fact of the matter is as the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) pointed out, that we cannot outlaw the instruments of death any more than we can outlaw death itself. Lethal weapons as such are already controlled as well as they can be controlled by being included as offences in the Criminal Code. Sawed-off rifles and shotguns, automatic weapons, and revolvers are already classed as either restricted or prohibited weapons in the Criminal Code, yet most gun-related crimes in Canada, as in other countries, are committed with restricted or prohibited weapons.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

The logical way to tighten up the law is to tighten the laws that are being abridged by criminals. Adding still more weapons to the restricted classes is not going to prevent or curtail gun-related crime. Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe the Minister of Justice is as naive as this gun-control legislation makes him out to be, so I have to suspect that there is a more sinister motive behind it, one that has nothing whatever to do with controlling crime.

I know as well as any other person in Canada that the government is bankrupt of ideas when it comes to getting violent crime under control, and I know that neither the Minister of Justice nor the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is all that concerned about the problem. How could a minister be concerned about controlling crime when he states publicly, before any legislation is even tabled, that he will not be a party to the execution of a person convicted of a brutal, vicious and deliberate murder? How can we believe that such a minister would follow up and ensure that such a murderer would really be kept in prison for twenty-five years? The answer is simple. We can't.

Allow me to point out that there are many other individuals and groups of individuals who share this view publicly. For example, just last Friday the committee representing the rank and file of the RCMP from across Canada expressed their concern that their boss, the Solicitor General, was "unable to be effective as the federal minister responsible for the force." Is there any wonder? They are talking about the same minister who just a few weeks ago said that Soviet KGB secret agents aren't spies. Perhaps he believes they are butchers, bakers or candlestick makers—or even diplomats.

In any case how can we trust a government to protect society when, for example, convicted rape murderers of children are allowed out of prison on daily and weekend passes, to commit further crimes? How can we trust this government to control convicted criminals when almost every week we see another prison break, or another taking of hostages by hardened prisoners? The obvious answer, again, is that we simply can't. We can only trust the government to chip away at the rights and freedoms of the law-abiding citizens.

The Minister of Justice insists that capital punishment is not a deterrent to violent crime, and says that the answer is to impose longer prison terms for certain types of murder. I'm glad that the minister can at least distinguish between the various types of murder. No doubt when this legislation is railroaded through the House we will have two more types of murder—murders committed with registered guns, and murders committed with unregistered guns.

The plain fact is that the minister does not know whether or not the threat of execution would be a deterrent to certain types of premeditated murder. We don't have any data on which to base such an assumption for the simple reason that the cabinet in the past ten years has commuted every death sentence imposed by our courts, therefore breaking the very laws which it passed. Parliament compromised on the contentious issue of capital punishment and voted to impose the death sentence for conviction of the murder of a policeman or prison guard. While we don't have any data on the deterrent effect of the death penalty we do have records that show that some of those murderers whose sentences have been commuted by the Liberal cabinet have gone on to commit further crimes, including murders.

I am afraid that we are going to find ourselves in the same position that the people of California, and other states, now find themselves in as a result of the U.S. Supreme court decision banning capital punishment. That infamous murdering animal, Charles Manson, who had his death sentence commuted to life imprisonment after being convicted in 1969 for seven senseless murders, will be eligible for parole in 1978, just two years from now. Just think of it?

It is a mockery of justice and a sad commentary on any society to allow such a situation to exist. It is not a situation that exists only in the United States or in other countries remote from us. We have our own Charles Mansons, whether we want to accept that fact or not, and I do not want to turn such people out on leave, parole or full release, to prey again and again on innocent people, until at least they are cornered, and either shot down by the police or returned to a jail cell for a few more years. Unless we are prepared at least to put the death penalty to the test, and find out once and for all if it will deter violent and senseless murders, then we are not doing all we can do, and all we should do, to protect the innocent and law-abiding.

The Minister of Justice said a few days ago that this gun registration legislation will keep guns out of the hands of the irresponsible. What complete and utter nonsense! The irresonsible in society acquire guns in the same irresponsible way that they do everything else. The minister is insulting our intelligence when he suggests we can control the actions of the lawless by imposing new restrictions on the actions of the law-abiding people of Canada.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that people are not against some control over the sale, storage or use of firearms. No sensible person would agree that firearms should be immediately available to all sorts of people, in stores, by mail order, or by simply picking up a rifle or shotgun that is left lying around by its owner. I repeat that the Minister of Justice is resorting to overkill, instead of studying the matter thoroughly and sensibly.

The minister should be attacking the weak points in our gun laws, not the strong points. Gun clubs and other organizations concerned with the safe and responsible handling of guns are not the weak points in the gun question. These are the groups who would be in the strongest position with respect to limiting the irresponsible distribution, storage and use of firearms. These are the people who have pioneered the safe use of firearms, and who have carried the burden of education and instruction in the safe use of firearms. It is these people who have brought pressure to bear on the provinces, in the absence of any federal programs, to introduce gun safety courses.

In Ontario, for example, we have an excellent program of gun safety and hunter safety. No person in Ontario can buy a hunting license without first completing a hunter safety course and passing both a written and practical examination. The graduate receives a certificate which is presented to the agency selling hunting licences. It is a serious offence for anyone to sell a hunting licence without verifying that the buyer has such a certificate.

However, the problem here, is that the Minister of Justice simply doesn't seem to be able to come up with any concrete proposals for dealing with violent crime. His sympathies seem to be more with the rights and dignities of those convicted of crimes, and so his tendency is to vent his frustration on the innocent victims of crime and the law-abiding citizens of Canada. He can't bring himself to the point of allowing the state to take the life of a convicted murderer, and he can't seem to find any way of deterring those who follow a deliberate and calculated life of crime, especially those who use guns in the commission of crimes. And so, Mr. Speaker, the minister has decided to kill all the chickens in order to foil the fox. Of course this is a cop-out, but that is not new or unique to this government. It is a form of deceit, something at which the government is adept.

The minister says gun registration as proposed in this legislation is not intended to be confiscation. He says that in place of the death penalty we will impose longer, mandatory prison sentences. He promises a lot of things, Mr. Speaker, but we just cannot believe him. I think back on the multi-million-dollar campaign waged by the Prime Minister in 1974 against the wage and income control program advocated by the former leader of the opposition. The Prime Minister convinced the people of Canada that such a program would not work. And after his government was returned to majority power he imposed the present wage and price control program on the country, a program which had already been worked out in principle at the very time he was attacking our own program.

I cannot accept this bill on any count, Mr. Speaker, neither the gun control proposals, the wiretap proposals, the changes in sentencing provisions in the Criminal Code, the changes with respect to dangerous offenders, parole, nor the proposals for dealing with prison breaks. My objections have already been very ably defined in the remarks of my Conservative colleagues during this limited so-called debate. The fact remains that the government continues to shy away from including any specific details of law in any of the bills it has tabled in recent years.

I am suspicious of any open-ended legislation where the details are filled in after the bill has been passed by parliament. We should be voting on specific details rather than broad principles, and in the case of gun registration in particular I want to know what sort of bureaucracy the government plans to install to administer the law. I want to know exactly what regulations and conditions a person will have to contend with when he or she enters a registration office to apply for a gun registration certificate. It is not unreasonable for members of this House to want to know what they are voting for or against.

That is the reason why all these very important crime issues cannot and must not be pooled in a single misleading piece of legislation such as the one before us. It is easy to see that this devious Liberal government is continuing to try to fool the public. In this case it is most obviously trying to soften the people of Canada into believing that making this bill law, capital punishment will no longer be necessary. I think that the government has been fooling the people of Canada long enough, and I sincerely hope and believe that the public will not fall for it again.

It appears at this point in time that our only hope for getting this bill sorted out, and getting some details filled in, will be at committee stage. That is why, if I vote for this bill at second reading, I will be only doing so with the hope of having the necessary changes proposed during the last few days made during the committee stage. If the Liberal members will not compromise, then there will be no way that I, as a representative of my constituents in High Park-Humber Valley, can vote for this phony bill, as it now stands, at third and final reading. I can only hope that some of the members on the other side of the House will take the opportunity of the proposals made in committee to do what they themselves surely know must be done. This bill as it is written will be as bad for their constituents as for mine, and so if they have any interest at all in seeing that good legislation is salvaged from a bad bill, then I have faith that we will correct the obvious inequities and iniquities in Bill C-83 at that time.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) on a point of order?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: You are wasting time.

An. hon. Member: He wants to ask a question. It is not a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I only want to ask the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) for clarification. Did I misunderstand him that he believes the two bills are together? He called it a package deal a while ago, Bill C-83 and Bill C-84.

An hon. Member: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I will clarify the point very quickly. I never referred to Bill C-84. I was talking about the different subjects in Bill C-83 such as wiretapping, gun control, etc.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I listened attentively as the previous speaker, the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), read out was has been coming in the mail to all members of parliament, this so called document on the "Communist Rules for Revolution."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You know all about that.

Mr. Rodriguez: I thought it was more like the capitalist rules for revolution. Let me clarify. The first thing they do, according to those rules, is to:

Corrupt the young, get them away from religion. Get them interested in sex. Make them superficial; destroy their ruggedness.

I know many liquor companies in this country which became rich by pushing booze on young people. It is the Ontario Tory government which lowered the drinking age to 18, and it is its minister, Mr. Sidney Handleman, who got all the contributions from the liquor companies.

[Mr. Jelinek.]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are out of order.

Mr. Alexander: I thought we were debating Bill C-83. The hon. member has been speaking now for three minutes and I sincerely hope he will get back to the bill as soon as possible because we always want to hear words of wisdom in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has the floor. I suggest he revert to the terms of Bill C-83.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can see that it hurts them because they are always great ones to repeat this garbage, which in itself has nothing to do with Bill C-83.

The hon. member read the document into the record and I thought we should remind him that it is indeed capitalism that has been responsible for all these kinds of ills which he has read out as being so called revolutionary.

The government has presented Bill C-83 for parliament's consideration and decision. This piece of legislation comes under the general heading of peace and security. When we start thinking about peace and security we tend to think of widening police authority, prohibiting certain acts or instruments, and toughening penalties.

Our children and, I suppose, we as adults get a lot of romantic ideas from American television programs such as police shows, where in every case we see the police making an arrest we see them warning the arrested person of his right to remain silent and if he should say anything it could be used later on in prosecuting him. We do not have that right in Canada. As a matter of fact I know that our police force has indeed very wide powers, much wider than in the country to the south of us. So if we get a romantic view from television and think that Canadians also have these rights which we see on U.S. television, then we should be informed that such is not the case.

Not so long ago I had occasion to write to the Attorney General of the province of Ontario about the case of a young man who was arrested in a hotel in Sudbury and taken to the local jail. What was his offence? He was suspected of smoking grass in the hotel. He demanded to make one phone call to his lawyer, which he thought he had the right to do, but the police promptly booted him to the jail and told him he had no such right and he would stay in jail until they should decide what they would do with him.

The widening of police powers is one of the things that concerns many people in this country. In the bill before us the government seems intent on impressing on the Canadian people that it is the last buffer of security against a rising tide of crime and violence. Therein lies my first criticism of Bill C-83. It includes six particular items, from entirely new legislation governing the ownership of long guns, to amending present legislation covering habitual offenders and dangerous sexual offenders, electronic surveillance, special crime inquiries and custody and release of inmates.

Of all the items in Bill C-83 gun control has attracted by far the greatest attention, and in some parts of the country more than others. In my riding of Nickel Belt, which is predominantly rural and working class, there is great concern about certain provisions, which concern has resulted in about 180 pieces of mail daily, plus a 6,000 signature petition. I understand the basic resentment of the people in my area against certain provisions of the bill. They see it basically as legislation aimed at large urban centres like Toronto, Montreal or Ottawa, where a firearm is not looked on in the same manner as in rural areas. Indeed many of the folk in my area say that this legislation is for those urban crazies who do not know about or have any respect for firearms and who want to shoot each other. They feel they are being put through this bureaucracy for the sake of protecting urban dwellers from each other.

In Nickel Belt most of the workers are employed in mines or smelters, and when work is finished, or on week ends, hunting and fishing are indispensable forms of relaxation. Many of the workers have hunt camps or cottages and spend time in the summer and fall hunting and fishing.

They are also concerned about the cost of any kind of licensing program. One constituent pointed out to me that he now pays $15 for a moose licence, $5 for a licence for hunting migratory birds, and $10 for a deer licence, and after those costs there is also the cost of a hunting licence. Now there is a proposed gun licence fee which is as yet undetermined. My constituents see this additional cost a further proof that eventually hunting will be reserved for the rich.

My constituents have also expressed concern about the engulfing red tape of bureaucracy. By nature, rural folk seem to be much more resentful about encroaching bureaucracy than urban folk, probably because they are much more self reliant. In particular, they are set against the proposal to have two guarantors testifying as to the character of a prospective gun owner.

Concern has been expressed about the provision of search and seizure without warrant. In particular, if no charge has been laid, the firearm owner ought to be able to claim his property unless the licensing action is in progress or some charge has been laid.

Another question raised by my constituents deals with reimbursement. If, during the initial three year licensing period, a person is not issued a licence to own a firearm and the registrar issues an order to take his property, will that person be reimbursed? That is very important to the people in my constituency. I have met with members of rod and gun clubs and other interested citizens and listened to their opinions, and expressed mine, in the hope that this legislation can be as effective as possible.

I support the principle of gun control. Indeed the bill does not go far enough with respect to tightening gun control. I have said this to rod and gun clubs and those interested in my constituency, and there are large numbers of them.

Mr. Darling: What did they say?

Mr. Rodriguez: They said they would turn me out.

Mr. Darling: Exactly.

Mr. Rodriguez: But I must always be fair and honest with the people I represent, and I cannot say things I think they want me to say so that I can win their votes. I seems to me that being here is a responsibility. I must look at the evidence and make the decision which is in the best interests of Canada as a whole rather than in my own narrow interest, or in the interest of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) of getting re-elected. I suppose we could all become very popular in this House if we were to be for capital punishment and against gun control, but that is not the purpose of being in rd slowing the escalating rate of deaths involving firearms in domestic and non-domestic situations, as well as in accidental deaths. I say that because I notice that in 1974, under the heading criminal acts, 68.4 per cent of firearms murders involved handguns, which are presently strictly controlled in Canada, so I do not think this legislation will control criminals, no matter how we control long gun owners. No matter how strictly we control them, firearms will still be used in the commission of criminal acts in society.

However, the area in which I think this legislation will make some difference is in the inter-familial relationship or with regard to the person who is mentally unbalanced, either long range or temporarily, the person who is a violent alcoholic or who has had a criminal record, who is out on probation or who is out on bail awaiting trial. I think these classes of people ought not to be permitted to have the responsibility of bearing a firearm, and that is where I see this legislation being effective. I have taken that position in my constituency. It is not a very popular position, but in conscience I could take no other. I reject the argument put forward by hon. members in this House, and also by people at large, that it is a right to have a firearm. I must confess that I know of no such right.

I think this matter has less to do with rights and more to do with maturity. It seems to me that it is a privilege to own a firearm, and it is certainly the responsibility of the state to determine who can legally bear firearms and under what conditions. The same attitude should prevail with regard to drivers' licences. It is not a right of a citizen to have a driver's licence, it is a responsibility, and I think too often in the past we have been stressing our rights more than we have been stressing our responsibilities. This is an area in which we have been far too lax in the past.

Mr. Epp: Hear, hear! I finally agree with you.

Mr. Rodriguez: At the moment there is nothing to prevent a person who has been treated as a serious mental patient, and who is possibly dangerous to himself or others around him, from going to the closest army surplus store and purchasing a firearm or, for that matter, to prevent someone who has been convicted of a violent crime from blithely walking down to his friendly Canadian Tire Store and picking out his favourite firearm. If he is not happy with that he could purchase a periodical which is called the Calgary Gunrunner. In it he could find anything from a bazooka to an M.2 rifle. Any serious hunter I know from Nickel Belt knows you do not take an M.2 semi automatic rifle or a bazooka into the bush to hunt, but you can buy it all, and it is listed there. If you are so interested, there is nothing like an auction, and the Natural Resources Department of the province of Ontario sells rifles. There is nothing like an auction.

This is the kind of laissez-faire attitude in society which leads to a breakdown of a sense of responsibility, and somehow people are getting the idea that they have a right to own a firearm. Stores have no legal basis for refusing to sell firearms. I know that the Criminal Code places the onus on certain persons not to purchase firearms, but there is no onus on stores not to sell firearms to such people. At the moment there is no system whereby stores keep records of ammunition or firearms sold to individuals.

It was mentioned previously that there are approximately 10 million firearms now in the hands of Canadians. There is one firearm for every two Canadians, there is an annual increase of about 420,000 firearms, and no one knows where they are scattered. They are out there somewhere, and coupled with the fact there are no controls with respect to who sells and who buys, and no required competency test, the whole thing becomes a jungle which is quickly breaking down, and it will come down on our heads sooner or later. The time to take some action is now.

When there were such unfortunate and tragic incidents as those in Brampton and in Ottawa, my office received letters from southern Ontario and from everywhere else asking why we parliamentarians were not doing something about tightening up gun control. It seemed that everything died down three or four weeks after that. Now we are getting the other backlash that people do not want controls.

It is easy to see in respect of this kind of situation, this easy access to firearms, that we are playing Russian roulette, with innocent people at the end of the barrel. This concerns me as a parliamentarian and as someone who must look at this bill and make a decision on it. Unfortunately the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) are not in the House this evening. However, I want to say to them that the gun control section must be further tightened.

I, and many of my constituents, believe that the guarantor provision should be dropped because it will not be effective. This provision is not the same as that in respect of the guarantor of a passport. A guarantor of a passport is one who, for example, certifies that he has known the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) for two years and can state that the picture submitted is a reasonable facsimile of him. That is not the same as the provision in this bill. We are not asking for identification. We are asking the guarantor, under the provision in this bill, to make an assessment of the character of the applicant and to state whether or not he is a person of character who could be entrusted with a firearm. It seems to me that is entirely different.

Even in rural communities where everyone knows everyone else there would be a difficulty in getting someone to be a guarantor for a person to be permitted to obtain a licence. It seems to me that in an urban situation, such as Toronto, no one ever gets to know anyone else. Therefore I do not see how one could find two guarantors who would be prepared to say that one is a person of such a character that one should be permitted to be licenced.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

For instance, the guarantor may be a school principal. This missed the whole point. Today the schools are very large composite schools. The principal never knows who the students are. It is the guidance cousellor who deals with the pupils. The principal is an administrator who, in an urban area, could never testify concerning the character of his students. It seems to me there is another arguments which we should keep in mind which I believe is valid in this connection. I refer to the argument that this will become an elitist thing. It seems to me that certain classes will be certifying certain other classes. The elitist class will be classified as the lawyer, the judge, the school principal, and so on.

An hon. Member: And a teacher.

Mr. Rodriguez: No; a school principal. It seems to me that this involves a certain class distinction. It provides, apart from that elitism, as I have said, no real safeguards. I and many of my constituents think that we should be moving to drop that provision in respect of a guarantor, and instead have the registrar of firearms as the official who would make the decision in every case on the basis of the facts so far as he is aware of them. For example, psychiatric hospitals which are treating dangerously mentally deficient persons and who are moving back and forth from the community to the hospital would pass this information on to the registrar. This information now is passed to the local police force but it could just as easily be passed to the registrar. He could also be furnished information concerning any persons who are out on parole, or who are out on bail, or who have been convicted of a crime in the past.

If these names were passed on to the registrar then, if such a person should apply for a licence, the registrar would institute a check and make a decision on the basis of the facts available to him. In addition I think it is very important that the competency test be included at this stage before any licence is issued. In other words, the person applying must conform not only to the requirement of not having a record which would prohibit his obtaining a licence but he should also provide a competency certificate, and on that basis he will or will not be given a licence. That competency certificate would indicate that he or she had successfully completed a course in gun handling. It seems to me that is a role gun clubs could play in teaching people the proper way to handle and the best way to care for and store a firearm.

I also believe that the registering of guns should be under the aegis of the government rather than contracted out to the private sector. This would avoid the all too prevalent pork-barreling which we see flourishing all too easily in this country these days. With regard to the licensing, I feel it ought not to exceed $5 for at least the first five year licensing period. At the end of the first five year period the situation could be reviewed. I feel also that in the matter of search and seizure of a firearm without warrant the citizen ought to get his firearm back unless a charge is laid under the Criminal Code, or unless for some reason his licence is being revoked.

In respect of the initial licensing period, if an individual cannot be licensed and the registrar causes his firearm to be confiscated then that person should be reimbursed for his property. I would urge that the gun control section of Bill C-83 be amended along the lines I have noted.

However, there is a part of Bill C-83 which causes me great apprehension. I refer to the wiretapping provisions. During the minority parliament of 1972-74 parliament passed a bill which set up wiretap provisions. Now we have the spectacle of the government in a majority position wanting to put back into the wiretap legislation provisions which parliament had previously rejected. A speaker on the government side of the House argued that it is necessary to have electronic surveillance because that is how we could get at the top people—the dons of the mafiosi. I do not think he realizes that the top mafiosi today do not use the telephone. They are much smarter and wiser in that particular area. So I do not think any people of this type will be trapped in that way.

Mr. Nystrom: They use the Liberal committee rooms.

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, I have known them to be used for other things. This particular part of Bill C83 dealing with electronic surveillance to me is most regressive. It seems to me that the state has not made its case for additional powers under the wiretap legislation of Canada. Indeed it gives more arbitrary power to the police without a corresponding protection for the individual citizens' privacy.

I have no experience in this matter so I must believe what other persons with experience and some expertise have said. Ramsey Clark, former United States attorney general and one with considerable experience, made the following points about such surveillance:

a. wiretapping was not used between 1966 and 1969 yet indictments against members of organized crime tripled; he concluded that wiretapping is a wasteful and inefficient means of investigation and is not, moreover, effective against organized crime;

b. wiretapping destroys the professionalism of investigators; electronic surveillance encourages not investigation, but just sitting waiting for something to happen;

c. it is enormously expensive—for example, the use of laser beams which can pierce walls up to 12 feet thick;

d. such all-encompassing eavesdropping evades human dignity—e.g. the listening in on the sexual activities of Martin Luther King and the subsequent use of this information to smear King's reputation.

On the face of it it would seem to me that these amendments, with respect to electronic surveillance, give the police a licence to invade the privacy of any or all citizens without any authorization. Who will prosecute the police?

The present law at least provides defence counsel with an opportunity to determine whether unlawful surveillance did take place. The requirement for notification to be given to the person who has undergone electronic surveillance at least provides citizens with protection against an over-zealous police force. The government argues this requirement has seriously inhibited electronic surveillance, because notification alerts the potential offender before the investigation can be completed. The example the government gives is that "such investigations can be of a long-term nature and sometimes unproductive periods of some length occur where, for example, the subject is out of the country". The government should be required to provide statistics. How often has this happened? The proposed amendment increases the potential period of surveillance from 60 days to 120 days. But as the government itself argues, 60 days is usually enough.

In 1975, under section 178.12 of the Criminal Code, 555 authorizations were granted, and 449 renewals were approved. Apparently only two renewals were refused. Considering the track record, it is difficult to see why section 178.23(2b) does not provide the police with enough leeway to complete investigations. Coupled with proposed authorization periods, this proposal gives them a minimum surveillance period of 210 days. The government should tell us how many requests under section 178.23(2b) have been made and how many refused, and also how many convictions resulted from electronic surveillance.

According to the government another difficulty concerning notification requirement is this: it has inhibited the investigation of organized crime. Actually fault did not lie with the notification requirement; it lay with the types of offences for which authorizations can be granted. For instance, the present law dictates that authorization for interception may only be granted in respect of certain, specific indictable offences and any indictable offence involving organized crime. I call on the Minister of Justice to revoke that particular section as, potentially, it offers no greater security to Canadians than the present law does; on the contrary, it could undermine confidence in the state.

Let me say a word about crime inquiries as provided for in the bill. I do not disagree with this provision, but merely raise one point. I want to see the innocent protected. Sometimes, when inquiries are in high gear, the innocent are dragged in. Too often, in the mind of the public the innocent are judged as guilty merely because they are involved in the investigation. It seems to me that the minister should draft provisions to ensure that such inquiries do not become witch hunts but, rather, protect the integrity of the innocent.

Let me now say a word about the dangerous offender section. I suggest that, at the time of review of the indeterminate sentence by the National Parole Board, the board should be expanded with the addition of two persons who should come from the community into which the offender says he wants to be released. In relation to the section dealing with custody and release of inmates, there is nothing there that I disagree with, in principle.

In summary, I cannot support the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). He wants to send the subject matter of the bill to committee because he knows that by so doing he would kill the bill. I want the bill to go to committee, witnesses to appear and, hopefully, constructive amendments to be moved. Hence I support the bill in principle and will exercise my prerogative on third reading, when I shall see the bill after it has been through the committee stage, and after I have once again consulted concerned groups in my riding.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, as we near the end of debate of second reading I wish to comment on areas of the bill which I hope will receive careful examination and possibly be amended in committee. This debate takes place at a time when people are concerned about the rise in crimes of violence and want protection. It is important to make sure that the measures we adopt are effective, realistic, and afford that protection. But it is also important not to put in place measures so repressive as to be antithetical to rehabilitation.

Let me speak on wiretapping. I sympathize with the police viewpoint, with their contention that they need additional powers to deal with organized crime. From my own experience in corrections, I would say that the majority of people incarcerated are socially incompetent minor criminals, while the so-called "master criminal" often goes free. I do not wish to see the police restricted in their very necessary investigative work, especially if they are to reverse this trend. However, I am concerned about electronic surveillance, even when done with a judge's warrant. I think wiretapping represents an intrusion into people's lives which should be monitored very carefully. Representing, as I do, an ethnic riding where people are sometimes handicapped by lack of knowledge of English, where dissimilar names often seem similar by reason of unfamiliarity, and where mistakes in identity are made, I am concerned about the possible complications in the life of an innocent person which could result from a police file being built up about him or her.

The present requirement that people be notified after a certain period if police surveillance does not lead to a charge is, I think, a doubtful safeguard. I can understand the view of the police, that it limits their investigation of criminals and may in fact serve as a warning to a wide criminal network to go underground temporarily. But from the viewpoint of the innocent person I think such notification after the event can cause much anxiety and distress and will not necessarily result in corrective action, namely, the destruction of the file. I therefore suggest that either the regulations or an amendment to this bill—and I prefer the latter—should stipulate that in the event of an investigation not leading to a criminal charge after a certain period, all records of the wiretapping should be destroyed. There ought to be a verification procedure, to show that the records have been destroyed.

Let me now talk about the dangerous offender. Bill C-83 contains "dangerous offender" provisions to replace the "habitual criminal" and "dangerous sexual offender" categories. This is in line with the Ouimet committee recommendations of 1969, and with similar recommendations of the Canadian Mental Health Association committee on legislation and psychiatric disorders brought forward in the same year. The "dangerous sexual offender" category has been badly used. Sometimes the result has been excessively long imprisonment for people whose patterns of behaviour, although socially and morally objectionable, were not dangerous.

It is important not to confuse sexual behaviour with aggressive behaviour. Exhibitionists and other sexual nuisances are sometimes seen as being launched on a progressive route to rape; but figures obtained both in the United States and Canada show that convicted rapists are much more likely to have previous convictions for violent offences like assault or break and enter than for exhibitionism, voyeurism, and so on. It is important to protect the community from dangerous offenders, but that will not be done by locking up the socially and sexually incompetent.

● (2130)

Methods of prediction of dangerousness have been improved and refined considerably in recent years, but the definition of "serious personal injury" in this bill merits very careful examination if indeed it is to encompass the truly dangerous.

Turning to the Parole Act, I am pleased to see the proposal to add to the parole board representatives of the community to which an inmate is returning, in some cases. This first-hand knowledge of local conditions and feeling, and the supports or stresses the parolee will encounter should improve the decision making.

I have some concern however, about the parole board assuming responsibility for granting all absences from institutions. It is true that unwise decisions on unescorted absences have been made by some institutional staff, but there is no guarantee that the parole board will make better decisions.

In a well-run institution, correctional staff should consider it part of their professional responsibility to know prisoners as individuals, to know whatever potential an individual prisoner has for constructive, socially useful behaviour, and to support acceptable goals in positive ways. In this context arranging temporary absence for useful purposes can be an important rehabilitative tool.

If correctional staff are not using it wisely, they should be assisted to develop their judgment and prediction skills. However, to take away from them the decision making and, therefore, the responsibility to think about the factors that enter into decisions is to risk a static custodial program without much dynamism or interest in change.

I note that there is provision for the National Parole Board to delegate the authority to grant temporary absence without escort, and I hope this will be used where appropriate. Bill C-83 suggests that the decision to delegate will be made on the basis of some inmate criteria. The wording is "an inmate or class of inmate". It will undoubtedly be useful to develop criteria of this kind, but the competence and skills of staff enter into this too and they tend to vary from one institution to another, depending on the leadership and quality of staff development.

With regard to remission, I am pleased to see statutory remission abolished as I think it was meaningless and confusing. However, to ensure that earned remission really is earned, that it provides positive incentives for inmates to involve themselves in constructive work or study, it will be important to ensure that there is a clear and well developed evaluation system so that the remission is not credited in an automatic way.

If remission is earned and well earned, I think it should be forfeited only in very grave circumstances. I would, therefore, like to see an amendment to the proposal in the bill which provides for forfeiture for "any disciplinary offence". If staff and inmates know that remission, once earned, will be forfeited only for grave reason, which could be defined, there is more likelihood that the inmate will try to earn it and that staff will award it carefully.

This bill essentially deals with violent crime and the prevention of it. It is urgent that public confidence be restored since people have been disquieted by the rise of violent crime. With gun controls in place and with public confidence restored by the passage of this bill as amended, I trust, it will then be important to direct our attention to the prevention of crime. I think one needs to look at this in four steps.

Obviously everything we do in the way of social legislation—housing, income maintenance, family law, education and child welfare—is prevention of crime in the broadest sense. It is no accident that the inhabitants of our training schools, reformatories, and eventually penitentiaries, overwhelmingly come from disadvantaged families.

The second layer of prevention of crime comes in adequate policing. Here I refer not only to the community officer who can do a great deal to defuse situations where the ordinary law-abiding citizen might find himself in difficulty and who does a great deal of preventive work with youth, but also the visible uniformed policemen whose presence has been shown to cut down on certain kinds of crime, notably break and entry.

Third, I hope that we will soon be debating some of the important recommendations of the Law Reform Commission, particularly on sentencing. We have too many ineffectual relatively minor offenders in jails who would be better in community programs, leaving the prisons for the dangerous offender who needs to be out of circulation for a certain time. Measures to keep the offender in the community also provide opportunities to encourage accountability. The offender who is obliged to make reparation and remains in the community to make reparation is perhaps faced each day with the realization of what he or she has done in a way that the inmate in a prison is not.

There are many of the recommendations of the Law Reform Commission for innovative sentencing which could be implemented under present legislation. One must hope that attitudes of judges will change so that there is more interest in sentencing in ways that benefit the community and that reserve prison sentences for those where it really is essential.

For those who do get to institutions, it is important that there be a spectrum of institutions, from the community residence or hostel type right through to maximum security. The provisions in this bill for provincial-federal agreements are, I hope, the beginning of an attempt to use the facilities more wisely and more constructively.

Very often in a province such as Ontario you have three, four or five layers of institutions being run under provincial auspices, and the same under federal auspices. More sensible combined use would make it easier to get an individualized program for a person at a particular stage of his or her existence, and allow maximum security to be used not only as a holding place, bus as a place in which a person could be assisted to acquire greater control and move gradually on to a program more suited to whatever improvement he or she was showing.

Finally, I am pleased to see in this bill one amendment to the Prisons and Reformatories Act. I hope it is the beginning of many because the Prisons and Reformatories Act is a very outdated piece of legislation which badly needs many other improvements.

• (2140)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my contribution by paying tribute to the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) who gave us a very lucid and well thought out presentation on the subject, giving credit where credit was due, but pointing out the weaknesses in the bill.

I have often thought as I surveyed this measure that it was sponsored by the wrong minister when it was sponsored by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford). Maybe it should have been sponsored by the Minister of Immigration, who is also responsible for Manpower (Mr. Andras); it coud have come under the job creation program since obviously it will require a great deal of manpower to administer.

I have in my hands a publication, dated March 9, which was sent to me and, I suppose, to all members, by the B.C. Wildlife Federation. In this document the executive of the federation says the Treasury Board has already approved 900 new positions just to start this program. Based on the fact that the government has just indicated there will be registrars or licence issuers established throughout Canada for the public's convenience, the federation estimates that the program will require in the order of between 10,000 and 15,000 new civil servants, meaning a bill in the area of between $200 and $300 million. To add a final touch to this picture, the government has already indicated that the licence holders will pay for the entire cost of the program. On the basis of the issuance of three million licences for gun-owners in Canada, the annual licence fee could conceivably be in the area of $100 a year. This is staggering in itself. It amazes me, though, that this bill should be called "peace and security legislation".

I realize, of course, that the people of Canada want security, but I am reminded of an old adage, "The people are asking for bread and are being given a stone." Everyone is in favour of peace; everyone is in favour of security. And the people who are hungry for it most will be those most disappointed by the legislation. If this legislation were intended to produce peace and security one would think it would focus on those who violate peace and security the most, and while the bill does give some credible attention to that aspect it is nevertheless true that the people who will be affected most are those who are already respectful of law and order. The part dealing with firearms affects hundred of thousands of people who already peace loving, while the sections dealing with criminals are in a very small minority.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we have had some discussion among party representatives and I think there is a general disposition in the House for you not to see the clock until ten o'clock, perhaps allowing the hon. member who has the floor to finish his speech. We could then proceed with the procedural question.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We could do that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may complete his remarks.

Mr. Friesen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To support the point I am making I should like to quote an hon. member who is the chairman of the justice committee, the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), who pointed out that only three paragraphs are directed to crime prevention while the rest are "an inefficient tool to fight crime". That is a member on the government side speaking, and he is the chairman of the committee. I certainly support the proposal put forward by my hon. friend from Calgary North that the bill be split up into separate parts.

I might draw it to the attention of the House that the section on the crime commission is already anachronistic since the decision of the Supreme Court validating the operation of the crime commission in Quebec. Thus it would appear that some of the legislation is already out of date. I might add that this Supreme Court decision accepting the point that we are in a field of provincial jurisdiction would indicate that much of the bill before us ought possibly be referred to the Supreme Court for a decision as to its constitutionality.

It would seem to be a cardinal principle to follow that if we want good legislation we ought to consider the people who are affected most by it, as well as those who are knowledgeable regarding the subject. It came as a great surprise to me that the Department of the Solicitor General, while it did contact members of the public at large, notably members of the B.C. Wildlife Federation, did so well into the program, at which point the department did not even know that already in British Columbia there is a licensing program in existence which makes training and competence mandatory. When the officials of the federation offered their counsel and help, the offer was apparently turned down. I guess by this time it can be taken for granted that the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) would turn down that kind of competent advice. This is why we so often find duplication in government services across Canada. The provinces already have a good program in operation and now the federal government wants to duplicate it.

It seems to me there are several important principles of law which ought to be followed in this legislation. The first is that the very existence of a law ought to act as a deterrent to wrongdoing. This is why speed limit signs are posted. It is not enough that the law be there; it has to be obvious, it has to be made evident so that the public knows where it's at. These gun control provisions are a deterrent only to those who already have a solid core of good will. For those who are bent on doing evil the existence of a law such as this will not be any deterrent at all. Therefore there has to be a deterrent in addition to the law, punishment for violating the law.

Second, the law, to operate properly, ought to encourage responsibility for behaviour. The hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) just pointed this out and I think she is entirely correct. One of the failures of our society is this: we have not taught people to accept responsibility for their behaviour. In most cases when young people are brought before the courts, the judge simply turns them over to their parents or to another agency, slaps their wrists and says, "If you are good in future, everything will be all right." There is no thought of restitution, or at least, not often enough. Our people are not growing up with a sense of the need to be accountable for their behaviour.

One of the functions of law ought to be to make us responsible for what we do but, sad to say, much of the bail practice, much of the parole system, focuses not on being responsible but on finding ways of getting out of having to be responsible. I hate to say it, but some of my good friends in this Chamber who are lawyers have focused not on getting justice for their clients but on helping their clients to get off. That leads to a total miscarriage of justice. The focus ought to be upon providing justice for society; and the law should make us responsible for our behaviour.

Third, the law ought to be enforced uniformly. There ought to be equity in the disposition of the law. The problem I find with Bill C-83 is that it will be impossible to enforce the bill uniformly. For example, I have in my riding a competitive marksman who travels across Canada to compete. He has in his arsenal of handguns seven very finely tooled pistols. Under this legislation he cannot even travel across Canada to compete any more because he would violate the law.

It is easy to say that he can do it under the Olympic regulations, Mr. Speaker, but the Olympic regulations allow only two classifications, and this gun owner is an expert in seven. That is point No. 1. The second point is that if he is going to travel across Canada to compete he has to carry spare parts with him. This might be another pin, a clip—anything he needs in case one of his handguns breaks down. Under this legislation he would have to have another licence to carry those extra parts. It is impossible under this legislation to be equitable to all people.

Another class affected by the legislation is the antique dealer. In my riding there is a collector who has a mobile museum of guns. People come and see his museum all the time, and he travels around with it to show people. What is this man to do under the legislation? Various suggestions have been made in the House about making these guns inoperative by doing a little welding on them or disfiguring them in some way. But as soon as he makes his guns inoperative, their value as antiques is diminished. These guns are, in a sense, his life savings, his investment.

As other hon. members in this House have said, the gun legislation before us tends to make law breakers out of honest citizens. The people who are law abiding will conform with it. Those who do not have this hard core of good will in them will violate the law without compunction. The law abiding citizen will be hassled and harassed; the other person will not.

Then there are the violent in society, those who believe in violence and who live by violence. I have watched them operate. I have been on the streets where they have operated. Violence is a way of life to them. They believe that the establishment is wrong, that the establishment is corrupt, that it is a case of being more upright and moral by trying to overthrow the establishment than by being part of the establishment. It almost becomes a point of righteousness to help destroy the establishment with this kind of perverted morality.

What are we going to do about these people, Mr. Speaker? Are we going to give those with a distorted sense of morality the opportunity to escape the full force of this legislation? Are we going to take away the rights of the large mass of people who are already law-abiding and not deal with the violent in our society? As I have said, it is impossible to have uniform enforcement of this legislation.

Let me give the House an example. If you do not store your weapons properly, Mr. Speaker, you can be liable for up to five years' imprisonment for careless storage. But a person who steals a weapon that has been carelessly stored could get away with only one year if he commits a crime with it. Usually a person does not steal a weapon if he does not plan to commit a crime. Where is the sense of justice with this kind of distortion? With all deference to the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), we are dealing here with an exchange package between Bill C-83 and Bill C-84, this package that was mailed to our offices. The government has openly said that we are dealing with an exchange between capital punishment and peace and security.

Under Bill C-84 the maximum penalty is 25 years, which means a convict can vegetate. At the same time a rapist could get a maximum of 20 years. Why should anyone who has just committed the crime of rape, and who is liable for a maximum of 20 years, run the risk of leaving a witness lying around, for an extra five years?

An hon. Member: He would be eligible for parole.

Mr. Friesen: Eligibility for parole is another controversial aspect in this legislation. My lawyer friend over on the other side has been getting people off on parole. The legislation also focuses on minimum penalties rather than maximum penalties. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has already introduced a bill providing for a maximum penalty of five years for crimes involving use of weapons or firearms, and this seems to me the approach that we should take. But the government has consistently been moving toward minimum sentences or as short sentences as possible in this legislation instead of maximum sentences. It seems to me that we should increase the minimum penalties and lower the maximum penalties, thus eliminating the vegetation that could occur when people are in prison for a long time, yet still retaining sufficient deterrent to fit the crime.

One final point—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being after 9.45 o'clock p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, April, 1976, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question neccessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill now before the House.

The question is on the amendment. All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to order made Thursday, April 8, the recorded division stands deferred until 4.30 o'clock tomorrow, to be followed also by a division on the main motion.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—PROPOSED RESUMPTION OF NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN AIR CANADA AND FINANCE BRANCH EMPLOYEES AT WINNIPEG

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, to outline briefly the problems facing the Air Canada finance branch employees in Winnipeg, there is still a constant fear on the part of employees that Air Canada plans on transferring all the operations of the finance work to other groups of employees, or to contract out such work. The latter was already implemented, several weeks ago, with portions of the finance work historically performed by the Winnipeg employees being contracted out to C.A.E.

I will continue to protest this action taken by Air Canada in the strongest possible terms. There is no doubt in my mind that Air Canada has been taking steps over the last few years to wind up the finance branch in Winnipeg and move the whole operation to Montreal. It is my firm belief that Air Canada is introducing or has already introduced a decentralization program to remove the finance work from Winnipeg. The Liberals have moved enough government departments into the province of Quebec and it is time this was brought to a stop.

This problem in respect of the Air Canada finance branch has been in existence for the last two parliaments. I have been up on my feet about 30 times on this issue, and other opposition spokesmen have been up countless times. Just to give you an indication of what happened, way back on December 12, 1974, this is what the Liberal minister stated, as reported in the Winnipeg Free-Press of that date:

> Labour Minister John Munro agreed Wednesday to instruct his department to provide whatever assistance was necessary to try to resolve the differences between the government owned airline Air Canada and its finance department employees.
> The difficulties that have flared up anew between the management of Air Canada and its finance branch, located in Winnipeg, were aired in the Commons Wednesday. Opposition members outside the house pointed out that when the finance branch stops operating financial operations of the huge airline grind to a halt.

That was a year and a half ago and we are still going through the same operation all over again. When is this problem going to be resolved? The number of employees involved in Winnipeg is 700. If Air Canada is successful in making the move to Montreal this will be a tremendous loss to Manitoba, and it will certainly disrupt the lives of 700 families.

Adjournment Debate

Tonight I am calling on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) to make Air Canada lay its cards on the table and come clean. Why is no progress being made with this lengthy labour dispute? What does Air Canada plan for the finance branch in Winnipeg? All we know is that there is a constant confrontation, but we do not know what Air Canada is up to.

Air Canada is using tactics similar to those used when the overhaul maintenance base was moved from Winnipeg to Montreal in 1969. I can recall at that time the President of Air Canada standing up on a step ladder in front of a hangar telling all the boys, "Oh, don't worry fellows, we are not moving the base out of here". While he was telling them that they were moving another department out and another group of men down to Montreal. They are going through exactly the same tactics again today.

Just to give you an idea of what this is costing Air Canada and the Canadian public, I have here a report from London, England, on the Air Canada operation at the Heathrow Airport. This points out that three business firms are slowly going bankrupt because Air Canada cannot pay its bills due to constant labour trouble at the finance branch in Winnipeg. It states:

> Seagram's (liquor supplies). Despite relatively small invoices of a few hundred pounds each for December and January, they advise by letter that account failure to receive payment after two followups, the account was being turned over to their legal department, and henceforth, all orders would be on a "Cash on Delivery" basis. We have been doing business with this firm here for over twenty years.

The manner in which Air Canada treats its employees is bad enough, but here are further problems at Heathrow. They state in this interdepartmental document:

> From previous experience, we believe these three examples may well be just the tip of the iceberg. Several times a year we have been traced and on one occasion threatened with legal action by our Grosvenor Hill landlord for non-receipt of quarterly rental payment (approximately £14,000). Last year the manager, Disbursements, was provided with copies of 20 representative letters from suppliers all relating to their need to have invoices paid within ten days or "cash on delivery". Cash flow is a very real problem in the U.K. firms today.

Is that not a ridiculous situation for Canada's national airline? Everyone wants cash on delivery now. The document goes on to state:

> Messrs. Britton and Shackell from Finance, Winnipeg, subsequently visited London in March 1975 and met with all concerned re the problem, and it was thought at that time they had recognized the need to improve the capability of London to handle payment of accounts locally . . .

The document states:

> I understand from the accounts office supervisor that we cannot expect any positive action for the next 12 to 18 months as he has been informed that the delay is due to a backlog of programming time in the C & SS branch.

What a ridiculous situation! This has been going on for over three years, and now they tell us that even in 18 months they will not be able to correct it. The document goes on to state:

> Meanwhile, as you will appreciate, various London staff are having to spend a good many hours of non-productive time in trying to expediate payment and placate suppliers.
> Public relations-wise our image can only be poor and we are now facing distinct possibility of having essential services/supplies withdrawn.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

This is probably happening to All Air Canada operations around the world. If it is happening at Heathrow it has to be happening elsewhere. Also, as I pointed out last Friday, gas will be cut off at the Heathrow flight kitchen of Air Canada and there are threats that electricity will be cut off due to the ridiculous problems at the finance branch in Winnipeg. Also this internal document says:

> The attached memo presents a rather succinct picture of a continuing and rather perplexing problem regarding the payment of accounts in Great Britain. We have gone another year "down the pike" and yet the problem has not been satisfactorily resolved since it surfaced about three years ago.
> Notwithstanding the lack of resolution of the union contract in Winnipeg, and the switch-over problem to the Univac computer, there is a need to quickly put in place a system which will facilitate account payment in Great Britain and yet provide the necessary financial control over disbursements.

So you can see how important it is that the problems be solved immediately at the finance branch in Winnipeg.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the hon. member for once again having secured documentation which is internal to the department.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have it too.

Mr. Blais: However, it never ceases to amaze me how fuzzy the hon. member's thinking can be, for in effect what we have noticed here is the tying in of the unexplainable inability to pay one account of a gas bill at Heathrow to the transferring of Air Canada facilities from Manitoba to Quebec. The hon. member also stated that the finance department in Winnipeg will be transferred to Montreal, and at the same time he asked whether Air Canada would not make a statement on what it intends to do with that Winnipeg finance department. On the other hand the hon. member says that we must stop the movement of government departments from Winnipeg to the province of Quebec.

He cites as an example some dreamed up threat that some department of Air Canada—finance—might be moved over into Montreal. That is unsubstantiated. And all that, we finally discover, is somewhat tied into a labour dispute. The relationship between Heathrow and the movement of government departments from Winnipeg to Montreal and the tying in of the whole thing into a labour dispute to my mind indicates the fuzziness of the thinking of the hon. member.

With reference to the labour dispute which preoccupies the hon. member, and undoubtedly all hon. members, not only from the Winnipeg area but all hon. members who are interested in peaceful labour relations, I might indicate that the Department of Labour has provided the parties with full conciliation assistance under the Canada Labour Code in efforts to assist them in resolving their collective bargaining dispute.

A Winnipeg lawyer, Mr. Duncan Jessiman, acted as conciliation commissioner in efforts to settle the dispute. While to this date he has been unable to arrange a settlement, he made a report containing findings and recommendations for settlement of the key issues in dispute. However, his report was not acceptable to the parties, and the union membership commenced legal rotating strikes in December of 1975.

I suggest to the hon. member that he should make a declaration as to whether he would like to remove the right to strike from those parties who are engaged in the strike as a result of a collective negotiation which evidently has reached an impasse.

Mr. McKenzie: A very fuzzy answer.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—ROLE OF OFFICIALS OF DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT IN GRANTING LEASE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, last week as reported at page 12609 of Hansard, in attempting to elicit more information concerning the background of the extension of the Sky Shops lease I asked a former minister of transport, now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson), to indicate briefly what role members of his senior staff played in this matter, whether these roles were carried out with his knowledge and authorization, and what action, if any, he had taken to ensure that the RCMP had access to all relevant information with regard to these activities.

The minister indicated that he was informed informally concerning an exchange of correspondence between the executive assistant to the then minister of regional economic expansion and his own executive assistant. If I understood him correctly, he also indicated that he really did not have much knowledge of what disposition was made by the RCMP of the correspondence to which he gave them access.

The whole question of how the government deals with the awarding of leases and concessions is obviously of great concern. There is no reason why Sky Shops should be regarded as a unique, or even a rare example. Let us consider, for example, all this company did or had done for it in the period 1970 to 1972. This is a most curious affair. One should remember that while the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was in the transport portfolio, Sky Shops was very active in lobbying.

In the winter of 1970 its campaign began. It deliberately sought to have its lease extended upon terms which dispensed with competitive tenders, something which by definition was, and I believe still is, against stated government policy. Departmental officials in the Department of Transport were contacted. The principal secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), Mr. Lalonde, as he then was, was approached by Mr. Lapointe, who was a chief executive officer of Sky Shops and who had been allotted $10,000 to advance the interests of this company.

A former minister of transport, the Hon. Lionel Chevrier, was retained to press the company cause, and we have now learned that executive assistants may have been corresponding without the approval, or perhaps even the knowledge, of their respective ministers with regard to a Sky Shops lease extension.

So I hope this evening—and I appreciate very much his coming here—that the minister can further explain the increasingly complex background of this matter. Perhaps the minister can say how these events, and the correspondence in particular, happened without his knowledge. I am not disputing that he did not know anything about it, but I should like to know more details in retrospect about how this could have occurred. It is not as if others in Ottawa or his own department were not aware of the pressure to change his department's policy on tendering. Is it not logical or likely that at some point in time the minister must have signed some documents recommending to his colleagues on the Treasury Board that the Sky Shops lease be extended on its terms?

For approximately two years personnel in the Department of Transport were lobbied extensively. Can we not assume, as logical members of parliament, that the minister of transport as he then was must have become very curious about the RCMP's interest in his files as they related to Sky Shops? Tonight I hope the minister can shed a little more light on the background of the correspondence and why, in the normal course of events, an ex assistant from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would be concerned about an airport duty free store lease and why the minister was not informed.

Over five months ago, on November 3, 1975, I asked the new Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to stay the renewal of the Sky Shops lease, which was not to take effect until the following month, until he was fully satisfied that the renewal was properly obtained. This was not done. Also on the same day I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) in concert with his colleague in Transport to investigate thoroughly the circumstances of the Sky Shops leases at both Mirabel and Dorval. To this point in time we still have no assurance that parliament has all the answers to why the leases were renewed and granted on the terms which prevailed.

Therefore I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the former minister of the Department of Regional and Economic Expansion and Transport, to join with me and support the calling of a judicial inquiry into the entire background of the Sky Shops lease extension, and tendering procedures at Mirabel for concessions there. Until such time as our committee procedures are modified so that more effective investigation can be done there, a judicial inquiry is the only way to learn what has to be done to improve the ways in which tendering procedures, or the lack of them, are administered in cases such as this.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was advised late this afternoon of the intentions of the hon. member, but of course I had no way to know until three or four moments ago what kind of a statement he wished to make this evening. He has made a number of comments. I am not in a position to test the veracity of them. They involve various people who were engaged in the matter, and things of that sort. I am sure he would not expect me in the three minutes I have to try to deal with them, or indeed either to accept or refute them. I repeat that I have heard some of the comments only in the last few moments.

Adjournment Debate

The late show tonight is based on the questions the hon. member asked me on Thursday. It is to those that I am prepared to address myself. Specifically he asked in the first instance, I think, about the reason I was not curious as to why the RCMP would have asked me in the first place if I would object to any search of my correspondence or a look at my files from my Transport days. The answer is that when they came to see me they told me it was in connection with the Sky Shops affair. I said, "Fine", and I gave them the authorization. I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree it was entirely appropriate for me to do so. I do not know from any questioning or inquiries what the resolution of that might be. That is the situation which exists at this moment. I have not since that time been questioned or checked by the RCMP or by anyone else. Nor have I sought any sort of information as to what the results were.

The hon. member knows very well of course how I learned informally of the existence of certain correspondence between my executive assistant and the executive assistant to the then the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I do not think he will object to my saying he was among those who advised me of its existence. It was only in that way that I became aware of it; that is, by statements by him and other people who I assume in the very nature of things found out this was the case. I do not know specifically what the contents of those letters or correspondence were. I have not seen them.

On the final point having to do with—I am trying to paraphrase the hon. member's question—whether or not I would have been advised of this kind of correspondence, I think he must be aware that in the normal course there are many occasions on which members of cabinet, officials, and various others, including I might say members of this House, write letters of inquiry on behalf of various people. I regard all this as being entirely legitimate and appropriate, but I think that anyone who suggests that a minister or, for that matter, a member of parliament is aware of every piece of correspondence seeking information is being unreasonable.

In all fairness, a great many such inquiries are made, but to the best of my knowledge and recollection there was never any awareness on my part that any such inquiry was made. Also, until such time as I see the correspondence, or it is made public, it would be unfair to suggest that any member of my staff, or anyone else, would engage in any impropriety, or anything like it.

I realize again that once one of these issues is raised it creates real problems in terms of obtaining rational and reasonable views. In this case I am aware that the gentleman in question has suffered unfairly moments of anxiety as a result of this. My only comment is that I hope the matter is cleared up as quickly as possible. I can only repeat what I said in the beginning, and answer as I did on Thursday: that is the full extent of my awareness of the matter which the hon. member has raised.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CANADIAN POSITION ON INVOLVEMENT OF CUBA IN AFRICA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on March 23 I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) certain questions about his Cuba visit. I asked specifically if he had registered any further protest about Cuban involvement in military operations in Africa. In my question, as reported at page 12051 of Hansard, I attributed to the Prime Minister the statement that "Premier Fidele Castro was sending troops to Africa with a great deal of thought and feeling." I went on to say that I would be interested in any new information concerning the Cuban involvement and, if such information was available, in knowing the current position of the administration with respect to this unhappy situation. The Prime Minister was in a real flap. He answered:

> I must point out that the hon. member has grossly and inaccurately misquoted me.

I then said:

> If I am grossly and inaccurately misquoting the Prime Minister so did the Globe and Mail this morning.

I then followed my remark with a supplementary question. I wanted to know if there had been any official protest concerning this war involvement on the part of Cuba and, if so, what was the form of the protest. The Prime Minister answered as follows:

> I am informed that the misquote in the Globe and Mail was a quote from some American paper, so the hon. member is twice removed from the truth by two very big barriers.

He went on to say that, oh, yes, he had protested. Another minister had protested the involvement. He ended by saying, "We are opposed to that kind of intervention".

I suggest that the government adheres to a double standard. Today the Prime Minister, supported by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), had no hesitation in refusing financial assistance to a certain athletic event which is to take place in Canada, because it is understood that South Africans may attend that event and the government takes exception to the present status of segregation within that country. I do not disagree with that position; I simply ask why, if you do not agree with the internal activities of another country, do you involve yourself with Cuba? Why is there this double standard ? Why is there this involvement in the case of Cuba but not in the case of South Africa?

A few months ago the Prime Minister shunned a ploughing match near my riding in Ontario. His stated reason for shunning it was that two old Rhodesians happened to turn up and proposed to participate. He said that in no way would he give that ploughing match his blessing by appearing at the function.

The Prime Minister claims I misquoted him on March 23. Well, the remark I attributed to him, to which he referred, was carried in the New York Times. The New York Times reported the Prime Minister as saying that:

> ... Fidel Castro is a man of world statute, one 'very well informed about Africa,' who sent 10,000 Cuban soldiers to fight in Angola's civil war only after 'a great deal of thought and feeling for the situation.'

Mr. Rodriguez: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I notice it has the blessing of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). I can well understand the Prime Minister having a lot in common with that hon. member, knowing their backgrounds. Not only did the New York Times attribute that quote, but the Prime Minister stated in this House in answer to a question from the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), and I quote:

In so far as Premier Castro's views, he made them known to me. I have the feeling that he has a good knowledge of Africa and a good feeling for the realities there.

Right in this House he said virtually the same thing I attributed to him in the question to which he has since taken such exception.

Some time ago I pointed out to the House, in the form of a question to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), that we were giving extensive aid to Cuba through CIDA and the Export Development Corporation. Something over $100 million has been extended. The point that the President of the Privy Council and the Prime Minister have managed to sidestep is that Canada has no obligation to assist a country that is capable of sending troops, take your pick, anywhere from 6,000 to 12,000 according to reports, to fight in civil wars thousands of miles from its shores. Not only have they chosen to go into Angola, but the troops are now remaining in Angola and are active in seven other African countries which presumably have aggressive desires within the continent of Africa. Not only is this so, but when the government suggests it does not want to allow internal considerations in these countries to change its aid programs, it is contradicting itself.

About two years ago when the President of the Privy Council was Secretary of State for External Affairs he had no hesitation in cutting off government aid to India because the government felt that country had gone against Canada's wishes and detonated a nuclear device built with plutonium from a Canadian nuclear reactor. I am not disagreeing with this position, but what I find most remarkable is that the Prime Minister has embarrassed us with many of our allies around the world, including Venezuela. If I had more time I would read the quotes coming out of Caracas concerning the visit of the Prime Minister to Cuba.

The Prime Minister has embarrassed us as far as our world position is concerned, stating that he has a kind of token opposition to the Cuban involvement in Africa, but judging from his reply of March 23, in no way is he prepared to state to this House what official protests he has made.

Has he indicated we will withdraw our economic assistance to that country if it does not cease and desist from its aggressive tendencies, not only by sending troops to Africa but also making a contribution to South American countries, one at least bordering Venezuela from where we import a very large amount of our oil? The House deserves a better explanation than what it has had up to the present time.

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of course Canada's foreign affairs policy is not and could not be based on news reports in the Globe and Mail and the New York Times which seem to be the sources of information on the subject on which the hon. member opposite just spoke. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated the opposite very clearly in this House on March 23. He concluded his statement by reaffirming without any ambiguity, and I quote:

We are opposed to that kind of intervention.

The hon. member gave a strange example of stopping aid to India after the nuclear explosion in May 1974, and the case of apartheid in South Africa. These are two cases where international bodies—in one case the International Atomic Energy through the NPT and other multilateral agreements, and in the other case the General Assembly of the United Nations—have adopted clear resolutions voted upon by the world, to which of course we adhere. Consequently we took the course of action which is the wish and the will of the Canadian people represented by the Prime Minister and the various actions taken by our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

The case of the conduct of Cuba and its involvement in Angola has been repeatedly exposed to the House and to the public through the statement made in the United Nations General Assembly last fall by our Canadian representative in the Fourth Committee. It was then later repeated in the minister's release dated January 20, 1976, and again in his press statement of February 18 when he announced Canada's recognition of the People's Republic of Angola. He reaffirmed our opposition to the continued presence of foreign troops.

With regard to an official protest to Cuba, the Prime Minister, as the hon. member is aware, has spoken directly to Premier Castro on this subject. This is repeated each time a Canadian minister has occasion to meet his Cuban counterpart and to my knowledge the most recent instance was the meeting between our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and his Cuban counterpart. I think this is a very clear case in which the Prime Minister of Canada is representing the wishes of Canadians, as usual, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH PENALTIES FOR FRAUD EQUIVALENT TO GRAVITY OF OFFENSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of pressing and urgent necessity.

Considering that an individual who committed a $750,000 fraud got only a one day sentence before the Quebec courts, while another individual got 8 years imprisonment for a $2,000 fraud about a week ago; considering that the big swindler is a rich businessman while the small one is only an ordinary citizen; and considering that those decisions show that citizens are not all equal before the law, the rich people being favoured, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House instruct the Minister of Justice to table before the House a bill aimed at establishing a specific schedule of penalties in the case of fraud, so that the sentence would be directly related to the gravity of the fraud, to see that judges impose penalties which are not based on the thickness of the swindler's wallet but on the gravity of the fraud.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PROPOSAL TO STOP CONSIDERATION OF THE PURCHASE OF BRAZILIAN ARMOURED CARS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provision of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that reports have indicated that the Canadian government has narrowed its search for a new armoured car for our armed forces to two countries, they being Brazil and Switzerland, and in view of the fact that the Department of National Defence is reported to have issued a report to Treasury Board recommending the Swiss Piranha model over the Brazilian Urutu, but that this recommendation was blocked by people in the Latin American Division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and in view of the fact that the decision to purchase the Brazilian model would not only encourage a vicious military dictatorship in Brazil but would cost Canadian workers jobs since the Swiss model would be built in Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

● (1410)

That the Canadian government through its departments stop any consideration or negotiations now going on concerning the purchase of Brazilian armoured cars.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PENITENTIARIES

SUGGESTED CONSULTATION BEFORE ESTABLISHMENT OF WORK CAMP AT APPLE RIVER, NOVA SCOTIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move under Standing Order 43 a motion of urgent and pressing necessity, namely:

That the decision taken to establish a permanent type work camp on the property of Scott Maritimes Pulp Limited at Apple River in Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, be rescinded and that the Canadian penitentiary Service immediately undertake further consultation with the citizens of Apple River, Advocate and area and only move forward with the establishment of the camp if they have the consent of the citizens.

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF DECISION ON PERMITS TO DRILL IN BEAUFORT SEA PENDING COMMITTEE STUDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. It has just been announced that the government will make a final decision on offshore drilling in the Beaufort Sea on Thursday, April 22, at a time when the House is recessed. This parliament has been given no chance to examine this proposal to date and we are now faced with the sleazy and arrogant intention to announce a government decision when the House is in recess and members of parliament have no opportunity to respond in this House, which is both their right and duty to the people of Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House condemns the government's action of announcing its decision on offshore drilling in the Beaufort Sea while the House is in recess, and demands that the decision be postponed until the matter is referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR RESTRICTION ON IMPORTATION OF BROILERS TO PROTECT PRODUCERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

On December 11, 1975, I put on the order paper questions concerning the imports of broilers and poultry. After over four months, I am still waiting for a reply. Yet, bulletin No. 14 on poultry markets dated April 9, 1976, published by Agriculture Canada, market production division, advises us that in the first quarter of 1976 alone, poultry imports amounted to 6,786,392 pounds, exactly three times the imports in the corresponding period in 1975. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this important matter be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Industry, Trade and Commerce, with a view to limiting the massive import quotas of poultry or broilers which decidedly threaten the economic survival of thousands of poultry producers as well as Agriculture Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ROLE OF MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS IN GRANTING CONCESSIONS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman now inform the House of the details of his rather lengthy meeting with Commissioner Nadon and other members of the RCMP yesterday afternoon regarding the Sky Shops affair and, in particular, the conduct of any ministerial aides or other persons involved in negotiations or representations regarding Sky Shops interests?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a result of request made by the opposition, I had a meeting yesterday with the commissioner of the RCMP. I want to make it clear to the House that I am only reporting on this meeting in so far as it might have had any bearing on anything concerning members of my government, in other words, ministers. So far as other people might be concerned, I shall not entertain questions on that. I think the House will understand the RCMP conducted investigations. They have turned over their files to the provincial attorney general. If charges are to issue, they will come from that source. I think this indicates the wisdom of the practice of the government, and of the Solicitor General in the past, of refusing to give any details of investigations which might be initiated or which might be in course. This is obviously needed as a protection to innocent people.

This having been said, I want to say that the RCMP report to the provincial attorney general does not recommend that charges be laid against any member of the government. Any further information, I repeat, will have to wait the laying of charges, if any are to be laid, against whom and in what circumstances.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—POSSIBILITY OF COMPLEMENTARY INQUIRY—BY WHOM REQUESTED

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his answer. In view of statements made by a senior Quebec Justice Department official with regard to the implementation of a so-called complementary inquiry from the RCMP into the Sky Shops affair, did Commissioner Nadon or anyone else inform the Prime Minister of the details of such an investigation supposedly requested of the RCMP? If so, can he inform the House as to the purpose, nature and terms of reference of such an inquiry and who requested an inquiry of this nature?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as of yesterday afternoon when I met the Commissioner, there had been no notice or knowledge of any such inquiry. Today is the first time I have heard of it. I heard of it about an hour ago. I am not aware of what is referred to in that news report. I do know there will likely be a pre-inquiry, a pré-enquête, which is general procedure before laying charges. However, I have no understanding of what is alleged by the hon. member. I have no knowledge of it.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—POSSIBILITY PEARSON GUIDELINES VIOLATED BY MINISTERIAL AIDES

Mr. Elmer Mr. MacKay (Central Nova): Without giving details, is the Prime Minister satisfied as a result of his meeting yesterday that the guidelines promulgated by Mr. Pearson with regard to ministerial aides have not been violated? If he is not satisfied, what action will he be taking or what instructions will he be giving?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I made it quite clear in my answer that I was reporting on ministerial conduct. I am pleased to say that what I told the House last week as a result of speaking to the ministers has been confirmed by the RCMP and they are not recommending that any charges be laid against any minister. In so far as other people are concerned, I want to repeat what I said earlier. I think the House can understand that citizens in this country are presumed innocent until found guilty. I do not see why the opposition or any other member of the public would want to know who is being investigated, why and what the results might be.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I want to respond by asking a question about what the right hon. gentleman has raised. I remind him that on page two of Prime Minister Pearson's letter—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a final supplementary he should put the question.

Mr. MacKay: Is the Prime Minister in agreement with the short excerpt I propose to put to him from the guidelines of the late Prime Minister Pearson. On page two of his famous letter of November 30, 1964, he said and I quote:

> There are several things that should be stressed. The central one is that a Minister's staff must be subject to exactly the same high code of conduct that is recognized for Ministers themselves.

My question is simply this. Does the right hon. Prime Minister still adhere to this statement of philosophy and guideline set out by his famous predecessor?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I gave this answer yesterday or at the end of last week. The answer was yes, I do agree with that. However, the hon. member should reflect that perhaps there should be guidelines for members of the public or of the opposition wanting to find out about investigations into people by police and the damage that this can cause.

● (1420)

An hon. Member: Another red herring!

Mr. Trudeau: I hope there will be some respect shown for the reputations of innocent people by the other side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that we are now running at the worst sustained rate of unemployment since the recession of 1961—there has been a paltry drop of .1 per cent compared with last month—a rate which, with the sole exception of the United States, has in the last year run consistently ahead of every other major western country in the world, is the government at long last planning to reduce this 700,000 figure of unemployment which is so harmful both in human terms and to the economy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I quite agree with the hon. member that unemployment takes a very heavy toll both of individuals and of firms in Canada. It was for that reason, for the purpose both of reducing the rate of inflation and fighting any increase in the rate of unemployment, that the government brought forward a set of mandatory controls. We had hoped, in bringing this program forward, that we would have had the support of the hon. gentleman. So far, it has been withheld.

Mr. Broadbent: We did not support it, precisely because we said it would lead to sustained high rates of unemployment. Given the fact that unemployment in the Atlantic provinces continues to run at a rate higher than the rest of the country—it was up again last month in terms of the national average—has the government any particular plans for people in that part of the country who remain so unfairly treated in terms of employment opportunities?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It seems to me that the gentleman has just contradicted himself. He has referred to the fact that the period of unemployment pre-existed the controls and he said he opposed them because they would have created unemployment. He cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Broadbent: That answer is even more stupid than usual from the minister. Would he now deal with the fact that among those unemployed, women show a disproportionate rate of increase running some 20 per cent ahead of men while the rate of unemployed young people is about 100 per cent above the national average? Would the minister kindly remove the smirk from his face and tell the House what he plans to do about those two groups of unemployed?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I notice that when the hon. member becomes most abusive and shouts loudest he is on the weakest ground of all.

PROPOSAL THAT UNEMPLOYED BE USED ON PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Finance, who has just replied virulently to the leader of the New Democratic Party concerning unemployed Canadians.

Is the minister not considering or is he not tempted to consider hiring the unemployed who are available for work and, instead of giving them unemployment insurance benefits, paying them more for the work they could do in various fields, like building the roads we need in Canada, and the public buildings which are not built because of the government's restrictions? Would it not be to the advantage of the government, the department and Canada to hire these unemployed and pay them decent wages, and thus at the same time develop the country and avoid heavy expenditures like unemployment insurance in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I shall point out to the hon. member that in Quebec, for instance, there were 25,000 fewer unemployed last month. Regarding supplementary expenditures for building, I must say that we have found that the government must control its expenses. That means we cannot spend more money for special programs, as my colleague the President of the Treasury Board has announced. For these reasons, we expect a resumption of economic activity in Canada this spring and summer, and significant reductions of the unemployment rate.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The minister tells us that he must control public spending in Canada. I agree with him on this point. However, we cannot anticipate the number of people who will be unemployed next month or next week. Thus the government does not control anything at all. So my question is the following: if we cannot control the increase in the rate of unemployment—and when the minister says there were 25,000 fewer unemployed in the province of Quebec, I do not think of Quebec alone, but of Canada as a whole, and in the whole of Canada unemployment is on the rise—then I ask the minister this question: rather than not being able to control these spendings, let us pay those who are actually unemployed, that is, why does not the government consider the possibility of hiring them and paying them normal wages, which would allow to have something done, while nothing is being done right now and yet money is spent on the unemployed just the same?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada has suggested such a plan. It would consist in revising the unemployment insurance program in such a way as to prevent unemployment from going up in Canada. We are considering this suggestion and my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, will inform the House of the proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF MARIN REPORT AND MEASURES TO IMPROVE MORALE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and is based on the recent press release of the RCMP staff relations committee which states that the Solicitor General has lost credibility. In view of the fact that the minister has yet to make any statement respecting his willingness or otherwise to implement any of the recommendations of the Marin report or that any tangible steps will be taken to improve his rapport with the force, when will the Solicitor General take such steps to demonstrate to the RCMP that he is a credible leader and what steps is the government intending to take to improve morale in the force generally?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I reject, of course, the statements made by the staff relations group or the division representatives. With respect to implementation of the Marin report, I was in Regina last week to discuss this matter with them and they asked me for a delay because they said they were not ready to discuss it.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—POSSIBILITY OF IMPROPRIETIES BY MINISTERIAL AIDES WHICH MIGHT LEAD TO DISMISSAL

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, since matters such as the Sky Shops affair have a direct bearing on morale in the force, and assuming the minister listened to the reply of the Prime Minister to the question asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova, could the Solicitor General inform us in connection with the reports of the RCMP that were obviously disclosed to the Prime Minister, whether any improprieties existed on the part of ministerial aides, and I am not asking for names? Did any improprieties exist that were something short of an illegality which would not give rise to the laying of charges, but falling within the guidelines of the late Prime Minister Pearson as being conduct reprehensive enough to warrant these ministerial aides being dismissed?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when I met with the RCMP commanding officers and the division representatives they mentioned several things that were of interest to them, but Sky Shops was not one of them. Nor was there any mention of the other matters for investigation raised by hon. members opposite. In respect of the second part of the hon. member's question, the RCMP did not mention that there was any conduct or document relating to a minister or ministerial aid that they found to be illegal or in any way improper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PERSON RECOMMENDING MISS CARRIÈRE FOR APPOINTMENT TO IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD—POSSIBILITY OF REAPPOINTMENT

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the revelations concerning the role played by Miss Carmel Carrière, who was once the executive assistant to the Minister of the Environment, in the extension of the Sky Shops lease, and her subsequent appointment to a $27,000 a year job with the Immigration Appeal Board on the recommendation of at least one minister, can the Prime Minister now inform the House on whose recommendation Miss Carrière was appointed and whether she will be reappointed to that position in view of the fact that her present term expires on May 10 of this year?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without in any way admitting what was put as the preamble to the question, this position with the Immigration Appeal Board would have been on the recommendation, I imagine, of the then minister responsible for immigration, and it would have been authorized by order in council of the government.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not think it appropriate then to postpone such reappointment of Miss Carrière until her status has been fully clarified, so that the reappointment will be made only after there has been a full inquiry and that status has been clarified once again?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in so far as the reappointment is concerned, I believe this particular one will be coming up in a month or two and I will bear in mind the representation of the hon. member.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY OF PRE-INQUIRY INTO SKY SHOPS AFFAIR—REQUEST THAT RESULTS BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister alluded to the fact that a senior official of the Quebec Department of Justice had indicated that the possibility of a pre-inquiry into the Sky Shops affair is probable—that was the official, not the Prime Minister. Has the minister had any discussions with his counterpart in Quebec about the merits of such an inquiry?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, since it is my understanding that a pre-inquiry could in fact be held in camera with the results transmitted only to the department, will the minister undertake to discuss this method of proceeding with his counterpart in order that we can be sure the results of such an inquiry are public, because surely a private result would be unacceptable?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, whether there is a pre-inquiry or not is, as far as I am concerned, the suggestion in a newspaper report. That is the only information I have seen. However, I also think it would be improper for me to endeavour in some way to direct the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice of the province of Quebec on how to administer justice within that province and within its very clear jurisdiction.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—REASON MR. JAMIESON DID NOT SEEK CLARIFICATION OF REQUEST TO SEE FILES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since the minister last night confirmed his lack of curiosity when the RCMP asked for his files on the Sky Shops matter, I wonder whether he could explain why he made no attempt to get some clarification for this rather unusual request either from the RCMP, other ministers or someone on his staff, in particular his executive assistant?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, precisely for the reason that if I did make any attempt to do so hon. members opposite, at least some of them, would have accused me of trying to interfere with the process of investigation.

An hon. Member: Oh, never.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. In view of the minister's admission last night on the adjournment debate, brought on by the hon. member for Central Nova, that there were many matters raised at that time which the hon. minister could not answer, and in view of his specific statement last night as recorded at page 12756 of Hansard that: "My only comment is that I hope the matter is cleared up as quickly as possible", will the minister agree that this should be the case? There were many things raised last night which are matters of public record, but which are unknown to the minister and about which he could not answer last night. In view of the obvious desire to clarify this matter as soon as possible, would he not agree that he should be one at least in the Cabinet who would be in favour of a public inquiry into this matter?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

ROLE OF MR. MARCHAND IN DEALING WITH SKY SHOPS' LEASE AND OTHER QUEBEC CONTRACTS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Given the statement by the Prime Minister in answer to the first question that the RCMP, in discussions with him, indicated they would not want to lay any charges against any minister, it seems there is still a matter which is troubling me and many other people. Can the Prime Minister explain to the House how a lease involving a duty-free shop at an airport could find its way into the office of the minister in charge of DREE, and on what basis, on what right and for what purpose was that? Was the purpose to allow the minister responsible for DREE to follow the normal practice which seems to have become apparent with these contracts regarding the province of Quebec; that is, to be vetted by the ministry of that particular man as the Quebec leader?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, could I remind the hon. member that he made an allegation yesterday concerning this matter that he has not yet withdrawn, and it is at page 12710 of Hansard. I would ask him whether—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I could raise the question of privilege now as a result of what the right hon. gentleman has said, or I could wait until three o'clock. In any event, Sir—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think we might as well wait until three o'clock because the same question of privilege is going to be raised on either one side of the House or the other.

ROLE OF MR. LALONDE IN DEALING WITH QUEBEC CONTRACTS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered the question with regard to the input of what I have called the acknowledged leader at that time in terms of his party in Quebec. He has not answered that question. While he is thinking about the answer to that question would he think about this. If there is or was such input by that minister, I would ask the Prime Minister to inform the House whether the same input is now being made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare? If that is so, by what authority under the Financial Administration Act or any other federal statute is such input legalized?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to hear what the member will say at three o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Speaker.]

MANPOWER

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration my question is directed to his parliamentary secretary. In view of Statistics Canada reports published today to the effect that youth unemployment remains above 13 per cent, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether he can inform this House what measures he intends to introduce aimed at reducing youth unemployment this coming summer?

[Translation]

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the hon. member's question, but I would remind him that he will have the opportunity to discuss this problem before the committee, since the department's estimates will be tabled very soon.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED PURCHASE OF SWISS ARMOURED CAR TO ENSURE EMPLOYMENT FOR CANADIANS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, recent reports have indicated that the government is about to place a $150 million order for new armoured cars for the Canadian forces. In view of the fact the Defence Department has recommended that the government purchase the Swiss Piranha model over the Brazilian Urutu, and in view of the fact that this Swiss model would be produced in London, Ontario by General Motors under licence, thus involving a considerable economic benefit to Canada, will the minister assure the House that the order will be placed with the Swiss company to ensure that Canada does indeed receive the economic benefits?

● (1440)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to announce the decision at the present time. It is true that we are negotiating the purchase of an armoured vehicle, and the recommendations at the present time are before Treasury Board.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE DEALING WITH PURCHASE OF BRAZILIAN ARMOURED CAR—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN WORKERS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of what appears to be pressure from the Latin American division of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to purchase the armoured cars from Brazil is the minister prepared to table all correspondence relating to this purchase in the committee dealing with the defence department's estimates.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this problem is still before the Treasury Board. When the decision will be taken, we will see to that.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary again is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Can the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that the interests of Canadian workers will be put first before the building up of a military economic complex in Brazil.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this proposal to buy equipment for the army is one which has long since been submitted to the House. We do have military obligations, and of course we have to keep them.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—SUGGESTED IMPLEMENTATION OF SENATE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Senate report on the state of the textile industry in Canada states that the domestic industry's share of the Canadian market has been allowed to slip from 64 per cent ten years ago to less than 46 per cent now and that 25,000 textile workers were laid off in the past year and the unemployment rate among textile workers was 18 per cent in 1975 compared with the Canadian average of 7 per cent, does the government intend to follow the recommendation of the Senate that:

> The minister should negotiate voluntary restraint agreements on more textile products and with more countries and these should be more closely policed than at present. In addition, the government should keep an up to date import control list so it knows what the situation is.

In other words, it should know what the score is and what is going on.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. While I will not say we will follow the Senate recommendations in their entirety, there are some logical recommendations there. I might tell the hon. member that, provided the necessary work can be completed today, I will be tabling three reports of the textile and clothing board tomorrow and as is the custom, immediately thereafter indication will be given of what action the government proposes to take in those three sectors.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION NEW POLICY BE DEVELOPED BEFORE ELIMINATION OF RAIL SUBSIDIES ON FLOUR AND GRAIN

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is one of a continuing series to the Minister of Transport as custodian of section 272 of the Railway Act. Because the dominion-provincial task force has been for a few days studying the feasibility of running unit grain trains from the prairies to Saint John or Halifax, would the minister not now agree with the wisdom of my much older proposal that a new policy be developed and not just studied before putting to the axe the old policy of rail subsidies on flour and grain.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member is looking at the positive side and sees the great and good things that can happen when an expensive policy which creates anomalies is removed.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—REASON FOR FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO IMPLEMENT ANNOUNCED POLICY

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The same Senate report indicated that the government was not following out in the last year and one half its own announced textile policy. In view of the massive lay-offs in this country in the textile industry at the present time and the great difficulty the industry is facing, can the minister explain to the House why the government has not been carrying out its announced policy during the last few years?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I said there were parts of the report with which I agreed and others with which there was some disagreement. I do not think it is quite correct, indeed I do not agree with the sweeping generalization, that we have not been carrying out the policy. I should say, however, to the hon. member that I mentioned the fact that probably tomorrow or Thursday we will be indicating what we probably will be doing in three sectors. Shortly thereafter, I will indicate the terms of reference for a group requested by the textile industry which will have representation I hope from the interested provinces, and which will examine precisely the question the hon. member has raised concerning the implementation of the existing policy and how it can be improved. At the same time, I will look at some of the other proposals, a variety of them, which have come forward both through the committee report of the Senate and from other bodies.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

ALLEGED FAILURE OF FAST WRITE-OFFS AND REDUCED TAX RATES FOR CORPORATIONS TO CREATE EMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. After reviewing the figures for employment in the manufacturing industries, I find that no more jobs existed in the first quarter of 1976 than on average in 1972 and in view of the fact that the corporate tax measures of fast write-offs and reduced tax rates introduced in the budget of May 1972 and subsequently confirmed in other budgets were designed to, "provide well paying new jobs for Canadians" in the manufacturing industry, is the minister prepared to concede that these measures have failed to provide the promised employment opportunity.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

EFFECT OF ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM ON COMPETITIVE TRADING POSITION WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, considering that the rate of inflation in Canada exceeds that in the United States by nearly 3 per cent, and that the recent appreciation in the exchange rate with the United States dollar is making our exports even less competitive, is the minister in a position to report whether the anti-inflation program of the present administration has had any success in halting the erosion of our competitive position with the United States.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have had occasion to observe the program has been effective in reducing the average rate of settlements in Canada in the last six months from somewhere close to 20 per cent down to at least 5 percentage points lower.

REQUEST FOR COMPARISON OF CANADIAN PRICE, WAGE AND UNIT COST TRENDS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, since the improvement of our competitive position is one of the anti-inflation program—and I suggest that bringing it down from 20 per cent to 15 per cent is a long way from the 8 per cent target—and since the resolve of Canadians to fight inflation will be heightened by a full appreciation of the seriousness of the current situation, will the minister include, in his budget presentation, a comparison of Canadian price, wage and unit cost trends with those of the United States, as was done by his predecessor in the June 23 budget?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider the suggestion. I point out that the comparison with 8 per cent, of course, the latter is the rate of average compensation as opposed to the rate of settlements which have occurred in specific contracts in the manufacturing sector.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

COMMENTS OF JUDGE PARADIS ON JURY VERDICT—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

Is the Minister of Justice prepared to tell the House what he intends to do regarding the denunciations of André Choquette, formerly with the United Aircraft Corporation, in terms of Judge Louis Paradis' comments, following acquittal by a jury, and in terms of what the judge said against the jury's decision? Can the Minister of Justice tell the House whether he intends to deal severely with a judge of the Superior Court who judges his own peers, who takes a decision concerning a union member who has in effect been acquitted by twelve people?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, speaking generally of course it is not unusual for judges to make some comments on jury verdicts, but speaking specifically on this case, the gentleman in question has written to me complaining about the judge's remarks and it is the appropriate type of case which falls within section 33 of the Judges Act, so I will make a reference of the letter to the Judicial Council of Canada.

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST FOR AID FOR FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Following the policy statement of the Department of the Secretary of State concerning the development of francophone minorities outside Quebec, does the Secretary of State intend to do something about some of the claims of the federation of Francophones outside Quebec, to wit, develop regional offices and create positions of coordinators of bilingualism at regional and local levels in order to be really in tune with the population concerned?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

The federation of Francophones outside Quebec notices also that it is imperative that its allotted budget for the current year be re-evaluated. Does the Secretary of State intend to take the necessary means to ensure that this organization in full development will not be another victim of the government's budgetary cuts?

● (1450)

Mr. Faulkner: That is a more difficult proposition.

AVAILABILITY OF SPECIAL GRANTS TO STUDY NATIVE LANGUAGES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Secretary of State, and it refers to his recent statements about second language training across the country. Did those statements refer only to the two official languages, or will special grants be available from that grant structure for native communities studying native languages across this country?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, the program is a follow up to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and therefore deals only with the two official languages.

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS FOR STUDY OF NATIVE LANGUAGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will he take a special position with his cabinet colleagues, because of the importance to native culture of the preservation of Indian languages, with reference to the brief submitted to him last week by the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians suggesting that some of the grant funds for second language education be channelled toward native language study where they do not at this time have a written language?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, we just recently extended our grants to cultural colleges for another year period. I think they amount to $5 million for the cultural colleges for the Indian people across the country, and languages are one of their major areas of study.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES OF FINANCE BRANCH OF AIR CANADA AT WINNIPEG—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. It has to do with the dispute with the employees of the finance department of Air Canada. Following his meeting yesterday, I wonder if the minister might indicate to the House the results of that meeting and specifically whether he has assurances from Air Canada that there will be no lockouts, and second, that the farming out of jobs to CAE and others will cease.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did meet with the Air Canada people yesterday. They assured me that they were not attempting to break the union in any way as a result of the impasse in negotiations. They said that they had contracted out some work. They contended it was a minimum proportion of the workload, and that this was to assist them in catching up with the backlog. They did not anticipate any escalation in the contracting out of further work, certainly for the immediate future. I might also say that they assured me that Air Canada has no intention of phasing out its operations, namely, its financial administration, out of the Winnipeg area.

An hon. Member: We have heard that story before.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I know, but it was reiterated yesterday. I might also indicate that talks are resuming today, I believe, between the parties in the hope that this long standing dispute can be resolved.

Mr. Whiteway: Can the minister indicate to the House whether he received assurances that Air Canada will not lock out the employees of its finance department?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I did not get that in specific terms. I just indicated all the assurances I received. With contract talks resuming today, I do not believe it would be beneficial to the interests of either side for any further aggravation of that kind.

ALLEGED INTENTION TO MOVE FINANCE BRANCH FROM WINNIPEG—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport, and it relates to the problems at the Air Canada finance branch in Winnipeg. The Minister of Labour just stated that Air Canada would not be phasing out the finance branch, but he said also that Air Canada is contracting work out because it is getting behind. I point out to the Minister of Transport that the staff there is sitting doing nothing. Will the minister get a firm assurance from Air Canada today that it will not phase out the finance branch in Winnipeg? This is the main root of the problem, and this is why there is unrest. There is a constant rumour that the finance branch will be moved.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there should not be any unrest about that because Air Canada has made this very clear to the finance branch in Manitoba. Air Canada has firmly indicated that to me, and I am happy to pass that on to the hon. member. Air Canada has no intention of phasing out the finance branch in Winnipeg.

HEALTH

APPEARANCE OF REYE'S SYNDROME IN NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION AND REPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. There is evidence of two cases of Reye's syndrome in northern Newfoundland, which is a wonder because of the fact that there has been no spraying of the spruce budworm since 1968. I wonder if the minister would indicate if he has caused an investigation into this matter, and what were the results?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not caused an investigation into this matter. However, we are funding research on this subject by Dr. Crocker at Dalhousie University in Halifax. We have to await the results of that study. As the hon. member said, the cases seem to have developed without relation to spraying, and a few cases have recently been reported in the eastern United States which also do not seem to be related to spraying, so we may be facing a difficult situation. The cause and effect relationship does not seem to have been well established yet with regard to this rare disease.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON SPRAYING FOR SPRUCE BUDWORM TO ASSURE FUTURE TIMBER RESOURCES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that spraying of the spruce budworm could seriously affect the economy of the Atlantic region vis-à-vis the pulp and paper industry, and that there would also be an effect on the timber resources of the province as a result of the spruce budworm and the hemlock looper, I wonder if the minister would indicate if he has had a discussion with the ministers responsible in the Atlantic region to ensure that the future of the pulp and paper industry in the Atlantic region will be solidified.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, my department and my officials are very conscious of the importance of forestry resources for the Maritime provinces, and any decision by both levels of government to protect and develop these resources is a matter of concern to us.

As for damages caused by the spruce budworm, our department recently agreed to participate in discussions with the government of New Brunswick in order to fight this plague at the beginning of the season. To my knowledge, however, we have not participated so far in any negotiations with other governments of the Maritime provinces. There may have been exchanges of information but I do not know of any negotiations or actual proposals concerning a program which could be implemented either by the government of Newfoundland or the government of New Brunswick to deal with this problem, if it is more acute there.

I note that newspapers report that Nova Scotia does not see fit, at this time, to participate in such a program.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT DECISION ON PERMITS TO DRILL IN BEAUFORT SEA BE MADE WHILE PARLIAMENT IN SESSION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, if I could have his attention. A report recently indicated that the minister was intending to make an announcement on April 22 with regard to drilling permits in the Beaufort Sea. In view of the delays already, would the minister advise why it is necessary that this announcement be made on April 22, at a time when this parliament will not be in session?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know the source of the hon. member's information. It is our hope to make a decision this week.

Mr. Leggatt: Would the minister therefore confirm that that decision will be made while the House is in session? If he intends to make it this week, can we expect that announcement either today or tomorrow; otherwise will it be made after the break? Will the minister give an assurance that the announcement will be made in the House so that members of the opposition will have an opportunity to respond?

Mr. Buchanan: The problem I have is that the matter is on the agenda for cabinet on Thursday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Buchanan: Unless hon. members would like to sit on Thursday, I do not know how we can deal with it before the House adjourns.

POST OFFICE

LETTER URGING PITNEY BOWES CUSTOMERS TO BUY OLYMPIC METER DIES—REASON MINISTER SENT LETTER

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General arising out of a form letter dated March 17 from his office and signed by him. The letter was sent to all Pitney Bowes customers and urges the recipients to buy Olympic meter dies for $150. The question I would like to ask is what portion of the $150 is to be retained by Pitney Bowes, and why is the taxpayer of Canada asked to pay for the minister's solicitations on behalf of this business?

● (1500)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, Pitney Bowes has a vested interest in selling meter dies, which is their business. We have a vested interest in ensuring that meter dies contain the Olympic symbol in order that people who use meter dies rather than stamps will avail themselves of the opportunity of offering financial assistance to the Olympics. Of course, this is a co-operative venture of the Post Office, Pitney Bowes and the Olympics in general.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARCHAND (LANGELIER)—REMARKS OF MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have never abused this procedure. I have been sitting here for ten years and I never used it before as far as I can remember. I simply refer to what the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said yesterday. I did not do this earlier because there was some confusion yesterday on the import of his words; then I read Hansard and here is what the hon. member said. I shall say it in English because he spoke in English so that his words are not misinterpreted. The hon. member said the following, and I quote:

[English]

Again, a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the now public admission in the matter of the extension of the Sky Shops lease that the then minister of DREE was allowed input into the question as Quebec leader, although this lease—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is the point I want to raise this afternoon. I do not know where there was public admission that I played a role in the extension of the Sky Shops contract. I even stated the contrary; nobody ever dared state that I had something to do directly or indirectly with the Sky Shops affair. I hope that the hon. member did not think what he said and that he will simply say what he meant, and the matter will be settled. If he maintains that he did say this, Mr. Speaker, I will ask you to have him withdraw his words if he does not want the normal procedure in such a case to be followed. I do not want—and I have no intention of playing the offended virgin—reputations to be destroyed through insinuations; I think that we should not accept this in the House.

[Englishs]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —I am glad the minister raised the matter today as a question of privilege. He asked me specifically to withdraw an allegation with respect to his involvement, direct or indirect. He also asked me whether there had been any reference with respect to his involvement in this particular matter. I accepted unequivocally, in the preface to my question to the Prime Minister today, the statement made by the Prime Minister on the reports made to him by commissioner Nadon which stated—these are his words, I think; I took them down—that he does not recommend that charges be laid against members of the government. I have never accepted anything else with respect to this minister.

With respect to the public statement as to his involvement, it was made on April 8, 1976, by his brother minister who is now Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, when in answer to a question by the hon. member for Central Nova with respect to this matter he said the following, in part:

I have, however, been informed informally that there was an exchange of correspondence between the executive assistant of the Minister of the Environment and my executive assistant.

That was in his then capacity as minister of transport. The question that I have, and the question that many Canadians and many members of the House have on their minds, is not with respect to any criminal involvement of the minister, because that has been laid to rest by the leader of the government, but with respect to his responsibility for the operation of his office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I think the minister, now that he has raised the matter as a question of privilege, owes the House an explanation as to how, on God's green earth—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —a matter involving Sky Shops leases at airports could find its way into the office of the minister in charge of DREE.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I repeat, sir, that I have accepted without question, as I must, as I am bound to and as I do—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You're slipping.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —the statement of the Prime Minister with respect to the criminal involvement. But I do not accept, as a member of the House of Commons, the words of the Prime Minister yesterday that I must substantiate everything, as if I were in a court of law. I am an elected representative here and I am entitled to certain answers, and so are the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, in the course of making a contribution to a question of privilege raised by the Minister of the Environment, pursued a point which is of great value. But the narrow confines of the question of privilege relate only to whether or not yesterday, in the words of the Minister of the Environment today, an allegation was in fact made that the minister had input into a certain decision. That was the language that was used. I will have to ask the hon. member to confine himself to that point.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have almost completed what I have to say with respect to the matter. As to the last point made by the Prime Minister yesterday—I think this is a question of privilege which affects the privileges of this House—the question is, what is the position of a member when he asks a question? If the Prime Minister is allowed, day after day, to set up a straw man regarding the laying of a charge or the making of an allegation when a member asks a question, then I do not think this should be allowed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In closing, I want to draw to the attention of the House and to you, sir, your own words with respect to the incident that occurred involving the hon. member for York-Simcoe. At that stage there was an attempt to ask a member to substantiate, to withdraw his statement or to lay a charge, and all of this silly, specious parliamentary nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He said:

And the third rather vague practice relating to charges made if they are specific, withdrawn or in some way connected with an offer to put a member's seat at risk. That practice is very vague.

It is even worse than that, sir. You are most charitable. That practice does not exist in our parliamentary democracy or in this parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I say to the minister, on his very narrow question of privilege, that such is the public record. Sir, the question still remains of the minister's political responsibility for the actions of those who are involved in his office.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think it might be useful to put in its proper context the complaint of the Minister of the Environment. He complains of a statement made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton as reported on page 12710 of Hansard. The statement must be read in its entirety. With great respect, I think that a moment or two ago the Chair missed a word. I think Your Honour referred to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton as referring to an input into a decision. With great respect, that was not the phrase used. Allow me to read the question as reported on page 12710 of Hansard. This is what the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton is reported to have said:

Again, a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the now public admission in the matter of the extension of the Sky Shops lease that the then minister of DREE was allowed input into the question as Quebec leader, although this lease was not within his departmental jurisdiction, could the Prime Minister now tell the House whether the policy and practice of the government is that all contracts for the province of Quebec, whatever their departmental origin, are currently vetted through the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as head of the Quebec troika?

The Prime Minister replied, and what he said is pertinent to the question of privilege the minister has raised. He said, first:

I am not sure what the hon. member is implying—

He was not implying anything; I put that in my own parentheses. I continue quoting:

—when he says there was input by the minister responsible for DREE. I think it has been quite clear from the minister that he was not involved in any way with the Sky Shops matter and therefore I think the hon. member, if he made that allegation, should be prepared to withdraw it or substantiate it.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton then said:

I made no allegation with respect to the involvement of the minister.

I submit that if the matter the minister has raised is to amount to a breach of the minister's privileges, the statement alluded to must amount either to a slander of his person as minister, libel, or a statement in the nature of a charge directed at the minister and implying corruption. I think the precedents are clear and I need not cite the authorities at length. I refer the Chair to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, page 96, citation 105(3). I refer to the third paragraph of that citation. I submit that the minister's complaint does not amount to the type of privilege contemplated by that citation.

I also cite May's Parliamentary Practice, eighteenth edition, page 148. In that part, headed "Reflections upon members", there are examples of speeches and writings which have been held to be contemptuous and breaching the privileges of a member. Not one of the examples given in that citation is similar to the matter described and put forward by the minister and complained of. The only example which is in the least similar to the matter complained of comes under the heading on page 149, "Imputations against members of corruption in the execution of their duties."

I submit that the statement of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, that the then minister of DREE was allowed input into the question of the lease, falls far short of an allegation of corruption. Indeed, it is questionable if it falls within the definition of improper conduct. It may well be that there was a vetting of the leases on behalf of the minister of DREE who now says he had nothing to do with it. It appears that there was an exchange of correspondence between his executive assistant, when he was minister of DREE, and the executive assistant of the then minister of transport. I say all this on the assumption, expounded and confirmed by the Prime Minister yesterday, that ministers are responsible for their personal staffs and that their staffs must adhere to a certain code of conduct. We must, therefore, assume that there was ministerial responsibility for that exchange of correspondence.

The then minister of transport acknowledged that he subsequently knew of the exchange of correspondence, although he had not seen it. That, sir, may be proper conduct. I do not think the Prime Minister, responding yesterday to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, should have said, "make a charge." That, I submit, was not the course to be followed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the purpose of this discussion is not to talk about the conduct of the Prime Minister yesterday. We are considering a question of privilege relating to affairs concerning the Minister of the Environment only, and we ought to confine ourselves to that.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, indeed we are concerned about yesterday's proceedings since the question of privilege arises from the exchange between the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. I simply submit to the Chair that yesterday the Prime Minister's proper course was to answer the question. If there was no impropriety, he could simply have said so and that would have ended the matter for the day. I submit as strongly as I can that although the minister's feathers may be ruffled, the point does not constitute a breach of his parliamentary privileges nor a breach of the privileges of this House.

I submit that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton used mild language yesterday, in view of the evidence. It is on the record: it was put there by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and by other questioners involved in the subject matter.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, may I make my own role clear in this matter? My purpose in challenging the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The Prime Minister should be more worried about the next member for Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Trudeau: —was to make sure that the facts were known to this House. I am not raising a question of privilege, although the minister may. My role was to make sure that this House understood the allegation smuggled into the question by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Smile, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: The allegation smuggled into the preamble of the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: In the allegation, the hon. member suggested that there is a public admission that the then minister was allowed input. Mr. Speaker, the minister denied this input. The hon. member made some smokescreen to talk about other things. The essence of the question before the House is that this fact alleged by the hon. member is false. Whether the matter raised amounts to a question of privilege, calls for withdrawal, or anything else, is a matter for the Chair to decide. I want to establish clearly that the allegation was false, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You don't read Hansard.

Mr. Trudeau: It was a false statement of fact, such as the opposition very frequently makes in the preamble to a question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I will call on the hon. member for Annapolis Valley in a moment, but I want to indicate my assessment of the situation. The Chair has been asked to decide two questions: first, whether an allegation was made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton; second, whether a question of privilege exists with respect to the privileges of the Minister of the Environment or all members of the House. I do not think either question is terribly difficult to decide. Both are significant, but I do not think either gives the Chair difficulty. First, it is obvious that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton made an allegation. I cannot think of any other interpretation of language which reads:

> Again, a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the now public admission in the matter of the extension of the Sky Shops lease that the then minister of DREE was allowed input into the question as Quebec leader—

That is an allegation. It could not be interpreted in any other way. I find that it is an allegation. The question I now have to decide is whether it constitutes a question of privilege. I find it does not constitute a question of privilege. It is an allegation which is denied; it is an allegation which has been called false, but it is not an allegation of improper conduct. It is not unparliamentary language, and it is not in any of the confines of the definition of questions of privilege that have been accepted in the past. It is an accusation or allegation made by one member in respect of the conduct of another. It concerns an allegation of fact which is disputed. That is something that occurs rather frequently in the House.

It may constitute a matter of great irritation or debate both inside and outside the House and a matter of considerable significance vis-à-vis the reputation of members on either side of the House, but within the confines of the definition as I understand it, it does not constitute a question of privilege.

PROGRAM FOR REMAINDER OF SESSION

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the length of the present session of parliament. I realize that there is nothing in the rule books that requires the government to prorogue a session of parliament within any given period of time. However, in view of the fact that traditions are being shattered by the length of this present session, which is approaching two years, it seems that parliament ought at some point to be advised whether this session is going to go on and on, or whether the government plans for it to be prorogued within a reasonable time.

I recognize that today is Tuesday, not Thursday. However, since we will not be here on Thursday it is a matter of order that the House be told of the government's plans, not just for the next few days but for the balance of this session. Does it intend to bring the session to an end in 1976? If so, when? What does it expect the House to do between now and whatever date it plans for the session to be ended? There are two questions here: When will the session be prorogued, and when will the summer recess commence? At some point before we rise for the Easter recess the House has the right to have this information communicated to it. I realize that this could perhaps be done tomorrow on the motion regarding the Easter adjournment, but it strikes me it would be useful for us to have his information in advance of that debate. That is why I raise it as a point of order today.

Mr. Speaker: I could not, in fairness, in any of the precedents find that the question raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre constitutes a valid point of order in respect of today's proceedings. Although it is a question of great interest to hon. members, it certainly does not constitute a point of order with respect of today's proceedings. However, it may be a question of sufficient general interest that the House will want to give its consent to allow the President of the Privy Council to comment on it. Does the House give consent to such a comment being made by the President of the Privy Council?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who indicated to me his intention to ask the question today. Under ordinary circumstances I would have made such a statement either on Thursday, if we were sitting, or tomorrow at the time of adjournment. However, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is right and that it will help in the adjournment debate if the House has some indication of the government's plans for the remainder of this session. I might as well give a complete statement of business for today, tomorrow and for the period until we hope to adjourn or prorogue.

Today we will begin with Bill S-31, the Quarantine Act, which I am hopeful will not take very long. When that is concluded we will take the report stage of Bill C-20, the amendments to the Citizenship Act. Hon. members will also recall that there will be a vote on second reading of Bill C-83 at 4.30 p.m. today. Tomorrow we will continue with Bill C-20 and the adjournment motion.

It is the government's purpose to conclude this session to all intents and purposes by June 30 and to begin a new session in the fall. I understand from the attitude of the parties opposite that they share these objectives. I am sure they do not want to sit in July. Indeed, so much is the prospect disliked by some members that I hear rumours about a platoon system on the part of the official opposition so that those who do not want to stay can go home, while the rest bask in the warmth of the July days in Ottawa.

Mr. Paproski: Make a charge, or withdraw.

Mr. Sharp: I withdraw. I know that the opposition would like to bring this session to an end and to have a Speech from the Throne as soon as possible. There are certain bills on the order paper which have high priority, including some in which a great deal of House time has been invested. The government wishes to see these dealt with before the summer adjournment which I repeat, will be, in effect, the end of the new session even if we continue for a very brief period just before the opening of the new session in the fall.

One Bill, C-61, is at third reading. Three Commons bills are at the report stage, namely, C-20, C-68 and C-89, and one bill from the Senate, S-8. Next in order of the investment of House time is Bill C-83, second reading debate on which was concluded yesterday and which now goes to committee. Then we come to four bills which are on the order paper, which have not yet been called for debate but which the government wishes to have disposed of before the summer adjournment, namely, C-81, C-84, C-87 and C-88.

The government has no other major items that it intends to proceed with during the present session, except a budget. It may be necessary, however, to seek approval for two bills, one relating to airport security and one to extend the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act, which should not be controversial. I must add that there may be government decisions in the next couple of months that will require House action, of which I am not now aware.

From now to the end of June there are 13 allotted days. It is my intention to distribute these throughout the weeks that remain, beginning with May 4 and May 7 which I now designate as allotted days. The last allotted day will be June 22. I hope to discuss with the House leaders a full program of allotted days, in the intervening period, for the other ten days. With co-operation from all sides, I am confident that we can achieve our purpose and be able to adjourn and terminate this session to all intents and purposes before the July 1 holiday.

I have omitted from this list Bill C-82 relating to the Thousand Islands bridge because of the illness and absence from the House of the hon. member for Leeds who has a special interest in it. If he returns before June 30, and proceeding with that bill will not interfere with other business, it will be included. Finally, I should perhaps indicate the order of bills when we return after the Easter break. The first order of business will be three bills related to the anti-inflation and restraint program, namely, C-89, C-81 and C-68. It is the government's wish to begin second reading debate on Bill C-84, the bill relating to capital punishment, during the second week of our return, and except for interruptions for allotted days and for the budget, if that should intervene, to continue that second reading debate until it is concluded.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, there is one vital omission in the government's program which will eat up six days of about 30 government days remaining between now and September. That is, the budget. Did the minister mention the budget?

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I apologize. On behalf of the hon. member for Leeds, I want to thank the government House leader for his consideration with regard to the bill dealing with the Thousand Islands bridge. Finally, has he consulted his seatmate with regard to the by-election in Ottawa-Carleton?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister one question with respect to the information he has given us. With regard to the plan for concluding by June 30, that will obviously call for a good deal of co-operation. But is the government now making a firm commitment that the first session of the thirtieth parliament will end in mid-1976 and that a new session will start this fall?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, unless something very untoward occurs, it is our hope to end the session on June 30. Certainly we will not extend it beyond the summer break. I should add, Mr. Speaker, that we may return for a day or so before beginning the new session.

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin) on the same point of order.

Mr. Beaudoin: No, Mr. Speaker, it is on the same question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Since the minister has indicated that this session would be adjourned and that there would be a few days left to discuss the bills he just mentioned, before starting the other session, would the minister say whether it is final one way or another that the summer recess will begin on June 30?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: That is our purpose and our plan. I hope we will receive the utmost co-operation. I am quite sure there can be adequate debate on the remaining items to the satisfaction of the public and of this House if we can program our bills in an orderly way. I hope for the co-operation not only of the House leaders but of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) on the same point of order.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, once again, I should like to respectfully draw your attention to the fact that on motions today, I moved a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43, and when you asked for the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to put this motion, I heard objections being voiced from the Gallery across the floor. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would beg you to kindly put in practice Standing Order 28, which states that a member, when he wants to intervene, must rise in his seat to be identified, because today we have not been able to identify the member who put in an objection to the motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 43. Mr. Speaker, we have realized for some time now that this practice of opposing any motion moved pursuant to Standing Order 43 comes perhaps from the House, but today I have seen people in the gallery who objected to this motion. I cannot understand that we take for granted an objection to any motion being put by someone who must not take part in the House debates because he is not a member.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to try to settle this question once and for all by applying Standing Order 28.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The last time the hon. member raised this question on the same point of order, I tried to explain the situation in French. It might not have been clear. So, I must explain it once more but this time perhaps I should do so in English.

[English]

Standing Order 43 does not envisage speeches on a motion which are described in Standing Order 28. The question to which the House is asked to address itself, pursuant to Standing Order 43, is whether or not it wishes to give its unanimous consent to setting aside whatever business is scheduled for the day in order to debate something else.

Dairy Policy

A withholding of consent might constitute simply an expression of refusal to stop the debate of the day, refusal to stop the question period, or refusal to stop routine proceedings, and have nothing to do with the merits of the question. It is not a speech on the motion, and it is not an expression either of support or rejection of the motion itself. It is simply a question whether or not the consent of the House is given to stopping business at that point and addressing itself to some other matter.

Standing Order 28, which has to do with speeches, is not applicable to Standing Order 43, where the question is whether the business of the day can be set aside in order that the House might proceed to consider something else. That can only be done by unanimous consent, and if there is a single contrary voice, regardless of the side of the House from which it comes, and regardless whether the hon. member wishes to identify himself, a motion under Standing Order 43 cannot be pursued.

STATEMENT ON DAIRY POLICY

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty at this time to announce the dairy program for the 1976-77 dairy year. Effective today, the target returns level for industrial milk has been increased to $11.45 per hundredweight. This is an increase of 43 cents per hundredweight, or 3.9 per cent, and is in line with increased cost of production. The new target returns level is determined in accordance with the long-term dairy policy which I announced last year and which provides for adjustments equal to increased production costs.

The rate of federal subsidy for this year will remain unchanged from that of last year, at $2.66 per hundredweight. This is in keeping with the government's wish to moderate as much as possible the increase in dairy products prices in the interests of both the producer and the consumer.

In order that the target return of $11.45 per hundredweight be attained, the Canadian Dairy Commission, on behalf of the producers of industrial milk, will offer to purchase butter and skim milk powder from processors at higher prices. The support price for butter will increase 5 cents, to $1.08 per pound. The support price for skim milk powder will increase 4 cents, to 68 cents per pound.

Part of the reason for overproduction of industrial milk during the past year was insufficient control through the use of quota. The industry has no choice but to tighten its controls this year to bring industrial mild production down from its current high levels. The provinces and producer organizations, whose co-operation is essential, have recognized and agreed to this.

Taking into consideration the amount of stocks and projected demand for dairy products, the Canadian Milk Supply Management Committee, which is made up of representatives of producers and provincial governments and is chaired by the Canadian Dairy Commission, has estimated that domestic requirements are 95 million hundredweight of industrial milk for 1976-77. This will be the maximum volume eligible for the direct subsidy of $2.66 per hundredweight.

In keeping with the fact that actual shipments of industrial milk are usually somewhat less than total market share quota, and that production of industrial milk must be curtailed, the total amount of market share quota to be allocated to provincial milk marketing agencies will be 100.5 million hundredweight. Should producers ship more than 94.5 per cent of their individual quota, a levy of $8.60 per hundredweight will be charged on all shipments exceeding 94.5 per cent of quota. A year-end adjustment will be made to assure that the $8.60 levy will apply only to shipments in excess of 95 million hundredweight.

Any milk shipped in excess of individual quota holdings will have the penalty of $8.60 per hundredweight applied, and there will be no chance for refund on any deliveries in excess of quota. The levy on all in-quota deliveries has been increased to $1.35 per hundredweight in accordance with our policy.

I realize that bringing milk production in line with demand will be a difficult adjustment for dairy farmers. But to operate an effective supply-management system, producers should not exceed domestic market demands. After all, this is what supply management means.

I wish to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that dairy farmers must reduce their shipments of industrial milk now, and not starting next fall or winter near the close of the dairy year. I do not want farmers continuing along at present high levels of production and adding to our surplus only quickly to deplete their herds at the end of the dairy year in order to avoid shipping more milk than their annual quota allows. That sort of irresponsible action would result in too few cows remaining to start off the subsequent dairy year, and possibly in a shortage of milk or milk products a few years from now.

[Mr. Whelan.]

To accomplish an early cutback in production, and yet not to overreact to the situation, I am asking the provincial milk marketing agencies to implement a monthly allocation of market share quotas to each individual producer. If a province does not establish a satisfactory system of controls, I have instructed the Canadian Dairy Commission to take whatever action it thinks is appropriate to achieve the desired goals.

One of the major areas of concern to me is the separation of the fluid and industrial milk markets. It is apparent that milk producers would benefit from a complete integration of both industrial and fluid milk markets. I believe that producers should receive equal returns for milk of equal quality, whether the milk is intended for manufacturing or fluid sales. I am asking the Canadian Dairy Commission to consult with the provincial milk marketing boards during the year to work out a program for complete integration of their fluid and industrial milk markets. This basis could provide a system for future federal subsidy programs. I am also asking the commission to review, within the framework of approved policy, other aspects of the program in their entirety.

While the year ahead will be a difficult one for the dairy producer, I want to reiterate that the government remains deeply committed to the dairy industry. The government will be paying subsidies of $253 million directly to producers and $24 million for marketing costs. In addition, product prices will be supported at $1.08 per pound of butter and 68 cents per pound of skim milk powder. To provide the necessary support, the government is increasing its loan limit to the Canadian Dairy Commission from $300 million to $334 million to finance the purchase of these products. It is also limiting cheese imports to 50 million pounds.

The Canadian International Development Agency has also been instructed to investigate thoroughly the possibility of increasing the skim milk powder component of its food aid program either through a bilateral arrangement or through the world food program in countries or on projects where it can be beneficially used. I was told just before entering the House, Mr. Speaker, that CIDA had decided to buy $20 million worth of skim milk powder, which will eliminate some of the dairy farmers' costs, etc. At world prices, this amounts to approximately 75 million to 80 million pounds of skim milk powder that the dairy farmers will not have to finance.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize that good supply management is the key to the continued prosperity of the Canadian dairy industry. It remains the policy of the governement to ensure that efficient producers of milk and cream are given the opportunity to earn reasonable returns. The policy which this government has adopted for the current dairy year will ensure that these aims are met.

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, upon review of this statement and upon pondering its effects for the future, one is encouraged to strengthen one's suspicions and doubts about this government's real intention to support a domestic dairy industry with any real, continuing stability. Agricultural subsidies, and particularly dairy subsidies, benefit producers and consumers alike. This announcement once again underlines the fact that it is this government's intention to shrink, and shrink substantially, Canada's dairy industry and to continue its policy of forcing producers to get every cent of their income in the future from the market place.

This is disturbing news to producers, but it carries with it equally severe and serious implications for the consuming public. Actual returns to producers could in the future be reduced, and market prices for dairy products likely will increase and consumption could well decline. Support appears to be reduced by some $22 million—$275 million as compared to $253 million—and it is estimated that an additional $40 million will be required from the total to cover some of the administration costs, some interest costs and storage fees, of which only $24 million will be paid either by the federal government or the Canadian Dairy Commission. Thus, a considerable portion will again fail to end up at the producer level.

It should be pointed out that when the program was announced last year with its target price of $11.02—a figure, by the way, that producers did not actually receive—the cost of production was not met then. Taking into account reductions in subsidy payments, haulage, export levies, licence fees and advertising, the amount received by producers was approximately $8.76 a hundredweight, or some $2.27 per hundredweight less than the target price.

It is widely recognized that the cost of producing one hundred pounds of milk varies. However, many well-documented cost studies indicate a figure in the neighbourhood of $14. With this figure in mind, and given the support price of $2.66 a hundredweight, producers are in fact actually subsidizing dairy products to the tune of $3 a hundredweight from their own operations. Some people may ask: How can such a statement be true; how can it be possible? Let me answer them, Mr. Speaker, by saying that it is true and it is also commonplace. It is possible because the milk cheque income must be supplemented by sales of breeding stock, by sales of cash crops, and in many cases must be supplemented by off-the-farm income.

I am not quarrelling with the minister with respect to world stocks of skim milk powder. However, the government's record in regard to skim milk powder for export sales and world food aid must be regarded as nothing less than a complete failure. Particularly at a time of surplus product, Canada's commitment remains at a shamefully low level. At a time when our domestic stocks are in a surplus position, it is unacceptable to learn that our commitment has been reduced. I am certain that most Canadians would agree that the need for world food aid has drastically increased over the past ten years. Canada's current commitment through CIDA of skim milk powder for aid is 1¾ million pounds less than our last ten-year average. I trust that the minister's instruction to CIDA will be more successful in the future than the past record indicates.

The minister's statement also made reference to quotas on cheese imports. Another unfortunate aspect of this government's inaction relates to the refusal to reduce cheese import quotas. Importation of cheese has risen drastically, from 31 million pounds in 1970 to 50 million pounds in 1975. This government has ignored the traditional method of calculation that is based on a five-year average. Calculated in this manner, we would have a quota of 38 million pounds, a limit much more in tune with the needs of Canadian producers and the industry. It has been indicated by a leading industry spokesman that every million pounds of chese imports results in a loss to Canadian producers of approximately $360,000. Thus, a reduction of 10 million pounds would result in savings to the industry of some $3.6 million.

I am not quarrelling with the minister about our present domestic surplus position. There are reasons for this that should be recognized, taken seriously and given full consideration. Most of the causes are not of the producers' own making. For example, we have had some excellent weather conditions during the past season. We have experienced declines in the number of exports of dary heifers, and we have had larger than normal numbers of older dairy cows still being held because of low beef prices. There are factors largely, if not totally, beyond the producers' control.

Canadian producers welcome the opportunity to compete in a fair marketplace but they cannot, and should not, be expected to compete in a marketplace filled with heavily subsidized products from foreign competitors. In addition, they should not have to stand alone against the treasuries of the European Economic Community in the world market, which is the case at the present time. The industry has requested that some special assistance be given to producers to overcome their world market disadvantage.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am certain that many of my colleagues on this side of the House will have questions. I would respectfully repeat the three suggestions or recommendations I made previously to the minister and his officials. First, the minister should continue actively to pursue the possibility of an effective supply management program at the national level as it relates to fluid milk production. Second, policy changes should create an incentive to even out year-round production. These two factors would match more closely supply with demand; thus, a reduction in surplus stocks would obviously result. Third, the government should transfer the control of import permits from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to the Canadian Dairy Commission.

The content of the minister's statement recognizes some of the difficulties in the industry. However, its success relies heavily upon the producers' ability to match supply to demand. I am confident that the producers will fulfil their obligations, but I doubt that this government will be equally successful in meeting its obligations.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in considering the statement the minister has just made, the only thing I can say is that it is not worse than we anticipated, but obviously it does not make the situation much better. If the farmers of Canada supplying the dairy manufacturing industry were to receive $11.45 on 100 per cent of supply management quotas, those farmers would be very happy. The farmers do not receive that kind of money. While it is true that as a result of the government's policies we have been able to raise the price of industrial milk by 43 cents a hundred, we have at the same time reduced the anticipated size of global consumption as a result of increasing the price of butter by five cents and the price of skim milk powder by four cents. One of the problems results from the fact that the federal dairy policy does not, through market sharing quota arrangements, allow for a longer period of time, which is absolutely necessary in designing a program to meet the needs of dairy farmers.

The minister says we can increase production per cow. A dairy farmer operates on the basis of a herd and he has to make plans before deciding how much production he should have. If this is to be changed every three months, as has been the case in the past year, there is no way the dairy farmer can remain in a healthy state. For those farmers who are producing over 94.5 per cent of their quotas there will be a reduction, bringing the return below the farm cost of production. It would be much more honest on the part of the minister if rather than saying that the federal subsidy rate will be $2.66 per hundred, he had said the subsidy would be $1.31 on quota milk. Right now there is a deduction from all in-quota milk of $1.35, which leaves the federal subsidy at $1.31, not $2.66.

If we reduced the over-quota milk and the in-quota milk, the farmer would be left with something like 20 cents a hundred for producing milk. We should be very interested in this aspect of the matter because of its great implications not only for the dairy industry but in respect of the production of beef, pork and probably poultry as well.

If the farmer is to receive something in the neighbourhood of 20 cents a hundred for the milk he ships over quota, has $8.60 plus $1.31 deducted, and has to pay a transportation cost, he will find that shipping the milk to market will cost him money. The farmer is smart enough to know that he should buy a couple of pigs or start raising some veal. In this way the farmer will have to operate the dairy production safety valve on his own.

One of our major tasks in this country is to create a dairy industry that is able to meet Canadian requirements as well as producing for the export market. If a farmer has to decide, on a daily basis, how much milk he puts into the bulk tank, and knows if he puts too much in and only receives 20 cents per hundred it will cost him money, he will then open the safety valve and move into other production. This is particularly true if the farmer has to pay a transportation charge of, say, 75 cents. He will then end up with a net loss of considerably more than 50 cents. This will result in an increased production of beef, pork and poultry products.

As the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) said earlier, dairy farmers are concerned about the deal the minister made last November in relation to the export market. I gather from the November statement that we agreed to relate 10 per cent of our total manufactured dairy production to our imports of dairy products. The $50 million we have agreed to import in cheese production represents about 5 per cent of our manufactured production. It is not difficult to envisage that we will be importing other commodities, bringing us to that 10 per cent range without any exports at all.

Like the egg business, we have more exports than imports. We import eggs at the full table price but we export them at the breaker trade price. We export more eggs. But this is much like the skim milk powder business; we export a considerable amount of powder, but we do so at a loss. Who accepts that loss? I suggest it is not the government, but the loss is being absorbed by the farmers themselves.

I think it behooves every member of this House, whether interested in consumers or producers, to demand of the government that we develop a much more far-seeing dairy program than this, get away from the yearly quota and make a decision concerning what we anticipate to be the needs of the Canadian public. We should meet those needs and get whatever export sales we can. This should be done in conjunction with the provinces. The province of Ontario recently signed an agreement with the minister and that province is very unhappy with the agreement: it has written a long letter to the minister outlining ten or 12 reasons why it is dissatisfied. The province of Quebec has given the year's notice that will allow it to get out of the national share quota arrangement.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Peters: Because there is not enough money. It is not satisfactory to the province of Quebec. The dairy farmers there are not satisfied. They are getting out for that reason. I am sorry the minister did not indicate that the dairy industry, through government assistance, would be able to go into the international markets through CIDA. We are quite pleased with the amount of $20 million he announced for the skim milk proposals in respect of CIDA. However, I think we have an opportunity to get into some of the other markets again. This may have to be subsidized, but it would not have to be subsidized to the amount the farmer now has to pay if he pays the two levies for in-quota and above-quota milk.

I think the farmer would be willing to make a contribution to an export levy more in keeping with the total requirements of the Canadian dairy industry. No farmer will be particularly pleased with the announcement made by the minister today. In the long run, I think we will see again, as we did last year, that when the consumer has to pay more, there is a reduction in the amount he will consume. This will be true in respect of butter, cheese and fluid milk.

I think it behooves the minister to really give some leadership in the development of a school milk program. I think it is interesting to note that a sister commonwealth provides free milk in all hotels. There is a milk bar in all the lobbies, and they provide milk in all the hotel rooms. They also provide milk in the schools. I do not think we want to interfere with the brewery industry, but surely we could get rid of the pop drink machines in the schools and put in milk. The minister is interested in this, but I suggest he has not done a very good job in selling this program to his colleagues. He should get some help from the backbenchers who represent consumers, if not the agricultural industry. The establishment of a program which on a long-term basis will keep the Canadian dairy industry healthy is absolutely necessary for all segments of the Canadian population.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, industrial milk producers had been waiting the minister's statement since March 29. It should be particularly recalled that on March 29, during the producers' demonstration on Parliament Hill, the minister said he would make a statement on the dairy policy for 1976-77 before April 1. However, he made this statement only today, April 13. I had an inkling that the delay would spell bad news for the producers.

For several months, industrial milk producers have seen their income shrink considerably and they fear the worst for the year 1976. The producers organized meetings with their hon. members to make governments aware of their problems and during these meetings, there was a clear indication that it was at that time, and that it is still today, a political problem and that in order to maintain the producers' incomes at the 1975 level, the federal government must inject a supplement of $40 million in the economic sector. By the way, I should like to say that any government investing in agriculture makes an excellent investment because this is the basic industry of a country. As the government party claims to be on the side of power, he had to decide whether the producers would see their income reduced in the year 1976.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of power, we must be clear on this. Does government majority represent the real power or, on the contrary, is real power represented by high finance which commands the majority government to the extent that they are restricted in their financial means, which prevents them from acceding to the fair demands of industrial milk producers? People can think anything they want but it remains that the dairy industry is very important since it provides more than 300,000 jobs throughout Canada, including the producers themselves. It gives work to many truck drivers, it creates many jobs in manufacturing, packing, transportation industries and so on. It means that this industry helps the other sectors of activity of our economy.

When we talk about subsidies to support the dairy industry some people think it is the only industry that is subsidized in Canada. We often forget to evaluate how many millions of dollars in subsidies of all kinds are given to national and multinational corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to underline the following point: milk subsidies are some kind of additional revenue which is beneficial to consumers. If some day the consumer is asked to pay from his own revenue the real value of such or such dairy product he will realize that it will be even harder on his budget and that he will have to spend a major part of his revenue for food.

On the producers' side if a part of the products is paid directly by the consumers and the other part by the government it does not really change the situation, provided the producer can, when selling his product, recover his production costs plus a reasonable profit margin to earn a living at least equal to that of those working in other sectors of the economic activity.

In some countries, Mr. Speaker, the government subsidize up to 75 per cent of dairy products value. It is from those countries that we import some products and indirectly the problems we now experience are caused in part by those overly massive imports.

The minister tells us that we must reduce our dairy production to get better prices. The minister should know that it cannot be controlled like a water pipe can be controlled with a tap.

Two years ago producers were asked to increase their production. They responded. Nature helping, production was excellent in 1975. Another factor that prompted producers to improve production was the drop in beef prices. More cows were kept in the herd while farmers waited for better prices to take them to the slaughterhouse.

In any event, the president of the APU and the president of the Federated Cooperative sent a letter to the Prime Minister to bring to his attention the very nature of the problem and suggest possible solutions. First, they asked for a basic price of $11.42; second, that the subsidy of $2.66 be maintained; third, that cheese imports be reduced to 39 million; fourth, that the support price be raised by $30 million and an additional budget of $19 million approved to compensate the producer who must cut down on his production.

Well, the minister's reply today is that he will boost the price of milk by 43 cents a hundredweight to offset higher production costs. On the other hand, in another part of his statement, he informs producers that the export levy will be $1.35, 70 cents more than in the fall of 1975.

In brief, the situation will be worse than in 1975-76. In 1975-76, the government spent $270 million to support producers' prices, a subsidy of $2.66 a hundredweight, and at the same time last year the levy was 45 cents a hundredweight and the basic price $11.02. In 1976-77, the government anticipates $253 million will be paid directly to producers, the subsidy will remain at $2.66, on the other hand, the levy will be $1.35, the basic price $11.45, which means that compared with the same time last year, that represents 47 cents a hundredweight less when producers asked precisely for a raise at least equal to the increases provided by the Anti-Inflation Board through Bill C-73, and the opposite happens, we will have a drop in incomes.

Well, the way things are going, I do think indeed that it will be very difficult for young people to get into farming with any hope of success. Agriculture will slow down and one day or another our production will not be sufficient and we will have to import. When a country imports too much food to satisfy its needs, it becomes dependant on others. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we should not agree to a policy that is different for everyone. Because of a light surplus, the incomes of industrial milk producers are being reduced and on the other hand, as far as labour is concerned, wages are not reduced because there are 800,000 unemployed, because some people do not work. Those who do work are paid for what they do.

The same should apply to the dairy industry. To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to note that millions of dollars are being wasted in various departments for all kinds of reasons. One only has to check the accounts of the Auditor General to realize that there is mismanagement in many places. When it comes to agriculture, they immediately say they cannot give more and farmers are being called a "bunch of bawlers".

People who cannot take care of their own affairs are always obliged to complain to the state. I wish these people who behave in this way would set an example by going to the country; let them buy a farm, make up a herd and show us their turnovers, which will enable us to check whether they can do better than those we are referring to today. It is a matter of simple reasoning and common sense.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we took a step backward today with this reduction of the incomes of industrial milk producers. In closing, I wish I will see the day when we can have in Canada a milk pool so that this dispute between fresh milk and industrial milk producers may come to an end. At that time, I believe we shall have a very valid solution to our problem and be able to hope that this industry will survive and that those who are involved in the dairy industry will receive higher incomes.

[English]

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, the minister giveth, and the minister taketh away. I asked a question of the minister a few months ago, and in it I pointed out that farmers this year are getting less than they did 18 months ago. That was denied, but I checked and it is true. A farmer staying within his quota—and goodness knows, without his quota he will get no money—will actually get 47 cents less than he got last year. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) says 46 cents, but I say 47 cents less.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, it all depends on what the production is. The farmers agreed with this policy, and agreed to pay the storage costs, the marketing costs of this product on the world market, etc., and we put in an extra $200 million last year. We are putting in an extra $49 million this year. We are putting approximately $84 million more into the dairy industry this year than last year. The cheques of dairy farmers may be less because they are paying—and they agreed to pay—for the world distribution of the surplus product. That is what they are involved in, and that is what the levy is for. That is what the hon. member is talking about. They will have to pay the extra levy. If the hon. member thinks I am happy about that, he is wrong. This is not all my doing. It is partly their doing and also the doing of the provincial marketing boards.

Mr. Ellis: The fact is that the farmer is getting less in his pay cheque every month than he was getting last year. In order to stay within the quota, I should like to ask the minister if there is any other way—other than in fact killing off producing animals—to cut back a farmer's quota in this dairy year.

Mr. Whelan: I do not fully understand what the hon. member means by "killing off" animals. We know that there were many dairy cows which should have been called from herds last year, and they were not mainly because, as was said by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), beef prices were low, so those cows were kept in production one year longer. We estimate that there are at the present time between 150,000 and 200,000 dairy cows which should be called from dairy herds. Whether they will be, I do not know; but we do know there is a larger number going to market at the present time because the price for kill cows is better than it has been for over two years. Good kill cows bring about 30 cents per pound. The hon. member is trying to intimate that we are giving dairy farmers less, and that the government cares less about dairy farmers. The reason I did not bring in this program before April 1 was that we were trying to work out the very best program we could.

It amounts to approximately $84 million more being put into this program. The farmers will have to pay part of that back, but they agreed to do so. The dairy farmers of Canada agreed to that kind of policy. It will create hardship for some dairy farmers; there is no doubt about that. But if hon. members are suggesting we should put in a few hundred million dollars more, they should say so.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, regarding cheese imports, we know that they have been held at 50 million pounds this year. The minister mentioned that in his statement. What happens next year? The minister says he now has a long-term dairy policy. We have asked for that for years. But will he change the rules in the middle of the game next year? Will he go back to what he originally decided upon? Just how can people make plans for the future?

Mr. Whelan: Never before last year did we have an import control system. We initiated the import permit system for bringing specialty cheeses into Canada. Never before did we have that. It was hailed by dairy farmers and by the dairy processing industry as a good thing because they needed that protection. We said that we would work toward allowing increased imports into our country, but at the same time we also said we would work toward making Canada self-sufficient in its own dairy needs. That may sound contradictory, but we also made a statement to the effect that the figure will not increase above 50 million pounds this year.

We are also negotiating with the countries which are subsidizing those cheese products into Canada and trying to work out a proper program so that their treasuries will discontinue the high subsidization of some of those cheese products coming into Canada. As it stands, our cheese producers and dairy farmers cannot compete. I do not intend to allow this figure to increase, and as long as I am Minister of Agriculture I will work toward decreasing it and making sure that farmers do not have to compete unfairly with regard to these products.

These products come mainly from 16 countries, but as many as 27 countries export specialty cheeses to Canada. Some of them export in small amounts. Our processors would never process cheese in the minute quantities which are coming in, because it would not be economic for them. They have told me that with the present facilities for cheese manufacturing in Canada, the most they would be able to produce would be 75 per cent specialty cheeses.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the minister on more than one occasion has expressed his concern over the importation into Canada of heavily subsidized dairy products from abroad. He said at one point the government may be prepared to take some action with respect to this. Assuming the minister is unsuccessful in persuading foreign governments who are currently subsidizing dairy products which they are dumping on the market in Canada, is the minister willing to make representations to his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to decrease the quota of cheese allowed to be imported into Canada?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, that was seriously considered. We thought of decreasing the quota from 50 million pounds to 40 million pounds of cheese a year. I work very closely with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and naturally his officials and mine are in consultation on this matter at all times. They are the ones who are trying to negotiate in this matter. The United States was successful in negotiating with the exporters of cheese to their country so that they no longer have highly subsidized cheese coming into the United States. Often the United States is pictured as having a great system of free marketing, but in fact they only allow 3 per cent of their dairy products to be imported into the country. Our country allows 5 per cent.

Mr. Beatty: What I am trying to get clear from the minister is how long he will continue to allow foreign countries to dump heavily subsidized dairy products on Canadian markets. When will the government be prepared to take action if these other countries refuse to change their policy, and when will the government decide to impose much greater restrictions on the importation of heavily subsidized dairy products into Canada?

Mr. Whelan: I think we must recognize that many of the cheeses that come into Canada are high-priced cheeses. We are negotiating in particular with countries which are exporting highly subsidized commodities to Canada. If we do not make the progress which I think we should, I will be recommending to my colleagues in cabinet that we take some other form of action to make sure that our producers do not have to compete in an unfair manner with this type of product.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I intend to put an end to these questions by recognizing the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), then the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), and finally the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain).

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, following the meeting the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has had with his provincial counterparts, can he inform the House whether limits on margarine production, or butter substitute, as well as synthetic ice cream were discussed as they were before 1960? The minister knows, of course, that before 1960 the provinces had control over margarine production and volume. At the present time, I believe they have very little control and margarine accounts for an ever larger slice of the market.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: No, Mr. Speaker, we have not discussed that with the provinces. We have discussed with them an advertising program to sell dairy products, not just put them on a shelf in some supermarket or dairy store and hope people will buy them. We have a high quality product which we think can be sold, and we just hope people will buy it. We know there are many uses for dairy products of which perhaps the public is not aware. For instance, even with the increase in the price of skim milk powder, people will be paying approximately 18½ cents for a 40-ounce drink. With one pound of skim milk powder you get four quarts of milk, which means that you have 40 ounces for 18½ cents. You could not even get the best soft drink at that price, and it would have none of the protein, minerals and vitamins that skim milk powder has.

● (1630)

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I will probably have to ask a twofold question, since I think my time is running short. The minister is aware of the representations which have been made by the federation that storage costs be fully absorbed by the government, and that the deduction not be increased but remain stable at 65 cents. If this deduction has gone up to $1.35, and the minister is referring to an additional credit of $84 million under the dairy policy, I figure that those $84 million the minister is referring to will be shared between the producer and the government. What thus would be the percentage the producer will have to contribute in those $84 million? Since the minister said that the producers had accepted these proposals, I would like him to tell us clearly whether the producers have accepted the program he has submitted to us this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I said in my presentation to the House earlier that it would be $24 million. In the past we have paid, automatically, $9 million in storage costs, etc., but this year it will be $24 million. However, the very fact that CIDA is putting $20 million into the program to take ownership of approximately 75 million pounds of skim milk powder will mean that dairy farmers will not have to handle storage, financing costs, holding charges, etc., for the product. On world markets that could mean between 75 million and 80 million pounds of skim milk powder sold, and this would alleviate the storage problem here and it would eliminate the surplus problem. The storage problem and costs are of great concern to producers, and CIDA's action in this respect will alleviate it greatly.

Mr. McCain: In order that the minister's program works, the provinces must know what the individual provincial quotas are, and the governmental structure of the commission itself must have ways and means of verifying the amounts of milk delivered province by province. Is the machinery in place so that each province will get its fair quota of milk, and can they be confident that the statistical reports in this regard will be accurate and fair?

Mr. Whelan: Yes, Mr. Speaker, because last year each industrial milk producer was on a strict quota. They will be monitored month by month and watched closely, something which could not be done in the dairy year 1975-76.

CRITERIA FOR ADMISSION TO QUEBEC REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

Question No. 4,161—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

What are the criteria for admission of an inmate to the Quebec Regional Psychiatric Centre?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): The same criteria apply to all Regional Psychiatric Centres. The major group of cases which receives priority for psychiatric treatment is, naturally, those suffering from acute mental illness and then those whose illnesses are either sub-acute or chronic. This is comparable with the criteria used in any psychiatric treatment to such patients, the Psychiatric Centres of the Canadian Penitentiary Service have also been given the task of developing pilot treatment programs for such groups as sexual offenders, drug addicts and offenders with personality disorders.

CRITERIA FOR ADMISSION TO THE ONTARIO REGIONAL PSYCHIATRIC CENTRE

PROGRAMS IN PENITENTIARIES FOR PERSONS OF NATIVE ANCESTRY

Question No. 4,440—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Do penitentiaries have programmes for persons of native ancestry and, if so (a) which penitentiaries (b) what types of programmes and, in each case, are they staffed by the government or by volunteers from outside groups?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Yes. (a) Springhill Institution, Dorchester Penitentiary, Westmorland Institution, Millhaven Institution, Prison for Women, Collins Bay Institution, Regional Reception Centre (Ontario), Joyceville Institution, Warkworth Institution, Bowden Institution, Drumheller Institution, Rockwood Institution, Saskatchewan Penitentiary, Saskatchewan Farm Annex, Stony Mountain Institution, British Columbia Penitentiary, Mountain Prison, Matsqui Institution, William Head Institution, Agassiz Correctional Camp, Robson Centre, Ferndale Institution, (b) Outside participants include community members and families. Native community organizations are awarded contracts to provide services to particular institutions by means of a Native Liaison Officer delegated by that organization. The programs consist in providing liaison services with native inmates, native communities and families of inmates. Some provide an alcohol and drug abuse training program. They help the inmate to maintain an identification with the people to native origin. The members are often involved in developing folklore and learning native crafts. The groups meet regularly and guest speakers are invited occasionally.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—STOLEN WEAPONS AND UNACCOUNTED INVENTORY LOSS OF WEAPONS

Question No. 4,612—Mr. Whiteway:

For the year 1975, were firearms or other military weapons stolen, or inventory unaccounted for in the Armed Forces and, if so, in each case (a) what was the model name, (b) how many, (c) what was the value?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): From the large number of fire arms used in the Regular Forces as well as in the Reserves and in the Cadet units including weapons lost on training exercises less than 20 weapons are currently unaccounted for. Details are set out in the following statement.

CONSUMER FRAUD

Question No. 4,923—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

Since January 1973, has the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or any other governmental agency responsible for products inspection imposed any fines on Canadian merchants guilty of consumer fraud and, if so, what (a) was the total amount, (b) was the total number of merchants involved, (c) was the number of merchants involved by province, (d) was the average amount of fines, by province, (e) use was made of the money derived from the fines?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Since January 1973, the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has prosecuted Canadian merchants for consumer fraud offences. The fines of course, were imposed by the courts. (a) $64,620; (b) 227; (c) Newfoundland, 3; P.E.I., 0; Nova Scotia, 2; New Brunswick, 1; Quebec, 113; Ontario, 93; Manitoba, 3; Saskatchewan, 7; Alberta, 4; British Columbia, 1; Total, 227. (d) Newfoundland, $200; P.E.I., not applicable; Nova Scotia, $137 New Brunswick, $50; Quebec, $230; Ontario, $275; Manitoba, $2,200; Saskatchewan, $421; Alberta, $175; British Columbia, $100. (e) The money derived from fines is put into the consolidated Revenue Fund for use by the government.

FATTAH REPORT

Question No. 4,943—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What was the cost of Dr. Ezzat Abdel Fattah's report on public attitudes toward capital punishment in Canada?

2. How many persons did Dr. Fattah interview and, in each case, what was their (a) religion, (b) language, (c) age?

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. $5,762.

2. Dr. E. A. Fattah did not interview anyone. The report reviews the existing research literature on public attitudes towards capital punishment in Canada. This literature included a variety of systematic surveys of adults representing all major religion, language and age groups in Canada.

MR. MICHAEL McCABE

Question No. 4,949—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. Was the position of Assistant Deputy Minister in the Bureau of Consumer Affairs, recently filled by Mr. Michael McCabe, advertised and, if so (a) in what locations, (b) was a previous competition held for the same position prior to Mr. McCabe's appointment?

2. Did Mr. Michael McCabe run as a candidate for the Liberal Party at any time, either federally or provincially?

3. Has Mr. Michael McCabe worked previously for a cabinet minister and, if so (a) on what dates, (b) in what capacity?

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. No, the position was filled following an internal competition within the Public Service. (a) Not applicable. (b) The previous incumbent was appointed as a result of a similar competitive process.

2. No.

3. Yes. (a) April 1963, June 1968. (b) Executive Assistant.

CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (NO. 1), 1976

MEASURES FOR BETTER PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SOCIETY AGAINST CRIME

The House resumed, from Monday, April 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford that Bill C-83, for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Four-thirty.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 4.30 o'clock, pursuant to order made Thursday, April 8, the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) to Bill C-83, an act for the better protection of Canadian society against perpetrators of violent and other crime, and every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the said bill. Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Woolliams) which was negatived on the following division.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt)—Finance—Monitoring of income of insurance agents in British Columbia—Government position; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) Trade—Effect of repeal of section 272 of Railway Act on flour and grain exports—Government action.

It being five o'clock, pursuant to order made Friday, February 27, 1976, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills. Is it understood and agreed that the public bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Bill C-311, shall be considered at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Citizenship

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE TIME OFF WITHOUT LOSS OF PAY FOR APPEARANCE IN CITIZENSHIP COURT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that Bill C-311, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act (time off without loss of pay for appearance in Citizenship Court), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-311 is a very short bill which would add just one new clause to the Canadian Citizenship Act. I think I could best indicate what the new clause would do if I were to read its actual wording, which is as follows:

An applicant for a certificate of citizenship who is required under any of the provisions of this Act to appear before the court, when such applicant is regularly employed during the time he is required to appear, shall be granted by his employer such time off work, up to a maximum of three hours for any one appearance, as may be necessary to enable the applicant to appear before the court, and no employer shall make any deduction from the pay of any such employee nor impose upon or exact from him any penalty by reason of his absence from his work for the length of time specified in this section, provided that the absence is for the purpose specified herein.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that those words as set out in Bill C-311 are proposed by the bill to be made a new section 29.1 of the Canadian Citizenship Act. The only change that would have to be made relates to the question of where that new clause would be inserted. As hon. members are aware, a new Canadian Citizenship Act is under way, Bill C-20; indeed it will be under debate later today.

When I suggest that the new clause be numbered 29.1, that is in relation to the act as it now stands. After all, I have no alternative but to seek to amend the law as it stands; I cannot at this point propose to amend a law that has not yet been passed. Offhand I would say that perhaps the best place to put this proposed clause in the new bill would be following clause 26. In other words, if it were made section 26.1 instead of 29.1 it would fit in the new bill quite appropriately.

I suggest that the idea contained in this bill is one of those good ideas—call it a motherhood provision if you wish—to which no one can really take any objection. Despite the difficulties that private members have in this hour with their bills, I hope that this bill will be looked upon sympathetically. Certainly I would have no objection if instead of passing the bill as it is, the House would refer the subject matter to the appropriate committee, but I hope that the House will be quite ready to accept the idea itself.

I have borrowed the idea from the Canada Elections Act. As all hon. members are aware, there is a provision in that legislation that permits an elector on election day to have a certain amount of time off work without loss of pay in order to enable him to cast his vote in a federal election. If—and I am sure we do—we regard the applying for and obtaining of Canadian citizenship an important matter, I think that those persons who take this step should be encouraged to go through with it, should be encouraged to appear before the court when they have to make an application, and should be encouraged to appear before the court when their citizenship certificate is granted. In some cases this does present a hardship, namely, that pay is lost. In the case of the Canada Elections Act, of course, we made a provision that could apply quite often in a person's lifetime. Here we are making a provision that could apply only once in a person's lifetime.

So, Mr. Speaker, I present the idea to the House. I do not think it needs to be argued at length; it is a very simple proposal. I have read the whole of the clause. As I say, the proposal is quite direct, namely, that applicants for citizenship who have to appear before a court of citizenship for any reason should be given up to three hours off work without loss of pay in order for them to make that appearance.

In the explanatory notes to the bill I have explained what it does, but I have this sentence at the end:

It is felt that persons seeking Canadian citizenship should be granted this recognition of the importance of the step they are taking.

That is the way I feel about it, Mr. Speaker. Applying for and obtaining citizenship is an important step, and this bit of recognition is well worth the favourable consideration of the House of Commons. I hope the House will pronounce favourably on the idea during this private members' hour.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has drawn to our attention a financial difficulty that may be faced by some applicants for citizenship in Canada. The question he has raised is well worthy of our attention—the possible financial cost of taking time off from work to appear before a citizenship court in the course of acquiring Canadian citizenship. He has said this is a very important step in the life of an applicant, as indeed it is. It is taken once in a lifetime. It is a very solemn moment not only for the applicant but, indeed, an important moment for all citizens of Canada. The hon. member has suggested we should give some recognition to that importance. I am going to argue that the government and the Parliament of Canada have given very great importance to that moment and, in fact, have taken more appropriate means than those suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to cope with what may be for some a financial difficulty.

The hon. member proposes that employers be required by law to grant up to three hours in time and pay for any one appearance by an applicant for citizenship. He suggests that such a requirement in our law would be similar to the requirement in the Canada Elections Act regarding time off and pay regulations. I think this is very different from that circumstance, as I will attempt to show in the course of my remarks.

While the hon. member's objective of removing any possible serious financial obstacle is a desirable one, the means proposed do not appear to me to be necessary nor, indeed, appropriate, and may in fact be of doubtful constitutional validity, although it is not on that latter point that I would rest my argument.

Other means have been developed and are in the course of being developed to accomplish the same thing; that is, to alleviate possible financial difficulties and to do this in a way that does not transfer the burden to the employer. We should, therefore, assess rather carefully what appears on the surface to be an attractive proposal. We should assess how difficult or serious the problem is and whether it can be resolved better in some other way, as I believe it can, and whether in fact it is being resolved better in some other fashion, as I believe it is.

Under the present act, an applicant for citizenship must go to the office of the citizenship court on three occasions. He must go first to make an application and this involves documentation. On the second occasion, the applicant attends a hearing before a citizenship judge and this involves an assessment of whether the applicant meets the requirements of the act. On the third occasion, the applicant attends a presentation ceremony during which he or she takes the oath of allegiance.

The time-frame mentioned in the hon. member's bill is undoubtedly appropriate and covers any one or all of these three occasions when the applicant goes before one of the offices of the court, that is to say, three hours. Some of these occasions may be over within 15 minutes and some may in fact extend for roughly three hours.

What is being done currently to face up to the possible problem raised by the hon. member? Over the past three or four years the Department of the Secretary of State has developed an outreach program to meet the very problem raised by the hon. member, as well as to encourage landed immigrants to come forward with applications and to take that very important and solemn step of becoming a citizen of Canada. The outreach program consists of three services: first, storefront offices, second, mobile teams of examiners; third, night courts. One could add a fourth, the practice of the courts of scheduling appearances by appointment or arrangement. In addition to these outreach services, which I should like to describe at greater length, there are 15 citizenship courts in Canada and some 12 sub-courts to meet the convenience of applicants.

Let us consider for the moment the outreach services. The storefront offices have been established in the centres of greatest pressure, that is to say, in Toronto and Montreal where there are now four such storefront offices. They are open in the evenings and on weekends when applications for citizenship can be made. If the demand arises, the Department of the Secretary of State is prepared to extend these storefront offices to other locations; that is, the applicants can meet that first occasion or appearance where the pressure has been the greatest and where the demand is the greatest, and they can do that in a manner which does not involve loss of work time or pay. There are now four mobile teams of examiners operating in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and Hamilton. In these four cities some 78 per cent of all applications are currently received. These mobile teams also take applications in such prearranged locations as schools, community halls, places of work, and so forth.

These two services enable applicants to make their application at times convenient to them, with no loss of time whatever. They are available in cities where over three-quarters of citizenship applications are currently being received. Again, it is a service that may be extended if communities seek it, if volunteer organizations ask for it and demonstrate a need. These two services of the outreach program are in fact being used, so it is evident they are responding to a problem of the kind raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre but in a different way from that which he has proposed.

For example, in the most active of these storefront offices, the Dufferin Street store in Toronto, last year—and the office was open, I think, for only six months—some 12,536 applications were received. This represents something under one-fifth of all applications in Canada. They were received either during the day, if convenient, in the evening or on weekends without requiring any loss of work time to the applicants.

The two storefront offices in Montreal handled about one-quarter of the applications in that city; over 5,000 out of over 18,000 applications. The mobile teams in Toronto, in 1975, took over 2,400 applications—and this is a service which is still in the early stages of development. So these outreach services are in fact supplying an answer to a certain need, not only financial but of convenience.

In addition to the storefront offices and the mobile teams, the department has tried to respond to needs by establishing night courts, again to avoid inconvenience and unnecessary financial hardship. These night courts have been established mainly in Toronto on an experimental basis in response to an initiative taken in the community of Toronto. The night courts are not for applications but for hearings and for ceremonies, the other two occasions when applicants go to the offices of the citizenship courts.

Moreover, it is now practice in respect of citizenship courts to arrange appointment times for these hearings for applicants to avoid the situation where persons have to attend and wait for extended periods of time in a line-up. This meets the need of those who may be on shift work. Persons ask for the most convenient times for an appointment and arrangements are made. These night courts and arranged appointments should alleviate the kind of problem raised by the hon. member

Again, this is a service the department is prepared to extend to other communities should a request for such arise. It is perhaps natural that the request should have arisen first in Ontario, where over half of all applications occur, and that the first response would be made there because of the activity of voluntary associations which requested it. Such activities are open to other communities which wish to seek the same thing without, as I say, the necessity of passing a law of parliament which would place the cost on the employers of those applicants for citizenship.

Some problem may remain in respect of the visit to the court for the citizenship ceremony. However, this to some extent has been alleviated by the night courts in Toronto and by night courts which have in fact been held in other cities, although not as frequently as in Toronto but, again, in response to community pressure and requests. To the extent, therefore, that a problem may remain, it seems to relate rather to the state of the community organization and voluntary community association activity rather than to the absence of a means to respond. Some exploration, in fact, of the remaining problem in respect of the night courts is presently under way in Montreal. The department is prepared to respond in a similar manner should the need and demand become effective. The first storefronts and mobile teams were established in Toronto about three years ago and, as I say, may be expanded into other cities.

There is a certain other argument which I think should be raised in this House relative to points made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I refer to the possible constitutional problem with regard to his proposal. His proposal, if adopted, might in fact be applicable in law only to companies which lie in the federal jurisdiction. It may be, if adopted, that it will not be applicable to companies that have been incorporated under provincial law and lie in the field of provincial jurisdiction.

In addition, I think the hon. member cannot argue that the granting of citizenship ranks in the same order or measure as general elections which establish this very parliament. The elections establish the government of the country. It is obviously an essential national process. It is a requirement of our constitution that elections be held at least every five years. It is a democratic need that all citizens be able to participate. It is very difficult indeed to extend that need to the citizenship process, which is an individual choice, an individual act which occurs once in a lifetime, important as it is for all of us. It is extremely difficult to extend that argument to Canadian elections to the circumstances of citizenship applicants. It is more a matter of convenience to the case of the hon. member, but it really weakens his case because of the doubtful constitutional validity on which it rests. There is a very evident difference between a general election and the taking of citizenship.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply say this is an important problem. The problem is being met partly by means already developed and by means which are capable of extension by a department which took the initiative to meet this problem in innovative ways and is trying to bring the citizenship process to the people. This is a process which can be extended by community action in other cities in a better manner than through statutory or legal action by this parliament which in any case would be of doubtful constitutional validity.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, at the outset permit me to establish my position. I will be opposing Bill C-311 because I do not feel we should have to pay people to become Canadian citizens. Certainly it would almost appear to be a shame for me this afternoon to have to oppose a private member's bill standing in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), a gentleman whom I respect greatly as a member of this House. Ever since I came here as a new member I have had great admiration and respect for the proposer of Bill C-311. However, as I shall demonstrate in my remarks I do not feel this to be a wise move or one in which the government should be involved. It would place an additional burden on the employer by requesting that he expend additional funds to allow persons desirous of becoming Canadian citizens time off from their duties.

During the vote this afternoon I had time to reflect on the fact that since it is so rarely that the New Democratic Party votes against our government, it is almost a shame that I have to speak against Bill C-311 as proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, a member of that party.

However, one does wonder from time to time, when this type of suggestion is made in the House, whether it might just be another thread of the socialist fabric that we sometimes see appearing on the scene in Canada. Let me say, on behalf of the Liberal Party, that the buck stops here and we do not endorse or support this type of program. On the contrary, I would say we should be emphasizing and encouraging the necessity for greater productivity in this country. We have acknowledged and accepted our responsibility in this regard in this time of restraint. The restraint legislation, by the way, as stated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other authorities throughout the country is working, contrary to some of the mutterings by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) and members on the other side of the House. However, it is always somewhat amusing to me to hear recommendations from the opposition parties for the spending of more money, or the spending of someone else's money, to be more precise.

● (1730)

Bill C-311 asks for a contribution of money to persons who aspire to be Canadians. That money will, of course, be spent by someone other than the New Democratic Party. It will be spent by employers and by people who will have to carry the burden.

Hon. members who have travelled throughout the world know only too well the feeling of pride one has on returning to one's native land. We acknowledge that pride when we think of the freedom, the good life, the prosperity, the availability of medicine and education, and all the excellent facilities and programs which are available to Canadians. I am hard put to understand why we should entertain Bill C-311 under which we would be reimbursing prospective Canadians.

I suppose it could be said, after listening to some of the allegations and innuendos from the other side of the House, that this could almost be considered a form of a bribe to entice an individual to become a Canadian. Perhaps that is an exaggeration, but there are some who have this type of warped mentality, and sometimes we witness it in the House.

However, if we consider this proposition, we would not want to support Bill C-311 because we would be encouraging a situation where we might be accused of offering some sort of incentive, which I suggest might be called a bribe, for someone to take on the great honour of becoming a Canadian citizen.

If we are going to encourage law, order, peace, security, and justice in Canada, as is the case we hope with the New Democratic Party, I think we should be urging programs which will encourage people to respect authority, to respect police, and to respect teachers in schools. That is the type of program we should be supporting, and we should not start new Canadians who are coming into the country and who want to become Canadians off on the wrong foot by giving them the impression that this is the way it works in Canada. They should not be given the impression that they can be paid to become Canadian citizens.

I think this is a weak proposition. It would only foster an attitude on the part of prospective Canadians that this country is weak and that everyone is paid or rewarded with money to do certain things. I believe anyone who sincerely wishes to become a Canadian, who meets all the criteria, who takes it upon himself to qualify and who takes the necessary steps to become a Canadian, should not in any way expect to be paid to do this.

When we consider the amounts of money which have already been expended by Canadians for citizenship courts, subcourts, store fronts and mobile teams operating across this country, together with other services rendered to prospective Canadians, surely we should not be asked to pay a potential Canadian to become a Canadian.

There are many people in my constituency who are from foreign countries and who have become Canadians. A good many of them are in the professions and would not expect to receive remuneration or monetary rewards for becoming Canadians. Those whom I have had occasion to befriend and with whom I have become acquainted have taken their places in Canadian society. In one particular family I can think of, the son is now a general practitioner in Halifax, and the daughter is a dietician. These people came to Canada and accepted it with all its beauty and opportunity. At no time did they expect any reward to be held out to entice them to become Canadians. They made the decision and sincerely wanted to become Canadians.

Once in private members' hour when one of my colleagues introduced a bill which would have involved the expenditure of money outside this country—I refer to the bill proposing construction of a road corridor in the United States—I was convinced then, and I still am, that it was my duty to speak against that bill because of the need for the upkeep and construction of highways in our own country, particularly with regard to the situation in my riding in New Brunswick. I found it necessary to speak against that bill, and I understand there will be another similar private member's bill soon, one which we expected to be before the House last week. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) introduced that bill with respect to the proposed construction of a tunnel between Dartmouth and Halifax. I will attempt to be placed on the roster to speak against that bill because adequate moneys have already been expended in that area, something to the tune of $80 million, for existing bridges. I do not see any need for a tunnel. What I am leading up to is that when I see the type of proposition contained in Bill C-311, I am convinced that we must discourage it because it would be poor legislation.

In the time afforded to me I have expressed my disagreement, but I also wish to profit from this opportunity and to go on record, as a new member in this House, to say that notwithstanding my disagreement with Bill C-311, I have the utmost respect for the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question before he sits down?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Harquail: With just one qualification, provided it is a fair question.

An hon. Member: Forget it, then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) views my bill, which would require employers not to deduct one's pay for the time spent appearing in citizenship court, as a bribe to persons to become Canadian citizens, how does he feel about the same provision in the Canada Elections Act, put there by the Liberal government, which permits people to take time off work without loss of pay in order to vote? Is that also a bribe?

Mr. Harquail: I believe I indicated that I would be disposed to respond to the question. With all due respect to you, Mr. Speaker—I will not be making a ruling—I wish to say that I agree with my colleague that the question is not in order and does not apply to what I said this afternoon. Let the record be clear that that is not what I said nor was it my intention to say that. That is contrary to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just indicated. However, let me assure him—and I know he supports this and so has his party in the past—that we certainly take credit for most of the good programs we have introduced in the House, and when I say we I mean the Liberal party.

● (1740)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, is that the end of the debate on Bill C-311?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): No, the debate is still continuing.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to raise an issue which under the rules I am required to raise at the first opportunity following any incident that occurs in the House. I appreciate the hon. member's suggestion that perhaps my point is a question of privilege, therefore I will enclose my remarks within the ambit of a question of privilege also.

I appreciate the difficulty that any Speaker of the House has in the hub-bub that occurs in the Chamber on the taking of a second reading vote on any bill, but for the record I want to point out that at the end of the Chamber there were seven hon. members on their feet requesting that a recorded vote be taken on Bill C-83 this afternoon. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker was not able to determine whether those people were here or were leaving.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Under the rules the hon. member is not allowed to comment on votes which have already taken place. The hon. member should bring up his point of order tomorrow when Mr. Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is to be congratulated for having brought forward this idea in the form of a bill. It is a thought expressed in the form of an amendment the content and thrust of which is irresistible.

It is positive and, as the hon. member himself said, it is in the category of motherhood proposals. We on this side of the House must admit and recognize that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a grand master at that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am not a grand master, I am a grandfather.

Mr. Caccia: I cannot recall in the past eight years since 1968 one motion put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that did not fall into this category. The hon. member has a real ability to catch a certain idea and put it into legislation or into proposed amendments. Nevertheless it remains in the category of motherhood, and I will explain why I have come to this conclusion.

On examining the statistics on citizenship over the past 20 years I find that there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians who became citizens in the course of time since Canadian citizenship has been made available, and they have done this regardless of whether or not they lost a day at work. To them Canadian citizenship was important enough to disregard any monetary consideration. When you decide to acquire it, for reasons that are different from individual to individual and therefore for which there is no set, general law, you set you mind on it and you obtain it no matter what.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: I fully understand the best intentions of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but somehow I believe that a measure such as this one would cheapen the whole concept of the acquisition of Canadian citizenship, and I will explain why. Over the past 10, 15 and 20 years good employers have had a sense of pride in being Canadian and have done what the hon. member is proposing here today. So in that sense the proposal has already been adopted by people who are usually regarded as good employers. Those who are lousy employers—excuse that expression, Mr. Speaker—still do not recognize this fact and withhold the wages or salaries of those who go to acquire Canadian citizenship.

In order to meet these situations, which unfortunately still occur but which are rapidly disappearing, which arise because of these bad employers who are so narrow minded that they do not see that the day when a new Canadian acquires his citizenship is a day to celebrate, and therefore requires that recognition on the part of the employer who will say, "All right, Pasquale, or Joe, or whatever, go down town and get your citizenship; this is our way of recognizing this great day in your life", the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has carried out a number of additional measures which were already so clearly and effectively outlined by the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell).

Our hope on this side of the House is that these programs, such as Outreach, Storefronts, and the other fancy names that go with them, will not be limited only to large metropolitan centres like Montreal and Toronto but will also be implemented in centres such as cities in western Ontario where a large number of new Canadians live, and where services of this kind would be most definitely well received. There would probably be a constant need for them for a number of years to come, not only in southwestern Ontario but also in the west and perhaps in the east.

When listening to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I could not help asking myself—and I must say in advance that my thought was not totally serious—why should there not be a bill that would legislate compensation for loss of wages when a person goes out to get married? Indeed, why not? The day you become a Canadian citizen is almost like your wedding day. You have decided that your relationship with your motherland should evolve into a new relationship with the country of your choice, namely, Canada, to which you are in a way becoming married on the day on which you acquire Canadian citizenship. I am the first one to admit that the similarity is somewhat shaky, nevertheless it has some validity because it is an event of such importance in an individual's life. Therefore to talk about loss of pay on such a day does not do justice to the event itself and to the idealism of the person who decides to become a citizen and therefore is ready to give up certain hours and a certain amount of income, and in fact even pays a $20 fee for the fine privilege of becoming a Canadian citizen.

Let us look at something greater than just money, particularly in the process of acquiring Canadian citizenship.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: I should like to conclude my remarks—because I know others would like to speak—by saying that when applying for Canadian citizenship I can see a matter of greater concern than the matter of loss of pay. I look with great concern at the requirement, which is being introduced in the new bill which will soon be before us for debate in the House, for adequate knowledge of one of the official languages on the part of applicants and candidates for Canadian citizenship. I have looked at this matter with great distress and a deep sense of uneasiness, because from my experience over the years I have learned that Canadian citizenship involves more than facility in an official language and knowledge of the history and geography of the country.

● (1750)

Many new Canadians came to the east, central Canada, and the west before the first world war, between the wars, and after the second world war. Many never acquired command of or fluency in one official language, let alone adequate knowledge of it. They have not learned the capital cities of provinces or the lengths of certain rivers, but functioned well as citizens in their communities. They have raised families, sent children to school, respected the law, paid taxes, and been active in church and secular associations in their community. And they did this often without knowing English or French, history or geography. But they were damned fine citizens, even though they lacked scholastic, theoretical knowledge.

I have made known my concerns, as they are important. These matters should be aired in the debate on the bill sponsored by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre whose intentions, I am sure, are of the best and whose fine parliamentary record we all respect.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I shall try to be brief and allow other hon. members time to speak. Frankly, this proposed measure reminds me of the Canada Elections Act. This is an urban-oriented, you might say union-sponsored type of bill. It is like a fringe benefit under some wage agreement. What about the man from Spirit River who must go to Grande Prairie? His journey will take a whole day. He must be prepared to take the whole day off.

I agree with something the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said. Canadian citizenship is an important matter. Yet coming out of his mouth some of the things he said sounded strange, as did the applause of the hon. member's colleagues. Tonight we shall debate Bill C-20, which will provide for the downgrading of the citizenship ceremony. It says that in many instances the ceremony can be performed across a desk. The bill removes the discretion of the judge in the citizenship court. The grant of citizenship will become an act of ministerial administration. What utter nonsense! I hoped that the hon. member for Davenport would insist on the dignity of the ceremony in court when new Canadians, in open court, before fellow citizens and friends, renounce their allegiance to their countries of origin.

I have participated in more citizenship court ceremonies than any member of this House. Since citizenship courts came into being I have made it a regular practice to appear in citizenship court ceremonies in Edmonton. One must be impressed at the attitude with which candidates for Canadian citizenship approach the final ceremony. One sits with great pride alongside the president of the court, on the bench, and sees the emotion, in young and old, when people go through the ceremony. One sees people who have been here above 40 years and now wish to take out Canadian citizenship. With great pride they repeat after the president of the court the oath of allegiance. I fear that, deliberately, we shall downgrade that ceremony.

I join hands with the hon. member for Davenport in saying that a man will be compensated in many cases if he will make this voluntary gesture affecting his status. But nobody is going to pay the Dutch farmer who must travel many miles to Edmonton from some outlying area. Farmers will not get paid. Why should anybody else get paid for this sort of thing? Why should anyone be paid, by law, for an exercise in good Canadian citizenship? I agree with the hon. member for Davenport. I think the reasonable employer will be the first to encourage the employee to take out citizenship as soon as possible. Only the most hardhearted employer will refuse his employee time off; and frankly he should be publicly criticized for his attitude. Or the employer will refuse when a collective agreement is narrowly interpreted by the business agent of a union. In those cases the employer will react in the same way.

Normally when a husband and wife want a little time off in order to sign papers for purchasing a house, the average employer says, "Surely to goodness the enlightened employer will give his employee time off to do these things. If in some industrial cities there are to be special night sittings of the citizenship court, that too will be a good way of doing it.

My final word—I see it is almost six o'clock—is this: in no way should the citizenship ceremony be downgraded. The discretion should be that of the judge and the award of citizenship should not be a mere administrative act. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

QUARANTINE ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND APPLICATION TO DANGEROUS DISEASES

Hon. Otto E. Lang (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill S-31, to amend the Quarantine Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lang (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a very few comments before the final adoption of this bill. It has received active scrutiny by members on all sides of this House. The standing committee concerned examined witnesses from the private sector as well as carefully examining government officials. We have had, as well, the benefit of study by members of the other place. We are very grateful for the attention they paid to the bill.

It is significant that the bill has proceeded to this point with no amendments being put forward either in the other place or here. I want to say on behalf of the minister that he is grateful for the co-operation and the interest shown by all members. We look forward to the final adoption of this bill, to its early proclamation, and to an opportunity to put the bill into effect.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take too much time. We have already discussed this bill in some detail when it was before the House at second reading. However, I want to express a few reservations about some of the inadequacies which surround the bill.

When the bill was first presented in the House, the parliamentary secretary indicated that it was largely to allow Canada to prepare for two large international events to be held in Canada this year, namely, the Habitat Conference in Vancouver and the Olympic Games in Montreal. Strangely enough, when the parliamentary secretary appeared before the committee, and indeed others, they tended to deny that this bill had anything to do with these two major movements of people in and out of this country in one year. It struck me as rather strange that, for some reason, they were afraid to tell us that this bill is going to have a significant bearing on these two conferences or, vice-versa, that these two conferences had a significant bearing on the bringing forward of this bill.

The bill proposes to give the minister and his officials some extraordinary powers to detain people at the port of entry, or anywhere within this country, if they have sufficient reason to believe those people may have been exposed to some communicable disease, whether it is one listed in the international agreement or some other one which is not listed.

Mr. Paproski: They are going to find many.

Mr. Yewchuk: That is right. I was not satisfied with the explanations provided by the parliamentary secretary. Indeed he was somewhat reluctant to let the officials speak on this bill in committee and insisted on answering the questions himself. I must say I was not all that confident in his expertise on these matters.

It appears that one of the diseases which the government seems to be worried about is the one known as Lassa fever, a virus disease found largely in west Africa, generally along the southern portions of the Sahara Desert. We found from testimony before the committee that Canada has a number of people involved in CUSO working in these regions. I am quite concerned about the fact that there does not appear to be adequate protection for those working in that area, particularly because of the lack of proper facilities for treatment, and indeed for isolation, and perhaps for some other reasons.

A couple of years ago Canada made an application to the World Health Organization to have Lassa fever placed on the list of communicable quarantinable diseases for international purposes. The World Health Organization rejected this application. They said in no uncertain terms that the reason, which was based on the advice of many experts, was that quarantine as far as is known is of no value from the point of view of containing the spread of this particular disease.

We also discovered during the investigation of this bill that even if we wanted to quarantine those whom we suspected of having been exposed to Lassa fever, and perhaps of having Lassa fever in the early stages as they come into this country, we do not have the facilities in which we could safely quarantine them. This is a matter of great concern to me because the approach we are using here is not to try to prevent people from coming but to delude ourselves that we can look after them once they get here, isolate them, and thus protect our own population. This happens to be a completely erroneous assumption.

The fact is that if someone comes into this country with that disease we have no way of protecting the people of Canada from it simply because it is not amenable to containment through quarantine. It is my impression that the officials of the Department of National Health agree with that proposition. I believe we should be looking at something different.

If we are concerned about that disease being brought into Canada perhaps we should consider the possibility of not allowing people to come here if they have been exposed to it, or if we have reasonable grounds to believe they may be carriers. I am not satisfied the government has considered the possibility of excluding these people rather than allowing them to come and pretending that we can isolate them safely, when in fact we cannot. Both Britain and the United States go much farther in this direction than we presently do. For example, those countries reserve the right to prevent arriving passengers from disembarking from aircraft. Suspected cases are sent back to their country of origin which then has the responsibility of dealing with them.

As to our own overseas workers it would appear from evidence given by a representative of CUSO that some of them are presently exposed to unusual danger and that the Government of Canada is taking virutally no steps to protect their health. There seems to me to be some confusion as to what should be done if one of our workers in Africa acquired Lassa fever—whether he or she would be treated there or brought home. No one was able to tell us in the committee what would happen, and I think that was rather a poor showing. It seems to me the people of Canada deserve an explanation of what the contingency plan might be. The CUSO workers themselves deserve some kind of reassurance and a clear-cut statement on what they can look forward to if they should contract this disease. There was a suggestion that an educational program might be aimed at people working in this area designed to enable them to increase their ability to protect themselves. This might be useful, but as far as I can gather there is no such program in existence at this time.

We are left then with a situation in which the government proposes changes in the Quarantine Act. I have no objection to the changes which are proposed, but I do object to the fact that the government is basing the case for those changes on the premise that the legislation will protect the population from strange and unusual diseases whereas, as I say, it will simply not do that. We know from our experience with Lassa fever in particular that workers involved in a facility where a patient is held acquire the disease themselves at a fairly high rate, whether they are attendants on the ward or laboratory workers trying to isolate a virus. So while we do not object to the passage of this legislation—it could be useful in many ways—we are expressing reservations about the government's lack of action with reference to certain specific diseases which were mentioned during the course of the study of this bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it is useful that the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) should have placed on record the concerns he feels. He has done so both in the standing committee and here in the House. Even so, I note that he and his colleagues are prepared to give this bill third reading, and that is our position. On balance we feel the government should have the extra authority set out in the bill to cope with strange and unusual diseases, and our examination of the text does not cause us any concern as far as civil liberties and rights of that kind are concerned. We are therefore prepared to support the motion for third reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CONDITIONS AND PROVISIONS GOVERNING CITIZENSHIP

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-20, respecting citizenship, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Benno Friesen (for Mr. Jarvis) moved motion No. 1:

That Bill C-20, an act respecting citizenship, be amended in Clause 5 by

(f) in the opinion of a citizenship judge, is not shown to be of other than good character."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in addressing the House on the report stage of this bill. We have been through the committee stage, and again it was an experience of mixed ennui and surprise. The surprise stemmed from the fact that the minister chose to introduce a number of amendments at the committee stage which we had not anticipated. Certainly I am not critical of some of the amendments that have been made which were very necessary. Others were housekeeping and simple editorial amendments. For example, I will commend him for closing the loophole in regard to deportation orders.

Another very substantial change to the bill deals with assigning jurisdiction to the provinces for land ownership in the case of non-resident aliens. I think this is a much needed amendment, one that needed to be dealt with since this has become a matter of great concern all across Canada.

It was also an experience in ennui in that we had a repetition of what occurred when we were dealing with Bill C-58. Again the minister very tightly organized the number of witnesses who were to appear. In this case something like four witnesses were allowed to appear before the committee. None of the witnesses whom members of opposition parties wanted to appear before the committee were allowed to appear. I remember specifically the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) recommended to the committee that we hear one of the judges, but this raised the hackles of government members. We could not by any means offend any of the regulations, even though it had already been pointed out that a precedent in this regard had been set. Therefore some of the people who could have given us a wealth of experience, information, and sound guidance in discussing the amendments were kept out.

Still the government blithely keeps repeating that it wants legislation that is in the best interests of all Canadians. As I say, Mr. Speaker, under a pre-structured committee system where government members are asked to vote preferably without thinking about what they are voting on, and where opposition members are not allowed to bring in any suggestions that would at all disturb the neat orderliness of the minister and his members, it was once again an exercise in ennui.

As is his custom, the minister gave us a copy of the statement that he presented to the committee, which I appreciated because it gave us an opportunity to deal in a concrete way with his point of view. It also gave us an opportunity to review the amendments that he was presenting, as well as some of the original provisions of the bill.

In addressing myself to the bill I want again to deal with what the minister said. I might add that the amendments, he presented to the committee during committee stage made the bill, in the language used in this House, not substantially the same as it had been but very substantially different. The minister began with one of the arguments that has been a concern of members on both sides of this chamber. He said:

It—

That is the bill.

—clearly lays down certain steps the applicant must follow and certain qualifications the applicant must satisfy. Upon satisfaction of those conditions, then citizenship should follow as a right.

The operative term used by the minister there, one that expresses his philosophy, is that citizenship is a right. There is where I disagree violently with the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). I would point out that if citizenship really is a right, then it contradicts the bill itself. The Canadian Citizenship Act provides an elaborate procedure whereby a prospective citizen has to come before a quasi-judicial board and a judge in order for his case to be heard, and by that process become a citizen. Yet the minister says that upon satisfaction of certain conditions that are laid down in the act, citizenship shall follow as a right. In other words, it is an automatic process.

The most obvious question we must ask ourselves is this: if all one has to do is to meet the qualifications on the application form for citizenship and the criteria that the minister has laid down before citizenship follows as a right, why do we need a citizenship judge in the first place? Why go through the judicial system to provide citizenship for our immigrants? As I have said, it is a contradiction in terms.

When I was serving on the special parliamentary committee on immigration, commonly called the green paper committee, I remember very clearly that one of our witnesses was the chairperson of the Immigration Appeal Board. She was a very astute woman who had a lot of experience in immigration as well as citizenship.

One of the members of the committee at that time spoke about providing leave to appeal to an immigrant before deportation. His argument was that landed immigrants or prospective landed immigrants should have the right of leave to appeal. The chairperson of the Immigration Appeal Board very wisely contradicted him and pointed out by means of a very good analogy that this certainly is not the case. She used the analogy of a gate to the yard before one even enters the house. She said there is nothing stopping anyone from knocking at the gate to ask permission to enter the yard and then to enter the house. That is the right of every prospective immigrant who comes to this country. We always want to adopt a welcoming attitude to immigrants. But there is no right to enter, just as there is no right for anyone to enter upon your personal property or enter your private home. Entering the yard or entering the home is more a privilege, not a right.

So I ask, Mr. Speaker, why does the minister insist that citizenship is a right when it contradicts the very process by which an applicant gains citizenship? If it is a right, why go through this whole process? It seems to me that the host country, Canada, has the right, indeed the obligation, to examine each applicant and to refuse those she chooses not to accept.

The minister went on to add in his statement:

As a corollary to this second great principle of citizenship as a right we have built into the law the possibility of forgiveness of certain conditions at certain times. The main reasons for this is that I and my predecessors responsible for Canada's citizenship law have, through the years, received letters from unfortunate people who have somehow got tangled up in the machinery of government through no fault of their own or the circumstances of whose birth and subsequent movements around the world have been such that no framers of law could have predicted.

I will readily concede, Mr. Speaker, that under any kind of system or law, circumstances might arise which would bring about unfortunate results for some applicants who apply for citizenship.

The minister is reserving unto himself the right of forgiveness. As the amendment I am proposing tonight points out, the minister has already taken away that right at this point from the judges. They are not supposed to make any assessments of character of applicants who appear before them. The minister wants to have that privilege go in the opposite direction. If there is someone who feels he has been unjustly treated by the process, he wants the opportunity to forgive him some of those things that would hinder his becoming a citizen. He wants to be granted that privilege, and I suppose that is his right as a minister of the Crown. At the same time, why take away some of the prerogatives of judges who are now performing a very good and useful function? As a matter of fact this could take away some of the burdens from the minister in the later stages of the application.

The minister went on to say that the bill gives him certain limited powers of forgiveness, and gives to the governor in council the power to help people for compassionate reasons. He then assures us that this latter power will be used with great care. I have become somewhat cynical of this kind of assurance. It is not good enough for me to have a minister tell me that he promises not to abuse these powers but that they will be used with great care. If that is the case, then why not outline these powers within the act so that we know exactly how the minister is going to use them?

We have all too many examples in our country of people who have come here not for the welfare of Canada but for selfish or spurious reasons, not thinking of the good of our country at all. I am thinking especially of one who gained national notoriety about a year ago, a man by the name of Hardial Baines, an openly avowed Marxist. He came to this country 16 years ago, he is a landed immigrant, he applied for citizenship and was refused, but is still in the country. He openly speaks of the need for people to revolt against the capitalistic form of government. Are we to forgive that kind of man? Why is he still in the country? There is no measure in this bill or in the Immigration Act that provides powers to deport those people who have gained landed immigrant status, who have been refused citizenship, and who remain in the country. Nothing of that sort is in here.

The minister went on to say that this issue is one that quite frankly surprises him, referring to this reduction in residence requirement from five to three years. Why this should surprise him I do not know, unless he has been speaking only to those people in Peterborough or some areas of Toronto. I assure you that is not the unanimous opinion across Canada. As a matter of fact in my last mailing to my constituency I had as one of my questions whether they felt in their opinion the citizenship requirements as to residence should be reduced from five to three years. While I have not finished the entire tally, I can tell you that even on a partial tally the response has been two and a half to one in favour of maintaining the five-year limit.

Members in the House will perhaps realize from the questions I have asked in this Chamber that I have a lot of immigrants in my riding, people who have come to Surrey-White Rock within the last two or three years. These people are saying we should keep this at five years. In fact I have had letters suggesting it should be seven. I think there are some very sound reasons for maintaining the five-year residence requirement. Let me take a minute or two just to rehearse some of these reasons for the edification of the minister who is here tonight.

An hon. Member: Why don't you move an amendment?

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) would like me to move an amendment. That just might come, but I would assure the hon. member that he does not need to prompt us for too long to get that kind of amendment.

The minister says there are some people who are ready to become citizens within three years. I do not deny that. There are a good many people who are ready for citizenship within three years. In fact there are some who are ready as soon as they arrive, and no one would deny that. Some people who have fled from very authoritarian governments felt the breath of freedom as soon as their feet touched the shores of Canada. They are thoroughly in love with the democratic system as we enjoy it here, and are ready for citizenship as soon as they come. If they are ready when they arrive and ready three years later, surely they will still be ready in five years time. Those are the very people who appreciate citizenship so much and appreciate being members of the Canadian family to such an extent they are completely willing, perhaps inpatient at times, to wait five years before officially becoming Canadian citizens.

There was a time when immigrants coming to Canada were predominantly from Commonwealth countries. They were thoroughly familiar with the kind of parliamentary system as we practise it here, and as it is practised in other Commonwealth countries. It is completely understandable that those people from Commonwealth nations would be so familiar with our form of government as to be ready for citizenship within five years and, conceivably, ready within three years or less. The pattern of immigration has changed very much in the last decade and we can no longer assume that the majority of the people coming to our shores are familiar with our form or government.

Mr. Lang: But they are fast learners.

Mr. Friesen: They are fast learners. Thank you, Mr. Minister of Transport. There is something you do not learn through speed reading, and that is tradition. If the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) can speed read tradition I should like him to give the formula to a lot of immigrants who come to our shores. They would love to have it.

Mr. Lang: Their desire is all we need.

Mr. Friesen: Their desire is all we need, the minister suggests. It seems to me it would be helpful to all prospective citizens to experience at least one federal election so as to become totally familiar with our process of government. It may be in the intervening years government members could pick up a few votes, and perhaps—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish to limit the hon. member's time, and he is entitled to 40 minutes as mover of the motion, but I want to bring to his attention that he has spent a good portion of his time on subjects away from the subject matter of the motion before us. The amendment has to do with the character of the applicant, and I think the hon. member should return to the subject matter.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, as you say, the amendment has to do with the good character of the applicant. I am speaking of those ingredients that contribute to the good character of our immigrants and our citizens, so I do feel I am on topic.

As I was saying, I think it would be good for prospective citizens to experience at least one federal election compaign in order to know a little bit more of what our system is all about.

Why is it we think we are injuring people by asking them to wait for five years? The minister wants to make it as easy as possible, and this is where the amendment comes into play. The minister at the committee raised a point regarding Clause 5, sub-clause (1), paragraph (b), sub-paragraph (i) regarding the matter of residency required. The operative part states:

(i) for every day during which he was resident in Canada before his lawful admission to Canada for permanent residence he shall be deemed to have accumulated one-half of a day of residence,—

● (2040)

The minister was the picture of injured innocence in the committee when he raised the matter that we would object to that particular clause in the bill whereby someone could come to Canada and receive half credit for the time he was here before.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I must remind the hon. member that my interpretation of the rule of relevancy is not the same as his. I believe he should come back to the motion. The amendment the hon. member was defending so well at the beginning is very far away from the section to which he is referring at this time. I think the amendment is very narrow in scope and reflects mainly on the good or bad character of the applicant, and not the time he is in Canada.

Mr. Stollery: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would entertain a question.

Mr. Friesen: I did not hear the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member asked if the member who has the floor would accept a question.

Mr. Friesen: After I have completed my speech I would entertain a question. Mr. Speaker, I will show you that really I have not been moving away from the amendment. It really is apropos of what I have been saying. I was relating to the fact that the minister wants to give half credit to people who have been here in this country before they are here officially as landed immigrants.

We have had experience in the last decade in respect of people who have been here unofficially or without permission before they received landed immigrant status. The minister himself alluded to such cases. In the last decade thousands of people have illegally come to Canada. I might refer to the American draft dodgers who in many cases may have been fine, upright, and upstanding young men. However, they were here illegally.

While these people were here they were granted landed immigrant status in one fell swoop and, presto, chango, they were legitimate residents. According to this bill in three years they would qualify to become citizens. I suggest that although there may have been some very fine prospective citizens among those thousands of people who came to Canada, at the same time there may have been many of them whose reasons for coming to Canada we do not know. Were those reasons spurious; were they legitimate? Were these genuine conscientious objectors, or were they afraid of war, or were they here because their parents did not want them to go to Viet Nam? They were here illegally, but it was not long after they were here illegally that they became legitimate landed immigrants.

According to the bill before us there is no process by which the judge can assess whether or not the person appearing before him should qualify. According to this bill, with the deletions of the minister, the judge does not have the prerogative to examine a particular applicant to determine whether or not he should be admitted to Canada as a citizen. This is the matter which I believe must be raised. For this reason I believe the amendment I have submitted to the House should be considered. I believe it is a sound amendment. We need to give the judges the kind of authority that will ensure that the people who come to Canada and become part of our family are the kind of people who are here because they are interested in our country.

Many things have changed in the last few years that have induced people to come to Canada. We know that for the first 100 years, or for the first 200 years of the life of our nation there were thousands of people who came to Canada because they saw it as a land of opportunity, because of all the advantages it would provide for them—the freedom that exists here, the opportunities there would be for their children and their grandchildren, and the economic possibilities. Then within the last 60 years events around the world changed the nature of immigration. The seven days in Russia in 1917 changed entire immigration patterns around the world because one of the fundamental tenets of the Russian revolution was that there was a need incumbent upon a good communist to export the revolution. One cannot call himself a good communist if he does not in fact militantly try to export the revolution.

I was a member of the committee which studied the green paper on immigration. Hearings were held across Canada. When we were in that great bastion of free enterprise, Edmonton, Alberta, we saw, as we did in other cities, demonstrations in front of the hotel where the meetings were held. These were demonstrations by members of the Maoist organization.

Mr. Nystrom: Conservatives.

Mr. Friesen: These were Maoists. My hon. friend would know them. Not only were we called verbally fascist pigs but were called the same thing by bulletins and newspapers which were passed out. One of the handbills passed out announced the next Maoist meeting for the purpose of reorganizing their troops in order to attack the fascist pigs who were coming to the immigration meetings. Mr. Speaker, do you know where this next meeting was to be organized? It was to be organized at the office of the Company of Young Canadians in Edmonton, an organization which this minister was supporting in his budget until a few months ago.

I suggest there are men and women who want to become citizens of Canada who are not necessarily men and women of good character who are here for our interests. They are not interested in the welfare of Canada. The committee on energy went to the northland. It visited Yellowknife. There the members of the committee met a couple of workers who were working very piously for the members of the Dene nation, supported by Mr. Mel Watkins and also supported by the Secretary of State. He was there supporting the Dene nation. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, we have not heard the last of that.

I am simply illustrating the fact that not everybody who comes to Canada necessarily is thinking of the welfare of this country when he does come here. We need to provide for the judge the kind of power that will give him the authority to make a decision concerning whether or not such a person should be admitted even though on paper, as the minister suggests, he meets all the qualifications. There ought to be some way in which the judge would be able to decide right there and then whether this person will contribute to the welfare or to the harm of our nation.

I would recommend to the House the acceptance of this amendment because I think it is a good and wholesome step in order that we might ensure the preservation of a Canada that will be integrated, harmonious, and co-operative, and which will provide for us a reservoir of citizens who will look out for our welfare.

Mr. Stollery: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member informed me that he would entertain a question after his speech. He suggested that the time required for citizenship should have some relation to general elections. Over the past 20 years in Canada there have been general elections every two to two and a half years. How does he equate that with his four year term for general elections? I should like to hear his response because I think since 1957 elections have come every two to two and a half years.

Mr. Friesen: Very simple, Mr. Speaker. The way this government is performing it will not have an election before it has to, and that will be in 1978 or 1979. By that time the three years will have elapsed, and many more people will have qualified.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to commend the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) for moving the amendment to Bill C-20. I intend to make some comments on the amendment. Throughout the debate on Bill C-20 one of the underlying factors which has affected the thinking of many hon. members is that Canada has been a receiving country of immigrants for the last number of years, with an average immigration of approximately 200,000 per year, so the question of how a person who wants to become a Canadian citizen can become one is a little critical. In the debates at second reading and during committee stage frequent comparisons were made with other countries, especially in view of the reduction of the residency requirement from five years down to something less, in this case, three years. Comparisons were made with countries which have very few immigrants. Those countries are not considered receiving countries.

During the debate at second reading and at committee stage a number of people wrote to me and, I imagine, to other hon. members as well, expressing the fear that we are moving toward a bureaucratic citizenship, or what some referred to as rubber stamp citizenship. When the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) appeared before the committee he gave a fair amount of attention to the fact that once certain conditions and requirements are fulfilled, citizenship is a right. I think this is also an area in which we disagree, not only with regard to immigration but also with regard to citizenship.

Many of us feel that immigration and citizenship are privileges which are bestowed upon individuals by this country. Granted, there are certain conditions whereby an immigrant can come into Canada. There are conditions whereby a landed immigrant can become a citizen. I accept that, but I prefer the system where judges grant citizenship only after certain qualifications have been met, including the qualification of good character. I am fearful that we are moving toward an across the counter citizenship, or as some people have said, rubber stamp citizenship.

I should like to come directly to the amendment, which reads as follows:

(f) in the opinion of a citizenship judge, is not shown to be of other than good character.

In his presentation to the committee on February 24 the minister suggested that the qualification of good character was too hard to determine. In other words, there is not a set norm, and therefore, it being arbitrary, he felt that that consideration should be removed from the legislation. The argument was that it was too arbitrary, too subjective, and that the evaluation simply would not stand up in a court of law. I believe those were the three arguments the minister made to us at that time. He also mentioned that with regard to the question of good character an applicant could be refused citizenship, to use the example quoted by the minister, if he towed a person on water skis without another person keeping watch, which is a criminal offence. After that conviction the qualification of good character could be judged as not having been fulfilled and the application at least held in abeyance. On the other hand I think there is some merit in the suggestion that at the present time violations of the Criminal Code or the Narcotic Control Act should be retained.

I think this amendment also addresses itself to the problem of good character, which is just another extrapolation of the provisions as they presently stand in the bill. I gave this concept a fair amount of thought, and I also had difficulty on how to judge good character. I suppose we all have our own standards, but to my mind that condition should remain. A citizenship judge who has been given the responsibility to evaluate people, once the criteria in the act have been established, should be able to make the judgment.

There was very interesting testimony given in the committee, and one person who appeared before the committee expressed it rather well. He might not have had an exhaustive list of good character traits, but I will refer to the testimony which was given before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts on Thursday, March 4.

This testimony was given by, I believe, a constituent of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who has been a very strong proponent of the bill and who does not like the arbitrary concept of good character. The witness gave a very good definition of how this condition would work. The person was Mr. J. Carraro, director of social services for the Labourers International Union of North America, local 183. Mr. Carraro was a strong supporter of the provision in Bill C-20 wherein the five year residency requirement is reduced to three years. I will be very frank about this. On the one hand I am quoting him, but I will freely admit that on the other hand he thought the requirement could be reduced to three years. At that time I said to him that if the conditions he placed before the committee were embodied in the legislation, I would much better understand the validity of the argument of the minister regarding the reduction from five years to three years. However, that is another matter, and we can address ourselves to that at third reading.

Specifically on the question of good character Mr. Carraro said that his union held citizenship classes. They tried to teach people—I take it primarily of Italian background—their rights in Canada, but very strong emphasis was also placed on the responsibilities which we have in a parliamentary democracy such as Canada. I was very impressed with the testimony of Mr. Carraro and the sincerity with which he tried to answer the questions we put to him.

He had some specific recommendations to make on what he thought should be done in order to make the Citizenship Act and the citizenship procedure more equitable for those with landed immigrant status who wanted to become Canadians through the citizenship procedure.

Quoting from page 38:6 of the committee proceedings, Mr. Carraro said:

Finally, I would like to read some recommendations:

1. That in examining the suitability of an applicant for Canadian citizenship, the judge give priority to the personal and family habits of the applicant over the knowledge of the language and geography of this country.

I had the opportunity, as did a number of other members on the committee, to question Mr. Carraro on how he would define those conditions which he names, such as personal and family habits, as part of the good character clause which he wanted to see retained in the new citizenship act. In response to a question on how he would define good character, Mr. Carraro's list was not exhaustive, but here is what he said. I am quoting from the minutes of the same meeting at page 38:7: He said:

What I would look for is whether a man—let us speak of a man in this case—is a steady worker. I feel that is an objective measure for good character. He is contributing with his work to the betterment of the society. He is a good provider. I think that is good measurable character criterion for good character. Also, whether he is paying his mortgages on time. I think that is also a good character.

I thought that here was a person who had gone through the immigration procedure, had applied for citizenship, had appeared before a Canadian citizenship court and a Canadian citizenship judge, had become a citizen, and now was using his abilities and his association with immigrants to try to teach them the responsibilities and rights that each one of them would enjoy once he becomes a Canadian citizen. I think it was a practical illustration of what one person thought, having gone through the procedure relatively recently, spelled out good character.

It is a pretty practical approach, and while we might not want to incorporate into the act a provision which states that if a person pays his mortgage he should get his citizenship and if he does not pay his mortgage he should not, I do believe that here is a gentleman who was trying to establish for the committee that there are certain acceptable norms of behaviour which we expect from Canadian citizens. He was simply showing to the committee that surely a citizenship judge with certain responsibilities under the act can judge good character or, to make it easier perhaps, he can definitely see when the person before him is not of good character.

What will happen under the new act is that the judge will not now have the judgmental ability to assess what has been the accommodation of the applicant to Canadian life. I believe that this is especially valid in view of the fact that Bill C-20 will reduce the residency requirements from five years to three.

While some people will argue that this provision is arbitrary, I believe that this type of evaluation takes place every day. It takes place in our courts every day, and I think the minister should take a hard second look at whether or not the quality of good character should be reintroduced into Bill C-20.

I intend to speak again on third reading on other provisions of the bill, but I want to impress upon the minister and his colleagues that while he might argue that it is a subjective evaluation, it is one that has widespread support and one that takes place on a daily basis in the courts of this land. Our judges, having the responsibilities and qualifications that they do, are well capable of using a good character clause. Not only do they feel they are capable of using the parameters which the good character amendment would bring to this bill, not only are they capable of evaluating candidates, but they feel the good caracter clause should be reincorporated in the act to give them the judicial scope which they require at present.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address myself to the amendment which attempts to retain good character as one of the criteria for qualifying for citizenship of this country. I suggest that it becomes essential to talk about some of the other criteria in order to plead for the retention of this one because so much has been lost and is being lost in the bill when citizenship is considered a right rather than a privilege if certain criteria are met. It becomes absolutely essential when we read two excerpts from the minister's statement in the committee when the bill was first discussed there. He said:

> What makes this bill unique and a leader among nationality laws of the world? First, it treats absolutely everyone equally. An applicant is an applicant, whether the person be male or female, young or old, from Austria or Australia. This quality is rare in citizenship law.

Then he spoke about citizenship as a right, and eventually about the possibility of the time limit and the language requirement. He said that some citizens will of course have an advantage when they come to this country. He added:

> It is to recognize the fact that some people are ready to try to meet the qualifications for citizenship more quickly than others. It is as simple as that. It only takes a moment's thought to realize that an applicant who already speaks one of Canada's two languages, has close family connections within Canada, is familiar with the Canadian form of government, has visited the country, and so on, has tremendous advantages over people who came from a country where they speak neither of the languages, which has a totally different form of government and so forth. There is certainly no guarantee that a person will receive citizenship after three years.

I submit that there is a contradiction in these two statements. It cannot be one and the other at the same time. I suggest that if this bill treats everyone equally it means that the criteria have to go. The criteria used to be five years of residence, security, knowledge, language, character, and something called "other" that I gather is judicial discretion.

Certainly security had some play around 1951, and I suspect the trial which was started off by Igor Gouzenko had something to do with security being a factor when this nation lost the innocence it had acquired through World War II and the hope that we would live in peace forever after. But I gather that the minister was very young in 1950 and has somehow retained his innocence and believes that now in 1976 we live in the same euphoria in which we lived in the years immediately following the war.

This is the time of detente, and security is gone—it was not used in 1974-75. Knowledge is gone as well. It did not matter in 1961, and in the last six years on record only one person a year has failed to acquire citizenship because of lack of knowledge of this country, and that was after five years of possibility for study. Language has been a factor but will cease to be.

There were attempts to amend the bill in order to eliminate the adequate knowledge of one or the other of the official languages. If you are going to treat everyone absolutely equally whether they come from Austria or from Australia, language will have to go and will not be able to stand as a criterion for rejecting a citizenship application. So we are left with character as a factor.

It was hoped that character would play some role in distinguishing between the applicant who failed and the one who succeeded, even though the time of residency was reduced. It seems to me that it is easier to disguise lack of good character for three years than for five years. In five years basic character becomes apparent. It is difficult to hide it for that length of time. But no, we are to reduce the waiting period to three years.

I am not at all convinced that granting citizenship at the end of a three-year period is good. I cannot understand why the government wishes to do this, after wishing to remove all traces of British subject status. Today we put in motion provisions which will eliminate all traces of the British subject from the elections act, as if it were a taint. The provision is to be removed. Some people who have lived in this country many years will not be able to vote at the next election because they will not have applied in time for Canadian citizenship. Is that how the governments means to demonstrate the value of Canadian citizenship? I submit that the value will go down.

In this busy world, time represents value. Actually it represents more than money. If you reduce the waiting period, you reduce the value of citizenship. I suppose it is too much to expect the government, which has reduced the value of our money to 40 per cent of what it was, to make the value of citizenship greater than 40 per cent of its original value.

I have been sent a great many letters in recent days. People write to me about the gun laws, that other infamous bill being put through by the government, and about the death penalty. A common thread runs through the letters, a desire to retain something worth while in this country, to protect this country. Some feel that this country is threatened. I wonder what people like this have been doing in the past year when the government has moved deliberately and cynically to reduce the value of Canadian citizenship.

Why will people not rise to the defence of something so worth while as citizenship? What has the Committee for an Independent Canada been doing? What has happened to the professors' report on Canadian studies in Canadian universities? What happened to that report this past year, when this bill was working its way through parliament? Thomas Symons said that there are few other countries in the world which have developed a post-secondary educational system that pays so little attention to the study of the country's own culture in the university curriculum.

We shall require that prospective citizens learn the language, attain a job, and reach some measure of self-sufficiency. We do not require that they shall spend enough time to learn something about our culture and about the essential factors of the country. Why bother stressing the value of citizenship if it can be so easily attained?

I know that in this last-ditch struggle we shall meet with no more success than our amendments met with in committee. We wanted to amend the provisions governing the time factor. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) said, "Move an amendment." I moved an amendment in committee, but it received, I am afraid, short shrift from the government that was bent on building a monument to the minister rather than on the retention of the value of citizenship.

In closing, I wonder what is the attitude of those who have sought a Canadian identity and who endeavour to inculcate the Canadian identity in our universities and in the economic systems of this land. I say, to paraphrase the old song:

Yet Hurtigs and ye Symons,
Oh, where hae ye been?
When they gave away the citizenship for Half of what it's been.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief and non-provocative. I hope sincerely that we can read this bill the third time tomorrow, and I shall not do anything which may upset that hope.

I admit that at the committee stage there were genuine differences of opinion between myself and certain hon. members opposite who served on the committee, on the question of good character. One can say that we will agree to disagree. We both stand for principles we are trying to defend.

Hon. members opposite know my concern about good character and know I am not trying to promote bad character. They know, as the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) was good enough to say, that I consider a good character provision as too subjective. It is not measurable in law. I feel that in a piece of legislation like this we should try to avoid subjective provisions of that kind which are, as has been said, interpreted by individuals according to their own views, culture, background, and traditions.

We are not avoiding the issue. We propose to replace the good character provision with a provision which can be measurable in law, namely, one to do with indictable offences. This provision is found in clause 20, which reads in part:

Notwithstanding anything in this act, a person shall not be granted citizenship under section 5 or subsection 10(1) or administered the oath of citizenship

(a) while he is

(i) under a probation order,

(ii) a paroled inmate, or

(iii) confined in or an inmate of any penitentiary, gaol, reformatory or prison, pursuant to any enactment in force in Canada;

And now comes the especially pertinent part, the provision which takes the place of the good character provision:

(b) while he is charged with, on trial for, subject to or a party to an appeal relating to an offence under subsection 28(1) or (2) of an indictable offence under any Act of Parliament . . .

I do not think we can reconcile our differences. It is my contention that the government's approach is measurable in law. I am not proposing anything inconsistent with the spirit of the law. I think this provision makes more sense than retaining the notion of good character. I made the point several times in committee. I have not been able to persuade hon. members opposite; nor have they been able to persuade me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Jarvis) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The House will now consider motion No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes).

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie) moved motion No. 2:

—That Bill C-20, An Act respecting citizenship, be amended in Clause 18 by deleting sub-clauses (2), (3) and (4) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The Minister shall appoint a tribunal consisting of a Superior Court Judge or Judges who may review any declaration made by the Governor in Council pursuant to sub-section (1) hereof.

(3) Upon an application for such a review the Minister shall advise the applicant of the particulars of the grounds upon which the Governor in Council has declared that to grant citizenship or issue a certificate of renunciation would be prejudicial to the security of Canada or contrary to public order in Canada, without disclosing the names of witnesses or sources of this information.

(4) The tribunal shall hold a hearing at which the applicant and the Minister shall be entitled to be present or to be represented by Counsel.

(5) The tribunal shall make recommendations to the Minister as to whether the declaration by the Governor in Council should be implemented or withdrawn as the case may be and shall state its reasons therefor in writing to the applicant and the Minister.

(6) A declaration made under sub-section (1) ceases to have effect two years after the day on which it was made.".

● (2120)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to present this amendment at the report stage of this bill because I think the committee, having spent a good part of two sessions dealing with it, recognizes the importance of the problem that relates to the amendment I have moved.

Basically the situation is that in the bill we have before us there is a provision in clause 18 whereby the governor in council, in practice the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), can deny an applicant Canadian citizenship on the grounds that to grant the application would be prejudicial to the security of Canada or contrary to public order in Canada.

That is an important clause in the bill. I do not argue with it being there. It is important that the minister have that discretionary power to deny citizenship because of security reasons, as so stated. What I take exception to is that there is no provision in this bill, nor has there been in the past, that when a minister denies an applicant citizenship for security reasons that those reasons have to be explained to the applicant. Nor does the applicant have an opportunity to appeal those reasons or present to the minister contrary evidence and argument, in other words to have his day in court.

As it stands, the clause seems to be a denial of natural justice. It is a denial to the applicant to be given clearly the reasons for rejecting his citizenship and the opportunity to put forth counter-argument. That is why I have moved the amendment that is before us.

The amendment does not remove the minister's discretionary power to turn down a citizenship applicant for security reasons. Nor does it force the minister to disclose the sources from which he has received the information that led him to conclude the applicant would be a security risk. What the amendment would do is set up an appeal tribunal consisting of superior court judges. It would allow the applicant to see the reasons why he is being denied citizenship without disclosing the sources.

This would provide an applicant with a change to dispute those reasons and present evidence that may contradict some of the arguments the minister has received from his sources. I submit that the confidentiality of the sources of the minister would be maintained. That is important. If security agencies want to continue to receive information from sources, obviously the confidentiality of those must be protected.

I have therefore designed an amendment which I think is reasonable and moderate. It does not demand that the cases be held in open court under normal legal practices. It at least allows the applicant some opportunity for a hearing, although it is a very limited hearing. As it is now without this amendment, a person is simply told he has been denied citizenship for security reasons. They are not enumerated or elaborated. Nor does he have a chance to challenge that decision.

I submit that the amendment I have moved falls in line with general government policy or at least with some of the recommendations made in 1969 by the Royal Commission on Security which recognized the very problem I have described, namely, that there is a denial of natural justice without this right of appeal. That royal commission made what I thought was a very sensible recommendation. I quote from page 301 of the abridged report:

[Mr. Symes.]

We recommend that the grant of citizenship should normally be refused on security grounds only if actual illegalities or criminal acts have been committed and proved in court, and not merely for membership in subversive associations or even the communist party. However, we recommend that ministerial discretion should be retained to deal with certain cases in which it may remain appropriate to withhold citizenship for particularly significant security reasons. All persons whose applications are rejected on security grounds should have access to the Security Review Board.

Because the royal commission stated that no group in Canada has been designated as subversive, if someone is going to be denied citizenship on that ground he should have the right of appeal. The royal commission recommended that a security review board be set up. Seven years have passed since that recommendation was put forward. We still have many applicants for Canadian citizenship being turned down for security reasons without any opportunity to appeal that decision. My amendment falls in line with the conclusions of a royal commission.

I do not accept the arguments that we heard in committee from the minister's officials. They stated that the problem is so difficult that the government cannot come up with some kind of security review board or appeal tribunal at this time. They further said it was beyond their mental capacity to design such a board that would guarantee a right of appeal and at the same time protect the minister's discretionary power and confidentiality of sources. If we do not make a move at this time to set up some kind of appeal procedure, how much longer must we wait?

The royal commission made some very important conclusions in 1969 and we should be acting on them. If that royal commission is not enough to convince hon. members of the importance of having this kind of review procedure, I draw their attention to a case that was brought before the Federal Court of Canada in 1973 by an applicant who had been turned down for security reasons. He was not given any argument or any chance to appeal. He took the then Secretary of State to court. I wish to read the decision of the Federal Court judges because I think their conclusions are very relevant and appropriate to my amendment.

The case was T. Lazarov v. Secretary of State of Canada. I read from the decision of Mr. Justice Thurlow of that case in 1973. He stated:

● (2130)

Whenever the reason for contemplating refusal of an application is one that is peculiar to the particular applicant the nature of citizenship and its importance to the individual are such that the applicant ought at least to have an opportunity of some kind and at some stage of the proceedings to dispute its existence.

Further, Mr. Justice Thurlow, with two other justices concurring, ruled that:

The status of citizenship carries with it rights and advantages and to refuse the application of a person to whom it would otherwise be granted on the basis of matters of which he is not apprised and which he is given no opportunity to dispute is shocking to one's sense of justice even though he may lawfully apply again after a comparatively short time. It suggests that the applicant is not being fairly dealt with and fairness demands that he at least be afforded an opportunity to state his position . . .In my opinion, therefore, the rule audi alteram partem applies whenever the minister proposes to excercise his discretion to refuse an application on the basis of facts pertaining to the particular applicant or his application and where he has not already had an opportunity in the course of the proceedings before the Citizenship Court he must be afforded a fair opportunity in one way or another of stating his position with respect to any matters which in the absence of refutation or explanation would lead to the rejection of his application. This is not to say a confidential report or its contents need be disclosed to him but the pertinent allegations which if undenied or unresolved would lead to rejection of his application must, as I see it, be made known to him to an extent sufficient to enable him to respond to them and he must have a fair opportunity to dispute or explain them.

That was the considered opinion of a Federal Court justice in a case which is most pertinent to my amendment. So, Mr. Speaker, we have a royal commission arguing the need for an appeal procedure, and we find a Federal Court justice also stating that an appeal procedure is necessary. I understand that the Department of the Secretary of State is appealing that Federal Court decision before the Supreme Court and that the matter is still unresolved. Nevertheless I feel strongly that there ought to be some kind of appeal procedure provided.

I have heard departmental officials argue that though a person might be denied citizenship for security reasons he can reapply after two years. That is true, but neither the officials nor the police agencies are obliged to prepare a new report or submit new evidence which might be on the side of the applicant. All they have to do is resubmit the original files, and the minister denies the application once again. This process could go on every two years. For his part, the applicant has no opportunity to get hold of the reasons for the denial of his application and produce counter arguments. So the two-year provision is no solution; it only puts the applicant back to square one every two years.

We heard an official in the security branch say he recognized the merit of the appeal procedure but he feared that if any such procedure were introduced the government's sources of information might dry up. I presume he was referring to the RCMP or to police agencies or to organizations such as the FBI or the CIA. But my amendment would take care of such a situation by providing for a hearing in confidence—the reasons need only be stated to the applicant in a general way, and the sources of the information need not be disclosed. Thus there should be no fear on the part of the government that its sources of information would dry up.

I might say, as an aside, that I am rather skeptical and, indeed, highly critical of the government's sources of information if they include the CIA, which has become infamous for its illegal activities, as we saw during the Watergate affair, and for carrying out all kinds of spying for a former president. We should remember that in the United States a law has been passed requiring the FBI and the CIA to present any dossier concerning a person when that person requests it. And these agencies have not gone to ruin because such a basic right has been granted with the object of protecting civil liberty.

I realize the government is preoccupied about the secrecy of information, but in an area such as this which so closely affects natural justice I believe it ought to recognize that my amendment does not, in fact, jeopardize its sources of information. It is of great importance that an applicant should have an opportunity of appearing before a tribunal to hear the evidence and comment upon it.

There is historical precedent in Canada for such an amendment as I propose. During the second world war and thereafter, in the course of what I consider to be a sad chapter in Canadian history, when citizens of Japanese origin and other so-called aliens were interned, the government set up an appeal procedure whereby anyone who was to be interned had a right to appeal along the lines I have suggested here. Government sources of information were protected, but at least the person concerned had a right to his day in court, as it were.

When we look at the history of the denial of citizenship on security grounds we cannot but be concerned over what has been happening in recent times. The government has never been obliged to define precisely what is meant by "protecting the security of Canada" or "prejudicial to public order". There are phrases which can be interpreted by bureaucrats and by the government as they go along.

One has only to look at the pattern of denial of citizenship for security reasons to see how irregular the definition of these phrases has been—how it fluctuates from time to time as people interpret the situation according to the vogue of the period. When we look at the statistics provided for us we find that since 1949 2,173 applicants have been denied Canadian citizenship for security reasons. This figure represents 39.9 per cent of the total number of rejections year by year. It is a significant proportion. But when we look at the pattern of the number of rejections in each year something very interesting emerges.

In 1949, 28 people were denied citizenship for security reasons. By 1951 the number had jumped to 170 and remained at about that level, between 150 and 190, from 1951 to 1959. Then it began to drop off, falling to 70 in 1963, and 11 in 1973. Hon. members will notice that the high watermark of rejection occurred during the McCarthy red scare era in the United States which spilled over into Canada as well. There followed a kind of hysteria when people looked for security risks behind every door and in every closet. This shows how unregulated and widely interpreted this concept of a security risk can be.

When we questioned the minister's officials in committee, my confidence that the interpretation would be fair was not in any way strengthened. For example, when I asked them how they interpret "prejudicial to the security of Canada" or "contrary to public order in Canada", Mr. Nichols, as reported at page 44:7 of the minutes for Tuesday, March 23, had this to say:

On the matter of how we will interpret the words of the bill, again I am at a great disadvantage. The words of the bill, as I have said, are simply a phraseology to describe what is now done. The present act does not talk about security. It evolved. Canada has been in the security business regarding the naturalization of aliens since about 1918. Various methods have been used through the years. Most of them just grew.

I suppose they just grew like Topsy, Mr. Speaker. It is something that has evolved without any kind of definition or regulation. I worry when bureacrats make definitions according to their whims and fancies as the days go by. If we are going to have this kind of latitude in interpretation, we must have some appeal procedure to guarantee basic human rights.

I am not speaking abstractly, Mr. Speaker. I have pointed to figures showing people who have been denied Canadian citizenship for these reasons. I have quoted a court case, and there have been other cases as well. The most current one concerns an individual called Mr. Offley who came to Canada a few years ago. He applied for citizenship which was approved by a citizenship judge, but he was turned down by the minister for security reasons. Because he renounced his U.S. citizenship and cannot get Canadian citizenship, he now finds he is without a country, unable to move out of Canada.

To show in human terms what happens when people are caught up in the regulations, I should like to quote a letter Mr. Offley wrote to the Secretary of State on April 9. In part he said:

Your decision to refuse my application means that I am, and will stay, a permanent domiciled resident in Canada. I am stateless, and thus immune from deportation, as no country will accept me either as a visitor or as an immigrant.

However, if my rejection has no substantial consequences for you, it has quite immense ones for me. It means that my legal status will remain one of living in limbo, with no possibility of gaining citizenship, without even the alternative of leaving. I have been conferred this status without a trial, without access to the allegations on which the decision was taken, without a right to confront my accusers, and without right of appeal. It is a decision that has been taken without reference to the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Security and without regard to the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal.

I think that points out in a quiet, dramatic way how this law affects individuals. There may be good reasons for turning down applicants on security grounds; I do not dispute that. Nor do I dispute the minister's right to do so. But surely in this country, which prides itself on its democracy and long tradition of basic human rights, we should at least allow the accused, so to speak, to have his day in court, although in this case it certainly is a rather restricted one because of the circumstances.

We discussed this very thoroughly in committee, and it was my feeling that because members were generally concerned with trying to wrestle with the problem, that they felt deeply about it. The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) was very sympathetic and argued that we must move in this direction.

I do not have much hope that government members will support my amendment; it will probably go down to defeat. Nevertheless I wanted to put on record something that concerns me as a Canadian and believer in liberty and justice. I hope my arguments, if they do not move the government to bring in a security review board or appeal procedure at this stage, will give the government added impetus to take action and bring in such a review procedure in the near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) not going to reply to this excellent appeal that the hon. member has made to him?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I was going to resist the temptation to reply, having one eye on the clock, but I will be very brief. As the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) has put it, this is a subject that was given an awful lot of thought and consideration in committee. He has raised a number of extremely important questions. The formula that we have put forward in Bill C-20 I think he will agree is an advance over what we had before. I do not believe we have found the ultimate answer to the concern that he raised tonight, but I think it is important to recognize that we have made three changes that are an improvement over the present situation.

First of all, we have stated the nature of the discretionary power involved in rather plain language, so that applicants are not refused without reason being given. Secondly, the discretionary act is moved to a higher authority and the decision will be collegial. In other words, it will no longer be a simple act of discretion on the part of the minister but will also involve the governor in council. Thirdly, for the first time we will make available to a refused applicant the reasons for his refusal. He will be told in so many words that he has been refused citizenship for security reasons, and he will be given this information in confidence.

I think that is an improvement over the present situation. I do not think I would argue, though, with a great deal of personal conviction that it answers all the questions that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie raised tonight. I think those will be subject to further reviews down the line.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Symes) negatived.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie) moved Motion No. 3:

That Bill C-20, An Act respecting citizenship, be amended in Clause 33 by deleting sub-clause 6(e).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be much more brief in my explanation of this amendment. It deals with the amendment proposed by the minister regarding property and how it relates to ownership and citizenship.

● (2150)

Briefly the situation up to now has been that under the constitution the provinces have control over property. What has happened in many provinces, certainly in my povince of Ontario and in Prince Edward Island, has been that foreign ownership of land has become a great problem. Recreation land was bought up by non-Canadians and a lot of land speculation took place. The only way a province could put a stop or a slowdown to this process of foreign ownership and the purchase of land was to pass regulations denying ownership on the basis of non-residency. That is to say, if you wanted to buy land in Prince Edward Island you had to be a resident of Prince Edward Island. This was felt to be rather restrictive. By denying ownership to anyone not a resident, not only do you deny the right of foreign nationals to buy land, you prevent other Canadians from buying land in that province.

What the bill before us does is widen the scope of action on the part of a province. It will allow a province to deny ownership of land on the basis of residency, as has been the case in the past, and also on the basis of citizenship. That it to say, if a province designs the legislation, a non-Canadian would be prohibited from owning certain types of land. Of course I agree with that. What I object to is one clause in the amendment presented by the minister which states that if the Foreign Investment Review Agency, which is a federal agency, decides that an ownership acquisition by a foreign company is in order, then that is to overrule any provincial law which may deny ownership on the basis of non-Canadian citizenship.

I moved an amendment to deal with the clause relating to the Foreign Investment Review Agency for a number of reasons. First of all, it is a fact that many of the provinces object to the clause itself on the basic ground that it is an intrusion of federal jurisdiction into what is clearly defined by the constitution as a provincial right, namely, the right of property. It also means that the rules can be changed at any time because the Foreign Investment Review Act can be amended at any time by the federal government without consultation with the provinces. Some of the provinces, therefore, are in dispute over this clause. Because we did not hear from the witnesses for the provinces at the committee it would be more appropriate to delete this clause until the federal government can talk to the provinces in an attempt to hammer out something agreeable to the majority.

In addition, I think the foreign investment review clause negates the general thrust of the amendment which is intended to broaden the scope under which provinces can act. It may well be that a province might want to deny ownership to a foreign company buying up real estate for land speculation purposes, either on the outskirts of an urban centre or in the urban centre itself, or deny the right of a foreign land corporation to buy up agricultural land, as has been going on in many of the provinces.

We could conceivably have such a foreign company being given the right by the Foreign Investment Review Agency to buy up Canadian companies and the land on which they reside or which they control. This would be contrary to the intent of the amendment, to give the provinces some power to restrict ownership on grounds other than just residency. That is to say, they could restrict ownership on the basis of not being a Canadian citizen.

It is my feeling that it would be best at this time that the clause be deleted for the reasons outlined. I do not wish to go into more detail as we discussed it in committee, but again I felt it was important to put this on the record and I commend my amendment to the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Symes) negatived.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State) moved that Bill C-20, respecting citizenship, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, by leave now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): This can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Faulkner moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—EFFECT OF REPEAL OF SECTION 272 OF RAILWAY ACT ON FLOUR AND GRAIN EXPORTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I realize that the last should always be first, but I did not know that I would really be first that quickly. I count on you and other people for small mercies. Now to get down to business.

My business in being here tonight is to deal with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) in connection with what I think is a great travesty as it affects the people of Halifax, the people of Saint John, the people of Montreal, the millers in all parts of eastern Canada, and the western grain growers, more particularly those of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. I hope I have covered the ground adequately for that with which I intend to deal. This is probably my sixth appearance on the late show in the last three or four weeks in connection with this particular subject.

What concerns me is that the Minister of Transport, who should be the custodian and guardian of Section 272 of the Railway Act, is going to repeal this by virtue of Clause 15 of the bill which is item no. 87 on the current hit parade; that is, the restraint program before us in parliament. That is the reason why I appear here tonight, as I have on a number of occasions, to appeal to the Minister of Transport, my dear friend; the President of the Treasury Board, a dear friend of mine also; the Minister of Agriculture, also a dear friend; and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, also a dear friend. I hope I have proven in previous debate that what they propose will cause a loss to the Canadian economy of at least $100 million a year. Whether we like that or not I think that is an important figure.

I believe I have proven that this has been an ill-contrived program. It is something that not only I will fight but which also will be fought by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax-East (Mr. Forrestall). The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers) also will be dragged into this fight before it is over. There will be 22 or 25 members from the city of Montreal who will be dragged into it, as well as members from the western grain growing areas of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. In other words, it will be one hell of a good fight in this House of Commons. I can say without even taking a second breath that that is exactly what will happen. Why will this come about?

Before asking the spokesman for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to reply I will venture to suggest the reason this will come about is simply that when the new Minister of Transport, the hon. member for Humboldt, took his place he was told that he would have to achieve a certain amount of savings. He went back to his department, which admittedly has been in a mess not only since the days of the minister who preceded him but since the days of a couple of ministers back.

He asked what he could do in order to effect savings in his department. He was told that the flour-grain subsidy could be dealt with because no one would protest it. He was told that it might affect Halifax, Saint John or Montreal, but that the people involved are all very supine and that no one would be smart enough to spot it. The darned trouble was that quite a few people did spot it very quickly. Many of them were very quick to raise a resentful voice. I was one who raised the matter, and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) was another. Between the two of us we batted this thing back and forth for the last couple of weeks. I will tell you, Sir, that I think the new Minister of Transport now realizes this. This does not involve merely the two of us. There are about 20 and probably more members of parliament who are prepared to start raising a very large fuss about what he proposes to do.

This has been scouted thoroughly in the past. I do not wish to go into the fact and figures, but I am prepared to debate the facts and figures in respect of this matter with anyone. The fact is that the Port of Halifax will not be dealt with in the way suggested, nor will the port of Saint John. I may stand as a rather small figure compared to the large number of figures who have not yet spoken in respect of the port of Montreal. Before this is over not only will the members from Montreal be involved is this but also the members from Manitoba and Saskatchewan, the two grain growing provinces.

When we return after Easter there will be a large number of people fighting for what I am fighting for tonight, and I will not feel too much alone at that time. I will be able to say that at least I was a pioneer. What I am fighting for, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not throw out an old policy until we can come in with something new that is better. Until the Minister of Transport does that, I will be fighting for an old policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. colleague mentioned that he did not want to be last, he certainly raised a problem that was the subject of many discussions. I personally raised that problem many times in the Department of Transport. When he mentioned the Department of Transport, the Treasury Board and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as having something to do with this problem, one sees how complex the problem raised by the hon. member is.

The government came under numerous protests for repealing section 272 of the Railway Act. Of course, the decision to eliminate the "At and East" subsidy was made to reduce government expenditures. It may be easy to blame the government for its excessive expenditures—and we hear about it virtually every day during the question period in the House—but it is even a lot more difficult to suggest means of reducing those expenditures without clashes. All budget cuts were made after consultation with the bodies involved and after considering regional submissions and needs within an overall policy dealing with socio-economic aspects, or still within an economic policy for the whole of all Canadians.

[English]

With respect to the ports of Saint John and Halifax, the Minister of Transport has indicated that the removal of the subsidy may encourage beneficial developments, such as the movement of grain by unit train to these ports.

Flour exports from most traditional exporting countries, including Canada, Australia, and the United States, have been declining for a number of years. This is due to several factors, including a trend toward national self-sufficiency in milling capacity throughout the world. Nonetheless, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce advised the hon. member, he intends to have discussions with the Minister of Transport and his officials on this subject.

I congratulate the hon. member who raised this question, and I assure him that it is very important. I hope the decision will reflect the needs of all Canadians.

FINANCE—MONITORING OF INCOME OF INSURANCE AGENTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to start on a pleasant note by congratulating the parliamentary secretary for doing double duty this evening and representing the forces of the government in such an adequate and astute way.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The forces of evil.

Mr. Leggatt: I didn't say that.

The question I raised several weeks ago was with regard to the increasing evidence that incomes for insurance agents in British Columbia have gone up dramatically as a result of the increase in auto insurance rates in that province. It was not raised out of any petulance or envy of those incomes. It was raised because any anti-inflation program worth the name must develop some kind of consensus within the population, and differences in raises within that population must be seen to be fair for any anti-inflation program to work.

The evidence is that the average rate for auto insurance in British Columbia has doubled, and the charges insurance agents make for collecting those premiums have remained approximately the same. They have reduced their rate from 7 per cent to 5 per cent on the basis of statutory coverage and it has remained 10 per cent on the optional coverage. The collision coverage, which is now optional, goes into that optional area. Let me give you an example.

The commission that an agent would get on a 1973 Toyota between last year and this year has increased by 83 per cent, given the same risk. With the same work force, the same number of people, the same staff, that increase is not justifiable under any kind of meaningful anti-inflation program. As a result of that I decided I would drop a note to the Anti-Inflation Board to see what steps the chairman of that board would be able to take with regard to what appears to be an excessive increase in the incomes of one section of the community. I should like to quote from a letter from Jean-Luc Pepin, dated March 30, and directed to me in response to my letter. He writes:

> Increased earnings derived from direct commission in a guideline year are not subject to legal restraint, providing the formula by which the income is determined does not change from the base to the guideline year.

Later he goes on to state:

> The increase in remuneration would be attributed to an increase in productivity.

It is that quote from the letter in which the chairman suggests that somehow the increase in the incomes of insurance agents in British Columbia has something to do with productivity which makes me think that the government is living in an Alice in Wonderland world, and the legislation it has proposed in terms of controlling inflation does nothing meaningful whatsoever with regard to the incomes of such people.

I would like the parliamentary secretary to put himself in the shoes of a lumber worker in my constituency who finds, first, that his wages are frozen; second, that his insurance rates have been tripled; third, that the export levy has been removed on the lumber that his company sells abroad, which means that it can make just as much profit as it likes because it is not under the anti-inflation guidelines; fourth, when he buys his insurance he finds his insurance agent no longer flies to Hawaii every year, he can now go around the world if he likes. That kind of program does not give any hope of a consensus on anti-inflation measures. From time to time people in our party are critized as being carping critics, but I am trying to be positive on this.

I hope the parliamentary secretary in responding to this question will deal with what the legislation can do to control this excess of income and will tell us what specific proposals his government is now prepared to make to bring the incomes of professional people and people at that level under some control. I suggest it has to be in the form of income taxation. This should be done so that the people who work with their hands in the mills, who have their wages frozen, and people who are on low incomes can have some confidence that the program is not being carried on their backs, which certainly evidence concerning incomes of insurance agents in British Columbia would seem to support.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to thank the hon. member for his kind remarks and I hope he will be satisfied with the reply I intend to give him.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) has asked if the income of agents selling insurance on behalf of the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia (ICBC) is being monitored under the guidelines of the anti-inflation program. I would note, first of all, that the province of British Columbia and the federal government are in the process of negotiating an agreement under the anti-inflation program. Until such an agreement is signed, none of the provincial public sector, including any of its Crown corporations, is covered under the anti-inflation program.

Second, the minister indicated quite clearly to the provinces on February 10, 1976, in reply to a question on whether the ICBC would be covered by a Canada-B.C. agreement on the anti-inflation program, that we would be quite prepared to discuss the inclusion of provincial agencies under such an agreement. The procedure that has been followed with provinces that have signed an agreement has been to annex to any memorandum of agreement the specific schedule listing such government bodies that are to be covered. The final decision on which bodies will be covered by the government remains with the provinces.

In this regard I wish to bring to your attention Premier Bennett's statement of February 27, 1976, in which he indicated his government's intention to have the national anti-inflation guidelines apply to pricing and compensation decisions in the British Columbia public sector.

With respect to the specific question on monitoring of income of agents of ICBC, it is the minister's understanding that such agents are not salaried employees. They operate under a contractual agreement with ICBC, and are paid on a commission basis. Furthermore, the minister is given to understand that commission rates vary by type of insurance sold. An agent's remuneration would depend, as well, on the size and number of contracts he negotiates.

If such a case were to be brought to the attention of the Anti-Inflation Board, it is the minister's impression that they would be guided by their compensation regulations which provide for review of commission rate structures for those employers subject to monitoring under the program. I would note, however, that the anti-inflation guidelines are not intended to penalize those individuals whose productivity increases. In this case, any increased income of agents which is attributable to an increase in the size and number of contracts they negotiate would be within the guidelines under the anti-inflation program.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

PROPOSED MEETING WITH PREMIERS OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES TO DEAL WITH ECONOMIC SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of recent confirmation by Statistics Canada and Canada Manpower of sharply increased unemployment in Atlantic Canada over last year, in some instances one third greater, as in my own area; the urgent demand by the premiers of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island for assistance for unbearable electrical costs; and the federal government's announced intention to increase transportation costs in Atlantic Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean):

That the Prime Minister convene an emergency meeting of first ministers of the Atlantic provinces to deal in particular with the alarming situation in respect of seriously deepening unemployment, escalating electrical costs and impending transportation cost increases; that this House instruct the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to report within thirty days on the impact of the government restraint and anti-inflation programs which are creating increased regional disparity; that the President of the Treasury Board be instructed to present a re-allocated program of government expenditure which recognizes the necessity of flexibility to assure that regional disparities will not continue to increase.

Mr. Speaker: Such motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF IMPORTS TO PERMIT REVISION OF POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the footwear and textile industries as well as poultry farming in Canada are all three threatened by massive imports, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, responsible for licences on import quotas, suspend for a three-month period all import licences on those products to undertake a complete review of any import policy to stabilize the Canadian production for threatened producers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF POLICY WHICH RESULTS IN INCREASE IN PRICE OF BUTTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a very urgent and important motion.

Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture made public the new dairy policy for the coming year. Considering that the minister's proposals will force consumers to pay 5 cents more for a pound of butter, considering also that the policy as a whole will mean a sure loss of $2,000 or more for milk producers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That the House unanimously request that the minister responsible summon the CDC before the Committee on Agriculture to reconsider the announcement made by the minister yesterday and which is totally unacceptable at the moment to consumers and producers.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS CONCERNING LICENSING OF AIR CREW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the fact that as of Friday, April 9, approximately 3,500 pilots whose licences have expired are breaking the law, in particular the Aeronautics Act. Air regulations section 400 states that, except as provided in this part, no person shall fly or attempt to fly as a flight crew member of an aircraft unless he is the holder of a valid and subsisting licence or permit appropriate to his duties issued under this part.

Because this law is being broken, there being no air safety inspectors because of the strike in Ontario and Quebec, and because of the safety hazard, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

● (1410)

That the Minister of Transport take immediate action to enforce the Aeronautics Act, air regulation—section 400 and that the appropriate action be taken to see that this law is not broken again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented for debate with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RECOGNITION OF ABORIGINAL NATIVE RIGHTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Native Council of Canada presented a position paper on aboriginal rights to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet on April 15, 1975, and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has not yet responded to the Native Council of Canada position paper although an answer was promised within three months of presentation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That this House urge the government of Canada to recognize the aboriginal rights of native peoples, including Mètis and non-status Indians, and enshrine these rights in the Canadian Constitution in a way which will enable them to preserve and protect their languages and cultures.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF EFFECT ON CANADA OF INTERNATIONAL CURRENCY SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter. As the United Kingdom pound has plunged one third in value in the past year, the Italian lira is falling to new lows, while the French franc is under severe pressure, it is urgent that the government inform this House and the Canadian public if any call has been made or any commitment given by Canada to support or indirectly aid any foreign currency and, secondly, review what consequences, if any, may develop in the Canadian economy as a result of this international currency turmoil. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies):

That this important matter be immediately referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs with a view to hearing the Minister of Finance, his officials, the governor of the Bank of Canada, his officials, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, his officials, and other authorities, on the topic and that there be provision for the committee to make recommendations to the government on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO PRESIDENT OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL ON MARRIAGE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather special question of privilege. I hope I may have just one minute of the time of the House. There is precedent for this. On March 5, 1971, the then Acting Prime Minister felt compelled to take note of a certain event. I want to do the same today and return the favour. I will do it by replacing my name with his name in what he said on March 5, 1971 in Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the House for not having given notice yesterday of the intention of our esteemed government House leader to get married . . . The trouble is he did not consult the members of his Cabinet on this essentially private affair, but I am sure all members of the House will join me in wishing great happiness and long life to the happy pair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. On behalf of the members of the opposition, I want to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for bringing this event to our attention in this almost unique way. I ask him to express the very best wishes of the members of the opposition on this act of great wisdom by the government House leader. I ask him to express to his seatmate our very best wishes for a long and happy married life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) rose I had the rule book in my hand. I was thinking of proposing a motion under Standing Order 5 to give the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) leave to be away. However, since he has taken that leave himself, we join with the Prime Minister and with the spokesman of the official opposition in extending our best wishes to the Honourable and Mrs. Mitchell Sharp.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, with my colleagues of the Social Credit Party of Canada, I join the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as well as the official opposition and hon. members of the New Democratic Party in extending to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) our best wishes of happiness on the occasion of his wedding and we hope he will enjoy many happy and gratifying years.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DR. G. S. DHILLON, MINISTER OF SHIPPING AND TRANSPORT FOR INDIA

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the oral question period, which I will extend for a few minutes after three o'clock so that before we are away for a few days, hopefully, hon. members will enjoy a full and ample question period, I draw to the attention of hon. members the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor who is here today in his capacity of Minister of Shipping and Transport for India. He is much better known to us in his former capacity as a very distinguished Speaker. He was one of the Commonwealth's most outstanding Speakers for seven years in his role as Speaker of the LokSabha, Dr. G. S. Dhillon.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REASON FOR INCREASE IN PRICE OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, after the announcement of dairy policy by the Minister of Agriculture yesterday I will put my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and ask him whether he will inform the House why we are faced with the worst of both worlds, namely, an increase in dairy prices to the Canadian consumer at a time when the Minister of Agriculture is asking dairy producers to reduce production?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): First, allow me to congratulate the hon. gentleman for his new role in the shadow cabinet; I hope he remains in the shadows for a long, long time. As a member who represents a farm region he is in a position to understand the intricacies which have resulted in this situation. The dairy farmers of this country have been victims of a world-wide phenomenon, basically that of a world-wide surplus of skimmed milk powder which has unexpectedly reduced their incomes. Accordingly, all segments of Canadian society have been asked to help the farmers in this situation.

The Treasury Board has aided substantially, farmers themselves are voluntarily cutting down production in this coming year and we have asked the public to absorb 5 cents on the price of butter, knowing full well that if the price of butter continues to rise farmers will eventually see a diminishing market at home, something which would only add to their problems in the long run. I can only hope that the announcement made by the Minister of Agriculture yesterday, with the object of avoiding this situation next year, will have a beneficial effect on prices as well.

Mr. Grafftey: Before I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture, I would like to congratulate the Minister of Consumer Affairs on his appointment and assure him we shall not be in the shadows for long; I shall keep galloping along with my leader.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: In the hope, again tentative, that for the next two weeks, hon. members may be deprived of the scintillating questions asked during the question period, perhaps members on both sides would agree to stay with questions and answers.

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF NEW DAIRY POLICY TO COMMITTEE AND TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the disastrous dairy policy announced last April setting the target support price too high for dairy products, which resulted in over-production, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture why the Canadian consumer and producer should pay such a penalty for his mistakes? Considering the price increase anticipated for Canadian consumers and the fact the individual producers will suffer to the extent of $2,000 to $3,000 a year, would the minister refer his announced dairy policy to the appropriate standing committee of this House, and if not, why not?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first and foremost the dairy farmers of Canada last year presented figures to justify their request for $14 a hundredweight for milk. We did not give them what they wanted and they are still condemning us for that. I would dare the hon. member to go into his constituency and tell the dairy farmers that I paid them too much, which is what he has suggested. There is nothing stopping the agriculture committee dealing with dairy policy. I understand that they were supposed to deal with it today but they could not find a quorum since not enough members were going to be present.

Some of my officials are meeting at the present time with some of the dairy farmers of Canada and discussing the proposed policy and program for this year which I announced yesterday in the House. If it is creating a hardship on farmers, then I did not tell them to produce over 100 million hundredweight of milk last year. If the hon. member would read the announcement I made last April, he would find that I told them to produce 100 million hundredweight of milk and no more.

Mr. Grafftey: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister explained to the Anti-Inflation Board how the consumer can pay more at a time when he is asking the producer to restrict production; and in view of the anticipated increase in the price to the consumer, has the minister referred the proposed dairy policy to the Anti-Inflation Board?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Board has been having discussions with the Canadian Dairy Commission and is perfectly aware of the formula the commission is operating under. Let me tell the hon. member that if labour and business in this country were like the dairy farmers, who are operating under a stricter program than we are suggesting for labour or industry, there would be no need for an Anti-Inflation Board.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR JUSTIFICATION OF INCREASE IN PRICE OF BUTTER

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Considering that the storage of butter surpluses is extremely expensive and that the price of butter increased by 5 cents a pound, which may well reduce consumption, how can the minister justify in the eyes of the consumer such an increase in the price of butter when we have surpluses which cost us so much?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not tried to justify to the consumer why our dairy policy has resulted in a five cent increase in the price of a pound of butter. On the contrary, I have expressed my regret that this is one of the end results of the policy. Having said that, I am pragmatic enough to know that the farmers, as a result of a world-wide surplus of skim milk powder, are facing extraordinary storage charges. We are asking all segments of society to bear the cost of that particular problem which is bearing on a particularly important group of people. We cannot develop the type of society in which each and every one of us would be selfish enough to share the benefits and not be prepared to share some of the problems of other segments of society. We have helped the dairy farmers, even if the opposition does not agree.

POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT PAYING ENTIRE COST OF STORAGE OF BUTTER

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a second supplementary for the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that, according to what he said yesterday, it seems already certain that the credits for storage cost are insufficient, will the minister ask the producers to pay for the storage cost if necessary or is he prepared today to ensure that this will be provided by the government?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am confident that if the dairy farmers do what they have said they are going to do about production and domestic consumption, they probably will not need all the money we are providing. I am hoping this is going to be the fact. My officials and our dairy farmers, yours and mine, advise us that they are going to adhere to this kind of program but they are not going to produce for waste, and are not going to produce to give away their products. We do not ask anybody else in our society to do that.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN DECISION ON WAGE SETTLEMENT OF URANIUM MINERS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, given the fact that workers in Canada who work for the uranium mines are subject to a totally disproportionate degree of risk of acquiring both silicosis and lung cancer, and given the fact that the trade union negotiating for such employees in the Elliot Lake region negotiated as part of the package an early retirement provision, designed precisely to protect the health of those workers, will the minister assure the House that the government will intervene in the extraordinary decision of the Anti-Inflation Board that held down the proposed negotiated settlement to 12 per cent, the bare guideline in this case, thus putting in total jeopardy the package negotiated by the union, accepted by the company, and intended to protect the health of those employees?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the assurance that we will intervene, although my colleague, the Minister of Labour, in particular, has been concerned about the efforts the federal government would like to take to assure better safety standards in uranium mines at Elliot Lake and elsewhere in Canada. I should say that the Anti-Inflation Board will be meeting on Tuesday next, April 20, with parties to this particular settlement for the purpose of clarifying the decision. I will be looking forward to a report from the board after that time on reactions expressed at that meeting to see what further action might be taken. I might just add in this regard that as soon as Bill C-89 is adopted by the House that would provide a route for either the company or the union to seek a review of the decision. For the time being, the board has agreed to meet with the parties to discuss it further, and I will await the results of that discussion.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the board, of course, refused to meet with those workers in the first place. Considering that one of the provisions of the law now on the books would enable the board to make a ruling that would provide for an increase beyond the 12 per cent level, that is the provision relating to the fact that the 12 per cent increase might result in a lack of workers going into the industry, in which case they would be exempt, and given the fact that everyone knows there is a profound health hazard associated with working in uranium mines, rather than waiting for the results of that meeting next week or two weeks, will the minister assure the House that the government will make known to the Anti-Inflation Board that it does not accept this extraordinarily bad ruling in this instance?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that the hon. gentleman is correct when he says there was a refusal to communicate between the board and the union in question. It does seem to me, however, that the board has been given the responsibility by parliament for negotiating between parties in this kind of situation. It does remain sensible for the board to engage in that kind of negotiation such as the kind of discussion that is implied next Tuesday. Under the circumstances, I think it would be far wiser to await that discussion and see what the conclusions would be. As to the application of the particular exemption referred to, that of course is a matter which will be before the Anti-Inflation Board and it will want to take it into account in its decision on this matter.

POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION IN DECISION ON WAGE SETTLEMENT OF MINERS AT THOMPSON, MANITOBA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): As a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question with reference to another decision made by the same brilliant board. Does the government plan to take any action concerning the settlement the board has deemed to be appropriate for miners working at Thompson, Manitoba which again has been set at the 12 per cent level and will leave miners in the Inco Corporation in that part of Canada being paid substantially less than the miners in the Sudbury region who work for precisely the same company? I should like to ask the minister if the government will not make it clear to the board that the same provision for companies to be able to ensure a supply of workers, and thus have an exemption under the guidelines, applies in the Thompson case and that here again the decision should have been one that would have provided workers there with an increase well above the 12 per cent limit.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the board would have taken into account that particular consideration, but certainly I would be glad to mention that point of view to the board. It seems to me, however, that the same principle applies where parliament has given this board this authority that it should have the opportunity to exercise its best judgment on the matter.

NEW DAIRY POLICY—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL MEET PRODUCERS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

According to the law of supply and demand prices would tend to drop when supply exceeds demand. This is the case with the dairy industry.

The second part of my question is this: since the government dairy policy was announced yesterday and in view of the reports we have received and the pressure we are made to feel, did the minister have any communication with the APU asking for a meeting for today or so, in order to discuss this overall policy concerning the dairy industry in Canada?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware if UPA has made that request. We have met with representatives of La Belle Province industrial milk producers at the Sir John Carling Building this morning.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT PRODUCERS BENEFIT FROM INCREASED PRICE OF MILK

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary, which is also directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Given the fact that the support price for butter has been increased by five cents a pound and that the price for milk powder has been raised by four cents a pound, which represents roughly 50 cents a hundredweight to be absorbed by the consumers, may I ask the minister, even if he would be tempted to answer that this is not under his jurisdiction, whether he would be prepared to exercise his influence in order that processing plants give industrial milk producers the benefit of the full amount of this price increase as compensation for producers having to pay the 70 cents a hundredweight increase for export?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is the general intention, but I would just remind the hon. member that over 80 per cent of the dairy products which go to the industrial markets are marketed by co-operatives owned by the farmers themselves.

METHOD OF DISPOSING OF SURPLUS MILK

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I too, would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a supplementary.

Could the minister tell the House how the Canadian Dairy Commission will dispose of the surplus milk subject to the $8.60 a hundredweight penalty? Will these surpluses be turned into butter or some other products to be marketed at the same prices as those for milk subject to quotas?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, any surplus milk that the hon. member talks about that will suffer a penalty of $8.60 per hundredweight will not be wasted. We are hoping that it will just not be produced because farmers will be producing it for a few odd cents a hundred. This just does not make common sense or economic sense.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH PREMIERS OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES TO DISCUSS ECONOMIC POLICY

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the temporary absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to direct to the Prime Minister a question arising from the sharply increasing unemployment level in Atlantic Canada as indicated by Statistics Canada yesterday. Since one purpose of the control program was to contain inflation without increasing regional disparity, would the Prime Minister give us a commitment or advise the House whether the Minister of Finance will hold formal talks prior to final budget preparations with all four governments of the Atlantic region to reach some kind of open understanding on employment goals and on common fiscal action.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that such talks have been held by the Minister of Finance with all the provincial ministers of finance just a few weeks ago.

SUGGESTED NARROWING OF REGIONAL DISPARITY AS GOAL IN PREPARATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister indicate to us whether the Minister of Finance in going into the preparation of his budget now has some common understanding with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces regarding the impact of the federal policy upon those regions, and if he has not will the Prime Minister give us an undertaking now that there will be that kind of consultation prior to the final preparation of the budget so that the budget will not have another devastating impact upon that region of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can give the House the assurance that the finance minister's budget will take into account not only the effect of that budget on the maritimes but on all parts of Canada. The Leader of the Opposition knows that the unemployment figures fluctuate from time to time. In the past two years the growth in investment in the maritimes has been much higher than the national average and employment growth has been much higher than the national average.

An hon. Member: That is silly.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not silly. Those are the facts. These figures vary from time to time. I am rather surprised that the Leader of the Opposition wants a budget to be designed only for the maritimes. Surely all parts of Canada are important.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is losing his touch even in diversionary tactics. I would invite him to read the documents prepared by his colleague the minister responsible for DREE which indicate that capital formation in Atlantic Canada will continue to lag substantially behind the national average. In light of that I wonder whether the Prime Minister can assure us now—and I stress that I am not asking him to anticipate any specific budgetary decisions—that the goal of narrowing regional disparity this year will be a priority consideration—I emphasize "priority" consideration"—in the over-all approach of the Minister of Finance to the forthcoming budget.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would want to point out to the Leader of Opposition that the very documents to which he refers if he looks at them well will indicate that my statement about capital formation in the past two years is correct and that it is higher in the maritimes than in the nation as a whole. The hon. member cannot quote a document and then deny what is in the document.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister depart from these diversions and answer the question as to whether or not the Government of Canada is going to follow the goal of narrowing regional disparity this year as it applies to Atlantic Canada and take that as a priority consideration in the preparation of the budget which is to be presented sometime in May. Will he answer that question.

An hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes.

PROPOSED RECONSIDERATION OF SPENDING PRIORITIES TO BETTER AID THE ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might direct a supplementary to the Prime Minister with regard to the economic slowdown possibly as a result of the controls where the impact has been severest, in Atlantic Canada. Can he say whether there is now underway a reconsideration of the spending priorities of such key departments as DREE, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Transport or Manpower with a view to a possible redistribution of their existing budgetary allotment to better aid the Atlantic region in at least regaining the ground it has lost this past two years and if such a review is not now underway what type of immediate assistance is the government contemplating?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes or No, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Petulant child!

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. members opposite should know that.

An hon. Member: Remember your blood pressure.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the House is very serious, judging by the interventions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am really quite disappointed that the Prime Minister feels unable to answer a basic question with respect to what he considers to be so fundamental. The reason I am so concerned is that in my area unemployment has risen.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question, will he put it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the more than one third increase in unemployment which has occurred in some areas, I should like to ask whether the Prime Minister would establish some form of interdepartmental or government co-ordination specifically addressed to the problem of rising unemployment and, if not, would he convene at the earliest possible moment a meeting of first ministers from the Atlantic provinces to consider these major problems in unemployment, escalating electricity costs, transportation, etc., which are crippling the economy of the Atlantic region?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am really amazed at the opposition members making suggestions now of things which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been doing for several years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That is the reason for the higher growth which has taken place in the Maritimes in the past few years. I am pleased that they are jumping on our bandwagon. Of course, we will continue our programs.

An hon. Member: What absolute balderdash!

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Could you not have asked it in caucus?

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister in view of the absence of the Minister of Public Works. Has the Prime Minister been advised that a company whose principal owner is a fairly senior employee of the Bank of Canada has been awarded at least four cleaning contracts in federal government buildings in Ottawa since 1972 and, if so, does the minister consider that to be a conflict of interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of these facts but I will take note of them.

Carleton that he feels the Liberal bandwagon will turn out to be a funeral procession?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I want to answer this, Mr. Speaker. It might be a funeral procession and we will bury some of the hon. members opposite.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO BOARD OF PRICE INCREASE BY "MACLEAN'S"

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. It concerns the responsibility of the Department of Finance for anti-inflation measures. My question arises from information in yesterday's press stating Maclean's magazine is raising its price from 50 cents per copy to 60 cents per copy, and the question is this: Since Maclean's magazine is the chief calculated beneficiary of recent legislation passed by this government and since they have recently stated that they wish to serve urban areas in Canada, abandoning any rural contact, will the government and its Anti-Inflation Board allow that magazine to benefit from this 20 per cent price hike which I am sure is far above any permitted increase according to anti-inflation guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the guidelines apply to corporations as well as to other sections of society and most generally they apply through the profit margin. I imagine they have raised their price because they want to maintain their profit margin after the publicity they gave the Tory leader in one of their recent issues.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—EFFECT OF ATTEMPTED FINANCIAL REORGANIZATION OF COMPANY

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. The president of Lockheed stated yesterday that Lockheed has agreed to the investigation of itself as a necessary prerequisite to finalizing their recapitalization plan with 24 banks. Lockheed is clearly in the throes of a very difficult financial reorganization. Does this reduce the minister's enthusiasm for the Lockheed contract, and, if so, is he going to do anything about Lockheed's worsening situation?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The government has an option to complete the contract, an option which terminates at the end of this month. Our objective is to achieve the contract before that time. We are now in the process of holding discussions with the U.S. government to receive the assurances that we need before signing the contract, and Lockheed itself is discussing the financing arrangements with the Canadian banks.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—RETENTION OF RIGHTS IN ELECTRONIC PACKAGE IF DEVELOPMENT COSTS PAID

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, apparently yesterday's sad financial news for Lockheed makes no difference to his determination to deal with them. If the Lockheed LRPA contract is signed, I understand that Canada will be paying all the research and development costs of the S3A electronic package, which may be as high as $100 million. Is the minister ensuring that Canada will retain residual equity rights to these technical developments if there are future sales beyond the Canadian 18?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): It is obvious that Canada is not paying for the development of the S3A. The S3A equipment is already in service in the United States in their carrier borne aircraft. It must have been developed long before Canada got into the picture. We are, of course, putting that type of equipment into the new aircraft, and there will be one-time engineering costs involved, but we are certainly not involved in the development of that equipment.

NATIONAL REVENUE

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF DEPARTMENTAL POLICY OF EMPLOYING HANDICAPPED

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister inform the House whether there is a conscious effort on the part of his department to employ the handicapped, and if so, would he use his influence with his cabinet colleagues so that they might follow his laudable example within their respective departments?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a conscious policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: It just makes good sense that people who have minor handicaps—we all have one handicap or another; look at the opposition—should be helped in this way. For example, some changes should be made in buildings so that people who are handicapped and have to use wheel chairs can move about. Perhaps we should take some initiative in that area.

CONSULTATIONS WITH OTHER DEPARTMENTS TO DESIGNATE SPECIFIC POSITIONS FOR HANDICAPPED

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. Would he consult with his colleagues, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, in order to have specific positions in the public service designated for handicapped people, including members of the opposition, who always have aspirations to get to the other side of the House, and will he follow the example of other countries which have advanced social policies in this respect?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not agree with designating certain jobs and saying that they will be done by the handicapped. My experience has been that the handicapped can handle most jobs, and we should not limit them by setting quotas or designating jobs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF "SAN JUAN" TO DETERMINE CAPABILITY OF SEARCH AND RESCUE ORGANIZATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the minister tabled in the House the summary report of the in house investigation into the sinking of the fishing vessel, the San Juan, off the east coast of Newfoundland. It followed on the heels of a statement the minister released last week in which he admitted that present marine search and rescue capabilities are inadequate. Since this in house investigation raises more questions than answers, does the minister now intend to order a full scale inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the sinking of this vessel and the loss of the lives of two fishermen which would address itself to the whole situation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. It is my view that the investigation answers the questions raised by the events surrounding the sinking of the San Juan. The hon. member is quite right that there are other questions in relation to the total search and rescue capability, and as he knows, at the moment we are making a very determined effort to take those in hand and to ensure that there will be improvements. Those improvements will be announced in due course.

MEASURES TO ENSURE EFFICIENCY OF SEARCH AND RESCUE ORGANIZATION PENDING REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the fact that the statement of the minister last week indicated that the report of the task force on search and rescue procedures, to which the minister just referred, will not be ready for the cabinet before mid-summer, and in view of the fact that we are now embarking on another full scale fishing season, what immediate plans does the minister intend to put into operation to cover the inadequacies to which he referred? Surely there will be maximum efficiency in whatever search and rescue capability we now have.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The statement from my office, which was a very long one outlining all the things which have been done and some very fine improvements in our basic qualities, did indeed indicate the need for additional efforts. I know the hon. member is disturbed that that straightforward statement on my part left him without a charge to lay, but I would say that I believe the hon. member is misreading the statement which, as I recall, said the report would be presented before mid-summer, which is rather different from his statement, which was "not" before summer.

Would the minister advise whether the cabinet now has the schedule of reductions in military bases, and in particular, when does he expect a definitive decision? Will it be made during the parliamentary recess, or will it be deferred so that we can discuss it in the House?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the infrastructure rationalization paper is now before a cabinet committee. There will be no announcement during the recess.

REASON MISS CARRIÈRE WROTE MINISTER OF TRANSPORT CONCERNING SKY SHOPS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. What possible reason would Miss Carmel Carrière, then the executive assistant to the Minister of the Environment, for whose actions the minister obviously must be held responsible, allegedly send a handwritten note on ministerial stationery to Andrew Chatwood, executive assistant to the then minister of transport, under date of October 26, 1971 pertaining to the Sky Shops lease?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I missed the first part of the question, but if the hon. member is asking about a matter which is under investigation, I told the House yesterday that the RCMP had made their report to the office of the provincial attorney general, that it would be up to them to assess the evidence they have, and if they laid charges, we would await the verdict.

If they do not lay charges, I hope the opposition will stop laying charges.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You know it's true.

Mr. Lawrence: I have no knowledge of the RCMP investigation because we cannot get that information. However, I wonder if that handwritten letter would have anything to do with an alleged letter written on November 23, 1971—obviously in reply—by Mr. Chatwood to William Huck in the air transport division of the Ministry of Transport with a copy of the letter going to O. G. Stoner, deputy transport minister, saying that the hon. Mr. Marchand was insisting that no competitive bids for that lease be called.

Mr. Trudeau: I would not know, but I would be glad to draw that piece of evidence to the attention of the RCMP, in whom I have confidence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, come on.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPMENT OF COPPER MINE AND SMELTER IN CHILE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government of Canada directly or indirectly, through the Export Development Corporation, the World Bank or the Inter-American Development Bank, assisted in financing a very large proposal by Noranda Mines Limited, a Canadian corporation, or any of its subsidiaries for a copper mine and smelter in Andocollo, Chile? If it has not done so, has it undertaken to do so?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there has been no approval by the government of Canada to support financially a copper project by Noranda in Chile. I understand there may be some such proposal in mind, but to my knowledge no application has been made by Noranda for government assistance or government assurance through the EDC.

In order to complete the picture and to avoid misunderstanding later, I should say that Canada has joined the World Bank in support of a loan for copper development in Chile, but it is not, to my knowledge, the Noranda development. It is a globally supported development in that country.

Mr. Brewin: In light of the fact that this government, as well as the United Nations, has condemned the regime of terror and torture in Chile, and in light of the economic situation there, where there was a 340 per cent inflation rate for 1975, will the minister undertake, as far as he can do so, that the Canadian government will not directly or indirectly support investments by Canadian multinational corporations, which would have the effect of bolstering the regime in Chile?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. MacEachen: As the hon. member knows, we have consistently condemned the denial of human rights in Chile, and we have made our voice clear in the United Nations in that respect. However, we have not reached the conclusion that the discussion on multinational subjects at the World Bank or other international agencies ought to be politicized in the way the hon. member suggests. Nor do I accept the notion that these investments are directed to the maintenance in power of the present government. Rather, they contribute to the maintenance of the social and economic development of the country.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON PATRIATION

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the documents tabled in the House by the Prime Minister last Friday when he gave details on the correspondence exchanged since April 9, 1975 with regard to the avenues open for patriating the Canadian constitution, and bearing in mind that two federal-provincial conferences are to be held grouping the Prime Minister and provincial premiers in early May and around the middle of June can the Prime Minister tell hon. members of the House whether he intends to broach the subject at one or the other conference, or whether he plans to convene s special conference to discuss this subject alone? If so, when would he propose to do so? If not, does he intend to ask the Clerk of the Privy Council to go and meet the premiers of the Canadian provinces to get their points of view and agree with them on the steps to be taken further to the proposals made in his letter of March 31 last?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to answer the last point the hon. member brought up, I must say that the secretary to the Cabinet for federal-provincial relations is now visiting one of the provinces to discuss this matter, at the request of its premier.

As for the first part of the question, I suggested to the premiers that we discuss the matter when we meet early in May. However, I have yet to receive replies from all premiers and, for the time being, I do not know whether this question will be on the agenda or whether we will have to discuss it at a later date.

URBAN AFFAIRS

HUMAN SETTLEMENTS CONFERENCE—REASON FOR EMPHASIS ON URBAN RATHER THAN RURAL PROBLEMS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. The upcoming United Nations Conference on Human Settlements will place great emphasis on problems urban areas of the future will face, but the agenda places little emphasis on the problem of rural housing. As the minister has said that the vast majority of the world's poor live in rural settlements, why is more emphasis not being placed on solving the housing problem in rural areas, a problem which applies not only to agricultural land areas but also to small villages and towns?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the agenda for the conference is set internationally by the United Nations itself. There is to be great emphasis on rural settlements, an emphasis which I welcome, as do both developed and developing countries. That matter will certainly be emphasized and included in Canada's position as presented to the United Nations.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NEW COMMISSIONER OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES WILL BE RESIDENT OF AREA

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Without commenting on the specific appointment of the new commissioner to the Yukon, in view of the concern expressed by the people of the Yukon about the appointment of an individual who is not a resident of the territory and a similar concern expressed by the residents of the Northwest Territories, will the Prime Minister assure the House and people of the Northwest Territories that, when the present commissioner of the Northwest Territories retires, his replacement will be a resident of the territories and that the wishes of the elected representatives of the Northwest Territories will not be ignored, as happened in the Yukon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my information is that the newly appointed commissioner of the Yukon had been a resident of the Yukon for many years.

An hon. Member: Had?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, yes. I think he moved out last year to Edmonton, which is not so remote from the Yukon, because Albertans are often seeking jurisdiction over the Yukon or the territories. I do not think a man is disqualified, and his knowledge of the area erased, just because he has been away from it one year; otherwise, hon. members on both side of the House would be disqualified.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF SKIM MILK POWDER IN AID TO EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the end of this month further aid to the stricken people of Guatemala will be shipped from the east coast. Included in that aid will be building and medical supplies. I might say that this special shipment coordinated by the Diocese of Hamilton would not have been possible without the extraordinary efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Labour. I congratulate them both for their humanitarian efforts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to go a step further. In the shipment there is room for ten tons of skim milk powder. Will he make representations to the Minister of Agriculture, so that there may be included in the shipment ten tons of skim milk powder, as this commodity, contrary to earlier reports, can be consumed by the people of Guatemala who need it desperately.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his comments about efforts being made in Guatemala. I shall not have any difficulty in making representations to my colleague about skim milk powder. He has frequently made similar representations to me and I am happy for a chance to return the compliment.

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON METHOD OF AMENDING PRIOR TO PATRIATION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. If the federal government were to patriate the constitution unilaterally, in line with the Prime Minister's suggestion, the British parliament would need to amend certain key provisions. I ask, how would these key provisions be amended when the provinces cannot agree on the amending formula?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had dealt in detail with that matter when I answered in the House last week. The short answer is that we have three formulae whereby patriation would be possible. All three indicate a procedure for amendment which, in first instance, would be based on the unanimous consent of the provinces. That is to say, all provinces would be involved when any amendment is adopted or when any amending procedure is adopted. Surely, the hon. member would not expect more than this. You cannot have more than unanimity.

ENERGY

OIL—INCREASED COST TO BRITISH COLUMBIA CONSUMERS AS RESULT OF SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister has been advised by the minister responsible for energy in British Columbia that the phasing out of oil exports through the Trans Mountain Pipe Line to the Pacific northwest will increase the tariff per barrel for

B.C. consumers by an estimated 74 cents per barrel, for an estimated total cost of $37 million in the year 1977. As this volume will be flowing through the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline, to an area receiving a $20 million pipeline subsidy and an area which also benefits from subsidized, imported oil, can the minister say if the federal government will subsidize this new $37 million annual cost to B.C. consumers, a cost caused by this new direction of flow?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the same story said that the B.C. minister was writing to me, to set out his arguments. I have not yet seen his letter.

OLYMPIC GAMES

ALLEGED FALSE ADVERTISING OF GOLD COINS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Does the minister know that high powered, national week-end advertisements for the $100 Canadian Olympic gold coin represented that the coin is destined to become one of the most exciting coins in history and that all previous Canadian gold coin issues have increased dramatically in value? But that same advertisement did not say that all previous Canadian issues contained gold content equal to their face value. The currently issued gold coin sells for $105 but contains only $32 worth of gold. If the minister is aware of these advertisements, is he satisfied that they are fair representations to an unsuspecting public? As Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, can he assure the House that this does not constitute misleading advertising?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it is not misleading advertising to say that it is one of the most exciting coins we have ever produced. The fact that the coin has virtually sold out indicates that. It is not misleading advertising to say that all previous coins, or any coins produced in the past by the Canadian mint and circulated by the Canadian government, have appreciated in value. These are facts.

Mr. Bawden: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would appreciate the minister's comment on the gold content. While he answers, will he say if he was consulted prior to the publication of this slick gold coin advertising which calls the coin a solid investment and suggests that there may be gains of up to 37 times the original investment, without explaining the difference between the value of gold content and the price at which the coin is being offered. Will the minister assure the House that this shabby and misleading advertising will not reflect on the international standing of our currency?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the only thing shabby is the question. If people want to buy pure gold, they can do it. However, when you buy a Canadian gold coin with a face value of $100, we do not pretend there is $100 worth of gold in it anymore than with any of our other coinage. You are buying what the hon. member fails to appreciate; the beauty of the coin, the fact that it is related to a once in a lifetime event, the Olympics, that it is a work of art and that it is appreciated all over the world. It is very much in demand. That is one of the reasons it will appreciate in value. This may just reflect the lack of cultural value of the hon. member when putting his question in such a manner.

[Mr. Huntington.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, the advertising virtually assures buyers that their $100 coins will be worth something in the order of $3,000 or $3,500. I think the minister will agree that is going too far.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it is true that it is almost equal to the percentage increase reaching the oil industry through drilling.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROPOSALS TO EXTEND COVERAGE

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement which I hope will be encouraging news to over one half million residents of Canada who are presently deprived of social security benefits earned in other countries because of the absence of reciprocal agreements with those countries.

I wish to announce the government's intention to submit to parliament, in the coming months, legislation amending the Old Age Security Act. Parliament will be asked to adopt measures, first, to increase the flexibility of the residence requirements relating to eligibility for a pension; second, to remove the all-or-nothing feature of the present legislation, thereby relating the pension to the beneficiary's association with Canada and bringing the legislation into line conceptually with the CPP; and third, to build into our program the possibility of its inclusion in international reciprocal arrangements with other countries, such as Italy, the United States, and the United Kingdom, so that our residents who have earned social security rights in foreign countries can receive them in Canada.

[Translation]

Canadians haves good reason to be proud of the present old age security program. It is a generous, non-contributory universal program which few other industrialized countries can match. The changes which I propose will not affect the conditions under which lifetime residents of Canada, or those in their immediate pre-retirement years, can qualify for or enjoy their pensions.

Its essential features will remain: universality, payable at age 65, or 60 in the case of the spouse's allowance, eligibility subject to a minimum of ten years residence after age 18 or a minimum of twenty years residence in Canada if it is to be paid on a permanent basis to a beneficiary living abroad. The proposed changes I am announcing today are to enable the program to address the inequities which are arising because of the increasing number of persons whose active working life and retirement are not all spent in Canada. When the program was first introduced, mobility across international boundaries was much less, and migration was usually once-in-a-lifetime event. But the situation is changing and the present act, which takes no account at all of the pension credits which Canadian residents may have acquired in other countries nor provides for international agreements, should also be changed.

[English]

These proposals will make the present residence rules fairer and will also make them simpler over the long run. I would like to sketch out the changes and explain our strategy for implementing them.

The government will propose that the old age security pension be "earned" by residents at the rate of one fortieth of the eventual full pension for one year of residence in Canada after age 18. This would mean that legal residence in Canada for 40 years would qualify a person for the full OAS pension, and residence for less than 40 years after age 18 would qualify a person for a portion of the full pension. This change will achieve several worth-while objectives. It will eliminate the inequities which result in a small but significant number of cases from the rigorous application of the current eligibility rules.

At present to qualify for the pension at age 65, one must (a), have resided in Canada for 40 years after age 18 ("40 year rule"); or (b), have resided in Canada for any consecutive 10 year period from age 55 onward ("10 year rule"); or (c), qualify under the "three-for-one rule". This last eligibility rule is a formula under which three years of presence in Canada between age 18 and 55 will count for one year of residence under the ten-year rule provided that the applicant resides in Canada during the year preceding commencement of the pension.

These rules created an all-or-nothing situation. The changes we will propose will relate the amount of the pension to the degree of association that the individual has had with our country. This will create a stronger program, and in fact one which is more consistent with the Canada Pension Plan in which benefits relate to contributions made here.

At the international level the changes which we will be proposing will enhance the government's ability to protect the acquired social security credits of our residents who migrate across international boundaries during their active years, by providing for the negotiation of reciprocal agreements. These would be similar to those already entered into by many countries.

There are a great variety of rules in different countries pertaining to the payment abroad of acquired social security benefits. We will seek enabling amendments to include the OAS program in international social security agreements to be negotiated with other countries. Therefore in addition to the authority which the government presently has to negotiate such agreements in respect to the Canada Pension Plan, we will be proposing to acquire such authority in respect to the Old Age Security Act.

Representations have been made constantly over the years by people who do not receive in Canada payment of pension credits accumulated in their country of origin. I have also received frequent representations concerning this issue from members of all parties, and in particular from members on this side of the House. The proposed amendments should facilitate the payment of such pensions through the negotiation of reciprocal agreements. I am convinced that this measure will be welcomed by the many thousands of Canadians of British, Italian, and other origins. Assuming the co-operation of the foreign governments concerned, it would be our desire to reach early agreements with these countries.

It is our firm intention at the same time to protect those who now have the possibility of eventually qualifying for a full pension under the present rules. Our implementation strategy for the new policy will ensure this. For residents who are 25 or over and in Canada at the time the amendments come into force, the more beneficial set of rules, either the present or new ones, would apply. They too would have the opportunity, as they now have, to qualify for a full pension. This choice of alternatives would also apply to those not now resident in Canada but who have had prior legal residence here after the age of 18. To all others, only the new rules which I have just sketched would apply.

I am announcing our intentions as proposals because I will be consulting with the provinces prior to introducing legislation. I would like, in closing, to ask the unanimous consent of the House to table background information on the matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

● (1520)

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving me the opportunity of replying to the minister. May I say first of all that I do not understand why, having looked at the matter over the years, the minister is so late in coming up not with some concrete proposals but suggested proposals which have to be accepted by the provincial governments before he can move a step further.

Secondly, I take an extremely dim view of the attitude and partisanship shown by the minister on page 4 of his statement, where he says:

I have also received frequent representations concerning this issue from members of all parties, and in particular from—

Then he did not want to read the next part, which mentions the hon. member for—

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps to shorten the matter I anticipate that the point concerns the fact that the minister did not speak those words when he made his statement.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, we distribute proposed statements to opposition parties as early as possible as a matter of courtesy. These are "proposed" statements. Obviously it is the right of a minister to modify these proposed statements after they have been sent out, especially on matters of detail. It is really in rather poor taste to raise this point, and I take the strongest exception to the hon. member's trying to use a draft that he has received as words I have actually uttered in the House. If he wants to quote the text, I have no strong objection. Indeed the three members whom he wanted to refer to have been very articulate—and I am glad that they are all on this side of the House—in pressing for changes in this area. However, I felt that in terms of good relations with all members of the House, particularly members on his side, I would not mention individual members. I find the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) acting in rather poor taste.

Mr. Alexander: Let me say this, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the fact that the minister gave me notice of his statement, but I very much resent that part of the statement which he now finds extremely important was left out. Surely the minister should have the courtesy to advise me that he was not going to mention the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and the hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Parent). He might have called me about it, or his office might have called me.

My point is that there are members on this side of the House who should equally have been singled out if the minister is going to single anybody out. He should also have singled out members from the NDP. He could have referred to the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) and to the hon. member for Hamilton West. All I am saying is that if in the future the minister is going to mention names, to be fair he should mention names of members from all parties.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are into a procedure that has been set down in our Standing Orders since last Easter, almost a year now. The minister has made a statement and the opposition parties are given time to comment on it. It seems to me they can comment on any part of the statement or omission from the statement that is relevant, and this is now taking place.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I can have order. What I have to say is for the edification not only of those on this side of the House but those on the other side as well. This statement is obviously a reaction to a bureaucratic oversight and is an attempt to give legitimate power to make international reciprocal agreements, a power that now exists in the Canada Pension Plan. There has now been a recognition of the need of some 500,000 people. It is an astonishing revelation that there are some 500,000 people who are deprived of benefits as a result of the lack of reciprocal agreements. That is the key phrase.

How long has the minister been involved with old age security legislation? Certainly he has since 1973. The act was first brought in in 1951. Now, in 1976, the minister is taking a pie in the sky approach in these proposals, and in the meantime a lot of people are suffering. There has been a cavalier disregard for the plight of thousands of people whose incomes have diminished because of the erosion of the dollar and the high cost of living. Now at long last the government has awakened to the fact that there is significant mobility across international boundaries, and that migration is not a once in a life time matter.

With all respect to the minister, Mr. Speaker, I must say I am somewhat hesitant to give him any praise, even though I like him. He is a nice chap, and although we had a few words of disagreement at the beginning he is trying to do his best. But what disturbs me is the patchwork, ad hoc approach of the minister to our social security programs. At the same time the government is advocating an integrated approach to the entire social security program, and work has been going on now for three years. There is no integration in the minister's proposals; rather it is a patchwork approach that can only lead to further confusion and frustration by denying the rights not of doctors, lawyers, and members of parliament, but of the working poor. This is what I find most discouraging.

We now have a three tiered approach to social security. First there is old age security, and this is going to be affected by the proposed legislation. Old age security is granted universally. We then have the Canada Pension Plan to which a person must contribute. The third tier is private plans. The disturbing thing about private plans is that they are not working. Those who contribute to a private plan are locked in for a 10-year period, and some people leave their employment after five years. I want to know whether the minister is concerned about this. Is he examining the inequities, injustices, and the discrimination that is taking place? I would have thought the minister would have dealt with these questions in his statement.

The minister has now really brought in a fourth tier. The first tier is old age security, the second tier the CPP, and the third private plans. The minister is now taking another approach which puts forward options, and this is why I call it a fourth tier.

Let me just refer to what the minister said on page 5 of his statement:

For residents who are 25 or over and in Canada at the time the amendments come into force, the more beneficial set of rules—old or new—would apply. They too would have the opportunity—as they now have—to qualify for a full pension. This choice of alternatives would also apply to those not now resident in Canada but who have had prior legal residence here after the age of 18. To all others, only the new rules which I have just sketched would apply.

What kind of a mess are we getting into, Mr. Speaker? Once again the government is bringing in confusing, frustrating proposals that are extremely complex. I have every sympathy with the minister, but I must inform him that the members on this side, although very sympathetic to the approach to the over-all picture of social security, want something that is easy to understand, not complex, and, unlike what we have now, non-discriminatory.

I note that there are three objectives in the minister's proposals. The first is to increase the flexibility of the residence requirements relating to eligibility for a pension. There is no question that there is a need for equity and fairness in this regard. The second objective is to remove the all or nothing feature of the present legislation, thereby relating the pension to the beneficiary's association with Canada and bringing the legislation into line conceptually with the CPP. I question whether that is fair or just. We are anxious to meet the minister in debate on this floor and in committee so that the many questions that have to be asked can be answered.

Under this proposal you have a partial payment. Some of those who reach 65 will get full payment and others will not. I do not know how many are involved, who they are, or really what is going on. These are some of the many questions that we must ask. I know the minister will be able to answer them as a result of consultation with his assistants.

There is another question in respect of which one must register some concern. The minister has talked about reciprocal agreements, and I think this relates to Italy, the United States, the United Kingdom, and others. I do not know who the "others" are, and I hope the minister will give us some indication.

An hon. Member: And Germany.

Mr. Alexander: I know we have been involved with Germany, both east and west, but I do not know what the particular situation is right now. The minister is involved with a number of countries and perhaps he could be of some assistance to us in this regard.

The minister also said:

I am announcing our intentions as proposals because I will be consulting with the provinces prior to introducing legislation.

I should like to know what that particular sentence means. This minister has been consulting, consulting, and consulting, for over three years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: That sounds like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) interjecting, and I have no idea why. I have no idea why he would interrupt as I have not referred to him. I am talking to you, Mr. Speaker, in order to get to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), not the Minister of Justice.

Has the minister been consulting with the provinces in respect of the introduction of this legislation? Is there agreement right across this country? Is Ontario in shape for this, and what about British Columbia? Are all the provinces in shape?

In conclusion, and I know I have over-stepped my bounds—

Mr. Paproski: No you haven't.

Mr. Alexander: I know the minister would like to hear what I have to say. There are many questions that have to be asked and answered. Therefore we are hesitant about giving the minister a blanket endorsation of the proposals at this time. We appreciate what the minister is doing, but there are a lot of questions we have to ask, questions that we hope will be answered.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want my first words in response to the Minister's statement to be that it is a welcome statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suppose I can say that I have had as much to do with old age pensions over the years as anyone now in this House of Commons, and I take second place to no one in calling for improvements and in pointing out deficiencies and inadequacies.

And the same time, I have to say that in respect of the two matters the minister is now seeking to do something about, his proposals deserve the endorsation of the House. His proposals deal in the main with the residence requirement for old age security on the part of persons who are Canadians, and with the question of reciprocity in the pension field between this country and other countries.

I hope it is not too immodest for me to say that I was asking questions about the residence requirements and pressing for changes at least 30 years ago, and that I started pressing for the government to do something in the field of reciprocity nearly 20 years ago. I recognize that it has taken the government a long time to get to this point, but certainly in the field of reciprocity this does involve negotiations with other countries. Even after this statement the minister may have difficulty achieving as many reciprocal agreements as he would like. So, even though it has taken all this time. I am glad this bit of progress is being made.

I said that the statement deals with two matters: one having to do with reciprocity, and the other having to do with changes in the residence requirements that have to be met in order to qualify for old age security and, consequentially, the guaranteed income supplement.

Despite the fact that my friend who just spoke thinks it is complicated, the general formula that is proposed is better than the one we have now. At the present time we have, as the minister pointed out, the ten-year rule, the 20-year rule, the 40-year rule, the three-for-one-rule, and the last-year rule. It is awfully difficult to explain these various rules to people. Now we are going to have a rule that says that you earn one fortieth of the old age security pension for each full year you spend in this country as an adult. That will have a particular advantage for persons who spend part of their time in Canada and go to other countries, and it also will have advantage in the long run for those who come from other countries, particularly if reciprocal arrangements can be made with other countries.

Before I go any further in commenting about the new rule, I do hope the minister will let the country know what is happening through the facilities to which he has access. I do hope the press will make the point, and make it absolutely clear, that this change in the legislation does not affect by one cent the pension of any person who is now drawing old age security or the guaranteed income supplement. The minister said that.

Mr. Lalonde: Anybody who is 25.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will get to that in a moment. The minister said it does not affect anyone who is 25 or over. However, when persons start to hear about the pension being based on the number of years you have been here out of 40 I am sure there will be some senior citizens drawing their pensions, having been here 12, 15 or 20 years, who will wonder whether their pensions are to be reduced. The formula as outlined by the minister says that will not happen. I am satisfied it will not happen and I hope that will be made crystal clear.

The minister has also emphasized by his interruption that neither will this affect anyone in Canada today who is 25 years of age or over. He will have the right if he is not here from 25 to 65 years of age, but meets the other rules, to get the full pension.

The only persons living in Canada who are going to get something less than full pension, that is ten fortieths or twenty fortieths, will be those who come here from other countries. But under the reciprocal arrangements it will be possible for them honestly and openly to receive social security from two countries.

At the present time this matter is abused and is the source of confusion. Some people manage to get old age security in Canada and social security from the United States, going one way or the other. Other people get caught and do not get either, and this is because of the all-or-nothing arrangement, which is now to be changed.

I believe that what is being proposed is something that has been thought out carefully, and something in the long run which will be a lot better. As I say, the provision for basing the pension on the number of years out of 40 that you have been here will make it possible for persons who have been here to age 40 or 50 to go elsewhere and get their share of the Canadian pension along with what they pick up in other countries. It will also be possible for those who come from other countries, under the reciprocal arrangement, to get a total pension income that will be to their advantage. This will be more fair and more equitable, and I congratulate those in the department who have worked this out, and I congratulate the minister for accepting and putting this proposal forward.

At the same time, and even at the risk of saying what the minister thinks he has already said, because people can get concerned and excited, let it be the clearest word that comes out of this House today that no one who is drawing a pension will suffer any loss whatsoever in that pension and that no one who is over 25 years of age will have any different possibility than he now has.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think this will solve many problems. It will certainly get rid of that terribly complex situation we have with the ten, 20, 40, three-for-one, and final year rule. So, in the main I think it is a good arrangement that is being put forward.

If I may go back to the reciprocity question which is half of what is before us today I do urge the government to push this. I know the government has been pushing it for a long time and that other countries have been reluctant to enter into agreements because we were not able to make an agreement involving our old age security.

I know there was the problem when reciprocity was provided in the Canada Pension Plan and not with respect to the Old Age Security Act. This scheme will work satisfactorily and effectively only if we do achieve reciprocal agreements with other countries. The minister mentioned the United Kingdom, Italy, and the United States. I wonder what has happened in respect of the West German situation. I know there is an agreement, but there is much dissatisfaction with it. I hope that that agreement might be renegotiated under the terms of this program. I also notice that France has not been mentioned. I think that is another country with which we should have a reciprocal arrangement.

I press that this be done and that there be pressure to achieve reciprocal agreements because, without this, the whole arrangement has no value for those who come to this country. The new 1/40th per year rule is good for Canadians who go elsewhere, because at present they either get all or nothing. But if this legislation is to have advantage for those who come to this country there have to be more reciprocal agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are getting to your favourite position in your chair, at the forward edge. If you sit back I will be through in just a minute. I simply want to say to the minister that although I welcome what he is doing as announced today, I regret that he tells this House he intends to bring in legislation to amend the Old Age Security Act but has not touched on some important issues, namely, the basic amount of the old age security which should be increased substantially, and the question of the eligible age which, in my view, should be 60 for all those who are out of the labour market. Neither has he told us what he intends to do about the discrimination in respect of the spouses' legislation against spinsters, widows, bachelors and widowers, and I hope that when he gets around to bringing in this legislation these shortcomings will be corrected. It is fine to have the improvements which are proposed today, but surely when the minister brings in the actual bill he will have in it some of the substantial improvements that are needed with regard to senior citizens in Canada right now.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I shall do my best not to abuse your patience. However, I would like to thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) who in today's statement informed us that amendments will soon be made to the Old Age Security Act to allow greater continuity of old age protection by transferability of acquired credit, through the agreements that he will be able to negotiate and ratify with other governments.

I agree with the minister that the present plan lacks flexibility. This is what my party has always maintained. In the field of old age and social security, there is also a lack of flexibility, as in the income security system, which is outdated. This is why we have long urged the minister to consider seriously the very simple non-bureaucratic and less costly formula of a guaranteed annual income, which would allow each Canadian citizen to be spared the problems of an increasingly costly and inefficient bureaucracy.

Instead of aiming at gradually correcting the present income security program in general, which includes the old age security program, the minister would have advantage, so as to present a comprehensive guaranteed annual income program and improving at the same time the old age security program, the minister, as I say, would have advantage to consider more seriously our proposal so that all Canadians can be ensured of a guaranteed annual income and an old age security pension.

The minister has informed us that 500,000 Canadians are now deprived of benefits which they could receive from other countries and a great number of Canadians who have emigrated abroad cannot receive benefits concerning security of foreigners. This is what caused the minister to propose today amendments which will eventually rectify this situation. When the amendments are introduced, we shall be able to study the proposals in detail, but we still want to thank the minister for having at least taken one step forward in this area today, since, according to what he said, at least 500,000 Canadians cannot receive their old age security pension under the present Old Age Security Act.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The procedure which we have been following in respect of ministerial statements calls for a statement by the minister and then brief responses by members of the opposition. The response from the last member of the opposition, the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), was indeed in keeping with those guidelines. The response from the first two spokesmen for the opposition parties was uniformly about twice the length of the minister's statement. I did not intervene, but at this point it is an exercise of my discretion under these practices as to what questions should be allowed.

Bearing in mind those speeches, and also bearing in mind the fact that the purpose of the statement is an announcement of the introduction of legislation which will be coming before the House at another time when there will be a response to questions, I really think that I should extend questions only to allow the minister to make some retaliation to some of the things that have been said about him during the course of the comments. Perhaps one spokesman for each party would be more than adequate under the circumstances.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I accept your admonishment and will try to be as responsible as I can. I shall ask as few questions as possible in the knowledge that we will be getting the legislation.

I should just like to ask the minister some questions regarding the reciprocal agreements, which is a subject with which we have all been involved, particularly in respect of the United Kingdom. I know I have been involved with it since 1973. I think the step that is being taken certainly is in the right direction. The minister mentioned the United States, the United Kingdom, and Italy. What are the other countries to which he is now directing his attention in terms of agreement, so that we can have something on the record in that regard?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the countries which have been most persistent and pressing in terms of reaching an agreement are the three countries I have mentioned. We already have an agreement with Germany. That is open for revision if the legislation is passed. Obviously France also would be a natural candidate for negotiation.

Frankly it is a matter of dealing with priorities. I must say that the cases of the United Kingdom, Italy, and the United States have been the ones that have been most urgent. However, we will proceed in respect of any country that is ready and willing to sit down and start negotiations.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I will just leave that. I think the minister has answered it adequately for the time being. What about consultation with the provinces? I am wondering whether the minister has had some agreement. Is there some unanimity concerning this particular proposal and will there be an opting out formula in respect of it? Is it a shared cost program?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a slight misunderstanding as to the meaning of the consultation with the provinces. However, before I answer that I might add with respect to the previous question that we will carry on with these foreign countries the exploratory talks that we have been having for the past couple of years in some instances.

Obviously if we cannot find agreement we cannot make anything formal until the law is amended, but we are open for exploratory talks at the present time. So far as the consultation is concerned, this type of amendment does not require consent in respect of anything over which any province has any veto. It does not imply participation as such by the provinces. It is more a matter of courtesy and common sense, since we are discussing the whole field of social security, that I should have a word with them to see whether they have any specific concern with regard, for instance, to some aspects that might have some implications for social assistance, and about which they might want to draw specific points to my attention.

In addition, the fact is that this type of amendment will facilitate reciprocal agreements with other countries. It will be easier to achieve these agreements if we can include Workmen's Compensation which is under provincial jurisdiction, as well as other federal programs, so this is the purpose of the consultation. The purpose is not to give the provinces a right of veto over our formal approval of these proposals, but to ensure that these amendments will be harmonized with whatever the provinces are doing at their own level.

Mr. Alexander: The minister has answered the question that there is need for provincial consultation and that it will be high on the priority list. I have just one last question. I am a little confused. Suppose someone comes from Italy and someone comes from the United Kingdom, and they are both eligible under the new legislation. If Italy has no reciprocal agreements with Canada but the United Kingdom has, then one of the two people, regardless of his eligibility, will be denied his benefits because his country has no reciprocal agreement. Is that how it will work?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, the hon. member understands it correctly. In that sense, I could go back to something he said about the half a million people who are not enjoying the full benefits which they have earned in the foreign countries. The proposed amendments will not guarantee to them that they will receive such benefits because we obviously cannot legislate for foreign countries. But we will do everything we can in terms of our own legislation and in terms of opening the doors for negotiations and agreements to ensure a reciprocity of benefits so that there will be what we call prorating and totalization of benefits, both those earned here, and those earned abroad.

Obviously, if a foreign country does not want to pay such pension credits to its former citizens, there is not much Canada can do. In fact, there is nothing preventing any of those countries from paying those benefits at the present time to the roughly 500,000 residents of Canada of whom we spoke, and there is nothing in the present Canadian legislation that would prevent this from taking place. However, those countries are saying that they will not pay unless they have an agreement.

Since our system is based on an all or nothing formula, they say that since we are paying a full pension by Canadian standards, why should they pay anything. That is the situation at present. What we are proposing is to make it much easier for these foreign governments to start paying pensions to their former residents who have earned them abroad in Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, you will be glad to know that the minister in answering the previous questioner has answered a number of my questions, so I shall be brief. I am glad to know that a possibility exists that an agreement with West Germany can be renegotiated, and I am also glad to know that France is on list as well. Can the minister say whether there are consultations taking place with other countries such as Belgium, the Netherlands, and the Scandinavian countries, areas from which we have many people in this country?

When he answers that I should like to ask him a question about the provinces. He has made the point that it is consultation, not a case of their approval having to be obtained. In doing that he referred to such things as workmen's compensation being in the total picture of reciprocity. Is he having consultations with his colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), with the same idea in mind?

I can get all my questions in at once, unless something comes out of what the minister says. The big question is, when will this legislation be introduced?

Mr. Lalonde: In answer to the first question, I am not aware of current negotiations taking place with any of the countries which the hon. member has mentioned. Obviously we are open to such negotiations, but I am not aware that there are such active negotiations at present.

With regard to the second point, when this matter was considered, it was obviously considered by cabinet and all the ministers involved, including the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). In the course of our negotiations we will take into account all the federal programs which include the possibility of reciprocal agreements such as the Unemployment Insurance Act which has provisions in that respect. We hope to be able to put in the basket all the various federal programs in the field of social security that provide for reciprocal agreements.

Finally, there is the question of when this legislation will be introduced. I hope to introduce it as early as possible during the course of the next session. I would like to be told that there is a possibility that it could be passed before June 30, but knowing what is on the agenda and the difficulty of getting it through the House, I am skeptical that it can be introduced before the fall.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that the date of a new session is an unknown quantity, can the minister give us his answer in terms of a month? Will it be brought in in 1976?

Mr. Lalonde: I would hope to be able to introduce it some time in the fall.

MAGNA CARTA DAY ACT

MEASURE TO COMMEMORATE SIGNING ON JUNE 15, 1215 A.D.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-435, respecting Magna Carta Day.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to afford to Canadians, as beneficiaries of the gradual development of representative parliamentary democracy, the opportunity to commemorate, with the appropriate ceremonies in schools and other public places, the signing of the Magna Carta on June 15, 1215, an act which marked the beginning of the decline of arbitrary power and the emergence, in Britain, of responsible government from which the entire democractic world has benefited.

[Translation]

I take the liberty of reminding hon. members that King John who signed the Magna Carta was one of the first French-speaking monarchs of Britain who eventually became bilingual.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS AND STANDING ORDERS

PROPOSED MOTION TO AUTHORIZE COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER FEES PAID BY BRITISH COLUMBIA TELEPHONE COMPANY RESPECTING BILL S-11

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 99 I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds):

That the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders be authorized to consider and make recommendations upon the fees paid by the British Columbia Telephone Company in relation to Bill S-11.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion can only be put forward by the hon. member with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the hon. member.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am prepared to second it, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: The mover of the motion left the Chamber, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Hughie, you blew it again.

● (1600)

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I was called out of the Chamber.

An hon. Member: Stay in your seat.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Make your motion.

Mr. Epp: You haven't written it out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) stands.

It may be that during the balance of routine proceedings there will be some questions on the order paper or other items which might be dealt with. Presumably, however, if the debate on the motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council concludes, the rest of the routine proceedings will not be reached.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I understand there is to be some debate on that motion, so I suggest we deal with the questions on the order paper and notices of motions for the production of papers first, and then carry on with debate on the motion.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to lose the opportunity to present a petition, of which I have given notice.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously it is the desire of hon. members that we conclude routine proceedings before embarking on the motion standing in the name of the President of the Privy Council. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PRESENTATION OF PETITION RESPECTING MEDICAL RESEARCH FUNDS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition containing the signatures of 17,612 Manitobans who are asking the government, and specifically the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), to reconsider the freeze on medical research funds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT—SUBSIDIES

Question No. 3,995—Mr. Saltsman:

What was the amount of location subsidies granted under the provisions of the Regional Development Incentives Act for each year 1970 to 1975 or for the last year for which information is available by (a) type of industry, (b) province?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: The total estimated amount of development grants under the Regional Development Incentives Program, for net accepted offers as of November 30, 1975, is $534.3 million. This amount is broken down on the attached table as follows: (a) by fiscal period in which an offer was accepted, (b) by type of industry, (c) by province. More recent information is not currently available.

CBC PROGRAMME "BYE BYE 1975"

Question No. 4,055—Mr. Cyr:

1. (a) What was the cost of the Programme Bye Bye 1975, (b) what were the salaries and travelling expenses of the artists, (c) what was the number of artists involved in the Programme, (d) what was the number of persons who produced the Programme?

2. What was the cost of (a) Bye Bye 1973, (b) Bye Bye 1974?

3. Did CBC ask producers to submit a Programme project for 1975 and, if so, what were (a) their names, (b) the prices submitted?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) and (b) and 2. (a) and (b) It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration. The background of this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

1. (c) 101, including 86 actors and 15 musicians. (d) one.

3. (a) No. The CBC assigned producer Richard Martin to the production of the program.

GREENLAND SEAL CATCHES

Question No. 4,078—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the number of Greenland seal catches declined during recent years and, if so, what was the reduction for each year from 1970 to date?

2. By year from 1970 to date, what was the maximum number of catches permitted?

3. By year from 1970 to date, how many seals were lawfully taken by (a) large Canadian boats, (b) large Norwegian boats, (c) coasters and small boats?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): 1. The number of Greenland seal catches has not declined since 1970 but there has been some fluctuation from year to year.

Greenland Seal Catches 1970-75

1970	5,747	1,367	7,114
1971	5,001	1,405	6,406
1972	5,591	2,232	7,823
1973	8,700	2,300	11,000
1974	6,422	2,456	8,878
1975	Not available

The Greenland seal catch has, however, declined since the early 1950's when the catch annually ranged between 10,000 and 20,000. It should be noted that catches referred to are taken entirely by landsmen and small boats operated from Greenland.

2. By year from 1970 to date the maximum number of seals permitted to be caught is as follows:

Year	Harps	Hoods
1970	No quota	No quota
1973	150,100	"
1974	150,100	"
1975	150,100	15,100
1976	127,100	15,100

3. By year since 1970 the following number of seals has been taken by (a) large Canadian vessels, (b) large Norwegian vessels and, (c) coasters and small boats:

	Year	Harps	Hoods	Total
1970	(a)	95,217	1,043	96,260

SEAL CATCHES

Question No. 4,081—Mr. Matte:

1. Has hooded seal catching been authorized on the Atlantic coast for several years and, if so, how many were caught in each year from 1970 to date?

2. For the same years, how many hooded seals have been caught in the frontier area, and of that number how many were by (a) Canada, (b) Norway?

3. How many baby seals were killed on the Atlantic coast in each year from 1970 to date?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): 1. Hooded seal catching has been authorized on the Atlantic coast for several years and since 1970 the catches of hooded seals are as follows:

Year	Catch
1971	16,351
1972	14,832
1973	8,867
1974	12,455
1975	15,612*

*Canada and Norway catch only. Does not include Greenland catch which is unavailable at this time.

2. Canada and Norway have caught the following number of hooded seals in the front area since 1970:

Year	Canada	Norway	Total
1970	1,043	4,321	5,364
1971	348	14,514	14,862
1972	278	12,178	12,456
1973	174	6,255	6,429
1974	203	9,796	9,999

CBC—DISTRIBUTION AND COST OF POSTER "UNE RADIO BIEN À VOUS"

Question No. 4,444—Mr. Lachance:

1. Was a poster entitled Une radio bien à vous distributed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in early 1976 and, if so, what was the cost of its (a) design, (b) production, (c) distribution?

2. To what individuals and organizations was the poster distributed and how many were sent to each?

3. Did the artists mentioned in the poster receive a fee and, if so, what are the details?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) and (b) $8,248. (c) $950.

2. The poster entitled "Une radio bien à vous" is one of the elements of the promotion campaign conducted by the CBC to create audience interest in the programs of the FM network and at the same time to stress the importance of Canadian talent in radio programming. Five thousand copies of the poster were produced. They were distributed as follows: Educational Institutions—conservatories, universities, CEGEPs (junior colleges), and composite schools: 2,500; Advertising agencies and unions: 650; Theatres, libraries, night clubs, record shops, book stores: 250; Newspapers, periodicals, critics: 400; French network stations for distribution in their locality: 700; Political figures: 241; Reserve: 259.

3. Yes. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details as the fees paid to artists. The backgrounds of this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE OF EMBASSIES

Question No. 4,767—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government aware of reports of a form of electronic surveillance of the United States Embassy in Moscow involving a form of radiation and, if so, has it any official information on the matter?

2. Is the government in possession of any information to indicate whether or not any similar radiation situation has existed or does exist in regard to the Canadian Embassy in Moscow and, if so, what are the details including (a) on what date such information came to the attention of the government, (b) all actions taken by the government since learning of such information?

3. If the government is not aware whether there has been any such radiation problem in regard to the Canadian Embassy in Moscow, has it recently taken any steps in an effort to determine the existence or non-existence of such a situation and, if so, what are the details?

4. Has the Department of External Affairs made any check of health records of persons who have served at any time in the Canadian Embassy in Moscow, and (a) if not, does it plan to make such a check, (b) if so, what do such records show in regard to any evidence of disease that could be directly or indirectly connected with radiation?

5. Are the incidents of cancer or cancer type diseases more prevalent among personnel who have served at the Canadian Embassy in Moscow than other Canadian personnel who have served elsewhere abroad?

6. Other than the Canadian Embassy in Moscow, has the Department of External Affairs investigated, or is it investigating, possible radiation surveillance of any other Canadian diplomatic establishments abroad and, if so, what are the names of all the countries involved?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The government is aware of reports of a form of electronic surveillance of the United States Embassy in Moscow. It has no official information on the matter.

2. The government has no information in its possession to indicate that a similar situation has existed or exists in regard to the Canadian Embassy in Moscow.

3. The government is not aware of any radiation problem or hazard affecting the health of its employees at the Canadian Embassy in Moscow and has received no information that would warrant an investigation of such a situation.

4. All employees of the Government of Canada are subjected to medical examinations prior to and on return from postings abroad. Postings to Moscow are usually for a period of approximately two years and medical examinations of those concerned have not indicated any need for special investigation of diseases attributable to radiation.

5. There is no evidence to suggest that cancer or cancer type diseases are more prevalent among personnel who have served at the Canadian Embassy in Moscow than among other Canadian personnel who have served elsewhere abroad.

6. No, the Department of External Affairs knows of no reason to undertake such investigations.

OIL IMPORT COMPENSATION—NEWFOUNDLAND REFINING COMPANY

Question No. 4,924—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. In the past five years, has the Newfoundland Refining Company, at Come-By-Chance received any subsidies as part of the compensation programme for oil imports to Eastern Canada and, if so (a) in what amount, (b) what were the repayment clauses?

2. Has there been any delay by the Company in repaying (a) monies owed, (b) subsidies received and, if so (i) what is the amount in arrears (ii) for what reason?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Energy Supplies Allocation Board reports as follows: 1. Yes. Paid as compensation to oil importers in Eastern Canada under Section 76 of the Petroleum Administration Act. (a) $108,523,-841. (b) Section 76 of the Petroleum Administration Act.

2. (a) No. (b) Yes (i) $15,913,148. As at February 13, 1976, company records showed approximately three million barrels of petroleum or petroleum products in inventory. If this material is consumed in Canada, the Board's position is that their claim for a refund of $15,913,148 would be reduced by approximately $12 million. (ii) Newfoundland Refining Company Limited and Provincial Refining Company Limited are each subject of a petition in bankruptcy dated February 13, 1976.

NUMBER OF PUBLIC SERVANTS ENROLLED IN FRENCH AND ENGLISH LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 4,941—Mr. Reynolds:

For the year (a) 1973, (b) 1974, (c) 1975, what was the total number of public servants who enrolled in (i) French (ii) English language training?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows:

Year	French training	English training	Total
1973	5,655	948	6,603
1974	7,466	1,271	8,737
1975	8,921	1,043	9,964

NOTES:

(1) Figures are for calendar years, and include both cyclical and continuous/intensive courses.

(2) Many public servants take training in consecutive years, carrying over from one year to the next, and are counted in each year's total.

LES ÉQUIPEMENTS LAPORTE INC., GRANBY, QUEBEC

Question No. 4,959—Mr. Kempling:

Was a grant, loan or other assistance given to Les équipements Laporte Inc., Granby, P.Q., by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in the fiscal year (a) 1974-75, (b) 1975-76 and, if so (i) in what amount (ii) for what purpose?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: (a) 1974-75, no. (b) 1975-76, yes. (i) An offer of $65,502 was accepted under the terms and conditions of the Regional Development Incentives Act. (ii) For the establishment of a new factory for the manufacture of clay pigeons.

DIXON REDIMARK PERMANENT FELT TIP MARKER

Question No. 4,988—Mr. Brisco:

1. Did the Department of National Health and Welfare examine the Dixon Redimark Permanent felt tip marker for possible harmful effects by inhalation of chemicals and, if so, was it (a) approved, (b) disapproved?

2. What chemicals are contained in the marker and are they harmful to the user by virtue of inhalation?

3. Has the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs examined the marker and, if so, did they direct that such harmful effects be noted on the marker?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Consumer and Corporate Affairs as follows: 1. No, this specific brand has not been examined.

2 and 3. Dixon Redimark Permanent felt tip markers contain xylene solvent which does not presently come within the purview of the Hazardous Products Act. The subject has been discussed with the manufacturer who stated that no user complaints have been received. Cautionary labelling will be the suject of further investigation by the department.

CBC EXPENSES SINCE 1973

Question No. 5,004—Mr. Matte:

What were the annual expenses of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation since 1973?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1972-73, $193,634,000; 1973-74, $228,395,000; 1974-75, $241,712,000. These amounts represent the net cost of operations, less depreciation and amortization for which funds are not provided. They include the operations of the following networks and services: English AM radio, English FM radio, English television, French AM radio, French FM radio, French television, the Northern Service, Armed Forces Service, regional networks where applicable, and Radio Canada International.

DONATIONS FOR SWIMMING POOL AT 24 SUSSEX DRIVE

Question No. 5,184—Mr. Cossitt:

Have any Members of the Senate been involved directly or indirectly with soliciting donations of money or materials, or in making donations themselves, to the swimming pool at the Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive and, if so, what are their names?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See third paragraph of reply to question 1,233 answered October 28, 1975.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

MAN-HOURS OF TEMPORARY LABOUR

Question No. 5,198—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. For the fiscal years 1973-74, 1974-75 and 1975-76, by month and by department and agency, how many man-hours of temporary labour were provided by private employment agencies?

2. For each department and agency (a) what were the names of the private employment agencies, (b) what was the percentage of man-hours provided by each?

3. For the same period, by department and agency, what (a) was the total amount paid to private employment agencies, (b) percentage of the money went to actual temporary employees, (c) percentage of the money went to the company in the form of commissions or other payment?

4. For the same period, by month and by department and agency, what was the number of persons working on a contract basis?

5. For the fiscal years 1974-75 and 1975-76, by month and by department and agency, what was the total number of (a) man-hours worked by permanent employees excluded from collective bargaining, (b) hours worked by permanent full-time or casual employees?

6. For the fiscal years 1974-75 and 1975-76, by month and by department and agency, what was the (a) total number of man-hours worked by all permanent full-time or casual employees who were considered clerical or secretarial, (b) percentage of the total number of man-hours worked?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply in its entirety, would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every department, which would be exorbitant or prohibitive.

RENOVATIONS TO EAST BLOCK

Question No. 5,209—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the estimates for 1976-77 which show a sum of $8 million as the estimated requirement for alterations, repairs, renovations, etc. to the East Block of the Parliament Buildings (a) how much will be spent on the part of the building now occupied or to be occupied by the Prime Minister and members of his staff, (b) what is a detailed list of the proposed items for the area occupied or to be occupied by the Prime Minister and his staff together with the estimated cost in each case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See Report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for April 5, 1976.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER RECESS

Hon. Ron Basford (for the President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when the House adjourns on Wednesday, April 14, 1976, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 26, 1976, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this Order.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree to adopt the motion?

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised that the acting government House leader has not seen fit to get up on this motion and defend the record of the government.

An hon. Member: How could he?

Mr. Paproski: That's why he didn't get up.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Perhaps the reason he did not get up and defend it is that he is basically an honest man, and when he looked at the record he really had nothing to defend.

What really does surprise me is the courage of the government in deciding to adjourn the House today. This motion, unless hon. members opposite hive themselves off in their hotel rooms and in their offices, will set them out in the streets, highways and byways of their constituencies to meet the people of Canada.

Mr. Goodale: They are anxious to see us.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am sure hon. members opposite are anxious to see the people, and I am sure the people of Canada are anxious to see them, to ask them what has gone wrong with the ship of state here in Ottawa and why the government is shambling and moving seemingly without rudders or leadership with respect to all kinds of matters.

While it has always been the usual attitude of the opposition to fight adjournment and to make the government stay and tackle the problems for which governments are basically responsible because of their own neglect and dereliction, our attitude today will be a little different because we feel it is a good thing for this complex of dispensables, this shambling group which masquerades as a government, to go out and meet those for whom they say they speak. They pound their desks and say aye when the time comes to say aye, and nay when the time comes to say nay. I think that group which masquerades as a government should go out and meet the people of this country and find out just what the people really think of their performance.

An hon. Member: It would ruin their holiday.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I should like us to consider for a moment the members of the government. Let us think about the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). This morning in the Globe and Mail someone called him a "dyed in the bull" politician. Let us think about what he did. He carried off a masterpiece today and yesterday with respect to the dairy policy he introduced. He managed to do what no other minister of agriculture has ever been able to do, and that is shaft both producers and consumers at the same time. That takes some doing.

Mr. Broadbent: That is known as the Whelan principle.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Perhaps it is known as the Whelan principle. It is not the principle of relativity, in any event.

Then there is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), who has no energy and who is prepared to let the Atlantic provinces heat and light themselves "at twice the price."

The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) is the minister who has forgotten that when you build jails and penitentiaries you are supposed to put locks on the doors to keep the inmates in. He has forgotten the problems which are faced by his own staff. He has been condemned by the leadership of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. When I think of the morale of the RCMP, the morale of the people who work in our prisons and the dreadful conditions in them—if we believe half of what we are told, and I suggest we can believe at least that—I wonder why the minister should be in that portfolio at all. I wonder why he should be supported. If hon. members of the government are going to speak today, they should tell us why the Solicitor General should be supported, except that he happens to be one of their own.

If there is any situation in Canada which needs a clear investigation by someone who is prepared to look at all sides of the issue, it is the situation in our penitentiaries and the situation with regard to the RCMP, to which the government is prepared to give lip service, but in terms of the rumblings of discontent within that latter service there is an indication that something is wrong, and I suggest something is wrong with the government, not just with the Solicitor General. Surely the shoulders of the Solicitor General are not broad enough to bear all the results of the acts of omission and commission of the government.

If this is the season of tranquility and peace, I think we should leave this House and hope that in the spirit of Easter we might see a government returned refreshed. But I do not think there is very much left to refresh in terms of this government. With such a ministry is it any wonder that this country is in such difficulty?

● (1610)

Can any good Liberal be proud of the government's legislative accomplishments? What have hon. members opposite contributed to debates in this House? What has been the contribution of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), apart from the occasional reply? For most part it has consisted of "Oh, oh!" or "Hear, hear!" Is it any wonder our people question the wisdom of the government? We are going through an economic crisis, a crisis involving the Solicitor General's department, and a crisis relating to the government's moral and ethical standards.

Mr. Broadbent: What standards?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Apparently, in matters of ministerial ethics, the government considers the Criminal Code as the basic guide, not the guidelines set down by Lester B. Pearson. As the ship of state plows ahead, bumping a shoal here and a shoal there, with nobody at the helm, is it any wonder people think the government is a drifting mess.

In his year-end oration the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said parliament is irrelevant. The people of this country now think the Prime Minister himself is irrelevant. I ask hon. members to cast their minds back. When, in modern parliamentary history, have two ministers submitted their resignations in such circumstances as we witnessed? When has it ever happened that one resignation was accepted, and one not accepted on such specious grounds? When has a ministry been involved with matters like Sky Shops, the dial-a-judge affair and other, similar matters which have come before the House?

If government supporters are dismayed by opposition charges, I merely say that the opposition cannot make bricks without straw. The actions of the government, or its lack of action and—I use the word in its parliamentary sense—the wrongful acts of the government and those beholden to it have created the straw. We merely brought these matters to the attention of the House. When did you ever see such evasion? Certainly not in my time here. Perhaps others, who have been here longer, remember similar instances, but I do not.

When did you ever see such posturing as went on in the last year and a half, such empty posturing? Why, it has become necessary for the government to invent reasons for avoiding the public inquiries which we asked. Only when those involved in the matter were not in the government or closely connected with it was an inquiry granted. Otherwise, when we have asked for people unbiased politically to inquire into important public matters, we have been refused and stonewalled. Other times the government asked us to lay charges; but the government would not provide information which would allow us to make a judgment. Government members have tried to intimidate opposition members in a question period, and failed. This government has much to account for to the people of this country.

Why is the government afraid to face the people of Canada? The Prime Minister spurned the invitation to face the public in St. John's West, until he could spurn it no longer. We shall know the people's answer to the government when the people of St. John's West speak. Yes, the Prime Minister will have his birthday present in October, 1976. And what is to happen in Ottawa-Carleton? How can the Prime Minister justify leaving over 100,000 people in Ottawa-Carleton without representation in this House? Why has he refused, despite the pressure put on him by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and other opposition members, to say when an ordinary process in a democratic society is to take place, namely, a by-election?

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

The Ottawa Journal, a newspaper known for its unbiased approach to public matters—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —said, in an editorial printed on April 12, 1976—

Mr. Broadbent: It's about as unbiased as the Daily Worker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —as follows:

> Of course no justification is possible. Mr. Trudeau is willingly sacrificing the interests of parliamentary democracy for the perceived self-interest of the Liberal party. His political advisers are worried about an Ottawa-Carleton by-election, as well they should be. The delay in even announcing its date is entirely for partisan reasons.
> Before Mr. Trudeau next talks about the irrelevancy of parliament, he might contemplate his own contribution to that sad fact.

With every passing day the government exposes its weakness. Although ministers demonstrate their technical knowledge and managerial ability, their credibility inexorably is lessened. The government is becoming less and less realistic in its assessment of the problems we all face. A government like that should go out to the people of Canada—

Mr. Stanfield: It should go out, period.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) says, it should go out. And I do not want anyone to think that the government neglects only the big issues. It neglects the small ones as well. In all aspects of its activities it has demonstrated the same inability, incompetence, and disregard for matters small as well as large.

I allude particularly to a matter I raised the other day as a point of order. Mr. Speaker decided that it was not a point of order, but I suggest that it concerned the smirking hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and others, as it has to do with the position of parliamentary secretary. A section of the Parliamentary Secretaries Act provides that:

> There shall not be at any one time more parliamentary secretaries than the number of ministers who hold offices for which salaries are provided in section 4 of the Salaries Act.

This subsection refers to the ministers in office and not to the total number of eligible portfolios. We have, by virtue of the Government Reorganization Act, provision for a total of 28 full ministers and, therefore, a possible 28 parliamentary secretaryships. This government has not appointed an associate minister of national defence. It only takes one minister of national defence to foul up the defence posture of the country. We do not need an associate minister. Prior to March 16 there were 27 full ministers and 27 parliamentary secretaries. The three ministers of state do not enter into these calculations because they do not fall within the definition.

When the hon. member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) resigned as minister of consumer and corporate affairs, there remained 26 ministers drawing salaries pursuant to section 4 of the Salaries Act. As a consequence there is one parliamentary secretary too many in terms of salary. There are some in this country who would say there are 20 odd parliamentary secretaries too many in terms of the work they do. However, I am not going to raise that matter in this debate.

● (1620)

On Thursday, April 8, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) was given the additional portfolio of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has proved that he cannot run the Post Office. He is now going to prove that he cannot run that department. Consequently there is a minister for each of the 27 portfolios. However, there are still only 26 ministers holding an office for which a salary is provided for a parliamentary secretary. Since the number of ministers is operative in determining the number of parliamentary secretaries, there is still one parliamentary secretary too many as of this time. It appears that one parliamentary secretary is drawing his salary illegally.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): None of them earn the salary, but one is drawing it illegally. I raise this with the government and I was thanked by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) for doing so. I want to know which one of the parliamentary secretaries is going to volunteer not only to give up the salary but to send back what he has taken from the Crown improperly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As I said, Mr. Speaker, the government provides an equal amount of neglect to each problem facing it. The parliamentary secretaries must be delighted to know that they are among the small problems. However, their neglect in this problem is very important in terms of proper administration under the statute. But the government ignores the problem.

We do not resist too strenuously adjournment at this time. In order for the government members to have more than a short exposure to the people on the streets of Canada we might increase the number of days. However, there will at least be time for them to understand fully that outside this lovely precinct of parliament, insulated as it is from time to time from what people on the street are saying, there are a great number of Canadians who look upon the government with the same disdain and disgust as many members of this House of Commons.

There are problems in Canada. There are great challenges facing the country. Frankly I do not believe that this shambling, dried-up bureaucratic, technocratic government, which once classed its members as great managers, is capable of managing its own affairs, let alone the affairs of a country that requires a unique kind of attention.

It would be very well if this House were dissolved and we went to the country. If this were the case today, there would be no doubt about the outcome. I would be immodest if I suggested that we might have an opportunity to go across the floor of the House, so I will not suggest it. I would rather say that members opposite will have an opportunity to test the other side of the House. With the situation in this country, this could not happen too soon. I do not know how long any country can withstand the neglect and lack of policy and direction. This government has ably demonstrated its incapability.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, if Canadians picked at random a group of people to run the government and sit in the cabinet, they would come up with a group that in the normal course of time would make a number of decisions which would include some good results and some errors. However, it is a marvellous accomplishment of this collection of Liberals to turn virtually every aspect of policy that they have had to deal with since the Christmas break into an unmitigated disaster. No other group of Canadians could have been so successful at spoiling virtually everything they touched in terms of policy in the past few months.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), on behalf of the government, moved a motion of adjournment. We all noticed that he did not say anything. I do not mean that in the normal Liberal sense where they speak at length without any substance, but in the literal sense in that he simply moved the motion and resumed his seat. The reason is obvious. He would have had to speak in terms of pure hypocrisy about the record of the government, or tell the truth. If he chose the latter he would not have anything to say of a positive nature about the performance of the government.

In the past three months we have had the worst consecutive period of government for a three month period in the living memory of any member in this chamber.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Even Stanley!

Mr. Broadbent: We had the judges' affair and the Sky Shops' affair. The over-riding conclusion that has to be drawn from these two episodes is that, apart from the Criminal Code, the government has absolutely no standards. If it is not illegal, for a Liberal it is permitted, unless he is caught. If caught, the principle is that they do their damndest to cover it up. If they are caught trying to cover it up, they get some minister to resign for a completely phony reason and hope that no one will notice. That is the standard this cabinet has set in the last three months. I have no doubt that it has contributed to its very significant nosedive in the Gallup poll figures recently announced.

There has been a total abandonment of the serious parliamentary tradition, both in this country and abroad, that ministers have moral responsibilities that are well above those provided in the Criminal Code. Long after the temporary illustrations of the so-called judges' affair and the Sky Shops' issue are forgotten, neither of which is completedly resolved by a long shot, the permanent effect upon the government and the Liberal party will be that the people of Canada will judge them as a party that looks upon this nation in a completely cynical fashion, a fashion which states that, as long as it is not illegal, it is to be permitted. That is a standard that all parties on the opposition side made clear in the past few weeks that they categorically reject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: As for the Defence Department, I do not know if one could get lower in any provincial or federal department, in this country or anywhere else. The $1 billion misunderstanding with regard to the Orion is almost beyond description in terms of the incompetency of the government. It is an incredible mishandling of public responsibility and public funds. All opposition parties have played a role in showing that this profound mishandling is taking place in the Defence Department by the current minister.

● (1630)

We are spending $1 billion on Lockheed Orions, which I suggest are not going to serve the first priority of our defence, as stated by the government itself in its 1971 defence white paper, namely, the protection and enhancement of Canadian sovereignty. We are spending millions of dollars on needlessly complex, technical equipment for the Orion, which the minister acknowledged in committee and acknowledged implicitly in the House has no other purpose but to provide the technical capacity to detect submarines in the course of supplying protective coverage for convoys carrying goods back and forth across the Atlantic in the event of a prolonged land war in continental Europe.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, could anyone other than the present Minister of Defence (Mr. Richardson) come up with such a hypothetical possibility in the year 1976 which has such absurd implications? As I said on another occasion, in the Orion deal the minister has prepared magnificently for refighting the second world war. This can be facetiously or jokingly dismissed, but we are not approaching it in that way, Mr. Speaker. Defence spending is a serious matter.

However, there is yet hope. The deal is not settled. We have suggested that the government extricate itself completely from the Lockheed deal and proceed to purchase and build planes in Canada. The Dash 7-R can be built in Canada, and given the right kind of equipment can undertake the surveillance task which, I repeat, was the number one task assigned to the defence department in the government's white paper. This can be supplemented by re-equipping the Argus aircraft, which can provide surveillance for submarines along our coast where this is appropriate. This would leave some $500 million which could be used for sensible, long-range purposes. For example, it could be used to develop inter-urban rapid transit facilities, which also can be produced in Canada and would meet Canada's urban needs.

As for inflation and unemployment, I will not go back over the origin of the anti-inflation program that was presented to the House shortly after last Thanksgiving. If one looks at what has transpired since we returned to the House following the Christmas recess, the weakness of the program in terms of its legal structure, complemented by regulations and administrative decisions, have more than confirmed our original conclusion about the program, namely, that it was primarily a wage and salary control program and not at all a price control program.

Perhaps the symbolic appointment that best characterizes the fact that the government was not serious about prices was the appointment of a man named Lasby as head of the profit control section of the Anti-Inflation Board administrative apparatus concerned with food prices. Did the government appoint a social worker, a trade unionist, a fisherman, or an ordinary worker to this position, Mr. Speaker? No, it wanted someone very dear to the hearts of the Liberal party and hired Mr. Lasby, who was formerly vice-president of Canada Packers. Mr. Lasby would know very well about price fixing and how the system works, but he would not be the kind of person in terms of disposition to look for profiteering and price gouging, which surely should have been the sort of person the government was seeking for this particular role in its anti-inflation program.

Perhaps it is just a mere coincidence that the board has rolled back in more than five months of existence only one price increase in Canada, and that was the price of a particular brand of beer manufactured in the province of Quebec. Some record indeed! In the meantime the board has rolled back some 100 trade union contracts and wage and salary settlements. The board has before it some 6,000 contracts, and since the program began has reached a decision on 2,000 of them. Some 4,000 remain. But overwhelmingly the emphasis of the board has been on rolling back contracts that have been negotiated and settled by the participants, not in any circumstance on improving those settlements.

The legislation that we have passed dealing with inflation was anti-working Canadian at its inception and has remained anti-working Canadian in its application. The recent cost of living figures illustrate this. There was a slight decline in the cost of living, but contrary to what certain government members have said this reduction was not at all the result of the anti-inflation program. This reduction occurred in sectors that the program does not control, namely, imported goods and food prices. The fact of the matter is that the most important price increases for Canadians are not covered by the program. I will not go into them at length but simply mention them: energy prices, mortgage costs, and food prices. These are virtually exempt in the most important respects from the anti-inflation program, yet they are most relevant to the budget of a typical family.

Another area that the government has fouled up—and I think that is the appropriate term—has been federal-provincial relations. In the last few months the government has reneged on a whole range of programs originally negotiated between the Government of Canada and the provinces during the last few years. This is the case particularly in regard to those programs involving the transfer of financial resources from the federal government to some of the provinces, which inescapably has normally meant the transfer of wealth from the wealthier provinces to the poorer. As I say, the federal government has reneged on the agreements it entered into with the provinces ostensibly in good faith. Now the financial burden has got a little tough, the federal government has turned its back.

This is particularly so in the case of health care financing, and it has had a very bad effect on the poorer provinces. The same is true of the revenue guarantee agreements entered into with the provinces some five years ago. The federal government's unilateral and arbitrary action in these areas not only jeopardizes the good relationships that are essential between the federal government and the provinces, but it has had a negative effect in terms of the income benefits of our citizens. In all these instances it means that the poorer provinces of Canada are going to suffer and become even poorer.

Again the government's lack of action and failure to take specific steps is seen in its treatment of the native peoples of this country. Tomorrow is the first anniversary of a special submission on the aboriginal rights of Metis and non-status Indians made to the cabinet, and specifically to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by the Native Council of Canada. At that time the Native Council of Canada was promised a response by the government within three months. That is a year ago tomorrow. I say with all seriousness that if the Government of Canada does not act, and act soon in terms of the needs and the aboriginal rights of the native people of Canada, we will experience a very significant, and I will not put it more strongly than that, level of civil disobedience in this country. It may well go beyond that, the issue is that serious.

A government that promises a year ago that it will act within three months and has yet done nothing is not a government that deserves the support either of the native people of Canada or of the rest of us. Our party believes it is time the rights of the native people of Canada were guaranteed. We believe their linguistic and cultural rights should be guaranteed in precisely the same way as the linguistic and cultural rights of French and English-speaking people are guaranteed. By that we mean they should be firmly embedded in our constitution. That is what they want, and it is time the Government of Canada gave recognition to the desire and implemented it.

Another area in respect of which the government can be criticized with complete justification is that of its neglect of women's rights. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) put on one fancy and expensive fanfare after another, along with a little bit of showbiz here at the National Arts Centre and its equivalent in Winnipeg, where there was a great production with buttons and everything, all during International Women's Year. Once the great and symbolic year was over we got no action at all.

There was a possibility within the anti-inflation program of making it clear that the women of Canada who still experience wage and salary discrimination ought not, in terms of the law, be subject to a continuation of that discrimination. The normal cop-out of the federal government was the suggestion that these people are employed within the framework of provincial law. That was the government's excuse up to its new anti-inflation law. Now that this has been brought in under the guise and within the framework of exceptional constitutional powers given to the federal government in emergency situations, the peace, order and good government clause, the government no longer has that excuse. While this legislation is on the books it provides the government with a perfect opportunity to practise this year what it preached last year when it was fashionable to talk about women's rights. It could have made it mandatory that women in Canada in the market place be paid on a full equality basis.

Another area the government has been treating with blasé indifference is that area of the automotive industry in Canada. This is a serious part of our industry, and in the province of Ontario alone one out of six jobs is directly or indirectly related to it. The government has been sitting waiting month after month, indeed, year after year in recent years, while our relative position compared to the United States automotive industry has gone down.

Last year we had a $2 billion deficit in automotive trade with the United States. That's a lot of dollars, and this affects our trade position seriously. It is also translatable into jobs. That means a lot of men and women in this country have been unemployed who might otherwise have been employed. If the trend which I understand has taken place during the first two months of this year persists, I predict that the deficit for 1976 will likely reach $3 billion. I understand we have a deficit not only in the automotive parts sector, which has been traditional over the years, but also unfortunately we have a deficit in the assembly sector in trade with the United States. I predict this with care, and with some knowledge about this industry.

It is time the Government of Canada recognized the importance of what is taking place within the framework of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement and took steps to change it so Canadians would get, not more than their share, but at least their share in terms of jobs that were supposed to be guaranteed by that pact. In addition, the Canadian consumers would get the benefits they were supposed to get when the tax came into being ten years ago, namely, price parity in automotive production. They do not get this and, in fact, this is just as bad today as it was in 1965 when the pact came into being.

The final matter I wish to mention that is of concern to us is the decision that is likely to be reached in cabinet tomorrow concerning drilling in the Beaufort Sea. This is another example of the government plunging ahead without any thought about the consequences when it gave approval in principle to Dome Petroleum in 1973 starting some preliminary drilling there. In spite of requests from the United States government to delay, in spite of the expressed concern by the federal Department of the Environment, which has pointed out that if a blow-out occurs in the Beaufort Sea it could run wild for up to two years, and particularly in spite of the opposition by the United States government to proceeding so quickly, the government gives every indication that it will decide to proceed with that operation.

We in the NDP assert that this is a wrong decision. The technology being used, to our knowledge, is not sufficient to guarantee the kind of environmental safety that is essential. We say the decision should be delayed and that this action should not go ahead. I repeat that all the indicators seem to be that the government will proceed, as soon as it gets the opposition parties out of Ottawa, with that very important and potentially very harmful decision.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As they always do.

Mr. Broadbent: As the government always does, as the hon. member suggests.

I have touched on a number of areas: the judges and Sky Shops affair, the billion-dollar misunderstanding about the Orion, the disastrous levels of persistent high unemployment, the betrayal of the provinces in respect of cost-sharing agreements, the ignoring of our native people's rights, and the continuing ignoring of the important principles of sexual equality.

I conclude with the point I made at the outset, that no other group of people in Canada, had it been randomly selected, could have done so badly about so many issues of such great importance as this government has in the last two months.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself very briefly to one question that has been raised repeatedly during this session, and certainly during the 1976 portion, and this relates to search and rescue.

Since January we have lost six fishermen off the coast of Newfoundland and four fishermen off the coast of British Columbia. In March the fisheries patrol vessel Cape Friels went down leaving 23 men in the water for 15 hours. It was just by a very happy coincidence that at that particular time there happened to be a tracker aircraft from Halifax on the ground in St. John's. That tracker aircraft was able to get in the air and succeeded in locating these men. We are told they were within one hour of being lost because of a developing weather system in the area. I am further told that the pilot of that tracker aircraft was severely reprimanded by his superiors for refusing to obey orders and insisting on staying over the area until the rescue vessel was in sight. As I say, that would have been a very serious disaster indeed.

It came as no surprise when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) issued a statement on April 7 under the heading "Marine Search and Rescue (SAR) Activities". This was an eight-page resume of the inventory of the Canadian coast guard. The minister really did not address himself to the total search and rescue effort. What really surprised me and most people was the very dramatic admission on page eight of that statement. This is what the Minister of Transport said:

> It has become evident that, in spite of the provision of additional resources, facilities and coordination capabilities over the years, the marine SAR organization is no longer entirely adequate.

That is precious little consolation to the families of those fishermen who have been lost this year. Then the minister went on to state:

> A Canadian Coast Guard Task Force has reviewed the national search and rescue policy and the revised policy is expected to be ready for submission to Cabinet by mid-1976.

The Minister of Transport accused me of misreading his statement. He said his statement referred to the report being ready before mid-summer 1976. That is what Hansard will show. I hope the parliamentary secretary will note that the statement of April 7 said that the submission would not be ready until mid-summer 1976.

This is a most crucial fact. It raises the whole question that, once the Minister of Transport arrives at the point in time where he is ready to admit what we have been saying all along, which is that the present search and rescue facilities are not adequate, it then becomes incumbent upon the minister and his colleagues in cabinet to assure the House and the Canadian people that an interim measure is being put into effect which would cover, on an interim basis, the inadequacies referred to by the minister in his statement, at least until the task force makes its report by mid-summer.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, this is a most grievous thing because we are about to embark upon another fishing season on the east coast of Canada. I believe the minister has put himself in the position by that admission that, if there is another accident at sea involving Canadian fishermen, which by the very nature of the occupation there probably will be, God forbid, the government will be condemned by its own words. This government by its own admission places itself in the position of being accused of what to my mind is tantamount to criminal negligence.

I do not know what the legal position will be if there should be another accident at sea either on the east coast or on the west coast, but certainly we have a right to expect from the minister some assurance that the inadequacies which obviously have been identified will be corrected, at least on an interim basis, to ensure maximum efficiency during the crucial time when the task force is preparing its report, which report will not be ready for submission to cabinet until mid-summer, or perhaps even later.

The last tragedy at sea in my province was the foundering of the fishing vessel the San Juan with the loss of two lives. My question today to the minister was whether or not he is now prepared, in light of the submission of the report by his department into the sinking of the San Juan, to have a full scale judicial inquiry. I submit such an inquiry is warranted by the tabling in this House by the minister of the in-house inquiry report of his department.

Such an inquiry is warranted because, according to this report, only the captain of the CGS Bartlett and only the first officer of the vessel and the quartermaster were interviewed. Why were the members of the RCMP not interviewed since they were instrumental in notifying the air-sea search and rescue in Halifax that the San Juan was lost? Second, why were not the personnel of the air-sea search and rescue in Halifax not interviewed to determine what procedure was taken immediately following the receipt of this news?

What seems to be perhaps even more difficult to understand is why were not the members of the crew of the Bartlett who were on deck at the time not interviewed by this inquiry or investigation? I say, Sir, that unfortunately, because I am sure this was the conclusion of well meaning people, this investigation raises more questions than it answers. I find one part of the report particularly objectionable. On page three of the report there is a reference to the fact that the two fishermen, Mr. Coady and Mr. Ryan were on some kind of pleasure cruise. The suggestion was made that they were out sports fishing, that they were shooting birds for sport.

The Newfoundland fishermen do not venture out into the North Atlantic in the middle of February for sport. They do so because that is a crucial part of their existence. They do so for the very important reason that they have to supplement their inadequate incomes. They supplement their income by catching a few fish for their table or by shooting some seabirds to provide some fresh meat. That has been the traditional pattern of Newfoundland fishermen. It is unworthy of the people who prepared that report, and of the Minister of Transport who presented it, to suggest that these two fishermen who were lost were out on some kind of sporting venture.

I wonder whether the Minister of Transport would have the courage to go to the widow of one of these fishermen and adviser her and her nine children that the husband and father was lost while on a sporting cruise on that ill-fated day. How many more fishermen will have to be lost before this government gets the message that it has an on-going responsibility to protect Canadians at sea and in the air?

I venture to say that if some kook were to take it upon himself to cross the Atlantic in a balloon, as has happened on a number of occasions, and if by the very nature of that foolhardy exercise was to come down somewhere in the northwest Atlantic, the full capability of Canada's search and rescue and of the United States search and rescue facilities would be brought to bear to save the skin of that nut. Yet, Sir, we seem to be suggesting that if fishermen engage in some kind of sporting pastime with their equipment while waiting for the fishing season to commence, or if fishermen on the west coast of Canada venture out without adequate equipment, then somehow they are not entitled to the same protection as they would were they engaged in legitimate fishing activity.

I submit that all Canadians involved in fishing, be it sport or otherwise, are entitled to the protection that is their right as Canadian citizens. That is why I believe, with the admission of the Minister of Transport that the present procedures are inadequate, with the further admission that the task force report will not be ready until mid-summer, that we must have some assurance that steps will be taken in the interim to correct the inadequacies.

The minister in the report on the San Juan incident made no reference to the air-sea rescue Centre in Halifax or the responsibilities they have. The report carried with it the implication that there is a division of responsibility here which all too often has resulted in a very serious loss of time in getting the search and rescue in operation.

On the one hand we are told that the Department of Transport is responsible for the marine capability in search and rescue, and on the other the Department of National Defence is responsible for the air capability. That is not my understanding of it. My understanding of it is that the Department of National Defence, which operates the four search and rescue centres in Canada, is responsible for the over-all supervision of search and rescue in Canada. It is its responsibility to take the initiative. Indeed the initiative cannot be taken unless the air-sea rescue centres have been notified, and indeed air-sea rescue centres have the ongoing co-ordinating responsibility once a search gets under way.

Yet we have all these contradictions creeping in from time to time. For example, General Dextrase when he was before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on March 23, in his statement, which can be found in the report of the committee of that day, said:

> But I do believe the responsibility is not ours. I do not want to sound callous; somebody has to do the job. But if we are forever coming back when we are discussing estimates and having the Department of National Defence picking up whatever is alleged or considered as not being done by anyone else, then the budget will certainly have to include it.

Obviously the Commanding General of the Canadian Armed Forces does not have the same understanding of the division of responsibility that the Minister of Transport and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) have. I would say that we deserve, the people of Canada deserve, and certainly our fishermen deserve, to know exactly what interim measures the government will take to correct the inadequacies identified by the minister in his statement last week. We deserve that because, after all, if a municipality is about to acquire a new fire engine, it does not close down the fire hall because the existing equipment is inadequate. It takes whatever steps are necessary to bring the present equipment up to maximum efficiency on an interim basis until the new equipment is ready, and certainly that applies with a great deal of force and legitimacy to the whole question of air-sea rescue.

I will not take too much of the time of the House, but in conclusion I want to make reference to the report of Judge Soper who headed a judicial inquiry into the loss of the fishing vessel Enterprise, and the foundering of the Canadian National ship Patrick Morris which was engaged in the search of the Enterprise in 1970. Judge Soper released his report in 1971 and identified the problem. For example, he said:

> There is one factor which should be examined by the appropriate authorities of the Government of Canada and that is the "reaction time", which is the time lag between the order to go on a mission and the take-off of aircraft.

I did some checking today with the Canadian Armed Forces and I am told that the tracker aircraft, a prop aircraft which is the kind of equipment we now have, takes approximately three and a half hours flying time to get from Halifax to eastern Newfoundland. That is a critical time factor. As I mentioned earlier, it is only by the grace of God that there was a tracker at St. John's at the time the Cape Freels was lost because, if that tracker had not been there, we would probably have been faced with a tragedy of huge proportions in that 23 men would have been lost. Yet we had to depend on the east coast of Newfoundland on an air element that is operational from Halifax or Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

What did Judge Soper have to say about that in his report? He made some important recommendations which, to the best of my knowledge, have never been acted upon. That report was handed down in 1971. In addition to addressing himself to the critical time lag he recommended that there should be greater dispersal, greater deployment of air-sea rescue aircraft to cover the Atlantic region, pointing out rightly that the area covered by air-sea rescue was far too vast to have to depend on aircraft stationed in Summerside or in Halifax. Yet to this date that recommendation has not been acted upon.

The judge also recommended that additional personnel be employed in the air-sea rescue centres to ensure maximum 24 hour efficiency. To the best of my knowledge that recommendation was not acted upon either. I think we deserve an explanation. People who depend upon the sea for a livelihood deserve an explanation. What is more important, we deserve from this government and from the Minister of Transport, who should have all the responsibility because he has under his command the Canadian coastguard, an assurance, while he is waiting for the report of this task force, that immediate steps will be taken to correct the inadequacies identified by the minister himself, and that they will put together some kind of interim organization to ensure maximum efficiency and capability and a reduction in reaction time until the report of the task force is received.

This would mean a few simple steps which I will suggest to the government right now. First of all, tracker aircraft should be stationed in Gander on a full time 24 hour basis. Second, lifeboats which were purchased by the government at considerable expense should be redesigned to make them efficient to the maximum, because at present they can only operate under ideal conditions. For example, when two fishermen were lost in Morton's Harbour in February there was a lifeboat standing by in Twillingate a short distance away and that lifeboat was not operational because it could not operate in more than two inches of ice.

An hon. Member: One inch.

Mr. McGrath: I am corrected by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate)), and I appreciate that correction.

● (1710)

Second, I am told that when the San Juan went down there was a lifeboat in St. John's at that time and that that lifeboat was not operational because it could not operate in high seas. These accidents do not take place under ideal conditions. They usually take place when there are high winds, adverse weather conditions or serious ice conditions, so for God's sake let us not play around with cosmetics. Let us bring these lifeboats back, redesign them, and have the necessary additions made to them which will make them truly operational.

Third, I suggest that some kind of plan be put into effect which would maximize the use of whatever aircraft and whatever vessels happen to be in the area. For example, at any given time at St. John's or Gander there are water bombers, which are converted Cansos, which are ideal for this type of operation and which could and should be brought into force whenever there is a rescue operation under way. This could be done by a simple arrangement with the government of Newfoundland. Surely that is a simple suggestion.

Finally, whatever the task force recommends—and obviously it will have to pay some heed to the recommendations of Judge Soper with respect to deployment—let us hope the government acts on its recommendations and acts with the dispatch this situation deserves.

In this regard I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries will let his voice be heard because I know he shares my concern. I know he is convinced, as I am, that the logical location for deployment of whatever facilities we have from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island to cover the Newfoundland situation would be the airport at Gander, which has the National Defence establishment already there. There is a fully operational aerodrome, and this could be done with very little additional expense to Canadian taxpayers. Whatever is to be done, for God's sake let it be done quickly, before someone else is lost.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), not in an effort to monopolize the debate on the adjournment motion, but simply to point out the truth which he speaks. This is a very important matter.

As the over-all arrangement for search and rescue is set up throughout this country we have four co-ordinating zones. In the case of the province the hon. member represents, which is my province, operations are co-ordinated from another province. All the aircraft which are used in search and rescue operations have to be sent from another province, and from a specific area of another province, which is perhaps quite distant.

The co-ordination presently in effect is not adequate at all. As the hon. member pointed out, division of authority between two specific departments is not acceptable. The triggering device for search and rescue is not acceptable, and I think that is the major reason why there are discussions under way regarding the whole situation.

What is it that the hon. member for St. John's East and I are basically requesting? We deserve at least an aircraft in our own province, which we do not have at present. We do not have one aircraft. They have to come from another area of Canada. The hon. member pointed out that with regard to the major disasters which have occurred that they have occurred mostly at a certain time of the year, and around the coast of Newfoundland. The hon. member pointed out the reasons for that.

We have fishermen who are licensed seal hunters and who have to go out at a time of year when the ice is in and not too far off shore. There is a regular hunting season, not for sports hunting, but to provide a food supplement to the people who live along our coast. They have to go out at a time of year when one normally would not be doing sports fishing. A sports fisherman would not want to be out among ice pans at a time of the year when any change in the weather within a 24-hour period would result in the sports fisherman being heavily iced in. Because of our geography, weather conditions, and the occupations of Newfoundlanders, I believe we deserve to have an air-sea rescue co-ordinating centre in Newfoundland.

I would not mind if the centre were placed in the riding of the hon. member, or in some other part of Newfoundland. However, Gander is a central location, and I think the government should reach that decision.

This question is important to Newfoundlanders, not just to those people working in the fishery who have to go out on these waters during the spring and winter months, but to everyone in Newfoundland. I predict that before long—I would say this summer—we will see some petitions about this matter presented in the House of Commons. I agree wholeheartedly with what the hon. member for St. John's East said with regard to the need for an air-sea rescue centre in Newfoundland and also with his general comment about the need for co-ordination, better aircraft, and better equipment on that aircraft.

We could learn a lot if we examined some of the air-sea rescue services which are operated throughout the world. Perhaps if we were to look at what is now available, and deployed our resources properly, the problem would be solved. In any case, the problem has to be solved, and I join with the hon. member in making that point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, it seems strange that after 17 months of a session, the longest in the history of this country, the adjournment motion should be put without any statement whatsoever from the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Nineteen months.

Mr. Coates: Well, I made a mistake in a conservative way. After that period of time the acting government House leader comes into the House and puts this motion for adjournment without any mention of any achievements the government could lay before the people of Canada as reasons for taking a recess instead of proroguing the House and starting a new session of parliament.

It is one of the very sad commentaries on this parliament that it has been going continuously since the last general election. That is an indication of just how unco-ordinated the government has been in everything it has tried to achieve, in the name of sanity, for the people of Canada. The crown the government wears is not a crown of diamonds and rubies. It is a crown of thorns, and the people of Canada feel the effects.

I am pleased to see the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) has been present in the House all the time this motion has been debated. He is new to the department. He is a dedicated man but must clean up a terrible mess in Atlantic Canada. Eight years ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talked about the just society, about the need to eradicate regional economic disparity. Is it not sad that the head of the Economic Council of Canada, appearing before the Regional Development Committee, said that the department set up seven years ago to eliminate regional economic disparity has not achieved its aims? It has hardly lessened regional economic disparity which has existed since Confederation.

The economic outlook for people in my province becomes worse with each passing day. They face the future with fear and trepidation. Why, Mr. Speaker? The reason is our escalating energy costs. The blame is not to be laid so much at the feet of the federal government as at the feet of the government of Nova Scotia, which did virtually nothing by way of planning to lower the costs of energy. Our energy costs have escalated because the Nova Scotia government put its faith in offshore oil. Offshore oil is used mostly for the province's energy production. The situation is similar in Prince Edward Island but could have been avoided in Nova Scotia, as the province has available other resources which it could have brought on stream in anticipation of present difficulties.

Ordinary Nova Scotians owning ordinary homes pay more for their electric bills than for their mortgages. Mortgage payments are lower than payments for electric power bills. And this happened almost overnight. The government of Nova Scotia, through an advertising campaign, convinced people to change to electric heating. Many people converted, and now they cannot afford to heat their homes electrically. They cannot pay their electric bills and cannot sell their homes, because no one wants to buy homes so expensive to heat. This is a terrible mess and a terrible disaster for the people.

The federal government convinced many industries to locate in Nova Scotia. The idea was to provide employment for our people. Assisted by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, some industries established themselves in Nova Scotia. They face mounting energy costs which they could not have anticipated when they first moved to Nova Scotia. I do not doubt that if something is not done soon, bankruptcies in the province will increase. This will be bad news for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the people of this country, because we shall lose the tremendous investment we made when we helped those industries locate in Nova Scotia.

I say to the minister that the Nova Soctia government's lack of planning and lack of concern for the people are reprehensible. I criticize the Department of Regional Economic Expansion for not protecting the investment the people of Canada made when they helped industries to locate in the province. My criticism is not directed at the minister personally; it is directed at departmental officials. They should have anticipated that energy costs would increase, and should have encouraged the government of Nova Scotia to provide forms of energy alternative to and cheaper than offshore oil.

Nova Scotia possesses tremendous coal resources and Devco, the federal entity, is doing its best to bring provincial coal on stream. It wants to open coal mines; we need coal both for the steel industry and thermal power production. When Devco was first established the government of Nova Scotia entered into a special arrangement with the federal government whereby Devco was to assume responsibility for the coal mines in Cape Breton and the Nova Scotia government for the coal mines in the rest of Nova Scotia. The provincial government was to pay the subventions connected with thermal power plants in the province, not the federal government. The Nova Scotia government thought it was a good deal. The federal government behaved generously in the deal which led to the establishment of the Crown corporation on Cape Breton Island. But what happened?

After the deal was signed and the Regan administration took over, the province began closing coal mines. It thought, shortsightedly, that it would save money because it would not need to pay subventions on coal if mines were closed. Now that administration would dearly love to have those coal mines in operation and dearly love to pay those subventions. In my constituency, at Springhill, a viable coal mine could be in operation. There is lots of coal. At one time the Nova Scotia government decided to open a new coal mine there, then, suddenly, at the whim of the premier, decided not to. In Pictou county it was the same.

The provincial government closed the mines. Because coal had no sex appeal for the premier, coal mining was phased out. He put all his eggs in the one basket. He put his faith in oil on Sable Island, until he discovered there wasn't much oil on Sable Island. There wasn't enough to make that oil commercially viable.

An hon. Member: He showed everybody a bottle of oil.

Mr. Coates: Yes, he showed Nova Scotia a bottle of oil. Oil was to be the wave of the future in that part of Canada. But even that bottle of oil has become pretty expensive.

An hon. Member: It has turned out to be castor oil.

Mr. Coates: As the hon. member from Kingston says, for Nova Scotia it has turned out to be castor oil.

Then the premier decided that, although we did not have offshore oil, perhaps we could develop Fundy tidal power. One minute he is in favour of Fundy tidal power, and the next he is not. Nobody knows where he stands. Despite the willingness of the federal government to involve itself in tidal power studies and bring closer the day when we can decide if we can harness the tides, the premier could not make up his mind. He could not come up with appointments to the Fundy tidal power review committee for almost a year. He messed around with the additional study and we lost months when the committee could have been working and coming up with conclusions. At this moment in time we in Nova Scotia find ourselves almost totally committed to offshore oil, and the premier now cries, asking the federal government to bail them out.

● (1730)

As much as I hate to see us having to pay for the mistakes of Mr. Regan in Nova Scotia, at the same time I say we have to give very serious consideration to meeting the request he is making. If not, we will only worsen the degree of regional economic disparity that exists there. We will increase unemployment in that area and there will be a further migration of our people because there will not be the possibilities to entice them to remain there. Therefore I say to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, please urge upon your colleagues to put into effect at least a short term program to help both Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island out of the terrible dilemma they are in with regard to escalating energy costs.

Let me give an example of how serious this is from a personal point of view, and I am much better able to pay my power bills than most people in my constituency. Prior to a few months ago my power bill was $24 for two months, in effect $12 a month. I have the same basic facilities now. I do not have an electric stove. I heat with oil, not with electricity. My water is oil heated. My power bill went from $24 to $83.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Did you talk to the provincial government?

Mr. Coates: The hon. member says I should talk to the provincial government. I agree with him from the point of view that it was the provincial government that created the problem. However, the federal government has so much money invested in Nova Scotia through the infrastructure of DREE to try to overcome regional economic disparity that we cannot sacrifice what we have done, as well as the hundreds of millions of dollars of investment, because of the stupidity and incompetency of the Regan administration.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is the same in every province.

Mr. Coates: I hope it is not the same in every province. I suggest to the hon. member that everyone in this country does not have the same kind of power bill as the people in Nova Scotia. That is the sad fact. I therefore plead with the government to put forward some kind of interim plan to help the people of Nova Scotia get over the hump. The government should have some forward planning to open some coal mines, get on with the Fundy tidal power project, and get oil from wherever it can be found, but get away from the dependence on expensive offshore oil.

Even if we have to pay the equivalent for coal mined in Nova Scotia as we pay for offshore oil, it will accomplish two things. Nova Scotians will be put to work in the coal mines and pay cheques will be provided for them. Second, the money that we get for the coal that goes to the thermal power plants will stay in this country. Therefore, we must come up with some plan to try to overcome this tremendous economic burden that has quickly fallen on the shoulders of the people of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. We must try to keep the industries there viable. We must keep the people working in those industries and, hopefully, take some of the burden off the people of Nova Scotia who now are paying horrendous power rates. Many of the ordinary working people just cannot pay those rates as well as their mortgage payments. They will lose their homes.

This is a sad commentary on the shortsighted planning of the Regan administration in Nova Scotia that has now run crying to the federal government. At the same time, if we are going to protect our investment, we are forced to come up with some kind of interim plan that not only helps the people of Nova Scotia by eliminating regional economic disparity to a degree, but protects the investment the taxpayers of this country have made through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to overcome some of the unemployment that we face, and will continue to face in the days ahead.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to take only a few minutes of the time of the House to associate myself with the speeches which have been made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker) with regard to the need for immediate action in providing an effective search and rescue service on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. I support completely the statements made by these two members with respect to conditions as they exist for fishermen on the Atlantic coast. I rise solely for the purpose of pointing out to the House that a similar situation exists on the Pacific coast and that the conditions there are equally deplorable and equally demand prompt and efficient action by the government.

On the Pacific coast last year, in a two week period during the herring fishing season, we lost 14 men and ten ships. Already this year, in the first two weeks of the season, we lost four men and six ships. When I raised the matter in the question period in the House some weeks ago, to our consternation the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) admitted that, while we have an aerial search capacity, we do not have an aerial rescue capacity after dark, and that for service during the night hours we are dependent upon the assistance of our good friends and neighbours in the United States.

During the storm which took the lives of those four men and was responsible for the sinking of those six ships, the United States Air Force was, of course, pre-occupied with events on its own coastline and we were unable to get the kind of service which might have saved the lives of the fishermen.

It becomes increasingly apparent that there are two great difficulties as far as the search and rescue arrangements on the Pacific Coast are concerned. The first is the lack of co-ordination. The Department of National Defence is involved, the Department of Transport is involved, the Department of Fisheries is involved and, in the case of night rescue operations, the U.S. Air Force is involved. It is no wonder the fishermen find the service unsatisfactory with a divided jurisdiction like that. They have complained to the government year after year, but no satisfactory action has followed.

Like the hon. member for St. John's East I was interested in the eight-page press release issued by the Department of Transport. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) seems to put the major blame for this loss of lives and ships upon the fishermen, not upon his department, not upon the government's inefficiency and incompetence, not on the fact that the operation is characterized by divided jurisdiction. I will read what the report says under the heading "Herring Roe Season":

> Fishermen, in some cases, are not taking every precaution for their own safety. It is becoming evident, particularly during the herring roe season on the West Coast, that because of the cost involved fishermen are not willing to spend money to equip their boats with such safety equipment as emergency transmitter locators, flares and life jackets.
> In 1975, 14 men died and 10 boats were lost in one two-week period. This year already, six boats have sunk and four men have lost their lives. However, there is nothing to prevent a novice crew from setting out under an incompetent captain on one of the many small, fragile gillnetters and running into trouble somewhere in the vast area served by the Victoria Rescue Co-ordinating Centre.

So the department is blaming the fishermen because they do not have proper equipment, because they have not taken precautions such as putting in bulkheads to prevent the fish moving and capsizing the boats. I would point out that the Department of Transport and the Department of Fisheries have been asked repeatedly by the unionized fishermen on the West Coast to make such provisions mandatory.

The fishermen have been asking the department for years to declare fish to be cargo under the fishing regulations; they have been asking the government to require that these fishermen shall instal on their boats necessary equipment such as transmitter locators, flares and life jackets. They have been asking that it be made mandatory for bulkheads to be put in and for the stern to be protected. Yet none of these requests have been complied with as yet.

Now, the minister, in the press release he issued, tells the country and the House that an inquiry has been undertaken. These are his words:

> In July of last year, the report of the West Coast fishing vessel casualties inquiry was tabled in the House of Commons. It was initiated because of the unprecedented loss of life. The report made eight major recommendations on crew certification and training, weather forecasting, vessel regulations and inspection, fishing research, naval architecture and safety information to improve springtime operations.

I have this report in my hand. It is the West Coast Fishing Vessels Casualty Inquiry, March, 1975. It is a good report. But there is not a recommendation in it which has not been made to the government again and again over the years. The report of Mr. Justice Soper, to which the hon. member for St. John's East has referred, and the petitions and representations which have been made by the fishermen's union on the West Coast, have dealt again and again with these matters. Now the minister says he has received a report. And what does he propose to do with it? He says:

> A joint Transport Canada-Fisheries working group has been studying the recommendations and how they should be implemented. The work of this group will result in meetings between senior Transport-Fisheries officials and all concerned parties, including the B.C. government, to discuss further the implementation of the recommendations. It has become evident that in spite of the provision of additional resources, facilities and co-ordination capabilities over the years, the marine SAR organisation is no longer entirely adequate.
> A Canadian coastguard task force has reviewed the national search and rescue policy and the revised policy is expected to be ready for submission to cabinet by mid-1976.

They got the Soper Report in 1971. Briefs have repeatedly been presented to them by the fishermen's union. They have the report of the West Coast Fishing Vessels Casualty Inquiry in hand. And now the government says it hopes some recommendations will be ready for cabinet by midsummer of 1976. Then, of course, the House is perfectly aware that a decision made in Cabinet will not in itself do the fishermen any good because of the length of time it takes, after the time the cabinet has decided to do something, before the word trickles down through the bureaucracy and is translated into action. That interval, Mr. Speaker, is liable to be a lengthy one.

On Tuesday, April 8, I moved a motion in the House under Standing Order 43. It asked:

> That the House urges the Prime Minister to order a restructuring of the search and rescue organization under a single agency responsible to one minister, and that immediate steps be taken to procure adequate facilities and equipment for air and marine search and rescue operations on a 24-hour basis.

Because it was put forward under Standing Order 43, requiring unanimous consent, the motion could not be dealt with—some Liberal members said no. I do not wish to delay the House but I do want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the members of the government, that this is not a partisan matter; this is not some economic debate. It is a matter which affects the lives of the men who make a living by going out onto the ocean to catch fish. It is a matter which concerns the welfare of human beings, and the delay which the government has shown in coming to grips with this problem is deplorable.

On almost every subject, but on this one in particular, members on the treasury benches opposite have shown themselves to be masters of procrastination. Their slogan seems to be: never do today what you can put off until tomorrow. The fishermen on the West Coast, like the fishermen on the East Coast, are sick and tired of this dilly-dallying. The government ought to take notice that members on both sides have stood up to register their righteous indignation and their protest.

We expect some action soon. By the time we come back after the recess we ought to hear from the Minister of Transport, if he is capable of coming down to earth, some information about what he and his colleagues propose to do to stop this deplorable loss of life due to the government's incompetence and to its failure to organize the search and rescue capability of our country under a single agency, and under one minister, so as to bring an end to this divided jurisdiction which has produced an intolerable situation.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 6(5)(a) I move:

That the sitting of the House be continued beyond the ordinary hour of daily sitting until this motion is adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has moved a motion under Standing Order 6(5)(a) which reads as follows:

When Mr. Speaker is in the Chair, a Member may propose a motion without notice, to continue a sitting through a lunch or dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof subject to the following conditions:

(i) The motion must relate to the business then being considered—

—which is met.

(ii) The motion must be proposed in the hour preceding the time at which the business under consideration should be interrupted——which is met also.

(iii) The motion shall not be subject to debate or amendment.

(b) When Mr. Speaker puts the question—

This has to be very clear to hon. members.

—on such motion, he shall ask those members who object to rise in their places. If ten or more members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted.

It is therefore my duty at this time to put the motion. It has been moved by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley):

That the sitting of the House be continued beyond the ordinary hour of daily sitting until this motion is adopted.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is no debate. Are any members opposing the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is carried.

Motion (Mr. Elzinga) agreed to.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that I said yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I did explain the Standing Order. If hon. members had intended to oppose the motion, we would have called it six o'clock in five minutes' time. We will now sit until the motion is adopted.

Mr. Elzinga: Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate in this adjournment debate to review some of the actions of the Liberal administration. My main concern is the implementation of its anti-inflation program. For programs such as this to work, I believe it is essential that the public—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interfere with my hon. friend's right to speak. In fact I would join in unanimous consent that he be permitted to do so. But did he not exhaust his right to speak in this debate when he rose to present the motion? Can he do both things, make a motion and then speak?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Surely, Mr. Speaker, he rose immediately without any debate whatever and put the motion. He sat down, the motion was put and was adopted under the rules of the House. He then rose to make his speech having been recognized by the Chair. I submit that is an end to the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must say that the Standing Order is not really clear on this point. I think by consent the hon. member should be allowed to speak. Though his proposal might have been misunderstood, if it meets the wish of the hon. member I hope he can speak by consent. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Basford: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I agree with what Your Honour has just said. I hope the hon. member will be recognized and will make a speech, and that other members who wish to make a speech will also do so. If the motion had not been agreed to we would have adjourned at six o'clock and sat tomorrow. As House leader I would only entreat members to make their points undoubtedly, but to endeavour to make them briefly.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether there is any broad agreement during this extended period, which I have no objection to, for the House to adopt a procedure whereby we will waive the quorum requirements during that period.

Mr. Elzinga: Before I get to the crux of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to explain why I put this motion. So often in this House individuals like myself who are on the backbenches do not have a proper opportunity to express the views and complaints of their constituents. We saw a prime example of this when the Liberal administration brought in closure on the second reading debate of the gun control legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: If the hon. whip on the other side wishes to speak, he now has an opportunity. As I was saying, for the government's anti-inflation program to work it must have the faith of the public. This government, our Liberal administration, has lost the faith of the public because it speaks so often out of both sides of its mouth.

During the election of 1974 hon. members opposite said that our control program would not work. Now they themselves have introduced a program of selective controls for a period of three and a quarter years. This is a program with almost dictatorial powers that could lead to a state or government controlled economy. We advocated during the 1974 election campaign a 90 day freeze on everything, with a period of 18 months of flexible controls to follow.

What we wanted to do was to break the inflationary psychology that is prevalent in Canada, but we were also aware that controls were only a temporary stopgap program. However, the main plank in our program of controls was government restraint and the controlling of our money supply. This is not in the Liberal government's program.

The majority of economists today agree that the government itself bears the major responsibility for inflation because it has not controlled these two areas. What has the Liberal administration done in these two areas? It has asked the public to abide by an increase of 8 per cent while government expenditures rise to something in the vicinity of 18 per cent. I would ask our colleagues opposite, where is the fairness in that? Is it any wonder that the government has lost the faith of the Canadian public?

As I have said, in 1974 the Liberals campaigned against a controls policy. Then a year later they implement a program of controls which is full of injustices. I might also note that exactly the same thing happened in the 1972 election.

In 1972 the Conservative party proposed the indexing of personal income taxes and a modest increase for pensioners. We were criticized strongly by our opponents, but when they were elected as a minority government they accepted the guidelines upon which we campaigned. Now hon. members opposite wish to take credit for that. The other day in the House a Liberal backbencher was speaking and attempted to take credit for the conception and implementation of indexing of personal income tax, a positive platform of this party during the 1972 election campaign. We introduced that idea, and I commend the government for instituting programs we have introduced, but I think it could be a little more honest in presenting them to the people.

It is my feeling that the government cannot be trusted by the Canadian people, as illustrated by the examples I have given. In the last two elections the government has campaigned on one thing, and shortly after the election has reversed its position entirely.

There are other prime examples that leave a good many questions in the public's mind. All we have to do is look at the judges' affair, and there are many questions to be answered in that area, the SIU implications, the Hamilton Harbour scandal, the Sky Shops affair, the Mirabel airport inquiries, the Olympic Village and the travel agency irregularities. For any government to function properly it must have the faith of the public, but this Liberal administration does not have that faith, and understandably so.

Despite what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other members of his government have said in the past about the danger of believing in "doom and gloom" forecasts, our economy remains in poor shape, and we believe it is due to the contradictory economic policies of the present administration—

An. hon. Member: Why don't you read?

Mr. Elzinga: I will do that, and what you should do is learn how to read. We believe this is due to the contradictory economic policies of the present administration which has failed to enhance the growth and stability of Canadian employment and industrial production. This has not encouraged investment in industry and has permitted a serious decline in our competitive position in international markets.

This Liberal administration, as a means of fighting inflation, has imposed upon all Canadians a program of prices and incomes controls, the major component of which is restraint. In implementing the program and demanding restraint of everyone else, the government itself is failing to observe its own rules. The federal government this year will increase its spending in the order of 18 per cent, according to a comparison of the 1975-76 and 1976-77 main estimates. The federal government from January, 1975, to January, 1976, increased the money supply by some 16.5 per cent. By January, 1977, according to the finance minister's own estimate, our money supply will have grown another 13 per cent, yet everyone else in the country, according to the regulations set down by the government's anti-inflation program, is being held to wage and price increases of not more than 8 per cent.

This is counterproductive and contradictory in two ways. First, the government's fiscal and monetary policies are working against the goals it is attempting to achieve with its anti-inflation program; and, secondly, the government's lack of restraint in fiscal and monetary policy sets a poor example for the ordinary worker and the businessman. Such lack of restraint on the part of the government only creates cynicism about the program and works against the program's intended success.

There are many more examples of our current poor economic performance. We must find solutions, but again the federal government's answers are non-answers. As was expressed by our party's finance critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), in debate on March 24:

> With no real growth in the economy, a per capita income now eighth in the world compared with second six years ago, and with the highest combined inflation and unemployment levels since Confederation, those in power would like to talk of other things. The new approach is: if you cannot reach your goals, then change your goals.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe suggested there is too much government control of the economy. He went on to state:

We have the potential to be the wealthiest people on earth if we allow our resources to be harnessed through individual initiative.

He also said that:

—left to government, our oil fields, our gas reserves and our potash industry would never have been developed to their present levels. Yet governments, in the name of progress, now stifle further advances through heavy taxation and regulation.

He told the House of Commons:

The nation has now reached a crossroads where we must decide between a more competitive more open society or accept, perhaps irrevocably, a society in which the large decisions about our economic and personal welfare are made by a central government.

This same government would like to run all our lives, but it should be remembered just how it runs its own departments such as the Post Office. The hon. member for York-Simcoe went on to state:

The past demonstrates that a system of free enterprise, despite its many flaws, is the most compatible with the protection of rights and liberties as well as the most productive of material goods.

There are two other areas I wish to deal with, and one is in respect of Bill C-83. I should like to express my deep concern and disappointment with the Liberal administration that has seen fit to muzzle members on all sides of this House on the second reading debate of Bill C-83. All this does is exemplify the attitude of the government. It does not care about what the people want. It is going to do exactly what it wants, and it does not give the members of this House the opportunity to express the wishes and the desires of the constituents they are sent here to serve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Elzinga: In closing I should like to give a prime example of what is happening in my own constituency of Pembina. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) said to me several months back that in the event our constituents and the people in the municipal district of Sturgeon did not wish to have a federal penitentiary located in the area, the government would not go ahead with it. What do we see happening now? The Solicitor General is pushing this down the throats of the individuals in this area, in spite of the fact there is a petition on his desk with the signatures of 248 people requesting that the government not build this penitentiary on this piece of prime agricultural land.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Elzinga: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is this not being less than honest with the Canadian people regarding this issue?

In concluding, I should like to leave you on a lighter note, Mr. Speaker. I wish you, the members of the House, and the staff, all a restful and happy Easter.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the desire of many members to leave the Chamber and I will not impose upon you for very long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: That may be the only response I get.

It probably is appropriate that one of the last speakers this afternoon intends to talk about the environment, because the environment is the last thing on the priority list not only of the government, not only in terms of the opposition, but in terms of the public itself.

An hon. Member: What about the NDP?

Mr. Leggatt: Yes, and the NDP. I am not trying to be partisan. What I am trying to do is bring the question back to the attention of the public.

As soon as the gross national product in this country drops a little bit, interest in the environment drops as well. We are all guilty in this regard. The environment was something we talked about several years ago and something the government talked about in the Speech from the Throne in 1974. This is what the government said in that famous speech about its intentions:

—stemming the despoilation of our planet and returning our water, air and land to a more natural state.

That is a very acceptable objective, but nothing has been done about it. Not only is the government not attempting to redress this process of the environment, it is participating in the escalation of the destruction of this country's environment at a rate that is disgraceful.

Let us have a look at what the government has been doing. The last thing it did was to replace the minister we had before. She was not particularly successful at her job but she could have learned, with a little time and patience. She made some very attractive speeches. Her rhetoric was very good, as were her intentions. What did the government do? It moved her out as soon as it looked like she might really start to do something in respect of the environment.

The government replaced that minister with the most moveable minister in the whole Liberal cabinet. He began his career without a portfolio. Then he went to DREE. We remember when that minister was looking after DREE. I would say that we in the New Democratic Party were thankful that he was responsible for DREE in 1972, because he was probably as responsible as any other minister for the election of many members of our party due to the way he managed that portfolio. Then he went to the Department of Transport. We remember that. After he looked around that department he said it was in a mess and that he could not do anything about it. Then the government tried to find another slot for him. I forgot for a moment that he was once in the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Finally he went to the Department of the Environment. That minister has a reverse Midas touch. Everything he touches becomes crap.

I should like to say something about the important decision the government will make tomorrow in respect of the Beaufort Sea. My prediction is that this drilling permit will be issued. The reason is that the same mistake has been made that was made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) in respect of the Lockheed Orion. Two years ago an agreement was entered into in principle with Dome Petroleum Company involving an investment of $100 million. The government locked itself into that project. Then the government received the environment studies which predict the probable disaster and high risk in terms of the use of the Beaufort Sea area. Now it is faced with either a $100 million lawsuit, or risk to the environment. I predict the government will let the environment take the risk again despite the protest by the United States. There again the government has locked itself into a position out of sheer negligence.

Then there is the Syncrude project in which there is a conflict of interest. The environmental studies refer to 40 tons, and the emission permit is for 287 long tons. In this country we rely for our standard of living on the industrialization of the belt immediately north of us. When our standard of living results in the death of Indians from mercury poisoning the government should take another look at the environment in terms of things we should be examining in this House. Last but not least in respect of the environment is the insatiable desire we have for money. We export nuclear death around the world. The government is contributing to the greatest possible disaster the world has yet seen.

An hon. Member: Hogwash.

Mr. Leggatt: It is not hogwash. We were once known around the world as a country on which one could count to go abroad and cool the fires of international tension. Now we are flooding the world with CANDU reactors. It is interesting that the United States, in terms of their sales of the Westinghouse reactor, say there is no point in bothering with unstable countries because Canada has them all locked up.

The United States takes the position that there is no point in considering sales to North Korea or Argentina because the Canadians are selling their reactors to these countries at an indecent rate. Then there is the question of our reliance on domestic nuclear sales. There is required in this country a very open inquiry so that the public will have an important input. We may be creating a nuclear industry which will be completely unnecessary if we look to alternate sources of power. If we continue to do what we are doing we will rue the day.

I must say that for the first time I am ashamed of Canada's position in the world in terms of the export of nuclear reactors. I might say that the government is a very poor inheritor of the mantle of Lester B. Pearson who went down in history as a peace maker. This country may go down in history as a war maker and a contributor to international disaster.

Easter Adjournment

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I find myself in the position of being acting House Leader because Cupid has stolen my colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). Because of pressing events I did not reply to all the matters raised in the previous debate. We are adjourning for purposes of the season and the Resurrection, and I am sure the President of the Privy Council will return on April 26 resurrected and ready to answer all the questions that have been raised. May I move, Mr. Speaker, that this House do now adjourn?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is hardly necessary because we have sat beyond the ordinary time of sitting. There is no need for such a motion.

Perhaps I might take this opportunity in the name of Mr. Speaker, who is unavoidably absent from this House, to invite on his behalf members and the staff of the press gallery to room 16. When the House rises it will await the Easter opportunity to rise again, when there may be another opportunity to have a good understanding of Standing Order 6(5)(a) in anticipation of a good and restful adjournment.

I am happy, on behalf of the Speaker and at his express request, to invite all hon. members as well as staff members, and members of the press, to come and fraternize in Room 16, and perhaps discuss all the topics mentioned in the last few minutes, in the spirit of Easter and the Resurrection.

It being past six o'clock, pursuant to Special Order made earlier this day, this House stands adjourned until Monday, April 26, 1976, at 2 o'clock p.m.

At 6.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FARRIS REPORT AND ESTABLISHMENT OF INDEPENDENT INQUIRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43, on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since we have now witnessed the sixth hostage drama at British Columbia Penitentiary in just over 14 months and again the establishment of a meaningless in-house inquiry into the incident, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House instruct the Solicitor General to immediately table the report of the Farris Inquiry and to establish an independent investigation into what is obviously an explosive situation at the B.C. Penitentiary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO THE COSTS OF DAYCARE CENTRES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Last December, I questioned the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) on the government's intentions with respect to the recommendation of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women dealing with daycare. Since that recommendation has still not been implemented, and since the lack of adequate daycare facilities continues to be a serious concern all across Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House instructs the government to implement within 12 months the recommendation that the federal government contribute on a cost-sharing basis with the provinces in the capital costs for the establishment of daycare facilities and not simply contribute to maintenance costs once they are established.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO TENDERING PROCEDURES FOR LEASES, CONCESSIONS AND CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the numerous questions about public propriety that affect trust in government and reflect, indeed, on all of us in public life, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That the Prime Minister take all necessary steps to arrange to appoint a judicial inquiry into tendering procedures at Dorval and Mirabel airports, with reference to contracts involving leases, concessions and construction projects, excluding therefrom, however, those matters involving Sky Shops during such time as they remain sub judice of our criminal courts.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF PENSION RIGHTS FOR HOMEMAKER SPOUSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in asking the House to agree to this motion under Standing Order 43, I make the point that it does not call for action overnight. However, it does stress the urgency of a commitment being made now with regard to an important matter. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the government to bring in legislation that will establish pension rights for homemaker spouses equivalent to the rights of those employed outside the home, and that the government commit itself to the taking of this action during the life of the present parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House before the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ELIMINATION OF SEX DISCRIMINATION IN PAY PRACTICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On December 17, 1975 and again on February 5, 1976, the leader of the New Democratic Party raised in this House the question of the widening gap between women's and men's incomes and urged that the provision in the anti-inflation program for an exemption from the general guidelines to ensure the achievement of equality of the sexes with regard to income be made mandatory instead of optional.

Since the government has failed to take such action and since women in the Canadian labour force continue to be discriminated against in terms of their incomes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instruct the government to take steps to implement on a mandatory basis the permissive clause in the anti-inflation program relating to the elimination of sex discrimination in pay practices.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF ACTIONS OF KHMER ROUGE IN CAMBODIA TO UNITED NATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

For some months now in the New York Times, as well as New York Review of Books, and recently in Time magazine, April 19, 1976 edition, it has been estimated that since the Communist victory in Cambodia last year, one half million Cambodians, or one tenth of the population, have died from political reprisals, disease or starvation under the Khmer Rouge.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That Canada's External Affairs Department bring this matter before the United Nations for open discussion.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

MIRABEL—TENDERING PROCEDURES FOR FOOD AND BEVERAGE CONCESSIONS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister assure the House there were no unusual circumstances and excessive lobbying involved in the tendering process, the evaluation of bids and the eventual awarding to Les Entreprises Cara (Quebec) Limitée of a lease to operate the food and beverage concession at Mirabel Airport? In other words, can he assure us that standard procedures according to established government policy were followed throughout?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is nothing at all to indicate that anything but the standard procedure was followed. If the hon. member has any information to the contrary I would be delighted to receive it.

Mr. MacKay: That being the case, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if he is aware of the circumstances surrounding a telephone conversation made a couple of hours prior to the time scheduled for the opening of tenders for this concession wherein Mr. Boyd Matchett, the president of Cara, called Mr. Gerry Stoner, the then Deputy Minister of Transport, to inform him about departures from normal tender-opening procedures which Mr. Matchett discovered upon his early arrival for the opening of bids and which Mr. Stoner had to over-rule very precipitously?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such call.

Mr. MacKay: Would the minister, after he has looked into these things and acquainted himself with the circumstances, explain to the House how it was that because of alleged great pressure which was then exerted on the then minister of transport, Mr. Stoner, the Deputy Minister, suggested to Mr. Matchett some time after the tenders were opened that he should explore a merger with Kebec Restaurants Limited and how it was that when Mr. Matchett did this, Mr. Bellehumeur of Kebec Restaurants suggested that Cara withdraw its higher tender and that these companies work together on the basis of the lower bid submitted by Kebec Restaurants, a proposal which Mr. Matchett very properly refused to consider?

Mr. Lang: The hon. member knows full well that I do investigate any matters which are brought to my attention and I would have appreciated it had he brought these matters to my notice.

POSITION OF MR. MARCHAND IN RECOMMENDING CONTRACTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment.

As weekend newspapers reported that the Minister of the Environment had admitted making, at the time when he was the Prime Minister's Quebec lieutenant, thousands of recommendations with regard to the adjudication of contracts, can he tell the House whether, among those countless recommendations he made, he might not have made specific ones with regard to "Les Entreprises Cara Québec Ltée" and "Québec Restaurant A.F.C. Ltée"?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in all cases, I followed standard procedures observed by the department concerned. In the case of public tenders, I did not intervene. In cases where there are no tenders, I received recommendations, I made some in turn, and I even received some from my hon. friend from Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Since the minister confirms that he made recommendations for public information would he be willing to table a list of his recommendations and say what were the results?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary to draw up the list and mention the recommendations made by the members of all parties in this House. I must say that I got some from every party. Moreover, I find this perfectly right. When the member for Joliette asked me if it would be possible to obtain grants for his constituency, I found his representations fair and I do not blame him for doing so.

Mr. La Salle: One last supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When I said recommendations I hope the minister understood that I was referring to companies and contracts.

I would like to put a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Considering that the Minister of the Environment was at one time the lieutenant of the present Prime Minister and that he had to make hundreds of recommendations concerning the granting of contracts, are we to understand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), in his quality of Quebec lieutenant, is now responsible for these recommendations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when there are several members of parliament or several ministers in one province, it has happened and it still often happens that I ask some ministers to come together with a recommendation. This is so in the province of Quebec, this is so in the other provinces, and it was so when the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister.

LETTER FROM CARMEL CARRIÈRE CONCERNING SKY SHOPS LEASE—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has asked the Minister of the Environment if he had knowledge of a letter written in October, 1971 by his then executive assistant, Carmel Carrière, to the then executive assistant to the Minister of Transport concerning the removal of competitive bidding for the Sky Shops lease and, if so, would the Prime Minister tell the House what the minister's answer was and was he, the Prime Minister, satisfied with it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot recall that any such letter had to do with the removal of competitive bidding, but it has been alleged publicly that such a letter was written by Miss Carmel Carrière. I knew of it and I discussed it with the minister, but I do not believe that the subject of removal of competitive bidding was in the letter I am speaking of.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The last part of my question was not answered by the Prime Minister and I should like him to do so now, if he would. Was he satisfied in every way with the answer he received from the minister concerning that letter? Secondly, would he tell the House whether he has asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the then Minister of Transport, if he was aware of the letter that had been sent by Carmel Carrière, did he discuss that matter with this minister as well, and was he satisfied with the answer that he received from that minister?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes in both cases and on both subjects. The present Minister of the Environment made it quite clear, and I stated in the House, that he became aware of that letter after it had been discussed publicly, but he did not know of the existence of that letter at the time.

POSSIBILITY TREASURY BOARD CONSULTED ON RENEWAL OF SKY SHOPS LEASE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister advise the House whether or not Treasury Board was advised or consulted regarding the decision to renew the Sky Shops lease; and if advised, did Treasury Board itself make a recommendation in this matter?

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the extent to which the Treasury Board was or was not involved. I had in mind an answer given by the present Minister of Transport some weeks ago when he explained the Sky Shops affair and the lease which had originally been granted by the Conservative government back in 1962 and renewed in the normal way. I have asked for further details on this, and whether or not it had gone to the Treasury Board. I have not had that answer. I expect it later today. I did have in mind the rather complete answer given by the Minister of Transport some weeks ago. I cannot remember whether he did mention Treasury Board involvement.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON GUARANTEES REQUESTED BY MR. BOURASSA PRIOR TO PATRIATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister.

During the weekend a Liberal party convention took place in Quebec City where Premier Bourassa dealt with three specific points, namely the patriation of the constitution, the Olympic Games and the common front in the province of Quebec.

As far as the constitution is concerned, Mr. Bourassa stated that he represented one fortieth of the total population in America and that he required guarantees by the Prime Minister of Canada before he agrees with the idea of partriating the constitution. Is the right hon. Prime Minister in a position to tell the House whether the guarantees required by Mr. Bourassa have been given to him?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the idea of such guarantees was accepted not only by myself but also by the nine other provincial premiers at the meeting of first ministers in the month of April last when we got together to discuss this among other things. This was explained quite clearly in a letter tabled in the House before the Easter recess.

In brief, everyone is prepared to give guarantees so the French fact, so the French language may continue to exist on an equal basis in this country. That is the policy of the federal government, and of all parties in the House. There is no question about that. It is on the wording itself of a guarantee that there has been no agreement thus far. The hon. member no doubt learned from the papers tabled in the House that the federal government made an effort together with the province of Quebec to draft such a guarantee. Now, if the premier of the province of Quebec wants other formulas, or other clauses, I think it would be up to him to come up with proposals, otherwise he is asking in theory for something that was already given in theory.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

OLYMPIC GAMES

FEDERAL AID IN FINANCING

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

About the constitution, as far as I was able to see last night, the premier of Quebec has not yet understood, but nevertheless he suggested that yesterday the President of the Treasury Board was meeting provincial Finance Minister Garneau about the Olympics and that an agreement was about to be passed whereby Ottawa would come to the help of the Montreal Olympic Organizing Committee which forecasts a very great deficit. Did the government suggest or propose to the federal government any assistance to fill that deficit that will occur in Montreal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government on that has not changed for the last two years, and has still not changed in the past month. We supported the systems of self-financing from the start. I said on several occasions in the past two years that we would look at any reasonable system of self-financing. I said in answer to the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont recently that that was still the position of the federal government.

I strongly refused and still refuse that money be taken out of the federal treasury to cover a deficit incurred by the Olympic Games Organization Committee, the city of Montreal or the province of Quebec, as regards the Olympic Games. This position remains unchanged. I think that the province of Quebec now understands such view and, if I am well informed, it is considering self-financing propositions, and that will be the end of those stories to the effect that the federal treasury will help make up the deficit incurred.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBILITY MR. BOURASSA REQUESTED ASSISTANCE OF ARMED FORCES IN VIEW OF COMMON FRONT DEMONSTRATION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a final supplementary question.

A moment ago, I pointed out three facts. However, there are rumours about the rather delicate situation existing in the province of Quebec between the common front and the government, that is to say against the Quebec government's authority. Is it true that Mr. Bourassa asked for federal government assistance in case the army is required if ever the situation worsens between the common front and the Quebec government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, such a request was certainly not submitted, at least not to my office because I would be aware of it.

[English]

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO TENDERING PROCEDURE OF DEPARTMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In light of the information raised today by the hon. member for Central Nova and the indication by the Minister of the Environment in Macleans Magazine that his duties as Quebec leader involved the making of thousands of recommendations for contracts and so forth, is the Prime Minister now prepared to establish a judicial inquiry into the tendering procedures of the Ministry of Transport, specifically excluding those aspects of the so-called Sky Shops affair now before the courts, but including the role of ministers' offices within the general tendering procedure.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister made it quite clear that when there is a tendering procedure he does not intervene to make any recommendation. That was quite clear from the answer he gave a moment ago. When there is no tendering procedure and there has to be a choice made between a group of architects, lawyers or engineers, the minister follows the same procedure which has been followed by the previous government, and by governments before that, of rather than letting the civil service make the choice the ministers themselves make the choice and recommend one officer or one series of operators.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Prime Minister's answer is that he will not now call a judicial inquiry into this question concerning the participation by ministers or ministers' offices in the tendering procedures of the Ministry of Transport or generally. To be clear on this, is the Prime Minister telling the House that after the inquiry he has made privately, he is satisfied there is no irregularity in the tendering procedure of the Ministry of Transport, and particularly that there has been no involvement by representatives of offices of the ministers of the Crown in the tendering procedure? I make the point, offices as well as ministers themselves. Is he satisfied as to that effect and is that the reason he declines to establish a judicial inquiry?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the answer is that, generally, I am satisfied that is the situation. If there are particular cases which come to light in the case of the government or the opposition, they of course should be pointed out to the police who in this particular case have made an investigation. There is obviously a possibility of human fallacy. When such a thing is discovered in every case to my knowledge it is handled by the RCMP and investigation follows. I think this is the proper procedure.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, so that I might be clear, the Prime Minister has ruled out the possibility of a judicial inquiry into the tendering practices or procedures in the Ministry of Transport or the involvement of ministers or offices of the ministers. Is that the case?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have ruled it out on the basis that so far as we know or so far as the opposition seems to know there has been no system of irregularities. There has been one case which has been doubtful, which is being investigated and indeed is before the courts. Of course, if it came to light that there was a system or a pattern of irregularities, I think the answer might be completely different.

Mr. Horner: Are you prepared to look for the facts?

Mr. Trudeau: If the opposition has knowledge of such a thing existing under my government or under any previous government we would gladly look into it.

POSSIBILITY OF FORCE BECOMING INVOLVED IN JURISDICTIONAL DISPUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. In light of the absence of the Solicitor General and the Attorney General, the Minister of Justice. Would the Prime Minister tell the House and the country what steps his government has taken or will be taking to ensure that the RCMP, for which the Solicitor General is responsible to Parliament, does not become embroiled or involved in jurisdictional conflict which could reflect upon its credibility or apparent effectiveness as a national force. He often refers to them and says that the police are looking into this or that. If they are going to be an effective force, they should be above that kind of dispute.

● (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree that they should be above that kind of dispute. It appears that in the course of the past week there has been a dispute which did arise between the authorities in the province of Quebec and the RCMP. I have asked the Solicitor General to look into it and to report to me. It is not a dispute with the government but, I repeat, a dispute about the RCMP having laid charges in one province rather than in another. It is of course within their right to do so and I am naturally interested, as is the hon. member, in finding out the process through which this dispute arose.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact that, as the Prime Minister said, there does seem to be some dispute as to the jurisdiction of the police force, has the government given thought, in light of the recent developments in the Sky Shop matter, to the appropriateness of proceeding under the Senate and House of Commons Act rather than under the Criminal Code, as a result of which there could be no conflict?

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure the suggestion will be conveyed to the RCMP, but I must confess that I do not see the relevance of it in this particular proposal. Charges have been laid under the Criminal Code in the way the RCMP decided, and I do not see that the hon. member really complains about their decision. If he does, I will convey his feelings to them.

Oral Questions

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF PRE-ENQUÊTE PROVISION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Will the right hon. Prime Minister consider an amendment to the Criminal Code to repeal what seems to many of us to be an unjust provision, that of pre-enquête or pre-inquiry which is obviously an outmoded method of dealing with this. Will the government abolish this system?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the suggestion and will discuss it with the Minister of Justice. I think this tradition or this practice has existed for a long while and is still practised in various provinces in exceptional circumstances. I cannot see at first blush why it should be discontinued in special circumstances, but I would be glad to hear the arguments of the hon. member.

ACTION OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT IN SUGGESTING JOINT VENTURE ON TENDER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Arising out of the information disclosed by the hon. member for Central Nova, does the Prime Minister accept it as a principle in the guidelines that govern the conduct of deputy ministers that such a deputy minister should suggest to a bidder that he enter into a joint venture with a competitor in order to secure a concession or a lease upon which both have bid, and that this shall be done according to terms that are more favourable to one of the bidders?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. member is referring to a case of which I know nothing and of which apparently the Minister of Transport knows nothing either. If the facts are as stated by the hon. member, there may have been good reasons to do it. We will find out and report to the House.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES ON DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On March 19 it was reported that the United States delivered a note of concern to the Canadian authorities over the drilling program proposed at that time for the Beaufort Sea. Can the minister advise the House whether that note of concern has now been withdrawn, and can he also advise the House whether the U.S. authorities are now in agreement with the decision to drill in the Beaufort Sea?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer affirmatively to either of these questions. I know that there have been consultations with the government of the United States and they expressed concern about the environmental effects of such drilling. I believe that a series of technical meetings have been held at which time it was suggested to us that their views be taken into account. Indeed, they were in the decision of the cabinet, but I have not received any additional comment from the government of the U.S. since that decision was announced.

POSSIBLE ABANDONMENT OF REASON FOR ADVOCATING 200 MILE ZONE IN VIEW OF DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): In view of the position that Canada has taken at the Law of the Sea Conference which was to justify the 200 mile economic zone on the ground that we would require that zone to protect the coastal state ecology, and in view of the risk that the government is now undertaking in the Beaufort sea, have our delegates to the United Nations now been instructed to abandon that as a ground for supporting our 200 mile zone in view of the risk that this country now seems to be willing to take in the 200 mile zone?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It was never the view of the Canadian government either at the Law of the Sea conference or elsewhere that economic activities should be prohibited in any such zone and in particular in the Arctic. What we did say, and what we continue to say, is that the highest possible environmental protection should be put in place when such events do take place, and that is certainly the effort that was made by cabinet in making its decision.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question. Would the minister advise the House whether it was his recommendation to proceed with the drilling in the Beaufort sea and, secondly, in view of his answer that the highest technology should be available to justify our position, is it his position now that the highest technology is available to clean up a blow-out in that sea?

Mr. MacEachen: I regret that I cannot oblige the hon. member and tell him what transpired in the cabinet, and therefore his supplementary questions are not applicable.

TRANSPORT

DEPARTMENTAL RULES ON OPENING OF TENDERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. I assume from the answer which the minister gave to the questions posed by the hon. member for Central Nova that an investigation will be carried out into the matters which have been advanced by the hon. member. While the minister is checking into the circumstances of this tendering procedure and subsequent events, would he also report on the rules relating to the opening of tender bids publicly as opposed to private bids as well as find out who authorized that course of action which Mr. Stoner found it necessary to over-rule, and also would he report on what steps Mr. Stoner took and whom he contacted to rectify that which Mr. Matchett found unacceptable?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, certainly the hon. member can be assured that the ordinary procedures are followed carefully with regard to the opening of public tenders. I have given his colleague the indication that I will look into these matters. I do not think there is much point in further speculating on what did happen as the result of a phone call which cancelled another phone call. But I will look into the matter.

POSSIBILITY OF REVIEW BY TREASURY BOARD OF PROCEDURES CONNECTED WITH LEASES AND RENTALS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): My question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Since the Treasury Board, under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, has over-all authority in the management of Canada's financial affairs which includes among other things the matter of leases, the provision and use of facilities and rentals, etc., is the minister satisfied with the current practices and procedures, and can he indicate to the House whether he is considering undertaking a comprehensive review of current practices so that we might hopefully restore public confidence in this part of the government's activities?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, whenever a problem such as this one is brought to the attention of the Treasury Board, we consider it and try to give the best possible ruling. However, we are always on the lookout for better procedures. This is not always easy but I shall heed the hon. member's suggestion.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Could the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that he and his colleagues will undertake a comprehensive investigation and review of current procedures in light of the Sky Shop affair and in light of the affair which has been brought to light by my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova today?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there are times when it is absolutely impossible to call for tenders. We try to proceed through tenders as much as possible but there are situations, Mr. Speaker, where we must take our responsibilities, and this cannot be helped. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, when we have decisions to make we assume our responsibilities. One cannot deny that we are politicians. We were elected by the people and in some circumstances we must assume our responsibilities as administrators and politicians at the same time. We cannot separate the two.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. With regard to the special responsibilities he has inherited from the Minister of the Environment as the leader of the federal Quebec party, I should like to ask the minister if he takes direct responsibility for this extra ministerial task or whether to any extent this clearing house is run by his staff.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member realizes that he is not directing a question to the minister in his capacity as Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order at the present time? If the minister or members of the cabinet have on different occasions indicated that they in fact are vetting various contracts within various provinces,—and the answers of the Prime Minister confirmed that contention—and if there is an acknowledged leader of the party in a particular province, seized with that responsibility, it seems to me to be quite legitimate for us to ask that minister questions with respect to those responsibilities, and I ask the indulgence of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: It may be an interesting question to ask, but it is not a legitimate question to ask during the question period.

POSSIBILITY OF IMPROPRIETIES BY MINISTERIAL AIDES IN SKY SHOPS AFFAIR—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Prime Minister. On April 13, as recorded at page 12761 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said it was confirmed by the RCMP that they are not recommending that any charges be laid against any minister. Since the questions of propriety and the Pearson code are the responsibility of the Prime Minister and not the RCMP, would the Prime Minister tell the House what kind of investigation, if any, he has undertaken into questions of impropriety by ministers, but perhaps more important, by ministerial aides, which have been raised by the Sky Shops affair, and would he advise the House the full results of these inquiries which have been made by him, if he has made them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the results of the inquiries I made, particularly with regard to the Sky Shops affair, I have reported to the House on previous occasions.

As regards the conduct of ministerial aides in general, I always make it a point, when I am appointing a new minister, to remind him of the responsibility he has to choose the best aides possible, to make sure that they stay within the limits of their authority, that they do not use the minister's name in vain and that if he has any cause to suspect misconduct, he should get rid of the aide involved. I am not sure if I did in every case, but I have circulated copies of Mr. Pearson's guidelines of 1963 or 1964 regarding aides to the ministers.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is obvious that the Prime Minister is saying that in his judgment the Pearson code does apply to ministerial aides. Given that state of affairs, would the Prime Minister answer the question and tell us whether he will advise the House fully and completely with respect to the conduct of ministerial aides pursuant to the Pearson guidelines in connection with these issues? That is the question which was asked on April 13. We are asking that question again today because we think this is a matter of extreme public importance and that the Prime Minister and his ministers have a duty to this House to answer it fully.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I have answered the question with regard to the possible involvement in the Sky Shops affair of any ministerial aides.

With regard to other aspects I repeat that there are general guidelines or enjoinders which exist. Ministers are always cautioned, and they know well enough to caution themselves, against aides who might use their authority unwisely, but by and large, I think it is fair to say that this government and, presumably, previous governments have been well served by the young men and women who come to work for the government for a period of time to do their share for the common weal.

REQUEST FOR DISCONTINUANCE OF SLAUGHTERING CATTLE AFFECTED BY BLUE TONGUE

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister consider abandoning the procedure of slaughtering cattle herds in the south Okanagan with the disease blue tongue, in view of the fact that many more herds with the disease have been found and that slaughtering may not be the best way of proceeding at this time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this disease has been brought into Canada by imported cattle. We were free of this disease. We want our herds to remain so. Some of these cattle have been shipped from that area as far east as Ontario, and we are checking those herds at the present time. The only nations which are free of this disease follow the procedure of eradication. I have a complete report from the acting director of health of animals, and recently he met the people in this area and outlined our policy to them. We will continue the eradication program until we rid the nation of the disease.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

BLUE TONGUE—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED CATTLE

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture with regard to blue tongue in herds in the southern Okanagan.

Mr. Broadbent: Tory cows.

Mr. Whittaker: In view of the fact that eradication of herds is going ahead—even though blue tongue does not affect the animals—to help some other industries in Canada, would the minister look at the compensation he is giving to ranchers for these animals? The compensation which is being given is market value, and to me this means that it is not costing the government anything. Would the minister consider giving the ranchers proper compensation for these animals?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says this disease does not affect the animals. It certainly does. It causes weak calves to be born, and as far as we are concerned, all the consequences of this disease after it has been in a herd for some time are very questionable. We are considering the compensation. We want to be as fair as possible to these people.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBLE CONTINUATION OF BENEFITS FOR PERSONS 65 YEARS OF AGE

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that a recent ruling from the appeal board has established a case of statute law to the effect that a person over 65 years of age who was entitled to unemployment insurance benefits before January 1, 1976 will be able, notwithstanding the new Unemployment Insurance Act, to retain all his rights pursuant to the former legislation, would the minister indicate to the House whether or not people aged 65 or over, whose benefits have been withheld pursuant to the new law on December 31, 1975, will be able henceforth to receive their benefits until they have run out?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is asking me for a legal opinion or a legal interpretation. I am aware of the case to which he refers, and it is being considered. I believe there is an appeal from that decision to a higher authority, and until that appeal is heard I do not think I should made a legal comment.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST ROSIE DOUGLAS—DIFFERENCE BETWEEN DOUGLAS AND QUANG

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I understand that it is the intention of the department to carry out tomorrow a deportation order against one Rosie Douglas—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: How did he get here?

Mr. Brewin: —notwithstanding the fact that, as I understand it, there are proceedings pending, or there may be, before the Supreme Court of Canada, and notwithstanding the fact that if he is deported to the Dominican Republic, his future will be at least as hazardous as that of one Quang, who has been ordered to be deported to Viet Nam but who has not been required to leave the country.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that deportation proceedings relating to Mr. Douglas have been under way for some time. He has appealed to the Immigration Appeal Board, to the federal court, to the Supreme Court, back to the Immigration Appeal Board and the federal court, and he may now again be considering some further appeal to the Supreme Court. I am not sure on what grounds, but our instructions are to proceed with the deportation order. As to the second part of the question, I suggest that the premise of the hon. member's comment, about how he would or would not be treated in the country to which he would be returned, is doubtful.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Would the minister explain the difference between a case like this, involving a man who has been accused and convicted of expounding radical opinions, and that of a man like Quang, who has obviously been involved in large scale criminal activities in his own country?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that a deportation order has been brought against Mr. Quang and that inquiries are under way with the government of South Viet Nam to ascertain if they would accept him on return, and under what conditions. When I have that information, I will decide what is to happen about his deportation.

DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST ROSIE DOUGLAS—INQUIRY IF CONVICTED OF CRIME IN CANADA

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration if Mr. Douglas was convicted of a crime committed in Canada?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. The conviction was upheld on appeal to the Superior Court.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION INCREASED FERRY RATES NOT BE PASSED ON TO SHIPPERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the minister's department has granted ferry rate increases of up to 38 per cent and 52 per cent with regard to goods shipped by rail and ferry to Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, will he assure the country that the increase will not be passed on to shippers in Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the increases would be on the rates in the ordinary way, and would be borne accordingly.

INCREASED FERRY RATES—CONSULTATIONS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the two provinces to be affected by the proposed ferry rate increase already suffer from high unemployment and extraordinarily high inflation rates, and as the rate increase will exacerbate their situation, is the minister prepared to meet with his counterparts in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, before this decision is implemented by CN?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are conscious of the impact of rate increases, especially in this area, and are slow to move on them if they are to take place in areas over which we have jurisdiction. But it is worth observing that the increases are small compared to increases in costs—

Mr. Horner: Is 52 per cent small?

Mr. Lang: —which are constantly growing at a rapid rate, and represent a significant investment by the people of Canada in the development of these areas.

PENITENTIARIES

REASON FOR FAILURE TO TABLE FARRIS REPORT

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Solicitor General. In view of the latest hostage taking at B.C. penitentiary this past week end, the sixth in 14 months, why has the government still not produced the Farris inquiry report which was completed several months ago?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, charges are pending against persons involved in the hostage taking, although the murder charge has been stayed. The Farris report will not be released, as the Solicitor General earlier advised the House, until those other charges have been disposed of.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REASON FOR FAILURE TO PROVIDE ADEQUATE NUMBER OF GUARDS

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At a March 10 meeting with the Commissioner of Penitentiaries, Dragon Cernetic, director of British Columbia penitentiary, stated that he requires 205 security positions to maintain adequate supervision over prisoners. Will the Acting Solicitor General explain why Millhaven has 182 security guards for 280 inmates, whereas B.C. penitentiary has only 168 security guards for over 430 inmates?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into the particulars of the facts and provide the hon. member with the information.

POST OFFICE

CLOSING OF CANTEEN AT CALGARY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Is the Postmaster General aware that another attempt is being made to close the canteen at the Calgary post office on weekends and the midnight "graveyard" shift, notwithstanding the fact that operations at the plant are on a seven-day, 24-hour schedule and the order issued by the Postmaster General on two previous attempts to deny canteen service to some of the postal workers, to the effect that in the interest of good human relations canteen service will be available to all employees at all times? Will he now reaffirm his earlier decision?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I will investigate to determine if the restaurant is closed and canteen services available. I would be surprised if no food is availabe to employees on the graveyard shift or any other shift.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think, if the Postmaster General will investigate, he will see that the situation is precisely as it was a few months ago. May I ask this supplementary question: does he not agree that the way to heal the malaise in the Post Office Department is by ensuring good industrial relations?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, well fed postmen on the midnight shift will do a lot to increase morale. But morale in the post office has never been higher. If it is related to food, they must eat very well these days.

INDUSTRY

LISTS OF COMPANIES BENEFITING FROM LOCKHEED CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The minister has been somewhat reluctant to reveal the names of the 25 Canadian companies which would get sizeable production benefits from the Lockheed deal. I have before me two lists, one naming the 25 principal companies which will benefit and a second, much longer list, which was made available to me, naming companies which might receive benefits. Some of the names on the latter list include companies like B.C. Aviation Research Council, which makes a marine borer prevention system. These appear as unlikely candidates for work on the LRPA. I would therefore ask the minister to table both lists of companies which are supposed to do work on the LRPA, together with a brief description of the work they will be doing and the approximate cost.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member does not expect me to table something, when I do not know exactly what I am supposed to table. I have not seen the list. I must apologize to certain hon. members, to whom I said earlier that I thought I could make the list available. I am looking into that today, to see if it is possible. I was told that the only reason it is not is that these are speculative lists. They depend on whether companies are successful in the tendering process. If the hon. member would be good enough to let me see the lists, I will be glad to make them as open as we possible can, without jeopardizing the interests of the companies concerned once arrangements for the tendering process are completed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF LOAN

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly co-operate with the minister.

My second question is for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister tell the House three things about the LRPA Lockheed deal now being negotiated? Exactly how much money is being borrowed; how long is the period of the loan; and what kind of security will Canadian banks get for their loan, inasmuch as the government has said categorically that it will not guarantee the loan?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are now in the final stages of important negotiations between the Lockheed company and Canadian banks and I expect to be able to make an announcement about those discussions fairly soon.

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTION REAPPOINTMENT OF CARMEL CARRIÈRE TO APPEAL BOARD BE DELAYED

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In his absence on April 13 I asked the Prime Minister if Miss Carmel Carrière, whose appointment to the Immigration Appeal Board is to end on May 10, 1976, is to be reappointed. I ask the minister to indicate whether his cabinet colleagues have recommended that Miss Carmel Carrière be reappointed? Further, will the minister consider not reappointing Miss Carrière to the Immigration Appeal Board until the Sky Shops affair has been concluded in court?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the recommendation. On the second point, as I recall, the appointment was to a temporary position. It was to last for a two year term and was for the purpose of cleaning up the appeal backlog. We do not intend to renew these appointments when they terminate.

POST OFFICE

SALE OF STAMPS TO FOREIGN DISTRIBUTORS AT DISCOUNT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Is it the practice of the Post Office Department to sell Canadian stamps to foreign distributors for one third less than the face value of the stamps?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I know exactly to what the hon. member alludes. It is a practice engaged in by at least 15 other countries. Rather than opening permanent offices in Europe, we have appointed distributors to sell to the philatelic field. They get a discount, which is below the regular retail value, and then sell the stamps retail. Since they sell to the philatelic world, we take all precautions to make sure these stamps do not find their way back to Canada.

Mr. Ellis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister confirm that the department is selling to United States philatelic dealers who are within 200 or 300 miles of the Canadian border, sometimes at prices much below face value?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member implies that the stamps come back to Canada at a discount. But the discount is not sufficiently large to warrant anybody doing it. We also know what quantities distributors in virtually every country, including the United States, purchase and this can identify those who might attempt to ship stamps back into Canada.

● (1500)

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of momentous privilege to the women of my province. Sixty years ago today, the women of Alberta received the right to vote. I wish to report, Mr. Speaker, that in the most recent elections thay have been exercising that franchise in a manner entirely commendable, completely logical and in accordance with the welfare of my province, a situation which I hope will soon spread to the rest of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ministerial Responsibility

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, during the question period I very briefly raised a point of order. I raise it again now in a little more detail and depth in order to get an answer, guideline, or possibly a ruling from Your Honour with regard to the whole question of ministerial responsibility and, indeed, the right of members of the opposition to question members on the treasury benches with respect to matters within their jurisdiction or, indeed, competence.

There has been a fair amount of circumlocution during the past few days and weeks with regard to the question whether there has been any vetting of contracts or dealings by a particular minister with regard to a particular province or region of Canada. In statements made today by the Prime Minister it came out that there has been input by a minister or group of ministers with regard to matters arising in various provinces. In other words, there has been an admission on the part of the government that at this point in time there is some responsibility attributable to certain ministers for matters arising within their areas. If, in fact, the government has given some responsibility with regard to granting of contracts or leases, and indeed the matter on which we are now questioning the government, the ministers involved in particular areas should be responsible for answering certain questions with regard to that.

If Your Honour in fact finds there is no requirement on the part of ministers to answer questions regarding matters arising within their general areas, or in fact it is not a matter of responsibility or places the legal interpretation that ministers have no right to have input with respect to contracts within a particular province or area, that is one thing. However, there has been no admission on the part of the government or the Prime Minister that this in fact goes against the Financial Administration Act: they say that the practices and procedures are quite within the law.

After admitting that they are vetting contracts and leases within a particular province, ministers should be obliged to answer questions with regard to their involvement and participation in them. If they have this responsibility, they should be required to answer in the House of Commons with regard to all aspects of their activities relating to the granting of contracts. They should not be allowed to hide behind the technical appellation they have with respect to a particular department, but should in fact answer questions regarding any input into the granting of contracts. I give as an example the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce did answer questions with respect to the involvement of his staff relating to matters over which he does not now have jurisdiction.

I submit to Your Honour, with the greatest deference, that it should not only be a ruling of the Chair but a right of opposition members to have every opportunity to investigate these matters, whether they be technically within the responsibility of a particular department, if—as it is now acknowledged—there is some method within cabinet for input by ministers for particular areas. I ask Your Honour to take this matter under consideration and in future question periods to allow us to direct questions to leaders within a particular province, as there is apparently an admission that they do in fact vet all contracts that come within their province.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fairly obvious that there is a long-standing tradition in this place—and there are very good reasons for it—that a responsible minister answers in relation to matters having to do with his department and matters coming within his purview when matters cross several departments; and, of course, questions are from time to time put to the Prime Minister. It is perfectly obvious that members opposite may have questions of interest having to do with political matters or matters outside the purview of a minister's department or the government's operations as a government, but this House is not the place for those questions to be put. In fact, the rules of this House prohibit it.

There is, in each case to which the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar refers, where any matter of government business takes place, a minister responsible for that business, and—certainly in this government—he stands in his place ready to take responsibility for what is done within his department, to answer for it and to answer for the procedures in relation to it.

There are, of course, many submissions from members of parliament inside the House and citizens outside the House in relation to matters of government business. Indeed, conscientious members of the opposition from time to time write to ministers asking that careful consideration be given to a particular case or cause of a constituent, district or city. Clearly, that does not shift any responsibility from the member of the opposition but, rather, leaves responsibility on the government and the minister in relation to his department for the thing that is done, if it is done, and the way in which it is done. That supports the long-standing rule with regard to questions to ministers relating to their departments and the exception to it made in relation to the Prime Minister because of his broad, over-all government responsibility.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the acting government House leader referred to the opposition and our request for answers to certain questions. Indeed, the acting government House leader, the Minister of Transport, put the classic case within the rules of this House with regard to questions about ministerial responsibility as established by the government.

The questions that we are now asking have been responsibly and fully dealth by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar. They relate to a direct assignment of responsibility by the Prime Minister, the leader of the government, to particular ministers. One concerns the Minister of the Environment, at the time the minister of regional economic expansion, whose mandate from the leader of his party and the government went far beyond the operations of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. By the admission of the Prime Minister today—and it will be seen in public print tomorrow—the minister was involved in vetting things that had absolutely nothing to do with regional economic expansion. That was not by accident, but by design, because he was an acknowledged leader in a particular province. Surely it would be improper, and would indeed fetter the ordinary operations of the opposition, if the Chair allowed the government to hide behind the classic definition that was just put by the Minister of Transport, as it has no application to this particular type of case. That is the point of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

I go one step further. If there is to be any order with respect to leasing, rentals or anything else involving government expenditure, something must govern—and surely that is the Financial Administration Act. If there is to be a case made for ministerial propriety, surely questions can be directed to the President of the Treasury Board with regard to financial administration. In fact, we should not be left there; we should not be stepped from asking questions of a minister whom we feel is carrying out responsibilities, as admitted by the Prime Minister, beyond the power of the ministry under the Financial Administration Act. Surely we cannot be fettered in that respect. That is the point made by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, one which is important from the point of view of the opposition and its rights to ask questions and the responsibility, at least politically, of the government to answer them.

It is such an important question that I ask you, Mr. Speaker, not to make a judgment today but to consider the matter in light of what has been said on both sides and decide later whether it would be proper to fetter the opposition in this way.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to support the position taken by the Minister of Transport, the acting House leader, and to indicate, by using one or two examples, that his view is perfectly correct. The minister responsible for a department or for a particular appointment must, in the end, answer for it. I am answerable for appointments, for instance, when I name a particular person to the Senate from a province which is not my own province. I would, however, ask the advice of the senior member from that province.

When I appointed the former Conservative leader from Nova Scotia to the Senate a few months ago, I did discuss the matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs who knows that province well and was in a position to confirm the respectability and qualifications of that particular person. When I named the former Conservative member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin), to the Senate, I discussed the matter with the present Minister of the Environment because that is a province which he, also, knows well. But the responsibility of appointments to the Senate is mine, just as the opposition has been making it clear that I was responsible for appointing Senator Giguère. If they have questions to ask, they can direct them to me. But the convenience of consulting a minister who represents a particular province, whether the matter concerns the appointment of a senator or of a lieutenant-governor, of finding a qualified lawyer or an engineer able to do a job, cannot be underestimated since these are things a prime minister does not know because he cannot know the whole country.

It frequently happens that a minister responsible for a particular department is not acquainted with the firms which operate in another part of the country. I repeat, by way of example, that the responsibility is taken by the responsible minister and he is answerable to the House with respect to his political judgment. As the President of the Treasury Board said, we are politicians; we have to make political judgments; we are answerable to the people for those judgments, and we are answerable to this House. If the opposition were to ask us, as they did ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, about Carmel Carrière, we would accept responsibility—and if the people do not like our answers, they know what to do at the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I am glad I have at least the theoretical support of the opposition, because by their applause they are indicating that this is the correct procedure; that we should be responsible, and not someone else.

Mr. Speaker: Since it does not appear that other hon. members wish to contribute to the discussion of this interesting point of order, let me say I am prepared to take it under consideration, but I must exercise some caution. I am sure members of the opposition who have indicated their desire that I extend the parameters of the question period to permit the kind of question asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar earlier today are not seriously suggesting that reconsideration should be given in terms of the full range of political responsibility which is generally accepted as falling upon members in the geographical sense.

I think the political responsibility involved there is well known. It has never been extended to the ambit of the question period, and that is not what is being requested from me. Nevertheless, I am prepared to look at this particular matter, in view of the circumstances, and give a definitive answer tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order. During the question period, when the Minister of the Environment was answering questions put to him by the hon. member for Joliette concerning recommendations with respect to a contract, or certain contracts, inside the province of Quebec, the Minister of the Environment said he had received recommendations regarding this matter from all members in all parties: at least, that is what I heard him say. I suggest this casts a rather wide net. The inference was that there were recommendations which went beyond the rules of propriety from all members of all parties. If that is what he said, I think the Minister of the Environment should table those recommendations or at least table a list of those who made them to him.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that I would like to make very clear if I did not do so in the interview that I gave. I want the House to understand that there is no interference in the granting of contracts for which there is a call for tenders. The decision is based on the merits of the tenders. Even in the case of CARA which was the low bidder, this company got the Mirabel franchise instead of someone else.

When it is a matter of a recommendation where the government has some discretion, then representations come from everywhere. For instance, they can come from the New Democratic Party, from the Senate or from a judge, and there is nothing shocking about this. Everyone is aware of it, including the provincial governments and the opposition. Moreover, it is useless to create an atmosphere of scandal when we are simply following regular procedure.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister—as is not infrequently the case—has added further confusion to the confusion which arose from his earlier statement. I believe he has an obligation to make a distinction between the kind of requests that he gets. In answer to questions on the orders of the day, he said, or implied, that members of the House of Commons made requests on behalf of their constituents or on behalf of other groups or persons in Canada. Such requests are, within one category, entirely appropriate; they form part of what we were elected to do.

What the minister failed to do when he spoke in a general way about requests was to distinguish those requests from requests which violate government guidelines or the laws of Canada. Such a distinction is important. If the minister has had requests made to him by any member of any party asking that a course of action be taken which violates treasury procedures or the laws of Canada, he has a duty to make available a list of such requests.

● (1520)

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am in complete agreement with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). We should establish a distinction. For my part, I am not at all shocked when I receive requests from any source. Of course, the problem is as follows; when the request is for something illegal and unethical, I agree that it must be turned down; if undue influence is used, it should be criticized publicly. If the official opposition wants to blame us for such action, let them come right out and say so instead of making only general suggestions and creating an atmosphere of corruption where there is none.

If there has been, let them say where. As concerns the Sky Shops affair, I have cooperated entirely with the RCMP. I have given them all the information that they asked. I have given them everything that they wanted and they know this, including very personal documents. I have cooperated with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police because I knew that everything that I did was legal. I did nothing wrong in the Sky Shops affair.

The other matters are before the courts, and this is where they should be. If there are some irregularities, the judge will say so, and then we shall know where we stand.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,912, 3,969, 4,112, 4,120, 4,304 to 4,308 incl., 4,589, 4,593, 4,618, 4,774, 4,928, 4,930, 4,944, 4,953, 4,962, 4,964, 4,996, 5,019, 5,027, 5,055 to 5,064 incl., 5,100 and 5,136.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

REPAYMENT FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY FLOODING IN QUEBEC

Question No. 3,969—Mr. Lefebvre:

1. Since the 1974 spring flooding, what was the total amount claimed as compensation in (a) the Province of Quebec, (b) the Constituency of Pontiac, (c) each municipality in the Constituency of Pontiac?

2. Of the total amount claimed in the Constituency of Pontiac, what was the amount of money and how many claims were accepted for compensation purposes under the federal-provincial agreement for (a) individuals, (b) provincial government, (c) provincial government agencies, (d) municipal governments, (e) school boards, (f) business and manufacturing establishments, (g) any other group?

3. Of the total amount accepted for payment (a) in the Province of Quebec, (b) in the Constituency of Pontiac, what amount will be provided by the (i) government, (ii) provincial government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): 1. The federal government has offered to share the cost of assistance provided by the Province of Quebec to victims of the 1974 flood. The offer of assistance was in accordance with the terms and conditions of the Federal Disaster Assistance Program, under which the province is reimbursed for a certain portion of the costs incurred as prescribed by formula. Following completion of its flood damage assistance program the province requested that a sample audit be conducted pending submission of its claim for final settlement of account. The sample audit which was conducted by the federal auditors identified several problems and the province has chosen to have these clarified before rendering its final account. As soon as these problems are resolved and the claim from the province has been received, the audit will be completed and the payment made.

2. See above.

3. See above.

MINT CANADIAN POSTAGE STAMPS

Question No. 4,112—Mr. Gillies:

Does the Post Office Department sell mint Canadian postage stamps to philatelic distributors in the United States at a price less than the face value of the stamps and, if so, what is the annual value of sales?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): No. Sales of mint Canadian postage stamps by the Canada Post Office of its agents, to philatelic distributors or other purchasers, are not made at a price less than face value.

CFDC FILMS SHOWN ON CBC NETWORKS

Question No. 4,589—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. Have any feature length films produced with financial assistance from the Canadian Film Development Corporation been shown on (a) CBC network, (b) local CBC stations and, if so, what was the number and percentage of such feature films shown on (i) CBC network (ii) CBLT (iii) CBUT (iv) CBCT?

2. For each year 1972 to date, what percentage of all feature length films shown on (a) CBC network, (b) CBLT, (c) CBUT, (d) CBCT were (i) produced with financial assistance from CFDC (ii) Canadian films?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a) Yes. (b) No. (i) French television network: 37 showings of 26 films from 1972 to date. English television network: 8 films have been shown, two of them more than once, from 1972 to date. (ii), (iii), (iv) So far, Canadian-produced feature films have only been scheduled for network release.

2. (a) Records are not maintained in such a way as to permit a calculation of the percentage of CFDC-supported feature films of all feature length films shown on CBC networks. (b), (c) and (d) See answer to 1 (ii) above.

CBC—ADVERTISEMENT IN WINNIPEG "FREE PRESS"

Question No. 4,593—Mr. McKenzie:

1. With reference to CBC advertisement in the Winnipeg Free Press, February 24, 1976, was this placed in the paper in the French language only and, if so, for what reason?

2. What are the language criteria used when placing advertisements in Canadian newspapers?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Yes. The advertisement was placed in French only through an unintentional mistake.

2. Normal practice in the CBC's Prairie Region is to place advertisements in French in the French-language press and in English in the English-language press.

CBC—HOCKEY GAMES TELEVISED

Question No. 4,618—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Are Montreal Canadians' away-games televised by CBC in the Province of Quebec and, if so, for what reason?

2. Are Vancouver Canucks' away-games televised by CBC in the Province of British Columbia and, if not, for what reason?

3. Did CBC televise the Buffalo-Montreal Canadians game on March 6, 1976 for British Columbia viewers but not televise the Vancouver-Kansas City game played in Kansas on the same date and, if so, for what reason?

4. Does CBC promote games in the World Hockey Association which has more Canadian teams than the National Hockey League and, if not, for what reason?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Not on a regular basis by the English network, although playoff games are carried. Montreal Canadien's away-games are sometimes carried in Quebec by the CBC's French network, which now has two evenings a week of hockey instead of the English network's one. However, next season, when the French network's coverage of hockey on Wednesday evenings is expected to end, Canadiens' away-games will not be carried by the French network, unless they are played against another Canadian team.

2. Not in regular season when the away-games in the United States, but playoff games are carried. The English network carries hockey on Saturday evenings only, when there is at least one Canadian team playing at home. The home game is the one carried on the national network.

3. Yes. As stated in part 2, games invloving one or more Canadian teams playing at home are carried rather than games outside the country. The Buffalo-Montreal game was played in Montreal.

4. No. CBC does not have a contract to carry World Hockey Association games, rights to some of which are held by Global TV (for the Toronto Toros) and TVA (for the Quebec Nordiques). The CBC carries National Hockey League games and, as noted in parts 2 and 3, the Saturday evening schedule emphasizes at-home games of Canadian teams. The CBC does not feel it can add a second evening of hockey to the English network in view of its other national, regional and local programming responsibilities.

(d) The New Horizons Program was established to enable retired Canadians to participate in activities beneficial to themselves and the community and all participants are volunteers. Furthermore, New Horizons is an activity oriented program and not a job creating program.

DRUG CASES IN COURTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 4,944—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,161, regarding drug cases in court in which the Minister of Justice stated that he was "determining the necessary measures required to rectify the problem", has the Minister taken any action since October 16, 1975 and, if so, in what manner?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): A close review of drug cases in the Courts of British Columbia was done prior to the end of 1975. As a result of this study, various steps have been taken in order to improve the prosecution of such cases. Legal supervision of the agents acting for the Attorney General of Canada in British Columbia has been decentralized and is now primarily the responsibility of the Regional Director of the Department of Justice in Vancouver. There exists in British Columbia a substantial back-log of cases of every nature. Discussions have taken place with representatives of the Attorney General of the Province in order to determine the possibility of improving court facilities in Vancouver for a better handling of drug cases. It is clear, however, that the back-log of drug cases in British Columbia is only part of a much larger problem of a back-log of criminal cases, not only in British Columbia but in other provinces as well. In February, the Minister of Justice asked the Law Reform Commission to accelerate its work in relation to pre-trial procedures with a view to reducing the delay in getting criminal cases on to trial. The Commission has agreed to do this and has established a task force consisting of judges, prosecutors and defence counsel to deal with this problem. The provincial attorneys general have all responded favourably and enthusiastically to this initiative and the Commission's proposals will be presented at a meeting of the eleven attorneys general in Vancouver in June. The Minister of Justice has stated that if general agreements can be reached about the changes which should be made, he would be prepared to move quickly with amendments to the Criminal Code.

ARTIFICIALLY CONTROLLED ENVIRONMENT FACILITIES FOR GROWING OF VEGETABLES, PLANTS AND FLOWERS

Question No. 5,027—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has the government participated financially or indicated an interest in any artificially controlled environment facilities for the growing of vegetables, plants or flowers?

2. Are any studies underway or being considered to encourage the development of systems to overcome the economic effects of Canadian winters to facilitate increased Canadian production and to reduce the demand for imports?

Order Paper Questions

3. Have studies been made of the Danish method of plant culture using continuous growth techniques?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. No.

2. No.

3. Plant growth systems are monitored on an international basis and no specific Danish method is known.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—QUEBEC

Question No. 5,055—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Quebec by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $27,601 thousands.

2. (a) 53 permanent jobs; (b) $1,449 thousands, for 1975-76.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—ONTARIO

Question No. 5,056—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Ontario by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $1,640 thousands.

2. (a) 15 permanent jobs; (b) $316 thousands, for 1975-76.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 5,057—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Newfoundland by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $7,178 thousands.

2. (a) 18 permanent jobs; (b) $640 thousands, for 1975-76.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 5,058—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of New Brunswick by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $10,388 Thousands.

2. (a) 17 permanent jobs, (b) $599 thousands, for 1975-76.

[Mr. Herbert.]

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 5,059—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Nova Scotia by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $5,682 thousands.

2. (a) 24 permanent jobs; (b) $608 thousands, for 1975-76.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—P.E.I.

Question No. 5,060—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Prince Edward Island by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Nil.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—MANITOBA

Question No. 5,061—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Manitoba by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Nil.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—ALBERTA

Question No. 5,062—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Alberta by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Nil.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 5,063—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of Saskatchewan by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Nil.

CREATION OF NATIONAL PARKS—BRITISH COLUMBIA

Question No. 5,064—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. From 1965 to date, how much has been invested in the Province of British Columbia by the government for the creation of national parks?

2. (a) How many permanent jobs have been created for the management and maintenance of such parks, (b) what is the annual cost of such services?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. $8,034 thousand.

2. (a) 20 permanent jobs; (b) $694 thousand, for 1975-76.

BILINGUAL POSITION IN RECENT PSC COMPETITION

Question No. 5,100—Mr. Herbert:

1. Were there nine applicants for a bilingual position in a recent Public Service Commission competition?

2. Is at least 90 per cent of the work of this position presently in the French language?

3. Was the winner of the competition unilingual English and, if so, was that person sent or will that person be sent on a language training course?

4. Could the language training of the successful candidate last more than six months?

5. (a) Have five persons been placed on an eligibility list for a maximum of six months, (b) are the first and second persons on the list bilingual?

6. Do the Public Service Commission's regulations require the opening and publication of another competition should the winner of the original competition be unable to fill the position after a six month period has passed?

7. What means are employed to ensure that the work to be undertaken by the new employee is satisfactorily executed during the period of the language course?

8. What are the language capabilities of the employee to be used to fill the position for the interim period?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The Commission is unable to reply to this question due to lack of information as to which competition is being referred to.

VETERANS' HOSPITALS

Question No. 5,136—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the name and location of each veterans' hospital, either federally or provincially operated?

2. By province and territory, for each hospital, how many veterans (a) have been on the waiting list since March 31, 1975, (b) are presently on the waiting list?

3. What is the average waiting time for veterans to enter each veterans' hospital?

4. What steps are being taken to alleviate or eliminate the waiting time at the veterans' hospitals?

2.

Nova Scotia	Camp Hill Hospital
Quebec	Queen Mary Veterans Hospital
Quebec	Ste. Anne's Hospital
Ontario	Westminster Hospital
Manitoba	Deer Lodge Hospital
Alberta	Colonel Belcher Hospital

3.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-88, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House contains, essentially, two matters of interest and importance to the Wheat Board designated area. They are the formal provision of procedures for the election of the Wheat Board advisory committee; secondly, the broadening of the scope of the Canadian Wheat Board to establish separate pools for selected types of grain within an identifiable grade. This will be known to most members as a malting barley pool amendment, though in its words and possibilities it is broader than that.

The first part of the bill having to do with the election of the advisory committee follows an experiment which was very well received by the grain producers. The experiment was to set up an election procedure which allowed the producers within the Wheat Board area to nominate, and then to vote upon and elect, the members who would serve on their behalf on the 11-member Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee. There was a great deal of interest in the election that took place, in terms of the number of candidates and the breadth of experience and interest that the candidates represented, which resulted in electing members who in this way directly represent the producers in particular and identifiable regions. Under the existing law, of course, the election was a forerunner to the appointment by order in council since the law requires the 11-member board to be appointed in this fashion.

We had, of course, indicated that the election would be followed up with such appointment, and that has taken place. Indeed, the new committee has been functioning for a good number of meetings now, and while admittedly having some interesting growing pains as it became established, I think hon. members will agree that it is showing its real value. The Canadian Wheat Board relies on the committee for comment and opinion on matters affecting producers, though not, of course, transferring to it any of the essential responsibility for providing the best marketing expertise that the Wheat Board must exercise on its own. The advisory committee will, I hope play an increasingly important role in advising the Canadian Wheat Board of the views of producers on a multitude of matters and will also increasingly be in a position to report back to producers on matters within the board's responsibility. In this way producers can become informed by their own representatives in addition to the more formal releases or methods of communication adopted by the Wheat Board.

I said that the procedure was generally very well welcomed, and I believe that is also true of its operation. I am sure members will be glad of an opportunity in committee to look at the specific nature of the advisory board and to comment further upon it for its own future development. Certainly for my own part I shall welcome expressions of view from hon. members concerning the direction in which the advisory committee should go and the extent to which the input of producers can be improved. I have always been very concerned to establish as many means of consultation as possible with producers, particularly in regard to matters such as the marketing of their own grain in which they have a prime interest, even though necessarily it falls under the broad umbrella of the legislation of this parliament.

The establishment of a separate pool for malting barley has been discussed by those who have grown barley for quite a number of years. However, for a long time the view was taken by a good number of producer representatives that a pool was undesirable in view of the fact that the selection of specific barley from among all the grades might be seen in itself as somewhat fortuitous and a rather special break for the individual producer who managed to have his grain selected.

As the selection of barley for a purpose such as malting became more important, and as more and more producers attempted to arrange their farm practices to raise a malting barley, putting increasing efforts into the production of barley for specific selection, the pendulum began to swing in the other direction. In the course of the years 1973 and 1974, therefore, we began to receive an increasing number of representations in favour of allowing for the separate pooling of the selected barley within a particular grade, and in due course the Wheat Board and its advisory committee joined in the representations that were made that this was a worth-while thing.

Accordingly, I indicated that I would be willing to put before the House a bill along these lines in the hope that the House would see fit to bring it into law in order for it to be effective in the present crop year. The indication of my willingness to do this came during the course of the last crop year when I indicated to the Canadian Wheat Board it would be desirable for it to keep accounts in such a way that if parliament did, indeed, make this law effective, the barley selected for malting this year could be pooled separately.

Hon. members from the Wheat Board region will be particularly aware of the fact that last year emphasis was placed on the desirability of separate pooling of selected grades of barley for malting purposes. In the last year period a good amount of what otherwise would be No. 1 feed barley was selected for malting purposes. Because the Wheat Board could not, under existing law, segregate the results of the pooling of that selected barley, it was merged with the broad pool for feed barley. While the difference between selected barley when it is selected from other higher grades is perhaps significant enough, it is even more significant in the case of selection from No. 1 feed barley. Quite obviously, as a result those farmers whose barley was selected felt they should have had the benefit of that selection. The argument could rage on, but certainly at this point in time many producer organizations—indeed, I do not know of an exception—have changed their former position in recommending against separate pooling and now endorse the separation of the selected grades.

As hon. members will know, I have been speaking about malting barley, and this is the key selection of grade that we have in mind; but the bill is broader, to give the Canadian Wheat Board and its advisory committee rather additional flexibility from time to time, when other types of grain within a broad grade are selected, to establish separate pools in those cases as well. I do not suggest the judgments will be easy in every case, as it was not over a period of years in this instance. However, it does seem to me it would be better to be in a position to respond quickly on the advice of producer groups, the advisory committee and of the Canadian Wheat Board itself, when a broad grade is being subdivided in practice by selection for a particular purpose, to allow pooling in that situation.

I therefore commend to hon. members this change in the legislation. I would be very glad to go into the reactions and views of the various representative groups throughout the prairie region with hon. members. I know their familiarity with these views will lead them to lending their support to this bill. I certainly welcome that as we see it moving toward becoming law. In closing, I emphasize the importance of moving it forward since the crop year is moving along and it would be useful to add certainty to the proposition which I have put forward, that it would be desirable to have this law applied to the crop year now in progress, that is to say, the one which commenced last August 1 and which ends next July 31.

Notice of the intention to present the bill was given to the public well in advance of that time and I believe, therefore, that hon. members can move forward with happy hearts so that selected barley in this year can indeed be segregated in the pool, the Wheat Board having kept the appropriate accounts for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I therefore take great pleasure in moving the second reading of this bill and its reference to the committee.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the minister quite rightly pointed out that the experiment of an elected Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee has worked out well. I wish that committee the best in years to come. Bill C-88, as the minister has said, proposes to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act to provide for the establishment of separate pools for selected grains, such as malting barley, probably the selected oats going into the rolled oats trade, and we are hopeful it will also include payments for selected high protein grains.

I note that the Palliser Wheat Growers Association has written the minister suggesting that Bill C-88 presently before the House is the proper vehicle under which to sort out high protein grades. The association goes on to state that this would not require special binning at the country elevator level, but that the protein level could be determined as it is by our American friends. The association further states that the Canadian Wheat Board has received some 34 cents a bushel premium for 13.5 per cent protein wheat, compared with 11.5 per cent. It suggests it would seem only fair that farmers growing the higher protein should be compensated, thereby promoting this incentive. The association goes on to say that this would lead to better land utilization by producers in consistently low protein areas, improving their performance by growing higher yield varieties. The association ends its letter by stating:

> Due to the frustrations from delays, the producers are ready for some action.

I hope we can look forward to protein being included under this bill. The bill also provides a permanent basis for the election of prairie grain producers to the Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee. Under the amendment, the board will exercise direction and supervision over the administrative process in all future elections to this advisory committee. The governor in council, however, will enact all rules and regulations, which means the minister will in fact have complete control. This will probably give producers some cause to ponder.

Mention could be made of the present snarl-up in the western grain stabilization plan whereby every producer now delivering must have the 2 per cent deduction applied, whether he wants to come into the plan or not, because the excluding stickers for their permit books are not yet available. This has caused the farmers in my area to become even more skeptical of this plan, especially now that they find the government's contribution to the plan will only be a bookkeeping entry and the money will probably be used elsewhere. This money could, of course, be used to promote the metrication of our grain industry. This is incomprehensible to producers in southern Saskatchewan. We have had no estimate of the cost of this metrication plan, but we note United States publications claiming an estimate ranging from $40 million to $100 million for the switch in that great country. If we take one-tenth of that, we end up with something between $4 million and $10 million.

It is all right for the government to be promoting this program. The bureaucrats may well say, "Let the costs fall where they may." They are not in the business, of course, and do not have to buy new scales, new tools and new labels. It is impossible to understand the claims by metric commission officials that the conversion will increase the export of our grain as our grain is presently sold on the basis of metric tons. The United States has used more common sense in its conversion, which is more gradual and selective. Each move must pass the test of benefit and existing cost. I suggest we could well take a look at this method in our country.

Because of this forced 2 per cent deduction under the grain plan, farmers are properly asking whether the government is trying to force a signing-up. Producers rightly suggest that it is probably much easier to have the amendments made to the plan now than getting the plan established and then trying to have it amended.

The minister indicated there was some skepticism in years gone by about obtaining additional premiums for malting barley because it might appear that this is special treatment for those who produce malting barley. This a very tricky question. The domestic and export malting industries require barley that is relatively plump and uniform in size, true to variety and type, which does not have excessive amounts of physical imperfections.

It is absolutely imperative that uniform germination takes place in the malting process. Barley must be low in moisture content. If it has to be stored for long periods, artificial drying will adversely affect germination. Producers, further, have to use sound methods of threshing and be careful not to peel or break the kernels. The protein content is very important. Low protein content is desirable. Most of these requirements are above and beyond requirements in respect of grade.

I hope this will give some appreciation of the care and technique required by producers to have their barley rated malting. It is interesting that sales in this crop year to date, of some 274,000 bushels of malting barley, have been selected from grain company stocks. I hope there will be some assurance from the minister that the grain companies will not reap the benefits from the malting premium.

In the last full crop year—that is, the 1974-75 crop year—over 18 million bushels of feed barley ended up in the malting houses. When a producer delivers grain to a western country elevator, normally no official grade is placed on the grain. The ticket is simply marked "Graded by agreement". This is the official basis for payment if accepted by the producer. This was the basis for any final payment by the Canadian Wheat Board. So any barley graded No. 1 feed and eventually ending up in the malthouse generated a final payment to the farmer of about 18 cents a bushel last year, whereas it generated a premium of up to and over $1 a bushel for the Canadian Wheat Board.

The minister is always saying he is held up by some final legal interpretation when it comes to giving the producer the benefit of the doubt. However, there seems to be no such qualms when the shoe is on the other foot. I think of the sorry story of the Temporary Wheat reserves Act payments of several years ago when producers were required to initiate court action in order to get the money from the government that was legally owing to them.

I question the legality of the Canadian Wheat Board proposal to pay to the grain companies some $10 million of the farmers' money in order to encourage the companies to build additional storage at Vancouver. All we know about this is what is reported in the Western Producer of April 15 where it is stated that the Canadian Wheat Board proposes to establish three categories. The companies were to receive guaranteed storage payments on 95 per cent of their total licensed capacity, less whatever percentage they reserved for non-board grain.

Those companies which build or increase their terminal elevator facilities by more than 2.5 million bushels will be eligible to receive guaranteed storage payments on all their licensed capacity. As I have said, it appears to me that this will cost western farmers some $10 million. I think the government of Canada could well take a look at this because it has a responsibility to help increase the storage space at the Pacific seaboard.

On top of that, the farmers are now aware of the proposed non-funding by the government under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. This, to them, seems to be consistent with the minister's mode of operation. We had a plea from him this year for more seeded acreage, and at the same time we had an announcement of lower initial grain prices to the western farmer. Our western grain industry was built and developed on policies that were designed to bring the greatest good to the greatest number. We had standard handling tariffs. Now we have variable or flexible tariffs in country elevators.

We had no trucking from country elevators, but now we have it. We had standard grades across the prairies, and now we have protein standards at export and proposed protein granding at country elevators. We used to have the standard Crowsnest Pass freight rates for export grain. Now the minister is bringing forward proposals that the producers feel will make those rates variable. Where we formerly had complete Canadian Wheat Board control, we now have open market feed grains and a general freeing-up.

Grain from the northern and southern parts of the prairies used to be blended at export to give a uniform grade. Now the northern and southern grains are kept separate because of protein standards. Our whole grain transportation system, of course, is in a turmoil. The elevator companies do not know what the future holds. The railways do not know where they will go. Surely the government's transportation policy should be to develop a system to serve the needs of the grain industry, and not vice versa.

[Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek).]

The net result of the meddling by the minister has brought the western grain industry to the point where it would be impossible to export the volumes of wheat of some 14 years ago. It is interesting to note that up to the present our wheat and Durum exports amount to some 260 million bushels. There are three more months until the end of the crop year. This means we will probably end up, at best, with 400 million bushels of wheat. Government grain statistics show that in the peak year, 1963-64, wheat exports were 594 million bushels. We might compare that with the 400 million bushels we will probably export this year in spite of all the government money poured into our system.

The minister has done this by using the capital accumulated by the discipline of the past. The word I get from the producers is, "Get the government off our backs for a while". By "the government," they mean the minister. No other country has the control of licensed varieties that Canada has. This is certainly necessary if we are to keep promoting our malting barley. It seems to me that we are slipping badly now. Our research scientists are being neglected. Their work on new varieties is being curtailed. Canada is losing its leadership.

Surely it is time for the government to allow producers to set up a check-off system so they can promote their own research and marketing. This could be done, hopefully, under the amendments we are now discussing in Bill C-88. We might look at our competitors in other countries to see what they are doing. We see that in Brazil they are expanding the network of paved roads to 63,000 kilometres. They will be spending $3.5 billion on railways in the period 1974-79. By the end of the decade the Brazilian merchant fleet will reach over 9½ million tons dead weight, with most of the ships having been produced in Brazilian shipyards.

On the other hand, we in Canada have practically no merchant marine. The rural credit programs in Brazil totalled $12 billion, with an average 11.2 per cent nominal interest rate, which in an inflationary economy means a real transfer to the agricultural sector. In our country, the largest grain handling organization, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, states its concern about the limited funds available and the lack of encouragement for young people to become involved in agricultural research and plant breeding. I should like to quote a statement by Mr. Avery Sahl, pool director and Wheat Board advisory committee member. He said:

But during the course of this discussion—and I might say that we had a Dr. Jack Morrison from Research Ottawa in attendance and I've personally had some communication with Dr. Hurd at the research station in Swift Current and some pretty startling realities have come to light as a result of those discussions . . .

For instance, we've only got 30 cereal scientists or plant breeders left in Canada. They have about 29 or 30 back-up people such as chemists, you know, assist them in their efforts but I should also say that these same people, these same 30 plant breeders, really can't devote their total efforts to plant breeding because they're involved in teaching at universities and other administrative work.

He concluded by saying:

Well that's certainly true. During our discussion we learned that the people that are in the plant breeding program are in the general age group of 50 years of age and we'll be losing these valuable people through normal retirement, you know, before very long.

The director says that the federal government has some responsibility in the area of basic research, as do agricultural producers through the Canadian Wheat Board, farmer-owned co-operatives and marketing agencies. So I say again that provision should be made in this bill for producer check-off as their contribution to the basic research that we need.

We are all aware of the fact that the Canadian National Railways' main line has been out of commission to the Pacific seaboard for some months. It is back in business now. The government has made no move to bypass this bottleneck in the Fraser canyon, which could be done with a simple 40-mile loop. We desperately need more facilities in the Pacific seaboard, and we see no reason why the government cannot act and why it cannot pay interest on the deferred settlements and extend those deferred settlements with interest for the present year or for two or three years.

We heard the minister say that we have to accept the "user pay" proposition and that the St. Lawrence Seaway tolls have to go up. It seems to me that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that the free market system under which the users pay is not working for the general good. We are told that the AT and east rates for export flour and winter grains for the maritimes will be removed. In this particular case there was no prior consultation with the industries. It was an arbitrary decision by the minister playing fast and loose with the industry, I suggest. From 1954 to 1974 world demand for flour increased by 50 per cent. Canada's share of the flour trade declined from 31 per cent to 11 per cent in 1974. The world flour market is fiercely competitive due to the implementation of subsidy programs by many foreign governments. Many markets for our winter exports can only be met by the export of flour to West Africa and the West Indies where there is no milling capacity. The Soviet Union has indicated that Canada is no longer competitive in world flour markets and that further increases in price will require them to look for alternate suppliers.

To return to the matter of the AT and east freight rates, the removal of which will be disastrous for our flour industry, Mr. Sneath, president of the Manitoba pool elevators, had this to say:

We have stated many times that the Seaway provides a service which is in the national interest and should not, therefore, be expected to generate a profit. Approximately one year ago, it was suggested by the Seaway authority to the Hon. Jean Marchand, then minister of transport, that rate increases should be considered. At the same time, a proposal to write off the long-term debt and interest charges, was also suggested. We encourage the latter, and suggest that such a move would increase traffic and, even at present rates, keep the Seaway down in the black.

The Manitoba pool president stated that decisions on this matter should not be made arbitrarily. He said:

As a member of the Great Lakes Waterways Development Association, and as users of the Seaway, we feel strongly that Canadian users should be consulted about the effects of any increase in rates on their operations.

It does not take much studying of the western Canadian grain industry to realize that the minister has handed to Mr. Justice Emmett Hall the impossible task of deciding the fate of our western rail system, primarily because none of the factors in our grain system at present are stable; everything seems to be in a state of flux. I will mention just one factor, namely, the inland terminal concept in western Canada which has everyone wondering.

The minister's treatment of our grain industry can be likened to a building catching fire. It is the combustion of one object which generates the heat required to ignite the next, and unless counter measures are taken the fire spreads farther and farther, becoming more difficult to control, until nothing is left.

When we look at the problems facing our industry, we remember that under the 1974 tariff structure for the country elevators it costs as much to lift the grain 50 feet into the air as it costs the railways to move it 1,000 miles. Other problems are the export grain rates to be changed, rail line abandonment, the metric conversion of the grain industry, the fact that our competitors have long-term deals with our best customers while we have none, more storage at the Pacific seaboard, etc. Perhaps we should consider storage of grain overseas where the customers are. Companies such as Imperial Oil, Standard Oil and Gulf would not keep their oil in the United States. They promote its sale by having it where the customers are. As I have mentioned, we need more research into new varieties of grain.

The minister's actions can be likened to baloney being sliced one thin slice after another. Pretty soon all we will have left is the string, and that is not much good to anyone. Right now grain farmers are about the only Canadian industry not priced out of world markets, and we would like to keep it that way.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my party generally supports this legislation in principle, but we have some comments to make on it. I hope the minister will consider some suggestions that we have to make both at this stage of the debate and in the committee for changes in the legislation. First I should like to comment on the bill in general, and then on two or three specific matters relating to it.

This bill defines the structure of the advisory committee, how its members will be elected, what their duties will be, how they will receive their pay and expenses, and so forth. The previous practice was that advisory committee members were appointed by the minister, usually on the recommendation of major farm organizations. As the minister explained earlier, and as we all know, the situation is now changed so that the producers themselves directly elect members of the advisory committee. The legislation also allows for the establishment of various constituencies for each of the 11 members of the committee and sets out the means for arriving at their pay, the meetings to be held—there will be six in number each year, and I will comment on that later—and who has authority to call a meeting.

One of the disturbing aspects of the situation is that no provision is made, either explicit or implied, for committee members to hold such meetings as may be necessary in order to report back to the permit holders who elected them. Previously there was a six-man advisory committee and the members were nominated by the western co-operatives and the farmers' union. It was not mandatory under the act that they be selected in this manner but that was the practice followed, and it was possible under those circumstances for the members of the former committee to have a means of reporting back to the producers. All the members of the advisory committee were elected officers of farm organizations which were controlled by the producers. A method of reporting to farmers and bringing forward information respecting producers' opinions to the minister or the administrators of the Wheat Board was established.

The advisory committee members who will be elected under the new procedure may not be attached to farm organizations in an official capacity, and since they are nominated and elected we submit that provision should be made for them to be responsible directly to the producers in all respects. It seems to us that if the new committee is to function effectively, there must be provision for it to have the ability to report back to its constituents in the same way as a member of parliament. There must be provision for members of the committee to hold meetings and contact directly the individual producer or collectively contact producers in the regions they represent in the Wheat Board area.

It should also be possible for farmers in the constituency to initiate meetings if the need should arise and if they wish to meet with a member of the advisory committee. There should also be provision for the advisory committee to have a meeting called upon its own request. Provision should be made whereby the advisory committee, either unanimously or by a quorum of five or six members, could request the board to call a meeting of the committee. It should then be obligatory for the board to do so.

The legislation provides that the board shall call six meetings per year of the advisory committee. What would happen if some matter arose which members of the advisory committee thought was so urgent and important that an extra meeting was required? It seems to us that the advisory committee, through either a majority or a quorum, should be able to request a meeting, and that it should be obligatory on the chief commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board to call such a meeting. It should not be left just to the board or just to the limitation of the act providing for six meetings per year. If the members of the advisory committee feel there should be three or four meetings more than that during the course of a year, the legislation should allow it to happen. It should not be just at the whim of the minister or the Canadian Wheat Board.

If a majority of the advisory committee members feel that additional meetings are warranted, this bill should make provision for that and the members should be paid their pay and allowances. The committee should not be put in the position of being suspected of being nothing more than a puppet for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board or being at the beck and call of the Canadian Wheat Board. Some degree of autonomy and freedom of action of the advisory committee should be in the legislation. Unless something of this nature is provided for the committee, it will look too much like some sort of pussy cat for the board.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

The bill proposes to amend section 10 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act and it lays out in full detail how the advisory committee shall be elected, how it shall be constituted, and so forth. It is to be constituted by regions, or what I choose to call constituencies, which each advisory board member will represent. The legislation provides that this shall be arrived at by the governor in council. I wonder why this could not be done by the redistribution commissioner who works on the boundaries of federal constituencies for members of parliament. Why cannot this be done by the redistribution commissioner, or at least by the Canadian Wheat Board itself? I ask that because, frankly, I would feel nervous if the decision as to the areas which members of the advisory committee will represent were left in the hands of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board and his cabinet colleagues. I think I have good reason for that nervousness. I do not see why the governor in council should be the body to have responsibility for determining the boundaries of the constituencies of the members of the advisory committee.

The expenses and allowances paid to members of the advisory committee should be sufficient to allow them to incur what could be considered reasonable costs for travelling about the constituencies they represent, holding meetings and reporting back to their constituents, the grain producers who are the permit holders they represent. It seems to us that this should be a two-way street of communication, not only from the bottom up but from the top down. The advisory committee should be able to report back to those permit holders who are grain producers and tell them how much of their advice is being taken by the Canadian Wheat Board, by the minister or by both of them, and how much of it is being ignored. I submit that the grain producers have a right to know just what effect the advice of the advisory committee will have on the minister and the Canadian Wheat Board.

Having an advisory committee democratically elected by grain producers will be of little use if the grain producers have no way of knowing whether that committee is of any benefit to them, or whether the minister or the Canadian Wheat Board is paying any attention to it. Is this just going to be window-dressing, something which makes it appear as if the Canadian Wheat Board is drawing upon the best possible advice from the grain producers' representatives and using it? This two-way communication should be built into the legislation, which means allowing each member of the advisory committee sufficient expenses in order to report back to the grain producers he represents.

The legislation also provides for the continuing of grain deliveries from an existing crop year into a new crop year. There is nothing new about this. The minister is just making it formally possible in the legislation, but in many previous crop years the Canadian Wheat Board, grain companies, railroads and everyone just turned a blind eye. We always had a saying that July 31 could be a very long day. Quota deliveries for the previous crop year were delivered on the fourth, fifth, tenth and twenty-fourth days of the new crop year, but the storage tickets, or the cash tickets which the elevator agent made out were all dated July 31. This was to allow producers who, through no fault of their own, had been unable to deliver their quotas before the expiration of the crop year, to deliver them so that all would be fairly treated. I hope that is the intent of the minister in putting this provision into the legislation.

The third change is a proposal to amend the act by bringing in an addition after section 32. Under the provisions of the new legislation, the Board could select certain grades, a minimum of two, and form a separate pool in any crop year. The purpose of this is to permit the setting up of separate pools for malting barleys so that the premiums now paid can be passed directly to the producers. This proposal also provides for the setting up of separate pools for separate classes of wheat such as Durum and winter wheat. We generally support that idea. However, I want to caution the minister and the House that while we support the idea of separate pools in the case of malting barleys and in some instances two or more grades of wheat, I hope the minister and the board will not allow this separate pooling to be carried on to such an extent that one of the major reasons for the existence of the Canadian Wheat Board is rendered useless.

One of the reasons for having a Wheat Board was that returns from the sale of grains would be pooled so that all producers would benefit relatively equally. Another reason was that bad weather or poor export markets would not cause one group of producers in any part of the Wheat Board area to be treated less fairly than those in another part of the Wheat Board area. I wonder whether the allowing of separate pooling for not less than two grades should be made something like not less than three grades. I wonder if this would prevent any narrowing down or pooling just for special areas which, I submit, could then weaken one of the main principles behind having the Wheat Board. The idea of doing this with malting barley is good, although I am concerned about the two-grade limit. That ought to be the minimum limit, otherwise we could destroy the very purpose for the existence of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Something which has happened in connection with malting barley in the last two crop years, and possibly before then, concerns me greatly. I am thinking of producers who have special permits to deliver carload lots of malting barley. Sometimes the Canadian Wheat Board or a grain company will phone a producer with a special permit for a carload lot of malting barley and ask him to deliver, but that producer must haul to another shipping point on another railway line because the railway company has abandoned temporarily the railway line serving him.

That has been the experience of hundreds of producers in the past two crop years. It happened in my own constituency before Christmas. The railway had shut down one line for over a month and announced it would not open it for two more months. Several producers within the area had carload lots which had to be delivered by December 20. But there were no trains. Consequently, the farmers were told to haul the grain an extra 20 or 40 miles one way. The extra trucking cost gobbled up any premium they might have earned from their malting barley. There is not much point establishing a separate pool for malting barley if in hundreds of cases the premium the farmer would earn from delivering a carload lot of malting barley is used to meet extra trucking costs, costs incurred because the rail line is not functioning.

If this is allowed to continue there will not be much in the pool to divide among farmers. It has happened in dozens of instances all over the three prairie provinces. The railways have allowed their railway lines to deteriorate. The rail lines are in a disgraceful condition. Trains have not run over some of them for months on end. Then, when a grain producer receives an order or a special order of the kind I have mentioned, he cannot ship from his own shipping point. Consequently, many Canadian Wheat Board shipping orders are left unfilled and the efficiency of the Canadian Wheat Board, the pool system, the block system, unit trains, etc., is effectively harmed.

In my constituency there is a line which had not carried a train for over three months. The railway had allowed the condition of the line to deteriorate. Many producers served by that line could not fill outstanding Canadian Wheat Board shipping orders. There were a number of carload lots of malting barley and odd carload orders for commodities such as rapeseed which could not be shipped by rail. There were over 200 outstanding regular Wheat Board shipping orders. In other words, five or six trainloads of orders could not be filled because that line was not operating.

The railway company would not run a train over the line in the winter. When the matter was raised with the minister and his officials, they said that winter is not a good time to run trains because there is a lot of snow. I point out that last winter was not a hard winter and the line could have stayed open. Not enough snow fell to block a gopher hole, let alone the railway track. The government used snow as an excuse. That was the reason for not running a train on a line about 120 miles long.

It should be pointed out to the minister, since he was involved with this, that if the ground under the track is in bad condition and if your rails are weak because the ties and rails have been insufficiently maintained, the time to run trains on that track is in winter when the ground is frozen. But no, the CPR had to have its own way. The railway closed the line for three or four months because, allegedly, it was snow-covered. So no trains ran over it in the winter months. But the line was also closed in the spring because the ground was soft. You end up with trains not running on branch lines until May or even mid-June. Sometimes people served by branch lines do not see a train on the line for as long as six months.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) suggested that an impossible task has been handed to Mr. Justice Hall. That is perfectly true. I do not know why the task was given to him in the first place. The railway companies should not have been allowed to abandon any rail lines. They should have been told that they will not be allowed to abandon any line until the facts are ascertained and Mr. Justice Hall advises or rules that a certain line can be closed. As I say, it should be the commission's task to decide whether, and which, rail lines should be abandoned. The commission will have an awkward task deciding if a rail line should be abandoned as the railway companies can argue that certain rail lines are already abandoned, so to speak, up to four months each year. The railways have allowed lines to deteriorate so much that they can argue, justifiably, that it is economic suicide to repair them, even if the commission decides to keep them open. The costs will seem horrendous to the railways and to the minister, and the government could well choose to ignore the recommendations of the Hall commission.

We submit that the legislation ought to be broader. Let me repeat something my party has been saying since 1935. Of course we shall argue for improved provisions when the bill is considered in committee. The bill ought to contain provisions which will broaden and strengthen the responsibility of the Canadian Wheat Board. All parties in this House support the existence in principle of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is like motherhood; nobody dares oppose the existence of the Canadian Wheat Board. But certain things done have tended to weaken the authority of the board and lessen its importance and strength.

We want the legislation to give the Canadian Wheat Board full jurisdiction over feed grains. The minister may argue that the farmer should be free to decide where to sell, that is, whether to sell on the open market or to the Canadian Wheat Board. To that I say that the farmers have over-whelmingly shown how they choose. Little feed grain is delivered and sold on the open market. That speaks well for the almost unanimous support western grain producers have shown for the Canadian Wheat Board. Their choice answers the contentions of those who want to cling to the outdated and outmoded free market concept in feed grains. I do not see why we should pander to them. We believe that full jurisdiction over feed grains should be returned to the Canadian Wheat Board. This piddling around with small lots of feed grain on the open market is of no benefit to most grain producers of western Canada.

I say that we should broaden and strengthen the responsibilities of the Wheat Board. This bill ought to do something we have advocated since the early 1930s, that is, put all grains under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. This means bringing commodities like flax, rye and rapeseed under the board's jurisdiction so that no significant quantities of grain in Canada are left to the whim of the grain speculators and the so-called open markets of Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, Winnipeg, and so on. In short, the Canadian Wheat Board should be the sole agency for dealing with all grains produced by western Canadian farmers. Farm organizations have been urging this for decades, as have certain members of parliament. But the government continues to ignore us. We say that this bill should bring under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board flax, rye and rapeseed. We will continue to fight for that.

● (1620)

In summary, when the bill gets to committee I ask the minister to make provision that whenever a quorum or majority of the advisory committee wants to have meetings in addition to the six provided for in the legislation, it is obligatory on the part of the board to call such meetings. In that way, no one could suggest that the advisory committee is a puppet of the minister for the Canadian Wheat Board. It would have some autonomy, some freedom of action. If circumstances arise where the advisory committee feels a meeting is warranted, the legislation should allow for that. The committee should not be limited to six meetings. Provision should be made for the payment of fees, allowances and expenses of the advisory committee meetings in those instances.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

We hope that in committee the minister will tell us what he and the governor in council have in mind with regard to the drafting of regulations under amended section 10.5 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. We will be interested in knowing the ground rules for defining the borders of the electoral districts, as they are called in the legislation. What does the government have in mind with regard to the other provisions under that section? We would like some detail. Unless we have some idea of that, the minister and the governor in council could unwittingly cause things to happen that in effect detract from the need of and purpose for the Canadian Wheat Board advisory committee. I hope that in committee the minister will be willing to discuss the government's intentions with regard to regulations under the amended section 10.5 as contained in Bill C-88.

In conclusion, we support the legislation in principle. We hope the minister will consider changes of the kind I have mentioned. Further, we hope the minister will take the committee into his confidence and give us the details of what he has in mind with regard to implementing the provisions of this bill by order in council.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words with respect to this bill. Our party really has no objection to the bill. I was pleased to hear the minister say he would welcome constructive criticism on various aspects of it. I am concerned primarily with clause 4. We agree with the concept of the advisory committee. It has an important role to play in the function of the Wheat Board. However, what is most important to me is that the advisory committee be made up of actual producers. Section 10.5(3) reads as follows:

> The governor in council may make regulations respecting the conduct of an election of members of the advisory committee and in particular, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations . . .
> (c) prescribing the qualifications of members of the advisory committee and of actual producers for the purposes of section 10—

What has happened here is that the governor in council is given the responsibility of naming the members of the advisory committee. I can visualize a situation where we could end up with members on the committee who are not actual producers. There may not be anything wrong with that, but it is an aspect that should be looked at when the bill is in committee. If, after hearing evidence from organizations and individuals, it is the feeling of the committee that members of the advisory committee must be actual producers, the bill should be changed so that it provides that members of the advisory committee shall be producers.

We have a situation here, as we often have, where the details are not spelled out in the bill. We are governed by regulations at the whims and fancies of the governor in council. Parliament is not given the opportunity of making the decision. If it is put in the legislation by parliament, there can be no changes. As members know, regulations can be changed as often as the governor in council or the cabinet wish. I quote from a news release dated March 10, 1976, page 2, where the minister is shown as saying:

> I have always thought that the 11-member advisory committee should be chosen from amongst farmers, with farmers themselves having a direct vote in their selection. It was with this thought in mind that I authorized the first election of the members of the advisory committee in 1975; the successful candidates in that election were subsequently appointed to the committee by the governor in council as required by the act.

If it is the feeling of the minister that the members should be chosen from among the farmers, he should bring in an amendment at the committee stage to make it law. The minister has stated that he would like constructive criticism. I criticise the bill by making that suggestion. Clause 2, with regard to deferred delivery permits, is interesting. The explanatory note reads:

The purpose of this amendment is to correct errors in the present act.

If you compare the clause in the bill with the section in the act, the only change is changing the word "grain" in the original section to "wheat". I would like to know whether it is the intention that from now on deferred permits will only be granted for wheat. If you read the interpretation in the main bill, "grain" includes several types of grain. It includes wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax and rapeseed. By amending the section and changing it from "grain" to "wheat", unless you can stretch your imagination to say that "wheat" includes all these other grains, you end up in a situation where deferred delivery permits are only granted in the case of wheat. That will have to be looked into at the committee stage.

Clause 4 was included to remedy the situation that occurred in the 1974-75 crop year regarding malting barley. I and many other members of this House received letters from producers in the west complaining about the treatment they received with regard to their malting barley sales. I wish to quote from a typical letter that I received. It is from the town of Macrorie and is dated March 8:

Dear Mr. Neil:

I sold 1,854 bushels of barley in the 1974-75 crop year. This barley was accepted as malting barley but was graded as No. 1 feed. I have found out that the Wheat Board sold this barley at only 10 cents a bushel less than 2-CW malting barley. I would like to know why I received only 18 cents as a final payment, while producers with 2-CW barley received 99 cents a bushel. I do not think this kind of treatment is very fair. I also think that this mismanagement has to be stopped and producers in my situation should be reimbursed for the money they should have rightly received.

● (1630)

Instituting a separate malting pool will not help me now. I have been treated unjustly and would like to see the situation clarified. I do hope you can help me.

Mr. Speaker, my understanding, on the basis of information I have received from the minister's office and from the Wheat Board, is that in the 1974-1975 crop year there was a shortage of malting barley, the result being that maltsters purchased No. 1 feed barley from the Wheat Board to cover the shortage. Approximately one-third of the feed barley sold to the Wheat Board was sold as malting barley to the maltsters. The premium on malting barley during that period was approximately $1 a bushel.

If we look at the annual report of the Wheat Board for the crop year 1974-75, we find that No. 1 CW six-row barley realized an over-all payment of $3.26 per bushel, whereas No. 1. feed realized $2.33, approximately 90 cents a bushel less. The difference in grades 2 and 3 ranged from 90 cents to $1 a bushel. This is what individual producers are complaining about, and I can understand their feelings. I can also understand the problem faced by the Wheat Board in trying to straighten out this situation, and it is for this reason we welcome the amendments contained in the bill.

The minister realized there was a problem, because he wrote to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart) with reference to a specific situation, stating:

To overcome this problem in the current year and in future crop years I introduced in parliament on March 8 an amending bill which, when approved, will enable the establishment of a separate pool for selected barley. I am enclosing for your information my press release of March 10 concerning this matter. As you are aware, changing the pooling system of the Canadian Wheat Board is not a simple matter which can be achieved overnight at the whim of myself or the board. The present system is regulated by the Canadian Wheat Board Act and in order to change that system and establish a separate pool for malting barley legislative amendments to the act must first be drafted, then considered and approved by parliament. Once the bill introduced on March 8 is approved, the returns to the board for barley which is selected and accepted by maltsters will be deposited in a separate pool. The final payment for No. 1. feed barley which was selected and accepted as malting barley will therefore fully reflect the board's selling price to the maltsters... The amendment will be retroactive to deliveries of malting barley in the current crop year.

So the present crop year, 1976-77, will be covered. Mr. Speaker, I have read carefully clause 4 of the bill which presumably refers to barley although I see no mention of barley in it. I know the minister will say that as far as this clause is concerned, wheat is barley; but this seems strange to me. Talk to anyone in western Canada and they will tell you that wheat is wheat and barley is barley.

An hon. Member: And never the twain shall meet.

Mr. Neil: For the life of me I cannot understand why, when amending the act, we should be called upon to say that wheat means barley. Nevertheless, that is the situation in the bill before us and it is typical of a lot of the legislation brought before the House. We do not call things by their proper names. We do not call a spade a spade: we might call it a manual, earth-moving machine. I cannot understand why in this bill it should be necessary to call barley, wheat. Part of the original Wheat Board legislation deals with oats and barley, and it seems to me it would be simple to amend that portion of the legislation so that pooling arrangements could apply. Otherwise, if the minister feels it is not possible, let us call barley by its true name and not call it wheat.

As things are, the ordinary individual reading this bill is likely to be confused. I should like to see the entire Wheat Board Act put into a form in which it is understood by the average individual, so that farmers would have no need to consult a solicitor to determine what a particular section meant.

I am sure the barley producers of western Canada will welcome the amendments contained in this bill. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) told us a few minutes ago that he would like to see included in the bill provisions for a protein grading system which would ensure that those who produce high protein crops would obtain a premium for their production. We all know that the board, when disposing of this high quality grain on world markets, receives a premium amounting to around 35 cents a bushel. I appreciate it can be argued that the pooling arrangement is fair to all, but generally speaking those in the high protein growing areas get lower yields than those who grow low protein wheat in the wetter areas. I believe it would even out in the long run. Many farmers in western Canada are clamouring for changes in the system so that they can receive a premium for their high grade protein product.

As I said earlier, I am looking forward to seeing the bill sent to committee and having the opportunity to question the minister and his officials with respect to specific clauses. The minister has told us he is prepared to accept criticism, and I hope he is prepared to make changes if he considers that criticism to be constructive.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter the debate on Bill C-88 and say a few words with regard to some of the changes suggested to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Some years ago the Canadian Wheat Board Act was renewed on a ten-year basis. In practice it came up for renewal every ten years. Two years ago the government of the day suggested that this was wrong and wanted to demonstrate its good faith in the Wheat Board by making the act permanent and doing away with the ten-year review. Since that demonstration of good faith we have seen major changes in the operation of the Wheat Board, some of which I greatly fear are to the detriment not only of the board but of the farmers in western Canada.

I always believed that the primary function of the Wheat Board was to ensure equal market opportunities and fair treatment for the farmers of western Canada. The quota system is perhaps one of the ways in which this clear and equal opportunity can be demonstrated to the farmers of western Canada; yet the authority of the Wheat Board and its ability to provide fair and equal service to the farmers of western Canada is being eroded.

The minister has come along with a feed grains proposal which allows for the open market buying of grain but which has not clearly demonstrated a pricing system for open market grain. It is a "Guess and by God" proposal which is supposed to hinge upon the initial payment plus the expected future payment. Sometimes it is relevant and sometimes it is not. It has brought about high feed grain prices for the cattle producers of western Canada, and this has caused them hardship in what might be called a very difficult period for the cattle feeding industry.

It has also caused a great deal of difficulty to the grain producers because it has tied up a great deal of storage, particularly at Vancouver. Having to keep open quota grain and Wheat Board grain in storage at Vancouver for the grain companies—really for the farmers—has caused duplication of storage of grain and has tied up bins. The Canadian Wheat Board now comes along and tells the farmers of western Canada that they are going to dock, or deduct from the final payment a certain amount of money in order to encourage the building of storage at Vancouver.

I, personally, regret that the Wheat Board had to take this unilateral action of using the farmers' money to build storage at Vancouver. I think that the government and the grain companies could have done this on their own. I well remember the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), boasting in Calgary during the 1972 election that the government was concentrating on overhauling Vancouver harbour and building greater storage facilities there. Well, Mr. Speaker, I happened to look up some figures, to be found in Hansard of February 5, 1972, which indicated that the government had spent very little money in Vancouver, that in fact the amount of money spent in Vancouver between 1967 and 1972 had gone down drastically. Yet Vancouver handles something like 30 per cent of the total tonnage moving into Canada through National Harbours Board ports.

Since the minister has failed to overhaul Vancouver harbour since 1972, the Wheat Board, acting in good faith on behalf of the farmers of western Canada, have taken this task unto themselves. They have lost faith in the government and in the Minister of Transport who acts and speaks for the Wheat Board in the House of Commons. I think there is great need for further space in Vancouver because of the complicated manipulations that are involved in an open quota grain system and a Wheat Board quota system for grain. The situation will only be further complicated unless somehow or other in the regulations governing malting barley a definite grade is approved by the maltsters.

Anybody who has attempted to sell malting barley in the past knows that you can take one load of grain out of the granary and it will go malting. Yet the very next load will not go malting. What does this mean in terms of dollars and cents, Mr. Speaker? In the past year it means something like 78 cents a bushel. One farmer can sell grain as malting barley consistently. Another farmer just across the road might well believe he has harvested grain with the same low protein content, with no peel or broken kernels, yet he cannot get malting barley.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that I completely agree that there should be a separate pool for malting barley, but the Wheat Board at the same time should establish quite clearly a number of things. First of all, it should make quite clear that the maltsters can buy their malting barley only from the Wheat Board. If that is not made clear, the grain companies—and I fear the international grain companies because of their skill in marketing—might well be a jump ahead of the pool and in their search for customers might well use their ability to sell malting barley to the maltsters and give them a premium of some 78 or 80 cents a bushel. This would mean that the co-ops and other Canadian-owned grain companies would not be able to make sales to the maltsters.

Secondly, the Canadian Wheat Board should quite clearly lay down what in essence passes for malting barley and what does not. It should not be left to the maltsters to decide what they will accept as malting barley and what they will not accept, because I fear favouritism and that the big farmers will get the advantage over the little farmers. For example, if the maltsters want 5,000 or 10,000 bushels of grain and they can buy it all from one farmer, all from the same sample, there will be a tendency to do so. It will mean that the big farmers will get the 78 to 80 cents a bushel premium and that the small farmers will not have an equal opportunity to get the same premium.

We must always remember, Mr. Speaker, that the purpose of setting up the Canadian Wheat Board was to ensure equality and fair treatment for the prairie farmers. I have seen the erosion of this equality during the past number of years under this minister who now speaks for the Canadian Wheat Board. While I am in complete support of a separate pool for malting barley, I see the danger of further erosion of a guarded principle that I think most farmers treasure—that of equality and fair treatment. If necessary, steps must be taken to establish a couple of clear principles—that the Wheat Board is the only body to sell to the maltsters and that the Wheat Board sets the quality or grade of malting barley, not the maltsters themselves.

While speaking on this question, I might say that I am a long-time believer in a separate pool for high protein grades and that growers of high protein wheat should get a premium. It is a well known and established fact that the farmers in northern Saskatchewan and northern Alberta are more likely to grow malting barley. This is low protein barley and has a better chance of success in the area owing to the climate in that part of the country. Barley in that area has a better chance of having no peel or broken kernels.

The very opposite is true with regard to the protein grading of wheat. It is a well known fact that farmers in southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta have a tendency to grow high protein wheat. High protein wheat is grown in what is commonly referred to as the Palliser triangle. Farmers in the Palliser triangle should get a bonus or premium for growing high protein wheat. In the past year this would have amounted to 33 cents to 35 cents per bushel. That also should be kept separate so that this premium would be paid. The net result of paying the premium on high protein wheat would be an encouragement to produce high protein wheat, and the net result of paying the premium on malting barley in a fair manner would be an encouragement to produce malting barley.

These two factors would also decrease the subsidization that now occurs in the pooling system that has been in place in the past. The premium on high protein wheat has gone into a general pool, has been divied up and has tended to maintain a higher average price for low grade wheat. The premium on malting barley has gone into a general pool with feed barley and has tended to maintain a higher average price for low or what one might call feed barley. These two facts tend to keep the price of feed grain high on the prairies. With these grains separated out, the feed grain would bring a price more comparable with what the feeding industry is prepared, willing and able to pay. I suggest this should be done.

Before this bill is passed—and I hope this is the intention of the minister—we should allow the committee to call members of the Canadian Wheat Board before it to answer a number of questions that ought to be asked. Is the open feed grain policy causing congestion at the terminals? If that is the case, as the railroads claim, we should examine that policy. That is one question I should like to ask. It has always been my belief that an open feed grains policy was designed to aid the sale of feed grains domestically rather than internationally. Why, then, is it causing congestion at the ports and terminals? This particular question should be aired and examined very thoroughly by the committee on agriculture. When this bill goes to the committee it will provide an opportunity for examination.

Canada Malting Co. Ltd. is one of the largest buyers of malting barley. Who owns that company? Is it true that Molson's and Labatt's have members on the board of directors of Canada Malting Co. Ltd.? Does this not bring about a conflict of interest regarding the price to be paid for malt, which in turn reflects the price to be paid for malting barley? Do the maltsters and Canada Malting seriously desire to export malt to the United States and other countries? Surely, with our ability to produce malting barley, we should be prepared to export malt to a greater extent than has been the case in the past.

Surely, it would be desirable to bring about a fair grading system for malting barley so that it could clearly be identified on each occasion and not be at the whim of the malting companies. In this way, malting barley would be clearly identifiable by farmers, grain companies and the Canadian Wheat Board. They would then know what ingredients make a sample of barley qualify for the premium.

It is a well-known fact that farmers have sent in a sample of what they felt was malting barley which has been rejected, and then sent in the same sample two weeks later and had it passed as malting barley and shipped the same carload. If we are to pay an 80-cent premium, we must have a more definitive system than the one that exists. If we do not, we will cause even more dissatisfaction over the long haul. Certainly there is a great deal of dissatisfaction today on the part of farmers who grow malting barley. They resent very much losing out on the 78-cent or 80-cent premium.

The province of Alberta grows over 50 per cent of the barley that qualifies for malting, and therefore it is the duty of Alberta members particularly to point out that our farmers want that premium. We want that premium paid to those farmers who have the capability of growing malting barley, and we want the small farmer to have an equal opportunity with the large farmer in qualifying for the premium.

Members of the Wheat Board and of the Board of Grain Commissioners should be called before the committee to clearly state that they can set up a grading principle or system which in essence will be satisfactory to the trade and, most importantly, to the producers who are to receive the premium.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) suggested that in 1974-75, 18 million bushels were bought as No. 1 feed and sold as malting barley. This is a clear case of the grain companies picking up the 80-cent premium. This is another reason the grading system has to be clearly understood by the farmers so they can prevent the grain companies from what amounts to stealing the premium. The grain company can buy up the barley as No. 1 feed, send in a sample or a mixed sample later on and qualify for the malting barley premium. It is of paramount importance that we set up a fair grading system for malting barley.

It is extremely important that the Canadian Wheat Board be given sole authority to handle malting barley under a clearly defined grading system. It is also important that the premium should be paid on high protein wheat. These two points should be made to representatives of the Wheat Board who come before the committee on agriculture to discuss this bill.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

OLD AGE SECURITY

SUGGESTED RETROACTIVE PAYMENT TO DATE AT WHICH PERSONS ATTAINED AGE 65

Mr. J. Larry Condon (Middlesex-London-Lambton): moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider amending the Old Age Security Act to grant the Minister of National Health and Welfare the discretionary power to make retroactive payments under the Old Age Security Act to the date at which a person has attained the age of 65 years regardless of the date on which an application is received when it is shown that an applicant has failed to apply at the proper time due to sickness, justifiable ignorance, absence or for other serious and similar reasons.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention very early in my career as part of the government team that in respect of old age security there is a matter which has been of concern not only to me but, I am sure, to other members of the government and of the opposition. This concern relates to people who for some reason or other do not realize the advantages available to them in respect of the old age security pension and are not given the opportunity after one year has elapsed to have it made available to them. In such a case, obviously they lose at least one year's pension, a pension for which they have fully qualified.

I think the care of our senior citizens has become a passion for many of us. Obviously, the government has played a part in this. Representatives from countries all over the world come to Canada to study our social programs. I think we should realize that our senior citizens are the people who participated in the process of making this country great. In many ways it is because of our people who are retired that we have today a free, democratic system. Obviously, this has added to the greatness of Canada and for many of us has added to the quality of our respect not only for the old people but for the country in which we live.

The Liberal government, through its foresight and concern for not just the old people, or the senior citizens as they are now called, has over the period of its history brought in many social programs. I am afraid that on many occasions the government has neither taken nor received credit for this. At this time I think perhaps I should refer to the credit the government should receive. Frequently in the newspapers we read of the problems governments face. Because they are governments they are criticized. However, let us look at the other side of the coin because it is obvious this has not been drawn to the attention of the people of Canada.

On many occasions we have heard of the great strides taken by the New Democratic Party, but we have not seen too much evidence of this. This is because the liberal government has won the elections. Why has the Liberal government won the elections? Is it because it has come in with promises before election time? No. It is because the Liberal government has shown the people of Canada that it listens to them and is concerned about the people of Canada both young and old. It is also because of the fact that the representations which are made to the people are acceptable to the people.

One problem in respect of this particular legislation has been the lack of retroactive payment after one year. Let us take a look at some of the reasons and some of the people who are affected by this loophole. We are very fortunate in Canada and in my riding that we have many senior citizens. The people who send congratulations to these people are amazed that some of them are 80, 90 or 100 years of age and have been married for 40, 50 or 60 years.

If I were asked why there are so many of these people in my riding, I think I would say that although it is neither a riding in which there is great poverty or great prosperity, it is one in which the older people had to work long and hard for a living. They did not have the benefit of the social security programs that are available now. They had to work in order to provide a strong base for future generations. Not all of us, when we reach age 65, will be able to say we will retain 100 per cent of our faculties. Many do, but others are less fortunate. I think we must have concern for these people.

Back in the so-called old days when our society was not as mobile as it is now, the children were around the family or were in very close proximity to their parents. In many cases the parents lived in their children's homes. Now, in this mobile society, when the children grow up they have great prospects right across Canada. Many of the children look for jobs outside the proximity of their homes. When the parents reach age 65 they do not have the opportunity to go to their children and ask what they should do in respect of a certain form. They know they are entitled to the old age pension but they are not sure how to get it. Not always in all areas are offices available to such people. It would be nice to say that they could go to any town in Canada to obtain the necessary information.

We must also realize that people 65 years of age have pride. This is not a false pride. They have pride in the fact that they have gone through life supporting their children, paying their bills and attempting to have a comfortable living without depending on anyone. These people had self-sufficiency. They depended on themselves. With their pride, they ask themselves whether people would think they were becoming senile if they asked too many questions. I do not believe these people who have a fear of asking questions should be left out.

The department, of course, has done an excellent job; there is no question about that. However, it is difficult, if not impossible, for the government to follow up on every particular case. When these people find out that a one-year period has elapsed, I think they should be given an opportunity to reclaim the money which is justly theirs. The legislation was set up to take care of these people and provide them with an income. Periodically we all receive letters. I have here a letter from a lady who is a senior citizen. When she became 65 years of age, because of her pride—as I mentioned before—she did not apply for the pension. However, she was under the impression that she could draw it later, with accumulated interest. She thought the money would be held in trust and that she could withdraw it later. As we know, this is not the case.

I understand that this lady is now out helping other senior citizens. She has not only given of herself for 65 years, but is now 71 years of age is still going around helping people in her area who are not as well off monetarily or physically. She was under the impression that she could leave the money there or hold it in trust until it gained interest, after which she could take it out and spread it around to more people. I can mention other such cases; there are many across Canada.

Let us assume that a woman reaches the age of 65 first, and that her husband is five, six or ten months younger. All these years the assumption was that the husband was older. In the old days I suppose that meant something. They had lived together for 40 years, and on the wife's sixty-fifth birthday she did not claim her social insurance because she did not want it coming into the house, thus making it obvious to the husband that she was 65. There was a bond in that marriage, a bond which kept the marriage together for many years. It is a bond that the wife did not want to break because her husband felt she was the younger of the two. I am sure that on many occasions this happens. Wives in the old days had to be younger than the husband to get married. I am sure there are many Canadians in that category. Why should they be penalized for this? Why should they be penalized because of that bond and sincerity they had for perhaps 40 or 45 years?

I suggest it is time this legislation was either changed in some way or that discretionary power was given to the minister. This could be done very simply and it would show the sincerity and concern we feel, not only for the ones who apply for and receive social security but for all Canadians whom we want to enjoy the opportunities which Canada offers and which they so richly deserve.

[Translation]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the previous speaker, has suggested that the legislation on old age security should be amended in the House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the motion which my colleague has presented certainly has a great deal of attraction, but I would like to examine carefully the implications of the measure he is proposing. At present an applicant has a period of two years within which it is possible for him to file an application, one year preceding his sixty-fifth birthday and one year subsequent to it during which the law permits the payment of retroactive benefits for as long as 12 months.

The motion introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon), is intended to permit payment of a lump sum benefit equal to at least 13 or more times the monthly amount of the benefits payable under the Old Age Security Act. Such a proposal does not really fit one of the basic objectives of the old age security program, namely, that it is an income security program for older persons designed to provide a basic current income on retirement to residents of Canada. The program is intended to provide a regular flow of income to enable those who might not have had the opportunity to set aside savings during their working careers on which to live in retirement, to meet the daily expenses of an adequate standard of living on a current basis.

The guaranteed income supplement further enforces this objective by providing additional moneys monthly for those who can demonstrate that the flow of cash receipts they have obtained within the period of the past year or less is insufficient to meet their immediate maintenance needs. I should like to say that the program is not designed to be a long-term savings plan or to provide benefit options to meet different contingencies. It is available to all eligible applicants for day to day living needs, but is not a method of capital accumulation for later withdrawal.

The requirement that an application be filed before benefits are paid is essential to the operation of the old age security program since, if potential applicants do not come forward, it would be virtually impossible to identify and locate those who are eligible in order to begin the payment of benefits. At present, an application for benefits may be filed well before eligibility for pension commences, although for administrative reasons persons are advised not to apply more than one year in advance, as I said earlier. For those who might miss the eligibility date, up to 12 full months of retroactive benefits may be paid, as I have indicated. Thus, a potential recipient has at least a full two years within which to file an application without any loss of benefits whatsoever.

It has been shown that of the Canadian population in general, 95 per cent are familiar with the old age security program. Because of their greater interest, it is not unreasonable to assume that the awareness of the program is even higher among the population approaching retirement age. My colleague, in his motion, itemized a number of circumstances which he feels would justify the increased retroactive payment of benefits. One of these is absence.

All hon. members are aware of the fact that an application for old age security benefits can only be accepted and approved from a non-resident of Canada if that person had previously resided in Canada for at least 40 years after reaching the age of 18. Therefore, in many cases an application cannot be accepted or a benefit paid to a person who is out of the country. I trust that my colleague is not suggesting that this clause should serve as a means whereby persons whose non-residence in Canada would normally disentitle them to benefits would be able to circumvent the eligibility reuqirements by applying for benefits retroactively and pleading absence.

For those persons who would be eligible to apply for benefits from abroad, the fact that they are required to have lived in Canada for 40 years of their adult life means that they could not have left this country before the age of 58. As I mentioned earlier, they would have a full two years or more within which to remind themselves of the need to apply for the benefit and submit the application, without any loss of old age security benefits. Even our much maligned postal service would no doubt be equal to the task of delivering an application within 24 months from the very farthest corner of the globe.

Sickness is another circumstance where this greater retroactivity would apply under my colleague's suggestion. As we have heard, under the current old age security legislation a special provision is made whereby a person who cannot apply for benefits on his own behalf because of infirmity, illness or any other good reason may have someone else apply for him. Also, when a person is not sufficiently mobile to visit one of the many Old Age Security or Canada Pension Plan offices across the country, representatives of these offices will make home visits—a service which few ill persons can expect even from their doctors these days.

Justifiable ignorance is another reason which is accepted in awarding larger retroactive benefits. "Ignorance" is a rather open-ended word. Ignorance of what? Are we speaking about ignorance of the program? If so, let us look at that question. As I said earlier, 95 per cent of the full age range of the population know about the old age security program. As personal interest in such things grows with the proximity of potential benefits, the older age groups who are thinking of retirement—let us say from 55 years and up, an age group about which I am particularly sensitive—are doubtless even more aware of the program.

Of the population aged 65 and over, more than 98 per cent are receiving old age security benefits. Of the remainder, less than 2 per cent who are not receiving the benefits—a goodly number, approaching 1.5 per cent—would not be eligible for the benefits because they do not meet the residence requirements. Others who are not receiving the benefit at one point in time, although eligible, will apply and begin to receive it within a year, and so are covered by the existing retroactivity provision.

Once we eliminate all these groups, we are left with very few potential cases. Who are the people in this group? Their most important characteristic which we should consider is their financial position. If someone over 65 is in financial need and seeks assistance from virtually any source in this country, he or she will be made aware, if they are not already, of the old age security benefits available to them. Social assistance agencies, private benefit plans, financial counsellors, retirement groups and friends all know of the program and would refer them to the old age security program. One quarter of the people over 65 who do not receive old age security do receive some other form of government transfer payment and therefore are doubtless aware of the old age security program.

Of course, in some cases pride enters into the question. My hon. friend discussed pride—pride upon which, presumably, a marriage survived over a long period of time. I understand the circumstances and I find them a little unusual. However, it is not unusual for a retired person to refuse government income even though he or she is in need. This position can, and does, apply to old age security as much as to other public benefits. Where persons of their own free will choose not to apply for OAS benefits, as they are entitled to do, I question whether the government can or should interfere with that choice. Again, where it can be shown medically that such a choice is the result of physical or mental deterioration, some other person may apply for the benefit of behalf of the beneficiary. Finally, there are those in our society who are in the happy position of not needing OAS benefits. For these people the limit on retroactivity is not a financial hardship.

I wish to reiterate that OAS benefits are designed to provide current income to meet day to day needs. Although, as a result of various circumstances, a person may meet these needs by some other means for an extended period of time, this should not serve to transform the basic purpose of the program to that of a means of capital accumulation.

There is another type of ignorance to which we might refer. That is personal ignorance of one's own age. In a limited number of cases when people come forward to apply for OAS benefits and are asked to provide proof of age, they discover that they are older, sometimes by several years, than they had always thought themselves to be. With more accurate records, and so on, this situation will become less and less common. However, for those in this situation now the late determination of their true age means the loss of OAS benefits. Of course, this discovery will affect more than just OAS, and the interaction of a large retroactive OAS payment with other affected benefits or legislation must be considered. Payments under the Canada assistance plan, war veterans' allowances and some private pension plans are fully or partially offset by OAS benefits. A long-term retroactive payment of OAS benefits would retroactively affect the recipient's status under such programs or plans. In addition, there are the possible income tax effects of the receipt of a large cash benefit payment in any one year.

Finally, the hon. member's motion states that where an acceptable reason for late application is presented, the OAS benefit is to be paid retroactively to the date at which the person attained age 65 in all cases. I want to talk about this. Such a provision, if interpreted in the manner in which I think it could be interpreted, would introduce a far greater and more serious inequality than that which the motion purports to remedy.

Let us consider one or two possible hypothetical cases. The proposal might entitle a person to a retroactive benefit for the full period from age 65, even though had he or she applied for that benefit at age 65, he or she would not have been eligible for the payment at that time. This would occur when the applicant had ten years continuous residence at, say, age 68 and applied then for a retroactive benefit on the ground of justifiable ignorance. However, at age 65, with only seven years of residence, that same person would not have qualified for OAS.

Another example to which I referred briefly earlier is the applicant who is resident in Canada at age 68 when the application is made for the retroactive benefit, but at age 65 was living abroad and did not have long enough Canadian residence to qualify for receipt of OAS benefits abroad at that time. I must concede that these are hypothetical cases, and the hon. member who proposed the motion might well agree that it would be possible to make amendments in drafting the legislation in such a way as to make sure that the clear intent of parliament when the legislation was introduced would not be thwarted.

I suggest that there is no major inequity in the present situation. I am suggesting to hon. members that they must look at the basic objective of the program, and that is to provide a decent standard of living, so far as possible, on a current basis. The purpose of the program is not to provide a savings program, not to accumulate assets and not to accumulate credits. For these reasons, I suggest that this House might want to think fairly carefully before extending the period of retroactivity under the legislation.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of becoming involved in this debate, but I was impressed with the seriousness of the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon). I listened to him with a great deal of compassion because I have had one or two experiences in which people who for one reason or another did not apply in time or, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, within one year after having attained the age of 65.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was Ottawa West (Mr. Francis).

Mr. Alexander: Well, I think we all know to whom I am making reference. I do have some knowledge as to the possibility of hardship, but I did not realize just how many people would be involved. I was pleased to hear that if there are any, there are not many. It is something like 5 per cent who for one reason of another were not in a position to apply for old age security. I think that is a very significant statistic.

In order to assist the hon. member who moved this motion, I suggest there might be a need for more advertising; for example, a full page ad once a year in the daily newspapers saying, "You are entitled to old age security if you can meet the following criteria." Is this being done? Perhaps it is, but not often.

● (1730)

As members of parliament we are responsible for advising constituents, including old age citizens, of available government programs. Certainly I try to tell my constituents that unemployment insurance is available in such and such circumstances, that old age security and the old age supplement are available in certain circumstances. Many members send their constituents newsletters, some of which are factual, but many of which are partisan. Perhaps our newsletters should be more constructive and tell constituents what is available. After all, we are concerned about people who have worked for years. They are entitled to benefits.

Why do people sometimes not apply? Well, what about the wife who is older than the husband? Perhaps she is embarrassed to admit she is 65, when her friends thought her only 55. Some do not apply because they are afraid of some possible stigma.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And others apply automatically.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, and others apply automatically. Or there could be peculiar circumstances which inhibit an application.

The hon. member suggests in his motion that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) should be given discretionary power:

> . . . to make retroactive payments under the Old Age Security Act to the date at which a person has attained the age of 65 years regardless of the date on which an application is received when it is shown that an applicant has failed to apply at the proper time due to sickness, justifiable ignorance, absence or for other serious and similar reasons.

Old age security gives a monthly income to the retired. The phrase in the motion "regardless of the date on which an application is received" troubles me. You see, Mr. Speaker, if we adopt this part of the motion we shall open the door for all sorts of abuse. What if a person waited five or six years before applying? He would be entitled to a lump sum payment. I do not think the original act intended that. I respect the hon. member's motives; they are grand. But there is a fault here.

The motion speaks of an applicant who fails to apply at the proper time due to sickness. Well, someone else can apply on the applicants' behalf. There are such procedures. Surely uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters, even parents, of the sick can forward applications. There is entitlement to old age security if the proper application is made.

The motion then uses the word, "that an applicant has failed to apply—due to—justifiable ignorance." It is an interesting phrase, but I don't know what it means. Does it mean ignorance of the law, ignorance of this motion, or ignorance of rights? And what is "justifiable" ignorance? That is open to interpretation in court, and we all know what happens in court when lawyers argue.

The concluding words of the motion are, "—absence or for other serious and similar reasons." Absence is a tricky word. Does it apply to residency? If it does, it could frustrate the legitimate intention of the law having to do with residency periods. And the last few words, "—or for other serious and similar reasons" are merely a catch-all phrase defying definition. I say all this while conceding the hon. member's good intentions.

All this talk of senior citizens reminds me of the minister's bill which was to provide spouses' allowances. There was a great hue and cry all over this country when the bill was first introduced. Members of parliament heard from widows, widowers, single people and divorced people, those who had not reached 65 and were not married legally, and those who were 65 or over but were not able to get the allowance. After all, the idea of the supplement was to make life more tolerable. I am still getting letters about the spouses' allowance. People take a dim view of it. It seems to me that under the minister's proposal—and I say this with sincerity—people living in sin could be entitled to spouses' allowance, whereas 60-year old widows, widowers, single people and divorced people would be put out the pasture, so to speak.

The hon. member's proposal involves money; I do not know how much. He mentioned 5 per cent of the people being affected by it. Apparently 5 per cent of our people, for some reason, do not apply for benefits. I wish the hon. member had told the House how much money his proposal would cost. These are days of restraint. Even so I recognize that, because inflation has eroded the value of our dollar, some people are in dire need of financial assistance. We ought to be concerned about them.

In my opinion the present law allows those who cannot themselves apply, or have failed to apply, one year's retroactive benefits. Really that is a lump sum payment. The government provided for a sort of trust fund and took cognizance of the kind of situation about which the hon. member is concerned. No matter when you apply, you cannot get more than one year's benefits.

I do not want to talk the motion out. The hon. member brought the motion before the House for the edification of members and their constituents. This debate has shown that we are always thinking and want to improve the lot of those who did so much to develop this country. Even so, I suggest that the number of people the motion would affect is not great.

In conclusion I say that it is our responsibility as members of parliament to advise constituents, especially people falling within the purview of the motion, of government programs set up for their benefit. As I said earlier, the government should vote money every year to advertise these programs. I do not know what it would cost, but it would be a dollar well spent if there were an advertisement, even once a year, advising people of programs such as this.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon) is learning this afternoon what it is like to be a member of the opposition. He got hold of a good idea, he brought it before the House, he was hopeful it would be received favourably but has found that it is being jumped on by his friends and opponents and that in due course, it will be talked out.

If the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton had proposed a wide open provision that would enable persons to defer taking old age security for five or ten years and then pick up a nest egg with interest and so on, that proposal might have deserved the kind of criticism that was given by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and in part by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. However, I want to emphasize, in supporting the hon. member's idea, that he is not asking for a wide open provision. He is simply asking that in certain special cases there be more discretionary power than there is at the present time. The act now provides, and it is spelled out in the regulations under the act, that a regional director can go back at least a year. All that the hon. member is proposing is that it be possible to go back further than that in special cases.

It is possible to criticize some of the reasons the hon. member has put forward. However, all he has placed before us is a resolution. This is not the language to be put in a bill. I am sure he would agree that the language in a bill could be more restrictive.

Both of the last speakers have suggested that not very many persons are affected by this situation. I can testify to that as well. I agree with the hon. member for Ottawa West that Canadians from 55 up pretty well know what the provisions are with respect to old age security and are ready to apply when the time comes. However, I remind the House that not many months ago the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) brought up a case of one person, a veteran, who had stayed in the United Kingdom for some years after the war. He failed to meet the precise qualifications even though he was a Canadian in all other respects. It was finally agreed by the government that, even if there were only a few cases, here was an injustice that should be corrected. That injustice has been corrected, or at least is in the process of being corrected.

I receive a great deal of correspondence about pension matters, but I have had only two persons write to me about this matter because if affects them. However, they are extremely grateful that an injustice has been corrected. That is one of the things that is great about parliament; if there is an injustice, even if it affects only a very few persons, it deserves to be corrected.

I quite agree with those who say we should not go hogwild in this. However, I believe there is room for a greater element of discretion where there is a clear, justifiable reason for a person failing to apply for old age security within the year that is now stipulated in the legislation.

Even though the hon. member many suffer the fate of other private members and see his motion talked out at six o'clock, I hope that his having raised the matter for discussion will result in its being considered in the department. If he has cases that are specific, such as those to which he referred, he would be well advised to present them to the department. Others of us should do the same so that an injustice, even to a half dozen individuals, does not remain in our statutes.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I give my general support to the intent of motion presented by the hon. member. I will refrain from participating in any talking out process. In fact all I will say before I sit down is that I am glad the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) raised an issue which most of us think is of very great importance right now. I refer to the discrimination being experienced and felt by thousands of Canadians who are spinsters, widows, bachelors, and widowers in the age bracket between 60 and 65.

When the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) brought in Bill C-62 in June, 1975, he stood in this House and said that what he was trying to do was to solve the problem of two persons living on one pension. That is his plausible excuse for this arrangement that pays a pension, on a means test basis, between 60 and 65 to a person who is married and living with a spouse over 65, but not to a person in the same age bracket who is alone. Indeed the spinster, widow, bachelor or widower in this country who is between 60 and 65 cannot understand why a pension is available to a woman of the same age who has a husband over 65, but is not available to the woman who is a widow or who is not married. That is an issue that should be corrected in this very session of parliament.

I realize this is beyond the confines of the motion before us, but each member who has had the floor so far has gone beyond those confines for a moment. I shall settle for what I have said. Although there are many things that need to be done in the pension field, one fact above all others that is annoying thousands of Canadians today is this discrimination of the spouses' allowance in that it discriminates against single persons between the ages of 60 and 65. I hope that will soon be corrected.

I sit down simply saying again that despite the rough ride the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton has had, I hope that his bringing this issue before the House will result in the matter being considered, at least in the department.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, when I examined the motion of my hon. colleague, the member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon), it brought back a very pleasant recollection, that is the beginning of my public political life.

As for all those who are in this House, the time comes when one has to choose the political party answering one's aspirations. I obviously had the opportunity to consider the platforms of all political parties and after a thorough consideration of the Liberal platform, especially that dealing with the old age security legislation, my choice became easier. Moreover, I do not regret it, since the real intentions of the party to which I belong have been shown and continue to be shown in favour of deserving citizens who after many years of untiring work have succeeded in establishing a better community and are entitled to our consideration and more particularly to a financial assistance as subtantial as possible according to the resources of the country.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, it might take too long to recall all the legislation the Liberal party has had passed in this House in the last 30 years, but it should not be pointless to mention that history reminds us it was the government which, in 1927, passed the Old Age Security Act, followed in 1952 by the old age security program.

At that time, one had to be 70 or over to be eligible. In addition, in the last decade, the steps taken by the government reflect, to my mind, in a very concrete sense, the intention of the government to resolve the various difficulties our senior citizens confront. Let me say immediately, Mr. Speaker, that we all meet on the floor of this House in a common ideal, that is ensuring our senior citizens to the greatest extent possible access to the old age security pension to which they are entitled. And I am sure that, on both sides of this House, there is no question of adopting a negative attitude towards this motion; the few words I want to say certainly are not meant to encourage unfair treatment of our senior citizens, nor to deprive them of the means or services offered to help them by the Canadian Parliament. Still, Mr. Speaker, there are basic principles we must not hesitate to discuss in this House when, for instance, it is claimed, as did my hon. friend, that the senior citizens are not responsible enough to take care of their own affairs and to make their own requests of the state, or even through intermediaries, when their health does not allow them to take advantage of the means put at their disposal by the old age security program.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is an insult to the citizens who, during 65 years, have always behaved like responsible people and have taken care of their business, their families, their work, and who, at a certain age, are now able to take advantage of legislation introduced for their benefit.

I believe it was the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) who suggested that more complete programs, and more substantial and extensive information should be made available to all citizens so that, as the previous speaker said, no one who is entitled to it be deprived of the advantages of the old age security program. And in this regard, I agree with the hon. member who spoke before me when he said: "Even if only a few could not take advantage of the legislation, it would be unfortunate. This would be an injustice that we could not tolerate."

However, Mr. Speaker, if the motion of my hon. friend is adopted, we would have to extend the debate and apply the same provisions to other classes of citizens who have not yet reached pensionable age and who, because of a lack of training or because of illness, cannot take advantage of the other acts which have been passed for their benefit.

Mr. Speaker, as many of my colleagues probably know, people often tell my colleagues or myself: I did not submit a project under the local initiative program, for instance, because I was sick or because I did not know that the program would end on such or such a date. If we applied the concept of extension because of ignorance, illness or other reasons, the same concept should also be applied to all classes of citizens and all programs.

In my view this would make the government's position impossible since the discretionary power, which my hon. friend wants to place in the hands of a minister, is, I believe, an extremely delicate tool which ought to be used only in exceptional circumstances. The word "discretionary" is, in my opinion, extremely dangerous and so is the word "retroactive". I suggest that laws should be retroactive only in exceptional cases and the discretionary power used only on the rarest occasions.

Be this as it may, Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me the opportunity to discuss this most important subject. I think as the previous speaker mentioned that an open and sincere discussion was made possible for hon. members who are assuming their responsibilities and who, on a matter as important as the one which is before us, have adopted a constructive attitude which will enable us to try to work together to help senior citizens. They certainly deserve that we stop squabbling and start cooperating to ensure their welfare.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at this point I should like to note the overwhelming interest of the scribes and Pharisees who occupy the seats above Your Honour.

Mr. Paproski: They are not Pharisees.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is going to be one of your best speeches.

[Mr. Marceau.]

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Thank you. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has stolen most of my speech and made it already. I wish to add my congratulations to those offered to the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon). I believe his motion has been put forward in the true spirit of liberalism and he is to be unreservedly congratulated. I see that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre agrees.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No; because the Liberals have sat on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hour set aside for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.01 p.m. the House took recess.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT (No. 2)

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ELECTION OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-88, to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, amendments to the Canadian Wheat Board Act are always the subject of great interest to western farmers. The Canadian Wheat Board is a very unique institution about which Canadians should know much more. Under the Canadian Wheat Board Act of 1935 we give the power to this independent board to buy the grains of western Canada, and we give the power to this independent board to sell the grains of western Canada, so that in one sense parliament, by drawing power from the provincial governments, has delegated monopoly power to the board to sell the goods of a very large productive area of Canada, the grain growing area of the western provinces, including parts, of B.C. and Ontario.

This organization or institution is unique, as I say. Even though it has all the powers that our so-called socialist would say he stands for, of delegating to a board complete monopoly over the buying and selling of a farmer's product, actually it is not a selling board and it is not a monopoly in the real sense of the word. What the board does that makes it unique is that in turn it delegates its power to be the sole agent that buys the grain of the farmers to private enterprise. It delegates its power to the grain companies such as the great co-operatives, the Alberta Pool, the Saskatchewan Pool, the Manitoba Pool, and to the UGG. These are supposed to be the greatest co-operatives in the world in terms of the volume of business that they do.

At the same time it delegates the power to any group of people who have enough money and responsibility to go to the Wheat Board and buy the grain from the farmers as the board's agent, so that any group of people who can collect the money have the right, under the management of the Canadian Wheat Board, to become the agent of the board and, in effect, provide competition among the buyers or agents of the board in the buying of grain from the farmers.

That is one side of the equation. When the board transfers the grain from the farmer through its agent, these private companies, it then turns the power to sell—which is a monopoly—over to a series of agents, so that any group of people, Canadian or foreign, who can prove to the Wheat Board they have the financial responsibility can become agents of the Canadian Wheat Board and sell all over the world.

I am quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that not only do many people across Canada not understand how the Canadian Wheat Board operates but many people in the west are uncertain too. We do not get too many opportunities to discuss the Canadian Wheat Board and the amendments made from time to time to the act.

This unique institution has worked exceptionally well. It has attempted to give to the farmers a fair price averaged over the year. The technique it uses is to give an initial payment, and when the grain is sold to give an interim or final payment, and this is averaged grade by grade.

To put the matter into perspective, I do not think there is any question but that 85 to 90 per cent of the farmers have been reasonably satisfied with the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board over the last 40 years. However, that does not mean that there has been complete satisfaction; doubts do arise from time to time.

One of the amendments in Bill C-88 which is before us is to set down the terms for electing an advisory board based on districts in the grain growing area. This is an amendment that I am positive every political party in western Canada supports. We have no choice but to congratulate the government on putting this proposal into law, and I am going to give the House some reasons why those congratulations are worth-while and necessary.

There always has been an advisory board. Under the original act power was given to the minister to appoint members to an advisory board, and as a general rule the minister picked the heads of the big grain organizations as members of the board to advise the Wheat Board. When I was minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board I added an additional person, a representative of the National Farmers' Union. Why, then, do I say that an elected advisory board is better? The reasons are very simple.

When you began to watch, observe, and assess what the old advisory board was contributing to the actions of the Wheat Board you got the strong impression that the advisory board you had appointed yourself, made up of the heads of the big grain companies, was in fact very friendly and cosy with members of the Canadian Wheat Board. They were there representing not only their farmers and their organizations, they were representing the businesses they managed, and as managers they were very anxious to have this system work smoothly and efficiently. You rarely got criticism from these people about the actions of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Remember what I said earlier—the Canadian Wheat board selected these companies as its agents. Therefore it was a meeting really of top management, the Canadian Wheat Board and the advisory board which was in effect the agent of the Canadian Wheat Board. It was naturally a cosy relationship.

The great grain companies are very large and they make good returns. Their first responsibility to their rank and file is to maintain the profit margin they have obtained through the handling of grain. I got the impression, as the minister watching their activities, that this was not really the type of advice I thought the farmers deserved when they had to rely on the Canadian Wheat Board. That is the reason why I added the farm unions, hoping they would represent these farmers in a better way, not having a vested interest and not having a great army of country or seaboard terminals to manage. Even this was not too strong a representation for the simple reason that we soon found out the National Farmers' Union rarely disagreed with the wheat pools.

Therefore I say with all sincerity to the minister that by putting this board in as an elected board, giving the farmers directly a chance to elect their representatives to advise the Wheat Board, he is going to get a little more independent type of advice as well as criticism of the Canadian Wheat Board. Even if the Wheat Board were made up of the most perfect people in the world it could not be anything more than human, and it makes mistakes, but it is nice to know there are at least ten or 11 independent elected people representing their electors, watching what is going on and giving advice.

With these advisory meetings as laid down in the amendments I hope this will result in more cogent criticism of the Canadian Wheat Board. This will make it even better than it has been. Just as an example let me refer to a report of one of the independent members who got himself elected. He comes from the province of Alberta and he submitted a report of which I have a copy here. Just listen to his language, and remember that this is a report of an elected representative on the advisory board which we are now legalizing by this legislation. He says in this report:

> Did you know: that grade and dockage must be agreed upon by both the elevator agent and the farmer?

That is a routine question. He goes on to state:

> A "subject to grade" storage ticket ensures that a government inspector will grade this grain; or you can have a sample government inspected at the government inland terminals. If to your advantage, haul it there, consign it to the elevator company of your choice and receive the $ benefit of official grade and dockage.

Then he says:

> (For example, a government inspected sample of your barley may grade 2 CW Barley instead of 1 Feed Barley, to your advantage of 91 cents a bushel.)

I stop there, but that is the type of advice he is giving. This type of thing has been known all along, but not too often have we found people who are advising the farmers and being so frank with them. In fact this advisory member of the board is telling the farmers in his area to make sure they shop around and get the best price from the grain companies.

I was struck by this because I am sure one of the reasons why we have this amendment before us is that there has been a squabble over barley this last year. This is dealt with in clause 4 of the bill. Under this amendment it will be possible for the Wheat Board to set up a malting barley pool. No member has to be told that barley is of several grades. In addition to being of several grades, some of it is selected in a very mysterious manner and called malting. Very few people, if any, are able to tell us or the farmers exactly what is a malting grade of barley. You can haul one load in from your granary and the elevator man will look at it and say it is malting. You can then bring in another load from the same granary and he might look at it and say it is No. 1 feed. The farmers have been unable for years to find out what it is that makes some barley malting and some feed grain, but the price is different. This year it was some 91 cents different.

As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) was saying before the dinner recess, the key to making this part of the bill work is strict definition of grades. With the knowledge and experience of the elevator agents I think they require a type of description which has never been given before. Some farmers, who for years have been getting malting, will suddenly not get malting but will get No. 1 feed. This year with that 91-cent a bushel spread this represented a very serious loss. My point here is that I think the hon. member for Crowfoot was not gilding the lily when he used the word "stealing".

The grain act makes it very plain that every time a farmer hauls grain to an elevator the law of Canada requires that the farmer be paid for what he delivers. For that reason it is very necessary to have a clear definition of the difference between the various grades we have been using for years. If a farmer does not like the grade given by an elevator agent he can appeal to a government inspector and to the Board of Grain Commissioners. Theirs is the final decision. This system has worked very well over the years. It is very important that the law be carried out, and that each farmer is paid for what he delivers.

No one has told me as yet the full story of what happened last year. Apparently the farmers took in their barley. Many of them got feed grades, and no one knows why. Later on it was discovered there was not enough malting barley on hand, so they took the barley which had been graded No. 1 feed, which gets a lower price, and arbitrarily raised it to malting, and then made the maltsters pay another 91 cents a bushel for that malting barley. Somewhere along the line the farmers were done out of the full 91 cents difference for malting barley.

The hon. member for Crowfoot suggested that the difference went into the accounts of the grain companies. I have heard another story, namely, that it was the Wheat Board that mixed the grain at the terminals up to a malting barley grain which the maltsters accepted. The board took this excess money for this barley that was raised up in grade and distributed the extra money equally in respect of all No. 1 feed deliveries. Some got 18 cents extra and some got 91 cents extra, and that is what the issue is all about.

I understand from reading the press that a number of farmers have grouped together in Alberta and are suing the Canadian Wheat Board and the grain companies for many millions of dollars because they claim they got No. 1 feed grade for their barley and found out that this was later graded malting barley, yet they only got a final 18 cents a bushel extra payment. In effect they are accusing the Canadian Wheat Board and the grain companies of stealing their grain and are asking for recompense in a class action. I suspect that is the reason for this sudden amendment. This is being made retroactive so that it can be legitimately pooled this year and so that there will be some way to know that the farmer receives the amount of money he should receive rather than having it given to the grain companies or having it spread over all the feed grades.

I say that even though the Canadian Wheat Board has a long record of successful activity that satisfies the great bulk of the farmers, every so often something goes wrong. When it comes to not paying the farmer for the grade of grain as delivered to the elevator and when he is not given the exact price for the exact grade, it is in effect stealing from that farmer and is in breach of the Grain Act.

This brings up the third point I want to make. Twice this afternoon the necessity of protein grading has been mentioned. I think the minister has been very delinquent in not taking the opportunity to get amendments into the act and in not having used this opportunity to make it mandatory that the grain companies provide protein grading at the elevators. Going back 20 years, the argument was that it was impossible for the Board of Grain Commissioners and for the Canadian Wheat Board to grade at the elevators. It was argued that the elevator men were not smart enough to carry out the protein grading technique. That was always a fallacy. So long as the farmers were paid on the basis of the number of pounds brought to the elevator and on the basis of the colour, there was no breach of the law. Now that we are not selling grain on the basis of pounds and colour but on the basis of protein content it is a different story.

Today we are selling at the coasts to overseas buyers wheat graded on an average of 13.5 or 12.5 per cent protein. That is what we are paid for. Our customers demand a guaranteed percentage of protein in the wheat they buy. They are buying protein and not wheat. Therefore under the Grain Act if you sell grain on the basis of protein content you must pay the individual farmer in respect of what he delivered to the elevator on the basis of what it is sold for, and if it is sold on the basis of protein content he should be paid at that rate. If this is not the case then there will be a breach of the Grain Act because this will represent stealing from the individual farmer. Therefore the minister, who knows all this, should have attempted to put into this legislation a clear mandatory direction that grain be graded on a protein content basis so that each farmer would know the amount of protein he delivered. If the grain were mixed after that, that would be fair enough. But the farmer should be paid on the basis of percentage of protein he delivered.

I say very bluntly to the minister that I suspect that so long as we continue buying from the farmer on the basis of the existing grading at the elevator, and turn around and sell his grain on a different basis of protein grade, the Canadian Wheat Board and the grain companies are in breach of the Grain Act and are subject to class actions for damages by the farmers when they get mad enough and find out about it.

The minister should have been on top of this. He should have forced the grain companies to modernize their systems and put in this type of grading. I think that is what we should have been discussing here tonight because I believe it is even more important than just the barley malting pool. The principle in both cases is identical.

The pool system is being amended to provide a malting pool so that the farmers will be paid for what they deliver. Why should the farmers not be paid for what they deliver on the basis of the protein content of the wheat, which is nine or ten times more important relatively than the barley problem?

I suggest that the royal commission which is now holding hearings in the west on transportation and grain handling should make a very strong recommendation that the Canadian Wheat Board be asked to have the Canadian Wheat Board Act amended to make it mandatory that the Board and its agents, the grain companies, pay the farmers for what they deliver to the elevator on the basis of the protein grade of the delivered wheat.

I am very annoyed that after all these years, when we have an opportunity to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, we do not get at this basic weakness which has existed ever since Canada began to sell on the basis of protein grade from the elevators. I realize this means that the elevator companies will have to be modernized so that they can not only buy the grain and dry the grain but also grade it on a protein basis.

Once again may I say I think this royal commission should very strongly recommend to the government that the elevator companies be asked, as the royal commission has asked the railway companies, to bring in a rational plan for elevators all through the prairies instead of having this 30-year old long drawn out struggle to avoid giving up older elevators in place of the modern ones we should have had 30 years ago. Now that the elevator companies are exposed I think they should be asked by the royal commission, just as the railways were asked, to bring in a rational plan to modernize elevators so that we are not overwhelmed by irrational building by the various companies. I hope the royal commission will see that as a good recommendation to make. Naturally I would have liked the government to have heeded the pressure of public demand and common sense and to have done it in this legislation.

The next point I wish to make is one that does not require an amendment. There is an interesting clause in section 25(2) of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. I will read this section because it deals with farm storage:

The Board shall,—

I think this is understood by the minister.

—if directed by regulation, pay to each producer at the time of delivery of wheat to the Board, in addition to any other payment authorized by this section, a sum per bushel on account of storage of the said wheat on the producer's farm, . . .

If we are to have a rational grain storage system both at the sea coast terminals and at the country terminals, into that storage system must be built, if we are to have a rational plan, some provision for farm storage. I bring this up particularly in respect of the branch lines.

There has been an ongoing difference of opinion between the farmers and the railroads on these branch lines where the steel is not too good and where the roadbed has not been maintained during the last 20 or 30 years. These branch lines do not operate in the winter months. In some cases where the lines have been built up it is relatively easy for the railway to keep them open and service them in the winter, but there are many hundreds of miles of branch lines where it will be many years, and require the expenditure of many millions of dollars, before they are raised high enough and will be of heavy enough steel to warrant their being kept open during the winter season when the snow has drifted across the tracks.

If the railways could save money by not having to operate trains on those branch lines which only require one train a week, for example, if those trains were stopped for the winter—as most of them are now anyway—so the railways would not have to expend money to snowplough the tracks,—if the railways were given instructions from the Canadian Transport Commission to let these lines lie idle during the winter months, then the farmers along those lines would be quite satisfied if they had the opportunity to get paid for the grain stored on their farms during the periods of non-delivery. They would be glad to store this grain at half the rate that the grain companies demand.

It is an injustice to the farmer who cannot get his grain into the elevators in the fall, and who cannot transport it in the winter because of lack of movement of trains, that he cannot take advantage of the provision in the act which allows the Canadian Wheat Board to pay for the storage of his grain on his own farm until the spring. If he kept his grain on his farm, and assuming it did not interfere with the Wheat Board deliveries to market, he could be compensated at 5 cents a month or 3 cents for six months, and he would be quite satisfied that justice had been done.

I would have liked to have heard some mention made by the minister that he was aware of the fact that this should have been part of the over-all rationalization of the handling of grain on the western farms which would not force the railways to go to extra expense if they did not have to, and at the same time which would allow grain to be held back from lines which would not have to be kept open in the winter. It would be fair both to the grain companies and the farmers along the lines if they got paid for their storage as were farmers along other lines who got their grain into the elevators or could get it to market. I put this suggestion forward knowing that it does not require an amendment to the act because the act allows it now. This requires a decision of the minister and of the Canadian Wheat Board, and I would like to see them think about it and do something about it rather than being told by the royal commission, when it reports in a year or so, that this should have been done.

In summary, what I have tried to do tonight is to put in perspective the work of the Canadian Wheat Board in serving the western farmer as equitably and fairly as it can, to point out that the minister should be congratulated for having made the advisory committee an elected body which we hope can give good advice to the Wheat Board, and to give the minister a little bit of a poke to amend the act insofar as the barley malting pool is concerned. This pool is necessary to get around the difficulty which arose last year, not only because it arose once but because it was so serious last year that we had to amend the act. I should like to suggest very strongly that the minister made a great error in not making protein grading mandatory. I think this should be part of a comprehensive, rational system. I think this amendment would meet with the approval of most members from western Canada, but I could not resist the opportunity to put forward a few suggestions that would have made it much better.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this bill. First of all I should like to speak on the portion dealing with the advisory committee. I think I can accept what the minister has done, although I will say that I had hoped the advisory committee would keep the Wheat Board closer to the producers and closer to the principle on the basis of which the Board was established. We have to remember that in the last six or seven years the political process had a great deal of influence on what has gone on in Wheat Board circles.

As I understand it, the Wheat Board was given the specified duty of getting for the farmers the best price that their product could bring, whether it was selling abroad or in Canada. It is quite easy to sell abroad at a good price, but it is not always so easy to sell the product well in Canada particularly when it comes to feed grains and products consumed in other parts of Canada. For instance, if feed barley is sold by the western farmer, should he receive all the money he can get on the world market or should he in the national interest accept a lesser price in order to give the feeder in eastern Canada an advantage or to eliminate excess price?

It is important that the Wheat Board be as close to the farmers as possible, and that the advisory committee to be elected by the farmers act as a watch dog on what the Wheat Board is doing. It should be noted that the Wheat Board will function best if the political input from Ottawa is kept down to the minimum.

I should like to comment on the problem of barley which this bill seeks to rectify. It has come about because the producers of No. 1 feed barley this year are now seeing red. A good many of them have lost more than $2,000 a car lot because their earnings were lumped into the same pool as funds from lower priced feed barley.

Indications that a separate pool for selected and accepted barley will be instituted this year are not going down too well with producers who lost heavily in the past year. As some producers have said:

It has never been this bad. It's the same as if someone puts their hand in your pocket and takes $2,000.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

At this point we're unwilling to accept this kind of legislation. We feel there is mismanagement to the point where the government should rectify their errors.

It has all come about because of the shortage of malting barley and the fact that some feed barley was put in but the grower of better grade barley did not receive his proper return.

I have received a letter from a constituent, who made what I thought was a very good comment, in which he stated that he hoped that any proposed legislation and change would be retroactive to the 1974-75 crop year at least because this was the crop year when any significant difference in the pricing of the two types of barley took place. He writes:

Feed barley producers who have had their final payments increased by selected barley producers in 1974-75 should have no objection to have their final payments reduced by a like amount in 1975-76 to correct a situation that should never have been allowed to exist in the first place.

He suggests that the only known way to correct a wrong is by making it right. He goes on to say that it is not just luck that a barley sample is selected for malting. Malting barley requires any number of conditions which do not necessarily apply to feed barley. First, a variety must be grown which is acceptable to maltsters, and most barley varieties have disadvantages. They are usually lower yielding than feed varieties. They generally require earlier seeding to mature. They are more intensive and need more expensive weed control. They need proper timing of swathing to avoid damage by frost or shrinkage. Harvesting is a problem, and more care must be taken. Cleaning and marketing are more variable.

I think the minister in charge of the Wheat Board should consider what he could do for barley producers who have found themselves caught out this year. It is certainly true that many farmers do try to raise malting barley. They give it extra attention, but very often they do not succeed because of conditions beyond their control. When they do have the good luck and the good fortune to have a carload of malting barley, they should receive benefit from their work.

There is one other clause in the bill which interests me. It is clause 5 at page 8 of the bill. The explanation given of this clause is to correct an anomaly in the act since the act does not provide for an initial payment in respect of rye, flaxseed, and rapeseed. I should like to hear an explanation of the purpose of this clause from the minister because it is my understanding with regard to rye, flaxseed, and rapeseed on the open market that there would be no necessity to have an initial payment unless it was decided to put these under the Wheat Board. However, I think it is important that before any of these grains be put under the Wheat Board the views of the majority of producers be ascertained in the usual manner.

Because there is not usually very much opportunity to discuss the problems of the wheat grower, I should like to speak about a problem which is common to the northern part of the prairies, particularly my area, which is a parkland area. All wheat now grown in the parkland area, which I understand this year is approximately 100 million bushels, is grown in the area stretching from the Peace River country through northern Alberta, northern Saskatchewan and on into Manitoba. All of it is pretty well graded No. 3 Red this year. The next grade below No. 3 Red is No. 3 Utility wheat, or what is commonly known as feed wheat.

The price differential between No. 3 Red and No. 3 Utility is anywhere from 40 cents a bushel to 60 cents a bushel. This seems to have come about because of the change in the grading system, and it is causing a great deal of consternation and reassessment about what farmers should grow in my area. We in the parkland area have always accepted that we grow lower protein wheat, but generally speaking we grow more bushels, and by and large there has always been a market around the world for the parkland wheat even if it has not commanded the same high price as southern Saskatchewan and southern Alberta wheat.

The recent changes in the grading system seem to have made No. 3 Red wheat a relatively unwanted variety in the grain trade. The changeover from the grading system meant, presumably, that No. 1 and No. 2 were to go into the new No. 1 Red; No. 3 and No. 4 were to go into No. 2 Red; No. 5 and a bit of No. 6 were to go into No. 3; and the balance of No. 6 and feed wheat were to go into the new grade 3 utility. However, while the drawings and the propaganda put out by the Board of Grain Commissioners have these all neatly circled, in practice I have found that the government grading system as well as that of elevator agents—and they are not to blame—is that they are putting pretty well all wheat in the parkland area in No. 3 Red. In other words, they are really grading protein by areas.

I had occasion to take a sample of wheat to two individual elevator buyers. I asked them what this would grade under the old system, and they said it was at least a poor No. 3 or a good No. 4. This should have put it into the grade 2 Red, but in effect it did not because the Board of Grain Commissioners people graded all this No. 3 Red, which is considerably below what it would have graded under the old grading system.

What is the effect of this? The effect has been that No. 3 Red wheat has had a hard job this year finding a market around the world. Many farmers in my constituency have delivered no wheat this year because there was no room. One country point only had ten cars in the last four months, none of which was No. 3 Red wheat. Even No. 3 Utility wheat is moving faster than No. 3 Red. Furthermore, elevator agents and farmers point out that the difference between No. 3 Red and No. 3 Utility was 60 cents a bushel last year, 40 cents a bushel this year, and that the difference between grading No. 3 Red and No. 3 Utility in many cases is not easy.

These changes are having a very adverse effect on the grading of wheat on many millions of acres. I should like to know why this is. Is there some collusion, so to speak, between the Wheat Board, the Board of Grain Commissioners and grain handling companies? It will obviously be easy for the Wheat Board to sell grades 1 and 2 around the world. The percentage of high grade wheat moving in international circles has remained fairly high, at 26 per cent or 27 per cent. It has been fairly consistent over the last number of years.

But what about No. 3 Red? That is a harder thing to sell, whereas previously it was easily sold, particularly this past year. Is the Wheat Board always making an effort to sell No. 3 Red wheat? A good deal of the wheat is being pushed down into No. 3 Utility and into feed grain, and I suspect that the Wheat Board does not find this all that bad because it is relieved of attempting to dispose of a sizeable portion of the No. 3 Red crop around the world. I think this is unfortunate.

I think we are doing ourselves out of a market, and as the amount of grain involved is one hundred million bushels at $4 or $5 a bushel, that represents half a billion dollars. If this is lost, our farmers and our economy are certainly much worse off. If grain is not going to be graded any higher than No. 3 Red and if it will not be easily sold, there may be a shift in farming practices. I suggest that in the new grading system there should be another grade between No. 3 Red and feed wheat.

Of course, having the new system has been advantageous to grain handling companies because it has reduced their binning requirements necessary to carry out more grades. Grading is not uniform. I have known elevator agents say, "If you were in southern Saskatchewan I could grade this grain as No. 1; but here we must grade it as No. 3." That shows that the grading system is hazy in operation and not serving the farmers. I hope the minister and the grain commissioners will look at the matter and correct it. Possibly the solution lies in introducing another grade which could be equivalent to Nos. 5 and 6 under the old grading system. This, I think, would best serve the farming community, particularly the farming community of western Canada.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring two or three matters to the attention of hon. members, particularly those interested in the production and movement of grain. I suggest that all hon. members ought to be vitally interested in what is happening to prairie grain on world markets, as grain sales vitally affect our country's well-being. We sell about $3 billion worth of grain on world markets. These grain sales improve our balance of trade, something we should not forget.

I was concerned, on returning to this House, to discover that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who is also the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang)—

Mr. Benjamin: And acting government House leader today.

Mr. Towers: —and acting House leader could not answer our questions during the question period. He said he did not know the answers. Obviously the reason is that he has not been in Ottawa, keeping in touch with events; he has been in western Canada, traipsing around in the Jetstar and trying to sell his stabilization bill to producers. The minister reminds me of Nero who fiddled while Rome burned. He was fiddling around in western Canada, trying to sell a program not too acceptable to western grain producers. By accepting our advice he could have designed a workable program. He would not have needed to spend several weeks out west trying to sell his program to producers. When he appeared in Red Deer, two known Liberals clapped their hands—not at what he said, but perhaps because he is such a good looking fellow.

We question certain aspects of this bill and will consider them further, in detail when the bill is in committee. In some ways the faults of this bill are similar to the faults of the grain stabilization bill. As was pointed out at the meeting in Red Deer, the grain stabilization bill is dictatorial, as is this bill. After the stabilization program has been in place three years, the producer cannot opt out. He is locked in. Orders in council can raise or lower tariffs, but it is dangerous to introduce a program from which the producer cannot opt out. The same is true of the bill we are considering.

Mr. Benjamin: That's nonsense. You can't opt out of the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Towers: Yes, but the government is assuming too much control over the administrative aspects of the bill. I know that on second reading we are not supposed to speak in detail on the clauses of the bill. Nevertheless, allow me to read part of proposed section 10.5(3) wherein it says:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations respecting the conduct of an election of members of the Advisory Committee and in particular, but without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations . . .

The following subparagraphs specify that there shall be regulations prescribing the qualifications of members of the advisory committee, regulations governing the making and withdrawing of nominations, and so on. The provision for elections puts me in mind of what happens in Russia. If the government wants to introduce such regulations, why must we elect an advisory committee? Logically, if the advisory committee is elected, it should control the program and be responsible to its electors. Why should control of the program be vested in Ottawa, in the cabinet? Why should the minister in charge of the Wheat Board try to exercise control of the committee? I cannot accept that provision as logical or reasonable.

If an advisory committee is to be elected, surely it will be composed of members who will want to act in the best interests of prairie grain producers. Why should the governor in council be given ultimate responsibility? The point is one of fundamental importance.

The bill contains other provisions for the making of rules and regulations for the pooling and sale of grain. It will be to the advantage of grain producers if malting barley sales are pooled. Certainly members representing grain producing ridings have received letters from producers complaining about losses in the last two years. On average producers lost about $2,000 per carload; no small amount. If the minister in charge of the Wheat Board had been sufficiently far-sighted, he would have foreseen what could happen. Why should producers on average have lost that $2,000? Grain producers have every right to know.

Sometimes the difference between various grades of barley used for malting is small. There could be little difference between No. 1 feed and 3C grain or barley used for malting. I had a letter from a man who took two carloads of malting barley from the same bin. One was graded 3CW and the other No. 1 feed. To all intents and purposes it was the same grade of grain. He wondered why the grain had been graded differently. He lost about $2,000 on the deal. Clearly, eliminating such discrepancies would be to the benefit of producers.

As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) suggested earlier, the $2,000 lost might find its way to the pockets of some grain companies. There is a loophole here which ought to be closed. The advisory committee could close it. I do not think it is up to the governor in council to make an order in this regard.

The bill also deals with the pooling and handling of grain. I do not like the provision in the bill for a further tinkering by the governor in council with regard to the cutoff date for the pooling aspect. I do not think it is right, necessary or logical.

Hon. members will recall that during the 1972 election campaign the minister in charge of the Wheat Board did a little tinkering. He had a final payment made prior to the end of the year. This upset a lot of producers because they were used to getting the final payment after the year end and had governed their sales accordingly. This payment upset their whole financial operation. They had to pay income tax on an income they had not anticipated.

This upsetting aspect was not just limited to producers, but to members of the other place. Immediately after that, they brought in a bill stipulating that payments only be made after the beginning of a new calendar year. They were aware of this tinkering by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

The minister is now going to do more tinkering. In this bill there is provision to allow adjustment of the pooling cutoff. It is neither reasonable nor necessary; in fact, the advisory committee could do that. They know when the cutoff should be. If an election is to be held in a year or two, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board could manipulate the final payment to such a degree that it would be of benefit to the government. I do not like this kind of tinkering. It is not fair. I am sure that members opposite do not appreciate that provision the minister is including in this bill.

There is something else that concerns me. The Wheat Board is making provision for an amount in the vicinity of $10 million to provide a storage facility on the west coast. This is made up of producer dollars. We see what is happening in other aspects of industry. Governments provide facilities for the provision or development of manufactured products. We see what is happening in CIDA. Canadian dollars are made available for the promotional activity of manufacturers in this country. I do not see why the federal government cannot undertake this obligation rather than having the Wheat Board undertake it.

There are many things that could be of great benefit to the prairie grain producer. These provisions could be made by the advisory committee. I suggest they will be well versed on the requirements of the industry. More cognizance should be given to them rather than having the control left in the hands of the governor in council.

It is time we realized that all knowledge of the grain industry and the future well-being does not necessarily rest with the government of the day, whether it be with the present government or some future government. More power should be given to the advisory committee because they know the score. They know what is taking place.

I hope that in committee government members and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board will give consideration to the comments that I have made. I do not think the government should take much more control of the industry. A shortcoming of all governments is that they try to build empires. There is no room for any empire building in the production of grain in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

MOTOR VEHICLE TIRE SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH SAFETY STANDARDS FOR TIRES

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill S-8, respecting the use of national safety marks in relation to motor vehicle tires and to provide for safety standards for certain motor vehicle tires imported into or exported from Canada or sent or conveyed from one province to another, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Drury (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on third reading of Bill S-8. I might say at the outset that we are generally pleased to see this bill brought forward for third reading—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: Just wait for the lines. I might say something nasty before I am finished. We are pleased because several on this side of the House, including the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), had considerable input into the second reading debate and the committee hearings. I also commend the minister's parliamentary secretary—

Mr. Benjamin: Don't do that.

Mr. Kempling: Well, you have to give a bit of credit once in a while.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: All right, you win.

Mr. Benjamin: It was all written out for him.

Mr. Kempling: We made several amendments to the bill. As a result of some private meetings a consensus was reached on the amendments and the final form of the bill. This is one of the better bills that have been handled since I have been here. We were able to make reasonable progress both at second reading and committee stage.

As hon. members know, the bill deals with tire safety standards and a national tire safety mark. In its original form it provided for the establishment of a record keeping system at the retail level and for a system of inspection to ensure that the records were maintained. I am happy to say that the government recognized the weakness of such a procedure and withdrew that provision in committee. As a matter of fact it was agreed to proceed with the debate on second reading only on the understanding that this provision would be removed.

During the committee stage further changes were made. The term "distributor" was defined along lines more in keeping with those understood by the trade. The bill was further amended to require record-keeping by manufacturers, importers, and others connected with interprovincial trade. Notification of a defective tire was required by certified mail rather than by registered mail as originally written in the bill—we felt this would be an easier, faster, and less costly procedure.

Some amendments were made to Part II of the bill having to do with inspectors and powers of inspectors. As a result we feel the measure now has a reasonable chance of being accepted and implemented broadly across the country by all levels of the trade.

There were other clauses we would have liked to have seen changed. We are still not happy about the definition of safety standards in clause 20. However, we reluctantly accept the testimony of the department's officials that there was no intention to lay down design criteria—nor are they, in fact, capable of designing tires.

Mr. Mazankowski: We know that. They are bureaucrats.

Mr. Kempling: We know they are not capable of designing anything except a lot of red tape. Hon. members may have noticed recently that a new tire process has been developed in Britain. The tire tread is compressed on to the casing in such a way as to resist cuts in the tread. This promises improved safety and much longer tire life. Such developments are, of course, in the nature of the tire business. It is highly competitive, a high profile business which requires a well organized distribution chain backed by competent service. In the tire business you will find thousands of small businessmen. Both they and the consumers will benefit from this legislation.

When this bill passes and is proclaimed, tires which are being imported into Canada in increasing numbers will come under its control. This is an aspect which concerns us. I do not know whether the legislation we are considering will straighten it out or not, but our tire industry is floundering rather badly right now. The last time I looked at the statistics I found we were producing only about 50 per cent of the radial tires consumed in Canada. If there is any industry in Canada with a potential which is not presently being fulfilled, it is the tire industry. Perhaps when this legislation passes and imported tires are required to go through the inspection process, we may see our own tire dealers become a little more expansionary in their thinking and make added capacity available to serve the domestic market.

Under the bill as presently written, a customer purchasing a tire will have to fill out a card on which the serial number is recorded. This information will be kept by the manufacturer, or importer, or by the interprovincial distributor, and in the event of a tire being found defective they will be required to notify the consumer by certified mail. We think this is how it should be done. The tire industry in general agrees with this procedure. I believe the retail and wholesale dealers across the country are in favour of it and, as I said earlier, the legislation has a reasonable chance of being accepted broadly across the country to the benefit of everyone who purchases tires.

The bill before us started off in the other place and, after lengthy hearings during which some really good evidence was presented, it found its way to this House. Really, it was the evidence presented at the Senate hearings which gave us the idea where to go to get certain changes made. What seemed strange to me was that the government appeared reluctant to accept the testimony presented at the Senate hearings by knowledgeable people.

When it became apparent that the original intent of the government with regard to safety standards was being changed in such a way as to mean the establishment of another great bureaucracy of inspectors to check the records of retail stations, many people who looked at the legislation objectively became angry. Subsequently, to its credit, there was a change of mind; there had been a change of ministers and parliamentary secretaries and we were able to negotiate, one might say.

We wanted to see the legislation passed but we believed the government should remove the record-keeping clause applying to retail tire dealers. As I say, the minister, the parliamentary secretary and the officials saw the wisdom of this approach, and to their credit they made the change which we were proposing. We thought it was a good move. As a matter of fact it was this concession which got the bill going again and prompted us to take it through second reading into committee and pass it there in a relatively short period of time. I hope we can dispose of it this evening so that it can proceed, presumably, to the Senate—

Mr. Benjamin: And you and the minister with it!

Mr. Kempling: I hear the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) say something down there. If he gets involved in this discussion we will be talking about it this time next year. In spite of what he may say—and I know he is capable of saying anything—I still believe that those on all sides who were involved with the bill before us deserve praise because it is one of the few bills with regard to which I have seen close co-operation. If we could only do the same with respect to more pieces of legislation we in this House would be very much more productive.

● (2120)

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this third reading debate on Bill S-8, which was originally introduced in the other place as Bill S-3, I think something over two years ago. As the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) has pointed out, we on this side of the House generally support the principle of the bill, though quite frankly the first version presented to the House of Commons, having passed the other place, was a very bad piece of legislation. As the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth said, Bill S-8 represents a vast improvement over that first version with which we were presented.

Had Bill S-3, which is now Bill S-8, been passed in its original form I venture to say that probably one half or three quarters of our independent tire dealers in Canada would have been out of business. Testimony presented to us clearly brought to light the bureaucratic nightmare that this piece of legislation would have caused, and which would have made the whole operation quite unworkable.

In saying this I suppose I am criticizing those in the other place and I am not sure it is parliamentary to do so, but I will take a chance on that anyway.

Mr. Paproski: Come on, feel free.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think the examination of this legislation in the other place left much to be desired, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. members of the other place touched the periphery of the contents of this bill, but although some very major objections were raised and talked about, very little action was taken. While the intent of the bill and the principle of the bill are both laudable, I do not think the provisions of the bill would have been properly realized, nor would the objective of safety have been properly achieved had it not been for the close scrutinization by the members of the House of Commons and the further scrutinization that took place in the transport committee.

I think as originally presented the bill was clearly a classic example of bureaucratic overkill as a result of which the objective of safety would not have been fulfilled. I base this statement in part on testimony presented to the committee, as well as on testimony given in the United States where a similar registration process is currently in existence and where the compliance record is something in the order of 20 to 30 per cent.

Bringing in a piece of legislation that is unworkable, unmanageable, and which will not be complied with will never achieve the purpose for which it is intended. This was the major fault we saw in this piece of legislation. As I said before, these points were clearly identifiable in the testimony examined in the committee and debates in the other place, but our hon. friends in the other place failed to pursue the issues and thereby failed in their attempts to make it a workable piece of legislation. I must say I regret that.

As the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth pointed out, while the bill is far from perfect there have been some major improvements made to it which can be either added to later or improved upon once the legislation comes into force. Certainly the bureaucratic mess that the bill in its original form would have created would not be in the best interests of motor vehicle safety.

As presently framed the bill provides for a form of voluntary registration and for a recall mechanism between manufacturer and end user, which in this case is the final consumer. We think it is in the best interests of consumers to take advantage of the safety provisions in this bill, the recall system, and the registration provisions as prescribed in the regulations. In the event that a consumer purchases a tire from a tire dealer or manufacturer and that particular type of tire becomes defective, the consumer will be notified if a recall is necessary.

As the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth has said, there are some areas in the bill that still give us on this side of the House cause for concern. For example, the notification of a defect as provided for in clause 8 still causes us some concern. We are indeed delighted that the bill has eliminated the necessity for the small tire dealer and retailer to notify the consumer. Now the onus is placed directly upon the manufacturer.

Another criticism that we have relates to clause 8(1) under which, as we read the bill, a manufacturer is guilty of an offence if he fails to give notice of a defect in a tire that is not necessarily sold but which is moved through the merchandizing system of the company. The manufacturer must give notice by certified mail of such defect, otherwise he is guilty of an offence. That is all very well and good when it applies to the end user, the consumer, and we certainly find no fault with that.

Mr. Benjamin: You want it both ways, do you?

Mr. Mazankowski: My hon. friend from Regina-Lake Centre would not appreciate this because he really does not understand business. He believes the best way to achieve an objective is to nationalize or socialize; he does not really understand or appreciate the ramifications of competition in the workaday world of business among small entrepreneurs, at the distributor level, and so on and so forth. As far as he is concerned, the more regulations the better. He and his colleagues are great advocates of that, and to some extent the government of the day has fallen for that sort of poppycock, which is why we are in the trouble we are in today.

An hon. Member: Has he worked for the CPR too?

Mr. Mazankowski: He has probably worked for the CPR and the CN. As far as he is concerned he would probably much rather have worked for the CN because it was a nationalized corporation. If he had his way he would nationalize the whole railway network.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest the hon. member return to Bill S-8.

Mr. Benjamin: Don't do that; that would ruin everything.

Mr. Mazankowski: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but these kind of interjections lead one into a discussion of the whole transportation industry, and a lot of our goods are transported on rubber. That is one of our problems. As far as the hon. member is concerned, we should be using steel wheels.

● (2130)

Mr. Benjamin: How about square wheels?

Mr. Mazankowski: As I was attempting to point out, it is all well and good to engage in a registered mail or certified letter process when notifying the end user, but in the case of notification of the merchandising network, such as the distributors, dealers and sub-dealers, there are perhaps better and more effective methods.

The wording of the bill as it now stands makes it an offence for a manufacturer not to notify by certified mail. In the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before the committee in support of this piece of legislation it was brought out that there may very well be other methods that could prove more effective in the notification process than registered mail. The manufacturer, however, is faced with the possibility of being guilty of an offence if he fails to notify his dealer or distributor by certified mail. All I am saying is that there are other ways and means, such as the telex system. There could be a telephone call within the system. I think there is a differentiation to be made here.

Within the merchandising system we have a different situation than in the case of the consumer or end user. I have no argument or qualms about the provisions which require that the end user be notified by registered mail or certified letter, but there are procedures and methods that could be utilized in notification within the merchandising process. We were given the assurance by the parliamentary secretary and officials of the Department of Transport that such regulations which clarify the notification process will be presented so that the process will not only be effective but also not overly burdensome.

It stands to reason that it would be sheer lunacy to suggest that when a manufacturer ships out 75,000 tires to 3,000 dealers he must send out a certified letter or a letter by registered mail notifying them of a pending difficulty. Surely there are other more appropriate ways and means. It may well be suggested that this is a technicality, but I think it is a matter of some concern to manufacturers.

Our second area of concern is that part which deals with the definition of safety standards. While we appreciate that the definition does conform to the definition in the Motor Vehicle Act, after which this particular piece of legislation is patterned, we were not convinced by the testimony and arguments presented by the parliamentary secretary and the officials that the final test is in performance. We believe the safety standard definitions could in fact regulate the design and construction to such an extent that this may well affect future advancement in the manufacture and production of tires. The Michelin people, for example, in a letter which was submitted to the committee on November 19, stated:

> We feel that the definition of "Safety Standards"... should not be worded in a manner which could considerably restrict future design possibilities and innovations. "Safety Standards" should mean actual performance standards and all marking requirements specifically. We feel that design and construction of a tire, as we would define those words, are such that they should be left specifically to the manufacturer.

In addition, it is pointed out in a letter to myself from the Michelin people as follows:

> We would like to point out in more general terms, to yourself, that in establishing new performance standards, which are in essence minimum standards, that they can have quite the reverse effect to that desired, instead of bringing up the standards of the lesser grades of a product it can encourage design down to those minimum standards.

An hon. Member: What is the date of the letter?

Mr. Mazankowski: That date of that letter is March 19, 1976, and I thank the hon. member for drawing that to my attention because I think it is a very pertinent and logical argument.

We do not want to bring forward a bill that would provide for minimum safety standards. What we want to do is encourage optimum standards in respect of automobile tires, whether that be safety and/or performance.

The suggestion here by the Michelin people is that the current definition in the bill establishes a minimum standard which could in fact encourage the tire manufacturers to design downward rather than upward. This is something that may well be a valid consideration. Quite frankly I think the definition could have been dressed up considerably. I do not believe it is the intention of the ministry to dictate design and construction to automobile tire manufacturers. That being the case, this should not be included in the bill.

Safety standards as now defined at page 2 of the bill mean standards regulating the design, construction or function of a motor vehicle tire for the purpose of protecting persons against personal injury, impairment of health, or death.

Quite frankly we believe the key here is performance rather than design and construction. It really does not matter what sort of formula is used in the fabricating of a tire as long as it is safe, performs properly, and meets these standards. We think we can live with that. However, in the opinion of the minister and his representatives, that was not a valid argument. I simply reiterate that we have some reservations about that aspect of the bill.

The other area about which we have some concern is the power of the inspectors. Here again we may be overly concerned, but I feel I must place on the record some of the concerns that have been advanced by the Michelin tire people. I do not have any association with the Michelin people, but I do know, as I am sure many of my colleagues do, that they have set optimum standards in terms of tires and tire safety. Therefore I value the points they have advanced in respect of this particular piece of legislation. They are somewhat concerned about the wording of the section as it relates to the design and construction, but more so in terms of clause 11 as it now stands.

I refer to a letter directed to the Committee on Transportation and Communications dated March 24, 1976. It states:

With clause 11 as it stands now, there is no limitation of power of the inspectors, therefore an inspector can enter any Canadian tire manufacturing facility, photocopy all documents to his liking, freeze all movement of products for a period of 90 or more days and walk away.

The consequences are easy to imagine: work methods and procedures, trade secrets as well as production capacities available to all government employees, thus the Canadian public. Frozen movement of the products will stop production lines causing massive lay-offs and therefore economic hardship to the affected company and to the employees of that company.

It may seem an exaggeration, but with the clause 11 of the act as it is worded now, this is possible and it is in the hands of one inspector who, according to clause 11 (1), may reasonably believe there is any motor vehicle tire of a class etc.

Gentlemen, we appeal to you, as members of the standing committee, to reconsider the powers of the inspector, to seek assurance that only when an actual safety related problem is evident, is the inspector entitled to the search and seizure powers conferred by this act.

Perhaps that may be a bit of over-exaggeration but nonetheless I think it draws attention to the very wide powers the inspectors have under the provisions of this bill.

With those reservations, Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in seeing this bill move forward because I believe it is a bill which clearly all Canadians would support. We on this side of the House support it. We are grateful to members on the government side for accepting some of our suggestions and for dealing in a very serious and sincere way with the reservations we advanced.

Along with my good friend from Halton-Wentworth I wish to pay a tribute to the parliamentary secretary, who indeed has been very helpful in respect of this bill.

In closing I want to say this piece of legislation has one glaring loophole in that it fails to recognize the retread tire. As I pointed out in my initial remarks, this bill has been before the House for over two years. During that time in the testimony that was advanced we were led to believe there would be a code of standards brought forward by the government relating to the safety standards of retreads. It is very discouraging to note that there has not been any progress in this particular area.

While there has been some concern by the government about moving this bill forward, there has been absolutely no progress, so far as we are aware, concerning the question of the retread tire. I think the Ministry of Transport and the government have been derelict in providing leadership to bring together the retreaders and manufacturers in the kind of association that would provide the kind of standards which should govern the sale of retread tires across the country.

It seems to me that a retreaded tire should pass a performance test just the same as a brand new tire. I am told that in the United States a retreader is responsible for maintaining the same standards as those required for a new tire. I think that is a very simple standard. During this two year interval in which we have focused attention on the question of tire safety I think it would have behooved the government and the Ministry of Transport to have come forward and established a proper code or a proper standard governing the sale of retreaded tires.

Mr. Benjamin: I wish you would make up your mind.

Mr. Mazankowski: While we welcome this particular bill as it applies to new tires, we must say very simply that we regret there has been little or no initiative taken in the area of retread tires. My friend said that he wished I would make up my mind. I am as interested as he is in the safety of tires. He does not have a monopoly on the question of safety. I happen to know a little more about the tire business than he. He may be a little jealous. I can assure him that I am as concerned about retread tires as I am about new tires, both of which are being sold very readily on today's market.

In the two years that this bill has been before the House one would have considered that the government, particularly this minister and his very effervescent and knowledgeable parliamentary secretary, before engaging in an attempt to sell us on this measure would have come forth with some positive recommendation in the area of retread tires. I hope that now we are giving them the satisfaction of the passage of this bill they will not delay too long in coming forward and perhaps orchestrating the kind of a system which should govern the sale of retread tires in this country.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased this evening to see that on this occasion we are back before the House of Commons once again at the report stage of Bill S-8 to consider a number of amendments that have been proposed and approved by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I hope this indicates that the House will give this bill its approval very shortly. In this connection I am very pleased to have heard the remarks of the hon. members who spoke just before me.

I want to express a word of thanks to the members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and also to the witnesses who appeared before that committee in the course of our deliberations. I should like to thank the committee members for their co-operation in the thorough and fair consideration which I believe has resulted in some improvements to the bill. I should like to commend as well the very real contribution to this bill by the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski).

Dealing very briefly at the outset with the concluding comments of my friend from Vegreville, I want to assure him sincerely that the issue to which he referred, the matter of retread tires, is not one which has escaped the attention or the concern of the government. Indeed we share the concern he expressed this evening. I assure him work is going forward in that particular area, and I hope we may be able soon to contend with the problem which he outlined earlier this evening.

The history of this particular piece of legislation I think is pretty well understood. It was introduced in the Senate in its original form two years ago as Bill S-3. After examination by the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and subsequent approval by the Senate, the bill unfortunately expired on the order paper of the House of Commons. It was re-introduced and passed by the other place in October, 1974, as Bill S-8. First reading was given to Bill S-8 in this House in October, 1974, and second reading was completed on March 4, 1976. Our Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has given careful study to the bill and has approved a number of amendments which I believe have improved this piece of legislation, as I said earlier.

The general objectives of the Motor Vehicle Tire Safety Act have not changed in the course of the last couple of years of work. This bill, when passed, will lead to increased safety of Canadian motorists and will prevent unfair competition for Canadian tire manufacturing plants.

During discussion of this bill, both at second reading and in the standing committee, the need for such a bill has been questioned. In particular there has been some suggestion that the implementation of this legislation will not contribute greatly to road safety. On the other hand, I believe many of the comments made during second reading related to the very real concern that many of us have about the quality and safety of the tires that are offered for sale in this country.

The testimony that many of us had the opportunity to hear in the committee demonstrated that Canadian manufacturers are indeed doing an excellent job in producing first class tires for the Canadian consumer. However, there was also testimony that indicated that on occasion defective tires do get produced and do result in serious road accidents. It is the objective of this bill to see that these occasions are rare and that when they do occur that motorists have the opportunity of being notified in advance of the defects so that they may avoid driving their cars on potentially dangerous tires.

The passage of this bill will also enhance federal-provincial co-operation by assisting the provinces in overcoming problems involving the control of tire safety at the point of retail sale.

The main provisions of this legislation probably bear repeating and emphasizing at this time. The bill will establish the authority for the governor in council to prescribe safety standards for minimum tire safety requirements. These standards will be established for new tires manufactured in Canada and for all tires imported into this country. The bill establishes a national tire safety mark and, by use of the mark, tire manufacturers will be certifying that they comply with the prescribed safety standards.

Manufacturers and distributors will be prohibited from exporting or from sending or carrying from one province to another motor vehicle tires to which the national safety mark has not been applied. Manufacturers and importers will be required to give notice of any safety related tire defects of which they become aware. The bill establishes the method by which this notice must be given.

As has been mentioned earlier in the House this evening, the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has given careful consideration to the problems this bill might have created for small distributors and dealers. As was mentioned during the second reading, it was never the government's intention to require dealers to maintain a detailed record system of their tire sales, nor was there any intention to establish a large staff of inspectors to ensure that the act was being complied with at the small distributor and dealer level. For this reason two main amendments were proposed, one establishing a record system in which consumers could have their names recorded if they so desired, and a second providing that inspectors already designated under the Motor Vehicle Safety Act be designated as inspectors under this act.

The committee, as a result of consultation, settled on a number of amendments which will limit certain responsibilities under the act to manufacturers, importers, and only those distributors who are in the business of selling in more than one province or country; the responsibility for giving notice of safety related defects, as a result of these amendments, has been clearly left to the manufacturers and importers.

I think that as hon. members go through this legislation and compare the bill which is before the House this evening with the one which was referred to the committee some weeks ago they will find that a number of amendments have been made to it. For the information of those hon. members who would like to follow the course of this legislation I would point out that the most significant of these amendments are to clauses 2, 4, 5, and 7, and probably the most important is to clause 8.

The proposed change to clause 8 will result in the distributors having no responsibility for notifying subsequent tire purchasers of safety related defects. Instead this responsibility will lie entirely with the manufacturers or importers. Therefore the consumer will still be assured that he will be notified of a defect if he has his name recorded with the manufacturer or importer. However, distributors and dealers will not be responsible for maintaining a record of tire purchasers.

Clause 8(2)(a) is also to be amended so that certified mail may be used rather than registered mail in notifying purchasers of safety related defects.

Clause 10 is also a clause to which hon. members may wish to refer to see some of the work of the standing committee. Clause 11 was another such clause. In view of the lateness of the hour I will confine my concluding remarks to clause 11, and be brief with respect to it.

The proposed amendment to clause 11 will ensure that inspectors do not have a completely free run of a manufacturer's premises. Inspectors will be able to inspect tires at the point of manufacture. However, they will only be able to inspect completed tires that are to be offered for sale. Therefore they will not be involved with experimental or developmental tires. This possibility concerned the industry and, as the House has heard, it concerns hon. members opposite as well, and I believe these amendments will satisfy the industry that the inspectors will only be concerned with tires that will find their way into the market place.

I am satisfied that these amendments do not compromise the original objectives of the bill. In fact I believe they will strengthen the bill by making it more practical, and by more clearly defining the responsibilities of manufacturers, importers, and distributors. In view of all this I believe that at this time Bill S-8 is worthy of the support of all parties in this House.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the one minute left I only want to say that while we agree that this legislation should be passed we think it is window dressing. In spite of all the nit picking by the official opposition and the protestations by the government it will not guarantee proper safety and performance.

I would like to remind the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who said he knows so much about the tire business, that I too dealt with it for about eight years and I know that every reputable small businessman and retailer keeps accurate records of the serial numbers, kinds, makes, and sizes of tires, and that whatever fears he might have had have nothing to do with safety and performance and the protection of the public.

[Mr. Goodale.]

The legislation can well be passed tonight but it will make little difference in experience in the next few years because both the government and the official opposition have chickened out and have not done something really important about tire safety.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could the acting House leader tell us what is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Lang: At present it would be our inclination to call Bill C-89 and possibly Bill C-68, although the alternative would be to go to Bill C-61 and attempt to finish it tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—LOCKHEED CONTRACT—ARRANGEMENTS FOR INTERIM FINANCING

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, without upsetting any delicate arrangements that may be about to be culminated with respect to the replacement of the Argus or interfering with it because all of us, particularly on this side, are very concerned that Maritime Command get a replacement, I wish to say that there is no question that we continue to agree that that replacement should be the Orion. However, we continue to have some very grave concern about mismanagement and very bad handling with respect to the details of the contract, and my purpose tonight is to try to touch on three questions which I raised shortly prior to the Easter recess with respect to perhaps a narrow aspect of this situation. They have to do with the authority or the absence of authority for the spending of any moneys by the Department of National Defence or on behalf of National Defence by the Department of Supply and Services, or the authorizing by Supply and Services of the expenditures of any funds prior to the establishment of a contract.

● (2200)

I think it would serve the understanding of Canadians, particularly hon. members on this side of the House, quite substantially if we were to understand a little more about the background for proceeding in the absence of a contract, and particularly for proceeding when there was reason to believe that the contract would give rise to some considerable problems.

As I indicated, I do not particularly want to make comments or observations this evening which would jeopardize the situation as we now have it. I think we would be reassured if the parliamentary secretary could indicate to us tonight one or two things; first, if he could touch on the nature of the authority and from whence it came with respect to expenditures which were made in the absence of a contract; second, if he could give us some indication with respect to timing, because I understand that, perhaps even more than the Department of National Defence, the Department of Supply and Services continues to be very closely and deeply involved in this contract; third, we would appreciate hearing tonight a reiteration of the assurance that in connection with any announcement either the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) or the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) might again undertake immediately to table the contract and that the minister will refer that contract to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence so that the members of that committee and Canadians in general will have some understanding of the contract and some understanding of just what it is we are getting into.

Finally, there is a fourth area. I recognize that this falls a little closer into the area of policy which would be more clearly national defence, but in this interim period has any consideration been given by the ministry, by the Treasury benches, or by the Department of National Defence to proceeding with the development and work up of a contract which would effectively reduce, change or alter the form of the replacement equipment? What I am getting at is whether there has been any consideration given by the Treasury Board to charging other user departments a portion of the capital cost of the Orion so that the cost to the Department of National Defence will not be in the order of $60 million to $70 million, or possibly even $75 million or $80 million, but rather more in the order of $30 million. It seems unreasonable that the Department of National Defence should be asked to pay twice as much for an aircraft in terms of its capital cost when other government departments will utilize to an extensive degree the capacities and capabilities of this aircraft.

Those are the four areas upon which I should like the parliamentary secretary to touch. I think we would be enlightened and grateful, and I appreciate his being here this evening.

Mr. Walter Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to answer the hon. member's questions in three minutes. I shall begin by speaking on the interim financing arrangements for the Lockheed contract.

Regarding the interim financing for the Lockheed contract, it must be recognized that, as the contracting agency for most government departments, the Department of Supply and Services is not directly responsible for the provision of program funds to support the requirements of customers. Officers of the department and, particularly, the DSS members of the LRPA joint project office have been actively assisting the Department of National Defence in endeavours to resolve the DND cash shortfall in the early years of the program.

The matter has not been finalized as of this date and we have been requested to enter into an option arrangement with Lockheed whereby the price, schedules, and industrial benefits for the LRPA acquisition would be protected through April, 1976. This afternoon the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) said that he hoped to be in a position to make an announcement soon.

Let me now say a word with regard to the authority to spend the money. The cabinet initially approved the selection of the Lockheed P3 LRPA aircraft on November 27, 1975, and approval to contract was issued by Treasury Board on December 2, 1975. On this basis a conditional acceptance of Lockheed's offer which otherwise would have expired was issued in order to preserve the integrity of the offer, including price and Canadian industrial benefits. The same approval process has been followed in the case of the recently negotiated option to extend the original conditions, price, and benefits to April 30, 1976.

The hon. member also raised another question concerning the P3 LRPA. The aircraft is essentially configured to meet specific defence requirements, although certain items of surveillance equipment can also be utilized for non-military purposes such as pollution protection, ice reconnaissance and so on. During the definition phase a policy decision was made not to ask other departments to contribute to capital costs. However, new tasks could arise in future and cost recovery principles may apply when the aircraft are used on missions dedicated for other departments.

The Minister of National Defence has said on several occasions that negotiations taking place between the Lockheed company and the banks are going ahead in a constructive way. Earlier today, replying to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), the minister said that negotiations are in the final stages and an announcement will be made shortly. There is no change from the initially expressed intention of the Department of National Defence to proceed with the contract for the Lockheed long-range patrol aircraft which is to replace the Argus.

AIRPORTS—PICKERING—PLANS FOR USE OF LAND IN VIEW OF ABANDONMENT OF CONSTRUCTION PLANS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the question I am raising tonight is connected with the question I directed initially to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on April 7. I then directed it to the acting Minister of Transport, who was then the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey); he, in turn, referred the question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale) who said, as reported at page 12580 of Hansard, ".... I will certainly bring the question to the attention of the minister."

My question concerned Pickering. I simply asked if the government intended to return the Pickering area lands to previous owners and, if not, what exactly did the government propose to do with those lands. I asked the question even though in the last two or three years 84 oral questions concerning Pickering have been directed to the government. There is still tremendous doubt on what the government's decision is to be on this unfortunately conceived project.

I asked my question because current statistics show that air travel in Canada and in many other parts of the world has, so to speak, "plateau-ed out." The government's repeated statements that somehow Malton will become overcrowded do not appear to be backed up by existing statistics. I would also point out that another tragedy, Mirabel, is perhaps becoming the most costly white elephant in the world. I think that we, as members of this House, have to accept the responsibility of ensuring that the government, in spite of itself, does not create a still more costly white elephant than Mirabel is at the present time.

I say this because when we review both the answers to written questions on this subject and to oral questions, we find there is a great discrepancy among the ministers who respond to the questions. For example, as long ago as May 1, 1974, in answer to a written question, the then parliamentary secretary to the minister of transport stated that the total cost, expressed in 1973 dollars, of Pickering would be $434,429,000. That seems to have been the high admitted cost of Pickering. Ever since, ministers one after another have played down the total cost of this concept, sometimes stating it might be about $200 million that is committed.

We know from the current estimates that the government is still proposing to spend money on Pickering in spite of the fact it is clear the majority of those in the Toronto area do not want this airport. It is clear the Ontario government has asked that the airport be delayed.

In short, my question of April 7 was simply one of clarification; would the present administration now tell us what it proposes to do with these lands, not only the expropriated lands, but the noise lands that it has so unfairly caused to be frozen surrounding the Pickering airport site?

Last fall my colleague from Blind River asked what it proposed to do with the farm land it had expropriated. At that time the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) indicated the government was going to endeavour to get farmers to come in and farm it while it waited for the actual development of Pickering. Hopefully the answer tonight will give some further knowledge. Has it in fact rented the land for farm purposes? Spring is here. It is important that those 18,000 acres be devoted as much as possible to agricultural production.

Historical sites are involved. What is the government's position? Has it finally accepted that there are certain significant historical sites there that should not be permanently destroyed, as was apparently the original intention of the present administration?

I would also like to point out that there has been much talk about the Gibson report. When you review the questions in this House, there was great anxiety on the part of the members as to the position of that inquiry. Subsequently there was a general feeling that the Gibson report gave fairly good evidence that the present administration should not continue with the project as originally intended. What is the attitude of the present administration? Does it intend to proceed in spite of the Gibson report, and in spite of the attitude of the Ontario government that the project should not be allowed to continue?

It is time that the present administration gave us a candid answer. I hope it will come to its senses and say that it has agreed to abandon the project, it was an unfortunate concept in the beginning, it was something of a civil service dream that it finally realizes is not needed, and that the money that would be spent on Pickering will be spent on a much more worth-while cause than was originally proposed.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond this evening to my friend, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I believe this is the first opportunity that I have had during a late show proceeding in this House to discuss an issue with the hon. gentleman. I take the gist of his question to be this: what plans does the Government of Canada have with respect to the land involved in the Pickering airport site?

While final statistics are not yet available, there appears to have been little or no growth in Toronto's air traffic during 1975, but this in itself is not sufficient reason to throw away for all time the option for the people of the Toronto area ultimately to establish airport facilities at the Pickering site. There have also been slowdowns in the past, but the hard lesson that must be learned in the art of forecasting demand for airport facilities is that one cannot decide major long term options on the basis of short term fluctuations in traffic.

We have reason to believe that the 1975 air traffic pattern is just that, a short term fluctuation in what would still appear to be an over-all upward trend, at least in the foreseeable future. This growth plateau is not surprising when one considers economic conditions in 1975 and the unusually high rate of growth between 1971 and 1974; Toronto traffic increased 56 per cent over those three years in comparison with total United States traffic growth of about 20 per cent in the same period.

On the likely basis then that traffic will increase again, it remains the view of the federal government that a second airport may well be needed in the Toronto area. For this reason it is our intention to retain the option for the people of Toronto of providing needed airport facilities at some time in the future. Whether facilities are needed in 1980 or 1985 does not alter the long term need. The government cannot wilfully commit itself to a course of action such as has been suggested, one which would inevitably mean the loss of all flexibility in meeting future needs.

At present Toronto handles about 25 per cent of the nation's air traffic, and we feel that failure to provide adequate facilities in the area would ultimately hamper Toronto's ability to compete effectively on an economic basis with other cities in North America. In the meantime the land at Pickering will be retained by the federal government and is being put to productive use through leasing of the properties for farming.

As most people are now aware, at the time of expropriation over 50 per cent of the airport site was owned by speculative interests and only about 10,500 acres of the 18,000 total acres were being actively farmed. The production yield from the site was considerably below the average for similar agricultural land elsewhere in Ontario. Since the expropriation we have attempted to maximize the use of the land by leasing all the rentable residential and farm property. At present some 14,000 acres are devoted to farming, an increase of over 33 per cent since the land was acquired. The government has committed itself to developing a long term program to maximize agricultural production on the site, even in the event airport facilities are developed.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member agrees that the only responsible course of action is the one we are presently following. It allows adequate flexibility in the long term while making the best use of present facilities in the short term. At the same time, the agricultural resources now in the government's charge at the Pickering site are being productively managed to the advantage of the Toronto area.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—CAMBODIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF AID

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I should like to expand this evening on a question I first asked on March 18, and continued to repeat as lately as April 7. In so doing I wish to quote from the Sunday Times, a British newspaper, of April 18, a date subsequent to my last raising of this subject. I propose to quote from an article by Jon Swain, named "Journalist of the Year" in the 1975 British press awards for his despatches on the fall of Cambodia to the Communists. He has now returned to the borders of that country to report on the tragic and profound revolution forced on its people in just one year. He says:

> If any country deserves the world's compassion and interest it is Cambodia.

Nevertheless, the attempts made by myself and others in this House to obtain any sort of response when we raise this subject have been met with precious little interest and, certainly, with no compassion.

Writing about this particular revolution, Mr. Swain says:

> It is now clear that this has obliterated what little progress had been made in the past hundred years and destroyed an ancient civilization which had stayed intact for centuries.

● (2220)

He goes on to say:

> But it has been the Khmer Rouge, forcing a uniquely painful brand of communism on to a bewildered, demoralized peasantry at the point of a gun, that has prolonged and darkened the tragedy.

Further he says:

> Probably the world will never know how many Cambodians have died or had their lives irreparably broken by the Khmer Rouge's rush to force a new society . . .

Other reports have been bold enough to estimate the dead to be as high as 600,000. The government's hesitancy to display any interest in this area is to me very strange. I can recall during the twenty-seventh parliament we were constantly sending special missions to Hanoi, which is not all that far from Phnom Penh in Cambodia, in an endeavour to lessen hostilities. No amount of American bombing or danger could keep us out of Hanoi at that time. We found a way to overcome every obstacle and to send our special representatives to Hanoi.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we know that the government, which oddly enough does not even have a parliamentary secretary in the House at the moment to respond to my question, is prepared to make a big gesture in responding to conditions in some other parts of the world. We have seen in the last few weeks threats to cut off federal assistance to the Olympics for the Handicapped because a South African team, which was integrated, was permitted to enter that competition. The action of the federal government at that moment was swift and sure. I find it a strange double standard.

I made inquiries whether this country was prepared to send a special mission to Cambodia to ascertain what had happened in that country. I received no response. I inquired whether our aid to the Khmer Republic had been cut off and was told there was no aid. This was reassuring because in 1972 our aid amounted to $30,000, in 1973 to $50,000, and in 1974 to $100,000. I notice the parliamentary secretary has now arrived so perhaps I can have an answer to my questions.

If this accelerated rate in the growth of aid to the Khmer Republic has been cut off, I wonder when it was cut off and what was the motive. Was it their unilateral action, or was it as a protest by this country against the situation developing in that part of the world once the communist Khmer regime had taken over? I admit the amounts spent were small, but was there no residue of good will in that country? Cannot we find among the representatives in that area over the years someone we could send to that country to plead for some respect of human life and to give an indication of our interest in and compassion for that extremely troubled land?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Okanagan Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) has spoken on several occasions about the question of aid to Cambodia. He mentioned previously that the United States deemed it timely to withdraw their aid. Now, I fail to see the relevancy of this statement to Canada. In fact, this country no longer provides assistance to Cambodia since April 1975 and no aid program is being considered for the time being. No Canadian diplomat is accredited with the Cambodian government and the contacts we have with the few Cambodian diplomats posted abroad are very casual.

I think he will remember that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and myself have declared on several occasions that it was extremely difficult to obtain reliable information on what is going on in Cambodia at the moment. None of our allies has any diplomat stationed in Phom Penh and reporters have no access to the country. According to our information, chances are very remote that this situation will change in a forseeable future because the Cambodian regime has clearly indicated that it is not interested in receiving diplomatic missions from countries that recognized the former regime of General Lon Nol, of which Canada was.

Their attitude is the same with regard to international agencies which managed assistance programs under the former regime. Their representatives were expelled from Cambodia at the same time as all other foreigners in the spring of 1975. Even the International Red Cross, which tried to reestablish ties with its Cambodian branch, has had no success to date. The policy of isolationism, devoid of any practical concessions, of the present Cambodian government makes it therefore extremely difficult for the Canadian government to attempt to get information on the development of events in that country.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, to my mind, there is little probability that the United Nations will be asked to look into the matter of the rights of the people and all other related matters unless individuals or non-governmental groups, with a first hand and reliable knowledge of recent events in Cambodia, bring forth directly a grievance for violation of human rights before the agency of the General Assembly of the UN entrusted with that type of problem, as that is the procedure that must be followed when human rights are violated, or in cases of torture, which cases have repeatedly been reported as occurring in Cambodia.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF DECISION ON WAGE SETTLEMENT OF INCO WORKERS AT THOMPSON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the Anti-Inflation Board roll-back of a settlement reached between United Steelworkers local 6166 and International Nickel Company of Canada which concerns a work force of 3,000 employees in Thompson, Manitoba. In view of the fact that there is a clear historic relationship between the Manitoba Division of INCO Limited and its employees and settlements between INCO Limited and its employees in Sudbury, Port Colborne and Shebandowan, Ontario, which settlements were reached prior to the implementation of AIB regulations and which historically always precede Manitoba negotiations by six months; and in view of the fact that an AIB imposed settlement in Thompson significantly lower than in the Ontario operations will result in a critical shortage of employees in Thompson, and in view of the fact that maintenance of operations in Thompson is vital to the continued existence of the city of Thompson because the INCO payroll is 80 per cent of the total payroll in that city, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House instruct the Prime Minister to table forthwith a telegram from three thousand citizens of Northern Manitoba protesting the roll back and the Government's misleading statements in this matter, and that the Prime Minister and Cabinet immediately consider the destructive consequences of the roll back to the city of Thompson, other northern communities, and the mining industry of Canada and take appropriate steps to alleviate the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion proposed by the hon. member can only be put forward with the unanimous consent of the House. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN PROPOSALS TO UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the standing committee on external affairs and national defence filed a report on international development on Wednesday, April 14, and in view of the fact that this report calls attention to the urgent importance of the forthcoming meeting in Nairobi of UNCTAD, United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, and in view of the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be representing Canada at the conference, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche):

That this House request the Secretary of State to give to the House an outline of the constructive proposals to be made by Canada with a view to ensuring the success of the UNCTAD IV conference which is all-important to the relations between Canada and the developing world.

Mr. Speaker: The motion can only be put with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF STOCKS AND PRICE OF CHEMICAL FERTILIZER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an urgent matter.

Since last spring the manufacturers of chemical fertilizers were not in a position to provide normal supplies to farmers; since chemical fertilizers were so expensive in 1975 that a great many farmers were unable to buy some to meet their needs; and since there were price fluctuations, even taking into consideration the location of supplies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House take all the necessary steps in the shortest possible time to establish a special committee to undertake an immediate study on the availability and prices of chemical fertilizers and thus exercise a control on the prices of chemical fertilizers to prevent farmers from being exploited at that level and to guarantee a sufficient supply of fertilizers to meet the demand.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion cannot be moved without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

INTRODUCTION OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On Tuesday, December 23, 1975, the Prime Minister in a television conversation with Bruce Phillips and Carole Taylor said, and I quote:

● (1410)

In the first half of this year, for instance, the public sector salaries have grown by something like 22 per cent as against 14 per cent in the private sector because in the private sector there is a limit that's called bankruptcy. In the public sector there's not, so we obviously have to change that.

The change introduced by the Prime Minister is called the Anti-Inflation Board. The Financial Times—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Motions pursuant to Standing Order 43.

ABORTION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF BADGLEY COMMITTEE REPORT AND DEBATE ON ISSUE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the latest report of the ARCAL referral clinic of Ottawa that out of 859 women referred for abortion after counselling only 50 were able to obtain a therapeutic abortion in Canada, the remainder being performed in the United States, and in view of the lack of debate in this House on this important national issue, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House request the filing of the Badgley Committee report within two weeks, and further that the House leaders set aside a reasonable period of time for debate on this important national issue to commence no later than one month from this date.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

MIRABEL—TENDERING FOR INSTALLATION OF SOUND REINFORCING SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, who I assume will be reporting on the questions I asked yesterday whenever he is ready. Today I would ask him, or perhaps his colleague the Minister of Supply and Services, whether he can assure the House that to his knowledge there were no improprieties or irregularities surrounding the tendering for, and letting of, some of the contracts for the installation of a sound reinforcing system at Mirabel airport.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member generally that I know of no irregularities with regard to the tendering system. If he is going to stand up every day and ask about irregularities on some other contract—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: —then in that case he may be seen by his colleagues opposite to be doing a service, but I do not think that he will be seen by the country or by anybody else to be doing a service.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I am only trying to be helpful to the minister; he certainly needs help. Can I then ask the minister whether he will inquire into the circumstances surrounding this particular contract with a view to explaining how it is that the single and only bidder whose tender was found in the tender box when it was opened was not the bidder who won the contract?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it is rather intriguing that the hon. member chooses to make these sorts of allegations and insinuations without—

Mr. Fairweather: Let us have an official inquiry, then.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Cleanliness is next to Godliness.

Mr. Lang: The hon. member does so, even though he attaches so little importance to the matter that he does not even give me an hour's notice about the situation so that I can return with the answer. I recognize that hon. members opposite, who are only interested in making a point and getting a headline on the basis of a question, will not be interested in an answer and therefore do not want any notice to be given. For instance, having given me notice of a certain matter yesterday, which was rather a puff of nothing, he now goes to another issue rather than returning to yesterday's issue.

NUMBER OF INCIDENTS REQUIRED BEFORE INQUIRY ORDERED

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): It may be a puff of nothing, Mr. Speaker, or it may be a puff of something. May I direct my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the right hon. gentleman indicated that if there were a system or pattern of irregularities, he might consider a judicial inquiry in order to clarify matters. In order to ascertain whether the Prime Minister is establishing new political jurisprudence in which he may be saying more than one incident is required for an inquiry, will he inform us if he has formulated guidelines as to the number and types of events which are conditions precedent to an inquiry, or will he be having his own parliamentary pre-enquête?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is up to parliament to decide whether it wants a pre-enquête.

An hon. Member: We want one.

Mr. Trudeau: On the one hand when I say parliament should decide the other side seems to object, and when I say that I should decide, they say it is up to parliament to decide. I suggest they should make up their minds, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: We want you to decide.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You have just had a week's holiday; don't get testy.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat the astonishment expressed by the Minister of Transport, that having asked a series of questions yesterday, which the House obviously thought important and which the Minister of Transport has looked into, the opposition is no longer interested in having the answers but just wants to ask questions. I suggest that if they want to ask questions, in order to ascertain truths and get answers, they should ask the questions and not move on from one thing to another.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PERSON AUTHORIZING VISIT TO OFFICES OF JEAN RIVARD—RELATIONSHIP TO MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND COMMISSIONER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Solicitor General. I wonder whether the minister would inform the House who authorized the visit of the RCMP to the offices of Jean Rivard, journalist for Tele-Media, on April 15, 1976? Did the interrogation originate as an internal initiative of the RCMP or was it inspired by requests from political sources?

An hon. Member: You are insulting the RCMP now.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it certainly was not authorized by anybody in a political position, but I will be pleased to find out which officer authorized the visit.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, will the minister indicate to the House whether there is any direct or indirect relationship between the visit to Mr. Rivard and conversations held between the Prime Minister and RCMP Commissioner Nadon just two days previous?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have no information that there is any such connection, and I would be interested if the hon. member has any.

An hon. Member: Why don't you check it with the Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could be allowed to answer that. There was no question of Mr. Jean Rivard in any discussion I had with the Commissioner of the RCMP, and I am astonished that the hon. member is insinuating to the contrary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We are not insinuating, we are asking questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

POSSIBILITY TREASURY BOARD CONSULTED ON RENEWAL OF SKY SHOPS LEASE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister and I do not at all share the criticism levelled at the hon. member for Central Nova for doing exactly what a good MP should be doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question that does have reference to an answer given yesterday, and that is the question I asked about the role the Treasury Board may or may not have played in the decision reached to extend the franchise of Sky Shops. Yesterday the Prime Minister indicated he hoped to have an answer to that question later on in the day. Therefore, I should like to put it to him, has he found out whether the Treasury Board was consulted with respect to the extension of the franchise to Sky Shops and, if so, will he tell the House what Treasury Board's advice was on the matter? If Treasury Board was not consulted, why was it not consulted?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that this answer was given to the House several weeks ago by the Minister of Transport when he answered in a rather detailed way about the renewal of the Sky Shops lease. He indicated then, and perhaps he could give the exact reference as I do not have it before me, that the Sky Shops lease, which originated with the Diefenbaker government, was renewed under our government at very substantially improved conditions to the benefit of the government. He indicated that was done in a routine way without any political intervention whatsoever. It was done in a routine way by officials. I would suggest that the House should return to the answer of the hon. Minister of Transport, reflect on it and give it some publicity, rather than pretending he had not given that answer.

REASON FOR ORDER IN COUNCIL EXTENDING SKY SHOPS LEASE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Before you clap too loudly, wait until you hear this one. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has just said the decision was made by officials, would he mind telling the House why the cabinet passed an Order in Council dated August 24, 1972, just prior to the election of that year, which extended the franchise of Sky Shops at Dorval by another five years when the normal process would have been to call for a re-submission of tenders, a procedure which, in fact, had been stated to be the case by the then deputy minister Mr. O. C. Stoner and which was overturned by the cabinet by order in council.

● (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these are allegations which I cannot—

An hon. Member: Why don't you clap?

Mr. Trudeau: Surely, the House must understand that I cannot vouch for the exactitude of every fact of every decision which is quoted by the opposition which they presumably think is accurate. In this particular case, if there was an Order in Council I will look it up. I will look at the minute of cabinet, see what happened and report to the House, assuming the opposition is interested tomorrow in getting the answers rather than just putting questions.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I went back to the Prime Minister today following up on a question I asked him yesterday, so I resent that pettiness. On the question of whether or not there was an Order in Council, I could tell the Prime Minister that I checked myself with the Privy Council office this morning. So I repeat, Mr. Speaker; will the Prime Minister check because he will find out from the Privy Council office that there was an Order in Council passed on August 24, 1972 which extended the franchise and will he undertake to make a report back to the House tomorrow concerning the reason the cabinet reached that particular decision?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I will, Mr. Speaker, also let the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby have the reference to the previous discussion some months ago concerning the nature of the extension of this particular lease involving the Sky Shops concession. It is in Hansard. It is all on the record. The actual decision to recommend the extension of the lease was made on the basis of a much increased revenue in the remaining three years which the lease still had to run, and was the basis for its renewal. I will give the hon. member the detailed information on that. That was in the nature of a decision, and recommendation which in due course in the ordinary way had to go forward to the Treasury Board for confirmation. That is the order of confirmation to which the hon. member referred. It is a routine one in relation to the awarding of a contract of this nature, in this case a five-year lease.

I would advise the hon. member that he might go back and look at it. In the original contract which still had three years left to run a rather lower revenue was specified and a very much higher revenue, particularly on liquor sales, was specified for the remaining three years of the lease as well as for the renewal and the five-year period. We will, from time to time, have renewals in a variety of circumstances. If the hon. member will look back at this one he will see as well that it had to do with the fact that this was an area and an airport where a great deal of change was going to occur at the end of the period because of the transfer of the international traffic from Dorval to Mirabel, and of course a duty-free shop is essentially related to international traffic.

FLOODS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

According to the Quebec government's latest estimates concerning the recent floods throughout the province, the damage has been assessed to roughly $34 million. Has the Minister of Finance been contacted by the Quebec Minister of Natural Resources or of Finance and has he received a request pursuant to the federal act providing for assistance in case of natural disasters, amounting to $1 per capita in the province whenever the damages exceed, let us say, $6,500,000?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has pointed out, there exists indeed a federal program to cover part of the expenses due to such flooding. I did not, personally, receive a telephone call from my Quebec counterpart but I can inquire and report to the hon. member.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE DECISION OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ON WAGE SETTLEMENT OF INCO WORKERS AT THOMPSON WILL NOT BE REPEATED

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that if the Anti-Inflation Board ruling regarding steelworkers in Thompson, Manitoba is allowed to stand, the continued viable existence of the city of Thompson is in jeopardy, because if INCO cannot get workers they will seriously cut back operations which slashes the pay roll upon which the city depends, and in view of the fact that this specific situation will be repeated in other northern communities as wage settlements are negotiated later this year, what assurance is the minister prepared to give labour in Canada that the Thompson situation will be corrected, and further, that it will not be allowed to be repeated in other Canadian communities?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I believe that after full representations the Anti-Inflation Board took all these considerations into account when they made their final award, and I trust they will do so in the future.

Mr. Fraser: I would point out through you, Mr. Speaker, that the payroll of INCO is over 80 per cent of the total payroll of that town and that the town will die if this ruling is allowed to stand. I should like to ask the minister the following question. On October 20 last the Minister of Labour advised Mr. Wilf Hudson of the steelworkers in Thompson to continue bargaining as usual. The answer which the minister gave was in reference to the concern as to whether the historical relationship between Sudbury and Thompson would be maintained. In view of the situation today in Thompson where normal bargaining did not result in maintaining historical relationships—contrary to the advice of the minister—how will the minister restore the confidence of labour in the restraint program when the Thompson case illustrates how the minister himself has failed to understand the implications of his government's policy on the collective bargaining process?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Certainly, I do not agree with what the hon. member has stated and I would like to know the source of his information. I think that any reference I made—and I stand to be corrected here—was relative to the INCO and Falconbridge situation in the north. I am also aware—and the hon. member might be interested in this—that the United Steelworkers of America were down here to make representations last week to the Anti-Inflation Board with reference to Elliot Lake and the situation developing there, and following that with reference to Thompson. I am not fully aware of the precise reaction of the Anti-Inflation Board to the representations made by the United Steelworkers in support of a request for a review of the situation, but I will try to find out and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Fraser: I should like to advise the minister that there is a telegram signed by 3,000 people living in the north with respect to this situation which was delivered to the office of the right hon. Prime Minister yesterday or the day before and I ask the minister to look at that. It is not just Thompson; it is Snow Lake, Flin Flon—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ALLEGED STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FINANCE CONCERNING PARITY BETWEEN INCO WORKERS IN THOMPSON AND SUDBURY

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On the program "Cross Country Check-Up", several months ago the minister was asked whether the INCO steelworkers in Thompson would be allowed the same increase in wages and benefits that the INCO steelworkers received in Sudbury. The minister said they should receive the same but no more. Can he tell the House why he made this statement in light of the fact that the AIB ruling is in direct contradiction to the assurance the minister gave?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would want to check to see whether the hon. gentleman's quotation is accurate. I have always pointed out that it is for the Anti-Inflation Board to make this decision, as recommended by parliament.

● (1430)

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Can the minister give the House and the people of Thompson an assurance that he will immediately raise this matter in cabinet and press for an appropriate solution?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Parliament has created the Anti-Inflation Board for the purpose of dealing with this particular question. Indeed, the hon. member probably voted for it at second reading, and I think we should obey the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fraser: What about the town? What are you going to do?

Mr. Stanfield: It couldn't have happened to a nicer fellow than you.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You voted for it, too. You advocated it and voted for it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

SUGGESTED NEW COMPETITION FOR DESIGN OF NATIONAL GALLERY

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. It seems that the government, and specifically the Department of Public Works, has incurred the wrath of the architects of our country as a result of the provisions which have been set out for taking part in the competition for design of the new national gallery. Would the minister consider calling for a new competition for this design, which would allow more individual architects to submit plans?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should point out to the hon. member that so far as the architects are concerned there have been some expressions of contrary view, and that the competition was organized along lines in agreement with the representative associations for the architects of Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF INSTRUCTIONS NOT TO PROSECUTE OIL COMPANIES WITHOUT CONSULTING MINISTER—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Last April 7 Dr. Stephen, a senior official of the Canadian Wildlife Service, in giving evidence before the Berger Commission admitted that certain prosecutions had not been commenced because they might have a political impact. On being challenged on that Dr. Stephen made this statement: "I consider it my job to put a halo and wings on my minister." While I will refrain from comment on the very impossible job that civil servant has, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if instructions were in fact given to this and other civil servants in the minister's department to report first to the minister before engaging in prosecutions of oil companies, which might have a political impact.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the answer is definitely no.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the statement which obviously was made before the commission of inquiry, and which has the effect of sworn evidence, will the minister make an inquiry into the question of these prosecutions and why it was admitted that certain prosecutions for shooting were brought against ordinary individuals, but prosecutions against oil companies were not launched as they should have been? Would the minister inquire into that and report back to this House?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I asked my deputy minister to make a full inquiry and make a report to me, and after that I will see if I can give some information.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF SOCIETY FOR THE STUDY OF THE HERITAGE OF CANADA

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that over a year has passed since the RCMP launched an investigation into the Society for the Study of the Heritage of Canada, and in view of the fact that the minister's seatmate and another ministry have spent over $1 million of taxpayers money in this organization, which is now defunct and bankrupt, is the minister now in a position to advise us whether he has received a full report and whether the investigation of the RCMP is now complete.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when the RCMP complete investigations, they present their reports to the Crown prosecutors in the different provinces, but I could get a report from them on what progress has been made in this investigation and report.

Mr. Brisco: I appreciate the answer of the minister, but in view of the fact that the matter has been brought to the floor of this House, and in view of the fact that numerous questions have been asked, would the minister not consider it routine to advise the House as to whether the RCMP had completed their investigation?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member had given me notice of his question, I would have been pleased to give him an answer today.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Thousands of police investigations are going on across the country, and I do not have reports on all of them for the House at all times.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST TO FACILITATE ENTRY OF LEBANESE TO CANADA

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since Canada had to close its offices in Beirut following the political turmoil in Lebanon and since many Lebanese whose second language and culture are akin to and shared by many Canadians of French expression intend to migrate to Canada and since it is important to ensure a better linguistic balance among immigrants in Canada, would the minister tell the House whether he is prepared to consider the applications from Lebanese citizens who request a visa to immigrate to Canada as political refugees and thus facilitate their settlement in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are giving high priority to processing Lebanese, particularly those Lebanese who are related to Canadians or to landed immigrants in Canada.

Incidentally, our immigration officer in charge travelled to Beirut on April 22 to begin the administrative processing of some 200 files which were pending. However, in the sense of the UN definition of the word, these people are not refugees in that they are not fleeing persecution on political grounds, although there is no argument that they are in a very disturbing and unstable situation, which we hope is temporary. We will give sympathetic consideration in the sense of not asking Lebanese people here in Canada who are not related to Canadians, to return while this disturbance continues. We are giving high priority to processing those who have been nominated or sponsored.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR CABINET CONSIDERATION OF DECISION OF BOARD ON WAGE SETTLEMENT OF INCO WORKERS AT THOMPSON

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. My question relates to the subject already raised by the hon. member for Churchill and the hon. member for Vancouver South, but there is one further direct question I should like to put to the minister.

In view of the seriousness of the situation at Thompson, Manitoba, where a ruling by the Anti-Inflation Board seems to ignore completely a historical relationship, and in view of the fact that it will be perhaps some days before the new appeal procedures will be in place, will the cabinet consider this case, review it and make it clear to the Anti-Inflation Board that a change ought to be made in favour of the INCO workers at Thompson?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly there will be a great many cases to be considered by the Anti-Inflation Board under this program, and where the board is going to have the full opportunity to review the facts in these cases through its representatives and to be in contact with the parties, I do not think it is appropriate for the cabinet to try to set its judgment over and above that of the board in the vast majority of these cases.

With regard to the appeals procedure, I hope I might engage the support of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues for an early passage of Bill C-89 so that we can indeed have the appeals procedure in effect, which would be available for this union as for others.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the minister then saying on behalf of the cabinet that it will not review this case? Is it saying no to the delegation from Thompson before it even gets here?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I understand that the delegation from Thompson is coming down to meet the representatives of the Anti-Inflation Board.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE DEBATE ON BILL C-84 WILL NOT TAKE PLACE WHILE COMMITTEE CONSIDERING BILL C-83

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question. It is very important today. As Bill C-83 was rammed through parliament by closure and now the committee will have five hearings a week on it, would the minister assure the House that the debate on Bill C-84 will not go on while the committee is studying Bill C-83? Many of the members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs are interested in the debate on Bill C-84. Can the minister assure the House that that debate will not proceed until the committee has considered Bill C-83?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. I think it is necessary that we proceed with Bill C-84 some time soon, although we will take the recommendation of the hon. member into consideration so there will be as little conflict as possible.

Mr. Woolliams: Because the two debates will go on at the same time in different places, one in the committee and one in this House, is the Solicitor General saying that there is no relationship between what might happen to the bill in committee, Bill C-83, and the debate which will take place at second reading of Bill C-84? Is that the position of the Solicitor General?

Mr. Allmand: No, Mr. Speaker.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

OPPORTUNITY OF PERSON APPLYING FOR MORTGAGE TO CHOOSE SOLICITOR

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. There was an admission last week by a member of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that it is required to operate from lists of notaries and lawyers supplied by the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Transport, the former minister of justice, confirmed this fact and described it as political patronage. I should like to ask the minister if he is now prepared to revise this procedure in order to give Canadians who find this procedure repugnant, the opportunity to choose their own solicitors when they are looking for mortgages from CMHC?

● (1440)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to welcome the hon. gentleman as official critic in this area; I know we are in for some interesting and lively times. With reference to the listing of solicitors, all institutions of course must provide a list of solicitors who are qualified and who they would choose. I would be most interested in finding a system that is more satisfactory and fair. Indeed, I just came from a meeting with directors of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and posed this problem to them for their consideration so that their interest can be observed by all. As long as people are competent and fulfil their role well, that is our main consideration. I might add that in most instances of public housing and non-profit housing where the organizations themselves provide their own solicitors who have been acting on their behalf, we generally accept the recommendation providing he is a member of the bar in good standing.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question. May I ask the minister if he is prepared to give consideration to revising the procedure to make provision for patrons of CMHC who would want and demand the right to use their own solicitor? Since they have to pay for the convenience anyway, is he prepared to allow for that procedure?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, it is common practice that the lender must choose his lawyer. The borrower can also name a solicitor of his choice but the taxpayers' interest must be served and I think that is the case.

ENERGY

IMPACT OF DELAYED DECISION ON MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE ON UNITED STATES AND CENTRAL CANADA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Having regard to comments made recently in northern Canada by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with respect to the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, I should like to ask if new information is now before the government which would put the feasibility of the pipeline in the north in question? I should like also to ask the minister to explain how this new turn of events can be reconciled with the decision of the government recently to commence drilling in the Beaufort Sea?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is making an absolutely straightforward observation when he says that until the hearings are over and all the information is in the hands of the National Energy Board and in the hands of the government, no decision can be taken.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the House whether he has been able to assess the impact of this casual and off the cuff statement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on the decisions the United States would have to make in securing supply for their own purposes and also the impact the decision would have on the security of supply for central Canada?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the United States has its own set of regulatory hearings. It is considering this matter as well in Congressional committees and has by no means as yet sorted out the particular timetable.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

EFFECT OF DEFINITION OF CHARITABLE DONATION AS RESTRICTED EXPENSE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and I have given him notice of it. It has to do with charitable donations being defined as a restricted expense under the Anti-Inflation Act regulations. The result is causing considerable confusion among corporate givers as to whether they are able to increase their charitable donations or will have to register them if other items within the restricted expenses column rise?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of the question. With respect to the category of restricted expenses, I am advised by the Anti-Inflation Board that the total of restricted expenses which may be expended by a firm may not be increased at any greater rate than the total revenues. It is possible that a firm may allocate the amount within the six categories of restricted expenses and may choose to reduce advertising, for example, but increase the amount to be made available by way of charitable donations.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I take it the reverse is also true, that if a corporation decides to increase the amount in the five other categories they may have no alternative but to reduce their charitable donation or even eliminate it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, if that particular corporate management chooses to spend more on convention fees, management fees or advertising rather than on charitable donations that would indeed be the result.

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN AMOUNT ALLOWED FOR RESEARCH AS A RESTRICTED EXPENSE ITEM

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's last reply and bearing in mind that one of the restricted expense items is research and development, would the minister consider giving more leeway to corporations that wish to increase their research and development, especially with the productivity problems we have in industry today?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As I said, Mr. Speaker, a firm could, if it chose, reduce the amounts paid by way of management fees or convention expenses and increase both research and development and charitable contributions. It has to be a matter of priorities for that particular management.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBILITY FOR LEBANESE CITIZENS TO VISIT CANADIAN RELATIVES

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Could the minister assure Canadians of Lebanese origin who during the current tragic situation in Lebanon, would like to have their relatives come to Canada as tourists for a temporary period until the fights are over, that they will be allowed to do so?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

REASON FOR GRANTING KINGSTON-OTTAWA AND KINGSTON-BELLEVILLE SERVICE TO VOYAGEUR COLONIAL

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport concerning a matter that affects the economy of the Canadian National Railways and the interests of all taxpayers in Canada. I ask him to use his authority to investigate this matter. According to today's press, why were the low tenders of Carleton Buslines of Antrim and Wagar Coachlines of Napanee totally ignored by the Ontario Highway Transport Board on the respective Kingston-Ottawa and Kingston-Belleville feeder services runs to convey passengers to Ottawa and Belleville from the Kingston stop of the Montreal-Toronto turbo train, ignored in favour of the higher tender of the Voyageur Colonial?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member fails to establish to me how that comes within the jurisdiction of the federal department. Is it the Ontario Highway Transport Board to which the hon. member refers?

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, I realize it does not come within the jurisdiction of the minister, but I want him to investigate this. This question goes beyond the provincial pale and is of national scope affecting the economy of the CNR and every taxpayer in Canada.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree and I thank both Your Honour and the hon. member for pointing out that this is a matter for the Ontario board which has been allowed jurisdiction under the law. Since it does concern the Canadian National Railways however, I have already taken note of the matter and have asked for an explanation. Of course, I await the actual judgment of the board with interest. I agree with the hon. member that it is a matter of serious concern.

SUGGESTED CONTROL OF PRICES OF FERTILIZER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Considering that the price of chemical fertilizers has increased considerably and scandalously in the last year and considering also that because of that increase one can wonder if enough fertilizers will be available this year, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to take certain steps to control prices so that farm producers are not exploited as they were last year in that regard and to ensure an adequate supply to meet farmers' needs?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the records of my officials show that fertilizer is in adequate supply if farmers would take delivery of it instead of waiting until the day they are going to plant. The price has come down $10 to $60 per ton from last year.

Oral Questions

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE BREACH

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. An advertisement has appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, April 12 which on the face of it appears to be aimed at the recruitment of Canadian personnel for mercenary operations. In light of the Foreign Enlistment Act, Section 11, which clearly prohibits recruiting of any person in Canada to enlist in the armed forces of any state or other armed forces, will the minister cause an investigation to be made by the RCMP to find out whether or not there have been or are contemplated breaches of the Foreign Enlistment Act?

● (1450)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the hon. member's notice to my office earlier, I have asked that an investigation be made on that particular point. I hope to be able to report to him very shortly.

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the minister to also take into account correspondence coming from the office named in the advertisement which refers to foreign countries requiring men with specialized skills to make a modern force?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE

DISCONTINUATION OF SERVICE TO FOUR INDIAN COMMUNITIES IN MANITOBA—DATE OF RESUMPTION

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. It is related to the discontinuation of postal service to four Indian communities, namely Wassagamack, Poplar River, Blood Vein and Garden Hill in northern Manitoba which I understand, following talks with individuals in Manitoba yesterday, continues and has been in effect since April 1. In view of the fact these isolated communities rely on the postal services for such important matters as receiving of old age pensions, family allowance and outside news, will the minister indicate if he is aware of this situation and, if so, can he indicate when the postal service will be reintroduced or alternate services will be instituted to ensure an immediate return of this vital service to these communities?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the hon. member for giving me notice. The services, particularly to a community known as Island Lake, has been temporarily suspended, as is the practice of the post office, because an audit indicated a shortage of close to $6,000, possibly through error, possibly through inefficiency or possibly through fraud. In that particular instance, a post office is closed and other temporary post offices are found, hopefully close by. This morning we were able to make arrangements to deliver the mail for that particular community to another post office six miles away situated in a Hudson Bay office. I hope that will satisfy the situation until such time as we find another postmaster in the community.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF NEW HEALTH OF ANIMALS REGULATIONS—APPLICABILITY TO CATTLE SLAUGHTERED FOR BLUE TONGUE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. When is the minister going to announce the new health of animals regulations, especially those concerning the payment of compensation to farmers for cattle ordered slaughtered under the slaughter eradication program?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Soon I hope, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Mitges: Since farmers in the B.C. area are facing serious economic losses with the recent outbreak of blue tongue resulting in the slaughter of hundreds of cattle, will the minister apply the new schedule of compensation payments, which I understand are much more favourable in keeping with inflationary costs?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we feel we have been quite fair in the past and we intend to be fair in the future. However, the treatment with regard to the loss of cattle is the same regardless of the disease, whether it be blue tongue, brucellosis or whatever. They will all be treated the same.

EFFORTS TO ERADICATE BLUE TONGUE DISEASE

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that anaplasmosis and blue tongue are transmitted primarily by biting insects, yet the minister for weeks on end has claimed that Canada is free of the disease, will he inform the House how he stopped the insects from crossing the United States border? Since it is common knowledge that Canada does have the disease and Australia and Britain have cut off all semen imports, will every effort be made to eradicate the disease in co-operation with the United States department of agriculture?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I know that one cannot stop pests from moving about—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: —or insects either. However, I am told these insects do not move very far. Our records show that blue tongue disease was not brought into Canada by an insect, but by people importing cattle which had the disease from the United States. We feel sure this is the way it was spread in Canada. We feel we can be successful in eradicating this blue tongue disease in the same way as we have other diseases that could have damaged the livestock industry. I am surprised that the hon. member, perhaps unknowingly, suggests that we do not control this disease by eradication and damage our livestock industry as far as exports are concerned, which amount to millions and millions of dollars a year.

FISHERIES

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON LOBSTER FISHING—REQUEST FOR ELABORATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fisheries). In view of the confusion which has arisen because of a statement made by the minister over the weekend that he was removing restrictions because of the start of the lobster season in some areas and the adjudication of appeals, can the minister elaborate on that statement for the benefit of this House and the country? Will he indicate what areas he was referring to and if any have been left out?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the decision to delay the implementation of the policy for one season, that is for the spring and summer lobster seasons, was made because of the large number of appeals to me as minister. I had to ask for additional information and doubtful cases could not be settled before the season began. In order to be fair to everyone, it was decided that licences would not be withheld for one season, and this applied to the maritimes area. In the case of Newfoundland, where the access to the lobster fishery has only been limited in the past year, the regional director asked for a few days delay in order to consult. In fact, I am to see him later this afternoon. We may have some statement tonight or tomorrow.

Mr. Marshall: I just visited the west coast of Newfoundland and found inequities in many areas and many decisions made by appeal boards that I intend to bring to the attention of the minister. Will the minister consider that the season opened in district 11 on April 20 and does not open in district 12 until May 5. Therefore, the province of Newfoundland should be given consideration. I hope the minister will make the right decision.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, if there were inequities, I would be very worried because the appeal boards did their work very well and very carefully with local input. However, I am very open to the hon. member's suggestion. I should have more to say this afternoon.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADA'S POSITION ON 200-MILE FISHING ZONE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The government has been telling the Canadian fishing industry to wait until the end of the New York Law of the Sea Conference since it would likely produce a settlement. As officials of the minister's department do not feel any decision will be made at this conference and as the United States has already declared a 200 mile fishing limit to come into effect on March 1, 1977, can the minister give the House and the industry a progress report on Canada's position on a 200 mile fishing zone, which to date has not even been dissociated from the economic zone activities at the conference?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I recently attended the Law of the Sea Conference. I agree with the conclusion the hon. member has reached that it is not likely by the end of this particular session either a partial treaty relating to fisheries or a general treaty will emerge. The possibility of a second session this summer is under consideration. I have not been advised whether a decision has been taken to resume the conference in Geneva later in the year. However, whatever may be the results of either the first or the second session, I stated in my speech to the plenary session that in so far as Canada is concerned, 1976 is the year of decision and that if the conference failed to reach a conclusion this year, in all probability it will not be able to reach a conclusion for a long time in the future. I should also say that we are obviously watching the conference in its concluding days and we are obviously influenced by the action taken by the United States.

● (1500)

Parallel with these developments we are continuing our bilateral negotiations with countries fishing in what will be Canadian waters in future; recently, we had discussions with the Russians which registered very substantial progress. My general attitude is a positive one. I feel that at this time Canadian policy is well in hand and moving well in the direction of achieving the overall objective of a 200 mile extended fisheries jurisdiction.

CANADA'S POSITION ON REMAINING WITHIN ICNAF

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): One brief supplementary. Between June 6 and June 24 of this year ICNAF will be meeting in Havana, Cuba. In the event that this meeting produces no agreement, is it Canada's intention to declare its own fisheries management zone or will it remain with ICNAF?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It appears to me—and here I am subject to the superior judgment of my colleague, the Minister of State for Fisheries—that in any foreseeable regime of extended jurisdiction by the United States or other coastal states the function of ICNAF, though it may be useful, would be changed considerably. I am sure the hon. member realizes that these changes are inevitable should coastal states acquire jurisdiction which at the present time is in part exercised by a consensus at ICNAF meetings. We have presently under consideration instructions to be given to the delegation which will attend the meetings, taking into account the particular factor I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Yesterday the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar raised a point of order at the conclusion of the question period in which he was supported by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. Arguments were advanced in favour of a contrary opinion, and I undertook yesterday to give the matter careful review. That review included a reference to remarks I made in the House on April 14, 1975, which, as hon. members may recall, was just after the Easter recess of that year.

I made those remarks for two reasons. First, it was just at the time we had begun to operate under new procedures with respect to the question period and, second, as a new Speaker I felt hon. members would wish to know as soon as possible my attitude toward the handling of the question period. I attempted to make that statement a thorough review of my attitude toward questions that ought to be permitted. I tried to make it as positive as possible and in line with a theme different from that of the past. Instead of there being a number of restrictions such as had grown up, somewhat vaguely, affecting the right of members to put questions, I attempted to put forward a positive statement as to what could be done, rather than a negative statement expressing what could not be done.

In respect of the responsibility of ministers and the areas which could be covered, I said this as recorded at the top of page 4763 of Hansard of April 14, 1975:

> Sixth, a question must be within the administrative responsibility of the government or the minister. Obviously, the government in general cannot be responsible for those areas which are beyond its own administrative responsibility. Furthermore, the minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his ministry; that is, his present ministry. He is responsible to the limits of that ministry, but not beyond that. In this regard I find no reason to change the earlier decision I made in respect of the capacities which ministers enjoyed in previously-held portfolios.

I think that statement is clear, and by and large it has not been challenged, I have to be concerned whether that ruling unduly restricts the right of members to put questions in respect of a situation facing us where information is sought about influence which members—indeed, ministers—might have exercised with respect to decisions affecting tenders. I am satisfied that the ruling I have quoted is a fair one still because, of course, questions can always be put to the Prime Minister concerning the conduct of any minister; questions can be put to the minister responsible for the tendering in the particular department involved, they can be put to the President of the Treasury Board with respect to general tendering practices, and they can certainly be put to the Solicitor General or to the Minister of Justice if there seems to be any suspicion of irregularity.

In some cases there is no doubt that questions are deflected to ministers who have served in previous capacities, but it seems to me that this is within the limits of jurisdictional responsibility as we have always known it and extends ample opportunity for hon. members to put questions at least during the question period. We have to remember, after all, that we are not attempting to afford complete investigative powers in the question period, but simply trying to manage the question period which is an extremely important aspect of our procedure and one whose duration each day is limited.

Finally, I am sure hon. members will understand that there are circumstances in which the enforcement of this rule is not easy for the Chair: ministers, in making one answer, may voluntarily go across the line and it is difficult for the Chair to interrupt further questioning on the same point. There are also circumstances in which statements may be made by ministers with respect to their former capacities, and the Chair has to hear at least one or two preliminary questions in clarification of such statements before it can rule definitively that the questions appear to go beyond the limits of the administrative responsibility of the minister concerned. These do not constitute exceptions; they are simply circumstances which cause the Chair some difficulty in specific enforcement.

All members will, I hope, agree with the practice I have followed. When in doubt as to the acceptability of a question, I have sought to resolve that doubt in favour of the member putting the question, rather than the member having to answer it.

Mr. Ellis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It has to do with the questions I directed to the Postmaster General yesterday. The Postmaster General said that certain distributors "get a discount which is below the regular retail value". We were talking about the price of stamps. On page 12859 of Hansard for yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General, answering a question on the order paper by the hon. member for Don Valley, is reported as saying that sales of Canadian postage stamps are not made at a price less than face value. I think those two conflicting statements should be clarified so that I might proceed a little further with the investigation of this matter.

Mr. Mackasey: I appreciate the hon. gentleman bringing the apparent difference of view to my attention. I will have the matter clarified by tomorrow. By way of a short cut I called it a discount. The Post Office prefer to call it a subsidy of rental, travel expenses and other types of expenses associated with the selling of stamps in Europe. I will ascertain the precise official, bureaucratic terminology. I may have fallen into the error of incorrectly calling it a discount.

ENERGY

TABLING OF DOCUMENT ENTITLED "AN ENERGY STRATEGY FOR CANADA—POLICIES FOR SELF-RELIANCE"

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table, in both official languages, copies of a document entitled, "An Energy Strategy for Canada—Policies for Self-reliance" and a summary of the same document.

Mr. Speaker, it is now almost three years since this government published "An Energy Policy for Canada—Phase I". That publication, issued in June of 1973, presented a comprehensive overview of the Canadian energy situation, its history, prospects and problems. Our intention was to begin a process of consultation, reflection and debate which would enable us to develop a set of national energy policies.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Barely four months later, war broke out in the Middle East and the Organization of Petroleum exporting Countries raised the international price of oil substantially. In the fall of 1973, oil in the Persian Gulf sold for $2.20 a barrel. Today the price is $11.50. This fivefold increase in the price of the singlemost important energy commodity, occurring as it did in a period of less than two years, has sent a series of shockwaves through the international economic system. It has contributed directly to the worst recession in the industrialized world since the 1930s, coupled with continuing rapid inflation. No country has been unaffected.

● (1510)

Canada has been more fortunate than most countries. Because we have domestic oil reserves we have been able to cushion the effects of higher international prices. The price of oil in Canada is currently about $4.60 per barrel lower than the price eastern Canadians would have to pay for imported oil if there were no subsidy program. However, proved reserves of Canadian oil and low-cost proved reserves of natural gas are declining. Canada now imports more crude oil than it sells abroad. As well, drilling results in Canada's frontier areas have been disappointing and the recent experience with the Syncrude project indicates that the further development of the oil sands will be extremely expensive. Finding new oil and natural gas reserves, developing them and transporting them to market will now cost substantially more and will require Canadian prices higher than those currently existing.

While our proved reserves of oil and low-cost gas continue to decline, Canadian demands for these energy forms continue to increase. The growing gap between our energy demands and our ability to supply them from domestic reserves suggests that we could become increasingly dependent on the rest of the world, and the OPEC cartel in particular, for our future oil supplies. This prospect carries with it economic and political risks that the government views with concern.

We have, within Canada, the people, the equipment, the expertise and the potential energy resources to reduce substantially our dependence on imported oil. We can do this by reducing the rate at which our energy requirements grow in the future, by substituting those energy forms which are in relatively abundant supply in Canada for those that are not, by accelerating the search required to find new oil and natural gas—to convert the potential of our undiscovered energy resources to proved reserves from which our needs can be supplied. These options will be expensive, but all must be pursued. The alternatives are energy shortages which will require increasing dependence on high cost, insecure oil imports or rationing available supplies among Canadians. It is within our power to avoid both of these alternatives and we must act to do so.

The publication that I am tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, sets forth a national energy strategy for Canada. It is a strategy that is consistent and comprehensive. The strategy consists of three well defined parts: first, an objective—energy self-reliance; second, a series of specific energy targets; and finally, in support of this objective and target, nine policy elements or priorities.

The national energy strategy for self-reliance presented in this paper is directed, through the next ten years, at minimizing the risks of growing dependence on imported oil. Self-reliance in energy means reducing our vulnerability to unanticipated changes in price or prolonged interruptions in supply. It means supplying Canadian requirements from Canadian resources to the greatest extent practicable, but it is not a strategy of self-sufficiency at any cost. It recognizes that we will have to rely on imported oil to a certain degree and an important policy element is emergency preparedness to ensure that Canadians using imported oil will be adequately protected if supplies should be curtailed.

Above all, it is a strategy that is both balanced and flexible: balanced in the sense that it recognizes that the policies we adopt will have costs as well as benefits, and a choice that provides the maximum advantage to Canadians must be found; flexible in the sense that many aspects of the international oil market and our own domestic energy situation are uncertain and continuing to evolve. The approach we have adopted will be dynamic enough to adapt quickly to changing circumstances.

The first target is to move domestic oil prices toward international levels, and to move domestic prices for natural gas to an appropriate competitive relationship with oil over the next two to four years. Domestic energy prices must continue to increase, to reinforce efficiency and restraint in energy use; to encourage the development of additional Canadian supplies; to reduce the magnitude of the transfer of real wealth from Canadians to oil exporting countries; and to reduce the subsidization of oil consumers by the general taxpayer. They need not move to international oil prices if it is clear that new Canadian resources can be found and delivered to markets at prices that are lower.

The second target is to reduce the average rate of growth of energy use in Canada over the next ten years to less than 3.5 per cent per year. This can be attained by appropriate pricing measures and energy conservation initiatives. It represents a reduction of the historically observed growth rate by over one-third.

The third target is to reduce our net dependence on imported oil in 1985 to one-third of our total oil demands, that is, to approximately 800,000 barrels a day by 1985.

The fourth target is to maintain our self-reliance in natural gas until such time as northern resources can be brought to market under acceptable conditions.

Finally, the fifth target is to double at a minimum, from $350 to $700 million a year, exploration and development activity in the frontier regions of Canada over the next three years, under acceptable social and environmental conditions. This is a minimum target that will facilitate the development of the information necessary to make appropriate decisions about our energy options.

In support of the objective of energy self-reliance, the government proposes nine major policy elements. These are: 1, appropriate energy pricing; 2, energy conservation; 3, increased exploration and development; 4, increased resource information; 5, interfuel substitution; 6, new delivery systems; 7, emergency preparedness; 8, increased research and development; 9, greater Canadian content and participation.

These policy areas are elaborated in the paper. In many cases specific examples of the kinds of programs and measures we will be introducing are indicated. For example, to further increase exploration and development we will be introducing a mandatory, company by company reporting system to monitor the cash flow of the petroleum industry. We will also move to reduce the period during which geophysical data remains confidential. To increase resource information flow we will be acting to require companies holding potentially important geological structures to have exploratory drilling undertaken within a reasonable time period. To promote new delivery systems for coal we are taking the position that before new export commitments are made producers should endeavour to determine whether a market exists within Canada for the additional coal production. Other specific measures such as conservation, research and development and greater Canadian participation that have recently been introduced or will be introduced shortly are described in the paper.

The precise nature of all future energy policy initiatives will continue to be determined within this framework but will, of course, be dependent on the course of future events. Such initiatives will embody the balance and flexibility that is essential if our policies are to be appropriate, and will reflect a changing relative emphasis among these nine policy areas as circumstances warrant. They will be developed with appropriate federal-provincial consultation and with due regard to the social, environmental and economic objectives of Canadians.

With the constructive co-operation of provincial governments and industry, and with the support of Canadians in all regions of the country, Canada can achieve the objective of energy self-reliance. Success in this endeavour will increase both the confidence and the options with which we can plan for years beyond 1985.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, we, like all Canadians, welcome this report today—a report of fundamental significance and importance for the development of Canada over the course of the next few years. I am sure that in the course of the next two or three weeks we will be discussing it, commenting on it and asking the minister questions about it in the House. This afternoon I want to take only a moment to point out two or three things which we think are of significance in respect of this important document.

The document has implicit in it three fundamental decisions on energy policy, and all but the final word on a fourth. The fact that these decisions have been made behind closed doors at 580 Booth Street, with barely a word to provincial governments and consumers who are so vitally concerned with this policy, makes a mockery of the so-called federal-provincial consultation mechanisms for energy development in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: The government seems to have forgotten the constitutional principle that the resources of this nation belong to the provinces and decisions made in that respect must be made in consultation with them. That this document should come down without that sort of consultation is, indeed, too bad.

We are now also told to expect higher oil prices. Consultation with the provincial governments in respect of this important situation is not even mentioned in the document's blueprint for a phased increase toward international levels, and no assurance is given to Canadians that our prices will not exceed those of the United States, our biggest competitor. Surely the cornerstone of the development of our resources and the development of our energy policy in this country has to be established in the face of our enormous international trade deficit. If Canadian buyers and consumers of energy are not to face a comparative disadvantage because of present policies toward energy, then an assurance of this kind will have to be given.

Secondly, it is quite clear that the government has apparently decided to ignore the special energy problems faced by Atlantic Canada. In the immediate future, maritimers can look forward to nothing but the hardship of escalating energy costs, in particular electricity prices which continue to mount and which will undoubtedly result in many more families being forced to find other ways to heat their homes. Nothing is planned to ease the burden of these costs, nor is there any federal assistance suggested to help in the generation of more electricity where the maritime provinces have some particular advantages. Nothing is said about the construction of a national grid, a policy which the Progressive Conservatives have advocated since 1969—indeed, since 1958. This matter must receive a great deal more support than this document suggests, if Atlantic Canada is ever to benefit and if ever such an energy grid is to become a reality in the nation.

Thirdly—and the minister said very little about this in his statement—the government has decided to press ahead with nuclear power as a major source of energy in this nation. The document cites a need to develop between 20,000 megawatt hours and 27,000 megawatt hours of new nuclear capacity within the next 15 years, a figure which is about equivalent to five reactors constructed every year. This is a massive commitment to an energy source which has attached to it many unanswered questions. How will we manage the highly toxic and radioactive wastes produced? How do we protect plants from natural and man-made disasters? Nothing is said about that. How are we going to protect ourselves against these disasters which can occur with the use of nuclear energy within our nation?

What is the competitive nature of this source of energy? A recent report prepared for the United States Energy Research and Development Administration showed that at current prices quoted for CANDU reactors, electric energy developed from the use of coal is competitive with nuclear power. Although the Canadian people are, by virtue of this document, committed to nuclear power, there is little discussion, especially in respect of the conclusions and the implications of this development. We simply cannot embark upon this road without more thought and discussion.

The fourth decision is one which is implied throughout the document but never stated; that is, that the government has all but made the final decision to go ahead with Arctic oil and gas development. If the so-called policy of self-reliance upon which the document puts such emphasis is to be realized in the timetable set forth, it is apparent that Arctic gas must come on stream by the early 1980s. Even though the document states that no policy commitment yet exists, if the self-reliance policy is to succeed in reducing our projected oil imports to one-third of total demand, the Mackenzie Valley pipeline must surely become a reality. The question of whether or not we should have a pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley has now become a question of when, not whether. The Berger Commission and the National Energy Board hearings, in light of this document, are not about whether a pipeline should be built but how it should be built and when it should be built. The decision has obviously been made.

There are a number of other features to this paper. The first is the government's virtual admission of ineptitude on a substantial scale in the budgets of 1974 and 1975. It is quite clear now that but for the prompt action of the Progressive Conservative government of Alberta, irreparable damage would have been done in respect of finding new supplies of gas and oil in Canada. It is to be hoped that when the new budget comes down the government will take into consideration the reflections in this report on its mistakes of the past, and we will then have a new and appropriate policy for oil and energy development in this country.

The government seems now to recognize the need for increased producer revenues. The minister has not outlined what specific measures he will take to ensure that this increased revenue will go back into exploration and development of energy in the future.

Finally, one can conclude that no matter how well or how badly conceived these policies may be, they have been put forward as a fait accompli without even the pretence of provincial consultation. Decisions have been made of fundamental importance without public hearing or debate. The minister has said in the past that his energy policies must become the policies of all Canadians, not just the government's. This document will not assure Canadians that that policy is being followed.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the document which the minister has tabled, entitled "An Energy Strategy for Canada—Policies for Self-reliance", represents the greatest retreat that has been seen since Napoleon withdrew in disarray from Moscow. In 1970 this government was telling the people of Canada that we had all the energy resources we needed for the foreseeable future. In 1973, when the government woke up to the deplorable situation in which we were, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the minister of energy, mines and resources at that time told us the government was launching a program which would make us self-sufficient in energy supplies by the end of the 1970s. Last year the government modified that pledge and said it would make Canada self-sufficient in energy requirements by the mid-1980s. Now the minister tells us he is introducing a policy for self-reliance.

When we consider what the minister means by self-reliance, we find it is this: whereas this year, 1976, we are a net importer of oil to the extent of 240,000 barrels per day, by 1985 we will be a net importer of 800,000 barrels per day. If that is self-reliance, I would look with horror on a policy of dependency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If one considers what that means, he will find that 800,000 barrels per day in 1985 means that we will be an importer of some 292 million barrels a year. If the price at that time is $15 a barrel—and that is not an exaggerated figure because Syncrude was undertaken on the basis that the price at that time would be about $15.50 a barrel—and if we are importing 292 million barrels of oil per year, we will have a bill of $4.380 million a year for imported oil.

I ask the government to look at the catastrophic effect this will have on Canada's balance of payments and what position it will put us in with regard to our competitive status with American industry. The United States, by means of a blended price, has been able to keep the price of oil in that country $2 or $3 a barrel below the international price. Moreover, in the past few years we have witnessed, and may witness again, oil being used as a political weapon. By 1985, under this policy Canada would be very vulnerable both economically and politically.

What does the government propose to do about this as outlined in the report the minister tabled today? First of all, the minister said that the matter is mainly to be left to the private sector. He says that Petro-Can will have an important role, but he does not spell out what the role will be. As a matter of fact, this morning's paper carries a story by Mr. Maurice Strong, the chairman of Petro-Can, in which he says that that Crown corporation is seriously considering investing money overseas in the North Sea and in developing the oil sands of Venezuela. We have billions of barrels of oil in the Canadian oil sands, but our publicly-owned oil company is considering the possibility of developing the oil sands of Venezuela. Is that the role for which the Canadian people are putting up money?

The government proposes to deal with this situation by the old policy it has followed throughout the years, which I think is a disastrous policy. It proposes raising the domestic price to the international price within two to four years, which it is estimated will be $13 a barrel and perhaps higher. What guarantee does this House or the consumers of this country have that these additional millions of dollars we will pay to the oil industry will be plowed back into exploration and development in Canada rather than in the North Sea, Venezuela or the Middle East?

The minister says the government will monitor these companies to make sure that they use these additional earnings for exploration in this country. We were promised that by the minister's predecessor last year when the government raised the domestic price of oil from $6.50 to $8 a barrel. Has this monitoring taken place? What monitoring machinery does the government propose to set up?

In the last three years the price of oil has gone from nearly $3 a barrel to $8 a barrel. If one looks at the record it will be evident that the money spent in exploration in Canada, as a percentage of the oil companies' earnings, has actually declined. The minister asks us to pay within the next two to four years $13 a barrel for oil and says that this money will be spent on finding oil and gas in this country. As a result, it is the Canadian consumer who buys the oil products—the Canadian taxpayer—because of the concession the government has so generously given the oil companies who will supply the funds for new exploration which will take place.

When the oil is found, the same people will buy it. This is known as a policy of pay now and pay again later. In the next ten years, the Canadian people will pay hundreds of millions of dollars in higher oil and gas prices in order to pay for the fact that this government for years allowed 60 per cent of our oil and gas to be exported to another country at prices only a quarter of what we will have to pay now for imported oil and domestic oil.

In this connection I want to say this is not a policy of reliance but it is a policy of drift. The tragedy is that once again the government is accepting the advice and acting on the recommendation of the very same powerful corporations which got us into this mess in the first place. The government is now proposing that we place our major reliance on pipelines into the Arctic and on nuclear power plants. In so far as pipelines into the north are concerned, the minister himself admitted that we do not have supplies or even proven reserves of oil or gas to justify the tremendous investment which will be necessary.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan), in the statement he made yesterday in Yellowknife, said that unless we can prove up significant additional reserves we throw into very grave question the whole matter of the pipeline through the Mackenzie Valley. Some of us have been saying that for many years. The best estimate of the National Energy Board is four trillion cubic feet of gas reserves in the Mackenzie Delta. We require 12 trillion cubic feet as a minimum.

Why are we asking the Canadian people to approve an expenditure of $8 billion to $10 billion for a pipeline, the main function of which will be to transport Alaskan gas from Pudhoe Bay to the United States? The fact is that if we invest these tremendous sums of money in pipelines and in nuclear power plants, we will have nothing left with which to finance or to further develop alternate sources of energy. We are locking ourselves into two programs that will shut out what could be much cheaper sources of energy and in some cases would be less detrimental to the environment.

The government has not announced its policy with regard to looking at alternative energy sources. At page 145 of this report we are told that the government will spend, in 1975-76, $1.6 million and will spend in this current year $1 million in looking at such things as solar energy, wind energy, tidal power, and so on. That is a mere bagatelle. Other countries spend tremendous sums of money looking at these sources of energy. The government has done no realistic investigation into secondary recovery of oil. There are billions of barrels of oil in western Canada which have not been economically viable to extract, but with secondary recovery methods and with higher prices this should be looked at. The government has not come down with any policy about secondary recovery or any policy of gasification of coal.

I say this is is a policy of treading old paths. It is a policy which is lacking both in vision and imagination. We face a situation in Canada in which our energy resources are running out. Apparently the government has no clearcut policy. Napoleon said that an army marches on its stomach. A modern industrial state moves on energy. If, in the years ahead, as a result of this policy of drift we find ourselves in difficulty with regard to supplying our people with the necessary energy, then this country will face very serious years. I see no hope, from the statement of the minister today, that the government even conceives the seriousness of the problem, let alone producing a policy to grapple successfully with it.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, a policy based on requirements is long overdue instead of a policy based exclusively on trade or consumer demand. Let me explain.

It is paradoxical today, when the minister is reporting on a relatively alarming energy situation, that we should wonder whether there will be another energy shortage, especially as concerns oil and natural gas. The fact that Canada is still exporting daily hundreds of thousand barrels of oil or cubic feet of natural gas proves without a doubt, Mr. Speaker, the lack of foresight of a government that has failed to develop the required policy when it was needed.

We really should establish the energy requirements in Canada on the basis of our actual needs instead of foreign trade. I do not believe that in a country as vast as our ours, so full of all sorts of energy sources, with only 23 million inhabitants spread over a territory larger than the United States and larger than the whole of Europe, we should be talking about an energy shortage. It is only the mismanagement of governments that leads us to such an economic dead end in the field of energy. Indeed, how can we possibly have an oil shortage if we continue to export it? Mr. Speaker, the government should reply to such simple questions before sounding the alarm.

On a few occasions, I had the privilege in this House under Standing Order 43 of asking the government to make an inventory of the Canadian energy potential. Obviously, such an inventory would require the closest possible co-operation of the provinces, and I agree with the hon. member who spoke on behalf of the Conservative Party a while ago when he said that meaningful discussions and a coherent energy policy is not possible without the co-operation of the provinces. Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that Quebec has a great energy potential as concerns hydroelectric power. It seems to me that this energy, which has required an apparently substantial capital investment, which is easy to preserve and relatively unexpensive, may compensate for the oil shortage that might happen in eastern Canada. But there is no co-ordination, no planning whatsoever in this regard. Thus, some provinces have energy surpluses while others are at grips with shortages and there is no co-ordination. The federal government should promote such co-ordination between all energy sources existing in the various regions of Canada. Of course, this cannot be done without extremely close co-operation.

Therefore, a precise inventory should be drawn up sometime. It should be kept up to date to enable us to know precisely what is available and what can be developed in Canada. We must no longer base our economy on those famous balances of trade with other countries or on exports. Let us simply ask ourselves, and this gives us the opportunity to do so, what we can do as Canadians. What are our energy requirements for the 23 million Canadians? Moreover, we must consider our energy potential. Mr. Speaker, once this has been seriously done, we will find out that we have all the energy required to meet our needs.

As long as the government refuse to see things as they really are, I suggest that we will always come to the point where we are told, as we were a few years ago, to turn down our thermostats, to shut the windows and not open too many doors. This is in my view a narrow policy, and it is time for the government to consider the introduction of a more serious, more positive policy, so that we know exactly where we are going.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the minister. I am looking at the summary of the proposals in the paper and the 13 programs for self-reliance on page 8. Is the fact that there is a total absence of the mention of tidal power in the Bay of Fundy specifically, or tidal power anywhere in this country, an indication of the government's views with regard to this potential source of energy and the low priority it gives to it? If so, what a disappointment that is to many Canadians who thought tidal power would be part of the self-reliance program.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley pointed out that he was referring to the summary which is a shortened version of the larger document on strategy—the blue book. If he were to refer to it, he would find reference to tidal power; indeed, specific mention is made of the importance of the potential of tidal power and the fact that the federal government, in co-operation with the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, has already undertaken a particular program.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate that in the more comprehensive text on policies for self-reliance, tidal power is mentioned along with other sources of power. I believe that the statement—which I do not have before me at present—is that further research is necessary. My point is that certainly in Atlantic Canada, where the sound of tidal power is as strong as some of the talk about its development, research in terms of the studies that have gone into this energy package is not much further down the line than in other areas of Canada where it was suggested that the extraction of energy from such sources was perhaps not feasible for ecological or other reasons. Research into energy from James Bay is pretty far down the road, while research into the Bay of Fundy tidal power is being reviewed and reviewed following the review of the Fundy Power Authority. Can the minister give us any hope that some stimulus and priority will be given to this non-polluting, renewable resource in the Bay of Fundy which could revolutionize the economy of Atlantic Canada, as did TV in parts of the United States?

Mr. Gillespie: The answer to the question is that we are betting $1.5 million that an updated research study, which is a $3 million joint study between the two provinces and the federal government, will show that there is, in fact, a realizable asset there. The hon. member must know that many research projects have been undertaken with respect to the tidal power potential in his area, but every one of them actually turned down the realizable potential when it came to putting it together. In other words, until now the experts have not been able to put together a package which is technically and economically feasible. We think that as a result of the increase in the price of energy generally caused by the OPEC oil price increase, a new, second look is now appropriate at tidal power sources.

● (1550)

Mr. Nowlan: The minister well knows, even though I think it was before he came into the House—and I might have been in the House—that in the first report on Fundy Tidal power it was always technically feasible, but at that time interest rates seemed to be a little high and it was suggested that the matter be reviewed a year or so down the road. We all know what has happened to interest rates. We all know what has happened to construction costs. They have affected James Bay. The estimate was several billion dollars, and now I think one figure is somewhere between $12 billion and $20 billion.

I find the answer of the minister difficult to understand in that in the summary of these policies, especially when eastern Canada and Atlantic Canada is so adversely affected by the increase in oil prices—and we have very few alternative sources—there was no priority given to the words "tidal power" when it is tied into research. I do not think that is a very good answer in terms of Atlantic Canada, and with respect, I think it illustrates some of the lackadaisical approaches of the government on the whole matter of energy.

Mr. Gillespie: In reply to that question I would draw the attention of the hon. member to page 29 of the summary of "An Energy Strategy for Canada" to which he was referring. There he will find a reference to tidal power under the general heading "Increased Research and Development" as follows:

> The gasification of coal on a commercial scale will only be fully realized if preceded by an adequate program of research, development and demonstration. In the longer-term search for new energy options, the promise of power from nuclear fusion should not be neglected and the feasibility of using renewable resources (represented by solar, wind, tidal, geothermal and biomass) should be fully explored—

And it continues.

Mr. Forrestall: God protect us from the minister. I should like to expand on that a little bit. The minister is indicating that there is substantial interest in the policy laid before us this afternoon and he elaborates on that by listing, amoung other things, wind power. We could rub sticks together and get energy, too. He lists biomass and tidal power somewhere in the middle, so there might be some hope for us. Unless the minister misunderstands us, we very much welcome initiatives with respect to coal, gasification of coal, and so on. I think the people of Cape Breton, particularly industrial Cape Breton, have some hope and welcome some good news: they are not totally negative about this.

However, can the minister elaborate with respect to the time parameters with regard to the extension of the Trans-Canada pipeline to the maritime provinces, so that we might at least have the comfort of the national security of our own resources? Those of us in the Atlantic provinces must now rely 100 per cent on foreign imports.

Mr. Gillespie: I cannot give the hon. member any indication of the time-frame for the extension of the Trans-Canada PipeLine system. I hope, though, that the kind of activity which is now going on in the Scotian shelf—really brought back as a result of the efforts of Petro-Canada in forming joint ventures, a program of $25 million per year over the next five years—will locate off the Scotian shelf the kind of proved oil and gas reserves which will serve not Nova Scotia but the other Atlantic provinces and perhaps central Canada as well.

Mr. Forrestall: As the minister is very well aware, the problem is the enormous impact on energy bills, particularly energy in the form of electricity, for the residents of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I know he is concerned about this and I am not attempting to suggest he is not. It is just that we find it passing strange that in the energy strategy there has not been a particular reference—not necessarily particularly to the problems we are facing now because they are under active consideration, hopefully, with some conclusion in the not too distant future—to the approach the government would tend to follow in a general way when this type of problem arises again at some point in the future. In other words, are we to believe that any approach to the resolution of our energy problems in the maritime provinces will continue to be ad hoc in nature?

Mr. Gillespie: On the contrary, I think when the hon. gentleman has had more time to review the document—and I agree that it is a very substantial document and it could not be done in the time he had available—he will be able to see that indeed there are a number of areas in which the federal government has introduced initiatives. We already discussed one this afternoon with respect to the development of potential tidal power resources; but the federal government has also made a number of moves with respect to regional interconnections, including the offer of financing one-half of the first nuclear power plant.

As far as Nova Scotia is concerned, there is a very substantial coal subsidy which runs into millions of dollars, and quite clearly the oil compensation program is of major benefit. The numbers I have seen indicate that very close to $1 billion has been paid indirectly to the consumers of Atlantic Canada as a result of the compensation program; that is, very close to $1 billion will have been paid to them by this summer. It seems to me that that is a very substantial contribution to Atlantic Canada. It is a very substantial way of assisting citizens of Atlantic Canada and eastern Canada generally, who would be paying $13 or higher if they were paying the going international price, to adjust over a period of time to a new reality. That is to say, the days of cheap energy are now over.

Mr. Forrestall: Don't be condescending about it.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question. Perhaps he does not know the answer; but as the minister, he should. Is the minister aware that as far back as 30 years ago or more there was a qualified consulting firm named H. G. Acres which did a thorough and complete study of Fundy tidal power? I think it was financed by the federal government. Is the minister aware that if the calculations were quickly brought up to date by a mathematician qualified in his field, and quickly computed, they would show that Fundy tidal power is not only feasible but practical and necessary? I suggest that federal governments from time immemorial, at least for the last 30 years, have been foot-dragging on Fundy tidal power. It is time the government got off its backside and did something about it. It is necessary and needed, and we in the maritime provinces are deserving of it.

Mr. Gillespie: Perhaps the hon. member does not realize that H. G. Acres are involved in the present reassessment of tidal power potential.

Mr. Jones: If that is true, we are paying twice for information which the government already has. I have that report, and I am sure the minister could use it.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, I did not receive a copy of this document; I just borrowed one from a colleague. I hope the minister will excuse the fact that I have not had a chance to read it. Will the minister tell the House whether there has been a discussion about the decision to move Canada toward the world price, which is a monopoly price? As a result of the research done by Professor Adelman, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which was offered to the American government, it was suggested that the United States government and the Canadian government combined, rather than multinational corporations, should buy from members of the OPEC cartel and seal biddings in order not immediately to destroy the monopoly price but gradually to lower it. It is obvious that within that cartel some countries are worse off than others.

● (1600)

We are going on the assumption made recently by the vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia that the thing to do would be to push up the price to world levels in one jump. As he knows, this would give a great push to inflation as well as to the problems of economic growth in the country. Professor Adelman's studies show that this has been done so as to help break off that cartel gradually and not go ahead and meet what is not an American price but is a monopoly price.

I submit to the minister that we are setting a stupid precedent in trying to meet what is a monopoly price, and is continuing to be so, without any effort on the part of a large consuming nation in oil such as we are becoming. This is my first question: Have there been such discussions?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, Canada has taken the position that the most effective way of bringing counter-pressure against OPEC nations is to join with other large consuming nations who were part of the International Energy Agency. As a member of that agency, we have reached agreement on a number of different measures which we think will have the force of providing counter-pressure against the OPEC nations.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer the question. Has he considered the enormous work that has been done by professor Adelman and has been offered to the American government over a period of years? He suggests that sealed price-bidding by both Canada and the United States would quickly lower the monopoly price that we have to meet. Has that been specifically considered by the National Energy Board and the minister's department when forming policy?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I will draw the representations of the hon. member to the attention of the agencies to which he has referred. I shall also make inquiries as to whether the International Energy Agency has looked into the work of Professor Adelman.

Mr. Hogan: A final question, Mr. Speaker. Recently the minister is alleged to have stated that the federal government will pay a $25 million subsidy on oil shipped from Sarnia to Montreal. I do not know whether the minister actually said that, but it was carried by the press. Is it true, or not?

Mr. Gillespie: Who has the floor?

Mr. Hogan: Can the minister tell the House how much the government intends to pay?

Mr. Gillespie: Are you giving me the floor?

Mr. Hogan: I will give it in a minute. Can the minister tell the House how much the government intends to pay in subsidy to Nova Scotia to offset the oil price increase that will hit the economy of that province very hard if the July agreement is reached? It is evident from the minister's statement today that the price will go up considerably. I want to contest his statement made earlier. I should like him to table it in the House that it has cost, or will cost up to this sum in subsidy—$1 billion for the Atlantic region. When I discussed this in the House three weeks ago the hon. parliamentary secretary said the $1 billion estimate—although he did not show how it was worked out—was for all consumers east of the Ottawa Valley and not just for consumers in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions there. As to the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline, the federal government did take a decision that it would pay the deficiency costs in transporting the oil the additional distance from Toronto to Montreal which were not picked up in the tariff structure that then existed from Sarnia to Montreal. That, very likely, will run to something in the order of $20 million to $25 million. It is strictly temporary and will cease immediately the National Energy Board produces its findings on what the appropriate tariff should be on moving oil from Sarnia to Montreal. It is strictly a temporary measure to bridge the existing situation.

As to the price in the maritimes, if the hon. member would like to come to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works this evening, I shall appear before that committee and we will try to give the hon. member more precise numbers then.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if we could conclude the questioning with a question or two from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my questions will be brief. First of all, I should like to refer the minister to his statement, which reads:

—to further increase exploration and development we will be introducing a mandatory, company-by-company reporting system to monitor the cash flow of the petroleum industry.

Is such a monitoring system in place now and, if so, to what extent does the minister intend to change or improve it?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there is an informal reporting system; but as the text of my remarks makes clear, we are now making it mandatory.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In his statement the minister says there will be a role for Petro-Canada to play. I wonder if he could tell the House briefly what role the government envisages for Petro-Canada?

Mr. Gillespie: A very important role, Mr. Speaker. The exploration budget for Petro-Canada this calendar year would be in the order of $100 million, I would expect. That will place it amongst the majors in the exploration and development field. The vast majority of those funds will be devoted to the frontier areas. As the total exploration budgets last year were in the order of $350 million in the frontier regions, the hon. member will appreciate that a sum of roughly $100 million is a very significant proportion of the kind of exploration activity that we foresee for the frontier regions.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Finally, Mr. Speaker, does the minister have in mind that this $100 million will mainly be spent in the Arctic and on offshore drilling, and nothing for development in the Athabasca oil sands or any other activity such as secondary recovery?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there is a sum of money—this is off the top of my head, and I would not want to be held to it—of something in the order of $7 million in this year's budget for participation in the polar gas project for technological research activity. There are further funds which are being sought for participation in various types of oil sands technology over and above the Syncrude project. I do not believe the additional funds have yet been authorized, but I think it is important to recognize that Petro-Canada will become the Canadian government's agent respecting Syncrude's participation, and that is in the order of better than $300 million.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,949, 3,982, 4,144, 5,020, 5,021, 5,022, 5,113 and 5,148.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

TORONTO HARBOURFRONT PARK

Question No. 3,949—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What was the original estimated cost to the government for the Toronto Harbourfront Park?

2. What will be the final cost?

3. What is the scheduled date of completion?

4. What were the (a) administrative costs, (b) total overall federal expenditures in (i) 1973, (ii) 1974, (iii) 1975?

5. What committee, commission or group was in charge of the Park at inception in the fall of (a) 1972, (b) 1973, (c) 1974, (d) 1975?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. The original estimate for site acquisition cost was $36,000,000, including an anticipated expenditure of $6,000,000 for the provision of port improvements and port facilities for the Toronto Harbour Commissioners in exchange for land under their control.

2. It is anticipated that some settlements may be resolved by the Federal Court of Canada in accordance with approved provisions in the Expropriation Act. On the basis of settlements to date it is estimated that the final cost of site acquisition will be $55,000,000, including payments for port improvements and port facilities to be provided to the Toronto Harbour Commissioners.

3. Under the terms of settlement with the Toronto Harbour Commissioners it was agreed that the Government of Canada would complete the port facilities by March 31, 1981. It is anticipated that all settlements now outstanding with private owner, even if referred to the Federal Court of Canada, will be completed by at least that date or earlier.

4. In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned:

		Capital Improvements $	Operations and Maintenance $	Site Acquisition Payments including Port facilities $
(i)	1972-73	Nil	Nil	3,862
(ii)	1973-74	302,610	110,000	35,682,926
(iii)	1974-75	1,386,252	412,936	1,442,924
	1975-76 (estimated)	1,000,000	500,000	2,371,000

Order Paper Questions

5. (a), (b), (c) and (d) The Minister of Public Works filed Notice of Expropriation on October 17, 1972. No programme activities were initiated on the site during the balance of 1972-73. During 1973-74, 1974-75 and 1975-76, the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs was responsible for the provision of programme activities on the site. The Department of Public Works has supported these programmes with related expenditures on capital improvements and site operations and maintenance. During 1973-74 and 1974-75, Urban Affairs chaired an Intergovernmental Committee that provided direction to the project team planning the development of the site. In July 1975, the Harbourfront Council was created by MSUA with the agreement of the Mayor of Toronto and the Chairman of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. This council of Toronto citizens was charged with the responsibility for directing the operation of the site and for making recommendations to the three participating levels of government on the future of the site. Their report was submitted January 30th and is under review by the three levels of government.

MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF MUSEUMS CANADA IN 1975

Question No. 3,982—Mr. Coates:

1. Did the Board of Directors of Museums Canada meet in Halifax during 1975 and, if so (a) on what dates, (b) for what purpose, (c) at what locations, and (i) in what manner, (ii) by whom were the decisions made regarding the location for each meeting?

2. In each case (a) how many persons were in attendance, (b) what was the total cost for (i) accommodation, (ii) travel expenses, (iii) food and drink, (iv) sundry expenses?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Museums of Canada as follows: 1. Yes, (a) September 15, 16, 17, 18, 1975; (b) according to the by-laws of the National Museums Corporation the NMC Board of Trustees must meet quarterly. The Halifax meeting was a regular quarterly meeting. Board meetings are held outside the National Capital in order to give Trustees an opportunity to meet with Canadians in all regions who have been closely involved in the policies of the National Museums of Canada and to give them a first hand view of how well the programmes and policies are being implemented. In Nova Scotia, Trustees also visisted Louisburg and the Miners' Museum in Glace Bay. The latter is assisted by the NMC and is one of the best examples of the NMC cultural decentralization policy in action; (c) Halifax, Louisburg, Glace Bay; (i) in the normal manner, which is determined by the Trustees at their meetings; (ii) by decision of the Board of Trustees at their quarterly meetings.

2. (a) Twenty-six persons were in attendance; (b) (i) $1,721.17; (ii) $7,837.28; (iii) $2,872.47 (In addition to the 26 persons who were in attendance for all or part of the Board meeting, the costs include entertainment for provincial officials and leaders of the museum community from the Atlantic region); (iv) $2,371.29 (The sundry expenses covered simultaneous translation costs).

[Mr. Drury.]

CMHC—LOANS MADE TO QUEBEC HOUSING CORPORATION

Question No. 4,144—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Does the Société d'habitation du Québec consult with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation before building (a) homes, (b) low-rent housing for senior citizens and, if so, does it submit its plans to the Corporation?

2. What is the name of the person who determines the amount of the contribution by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to a project?

3. Does an agreement exist between the two Corporations and, if so (a) what are its details, (b) as of what date?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: 1. (a) and (b) Following normal procedure for housing financed under the NHA, Quebec Housing Corporation submits plans and specifications to CMHC before loans are approved for housing for families or for senior citizens.

2. The processing of applications for loans under the NHA is an aspect of the internal administration of CMHC which is the responsibility of its President and Board of Directors, and it is not the policy to disclose details of such administration.

3. (a) and (b) An agreement between CMHC and QHC was entered into on September 12, 1974 for projects to be financed in 1974 and 1975 for housing for elderly persons under Section 15.1 of the NHA and for public housing projects under Section 43 of the NHA.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—NUMBER OF RETIRED ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL ON PENSION

Question No. 5,020—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired Armed Forces personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the following brackets (a) less than $20.00 per month, (b) $20.00 to $29.99 per month, (c) $30.00 to $39.99 per month, (d) $40.00 to $49.99 per month, (e) $50.00 to $59.99 per month, (f) $60.00 to $69.99 per month, (g) $70.00 to $79.99 per month, (h) $80.00 to $89.99 per month, (i) $90.00 to $99.99 per month, (j) $100.00 to $149.99 per month, (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month, (l) $200.00 to $249.99 per month, (m) $250.00 to $299.99 per month, (n) $300.00 per month and over?

2. How many widows of Armed Forces personnel or of retired Armed Forces personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the total number of retired Armed Forces personnel and also the number of widows of Armed Forces personnel or of retired Armed Forces personnel presently residing in each province?

4. In respect of how many orphans of Armed Forces personnel are pensions being paid and what is the average amount thereof?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. As of March 31, 1976, the number of retired Armed Forces personnel receiving monthly pensions totaled 48,018 within the following monthly brackets: (a) less than $20.00, 50; (b) $20.00 to $29.99, 64; (c) $30.00 to $39.99, 130; (d) $40.00 to $49.99, 251; (e) $50.00 to $59.99, 239; (f) $60.00 to $69.99, 186; (g) $70.00 to $79.99, 246; (h) $80.00 to $89.99, 336; (i) $90.00 to $99.99, 474; (j) $100.00 to $149.99, 2,480; (k) $150.00 to $199.99, 5,621; (l) $200.00 to $249.99, 7,893; (m) $250.00 to $299.99, 6,935; (n) $300.00 and over, 23,113.

2. The number of widows receiving monthly pensions totaled 4,866 as follows: (a) less than $20.00, 44; (b) $20.00 to $29.99, 44; (c) $30.00 to $39.99, 37; (d) $40.00 to $49.99, 45; (e) $50.00 to $59.99, 43; (f) $60.00 to $69.99, 79; (g) $70.00 to $79.99, 102; (h) $80.00 to $89.99, 165; (i) $90.00 to $99.99, 193; (j) $100.00 to $149.99, 1,086; (k) $150.00 to $199.99, 1,101; (l) $200.00 to $249.99, 725; (m) $250.00 to $299.99, 497; (n) $300.00 and over, 705.

3. The number of Retired Armed Forces personnel and widows of Armed Forces personnel presently residing in each province is as follows:

Provinces	Personnel	Widows
Newfoundland	215	16
Prince Edward Island	413	47
Nova Scotia	4,652	422
New Brunswick	1,756	172
Quebec	4,065	516
Ontario	18,732	2,053
Manitoba	2,035	210
Saskatchewan	653	84
Alberta	4,159	346
British Columbia	10,085	831
Territories	90	6
Outside Canada	1,163	163
	48,018	4,866

NATIONAL DEFENCE—SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 5,021—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount at credit in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account as at (a) March 31, 1973, (b) March 31, 1974, (c) March 31, 1975?

2. What rate of interest has the government paid for the use of this money during the fiscal years ending on the dates noted above?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1973, (b) March 31, 1974, (c) March 31, 1975?

4. What was the total amount paid out of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending (a) March 31, 1973, (b) March 31, 1974, (c) March 31, 1975?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1, 3 and 4. This information is tabled in the House of Commons annually in accordance with Revised Statutes, and also appears annually in the Public Accounts.

2. Rates of interest for: (a) 1972/73 Quarter ending June 30, 1972, 1.4601 percent; Quarter ending September 30, 1972, 1.4659 percent; Quarter ending December 31, 1972, 1,4778 percent; Quarter ending March 31, 1973, 1.4931 percent; (b) 1973/74 Quarter ending June 30, 1973, 1.5042 percent; Quarter ending September 30, 1973, 1.5252 percent; Quarter ending December 31, 1973, 1.5364 percent; Quarter ending March 31, 1974, 1.5490 percent; (c) 1974/75 Quarter ending June 30, 1974, 1.5642 percent; Quarter ending September 30, 1974, 1.59 percent; Quarter ending December 31, 1974, 1.6259 percent; Quarter ending March 31, 1975, 1.6363 percent.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PERSONNEL ON PENSION 1959-1975

Question No. 5,022—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. In each year 1959 to 1975, both inclusive (a) how many personnel of the Canadian Armed Forces have commenced drawing pensions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, (b) how many widows have commenced drawing pensions under the said Act?

2. In each year 1959 to 1975, both inclusive, how many pensions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (a) to retired Canadian Armed Forces personnel, (b) to widows of such personnel, have been discontinued because of the death of the annuitant?

3. In each year 1946 to 1975, both inclusive, how many service personnel contributed to the pension or annuity account under the former Part V or under the provisions of the present Canadian Forces Superannuation Act?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) The number of Canadian Forces personnel from 1959 to 1975 inclusive who commenced drawing pensions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (CFSA) was as follows: 1959, 752; 1960, 1,048; 1961, 1,418; 1962, 1,343; 1963, 1,623; 1964, 2,454; 1965, 3,419; 1966, 3,407; 1967, 2,983; 1968, 2,787; 1969, 4,050; 1970, 4,075; 1971, 4,267; 1972, 4,405; 1973, 3,357; 1974, 3,478; 1975, 3,459. (b) The number of widows of Canadian personnel from 1959 to 1975 inclusive who commenced drawing pensions under the CFSA was as follows: 1959, 98; 1960, 121; 1961, 166; 1962, 179; 1963, 207; 1964, 208; 1965, 283; 1966, 263; 1967, 303; 1968, 303; 1969, 371; 1970, 323; 1971, 375; 1972, 420; 1973, 441; 1974, 478.

2. (a) The number of pensions to retired Canadian Forces personnel for the years in question which were discontinued because of the death of the annuitant was as follows: 1959, 91; 1960, 103; 1961, 114; 1962, 127; 1963, 142; 1964, 169; 1965, 190; 1966, 208; 1967, 243; 1968, 295; 1969, 353; 1970, 356; 1971, 331; 1972, 323; 1973, 379; 1974, 524; 1975, 496. (b) The number of pensions to widows of Canadian Forces personnel which were discontinued because of the death of the annuitant was as follows: 1959, 9; 1960, 12; 1961, 17; 1962, 19; 1963, 26; 1964, 28; 1965, 34; 1966, 39; 1967, 45; 1968, 56; 1969, 50; 1970, 52; 1971, 24; 1972, 11; 1973, 12; 1974, 30; 1975, 39.

3. The number of contributors to the CFSA or the former Part V based on the strength of the Armed Forces as at March 31 of each year indicated, was as follows: 1946, 212,692; 1947, 36,535; 1948, 34,762; 1949, 41,676; 1950, 47,185; 1951, 68,427; 1952, 95,394; 1953, 104,427; 1954, 112,529; 1955, 118,077; 1956, 116,678; 1957, 117,092; 1958, 119,038; 1959, 120,412; 1960, 119,597; 1961, 120,055; 1962, 126,474; 1963, 123,694; 1964, 120,781; 1965, 114,164; 1966, 107,467; 1967, 105,584; 1968, 101,572; 1969, 98,340; 1970, 93,353; 1971, 89,563; 1972, 84,933; 1973, 82,402; 1974, 81,822; 1975, 79,817.

ARFAA—PAYMENTS BY PROVINCES

Question No. 5,113—Mr. Forrestall:

For each Atlantic province, by year since 1965, what is the government's best estimate of the payments made under the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act?

Anti-Inflation Act

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: The Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act received Royal assent on July 19, 1969 and payments under this legislation have only been made since that date. Such payments are made to carriers in relation to the movement of traffic within and westbound from the region. As such traffic originates and terminates within and/or between all provinces in the Atlantic Region it is not possible to allocate payments to a specific province. Such information could only be established by abstracting origin and destination statistics from the millions of shipping documents submitted by carriers in support of subsidy claims. No data gathering system currently exists to accomplish this purpose.

PICKERING AIRPORT EXPENDITURES

Question No. 5,148—Mr. Stevens:

1. What was the total amount expended, itemized to reflect the purpose of all main expenditures, by the government directly or indirectly on the Pickering Airport up to March 31, 1976?

2. As of that date, what further monies have been committed, itemized to reflect the purpose of all main expenditures, with respect to the project?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport):

	Accumulated Expenditures (1) to March 31, 1976 ($000's)	1976-77 (2) Estimates ($000's)
Site	543	—
Planning Team	10,798	—
Land and Related Costs	83,586	5,604
Headquarters Charges— Loan Interest, Fringe Benefits, etc.	24,303	12,651
Total	$119,230	$18,255

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-89, An act to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be amended in clause 11 by striking out lines 10 to 23 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) This act expires on May 1, 1977, or on such earlier date as may be fixed by proclamation or a motion taken up and considered by the House of Commons that is adopted by the House and concurred in by the Senate pursuant to subsections (8) and (9) unless, before May 1, 1977, or any earlier date fixed by proclamation or any such motion that is so adopted by the House and concurred in by the Senate, an order in council is made to the effect that this act shall continue in force for such period of time as may be set out in the order in council."

● (1610)

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in support of my motion I would first like to say that I hope hon. members will participate at lenght in the debate with respect to this motion and also Bill C-89. I believe that one of the most important matters before this parliament is the question of the wage and price control program inflicted on the Canadian public by the government.

Mr. Broadbent: And supported by you on second reading.

Mr. Stevens: In that connection I would say that the minister's comment earlier today in the question period, that he hoped for speedy passage of this bill, was not unfortunate, bearing in mind that at committee stage with respect to the bill the guillotine was used once more by government members to force the bill through without proper review of the clauses therein. In short, we spent three meetings at committee stage reviewing this bill.

The same mistake was made by government members as was made respecting Bill C-73, the original anti-inflation legislation. That was giving too little time for thorough review at committee stage on this important matter which, unfortunately, ended up with amendments being required as we are now dealing with in Bill C-89. I say that because at the committee stage initially with respect to Bill C-73 it was made quite clear that we felt there were not proper appeal provisions under the legislation that the government was advancing.

My motion is, in effect, a very simple one. I suggest that we should deal with motions Nos. 1 and 2 jointly because they are interrelated. Motion No. 2 is consequential upon motion No. 1 being accepted. Motion No. 1 simply proposes to change the expiration date of Bill C-73 from December 31, 1978, to a more realistic date, namely, May 1, 1977.

An hon. Member: Bill C-89.

Mr. Stevens: If I may clarify that, Mr. Speaker, the bill we are dealing with today is Bill C-89, which in turn amends Bill C-73, but the expiration provision is in Bill C-73. What I am saying is that Bill C-73 contains the expiration date of December 31, 1978. The clause which is amended in another way by the administration is now being reamended through my motion to make the expiration May 1, 1977, as opposed to December 31, 1978.

I urge members of this House to support us in our desire to ensure that the wage and price control program of the present administration be held to a minimum period. It is our view that the honeymoon period with the Anti-Inflation Board appears to be on the wane. Six months after its creation, there is little evidence that the board has helped to contain inflation. Current moderation in inflation is due in the main to a decline since October in the prices of beef, pork, poultry, fresh fruits, cereal and bakery products. None of these items, however, come under the Anti-Inflation Board's direct purview, even in principle. Wage settlements reviewed by the board have ended in average first-year increases of 16.2 per cent, well above the board's target of 8 per cent plus 2 per cent for so-called productivity. More and more it appears that the present administration established the Anti-Inflation Board for political rather that economic reasons. Jean-Luc Pepin, chairman of the board, has apparently been asked to keep a high profile to give the impression of activity so that the administration can claim credit should inflation decline.

The present administration, in their anti-inflation program, appear—as far as the cabinet members and others are concerned—to be more and more as though they were TV actors playing out a script. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I would suggest, takes the role of Marshall Dillon, out to vanquish the imagined villains, the labouring man, the businessman, the municipalities and the provinces. He, of course, has his little entourage. Festus, in the script, appears to be the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) limping along, meaning well but always fumbling and changing his mind. Jean-Luc Pepin, the board chairman, takes the role of Doc. His role is one of physician for all our problems. He is quick to prescribe aspirin remedies, but admits that he has no idea how to cure the overall disease of inflation. I am not sure who plays the role of Kitty in the program. It may be even Mrs. Plumptre, if you can imagine that.

As much as the administration may claim they are out to vanquish the villain of inflation, in the real world inflation always ends up vanquishing controls, if they are left on a permanent basis. The economies of western democracies are strewn with dead and wounded control programs that lasted too long. Controls only work on a temporary basis. Controls in themselves will not put an end to the inflation cycle. In fact, they may cause inflation to continue longer than they otherwise would. "Doc Pepin" will never put an end to the transfers of income and wealth that inflation brings. He will never be able to end the hardships inflicted by inflation on our poor and disadvantaged. Controls may be introduced appropriately as a supplementary or incidental device which for psychological reasons, at least, might assist the economy to right itself. Such controls must be subsidiary, however, to a tighter fiscal restraint and realistic growth in our monetary system.

It was on this basis that my party first suggested the imposition of an income control policy in Canada. We did that early in 1973. We based our proposition on the sound economic premise of having restraint in government spending and in the growth of our money supply. Had our approach of restraint in spending at the federal government level and in monetary growth been followed there is no doubt we could have shaved off the top of our inflation cycle and had less inflation today. Unfortunately, however, the present administration has subjected us to their control program for political reasons, not economic reasons. The administration is using this program to project an executive image of decisiveness in response to the public outcry to do something about inflation. In addition, they realize that the controls program shifts the focus of attention away from the real culprits of inflation—the government's own agency, the Bank of Canada, and the government's own spending—toward the private sector and the struggles between business and labour to maintain their income share.

The public relations' value is difficult to overestimate. Its ideal from the present administration's standpoint to have our commentators on TV and our columnists refer to labour or business leaders as being locked in confrontations against the public interest when they try to raise prices and wages. The administration's role then shows up as the protector, as the Marshall Dillon of the public interest rather than the culprit in the inflation process.

The electronic medium is perfectly suited to handle this shift in focus. Radio and TV people have a horrendous time depicting the complex process in which an undue increase in our money supply or federal spending creates inflation, but they have a very easy time depicting conflict between management and labour or consumer and supermarket. In this type of conflict the government always looks good. It is generally assumed they have no selfish interests, so they can appear to be the defender of the public and its protectors against selfish business and labour leaders. The Prime Minister and his officials wear white hats, carry halos and come on like Marshall Dillon with hundreds of deputized enforcers.

We were first told that the staff of the AIB would be 200 in number. At last count it was 583, and rising. After six months the number has reached nearly 600. Will it be 1,000 by the end of the year? At the highest point of the phase two control program in the United States the organization comparable to the AIB in Canada had only 700 people on its staff.

There is a growing indication that the government sees the control program in this country as a continuing one. Speaking in Toronto last weekend, the Minister of Finance told a meeting of Ontario Liberals that the wage and price control program might have to be tightened up so as to be more effective. He said that the program was, and I quote, "in a certain sense unjust to everyone", but that it had brought the rate of inflation down to about 9 per cent. Mr. Speaker, that is nothing but direct misrepresentation. There is no evidence that the program has materially reduced inflation. In fact, there is evidence to the contrary.

Let me cite two examples. I have already referred to the fact that the main reason for the decline in the rate of inflation is the drop in food prices. In the last three months, food costs declined to the equivalent of an annual rate of a 6.5 per cent increase, while the rest of the consumer price index package soared by 10.7 per cent. In the six months before the imposition of controls, the cost of living rose at an annual rate of 10.4 per cent. In other words, if you exclude the food component there is more inflation today than existed prior to the commencement of the program.

My second example is this. Increasingly there is a tendency for wage settlements to be more generous than they might otherwise have been, since employers contemplate the AIB knocking down settlement levels anyway. There appears to be a shifting of responsibility from employers to the AIB in the blind assumption that the board will insist that its own guidelines should not be violated. However, we find that recent settlements approved by the board have on average been 50 per cent higher than permissible under the board's own guidelines.

Most alarmingly, there is increasing evidence that the government intends to continue the control program indefinitely, at least in part. Mr. Pepin speaks about the program having a gradual character and states, "It's only a dream if people start thinking of getting out of controls in 12 months or 18 months." The Minister of Finance has admitted to the committee that it is going to take a number of years to get inflation down to a level which in the government's view would justify dismantling the control program. The longer the controls continue, the more they will distort the economy. With this in mind, Mr. Speaker, I have moved, on behalf of the official opposition, that the anti-inflation program should expire on May 1 of next year rather than continue beyond that date.

Inflation in the United States is running this year at 6 per cent, compared to our own rate of 9 per cent. William Simons, Secretary of the U.S. Treasury, has forecast that inflation in that country will be down to 2 per cent in a couple of years. In Canada, on the other hand, the government talks about 8 per cent inflation this year, 6 per cent next year and 4 per cent thereafter—figures substantially above the American level.

The AIB has introduced a high degree of confusion into the marketplace. There is presently a backlog of 3,000 applications for price or wage review. According to the findings of a Gallup poll released last weekend, 67 per cent of those questioned thought the program was unfair with regard to prices, and 65 per cent felt it was unfair with regard to incomes. In the absence of public confidence there is little chance the board will be able to function effectively.

Speaking of confusion, in the course of the question period today I asked the minister at least to clarify the unfortunate inclusion of charitable donations under the restricted expense definition found in the Anti-Inflation Act regulations. His reply confirmed my worst impressions. Charitable donations, as an item included under restricted expenses, are now put into such a category that businessmen, acting in complete sincerity, may find it difficult to maintain their programs of charitable donations. I say this because what the minister has chosen to do by way of these regulations is to lump a large variety of expenses together under the heading of "restricted expenses." He has lumped advertising, promotion and public relations, plant and office rearrangement, moving, landscaping and decorating expenses, with expenses incurred in research and development, management fees, including administration fees, technical assistance charges and accounting service fees paid to any person with certain exceptions. To all these things he has linked charitable donations and, finally, training and retraining expenses.

The unfortunate consequences are these. As a company carries on its business it may find that through no fault of its own advertising costs have increased. The cost of research and development might go up because the company feels it needs to spend more money in these areas in order to increase its productivity. Yet under the existing regulations the extra money needed will have to be found in one or other of the categories to which I have referred. For example, if a company wishes to increase its research and development program it might well feel it has no alternative but to lower its charitable donations in the current year. When we consider that more than 50 per cent of the money received by charitable organizations comes from business and commercial undertakings, I think it is particularly unfortunate that the regulations should be drafted in such a manner, the consequence of which might well be a substantial shortfall in donations to charitable donations such as the United Way in the current as well as subsequent years.

Initially, as I have pointed out, the administration stated that the board would have no more than 200 employees. As late as last November, Mr. Pepin is on record as saying, "The members of the board have a strong preference for a small agency, thus keeping the bureaucracy to a minimum." Last week, however, when appearing before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, he stated:

> The original plan which called for a total of 200 officials was nonsense. It was simply a concept in the mind of one individual with no analysis of the situation at all.

It was then revealed that as of last month the board had built up a bureaucracy numbering 583 persons—and that figure is likely to be over the 600 mark by now. Besides the staff to which I have referred in the AIB itself, there is, of course, a staff in the administrator's office, in the office of the appeals tribunal and in other departments of government such as national revenue. In addition there is, of course, the provincial involvement. Speaking about staff, I think hon. members would be interested in an article that appears in the current, April edition of Executive magazine. It refers to the chaos existing at the AIB. The article has this to say:

● (1630)

> Under the best of circumstances, the pace of expansion would have led to rather severe growing pains. But the differences among the board members and the lack of even minimal controls over the purse-strings have seriously compounded the problem. The growth has not been well orchestrated, internal co-ordination has been almost totally lacking, and personal empires are well under construction. In other words, the AIB's management is chaotic.
> One sign of this is the high rate of turnover among the senior staff in almost every branch of the board.
>
> Prices and profits: John Hague, the present director-general, is the second person to occupy the post. Hugh Bardon, his predecessor, walked out after a few weeks. But Hague himself is only temporary and he is expected to return soon to his regular job at the Canada Development Corp.
>
> Compensation: James King already has returned to his consulting business in Toronto. He was succeeded by William Nelson as director-general at the start of March.

Communications: Michael McCabe resigned in February, being replaced as director-general on an acting basis by Kenn Prittie. A permanent replacement has yet to be appointed.

Administration: Ralph Blackwell, the present director-general, is the second person in the job.

Economic research: David Dodge is at least the second director-general; nobody can remember how many others have preceded him.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, can you blame the official opposition for saying that we should ensure that this unfortunate program should come to an end no later than May 1, 1977? The Americans, in their phase two program which ran from November 15, 1971, to January 11, 1973—about a 13-month period—took a much different approach from that which has been taken in Canada. Their program had three tiers of controls. The first tier, which involved 1,100 firms with $100 million or more in sales, covered 55 per cent of the gross sales in that country. Tier No. 2 covered another 1,500 firms which had sales of from $50 million to $100 million. This level caught 11 per cent of gross sales in the United States. The third tier, which applied to firms with sales under $50 million, involved only selected companies. In total, the United States did not attempt to control more than about 3,000 firms—a far cry from our approach.

In the American program, however, Mr. Speaker, they did attempt to control rents, with the result that 57 per cent of their field force was devoted to that field where they received 80 per cent of their complaints. We in Canada have passed rent control over to the provinces, yet our AIB staff is even larger than that in the United States if we look at the composite picture.

To date, the administration appears to have made three important mistakes in setting up their Anti-Inflation Board and the anti-inflation program itself. First, they did not provide for a total freeze during an initial 90-day period to allow for the forming of definitive rules which could be more easily understood. Secondly, they are allowing a highly discretionary approach to be taken in their decisions, with little consistency. Some wage and price decisions appear to be excessive, while others are unduly low. Thirdly, unlike the American approach, where about 3,000 firms were involved, the board has kept expanding their jurisdiction so that they are now reviewing over 100,000 concerns in this country. The workload and frustration that that will entail will become impossible. The administrative cost to businesses of complying with the controls will run into hundreds of millions of dollars.

In this connection, the United States has estimated that its control program may have reduced the rate of price and wage increases by no more than about 1 per cent, and that the main impact was at the beginning of their program. Against this one must consider the statement of John Dunlap, executive director of the cost of living council, when he appeared before the United States Senate committee on banking, housing and urban affairs on February 6, 1974. At that time Mr. Dunlap had this to say:

One must consider the direct and indirect costs of the controls program. The direct costs consist of the administration necessary for the government and private sector to operate controls. The outlays of the federal government for implementing controls were $108 million for Phase II—

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the outlay for our program in Ottawa is running close to $20 million per year.

Estimates on the administrative costs to business for complying with the controls regulation cover a range of from $0.7 to $2 billion, with the more realistic estimates at the lower end of the scale.

With 30 times the number of firms involved in Canada's control program already, the relative costs to Canadian companies may be truly staggering. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members should at least peruse the latest publication from the C.D. Howe Research Institute in a booklet "HRI Observations", which carries an article entitled "The Anti-Inflation Guidelines: Linking Wages to Productivity". I think this booklet sets forth some interesting perspectives and comments concerning this controls program, and on page 3 the following interesting statement is to be found:

—without an exceptional boost in productivity growth during the current recovery period, the guidelines will prolong the process of winding down the rate of inflation.

I think that the factual information given in this brochure should give everybody cause to be alarmed. Their view is that the 2 per cent productivity assumption that is built into the anti-inflation guidelines is not realistic in relation to productivity increases in this country. When the minister comments on my motion I should like to hear him deal with this question of productivity precisely.

Again on the question of confusion, I think it is interesting to note that not only did the government request the Anti-Inflation Board to comment on bringing various companies under the general regulation of the program—I am referring to the recent order in council directed at construction companies right down to the one-man company level, trucking companies, grain handling companies and shipping and longshoring establishments—but it has chosen to throw its net around the general insurance companies as well.

This is truly remarkable, Mr. Speaker. If you read the Anti-Inflation Board's recommendations regarding the inclusion of general insurance companies within the program, in effect the board stated that those that had automatically fallen within the guidelines—those with over 500 employees—did not dominate the industry sufficiently because there were so many other companies in the industry competing that the board could not effectively deal with that industry if the program were restricted to a relatively small number of companies.

The fact is that there are over 400 insurance companies doing business in Canada. What the government had failed to recognize is that the board was really basing its recommendation on the fact that they had found that most of those 400 companies were truly very competitive, and that unless they could control all insurance companies they felt they would be unable materially to alter the general carriage of business in the insurance industry of this country since the controls affected only a few of the big companies which, in percentage terms, represented only a small portion of the general insurance field. I would suggest that is a complete distortion. Reading it another way, the board should have said this is an industry that is truly competitive and does not need the control we are being asked to extend over it. To confirm this, I think it is interesting to note the statement by Mr. Humphrys, Superintendent of Insurance, before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs just this morning. I should like to quote what Mr. Humphrys said as follows:

● (1640)

The recent and current economic situation has strained companies' resources.

He was referring to companies active in the general insurance business. He continued:

Rising claims costs due to inflation and the resulting underwriting losses suffered have made it impossible to restore margins from retained earnings; at the same time the competition for capital and the poor profit performance have made it difficult to raise additional capital funds. This has caused some companies to withdraw from Canada and some others have had to impose restraints on the volume of new business.

Incidentally, on questioning Mr. Humphrys he stated that 27 companies to date have had to withdraw from Canada because the insurance business is so competitive they no longer felt they could continue to make money here carrying on with the general insurance business. Mr. Humphrys went on to state:

The situation has required, and is requiring, sustained attention by the department to see that unsatisfactory asset positions and operating losses are recognized and corrected within time limits imposed, in order to ensure that companies remain in a position where they are able to discharge their financial obligations to the public. We are re-examining the statutory requirements for reserves and surplus margins to be sure that they do not unnecessarily impede companies in providing insurance that the public needs.

Those are alarming words coming from the Superintendent of Insurance. He is stating that the losses sustained by these companies were something over $200 million in 1974, and almost $200 million in 1975, have resulted in these companies being extremely strained as far as their capital resources are concerned. To suggest that they be subjected to still more harassing control and regulation shows the ineptitude of the government's handling of this entire anti-inflation program.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: My friends to the left, in typical fashion, hoot and holler when I refer to the insurance industry. I only wish they would read into Hansard what happened to the British Columbia Insurance Company which tried to get into the insurance business and compete with private institutions operating in that province.

In conclusion, I hope that hon. members will support my motion. I feel that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Trudel) will undoubtedly understand the reference I am making to the United States experience in phase two of its anti-inflation program. The parliamentary secretary, with myself, attended a seminar in Washington in January, 1975. At that time we heard most of the officials who had been involved in the United States anti-inflation program and I think the parliamentary secretary will agree that if we are thinking of getting into a controls program in the foreseeable future, we should not. They said we should not get into such a program, but if we did we should make sure we have the co-operation of labour before doing so. What I find most remarkable, Mr. Speaker, is the way—

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member, following his thoughtful speech, would answer a question before sitting down?

[Mr. Stevens.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Will the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) accept a question?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I certainly would be willing to accept a question from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I am just finishing my remarks.

Specifically, what I am saying is that I hope the parliamentary secretary will pass on to the Minister of Finance the very good information we obtained in Washington about the handling of an anti-inflation program, with the earnest desire that the minister will wisen up and perhaps be able to handle this program in a more satisfactory way than to date. Above all, I wish to emphasize that the program should not continue longer than 18 months and should terminate on or about May 1, 1977.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in the hon. member's speech of some 40 minutes he listed the many objections he has to the program, suggesting it was not working in terms of prices and was unfair in terms of wages. He mentioned that the insurance industry was upset, and so on. For 40 minutes I heard nothing but criticism of the program. I should like to ask the hon. member why, in heaven's name, he wants it extended for another year?

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, through no fault of the hon. member, he is not a member of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. This question was discussed at that standing committee and I tried the minister out on his willingness to accept various termination dates. I felt the only one we could possibly win on was May 1, 1977. The thought was that we should be thankful for small mercies if that was the chosen date for the program to terminate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I believe it has been suggested by the hon. member for York-Simcoe that motions Nos. 1 and 2 be debated together. If this is the wish of the House, the Chair has no objection to the suggestion. A separate vote should be taken on each motion. However, it seems to the Chair that motions Nos. 2 and 3 contain contradictory propositions. Perhaps the hon. member would like to comment on that, as it would seem to the Chair that if motion No. 2 is adopted, that would automatically dispose of motion No. 3.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that one vote be held on motions Nos. 1 and 2 in that, as I have indicated, motion No. 2 is simply consequential on motion No. 1, and in the event that it is defeated we should then have a vote on motion No. 3. If motion No. 3 carries, I would suggest that this is an entirely separate matter from motions Nos. 1 and 2.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I believe the hon. member suggests that the House should debate motion No. 1 and motion No. 2 together, then vote on No. 1, which would dispose of motion No. 2 and No. 3 would be a separate vote. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In view of the fact that motion No. 2 is now included, I will read the motion. It is moved by Mr. Stevens, seconded by Mr. Paproski:

That Bill C-89, an act to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be amended in clause 11 by striking out lines 27 to 38 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(6) Where, at any time after August 31, 1976 and before January 1, 1977, a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons, signed by not less than 50 members of the House, is filed with the Speaker to the effect that this act shall expire on a date before May 1, 1977, that is specified in the motion, the House of Commons shall within the first fifteen days next after the motion is filed that the House is sitting, in accordance with the rules of the House, take up and consider the motion."

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you provided the theme for my response to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) when you referred to him as having been completely contradictory in his motions. Indeed, he was contradictory to himself, to his colleagues and to his former leader throughout his speech. At the very start he got up to oppose the speedy passage of this measure. Indeed, he was only consistent, at least with himself, in the fact that he has been active in trying to prevent this particular bill from becoming law. He has taken every step possible to try to prolong debate on this matter, to prolong the committee hearings and in fact to prevent it from being carried out.

However, the hon. member has totally rejected the viewpoint of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), his former leader, or perhaps has revealed that that hon. gentleman was not genuinely expressing his party's viewpoint. Hon. members will recall the righteous indignation of the hon. member for Halifax, the former leader of the opposition, when he complained about the fact that the workingman in Canada did not have the right of appeal under this bill, or the anti-inflation law, and wanted that right of appeal established as soon as possible.

● (1650)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what this bill proposes. The hon. member for York-Simcoe, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and other members have prolonged the debate to prevent the representatives of the workingman, such as the unions and other representatives, from getting the right of appeal which the former leader of the opposition once said he, at least, was interested in.

In dealing with the substance of the argument, as I have said many times before we have set out to put into play a planned and deliberate reduction in the rate of inflation in Canada and to take account of the fact that some people in the working force have not had the opportunity to catch up with the rate of inflation in the past; in other words, to try to reduce the rate of inflation in Canada by a deliberate program over a three-year period. We have sought to soften the impact of the program on the workingman in Canada by extending the period of time in which it would operate. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues would like to see a much steeper rate of reduction in Canada and much harsher measures taken to bring down the rate of inflation.

Once again, the hon. member for York-Simcoe in his participation in the debate this afternoon advocated a policy which would ensure a very high rate of unemployment in this country and would bring about a very great risk of the Canadian economy being forced into recession. The hon. member has often quoted with admiration the American situation and the fact that the rate of inflation in the United States at the present time is about three percentage points below the rate in Canada. I think we should recall that the United States has experienced a rate of unemployment of up to 10 per cent during the past 18 months and, unlike the Canadian economy which was reduced to a very slow rate of growth, but a rate of growth, over the past six months, the United States suffered no less than a 6 per cent recession during the past 18 months.

For my part—and I am sure members on this side of the House agree—it would not be our purpose to fight inflation by bringing about high levels of unemployment and recessionary conditions in Canada as one way of bringing about a reduction in our rate of inflation. That is why we reject the tight money policies, the restrictive fiscal and monetary policies which the hon. gentleman opposite advocates as the means to reduce inflation in Canada.

Mr. Stevens: Then we do not have restraint.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We do indeed have restraint. The question is, are we to tighten up the economy and throw more people out of work? The hon. member for York-Simcoe would say, by all means do this and it is too bad for the workingman. He would say that we should tighten it up. That is not our viewpoint.

The hon. member used figures, again, concerning the number of staff in this particular organization and the number in the United States. During the course of the committee hearings he repeatedly produced figures and asserted that these were the numbers. He repeated the figure 700 as the number of United States employees involved in the program in that country. Of course, as was pointed out to him in the committee, he had—I am sure accidentally—only drawn the staff from one of the four United States' organizations responsible for running the American anti-inflation program. Indeed, at one point he picked out the number of employees from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as 250 and my colleague from Windsor pointed out that that was with regard to only one part of a departmental program which had very many more employees than that.

The fact is that there were many more persons involved in the United States. In the several agencies involved there were 1,000 persons under the anti-inflation program alone and three thousand more in the context of the internal revenue service. The interesting thing is that hon. members opposite are unhappy with this government for having adopted a selective incomes and prices control system. We have not adopted the type of comprehensive program of wage and price controls which hon. members advocated during the election campaign. They were going to control the whole economy.

Mr. Stevens: For 90 days.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member says, "For 90 days". The hon. member for Edmonton Centre and the hon. member for York-Simcoe are therefore going against the former leader of the opposition, because during the election campaign he was talking about 22 months. Who is telling the truth? Members of the official opposition who proposed a comprehensive set of controls over the entire economy are now complaining about the size of the Anti-Inflation Board staff with relation to only a selective set of controls.

Mr. Speaker, there was a reference to the average rate of settlements decided by the Anti-Inflation Board, a reference made by the hon. gentleman. I just want to point out that he, perhaps inadvertently, was referring not to the total of the settlements covered by the Anti-Inflation Board, or income settlements covered by the Anti-Inflation Board, but to those cases only in which the question of the historical relationship arose. I will have something to say about the question of the historical relationship and the way the hon. member for York-Simcoe repudiated the stand taken by his colleagues from Vancouver South and Churchill earlier in the question period today.

First, I think one should note that with approximately half of the compensation returns in, we are covering about two-thirds of the workers under the anti-inflation program. About half of those compensation returns indicate settlements which are at or below the guidelines. It is true, with regard to the highly-publicized settlements such as in respect of the Toronto high school teachers and the pulp and paper workers, where the question of the historical relationship was raised, there have indeed been higher levels of settlement. The last people to complain about this should be the members of the official opposition. After all, they were the people who said during the question period this afternoon that the program was unjust because in respect of the workers in Thompson, Manitoba, the historical relationship had not been recognized. They cannot have it both ways. If they agree with us that there will be some transitional situations which occur, for example, in respect of those in the pulp and paper industry, then indeed there should be recognition of the historical relationship and in some of these transitional settlements it is appropriate to have some recognition of settlements above the guidelines.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could call it five o'clock and return to this matter later in the day.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Transport—Atlantic region—Meeting with provincial ministers on highway program—trans-Newfoundland corridor study—government position; the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams)—Administration of Justice—Suggested reference of gun control measure to Supreme Court to determine whether jurisdiction federal or provincial; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Finance—Suggested changes in equalization formula as result of increased energy costs—Request for report.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

It being five o'clock, pursuant to the order made on Friday, February 27, 1976, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Shall order No. 34, in the name of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government. Shall order No. 4, in the name of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government. Shall order No. 10, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan), stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government. Shall order No. 24, in the name of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government.

● (1700)

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it has been agreed to stand all the other bills and call Bill C-247.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) is ready to speak on that bill.

HEALTH, WELFARE AND SOCIAL AFFAIRS

PROVISION FOR ABATEMENT OF NOISE LEVELS IN FACTORIES

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore) moved that Bill C-247, an act respecting noise in factories, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, as spelled out in the explanatory note attached to it, is to combat a major health hazard in industry by requiring that the noise levels in establishments having contracts with the government of Canada shall be a maximum of 85 decibels. The noise volume at 85 decibels is said by health experts to be "when you can hardly hear yourself talk".

Noise control has been a very complicated and controversial issue due to the complex nature of noise itself and its effects. Noise has been defined as any sound that is regarded or treated as a nuisance. But the degree of annoyance is not necessarily related to the intensity of sound. What may be music to one person is noise to another. Certainly, attitude of mind and environment are of major importance. This factor and others further complicate the debate raging on the best means of measuring noise, the most effective and feasible manner of protecting workers and the health effects of noise.

I have neither the expertise nor the inclination to become involved in that kind of discussion which brings in countless variables and employs scientific and technical jargon. I believe that kind of debate is too often used to slow down or halt noise abatement efforts rather than seriously attempting to find ways of controlling unwanted and excessive sounds. This "talk but don't act" mentality has resulted in slower progress in changing the law than technology's capacity to make more noise.

There can be no question of a man's right to work in an environment which will not harm him, and there is no doubt that noise which is loud enough and consistent enough will harm him. The degree of this harm and the scope of the health effects caused by noise—for which a wide variety of physiological and psychological effects have been postulated—is at present uncertain. However, one area where there is unanimous agreement is that noise can, and does, cause hearing loss whether it is temporary hearing loss or permanent hearing loss, or permanent injury to the inner ear. These effects are an established fact of living and working in an industrial society; there is no controversy over this point.

Another point that is not very controversial is how hearing loss occurs. The most common kind of industrial hearing problem develops when the tiny hair cells in the inner ear, which transmit sound pressure along nerves to the brain, are damaged. Exposure to high noise levels can cause these cells to become fatigued, resulting in temporary loss of hearing ability. The ear can usually recover, once the noise is removed, in a period ranging from minutes to days. However, if the noise is loud enough and long enough over months or years, the cells are destroyed and the damage is permanent.

At what level, then, does hearing loss begin? This point varies widely with individuals and it is often difficult to separate work-induced hearing loss from contributing noise factors off the job. However, in the summer of 1975 the U.S. occupational safety and health administration held 4½ weeks of hearings which included 139 presentations of testimony. During the hearings the occupational safety and health administration presented estimates based on a sample of 19 major U.S. industries employing about 14.5 million workers. With this group it was found that a strictly enforced—I repeat, strictly enforced—90-decibel limit of noise for an eight-hour work day would keep 463,000 workers, or 3.2 per cent of the work force, from suffering hearing loss after 40 years of exposure, still leaving 130,000 at risk of hearing impairment. Lowering that limit to 85 decibels, according to OSHA, would prevent hearing loss for another 73,000 workers, or 0.5 per cent of the work force. The U.S. national institute for occupational safety and health estimate that as many as 10 per cent to 15 per cent more workers might suffer hearing loss if exposed to 90 decibels, instead of 85 decibels, over a working lifetime.

As I stated earlier, health problems may not be the only result of high noise levels. A number of experts have suggested that by acting on the nervous system, noise increases the pulse rate and may raise the chances of high blood pressure and the occurrence of stress, which could have measurable effects. However, while many noise abatement proposals mentioned non-auditory effects of noise, most are aimed only at preventing hearing loss since research on these other possible effects is still inconclusive.

Although Canada does not have specific legislation dealing with noise control in industry at either the federal or provincial level, there are protective legislative provisions at both levels of government as part of other statutes. Federal legislation for noise control, found under the Canada Labour Code as the Canada noise control regulations, exist as statutory orders and regulations. The regulations affect noise control and hearing conservation in federal works undertakings and businesses. The regulations state that where reasonably practicable, employers must not permit employees to work where the sound level is 90 decibels or more. Otherwise, permissible noise exposure is scaled from eight hours per work day at more than 87, but not more than 90 decibels, to zero hours at more than 115 decibels. A worker may be permitted exposure to 90 decibels or more where a suitable hearing protector is worn which reduces the sound level to less than 90 decibels, or where a hearing test establishes no hearing impairment for employees exposed to 90 to 95 decibels and regular tests are made.

The United States has a 90-decibels standard for an eight-hour work day, similar to that adopted under the Canada Labour Code and by several provinces. However, the currently developing goal in the United States for maximum industrial noise exposure is 85 decibels for an eight-hour work day. This standard is being considered for adoption by the occupational safety and health administration in Washington. It would appear that this level might very possibly be adopted, at least as a goal for the near future. In addition, the Soviet Union, Australia, Czechoslovakia, Finland, Sweden, East and West Germany, and South Africa have adopted the 85-decibel industrial noise limit.

It is clear that industrial noise control in Canada lags seriously behind that of a number of other countries, including the United States. The cost of inadequate noise control is high, not only in terms of health damage but also in the context of compensation payments. For example, between 1971 and 1974 the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario paid out more than $2.5 million to people who had significant hearing loss from noise damage. It appears, as Robert Baron says in his book "The Tyranny of Noise", that—

Society seems to look upon any degree of excessive noise as it now regards pornography—if it contains a modicum of social value, it is not obscene.

However, perhaps it is somewhat unfair to blame all of society for the lack of effective controls on noise pollution, for the bulk of the blame must lie with governments and corporations. Too often, noise abatement is presented not as an essential but as a luxury. But who considers the ability to hear a luxury? We have to stop weighing economic considerations against public health and welfare. Indeed, it sometimes appears that more emphasis is placed on reducing noise complaints instead of noise.

As I indicated earlier, there is considerable debate about the present noise limit of 90 decibels for an eight-hour work day versus the proposed 85 decibels limit. In the United States, a number of organizations including the environmental protection agency and the national institute for occupational safety and health are supporting the adoption of the 85 decibels limit. Most major labour unions are also supporting this standard. Industry, by and large, is opposed to the establishment of the 85-decibel standard, especially in older plants, on the understandable grounds that the program will be prohibitively expensive. Industry's spokesmen argue, instead, for the use of hearing protection devices such as ear-plugs and ear-muffs. Labour groups argue against the use of these devices on the grounds that they are often improperly worn and thus give insufficient protection. In other cases, because the devices are hot and uncomfortable over long periods, workers frequently refuse to wear them at all unless they are directly supervised.

● (1710)

It may seem much more practical to have workers wear ear-plugs or ear-muffs rather than spending millions of dollars to convert machinery so that it meets the minimum noise standards. While in the short run this may be the only alternative, I believe industry must begin to place emphasis on designing machinery which will be much quieter. I really do not believe industry will take this initiative until it is forced to do so. Corporations have always argued against pollution controls—and let us make no mistake that noise is a form of pollution—on the ground that such controls were economically not feasible. However, environmental studies have generally shown that without such controls the cost will be much higher. In an article by George Clack entitled "The Noise Control Controversy" he refers to a recent long-range study which shows the same is true for noise controls. He said:

Dr. Nicholas Ashford, from the center for policy alternatives at MIT, analysed the costs and benefits of compliance over various periods of time for both 90 decibels and 85 decibels limits. By placing a dollar value on the benefits of less worker's compensation, absenteeism, and mental annoyance, he discovered that after 40 years an 85 decibels limit would actually be cheaper than a 90 decibels limit.

In conclusion, I hope hon. members will see fit to send Bill C-247 to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration for further study or, at the very least, the subject matter of this bill. If we fail to take some action on this matter, we may very well be condemning an untold number of workers to partial or complete deafness.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) on the introduction of this bill which, if passed, would be entitled "An act respecting noise in factories". The hon. member has made a good case for a proposition which we all support, namely, that in too many places there is too much noise pollution. One might say that at times it is not only in work places. I have seen places of entertainment and I have dropped in on parties which have taken place on this hill around the middle of December where I am sure the noise level was much higher than 85 decibels. There may be times during the question period in the House of Commons when the level gets fairly high as well.

[Mr. Robinson.]

At any rate, to be serious, I think the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore has done a service in bringing this subject before the House and I hope the House will be willing in this private members' hour to agree to this bill and send it to the standing committee. I think it is appropriate that it should go to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration because it does relate to noise in work places.

If I have some misgivings about the bill, they relate to the narrowness of its application and to the lack of any provisions for its enforcement. I remind the House that we already have in the Canada Labour Code a part which deals with safety. Back in earlier days we had two or three separate federal labour codes and one of them dealt entirely with safety. That particular act has now been incorporated into the Canada Labour Code as a whole and it lays down conditions with respect to the atmosphere, temperature, noise and any conditions which affect the health of our workers. I can say from some experience that when that legislation was first brought before this House a number of years ago we were urged to get it through in a hurry because the Department of Labour wanted to get moving on it, and despite that, these many years later there are still factories in this country where there are health hazards of various kinds because the Department of Labour has found it difficult to enforce the provisions of that act.

But this particular bill which is now before us does not provide for any enforcement provisions at all. It is limited in that it refers only to those factories which get federal government contracts, and I think we should go much further. That is not to be taken as a stand against the bill. I think the idea in it is a commendable one and I want to see the bill go to committee. However, I hope that in committee we might find ways of incorporating this into the Canada Labour Code so that the attempt to avoid noise pollution will be made not just in those factories which get government contracts but in all work places which come under federal labour jurisdiction.

I was critical a few moments ago with respect to the tardiness of the Department of Labour in putting into effect the provisions regarding safety which are in the Canada Labour Code. On the other hand, I know that genuine efforts have been made by the federal Department of Labour in co-operation with the various provincial departments of labour to get safety accepted and practised in all work places. I have the feeling that this little bill, standing by itself with no provisions for enforcement, will not do the job. What we need to do is put into the Canada Labour Code itself these provisions regarding 85 decibels over an eight-hour period, being all workers should be asked to experience, and I hope that if we could get it into the labour code with provisions for enforcement, the excellent proposals of the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore could be implemented.

So I commend my hon. friend across the way for bringing in another useful bill. He will be running up something of a record if he gets this bill through today. He got one through a short while ago. All power to him. We on this side of the House do not have that experience very often. However, it is high time we did something about noise pollution in Canada in all kinds of places. Because this is a small beginning in that direction, we are glad to give our support to Bill C-247.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the preceding two speakers and to say in a few words how this bill relates to the federal Department of the Environment. Under the Government Organization Act, 1970, the Minister of the Environment is charged with the responsibility to initiate, recommend and undertake programs and co-ordinate programs of the government of Canada which are designed to promote the establishment or adoption of objectives or standards relating to environmental quality, or to control pollution and promote and encourage the institution of practices and conduct leading to better protection and enhancement of environmental quality.

Consistent with this mandate, between November, 1972, and January, 1973, departmental staff conducted a series of bilateral meetings with all provinces on the subject of environmental noise control. These meetings led to arrangement of a conference of federal and provincial officials in Ottawa on May 1, 2 and 3 of 1973. With the exception of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, all the provinces were represented. At the federal, level, the Department of the Environment, the Ministry of Transport, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Privy Council Office were represented. The provincial representatives were unanimous in requesting the permanent establishment of a federal-provincial committee on noise to act as a forum for the exchange of technical and other information on noise and to assist in the development of proposals to improve the collective capability to manage noise problems in Canada.

At the meeting of federal and provincial ministers of the environment on May 8 and 9, 1973, several provincial ministers strongly endorsed the formalization of the federal-provincial committee on noise. Formal appointments to the committee were made during the summer of 1973 and the first meeting was convened in April, 1974. Two technical subcommittees have been formed, one dealing with general aspects of community noise and the other with specific noise sources.

We consider such federal-provincial interaction to be essential in developing an effective and nationally integrated approach to noise control, particularly since we are dealing in an area of mixed or overlapping jurisdiction. We believe that our program proposal provides for an effective approach to promoting and stimulating efforts in this area and in bringing together the various agencies, both federal and provincial, having responsibility and authority to effect the desired control measures.

Of course, Environment Canada's primary interest in the noise control field is directed to what may be termed "environmental noise". Environmental noise may be considered as noise which may be perceived over a relatively wide area and is harmful or disturbing to individuals or to local ecosystems. Bill C-247, on the other hand, appears to be directed to the control of "occupational noise". Environment Canada's interest, then, is somewhat peripheral, recognizing that occupational health and safety are a more direct responsibility of the departments of labour and national health and welfare and that provincial jurisdiction is also involved. However, it must also be recognized that reduced noise exposure levels in the work place may in some instances also result in reductions in noise in the environment surrounding a particular industrial activity.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on, but I shall not, to describe many other activities of the Department of the Environment and the requirements and procedures that have to be followed and that are established relative to noise pollution specifically. I could talk about the environmental protection agency and all that, but I shall conclude my remarks simply in an effort to accommodate the hon. gentleman who introduced this bill because I am in perfect agreement with the general thrust of the bill itself. Therefore, I shall not prolong the debate. I will simply say that it should be noted that much of the legislative jurisdiction over occupational noise rests with the provinces. That is going to be a problem.

Bill C-247 proposes limits for noise in industrial establishments working on government contracts. Noise control of the type considered could be introduced through requirements written into the contracts rather than through a new federal act. It is specified in clause 3 of the bill that subject to section 4, noise levels shall not exceed 85 decibels. There are various types of decibel representation of sound and the type of decibel should be clearly indicated in a noise specification of this type. Also, the effects of noise depend, among other things, on the duration of exposure to the noise. A proposed noise limit such as this one should indicate the duration of the noise exposure, as is done, for instance, in the Canada noise control regulations of the Canada Labour Code. It may have been intended that the decibels in clause 3 of the bill be A-weighted. A short exposure to 85 A-weighted decibels of noise would not have deleterious effects on human beings, and in fact such short exposures often occur in harmless occupational and non-occupational situations.

Officials of the Department of the Environment will continue to work toward the implementation of an effective national program in environmental noise control, and will work in close co-operation with officials of the Department of Labour and the Department of National Health and Welfare in overlapping areas of interest related to occupational noise and to the direct and indirect effects of noise exposure on human health.

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say on Bill C-247 introduced by our colleague for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), an Act respecting noise in factories.

I want to mention that there is already a regulation known as SOR 71-584 of the Canada Labour Code on noise control. That regulation relates to noise control and hearing conservation in federal works, undertakings and businesses. Of course, it would be interesting if that regulation were extended and enforced also in all provinces so this problem of outmost importance could be solved.

The schedule refers to the sound level in decibels and the maximum time of exposure. Well, the bill introduced by our colleague is very interesting of course, but perhaps not as complete as it could be, as one of the hon. members who spoke before me suggested. It is for that reason that we agree to have it sent to the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration so it can be considered more in depth and its full scope examined. In this way, we could see whether it would be possible after hearing witnesses on the subject to prepare a report allowing us to give this bill a new orientation and make it more complete.

Therefore, I think that all parties agreed to send the bill to the standing committee. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call it six o'clock.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is as follows: Mr. Robinson moved:

That Bill C-247, an act respecting noise in factories, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order. It should go to the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct; it is the committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration that is the recommendation with regard to the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Have we unanimous consent for the change?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The motion is that Bill C-247, an act respecting noise in factories, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before five o'clock I had referred to the very obvious difference of opinion between the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on the one hand, who is critical of the Anti-Inflation Board because it exercised its judgment, to quote his phrase, in a highly discretionary way with little consistency—those are his words—with respect to the historical relationship of certain of the collective bargaining units that had come before its attention, and the viewpoint expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) earlier today not because the Board had not exceeded the guidelines, but had not exceeded them by enough. They felt the Anti-Inflation Board had not gone far enough beyond the guidelines.

I think the answer was given by himself, although he obviously did not understand it, to the hon. member for Vancouver South in the very question he asked, in which he said, "But what if you are not to allow it to Thompson, are you not going to allow it to Snow Lake, Lynn Lake and a number of other mining communities in northern Manitoba?" That is the exact point. If one has to repeat it again and again throughout the work force, where is the restraint? Where are we going to have restraint on incomes in the work force? If you have a continual pyramiding of labour costs in our community, let us not kid ourselves, people will have to pay for it and it will add to the level of inflation in Canada.

His question involved another contradiction. Again the hon. member for Vancouver South obviously did not understand it. He said he was concerned about the work force leaving Thompson and going somewhere else. Where else—Snow Lake, Lynn Lake, or the other communities? If all those communities are restrained in the same way, to what avail is it to leave one for the other? That is the exact point of applying a general system of this kind to restrain incomes throughout the community.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe made some reference to the American anti-inflation program. He has come back from there and apparently is an expert on this question. I think it is fair to point out to him that that program was in effect for nearly three years, August 1971 to April 1974. It included a whole range of remedies, including not one but two freezes, and various kinds of selective controls in that period of time. Therefore there is obviously no single answer involved in how to bring about an effective mandatory controls program of this kind except to point out that, whatever one may say about the American experience, it lasted generally as long as the period of time contemplated under this particular program.

The hon. member made some reference to the fact that there are 100,000 firms now covered by the provisions of the controls. Perhaps he was being a little disingenuous in that. He referred to the fact that the vast majority of firms had been added as a result of the judgments of the Anti-Inflation Board with regard to association bargaining situations, the situation where a group of employers and firms are associated to bargain as a group with a group of employees, with a collective bargaining representative on their side.

The important fact to bear in mind is that those involved in this association bargaining process, firms, and in many cases the employees themselves, wanted the anti-inflation program to be extended to them as well so that it would not break up what in their viewpoint had been regarded as an advantageous way of dealing with labour relations. Therefore when the hon. member refers to 100,000 firms, he is obviously exaggerating. To be more honest, he should refer to about 143 associations which bargain collectively with their employees for the purpose of determining their wage levels.

The final point he made was with regard to his question during the Question Period about charitable donations. As I pointed out at that time, the government has indicated a certain level of restricted expenses so as to get around the situation where a firm could decide to increase its prices, with the consequent cost which would have to be borne by the consumer, and at the same time escape the profit restrictions of the anti-inflation program for the years of the application of the program by increasing its expenses a certain amount. This could be done, for example, by advertising promotion, expenditure on research and development, charitable donations, and action in a number of other areas. Clearly, restraint provisions inherent in the profit controls under the anti-inflation program would not be effective in holding prices down if firms could increase their prices and escape the profit control by that kind of practice. It is for that reason the guidelines provide that the over-all category of these restricted expenses may not be increased in any one year at any greater rate than the increase in the total returns to the firm.

The hon. member laid some store on the argument that it was regrettable that charitable contributions or expenses incurred on research and development might be reduced. Well, I suppose that if a firm were to decide to cut down its charitable contributions and increase its advertising promotion or its expenses on public relations, or if it wanted to increase its expenses on landscaping or decorating, which is another area of restricted expenses, or its expenses in connection with conventions for so-called educational purposes, it could do so. But let it not do so with a high moral tone pretending that the anti-inflation program was curtailing it in that regard. It is the firm's own priorities which determines whether money is put into landscaping, for example, rather than into charitable contributions. Hon. members should bear in mind that if a firm feels constrained to curtail charitable donations because it has to increase expenditures in other areas, this is an indication of the firm's own priorities.

The bill before us will extend the benefits of the appeal provisions to certain people affected by decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board and will provide certain additional legal measures to make the present anti-inflation program more effective. This measure has been outstanding for some time now, during which period the rights of appeal of certain groups have been abridged. I will terminate my remarks at this stage in the hope that we may secure early passage of the legislation in order that those rights might be available to persons affected by the Board's decisions.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate the New Democratic Party's support for the bill before us. I do so at least in part for the reason that we can claim to have had something to do with the origin of the bill in the first place.

The House will recall that about two months ago, as a result of the settlement in the Irving case, we moved a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 26 calling for an emergency debate on precisely this issue, the case of workers in Canada not having any right of appeal at all. Certainly they had no effective right under the existing legislation. An emergency debate was permitted by Mr. Speaker at that time. Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the amendments to the bill which are before us. But before doing so I must say I have never listened in all my life to such a contradictory speech as that presented today by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who used his full 40 minutes castigating the whole anti-inflation program. There was nothing good about it, in his view.

The hon. member listed objections which have arisen because of the lack of efficacy of the price control program; he listed objections based on inequities in terms of the effects on wages and salaries of Canadians from coast to coast; he complained about the effect on the corporate sector. In short, he said nothing good about the whole measure. He then presented an amendment which would have the effect of extending the life of the bill, permitting this measure to remain as part of the law of Canada, for fully another year. I would presume, Mr. Speaker, that only a member of the Conservative party could adopt such a contradictory position on a measure of this nature. He cannot have it both ways. Either the anti-inflation program embodied in the law of Canada at the present time is on balance a good program and acceptable to a party or to a member of the House of Commons and is therefore supportable or, on balance, the program is bad for whatever variety of reasons, in which case a logical mind or logical part would reject it.

I repeat, the spokesman for the Conservative party rose in his seat and spoke for 40 minutes against the bill, then made a proposal which would lead to its maintenance on the law books of Canada for fully another year. If any speech was attempting to have things both ways, then surely the one we heard from the hon. member was doing so. I hear an hon. member to my right protesting; he is shaking his head and presumably he agrees with the hon. member for York-Simcoe. He asks, "why not have it for a year?" I say to him that if a kick in the head is bad twice, it is no reason for him to accept being kicked in the head once. The Conservative member again insists that it is good to have one kick in the head. Well, that may be true for the Conservative Party of Canada, Mr. Speaker, but it is not true for the New Democratic Party. We said when this measure was first announced last Thanksgiving, that it was bad in principle. We said so when the bill was introduced shortly afterward, and we say so again tonight. What is bad for two, three or four years is, for us, equally bad for one year. You cannot have it both ways.

Because I intend to move a sub-amendment which I hope will be consistent with what I have to say, and one which goes to the principle of the legislation which is embodied in the proposal put before us by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, I want to say something very briefly about the existing legislation and its effects on the people of Canada.

It is, I think, worth noting, that the Gallup poll seeking the opinion of the people of Canada on this legislation recently revealed the conclusion that 65 per cent of Canadians think the program is unfair in terms of wages and salaries. Second, 67 per cent of Canadians think the program is unfair in terms of its effect on prices in Canada. This may well have been the reason why the hon. member for York-Simcoe made the kind of speech he did. He is now catching up to the people of Canada. They are feeling its effects. If they were here tonight they would obviously be voting against it. Certainly they would not commit the absurdity of speaking for 40 minutes against a measure and then, in effect, voting for its continuance.

The people of Canada now realize the program is unfair in its impact on wages and salaries. The rulings of the board in this area have been remarkable for their inconsistency. One has only to name a few categories of workers in highly disparate occupations and the facts speak out to support my statements. We think of the librarians in Toronto, and of the miners in Thompson. Just in the last few days we have been talking about the miners. The minister a few minutes ago scoffed at the suggestion that the workers in Thompson might leave Thompson because of the grossly unfair wage settlement which was imposed by the Board. The Minister of Finance asked, "Where are are they going to go?" He listed a whole number of places to which they might move and implied they weren't going anywhere.

Just for the minister's information, in case he is not aware of them, here are some figures with respect to the rate of labour mobility in Thompson, Manitoba, in the very company affected by the decision. In 1970 that company had a 124 per cent turnover in its labour force, in 1971 it was 112 per cent, in 1972 it was 101 per cent, in 1973 it was 84 per cent, in 1974 it was 130 per cent, and in 1975 it was 118 per cent. These figures are significant. They illustrate that Thompson is an isolated community, one to which most working people do not readily go. One of the major reasons for considering a move to that difficult northern environment is that at least the wage or salary offered will afford some kind of compensation for such a move.

I also want to put on the record the comparison with other workers in the same industry who live in Sudbury, Ontario. These workers are getting a higher rate of pay. It is with this group of workers that the Thompson workers should have been compared for historical reasons, and the board should have reached the same settlement and given them the same rate of pay. There is not the same isolation problem in Sudbury. Workers in that community in 1975 had a labour turnover of only 6.7 per cent. Compare that with the turnover in Thompson, Manitoba, for the same year of 118 per cent. Surely even the Minister of Finance can see the significance of these two different sets of figures. In the one case it is unpleasant and difficult to work in terms of accessibility to other populations living in reasonable climatic conditions; in the other case such problems do not exist.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if that AIB had an ounce of intelligence in terms of dealing equitably with this group of workers, it would have assured that in its decision of recent days the Thompson workers in Manitoba would have been given an increase fully commensurate with and equal to the remuneration received by their fellow workers in Sudbury who are doing the same kind of job. That is only one glaring and unfortunate illustration of the kind of inequitable decisions we have been getting from the Anti-Inflation Board.

Another vivid example is a decision announced the same day affecting the uranium workers in the Elliott Lake region of Ontario. These workers are susceptible to cancer and silicosis to a degree way out of proportion to almost every other category of worker in Canada. There is every reason to believe, now that it is common knowledge among the people of Canada, as it should have been a long time ago, that the pension plan that was negotiated by the steelworkers union in Elliot Lake on behalf of its workers, as part of the package considered by the AIB, was an essential feature so far as the work force was concerned. This was a provision for early retirement for the workers in the uranium industry. To put it bluntly, Mr. Speaker, early retirement is essential to many of these workers if they are to avoid getting cancer or silicosis.

Be that as it may, in making its ruling on the package settlement for the workers in the uranium industry the Anti-Inflation Board did not consider this fact, even though it knew full well that in considering financial benefits one includes pension plans as well as hourly pay rates. If the board gives a much lower settlement than is fair and equitable, inevitably it will mean that the pension plan will be affected and that workers in those circumstances will suffer a deterioration in their health, resulting—and I say this bluntly—in premature death for a number of them. This illustrates how serious is the Anti-Inflation Board's decision, yet the government had done nothing about it, saying benignly that it will leave it to the board and hope for the best.

I am not going to take the time to go over the whole range of decisions that have been made in past months; I cite here but two glaring and unfortunate examples. The general point that I want to make is that at the outset of this program, in view of the way it is set up and in view of the legislative provisions, the New Democratic Party said that the people who would be most seriously and adversely affected by it would be the working Canadians, the ordinary people on wages and salaries, the majority of whom are not even members of a trade union, like the steelworkers who at least are able to go to bat and fight against the board, as in the case of the unfair decisions affecting the workers in Thompson and Elliot Lake. Most ordinary Canadians do not even have a union to do this kind of work for them.

There are now over 5,000 decisions which have to be made by the board. In the meantime hundreds of thousands of workers across Canada are waiting for a decision to see how their income and livelihood will be affected. A more monstrous bureaucracy one can hardly imagine, Mr. Speaker.

What about prices? The whole thrust of the program was geared toward bringing down prices in Canada, but what is the record after the legislation has been on the law books of Canada for six months? The fact is that the very prices the board was set up to control or bring down have gone up. Discounting the effect of food prices from the recent cost of living figures which were published in the past two weeks, which you must, Mr. Speaker, because the program does not control prices of food at the farm gate, you will discover that the very items the board was set up to control have led at this point in our history to a greater increase in the rate of inflation than the increase last year when we had no such program. Could a more damning comment than that be made about the efficacy of this program? The fact is that the very items this program was set up to control, those that affect the cost of living, are now increasing at a more rapid rate than they were in 1975.

The only prices ordered rolled back in the more than six months of existence of the board have been the price of beer sold by one brewer in the province of Quebec, and secondly—and this one almost brought tears to my eyes—Imperial Oil, that poor petroleum corporation, was not allowed to increase the price of a gallon of gasoline recently by 1½ cents but was only permitted an increase of one cent a gallon by the board. That was really touching.

The reality of the situation is that the government is committed in principle to allowing this same petroleum corporation, Esso, and all the others, to increase the price of oil at the wellhead up to the world price level. Within the next two weeks there will be an announcement by the government that oil companies in Canada will be able to increase their prices by $1.50 to $2 a barrel, I predict, and this increase will be passed on to the consumer. As a result poor old Esso, which got an increase of only one cent of a gallon in the recent decision of the AIB, will be permitted within a couple of weeks to increase more than a hundred fold the price of oil which every consumer will pay for, whether he pays for it by driving his car, heating his home, or by buying products made by industries that are dependent upon oil for their energy.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, in more than six months of existence only two price rollbacks have been ordered by the AIB. One rollback was in the price of beer in the province of Quebec, and the second was a half cent reduction in the increase in the price of oil by the Esso Corporation.

I noted with interest, that Mr. Pepin, the Chairman of the AIB, recently said that we could expect an escalation in prices during the latter half of 1976. The reason, he said, is that the corporations will by that time understand the law and its complexities much better than they do now. Is that not again moving? They are going to come to a better understanding of the law of Canada during the next few months, and therefore they will be more able to increase prices, and more able in many if not all cases to gouge the people of Canada because their lawyers and accountants will have a more thorough grasp of the legislation that is on the books! The forecast then is that the situation is going to get worse and not better in terms of prices for Canadians.

I have simply reiterated our opposition to the legislation. It was unfair and unworkable when it was brought forward in the fall. It has turned out to be unfair and unworkable ever since it has been on the books. It is something the Canadian population, in terms of the most recent Gallup poll, has seen to be unfair and unworkable. It is not something we in this party can put up with any longer. Therefore I should like to move an amendment to the motion we are debating, as follows:

That Motion No. 1 be amended in line 1 of the proposed new subclause (2) by changing "1977" to "1976" and by deleting all the words thereafter.

This amendment is seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Just before I sit down let me say I have no hope at all of the government ever changing its mind. A Liberal never does that unless he is going to lose a vote over something. I do appeal to the Conservative party for once in its history to show consistency. I urge in particular the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) to re-read his speech and follow the logical conclusion. If he reads his speech and reaches the logical conclusion he will end up favouring this amendment, because if it passes it would mean at the end of this week, symbolically on May Day, this unfair and unworkable law presently with us in Canada would be no longer in existence.

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in support of the motions but down by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) I propose to address my remarks to the manner in which the Anti-Inflation Board has managed to become a bureaucracy of confusion, not only to those whom it attempts to regulate, but also to itself. This unfortunate situation is not surprising to many of us, especially in light of the circumstances surrounding the creation of the board.

In July, 1974, the present government, while allowing the Canadian economy to deteriorate to a position where drastic action was required, won itself an election by grandly denying that an economic problem existed. Leading up to that federal election we had a minority government and Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was forced to go to the polls by the opposition. The major issue was inflation, and the major proposal put forward by the then Leader of the Opposition was a 90-day freeze followed by selective temporary wage and price controls, and coupled with major economic policy initiatives designed to attack the root causes of our economic problems.

The Prime Minister was at his best, however, as he forayed back and forth across the country attacking, belittling, and ridiculing. Again and again he used the same catch words about these controls—hocus-pocus, baloney, and simplistic. He told the voters controls would never work. They failed in the United States and Britain, he said. You cannot control food prices, interest rates, housing costs, energy prices, dividends or the cost of imports. The only controllable area is that of wages, he told the people, and no self-respecting Canadian wants to see that.

As a result of this performance the Prime Minister returned to office with a majority and a mandate to refuse the imposition of controls. A scant 15 months later the Prime Minister came full circle and informed Canadians that his program of wage and price controls was the cure to the country's economic ills, economic ills which the Prime Minister found impossible to continue ignoring.

It was at this stage that the Anti-Inflation Board was created to regulate the economy single-handedly and slay the dragon of inflation. This Anti-Inflation Board was denied the advantage that a 90-day freeze had offered, and it was thrown into the task at hand to the sounds of confrontation from both labour and business as the Prime Minister threatened the nation with imprisonment for failure to comply with his ill-conceived and hastily prepared program. With a birth like that it is a wonder the board has even survived. That birth, again considering the haste with which the program was formulated, has resulted in the growth of a bureaucracy whose standards are double, whose rules are incomprehensible, and whose internal workings are chaotic.

It was said by the Prime Minister that all Canadians would have to tighten their belts and fight inflation together. Unfortunately the Anti-Inflation Board evidently failed to get this message, for it has been allowing far more generous pay increases in the public sector than in private industry.

A Financial Times survey of 104 wage decisions made by the board shows this divergence clearly. The survey showed 69 per cent of workers in the public sector have been allowed increases of 20 per cent or more, while raises for 79 per cent of employees in the private sector have been held to 15 per cent or less. In fact most decisions handed down from Ottawa have been in line with the pace of wage settlements before last October when the board was created.

This situation is particularly true for public sector employees who in several recent cases have won pay increases of 20 per cent or more, even through the guidelines the board is supposed to enforce allow first-year pay raises of little more than 10 per cent. The Times goes on to say that during the whole of 1975 wage settlements averaged 19 per cent for government employees and 14.2 per cent in the private sector. This is the situation the Anti-Inflation Board was brought in to control last October, with the wage ceiling set at a maximum 10 per cent for this year.

[Mr. Balfour.]

An analysis of 104 cases involving 57,000 workers meriting special consideration shows that in the case of first-year wage settlements the board has approved: Firstly, wage increases of 20 per cent or more for 15,000 public servants, most of them employees of Ontario school boards; and, secondly, wage rises of 15 per cent or more for 7,500 private sector workers; and pay hikes in about the same range as last year's settlements, 10 per cent to 15 per cent, for another 27,000 employees in private sector cases. A mere 1,000 private sector workers and only 500 government workers have been held to the government's intended guideline of a 10 per cent salary advance. Although the government is claiming that the board is achieving considerable results, it might pay to look more closely at these results.

Were it not for the drastic drop in food costs there would have been little or no improvement, and the minister and his colleagues would do well to resist the temptation to assume that the battle against inflation is half won. Although food prices at the farm gate are not controlled, the Anti-Inflation Board still claims some of the credit. It says controls on the profits of food processors and supermarkets helped keep prices down. That is possible, but I suggest the key element in the reduction of food costs has been a drastic drop in beef prices at the farm gate because of excess of supply.

I will come to the matter of confusion surrounding the Anti-Inflation Board rules in a moment, but first I think something should be said about the confusing bureaucracy from which these rules emanate.

In October last the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) declared the board's staff would total less than 200. Today the board's staff stands at 600 and appears to be still growing. Board officials maintain that this merely reflects problems of the start-up period and that this figure will in fact drop sometime in the future, but no one knows when. In the interim they insist that the board is not now operating in excess of the 398 man-years it was allowed because some 200 employees are on loan from other departments. That comment is rather lame, however, since the salaries of those borrowed employees must be paid by the Anti-Inflation Board.

So far as accomplishment is concerned, the latest figures show that the board has processed 2,304 of the 6,139 cases submitted to it. The backlog of 3,845 cases is growing at the rate of an additional 150 a week. These figures are for the wage side of the business. On the prices side of things, only 179 of 1,040 compliance forms received have been processed.

What would be amusing, if it weren't so sad, is the fact that the board's present workload and backlog do not yet include the impact of the additional 41,000 companies which the government recently brought under the controls. With figures such as these in mind it would be hoped that the board would present a cohesive and efficient organization to handle the responsibilities which have been so casually imposed on it. This, unfortunately, does not seem to be the case. For example, in the April 26 Financial Times it is reported:

There has . . . been considerable turnover at the most senior administrative levels and some insiders say the organization is far from crisp.

'We're constantly flying by the seat of our pants', says one official. 'Everything is improvisation, which is inevitable because we had to start from scratch with the vaguest of guidelines. But under pressure the decision-making sometimes gets so slap-dash that it's frightening.'

Another official stated, 'The organization is still pretty hectic. People come and go, bringing their own ideas and approaches. That means things still tend to change from day to day.'

As a result of this situation and the increase in the number of the employees of the AIB, the Public Service Commission now is looking to its executive interchange program to find 60 or 70 professional accountants whose employers might be willing to loan them for a year.

As an illustration of the way business feels about the regulations they have been handed, I quote this excerpt from an article in Executive Magazine entitled "Chaos Rules at the Anti-Inflation Board":

Employers already have spent enough time studying the regulations to realize that the rules at best are unclear, and, at worst, are totally incomprehensible. To take just one example, manufacturers are faced with three different rules in figuring out the maximum profit they will be allowed. The problem is in determining the appropriate rule to apply in each part of their business. The regulations provide a process of elimination, based on the extent to which the company can allocate its costs to separate items of production. If you can allocate costs to individual products, then you use one rule. If you can't do this but you can allocate costs to individual classes or lines of products, then you use another rule, and so on. The trouble is that this selection procedure is a concoction of economic theory and bears little relation to normal business practices—the test is not whether a company actually does allocate its costs in the specified ways, but whether it can do so.

And every single manufacturer in Canada meets that requirement—it can allocate its costs to every individual product, even though the method of doing so might be crude or unrealistic. To take the regulations literally, all the other rules of profit calculation would be irrelevant. The next step is to start digging through the Anti-Inflation Board's interpretation bulletins for clarification, on the assumption that the government must have had some reason for including those other two rules. This isn't the place to discuss in detail what the relevant bulletin has to say. But it has the effect of making it almost impossible for a company to use the first rule. At this stage the bemused company abandons the written rules and turns to the Anti-Inflation Board staff for help. The fact that even the accounting and legal experts are having such difficulties in making sense of the regulations should help to identify the most serious and possibly fatal flaw in the entire anti-inflation program. The government forgot that it was not writing a new Income Tax Act. To design its new system, it hired people in the business of either finding or closing loopholes in the tax system—in other words, tax experts from both inside and outside government. These wizards drew on their wealth of experience and concocted the predictable brew: a maze to beat all mazes, a monstrosity guaranteed to remain undeciphered for years after the anti-inflation program goes out of existence.

Of course the Anti-Inflation Board cannot hope to be the complete answer to Canada's economic ills. The government has continually refused to recognize that different monetary and fiscal policies must also be adopted, as well as an improved viewpoint on the part of government itself.

Government is the single greatest contributor to Canada's domestic inflation. Rather than control its own skyrocketing spending and growth patterns, it continues to drain money away from the investor and the saver—private and corporate—to pay for its own extravagance. I do not intend to go into this aspect of the problem in any detail, Mr. Speaker, but I think that certain brief points must be made.

Canada is a capital intensive country. That means that the creation of more jobs and expanded business relies heavily on the infusion of new capital in the expansion of existing commercial facilities and the creation of new ones. If this money, through severe corporate and private income tax policies, is kept from being re-invested, then Canada's inflation and unemployment problems can in the long run be expected to become worse.

In conclusion I think it must be recognized that government, especially this government, has not even attempted to attack the root causes of inflation. An over-supply of money, badly conceived tax laws, and government growth are all matters that the government has refused to act upon. The Anti-Inflation Board, with all of its own inadequacies, cannot hope and should not be expected to solve the problem. At the same time the Anti-Inflation Board is the only possible means by which Canada can establish a more sensible framework for wage and price decision making. It must set targets for behaviour that can be used as a replacement for the discipline and mutual trust that only spring from the adversary system. In other words, the board is not in itself a cure for inflation. It is simply a way of cooling expectations and a means of buying time until some of the fundamental causes of inflation can be corrected.

The government has chosen to introduce a system of complex controls and to impose them for the relatively long period of three years. Both their complexity and duration are unnecessary, but the key problem facing the government is to make the program work. The Anti-Inflation Board will have to overcome some serious handicaps. It was introduced hurriedly and without a temporary freeze on prices and incomes. The result was that neither the government nor the board had the opportunity to develop a philosophical and economical framework for what it must do.

The board's first decisions have created confusion about the way in which historical wage relationships will be allowed to influence wage increases. In short, the board has failed to establish its own credibility by making decisions that are perceived as being fair and consistent. The challenge to the board must be to apply the guidelines in a way that maintains the spirit of equity. The use of mandatory wage and price controls is a new experience for Canada and we must resist the tendency to expect the controls to solve the inflation problem.

The final cure for inflation will ultimately lie in the way the government conducts its stabilization policies—monetary policy, energy policy and fiscal policy. It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I urge the House to consider favourably the amendments presented by the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the amendments presented by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). This gives us a chance to discuss the Anti-Inflation Board and its activities so far. One very sobering result that has come to light is the obviously great difficulty the Anti-Inflation Board has in attempting to monitor wage rollbacks in various parts of the country and also to establish historical wage rates in various parts of the country. Of course in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs all things were honey and roses with the AIB officials, but certainly potential troubles loom high on the horizon.

● (2050)

The staff of AIB has already been tripled and one meets people working for AIB in the most unexpected places. There is a large backlog of unresolved cases, and the ad hoc nature of the whole operation results in increased difficulties because no one knows where the Board is going. This has a damaging effect on all the decisions being made on what individuals and companies, employees and employers, should do to meet AIB regulations. Indeed my own observation is that it is likely that many if not most professionals will have to curtail their workload this year in order to stay within the guidelines or at least not get into trouble with the Board by producing too much.

Mr. Benjamin: No more house calls.

Mr. Ritchie: That is right, no more house calls in the middle of the night.

Mr. Benjamin: You don't make them anyway.

Mr. Ritchie: There has been some improvement in the cost of living index, but as has been stated before this is only evident in the price of food, and if there were no drastic drop in the food component of the cost of living index there would have been little or no improvement in the index. One of the key elements, even in food costs, has been the drastic drop of beef prices at the farm gate. This has come about only because the beef industry is now in a state of liquidation and the herds in North America are being scaled down to a level consistent with the market, which has put many beef producers out of business. Most experts in the cattle industry feel that the price of beef should be nearly 50 per cent higher to make it once more profitable. Therefore in the long run so far as beef is concerned the present drop in the price is unlikely to remain down for many months.

Public acceptance of AIB actions has by no means been unanimous. Obviously unionized labour, as has been well documented, has taken an antagonistic view and has withdrawn from the Canada Relations Council, the body on which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) put so much emphasis as a means of preventing disruptive strikes.

Professionals are also finding it difficult to comply with the regulations, and while there will be no organized confrontation with the government there is no doubt that their productivity will fall to a certain extent. Although we may decry what organized labour is doing, we have to realize that it represents a very important segment of our community, a segment which is vital to our national economy. They represent the mining and transportation industries, to name but a few, and they are necessary to produce the goods that Canada needs to export to preserve its standard of living. There seems to be no doubt that AIB regulations will dampen the productivity of many Canadians, particularly in the vital goods segments of our economy.

It has been increasingly recognized that there is not much point in curtailing wages and prices if it is going to result in decreased productivity in our industrial and export segment. People in the Economic Council of Canada who have studied the Canadian labour market have found significant indications of where the increases in wages have concentrated in our economy. Between 1961 and 1974 substantial modernization and productivity gains occurred in agriculture, forestry, and mining. Real plant and equipment per person employed increased by over 80 per cent in all three industries, compared with 30 per cent in manufacturing and less than 5 per cent in the wholesale and retail trades. This process involved the substitution of machines for manpower. As a result, by 1974 average hourly earnings in forestry and mining were 180 per cent and 150 per cent higher respectively than in 1961.

The construction industry recorded equally substantial wage gains. By contrast, money wage gains in the services sector by 1974 amounted to less that 120 per cent of the 1961 level. This indicates that the supply of blue-collar workers and unskilled labour to the logging camps, mines and construction sites from rural towns and farms or from abroad has shrunk measurably. In 1974, for example, weekly earnings among service workers averaged roughly 50 per cent of the earnings in construction, compared with 67 per cent in 1961. This is an important thing to consider when dealing with the Anti-Inflation Board's decisions which seem to be concentrated on rolling back wage increases in the productive goods section of our economy.

Since 1974 we have seen the loss of exports of highly manufactured goods chiefly because of the Canada-U.S. auto pact deficit and the end of the defence production sharing agreement. Export flows are now dominated by food and industrial materials. Mr. George Post, vice-chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, has said that much of the growth of exports has involved raw materials, or products in which raw materials were a significant part of the total value.

Canada also seems to be rushing headlong into the establishment of the so called post industrial society, with a majority of its work force employed in the services sector and a diminishing minority of its workers in the goods producing sector. This aspect of the change in our economy seems to be evident in the problems the AIB is having. It has been especially counterproductive in its decisions concerning wage settlements affecting the goods producing segment of our economy, such as in the now famous Irving case where the wages of workers in the pulp and paper industry were rolled back considerably. It seems to be an over-reaction by the board and, whatever its outcome, it can only damage an already hard pressed industry.

Also there has been a rollback in the wage increase by Denison and Rio Algom. The increase exceeded the guidelines but it was in line with earlier settlements reached by International Nickel and by Falconbridge. With the rollback order some workers have already began to switch to INCO and Falconbridge where they can earn $2,000 more if the rollback remains effective. This is what happened to the Wartime Prices and Incomes Board, that is, workers moved laterally in order to increase their income. Even if the AIB is supposed to observe historical wage relationships, apparently it does not recognize the importance to Denison and Rio Algom of paying competitive wages. In fact it seems obvious that AIB will have to have a much greater knowledge about a whole lot of things of which it is seemingly unaware.

A further increase in AIB's personnel does not seem to be the answer. It is too much to expect that officials, given the complexities of today's business activity, can rule on the many problems with any degree of consistency or accuracy. In effect the AIB, through its government appointed administrators, is substituting for the judgments made in market place. Certainly market place judgments may not always be perfect, but they are still better than judgments made away from the market place by civil servants and by people unaware of all the circumstances of the case.

Consider the case of the Thompson mines at present. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) asked where they would go. I can tell him that they are already going to Fort McMurray. Some workers have gone to Sudbury, and many are leaving the mines to return to farming. The action of the AIB in instituting the rollback of the settlement can only cause great consternation. Even Premier Schreyer, who has not seen the light as his federal leader would want him to do, and who is an ardent supporter of controls by government, has suggested that the AIB erred. Telegrams to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the possibility of a massive group of workers descending on Ottawa to present their case indicate the workers' dismay at this ruling by AIB.

The Thompson complex contributes around 5 per cent of the total economic activity in the province of Manitoba. If the workings of this complex are seriously compromised, it can only be described as disastrous for the economy of Manitoba and the economy of Canada in the long run. The AIB again failed to take into account the historical relationship of INCO of Manitoba with Sudbury, and already INCO of Manitoba is losing some of its workers to INCO in Sudbury.

One of the most disturbing features of the AIB actions has been its tendencies to exert its powers to control wages in that segment of our economy which produces the goods to fuel the progress of our economy, particularly exports.

In an article in the Financial Times of Canada of April 26 statistics were produced to show that the AIB has been far more generous in increases for the public sector than in the private sector. They made a survey of 104 wage decisions reached by the board. It indicates that 69 per cent of public sector workers had been allowed increases of 20 per cent or more, while raises for 79 per cent of employees in the private sector have been held to 15 per cent or more.

Furthermore, the survey raises the question of whether the board is able to influence wage settlements as the awards handed down from Ottawa have been in line with the pace of wage settlements before last October when the board was created. A notable example which I mentioned previously was pointed out. The wage contract of Denmison Mines was cut from 16.8 per cent to 10.9 per cent, although the historical relationship with other workers was acknowledged and the firms were known to hold and contract skilled employees. On the same day the board announced an approval of a 16 per cent salary raise for employees of the Dryden board of education. Indeed it is becoming increasingly doubtful whether the board is in any way reducing inflation. In fact, it may be making it more likely.

When the government has aimed for an inflationary target of 8 per cent, the board has allowed raises in excess of 10 per cent, and in over half the cases raises of over 15 per cent. The board seems to be rolling back wages in the goods producing sector, upon which we rely, in favour of the service sector. It is felt generally at the present time that our goods producing sector is not functioning as well as it should.

I should like to speak for a moment about the problems of professionals. No matter what way the attempt is made to control professionals, it seems to me that it will be at best a very indiscriminate operation. Most professionals will obey the AIB guidelines, but they will obey them by reducing the amount of productivity they could attain. It is better to take a month off than run the risk of having not only the results of all the extra effort confiscated, but to find that there is a severe penalty for that extra productivity. Obviously in many instances professionals will have increased their incomes by more than $2,400, and this would include those who have stayed rigidly within the guidelines or who work in schedules set by the provincial governments.

Some of the problems professionals will run into are becoming obvious. Let us consider the example of a professional in my province of Manitoba. The AIB ruled that professionals who practise under the various government schemes and who, for example, are not opted out physicians, will come under the safe haven rule, and they will have minimum compliance regulations with perhaps a nominal reporting record. However, for those physicians who may have opted out of the provincial scheme although there may not be any greater charge than the provincial paying agency is making, the AIB has indicated that it intends to throw the book at them and pursue them energetically in order to make sure that they do not overstep the income guidelines. In doing this the board is following the advice of the government of Manitoba which does not like opted out physicians and other like professionals. I think that is an indication that those who are in practice outside, or those who are on their own, will fare much worse than those who have remained within the government fold.

Much depends on the forms which will be issued to professionals. Almost certainly they will be so complicated that the AIB officials will be able to convict or find a professional guilty under almost any circumstance. By and large, professionals will be at a considerable disadvantage because they will not be able to afford the large battery of accountants and legal advisors which large concerns are able to have at their command. To a large extent the individual professional will be controlled by the corresponding officials in the AIB who will, in many cases, have to make a fairly arbitrary decision because it seems obvious that it would be almost impossible to break down the income and arrive at a fair assessment. I would not blame the offical for this, but this is just the nature of the problem.

The limit of $2,400 may seem to be fair and equitable because professionals on the whole do make good incomes, but on closer examination it will probably be counter productive. In the province of Manitoba, which has the highest income tax in Canada, an individual making over $28,000 per year retains only 37 per cent of his extra income, so that out of a $2,400 increase he will, in effect, retain a little over $900. If he had an income gross before tax of $30,000 with a net take home pay of perhaps $16,000, with only a $900 per year increase he has lost considerably in his actual income. There certainly would be no point in his continuing to increase his productivity, and he would have to organize himself so that his income would fall below the $2,400 increase, or at least not above it. The balance of his efforts would be directed into other fields such as more holidays, more hobby work, more time spent for his own personal enjoyment. This might be a good thing for the individual concerned, but I doubt if it is very valuable for the economy of the country.

I believe this legislation will be a disaster when the final assessment is made. It certainly seems to discourage productivity, and we have a problem of Canadians investing outside Canada. There has been a trend in the last few years toward greater investment outside Canada by Canadians, particularly in the United States. I support very strongly the idea that this legislation should be reviewed in 18 months, with the possibility that it be terminated, Certainly 18 months is long enough for this legislation to be in effect before it is reassessed.

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to participate in the debate on the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I sat in this House and listened to the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) with great interest. He is a man of many words, and I leave it to the Canadian people to determine whether he ever says anything. However, he made reference to the inconsistency, or the alleged inconsistency, of the position taken by the hon. member for York-Simcoe vis-à-vis the amendment.

Mr. Broadbent: You were right the first time.

Mr. Whiteway: His reasoning is as follows: how could the hon. member for York-Simcoe, representing our party, stand in his place in this House and debate for 40 minutes against the program and then bring in an amendment which in effect allows it to live for a year?

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Benjamin: Explain it.

Mr. Whiteway: To the Leader of the New Democratic Party that is an inconsistent position. Well, that is the ostrich approach. The fact is that we have the program, and in reality Bill C-89 will pass in this House in the same way Bill C-73 passed because of the Liberal majority.

In his speech the Leader of the New Democratic Party made reference to kicks in the head and that we do not want any kicks in the head, but we will take one if we must. That is the point. We have the program. We have to take our kicks because of the government, not because of our decision, so it is better to restrict the kicks in the head than to leave it open-ended.

• (2110)

I hear a friend on the government benches say we are bickering among ourselves. Mr. Speaker, the positions taken by the New Democratic Party from 1972 until the present time seem to affect the decisions of the government more than the positions taken by my party. The government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) ought not to make bad friends with the New Democrats; they never know when they may need them again.

Mr. Paproski: They will get in bed together again.

Mr. Whiteway: When considering Bill C-89 I cannot help but think that the Minister of Finance is similar to old Christopher Columbus. He set out to explore new worlds and new concepts, plotting a new course. I would say the Minister of Finance is our Christopher Columbus, plotting a new course for Canada. When old Chris set out he did not know where he was going, and when he got back he did not know where he had been—and he did it all on the people's money!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: I would ask the Minister of Finance to take a sober second look—perhaps a sober first look would be more accurate.

Mr. Paproski: Macdonald for Senator.

Mr. Whiteway: I cannot imagine any man in the position of the Minister of Finance, or anyone on the Treasury benches, setting out upon a program without taking stock. I realize the minister had problems back last October when he was in a kafuffle and did not know where he was going or what form the program would take. They hustled it through the House and through committee. Had they at least taken stock at committee stage last fall and listened to some of the suggestions of members of the official opposition we would not be back in the House tonight debating Bill C-89.

I ask the minister, instead of hustling this bill through tonight, instead of hustling the amendment through, would he not now stop and take stock? I can assure him that the affairs of this nation are of interest to the opposition parties as well as to the government. We will help. We will give the kind of concrete and sensible suggestions and amendments that will make the program work.

When we pause to take stock of where we are today we find there has been no progress, no improvement in economic conditions in Canada. I shall not speak on the effects on labour as I think the position of labour and the rough justice meted out to it have been well expounded already.

So far there have been only three rulings by the Anti-Inflation Board in regard to prices. How can we talk about the success, or the appearance of success of the program when in fact there have only been three rulings? The Leader of the New Democratic party pointed them out—indeed I believe he only pointed out two, Esso and beer. Being a man of abstinence and not consuming alcoholic beverages, that latter one does not concern me. We would have to say, however, that there has not been any progress so far as restraining prices is concerned.

In the election back in the spring of 1974 the prices and incomes policy that this party suggested was to be for only 18 months and was to begin with a 90 day freeze, a period that would allow the government to put into place a program to fight inflation. I think it is agreed by most economists and most members of this House that the government's price and wage control program, or anti-inflation program, does not in itself have any effect on the causes of inflation. But the causes themselves must be attacked, Mr. Speaker. In taking stock surely the minister must have in mind programs that would get to the root causes of inflation.

The whole area of money supply has been discussed in this House previously. As a concrete suggestion I urge the minister to take some time to consider the position of Milton Friedman who suggests that inflation is always a special and monetary phenomenon. He stresses the impact of an abnormally high growth in the money supply and translates that into the effect on falling trade and the surplus of Canadian funds outside Canada, particularly in a time when there is an unfavourable balance of trade. We are facing a trade deficit of around $5 billion this year. Milton Friedman has a great deal more to say about this matter and I wish the minister would take heed of it.

I believe we need a responsible and realistic policy on money supply. I am not advocating zero growth in money supply, Mr. Speaker. I realize that a growth of 7 per cent or 8 per cent is necessary, and I realize what follows a tight money supply but surely the minister understands what follows if you have an accelerated or abnormally high rate growth of money supply such as we are having now, of 16 per cent or 18 per cent.

If we are to get at the roots of inflation I should think the minister would want to take stock of his fiscal policy. I know that speeches are often made in this Chamber that are frankly political in nature. On this side of the House at least we do not participate in that kind of political partisanship, but nevertheless it sometimes appears in the House. Notwithstanding that, it seems to me that a fiscal policy ought to be at least consistent with the kind of restraint that the government expects from the Canadian people.

I think it is wrong that the government expects the wage earner to restrain his income to increases of 8 per cent, 10 per cent or 12 per cent, depending on whether the historical relationship clause applies, while on the other hand it allows government expenditures to rise to 16 per cent, without the effect of supplementary estimates.

I have some sympathy with those economists who say that a tight fiscal policy will have some negative effects on unemployment. But, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to talk about the negative effect of a real restraint policy such as federal spending on unemployment, then we also have to take into consideration the recent report of the Economic Council of Canada tabled in this House. That report suggested that the $4 billion to be spent on unemployment insurance this year ought to be tied to productivity. The report made some concrete suggestions, and I know that many who served on the Economic Council of Canada would have liked to have made the recommendations far stronger and far more decisive than the watered down recommendations that finally appeared in the report.

I would ask the minister to take stock of the non-productivity of the unemployment insurance program and tie it back to productivity. The Economic Council of Canada had a great deal to say about the effect of productivity on international trade and our trade balance and competitive position in respect of world trade. I ask the Minister of Finance to take stock, not of this piecemeal, fly as you go, on the job training, but of the total program that reflects the studies, positions and suggestions, not only of opposition members but of people across the nation. I might make one suggestion to the minister. Perhaps he ought to fire all the economists on his staff, save one. At least then he would only be confused once.

When we consider the effects of the anti-inflation program, and particularly the amendment before us in relation to Bill C-89 which deals with the time element for the law of the land to be effective, it is important to point out that we in the opposition are not talking about the termination of the program. We ought not to be fooled or misled into believing that all we want is a commitment from the government in respect to the anti-inflation program. That would be deceiving.

It is not the program that we necessarily want ended because the program itself is arbitrary and can be changed by order in council. The existing law of the land allows the cabinet to write their own policy, and it can change day by day. The provisions of Bill C-73, which is now the law of the land, in no way specifies, outlines, details or establishes, except in the widest parameters, the specifics of the program. Therefore we are not asking for assurance in so far as the existing program is concerned because it can be changed. What we are asking is that the law of the land terminate in a year.

We on this side are not unreasonable. If in a year's time the government's program is working and it is getting in place the programs it ought to be getting in place, it will not only be helped by the Canadian people but by members on this side. We will give it the full measure of credit. If at that time the weight of argument warrants an extension of the program, we will be prepared to give that kind of extension. However, in the true parliamentary tradition, we stand opposed to the open-endedness of this kind of arbitrary legislation.

If the legislation were specific, that would be one matter, but it is not. It is arbitrary in so far as I pointed out that it is really a prerogative of the cabinet. It is that kind of arbitrary power which is not consistent with the parliamentary tradition. We have precedents for this kind of openended approach to legislation in our Defence Production Act. The former leader of my party made reference to that last fall when we were first discussing the anti-inflation program.

In conclusion, when this House recesses for the day, I ask the minister to find some corner of an office and, in the solitude of that moment, reflect upon the program and take the kind of stock I have been asking him to take. I ask him to give consideration to accepting some suggestions. The members on this side are sincerely interested in getting to the roots of inflation. Get a policy in place to fight inflation. We are prepared to accept the rough justice for a specified period of time that Bill C-73 and the amendments to Bill C-89 provide.

I conclude by asking the minister to take this kind of sober second thought and accept the kind of suggestions that we on this side offer in a most sincere way, with humility, dedication of purpose, and conviction of presentation.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate and to support the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He has put forward an eminently sensible amendment to this bill. The effect is consistent with the position our party has taken with respect to the anti-inflation program and this type of legislation right from the beginning. In other words, the effect of this amendment will be to limit the application of the act for a period of about 18 months.

This has been the position of our party. It is consistent with the position we took during the last election under the able leadership of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who unfortunately has just left the Chamber. We owe him a great debt of gratitude because he stood in the forefront of displaying candour to the Canadian people. Although we suffered electoral defeat on that point, it is now recognized universally, even by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that the hon. member for Halifax gave to the Canadian people the candour that is expected of political leaders in this country, as opposed to the type of flipflopping we experience with the present government.

I am interested in the amendment put forward by the leader of the NDP. It seems to be an expression of frustration on his part. I know that he wants to ingratiate himself with a very substantial portion of his support, the organized trade union movement, which has come out very strongly against the anti-inflation program. He finds himself in a bit of a conundrum. He has joined with the trade union leaders of this country to indicate his opposition to this program.

The amendment of the leader of the NDP would terminate the program on May 1 of this year, in effect an immediate termination. However, he is faced with the conundrum of having to deal with his provincial premier colleagues in the NDP who have wholeheartedly embraced this scheme. They have apparently co-operated with the federal government with respect to the implementation of this program affecting matters under provincial jurisdiction.

I appreciate the fact that the leader of the NDP finds himself in this difficult situation. However, notwithstanding the fact that there are some very serious deficiencies in the program the government has brought forward, he should realize that, generally speaking, there is among Canadians support for an anti-inflation program.

Mr. Broadbent: Not this one.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The fact is we have this government. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) just indicated that we have a situation and that we have to be pragmatic under certain circumstances. We face a government which is determined, using its brutal majority, to bring forward a scheme which was ill-conceived, hastily drawn up, and is a reversal of the position it took at the last election, a program which suffers from a lack of credibility in the eyes of the Canadian people by virtue of that very fact. Our party has taken the position that, notwithstanding the blemishes in the plan, we ought to give the government a reasonable opportunity to demonstrate it will work over a reasonable period of time. Thus, while we support the plan we consider ourselves free, in the meantime, to draw attention to what we consider to be its deficiencies.

As I pointed out on second reading, if we ever get into a situation of the kind to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) alluded in his remarks at the end of last year, if we get into a system of permanent controls or an altogether different economic system in Canada, it would be very easy indeed for the government to abdicate its responsibility in the area of fiscal and monetary measures and rely exclusively on a system of controls which, I suggest, would not get at the root causes of inflation and would bring about more problems than it solves.

It seems to me, if I may say so without imputing motives, that the government is attempting to gain the benefit of the traditional advantage inherent in Canada's relationship with the United States—that of sharing any upturn in the U.S. economy. After all, between 60 and 70 per cent of our trade is carried on with the United States, and it is my impression that in bringing forward this program the government had in mind the hope that the economy will follow the trend in the United States, that the rate of inflation here will decline. Things are promising for our neighbours south of the border, and indeed I believe the prospects are not all that bad for us—we may experience an upturn here; all hon. members, I am sure, hope that the inflation rate will go down and that our economy will prosper. In any case we can do a great deal to help by limiting the period of application of wage and price controls. I ask the minister to give serious consideration to placing a limit on this program.

When I read the statistics with respect to the terrific backlog of cases now facing the Anti-Inflation Board I can only conclude that the proposal put forward by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe is really a favour to the government, because if this plan continues for any considerable period of time it will be necessary to extend the scope of the scheme, expand the administration, and increase the size of the bureaucracy required to operate the system.

When the program began it was said the total number of staff likely to be needed by the Board would not exceed 200 persons. On the basis of the figures now available with respect to the backlog it appears it will be necessary to increase that figure very substantially—not tenfold, not even twentyfold, but a hundredfold in due course if the plan is allowed to carry on for an unreasonable length of time as suggested in Bill C-73. That is why the proposal put forward by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe is one which should be embraced by the government; it would permit it to break away from this program and get rid of it within a reasonable period.

I want to direct these remarks to the minister, since he is here, and to indicate my sympathy with the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the unfortunate position in which he finds himself, one which makes him uneasy and nervous since he has to justify his own position as leader of a national party on one hand while trying to support the position of his colleagues in the provincial parties on the other. I must say, though, that I agree with him to this extent: the program is ill-conceived and should probably not be supported for the period originally intended. We should face the issue and say that now is the time to bring the program to an end.

As I say, the problem we face now is the program's lack of credibility. The indication I have received as a result of questionnaires put out among my constituents is that while they support an anti-inflation program they have great difficulty in accepting the veracity and good faith of the government with respect to its actions; they find it difficult to understand the reason for the continuous and continued growth in government expenditures and the fact that government expenditures do not seem to be subject to the same rules as are expenditures in the private sector; they find it difficult to reconcile the government's calls for restraint with the increase in its own spending. So I say, in all sincerity, that if the Minister of Finance really wishes to do a service to his portfolio and to his country he will use his influence with the Prime Minister and his other colleagues, as well as with his caucus, to secure support for my hon. friend's motion. I personally feel it is worthy of support.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few words.

An hon. Member: Of wisdom?

Mr. Kempling: Well, let us see what they are when they come out. Speaking to the motion put forward by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe I want to say that we are being entirely consistent in putting forward this motion. The economists to whom I have spoken, the people who have had experience of the application of controls, tell me that 18 months is the longest period for which a program of this kind can be left in place. The longer it is in place the more difficult it becomes to remove it.

This is the dilemma the government faces at the present time. It does not know what to do after the program ends. It is in a quandary. I recall very vividly a question it directed to us during the last election campaign: what are you going to do when the control period ends? Now, of course, it has that problem itself.

One of the points that we disliked very much in Bill C-73, the original anti-inflation legislation, was the open-ended provision whereby the legislation could be extended indefinitely by order in council. To us, Mr. Speaker, this sounded like permanent controls, and to people across the country who were broadly concerned about controls it also sounded like permanent controls. Recent comments by columnists and various commentators in this country on the progress of the anti-inflation program have confirmed that, in their view as well, this program is one of permanent controls. I believe the labour movement generally perceives it to be a program of permanent controls, which is why it is so opposed to it.

I believe only seven out of the ten provinces of Canada are committed to the anti-inflation program, and I think that without exception those provinces that are have placed a limit on their commitment. I understand that this is 18 months, though in one case I believe it is 24 months. Generally speaking I think we can say that the provinces want the program to end after 18 months.

In Bill C-89, which motion No. 1 is endeavouring to amend, there is provision to end the program prior to December 31, 1978, and I have been wondering why that provision is in the bill. Obviously it is in the bill to give the government the option of ending the program providing it finds a way to slip out of it easily and knows what to do when the program has ended.

The matter that really concerns me is this: we started out with three main points. There was an export levy, a limit on profits—and by a mathematical calculation that was supposed to control prices—and, of course, we had a limit on wage increases. Why the export levy was imposed at the very beginning is something I shall never understand, but however it has been removed. We now see a great deal of pressure building in the business community to modify the profit control provision or remove it. As a matter of fact the minister stated, I understand, that he is prepared to look at this question in October of this year. If that section of the act is extensively modified, then the only thing left is wage controls, and I do not think that is acceptable. It may be acceptable to some people, but I do not think that generally across the country it will be acceptable and that the legislation can continue if it controls only wages. There is the dilemma that we are facing.

I understand that the leader of the NDP, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), has moved an amendment that would end the legislation on May 1, 1976.

Mr. MacLean: May Day.

Mr. Kempling: Yes, it is, and I am sure that he will be out waving the Red Flag with all the rest.

Mr. Nowlan: He may even be dancing around the Maypole.

Mr. Kempling: My colleague has taken the words out of my mouth. I am sure he will be dancing around the Maypole. This is a very contentious issue for the mainstream of supporters who gather around him, and in order to try to make himself far more credible he attacks our speakers and accuses us of being inconsistent. That is a lot of nonsense. Certainly we are being consistent. We said that we believed in an 18 month control program, and this is exactly what a termination date of May 1, 1977, will give us.

I think it is generally agreed today by those who have carefully studied the program, even by people in the Anti-Inflation Board itself, that had there been a 90 day freeze at the very beginning—and I think the reason there was not a 90 day freeze is that it would have been an absolute copy of the main recommendations that we made and it was just too hard for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to swallow that—then the program may have had a better chance of succeeding than it has right now. However, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, in order to try to remain a little bit credible to his people, says we are not being consistent in asking for a May 1, 1977, end to the program. It is he who is not being consistent, as he rarely is in many of the things upon which he comments.

The concern of people across the country to whom I have talked—and I have travelled a fair bit talking to quite a few people in labour and business—is that we are in a real decline. We are not pulling out of our recession. We see countries around us, like the United States, making really significant gains in their economy. We see more people being employed; we see a prime rate of 5½ per cent in the U.S., and we see a great deal of industrial activity taking place. One of the things I always watch for very closely is orders being placed for machine tools, and I think they are at their highest level now for several years. That is an indication of industrial activity down the road. Some of us who recently visited Japan saw a definite movement in their economy as well. Though they are planning for a slow growth period to about 1985, there is a definite movement and they are making progress.

In each of these countries, as well as others that have had control programs, it was found that the best way to control inflation is by means of good, strong fiscal and monetary policies. I know that those words have rolled out of the mouth of every politician in the country for several months now, but if you take politics out of it and look at inflation without politics this seems to be the solution that most countries have favoured.

I do not believe we are making much progress in this regard in Canada. We find our interest rates are high. This makes it difficult for businessmen to borrow money to expand their plant. We find a limit placed on profits and we find little effect on prices. This is why we feel the program should end on May 1, 1977, after an 18 month period. It has not gone the way we would have liked but it has been an interesting experiment. I think it has had some restraining influence; most of the provinces have cut back on their budgets.

Speaking in Toronto the other day the minister mentioned that if the provinces and municipalities would cut back on their budgets the anti-inflation program would have a much greater effect. A number of them have done this, and are endeavouring to continue next year and down the road. Perhaps the lesson of inflation has been learned by a great number of people. Having had this experience for 18 months, then I think we should end this on May 1, 1977. That is why I support the motion. With these few remarks I will give way to my colleague, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), or whoever happens to stand.

● (2150)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, very rarely have I entered into debate with almost unanimity of support on catching the eye of the Chair. I am glad I caught the eye of the Chair in order to take part in this debate on the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who has tried to put a limit on a program of a government that in some ways is almost limitless.

I can understand the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) moving an amendment to restrict the time period of the Anti-Inflation Board. From the purport of his amendment and the motion of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, it would appear that they both like May 1 as the date for the conclusion of this program, but the amendment refers to this weekend, the day following the day we must file our income tax returns. After you file your income tax return you are prepared to accept almost anything.

Having seen the lack of objectivity on the part of this government I can understand why the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby would move such an amendment. That hon. member was seduced by the government time and time again in another parliament between 1972 and 1974 when the respective parties were colleagues together in incest, but in terms of parliamentary progress did not produce a thing except dissension among the Canadian people. That hon. member wants to dance around the Maypole on May 1 after we pay extravagant taxes to finance a government that is almost unfinanceable. We have spent the money and I think it is a late hour in the day for me to have much sympathy for the problems of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). We have had other ministers of finance, some of whom are my friends and some of whom are my enemies in a political sense. I always have sympathy for ministers of finance.

The hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) just a moment ago tried to be economically objective. He tried to separate economics from politics.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: There is my good friend, the Ms. from Saint-Michel. She is one of the dynamo kids over there. The fact of the matter is that we have seen the government dance around the Maypole many times when fighting a campaign that has deceived the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Nowlan: I say to my friend, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth, who had to go outside to regenerate himself after trying to be too objective in taking politics out of economics, it is almost impossible to do that with a government that has been so intellectually dishonest with the people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: We as Canadians in this parliament of Canada are trying to make work something that is almost unworkable.

Miss Bégin: Shame on you.

Mr. Nowlan: Let me say to my friend, the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin), that I would like her boss and my Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau), to start to tell the people of Canada from coast to coast what they have to do in the fight against inflation. This is not something the Minister of Finance, that poor man from Rosedale, has to do, and it is not something the Anti-Inflation Board has to do. This is something that each individual Canadian has to do if the fires of inflation are to be dampened. Perhaps we should do this on May Day following April 30 when some of our expectations have been dampened as a result of paying our tax bills.

My Prime Minister and the Prime Minister of all Canadians campaigned in 1974, and was anti-controls and anti-Stanfield. This man requires some intestinal fortitude, although he has the force of persuasion to a limited degree. The fact of the matter is that he should try to do a sales job across this country from coast to coast. I wonder why he does not try.

Mr. Paproski: He doesn't know how.

Mr. Nowlan: Let me say to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) that he may know how, but I think he is fundamentally embarrassed in trying to take the message to Canadians to tighten their belts. I have lost 12 pounds because I had to pay my tax bill. How many other people have tightened their belts as much? I suggest that the government should start by tightening its belt.

I wonder if Bill C-89 or any of the mammoth works of the mammoth man from Rosedale are really going to do anything about the forces of inflation. There is one thing I am sure of, and that is that we have given our implied approval to the government in trying to do something. We advocated these controls in 1974 when we were scorned and laughed at. The people did not believe us then.

An hon. Member: And they don't today.

Mr. Nowlan: Let me say to the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) from that great province of New Brunswick, who is one of my finest colleagues—

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Nowlan: It is ten o'clock tonight, but it is ten o'clock also for this government, and we know what the Canadian people will want to do after that deception of 1974. May I call it ten o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—ATLANTIC REGION—MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL MINISTERS ON HIGHWAY PROGRAM—TRANS-NEWFOUNDLAND CORRIDOR STUDY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) is here. I had hoped he would have attended the committee but I knew he had to be in the House. I hope his very capable district director will be able to influence him regarding the very excellent presentation I made on behalf of the lobster fishermen of Newfoundland.

Let me get to the point of the debate tonight which has to do with transportation. On March 29 I questioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) because of my concern about the deterioration of the highway system in the province of Newfoundland and in the Atlantic region generally. I had in mind particularly the presentation by the ministers of highways and transport ministers of the Atlantic region regarding a highways improvement or strengthening program, similar to those presented in briefs by other provinces of Canada. The minister in reply indicated that his discussions with the provincial ministers related more to the issue of support for the movement of freight within the Atlantic region, and possibly to new programs using freight assistance more adequately for the development and improvement of the Atlantic region.

The minister also in his reply confirmed that a brief had been presented on highway strengthening and indicated that he would undertake a further examination of the brief before responding. Just today I had occasion to present the problem to the Canadian Transport Commission at the hearings of the transport committee, and in my representation I referred to the Trans-Newfoundland Transportation Corridor Study which made certain recommendations in compliance with the very objectives I preach tonight.

In addressing myself to the problem, and to the parliamentary secretary who represents the minister, I say there is a deliberate thrust by the CNR to downgrade rail freight and express service in Newfoundland. I suggest it is just as deliberate as was the thrust to downgrade the rail passenger service in that province back in 1969. Evidence exists that the CNR is deliberately moving to road transport in spite of denials to the contrary. There is evidence that traffic loadings are decreasing to justify the lay-off of personnel. Statistics prove that loadings in Newfoundland are increasing and yet the CNR is moving to road transport. At the same time the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland is being overtaxed by increases in rubber traffic. There have been increases in the last five years of almost 1,000 per cent, much of which is due to the fact that the CNR is contributing to that effort.

At the moment the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland is deteriorating to the point of no return, in fact to the point where soon it will be dangerous for persons to drive their cars on the highway because of the increase in road traffic. This is as a result of the increase in container traffic and the traffic which is being released from the rail traffic which we have in abundance. I say it is a condemnation of the government and the Ministry of Transport that the situation has been allowed to develop as it has today. Nothing is being done about it.

It further disturbs me to read news releases to the effect that many millions, indeed billions of dollars are being provided in other provinces to strengthen highways, to provide road link-ups, and to provide access roads for the development of the rural and industrial economy.

For some reason or other those who profess to know are ignorant of what is required by all regions of the nation to provide a basis for our economy. It becomes increasingly obvious that the province of Newfoundland will wait until all other provinces are looked after in respect of Canada's transportation needs.

The Atlantic region transportation ministers have submitted a brief to the Minister of Transport requesting support for the needs of Atlantic Canada. I would appreciate it if the parliamentary secretary would give me some hope concerning his minister's intentions to show that the Atlantic region, and particularly the province of Newfoundland, are still part of Canada. I hope he will indicate that Newfoundland will receive its just due in the contribution that our central government makes not only in respect of a strengthening program for its highways but more important in respect of the need for a recommendation concerning a transport system not only from Vancouver to Halifax but indeed to the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I desire very much indeed to provide my hon. friend with some of the hope to which he alluded in the final moments of his remarks this evening. Further to the comments he has made both tonight and in this House on March 29, I should perhaps remind the House that it was on March 10, 1976, that the highway ministers of the four Atlantic provinces first presented a joint report to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) which is entitled "Atlantic Provinces Primary Highways—Ten Year Program". This report is a statement of needs as seen by the provinces and was prepared subsequent to previous meetings between the provincial ministers and the Minister of Transport. The report is presently under study by departmental personnel in the Ministry of Transport.

With regard to recent highway expenditures in the Atlantic region, these have been made mainly through special and subsidiary agreements between the federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the respective provinces. In this connection it is interesting to note that in 1974-75 federal highway expenditures amounted to $18.2 million in Newfoundland, $1.3 million in Prince Edward Island, $1.4 million in Nova Scotia, and $18.1 million in New Brunswick. It is likely that 1975-76 expenditures will be in the same order of magnitude.

Concerning the standardization of truck weights we have now reached the point where these are all now at a minimum of 20,000 pounds for a single axle load with the exception of Newfoundland where the figure is 18,000, and at a minimum gross vehicle weight of 110,000 pounds, with the exception of Nova Scotia where it is 80,000 pounds. Completion of standardization of loads limits can be expected to result in increased economies for truck transportation which is one of the objectives of the federal Ministry of Transport and, I am sure, of the provincial ministers involved.

With regard to rail freight and express service in Newfoundland, may I assure the hon. member that every effort is being made to provide adequate rail service to shippers and receivers in this area. The CNR has undertaken a number of initiatives recommended in the trans-Newfoundland corridor transportation study completed in 1974 to improve the transportation system. These actions include the construction of a new express freight shed at Cornerbrook, increased capacity of the rail car wheel-set transfer operation at Port aux Basques, and the establishment of a freight planning group in St. John's to improve the scheduling of traffic.

In general, and in conclusion, I want to assure my hon. friend that the Government of Canada has substantially supported Atlantic region transportation and will continue to do so in the future.

FINANCE—SUGGESTED CHANGES IN EQUALIZATION FORMULA AS RESULT OF INCREASED ENERGY COSTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps very appropriate that my question, following the one of the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), should deal with energy because I think the two problems that are plaguing the Atlantic economy right now are the great and continuing difficulties we have had with transportation and transportation costs and with energy and the great impact which rising energy costs have had on the Atlantic region in the last three years.

Hon. members will recall that on April 5 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) whether, in view of the meeting of the first ministers that was taking place that week, there would be some consultations with ministers from the Atlantic provinces with respect to the suggestion of the minister of finance in Ontario, Mr. McKeough, who had suggested that there might be a consideration of some alteration in the equalization formula, particularly with respect to the skyrocketing electrical costs in the two provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. To a lesser degree, of course, this affects Newfoundland and New Brunswick, and I think it has some impact as well on one or two of the provinces in western Canada.

The Minister of Finance at that time was not able to give me that assurance. He said he would be discussing the matter generally with his colleagues but that this might be a question which could be resolved prior to the meeting of first ministers on energy at the beginning of next month. Therefore it is doubly appropriate that I raise this question tonight because in a little more than a week's time that meeting of first ministers will take place.

However, it is extremely disturbing to be raising the question following the announcement of the energy policy by the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) this afternoon. To my mind the statement by the minister this afternoon showed an almost complete lack of awareness or sensitivity to the energy problems of Atlantic Canada. When the minister indicated this afternoon that eventually there would be a move on his part to raise the price of domestic oil to international levels, and that one of the purposes of increasing domestic energy prices would be to reinforce efficiency and conservation, it seemed to me that the minister was trying to make a virtue out of the hardship that will obviously be created for many of the people already living on low incomes, some of the lowest incomes in the country, and in those regions in the country that can least afford to protect themselves.

Quite frankly, I was shocked at the insensitivity of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in suggesting that. It is similar, of course, to the further part of the answer which the Minister of Finance gave me on April 5 when I asked about some assistance with respect to the conversion from expensive electrical generation to lower cost forms of electrical production. The answer of the Minister of Finance referred quite specifically to nuclear power and the CANDU reactor, particularly the one which is contemplated for New Brunswick, yet the Pointe Lepreau reactor, when it comes on stream, will produce something like 600 megawatts compared with the estimated potential of the Fundy tidal power operation, which could produce something like 4,000 megawatts.

When we examine the statement of the minister this afternoon there is no mention of the possibility of proceeding as quickly as possible with Fundy tidal power development. There was certainly no mention of it by the Minister of Finance the other day, even though he must be well acquainted with its potential, having served in the portfolio of Energy, Mines and Resources.

All in all we are faced with a situation in which there seems to be no awareness yet by the government that there are consumers and producers living in my province of Prince Edward Island and in Nova Scotia who are paying as much as 200 per cent to 300 per cent more for their electricity than those who live in parts of southern Ontario, or even in some parts of the province of Quebec. This further emphasis on disparity and economic and social hardship for the people of the Atlantic provinces is unacceptable, and quite frankly I find it illogical. The government, having moved some time ago to standardize a base price for the cost of petroleum products, whether it be in eastern or western Canada, is now making the assumption that what it can do in one area with respect to petroleum it cannot do in another, and that is in the area of electical generation and electrical costs.

If there is to be a consistent approach in this respect, and if the government believes that one price for petroleum products should be established, even if that price is an increased one, as was suggested by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources this afternoon—but it would be a price which would be equal and fair for consumers from coast to coast—surely the logic of that, which I think has been generally accepted on all sides of this House and by all Canadians, is equally true with something as basic as electricity costs. I think it is an absolute farce for a government to expend something like $500 million in an attempt to reduce the disparities which exist between the poor and the rich regions of this country and then say that it is in no position whatsoever to act with respect to the enormous burdens which are being placed on the backs of consumers in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and the other poorer provinces. I hope the parliamentary secretary can give us a definite assurance tonight that this kind of insensitivity and illogical approach which is presently being taken will in fact be altered at the first ministers' meeting.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) noted, some provincial finance ministers have raised at their last meeting the issue of electricity prices in the Maritimes. The problem is due to the fact that the production of electric power in these provinces relies more than anywhere else in Canada on fossil fuels. Fossil fuels account for 100 per cent of the electricity produced in Prince Edward Island, 62 per cent of that produced in Nova Scotia and 38 per cent of that generated in New Brunswick. Oil prices have increased and this has had a direct impact on hydro rates in these provinces.

I would also like to note, Mr. Speaker, that the Maritime provinces are not the only place where the cost of electricity has gone up. Other provinces have known similar increases as a result of rising price. Electricity rates in Ontario have gone up by about 15 per cent during the last two years and they are expected to go up by 25 per cent a year during the next three or four years. Quebec is in a similar situation.

The federal government is aware of the problem in the Maritime provinces and it has taken certain steps to rectify it. The hon. member may not be aware of all the efforts made by the federal government to help the Maritime provinces has concerns energy supplies.

Mr. Speaker, the federal government is already working actively at finding solutions to the problems of electricity production in those provinces. The present policy of the federal government consists in financing 50 per cent of loans granted at the lending rates which apply to Crown corporations for the first 600 megawatts, CANDU reactor obtained by a province. In this respect, the government has granted a loan of up to $350 million to New Brunswick for the construction of a reactor at Point Lepreau.

Under this treaty, a loan agreement was signed by AECL and the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission by virtue of which loans amounting to $30 million were granted in 1975-76, and loans are expected to amount to $70 million in the current financial year. It will cover the interest.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, under the terms of the agreement reached by New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and the federal government, we will take over 50 per cent of the cost of technical, economic and financial feasibility studies on the harnessing of tidal power in the Bay of Fundy, as mentioned by the hon. member.

In the province of Prince Edward Island, the federal government is financing electrical connection between the island and the continent. We have agreed to grant, through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, an $18 million subsidy and, through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, a $9 million loan. That connection is expected to be completed by October 1976; it may not reduce the cost of electricity on the island but it will have a stabilizing effect in that the province will become less dependent on fossil fuels for its energy production. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the federal government is committed to implementing a single price policy—

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF GUN CONTROL MEASURE TO SUPREME COURT TO DETERMINE WHETHER JURISDICTION FEDERAL OR PROVINCIAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, if I seem a little out of breath it is because I just ran over from the committee that is considering Bill C-83.

I want to deal tonight with questions I asked on April 6, 1976, as reported at page 12501 of Hansard when I put this question:

Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. It is with regard to the Di Iorio and Gérard Fontaine case in which the Supreme Court of Canada held that the provincial government should have the right to conduct a criminal inquiry within the terms "administration of justice of the province".

This bill is now before the committee and if anybody had heard the proceedings at committee tonight they would wonder how the bill ever got out of this House—except by closure. From page 47 to page 53 the bill deals in brief with the fact that the federal government is giving power to the provinces to investigate crime and hold criminal inquiries. The fact is, however, that the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that the province of Quebec, and any other province, under our constitution has that power. That means that when this bill left this House through closure, eight of its pages were redundant because the provincial governments already had the power it proposed to give to them.

I should like to read briefly from the judgment of Mr. Justice Pigeon of the Supreme Court of Canada. At page 13 he said:

If it must be said that such an inquiry prior to any charge being laid under the Criminal Code comes within the description of "administration of justice in the province", not of "procedure in a criminal matter", I cannot appreciate how one may take a different view where the object of the inquiry . . .

In other words, the province of Quebec had that power. I should now like to read from page 14 of the judgment where he says that under the British North America Act the administration of justice falls under provincial jurisdiction but questions of criminal law fall under the ambit of federal jurisdiction. The judge said:

. . . "administration of justice" in all matters civil and criminal, which has consistently been held to include the detection of criminal activities.

He held that this falls within the admit of the provinces.

I should like to read from the judgment of Mr. Justice Dickson of the same court, who said:

● (2220)

First, I cannot subscribe to the view that administration of criminal justice is for parliament alone to prescribe.

It is also for the provinces. I would also like to quote from page 12 where the same judge said:

It seems late in the day to strip the provinces of jurisdiction in respect of criminal justice which they have exercised without challenge for well over 100 years.

[Mr. Trudel.]

Part of that bill now deals with provincial inquiries. It has gone to a committee for study. The Supreme Court of Canada in its judgment constitutionally says that lower is well within the ambit of the province of Quebec. If it had not been for its inquiry we would never have found out that carcasses were being sawed up, ground, and turned into hamburgers at the World's Fair to be sold to the public of Canada. They had the right to make that inquiry.

It is beyond my comprehension as a parliamentarian of this House for some considerable length of time that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Liberal government would challenge the province of Quebec on the right to conduct that kind of inquiry. I can only say they wanted to cover up something they knew Quebec was bringing forth.

The main point I want to make is that two thirds of the bill dealing with control of guns is a matter of administration of justice falling within the jurisdiction of the provinces. The fact is that much of that law that says it can be done by order in council, such as the cost of licences, the administration, all of which is defined in the bill, falls within the ambit of the provinces.

I was at the committee. I wish Your Honour were on that committee because it is a big circus. The greatest defence we had was to move that the motion be not read a second time. My guess is that tomorrow morning the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will fire the Liberal members of that committee because their questions are right on. They pointed out that gun control is not only within provincial jurisdiction, but is unworkable. There are so many anomalies it will not do anything to solve crime. That is the reason why I asked that question.

Bill C-83 was produced for one reason. It is a legal poultice to try to get the Canadian people to believe that the government is doing something to solve crime and to cover up the fact that it brought in a bill only two and a half years ago regarding penalties for murder which it will not carry out. I end with this sentence. This bill is to cover up for the fact that the government will not carry out the law that it brought in with reference to murder.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, tonight I am responding to my hon. friend on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and his parliamentary secretary. I am pleased to have this opportunity to do so.

As I begin, I remind the Chair and the House that I will be dealing with the substantive matters of both law and procedure which the hon. member raised in his original question in the House before the Easter adjournment. I will not direct my remarks to the rather extraneous and gratuitous references which the hon. member has made, particularly in the closing part of the speech which he just delivered.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) on April 6, 1976, asked the Minister of Justice if the government intended to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada the provisions in Bill C-83 relating to the ownership and handling of firearms for determination of their constitutional validity. The hon. member formulated his question after having referred to the recent Supreme Court decision in the cases of Di Iorio and Gérard Fontaine.

There is, of course, no relation between the Supreme Court decision in the Di Iorio and Fontaine cases and the parts of Bill C-83 relating to firearms. The Criminal Code always has had provisions dealing with guns. There has never been any suggestion that these provisions would not properly fall within the meaning of the words "criminal law" as they appear in section 91, sub-paragraph 27 of the B.N.A. Act. The proposed measures relating to guns in Bill C-83 extend and modify the existing provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with guns. It must be submitted that parliament is competent to enact such legislation as being legislation in relation to Criminal Law.

It has been held by the Privy Council and the Supreme Court of Canada that the words "criminal law" in the constitution mean the criminal law in its widest sense. It has also been held that the power to legislate in relation to criminal law is not restricted to defining offences and providing penalties, but it also includes the power to legislate for the prevention of crime. The precise point involved here was very aptly dealt with by the Imperial Privy Council in the case of Proprietary Articles Trade Association versus the Attorney General of Canada, particularly in the judgment of Lord Atkin. His Lordship's statement is a lengthy one and I shall not take up the time of the House by quoting it in full. However, the hon. member for Calgary North is a man learned in the law and I am sure he is fully conversant with Lord Atkin's speech and will find it constructive in this connection.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

FISHERIES

PROPOSAL THAT REMOVAL OF LOBSTER FISHING RESTRICTIONS BE EXTENDED TO NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Implementation of new regulations to exclude certain lobster fishermen has been delayed in the maritime region but appears to be discriminatory against Newfoundland. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House requests immediate consideration by the Minister of State (Fisheries) to include the province of Newfoundland which will allow all lobster fishermen in that province to engage in normal operations for this season.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DORVAL—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF EXTENSION OF SKY SHOPS LEASE WITHOUT TENDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion that arises more particularly out of the lack of adequacy of answers provided in the House in the past few days. Considering that standard Department of Transport policy as acknowledged by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is to require the submission of public tenders for contracts like that extended to Sky Shops by an order in council on August 24, 1972, and considering that this specific extension was previously denied by Mr. O. C. Stoner, then deputy minister of the Department of Transport, on the grounds that public tendering would be required, and considering that the order in council on August 24, 1972, which reversed Mr. Stoner's position, was based on the recommendation of the then Minister of Transport and of Treasury Board, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the present Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the present Minister of Public Works to provide a full explanation for their recommending the extension of the Sky Shops contract at Dorval airport without calling for public tenders.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED PROHIBITION OF FISHING VESSELS FROM THE GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE WHICH ARE NOT BASED THERE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the apportioning of quotas for carps, commonly known as goldfish, is prohibited; that the government ought to protect the spawning of goldfish which really need another generation to regenerate; that the fishing season in the Gulf of St. Lawrence opens only in late April and that fishermen in Gaspesia, Magdalen Islands and northern New Brunswick are now facing serious problems because big trawlers from coastal ports on the Gulf of St. Lawrence are plundering the sea bottoms of the gulf, particularly the Banc des Orphelins, which results in reducing the catch of deep sea fish, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the government allow the Department of the Environment to take any concrete measure it would deem necessary to ensure fishermen in Gaspesia, Magdalen Islands and northern New Brunswick better catches in keeping with their needs and to forbid all trawlers which are not based within the limits of the gulf waters to fish in that area.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this kind of motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion may not be put.

MIRABEL—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF MR. STONER'S BEHAVIOUR IN CONNECTION WITH FOOD CONCESSION TENDER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I too have a motion to propose under the provisions of Standing Order 43 arising out of a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the explanation of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), made outside this House yesterday, that Mr. "Gerry" Stoner, during his tenure as the deputy minister of transport, was authorized to make a serious intervention in a tendering procedure, to wit, making suggestions to one bidder for the food and beverage concession at Mirabel airport that they explore merger possibilities with a second bidder for the same concession, without apparently informing any or all of the other bidders, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Minister of Transport obtain and table in this House a written explanation of Mr. Stoner's behaviour, explaining the circumstances surrounding his behaviour vis-à-vis the aforementioned intervention in which it is made clear whether his minister of the day simply authorized the intervention or, indeed, ordered or suggested it.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED NO CHANGE IN AGREEMENT WITH ONTARIO PENDING DECISION ON APPLICATION OF DURHAM MEMORIAL FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which I hope will have the support of all members of the House.

In light of the fact that Durham Memorial Hospital is now before the Supreme Court of Ontario to challenge the legality of the Ontario government's decision to close the hospital, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

That this House instructs the government not to agree to any amendments to the memorandum of agreement between Ontario and the federal government dated March 3, 1958, concerning the provisions of hospital services in Ontario which would in any way affect Durham Memorial Hospital at least until after the Supreme Court of Ontario has ruled on Durham Memorial Hospital's application for judicial review.

PROPOSED SUPPORT FOR LEGISLATED USE OF SAFETY BELTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is similar to one I presented shortly before Christmas, but in view of the action yesterday by the governments of Saskatchewan and Quebec I trust that this will find general acceptance by hon. members of this House. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House supports the efforts of provincial governments in implementing laws designed to protect Canadians through the legislated use of safety belts, and encourages these governments to achieve uniformity across Canada in such laws, where practical.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can only be presented for debate with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR MORATORIUM ON SLAUGHTER OF CATTLE FOR BLUE TONGUE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas the Department of Agriculture has no real and concrete evidence that the eradication program for blue tongue disease through the slaughter of cattle in the south central area of British Columbia will be successful because the disease is known to be spread by flies which can easily fly across the Canadian-U.S. border, because deer and other wildlife animals are known to be carriers of this disease, and because there is ample evidence that this disease has been in the area for years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco):

That the Department of Agriculture establish a moratorium on this slaughter program until the full extent of this disease can be checked throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF EMBARGO AGAINST UNITED STATES CATTLE BECAUSE OF BLUE TONGUE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the charge made by United States cattlemen that the Canadian Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) imposed a non-tariff embargo against American cattle, and that he attempted to indict U.S. breeding stock so that it would damage potential export trade that Canada and the U.S. compete for by summarily and without consultation instituting the blue tongue embargo, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for study.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—REASON FORCE LAID CHARGES IN ONTARIO—CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General.

An hon. Member: Where is Joe?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It has to do with the unfortunate matter of the Sky Shops affair about which that government over there has nothing to cheer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Where is Joe? We want Joe.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On Monday, April 26, the Prime Minister indicated that he had requested the Solicitor General to investigate the jurisdictional question which seems to have arisen between the RCMP and the Quebec Department of Justice with regard to the laying of charges in that matter. Now that the Solicitor General has had had some time to consider the matter I wonder whether he might tell the House if he was consulted by the RCMP on its decision to lay charges in the province of Ontario and, if so, would he describe the nature of those consultations?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I was not consulted, and that is the usual thing. The police laid charges without consulting me. They have told me since that they had jurisdiction to lay charges in both Ontario and Quebec, the alleged offence having been committed in both provinces, and that they had consulted with the Crown Attorneys of both provinces, and finally laid the charges in Ottawa.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Solicitor General for that answer. In the course of discussions the hon. gentleman had with the RCMP, consultations that took place after the event, having indicated a choice of jurisdiction, did the RCMP indicate to the Solicitor General, and can he in turn indicate to the House, the reasons for that choice of jurisdiction?

Mr. Allmand: Not completely, Mr. Speaker. There was some disagreement between the RCMP and the Crown Attorneys in Quebec on the nature of the charges to be laid. I am presently gathering more information on the basis of that disagreement. But there was a disagreement on the nature of the charges to be laid.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the difficulty the Solicitor General may have in getting that kind of information. Would he be prepared to undertake to the House that within the next few days when his investigation is complete that he would respond either to questions or make a statement with regard to the complete reasons because I think this is of interest in the course of the administration of justice.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have made arrangements to meet with the Solicitor General of Quebec and following that meeting I hope to have more information.

NAME OF PERSON WHO AUTHORIZED VISIT TO MR. RIVARD

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish of ask a question of the Solicitor General.

After the Minister of Justice said yesterday that a notice was necessary to get an appropriate answer, the Solicitor General said that he would find out which RCMP officer authorized the examination of Télé-Média reporter Mr. Rivard. In such circumstances, can the minister tell the House today who authorized this visit and why was Mr. Rivard questioned?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I do not yet have a complete answer on that. I know that the agent of the RCMP who approached Mr. Rivard was from the A Division here in Ottawa. I am trying to find out who authorized or ordered that particular approach to Mr. Rivard. I have not yet received a full answer.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED RAID ON QUEBEC NEWSPAPER OFFICE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Considering that the Solicitor General said last week that he would ask the RCMP to report on the search made at the Agence Presse Libre du Québec, can the minister give the House some information or else is he considering it would be better to make a specific statement on this matter?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there again I have quite a bit of information from the RCMP. There were three participating police forces. By the way, it is clear now there was no warrant obtained from the court to enter, search or seize, but this will be another matter I want to discuss with Mr. Lalonde, the Quebec Solicitor General when I meet with him shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a final supplementary.

Can the Solicitor General give the House the assurance that he will make a statement as soon as he gets the information he is now looking for?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to answer questions in the House and give as full a report as possible once I have more information.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REASON FOR ORDER IN COUNCIL EXTENDING SKY SHOPS LEASE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising from questions I put to him yesterday and the day before concerning specifically the Order in Council that was passed by the cabinet on August 24, 1972. Since this Order in Council, which was passed on the recommendation of both the then Minister of Transport and the President of the Treasury Board, contradicted the general principle that there should be no extension of such leases prior to the resubmission of bids, I wonder whether the Prime Minister now can give us an answer to the earlier question concerning the reason cabinet reached the particular decision it did on that date?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, it was a decision of council which was recommended to it in the normal way by official recommendation and which was passed in the routine fashion. I understand that the hon. member may want to have further explanations on this. I have looked into some of the answers given in this House and elsewhere beginning back in November by the Minister of Transport and others. If the hon. member opposite or any hon. member on the other side wants to ask further questions on this, I suggest that they take up the offer of the Minister of Transport. His estimates are still before the committee. He has been heard during three days and I am informed that there was practically no curiosity expressed about Sky Shops or about Dorval or about Mirabel or any of that.

● (1420)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Members had no comments; they are not interested when they have the chance to ask questions.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In all earnestness, and in an effort to make sure that answers to questions come in a consequential way and not piecemeal from day to day, I urge the opposition to accept this invitation from the minister to ask any questions they wish to ask and to make any suggestions they might have. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal suggests parliament. If hon. members wish to revert to committee of the whole, we are prepared to do this also.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We are prepared to answer every and any question. If it is truth that is to be obtained, the way to get it is to have the minister in the House or in committee—this is the choice of the opposition—where he will be able to answer every question that opposition members can think of. I repeat this invitation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has had this precise question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister has had—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Despite the atmosphere of slight political antagonism in respect of these questions, I wonder if the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby could be given the opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has had this precise question put to him three days in a row. If he had answered it on Monday, we would not have to repeat it today.

I should like to ask the Prime Minister again, given the exceptional nature of the decision which was reached in the cabinet on August 24, 1972, a decision not reached by officials, as the Prime Minister said yesterday and again implied today, but by ministers of the Crown responsible politically for the decision, would he or the Minister of Transport give us an explanation for that precise decision?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the explanation was given by the Minister of Transport and is recorded in Hansard of November 6. He explained the circumstances under which this lease was recommended for renewal under improved terms. It was recommended by the officials without any political pressure being put on the officials for that recommendation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It resulted in improved benefits for the Crown. I could repeat the answer given at that time by the minister, but I am sure that what the hon. member would like to have is not bits and pieces of answers to questions asked sometimes by him and sometimes by other hon. members. I urge them to summon the minister before a standing committee or before committee of the whole to get the truth on all this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: If indeed there is a wish for truth rather than to create insinuations.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, for my final supplementary I will try the minister himself. There might be some hope of getting an answer.

In three days of dealing with this issue last November the minister made two points, if I understood him, for renewing the contract without a new bid being submitted. The two reasons given were that there were certain financial benefits greater than was the case under the previous contractual arrangement and, second, that there was going to be some kind of needed capital expansion in the facility at Dorval by Sky Shops to be paid for by Sky Shops themselves. Given the fact that there was going to be reduced international activity at Dorval, what sense does it make to say that they needed to expand the Sky Shops facility at Dorval when the expanded operation in fact was going to take place at Mirabel? Secondly—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: —would the minister not agree that if the contract had been put for public tender, as it should have been, it might well have been the case that other people submitting bids could have provided benefits to the public of Canada which would have exceeded those submitted by Sky Shops? How would he have known if he did not put it out to tender?

Mr. Paproski: Would you repeat that question?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has missed one element, and that is that the volume of activity at the Dorval duty free shop was due to decrease significantly at some point in 1975, 1976 or 1977. We are looking at it at the present time. We must remember that then we were looking at it in 1972, at that point in time there was no opportunity for a tender of the operation for three more years. What we entered into in 1972 was an upward revision of a lease which had three years left to run where, in other words, a much higher price was being paid for the remaining three years in order to get the extension.

Mr. Broadbent: To 1980 as well.

Mr. Lang: But we could look at the fact that the situation would be very different in that particular duty free shop with a good deal of the business transferred away from it in 1975.

In the complex business of business, which hon. members opposite will, I am sure, not understand—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: What do you know about business?

Mr. Lang: In the Annapolis Valley there are some who would, although their voices are not heard here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: The issue of whether a tender is called or an extension is given to a lease is a matter of business judgment, and what a government should be expected to do is to apply its best business judgment to that question. To the hon. member there seems to be some misunderstanding about this, and I should like it to be understood that the recommendation for the extension of the lease came after a final offer from Sky Shops which was much improved over anything which had been discussed before, and it was to be made effective virtually immediately.

At that point in time the view was taken by the Department of Transport that that was an extension which should be granted, and therefore the information was put to the company that indeed it would be recommended. For practical purposes it was taken at that point as approved, and I should just like the hon. member to know that the only approval which is needed—beyond that of the government—for a minister or his department to sign a contract of that sort is the official approval of Treasury Board.

In due course that was sought and obtained, but that is not the approval of cabinet which is referred to. It is not as if a major issue of principle were before it. The judgment of the Department of Transport was that that was a good transaction which should be entered into then for the benefit of the higher amount of lease which could be obtained from 1972 to the end of 1975 where there was a firm lease, about which we could do nothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT LOANS BE GRANTED PROVINCES UNDER SAME CONDITIONS AS LOAN TO CHILE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

We learned this morning that some American and Canadian banks have agreed to grant loans and credit to Chile for an amount of $125 million. Is the minister in a position to tell the House the conditions of the loan, that is its term as well as the rate of interest charged to Chile for such a loan of $125 million?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such a transaction, but I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

When the minister will be asking about the nature, the interest rates and the term of the loan, would he also inquire whether the Canadian provinces could obtain such loans from chartered banks in Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

MIRABEL—ALLEGEDLY CONFLICTING MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS ON FOOD CONCESSION TENDER—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on a point of clarification of ministerial statements in today's and yesterday's press involving the food and beverage concession. The present Minister of Transport is quoted in the Globe and Mail this morning to the effect that Senator Giguere was not involved and there was nothing to indicate that he was. The former minister of transport is quoted in yesterday's Ottawa Journal as saying:

. . . of course Senator Giguere approached me and was told that he was not going to get it because he was not the lowest bidder.

On a point of information for the former minister of transport, Mr. Speaker, I hope he understands it was the highest and not the lowest bidder who should have got it. That is pretty complex, but I hope he understands that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I want to ask the Prime Minister which, if either, of these statements is correct?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not even know if the quotations attributed to the ministers by the hon. member refer to the same series of incidents. Maybe one was—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You don't know anything.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in case you are wondering, the animal noises over there are from a bunch of hyenas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: You are getting pretty testy.

Mr. Fairweather: You have had a week's holiday; you cannot be as testy as that already.

Mr. Nowlan: Why don't we have an election?

Mr. Trudeau: They are not all hyenas, Mr. Speaker. There are also some donkeys over there.

An hon. Member: One of the donkeys is for Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Nowlan: There are a few horses' asses on their side.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is the north end of the horse pointing over there.

Mr. Speaker: Happily, without being called upon to make any sort of judgment upon that assessment,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Speaker: —I might say that at various times during this question period the noise has been equal from both sides of the House. I think it would be better if we were to allow those putting the questions to put them and those answering them to answer.

Mr. Nowlan: How do hyenas put questions and horses' asses answer them?

ALLEGED INTERVENTION IN TENDERING PROCEDURE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION AND REPORT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the President of the Treasury Board. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he could indicate to the House whether he agrees that it is proper procedure for bidders or tenderers to be encouraged to change their status after they have submitted bids or tenders and before tenders have been awarded? Could the minister also inform the House if his department is investigating this acknowledged intervention in a normal government tendering procedure to see what violations may have occurred with respect to the provisions of the Financial Administration Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, when tenders are made to the departments, we examine each one individually and accept the recommendation of the departments after having studied it seriously. I do not know whether there are negotiations between the parties once the Treasury Board has made a decision. In this case, the decision was made in the light of avaiblable information.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has provided a general answer. In terms of this specific case, is he or any officials of his department investigating the alleged irregularities that have taken place in the handling of this particular tender?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I do not know what tender he means, but if he is alluding to the decision whereby a restaurant in Montreal was leased to Entreprises Cara Québec Ltée, then the award was made to the best offer, that is to the tender who made the best offer to the government. That is all that counts.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Am I to take it from the minister's answer that he is in agreement that those tenders can be manipulated, that there can be intervention after the tenders have been set up and before the award has been made? Is the minister saying he is condoning that practice?

An hon. Member: Patronage!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the hon. member raises those things when he acknowledged that the best bid was accepted by the government. It is complete nonsense.

An hon. Member: What about the intervention?

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

IMPORTATION OF EGGS—DEPARTMENTAL ACTION TO PROTECT CONSUMER INTERESTS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister satisfied himself that the consumer interest is being protected in relation to permits issued this week by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce for the importation of eggs into Canada and if not, will he inform the House what specific action his department is taking?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in his question the hon. gentleman did not indicate the whom the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce issued these permits. If he would do that, perhaps I could answer more fully. I would give him an opportunity for a supplementary in order to be more specific.

Mr. Grafftey: I said this week, Mr. Speaker. This week permits have been issued by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to import eggs into Canada. That being the case, has the minister satisfied himself that the consumer interest has been protected? If not, what specific action is his department taking?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the role of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is to issue permits to traditional wholesalers or importers of eggs from the United States whenever there is a shortage. I presume that is what the hon. member is talking about. In that case, I am quite satisfied that consumer interests have been protected. So far there is no evidence that eggs were being sold at a higher price than set by CEMA and there is no evidence of any shortage. If, on the other hand, which I think is what the hon. gentleman is really getting at, the permits were issued to other than regular importers such as to CEMA directly or indirectly, I would be very upset because this would be in contravention of all the concepts of CEMA in the first place.

SUGGESTED EXAMINATION OF USE OF VETO POWER BY CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY OVER ISSUANCE OF IMPORT PERMITS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In pursuing his responsibility of protecting the consumer interest has the minister examined the use of the veto power that CEMA has with respect to import permits issued by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and confirmed that they are not in fact using these legal powers to make windfall profits on eggs imported into Canada?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no evidence of any veto powers of CEMA. In fairness to the question I come back to the point that when there is a shortage of eggs in this country it is traditional to import supplies from the United States, as the hon. member knows. For many years traditional importers have imported eggs. Government policy at the moment is that they should be allowed to bring eggs into Canada, when eggs are needed. This is done by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in such a way that everyone has an equal opportunity. Some rumours, which my department is attempting to trace, suggest that CEMA themselves have circumvented this process. If they have, CEMA should be condemned. My job, which I did not take under false pretences, is to concern myself with the consumers of this country. I intend to do so.

DURHAM MEMORIAL—REQUEST NO CHANGE MADE IN HOSPITAL INSURANCE ACT UNTIL COURT CASE DECIDED

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare arises from a motion moved earlier. Whereas Durham Memorial Hospital, in its effort to continue operation despite notice of closure from the Ontario government, contends in the Supreme Court of Ontario that such closure can only take place under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act if the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare consents to a change in the act, will the minister give assurance that he will not consent to such a change until the Ontario Supreme Court has decided the case concerning Durham Memorial Hospital?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are agreements with various provinces concerning hospitals under the Hospital Insurance Act. I have heard of the particular case in which the hospital concerned is contesting action planned by the government of Ontario before the courts. I assure the hon. member, since the matter is sub judice, I will not consider an amendment to the agreement concerning Durham Memorial Hospital until the court has disposed of the case.

ENERGY

OIL—DATE ON WHICH SELF-SUFFICIENCY ACHIEVED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In his statement yesterday, on the so-called energy self-reliance policy, the minister said that by 1985 we shall probably import 800,000 barrels of oil per day, in contrast with present imports of some 240,000 barrels a day. In view of this gloomy prognostication, can the minister estimate the approximate date by which Canada can hope to reach the self-sufficiency toward which the government, according to what it has been telling us, has been aiming for the last few years?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I told the committee last night, I should like to be able to give a date. Clearly, it is impossible. It will depend a great deal on good luck and on a great deal of exploration in the north. That is the main thrust. We must have exploration and development activity in the frontier regions of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister doesn't know what thrust means.

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING MANDATORY GUIDELINES FOR CONSERVATION OF ENERGY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I thought the government was running the country, not running a lottery. In addition to luck, you need policy. The Science Council of Canada having said that with proper conservation methods we can save between 20 per cent and 30 per cent of the energy we consume, and that industrial users could save large quantities of energy by following proper programs, I ask the minister if he intends during the present session, or in the near future, to introduce legislation which will provide for mandatory guidelines for saving on energy consumed in this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member does not understand the oil industry. He thinks you can make a hole in the ground and expect to find oil.

Mr. Nowlan: No; he knows if you have a dry hole you will find the minister.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed. If the hon. member knew more about the oil industry, he would know that it takes much luck to find oil. To speak on his second question, again, I am surprised that he, as official energy critic of the NDP, has not been following our debates. If he had followed them, he would remember that I tabled a full document on energy conservation measures some weeks ago, when I indicated that we shall introduce mandatory measures.

PROPOSED DELAY IN APPROVAL OF MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE PENDING APPLICATION FROM POLAR GAS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I know we must drill holes. I also recognize that the oil industry puts down lines and, every once in a while, catches a sucker. They caught one when they caught the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development having said that supplies of gas presently available in the Mackenzie Delta put in question the advisability of proceeding with the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he will consider asking the National Energy Board to postpone a final decision on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline until Polar Gas, which has found adequate amounts of proven gas to warrant a pipeline, has had time to apply to the National Energy Board, and the board has had opportunity to consider that application?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that the National Energy Board proceed as expeditiously as possible.

BROADCASTING

GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS FOR GREATER CANADIAN CONTENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —my question is to the Minister of Communications. In view of the rhapsody that her speech occasioned with the "sterile press" of this country—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: —I congratulate her on the attainment of her portfolio. Having congratulated her, may I ask this. We are talking about communications.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the expansive response of the press of Canada to the minister's speech given to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters' meeting on Monday, can the minister say what definite proposals she will make in this House or elsewhere for making even more Canadian the broadcast air waves of this country?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I welcome my new critic, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: It's Annapolis Valley.

Mrs. Sauvé: I so much like the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. That is why I made a mistake. I will try to like the hon. member for Annapolis Valley, my critic, as well. I disagree with the hon. member, who suggests that the press is sterile. Considering all the comments it made about my speech, I think it is very prolific. I did not make a specific proposal to the broadcasters, but threw in an idea which I think would help them to increase their revenues in an industry which, as we know, is fragile. It was not a specific proposal. It was an idea, to which I want them to respond. I think it is important to enhance the revenues of broadcasters, so that we may have in this country still better broadcasting.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's response, and her congratulations. It has taken me four long elections and some extracurricular activities to get this far. But, Mr. Speaker, in the words of the astronaut, Neil Armstrong, the next big step is going to be a big step for Canada and a small step for me because we are going right across the way.

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Those were reciprocal congratulations. So now we can cut the mustard and get down to business. I should like to know from the hon. lady, the minister who is most genteel and not necessarily gentle, whether the fact that she took the CAB as her forum to talk about Canadianizing the air waves—

An hon. Member: What is the question?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member for Annapolis Valley would now come to the point. In fairness, I must say he has been allowed considerable latitude with respect to the preamble.

Mr. Nowlan: And quite rightly so, Mr. Speaker, because this is the first time I have paid attention to the hon. lady minister. And it is the first time she has paid attention to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: The point is, and especially with regard to the digression by the rabbit from St. Boniface—he hasn't learned the first law of philosophy, and that is from Descartes—"I know, therefore I am"—

An hon. Member: Bravo!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Egmont.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC AREA OF INCREASED FERRY RATES AND LACK OF ASSISTANCE WITH COST OF ELECTRICITY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. It relates to the announcement earlier this week of the increase of rates on the car ferry to Prince Edward Island by some 60 per cent this year and the announcement or non-announcement, made yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with respect to the provision for assistance in terms of sky-rocketing electricity costs in Atlantic Canada. Has the department made an assessment of the impact of these two moves by two other departments of the federal government in terms of the deterioration of federal assistance when it comes to reducing the disparity between the economically disadvantaged regions of Canada and others.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in fact the department follows very closely the evolution of energy costs in the Maritime provinces and especially in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. We keep an eye on the influence additional costs could have on the activities of the industries as well as the general population.

We have expressed our concern in this regard to our colleagues of the cabinet, and I can assure this House, Mr. Speaker, that the department and myself keep watching the situation very closely and try by every means at our disposal to ensure that the effects are not too severe in that part of the country.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF EXTENDING SINGLE PRICE POLICY TO ELECTRICITY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the remarks made just now by the minister and the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance which were made last night in the course of the adjournment debate, I would direct a supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Inasmuch as the parliamentary secretary was not able to complete his remarks but indicated at the end that the federal government was committed to implementing a single price policy but was not able to clarify whether that will be extended now to electrical costs, can the minister tell us whether or not such a move is now under consideration and whether it will be an item for discussion by first ministers when they meet next week?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a single price policy is now in effect and has been for the last several years with regard to petroleum.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am well aware of that fact, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform us, in view of the remarks of his parliamentary secretary and suggestions at the earlier conference of finance ministers about adjustments in the equalization formula which the minister said were under consideration, whether there will be consideration of government policy which will have the effect of widening the gap of disparity of electrical costs in, say, the Province of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia as compared to the cost in, let us say, Central Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There will undoubtedly be discussion of this question at the meeting with regard to petroleum and natural gas prices which will occur early in May. I have to point out to the hon. gentleman that there is presently a great variation in electricity costs right across Canada and even within provinces. The notion of attempting to equalize to a single price would, of course, place a tremendous burden on the treasury.

ENERGY

EFFECT OF NEW ENERGY POLICY ON CONFERENCE TO ESTABLISH OIL AND GAS PRICES—AGREEMENT OF PROVINCES WITH POLICY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that the main item on the agenda of the first ministers' conference next week is the establishment of the domestic price of oil and natural gas, and since the energy policy tabled yesterday states that the first target is to move domestic oil prices toward international levels and to move domestic prices for natural gas to an appropriate competitive relationship over the next two to four years, would the minister tell us whether all the provinces have agreed to this policy and, if not, would he agree that the purpose of the first ministers' conference next week to establish oil and gas prices has been pre-empted or at least seriously inhibited by his announcement?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would not say that the announcement in any way inhibits the conference. Indeed, I think it will be a very useful background to the conference. I might add in that connection that contrary to the views expressed by the hon. member's benchmate yesterday there has been a great deal of consultation between myself and the other energy ministers. At least two conferences of energy ministers dealt with this matter as one of the items on the agenda and there have been further conferences between the leading officials of the various provincial departments of energy or their equivalent extending over some months. So there has been a great degree of consultation and, I might say, a broad measure of approval for the measures introduced yesterday.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CONCLUSION OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL THAT ACT RAISES UNEMPLOYMENT RATE AND FOSTERS DISINCENTIVE TO WORK—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I know he has had an opportunity of studying the recent report of the Economic Council of Canada, "People and Jobs", which has concluded that the present Unemployment Insurance Act raises the unemployment rate and fosters a disincentive to work. Is the minister in a position to respond to these findings? In short, does he agree with the findings of the Economic Council?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): As I indicated to the hon. member the other day, we will have a chance to discuss this matter in detail when I appear before the standing committee which I think is the more appropriate occasion. As to agreement with the council's conclusions, I think the hon. member, as is sometimes the case, has taken one single portion of the report and exploited it to illustrate a particular point without covering other portions of the report. In other words, it is slightly out of context.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Alexander: I know the minister is very concerned about the eight-week eligibility period and the time during which a person can receive unemployment insurance benefit. He stated on October 27, 1975, when dealing with Bill C-69, that he was assessing or reviewing the benefit structure which includes those matters to which I have just referred. Has he concluded this study and if so is he able to give us any hint as to what he has found? In particular, will he assure us that he will lay before the standing committee or before the House the findings of the study he has made with respect to the benefit structure?

Mr. Andras: I believe I have already laid before the standing committee considerable detail as to the findings which have emerged from this study, but I will be glad to do more when we consider the matter in committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRIME MINISTER OF BELGIUM

Mr. Speaker: I know all hon. members will join with me in welcoming the presence in our gallery of a most distinguished visitor in the person of the Prime Minister of Belgium, Mr. Leo Tindemans.

● (1500)

During his all too brief visit here the Prime Minister is accompanied by Mrs. Tindemans, by the Minister of Foreign Affairs and of Development Co-operation, in the person of Mr. Renaat Van Elslande, and Mrs. Van Elslande; and a person who may be "slightly familiar" to the members of this House—our very distinguished ambassador to that country, the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock has a question of privilege.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications, recently said that she wants to eliminate violence on television. In view of the proceedings in the House today, I wonder whether she would get together with the government House leader and shelve his plan to have television in the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been complaints in this House for several days about the denial of the right to bid on certain projects. I wish to enter a protest on behalf of the hon. member for Egmont, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond, as well as on my own behalf, in that we were not given the opportunity to bid on a certain project. I may say that if we had been given that opportunity, any one of us would have done it completely free of charge. So I wonder why the President of the Privy Council had to run off to Toronto to get married!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Even so, Mr. Speaker, we would add to the congratulations that were expressed on the floor of the House the day after he did it. We wish him and Mrs. Sharp the very best, and we are happy to welcome him back to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in once again expressing, now in the presence of the hon. gentleman, the good wishes which we expressed on the day he "flew the coop" from us and took upon himself a wife. I was looking at the tanned visage of the government House leader, and judging from his tan I, for one, would have to second guess whether or not he was in fact on honeymoon when he was away. Nonetheless, we do welcome him back and all of us join in extending to him and his wife our very best wishes for a long and happy married life.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank all hon. members for their good wishes on my recent marriage. I feel very fortunate: I mean fortunate to have married, not just to have been away from the House—so that there is no misunderstanding about that. It is one of those happy occasions. Indeed, when I let my parliamentary secretary into the secret the night before, so that he would be equipped to speak for me the following day, he said, "I'm glad there's a little romance around here".

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize. Earlier while someone was talking about the minister, I was discussing with a colleague from the Progressive Conservative Party. Still I want to extend personally, on behalf of my colleagues and on my behalf, our best wishes to the minister and congratulate him for having recognized the official bilingualism in Canada by marrying a French Canadian. This is an outstanding quality of the minister which I want to point out to the House. So we sincerely wish him many years of happiness.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a different point of order. Two weeks ago today, the last day the House sat before the Easter break, I asked a question in the House which is to be found at page 12811 of Hansard and to which I should like to make a correction. My question was:

Has the Prime Minister been advised that a company whose principal owner is a fairly senior employee of the Bank of Canada has been awarded at least four cleaning contracts in federal government buildings in Ottawa since 1972 and, if so, does the minister consider that to be a conflict of interest?

During the Easter break I found out that some of the information on which I had based that question was incorrect, and I thought it only fair for the record to point this out in the House. The information was honestly obtained. I also want to say that I regret if I have caused any inconvenience to anybody in the Bank of Canada. I also want to point out that a case like this illustrates that it would be wise if the Department of Public Works discontinued the practice of issuing contracts to companies whose principal owners are unknown to the government.

BILINGUALISM—KNOWLEDGE OF ENGLISH AND FRENCH AS FACTORS FOR PROMOTION

Question No. 3,813—Mr. Howie:

To what extent is linguistic knowledge of (a) English, (b) French a factor in promotions to and within the commissioned officer class in the Canadian Army?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): (a) and (b) Linguistic knowledge of both English and French is not a factor in promotions to commissioned rank and within commissioned ranks up to the rank of Captain. However, in all officer classifications, (except for some specialist officer's classifications) knowledge of English is necessary to complete classification training which is a prerequisite to promotion within commissioned ranks up to the rank of Captain. For promotion to the rank of Major and above linguistic ability in a second official language is a factor. The total scoring system which determines relative merit is based on two major appraisal scores, "Performance and Potential". "Performance" accounts for 80 per cent and "Potential" for 20 per cent of the total possible merit score, and linguistic ability is one of the factors considered under "Potential". Other factors under "Potential" are qualifications, experience, personality, age and such other factors considered appropriate by the promotion board membership. Thus linguistic ability in a second official language, whether English or French should enhance an officer's position with respect to promotion to the ranks of Major or above in relation to a unilingual contemporary when all other factors are equal.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PERSONNEL LINGUISTIC QUOTA SYSTEM

Question No. 3,815—Mr. Howie:

Does any linguistic quota system exist in the commissioned officer category of the Armed Forces that could require the promotion of a junior officer to a senior position in preference to a more senior officer and, if so, what is the quota system?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): To support the Government's Bilingual program the department is endeavouring to establish by 1987 an Anglophone/Francophone balance of personnel in the forces corresponding to the national ratio of the two groups, currently 73 per cent Anglophones/27 per cent Francophones. To provide an equitable distribution of this ratio in all classifications and trades and at all rank levels some adjustments to the promotion merit lists as described in Question No. 3813 are made periodically, when possible and practicable, in the ranks of Major and above. Where such an adjustment is made the promotion of the officer who would otherwise have been promoted is protected and he or she will be promoted when the next vacancy occurs.

UIC BENEFIT PAYMENTS

Question No. 5,035—Mr. Lawrence:

1. In (a) 1974, (b) 1975, how many persons receiving unemployment insurance benefits had a gross annual income (i) in excess of $50,000, (ii) from $40,000 to $50,000, (iii) from $30,000 to $39,999, (iv) from $20,000 to $29,999, (v) from $10,000 to $19,999, (vi) of less than $10,000?

2. What was the total number of persons who received unemployment insurance benefits in (a) 1974, (b) 1975?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): In so far as the Unemployment Insurance Commission is concerned: 1. (a) and (b) Information concerning the number of persons receiving Unemployment Insurance Benefit by gross annual income is not compiled by the Commission.

2. (a) 1974 2.03 million. (b) 1975, 2.44 million.

AMOUNT OF ESTATE TAXES COLLECTED IN CANADA AND PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Question No. 5,138—Mr. Matte:

For the fiscal years 1973-74 and 1974-75 what were the amounts of estate taxes collected in (a) Canada, (b) the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) Canada

	1973-74	1974-75
(i) Estate tax	$14.4 million	$7.1 million
(ii) Provincial succession duties	$24.8 million*	$17.6 million*

*Includes provincial gift tax.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Tax reform for 1972 discontinued the application of federal estate taxes for the years subsequent to 1971. All estate tax activity in recent years has been in respect of estates arising before that time and revenue collected during the period in question is strictly due to reassessments and prolonged assessments of estates that arose before 1972. Provincial succession duties were collected in 1973-1974 and 1974-1975 when the Department administered the Succession Duty Acts and Gift Tax Acts of the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. (b) Quebec. (i) No provincial breakdown is available of collections of estate tax in 1973-1974 and 1974-1975. (ii) The Quebec Succession Duty Act is administered by the Quebec provincial government and we have no information with respect to amounts collected in 1973-1974 and 1974-1975.

DEVELOPMENT PROJECT OF PARK NEAR LAKE LONG OF MONTAUBAN—CHAMPLAIN CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 5,159—Mr. Matte:

1. Have any monies been voted for the development project of a park near Lake Long of Montauban in the Constituency of Champlain and (a) if so, in what amount, (b) if not, for what reason?

2. Is the project (a) the subject of a conflict between the government and the Province of Quebec, (b) hindered by the existence of the National Saguenay Park?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No. (a) None. (b) Parks Canada has no such project under active consideration.

2. (a) Answered by 1. (b) Answered by 1.

INCOME TAX PAID BY HUTTERIAN BRETHREN

Question No. 5,207—Mr. Horner:

1. In what years did the Hutterian Brethren pay income tax and what was the total amount in each case?

2. Has the government refunded this money to the Hutterian Brethren and, if so, was interest paid?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): 1. This information is not available as departmental records are not maintained according to the religion of taxpayers.

2. See answer to Part 1.

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, April 27, consideration of Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my place at this time. Having spoken last night for five minutes, I did not appreciate that today I would be honoured by the return of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). From the grassroots of the House of Commons, not just through the House leaders, I should like to congratulate him and to echo and repeat ad infinitum the good wishes that we all have for him regarding the very happy step he took at Easter. I would not pontificate about the Easter message, but I would question the fact that the government House leader took only a week's Easter recess. In view of what happened over the Easter recess to the President of the Privy Council, I think he would have had the almost unanimous blessing of members on all sides of the House if he had taken two, three, or perhaps even four weeks to make sure that the happy union that occurred at Easter shall continue thereafter, as I am sure it will.

After those Goldilocks words and, as the leader of the Social Credit party said, after the happy moonglow of romance, I find it difficult now to shift from platitutes about honeymoons and marriage to the realities of the Anti-Inflation Board. Not since the doctor created Frankenstein has there been a creation on the floor of this House to equal Bill C-89. There are many of us humble people from the grassroots of Canada who believe in what our leader has said. We campaigned, we fought, we talked, and sometimes we were even questioned about what went on in that grand old election campaign of July, 1974. I was one of those who took a stand in trying to defend something that was vital to Canada, with all its imperfections.

● (1510)

Like other members in my party, I took a stand and our party was politically lacerated by the people of Canada: we are not now sitting over there. I will not waste too much time on sad, bittersweet memories or thoughts of what might have been—because we will be there. One thing that many people can say about the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), my former leader, is that he may have many pluses and he may have many minuses, but he speaks because he believes in something, and because he believes, he remains true. He did not do a flip-flop like this government. This government is like a gosh darn cookie jar in a lumberjack camp. This government wanted to cook pancakes; they put all the ingredients into the old frying pan.

An hon. Member: Come to the point.

Mr. Nowlan: Now we hear from the mountain member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane). If he wants to get involved in this debate, I would like him to speak now or go back to his riding and try to match his words of today with what he said in July, 1974. There may be a Gregorian calendar, a Christian calendar and there may be a Judaic-Christian calendar. The fact of the matter is that my happy friend from Hamilton Mountain, who is one of the lovelier people in this House, cannot face himself in the mirror. That is why the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) does not shave his face; that is why he has a beard.

I am amazed that the hon. member from "Happy Mountain", or the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain, has the temerity to even look in the mirror. I guess he does shave, though, and has never got over the baby fuzz. "Happy Gus MacFarlane, I do not know how you can face yourself in the mirror after the way you people campaigned in July, 1974, as compared to the facts of reality today." In any event, I do not want to get too political.

Mr. Paproski: Go ahead, Pat.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not want to get too political, but the fact of the matter is, in very serious vein, that my colleague the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has moved an amendment to a clause that in fact will allow controls for 18 months. Then my happy friend the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), who has to find happiness somewhere, and my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who is a happy fellow too, have concocted what I call the maypole dance. They have proposed a subamendment, not to have controls for 18 months but to end them on May 1, 1976. I am not going to waste too much time trying to analyse that subamendment because, quite frankly, it has no credence at all when taken in the light of what this party believes in or what this party stood for and campaigned for, namely, that this government should get off its duff and try to do something about inflation. This subamendment comes from my friends to the left, and they are so far to the left that I think they should be locked up in some type of sanatorium. They are so far to the left that obviously they do not put any credence in the fight that every Canadian is trying to win that is, the fight against inflation.

I said last night, in the few remarks I made before the hour of ten o'clock, that I respected the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and Jean-Luc Pepin, chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, and that I had some respect for the government. However, unless each individual Canadian begins to fins some personal solution to inflation, quite frankly we are not going to dampen these inflationary fires. The point is that some hon. members in the back row across the way have lately echoed what my leader has said. We want a 90-day freeze to wet the towels of all Canadians across the country so that we can get out of this inflationary psychology. We want people to stop and think before buying, perhaps because they know the cost will be 20 per cent lower tomorrow. This might cause people to pause and think. Perhaps that is what this government should do: it should begin to think.

Coming back to the bill—and I am very serious about this—this is the party that wanted some type of government intervention, and this was part of our campaing back in July, 1974. I found it very difficult to campaign because—

An hon. Member: And your party lost.

Mr. Nowlan: My hon. friend from Bathurst—

Mr. Breau: Gloucester.

Mr. Nowlan: We have heard from my friend Herb from Gloucester. The point is that this was the only party to take a stand in 1972 and 1974. We tried to tell the Canadian people that something could be done.

An hon. Member: And you struck out.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member is right; electorally and politically we failed. However, there is something that means much more to many of us, and that is our country.

An hon. Member: And integrity.

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, and integrity, as my hon. friend says. We did not fail because our integrity was not intact; in fact, our integrity is even better today than it was, as is the integrity of the hon. member for Halifax. His reputation for integrity is better today than it ever was as a result of those heydays in the summer of July, 1974.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: I have not finished, but the hon. member wants to ask a question.

Mr. Breau: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity of putting a question. I agree with the hon. member that we all value integrity and that there is integrity in that party. I do not quarrel with that, but he seems to be questioning the integrity of other people.

Mr. Nowlan: Certainly.

Mr. Breau: Is he not aware that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) admitted during the election campaign of 1974 that the government of Canada had a contingency plan for some kind of wage and price controls, and that under certain circumstances they would be brought forward?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before returning the floor to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) I should indicate that his remaining time is rather short.

Mr. Nowlan: How many minutes?

Mr. Speaker: About three, officially.

Mr. Nowlan: I am not going to take up those three minutes in answering the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). I am talking about integrity, and the fact of the matter is, as I said last night, if you are really going to sell the inflation package, the person who should sell it is the leader of the land, your Prime Minister and my Prime Minister. Why is that right hon. gentleman, who is a persuasive man, not out across this country from sea to sea preaching the message of belt-tightening, discipline and integrity? The reason he is not, has not and will not, is that there is no integrity: he has done a flip-flop that is the biggest pancake in the political history of Canada.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Getting back to the anti-inflation bill, this country of Canada in 1968 was caught up in something called "Trudeaumania". Many members won and are here. There were many members on this side who lost as a result of that so-called "Trudeaumania". It is a sad thing to this particular member of parliament, who happened to win in spite of Trudeaumania, that the so-called just society will, under Bill C-89, become a controlled society. I am seriously suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all my colleagues in this House that controls are alien to the Canadian public. This country was not built on controls. It was built on the initiative of individuals who were sometimes rewarded by tax incentives.

One of the reasons I do not hesitate to support the amendment of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, who is trying to restrict the controls to a period of 18 months, is that this bill is not designed to allow controls for three years but allows, by order in council, the Treasury Board to impose controls ad infinitum. Controls are alien to the North American continent, and certainly to parliament. This bill distorts the economic picture. I give great credit to my friends to the left for their sincerity and because some of them are school teachers. I have a brother-in-law in Nova Scotia who is a school teacher. The package in respect of the school teachers in Nova Scotia which was brought before the Anti-inflation Board has been distorted. These teachers did not ask for an increase for a long period. However, through a collective agency which bargains for all teachers in Nova Scotia, a package was prepared which has been challenged by the Anti-Inflation Board.

We have the idiotic situation that the teachers in that province must come to Ottawa to make sure that they get what they are entitled to. Because they did not make a demand for three years, what they have asked for in a one-year period appears to be above the guidelines set out by this government. They are being penalized by school boards in other parts of this country who have successfully negotiated in the last three years and are far above the level of the teachers in Nova Scotia. They are so far behind they can never catch up. There is no more responsible body in Nova Scotia than these teachers.

This is one reason controls are anathema to this country. I would not be in the House of Commons if there was equality. I am here because of the fundamental disparities and differences which are our curse and our challenge. That is why this House of Commons must deal in its funny way with procedural rules which are almost archaic and which you, Mr. Speaker, labour on and on to give fundamental judgments. However, you are a captive of this system that has been a fundamental part of our procedure.

In any class in which I have spoken to my students I always told them that when this House of Commons is in session it is the closest thing there is to the heart of Canada. I do not know of another institution which is so symbolically representative of the 23 million or 24 million Canadians, even with all its imperfections. Earlier I said that I would not be here if we had controls, because if we had controls and equality in my area we would never have survived.

I think, quite frankly, that the strength of this country lies in what the late right hon. member for Algoma East, Lester B. Pearson, used to say. He said that through diversity there is strength, and with unity there is common cause. Here we have a long-term control package at a time when we have escalating energy problems in Atlantic Canada, where people on moderate incomes have electricity bills of $300 and $400.

The fabric of this country is not based on linguistics or on race. This is an integral part of the country, but we must do something about an economic condition. As yet there has not been too much hue and cry from the people of Atlantic Canada. This is the reason I am happy to have an opportunity to participate in this debate on the amendment. We go along with controls that are down to earth, but I will never vote for a bill that puts controls in force for three years which, by order in council, can be extended ad infinitum. I am amazed that the Minister of Finance could acquiesce in this. I am amazed that he would ask the opposition to become an accessory before the fact in respect of Bill C-89.

The cabinet will change, and we do not know what attitude another cabinet will have. Ministers come and go. Very many of them will go. In fact, they should all go and I hope they do. Seriously, however, I cannot understand how my good friend from Rosedale, the Minister of Finance, who has taken constitutional law, let alone any government whether Liberal, Conservative or, in the name of infamy, NDP, could have brought in an open-ended program of controls. While I was interested in the endorsation of the just society, I will not be a part of this controlled society.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has returned. I am always interested in noting the behaviour of the Minister of Finance. He seems either to take some words out of context to take simplistic attitudes or come to simplistic conclusions concerning the attitude of the opposition. Yesterday he referred to the remarks of my colleague for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). He referred to what he claimed might have been insincere words and attitudes by the former leader of our party the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), with regard to parts of this bill.

Bill C-89 is not only concerned with the granting of the right of appeal from decisions of the Anti-Inflation Board by salaried and hourly-rated workers or parties to a decision, but there is something much more fundamental. There is an amending of section 46 of Bill C-73, which has to do with the period of these controls and the procedures and formulas that may be adopted. I think it was dishonest of the minister to say what he did about this party. This party voted in favour of Bill C-73 on second reading in order to have it sent to the committee, although we had reservations which were clearly expressed by the then leader of the party and other spokesmen in respect of the period of controls which we considered to be excessive.

We said we would do everything we could to have the period shortened and, depending on the action and attitude of the government in committee, we would then reserve our position at third reading. We voted against the bill at third reading, as we had undertaken, because the government refused to change it one iota except for the introduction of a review formula that was of little consequence. In the same way, there is nothing insincere about our having voted for Bill C-89 to go to the committee. That is not approval of the bill. This is the reason I say it is wrong for the Minister of Finance simply to say we voted before for this bill on second reading, and now are bitterly complaining about it and doing a flip-flop. That is not so. It was clearly indicated that we wanted to see the bill go forward to committee. That is where bills are supposed to be studied. The Minister of Finance is the author of the present rules under which we operate. All he has to do is review the speeches he made in proposing and supporting the rules.

My colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), in committee raised a point with regard to the power of the governor in council to extend by way of order in council the ambit of the Anti-Inflation Board under Bill C-73. Even with regard to the construction industry section 3(2)(b)(i) provides for a limitation of jurisdiction on firms employing 20 or more persons. Yet we now see the jurisdiction extended to all construction firms, even one-man firms. I wish hon. members and other persons outside the House, particularly those who write and comment about what goes on in the House, would realise that under section 12 of Bill C-73 the governor in council has the right to refer a question of extension to the Anti-Inflation Board, the board then will consider it and make a recommendation back to the governor in council, who in turn issues an order in council implementing the recommendation of the AIB as to the extension of jurisdiction.

It is as simple as taking a tennis ball, bouncing it against a wall and then having it come back to the hand, because the governor in council is extending the jurisdiction of controls not only from the few Galbraithian, selective controls that they allege were to be have been the basis of this program last October, and then in November and December, but from when the legislation was under consideration in the House. We have seen them go from some 650 firms to possibly 65,000 or 100,000 firms; and we will see the jurisdiction extended to insurance companies, property and casualty insurance companies, life insurance companies, banks and all the other institutions which are to be gradually brought under the net of controls.

How is it to be done? Not straightforward, but covertly, as I have said, by throwing a ball against the wall and catching it. The government say it thinks it would like to extend the jurisdiction of controls over this or that section of the economy. They turn to the Anti-Inflation Board, which merely reflects back the thinking in the form of a recommendation, and on that recommendation which was generated by the governor in council the order in council is issued and the extension made. That is how control over the construction industry was extended all the way down to one-man firms.

Some surveys of results of the AIB decisions have appeared recently, one of which is to be found in the Financial Times of April 26, 1976. This is an indication of what has been happening. Because I do not have much time, I will read directly from the report. All credit for this must go to those people who researched and prepared the story. The story originates in Ottawa and reads:

Ottawa—The Anti-Inflation Board has been allowing far more generous pay increases in the public sector than in private industry.

A Financial Times survey of 104 wage decisions made by the board shows this divergence clearly.

The survey shows 69 per cent of workers in the public sector have been allowed increases of 20 per cent or more, while raises for 79 per cent of employees in the private sector have been held to 15 per cent or less.

The survey also raises the question of whether the board is controlling wage levels at all. It finds that in most decisions the awards handed down from Ottawa have been in line with the pace of wage settlements before last October when the board was created.

This is particularly true for public sector employees who, in several recent cases, have won pay increases of 20 per cent or more when the guidelines the board is supposed to enforce allow first-year pay rises of little more than 10 per cent.

During the whole of 1975, wage settlements averaged 19 per cent for government employees and 14.2 per cent in the private sector. This is the situation that the board was brought in to control last October, with the wage ceiling set at a maximum 12 per cent for this year.

Analysis of 104 cases involving 57,000 workers meriting "special consideration" show that in the case of first-year wage settlements, the board has approved:

Wage increases of 20 per cent or more for 15,000 public servants, most of them employees of Ontario school boards.

That is over 15 per cent in one year. The article continues:

Wage rises of 15 per cent or more for 7,500 private sector workers, and pay hikes in about the same range as last year's settlements (10 per cent to 15 per cent) for another 27,000 employees in private sector cases.

A mere 1,000 private sector workers, and 500 government employees, have been held to the government's intended guideline of a 10 per cent salary advance (8 per cent for inflation, and 2 per cent for productivity).

The figures on the number of employees covered by board decisions are not complete. In handing down decisions before March, the board did not always detail the number of workers involved.

What has been the effect of the AIB with regard to wage rates? Have they, in fact, slowed down the wage rates that were being negotiated and won during 1975, which were this prime motivation for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government to come forward with this program of wage controls last October? Why were the increases so high in the public sector as against the private sector? These are questions which the AIB will have to answer.

Let us talk about some other impacts. My colleague the hon. member for York-Simcoe referred yesterday to the restrictions imposed upon property and casualty insurance companies. I cannot warn hon. members too much about the perilous condition in which property and casualty insurance companies find themselves in Canada at present. Do they know that there are many major building projects for which insurance cannot be obtained, that performance bonds cannot be obtained, that firms with fleets of automobiles and trucks are restricted to two or three brokers in the country, and that 27 major and minor foreign insurance companies withdrew from Canada in 1975?

Mr. Benjamin: Good.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) says it is good that insurance companies are withdrawing from Canada because the NDP operate a deceitful plan so far as the public is concerned. One has only to look to British Columbia and to the difficulties in Manitoba and Saskatchewan with regard to public insurance.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

● (1540)

Mr. Broadbent: In Manitoba and Saskatchewan they have the lowest auto insurance in Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Speaking about lower-priced insurance, look at the mess which came about in British Columbia, with hundreds of millions of dollars of loss and additional gasoline taxes to cover deficiencies in the insurance program. In Manitoba that is the only way they are able to reduce the losses to several millions of dollars a year.

Mr. Broadbent: Absurd.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In any event, we know there is a very difficult decision to make in Canada. Casualty claims are far too high. We know that the performance in 1974 was nearly disastrous. There is insufficient insurance in Canada today to meet the requirements of the Canadian market. Why? Because insurance companies at the present time are not being allowed to increase their rates in order to meet the level of casualty claims, and the casualty claims include inflated damage settlements and inflated claims for property damage from body shop repairs where the charge by automobile companies for parts increased from 40 per cent to 70 per cent last year. This situation is scandalous. The cost of building is high and any damage claim resulting from fire damage to a building is out of this world. Some of the blame has to be levelled at the courts because of the extent of the damage awards they are making. They are entirely out of line. That is one of the effects on the insurance industry.

I want to quote from a speech made by R. M. MacIntosh, executive vice-president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, on April 15, 1976. Mr. MacIntosh is a man who has appeared before many committees of this House and who is well known as one who really understands banking and business. He said:

The general philosophy of the anti-inflation guidelines is to weigh more heavily on corporations whose profits are in a high and rising profile. This necessarily follows from the use of a five-year average as the base for calculating "excess" profits in 1976. Those who have been successful, efficient and productive—

That is anathema to the New Democrats. The quotation continues:

—are penalized more than those who have been the opposite. So also are those who may have had some poor years during the base period for whatever reason, but have since experienced a turnaround. A record of declining or flat corporate performance is a badge of honour under the guidelines.

Also for the New Democrats.

This being the case, the guidelines are forcing the more profitable firms to become price leaders. They are the ones who must raise their input prices or reduce their selling prices relative to others. Since the market system still impacts even the biggest fellows, no matter what Ottawa ideology may declare, the less profitable will have to meet these market prices. By definition the most profitable will be best able to withstand regulatory control of profits in the short-run. The greater the severity of the AIB's interpretation of the guidelines, the greater the marginal impact on those who are least able to stand it. Hence through the price system, those firms which already had inadequate profit margins for whatever reason will not benefit from the welfare approach to the application of the guidelines to profits. If the margins of the profitable are squeezed, so will be those of the unprofitable, thus making it more difficult for the latter to raise capital, expand and compete.

In summary, the underlying theory of using heavy leverage on the most profitable to achieve control over inflation may well prove to have unintended side-effects on the unprofitable. This is not an argument against having wage and price guidelines at all, but against the particular methods of application.

I underline this because in 1973 and again in 1974 I, along with my colleagues, advocated a total wage and price freeze with selective controls to follow.

In retrospect, it would have been better to use the U.S. technique of a total short-term freeze to break expectations, followed by a selective removal of controls over perhaps a year.

I would have said 18 months, but Mr. MacIntosh says a year.

The only real purpose of controls is to break the psychological spiral—

This is admitted by the Minister of Finance and by the Prime Minister.

—and to seize the occasion in order to establish a tougher combination of fiscal and monetary policies. Unfortunately the whole issue of anti-inflation technique has become obscured by a quite different debate over the social and economy structure.

We are not against any question of appeal. That should have been in Bill C-73. What we are against, though—and this is why the hon. member for York-Simcoe advanced amendments Nos. 1 and 2—is that Bill C-89 amends the formula contained in clause 46 of Bill C-73, and it is perfectly proper to come back to this House to review the decision about three-year controls and to reduce them to 18 months. We support the idea of 18 months. That is the essence of the amendments of the hon. member for York-Simcoe and we intend to support his amendments. To my mind, that is a justifiable reason to vote against the bill, because that is consistent with the statements and the votes of this party a few months ago on Bill C-73, at which time the same question was at issue.

We do not oppose the right of appeal, but we find that there is greater wrong in the terminal danger of the period of control and the extension, by way of order in council—after a totally inadequate debate in this House—of controls for an indefinite period into the future. To us that is totally wrong and fatal to the program and that is why we will vote against it.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to some of the points made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). First, with regard to his quotation of Mr. MacIntosh in his discussion about a one-year period for American controls, I remind him, as I would remind Mr. MacIntosh, that the American controls were on, not for a period of one year but for a period of just under three years, with at least two freezes and with several different selective methods of control. So if in his quotation the hon. member is using the American experience as any kind of example of what the expected lifetime of controls should be, it seems to me that should be an argument in support of a three-year period rather than the shorter period he is talking about.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Just to make sure that we are talking about the same thing, would the minister accept, however, that in the United States the program started with a total freeze and then a phasing out of the controls, and it was that period when there was a total freeze, and the first phase of removal or relaxation lasted a year?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think the hon. member should go back and look at it, because they started in with a total freeze, went to another phase, had to come back to a total freeze again and had to go to a fourth system. So I think when we look at the record of the American program it is perfectly clear that it was a highly erratic one and that they would have been better off in the long run to have tried to set for themselves a planned interval in which the program would be effective than to have stopped and started the shift from freeze and off and on again, as in fact they did.

The hon. member made a series of arguments in favour of casualty and property insurance companies not being covered by the anti-inflation program. I think the best way to answer him would be to read a letter dated April 9 on the notepaper of Walter Baker, QC, MP, to me as Minister of Finance. The letter reads as follows:

I realize that the government has brought the property insurance companies under the umbrella of the anti-inflation guidelines and subject to the review of the board, but I have had a letter from constituents of mine, who indicate that they recently received an invoice for renewal of their car insurance policy which is due on April 1st, 1976. They were amazed to see that there was an increase of 26 per cent on the wife's car coverage and a similar increase on the car operated by the husband, who are insured on the same policy and this occurred after a period when there have been no claims in the last 12 months.

● (1550)

Mr. Speaker, things may be all right for the casualty insurance companies a far as the hon. member for Edmonton West is concerned, but the constituents of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and a lot of other people in Canada are concerned about the rate of their car insurance and insurance on a number of other things such as property. They are not unreasonably expecting to have some kind of protection from the Anti-Inflation Board, to the extent that it can be done, from unjustified increases in costs.

An hon. Member: Why do you not intervene?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. member is advocating that we should not have the kind of protection that the constituents of his colleagues seem to be concerned about, that is an interesting observation. At least we have two viewpoints on the question.

On the third point, an article appeared in the Financial Times of April 26, 1976, with regard to the settlements which were scrutinized by the Anti-Inflation Board. I might say it was a highly misleading article in which the author sought to establish that the board had been unduly discriminatory in favour of the public sector rather than the private sector, in his judgment. I should like to point out to the House that of course the principal group that the board has had to consider in the public sector is the Toronto school teachers and other school teachers in the province of Ontario, in the cases of all of whom the opportunity to catch up in terms of salary and inflation had not been present in the way it was for the private sector.

Prior to October 14, two-thirds of the Ontario teachers had signed collective agreements which were predominantly in the 25 per cent to 30 per cent range for the first year of the contract. To restrict the other one-third to increases of 10 per cent to 12 per cent would have seriously impaired historical relationships by opening a 10 per cent to 20 per cent salary gap between teachers who had previously received similar salaries. If the article had been written with some honesty, I think the writer should have taken into account the fact that for historical reasons the school teachers in Ontario had not been able to catch up with the rest of the community but were in the course of doing so in this particular year. It was for that reason that the school teacher settlements have distorted the over-all settlements scrutinized by the Anti-Inflation Board.

By way of comparison, in the same period 18 non-teacher public sector cases covering only 1,776 employees came before the board. On average the award was 13.1 per cent, a rollback of 1.7 percentage points from demands of 14.8 per cent. This contrasts with total non-teacher awards of 14.6 per cent which were 1.9 percentage points below demands of 16.5 per cent. In other words, taking out the Ontario school teachers' case, because that particular group had not had an opportunity to catch up as had most others in the community, one can see that there was not in any sense an unbalanced favouring of the public sector over the private sector.

I am sure this article will continue to be quoted by hon. members. I think they should bear in mind, however, that the writer of the article, whether deliberately or otherwise, failed to take account of the distortion that was introduced because of the high school teachers' situation. If hon. members opposite want to say that the Toronto high school teachers, or Renfrew high school teachers and others in Ontario should not be permitted to catch up, that in those particular communities where, because of the accident of time they have not had the opportunity to catch up, that is one thing. If they are saying that people in my city and some others should be held down to 10 per cent or 12 per cent, then I think they should honestly come right out and say so. If they agree, however, that this particular group had fallen behind and that some of their colleagues throughout the province had other chances to catch up and they were caught by the program in the middle, then I do not think they can fairly argue against the historical relationship exception being applied in their favour.

I see the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) in the House. He was calling for historical relationships in favour of the steelworkers in his constituency. Surely he is not going to say that should be applied as well in favour of the Toronto high school teachers.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): There is no comparison.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to make a few comments on the amendment now before us. Is it necessary to remind hon. members of this whole story and the reason for today's debate? An amendment which we consider reasonable has been put forward with a view to terminating on May 1 of next year the peculiar powers granted to the Anti-Inflation Board, as provided in this legislation.

In view of the effects that we have had in recent years as a result of the adoption of a legislative measure, we have followed the principle and even recommended that steps be taken to control inflation. However, we believe that in view of the huge powers granted to the board, it would be sufficient to end the control period as of May 1, 1977. At that time, we will be in a position to assess the effects of this legislation introduced by the government a few months ago.

Still, Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to representations made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who was then leader of our party, and in particular to the warning he has been extending to the governement for the past four or five years. I would like to remind hon. members of the many representations made by the hon. member for Halifax, supported by his colleagues, as well as the warning he was giving the government when he spoke of the danger that inflation involved. How many times did government members try to make a mockery of him or our party and suggest that we were frightening all the Canadian people? And yet the then Minister of Finance, who was not he who holds this office today, did not listen to these recommendations which we considered good—which were good as a matter of fact—and which would have been very helpful to the government. The Minister of Finance of that time got out of it; he resigned from Parliament washing his hands off it and saying: "It is not my fault!" I believe that we must all remember this period when the hon. member for Halifax went to great lengths to emphasize the importance of this danger and the hardships Canadians would have to face. This problem finally fell on us. Today we are still discussing an amendment and this whole matter.

Of course, one has to recall this government's attitude during the last election campaign of 1974, when we decided as a party to put forward a program that we thought provided a short term solution. It was not easy to tell the truth but we had deemed it necessary and in the interest of the Canadian people to do so. And yet, how many times have we been ridiculed, how often have they attempted to run down our proposal instead of giving it conditional approval with the option of readjusting it later to protect the small man's interests.

● (1600)

I remember very clearly, Mr. Speaker, that it was not easy to make trade unions, agencies and businessmen believe that our proposal was unacceptable, although God knows that the government succeeded very well in doing so. The Prime Minister did not spare his statements and insisted he would never use such a proposal.

Therefore the people were led to believe our proposal was not valid and supported the present government during the elections. It may be asked whether the government has not failed to honour its 1974 commitments and whether it has not deliberately lied to the Canadian people. We are convinced of it because we have seen the government change completely its policy and make to the Canadian people a proposal whose principle had been suggested by my party and whose particulars are entirely different especially in certain cases.

I remember having heard the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board regret this absence of a 90-day period to enable the board and the government to pave the way for reaching some agreement with the provinces, organizations and unions. We thought it necessary to provide a period to discuss those agreements prompting the population to endorse that proposal aimed at improving present conditions. That period or preparation was disregarded and then one is surprised by the strong opposition shown in every sector of the country. How can we trust, Mr. Speaker, a government which had undertaken to reject that formula in 1974? How can one trust a government that shows no concern for such a time of preparation and adaptation, and then ask the people to believe in that board or in the principle of inflation control?

There than, Mr. Speaker, are the reasons why many bodies and some provinces are still reluctant in some regards. Even now, we see that the board has to make some changes, some amendments, proving once again that the lack of a period of preparation and adaptation, for better acceptance, is one weakness in the present law, and was the first error the government made.

And so the people have not only a feeling but the proof of having been cheated by this government in 1974, and that the government did not use the absolutely essential tool a period of preparation would have constituted. Under the circumstances, and bearing in mind the excessives powers of the board, we, who believe in the basic principles of the anti-inflation act, and for that very reason, support the amendment of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), that is to say, that it should not apply beyond May 1, 1977.

May I be allowed to quote here, a statement made by the hon. member for Halifax who said, in no uncertain terms, and I quote:

> It is important to distinguish between a wage and price control program such as has been outlined by the government, such as it is, on one hand and the bill before us because they are not the same.

On November 25, 1975, he said:

> We are not being asked to vote into effect a wage and price control program for a period of six months, a year ... or three years ... We are being asked to give the government the authority to write its own wage and price control program, an anti-inflationary program, or to exercise these powers in any way it may see fit. If the bill should pass, there is nothing to prevent this government changing the program beyond recognition without any further reference back to this parliament. That in itself is sufficient reason for limiting the life of this bill to a period not in excess of 18 months.

I think this statement made by the hon. member for Halifax is very serious and very relevant. For this reason, I also regret that this bill provided for increases from 10 to 12 per cent, taking into account some factors. To what extent, Mr. Speaker, is there an attempt to give the small wage-earner an advantage equal to that of the worker with a reasonable income? When we refer to 10 per cent as applied to a salary of $8,000 and to 10 per cent applied to a salary of $20,000, we succeed once again in widening the gap that exists between the poor and the rich. In my opinion, this is not the objective that the government set for itself concerning the establishment of a just society.

I believe that it is important, Mr. Speaker, to develop a readjustment policy concerning the wage earner who is completely overtaken by the increase in the cost of living and who, under this legislation, has no possibility of getting an increase. On the other hand, those who already have a good income receive increases. Some will say that they have the same percentage of increases. But this is precisely what widens the gap for those who find it hard to keep up with today's cost of living.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I repeat that we support to a certain extent the implementation of this legislation. I am not saying to the minister concerned that we are against the principle of the measure and against the efforts that the government wants to make to curb the inflation which is causing so many problems for all Canadian citizens. But we believe that controls extended over an excessive length of time, in view of the changes which happen daily in our economy, we believe that a reasonable limit would be the one suggested by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (M. Stevens) and that, taking this as a starting point, the government will find and introduce other legislation much more brilliant than what we have seen to date so that the problems that Canadians have in view of the present economic situation will disappear.

Mr. Speaker, I know that my time is nearly expired. I hope that after this debate, the minister will consider the arguments advanced by the opposition. I believe that the population in general is aware that the government had committed itself not to use this tool and felt at a certain time the need to do so but, unfortunately, did not provide this preliminary period which would have been quite useful to the board, because of which it must now amend its programs nearly every day. Under the circunstances, we can certainly not follow blindly a government which shows such weakness concerning such serious legislation. In conclusion, I hope that the comments made on this side of the House will not only enlighten the facts, but also cause certain improvements to be made to this legislation.

[English]

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, as usual, my comments will be brief and to the point. Bill C-89 allegedly amends Bill C-73 in that, as we are told, it provides for certain appeal procedures. But it goes further and leaves open the termination date of the anti-inflation program. It can be extended by decree or order in council on Thanksgiving day, Christmas day, New Year's day or any other time. The point is, the termination date is left open.

I did not support Bill C-73. I have never supported controls which interfere with business enterprise, and still doubt if this procedure is or will be effective. The people of this country, not the anti-inflation program the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced on Thanksgiving day, will help our nation overcome our present inflation, poor economic performance, high unemployment, and so on. In no way will the government be responsible. Controls of this kind have never worked effectively.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Jones: Sure, we need restraint, we need a little belt-tightening and we need to halt inflation and rising unemployment. The process must begin with the Prime Minister and cabinet, with this country's leaders. I come from Atlantic Canada where the effects of the anti-inflation program will be disastrous. Already the program is creating greater unemployment. It is a disincentive to greater productivity and is hurting us tremendously. The government, by introducing such programs, interferes with the individual entrepreneur and wage earner. It is not wrestling inflation to the ground; it is wrestling the average working Canadian and small businessmen to the ground, sometimes into bankruptcy.

● (1610)

Government has an obligation to encourage self-restraint and belt-tightening, instead of enforcing it. If hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches enjoyed the confidence of the people, they could do just that. But they have lost the confidence of the people of this nation. Too much power has been given to the Anti-Inflation Board and to the administrator. The administrator himself said in a speech made recently in one of the western provinces that he had more power than the Department of National Revenue. The legislation has merely built up two or three additional bureaucratic empires. If the present bill goes through, I doubt whether this system of control will ever be eliminated. The controls have certainly eliminated collective bargaining.

Controls are repugnant to the thinking of most Canadians, as I have said on many occasions. I believe the program as proposed by the government should be terminated as soon as possible. It should not be open-ended. With less interference and more good sense on the part of the government this nation could decrease its unemployment rate, become more productive, slow down the inflationary trend and do all the things which need to be done for the good of the state.

To sum up, I believe the anti-inflation program as it has been proposed and put into effect by the government is utter foolishness and should never have been thrust upon the nation.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of points to raise at this stage of Bill C-89. As hon. members may have recognized, for the last few years I have been greatly interested in the public perception of government, and for a minute or two I should like to discuss what I believe to be the cause of increasing public cynicism with regard to the government's program. In my view, it would have been better from the point of view of public perception of the program had the government not seen fit to opt itself out of these arrangements. It would certainly have been better from the point of view of encouraging efforts such as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has asked all Canadians to make in support of the program.

At a cabinet meeting last January the government itself opted out. It did just that. It gave each minister power to rule whether an increase in departmental charges or fees was within the anti-inflation guidelines or not. This can be confirmed by consulting an order in council passed on January 27. Since that date a number of fees, for example passport charges and postal rates, have been increased substantially. In each case they have risen well beyond the guidelines suggested by the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board or by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald).

It seems to me that by this cynical act of opting out, the government has added to the legitimate criticism which is being directed at the program by the general public and increasing the confusion which surrounds it. We have listened to many injunctions from the head of the government, from the Minister of Finance and from the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board urging Canadians to make sacrifices in the interests of getting inflation under control and to support the program of controls for three years in the time-frame of the government. In the time-frame of the opposition it is about 1½ years.

What happens? These injunctions are delivered and advertisements are inserted in national newspapers. As a matter of fact, one newspaper stated in December of last year that the guidelines would apply—I am now quoting—"evenly and fairly to everyone covered by law, including the government of Canada". That was in an advertisement which appeared in December, 1975. On January 27, scarcely a month later, the government itself turned its back on its own advertising campaign by deciding it would not be bound by the regulations administered by the Anti-Inflation Board.

This increases public skepticism. I do not know whether the government is worried about public cynicism and public attitudes toward parliament, but a great many people in the opposition parties are worried about it and a great many people outside this chamber are concerned about the disaffection of the public, about the public attitude toward parliament and toward government in general. I am not given to hyperbole, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that public disaffection has reached great proportions in this country. One hears evidence of it everywhere, and the situation is made worse by the actions of the government itself.

The chairman of the board has confirmed that the government is exempt from the board's jurisdiction despite the fact that government employees come under the wage guidelines. I am really concerned about the fairness of such a state of affairs. The report of the Economic Council of Canada has now come to hand. We have seen the results of the Financial Times survey showing that of 104 wage decisions made by the board, 69 per cent of the workers in the public sector have been awarded increases of 20 per cent or more, while 79 per cent of the private sector increases have been held to 15 per cent or less. The inconsistencies were defended by the chairman on the ground that precontrolled wage levels must be taken into account.

As the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) has just said, this is the very problem employees in the Atlantic provinces face. With an over-all program of controls such as the one the government has put in place, people in the poorer parts of the country are much more seriously affected than others. This goes to the very nature of our federalism. I am not thinking in partisan terms, but when a very large number of the people of Canada do not support the concept of responsible government, then we find ourselves in a very grave situation. I deplore the fact that part of the authorship, if I can use the term, of this dissatisfaction is the action of the government in deciding to opt out of the program. Surely the increase in the cost of a passport could have been held to 8 per cent or, better still, the government might have believed its own rhetoric, believed its own advertising with regard to the necessity for control and kept the price of a passport at $10 for the three-year period.

It is not only a matter of the dollars and cents involved; that is not the message I am trying to get through to the House. The problem that I and many other Canadians have is that by substantially increasing postal rates, passport fees, airport landing fees, security costs at airports, and so on, the government is flying in the face of the exhortations given by the Prime Minister as to the necessity for all of us to do some belt-tightening. In my opinion, the increased cost of a passport merely adds to the cynicism shown by the public toward this program.

● (1620)

Many of my colleagues may have already seen a survey, which has appeared in various publications, conducted by an American professor, Daniel Yankelovich. My hon. friend from Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) may be able to brief me on the pronunciation of that word.

Mr. Paproski: Quite correct.

Mr. Fairweather: He informs me sotto voce that I am right. According to Daniel Yankelovich, the public, generally speaking, is very anxious to support the mixed economy system and responsible government. But the public sees, both in the United States and Canada, that those who now have the advantage of power are not affected fundamentally by a system of controls, whereas the people who have no power, those at the bottom end of the wage scale, are most grievously affected by controls.

I suggest that this situation has serious implications for peace, security and good order in this country. It is a concept that has a fair amount of jurisprudential history in our country and I am surprised that the minister, who in many areas has displayed some sensitivity, would have countenanced the order in council which declared that controls would be all right for the rest of us but would not in any way affect any increases the government itself wished to impose upon the Canadian people.

I think that as a result of that somewhat brutal and insensitive act the government went a long way to changing around the results of polls that were taken by the Canadian Research Centre for the CBC "Newsmagazine" program. The latest polls show that public support for the program has dropped radically. Now only one-third of those surveyed feel that the controls have been applied equitably and will be effective.

As I said a minute or two ago, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister repeatedly urged all of us to give the program our full support and confidence or it would not work. How can the Canadian public have confidence in a government which exhorts us all to fall within the ambit of the controls, and then in the next breath passes an order in council which says, in effect, "It's all right for everybody else, buster, but it is a different game for us. The government of Canada can increase fees and charges well beyond the guidelines. There is one law for all Canadians but not for the government of Canada".

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is not true, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. Fairweather: Perhaps the minister will want to speak again in a moment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With the hon. member's consent, may I speak?

Mr. Fairweather: I have no power to give consent. If the minister wants to deny that the order in council was made—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would require unanimous consent to speak. Is the hon. member willing?

Mr. Fairweather: I am prepared to, but there is a Chair and presumably the Chair is in charge of the proceedings. If you have a question, go ahead.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Is the hon. member permitting a question at this point or terminating his remarks?

Mr. Fairweather: I was in the middle of a speech. The hon. gentleman wanted the floor and I am doing my best to give him the floor.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I thank the hon. member very much. Let me point out to the House that the question whether or not the imposition of taxation should be applied both federally and provincially—because exactly the same provision under the agreements applies to the provincial governments as well as the federal—and whether or not it should be under the Anti-Inflation Board has been very much discussed in this House. It was the subject matter of a very full release by the government on January 15, and was the subject matter of questions answered by me in this House both during the time when Bill C-73 was going through the House and since.

The fact of the matter is that unlike the private sector, when a cost in the government service increases it has to be paid for. It does in other cases, too but in this case any cost increase does not come out of any Crown corporation's or anybody else's profit; it has to be paid for by the taxpayers. The question is, is it to be paid for by the user of the service, the person who parks at the airport or gets a passport, or should it be paid by the taxpayers generally?

Yesterday's Globe and Mail report, which I referred to as a false and misleading one, I repeat is just that. The fact of the matter is that we made this issue perfectly clear both before and after the issuance of the particular order in council referred to. We also made it clear that it was either a question of increasing the user fee, or taxation. Very obviously, under those circumstances a different set of criteria would apply to government than that which applies to a private party, who would have a choice as to whether to take it out of his pocket or not. That is the basic position. I know the hon. member may have been misled by the article, and I regret that; but I think that is a fair statement of the position.

Mr. Fairweather: I think that is wonderful, Mr. Speaker. It is great to have that statement in this debate. I was not misled by that article, but I was apparently misled by the government's injunctions and exhortations. I have certainly been misled by an advertisement saying that the guidelines would apply evenly and fairly to everyone covered by law, including the government of Canada.

I am interested in the fact that whenever this government gets into trouble with its program, it gently passes the buck to the provinces. The provinces are made the whipping-boy for many of the frustrations of this government. I know that the provincial governments can look after themselves, but I happen to be deeply concerned about the public's conception of the fairness of the government of Canada and its ability, first of all, to get wide public support for controls about which, I say quite frankly, many of us fought an election. At the time the government was pretty cynical about them. Then it brought in controls and we were asked to live with them.

The next thing we learn is that various fees and charges made by the government, including postal charges, passport fees, and so on, are to be increased. It is not the passport and postage increases themselves that are the problem, though it is extraordinary to me how, on the one hand, the government can announce what purports to be a periodicals' policy for Canada, and in the next breath almost puts periodicals out of business by increasing postal rates—but that is an aside. The dilemma is that the public's perception of this program and the public's support for it are being diminished by the cynical attitude of the government which in December said that everything would be fair, even and above-board, and then in January exempted itself from its own regulations.

As I have said, I am deeply concerned about public attitude toward government and toward parliament. If the hon. gentleman is not, then he must be luckier than most of us because I can assure him that judging from the results of polls that I read about, whether in the Globe and Mail or elsewhere, there is a lot of disaffection in this land on the part of the public for government and parliament. I, for one, resent the fact that having spent all my working life trying to support the institution of democratic government, at this stage in my life I am finding—and I do not think we should all take this burden on our own shoulders—that the institution we serve is not perceived by the public to be a place where things happen that matter, that affect the individual citizen.

Although I am probably grossly out of order, except that this is part of the general trend of thought about public perceptions of government, I think in a way this accounts for the popularity of such television programs as "Ombudsman" and the fact that there are so many storefront organizations, as they are called, which have had to interpose themselves between members of parliament, the government and the citizen. I am not criticizing this and I do not think we should be surprised about this development, particularly with a government which does not even support its own advertising.

I am sure the interpretation by the Minister of Finance will grip all Canadian citizens when it is relayed to them in the next hour or so. Presumably the workers at the Irving Pulp and Paper Company will be reassured by the minister's message. Presumably the people of Thompson, Manitoba, who are to be gravely affected by the minister's decision, along with the people of Elliot Lake and Sudbury, must feel much better now that the minister has interjected himself into this debate by saying everything is fine.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

The point I am interjecting today is that if the Prime Minister and his government expect general and wide public support, then it has to be seen and believed by the public that the government is part and parcel of this anti-inflation program and that the Anti-Inflation Board is serious about getting inflation under control. The evidence is very strong, by poll and by individual contact that hon. members have with the public, that the public has not yet been persuaded the government is serious. The public has not yet been persuaded that it can support this scheme as being one fairly applied to Canadians from one coast to the other, by big and small corporations including the largest and most monolithic of them all, the government of Canada.

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): It gives me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to speak on this amendment to Bill C-89 proposed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). It is my intention today, as it was yesterday when I proposed a motion under Standing Order 43 which this government did not see fit to accept, and when I asked questions similar to those asked by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), to bring the minister up to date about the cost of living in the north. I really do not believe this government understands how the high cost of living in the north affects the citizens living there. They are there, trying to make a living by extracting the resources this country so badly needs.

Le me start by pointing out the location of Thompson, Manitoba. It seems to me the only time this government recognized there was a place called Thompson was during the 1974 campaign when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and five cabinet ministers paid it a visit in an attempt to win that seat for their candidate. Since then we have not had any representations from the government respecting the north. Thompson is over 500 miles north of Winnipeg. That is quite a distance to those people who are accustomed to travelling in that great corridor from Quebec to Windsor, and I can understand that they would not want to venture that far north.

When this government wants to extract the resources of the north it has no hesitation and no restraint whatsoever. Government forces move in and do the work necessary to take those resources out of the north. However, the government is not willing to put anything back into the north to support the people who are there and have made the north part of their lives. Thompson, Flin-Flon, Snow Lake, Leaf Rapids and Lynn Lake are all mining towns where 80 per cent of the payrolls are from mining. The headline in the Journal today suggested "This city will die" and referred specifically to towns like Thompson, Flin-Flon, Snow Lake, Leaf Rapids and Lynn Lake.

The Anti-Inflation Board recently rolled back an agreement between the International Nickel Company of Canada and the steelworkers of union branch 6166 in Thompson negotiated after many months. The workers felt they had put forward a clear and precise proposal. Built into the proposal were provisions to cover the extra costs to the people who live in the north. As I have said, Thompson is 500 miles north of Winnipeg, a good day's drive by car. The return fare by air is $106. The cost of gasoline is now $1 a gallon, and I see that we can expect a further increase of 25 cents a gallon. The cost of living in the north is much higher than it is in Toronto. The minister was talking about the historical relationship of teachers in Toronto and the steelworkers in Thompson, but he is so far off base that it is obvious he does not know or understand the situation in the north.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Let us take a brief look at hydro rates. They have increased by 25 per cent in the last six months in Manitoba. Heating costs have gone up out of all proportion in the past eight to ten months. In the north, people have to heat their homes for ten months of the year, unlike those in the south who heat just for six months. A normal heating bill in Thompson, Manitoba, using an oil-fired furnace in a three-bedroom home, runs from $750 to $850 a year. This is what the steelworkers of INCO meant when they talked about a historical relationship with Sudbury.

I could go on talking about the high cost of living in the north, including the cost of transportation and building costs. There are no controls whatsoever on building costs or on various other costs. All this government has done is impose a wage freeze without putting controls on prices. The steelworkers in Thompson say that they really did not support wage and price controls proposed by the Conservative party in 1974, but they say if they had they would be a lot better off than they are now. They are being hamstrung by the controls this government is imposing. The people in the north do not have access to specialized services. They must travel to one of the larger cities to see a specialist for their children, to look after their teeth or anything of a specialized nature.

I mentioned the historical relationship between Sudbury and Thompson. Thompson is a relatively new city, approximately 17 years old. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) referred to the Falconbridge and Sudbury contracts. The Falconbridge contract was settled before the controls went into force, and the Falconbridge contract was settled after the Anti-Inflation Board was formed. The Anti-Inflation Board considered the Sudbury agreement and then looked at the contract Falconbridge was seeking. They said they had better take a close look at it because if they did not give Falconbridge a wage comparable to that given the workers at Sudbury, the workers would walk across the road and work at Sudbury. They gave them a raise comparable to that given the workers at Sudbury. The rollback proposed by the Anti-Inflation Board in respect of Thompson, Manitoba, is below the Sudbury rate.

● (1640)

Mr. Speaker, through you I ask the minister whether the cost of living in Sudbury is higher or lower than it is in Thompson. Anyone who has any knowledge of northern Canada or of northern Manitoba will know that the cost of living rate in the north is at least 15 per cent or 18 per cent higher than it is in Sudbury. I really cannot understand how he can say that there should be this rollback by the AIB in respect of a negotiated settlement which brings it to a point where it does not even meet the rising cost of inflation in the northern areas of the country. This makes a laughing stock of organized labour in the country. I can understand why they have no faith in this government.

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you how concerned the people of Thompson are in this regard. They called a public meeting as of last Monday night. There were 500 people from the town of Thompson who attended that meeting. It was a well organized meeting. These people were serious. Let me give you an example of what one lady had to say. She said that they had moved to Thompson 18 years ago. They have made their roots in Thompson. They have five children. They have one income, and at the present time are just able to meet the payments on their home and their other commitments, plus the cost of raising a family.

She said that if the decision is not reversed and they have to live with the loss imposed on them by the AIB in respect of this rollback to 12.5 per cent the first year, they will have to pack up and leave Thompson. That leads me into something else that was said last night as recorded at page 12930 of Hansard when the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacDonald) was speaking. He was referring to a question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver South who was concerned about the work force leaving Thompson and going somewhere else. He said:

> Where else—Snow Lake, Lynn Lake, or the other communities? If all those communities are restrained in the same way, to what avail is it to leave one for the other? That is the exact point of applying a general system of this kind to restrain incomes throughout the community.

Mr. Speaker, I ask whether this minister is so naive that he believes he can put a fence around a certain region of our country and say that if restraint is imposed in this area the people will not be able to leave and will not have a job. What will those people do? They will just quit their jobs if they cannot earn a living. They will move back to the area from which they came, probably somewhere in Ontario or in the maritimes, and will go back to living on unemployment insurance which this government hands out so freely without any control.

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): Nonsense.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): When the unemployment insurance runs out, the people will be forced to go on welfare. I think this is what the government wants them to do so that the government will have control over them.

Mr. MacDonald (Rosedale): Don't be silly.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): The government really feels it does not have too much control over the people living in the north and is damned well going to get that control by imposing this idiotic rollback on the workers in Thompson. That will happen not only in northern Manitoba but right across the north. The government wants to extract the resources of the north. The government exercises no control or restraint in respect of the money it spends in the north in attempting to extract the resources, but in respect of the people who were unemployed in the east and moved to the north to obtain employment, the government clamps down so that they cannot earn a decent living. As the heading in this article in the newspaper reads, "This city will die". I certainly commend this article by Victor Mackie which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of today.

I close with a reminder that there will be a group of concerned business people and a cross-section of people from the north coming to Ottawa within the next couple of weeks. My only message to the government is that it had better have Bill C-89 cleared up before they arrive here.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) wishes to rise and make his maiden speech in the House. I hope to fashion my speech after the women's fashions by keeping it short enough to be interesting and long enough to cover the various points I wish to make.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the amendment that has been proposed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), the thrust of which is to limit this program which appears to be almost limitless. I should like to share with the House the wording of the amendment. It reads as follows:

That Bill C-89, an act to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be amended in clause 11 by striking out lines 10 to 23 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) This Act expires on May 1, 1977, or on such earlier date as may be fixed by proclamation or a motion taken up and considered by the House of Commons that is adopted by the House and concurred in by the Senate pursuant to subsection (8) and (9) unless, before May 1, 1977, or any earlier date fixed by proclamation or any such motion that is so adopted by the House and concurred in by the Senate, an order in council is made to the effect that this act shall continue in force for such period of time as may be set out in the order in council".

This amendment is consistent with what we advocated both in this House and during the election of 1974. It is the approach we took in respect of Bill C-73. Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) stated that the hon. member for York-Simcoe was being rather contradictory in respect of his statements. I suggest that the minister look at the government's record to see how consistent it has been. We in this party might appear at times to be inconsistent, but one thing we are not is dishonest.

As I said earlier, the minister should look at some of the actions of the government. For the benefit of the minister I shall review some of these actions, because it appears to me that far too often the minister in charge of finance finds it acceptable to forget whatever he wishes to forget. During the election of 1974 we advocated a 90-day freeze on all commodities—a 90-day freeze with an 18-month period to follow with flexible controls. This is different from the policy brought forward by the Liberal party which proposes a 3¼-year policy with open-ended controls which could very easily lead us into having a country with almost dictatorial powers and a controlled society. Let me also stress it was our plan to break the psychology of inflation.

● (1650)

The two main planks in our platform during the 1974 election were government restraint and control of our money supply. I ask the minister if there is any government restraint in his program. We have had indications from all hon. members who have spoken against this bill that the government is not exercising any restraint, but that it asks the public to abide by an 8 per cent increase when the government's expenses will rise by about 18 per cent. How can the public have any faith in an administration that asks one thing of the public and does another thing itself? There is no consistency in what the government does. In 1974 they campaigned bitterly against our suggested program of controls, yet a short while later we saw the implementation of a control policy without any government restraint or control of our money supply. This government's fiscal and monetary policies are working against the very goals of the program they are advocating. I ask once again, where is the consistency in this government's action, when they are criticizing us for lack of it? The majority of economists agree that if a program such as this is to work, government restraint in spending and growth of our money supply have to be curbed.

[Mr. Smith (Churchill).]

Let me point out another clear indication of the inconsistency of this government. During the 1972 election we were the party that campaigned on the indexing of personal income taxes. We were the party that proposed a modest increase for pensioners. Hon. members opposite on a good many occasions have wanted to take credit for this program, and I commend this government for implementing a program along these lines when they were in a minority in parliament after the 1972 election. They instituted a program which we suggested in our campaign and for which they condemned us, yet when they were elected in 1972 with a minority government they brought in exactly what they had criticized us for advocating. Where is there consistency in that? The rules of the House do not allow me to express my true feelings for this administration and for the way they have dealt with the Canadian public.

A short while ago the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) quoted from an article which appeared in the Financial Times. The minister stated that the article distorted the truth. I think the minister is the man to state that this article distorts the truth, because in my view he knows what distortion of the truth is. The Financial Times stated that the survey they took showed that 69 per cent of the workers in the public sector had been allowed increases of 20 per cent or more, while raises for 79 per cent of the employees in the private sector had been held to 15 per cent or less. The hon. member for Edmonton West quoted most of the article, so rather than read it again I will merely suggest that if someone wants to do some good reading on the subject we are debating, he should read in Hansard the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West this afternoon.

I find it extremely hard to understand, as do the majority of the Canadian public, how this government can expect the Canadian people to have any faith in it. During two consecutive elections they campaigned against the positive proposals which we put forward, yet directly after that time, when they were elected to govern the country, they implemented the same proposals. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) did an excellent job in sharing his thoughts with hon. members with regard to the dissatisfaction of Canadian people with this institution. I can easily understand it, because the government has bred this type of feeling across the nation. Today, during the question period, our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave the opposition some suggestions on how they could perhaps derive some truth out of this government, but I am afraid there is very little of that to be derived.

Mr. MacFarlane: Nonsense.

Mr. Elzinga: Did the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain wish to take the floor?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member please address the Chair.

Mr. Elzinga: Please accept my apologies, Mr. Speaker. When a noted individual across the aisle makes his intentions known, courtesy requires that I suggest he take the floor, with your permission, Mr. Speaker. Another example of the inconsistency of this government, their program and the amendment to it, is that on the implementation of this program it was stated that the AIB would have a staff of some 200 people. But six months after the program was put into effect, we find close to 600 people employed by the board. I ask the Minister of Finance, through you, Mr. Speaker, at what point will this increase stop? When will employment in government circles end? In six months we have seen a tripling in the size of the staff estimated by the government. It puzzles me how the government can come forward so often with figures such as this, and when the program is implemented the Canadian people are given a distorted picture. The public's faith will not be restored for this institution or for government so long as the present administration is in office.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken on this bill before, as have many of my colleagues, but I welcome the opportunity to make a few brief comments about some of the elements that have come into play since this bill was last before the House and we last had the opportunity to discuss with members across the aisle some of the aspects of the anti-inflation program and particularly the amendments to the bill.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the amendments proposed deal with the appeal procedure which earlier was sadly lacking. One of the new elements that has been introduced into the debate since the bill was brought forward are the statements of the administrator whose appointment was made rather late. He said that anyone who comes before him must be prepared to suffer the consequences of his office adjusting the decision made by the Anti-Inflation Board. That is an interesting statement, because we do not have access to an appeal board, we do not have a man who allows or disallows an appeal or who reconfirms the judgment made by the lower tribunal, but he can go further and say that the lower tribunal missed something and that the rollback or the increase will have to be greater.

● (1700)

That is a strange situation. I have been trying to see whether in the Criminal Code or in any regulatory body that kind of power is bestowed upon an appeal tribunal. If the miners from Thompson, Manitoba, or the pulpworkers from the Irving complex come before the administrator, he might well decide that the lower tribunal was not right in making the adjustments it did, and he might come up with a worse decision than they were faced with at first. The administrator might use his all-powerful and almighty office to run the program further into the ground than it is now.

Many of my colleagues have said the program is not working. I say that it is working: it is working too well, because it is altering human behaviour in our country to quite an extent. It is establishing a degree of public cynicism such as we have never known in this country. The government is achieving a degree of public dissatisfaction and disaffection which it has probably never experienced before. Of course, we hope this kind of feeling will be reflected in the next election. But my colleagues and I are concerned because we probably have another two or three years to wait before the next election comes along, and of course this public cynicism and disaffection will rub off, not just on this incompetent government but on the whole political process and on all the agencies of government in which the people of Canada at one time had much confidence.

As I said the last time I had a chance to speak on this bill, I am particularly concerned about the dual standards which have been established as a result of this anti-inflation program. My hon. colleague from northern Manitoba has articulated to quite an extent how this program affects people in the outlying areas and northern areas of our country where the government has such a great influence. Here we have a minister who is practising restraint. He has sent letters to all government agencies throughout the country and told them to find where they can cut corners and make adjustments to their budgets in order to save money. Some civil servants run all over the country doing this, and they are striving to get to the top. That is only human nature. This happens everywhere. They invent all kinds of ways to cut corners.

For instance, when the district postmaster in Prince George received the minister's letter telling him that he should cut corners, where did he cut corners? There is a stretch along the Alaska Highway which is 1,200 miles long and there are about 27 mail stops along that stretch. The district postmaster sent an officer with a car and a helper to find out how many of these mail stops could be eliminated. They found that about seven of them could be eliminated. The mail truck goes up the highway and comes back down, and some of the mail stops which were eliminated are the ones where the truck driver stops for coffee and a snack. However, he could not open the truck and drop off the mail. The postal service there was not very good in any event. The driver merely dropped off the mail. But he could not even do that. He had to get back into his truck, drive another 35 miles and drop off the mail which, of course, necessitated everyone driving 35 miles to pick up their mail. With all respect to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), when I brought this matter to his attention, he saw how stupid and ridiculous it was, so that order has been rescinded.

However, these are the kinds of things which affect people in the north particularly. My colleague told us about some things which are going on with respect to insurance rates and government agencies which are just unbelievable. All of a sudden the government is on this kick that government services must be self-sustaining and that the users must pay the bill. When we talk about insurance rates—I am coming back to one particular insurance problem which exists in British Columbia—and particularly car insurance, people in the north have a higher accident rate. That is not because they are less competent or more reckless drivers, but because they spend more time in their automobiles.

As my colleague said, some people in the north have to drive 130 miles to a hospital. They drive for shopping every day and to the post office because there are no mail deliveries. They have to drive their children to school because sometimes the temperature outside is 40 below. There is no rapid transit, so they use their automobiles more frequently. That is why there are more accidents.

Then the government imposed a further gasoline tax to show people how to practice restraint. That is the situation in the north where the automobile is as essential as the knife and spoon with which they eat. People in the north cannot live without automobiles. When the government practices conservation of energy reserves, who pays for it? The people in the north. The same is true of the effect of the excise tax on aircraft in the north. Another ridiculous thing the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) brought in is called landing fees for small aircraft. In the north the aircraft is as essential as the automobile. I, and I am sure several of my colleagues who are here at this moment, cannot get around our constituencies without a private aircraft because there are areas which cannot be reached by car; they are not accessible.

Let us consider that since we discussed this bill last time, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) has announced the government's energy policy. That was yesterday. He told us that energy prices and the price of gasoline and heating oil will go up another 25 per cent by 1980. The government makes these decisions and the excuse it uses is that this is an essential public service and someone has to pay for it. Either we jack up the rate and make users pay, or it has to come out of general revenues, and eventually it filters back to the taxpayer anyway.

Not all the services this government provides are essential. In many areas, with 60 Crown corporations, the government is in direct competition with private enterprise. When we give CNR $200 million to run commuter trains, that does not help people in the north. But if we did not give CNR $200 million, I suppose the rates would have to go up and some taxpayers would have to pay more for travelling on trains. However, because the trains run between metropolitan areas along the American border we cannot upset the many taxpayers who live there, so we have to subsidize those rates. That is not important for the people in Thompson, Manitoba, Prince George, British Columbia or Gaspé. Certainly transportation is essential, but it is not so essential that if CNR employees went on strike all other private companies would also go on strike.

The question of essential public services should be discussed in this House and we should determine what an essential public service is. The other day someone asked what would happen in Lower Post, British Columbia, which is an isolated community, if the Post Office did not provide mail service. When the Post Office employees go on strike there is no mail in Lower Post, just as there is no mail in downtown Toronto. Who provides the local store with food? Private industry does that, and that never seems to be interrupted; everyone eats all the time. So in this modern day of industrial evolution and technological evolution, is the Post Office an essential public service? It used to be a crime to tamper with Her Majesty's mail; today postal workers walk out on strike and stay out for a month and nobody misses them. These are the kind of things we have to put in proper perspective, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Oberle.]

The minister argues for a 150 per cent increase in hydro rates in the north by saying that if we do not increase the rates the moneys will have to come out of general revenue. But he is in direct competition with some private companies—and what are those private companies going to do? They are going to apply to the Anti-Inflation Board and ask for permission to increase their rates to match those of the government. Of course, the Anti-Inflation Board is going to tell them that they have to justify the increase and show that there has been an increase in their costs. The companies are going to take pains to do that. Perhaps they will be able to show a historical relationship with a government-owned company and maybe that historical relationship will apply as well to private industry as it does to labour, and so forth.

The whole thing does not make sense, Mr. Speaker. The government imposes an increase, and nobody tells them what to do. As a matter of fact, they are making deals with provincial governments, particularly those that are also in the business of maintaining a number of Crown corporations in every sector of the economy—the wood fibre industry and the service industries. There are all kinds of Crown corporations in competition with private enterprise. That is why we have no price control element in this program—because the government sets the standard, private industry follows and the Anti-Inflation Board has to stay away.

I should like to refer to a problem which I previously mentioned in this House in the question period. That is the problem of the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia. I should like to read from an article which appeared in the Vancouver Sun early this year where the reporter responds to statements made by the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, Mr. Pepin. The article begins:

> Those pronouncements by Jean-Luc Pepin that Autoplan rates will be subjected to pencil-sharpened scrutiny from the Anti-Inflation Board deserve a little scrutiny of their own along with a lot of cynicism.

This reporter was kind. I have heard another report of a man who said the only reason he is not calling the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board a bare-faced liar is that he has a little moustache. The report continues:

> Let's go back to December 23 . . . where finance minister Donald Macdonald has his office.
>
> That afternoon Macdonald was meeting other cabinet ministers, including two of his colleagues, labour minister John Munro and consumer affairs minister André Ouellet.
>
> The other cabinet ministers were from B.C., finance minister Evan Wolfe, labour minister Allan Williams and consumer services minister Rafe Mair.
> If Pepin had been a fly on the wall in Macdonald's office he might not be saying the things that appeared in Saturday's Vancouver Sun.

That is, that he was sharpening his pencil to roll back the increases of the insurance companies. The report continues:

> At that point, December 23, the Social Credit government in B.C. was so young that it was hardly breathing. The three B.C. cabinet ministers had been sworn in the day before and their first course of action was to head for the Victoria airport and hop aboard a B.C. government jet for Ottawa.

The reason for the urgency concerned B.C.'s potential participation in the federal anti-inflation program.

At that meeting it became clear that the B.C. group had one major hang-up about joining the program and signing a contract with the board. The hang-up was ICBC and the rate hikes that were then in the works.

To put it mildly, B.C. was reluctant to sign on the dotted line when the signature could kill the upcoming boost in car insurance rates.

Mr. Speaker, British Columbia is not the only province to suffer these problems. All provinces have done their share in increasing the cost of their services and then running to the Anti-Inflation Board and saying that professional people, teachers, and so on, want higher wages and would the board come in and solve their political problems. I continue reading the article:

Macdonald and his group were also worried. The anti-inflation program was slow in starting and the change in B.C. threatened to pull that province back to October 13, which was when the anti-inflation program was first announced. Now Macdonald was threatened with the possibility of B.C. balking over ICBC.

With both Wolfe and Macdonald worried, the two ministers came to a quick understanding. If B.C. joined the program, the federal government would not allow the anti-inflation program to interfere with increases in ICBC rates.

This was not an implicit understanding or a vague promise by Macdonald to do everything he could. It was a carte blanche undertaking from the federal Minister of Finance to exempt ICBC from the anti-inflation guidelines.

This verbal pact had been checked and conformed through both parties.

So when Premier Bill Bennett, who has given a record quick commitment to the anti-inflation program, says he is confident ICBC's increases will be approved, he is not talking glibly.

Somebody should tell Pepin to forget his analysing, his pencil-sharpening and his standing on toes over ICBC because its rates have already been approved by a higher authority.

Mr. Speaker, would it be fair to ask the minister just what authority he exercises over the chairman of the anti-inflation program? What backroom deals has he made with the province of British Columbia or any other province? What deals have been made to protect agencies of government such as Crown corporations against the impact and authority that is provided to the Anti-Inflation Board in this bill? There is no way that Canadians will put up with this kind of skullduggery any longer, Mr. Speaker, and there is no way that this government can earn the confidence of the people with actions like this.

The program in British Columbia is not yet in operation and nobody knows where they stand. The small businessman protects himself and so do the large corporations. They formerly engaged people to walk through the plant to see what areas could be made more efficient. Now they are walking through the plant to see where additional costs have occurred which can be demonstrated to the Anti-Inflation Board so that prices can be increased every four months. That is the new regulation, Mr. Speaker. Prices are not just increased once a year any more; they are increased every four months. Any businessman who does not do that would need his head examined, because if he does not increase prices this period he will not know where the goal posts will be next time around. So every three months businessmen will jack up their prices, particularly in businesses where energy resources are dispensed.

Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources laid out certain guidelines which showed the discretion businessmen will have to increase prices by 25 per cent by 1980. Anyone in business with control over the pricing and marketing of his product would be very foolish if he did not increase prices in accordance with those guidelines.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): No, sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald).

• (1720)

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the amending bill we are considering today deals with the substance of the dispute raised last October 13, when the government announced its anti-inflation program, by the previous leader of my party and other Progressive Conservatives. We were, and are, concerned about the lack of effective government programs for halting the inflation besetting our country and, indeed, a number of other countries in the western world. The government's attempt to justify the unjustifiable is disappointing, especially if we bear in mind that as long ago as 1968 the government promised that it would do its best effectively to attack regional economic and social disparities in this country.

Hon. members who were here in 1965 will remember how the government acted in its previous attempt at restraint. The government attempted to restrain prices, but we remember how insensitive and inappropriate government policy was on matters affecting regional economic development. We remember how the government attempted, or did not attempt, to restrain its own spending in that period. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) did not then occupy his portfolio, but he was a member of parliament. He will remember, no doubt, that the cabinet ignored the advice of the then leader of the opposition, other members of my party and people outside this House. In 1969 we told the government that inflation did not affect us all uniformly. The problem was not monolithic. Inflation did not work the same way in Toronto, Ontario, as in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. But the government chose to ignore advice which came from respected and influential persons.

Mr. Breau: That is not true, I suggest.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): With respect, it is true. I shall be delighted to hear the hon. member from New Brunswick defend the government's program of that period.

Mr. Breau: Is the hon. member encouraging a filibuster?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): No, I am not, and I do not think any member on this side wants to filibuster.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member should address the Chair and speak to Bill C-89.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am always delighted to discuss these questions with my hon. friend from New Brunswick. He and I share a community of interest with respect to federal government policy.

Mr. Breau: About 40 miles separate us.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We are about 40 miles apart. We are both concerned about federal policies affecting the economic and social betterment of peoples living in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

Important lessons are to be learned from the earlier attempt at restraint. Unfortunately, those lessons have not been absorbed, as is evident if one examines the government's present anti-inflation program and its attempts to restrict federal expenditures. Let me cite two examples to show that the government has failed to co-ordinate its cornerstone policies for social and economic development. Yesterday, when making his statement—I call it a non-statement—on energy policy, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) in no way came to grips with rapidly growing energy costs, electrical costs in particular, in Atlantic Canada. Two days earlier we heard that there was to be a 60 per cent increase—

Mr. Breau: No.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard the hon. member speak in this debate. He does not agree with facts. But they are on record. I mentioned the minister's statement of yesterday. It is recorded in Hansard. I was about to mention the 60 per cent increase in transport action costs, announced earlier this week, affecting Prince Edward Island. Do hon. members opposite wish to disagree with the announcement of the Minister of Transport concerning increased transportation costs?

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member not aware that the government of Canada is participating financially, to the tune of 50 per cent, in supplying a transmission line to Prince Edward Island and will also pay 50 per cent of the financing of the nuclear power plant in New Brunswick?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to say that I am aware of both those programs. The minister mentioned both in the short question period which followed his announcement yesterday. Neither program, I suggest, will resolve the kind of problems to which I have alluded. Should we not be concerned about them? Is that not what this debate is all about?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am sorry; I thought it was.

Mr. Cafik: Why not talk on the bill and the amendment?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I thought I was sticking to the bill. I hope hon. members opposite understand exactly what I am talking about.

Mr. Breau: We can't hear you.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am sorry the hon. member opposite cannot hear me. I am talking about the economic burden being borne by the people of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. As well, I must mention the cost differentials which must be borne by people in Atlantic Canada. Present federal government policies are exacerbating the situation in Atlantic Canada and promoting the continuation of these cost differentials. I see the hon. member smiling but I know that he agrees with much of what I say.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

Mr. Breau: I support government policies.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): How can the hon. member suggest that government policies are helping to alleviate the unbelievably high unemployment in Atlantic Canada, including his area and many parts of my province, where last winter and up to the present unemployment in some regions has run at between 25 per cent and 30 per cent? I would dearly love to hear the hon. member explain how the federal government's anti-inflation announcement of October, its restraint program of December, together with and compounded by present levels of inflation in Atlantic Canada, will reduce our high levels of unemployment.

Mr. Breau: I did not say that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I did not think the hon. member said it and he will not be saying it, because what I have mentioned is a fact of life in Atlantic Canada, as the hon. member well knows. This matter falls under the purview of the amendment we are considering, inasmuch as the continuance of present government programs will defeat the federal government's basic commitment to the elimination of regional economic and social disparity. The government elected in 1968 was committed to eliminating regional disparities. It established the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. For the last two or three years the department has administered a budget of over $500 million in trying to solve the difficulties of the Atlantic provinces, parts of Quebec and some northern parts of the western provinces.

The irony of it is this: we, as members of parliament, are committed to maintain a certain level of expenditure in disadvantaged areas. At the same time, present government programs are making it increasingly difficult for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to administer its own programs effectively. It will be increasingly difficult for members of parliament to defend programs administered by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion unless the department's programs are co-ordinated with other major programs of the government. I am thinking particularly of the two programs we are discussing this afternoon, the anti-inflation program and its companion program to do with restraint in spending announced by the Treasury Board last December.

While we are giving with one hand and taking away with the other we are in a self-defeating situation and we are certainly undermining any advance which has been made with respect to closing the gaps in income standards, employment opportunities, and so on. It is crucial that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues realize the implications of what they are asking us to do.

The motion put forward by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) attempts at least to apply some measure of reality with respect to the continuance of a program whose benefits, whatever they might be, cannot be expected to continue for an indefinite period. As a number of speakers have well stated, we face a major difficulty here. It is one thing for the minister to introduce a program which will last for up to three years. It is quite another for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to indicate subsequently, along with the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, that the program of controls is not really a short-term program—if one can refer to three years as being a short period—but that it might be prolonged to become a more comprehensive system of economic controls than anything we have so far experienced.

All members realize that an economy such as ours is not one which operates on an eighteenth century or nineteenth century laissez-faire model. On the other hand, if the government is planning to change substantially the rules under which a mixed economy such as ours operates, then surely it should not do so unilaterally and, in particular, it ought not to do so on the pretext of dealing with one particular phenomenon, namely, inflation. That is the difficulty we face under the present program and its continuance for three years.

Economists not only in our own country but in countries which have had a good deal of experience in the operation of anti-inflation programs concede that such programs are indeed useful during periods in which the fires of inflation appear to be out of control, in periods when great damage is done, particularly to those living on low or fixed incomes. But it has also been concluded by a number of these economic experts that controls exercised for too long a period not only destroy the traditional economic pattern but are extremely harmful to the very people they are supposed to benefit.

This brings me back once again to the people I represent, to those who have to live in areas of great regional disparity, far from the centres of the decision-making goes on with respect to economic policy, people who far too often become the victims of the heavily centralist approach which is so involved in programs of the kind we are considering today. To my mind, the remarks of Jean-Luc Pépin and the remarks made by the Prime Minister have been in no way helpful to the credibility of the scheme for which the Minister of Finance is directly responsible. It must have been chilling for members to read the statement of the Canadian Labour Congress in the annual report and recommendations made to the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet. What disturbed me was not only the rhetoric contained in that document and the extent to which a significant section of the economy so totally rejected the government's program, but the degree to which neither side appeared able to engage in a useful conversation with the other.

We live in a time of very large institutions. We in this chamber do not have to ask ourselves how large the institution of government has become. We are well aware of it. We are also well aware of the strength of the big corporations. One of the other major segments of our society is organized labour. It is not as large here as it is in Britain or in certain other European countries, but it is certainly a significant factor. The degree to which the unions find the present program filled with injustice convinces me that it is not good enough for the government to ride roughshod over this basic antipathy, nor is it good enough to believe that a program such as this should be allowed to continue longer than is absolutely necessary.

From the outset, the Minister of Finance has not been able to produce any objective argument in support of his contention that three years is the correct period, the period necessary if the program is to achieve whatever virtues it is expected to produce. The motion which has been placed before us deals realistically with a predicament which must surely have occurred to members on the government side. What I am saying is that, particularly with respect to Atlantic Canada, the longer the anti-inflation program continues the less likelihood we have of getting away from the kind of centralized decisions which have not been helpful in the past. It is obvious that a program which looks at things, presumably, from a national perspective but becomes greatly coloured by the influence of the central regions is slow to take into account particular problems in Atlantic Canada or in the Atlantic portion of Quebec or in western Canada.

I trust hon. members will reflect on this aspect because there has not been a great deal of discussion so far on the impact of anti-inflation policy on regional development. I have attempted during the last few months to put questions to various ministers with respect to this matter. I believe it is incumbent, particularly upon the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, not simply to make recommendations in the secrecy of cabinet but to state publicly from time to time his views as to the real impact of the anti-inflation program on the effective reduction of regional disparity. This is necessary if the minister's own credibility and the credibility of his department are to be maintained. In the absence of such an assurance we shall find it most difficult in the future to defend any commitment made by the present government or any other with respect to making the reduction of regional economic and social discrepancies a cornerstone of the federal position.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, members of the New Democratic Party in Parliament have opposed the government's so-called anti-inflation program from the day the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first announced his intention to go ahead with it. We said then that the program would not work because it was inequitable and that because it was not equitable the people of Canada would not, in the long run, support it. The other night on "News magazine" we heard the results of a poll conducted by the CBC which substantiated precisely what we had said would happen. In November of 1975 the CBC conducted a poll which showed that 61 per cent of the people supported the idea of wage and price controls. Six months later the proportion which supported controls had dropped to 53 per cent. To another question as to whether the people believed controls were being applied fairly or not, two thirds of the people polled indicated that they did not believe the government's control program was being conducted fairly for all people.

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and sundry other cabinet ministers, both in speeches in this House and in cities across the country, have said that the people of Canada as a whole support the government's program, but that a few rabble-rousing labour leaders are trying to stir up opposition among their members to the government's program so as to destroy it. It is interesting to look at what is actually happening, Mr. Speaker. Who is actually opposing the government's wage and price controls, not just in speeches and in resolutions but by actually stopping work? It is not the blue-collar workers, the steelworkers, the autoworkers or the railway workers who have belonged to unions for 25 years or more. It is the teachers, the nurses, the policemen in New Brunswick, Ontario, Quebec and Saskatchewan. These groups, which a few years ago would have killed anybody who suggested that they belonged to the labour movement, have gone on strike and refused to accept the wage increases offered to them by their employers. They are saying in a graphic way that they are not going to accept the government's anti-inflation program.

The Minister of Finance should ask himself why it is that these white-collar workers, most of whom would consider themselves part of the middle class, are so militant. Why are they refusing—I am sure the minister would agree—to be good citizens? Why are they refusing to work despite the laws that this parliament has passed? They are refusing to work because their day to day experiences tell them that the anti-inflation program is nothing more nor less than a program to control wages and salaries. One has only to look at the fact that yesterday the Anti-Inflation Board approved an increase of one cent on a gallon of oil for two of the oil companies in the country. Similar approval was given a week or two ago to Imperial Oil.

Natural gas prices have gone up by about 30 per cent. If we can believe the policy statement tabled yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), the price will probably go up by 25 cents within the next couple of years, as will the price of oil. The cost of electric power has gone up. In Nova Scotia the price has virtually doubled within the last year. Municipal taxes in city after city are increasing by as much as 20 per cent. Housing costs are to go up, probably by another 10 per cent this year. The Anti-Inflation Board, which has been preening itself about how the cost of food has gone down, yesterday announced that food will increase in cost by 3 to 4 per cent in the next couple of months.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that the ordinary people of this country are saying that the anti-inflation program is not working and that they are not going to support it? Even though we oppose the whole program and the way in which it is being administered, we did support the minister when finally, after a great deal of urging, having refused to face up to the unfairness of the situation, he brought in this bill permitting groups of workers who feel that a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board is unfair to them, to appeal. Yesterday the administrator of the anti-inflation program made a speech in Edmonton in which, interestingly enough, he came down hard on workers in this country. I must say it was made to a very non-partisan organization, the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Paproski: What have you got against Edmonton?

Mr. Orlikow: I have nothing against Edmonton.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Paproski: Then what have you got against the Chamber of Commerce?

Mr. Orlikow: I have nothing against the Chamber of Commerce. They are good people and I give them a good deal of credit for defending the rights of their members, businessmen who are interested in getting work done, and in paying labour—I do not blame them for this—as little as they can get them to accept. After all, that is their job, just as it is the job of the labour unions to get for their members as much pay per hour as they can from the employer. So I make no criticism of the Chamber of Commerce.

Let me quote from a report of what Mr. Tansley, the administrator of the Anti-Inflation Board, said in his speech to the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce. According to today's Globe and Mail he warned the unions that his role as enforcer of the government's control program may require him to set tougher limits on wage increases than those allowed by the Anti-Inflation Board. Later in his speech he said:

> Unless their case is strong the parties seeking a reference run the risk of ending up with less than the Anti-Inflation Board is willing to grant.

He said those comments applied equally to prices, profits and dividends but were aimed primarily at the trade unions and the more controversial issue of wage controls. To whom, Mr. Speaker, is it more controversial? Are wage controls more controversial than price increases? When the administrator makes that kind of comment I suggest he has virtually ruled himself out as an impartial judge.

I am much more concerned with the fact that the Anti-Inflation Board permitted a sharp increase in the price of cement in the city of Winnipeg a month or two ago. When I wrote to the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board he did not even do me the courtesy of replying to my letter. I am much more concerned about the second increase in the price of copper which the Anti-Inflation Board permitted this week than I am in any increase in wages. I am much more concerned about the increase in the price of oil that was permitted last week than I am about the increase in wages. Yet the administrator does not seem to be concerned about those matters; he is concerned about wage increases.

Let me say something about wage increases, Mr. Speaker. I want to refer to a speech reported in today's Toronto Star given by the Minister of Finance in which he showed his complete ignorance of the working conditions and needs not just of workers but of companies in this country. One of the biggest producers of foreign exchange in Canada is the mining industry. One of the biggest corporations in this country is International Nickel, which has an operation in Sudbury and in Thompson.

● (1750)

Traditionally, the wages paid at the two operations in Sudbury and Thompson have been the same. The Sudbury workers and their union reached an agreement with INCO just before the anti-inflation program was brought down. The Thompson workers did not. They reached an agreement a few weeks ago which gave them the same wage rate as the Sudbury workers. The Anti-Inflation Board which received that application from the union and the company turned down the agreement and said that the company and the union would have to accept a reduction in wages. The minister is quoted in the Toronto Star as saying he agreed.

The INCO operation in Thompson employs about 2,800 workers. Last year International Nickel hired 3,100 workers. In other words, there was a turnover of more than 100 per cent. Who goes there and does not stay? I suggest it is single people who do not have any roots and probably live in company bunkhouses. If the Anti-Inflation Board decision is upheld, what will happen in the course of the next year is that the INCO operation will probably be short somewhere between 200 and 300 workers and the company will not be able to produce all the nickel possible which it could export at a good price. The minister thinks that is a very good idea, which indicates to me the minister has not the slightest concept of what is going on in this country or what are its needs.

The same thing is true at Elliot Lake. Hardly a week goes by when we do not read news stories and reports of discussions in the Ontario legislature about the dangers of working in the uranium mine at Elliot Lake and about the possibility of getting cancer being 200 or 300 per cent higher than in respect of workers anywhere else. Obviously, the workers at Elliot Lake and their union people think they should get some compensation for that danger. The company agreed partly because this was right and partly because of its knowledge that if it did not pay the same wages as those paid at Sault Ste. Marie or Sudbury they would not get the workers.

The Anti-Inflation Board has ordered that the wages be shaved. If that situation is allowed to exist and the wages in Elliot Lake are lower than at Sudbury or Sault Ste. Marie, it will mean that the company will not have the workers it needs to produce the uranium which I presume is required for those generating plants in Ontario and the United States which use that product in the production of electrical power.

Again we have this incredible decision by the Anti-Inflation Board backed by the Minister of Finance with his usual ignorance of the realities of life. I have to assume that on the basis of the statement made by the administrator this decision will likely be backed by him. If that is the way the administrator is going to deal with cases which come before him, we are not going to have much in the way of industrial peace in this country in the next year.

There is one other matter about which I should like some enlightenment before I vote on this bill. At page 3 of the bill, in clause 4(2) it is provided:

> "(1.2) For the purposes of paragraph (1) (*d.*1), the parties entitled to advise the board of their dissatisfaction with a notification from the board and thereby entitled to require the board to refer a matter to the administrator for consideration by him, are
> (a) where the notification relates to a price or profits, the supplier who is charging or is proposing to charge the price or whose profits are in question;

It then goes on to talk about wage increases. If the administrator is to do the job, and if the public is to accept that the administrator and the program are fair, the administrator should be given the job of dealing with wage increases. I believe he should also be given the job of looking at price increases approved by the Anti-Inflation Board. A consumer, myself or anyone else, should be able to appeal to the administrator to look at high price increases approved by the Anti-Inflation Board.

The workers who produce copper have had their wage increases monitored and there is a limit to what they can get. Why should a company which purchases that copper for use in one of its products not have the right to appeal to the administrator to look into the two price increases that have taken place in just over a month which the Anti-Inflation Board has permitted?

There is no indication that the companies are not making a fair profit on their sales of copper in Canada. I have no objection to the companies charging every penny the international market will support for copper exported, but I do not think Canadian copper should be sold to the United States at less than U.S. copper, Chilean copper or Zambian copper. I see no reason why the Anti-Inflation Board should have permitted the two increases of almost 10 per cent in the price of copper in just over a month. I should like to appeal to the administrator to look at this. I hope he will be as tough in looking at that increase in price as he threatens to be in respect of increases in wages.

Because I have so little faith in the government's program I intend to support the subamendment put forward by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) which calls for the ending of the program on May 1 of this year. Failing that, I will vote for the Conservative amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CONTROL VIOLENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since it has become urgent to control violence in sports generally and particularly in hockey; since violent fights, blows and excessive brutality are not at the present time covered under criminal law; and, finally, since control over sports activities is generally left to the goodwill of sports monopolies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House direct the government to take all necessary arrangements in the shortest time possible so as to use any legal mechanism to punish rightly acts of violence in sports generally, particularly in hockey, and so as to develop amateur sports and invite people to play an active part.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT REMOVAL OF RAPESEED OIL AND MEAL FROM STATUTORY FREIGHT RATES BE DELAYED PENDING CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity; in fact, a matter of a double-cross.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Benjamin: As the present and former Ministers of Transport as well as the government have promised repeatedly to consult fully with the provinces and to provide them with full cost information before deciding on the question of freight rate subsidies on rapeseed oil and meal, and as the order in council of April 13 removing rapeseed oil and meal was made only five days after mailing the latest cost information to the provinces, which they view to be inadequate and inaccurate, and as the meeting of western premiers in Medicine Hat has condemned the federal government for reneging on its promises at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That the federal government live up to its promises of full consultation with the provinces and not implement the order in council removing rapeseed oil and meal from the statutory freight rates until after full consultation with the provinces at next week's meeting of first ministers.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REASON RUSSIA HAS EXILED SECRETARY OF AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL FROM MOSCOW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of standing order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the Soviet Union be asked by our external affairs department, either at the United Nations or through diplomatic channels, to explain why they have exiled the Secretary of Amnesty International from Moscow.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be presented with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REVIEW OF POST-CONTROL SOCIETY—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the kind of speculative reports which are now circulating, for example the report which is featured in the Ottawa Journal of today, could the Prime Minister confirm for the House of Commons and the people of Canada that an extensive policy of review is now underway within the government in respect to what has been called the "post-control" society, and could he tell us something of the nature of this review procedure.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what today's Ottawa Journal says about this. It is naturally true that in so far as the control of the economy, the operation of the control mechanism, is concerned and the kind of difficulties which created the anti-inflation situation in Canada linked with the undesirable high unemployment figure, we are looking at the subject and trying to find ways in which the economy would operate better in the future. The hon. member will remember that in the white paper on inflation published last October we indicated certain non-structural changes which, among others, will have to be contemplated. This kind of work is in progress.

Mr. Clark: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The white paper also indicated there would be some fairly extensive consultative procedures with other sectors in the society. In view of the fundamental importance of the issues under discussion and in view of the fact that whatever the Prime Minister might think and might be suggesting this direction for Canadian society cannot be decided simply be the government alone and imposed on the rest of the community, would the Prime Minister be prepared to bring this whole subject matter of policy for the "post-control" period before a parliamentary committee and would he be prepared to begin that procedure with a full statement by the government of a range of options, and details of those options now being considered for the basis of the "post control" period?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would not want the question of the Leader of the Opposition to lead to the belief that there has not been and will not be a great deal of consultation on the matter of productivity, for instance, which interests the member for Prince Edward-Hastings so much. I stated to him in reply to a question in the House that there has been consultation. I believe there have been some personal meetings between the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and his advisory committee on that subject. I have reported to the House on several occasions that members of the cabinet have met with representatives of the public sector and the labour sector. We are very anxious to hear the views of the opposition on this subject—

An hon. Member: Here we go again.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Trudeau: —If they have any views on the matter of anti-inflation.

As to the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that parliament sit down and begin to study the post-control period, my general answer is no; I do not think that would be a proper course of action. I wish parliament would be more concerned with the control period which is the one we will have with us for another two and a half years.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am not at all surprised that the Prime Minister is interested in the views of the Official Opposition on national policies since he continually borrows from them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Clark: What we want to have is full information on the range of options now being considered in secret by advisers to the government of Canada. We want to have that information brought before, not this whole parliament, but before a standing committee of this parliament so that there can be an opportunity for full public debate on the various options by the House of Commons and by the people we represent. Then, there will not be simply an imposition of the Prime Minister's personal values upon the society. I ask the Prime Minister: will he make that kind of reference to a standing committee so that the House of Commons and the people of Canada can become aware of the range of options that are now being considered?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question which was asked twice by the hon. member—

Mr. Clark: And not answered.

Mr. Trudeau: It was not answered because the hon. member remained standing and asked it the second time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I do not know why the Leader of the Opposition seems to take offence that we borrow some of his programs. If they are good, then certainly we should borrow from them. But I do not see why they vote against them when we borrow from them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Because you change them as well as steal them.

Mr. Trudeau: With regard to the substance of the question, it seems to me to be a most unreasonable request. Naturally, the government is continually trying to plan ahead to see what will develop—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Do you mind if I doze off?

Mr. Trudeau: This may not be the mandate of the opposition, but it is our mandate. If we are doing this, naturally we are looking at a series of alternatives, economic and social, which might occur in the country and naturally we have a desire to cover various options. Naturally, there are hypotheses about the future. The fact that we do it in secret, to use the hon. member's word, seems to me to be a prudent way of doing it. We cannot possibly come before the Canadian public or the House of Commons and indicate all the various scenarios which could develop in Canada and have them studied one by one and the response which they would give to these various scenarios. Even the very talk of looking at new values emerging in a new society spooks the opposition out of their seats.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Since it is clearly an unreasonable position for the Prime Minister of Canada to suggest, as he has in Scarborough and other places, that the only choice for Canadians in so far as the new values of the new society is concerned, is to accept them voluntarily or have them imposed by the government, since that is an unreasonable and undemocratic position—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —will the Prime Minister now give the House of Commons and the people of Canada a commitment that we will have the opportunity to discuss and participate in the decision on new values for the so called new society before they are imposed without choice by the government?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The answer to that is obviously yes, Mr. Speaker. If we introduce any new policies or legislation, obviously they will be brought before the House. We will expect the opposition, perchance, to express some views on them.

● (1420)

The hon. member refers to what I stated in York-Scarborough. One of the examples I gave was pollution, and it does not seem very undemocratic to me to suggest to the audience and to the panel there that either the private sector voluntarily makes sure that it produces without polluting every aspect of Canadian life, or we impose legislation upon it to keep the environment clean.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I think that this is a very reasonable question which even the opposition will have to face some day when it gets around to it.

FORM AND TIME-FRAME OF CONSULTATIONS ON POST-CONTROL SOCIETY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —I should like to ask the Prime Minister something about the consultations he has talked about with Mr. Morris and also with the radio audience in Toronto when he indicated it is time we sat down together to discuss whether new mechanisms are necessary to promote better mutual understanding and co-ordinated action. Could the Prime Minister indicate the form such consultations will take, consultations presumably with sectors of the economy and sectors of society? Could he indicate the forum of those consultations and the time-frame he has in mind?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the most obvious example of that forum for consultation was the Labour Relations Council set up by the Minister of Labour of this government when he provided a forum wherein labour and management could at a very real difficulty in our economy, the difficulty having to do with industrial relations. In this forum, as indeed in the meetings we have unilaterally with labour on the one side or with management on the other, we try to ascertain some of their views which would permit Canada to have improved policies in the area of labour-management relations, hopefully to reduce the number of strikes and to reduce the inconvenience to the public by strikes in essential services. We believe this can best be approached by getting the views of both sides involved in the conflict.

CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON POST-CONTROL SOCIETY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): In view of the statement in the white paper on inflation tabled by the government last fall, which said that in concert with provincial governments the government intends to identify and correct public policies which impede in a structural sense the efficient operation of our economy, would the Prime Minister tell the House what consultations have been held with the provinces during the past six months?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Would you read the words about consultation again?

Mr. Stanfield: "—in concert with the provincial governments, consultations to identify and correct public policies which impede in a structural sense the efficient operation of our economy." Would the Prime Minister indicate what consultations have taken place with the provinces, and could he also indicate whether the provinces are to be involved in the general kinds of consultation the Prime Minister has in mind with regard to the post-controls society?

Mr. Trudeau: So far as the last part of the question is concerned, I attempted to deal with it in answering the question of the present Leader of the Opposition. In so far as examples of consultation with the provinces, from memory I can name several. There have been meetings of ministers of finance, ministers responsible for housing, ministers responsible for health and welfare, and I believe ministers responsible for agriculture. These are all areas which we believe were precisely pointed out in the white paper as perhaps in need of some structural reforms. I believe, to be specific, that we mentioned the food and housing areas.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POSSIBILITY RIGHT TO STRIKE WOULD BE ABOLISHED—INTRODUCTION OF NEW LEGISLATION ON EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Before we are given another committee, the report of which can be set aside, may I ask a question based on a report that the government is considering that in its post control plans it will abolish the right of public servants to strike. In view of the fact that a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on employer-employee relations in the public service spent a year and a half studying this subject, and made a report just a few weeks ago in which it was recommended that the right to strike be continued, may I ask the Prime Minister if any attention is to be paid to the report of that committee?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what report the hon. member is referring. If he is talking of the report in the newspapers about the right to strike—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No; the Finkelman committee report.

Mr. Trudeau: —I can tell him there is no movement afoot in the federal government to abolish the right to strike.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister if the government is working on new legislation respecting employer-employee relations in the public service based on the report of the special joint committee?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Arising out of the joint committee report, work is going on in the government toward changes in present legislation.

ALLEGED DELAYS AND IRREGULARITIES IN SENDING OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning problems now experienced by most old age pensioners in connection with their old age security pension cheque. This month, the supplement and spouse allowance were not included with the old age pension cheques. The pensioners received only the basic amounts. Our constituency office must take in many calls and the office of the department in Quebec advises us that it is snowed under and that we will have to wait a month. Could the minister tell us whether he is aware of that situation and what steps he intends to take to correct that serious problem which has dire consequences for older people in Quebec?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, indeed I was informed of a number of cases such as the hon. member mentioned. Apparently, these situations are due to some problem in the programming of computers which issue old age pension cheques. It is something I deeply regret and I gave instructions to my officials to prepare the cheques by hand if necessary each time there is a complaint. I thank the hon. member and I hope the other members will be able to explain the present difficulties to the citizens who will be affected and to bring each case to the attention of the responsible officers in each province, so that we may correct the situation as soon as possible.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF BANK LOAN BEING NEGOTIATED

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. On Monday last I asked the minister a question about the progress of financing arrangements between Lockheed and the Canadian banks. The minister declined to answer but immediately afterwards told reporters that an agreement was being negotiated for something more than $300 million but less than $400 million. While not wishing to raise a question of privilege about this at this time, I feel that since the question was first raised in the House, the House should have been given the answer before reporters were apprised of the situation.

Will the minister now tell the House more exactly how much is being borrowed, at what rate of interest, how long the period of the loan is and what kind of security Canadian banks will get for their loan, inasmuch as the government has said categorically that it will not guarantee the loan?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the financing arrangements are being worked out between Lockheed and the Canadian banks. It will be up to them to make the first announcement about the terms of that financing.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, you will notice that I had three questions wrapped up in that first one. The minister answered one and avoided two, which is about par. If the minister cannot tell the House what rate of interest will be payable on the loan which is being negotiated—what interest the Canadian people are going to pay—can he at least assure the House that it will not be above the prime rate? Can he tell the House whether he expects that the government will be required to pay more in interest than the $111 million which was allowed as part of the total program cost?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the answers to all those questions will be made available at the time the announcement is made concerning the whole matter.

An hon. Member: In the House?

Mr. McKinnon: Can the minister assure the House that he will make the announcement in the House of Commons where the questions have been asked?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Yes or no.

POST OFFICE

USE OF PRIVATE COURIERS BY DEPARTMENT—ACTION TO RECOVER BUSINESS LOST TO PRIVATE COURIERS AS RESULT OF STRIKES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Postmaster General in his dual capacity as Postmaster General and Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs? Does the hon. gentleman consider the admission by a Post Office official that his department uses expensive private couriers to carry urgent interoffice and intercity mail to be good advertising for the Post Office and an example of efficiency in restraint on behalf of consumers of Canada?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the use by the Post Office of private couriers and am told it has been the practice for 28.5 years. I am not sure if further investigation might not show that it has been done for at least 35 years. It is a special service. When a parcel, package or letter has to be delivered from point A to point B in Ottawa in 20 minutes, it is much more efficient and less expensive to use this service than to divert regular workers within the Post Office for this service.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Postmaster General has stated that private couriers are "costing the taxpayer" by creaming off revenue which would ordinarily go to the Post Office, why does he want the cost to be even greater than necessary by having the Post Office use these couriers? And, what does he plan to do to recover the business which has fled to private couriers because of the failure of the Post Office to provide consistently reliable performance?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have already announced that we intend to go into that business within one year in order to recover the type of business which private couriers attempt to attract. Basically, it is a profitable business only in big, metropolitan centres. As for regaining some of our business, the hon. member will be pleased to know that the volume and revenue of the Post Office in January, February and March this year was 6 per cent higher than in the corresponding period last year.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—DATE OF SIGNING

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Since the Minister of National Defence apparently does not intend to inform the House about the status of the Lockheed contract and financing arrangements for it, will the Minister of Supply and Services tell the House if he expects to sign the contract tomorrow?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to supply the House with more information but I believe that during negotiations one must necessarily proceed with utmost discretion. We have of course, until tomorrow midnight to make a decision but I do not know at this point whether or not the contract will be signed before midnight tomorrow.

ALLEGATION MINISTER CONSULTED PSYCHIC ON LOCKHEED CONTRACT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence? According to reports earlier this week in the Toronto Sun, the minister has apparently inherited an interest in things extrasensory and made at least half a dozen telephone calls to Dr. David Hoy, a psychic operating out of Paducah, Kentucky. Apparently the minister made the calls during a recent visit by Dr. Hoy to Toronto. The minister is reported to have sought advice from the psychic on defence policy and the Lockheed LRPA contract. Will the minister tell the House the advice he received and if it will be his practice in future to consult psychics?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the newspaper report but, as stated by the hon. member, it is totally erroneous. The man referred to as Dr. Hoy telephoned me two or three weeks ago and said that he had information concerning funding which might be useful for the Lockheed program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Did you ask Mackenzie King?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I did not return the telephone call and did not seek the source of funds suggested.

POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF EGGS IN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SUPPLIES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I gave him notice of my intention to ask it. It arises from the fact that Aaron Metzzer Produce, a major egg distributor in Ontario, has been unable to get CEMA to fill more than 50 per cent of its orders since Easter, that it has been unable to get import permits to fill the gap, and that a carload of eggs promised by CEMA for delivery today has not arrived. What assurance can the minister give the people of Ontario that there will not be egg shortages in stores in Ontario, shortages which may arise because this major supplier will not be able to meet orders as early as next Monday if eggs do not become available?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it has not been reported to me that anybody in Ontario went without eggs. I am told that the distributor will have eggs on Monday.

TEXTILES AND CLOTHING—REQUEST FOR QUOTAS ON IMPORTS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of deteriorating conditions in the textile and clothing industry of Canada—there has been a drop of 20 per cent in business over the last decade—can the minister explain why his department continues to refuse to place quotas on imports, particularly winter outerwear, coming from cheap-labour southeast Asian countries?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will refer to the proceedings of the Senate committee—I think it is the finance and banking committee—of yesterday morning he will find that I and my officials appeared before the committee for about three hours and many of these questions were dealt with in considerable detail at that time. On the question of refusing to introduce quotas, let me say that we have actually introduced quotas on a number of items. As for the matter of outerwear, and specific commodities relating to the report of the clothing and textile board, insufficient data was available in order to enter into the necessary negotiations with the countries concerned. But we have put all these items under import surveillance, which means that they require import permits. As soon as a case has been established as a result of surveillance, further action will be taken.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have met with members of the council and am perfectly satisfied they are acting within the law. They are not acting illegally, nor, as the hon. member suggested, are they being dishonest.

OLYMPIC GAMES

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO EXTEND SELF-FINANCING PROGRAMS

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board.

Considering that, in the last few weeks, there were meetings between the President of the Treasury Board and the Quebec Minister of Finance in which they discussed the continuation of the self-financing programs for the Olympic Games in the summer of 1976 and that, according to the provincial minister, negotiations would be completed by this time, and in view of the fact that the right hon. Prime Minister stated in the House two weeks ago that the government was still supporting the self-financing objective, can the President of the Treasury Board inform hon. members of the House of the nature of the agreements between himself and the representative of the Quebec government, and tell them when he proposes to introduce in the House the bills which are necessary to extend the existing programs or to establish new programs?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing else to report at the present time. We have not quite completed the negotiations and as soon as they are, I shall be glad to make a statement in the House.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—EFFECT OF CHANGE IN RATE ON RAPESEED

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As the minister's predecessor pledged in February, 1975, to reduce freight rate anomalies as between raw and finished products, especially rapeseed, and to consult fully with the provinces, I ask the minister what will be the effect of the order in council of April 13 increasing even further the present anomaly of 25 cents per hundredweight in favour of crushing rapeseed in Montreal over crushing it in parts of western Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, consultations have taken place and there was a general understanding on the part of western transportation ministers that under existing law we cannot impose a lower rate for rapeseed oil than the technically compensatory rate. That being the best we can do, it is what we propose to do. Of course, there is an anomaly which continues because of the movement of rapeseed at a very low rate. It would take another form of action which could correct the situation. There will be a possible opportunity for legislation next session to deal with some of these problems. I should say to the hon. member that if he thinks the existing use of Crow rates on meal and rapeseed is going by the board, he is wrongly informed.

● (1440)

Mr. Benjamin: I am informed today that rape processing plants in western Canada are losing at the rate of $300,000 a month at the present time. In view of the fact the Department of Regional Economic Expansion provided grants for these plants, will the Minister of Transport advise if he has made any representations in cabinet or if the government is considering any compensation? How does that square with the policy of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, in view of the fact that the government and the Prime Minister pledged in 1974 to do something about the anomalies between raw and finished products in western Canada?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the action to legislate changes in freight rates will be taken in the next session. The necessary changes in the National Transportation Act are being developed for that purpose. The hon. member knows that the figure he refers to as a loss in processing plants in western Canada is really due to the fact that there is a very low rate on rapeseed moving to destinations at the Crow rate. I am not sure whether he is proposing a solution by bringing those rates into line with costs.

DATE ON WHICH RATE OF INFLATION WILL REACH SIX PER CENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. When does the government expect this country will reach the 6 per cent inflation rate which has been achieved by the United States government and, following that, the 2 per cent inflation rate which the Secretary of the Treasury Williams Simon said recently he is confident the United States will reach within two years?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish Secretary Simon well in his expectation. I myself would think that is rather ambitious. From our standpoint, we do not anticipate reaching the 6 per cent rate in the current fiscal, or, indeed, calendar year.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Elgin.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I note that he has momentarily left the chamber. Perhaps I might be recognized upon his return.

BEEF CATTLE—REPORT OF SPECIAL INQUIRY—DATE OF PUBLICATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Agriculture has now re-entered the chamber, I will direct my question to him. I understand that on Tuesday of this week the Prime Minister received the report of the special beef inquiry that was ordered some time ago. I assume that since two days have past, the Minister of Agriculture has received the report from the Prime Minister and has had time to read it. Does the report make any recommendations as to greater government regulation of the beef industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had time to read the report and, therefore, I am not aware of what recommendations have been made, except for a telephone conversation with my assistant deputy minister in charge of the stabilization board.

Mr. Murta: As the report is going to be very important to not only the beef producers, but the consumers of this country, can the minister now give an approximate date when the report will be made public?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have been as eagerly awaiting this report as the hon. member or anyone else. He can rest assured that we will make it public as soon as possible.

SKIM MILK POWDER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PURCHASE BY CIDA

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he give some indication as to the status or progress of the purchase of some 75 million pounds of skim milk powder by CIDA? Can he give some indication as to the progress of those negotiations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I know of no problem there. I read some things in the press the other day which I found very hard to believe.

As far as I am concerned, the arrangements have been made. CIDA has agreed to spend an extra $10 million in the program and at world prices.

Mr. Wise: In the minister's statement we are led to believe that the purchase will be entirely financed by CIDA. Is it not true that the dairy producers will be contributing a greater amount of money than the government, $28 million from the producers compared to the $20 million from this government? When the minister is clarifying this matter, can he give some indication as to the method or formula used to arrive at the $8.60 used in the penalty clause of his statement on dairy policy?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the connection. However, in the case the hon. member has raised, CIDA has agreed to put $20 million into a fund to purchase from dairy producers. I am glad the hon. member has raised this. The dairy farmers of Canada will be contributing in a tremendous way to the food aid program, much more than the rest of society is being asked to do. This is something that many people do not realize. At the first opportunity I will present the complete memo to the hon. member on why the $8.60 is as high as it is. Basically, it is because they paid no attention, that is the provincial marketing boards and everyone else, to my appeals to cut back on production. It is just wasteful to produce and then do what they are now doing. They might as well do what they did the day before yesterday, throw it down the sewers in Toronto or anywhere else. If they are going to produce it for nothing, that is something that cannot be accepted when there is no market for the product.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LICENSING AGREEMENT WITH ITALIAN COMPANY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF REACTORS—POSSIBLE FAILURE TO ACHIEVE SAFEGUARDS AGREEMENT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It refers to a report on April 24 that negotiations are expected to be completed shortly on a licensing agreement allowing an Italian company to build CANDU reactors. In view of the fact that on July 22, 1975 the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources went to some lengths to outline the safeguards agreement he was trying to achieve to cover the resale by the Italian company of Canadian technology to other countries, and since the April 24 report states that the licensing agreement if approved would cover only construction of reactors in Italy and the company would not be permitted to sell reactors to other countries, does this mean that the Canadian government was not able to achieve the safeguards it was seeking from Italy?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question is a complicated one, as one would expect from the complex member who posed the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. MacEachen: If I may revert to the normal Celtic relationship that exists between us—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —the simple answer to the question is if the hon. member is referring to the licensing and licensing arrangements, that situation is fully safeguarded under the policy that has been adopted by the government.

● (1450)

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to point out that it is not a complex matter at all. Last year the government was talking about allowing the Italian government to have the right of resale of Canadian technology. Now it seems that that condition has been withdrawn because the safeguards being sought have not been met. My question is, is it the situation that the safeguards that were being sought for resale of Canadian technology at that time have not been met by the Italian government and therefore resale is not to be permitted?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, such resale or retransfer of Canadian technology could not take place to a third country without the concurrence of the government of Canada.

MIRABEL—TENDERS FOR INSTALLATION OF SOUND SYSTEM—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Supply and Services.

As reported on page 12900 of Hansard for April 27, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) asked the minister if he could assure the House, and I quote:

> ... that to his knowledge there were no improprieties or irregularities surrounding the tendering for, and letting of, some of the contracts for the installation of a sound reinforcing system at Mirabel airport.

Can the minister answer that question today?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the Social Credit party is more interested in finding out the truth than is the hon. member for Central Nova. It may be that he knew the answer, as all the information I am about to give was supplied to a representative of the Progressive Conservative party's research staff sometime last January. At that time they said that they were satisfied with the information they had received. We asked for tenders and the closing date was July 3, 1974. Later the closing date was extended to August 28, 1974 and all the firms which had been invited to tender were warned of this extension.

On August 28, therefore before the closing date, the RCA company sent in an envelope bearing the original date of July 3 as well as the tenders number. Due to a clerical error, this envelope was misplaced and when the tenders were opened there was only one, namely General Sound and Theater Equipment Ltd. The RCA tender was unsealed and accepted on the next day, as internal regulations state no tenderer shall be penalized on account of our own errors. The RCA tender was accepted because it was the lowest. This decision was accepted by the General Sound in a letter—

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF ANTICIPATED INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES ON ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE OF BUDGET

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Now that the Prime Minister has confirmed that we are stuck with controls for two and a half years, apparently certain in his attitude that they will work, much in contrast to his view on May 3, 1974 when he said he was quite certain that they were not the right approach to fighting inflation, and considering that the Anti-Inflation Board expects food prices to rise by 3 to 4 per cent over the next two months, does the Minister of Finance agree that this development would reverse the recent deceleration of prices increases, and does the minister now feel he may have to retract the statements of both the Prime Minister and himself to the effect that the anti-inflation program has already had some effect in reducing inflation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance who today indicated that our inflation certainly will not be down to 6 per cent this year, be it fiscal or calendar year. As our future inflation rate depends on the administration's fiscal and monetary stance more than the effect of the controls program, would the minister indicate when we might expect his budget which hopefully might better acquaint the people of Canada with the administration's current budgetary views, bearing in mind the last budget was 10 months ago and was brought down by a former minister of finance who has since had a falling out and has run away?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I just say that I think the hon. member's last several remarks are rather unfair to my predecessor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would hope to be able to confirm within a week or so the actual date of the budget.

ALLEGATION EGG MARKETING AGENCY CIRCUMVENTING LAW IN CONNECTION WITH IMPORTATION OF EGGS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I want to return to a matter that is very important to both consumers and producers. Has CEMA been importing eggs or otherwise obtaining eggs from the United States through intermediaries and offering them to Canadian firms while recommending to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce that Canadian firms not be allowed permits to import eggs themselves directly from the United States? Secondly, is CEMA trying to do indirectly something that the cabinet has not yet given it permission to do, that is, control the importation of eggs into Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered this question. CEMA is not doing anything that anybody has told me is illegal; they are operating within the law. They are supposed to be in the position of supplying the need for eggs in Canada. If they cannot supply the eggs needed in Canada by the consuming public, the breaking trade, etc., then they have to turn to some other source. In essence, they are using a perfectly legitimate broker bringing eggs into Canada and CEMA is paying them only the brokerage fee. The big dollar was coming from the importers who were but are not now making a rip-off on the importation of eggs from the United States. As far as I am concerned, it was an unwarranted rip-off. Certainly the consumers did not get any benefit from it but the importers were, and now somebody has infringed upon their territory they do not like it.

FRASER RIVER FLOOD CONTROL PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ACTION ON THE BRIDGEVIEW-SOUTH WESTMINSTER SECTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. The government of British Columbia has said it is ready to proceed immediately, with federal participation, on the Bridgeview-South Westminster section of the Fraser River flood control program. Could the minister give assurance that the diking and draining of this area will receive high priority so that the health and safety standards for this community can be brought to standards that all of us want to enjoy for ourselves?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the last time I met with Mr. Nielsen we discussed this problem, and he knows we are giving high priority to this item and are providing money for it.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

PROPRIETY OF ALLEGED STATEMENT BY ADMINISTRATOR ON WAGE SETTLEMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Does the minister believe that it is proper for the anti-inflation administrator, who should be impartial in judging labour-management wage disputes that are referred to him, to express views such as those he expressed in Edmonton, where he warned unions that his role as enforcer of the government's control program may require him to set tougher limits on wage increases than those allowed by the Anti-Inflation Board, and who said that unless their case is strong the parties seeking a reference run the risk of ending up with less than the Anti-Inflation Board was willing to grant?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have read the remarks of the administrator. I think he made it very clear that he is in the position, as the Anti-Inflation Board is not, of making a decision which is of a legal, binding nature, and he was merely making clear in his statement that because his order might be reviewable by the courts in due course he would have to proceed with much less flexibility than is possible for the Anti-Inflation Board. I do not think in any sense that it would be fair to characterize his explanation of the statute as a warning to anyone.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider pointing out to the administrator that statements such as he made will only increase the skepticism of the public. As a CBC poll indicated, two-thirds of the Canadian people believe the program is not being applied equitably now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for the administrator, indeed for the Anti-Inflation Board itself, to make things clear to the public so the public has a better understanding of the exact nature of the provisions of the law passed by this parliament under which they operate. I would think that the objection of the hon. member is a totally unreasonable one.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the government House leader the business for the balance of today, tomorrow and the early part of next week.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we shall continue discussion of the report stage of Bill C-89 with the expectation that votes on the motions would be taken this afternoon. We shall then call Bill C-68 and continue debate on the report stage until the end of the week unless, of course, it is disposed of earlier. On Monday it is the government's intention to call, for the first time, Bill C-81, the members of parliament pay bill. When that bill is called, the responsible minister will announce that the government will propose an amendment to freeze expense allowances as well as pay during 1976.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Sharp: There is an informal understanding, Mr. Speaker—or perhaps it is better to say, a hope—that the bill will be considered in committee of the whole. There is also the hope, rather than an understanding, that the bill can be passed through all stages in a single sitting. I know this will require unanimous consent of all members in order to permit such a serious departure from the rules, but I am hopeful that hon. members will co-operate in disposing of this matter expeditiously.

Tuesday, May 4, and Friday, May 7, will be opposition days. On Wednesday, which is the first government day after we have disposed of the pay bill, we will call Bill C-84, the bill on capital punishment.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the government House leader that I am delighted to see that the government has finally screwed up its courage and decided to come clean with the House of Commons. I hope it does not fall into this unfortunate position again.

There are two matters I should like to mention in respect of House business, both of which arose today during the question period and one of which is the budget debate. It does seem to be quite unusual, having regard to the statement of the finance minister, that we are left, some two weeks before the time the Minister of Finance indicated the budget would be brought down, without knowing the date. I think knowledge of that date is extremely important, not only in respect of the government but certainly in respect of the operations of the House in terms of choosing opposition days and a number of other things. That is the first point.

The second point has to do with an announcement which, in view of the question period today and the question period yesterday, would seem to be imminent, and that is the announcement regarding the purchase, or not, of a long-range patrol aircraft. This matter has occupied the question period of the House for a long time—a great many days—and the attention of the Canadian people. This is not the usual sort of thing such as a sale of wheat or grain to China or Russia. Will the government House leader assure the House that the announcement, whatever it is, in respect of this matter will be made in this House on motions?

We are prepared to give an indication of co-operation regarding priority, if necessary. That announcement should be made during motions in the House, rather than before the television cameras somewhere else in this building. I would ask for that assurance on behalf of all members of the House.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the government has not yet reached a final decision on the time of the budget, but my colleague the Minister of Finance has said that he expects to make an announcement within the next week or so. On the second point, the contract with Lockheed, if one is signed, I think I can give the undertaking, on behalf of the Minister of National Defence, that the announcement, whatever it is, will be made in the House of Commons.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Thank you very much.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the fact that the government has at last come to the position we took on December 18, 1975, the night the restraint program was announced, to the effect that a freeze on the incomes of members of parliament should be complete. The minister expressed the hope that this could be dealt with at all stages on Monday. I see no problem in respect of that, which leads me to ask a question about that day. In view of the fact that Bill C-81 ought not to take very long on Monday, what else will we be doing that day?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there is no difficulty in filling in the time. If, by chance—and I share the hope of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—Bill C-81 can go through all stages in a matter of a few minutes or hours, then I would propose, as I indicated much earlier, calling the bill on capital punishment so that it can be disposed of as quickly as reasonably possible. I note there is a disposition, if I might add this, to come to a decision on this bill and I am hopeful we can have some discussion about limiting the length of speeches so that a maximum number of members can express their views.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader to indicate the status of Bill C-72 in this session, the bill having to do with discrimination?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if the House is able to dispose of the matters I have indicated the government hopes can be disposed of before June 30, I will give consideration to opening the debate on that bill. However, I have come to the conclusion that it is the general wish of all members of the House that we conclude this session by June 30. I have heard my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, express himself very strongly on this matter from time to time. I would not want to disappoint him by bringing forward other legislation which I have not forecast.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN AUGUST, 1975

Question No. 3,830—Mr. Bawden:

1. How many persons in Canada were reported to be unemployed in August 1975 by Statistics Canada?

2. How many persons were receiving unemployment insurance benefits in August 1975?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following. 1. 623,000 persons were reported to be unemployed in August, 1975.

2. 634,839 persons were receiving unemployment insurance benefits in August, 1975. See attached explanation of differences between Statistics Canada's unemployment statistics and data from the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Comparing Unemployment Statistics with Data from the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

The monthly Labour Force Survey (LFS) is the source of the official measure of unemployment in Canada. Comparisons are frequently made between the number of unemployed persons as reported by the LFS and the number of unemployment insurance claimants or beneficiaries. The numbers in the series seldom coincide, and misleading inferences are often drawn about the accuracy of the measures. However, the series are not intended to measure the same characteristics or identical populations and therefore, direct comparisons are not valid. The populations to which the LFS and Unemployment Insurance Commission (UIC) data refer are somewhat different in several respects. The Labour Force Survey covers the civilian population 14 years of age and over, including self-employed persons but excluding the institutional population and persons living in the Yukon, Northwest Territories and Indian reserves. The insured population comprises the paid worker segment of the labour force (1), including members of the armed forces. Further problems in comparing the LFS unemployed and the UIC claimants and beneficiaries result from the fact that there are significant differences in the meaning of the terms "unemployed", "claimant" and "beneficiary". Not all the LFS unemployed are UIC claimants (beneficiaries) and conversely, not all UIC claimants (beneficiaries) are included in the LFS unemployed. According to LFS definitions, some UIC claimants may be "employed", while others may be "not in the Labour force". The LFS unemployment estimates include primarily, persons who were without work and seeking work. To be entitled to receive UIC benefit, a claimant must have had an interruption of earnings, and be available for and capable of employment. A UIC claimant may work part-time and still be eligible for benefit while in the LFS such a person would be considered as employed. Although a claimant may meet the condition of availability and capability, he may not be actively seeking employment and, therefore, would be treated by the LFS as not in the Labour force. Thus, in addition to persons who would be classified as unemployed according to the LFS, the UIC claimant count includes persons with some earnings (employed) as well as persons not actively seeking employment (not in the labour force). For example, most claimants eligible for UIC sickness, maternity and retirement benefit are probably not included in the LFS unemployed.

PEI FISHING SECTOR

Question No. 3,863—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

1. With reference to the fishing sector of the Prince Edward Island Comprehensive Development Plan, have any measures been taken since the Plan's inception to encourage a longer inshore fishing season and, if so (a) what were they, (b) on what dates, (c) at what total and yearly cost, (d) with what specific effect on the average number of weeks spent fishing by inshore fishermen?

2. Are any new measures planned or under consideration for Phase 2 and, if so (a) what are they, (b) do they represent a change in objective from Phase 1, (c) for what reason were they deemed necessary?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. No specific measures have been taken.

2. An examination of the harvesting and marketing potential of such species as silversides and quahaugs is currently underway. Development of these species, and others, could extend the inshore fishing season.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—MINISTER'S OFFICES

Question No. 4,093—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Does the Minister of External Affairs have an office in the Jackson Building and, if so (a) on what date was it opened, (b) for what purpose?

2. Does the Minister have other offices within public or rented buildings in the National Capital Region and, if so (a) in what location, (b) on what date was each occupied?

3. What was the cost of decorating and furnishing the offices assigned to the Minister in (a) the Jackson Building, (b) other buildings?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. (a) February 9, 1976. (b) The Secretary of State for External Affairs is responsible for the Canadian International Development Agency, which occupies the Jackson Building. It was recently decided that it would be more efficient for the Minister to have an office in the same building; this would facilitate a closer working relationship with CIDA.

2. (a) (i) Room 418-N, Centre Block, House of Commons. (ii) On floor A-10, Lester B. Pearson Building, 125 Sussex Drive, Ottawa. (b) (i) Upon becoming Secretary of State for External Affairs on August 8, 1974, the Minister remained in the Parliamentary office which he had previously occupied in other ministerial capacities, beginning in early 1968. (ii) August 8, 1974.

3. (a) $6,800. (b) During the Minister's tenure as Secretary of State for External Affairs, the amounts expended for decorations and furnishings have been as follows: (i) For Room 418-N, Centre Block: Nil; (ii) On Floor A-10 of the Pearson Building: $23.30.

[Mr. Roy (Laval).]

COLLÈGE NOTRE-DAME, MONTREAL

Question No. 4,129—Mr. Lachance:

1. Has the government rented the Collège Notre-Dame facilities in Montreal to accommodate members of the Canadian Armed Forces detached for security purposes during the Olympic Games and, if so (a) for how long, (b) for what amount, (c) who will be responsible for the cost, (d) how many personnel will be accommodated?

2. Will the Canadian Armed Forces members have exclusive access to the sports centre near the College and, if so, for what reason will the public who ordinarily have access to the centre be denied entry for this period?

3. Have agreements been entered into with other sports centres for the exclusive use of the Canadian Armed Forces during the Olympic Games?

4. How many private establishments have been so requisitioned to accommodate members of the Armed Forces during the Olympic Games?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Solicitor General and the Department of National Defence as follows: 1. No. The Government of Canada has rented the Collège Notre-Dame facilities to accommodate members of the RCMP detached for security purposes during the Olympic Games. (a) 80 days, i.e., June 1, 1976 to August 20, 1976. (b) $374,200. (c) RCM Police Olympic Budget. (d) 228 beds, plus a contingency factor of up to 272 additional beds.

2. No. The RCMP will have exclusive use of the Sports Centre connected to the College. These facilities were obtained to assist in keeping the members morale high while away from their families and provide physical conditioning equipment and training areas. For security reasons these facilities will not be available to the public during the rental period.

3. No.

4. None.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN CANADIAN MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY

Question No. 4,598—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

What is the government estimate of the unemployment rate in the Canadian motion picture industry in each year from 1965 to date for (a) the industry, (b) each major class of workers within the industry?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by several Departments as follows: This information is not know to the Government.

INFANT AND MATERNAL MORTALITY RATES

Question No. 4,969—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For each of the past five years, by province and territory, what were the rates of (a) infant, (b) maternal mortality?

2. For the same period, by province and territory, what were the rates of (a) infant, (b) maternal mortality by major ethnic groups including Indians and Metis?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: 1. The following tables A and B show the following: Table A: The number of Infant Deaths and Infant Mortality Rate for Canada, Provinces and Territories, 1970-1974. (Infant Mortality Rate is defined as the number of Infant Deaths per 1,000 Live Births). Table B: The number of Maternal Deaths and Maternal Mortality Rate for Canada, Provinces and Territories, 1970-1974. (Maternal Mortality Rate is defined as the number of Maternal Deaths per 10,000 Live Births).

NOTE: It may be observed that the trend has been one of appreciable and general decline in the above mortality rates over the period under review.

2. Unfortunately, the data by ethnic origin are either not available or very incomplete; the only major ethnic group for which the requested mortality figures are available is for Indians; these data are confined only to six provinces and Territories. The tables C and D show the following: Table C: The number of Infant Deaths and Infant Mortality Rate for Indians for six Provinces and Territories, 1970-1973. Table D: The number of Maternal Deaths for Indians for six Provinces and Territories, 1970-1973; The Maternal Mortality Rates have not been worked out because of the very small number of deaths.

FATTAH REPORT

Question No. 5,010—Mr. Brisco:

Was Dr. Ezzat A. Fattah's report entitled "The Canadian Public and the Death Penalty—A Study of a Social Attitude" his first report prepared for the government on the subject and, if not (a) on what date was the previous one undertaken, (b) on what date was it finished, (c) how much did it cost?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Dr. E. A. Fattah's report entitled "The Canadian Public and the Death Penalty—A Study of a Social Attitude" was not the first report prepared for the Ministry of the Solicitor General on the subject. Previously, he had prepared a similar report entitled "A Study of the Deterrent Effect of Capital Punishment with Special Reference to the Canadian Situation". However, the latter report did not contain any analysis of public attitudes per se. (a) June 15, 1971. (b) November 1, 1971. (c) $4,990.

RCMP—PENSIONS

Question No. 5,018—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the following brackets (a) less than $20.00 per month, (b) $20.00 to $29.99 per month, (c) $30.00 to $39.99 per month, (d) $40.00 to $49.99 per month, (e) $50.00 to $59.99 per month, (f) $60.00 to $69.99 per month, (g) $70.00 to $79.99 per month, (h) $80.00 to $89.99 per month, (i) $90.00 to $99.99 per month, (j) $100.00 to $149.99 per month, (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month, (l) $200.00 to $249.99 per month, (m) $250.00 to $299.99 per month, (n) $300.00 per month and over?

2. How many widows of RCMP personnel or of retired RCMP personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the number of retired RCMP personnel and also the number of widows of RCMP personnel or of retired RCMP personnel presently residing in each province?

[Mr. Roy (Laval).]

4. In respect of how many orphans of RCMP personnel are pensions being paid and what is the average amount thereof?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): 1. (a) 1. (b) 8. (c) 61. (d) 3. (e) 12. (f) 44. (g) 43. (h) 11. (i) 32. (j) 110. (k) 191. (l) 281. (m) 331. (n) 2,091.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO ADD NEW DEFINITIONS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 28, consideration of Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a long-standing arrangement to appear at 3.30 before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in respect of my estimates. For that reason I will have to leave the chamber then, but my parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), will be present and will be following the debate.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the annoncement about his busy schedule. I think an answer to the question asked today in the House is of great pertinence, particularly to the Atlantic area. The target for the reduction of the inflationary rate in Canada is much lower than the target and the anticipated rate of reduction of inflation in the United States. I suppose no area of Canada is more affected by such a situation than the Atlantic area. Our dealings, to a very large degree, depend not only upon the success of the economy of Canada as a whole, but upon our competitive position in relation to producers in the markets of the world and in the United States. Every time the economy of Canada is not in pace with that of the United States, the Atlantic area suffers much more than the rest of Canada.

● (1510)

Whether it be in respect of wood products, agricultural or any other products, we are constantly in competition either in United States markets or world markets with products produced there. If, for instance, one is involved in the paper industry, one finds oneself in competition with that industry in the state of Maine and throughout the eastern coast of the United States as far south as Georgia. Every advantage they can obtain from a declining rate of inflation is detrimental to our forestry and agricultural industries, at least in the Atlantic area. It is, therefore, the plea of that area that the government improve its target. The government must reduce the time-span required to reduce the inflationary structure and prevent the undue hardship which would fall on the Atlantic area.

If they, per chance—and I hope they do—reach the 2 per cent rate in the target time mentioned today in the United States, this certainly will place an undue cost on the Atlantic area. I think this is particularly pertinent in view of the fact that Anti-Inflation Board rulings already have decreed that workers in the Atlantic area are not entitled to wages equivalent to those of workers in other parts of Canada. Two instances have been cited. The first is in respect of the pulp and paper industry in the city of Saint John, which had been closing the gap but had not completely closed it in respect of the wages received by comparable industry in central Canada and on the British Columbia coast. They were also not allowed by the board to attain the wage level paid in the sugar industry.

It has been extremely difficult for this particular industry to obtain help at the rates of pay that have been paid. While the industry had tried, in the negotiations with its workers, to apply a rate which would provide stability with regard to the work force, this was rolled back by the Anti-Inflation Board. When one couples this with the policy of the government of Canada concerning regional wages in different parts of Canada, and when the same wages under certain agreements between the government of Canada and the unions are not paid in the Atlantic area, there is a discriminatory structure which does no good to the Atlantic area on an economic basis.

The basic structure, of course, requires co-operation among the government, management, and all other facets of our society. This is an aspect which has been lacking while the government has been trying to administer this bill. Therefore, the quicker the government gets out of its present posture in respect of price and wage controls, the better it will be for the amenities of the various groups in Canada, and the better it will be for Canada as a whole.

We cannot conduct ourselves on the basis of confrontation with labour. We cannot conduct ourselves on the basis of confrontation with industry. We cannot conduct ourselves on the basis of confrontation with the provinces. We must change the pattern and talk about the things this government intends to do, so that there will be some accord when the government comes up with a final policy.

Like so many other pieces of legislation, this bill was not presented to parliament by a government which had had proper discussion with all the other forces in Canada or which had properly explained the legislation, or its necessity, to the people of Canada at any stage and explained to the manufacturer and the labourer the real need and necessity for such a program. Instead, there has been confrontation.

The government of Canada suggested it borrowed this policy from the opposition. Mr. Speaker, it must be made abundantly clear, in spite of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in answer to a question today, that although he may have borrowed the semblance of a policy, obviously he did not borrow the policy of the opposition. While there may be an element of relationship between the anti-inflation legislation we have on the statute books and what the opposition would have brought in, it is not the policy of the opposition which has been brought in.

I believe the time has come when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) should not confront and challenge the people. Government speakers, as they go back and forth across the country, should not tell the people what to do. Instead, they should show leadership by giving information and by answering questions in this House. They should give forthright and full information to the voters across Canada concerning the implications and complications of our economic structure. If this were done, the amendment presently before us should be accepted, because it would not take more than 2½ years to bring about the changes that are required in our economy.

The Canadian people in Saint John and other areas of Canada should not be kicked around as they are by this government. Canadians are good people. They can, and will, take good advice. They will follow when they are well led, but they cannot accept confrontation as we have it. This legislation is directly responsible for the approach taken by labour, whether it be at the level of the school teacher or of the janitor, not because these people are not prepared to make their contribution to our society but because they have been confronted. This is what is wrong. This is why the adoption of this amendment would be good for the government, would be good for the opposition and would be good for the whole of Canada.

Legislation has continually hurt the Atlantic area. Whether it be in respect of transportation, fishing or agriculture, it would seem that the policies of this government, through Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance, have been to look at dollars and how to save them, but not to look at the consequences of saving money in particular fields. This is but another example of the inequities and inequalities which have existed and which will continue to exist in the Atlantic area until we have a total policy presented by the government of Canada to bring the whole of Canada ahead at once without neglecting any part of Canada.

This piece of legislation gives no consideration to the exceptions which invariably will be necessary in one part of Canada or another. This legislation does improve the basic principle of the Anti-Inflation Board; there is no question about that. Without the recognition by government of exceptions, without the recognition by government of the requirements in certain specific areas, without a cost-benefit study of the impact of legislation upon certain areas of Canada, this country cannot go forward as a country but will only go forward in those parts in which the government is particularly interested and apparently in which it holds most of its seats.

I appeal to the government to accept this amendment. Let us not confront the people; let us publicly consult them. There was a reference by the Prime Minister today to consultation, but there was no indication that the nation would have any idea of the type of consultation that would take place. There was no indication that the public would ever know what was said in the private and secretive type of consultations which he implied would take place. This is not the way in which a government should govern. It should be for what is right and fair in its policies.

I ask that when this legislation passes, as it will, unquestionably, with the weight of the government, that the minister give careful consideration—as he directs those controlling the anti-inflation program—to the impact of the individual agreement upon an individual area before he lowers the boom and says "No." Let us try to create an element of equality of earning opportunity across this nation. Let us not deny those in the east the privileges which are enjoyed in the extreme west, the prairies and the centre of Canada. We do not need to be treated as exceptions—we just want to be treated as Canadians!

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak for a few minutes in response to some remarks that were made yesterday. I want to remind the House that this bill is before parliament because the NDP, both at the time of the passage of the original legislation and as a result of Standing Order 26 in a special debate, insisted on the necessity for legislation to provide for appeal procedures for workers and salary earners in Canada against decisions made under the anti-inflation program.

I noticed yesterday that none of the members of the official opposition mentioned that that happens to be the main purpose of the bill, that is, to provide some justice and fair play to workers in Canada. They spent a great deal of time weeping and wailing for insurance companies, corporations, etc., but they forgot to mention the main purport of the bill, that is, to establish an appeal procedure for wage and salary earners in Canada, many of whom have already been unjustly treated as a result of the decision of the AIB and the administrator.

Yesterday, a spokesman of the official opposition stated that these kinds of controls should have limitations, that they should expire next year. The amendment reads, "May 1, 1977". They tore the program to shreds and, as my leader said earlier in the debate, they damned the progress from stem to gudgeon, then moved an amendment to keep it going for another year. I have not yet seen any proper reconciliation of that kind of nonsense.

Mr. Stevens: Sit down and I will tell you.

Mr. Benjamin: The issue is not how long the controls should be in place. Surely the issue is what kind of controls there should be, to whom they should apply, and how people will be affected by them. If the controls had started with those on high incomes, those who make high profits, those who have incomes from high interest rates, and if they had begun at the top and worked downward, whether it be incomes from profits, interest rates, investments or wages and salaries, then surely that would have been some kind of justice and equity in a program to fight inflation.

I heard the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) complain yesterday about the "poor" banks, insurance and finance companies that will be brought under the control program. He shed tears for them. Surely that is precisely where the program should have started, with banks, insurance and finance companies. Surely they should have been the first to come under a program to fight inflation. One of the spokesmen of the official opposition cries for the "poor" banks, insurance and finance companies, but I did not hear a word from the official opposition yesterday about any guarantees that old age pensioners should get what is allowed as a minimum under the anti-inflation program, that is, $600 a year. I would have hoped the official opposition would have taken action to impress upon this government the importance of bringing in immediately a $50 a month increase for old age pensioners.

People on low wages and salaries and people on pensions are not the ones who cause inflation; they are the first victims of inflation. But the whole program attacks these people first. The hon. member for Edmonton West worries about what will happen to the banks, insurance and finance companies when they are brought under the controls. That is the evidence the people of Canada have as to where the Conservative party stands when it comes to fighting inflation. They will look after their friends, the rich and the "barefoot" boys from Bay Street and James Street. They talk a good fight about workers, but when it comes to the crunch, when it comes to proposing legislation or moving amendments to legislation, they worry about banks, insurance and finance companies. It is not the people whose wage increases have been rolled back or whose bargaining process has been interfered with who cause inflation. They are the ones who are attempting to keep up with and to catch up with inflation. But the program picks on them first.

Another member of the official opposition yesterday was worrying about the "poor" professionals, the "poor" doctors, lawyers, accountants, architects and engineers whose average income is at least double that of the average wage and salary earner in Canada, those poor fellows, including colleagues in my caucus—who, by the way, do not practice law while they are members of parliament—

Mr. Stevens: Nobody would go to them.

Mr. Benjamin: —those poor professionals! A maximum of $2,400 a year is not enough for them, according to members of the official opposition. I suggest it should be the other way around. Those on high income should receive $600 a year, and those on low income should receive $2,400.

Mr. Friesen: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: But I did not hear a word on that from the official opposition yesterday. Let us go on to some more remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West. He said that the insurance and casualty companies will be withdrawing from Canada because of their poor cash flow under this program. I interjected at that point and said "Good". The hon. member for Edmonton West thought it was terrible of me to suggest it would be good if the casualty insurance companies withdrew from Canada.

We in the NDP, and in the CCF before that, under the leadership of my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), have acted on the principle that there is something immoral about making a profit from the misfortunes of others. We have had a compulsory automobile insurance program in Saskatchewan since 1947, and it works. I would tell my friends from British Columbia that in Saskatchewan, in the first two or three years, we had problems—I think we even lost money—but we provided insurance coverage at cost and we protected innocent victims of automobile accidents. The objective was not to make profit. But when Saskatchewan government insurance made a profit, that profit stayed in Saskatchewan and was invested in Saskatchewan industry and in Saskatchewan municipalities.

Where do these private auto insurance and casualty companies, about which the hon. member for Edmonton West is so concerned, get their money? They get it from the premium dollars they collect from the people of Canada. Where does it go? Does it go to the provinces or cities where the insurance is sold? No way! These are the kind of corporate citizens we do not need. In our opinion, profit taking and profit making at the expense of the misfortunes of others has no place in society.

The government of Canada is very reluctant to bring these corporations under the controls program. Their whole history is a crime against humanity. The percentage of the premium dollars they have paid out is not half of that in the province of Saskatchewan or, before too long, in the province of Manitoba. If the program is not totally ruined in British Columbia by the present government, the experience there will prove to be the same.

Yesterday the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) pointed out that the government is ignoring its own program and increasing passport fees, airport landing fees, and so forth. That is true. I should like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to reconcile something for me. Yesterday he interjected when the hon. member for Fundy-Royal was speaking. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) says that with regard to transportation the key is that the user shall pay. He is worrying about the $143 million in subsidies to rail passenger service. There is in the order of $500 million in losses in the operation of air services which taxpayers must make up. There is a $51 million loss in the St. Lawrence Seaway, $15 million in the National Harbours Board, and according to the latest figures I have, for 1972, the moneys which had to come out of general revenues, after collection of licence fees, gasoline taxes, excise taxes, and so forth, for streets, roads and highways in Canada amounted to over $1 billion.

If we follow the logic of the Minister of Transport to its conclusion and make the user pay, that will obviously mean increased rail, air and bus fares and increased licence fees, gasoline taxes, and so forth. That may help the Minister of Finance in terms of not having to put up so many tax dollars for those programs, but I should like to ask him what that does to the accessibility and availability of an essential service, namely, transportation. Everyone has to use transportation. What does that do to people who are on low incomes, and people who live in isolated areas?

If the Minister of Finance had a fair tax law and raised revenues to subsidize all modes of transportation based on ability to pay, we could equalize freight rates and passenger fares in all modes of transportation. We could cease discriminating against people in this country because of where they happen to live. We could put an end to the policy of the Minister of Transport as a result of which, if it is implemented and carried out, only the rich and those on expense accounts will be able to travel. I should like to ask the minister how he reconciles that with his anti-inflation program and how that principle is humane and civilized.

I would also point out that the failure to have a fair tax law is one of the things which has put the government into its difficulties. It has failed to apply an anti-inflation program to those who cause inflation. That has caused the people of Canada to be cynical about it. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal spoke about this at length yesterday. There is a great deal of cynicism. When a doctor can get a $2,400 increase in his income from fees, and another $2,400, $2,500 or $3,000 more income by way of what he calls increased costs of operation, and any income he gets from increased productivity, so-called, which means seeing more patients, and that is exempt under the anti-inflation program, let us not ask wage earners and pensioners to support the program or to pat the minister or this government on the back for it. There will not be that co-operation.

I am very pleased that the government of Saskatchewan has not signed an agreement with the federal government. I am pleased that the government of Saskatchewan saved our public employees from the tender mercies of this government and the Anti-Inflation Board and its administrator. We in Saskatchewan are going to allow increases which are fair and reasonable, and we are going to take into account regional differences, historical relationships and catch-up, whether the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada like it or not.

My final point is that I do not see the logic in wanting a program to end a year from next May 1, a year from this Saturday. I ask my Conservative friends why they want to set that kind of early deadline when they know full well, like everyone else in the country, that the rich and the powerful can sit and wait out that deadline, just as they did in the United States. Here they knew when the freeze would end. They knew when phase one, phase two, phase three and phase four would end, and they waited out each phase. In fact, the meat packing industry in the United States made it clear publicly. They were perfectly frank and honest. The day after the previously announced end of the controls, up went their prices.

Mr. Stevens: Your leader wants to end it on Saturday.

Mr. Benjamin: That is right, because the whole program is no good—and that is exactly what the official opposition has been saying. They want to keep for another year a program that is no good.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They want to suffer some more.

Mr. Benjamin: If you set a deadline of May 1, 1977, those who can afford to wait can reduce their inventories, operate on their cash reserves, sit on their savings and high current incomes and wait until May 1, 1977. Then they can raise their incomes through prices, profits, dividends or fees.

However, those who are on wages, salaries and pensions cannot afford to wait until the program ends, whether it ends on May 1, 1977, or a year beyond that, which is the way the government wants it. They cannot afford to wait, but the rich and powerful can. This anti-inflation program will have little meaningful effect on those who cause inflation, the profit takers and the profit makers, those who take all they can get and who take every fast buck they can—land speculators, professionals, corporations and financial institutions. I do not want anyone in this place to try to tell me that anyone whose income is less than $15,000 per year is causing inflation. Those people are victims of inflation, and they are still trying to catch up.

In typical free enterprise, old-line party fashion, the program started at the wrong end. It was backwards. It started with the poor and with wage and salary earners. It did not start with the rich and powerful. It did not start with corporations, profits or prices. I predict that however long this program last, the fight against inflation will be carried on the back of pensioners, wage and salary earners. People who earn incomes the size of the incomes of members of parliament will not really be sacrificing anything in the fight against inflation.

People who receive large incomes from interest, dividends, land speculation and house speculation are not going to be hurt. If this government had brought in a program which fought inflation and affected those who cause our domestic inflation, it would have had the support and good will of the people of this country and members of all parties in this House, with the exception of a few cry-babies in the official opposition who keep worrying about those "poor" insurance companies, finance companies, banks and trust companies. They would have had the good will and co-operation of the citizens of this country. They would have fought inflation in a fair and equitable manner by attacking those who cause inflation, not the wage and salary earners and pensioners.

● (1540)

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to support the amendment moved by my leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), that this program end on May 1, 1976; that is, this Saturday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I should like to suggest to the hon. member that he confine himself to the amendment as he has already spoken on motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to speak on the amendment proposed by the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) that the program end on Saturday. I wish to speak on this matter because I feel there should be clarification in this House as a result partly of the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and partly of the remarks of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and others.

The Minister of Finance indicated that he feels there are inconsistencies in the position of the official opposition with respect to controls and our anti-inflationary program. I challenge that statement, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I think we are the only party in this House that has been consistent for the past three or four years on the question of what is a suitable anti-inflationary program for Canada. When I look at the record, I find it most startling that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in particular, has vacillated so dramatically on this question of controls.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby which I would suggest is probably put forward on the recommendation of the president of the United Autoworkers Union, as I think they take most of their instructions directly from that union—

An hon. Member: Oh, come off it!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: When we look at the background of this question it is very clear why we in the official opposition take the position that we do today. We proposed three motions. Motions Nos. 1 and 2 are basically complementary and simply would have the effect of changing clause 46(2) of Bill C-89 so that the legislation would expire on May 1, 1977, as opposed to December 31, 1978. That change would simply bring the clause in line with the amendment we proposed at report stage when Bill C-73 was before the House last fall. That would, in effect, give the government 18 months to show that their controls program works, but if they felt that controls should be extended they would have to come back to parliament for authority.

As it stands, not only does Bill C-89 expire on December 31, 1978, but the government can at any time, by order in council, extend it for an indefinite period after three days' debate in this House. With the majority the government has, presumably it would simply endorse the order in council and we might find ourselves subjected to controls much longer than to December 31, 1978. Our position is clear, Mr. Speaker. We say that we will go along with an 18-month period. Let the government put their controls program into effect during that period, and then if they feel they need to extend the time, let them pass their order in council and come back to parliament. At that time we will examine the success or failure of the program.

Today, in answer to a question put by my leader, the Prime Minister confirmed once again that he intends to inflict these controls, presumably in their present form, on the nation for 2½ years. Mr. Speaker, 2½ years beyond today means they will be in place for three years. What a change in the attitude of the Prime Minister! On May 3, 1974, in answer to a question concerning wage and price controls, the Prime Minister gave this startling reply as reported at page 2004 of Hansard:

I am quite certain it is not the right approach to inflation.

On May 27, 1974, speaking at a nomination meeting in Etobicoke, Ontario, the Prime Minister said:

Well, we're going to bring inflation under control, that I pledge to you. It's not going to be any swift knockout, no 90 days of wonder and amazement, no NDP circus of slogans. But I'm confident we've got a grip on the problem and the continued implementation of selective measures, as we've been doing, will wrestle inflation to the ground.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I thought you warned the present speaker to confine his remarks to the subamendment. I think this should be done.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order, I am basically giving our position on why we feel the control period should be only 18 months, as opposed to the NDP suggestion that it should end next Saturday and as opposed to the government position that it should last for 39 months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: On June 29, 1974, at a constituency meeting in Cumberland-Colchester North, the Prime Minister said controls were "a disaster looking for a place to happen". Mr. Speaker, have they found a place in which it can happen, now that the Prime Minister feels we should be subjected to controls for a further 2½ years? The point I want to make is that we believe that controls for a temporary period, with suitable monetary restraints, can be put together as a package to confine inflation. We believe that it is extremely important, however, that the controls not be left in a permanent stance.

On the question of whether the government has accepted or not accepted our controls program, I can only refer to the remarks of the Prime Minister at a Liberal party convention in Ottawa on November 9, 1975, where he quite candidly stated that their controls program was not our controls program. Surely, then, there is no suggestion that the controls program we are now living with is a duplication of the Conservative program—at least not as far as the Prime Minister is concerned, and I believe the Minister of Finance indicated that as well.

The turnabout in the government's attitude since the former minister of finance was in office strikes me as strange. On June 23, in his budget speech, the former minister of finance said categorically:

But there would have been—and are—immense difficulties and disadvantages in such a course of action. Government would have to interfere in every type of business decision and wage settlement. To a far greater extent than in a voluntary program, a new bureaucratic appartus would have to be set up. New types of inequity would be created. The flexibility of the market economy in directing resources where they are most needed would be impaired. Dislocations would occur.

These costs would be worth paying if direct controls could be successfully imposed. If this were the case, we might well achieve lower price and cost increases without higher unemployment. But the success of such a program would depend crucially on widespread public support. As I have said before, I believe that we can resort to direct controls only when there is a public conviction of the need for such action. That point has not been reached.

Some time between then and October 13 there was obviously a great transformation involving the Minister of Finance who, as recorded in Hansard of April 30, 1975, suggested that wage and price controls were pure foolishness. Our position was set out clearly on January 17, 1974, when the former leader of the opposition said:

● (1550)

Our position is to put into place an economic stabilization plan incorporating for a temporary period strict mandatory controls of prices and incomes. The time we envisage for such strict temporary controls is in the order of 18 months to two years. This would not require a massive new bureaucracy—

He went on to say:

The freeze period should be as short as possible.

We certainly would not have wanted to see it continued. Then he said:

Our approach calls for judiciously balanced monetary and fiscal policies, and it demands exemplary self-restraint on the part of the government and governments generally in relation to their own spending—

That was our position then, and it is our position now. That is why, when Bill C-73 was being debated, we proposed an amendment to shorten the time to 18 months. That is why we proposed motions Nos. 1 and 2 in connection with this bill, and that is why we shall vote against the leader of the opposition's suggestion to terminate the program on Saturday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You mean the leader of the New Democratic Party. You said the leader of the opposition.

Mr. Stevens: I am sorry; I meant the suggestion of the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You mean the leader of the real opposition.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I expect we shall deal with motion No. 3 today. I conclude by saying that we shall vote against the subamendment proposed by the leader of the New Democratic Party. Actually, that is the amendment to motion No. 1.

Mr. Benjamin: But you have just finished convincing us that it is a good subamendment.

Mr. Stevens: If the hon. member of the NDP will read my remarks in Hansard, he will note the point I am trying to make. We shall vote in favour of motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3, but we shall vote against Bill C-89 if our amendments are not carried, because we feel we cannot be party to a bill which seeks to inflict controls on Canadians until December 31, 1978.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) to motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

And during the ringing of the bells:

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Why not defer this vote until we have dealt with motion No. 3?

An hon. Member: Too late.

The House divided on the amendment to motion No. 1 (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare motion No. 1 lost. In accordance with the agreement previously made by the House, I also declare motion No. 2 lost. Therefore, the question is on motion No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). Mr. Stevens moves:

That Bill C-89, an act to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, be amended in clause 11 by striking out lines 27 to 38 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(6) Where, at any time after August 31, 1976, and before July 1, 1978, a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons, signed by not less than 50 members of the House, is filed with the Speaker to the effect that this act shall expire on a date before December 31, 1978, that is specified in the motion, the House of Commons shall within the first fifteen days next after the motion is filed that the House is sitting, in accordance with the rules of the House, take up and consider the motion.

All those in favour of the motion will please rise.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I wish to move to the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The House may wish to deal with the amendment or to debate it. I want to suggest that the way the amendment reads now, it denies in fact the rights of two other political parties in this chamber.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member who said "Hear, hear" surely agrees that his rights are the same as the rights of all other members of the House. Also, he should consider the well-being of his own party in some other provinces when it comes to the rights of members of parliament. This amendment, by specifying the number "50," in fact denies the rights of two parties in this House.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Since there was a precedent, where 10 or 20 members of parliament on the signing of a motion may bring forward a matter for debate, and on a prior occasion that was agreed to in the House by all parties, or certainly all opposition parties, I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That motion No. 3 be amended by deleting therefrom the phrase "50 members of the House" and substituting therefor the phrase "10 members of the House".

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (1650)

Mr. Speaker: The question, therefore, is upon the amendment to motion No. 3 by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Is the House disposed to proceed with the taking of the recorded division without the necessity of calling in the members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare motion No. 3 lost.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-89, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair did not declare the motion carried on division. The Chair is inquiring whether the motion ought to be carried on division or whether the yeas and nays should be taken. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreed to the taking of the division without the necessity of calling in the members again?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Floods—Souris River area—Possible declaration as disaster area; the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Transport—Suggestion new policy be developed before elimination of rail subsidies on flour and grain; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Finance—Alleged importation of agricultural products from United States at below cost of production—Government action.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

UNITED GRAIN GROWERS LIMITED

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved that Bill S-33, respecting United Grain Growers Limited, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak on second reading of Bill S-33. The bill is not as contentious as the last piece of business the House just voted on, and I dare say it will enjoy the support of all parties and all members of this House.

It was both a pleasure and privilege to move second reading of Bill S-33, an act respecting United Grain Growers Limited, or UGG as they are commonly known across the prairies. It is a well known, well established prairie grain company which was originally set up by producers to buy and market grain. Since its earliest days it has expanded, as have other co-operative grain companies on the prairies, and become involved in the handling of chemicals, feeds and other matters related to the interests of grain producers.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The company was first organized by act of the Manitoba legislature in 1902, and later incorporated by the Senate and the House of Commons in 1911 under the name of Grain Growers Company Limited. The company has a long and illustrious history of service to western grain producers. It is organized on a co-operative basis, involving producers throughout the western grain growing region. Terms which have become widely used in the last few years in the cattle industry—"cross-bred" and "exotic"—apply, I think, to this particular company. It is a co-operative company with a corporate structure. At least, that is how it was to be set up under the original legislation, as I understand it. At present, UGG is led by a group of producer-elected directors under Mr. A. M. Runciman, president. The company has been not only active in doing an excellent job for its own members and shippers, but has performed good service for all producers of the prairie region.

The principles of the bill the House is considering are fairly simple and straightforward. Bills of a similar nature relating to UGG have been introduced in the House of Commons and passed, over the years. The bill requests an increase in the capital structure of the company from the present level of $12 million to $25 million. There shall be issued, altogether, 1.2 million class A shares at $20 each, and 200,000 class B or membership shares with a par value of $5 each. This will increase the capitalization of the company and enable it to perform the tasks it is required to undertake.

The bill also proposes to allow the company to increase the dividend rate on class A shares, which are in essence preferred shares, from the existing limit of 6.5 per cent to a new limit of 8 per cent, which represents an increase of 1.5 per cent in the interest rate paid. It also seeks to increase the number of shares which may be held by an individual from 2,500 to 5,000. I commend the bill to the House and ask that it be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to place on the record today a few brief comments with respect to Bill S-33. It is a pleasure primarily for two reasons: first, it is a refreshing change whenever this House gives its attention to agricultural legislation—and I regret that these opportunities are all too infrequent—and, second, as a personal comment it pleases me to have an opportunity, as a member from central Canada, to lend my support to a just and deserving cause in some other region of this country, in this case western Canada.

My research indicates that the United Grain Growers was first established and chartered by an act of parliament some 70 years ago, in 1906. My colleague for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) suggested that the company was incorporated by act of the Manitoba legislature. He may well be correct.

The United Grain Growers is a result of the encouragement and foresight of the territorial grain growers association, who with some imagination might be compared to a group similar in nature, namely, the Federation of Agriculture. From a small beginning, under good management and producer participation and support, it has grown and developed with remarkable success. With establishment in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, it lists some 475 manager units and operates some 700 grain elevators with terminals in Vancouver and Thunder Bay. It is an agent of the Canadian Wheat Board and, in addition, carries on business transactions in non-board grains, domestic feed grains, farm supplies, feeds and fertilizers. One would be remiss, when talking about the organization, if one did not mention its publication, "Country Guide". This agricultural magazine enjoys excellent readership and distribution throughout the entire country and well beyond our borders.

It is estimated that United Grain Growers handle approximately 16 per cent of the grain grown in western Canada. This bill is not unusual, nor is it unique. In 1941 and in 1965, and perhaps on other occasions, similar bills have been presented with respect to changes deemed necessary and desirable. The bill of 1941 amended the charter of the United Grain Growers to provide for two types of shares. First, it created $20 investment shares to be placed on the exchange, and second it created $5 membership or voting shares, the latter to be held only by members who could be regarded solely as producers or legitimate farmers. This was a desirable amendment because it ensured that this farmer-owned co-operative remained in the hands and under the control of producers. The 1965 amendment enabled the United Grain Growers to pay greater dividend or interest on their shares, up to 5 per cent, with the option of paying an additional 1.5 per cent.

Bill S-33 proposes another suitable revision, if that is allowed: first, an increase in capital from the present $12 million to $25 million; second, the right to increase dividends on some shares by a maximum of 3 per cent, giving a total yield of 8 per cent ; and third, an increase in the number of shares to be held by an individual from 2,500 to 5,000.

● (1720)

The record of this co-operative clearly demonstrates a steady growth and a sound financial position both now and over the years. It is a fine example of a united effort by producers successfully to establish and manage a commercial enterprise. It has served the interests of producers in western Canada over the years and I am confident that with these changes it will continue to do so for generations to come.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate the support of my party for this bill and to further indicate our full support and anxiety for its speedy passage.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree that this legislation should receive speedy passage in this House, in the other place, and royal assent. However, this is an opportunity to make a few points that are appropriate considering the co-operative with which we are dealing. The history goes back to 1906 and involves some of the patron saints in western agriculture, people like George Mothewell, E. A. Partridge and other old-timers in the co-operative movement of the prairies. Some are still alive and are active members of the United Grain Growers, the various wheat pools and farm unions. Hon. members will agree that they deserve full honour, credit and tribute.

United Grain Growers

Co-operatives came into existence as a result of economic tribulations caused by private enterprisers in the so-called free and open market—the grain speculators. Farmers were forced to ban together into co-operatives and start their own elevator companies. As a result, organizations such as the United Grain Growers have grown and expanded. They are the vehicle by which many thousand grain producers in western Canada market their grain. They know they can have confidence in their organization to work on behalf of their best interests.

As the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) pointed out, the legislation allows the United Grain Growers to increase its capitalization from $12 million to $25 million. Not only the United Grain Growers, but the wheat pools as well, will be faced in coming years with the necessity of further modernizing their country elevator system and enlarging their operations. This will be necessary because the pools and the United Grain Growers handle the overwhelming majority of grains marketed in the three prairie provinces. They will obviously need many millions of dollars for these expanded operations. Both the United Grain Growers and the pools have programs to construct new country elevators which will be more modern and efficient. In addition to doing a better job of cleaning, drying and mixing grain, they will have a larger capacity which will allow them to better utilize unit train systems.

The legislation provides that a producer member may hold up to 5,000 class A shares instead of 250. I am confident the additional capital will be used to expand United Grain Growers in the way in which it presently operates. I am confident that none of the money will be used for something like an inland terminal of the nature and kind being promoted by the multinational and international grain dealers such as Cargill and Continental. I know the board of directors, shareholders and members of United Grain Growers will join with the farmers of western Canada in opposing that kind of development. The capital they raise through this legislation will be used to expand their country elevator system. It will serve their organization in many hundreds of shipping points in the three prairie provinces and the Peace River district of British Columbia.

I hope the United Grain Growers, its members, shareholders and board of directors will begin not only to accept but to welcome its employees becoming part of the trade union movement. I speak in particular of the elevator agents, construction and maintenance crews. I hope the shareholders and the board of directors of the United Grain Growers will not just acquiesce but will encourage their country elevator agents, as well as their maintenance and construction crews, to join the Grain Services Union which now has in its ranks all elevator agents, construction and maintenance employees of the Saskatchewan and Manitoba pool elevators.

I know that some individual members have made inquiries and that there have been some quiet meetings and discussions. I am confident the management of United Grain Growers will not throw up any roadblocks or make any threats that will hinder or impede their employees becoming members of the Grain Services Union.

United Grain Growers

In the course of acquiring additional capital from the operations and modernizing their country elevator system, United Grain Growers, as well as the three prairie pools in servicing their members, are running into difficulty because of impediments imposed partly by the federal government and partly by our transportation system. Only today we were informed of a decision by the cabinet which will do a great deal of harm to organizations such as United Grain Growers and will have a direct as well as an indirect interest in not only rapeseed but rapeseed oil and rapeseed meal. The decision by the government came after an appeal by the co-operatives of the three prairie provinces, the Farmers' Union and the three prairie provincial governments to the cabinet against an order by the Canadian Transport Commission to keep freight rates on rapeseed oil and meal at the level at which they were compared to rapeseed.

Even with the rates as they were, 100 pounds of rapeseed crushed in Saskatchewan into 38 pounds of rapeseed oil, and shipped in a jumbo car at the lowest possible rate to Montreal, cost $1.10 a hundredweight. For 62 pounds of meal, made from 100 pounds of crushed rapeseed, it cost 23.5 cents a hundredweight to Thunder Bay or 59 cents a hundredweight to Montreal. However, if that rapeseed were crushed at Montreal, the statutory rates to Thunder Bay of 23.5 cents, and Thunder Bay to Montreal of 44 cents, makes a total of 67.5 cents, compared to a total of 93 cents if the grain is crushed in Saskatchewan. That is the difference. Under the old rates the 25½ cents per hundredweight favoured crushing rapeseed in Montreal or any other point east of Georgian Bay. That is a severe handicap for the rapeseed mills and crushing plants of Western Canada.

When United Grain Growers raise this further capital as proposed in the bill, they will be faced with a further handicap. Let me refer to order in council P.C. 1976-894 of April 13, which was passed by this cabinet:

> His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Transport, pursuant to section 64 of the National Transportation Act, is pleased hereby to vary the following orders and decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission:
> (a) Order No. R-16824 dated June 27, 1973;
> (b) Order No. R-17016 dated August 2, 1973; and
> (c) any other order or decision of the Canadian Transport Commission that is inconsistent with paragraph (d) hereof
> to provide
>
> (d) that the following rates or portions of rates for domestic and export movement of rapeseed meal and rapeseed oil from the four rapeseed crushing plants at Altona, Nipawin, Saskatoon and Lethbridge, be established annually at minimum compensatory levels:
> (i) rates for rapeseed meal and rapeseed oil moving west;—

That is to Vancouver.

> (ii) rates for rapeseed oil moving east; and
> (iii) the portions of rates pertaining to the movement of rapeseed meal east of Thunder Bay or Armstrong, Ontario.

This will mean that the United Grain Growers, Sask Wheat Pool and any other privately owned rapeseed plant in the three prairie provinces will be faced with an even greater differential when it comes to processing rapeseed into rapessed oil or rapeseed meal. I suggest that investment of any of the additional capital that will be raised under this legislation in a rapeseed plant will be difficult to justify or merely to break even on. That is because they will be faced with what in polite language can be called an historical anomaly but which is really outright, rank discrimination, which western Canadians have been facing in terms of our freight rate structure for many decades. After raising this additional capital, if United Grain Growers want to go into rapeseed crushing they will continue to be treated as hewers of wood and drawers of water, as we in the three prairie provinces always have been.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Historically we have always had difficulty with freight rates in western Canada when it comes to raw and finished products, whether beef or hogs and the processing thereof, or whether processing wheat into flour. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), that great friend of the farmer, has another bill on the order paper, Bill C-87, to remove the freight rate subsidy on flour. Our grain co-operatives in western Canada own a flour mill. In the middle of negotiations with the Russians for the sale of 275,000 tons of flour, they found they could not give the Russians a price because of this bill to remove the freight rate subsidy on flour. So the Russians said to these Canadian millers "Tough cookie, we are going somewhere else since you cannot give us a price. You cannot tell us what the freight rate is going to be other than it will be higher, and since you want a higher price for your flour we are going somewhere else".

The same thing is going to happen with rapeseed oil and rapeseed meal. Our traditional customer, Japan, bought four shiploads from France last month because the Government of Canada sat. The Minister of Transport and the railroad want to do something to the statutory grain rates. What have they done to protect these traditional markets, Mr. Speaker? Not only have they done nothing to protect them but they are making efforts to endanger those markets further.

When the four western premiers met in Medicine Hat yesterday they called the decision of the cabinet on freight rates, on rapeseed oil and rapeseed meal, a doublecross. I say it is more than a doublecross, it is a betrayal. The Liberals in the last election, as well as after the election, promised that the anomalies in our freight rate structure would be removed. Yet exactly the opposite has happened, and it is happening again today. As if the United Grain Growers were not having enough trouble serving their own members and protecting them from the tender mercies of the international grain companies, the CPR and the Minister of Transport, we now have this sort of decision from the government which is going to make their difficulties even worse.

All members of the House support this bill and will see it through parliament quickly. But I remind the House that some of the motherhood remarks that came from the other side are more like crocodile tears. All of the other moves the government is making are going to do nothing but harm the western grain producers and co-operatives. The United Grain Growers and the other grain co-operatives are trying to raise capital to modernize and enlarge their country elevator system and their capacity to move our grain quickly, thus serving their members even better. Yet they have been continually kicked in the face.

Who was it, Mr. Speaker, who raised the subject of the Crowsnest rates? It was not the farmers, the wheat pools or the United Grain Growers. Certainly the CPR has been complaining about them since 1899, but aside from that, who was it who raised the matter in recent years? It was the present Minister of Transport, the farmers' friend. He raised the subject two or three years ago in a speech in Winnipeg when he said possibly it was time to review the Crowsnest rates. There is only one way they can be reviewed, Mr. Speaker, and that is upwards. Certainly I cannot fathom the farmers asking that they be reviewed downwards.

Who was it, Mr. Speaker, who took feed grains out of the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board? We all know these fellows who say that the Canadian Wheat Board is the greatest thing since sliced bread, and they tell us how they support orderly marketing under the Canadian Wheat Board. But who was it who removed feed grains from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board? And, by the way, they were supported by the Tories. It was the Minister of Transport again, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. All of these actions have handicapped the United Grain Growers as well as the wheat pools of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta, for decades.

I remind the shareholders and members of United Grain Growers that battles won do not necessarily stay won. So long as there are those who propose an antiquated, so-called free enterprise and open market system for grain, the gains and battles won by United Grain Growers, Sask Wheat Pool and the Farmers' Union to get orderly marketing, to build their own co-operatives and to market their own grain, will always remain in jeopardy. They will always have to be on their guard, fighting the same old enemies. Many of those same old enemies are still in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker. We had a good example of this today when we found out what the cabinet has done about freight rates for rapeseed oil and rapeseed meal.

Historically we are not supposed to be able, according to successive Liberal and Tory governments, to manufacture and process our own production in western Canada. We are supposed to grow the raw product and send it to eastern Canada or the Pacific coast for manufacturing and processing. Then we buy it back, and it is very expensive. We are not going to stand for that in the prairie provinces, and the four western premiers made that very plain yesterday when they called this a doublecross. I am sure they did not use those words idly. The Premier of Alberta, speaking on behalf of the four premiers, last night made it very plain how western Canada feels about this kind of treatment.

What good are massive expenditures by the United Grain Growers or other wheat pools to improve even more their capacity to handle grain and process our agricultural products when we continue to get treatment in respect of transportation and orderly marketing such as we have been getting from this and previous governments? I hope this legislation not only passes but that the members and shareholders of the United Grain Growers repeat again the message they have been trying to get through to successive national governments regarding freight rates and orderly marketing. The overwhelming majority of grain producers in western Canada are unanimous about these issues. This is the message we have to get through to this government, and as long as we continue to have a so-called free enterprise government of either of the old line parties the grain producers will have to continue to fight.

I commend this legislation to the House. I support it, my party supports it, and we will continue to support the co-operative movement set up on behalf of grain producers in western Canada and the producers of other agricultural commodities who have continually been having a job done on them. This is discrimination that we are sick and tired of, and we want to assure this parliament and this government that they have not heard the last from us and many others about this kind of discrimination.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a very few words about Bill S-33, and I certainly do not intend to take as long as the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) in pointing out a gloomy picture as he did. I should like to talk for a few minutes about the company we are dealing with, namely, the United Grain Growers. I can probably say without too much fanfare, if you like, that I am probably the only person to speak during this debate who is actually a permit holder and has actually delivered grain to this particular elevator company.

It goes without saying, certainly on the part of most people in western Canada, especially farmers, that this company is viewed as one of the most progressive elevator companies and one of the most progressive farm companies in western Canada, and perhaps even in Canada itself. Certainly one of the good things about the United Grain Growers, which has been mentioned earlier, is the structure of that organization. It operates in some respects like a pool and in other respects like a private company. Because of this UGG has been able to get top-notch people into the top echelon of the company, bringing them up through the ranks to operate the day to day workings of the company.

This top echelon has a great deal of influence not only within the elevator system in which they operate but also in respect of farm policy which affects the farmers and, I suppose, ultimately all Canadians. The company has been instrumental in almost every progressive organization in western Canada in that its members of the board of directors hold prominent positions outside that board. I say this just to illustrate the influence that this particular elevator company has in western Canada.

Bill S-33 will be of great benefit and is certainly supported by the majority of members in the House. The increase in the capital is one of the major aspects of this piece of legislation. That additional capital will be required in the future because, whether we like it or not, there is going to be a drastic revision or change in elevator policy in coming years. There will be fewer elevators and they will be in all likelihood further apart. When the Hall Commission recommendations are implemented in western Canada there will be a tremendous change in our elevator or grain collecting system. The extra capital will definitely be needed, and I certainly recommend the passage of this bill to hon. members.

Let me take this opportunity to congratulate the United Grain Growers for the work it has done in western Canada and for being partly responsible for introducing competition to our grain handling system.

United Grain Growers

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I want to take only a couple of minutes during the debate on this bill. In spite of not coming from western Canada I am aware of the background of the United Grain Growers and the fact that it was started by a number of farmers co-operating among themselves many years ago. They developed this company long before there was an act in respect of co-operatives. If that were not so this measure might be dealt with in a different manner.

I was concerned, when reading the bill, to ascertain exactly what the United Grain Growers wanted to accomplish. If there are still more Class "B" shares than Class "A" shares and there is a desire for an expansion which is not greater than the co-operative's responsibility to its membership the company should have had someone other than the hon. member who is introducing this bill to sponsor it here and in the other place.

I am interested in a couple of sentences that I wonder whether western farmers understand, and I raise this matter because this is common to our legislative measures. These sentences are confusing. In the explanation to Clause 1 it is stated:

> Notwithstanding subsection (2), the directors of the Company may, for any fiscal year, declare an additional dividend of one-half of one per centum, or any multiple thereof to a maximum of one and one-half per centum, of the par value of the Class "A" shares—

What is "per centum"? For many years in this country, since we stopped the compulsory study of Latin, we have dropped most of the Latin terms. It would be quite easy, I am sure, for the purposes of this bill to amend at least that explanation by saying "per cent" rather than "per centum". I am sure there are some people who understand what that means, but I wonder how many—

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Having regard to the old Latin that was used years ago to which the hon. member has made reference, perhaps it has been used in that passage because what he was quoting from is the previous section on the explanation side of the bill. That is not what is in the bill now. If the hon. member would turn to page 2 of the bill he will find it says "a dividend at a rate of one-half of one per cent." We have done exactly what he has suggested and changed that old word.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I was just suggesting that we should not be using that type of term. Perhaps the hon. member has a different explanation for what appears at the top of page 3 which states:

> (c) The right to rank in a winding up of the Company pari passu with the Class "B" shares.

We may know what "per centum" means and, as he has suggested, the bill has dropped that, but what the hell does "pari passu" mean to a western farmer? Well, Mr. Speaker, they may be educated. Perhaps in western Canada the people use a different language going back to the old Latin. However, I do not find them to be that anti-modern. Most of the people there use modern language. I know what this means. It is in the English dictionary. I wonder whether the sponsor knows what this means.

[Mr. Murta.]

• (1750)

I should like to bring to the attention of the legal advisers to both the House of Commons and the Senate that in writing bills—and this is a very important bill I am sure to the members of the United Grain Growers' Association—they should use the vernacular, a language which can be understood.

As I have said, this is an important bill. It concerns a company which is owned co-operatively by the farmers of western Canada. Those who have spoken have lauded the value of the company and the least we can do is have the language in English or in French, one of the official languages, and quit playing around with a third one.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong the debate. Perhaps I might interpret this for the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). This phrase "pari passu" means to the farmers that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, parachutes in on them with programs and suggestions in which they are not too co-operative.

I wish to bring to the attention of the House the comments of the president, Mr. Runciman, and the vice-president Mr. Smith of Red Deer, of the United Grain Growers concerning the well-being and community life of Canada. Certainly we should support this bill because of the fact that it is required by this company which is deserving of the continued support of the House of Commons in its endeavour to promote the development of a proper system of moving and handling grain in western Canada. There is no doubt there have been problems, but I am sure the problems will increase in the future because of the fact that energy now costs more and more as time passes causing problems for the grain industry.

I think that if there is one shortfall in the whole system it is the fact that the Minister of Transport is not measuring up to his responsibility of making the job of the United Grain Growers Limited and similar bodies easier in respect of the movement of grain through the provision of proper facilities. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to lend my full support, and also I am sure the support of members on this side, including that of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), to this legislation. We certainly are in favour of the passage of this bill at the present time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired and I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 5.58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Paul Yewchuck (Athabasca) moved motion No. 1:

That Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Medical Care Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 1 to 16 at page 2.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have spent quite some time on this bill which originally was debated last fall, if I recall correctly. I spent a good deal of time last summer getting ready for it because we thought it would be one of the first items of business, but here we are at the end of April and the bill is still before the House.

The reason for taking such a long time on this bill is that it has been subject to a substantial amount of controversy. We on this side of the House felt that it was a rather strange way of conducting federal-provincial relations in this country. At the time that the bill was first brought in last June during the budget debate, federal-provincial negotiations were in progress which were intended in some way to rearrange the cost sharing programs between the federal and provincial governments in so far as health care is concerned. Strangely enough, at that time it appeared that the provinces were satisfied that negotiations were being carried on in a satisfactory way.

A working committee was established to study the problem and bring in a report. While this committee had almost completed its work and was going to meet some time last September, the former minister of finance announced that the federal government had decided to take this unilateral and arbitrary action without further consultations with the provinces. It struck us as being a rather arrogant way, to say the least, of dealing with the provinces since, as I said, negotiations were being carried on at that time.

The minister has since made it quite clear in committee on many occasions that in his view the presentation and passage of this bill do not in any way interfere with the conduct of negotiations which are still continuing. The minister assured us in committee that he feels that satisfactory progress is being made in terms of renegotiating the cost sharing agreements between the federal government and the provinces, and this led me to believe that this bill was a little premature and perhaps completely unnecessary.

However, evidence which was presented by the minister to the committee suggested that the provinces are not necessarily unhappy about the first two years. We also received evidence from the Medical Association of Canada suggesting that it is not all that unhappy about the first two years of the bill since it calls for increases of some 13 per cent in the first year following its passage, and 10.5 per cent in the following year.

In both cases those figures are perhaps sufficiently high that at least the medical association is not very concerned about it, although I think the provinces are concerned. They did not like the bill in the form in which it was passed at second reading. However, in view of the fact that the minister claims that this bill will not interfere with continuing ongoing talks with regard to readjusting the cost sharing agreements, we on this side of the House felt that if that is the case, then the bill is really unnecessary beyond a certain period of time. Given the fact that there is a real desire on the part of the provinces to conclude these talks and negotiations in a fairly reasonable time, and given the minister's stated desire to do the same, we felt that there was no need for this kind of legislation lasting beyond a period of two years. For that reason the amendment which I am now proposing calls for the termination of this legislation following that two year period.

In committee the minister expressed some reservations about the amendment, on the one hand stating that negotiations were moving along fairly well, but on the other hand suggesting that he did not think any significant progress would be made by the time two years went by. That led one to be somewhat suspicious with regard to the seriousness with which he is conducting these negotiations. That took me right back to the beginning of our attack on the federal government for putting forward such legislation in the first place, which takes the approach that the provinces are not very important in so far as their opinions are concerned, that the federal government will play God, set the rules unilaterally and impose them on the provinces whether the provinces like them or not, and impose them on the people providing medical care whether they like it or not.

I think this method of approaching unity and federal-provincial relations is contrary to the spirit upon which this country was built. It seems to me that in a country such as ours consisting of a number of provinces and territories with their own governments, each with its own areas of responsibility, and a central government which also has its area of responsibility, where there is a situation involving cross-jurisdiction in certain areas, in order for Confederation to work adequately and in order for unity to be strong between the provinces or between the various regions of the country, there has to exist a feeling of mutual trust between the federal government and the provinces. In saying this we have to keep in mind the fact that this medicare program, to be kind, was imposed upon the provinces against their will a number of years ago.

Virtually all of the provinces, except for one, I think, objected to it when it was first introduced. They did not want it. They felt that they were already providing adequate medical insurance and that the introduction of the medicare act at that time was interfering with their own priorities. The provinces were forced to readjust their priorities quite drastically, and at that time they foresaw what was going to happen. They wondered how they could be sure that the federal government, once it imposed this program, realized the cost of it and realized the difficulty in controlling the cost, would not try to back out and leave them saddled with the burden of the whole cost. Indeed this is what appears to be happening. The feeling of trust, which I think once existed, has been severely damaged, and I am concerned about that because I do not want to see any more strain on Confederation than is absolutely necessary.

However, unfortunately we have a government before us, temporarily occupying the other side of the House, which has always taken this kind of approach to federal-provincial relations, the approach where consultation usually means making a unilateral decision and telling the provinces about it later. Sometimes it does not even do that; sometimes it makes a unilateral decision and issues a press release about it, and the provinces find out, by watching the 11 o'clock news or perhaps reading the local newspapers, what are the plans of the federal government.

I want to place this serious concern I have before the House and before the people of the country. If unity is to be maintained we must accept the fact that the feeling of trust which must exist between the various governments is something which should be protected. I am afraid the action the minister took in this regard did anything but protect that feeling of trust. Indeed I think that feeling was damaged quite substantially.

The minister still has an opportunity to recoup lost graces, if he wants to be graceful. He has an opportunity to tell the provinces that he has confidence in his own ability to negotiate with them and confidence in their desire to try to reach agreement with him through negotiation and consultation, and if he has that kind of confidence I am sure he will accept this motion which would have the effect of terminating the bill after a two year period.

I think I will just leave it at that. I have clearly outlined the reason for this motion. We debated this bill for a long time at second reading, and there was a reason for that. We have found, through long and difficult experience, that regardless of how good a point we want to make or how right we may be, generally speaking nobody on the government side listens to what we say. Either they do not listen or perhaps their skulls are rather thick. I am not sure which it is. In any case, we find that by repeating something over and over again ad infinitum, sometimes it eventually sinks in. So here we are once again repeating things which have already been said. I know the minister sometimes listens while he is doing other things. He assured me at one time that he can talk to two or three people and listen to a speech at the same time.

Mr. Lalonde: That depends on the speech.

[Mr. Yewchuck.]

Mr. Yewchuk: If he is as bright as Weekend Magazine made him out to be a month or so ago, perhaps he can do all those things, but he has yet to prove to me that he is as bright as Weekend Magazine said, because so far nothing I have said to him on this bill during the course of the past few months seems to have sunk in very well. I am not sure whether the reason is a refusal to acknowledge a good suggestion when it is presented, or whether it is simply a refusal to acknowledge that he might have been wrong in the first place in presenting this.

Perhaps when the minister speaks he will tell us why he has so stubbornly pursued this unilateral and arbitrary course of action. He has pursued it virtually against the advice of everybody involved, against the advice of the provinces, against the advice of the medical profession, against the advice of other people providing health services and finally, and by no means least, against advice from this side of the House.

We get the impression that this particular government always takes the position that it alone represents the views of the people, that it alone can come up with ideas beneficial to Canada. For some reason it takes the position that parties on this side of the House have never come up with a good idea. I take objection to that position of course. Every member on this side of the House has fought an election, as have members on the other side. Every member on this side of the House represents the views of a certain segment of the Canadian people; every member does his job by presenting the views of the people who elected him to this House.

I can never comprehend why we have so much difficulty making the government understand that improvements to legislation are always possible. We know it is easy to criticize and we know too that in our parliamentary system, where the adversary system is in effect, that we have a duty to criticize legislation put forward by the government and to point out any pitfalls that might exist. We know, of course, that members of the government would never do that. We know from experience that they stand up and repeat the same old drivel about how great they are, what good ideas they have, and what their legislation will do for the country. In the face of that we have an obligation to point out the truth and to offer suggestions on how legislation can be improved.

I think we have fulfilled that task over and over again in regard to this bill. We have offered many suggestions to make it more palatable to the people who would be affected by it. We have offered suggestions which would lead to a greater feeling of unity in the country, a feeling that the federal government is truly interested in co-operating with the provinces and, through the democratic process, reaching a solution acceptable to the largest number of Canadians.

I will conclude by saying again that if the minister is sincere in his desire to consult meaningfully with the provinces, this bill will be totally unnecessary by the time two years have expired. In view of the fact that acts are almost never repealed even when they become redundant, we might as well build into this one a "self-destruct" mechanism which will remove the litter from the books when the time comes.

I hear a suggestion that the bill be given to the minister to hold in his hand while it self-destructs. Perhaps that is a good suggestion. The minister seems to have seen the light—he seems to acknowledge having heard what I have said so perhaps he will let this motion go through without too much objection.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) pointed out that this debate has been going on for a long time. It really started last June when the then minister of finance, Mr. Turner, gave notice of the government's intention to impose ceilings on the amount that the federal government would pay to the provinces in respect of medical care. The bill itself, of course, came in later.

There was a long debate at second reading which was brought to an end by the imposition of closure. We have since debated the bill in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. In that committee certain amendments were made, and I notice that in addition to the report stage amendments proposed from this side of the House there is now a further amendment by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) also being proposed at report stage.

I have to say, sir, that even with the amendments that the government made in the standing committee and with the amendment that the minister would make at this stage, Bill C-68 is still totally unacceptable to us. In our view one of the important advances that was made in Canada—and it took an awfully long time for that advance to be made—was when we established the principle of medical care for all our people, and when we made it a Canadian plan in the sense that the federal government would share the costs of medical care faced by the provinces in such a way as to provide equality of treatment and relative equality to the provinces right across Canada.

Now the government has come along and given notice that it is backing away from principles in this area and related areas which were forward steps. It is not only backing away from the formula for the financing of medical care which is represented in the bill now before us, it has also given notice to the provinces that at the end of this decade it will seek to renegotiate agreements regarding hospitalization. It is also in the process of cutting back on the funding of scientific research generally and medical research in particular.

No matter how much the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) might preach the need for restraint, no matter what problems we face in this country, we do not accept the idea of taking backward steps with respect to the provision of medical care for the people of Canada.

The bill that is now before us, as amended on the motion of the government in the standing committee, provides that in the first two years covered by the bill there are fixed limits as to the amount of increase that the provinces can expect from the government with respect to medical care.

Spokesmen on the government side like to make the point that these very increases indicate that the government is not paying out fewer dollars for medical care but is, rather, prepared to pay out more dollars and that therefore those of us who cry havoc about this bill and try to contend that it involves a cutback are not "telling it as it is".

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that one has to compare what will happen under this bill with what would happen if it were not enacted at all. If this bill were not enacted the federal government, under the Medical Care Act, would be required to pay the provinces roughly 50 per cent of their medical costs. Under this bill, with costs going up, the government will pay the lesser of two amounts, either 50 per cent of what it costs the provinces, or the number of dollars that were paid to them last year, plus a certain additional amount.

Since medicare started the provinces have been able to count on 50 per cent of those costs being paid by the federal government. I say 50 per cent, although I recognize that there is a formula that results in some provinces getting a little more, and some a little less; but the average is 50 per cent. The provinces that have been able to count on that will in future, if this bill is passed, not be able to count on getting 50 per cent of the costs of medical care. This bill fixes a precise limit in the first two years of the operation of this law. After that it is left to the government to decide by order in council.

The original bill brought before the House had precise figures in it for the next three years as well. The minister contended that he was doing something generous by taking out those figures and putting in the provision for the decision to be made by order in council. It means, if this bill goes through, that we have no way of knowing, and the provinces will have no way of knowing, what limits the government will impose after the first two years have gone by.

It is well established, both in the language of the bill and in the minister's statements made in this House and in committee that, although there will be consultations with the provinces—and consultation is defined one way in the dictionary and in quite another way by this government—the provinces will have no real say. In the end the federal minister will make the decision and put it into effect by order in council.

So we have this picture: for two years the provinces will know the limits; they will also know that they will get less than the 50 per cent they have been getting. The provinces know that after that they will be completely at the mercy of the federal minister, who will be free to act by order in council.

The hon. member for Athabasca did well tonight, as he did on second reading, in pointing out that this is hardly the way to carry on federal-provincial relations. It is hardly the thing to do to get the provinces to come into a plan like this, get their system built up as it were, and then undercut them by making changes in the formula of the kind being proposed. We think it is wrong and unfair to the people of Canada who deserve the benefits of health care; we think it is wrong to treat the provinces this way. I suspect the minister knows better than we do, because he was at the conference, of the unhappiness of provincial ministers of health because of the way the government has treated the provinces in the last number of years.

We do not like Bill C-68. We are against it, lock, stock, and barrel—all the way. Even so we are going to vote for the motion just proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca. It is a compromise. We would rather not have the bill at all, with its limitations; but if the motion proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca were to pass, and I hope it will, there would be the ceilings the provinces already know about for the first two years, but after that this limiting bill would have no further effect. After that we would return to the provisions of the original Medical Care Act.

As I say, Sir, we would much rather not see the limitations imposed by the government in those first two years; alternatively, it certainly would be better if the legislation could go only that far, if there could be limitations for only two years after which we could return to the principles laid down in the Medical Care Act itself. In other words, if the motion proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca is accepted by the House we would know what would happen for two years, after which we should be governed again by the principles of the original legislation. For this reason we welcome the proposal made by the hon. member for Athabasca. In this he would probably agree with me; I expect he would rather not have limitations in those two years; he would rather see the whole bill treated as I have suggested, made into a bill which would self-destruct, so to speak, and put into the minister's hands for that process. I hope that the minister and the House might consider that as a compromise.

If we cannot persuade the government to drop the idea altogether, that is, of walking away for the 50 per cent provision in the Medical Care Act, the compromise at least would impose those limitations only for the first two years. For this reason I shall be glad to see lines 1 to 16 on page 2 of the bill deleted. The proposal moved by the hon. member for Athabasca calls for just that.

Sir, I have already referred to the important milestone which was reached when medical care on a national basis was established in this country. I must be careful not to make a speech I have made many times in this House, about the great Liberal party of 1919 and the great things to which it committed itself, old age pensions, unemployment insurance, and health insurance. One could find that speech of mine in a great many volumes of Hansard. It tells the story of the years it took to achieve these things to which the Liberals committed themselves in 1919. And if I condemned them for taking so long, I gave them credit for moving in the right direction.

I cannot for the life of me understand why the Liberals, who were finally dragged into doing those progressive things for the people of Canada, now want to water them down. Health care for the people of Canada on a free, universal basis is a good idea. It is one of the best things that marks life in this country. To jeopardize it in this way is to betray the people of Canada. Certainly it is a betrayal of those Liberals of bygone decades who dreamed of achieving this sort of thing.

We again appeal to the government to scrap this bill completely. If it is not prepared to do that, I plead with the minister to accept motion No. 1 proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca, and call a halt to imposing ceilings after the first two years. Mr. Speaker, we shall support the motion proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand that there may be unanimous agreement for the vote on the bill we are debating to be deferred until Wednesday following the question period, after which we can proceed to third reading. I wonder if hon. members opposite would confirm that.

Mr. Yewchuk: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that would be acceptable to us. We could defer the votes until Wednesday afternoon, then perhaps terminate the debate with third reading of the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, yes, we are glad to agree to the proposal that any votes at the report stage be deferred until Wednesday, at three o'clock, and that the calling of third reading not take place until those votes have been taken on Wednesday. We agree to that.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: We also agree, Mr. Speaker, that the vote be taken next Wednesday after the question period.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered. Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) rising to speak?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to participate in the debate at this time. I shall have something to say, perhaps after hon. members have had the opportunity to speak on the various motions. That way we can probably save some of the time of the House.

• (2040)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 1?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Pursuant to Section (II) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The House will now proceed to Motion No. 3.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about motion No. 2?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): We cannot move to motion No. 2 because No. 2 hinges on the vote on motion No. 1. Therefore we will move to motion No. 3.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved motion No. 3:

That Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Medical Care Act, be amended by deleting Clause 1.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is almost too bad that arrangements were not made to tape the speech I just finished making because, with one or two additions to it, it could be played back as the speech to be made on this motion.

An hon. Member: Just make the additions and we will remember what you said.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I could be sure that my friends would remember everything I have said, I would of course do that.

The main difference between the motion we were debating in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) and the motion now before the House in my name is that his motion would have permitted the bill to pass thus providing limitations on federal grants to the provinces for two years, but then would have the situation revert to the original provisions of the Medical Care Act itself. My motion on the other hand would eliminate completely any provision for limitations other than those in the Medical Care Act.

In other words, if my motion is accepted by the House, the federal government cannot, even in these first two years, pay to the provinces less than they are entitled to receive under the Medical Care Act. I feel that this is the position this House ought to take. As I have already indicated, if we cannot win this point we are of course prepared to go along with the compromise suggested by the health critic of the Progressive Conservative party to the effect that we allow this action by the government for only two years.

I certainly do not intend to impose on the House by repeating all the things that I said in the debate on the previous motion, but I do ask hon. members to give serious thought to the point that I tried to make.

There was a time when to refer to the 1919 convention of the Liberal party was to cause some annoyance around here. When I first started doing it, there were persons in the House who had been at that convention. They are not around now, so it is like talking about the Battle of Waterloo to mention what happened in 1919. I want to say that that, of course, was before there was a New Democratic Party or CCF. Somebody had to have some progressive ideas. The Liberals at their 1919 convention here in Ottawa did have some of those progressive ideas.

Mr. Orlikow: They have been trying to forget them every since.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My colleague from Winnipeg North says they have been trying to forget them every since.

That was a great convention. It was the convention at which Mr. Mackenzie King was elected leader of the party. In the main speech he made at that convention, not a speech in the leadership contest itself, but in terms of dealing with policy matters, he dealt with the resolution that had been brought in calling for the three things I mentioned a while ago; old age pensions, unemployment insurance and health insurance. Mr. King called on the Liberal party of that day to commit itself to these things and to set out to make the Canada of the post-war world—that was after World War I—the better place it could be if we had old age pensions, unemployment insurance, and health insurance. It took a long while to get them.

It was not until 1926 that the old age pension law got on to the statute books so that it could come into effect in 1927. I was not until 1940 that unemployment insurance was passed. It looked for a time as though the third of those three things was going to be forgotten altogether. However, every once in a while we would remind Mr. King of the speech he made in 1919. He always came back and said he was going to see it implemented all the way, but things could not be done overnight.

It was not long before he quit being Prime Minister—I think it was about 1947 or 1948—that this place was a-buzz one day because an announcement on health was coming from the Prime Minister, one of those statements on motions. We even dared to believe that it was the beginning of health insurance. It turned out not to be that. However, it did turn out to be a program of hospital grants which he said would lay the foundation of health insurance later on. Well, that later on still had some years to come.

It was not until just before the Liberals went out of office in 1957 that they got hospitalization on to the statute books. Even so they had a provision or rider that prevented it from coming into effect. Of all things, it took the Progressive Conservatives to amend that bill so that hospitalization could come into effect. A few years later the Liberals came back and, in the days of Mr. Pearson as Prime Minister, we finally got health insurance, the Medical Care Act, on to the statute books.

That is a long story. I think I can be given credit for telling it in such a few minutes. I was telling the story of the period from 1919 to the middle sixties. That is the time it took to get this legislation on to the books. I was critical through the years I was here about how slow the process was, and how inadequate some of the provisions were that got enacted. However, these were all moves in the right direction of a better Canada for those who count, namely, the people of this country.

One of the hallmarks of that legislation is the provision for medical care. As I have already said, not only is it medical care that has been provided, but it has been provided on a basis that fits the Canadian scene in that the federal government pays half the cost and the provinces do the administering.

We now have before us legislation stipulating that despite the provisions of the Medical Care Act there will be this limitation that provinces will get 50 per cent, though not if their costs go up to the point where they exceed so many dollars more than they got the previous year. We think that this is an unfair way to treat the provinces. It is not the way to bring about co-operation. We also think that if it is done in this way some of the poorer provinces will be faced with special problems and will either have to cut back on the amount of medical care they can provide, or institute deterrent fees, extra taxes, or one thing or another, and then we will soon have the situation where the provision of health care is unequal across Canada, being better in some parts than in others.

We think the whole concept of a limitation as contained in this bill is wrong and ought to be stopped in its tracks. We said that right away last June when Mr. Turner brought in his budget. I can tell the House, if one is permitted in this place to refer to political conventions, that at the national convention of the New Democratic Party held in Winnipeg last July one of the things that concerned our delegates most was the Turner threat to cut back on hospital and medical care. Certainly I speak for my colleagues in our party when I say we do not want this to happen.

Having admitted that the Liberals have brought us to a certain point which was worth while, I simply cannot understand why they now want to reverse the situation. One of the arguments that is used is that if it is an open-ended situation, as it is now, then the provinces will spend money hog wild on medical care. But they have to pay the other 50 per cent. I point out that they are as concerned about achieving economy as is the federal government, and they have made the point to the minister that there are better ways than this.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, we think the whole idea of imposing limits that result in the provinces getting less money than they would get under the Medical Care Act is wrong. My hope is that the House will accept this motion of mine which in effect wipes out the whole idea contained in Bill C-68. If we cannot do that, I hope we will at least accept the proposal that is made in the previous motion No. 1 and stop this process of cutting off funds for medical care after two years have gone by.

I have already said, and perhaps my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), may develop this a little more, that this, to us, is frightening when there is associated with it cutbacks in funding for scientific and medical research. To us, Mr. Speaker, the government seems to be moving in so many directions to make life harder for people. Using the excuse of restraint not to increase family allowances is part of the picture. Cutbacks in social services that are being made in the provinces because of the government's attitude toward federal and provincial fiscal arrangements are wrong. Therefore all down the line we are opposed to Bill C-68. My motion No. 3, which we are now discussing, if it passes would take out of the bill the whole of that part of the bill that imposes limits on what the federal government can pay to the provinces. Therefore I hope the House will vote in favour of this motion.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I have no intention of repeating at length the arguments that I put forward at earlier stages of this bill. I rise mainly because, despite all of the protestations of the minister, the facts are exactly as they were when the bill was discussed months ago.

The provinces, which will be so adversely affected by the unilateral decision of the government as outlined in the bill and by other proposals that the government is going to make, are still adamantly and unanimously opposed to the basic principle contained in this bill. Indeed on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week the provincial ministers of health were in Ottawa meeting with their federal colleague and I know—and I am sure the minister will not challenge my statement—that they are still unanimously opposed to this bill.

If one looks at this bill and at the other proposals that the government has announced it will implement in the very near future having to do with estimates in various fields, it is not surprising that the Conservative provincial governments of Newfoundland, Ontario and Alberta, the Liberal governments of Prince Edward Island and Quebec, the NDP governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and the Social Credit government of British Columbia all oppose the principle of this particular bill as well as the other proposals to which I have referred. They do so because what they see is a pattern that has ominous implications for the provinces. After all, Mr. Speaker, with respect to virtually all of the social legislation we have and virtually all the other legislation in the field of health and welfare—I would use the term "blackmail" except it may be unparliamentary—the pressure for implementation mostly came from the federal government.

What do we see now, Mr. Speaker? In this bill the federal government is proposing to place limits on specific increases for the next two years which it will pay under the 50-50 sharing arrangement of health care costs. The federal government has given notice that it will opt out of the 50-50 cost sharing of hospital insurance in 1980, which is the first time it can get out of the present agreement.

The federal government is proposing a social services act which will wipe out the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan, and although the provinces do not yet know all the details this will mean that the provinces will be saddled with a substantially larger part of the costs. I see the minister shaking his head. It is easy for him to shake his head in this House when he has a big majority behind him, but I know that he has not convinced his provincial counterparts that this will not be the effect of the social services act. The minister can shrug his shoulders and wave his hand at me, but I have talked to some of his provincial counterparts and they all tell me the same thing.

Mr. Pearsall: Give them the bucks, that is all they want.

Mr. Orlikow: Someone says "Give them the bucks, that is all they want". Of course that is all they want, because the bucks come from the same source—the pockets of the Canadian people.

Whether we are dealing with federal, provincial or municipal financing, the question is: which level of government has the constitutional and practical authority and ability to raise taxes in the most equitable way? Any member of parliament with any common sense, and I exempt the member who interjected a few moments ago as he has demonstrated he has very little common sense, and any member who can look at problems objectively will admit that the level of government least able to meet its expenses is the municipal level.

● (2100)

The next level of government least able to meet its expenses in any field is the provincial level, whether it be the have-not provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia or Quebec, or the have provinces such as Ontario or British Columbia. If the hon. member does not believe me he ought to listen to what the Liberal premier of Nova Scotia has been saying about costs and the impossible task of the people of Nova Scotia in paying their extremely high electric power costs because of the high price of oil. If the hon. member does not believe me then let him wait to see what happens to the Liberal party at the next provincial or federal election.

The government which is most able to find money for necessary programs is the federal government because of its ability to tax those who have the money, yet it is the federal government that is getting out of these cost-sharing programs as fast as it can. I could go on talking about how the federal government is cutting back on services which it has provided over the years to the native people who move off reserves. There is no member here who can deny that. The federal government is doing everything possible to get out of its constitutional and moral obligation to provide health and welfare services to our native people.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests I might say a few words about the record of this federal government in the field of medical research. This is obviously an important aspect in the total cost of medical care. If our medical researchers can make a breakthrough in respect of one of the major illnesses that strike so many Canadian people, be it cancer, a stroke, or any one of the many, this would mean a very sharp reduction in the cost of health care.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) is putting a freeze on the very small amount of money the federal government provides for medical research. This is not the time to put the entire case on the record, but what is it that our medical researchers are asking? Are they talking in terms of billions of dollars, hundreds of millions of dollars, or even tens of millions of dollars? Our medical researchers are talking about the tremendous amount of $4.5 million. But the Minister of National Health and Welfare has the gall and the audacity to tell our medical researchers that the Canadian people cannot afford that kind of money.

Let us look at some of the things we have been able to afford. We might consider the $2 billion we have spent on Mirabel, and we might consider the $1,275 million the Canadian people will have spent on the Olympics before we are finished. We might also consider the tremendous increase in the number of civil servants who are at the top level of our bureaucratic system receiving from $30,000 to $65,000 a year. This number has almost tripled in a half a dozen years. The minister and his colleagues have been able to find the money for these things, but not for medical research.

We have the spectacle of the federal government saying to the provinces that it simply cannot afford to continue the 50-50 sharing of health care costs. Indeed the federal government is making an effort to get out of the 50-50 sharing of hospital insurance costs as soon as it can, in spite of the fact it has been obvious for many years that in the field of hospital insurance Ottawa has been more than willing to pay 50 per cent of the most expensive kind of hospital care, and that is for the active care hospitals. The federal government has not been willing until now to pay any share of the cost of health care in nursing homes, convalescent homes, and other similar types of institutions. As a result the provinces have carried that cost alone. This is the least costly form of medical care. The federal government has been willing to pay for the more expensive care.

I am sure there is not a member of parliament who has not come in contact with individuals who are occupying active or acute hospital beds when they really do not need to remain under active treatment. They could very well be at home, in a nursing or convalescent home, but very often the city in which they live does not have that kind of facility. In any event, that kind of care is not covered by insurance.

It would be much less expensive for taxpayers as a whole to provide for that alternative type medical care. This is not the case now because under the present schemes the individual or his family must pay the entire cost of that type of care. I am sure there is not one member of parliament who has not known of a constituent who has said at some time that he or his mother, or his father, or his cousin, or his aunt, should not be occupying an active bed in hospital. They will tell you that the alternative service is not available or, that if it is available they persuade the doctor to let patient stay in the hospital because the individual or the family would have to pay for that alternative service. The federal government has not had the will or the flexibility to co-operate with the provinces in meeting the alternative.

I have said in earlier speeches, and I repeat again, that the provinces are even more concerned about spiralling costs of health and hospital care services than the federal government because they do not have the ability to meet the increased costs like the federal government has in Ottawa. The provinces are not undertaking expensive luxury programs that the federal government has undertaken, some of which I have referred to already.

The provincial authorities know what it means to go to their citizens when costs of medical care increase by more than 13 per cent, which is what will be permitted under the provisions of this bill. All of these provincial levels of government are trying very seriously to find ways to slow down the growth if not the actual expenditures, and they ought to have the co-operation of the federal government in this regard. Experts in this field working for the federal government should sit down with provincial authorities to work out ways of cutting down on expenses.

If there are some governments which have been slow in beginning to look at ways of reducing increasing costs, surely the minister's department should have been willing and able to provide those recalcitrant provinces with the expertise to find ways. We have seen none of this co-operation from the federal government. What we have seen is simply a unilateral decision on the part of Ottawa to cut its share of increasing health care costs.

The allowed increases are to be 13 per cent in the coming year and 10 per cent the year after that. Following that, what the minister proposes is that the increase in succeeding years will be left to the tender mercies of the federal government. In light of the experiences the provinces have had with the federal government it is not surprising that, to say the least, they have been loathe to leave this decision to its tender mercies. As I have indicated, they have unanimously rejected the federal government's proposal. They have called on the minister to stand his bill over and wait until the next couple of months when the provincial ministers concerned meet with their federal counterparts in order to work out a program that is mutually agreeable to all the provinces and the federal government, whereby co-operatively the increases which have taken place can be moderated.

It is because I believe the arguments put forward by the provinces are justified that I, and other members of the NDP, have opposed this bill from the day it was suddenly announced. It was announced unilaterally and without any consultation. Indeed it was announced really in violation of the spirit of the discussions which had taken place between the minister and his provincial counterparts just a few months before the infamous budget of June, 1975.

All the discussions which have taken place since last June between the minister and his provincial counterparts, and all the discussions which have taken place here have demonstrated to me that the provinces were right, and that the provinces have been much more aware and concerned about the needs of the people who are citizens not only of the provinces in which they reside but also of Canada. Because I am convinced the provinces have been right and the federal government has been wrong I intend to vote for this motion. If the motion should be defeated, as I suppose it will, I propose to oppose the passage of Bill C-68, as I have from the beginning, in the belief that eventually even this government will realize its mistake.

I wish to conclude by saying that in the spare time I have had I have been re-reading some Canadian history. It seems obvious to me that when the history of this era comes to be written, historians in assessing the Canadian governments which have been in office since 1940 will find that this Liberal government led by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been the most reactionary, conservative government we have had in the last 50 years.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to speak at length on this motion.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Halliday: Having spoken earlier in the debate on Bill C-68 I have said many of the things I might have said at this time. However, there are one or two things I have previously indicated to the minister during the committee hearings which I think he has thoroughly overlooked. In a sense I think he is defrauding the people of Canada by not looking at some of the serious aspects of payment for medical care.

We have heard quite a bit tonight about the history of health care in Canada, both from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and more recently the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I am sure both members have much to be proud of in a sense at this stage in history, but I say that history will tell an entirely different story in 50 or 100 years when we have the virtual collapse or decay of our society because of the way in which we are spoiling people by not giving them an opportunity to exercise responsibility and self-reliance.

I wish to refer to the action of the government over the years in which this legislation has been in effect. As I mentioned previously, it was introduced by the Liberal government of five or six years ago contrary to the wishes of some of the provinces. Certainly from the viewpoint of the province of Ontario it represented an insidious tax which would have taken a lot of money from the province if it did not agree to go along with the scheme. Now, having been taken in with respect to this medical care bill, the province finds itself in the position of being forced to pay more because the federal contribution is to be drastically cut in the future. This appears to be a unilateral action on the part of the government which I believe is uncalled for. As the previous speakers have said, there is not one province at this time which is in agreement with this. It seems too bad that this is being forced on them once again.

What I wish to speak about mainly has to do with what I believe is one of the principal deficiencies in the thinking and the philosophy of the minister in respect of the provision of health care in Canada. It is obvious that he is attempting to save costs, particularly for the federal treasury. I do not fault the minister for that. However, we should look at the four criteria set down by the government. The first is universality. The second is comprehensiveness. The third is portability, and the fourth is public control of costs.

I submit that the government has omitted one very important aspect of control. I refer to patient control. Having been a practising physician for a number of years it is obvious now to me, having worked under medical care for years, that the best control of cost in respect of health care is not the computer in the local insurance office in the provincial capital but rather the patient himself or herself. It is the patient who is the best monitor of the cost of health care services. If we recognize that, not only will we keep down the cost but we will also provide a social favour to the people of this country which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in my view, fails to recognize in his deep concern for humanity.

I suggest there is no reason why the government could not institute another criterion in the provision of medical care services which would include the involvement of the patient in his own health care, in a way in which this is not provided for at the present time. One simple way to provide this kind of involvement is for the physician to bill the patient directly and have the patient pay the physician. That happens to be the official policy of the Ontario Medical Association, the largest association of its kind in this country. It is a very wise policy. Unfortunately for various reasons very few physicians across the country like to adhere to that policy, sometimes for selfish reasons. The same is true sometimes in respect of the patient, the consumer.

It has been my experience and my confirmed belief that if we could somehow involve the patients in their own health care, they would appreciate the cost of these services. As it is now the patient seldom realizes the bill that is being incurred on his or her behalf when patients visit their physician. This is certainly unfortunate and does not lead to any kind of control.

I am concerned about the way society in Canada is going. One can see a gradual decay, an internal rot setting in which I think stems from a number of factors, but one of the principal factors is that we do not encourage our people to provide for themselves. We tend to think that a big government can do things better than individuals can. I would be the first to agree that there is a small number of people in our society who are unable to provide for themselves, and of course we need to have appropriate health care and medical plans which will give those people the kind of services they need. By the same token, with the rising cost of health care and the increasing availability of more esoteric types of medical services, and the fact that we all feel we are entitled to them, there is no doubt health care costs are rising.

When one is sick it is difficult to meet bills, and I would be the first to agree that we must have some type of insurance scheme available. If it is provided by the state I see nothing wrong with that, although there have been many private plans that have been equally good and perhaps better, and run at much less cost to the consumer. So I feel that if we are going to do any kind of favour for the people of Canada as they progress into future generations, we must do something to provide an independence for people and to teach them how to look after themselves.

For some reason there is a notion around the country, which I think has been propagated mainly by politicians because they find they can get votes by advocating comprehensive, universal types of plans, that health care is some God-given right that everybody has, as if the individual had no responsibility to provide it for himself. There are many other essential services that all of us need and which we are continually using, as essential as health care, and yet few of us think they should be supplied in total by the state. Who would ever think that we should all have housing provided at no cost to ourselves except through a small premium or taxation?

Mr. Orlikow: Where would we be without housing?

Mr. Halliday: It would be absurd to expect housing to be provided for all of us at the expense of the government. Or let us consider footwear. Who in this country can survive in the winter without some kind of footwear? It is obviously essential—

Mr. Hogan: Or pyjamas.

Mr. Halliday: Yes, or pyjamas. For some reason we do not think they should be provided through some kind of state controlled insurance plan. Why can we not all have the shoes we want? It is an essential, we all must have them, yet we do not do that. There is an emotional attachment to health care. It is a holy sort of thing that we cannot question. Everybody must have health care provided by the state. I submit that health care should be available to everybody, but I like to think that the time has come when we can start to make people responsible for providing some of their own needs and services and at the same time make them available so that people can obtain those services if in fact they cannot provide for themselves.

One could go on to point out other defects in Bill C-68. Much has been said about medical research and the fact that the government has been picayune and miserly about supporting medical research. One only has to look at the figures for Canada and compare them with the figures for the United States, compare on a per capita basis the amount of money that is spent by governments on medical research, to find that we should be ashamed of ourselves.

Mr. Orlikow: It is the first thing you said with which I agree.

Mr. Halliday: The hon. member for Winnipeg North only now realizes there is some truth in what I have been saying. It is about time. I do not know what we have to do to convince the government that we need to spend more money on medical research. It is a crying shame when all the countries around us such as the United States, Great Britain and so on, find they can spend a lot more money per capita on medical research, and somehow we have to live off the work they do and the money they spend for research. Perhaps I have pointed out some of the more glaring defects in this bill and the fact that motion No. 3 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is indeed a good motion. Perhaps his philosophy for introducing it is not the same as my philosophy for supporting it, but I am glad to see his motion before the House and I urge all hon. members to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been some discussion in the House on the ruling of the Deputy Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the debate on motion No. 2. It is true that motion No. 2 would fall and be lost if motion No. 1 were adopted by the House, but motion No. 2 could logically have been dealt with tonight if it had been called for debate before motion No. 1. I believe you will find a disposition on all sides of the House to return to motion No. 2 now, and to debate it as if it had been called for debate before motion No. 1.

Mr. Yewchuk: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, without being critical of a ruling that was made earlier, perhaps rather hastily, it does seem to me that we should have dealt with motion 2 before motion No. 1. After all, if motion No. 1 carries, there is nothing left to amend as proposed in motion No. 2. We can correct that now by having a debate on motion No. 2 and perhaps by taking a vote on it first when we reach that point on Wednesday. We agree with the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member said, the House would not wish to reflect on the previous decision of the Chair. I want to say at this time that these orders of discussion are merely suggestions. I do not take them as a strict ruling by the Chair. Maybe the point should have been made immediately at the outset of the debate. The Chair is always co-operative and it will co-operate in this case and allow motion No. 2 to be considered now. I think it would be worth while between now and the time when the recorded division is taken for the Chair to take a second look at the order in which the votes should be taken, and the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) will be taken into consideration in due course.

● (2130)

We will proceed at this time with motion No. 2 standing in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco).

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (for Mr. Brisco) moved motion No. 2:

That Bill C-68, An Act to amend the Medical Care Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 14 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"Governor in Council, subject to affirmative resolution of Parliament, for insured services".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is one which has been put forward by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), and it is the next suggested compromise following motion No. 1, which I moved myself. Essentially it is moved on the assumption that if motion No. 1 is defeated—motion No. 1 calls for termination of this bill after a two year period—then motion No. 2 is a further compromise, calling for a parliamentary review of the percentages which may be set by order in council from the third year and onward.

The House may have noticed a suspicious resemblance between motion No. 2 and motion No. 4, which we will be dealing with a little later, and the resemblance is not necessarily coincidental. It seems to me that motion No. 4 embodies motion No. 2, and that makes it difficult to debate one without the other because the motion put by the minister himself will indeed achieve the result which the hon. member for Kootenay West wanted to achieve in placing motion No. 2 on the order paper.

The only comment I want to make at this point is to question why the minister chose to take this route rather than simply to accept motion No. 2 and perhaps to offer an amendment to it, taking a long and circuitous route and proposing an entirely new motion. I do not know whether there is a specific personal reason for his wanting to do that. One might suggest that he wants to enhance his own image after he was so ruthless during the debate on this bill and to suggest that perhaps he was listening to some of our recommendations. Whatever his motivation, I want it to be quite clear that we on this side of the House interpret his motion as perhaps, at least in part, accepting the suggestion in motion No. 2, rewording it to suit himself and putting it as his own motion.

We, of course, would have supported motion No. 2, and when the time comes to talk about motion No. 4 we will make comments on it at that time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, once again I want to indicate our readiness to support the motion which has been put before us by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) on behalf of his colleague.

If I may come to the end of my remarks first and then go back to the beginning, I have to say that I think the hon. member for Athabasca is buying too quickly the alternative proposal made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). The hon. member for Athabasca suggests that the minister is accepting in part the idea in motion No. 2. I do not agree. I think that what is set out in motion No. 4—I will say more about that when we get to it—is the very opposite of what is in motion No. 2, and that my friends to the right should not buy motion No. 4 so readily.

I think I have to take a moment to summarize the whole position which is before the House tonight, as I see it. We have a bill which provides for the limiting of the contributions of the federal government to the provinces in respect of medicare, commencing now. The bill, as we now have it, provides for precise limits for two years, and then for limits to be determined by order in council unilaterally by the government after those first two years. I have already said that in my view the whole bill should be ditched. I think that these limits should not apply even in the first two years. That is the first position, and I have taken it by putting down my motion, notion No. 3.

The second course is that contained in motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca which accepts the cuts for the first two years and then wants no more cuts in succeeding years. That is not as good as my motion, but it is the next best position.

However, then we have two other propositions: the one which is before us now in motion No. 2, and the one which will be before us later in motion No. 4. The proposal in motion No. 2, which is now before us, is that if the government by order in council sets any limits after the first two years, year by year that order in council cannot come into effect until the House of Commons has had a chance to vote on it. Motion No. 2 asks for an affirmative vote before that action takes place. That has some meaning, although not a great deal when there is a government with the majority this government has, and with the characteristics this government has, because it would simply mean a debate, and then the motion would carry. However, at least parliament would have a chance to decide on those limitations before they come into effect.

In a few minutes the minister will try to propose an alternative, namely, that if the government brings in an order in council setting limits, it should come into effect right away, but if 50 members sign their names to a motion, the minister will let parliament afterward debate whether it should have come into effect, and only if a majority in parliament is against it can the order in council be declared to be without effect. I think the difference between the motion now before us and the motion which will come in the name of the minister is the difference between night and day. One would give parliament a chance to say something at a point where it might be effective. The other would give parliament a chance to try to lock the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

The hon. member for Athabasca and I have been seeing eye to eye and saying the same things all night. I plead with him to toughen up a bit and not accept motion No. 4 as a compromise for his motion No. 2. If we cannot have my proposal to kill the bill completely, or if we cannot have the proposal in motion No. 1 that the cut-offs die at the end of two years, then I think the next best thing we should have is what is set out in the motion now before us, namely, that if there is an order in council in years 3, 4, 5, 6 or 7 down the road, before such order in council can come into effect it has to be brought before parliament for a decision by this House of Commons.

Therefore I am in favour of and we shall vote for motion No. 2.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (2140)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

Motion No. 4.

The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 9 thereof, the following heading and section:

COMING INTO FORCE OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL

10. (1) An order of the Governor in Council made pursuant to paragraph 5(2.3)(b) or 5.1(3)(d) shall be laid before the House of Commons not later than fifteen days after the day on which it was made, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

(2) Where an order of the Governor in Council has been laid before the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (1), a notice of motion in the House of Commons signed by not less than fifty members thereof and made in accordance with the rules of that House within seven days of the day the order was laid before that House praying that the order be revoked shall be taken up and considered in that House at the first convenient opportunity within the four sitting days next after the day the motion in that House was made.

(3) At fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the second sitting day following the commencement of consideration of a motion of which notice was given under subsection (2), or at such earlier time as the House of Commons is ready for the question, the Speaker shall put the question forthwith without further debate.

(4) If a motion considered by the House of Commons pursuant to this section is adopted by the House, with or without amendments, a message shall be sent to the Senate informing the Senate that the motion has been so adopted and requesting that the motion be concurred in by the Senate.

(5) The Senate shall, within the first four days next after receipt by it of a request from the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (4) that the Senate is sitting, in accordance with the Rules of the Senate, take up and consider the motion adopted by the House of Commons that is the subject of the request and all questions in connection therewith shall be debated without interruption and decided not later than the end of the third sitting day next after the day the motion is first so taken up and considered.

(6) If the Senate, pursuant to a request from the House of Commons, concurs in a motion adopted by the House as provided in this section, the order of the Governor in Council to which the motion relates is thereupon revoked effective from the day on which it was made.

[English]

He said: I thank hon. members for having agreed to consider these various motions tonight and for their contributions to the debate. I realize that various amendments have been brought forward to ensure that the points covered in committee will once again be discussed by the House at report stage. They represent the views of the opposition parties on this bill. Although I do not agree and the government does not agree with the amendments, I am convinced they are brought forward in a constructive way and with the best of intentions.

If I were to take the points that have been raised on this bill tonight, there are three or four that I should like to spend a couple of minutes on and then say a few words about motion No. 4.

There has been a complaint of unilateral action by the government in this case because the decision was brought in by a budget in June, 1975, by the former minister of finance. I have already covered some of that ground in committee, but I would remind hon. members again that after this particular announcement was made I had extensive consultation with the provinces and with the Canadian Medical Association. Following those consultations several amendments were made to the bill. As a matter of fact the bill before us is substantially different from the bill presented for first reading. Those changes were made following consultations and discussions with the provinces and the Canadian Medical Association. Obviously they do not meet all the points raised by the provinces and the CMA but they certainly go some way to meeting some of the concerns that have been expressed.

In addition, motion No. 4 is a change that the government is ready to support in order to take account of some of the views expressed by members of the opposition. As the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) said, motion No. 4 is substantially in the same spirit, as the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco). In this particular instance, therefore, the government has shown a lot of consideration for the views expressed on this bill. Obviously we have not withdrawn the bill; we believe the bill is necessary and that it is appropriate in the circumstances.

The hon. member for Athabasca put forward a motion to the effect that we should have this bill only for the first two years, on the basis that the provinces and the Canadian Medical Association did not seem to object too much to that proposition. I will admit to the hon. member that possibly Bill C-68 might not be necessary after the first two years. Several eventualities might occur in the meantime which would render it unnecessary. As a matter of fact I would hope that the government would not have to use the provisions of the bill after the first two years. That is why, instead of putting in a specific maximum contribution by the federal government, we have brought forward an amendment which leaves it to be decided by order in council after consultation with the provinces.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that there is no requirement for the government to put such a limit on the increase of its contribution. It may very well be, therefore, that after consultation with the provinces we will find that their plans for the following year are reasonable in the circumstances and that there does not appear to be any need to provide for a specific ceiling on the rate of increase of the cost of medical care. If, together with the provinces, we can develop an adequate control on the rate of increase in costs, then recourse to order in council would not be necessary.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

It may very well be that in the next two years we and the provinces will have arrived at a general financing formula which will replace both the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medical Care Act.

For the past two days I have presided at a conference with my provincial colleagues. The feeling amongst the provincial ministers was that following the meeting of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with the premiers in June we should try to develop a new health financing formula to replace both existing pieces of legislation and bring in a new technique for cost sharing. If this were to be accomplished and there were early agreement between the federal government and the provinces, obviously Bill C-68 would disappear. Not only would it self-destruct to use the hon. member for Athabasca's expression, but the Medical Care Act would be replaced in such an eventuality.

I am not saying that after two years the federal government would necessarily adopt orders in council setting some ceilings on the rate of increase in cost of medicare; on the other hand, however, it would be inappropriate for the federal government not to provide for the possibility that such agreement on a new financing formula would not have taken place or the possibility that agreement would not be reached with the provinces on what should be an adequate rate of growth of the cost of medicare. If that were to be the case, we feel that there should be in the hands of the federal government some power, as is provided in the present act, to put a ceiling on the rate of increase of the federal contribution.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) felt that such a measure was extremely wrong and unfair to the provinces. I was rather surprised to hear him use such strong words, Mr. Speaker. In effect, since the inception of hospital insurance and medicare we have seen the provinces deciding on their own how much the federal government was going to pay without consultation with the federal government, and without the federal government having anything to say about how much the bill would be at the end of the year. We are committed to paying 50 per cent of whatever the provinces decide to spend, and at no time do we have an idea of how much we are going to be asked to contribute, until we have received the last bill from the provinces.

In effect we shall now know what kind of bill to expect from the provinces. We have never said it is wrong or unfair, or used the kinds of adjectives used by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in describing this bill. This bill pays more respect to the role of respective governments than present legislation does, no matter whether we talk of hospital insurance or medical care. Indeed, it provides for the ceiling to be set after consultation with provinces.

The provinces will know ahead of time what they can expect as a maximum contribution from the federal government. They therefore will be able to plan the expenditures they will incur and the kind of settlements they can make with the medical profession, as well as arrangements they will need to make for meeting the total expense of medical care. They can plan all this well ahead of time, something which the federal government has not been able to do in the past, as we were asked to pay the bill afterwards.

An hon. member called this bill a backward step. It is some "backward step". I calculated quickly how much more, not less, the federal government is expected to contribute next year to medical care alone under the present bill. This bill calls on the federal government to cost-share with the provinces next year the small additional sum of about $250 million for medicare alone. If that is a backward step, I do not know what the hon. member would call a forward step. We are not talking about cutting or reducing our contribution to medical care. We say that we shall have better control of the rate of growth, of the rate of escalation of our contributions to medical care. Therefore in that sense many of the statements made in committee and on second reading are exaggerated, especially when you consider the choices this bill provides.

Some hon. members talked of the opposition of the provinces to this bill. This was also raised in committee. Indeed it would be surprising if the provinces were to welcome this provision since it will do away with the blank cheque arrangement of the past. Now the provinces will know ahead of time how much they can draw from the federal government for medical care. I suppose if most of us could choose between having a blank cheque to draw any amount, and being told ahead of time how much we can draw, most of us would choose the blank cheque. The provinces are reacting just as individuals would react in those circumstances. That is the change we propose.

Some hon. members mention medical research, an area of concern to me and the government. I said previously that I am reviewing carefully the whole situation to see if we cannot find funds with which to alleviate the present difficulties of medical research. That, of course, is not the subject of this bill. I understand that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs is to consider the estimates of my department soon. Witnesses on behalf of the medical research community will appear, and we shall have the opportunity to consider this issue at greater length.

Finally, let me say that the government is not backing away from cost-sharing. As I have already mentioned, this bill does not reduce the contribution of the federal government. Next year, for medicare alone, it will increase it by as much as $250 million for both levels of government. The social services bill will be proposed later this year and I hope will further extend the contributions of the federal government in the field of this country's social services.

As recently as two days ago I proposed to my provincial colleagues extended cost-sharing under hospital insurance and medical care, a cost-sharing extension which would have made life relatively easier for the provinces. Actually some provinces were eager to proceed immediately with the extension of those cost-sharing services. Other provinces prefer to wait until the first ministers' conference before making up their minds on this subject. Therefore it has been agreed that we shall wait until October 1 before reaching any conclusion on the subject.

We are not backing out of cost-sharing, not reducing the total volume of our contribution. We want to make certain that the health of Canadians keeps improving. But for this to happen we must allocate our resources to the most efficient area and make sure that the taxpayers' dollars, the spending of which is our responsibility, are used for the best purpose.

Having heard representations in committee, and particularly the motion proposed by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), I recognize that parliament ought to be given the opportunity to consider orders in council which the government might pass pursuant to the provisions of this bill. I therefore proposed motion No. 4, which is identical to a provision contained in Bill C-89. It provides that, at the request of 50 members of this House, an order in council must be debated for two days, after which there is to be a vote. If the vote is negative, the order in council shall become null and void. That provision, as I say, is identical to a similar provision contained in the bill on which the House voted earlier this afternoon. I hope it will carry, as it will give hon. members the opportunity to debate particular government decisions for a specified time.

Those are all the comments I wanted to make on the motions before the House. I thank hon. members for their attention.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in the 30-odd seconds left let me assure the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It's Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Yewchuk: —that we have made no commitment with regard to motion No. 4. We shall make no commitment until we see what happens to the other motions. It is difficult to debate the motion without knowing what will be the results of the votes on the preceeding motions. My present inclination is to say that we do not care for this bill one bit. Despite that we proposed three amendments. We do not know how they will be voted on. They are listed in order of decreasing acceptability, and motion No. 4 is less acceptable than all the others. Even so, if it passes it may improve the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could the acting government House leader tell us what business the House will consider if this matter is concluded some time tomorrow? What is to be the business tomorrow?

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I shall answer, not as the acting government House leader, but as deputy Whip. I can inform the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) that we shall continue debating Bill C-68. If we finish the debate on the report stage, the government House leader will consult the other House leaders in the morning and they may reach agreement on the legislation that is to follow.

Mr. Hees: Well said. Gus for mayor!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is another way of saying you don't know.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

FLOODS—SOURIS RIVER AREA—POSSIBLE DECLARATION AS DISASTER AREA

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, on April 12 I raised a question with respect to flooding on the Souris River. This is not a new problem. It is one that has been with the settlers in this area from time immemorial. However, it so happens that each year the problem is becoming increasingly worse. This year we have had intensive flooding which has involved major communities like Melita, Hartney, and the town of Souris itself, as well as thousands of acres of fertile farmland under flood waters and made useless for the current agriculture season, as well as extensive damage to wildlife.

The Souris River rises in Saskatchewan, winds into the United States, and then comes back into the province of Manitoba. For any action to deal with the growing problem of flooding, it will involve combined action on the part of at least five different governmental jurisdictions.

This year the city of Minot in the state of North Dakota was severely hit. It is estimated that damages will rise as high as $10 million. As a result the Governor of the state of North Dakota has asked the government of the United States to declare the area a national disaster.

Just to show how serious the flooding is this year, the Emergency Measures Organization calmly forecast that the flood would keep at a foot below the 1969 level. As actually happened, it peaked about ten feet above the flood level. Only effective work by the troops brought in on a very quick basis from the nearby Shilo Canadian Forces Base saved the water treatment plant in the town of Souris and also in the town of Melita. I would also like to note that students from the high school were released from school and did valiant work on the dikes as well.

The compensation is going to run into millions of dollars. As I have already indicated, the state of North Dakota will be backed by the resources of the United States. It appears that the Manitoba government is to bear the total cost of emergency compensation in the province of Manitoba through its Flood Assistance Board.

I raised the question on April 12 that the circumstances this year indicate that some permanent flood control measures must be taken on this waterway. I am sure all members are aware that over the past two or three years there has been constant discussion on the possible impact of the Garrison diversion that is being developed south of the border in terms of pollution of the Souris River and the Red River, and the possible impact on Canadian territory as a result. The International Joint Commission is looking into this particular aspect of the problem of the Souris.

I strongly urge, as I did in my question to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand) the other day, that when he meets with the officials of the United States government, as he indicated he will be doing in the immediate future, he make strong representations that the terms of the IJC investigation be expanded to embrace the possibility and plans for permanent flood control on the Souris River.

There is a co-ordinating body that will involve the levels of government already operating in Canada. It was established on October 28, 1974, with the signing of an agreement by the governments of Canada, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. These governments jointly agreed to study the "complex and troublesome Souris River" and they established the study objective, which was as follows:

> To carry out an assessment of the water and related resources of the Souris River Basin and of the demands being made and likely to be made on them—

Other objectives of the study were flood damage reduction—so this is specifically within the terms of reference—as well as water supply, water quality, agricultural matters, and water related resources. We have a body operating within Canada which has been gathering information now since 1974, so I suggest that Canada is in a very excellent position to make strong recommendations to the government of the United States in this respect.

I would also point out that there is an excellent precedent for the action on the part of intergovernmental bodies, at least on the Canadian level. In 1950 the city of Winnipeg was almost totally inundated by a disastrous flood. Following that flood, studies were undertaken which indicated that the only solution was permanent flood control. In the early 1960's—I will not mention the government that was in power at the time but it was a very effective government—the federal government started a program that we hoped would continue, but there has been no further development in this regard. Nevertheless the precedent was so effectively established with control of the Assiniboine River, the Shellmouth dam, the Portage diversion, and the Winnipeg floodway, that there is no longer any threat of flooding in the city of Winnipeg from the Assiniboine and Red Rivers.

I hope the minister will seize the initiative in meetings with United States officials. In light of the reaction of the Governor of the state of North Dakota, who has had to cope with a flood of the Souris River of unusual magnitude, the minister can be assured of the utmost co-operation from that level of government.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the federal government at this time has not received any request from the province of Manitoba for cost sharing assistance in respect to spring flooding along the Souris and Assiniboine River systems. I am advised, however, that the province will be establishing a flood damage compensation and restoration program to deal with the aftermath of the flood and that the costs of the program could be substantial. It is therefore likely that the province will be seeking federal financial assistance. The hon. member may rest assured that, when it is received, Manitoba's request will be given every consideration.

As the hon. member is aware, it has been long standing practice of the federal government to assist the provinces financially in the event that the cost of disasters exceed an amount that the provinces could reasonably be expected to bear on their own. Although the province of Manitoba is thoroughly familiar with the terms and conditions of the federal disaster assistance program, it might be useful for the members present if I briefly reviewed the chief aspects of the program.

As I have already noted, the federal policy has been deliberately designed to deal only with the larger, more costly disasters. This is clearly reflected in the cost sharing formula which establishes a minimum cost sharing threshold of $1 per capita of provincial population. No federal financial assistance is given until the costs incurred by a province exceed this minimum threshold. However, as costs rise above this level they are shared with the federal government on a progressive basis. Under the formula, which has been in effect since 1970, the amount of the federal contribution payable to a province is determined as follows: 0 per cent of the first $1 per capita of provincial expenditure, 50 per cent of the next $2 per capita of provincial expenditure, 75 per cent of the next $2 per capita of provincial expenditure, and 90 per cent of provincial expenditures in excess of $5 per capita.

In addition to the formula, there is a set of administrative guidelines which define the types of disaster related expenditures incurred by a province which are eligible for cost sharing assistance. Generally speaking, eligible expenditures are those made to restore the essential personal property of private citizens, farmsteads, and small businesses to habitable or workable condition, and to restore public works to their pre-flood condition. This also includes the costs of coping with the immediate situation such as building dikes and providing emergency accommodation. On the other hand, insurable losses, crop losses, and damages sustained by larger commercial enterprises are not eligible for cost-sharing assistance with the federal government.

● (2210)

As the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) is aware, the Canadian forces personnel based in Shilo, Portage, and Winnipeg have been heavily involved this spring in combating the flood threat, particularly in the towns of Souris and Wawanesa. This is a clear indication of the federal government's concern over the emergency situation in Manitoba and of the federal government's willingness to assist Canadian citizens in this area of provincial and municipal jurisdiction.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, is there a possible point of order, because that was really not my question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is aware that the procedure is very strict in the adjournment debate. There is no point of order; questions are put and answers are given, and the Chair has no alternative but to listen.

Adjournment Debate

TRANSPORT—SUGGESTION NEW POLICY BE DEVELOPED BEFORE ELIMINATION OF RAIL SUBSIDIES ON FLOUR AND GRAIN

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I must say I can appreciate the dilemma you are facing at this hour of the night.

Over the Easter weekend I had the privilege of marching down two sheds in Halifax that were the length of about nine football fields, I think. They would have docked the Queen Elizabeth and the Queen Mary end to end without giving them a chance to rub bow to stern. Imagine that! Loaded there as high as an elephant can reach, and much higher than I can reach, and I am not exactly small, were bags of flour. This was the extent, as I saw it, of the flour trade that goes out through the Port of Halifax. It is a large trade. As a matter of fact I was rather surprised, and my colleague, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) can back me up, to find that it was larger than either one of us had thought was the case.

In any event, I am here tonight with a file of speeches that is about four inches thick which I have made on the late, late show. I think that in itself has to be a record. I do not think anyone has made more speeches on the late show on any one single subject, with the possible exception of the merry member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) who tangled some years ago with a former Postmaster General, Mr. Kierans. They used to joust here I think about once a week, if not twice a week on occasion.

In any event, I have pursued this with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). Even the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) has not escaped my eagle eye on this subject.

I gather that our dear friend, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), is going to reply as best he can to this continuous thunder I am bringing up. I am not going to burden the House at this late hour with a lot of figures. What I am trying to burden the House with is a couple of arguments.

The first argument I hope I will be able to make successfully, and I will be backed up by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), and others who are going to join this debate later on if it gets to that, is that I am going to prove brilliantly, conclusively, and beyond a reasonable doubt that the transportation subsidy in Canada is not in respect of Crowsnest Pass rates or maritime freight rates, but in respect of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

In looking around I see there are five people present, plus the ubiquitous member from the Canadian Press; one person on that side, one person by the clock, and our protective staff so I am protected from God knows what, and yourself, Mr. Speaker. This number will be increased because before this debate is over, and I guarantee this if not threaten it, people are going to know that the fattest subsidies in transportation in Canada are not paid to westerners or maritimers but to those who live along the St. Lawrence system from Quebec City to Thunder Bay.

That having been said I wish to mention one further point the Minister of Transport deliberately has dragged into this debate late in the day. After I believe the fourth occasion on which I raised this matter in the Chamber the minister said would it not be nice if we had a unit train from western Canada to Halifax. The fact is that the roadbed is not strong enough to handle it now. I say that one should not throw out an old policy until one has tried the new policy.

My view is that the Minister of Transport is not justified in attempting to bring in the red herring of the unit train between western Canada and Halifax, which will not work unless a great deal of money is spent on it. He is not justified in throwing out a policy which now works. This is a matter which affects every eastern port. It affects the port of Halifax, the port of Saint John, the port of Montreal, and it affects the St. Lawrence River, Toronto itself, Thunder Bay, Port Colborne, and all the grain growers, at least in Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

Until the minister does something about this I, the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, the hon. member for Halifax, the hon. member for Vegreville, and the Lord knows how many other members from Ontario and Montreal will be involved in this. There will be a fight. That is the reason why I am standing up tonight.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe it has been suggested by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) that the work of the federal-provincial-industry group currently studying the potential for unit train operation for grain from the prairies to Atlantic ports be completed before the Atlantic and East rates are lifted. I hope I am dealing with the point he raised.

Mr. McCleave: Right on.

Mr. Francis: I am pleased to report that the development of the unit train concept is progressing well. In the case of Halifax, the CNR is now developing the rate quotations on movements from inland points such as Saskatoon and Rosetown. A further meeting relating to unit train movements to St. John via CP rail is scheduled for May 5 with the object of producing rates applicable to such origin points as Moose Jaw, Weyburn, and Elm Creek.

Mr. Forrestall: That is not the point.

Mr. Francis: I am sorry but I did not get the point of the hon. member.

Mr. Forrestall: The point is that the speed of the train is 25 miles an hour as opposed to the speed of 40 miles an hour which it should be.

Mr. Francis: The hon. member is making a point on which I really am not competent to comment. I simply want to put on the record what is taking place. I feel that what I am saying will be of interest to the two hon. gentlemen on the other side. I am happy to note that they are nodding their heads at this point.

In developing these rates a number of factors such as volume, type of grain, car cycles, season versus year-round movement, load and unload capacity, shift working and so on are being taken into consideration. It is anticipated that all parties involved in this evaluation process will be in possession of the relevant rate quotations before the end of May. Subsequently, the prospects will then be reviewed by the Canadian Wheat Board.

• (2220)

The railways are aware of the potentialities that exist for long haul unit train movement, and it is the minister's hope that the current assessment may do much to sustain the viability of the grain transfer role of the Atlantic ports.

FINANCE—ALLEGED IMPORTATION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS FROM UNITED STATES AT BELOW COST OF PRODUCTION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, at the turn of the century a great American orator made the comment, prophetically I believe, that if we destroy the farm it will not be long before the grass grows in the streets of every city of the country. But if the cities should be destroyed, they will grow again so long as we preserve the farms. Nobody wants to see either cities or farms destroyed, but I am concerned that in Canada we are not looking after the farmers, and in the future we will pay dearly for that.

Farmers are facing problems from every direction. Tonight I am speaking specifically about farmers in my riding of Surrey-White Rock who are facing distress, partly because of flooding which results from the urbanization of the area next door to the farms, which creates an increased run-off problem, flooding the flat lands where the best farmland is. Also they are facing the problem of high labour costs, and the most important subject of my comments tonight is the matter of imports that are competing, I believe unfairly, with the production of farmers in Surrey and, as a matter of fact, in the whole of Canada.

On April 12 I raised the matter in the House, first addressing myself to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I spoke about the fact that at the time when fresh vegetables are ready for the market in the lower mainland of British Columbia fresh vegetables also happen to come in from the United States. It so happens that the American farmers can raise three or four crops a year, and with that kind of production it is easy for them to compete with the Canadian farmers and to maintain a high price all year long, and especially at the time when Canadian farmer's products are coming on the market when they can lower their price and still sell their product at above the cost for them. So they are not really technically guilty of dumping, but it is a matter of distress to Canadian farmers who cannot compete with that kind of import.

At the same time I mentioned to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) the fact that the processor of Canadian farm goods in Canada is facing competition from what is called distress selling of the product coming in from the U.S. As I understand it, distress selling is not really dumping, but it is providing again the kind of competition that is unfair to Canadian farmers.

For example, the frozen foods coming in from the U.S. are a commodity which can be preserved and does not have to be sold at any specific time. The large producer and the large processor in the United States, with the volume they have, can easily bring that product to Canada and thus create unfair competition which is destroying Canadian farms. The U.S. can dominate in that way.

We had ten vegetables coming in from Taiwan at 20 per cent to 40 per cent below the market price of the Canadian product. We have mushrooms coming in from Korea and Taiwan. Recently Taiwan has been exporting frozen mushrooms. Until recently the mushroom farmers in Canada were selling mainly on the fresh market, and what they could not sell on the fresh market they froze and then sold. But now they are facing competition from these imports from Taiwan. You cannot blame farmers in Taiwan or the exporters, but we have to look after the producer in Canada.

What distresses me about this is that the consumer is caught in a bind. We cannot blame the consumer for that, but what will happen in the long run when smaller farmers are driven out of business and cannot compete any more? It will not be long until all we will have will be consolidated farms which will be similar to a monopoly and once that monopoly has been established, the consumer will get it in the neck anyway. It is only a matter of time.

All we need to do is to have a floating tariff which the Minister of Agriculture says is very simple. He is negotiating all the time but he does not seem to get around to providing that protective tarrif for our farmers in time so that our product is protected. All we need to do is raise that tariff in time so that the Canadian product finds shelter from the cheaper import from the United States. The Americans do that. They look after their own.

We have a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States, and there is supposed to be something like a 35 per cent or 37 per cent tariff on potatoes, for example. The Americans reciprocate, but they are shrewd enough and sharp enough to impose a quota on that part of the reciprocal trade agreement, and beyond that they impose a 75 per cent tariff. The quota is low enough so that it does not even pay Canadians to export, so we are defeated before we begin.

All I am asking of the Minister of Finance is that he consider the Canadian farmer and the distress under which he is operating and the kind of competition he is facing, and protect him so that in the years to come we will have production in our country and consumers will be protected in the long run. When a monopoly is established the consumer will be grabbed by the throat, and we will be paying, and paying in a way we cannot afford. All we are asking of the minister is that he look into the future so that our farmers will be protected, and in the long run our consumers will also be protected.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) raised several interesting points. One I do not intend to comment on is the flooding he referred to because on the previous flooding issue I think I was washed out to sea.

I will try to be very specific with regard to the question of April 12 which the hon. member raised as to tariffs. I wish to advise that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) wrote to the president of Royal City Foods Limited on March 25. In his letter the minister pointed out that the Tariff Board is currently reviewing the tariffs on fresh and processed fruits and vegetables. He also made reference to the procedures already available under the Anti-dumping Act to deal with any imports Royal City Foods Limited believes are being dumped on the Canadian market.

I might add that in response to representations the minister later received from the Canadian Food Processors' Association, senior officials of the Department of Finance and of other interested departments met with representatives of that association to discuss the difficulties which have been encountered recently in certain segments of the processed fruits and vegetables industry in Canada. Representatives of the industry have undertaken to provide certain additional information concerning the impact of import competition on their operations which will assist the government in reaching a decision on the request of the industry for additional protection against imports.

I hope this information will satisfy the hon. member. His concern is shared by many hon. members of this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REFERRAL OF FARM BROADCASTS TO COMMITTEE FOR STUDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 regarding CBC farm broadcasting, which recently has become the subject matter in many parts of the country of some controversy, complaint and uncertainty. In anticipation that all hon. members are anxious that this important form of communication with farm producers and consumers alike be of the highest reasonable calibre, I move, and I am honoured to have my motion seconded by my colleague opposite, the vice-chairman of the standing committee on broadcasting, the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas):

That this matter of CBC farm broadcasting be referred for study to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be put only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion which is moved by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) and seconded by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

SUGGESTED PROTEST TO UNITED STATES AGAINST CONSTRUCTION OF TRIDENT NUCLEAR BASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It concerns the construction of the Trident nuclear base in Bangor, Washington, immediately south of the city of Vancouver. In view of the tremendous size of the Trident installation, its close proximity to Canadian territory and the danger to Canadian lives and property posed by the existence of this base in the event of a nuclear fallout following a nuclear attack and in view of the long standing friendship, close relationship and atmosphere of goodwill between Canada and the United States, which Canada is presently demonstrating by her commitment to spend $1 billion of Canadian tax dollars to prop up the financially-troubled American Lockheed Corporation by its failure to either consult in respect of or protest such construction of the Trident base where Lockheed happens to be the prime contractor, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House go on record as condemning the construction of the Trident nuclear base and request the Canadian government to protest to the United States that construction in the strongest possible terms and, to request immediate consultation and discussion with the United States Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be presented at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

JURISDICTION OF BOARD TO REVIEW PRICING POLICIES OF GOVERNMENT BOARDS AND AGENCIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the pricing policies of the federal public sector have been removed from the direct jurisdiction of the Anti-Inflation Board, yet the board reports that almost 10 per cent of their complaints involve government matters, can the minister tell the House whether persons affected by federal price increases have any practical opportunity on a day to day basis to appeal the price policies of federal emanations and, if so, to what body?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's premise is incorrect. The federal government, and indeed provincial government bodies which recover most of the costs of the services provided by way of user charges, are subject to the Anti-Inflation

Board. As the House has been told many times, other federal tribunals such as the National Energy Board and other boards which govern the provision of services to the public are applying anti-inflation guidelines. In the situation where much of the cost is covered by a subsidy from the federal Treasury and only part is recovered by the user charges, the department or the Treasury Board applies the price and income guidelines in determining the extent to which there should be an increase in the user charge.

The hon. member has said very often that there should be a reduction of the federal government expenditure in this country. We have acknowledged that in the sense of saying that the absolute subsidy provided, for example, to the airlines through the air transport charges, should not be increased and where costs go up the user should be expected to pay rather than have the cost borne by the general taxpayer.

SUGGESTION BOARD BE REQUESTED TO REVIEW PRICING POLICIES OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES AND MONETARY POLICY OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): My question is directed again to the Minister of Finance. In order to prevent any possible doubt concerning this question of undue price increase at federal levels and considering that section 12(1)(e) of the Anti-Inflation Act gives the board the authority to comment on any inflationary activities at the federal government levels, will the minister encourage the Anti-Inflation Board to review all pricing decisions of federal emanations and to condemn publicly any price increase which the board finds unjustified?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The membership of the board is of such quality and so concerned about the effectiveness of the program that they do not require encouragement from me. I notice that they have been fairly active in this regard without my intervention.

Mr. Stevens: My supplementary question is again to the Minister of Finance. Noting that the C.D. Howe Research Institute has released a study claiming that the federal monetary policy has been inflationary in recent years and that a major villain of the piece has been the ravenous cash requirements of the federal government, will the minister ask the Anti-Inflation Board as part of its effort to promote public understanding of the inflationary process, as is contemplated under the act, to review developments in monetary policy and government expenditure and to report to the Canadian people as to whether these developments are consistent with the goals of the anti-inflation program?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it does dot seem to me to make a lot of sense to have the Anti-Inflation Board go back to 1972, 1973 and 1974 when the primary concern of the government at least, if not of the hon. member, was the high rate of unemployment in Canada and to review the policies being followed by the Bank of Canada at that time. The Bank of Canada has made it clear that under current circumstances it will run quite a tight monetary policy, and I think this is recognized as much by the Anti-Inflation Board as by anyone else, certainly by the vice-chairman.

ADDITIONAL STAFF NECESSARY TO COPE WITH BACKLOG OF WAGE SETTLEMENTS

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that the staff of the Anti-Inflation Board has increased three-fold over the minister's original estimate, and in view of the fact that as of April 9 there was a backlog of 3,900 wage settlements before the board, will the minister say, first, when the backlog will be eliminated and, secondly, how much additional staff he expects will be necessary to cope with the situation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the board that much of the backlog arises from the reports which have been required from the corporate sector, including the reports with respect to the wage settlements of their particular employees. The vast majority of those, as has often been stated in public, should be cleared in the relatively near future. Of course, there will remain a backlog of some of the more difficult cases, particularly where the question of historical relationship is involved.

ALLEGED STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR THAT CONTROL PROGRAM SHOULD BE DISMANTLED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Does the minister agree with the statement of the administrator of the Anti-Inflation Board that the wage and price control program should be dismantled as soon as possible?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): That is the position I have taken in this House right from the start, but the hon. gentleman seems to support the view that even if we have 6 per cent inflation next year, at that point we should accept it and live with it. This government has not taken that position.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We think the program should run until inflation in Canada is drastically reduced.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REDUCE DEFICIT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Finance. Given the report this morning that a body of United States politicians wants to continue with an unchanged Canada-U.S. automotive agreement—not unusual considering that they had a $2 billion trade surplus in their favour for last year—I should like to ask the minister if he would confirm for the House that in the automotive parts trade for the first quarter of this year we are running a deficit of $600 million in automotive parts alone. I believe that to be the case. Would the minister tell the House what plans the government now has to turn around this unacceptable situation.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I should like to confirm the accuracy of the figure, from a purely statistical standpoint. The position taken by my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has my support, namely, that his department has been carrying out an analysis on the current situation, both with regard to automobiles and parts, for the purpose of preparing a position for discussion with the United States on the subject of the auto pact.

Incidentally, the United States administration has been engaged in a similar analysis on their side. I think one would have to recognize that political events in the United States during the balance of this calendar year may make it difficult to complete negotiations for any changes in the auto pact.

Mr. Broadbent: For at least three years now the government has been saying that it has been undertaking studies as to what changes, if any, ought to be made in the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement. Would the minister finally give us some deadline for when the studies will be finished? Specifically, can he tell us what the government intends to do to ensure that Canadians get their share of investment which is at least proportionate to our consumption in that industry. Secondly, when does the government finally intend to make the automotive companies in Canada bring down their prices for Canadian consumers to at least the level at which they sell the same cars produced in this country to Americans?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the hon. gentleman knows, during the history of the auto pact over the past decade there has been a variation of experience. Indeed, up until 1971 the performance of the pact for Canada had been very much ahead and was the subject matter of some complaint by the then secretary of the United States treasury.

As to whether we will give up our careful study of the program, of course we will not. I think it will be important to monitor the effects of the existing arrangements from time to time to make certain that the program is meeting the interests of the two countries. I agree, however, that it is appropriate that the two administrations should be in position to discuss this, to do a perspective on the auto pact and to see the manner in which it should be changed in the interests of both countries.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister cites 1971 as a favourable year.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Up to.

Mr. Broadbent: He says "up to". I remind the minister that in eight of the eleven years the pact has been in existence Canada has had a massive deficit. I should like to ask whether the government intends, during 1976, for example, to come forward with specific proposals in terms of investment requirements for the automotive companies on this side of the border and in terms of pricing decisions to ensure that at least fairness is built into the pact for Canadians.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I point out to the hon. gentleman again that there has been an ebb and a flow in this matter, and that at the time cited Canada was quite substantially ahead on the auto pact. As I indicated, we are putting ourselves in a position to commence discussions with the United States on the subject of the auto pact. I pointed to what may be some difficulty, from the standpoint of the United States, with extensive negotiations this year but we are putting ourselves in readiness for those kinds of discussions as soon as they can reasonably be held.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTION OFFICIALS TRAVEL ECONOMY CLASS AND EXPENSE ACCOUNTS BE PUBLISHED

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to put a question to the Minister of the Environment but, in his absence, I believe the President of the Treasury Board, or even the President of the Privy Council could answer it.

As the government intends to reduce MP's expenses, is the minister aware that the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board still travels first class by air, according to the newspapers? First, would he have the chairman practice what he preaches since hon. members will have to travel third class? Second, would he be willing to publish the expense accounts of all the members of the AIB to ensure that they are really setting the example?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, one incident was reported to the effect that Mr. Pepin had travelled first class; he explained that he had an economy class ticket but he had been invited to travel first class. I am not aware of other similar incidents.

As for the other question, if the hon. member wants that information, I believe he could have a question put on the order paper to which the responsible minister would give a reply. As for the hon. member's travelling third class, I wonder if he will be travelling by canoe.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask the minister—but first I want to tell him that I go by canoe in the woods only—if he is going to ask all officials to reduce their expenses and stop travelling in millionaire style.

Mr. Chrétien: We put out instructions last December forbidding civil servants to travel first class, unless circumstances are extraordinary; that is the principle we have adopted to prove to the people that restrictions are also applied to members of parliament, ministers and officials of the government.

Oral Questions

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the marriage breakup which took place last week-end in Toronto between the federal and provincial wings of the Liberal party, I wonder if the Prime Minister is planning to make any helicopter tours of Ontario this spring, as he did a year ago, when he will be dropping in on provincial Liberal picnics and other such festivities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that such an experienced member has not learned to make the distinction between marriage breakup and women's liberation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: On the substance of the question, Mr. Speaker, the only plans I have for using helicopters in the near future is to reach those heights of Olympus on which the hon. member sits.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. I should like to remind the Prime Minister that the view is infinitely better from this new and exalted position that I now occupy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: The view of the back of your leader's head is better?

Mr. Hees: I can assure the Prime Minister that the atmosphere is far fresher and purer up here than it is down on that mundane level on which he sits. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he would seriously consider taking one of those helicopter trips, and if he would promise to call in at Prince Edward-Hastings, because I always appreciate the extra thousand majority he adds to my vote at election time whenever he pays my riding a call!

Mr. Paproski: And try Edmonton Centre at the same time.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as for the view, I agree with the hon. member. It is much better to see his leader from the back. I concede the telling point about the increase of votes. I believe they were brought about because when I visited the riding the hon. member made sure he was in every picture taken of me.

Mr. Hees: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My only objection, after the Prime Minister's last visit to my riding, is this: for about a week after his visit I kept being asked, "Say, George, who was the little guy traipsing around behind you at the fair?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Touché, George.

Mr. Hees: You set them up and I'll knock them down.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

ALLEGED INADEQUACY OF FINANCIAL CONTROL PROCEDURES FOR LEASES AND CONCESSIONS AT INTERNATIONAL AIRPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the Prime Minister's statement regarding the establishment of a pattern of inconsistencies with respect to tendering procedures, is it the intention of the minister to ask the Auditor General to look into the question of financial control procedures at all international airports in view of events recently brought to light with respect to the administration of leases and concessions and the fact that instances of inadequate controls were brought to the attention of the government by the Auditor General some time ago. Specifically, the 1971 Auditor General's report stated in part:

In audits of the international airports at Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, a number of irregularities were observed in the administration of leases and concessions. These irregularities indicate the need for a strengthening by the Department of Transport of the administration of its leases and concessions:—

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary to ask the Auditor General to do his job. He is very well known for his excellent work and I am sure that if he sees any irregularities in the procedures he will inform me without any delay. However, I thank the hon. member for raising this matter. As far as I am concerned, I inquired of the department's officials and found nothing in particular to comment on. For the information of the hon. member, I could send him immediately the list of procedures to be followed by the departments before asking for public tenders.

MIRABEL—REGULATIONS GOVERNING CHANGES IN CONTRACTS WITHOUT CALLING TENDERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed either to the Acting Minister of Transport or to the President of the Treasury Board. Can either hon. gentlemen indicate whether the consortium of consultants retained for Mirabel International Airport, namely Consultant en Aéroports Internationaux de Montréal Ltée have discretionary powers with regard to authorizing changes in tenders or procedures which would permit those who have submitted successful bids to receive "change orders" or additional payments up to several hundred thousand dollars without public tender. In other words, what are the terms of reference binding CAIM, the consultant firm, for allocating work and tenders?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give a full answer to this question. However, I take good note of it and I shall report to the hon. member later.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask him to consider, when he is looking into the matter, if the ceiling of $500,000 is relevant? Also, will he check to see if contracts exceeding the discretionary amount, if such there is, were severed or split into smaller amounts in order to bring them within the discretionary limit?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not have this information at hand, but I shall try to obtain it.

MIRABEL—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF MR. STONER'S BEHAVIOUR IN CONNECTION WITH FOOD CONCESSION TENDER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister? On Wednesday last my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville, asked the House to approve a motion requesting that Mr. Gerry Stoner explain in writing his behaviour vis-à-vis the Mirabel restaurant matter. The motion having been defeated, I ask the Prime Minister to direct the Minister of Transport forthwith to ask for and table a written explanation of Mr. Stoner's behaviour, which includes various statements to indicate whether or not his minister of the day simply authorized the act of intervention or, indeed, ordered it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the motion, which I did not hear last week, was brought to my attention. It reinforces my view of the offer I made in the absence of the Leader of the Opposition. This whole matter should be brought before a parliamentary committee or committee of the whole so that these questions can be asked of the minister. He will be assisted by officials and is anxious to answer all these questions. I regret the nature of the motion and, indeed, of the question, because, by innuendo, they cast aspersions on one of our most distinguished civil servants. The man is beyond reproach and has served the government well for many years. I am sorry that not only ministers but civil servants now are being tarred with this kind of smear.

Mr. Clark: Apparently there is a limitless supply of red herrings available to the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister completely misleads the House with respect to that matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1130)

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The question related to an apparent conflict of statements made by the former Minister of Transport, now the Minister of the Environment, and the present Minister of Transport. I again ask if the Prime Minister is prepared to have the present Minister of Transport file an explanation with regard to the influence or intervention by the Minister of Transport of that day into this matter vis-à-vis Mr. Gerry Stoner who is indeed a respected civil servant.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my answer to that would be a flat no. I would not want the minister to file any such statement. I hope the opposition will have the courage to challenge the minister and his officials in front of a committee or of the committee of the whole House, if necessary, because this kind of question that has been asked repeatedly is not meant to get to the truth of the matter. It is meant, as the hon. member for Central Nova indicated, to be mischievous and frivolous. He is not seeking the truth. He is seeking to distribute a lot of hot air. It is of no service to the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED DIFFICULTY OF UNITED STATES MAGAZINES IN OBTAINING WORK VISAS FOR CORRESPONDENTS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. Has the minister initiated a policy in which his department is telling companies owning United States magazines and reporting on Canadian public affairs to employ only Canadians for posts in Canada, in that organizations seeking to transfer non-Canadian correspondents to Canada have encountered difficulty in obtaining or extending work visas?

[Translation]

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall take note of the hon. member's question and he will have an answer sometime next week.

[English]

Mr. Epp: In order to maintain freedom of the press, will the minister assure this House that non-Canadian correspondents working for foreign news services, newspapers or magazines will not be barred from working in Canada through the withholding of work visas, an action that borders on control of the press?

[Translation]

Mr. Portelance: As I have said, I take note of the question, Mr. Speaker. The minister will reply to the hon. member next week.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF TOTAL EXPENDITURE IN 1976

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. The total outlay for unemployment insurance totalled over $3 billion in 1975 and caused the government's share of UI expenditure to increase by 90 per cent over that experienced in 1974. In view of the fact that Statistics Canada now reports that both net and gross benefit payouts for UIC have increased an additional 15 per cent in the first two months of 1976 over the first two months of 1975, does the minister now believe that total expenditure for 1976 will exceed those astronomical figures we had to live with in 1975 and can he give us any indication as to what this total outlay will be in 1976?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED FAILURE OF BILL C-69 TO EFFECT REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In June of last year the former Minister of Finance announced a five point strategy to achieve restraint in unemployment insurance expenditures. This was followed by Bill C-69 which revealed in glowing terms how it would tighten up the Unemployment Insurance Act. In view of the fact that Bill C-69 has been in effect since January 1 and in that same period of time expenditures have continued to increase, is the Prime Minister now prepared to concede that Bill C-69 will not bring about the desired effects it was initially believed to accomplish and therefore call for immediate additional amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, preferably early in the next session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is an intention to bring in amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Commission Act. We are now looking at this matter. I hope the hon. member will make his views known on this before the bill is put before the House.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the Unemployment Insurance payout has considerably increased since the introduction of Bill C-69, is the Prime Minister now prepared to indicate that Bill C-69 has not had the desired effect?

Mr. Trudeau: The question sounds slightly argumentative, Mr. Speaker, but I will take note of it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON BOUNDARY LINE DIVIDING FISHING BANKS ON ATLANTIC COAST—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Since Canada maintains the equidistant principle in the seaward extension of the boundary dividing the land mass between Canada and the United States while the United States claims the Fundian channel divides the fishing banks on the Atlantic coast, has the Prime Minister or any of his officials held recent talks with the Americans on this topic? If so, can he inform the House on the progress being made in view of the valuable groundfish and scallop fishery, as well as possible oil, gas and minerals in this area?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take note of the question on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Crouse: Since the ownership of this valuable offshore bank is obviously in question and is claimed today by Canada and the United States, can the Prime Minister inform the House if there is any informal agreement between our two countries on this bank and, if not, on what basis have exploration permits been issued to oil companies interested in probing the resources of this area?

Mr. Trudeau: I will take note of that too, Mr. Speaker.

ALLEGED OBJECTION OF UNITED STATES TO CANADIAN SUBSIDIARY OF PRATT-WHITNEY ENTERING INTO CONTRACT WITH ROLLS-ROYCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. I presume the Prime Minister is aware of the decision by the United States justice department which prevents Pratt-Whitney Canada Limited of Montreal from entering into a contract with Rolls-Royce for the development of a new engine, thereby purporting to use extra territorial jurisdiction over a Canadian company, although it is an American subsidiary. What action is the government taking to protest the move by the United States justice department to prevent this contract from being entered into, a contract which would provide a thousand Canadian jobs over the life of the development contract for the Rolls-Royce Pratt-Whitney engine?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member flatters me when he assumes that I know the terms of this contract. I will take note of the question.

Mr. Leggatt: I was not suggesting the Prime Minister would know the terms of the contract. I thought he might know that the United States justice department was interfering in Canadian affairs. That is something he might like to take note of if he did not know before now. In view of the information the Prime Minister now has, will he take action to protest the extra territorial use of American law dealing with Canadian subsidiaries and drying up Canadian jobs? Further, will the Prime Minister advise if it is government policy to continue going to the United States to buy Lockheed aircraft without research and development because this new contract that is drying up has research and development for Canadians? What action will the Prime Minister now take?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the justice department of the United States is indeed addressing Canada in that way, I will discuss with the Minister of National Defence what response will be necessary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY OF FORCE BECOMING INVOLVED IN JURISDICTIONAL DISPUTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Solicitor General a question. A few days ago I asked the Prime Minister to make certain that the RCMP do not become embroiled in a jurisdictional dispute. The Prime Minister said he would look into the facts and try to solve the problem. Would the Solicitor General now advise the House whether this question has been solved, so as to ensure that any wrongdoing will be subject to the judgment of the courts and not sabotaged by jurisdictional technicalities or political skullduggery?

● (1140)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): As I mentioned in the House the other day, this matter will be discussed between myself and the solicitor general of Quebec very shortly.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sure the Solicitor General has read the morning papers and noted that the solicitor general in Quebec has said: Hands off. What is the attitude of the Solicitor General, the minister responsible for the RCMP, when the force is, really, embroiled in a jurisdictional dispute?

Mr. Allmand: I do not think we can rely on the press for a true representation of what is going on between Quebec and the federal government. All I can say is that discussions have been going on between officials of the police involving Ontario, Quebec and the federal government, and that very shortly I shall be meeting with the solicitor general and the deputy minister from Quebec. I am sure we can resolve these difficulties.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALLEGATION MINISTER'S STATEMENT INDICATED GOVERNMENT WOULD NOT PROCEED WITH MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the minister's statement earlier this week to the effect that it is questionable whether the proposed pipeline down the Mackenzie Valley will be proceeded with, can the hon. gentleman advise whether or not this statement indicates that the government now favours the proposal of Polar Gas and Panarctic Oil to build a pipeline from the high Arctic and/or a Y-line concept?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion did not point in that direction. It merely indicated that as long as the extractable reserves in the north, in the Delta area, are only in the order of three trillion cubic feet there was some question that the pipeline might not be in Canada's interest.

DATE OF ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING DRILLING FOR OIL AND GAS IN THE NORTH

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Can the minister advise us when he expects to have the long-overdue oil and gas regulations ready for promulgation?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): It is the hope of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and myself that we shall be able to issue a statement containing the substance of the oil and gas regulations by the middle of May, that is, in the next two weeks.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PROPOSED PIPELINE FROM PRINCE RUPERT TO EDMONTON

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the light of serious studies presently being conducted in connection with a proposal to build a pipeline from Prince Rupert tying into the Trans Mountain Pipe Line, can the parliamentary secretary to the minister or the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the House whether the government is making any input into these studies and whether the proposal is being considered by the department as an alternative to the Mackenzie Valley route?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Perhaps I might reply to that question as acting minister. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has been contacted by participants in the study, essentially in the private sector, who have indicated their interest in this proposal. The purpose of the project is to carry petroleum rather than natural gas, moving oil which has come down through the Alyeska pipeline into the Interprovincial system by way of Edmonton so as to make up for reduced exports of oil to a number of northern tier American states. It is an entirely private initiative. The department has been in touch with those who are interested but the federal government has taken no decision with regard to it.

PROPOSAL TO REFUSE NUCLEAR TECHNOLOGY TO INDIA UNLESS AGREEMENT REACHED ON INSPECTION OF FACILITIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it arises from a CBC report of last evening. Can the right hon. gentleman tell us whether in the course of the current negotiations between Canada and India to resume shipment of nuclear technology and fuel to that country agreement has been reached with regard to IAEA inspection of all nuclear facilities in India, not just those supplied by Canada, and, if not, will the government refuse to proceed with any resumption of nuclear supplies to that country as has been strongly advocated by members on this side of the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The matter is to be before cabinet very soon; there have been recent discussions with the government of India.

RELATIONSHIP OF REFUSAL TO ALLOW ITALIAN COMPANY TO SELL NUCLEAR REACTORS UNDER LICENCE TO POLITICAL SITUATION IN ITALY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary involving a question which the Secretary of State considered too complex to answer yesterday. With regard to the licensing agreement allowing an Italian company to build CANDU reactors, if the report of April 24 was correct in stating that that company would not be permitted the resale of nuclear technology to other countries, was that decision in any way related to the unsettled political position in Italy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The hon. lady is talking about a report and a company. I do not know what she is referring to in either case. But I will refer her question to the minister.

FISHERIES

EXCLUSION OF NEWFOUNDLAND FROM REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON LOBSTER FISHING—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Fisheries I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that the minister has made concessions to maritime lobster fishermen while excluding the Newfoundland lobster fishermen who find themselves in the same difficulties, and in the light of representations which have been made to the minister respecting which an early decision was promised, can the parliamentary secretary now advise the House what decision or what action has been taken?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State (Fisheries)): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of State for Fisheries is presently in New York attending the Law of the Sea Conference. I know he was due to make a policy statement on the weekend so I might as well make it for him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): The decision does not involve a major policy change as was the case in other maritime provinces. It involves, rather, adjustments to enable two things to be done. First, the fishermen helpers who worked with moonlighters in past years, and who are not permitted under the present regulations to obtain operators' licences, will now be permitted to obtain them; second, fishermen who had contemplated going out lobster catching and were refused a licence and who had made a commitment prior to December 30, 1975, will now be able to apply for a licence. I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree with these basic changes, two of which were suggested in a letter he wrote to me approximately a month ago.

Mr. Marshall: I may say to the parliamentary secretary that I certainly agree with the changes because they are two which I recommended to the minister. Can the hon. gentleman now tell us what steps the department has taken to advise the fishermen of these adjustments, in view of the fact that the lobster season is now with us in Newfoundland and the information needs to go out as quickly as possible?

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): I can assure the hon. member that I will communicate this policy immediately to the media in Newfoundland. As the hon. member knows, most of the fishermen who were, in effect, discriminated against had already appealed to the Appeal Board and the Appeal Board will be notified immediately with regard to this policy change. Obviously, some of the applications which were formerly rejected will now be accepted.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF THOSE REFUSED LOBSTER FISHING LICENCE

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I wish to congratulate the parliamentary secretary. Would he tell the minister when he comes back that members from the maritime provinces are glad to see he has finally got some sense into this policy regarding lobster fishing licences. Will he also ask the minister to allow the members who represent the maritime provinces to get the names of those to whom lobster fishing licences were originally refused? I have been trying for weeks to get the names of those concerned in my constituency.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): The hon. member's question, as I understand it, is to ask the minister to do this. The answer is, yes.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF "ECONOMIC REVIEW" TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, I understand, will shortly be tabling the Economic Review, and who has indicated he will at least give some consideration to having the report referred to the Standing Committee on Finance. Will he be prepared to make such a motion of reference to the standing committee when he tables the report in the House?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I do not have a motion before me but I would be quite prepared to discuss the matter with the House leader with the hon. gentleman's objective in mind.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON REPAYMENT OF FARM CREDIT LOANS BY DAIRY FARMERS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure the minister realizes the disdain with which we regard the dairy policy. Notwithstanding this, since the policy is causing serious problems among dairy farmers, would he consider allowing dairy farmers to refrain in the next 12 months from paying back some of their farm credit loans until they can get the industry straightened out? I ask this because the situation is pushing some of them very close to bankruptcy.

● (1150)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we had the Chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation at a meeting late last night and he said they would look at this with their usual charitable attitude. Farm Credit history has shown that they have never taken advantage of a situation that was not the farmers fault.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBLE REASSESSMENT OF METHOD OF DISTRIBUTING MILK QUOTAS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Last week, during the yearly convention of the Quebec Federation of Milk Producers, a resolution was passed severely censuring the Canadian Dairy Commission for the way it allotted quotas which, in its view, is most unfair towards the province of Quebec in particular. Therefore, would the minister prevail upon the Canadian Dairy Commission to review and even amend the method it used regarding quota apportioning in view of reducing production since, according to the resolution, it was very unjust particularly to Quebec?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the industrial milk producers annual meeting in Quebec certainly has the right to pass any resolution it so desires. I am not saying what resolution should or should not be passed. The problem is that it is the province of Quebec itself that allocates the quotas for the producers in their own province. I did have a representative at that meeting. In fact, I had more than one representative there. The fact is that they are not happy at the present time with the way they are sharing the industrial or global quota or the quota of the whole nation. We have very little to do with how this is distributed between the provinces. The milk sharing quota committee, made up of provincial producers' organizations along with the Dairy Commission, decides how this is to be distributed. I do not make that decision.

SUGGESTION MILK PRODUCTION SHOULD BE CONTROLLED FEDERALLY

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. Has he recently received representations from milk producer groups suggesting that milk production should be controlled federally, presumably under the Farm Products Marketing Council and, if so, what has his response been to those representations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember receiving these representations in a formal manner. I have received them in conversation, but I have no recollection of seeing any written document of any kind making that suggestion. I think the only way we will be able to solve the problem is if there is more federal control, and I mean by that farmer control on a national basis. Every province runs its own quota system, and each one of them in Canada does it in a different fashion at the present time. However, if they are thinking along these lines I would be receptive to that kind of suggestion.

HEALTH

MEDICAL AUTHORITY FOR DECISION NOT TO VACCINATE CHILDREN AGAINST SWINE FLU

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government planning to provide vaccine for immunization of Canadian children against the swine influenza virus and, if not, upon what medical authority was the decision made?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the present time the answer is no and the authority is that of the best immunologists in the country who constitute the national advisory committee on immunization agents. They advised the government on this matter and their report has been tabled in the House.

In addition, I might point out to the hon. member that there seems to be very serious second thoughts taking place in the United States as to the mass immunization program as far as children are concerned. Some opinion I have read in the papers is to the effect that they should not immunize children under five years of age. I have seen other information to the effect that they are now carrying on tests of children between age three and 11 in order to determine whether they should or should not give the vaccine to them. So this is an issue even in the United States that is far from being resolved or settled, although at first the United States announced it was going to carry out universal immunization. We are obviously following this particular situation very closely. If there is any scientific information justifying a change in policy we will be acting on the best scientific advice we can obtain and I would not hesitate to modify the announced policy.

Oral Questions

REASON FOR REDUCTION IN BUDGET OF MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in view of the need for very active ongoing programs in medical research to keep abreast of the production of vaccines and for other medical services, will the minister explain the rationale for cutting the medical research budget of the Medical Research Council to the point that it had to reduce the number of ongoing programs by 40 per cent, and could accept only 13 per cent of the new applications for the year ahead?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that the production of vaccine in this particular instance has nothing to do with medical research as such. It is really a problem of industrial production which has to be met in a very short time. As to the broader question raised by the hon. member in which he suggests that I and the government are not concerned about medical research, I have already said to him and other members in the House that I was reviewing the situation and trying to find the funds somewhere along the line to put into medical research in this country.

SOURCE OF VACCINE FOR SWINE FLU

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicate whether he is now in a position to inform the House and the country what the source of the vaccine supply is to be? There have been varying reports about this, but we still do not know whether anyone will be able to produce a sufficient quantity?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am confident that we will have an ample supply of vaccine in ample time for distribution in the fall. We are having discussions with foreign countries, including the United States, but I am in no position to make a formal announcement at this time. As I have said before, as long as these negotiations are going on I think it would be very inappropriate for me to make a formal statement.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FALSE STATEMENT BY POSTMASTER GENERAL CONCERNING RATE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would ask whether he is aware of the announced plans of his colleague, the Postmaster General, to increase postal rates in Canada despite his assertion less than a year ago that postal rates would not rise until post office efficiency had improved, and will he tell the House whether the Postmaster General's comments constituted false and misleading advertising by the head of this giant monopoly?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the last time I tried to discuss this matter with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in my capacity as Postmaster General he was not speaking to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: I don't blame him.

Mr. Mackasey: As Postmaster General, I wrote him a letter and the answer came back—

An hon. Member: Has he got it yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: How did he get the letter?

Mr. Mackasey: I delivered the letter.

Mr. Mackasey: The increase we are suggesting in the way of first-class mail is very nominal and well within the guidelines, particularly in light of the deficit which exists in the post office. The Consumer and Corporate Affairs Department congratulated the Postmaster General on the high quality and integrity of his advertising.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question also deals with the matter of postal efficiency, and it arises from the planned lottery by the post office which would include the grand prize winner being sent by the post office to any place in Canada served by the Post Office.

An hon. Member: By mail.

Mr. Beatty: I would like to ask the Postmaster General what assurance he can give the House that the winning entrant will arrive at his destination without being lost or mutilated en route?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED DELAY IN SIGNING SYNCRUDE AGREEMENT UNTIL NATIVES GUARANTEED EMPLOYMENT ON PROJECT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and I am sure all members of the House are sorry to see him limping and walking with a cane. We did not expect such a violent reaction from his colleagues regarding his statement that we should not proceed with the Mackenzie Valley pipeline because there is not enough gas. I should like to ask the minister about the report that the signing of the Syncrude agreement has been postponed due to his intervention, an action for which I commend him.

● (1200)

The report is that the Government of Canada is insisting on some guarantees that the native people will be given employment, not only on the construction but in entrepreneural services. I wish to ask the minister, or the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, whether the government has received such assurance, and if so in what form and whether or not he has been able to convince both the Government of Alberta and the Government of Ontario, which have objected to this course of action, that such guarantees should be given. If they are not given, can he assure the House that the agreement will not be signed until some provision, either by way of a clause in the agreement or a letter of intent, has been received by the Government of Canada.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I last discussed this matter a couple of hours ago with my colleague the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is in Edmonton. We had been working on a draft of a letter which would be acceptable and which we felt would protect the interests of the native people. It was acceptable to the government of the province of Alberta and I believe my colleague has worked out the arrangements with the other interested parties as well. I have not heard from him in the last couple of hours.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, has the Syncrude consortium also agreed to a guarantee to employ native people.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, this letter is in the form of a direction from the participants to the Syncrude Corporation to negotiate and enter into such an agreement.

FINANCE

TABLING OF "ECONOMIC REVIEW", APRIL, 1976—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies, in both official languages, of the Economic Review, April, 1976.

Mr. Speaker, in light of the question raised by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) I have a motion to the effect that the Economic Review, April, 1976, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I wonder whether the House would be prepared to give unanimous consent to such a motion?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion, of course, can be put only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent that the motion be put?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the Economic Review, April, 1976, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Motion agreed to.

Order Paper Questions

CONSTITUENCY RECORDS ACT

MEASURE REQUIRING MPs TO PASS ON TO SUCCESSORS FILES RELATING TO CONSTITUENCY PROBLEMS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-436, respecting the preservation and surrender of constituency records.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require members of parliament to pass on to their successors any files they possess dealing with matters relating to constituency problems. The bill, in effect, provides that a member of parliament is holding any records, documents or correspondence in trust for the constituent to whom they pertain. The bill also provides for the arbitration of disputes arising out of the operation of the act and imposes appropriate fines for non-compliance.

The intent is do away with the existing practice where frequently a member vacates his office and disposes of constituents' files in the garbage can.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

RENTAL—LA CITÉ PROJECT, MONTREAL, QUEBEC

Question No. 4,109—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has or will the government rent space in La Cite project in Montreal and, if so (a) how many floors, (b) how many square feet, (c) what government departments will occupy the space and what functions will be performed by the offices in question, (d) what is the estimated cost of furnishing the offices, (e) what is the (i) annual rental on all space, (ii) length of the lease, (iii) lease renewal conditions, (f) how many square feet of carpet have been or will be ordered for the entire area and, what is the (i) cost per square foot, (ii) total cost?

2. (a) What are the reasons justifying rental of the additional space, (b) will it replace other areas previously rented and, if so, what is the square footage and location of the space elsewhere that it will replace?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Secretary of State as follows: 1. Yes. (a) Five floors; (b) 73,756 square feet; (c) Secretary of State, translation function; (d) Estimated cost of furniture as of March 31, 1975: $17,001.50; (e) (i) $626,926.00. (ii) Five years. (iii) Two one-year options, same terms and conditions. (f) (i) 73,798 square feet at $1.05 per square foot. (ii) $77,443.00.

2. (a) (i) The Secretary of State is to translate all working documents in government with special emphasis in the Province of Quebec thereby requiring a rapid increase in accommodation. (ii) The Secretary of State is to accelerate its efforts to establish in conjunction with the University of Montreal a national terminology bank. (iii) Secretary of State has outgrown its existing accommodation. (b) Yes; replacing 26,350 square feet at 1260 Ste-Catherine St. East, Montreal, Quebec.

ANIMAL TRAPS

Question No. 5,012—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. What steps were taken in 1974 and 1975 to test humane animal traps, and (a) at what cost, (b) with what results?

2. What provision is in the 1976 budget for testing more humane animal traps?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of the Environment): 1. In 1975-76 the Canadian Wildlife Service of the Department of the Environment entered into contracts with the Canadian Standards Association and the Ontario Veterinary College to develop testing procedures and protocols using the Conibear trap as a base on which to develop standards. Three traps chosen by the Federal-Provincial Committee on Humane Trapping are now being tested for biological and mechanical effectiveness based on those procedures. The contract with the Canadian Standards Association was for $12,500 and the contract with the Ontario Veterinary College was for $24,000.

2. In 1976-77 contracts will be negotiated to test four purported humane traps already on the market for mechanical and biological effectiveness. The Federal-Provincial Committee on Humane Trapping will be selecting three more traps for testing in the autumn of 1976. That committee will also be field testing those traps deemed to be biologically and mechanically effective.

DREE—1974-75 ANNUAL REPORT AND REVIEW COST

Question No. 5,034—Mr. Beatty:

1. What was the cost of the preparation and distribution of the 1974-75 Annual Report and Review of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion?

2. How many copies were printed?

3. What is the government's policy concerning the unsolicited distribution of the document during a time of austerity?

4. How many copies (a) were sent to persons or organizations who had not requested it, (b) have yet to be distributed?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. The cost of preparation of the 1974-75 Annual Report and Review was $49,000: $33,000 for printing; $14,000 for concept and design, and $2,000 for typesetting. In addition, distribution costs were approximately $6,000.

2. A total of 35,000 copies was printed.

3. In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned, a widespread distribution of its 1974-75 report and review was undertaken as a method of better acquainting the recipients with DREE's aims and activities, thus improving the department's capacity for effective working relationships with other federal departments, other levels of government and the private sector, at this, the five-year point in its history.

4. (a) The majority, according to a prepared distribution plan. (b) Approximately 1,500 copies remain in Ottawa for on demand distribution.

SUBSIDIES TO MOTOROLA, INC. OF MONTREAL

Question No. 5,037—Mr. Matte:

Did the government grant subsidies to Motorola, Inc. of Montreal and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what amount?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by several departments as follows: None.

CANADIAN IMMIGRATION OFFICES IN GREAT BRITAIN AND FRANCE

Question No. 5,199—Mr. Scott:

1. How many Canadian immigration offices were maintained in (a) Great Britain, (b) France in (i) 1972, (ii) 1973, (iii) 1974, (iv) 1975 and, in each case, in what city?

2. How many persons were employed in each office in (a) Great Britain, (b) France?

3. How many persons were approved to emigrate from (a) Great Britain to Canada, (b) France to Canada in (i) 1972, (ii) 1973, (iii) 1974, (iv) 1975?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration):

	Year	Number of Offices	Cities

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 5,211?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, given the length of the answer to question No. 5,211, I ask that this answer be put on record in Hansard as if it had been read in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Editor's Note: The aforesaid answer is as follows:)

*DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

Question No. 5,211—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Did the Secretary-General of the United Nations invite member states to participate in a disarmament conference and, if so, in what manner did Canada respond?

2. Did Canada suggest items to be included on the agenda of a disarmament conference and, if so, what were they?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to the first and second parts of the question is as follows: It is assumed that the questions refer to proposals to convene a world disarmament conference. The possibility of convening such a conference has been the subject of several resolutions in the United Nations General Assembly in recent years. The 28th General Assembly in 1973 established an ad hoc committee to examine all views and suggestions expressed by governments on the convening of a world disarmament conference and related problems.

The 29th and 30th General Assemblies in 1974 and 1975 received reports from the ad hoc committee and requested the committee to continue its work. Canada supported these resolutions and has been a member of the ad hoc committee since its inception. The deliberations and reports of the ad hoc committee have revealed a wide divergence of view among member states about the need for a world disarmament conference, the conditions essential to its realization, its main objectives, its agenda and other relevant considerations.

The Secretary General of the United Nations has not invited member states to participate in a world disarmament conference but has sought their views and suggestions on the convening of such a conference. In reply to a note from the Secretary General in 1975 and on other occasions the government of Canada has expressed its support in principle for the idea of convening a well-prepared world disarmament conference at an appropriate time but has also expressed its belief that it would not be fruitful to begin preparations or set a date for such a conference until there is reasonable assurance that it would in fact lead to concrete progress towards disarmament.

The government of Canada has stated that there can be little assurance that a world disarmament conference would lead to such progress unless all nuclear weapon states are prepared to participate and to assist actively in its preparation. As these conditions are not yet present the government considers it premature to suggest items that might be included in the agenda of a world disarmament conference. All states, however, continue to have the opportunity to express their views in the United Nations General Assembly itself which devotes several weeks each year to the consideration of arms control and disarmament questions and priorities.

Mr. Speaker: Are the other questions allowed to stand?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 29, consideration of Bill C-68, to amend the Medical Care Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the Order made yesterday, recorded divisions at the report stage of this bill will be taken as the first order of business upon the calling of government orders on Wednesday, May 5, 1976. Yesterday the Chair indicated that it would re-examine the order in which these deferred divisions would be taken. The Chair, at this moment, subject to any discussion which might take place between now and the time of the taking of the division, would suggest that motion No. 2 be the first one taken, followed by motions Nos. 1, 3 and 4, if necessary.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by making a comment concerning the order of voting to which Your Honour made reference. As I see it, the four motions before us are to some extent predicated upon the previous one failing to pass. If we look at it from that point of view, I think the motion put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) perhaps should be the first to be considered, because essentially it calls for the complete elimination of the bill. If that motion should not pass, which I do not suppose it will, the next motion would be the one standing in my name, which calls for the bill to expire following a two-year period. That is a compromise which gives the government a little more leeway than the motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

If motion No. 1, in my name, should fail to pass, which I expect will be the case by virtue of the government's majority, then motion No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), could be considered. This is a further compromise which suggests that if motion No. 1 fails to pass, then motion No. 2 would enable the bill to continue to live its terrorizing life, but that orders in council put forward by the government in so far as percentages of increase are concerned in the third and subsequent years would be debated in the House of Commons and indeed voted on and passed before they are made. As I see it, that is the third compromise.

Finally, there is the motion of the minister, which is even less acceptable but which to some extent would improve the bill because it does call for a debate on the order in council and a vote on it, even though it would be a retroactive vote because the order in council would have been passed in any case. At the moment, my feeling is that that kind of motion would improve an otherwise completely unacceptable bill. It is still unacceptable to us, however, because the amendment does not change the essential intent of the bill. But at least it would enable parliament to express some views on the subject and perhaps have a vote, with the possibility of reversing the order in council if it should prove to be unsatisfactory to the House.

One of our main concerns in dealing with this bill is the view of many people that this is but the first step in the desire of the government to back out of its commitment to cost-sharing with respect to medical care premiums, as it is doing in the case of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. We have a situation where this government demonstrated extreme arrogance in the first place by introducing this bill in a unilateral way at a time when negotiations between the two levels of government were going on and, second, by its use of closure to cut off the debate on second reading.

Even though the government has a majority in the House at present, by this kind of technique they are abusing that advantage. I do not think the people of Canada felt, when the rule changes were introduced in 1969, that they would result in an abuse of government power. I think the use of closure when it is unnecessary, when members of the House, who represent the people of Canada, want to express their views on a subject which will in the long run affect every Canadian, should not be employed to close off debate and thereby take away the right of members of the House to speak on behalf of Canadians, whether Canadians as a whole or Canadians in certain parts of the country.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The minister, in spite of the fact that after the debate on motion No.1, which calls for expiry of the bill after two years, the bill may well be unnecessary after a two-year period, still wants it in place because he wants some power. That this bill will give the minister some power is probably the understatement of the year, because that power amounts to a spiked club which can be used to clobber the provinces over the head during the negotiations for the readjustment of cost-sharing arrangements.

Another matter which has concerned me very much, and which has already been referred to on a number of occasions, is that of research. In his statement on the bill before us, the minister expressed concern about the rising costs of health care, but he did not make the slightest suggestion as to how these costs might reasonably be reduced. He simply said that he will just not pay them if they go beyond a certain point, and he leaves it entirely up to the provinces to decide how the service might be streamlined and how the costs might be reduced without the destruction or degradation of the standard of service which is now being provided.

I think the minister's refusal to deal fairly with medical research in this country indicates, perhaps more than anything else, his lack of comprehension of the need for research and of the fact that there is no better way in the world to reduce health care costs than through research of various kinds, even research into how to reduce the cost of research in various disease processes which is now costing a great deal of money. If research produces better answers with regard to the causes and treatment of illnesses, we know that in the long run these costs will be substantially reduced. I could use, as an example, the advent of various drugs used in the treatment of mental illnesses and the result this has had in virtually emptying overcrowded mental hospitals across the country for so many years which were simply providing what was considered as custodial care for people who were not well. Through research, certain tranquillizers have been developed, and the majority of patients who had been in institutions for 20, 30 years, or all their lives, are now functioning in society.

It appears to me that the thinking of the minister, and perhaps even more so of his parliamentary secretary, has been shortsighted in the extreme with regard to health care costs and how they could be reduced through increased assistance to research. We believe, from having observed the minister and his parliamentary secretary, as well as this government as a whole, that they seem to be spending too much time thinking about how to get power and keep it, and they do not spend sufficient time thinking about how to exercise power to benefit all Canadians.

If there is any message I want to leave while I am on my feet on this occasion, it is that this government should not be totally absorbed with the question of taking power and holding it in perpetuity. It should devote at least half its energy and effort in deciding how to exercise this power in such a way that Canadians benefit. When a government decides that a good way to save money in the area of health care costs is by destroying the research capability of this country, if it is not an abuse of power then certainly it is an improper use of power.

Another matter which has arisen as a result of this debate—medical research is certainly tied closely to this whole question—is that there has been no real dialogue between this government and the research community. I think that is a shameful situation, because we know that the research community is in a position to make suggestions to the government, not political suggestions but certainly suggestions on matters which may be very useful in terms of long-term planning when it comes to the relationship of man to his environment, and perhaps long-term planning related to various serious problems facing us today.

We know that the president of France, for example, has breakfast with representatives of the research community on a regular basis, perhaps twice a month. We know that members of the British government have a method of keeping in close touch with the research community of that country. We know that U.S. senators have their own "tamed" scientists, for lack of a better word, who keep them informed on various aspects of research in the country and how scientific information can be used for the benefit of Americans through proper application of funds by whatever government happens to be in power.

Therefore, I would like to emphasize the point that this government is failing the trust which has been placed in it by the people of Canada by neglecting, not only to speak adequately with the research community but, indeed, by destroying that community's position and research programs by putting a freeze on its budgets. I think that is totally unacceptable.

● (1220)

We know that in the scientific community the general policy which scientists follow, no matter in what part of the world they live, is to make their information freely available to scientists in all other parts of the world. It appears, therefore, that the policy of the Canadian government is that we do not really have to do research; we can let somebody else do it, and it is available to us. We can obtain it simply by reading scientific journals. That is the policy of this government. If I had anything to do with it, I would certainly not pursue that kind of policy. If Canadians were aware of the fact that this seems to be the official policy of this government, I think they would be ashamed.

The minister has put forward a couple of amendments. The additional amendment he put forward would result in the situation that after this bill comes into effect, and onward, there will no longer be an 8 per cent ceiling but it will be set by order in council. He put that amendment forward under the guise of improving the bill, but I am not satisfied that it will really improve the situation. As a matter of fact, that kind of amendment leaves the door open for the minister to set the percentage much lower than 8 per cent, and perhaps freezing it, as the government did with regard to the medical research budget. That is of significant concern to me because it will worsen the crisis the provinces may face if the government proceeds with the course upon which it has embarked.

The minister has indicated that motion No. 4 is based on motion No. 2, which was put forward by the hon. member for Kootenay West. That, again, indicates to us in the official opposition the fact that closure is an awful tool: it is destructive, to some extent, of the democratic process. It also indicates to us the usefulness of prolonging a debate ad infinitum if we feel strongly enough about a certain subject or a certain change which may be necessary. I am sure that had we agreed to let this bill pass last fall, the minister would not have accepted any suggestions to change it, least of all one which would allow for parliamentary debate on the order in council setting out the percentage which the minister may want to fix for the third year or after. It shows us that in spite of the fact that hon. members on the other side of the House do not listen very carefully, that their skulls, as I mentioned previously, seem to be very thick and that the noise has to be very loud and long before it gets through, if it is long enough, loud enough and repetitive enough, perhaps it does sink in.

The position we took has been justified. It has been shown that we spoke long enough and loudly enough to try to improve the bill, even though the improvement is very minimal and still does not make the bill any more acceptable in terms of its principle. However, it does introduce an element of democracy and for that reason I am not too unhappy about the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Chair would like to thank the hon. member. The Chair will certainly take notice of his suggestion and take it under consideration before decision on the final order of the vote is made.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) has pointed out, this bill is a part of a total package which we do not like. Not only are ceilings being imposed on the amount the federal government will contribute to the provinces in respect of the costs of medical care, but there is also the notice that the agreements respecting hospitalization are to be renegotiated in 1980. As the hon. member just reiterated, added to that are the cuts in the funding of scientific research in general and medical research in particular. I say once again that we object to the course the government is taking in all these respects.

Last night the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) indulged once again in an argument, which we have heard from the government side a number of times, to the effect that we have no right to talk about the government cutting its contribution to medical care because it is actually prepared to pay more dollars next year than it paid this year, and even more the year after than it is paying this year. We have been over this a number of times both in the House and in the standing committee. I think perhaps it was discussed more clearly in the standing committee than has been the case on the floor of the House. However, the point is that even though the government may grant more dollars to the provinces next year than it did last year, under this bill that amount is still less than it would be if this bill were not brought in at all.

The present Medical Care Act calls for the federal government to pay 50 per cent of the costs of medical care which the provinces have to meet. Once this bill is in, there will be two choices. One of those choices hangs on the use of the phrase "the lesser of", so that in the end there is only one choice. The government will pay the lesser of two amounts, either 50 per cent of the total costs of the provinces or only so many more dollars than the provinces got last year. Even when the minister can stand up and talk about hundreds of millions of dollars more, the fact is that that sum of money will be less than would have been the case if this bill had not been brought in. We contend that this is a betrayal of the provinces and of the people of Canada. It is a going back on the principles which were established in the Medical Care Act after all the years it took us to get that legislation.

I join again with the hon. member for Athabasca in registering our protest against this legislation having been put through at the second reading stage by closure, and I join once again in saying that part of the trouble about this whole exercise is that it is a case of how not to conduct federal-provincial relations. The health ministers of the provinces have been most unhappy with the way they have been treated, especially since the announcement by Mr. Turner in the budget he brought down last June. We think the whole story is a sorry mess.

However, we have just about reached the end of the report stage of this bill, leaving the third reading stage to come later, possibly next Wednesday, although I understand that it may be shifted to Thursday, and in this final part of the debate on the report stage I think not only should I direct myself to the amendment proposed by the minister, but that I might once again summarize the choices which are before us right now. We have a government bill which proposes certain fixed percentages so far as the increases which can take place this year and next year are concerned. Then in that bill there is a provision that after that the government has the right, by order in council, to fix the ceilings. They can be anything. There could be consultation, but in the end the government makes the decision. That is the picture. This is a bill that in the first and second years has a precise limit, but in years three, four, five, six, seven and on is subject only to the dictatorial, unilateral decision of the government, which puts it into effect by order in council. That is the bill. I tried, by way of amendment, to kill the bill completely and leave the Medical Care Act as it stands. The voice vote was against my motion, and I suppose that may be the result when the recorded vote is taken.

The next position was that proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk), that reluctantly we accept years one and two with ceilings, but that the rest of the bill be cancelled; that there be no Bill C-68 after two years have gone by. That is not as desirable as my position, namely, that the ceilings should be cancelled altogether, but it is a compromise that we can accept if we must. Again, the voice vote was against the motion and the government has shown no willingness to go the other way.

We come to two more propositions. One was the proposal in the motion of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Friesen) that a government order in council fixing the ceilings in years three, four, five, six, seven, and so on, not come into effect until parliament has voted on it. Yesterday the majority said no to that as well. We now have the proposal of the minister that the government shall have the right to bring in its orders in council in years three, four, five, six, seven, and so on, and put those into effect right away, subject only to the right of 50 members of the House of Commons to sign a motion which would result in a debate. If that debate were to go against the order in council, then it would have to be cancelled. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that there is a tremendous difference between having the right to vote on the validity of those orders in council before they are put into effect and simply being given the right to do that after the horse has been stolen, as I said last night.

I think the least acceptable of the propositions is the one before us in the name of the minister. If his proposition carries, we will have a bill that fixes contribution ceilings for years one and two and leaves the government free to fix the ceilings by order in council for all the years after. All that is left for parliament is the possibility of a debate if 50 members sign a motion requesting such debate. So long as the government that brought in the order in council has a majority in the House, it of course can expect to get its order in council approved. Mr. Speaker, I think we are being treated shabbily with respect to this whole matter.

I also want to say, as we have said on occasions similar to this one, that we think it is shabby treatment to say this matter can be debated only after 50 members sign the necessary motion. There are two parties in this House which have fewer than 50 members; we have 16 and the Social Credit party has 11. The "Moncton" party has only one, but he is not here just now. If this kind of motion is going to be made at all, I think instead of it being necessary for 50 members to sign such a motion it should be a number that would make it possible for any one of the recognized parties in this House to bring on a debate by itself. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we think the minister's motion should read "10" members instead of "50".

I have already said that I do not think the motion as a whole, as brought in by the minister, is worth very much. It gives the right to discuss the matter by trying to lock the barn door after the horse has been stolen. If it is going to be put on the books at all, it ought to respect the rights of all parties in this House. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that we are opposed to the entire bill. We would like to cut it off at some point, but if it is going to go through with this provision in it, the right—as I have just said—should apply to our party and the fourth party in this House. In order to bring this about, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That motion No. 4 be amended in subclause (2) of the proposed new clause 10 by deleting the words "fifty members thereof" and by substituting therefor the words "ten members thereof".

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The question is on the amendment to motion No. 4, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Pursuant to Standing Order 72(II), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few remarks in the debate on the resolution put forward by the minister. Before I do so, however, I should like to speak to the order in which the resolutions are to be voted on next Wednesday afternoon. As I understand it, the matter was taken under advisement by the Chair, and the Chair accepted responsibility by indicating the order.

I also listened to the point of view taken by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). I can indicate that for our part we have no objection to the resolutions being voted on in the order which the hon. member recommended, or in any order which might appeal to the Chair. I want to be reasonable on that matter, as the government has been reasonable on every aspect of this bill which has been put before the House to deal with medicare. There is no doubt that when bills to pay for the programs of the government are put forward, it is the government of the day that takes the responsibility for the way in which the money taken from taxpayers is spent.

Over and over again I have heard hon. members opposite express regret that the provinces will now have to adjust their spending in accordance with the position which may be taken by the federal government, if they expect the federal contribution. No sympathy has been indicated by them for the taxpayers of Canada as a whole and the burden placed upon them by the present arrangements. As the minister has often indicated, these arrangements require the signing of a blank cheque by the federal government year after year for its share of the medicare program.

Blank cheques are fine during the maturing of a new program when medical services were rapidly becoming available for the first time to all Canadians. Surely the time comes, however, when it has to be recognized as a mature program. If it continues to grow at an ever-accelerating rate, it becomes obvious that in the interests of the taxpayers, measures have to be taken to restrain the rate of growth. This fact is recognized not only by this government but by all provincial governments. The Premier of Ontario, for example, has said repeatedly that what is required now are measures to restrain the rate of growth. It is conceded there will be growth next year, the year after, and indefinitely into the future. But how much is not a matter for decision.

I contradict what I think is the most outrageous allegation hon. members opposite have made, an allegation which we have answered repeatedly. I hope this is the last time it will be necessary to repeat that medicare and hospital care programs introduced by this government are programs of which we are proud and for which we intend to take continuing responsibility. But if these programs are to survive it is absolutely necessary for there to be control over how they develop. The hon. member for Athabasca criticized the minister for saying last night that the federal government wants some measure of control over these programs. What is wrong with the people of Canada exercising control over these programs? It is unreasonable to expect the people of Canada, through their elected government, not to exercise control over a mature program.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) objected to the third arrangement as being impractical because no specific figure is assigned. But he also objected to the arrangements for the first two years where specific figures are assigned. You cannot have it both ways. If proper responsibility is to be assumed, you must concede that the federal government must have some say about how much the people of Canada are to be committed to spend on medicare and hospital care. The opposition was irresponsible in alleging that the federal government has no proposals for low cost medicare.

Mr. Yewchuk: Let's hear them.

Mr. Kaplan: It was irresponsible to allege that we are prepared to put ceilings on, without developing lower cost alternatives. If the hon. member for Athabasca had followed the events of last week—

Mr. Yewchuk: I did.

Mr. Kaplan: —he would know that a federal-provincial conference, chaired by the minister, was held in Ottawa last Tuesday and Wednesday and that a package deal adding $300 million or $400 million to the federal commitment in medical spending was put forward to encourage provincial governments to adopt six specific, low cost alternatives some of which could be covered within the present medicare and hospital care framework. Those alternatives were not pulled out of a hat. They have been developed since 1970 after detailed consultation with all provincial governments which themselves have been turning to these low cost alternatives. Many provincial governments are already deeply involved in low cost alternatives. On Wednesday the minister offered to share provincial expenditures in those areas. In return for that offer he is asking for targets and a measure of restraint in the growth of medicare and hospital care programs. The hon. member said, "Let's hear it." Well, there it is.

The government is not only concerned about health care delivery alternatives. It has put forward a whole new perspective on health a new perspective on ways in which the lifestyle of Canadians can be changed to reduce health costs. It favours reduction in smoking, reduction in the use of alcohol—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: —seat-belt legislation which will reduce injuries in motor vehicle accidents, reduced speed limits, and so on. This government has taken a tremendous number of initiatives to restrain the unacceptable growth of health costs in Canada and many provincial governments have adopted these initiatives with our encouragement and support. Surely we agree that that is a goal worth reaching. The proof that the government's approach as shown in Bill C-68 is good is the fact that it has already begun to work, even before the bill is law. We are already seeing tough decisions taken by provincial governments, decisions which I submit would never have been taken if the government had not brought forward the anti-inflation program and Bill C-68.

Finally, I deal with the charge that debate on the bill was ended with closure. I reject the use of that term to describe our procedure. Time was allocated in the second reading debate to allow the bill to go to committee where witnesses could be heard and the minister could be examined in detail on the provisions of the bill. The minister appeared, as did witnesses. There was full examination, I believe to the satisfaction of hon. members opposite and all those who attended the interesting committee meetings. Now the bill has been reported back. As a principle, closure is defensible. I think this is the only parliament in the world without some regular procedure for terminating debates. Indeed, parties opposite have in the past joined with the government in imposing closure and time allocation when certain measures were before the House. The opposition cannot now argue that it opposes closure absolutely, in principle. There is a time for ending debate. I invite hon. members to review Hansard and the quality of debate on this bill.

Mr. Paproski: The time comes when the government decides.

Mr. Kaplan: I concede that I have made no new arguments in the few minutes I have spoken in this debate. I have added no new facts.

Mr. Paproski: That is right.

Mr. Kaplan: But neither did the opposition. It repeated the tired statements made previously and raised questions which were answered satisfactorily in the House and in committee.

Mr. Paproski: You do not have to confess.

Mr. Kaplan: Surely, there is nothing more to be said about Bill C-68. I resume my seat, hoping hon. members will agree and that we may proceed to consider other matters on the agenda of parliament.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not see how you can put the question on the motion until my amendment has been decided. I suspect the debate may be over, but you cannot put the question on motion No. 4 until we take the vote on my amendment next Wednesday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I understand all the votes are to be deferred until next Wednesday.

Mr. Paproski: That has been changed to Thursday afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I think with the agreement of all hon. members.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I understand that we agreed that motions Nos. 1 to 4, inclusive, would be voted on next week and debated today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I understand there was a House order for the votes to be taken next Wednesday. If hon. members want to change it to next Thursday, we shall need another House order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am willing to agree to next Thursday. We can agree unanimously that debate on the report stage is now over. My point is that we can hardly vote on motion No. 4 until we have voted on the amendment to motion No. 4. We cannot do that until next week. I am prepared to agree that debate at the report stage is now over.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, it was agreed by the House leaders that the votes are to be taken on Thursday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It has been agreed to by three House leaders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed?

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I will have to check that out.

Mr. Paproski: That's the way it is, Gus. Sit down.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I will not accept it just like that. I will look into it. I am sure the hon. member spoke in good faith, but I would be less than responsible if I did not check. The hon. member mentioned three House leaders. They might be opposition House leaders.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the point being checked. I took part in a conversation this morning with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and the three of us agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that the vote shall be taken next Thursday?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As we have completed debate on Bill C-68 expeditiously, may I call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a point of order. Is it possible that private members' hour will be called earlier than usual? I ask this question so that hon. members may be ready to proceed. Is there that possibility?

● (1250)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member will find out. The universe will unfold.

Mr. MacFarlane: That is exactly what I mean. Fine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 12.53 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FINANCE

MEASURE TO AVOID DOUBLE TAXATION BETWEEN CANADA AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES

The House resumed, from Friday, April 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Buchanan (for the Minister of Finance) that Bill S-32, to implement conventions for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and France, Canada and Belgium and Canada and Israel, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we have no more speakers in this debate. There may be some on the government side who wish to carry on the discussion for the rest of the day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, trade and Economic Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed to call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is unusual that we should find ourselves with half a legislative day before us and no legislation to discuss, but I have sympathy for the position of the government House leader, and if that is the request I suppose we have no choice but to agree.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why not deal with Bill C-72?

Mr. Stevens: I had hoped the government House leader would acknowledge our co-operation as far as the finance bill was concerned. We felt we were expediting the business of the House by not prolonging debate this afternoon. I find it most remarkable, that we should find ourselves in this position, on a Friday afternoon, with the government having no legislation to bring forward. I would remind hon. members that on April 2 we sat in the House for 20 minutes waiting for the two ministers to turn up just to move that bill.

Mr. Sharp: On the same point of order, as the House is aware, we are trying to move this session to a close. I am very reluctant to bring in legislation I had not forecast would be considered during this term. Because some bills are in committee and others are awaiting certain discussions among the parties, I think it would be a very good use of our time if we adjourned and looked after other public business today. There will be a lot of business to be done before June 30, but it could not be proceeded with expeditiously today. I am very reluctant to call items that I have not forecast should be dealt with before June 30. If we start on this bill we will certainly not be able to conclude this session, which I know the opposition would like to do by June 30.

● (1410)

Mr. MacFarlane: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it would only be propitious for me to say that as a result of remarks at ten minutes to one when I asked hon. members opposite whether they saw any possibility of this happening, I understood that they were not certain what they intended to do. As a result, I do not really think what has happened should come as a surprise.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, on this point of order I should like to bring to your attention the fact that the hon. member is suggesting that we on this side should know what government business is coming up. It is the deputy whip over there who should be well aware of what is going on in this House, and he was not here to tell us what was going on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacFarlane: My point of order, Mr. Speaker, was simply that during discussions with gentlemen over there about the possibility of this happening, they told me not to be concerned because they thought they would not want to go on and there was no point in discussing further government business. I think sometimes it is an advantage to be a junior member of the House—I do not mean junior in age or intelligence, but in experience. I am used to a great deal of honesty. I have lived that way all my life and I intend to live that way in the future. I wanted Your Honour to know that is the way I feel about it.

Income Tax

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) asked his question before—

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member just called me a liar. I would like him to withdraw that statement.

Mr. MacFarlane: I didn't.

An hon. Member: He called himself an honest man.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has the floor.

Mr. Paproski: He should withdraw that statement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacFarlane: I did not make the statement.

Mr. Paproski: You aren't kidding. You haven't made one all day today.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to point out that when the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain asked his question just before one o'clock, he made, as part of that question, the statement: Should we be ready earlier than four o'clock for private members' hour? If the government does not have business to proceed with today why can we not call it four o'clock? The hon. member whose motion was to be debated today is in the House. Why not call it four o'clock now and proceed to private members' business?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think that is an excellent suggestion and I would hope the government House leader would agree to it. We might call it four o'clock now and proceed to private members' business. I think this is reasonable because, as the deputy whip of the government knows, the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization is meeting now with the subcommittee, doing its best to improve the lot of the private member to advance views on behalf of his constituents and, indeed, on behalf of the country.

In this way, what I would only call a lapse on the part of the government in respect of business—and I say that with all the charity I can muster—would not in any way take away from the right of the private member to debate his motion today. This particular member has been looking forward to advancing his motion. The member comes from western Canada and is a long way from home. His motion very much affects the position of young farmers in Canada who are now having great difficulty because of the recent actions of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). As a result of his announcement in respect of new dairy policy and the legislation he is asking this House to consider as a result of his resolution, the motion of the hon. member is of great importance. I would hope, for the reasons I have advanced, that the government House leader will see fit to permit this matter to go ahead today by allowing us to call it four o'clock. I want to thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his suggestion, which I think is very worth while.

[Mr. MacFarlane.]

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, I would say it is fine if he wishes to adjourn until four o'clock. We can arrange for that. I asked the question because of committee meetings which involve people who are just as interested in the farming situation and are not interested in just putting up speaker after speaker for the sake of speaking. They are people who are as interested in this subject as the hon. member. That was the only reason I asked the question, in order that these interested persons would be in a position to speak at two o'clock or three thirty. The answer to the question was that hon. members probably would not require that.

The other point I had in mind was that if the hon. member sponsoring the bill speaks again, it will be the second time and he will close the debate, and we are not prepared for that.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. MacFarlane: We are not prepared to have that happen, so I will not give unanimous consent to his speaking a second time. Hon. members are all aware of these things and I think sometimes it is of advantage to have them out in the open.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain who says he will not give his unanimous consent, let me say that I do not give unanimous consent to the House adjourning at this time.

Mr. MacFarlane: That's fine.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that we call it four o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being four o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Motion No. 2, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Shall the motion stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government. Notice of motion No. 15, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan). Shall the motion stand? Stand at the request of the government.

Notice of motion No. 19, the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson). Shall the motion stand? Stand at the request of the government.

Notice of motion No. 20, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Shall the motion stand? Stand at the request of the government.

Notice of motion No. 4. Shall the motion stand? Stand at the request of the government.

Notice of motion No. 45, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). Shall the motion stand? Stand at the request of the government.

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think we can expedite the business this afternoon by just getting on to No. 12.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Motion No. 12.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it agreed that we move to motion No. 12?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

SUGGESTED INCENTIVES FOR YOUNG FARMERS

The House resumed, from Monday, January 27, 1975, consideration of the motion of Mr. Schellenberger:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Farm Credit Act to provide incentives to young farmers to enter or to continue in the farm industry and, to this end, should consider providing such incentives as partial non-repayment of loans where young farmers meet performance standards, a maximum 5 per cent interest rate, deferred interest payments during an initial period, and open-end loans that will allow additional borrowing without refinancing charges.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I should like to remind hon. members that if the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) speaks now, he will close the debate. Is there unanimous consent that he may speak now?

Mr. MacFarlane: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas).

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forward by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) is of great importance, particularly at this time, as a result of the actions of the committee on agriculture which is hearing evidence from the Farm Credit Corporation. Representatives of that corporation appeared before the committee at last night's meeting and will appear again next week. Many of the points raised in the motion by the hon. member across the way were brought out at the meeting last night. Some of them were answered and some of them, I am sure, will be answered at meetings of the committee next week, the first being on Tuesday.

I should like to address myself to a number of the points put forward by the hon. member in his motion, particularly as they apply to young farmers wishing to get into the agricultural field in Canada, whether it be in western or in eastern Canada. It is of the utmost importance that we as a government, in conjunction with provincial governments across this land of ours, give to these young men and women every opportunity to get into the business of farming. We must do so, realizing that this must be a viable entity in which we are asking these young people to take part. We talk about incentives, and this is brought up in the bill. I quote from the motion:

● (1420)

... to this end, should consider providing such incentives as partial non-repayment of loans where young farmers meet performance standards, ...

I think we must be very cautious about this question of incentives, particularly as it applies to young farmers, because of the problems there have been with regard to the dairy industry in Canada.

I think in some instances we must look at the incentives that were put forward, both by the federal government and by many of the provincial governments, which have resulted in young farmers, particularly in the dairy industry, becoming involved in a situation from which they will have difficulty extricating themselves. I speak primarily of the young farmers in Ontario who took advantage of the IMPIP loans provided in good faith at that time by the provincial government. This was an incentive program of which many young men and women in my area took advantage. Possibly this was also the case in other provinces which had similar schemes. These young people entered the dairy business because they saw a great future in it. However, by the middle of last year we were confronted with an over-supply of dairy products, particularly powdered milk. Now these people having received the IMPIP or farm credit loan find themselves in a situation where the quotas given to them by the provincial milk marketing boards and provincial governments simply are not sufficient to cover their outstanding payments.

Last night one hon. member brought before the committee a situation involving a young man who had applied for a Farm Credit loan. His situation was reviewed by the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation who agreed that the loan had been made and that the quota allowed the young farmer would be sufficient to allow him to meet the obligation he would be subjected to under the terms of the loan. Now that the provincial milk marketing board has reduced the quota by 15 per cent, this young man with his sizeable obligation is faced with the payment of a loan in the amount of $900 a month, together with an input loan that would increase the payment by about $300 a month, which would require that he come up with $1,200 each month while being faced with the reduction of the quota in the next coming year. This is the situation which presently exists.

Of course there is mention in the motion that an incentive should be allowed that would entice young people to enter the business of agriculture. While it is all well and good to entice anyone to enter the business of agriculture or to increase his commitment in the field of agriculture, we must also take into consideration the possibility of cut-backs and over-supply because in such a situation we would be enticing people into an occupation in which they would find themselves hard pressed to keep up with it in the future. I think we must give very sincere consideration to this when considering the motion before the House.

The motion suggests that the governement should consider the advisability of amending the Farm Credit Act. Some amendments have been submitted before the agricultural committee and before the House with regard to the Farm Credit Act up to this point, and others certainly will be presented by the government in the future in its attempt to encourage agriculture in the province of Ontario and throughout the Dominion of Canada.

Last night at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Agriculture the question arose about the possibility of farm credit loans approved by the Farm Credit Corporation being extended, or that there be a period of grace for a period of a year or two years in respect of young farmers who have found themselves in the situation I earlier described. I think this is something which could be done without a change in the Farm Credit Act because it is now stated that a farmer, whether he be a young or older farmer, if he finds himself in difficulty can defer payments for a period of one year or perhaps two years. I think that is presently in place in the act and can be considered on an individual basis.

I do not think we should make this a blanket coverage to allow people to defer payments, or that we should make an exception to the over-all rule. I believe it must be considered on an individual basis, and on the understanding that officials of the Farm Credit Corporation will go to the farm involved, take a look at the operation and if possible decide what changes should or could be made under the present confines of the act to allow the producer to meet his commitment.

It also must be pointed out that under the Farm Credit Act the number of defaulters to this point has been very minimal. In fact the number is so low that I believe a great deal of pride should be taken in the fact that the Farm Credit Act has such a very small percentage of its loans that have reached the default stage. It was pointed out on a number of occasions at the meeting last night that several farmers, particularly in western Ontario in the area with which I am sure the hon. member is very familiar, are now bringing to a close mortgages that have been held by the Farm Credit Corporation. Some of these mortgages are at 5 per cent, 6 per cent and 7 per cent. These members of the agricultural community are bringing these mortgages to repayment long before the required time to do so. It is possible that in some instances they would be well advised to invest that money in the banks at a much higher rate of interest so that they would receive a better return.

I am talking about the farmers of Canada. They are people who historically do not like to have a debt of any kind outstanding against them or against their property. I think this is a subject which should be considered in any discussion here in the House of Commons in respect of the agricultural community.

Also at the meeting last night the question of partial payment or advance payment was brought up. The hon. member who introduced this motion most certainly was in attendance and will recall that a statement was made to the committee meeting that pre-payment or advance payment on any of these loans certainly is allowed. The question was raised whether people could, without penalty, make an advance payment on capital on the loans they acquired from the Farm Credit Corporation. We were assured at that time that such a payment certainly could be made without penalty. I think this is something we might take a look at in respect of other areas of the community in relation to mortgages on houses, mortgages on apartments, business mortgages, and business loans because the people in the farming community have somewhat of an advantage in being able to take out a loan and pre-pay it without penalty.

● (1430)

Perhaps we could make a suggestion to people in the housing field that it might not be such a bad idea if the same thing were carried over into housing in Canada so as to allow young men and women, some of whom have taken a very substantial mortgage on the houses which they occupy, an opportunity, if they have had a good year—and we can hope for good years in the future—to advance their payments on those obligations, thereby allowing them to cut down the number of years in which they will be faced with a rather heavy burden in so far as mortgage payments are concerned, but without a penalty involved in that clause. As most hon. members know, at present people who carry a mortgage on a house do so for at least five years with an option at the end of five years either to have the interest on that loan brought up to present standards or, if those standards should decline, lower than present mortgage rates, as we hope they will, to renegotiate the mortgage.

It was pointed out at the meeting last night that under the Farm Credit Corporation Act these mortgages are not renegotiable, in other words the interest rate that is granted on a mortgage under the Farm Credit loan runs for the life of the mortgage. The question was raised by the hon. member—and a very good question too—as to whether we should not look into the future to arrange Farm Credit Corporation mortgages on a five year renewable concept. I have some difficulty in accepting the idea simply because of the most recent experience.

If, in the last ten or 15 years, you had a CMHC mortgage, you would realize that the mortgage rate has always been going up. In the past five or ten years we have never witnessed such a mortgage rate on the decrease. It is hoped that, in the future, high mortgage or high interest rates charged on industrial or housing mortgages will be on the downgrade, but we must also realize that mortgages granted under the Farm Credit Corporation Act, which are now at about 9.5 per cent or 9.75 per cent, are much below the rates that are currently charged on loans for housing. I cannot foresee a decrease in those rates on Farm Credit mortgages, so it might be an advantage to the farmer to have a renewable mortgage after five years. But in general we must accept the fact that in recent history mortgage rates have been rising, so that the farmer who accepts a mortgage at 9.5 per cent or 9.75 per cent under the Farm Credit Corporation Act has a considerable advantage over those who go into the open market and get a mortgage from a bank, a lending institute or a credit union.

The subject of credit unions was also discussed last night and the minister and officials of the Farm Credit Corporation left themselves open to any suggestion that would be put forward by any member of the agricultural committee regarding possibilities of making mortgages available to young farmers at a lesser rate. The rate proposed in the motion is 5 per cent, and I think we will have to give careful consideration before granting a 5 per cent mortgage to farmers when mortgages to anyone else in our society are certainly well above 10 per cent, perhaps even 12 per cent.

I am fully in agreement with giving every opportunity and every concession possible to the young farmer, or to the farmer who wants to expand his operation into a more viable business concept, but we also have to take into account in all our deliberations the aspirations of the rest of the Canadian population, of those who are not farmers, of those who are in the cities who are trying to mortgage a house and who have to pay the rate of 12 per cent, and maybe even 13 per cent or 14 per cent, and if they need a second mortgage they have to pay a rate even higher than that. It must be pointed out also that under the amendments to the Farm Credit Corporation Act second mortgages in some aspects of the farming field will be allowed. This also should be considered when comparing the advantages of the agricultural community with some of the disadvantages of other people in this country.

At times we tend to segregate our population into those who are on the farm and those who are off the farm. While there are certain things about agricultural life that we must realize are advantageous, we must also realize that farmers must compete with the rest of society. The general public must also realize that, while the farmer is special in many respects, he is also very different from people in the rest of our community. So we must be very careful about that rate of 5 per cent. I think that in some ways it is too low to be realistic because the interest rates that are asked and received throughout the rest of our society are much higher than the rate suggested in the motion put forward by the hon. member.

With regard to the open-ended loans which will allow additional borrowing without financing charges, I believe the Farm Credit Corporation Act now allows a person to come in with a second mortgage. If he has borrowed, say, $20,000 in the past, and then brings in another application for a loan because he wants to expand his property to make it more viable, the $20,000 is brought into consideration and he is allowed to borrow up to $150,000 if he is under 35 years of age, and still be covered by the Farm Credit Corporation Act. I am not too sure if that is exactly what the hon. member had in mind in presenting his motion, but I believe that this possibility is open to the young farmer or to the not so young farmer, because I think it is important that we take these people into consideration as well.

Another matter that was brought up at the agricultural meeting last evening, and which I want to bring to the attention of the House, is that we must all realize that every segment of our population must take part in the restraint program. It has been said that the restraint program bears down much more heavily on the farm credit aspect of agriculture than on any other segment of our population, and I agree, but it is a fact that the agricultural segment in Canada has always taken a bigger part in Canadian affairs than the rest of our community would like to recognize.

It was pointed out at that meeting that in future young people who wish to apply for loans under the Farm Credit Corporation Act will fall into two groups. Let us say there is a farmer who has a reasonably viable operation, and he has a son who wants to take advantage of the benefits of the Farm Credit Corporation Act. The only way he can take part is to have the loan granted, and the payment is made. Another farmer perhaps has a viable farm business or farm occupation. He has a couple of sons. I think at the present time what we have suggested is that the Farm Credit Corporation should take a look at that situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. However, he may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): In conclusion, it was definitely pointed out that the order of need will have to be taken into account.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said no to allowing an extension of time.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I point out that if the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) speaks, he closes the debate, but he must have unanimous consent to do this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, when the bill was introduced for the first time in January 1975, there was then perhaps some pertinency. On the other hand, since its original submission in January 1975, the House passed Bill C-34 to amend the Farm Credit Act as attested by the comments of the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) who then maintained that the suggested amendments in Bill C-34 would do much towards prompting young people to get involved in farming.

Indeed, Bill C-34 having been passed on May 8, 1975, the Farm Credit Corporation has now almost a year of experience to determine its value. I feel that this motion is out-of-date as a result of the amendments. If you allow me, with my colleagues I would like to examine the amendments to the Farm Credit Act. Now, as we know, the ceiling for loans has been raised from $100,000 to $150,000. If we consider the number of borrowers aged 35 or less, they represented 27 per cent in 1971 and that figure has now reached 43.1 per cent of all applicants taking advantage of the Farm Credit Act. A young farmer under 35 can now borrow an amount over 90 per cent of the productive value of his land, livestock and equipment.

Finally, the New Part IV of the act empowers the corporation to make loans to individuals under 35 whose principal occupation is not necessarily farming, providing that they undertake to set up a farming operation within 5 years. It is a measure that has certainly helped to increase the number of young people to take up farming. Fourthly, the corporation is now empowered to guarantee these loans by way of a mortgage other than a first mortgage.

As a result of these amendments, farm loans approved by the Farm Credit Corporation during 1975-76 have reached a record number, while in the previous year they had increased by at least 60.7 per cent, reaching approximately $641 million. Such an increase is mostly due to the amendments. The corporation has made nearly 10,000 loans under the Farm Credit Act. Now, 66 per cent or two thirds of those loans were made to farmers under 35, compared to 53 per cent the previous year and only 36 per cent five years earlier, that is in 1971-72. Under Part III of the act, the corporation lent $318.6 million in farm credit during the fiscal year 1975-76, an increase, Mr. Speaker, of 310 per cent over the previous fiscal year.

The whole amount was loaned to people under 45, since these loans were made under Part II and Part IV of the act. However, in practice, the major part of those funds were borrowed by people, and as I said, under 35. The average amount of the loans made in 1975-76 was almost $65,000, while in the previous fiscal year the total amount was around $50,000. There has already been an increase of $15,000.

In fact, the recent amendments to the Farm Credit Act were intended almost exclusively for young farmers, and they proved so popular that the Farm Credit Corporation had to introduce restrictive credit measures during the current fiscal year in order to retain funds for farmers in greater need. Actually, the motion before us contains four specific measures designed to urge young people to go into farming, such measures supplementing those I have just mentioned.

Under the first measure, the borrower would have part of his loan forgiven provided he met certain predetermined standards of performance. I feel in that respect, Mr. Speaker, that we must take into consideration the rate of repayment by Farm Credit Corporation borrowers in recent years. And on March 31, 1975, as the hon. member who spoke before me indicated, 93.4 per cent of all accounts were up to date, while on March 31, 1976, that percentage had slightly dropped to about 93.2 per cent. It is an insignificant drop if one considers that the beef industry is going through a difficult period and the prospects of the dairy industry are far from being as encouraging as one would like them to be.

Nobody is to blame for this, Mr. Speaker, except the weather which was much more favourable to the dairy production. The corporation has therefore suffered insignificant losses through the years. Given those facts, I think it is useless to dispense the borrowers from repaying part of their loan. Had it been possible to actually prove that the borrowers were having trouble meeting their obligations, the proposed measure might have been advisable.

I feel, like the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), that we have to keep on upgrading the income stabilization programs so that the farmers might meet their actual costs, including the repayment of their loans. In practice, a partial repayment would prove discriminatory. Indeed, the output criterion used to determine this repayment, whatever it is, will always be subject to variables such as the weather, prices and market conditions over which the individual has no control whatsoever and which usually affect the farmers in different ways.

[Mr. Dupras.]

The second measure would establish a 5 per cent ceiling on interest rates. The Farm Credit Corporation rate is 9¾ per cent, and in spite of this, the major challenge the corporation will have to face during this new financial year will be to find enough funds to meet the requirements of the farmers who really need long-term credit.

In my opinion, the ceiling of 5 per cent for the interest rate would only inflate land prices, so that in the end the amounts to borrow and to reimburse would not be lower. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the higher land prices and the attendant increase in loans would largely obliterate the amount saved in interest. In addition, a 5 per cent interest rate would bring farmers to ignore commercial sources of credit and prompt commercial loan companies to withdraw from that market, so that finally less funds would be available to farmers.

The third measure is devised to defer payment of interest during the initial phase of the loan. Now, as the previous speaker has mentioned, it is already possible to defer the reimbursement of principal and interest under the Farm Credit Act and regulations. The reimbursement of principal can be deferred for a maximum of five years, but only for two years as regards principal and interest together. In addition, in practice the corporation can defer payments when it is in the greater interest of the borrower to do so and it takes advantage of that opportunity. It should also be noted that the borrower can make prepayments at any time without being penalized and the interest is later on calculated on the outstanding principal.

Finally, the fourth and last proposal made in the motion would grant open-end loans, that is to say the borrower could borrow again without having to pay refinancing. Thus, mortgages for an undetermined amount would be granted so that farmers could borrow additional funds without having to pay new notary fees and so on. That proposal seems interesting, at first glance. However, after having been studied closely and repeatedly by officials of the department, it was considered not to be practical. Mortgages, as we know, are governed by provincial laws, and no mortgage act mentions mortgages for an undetermined amount.

As we know, a practical solution was found to the problem when the Farm Credit Act was last revised authorizing the corporation to loan money on mortgages other than first. Consequently, when borrowers want to obtain additional funds, they do not have to pay the charges which are normally associated with the title search and to cover the refinancing of the initial loan. They have to pay only the charges associated with the registration of a second mortgage. These charges are not very high in comparison with the average amount of the loan since they only equal less than 1 per cent of the amount of the loan in most provinces. This amendment turned out to be popular and very useful since its adoption last May.

Mr. Speaker, I find that the amendments the House brought to the Farm Credit Act in May 1975 really encourage young people to settle or stay in agriculture, and the figures I produced demonstrate this. Consequently, I think that the proposals in the motion before the House would not really improve the rural economy.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Again I want to warn hon. members of the House that if the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) speaks, his contribution will close the debate. The Chair recognises the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Loiselle).

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the motion on which I agree in principle. However, in view of the present economic conditions. I think it is impossible for the Farm Credit Corporation to increase its funds at the same pace as it thought it would. Actually, the corporation will not have enough funds to approve the same amount of credit as for 1975-76. In addition, since it had to carry certain amounts involved last year over its budget for this year, it is evident that the number of new loans should be reduced likewise.

I think that we should also urge farmers to take part in the anti-inflation program, much as we ask all groups in our society and all our industrial sectors to do. However I think that with all the new guidelines concerning farm credit it will be possible for us, while beating inflation, to reach certain goals.

Those aims have, I believe, been clearly defined in the criteria outlined by the Department of Agriculture. I am quoting only a few instances of the consolidation of applicants' debts. Formerly, it was possible for a farmer to gather all his debts and apply for a single loan which would take care of all the total indebtedness. Now we shall urge instead other loan companies to lend the money so that the corporation may pursue its activities and its aim of improving the agricultural production in this country. This is why we must earmark funds for those farmers who do not derive an adequate income from their operation and who wish to buy more land.

We shall not lend money so readily to those farmers who have enough land, assets and an adequate income.

Those who do not have enough land to farm are unable to derive an adequate income from farming will be particularly encouraged.

Moreover, we will give assistance to the younger people—and I often hear this comment in my constituency—because a young farmer today does not have enough money to buy land which costs more and more. Thus, we will grant loans particularly to one, two or three members of the same family who want to buy the family farm.

Mr. Speaker, I think that even though fewer will be available for farm credit, it will still be possible to help the farmers who either wish to improve their lot or simply to take up farming. In my opinion, this is one aspect of the problem facing the young farmers and those who are developing their operation.

We should not be concerned only with financing problems facing farmers but I believe that with provincial and perhaps even municipal authorities we should hold a joint meeting of the three levels of government with a view to constituting agricultural land banks.

In an area such as mine, even if farm credit is available to the farmers, it has become unthinkable to buy land because most if not all of it has passed into the hands of speculators. Even if he has already settled, a farmer cannot think of increasing his land, let alone a young man who intends to enter this industry. Therefore I believe the major problem does not exist at the credit level only but also extends to the possiblity of acquiring land.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not stop this shameful speculation which is now raging in the Montreal area, we will lose all the best agricultural land in Quebec.

I do not think we should dwell merely on the financial problem. We should rather consider the possibility now given to present and future farmers to buy new lands. And I would urge the committee on agriculture to look into this matter so as to be in a position to make recommendations to the provincial agriculture ministers and also to the municipal affairs ministers who are the only ones qualified and empowered to act in zoning matters.

Mr. Speaker, I think that if we could do as some American states have done and urge the provincial legislatures to intervene as some American states and zone certain agricultural areas, land speculation would no longer be possible in those regions.

So long as we do not come to grips with the financial problem, to earmark additional funds for the Farm Credit Corporation will only amount to overbidding.

I also think that we, as a government, should urge the lending institutions such as banks and trust companies to make more and more loans to the farmers who have always found it difficult to borrow money, and that is why they have always relied on the government. If we believe in our farming industry, I wonder why financial institutions such as banks are not more interested in this field, which proves most profitable. Unfortunately, one only has to consider the farming production surpluses last year.

● (1500)

Mr. Speaker, even if it is hard to tell the farmers that we cannot make more funds available to them, increase their borrowing power next year, I think they must agree to join us and the other sectors of the Canadian economy in our fight against inflation, a fight which has made a very good start with the results we already know, which gives us some hope of a decreasing rate of inflation this year.

However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the motion of my colleague, but with the present inflationary crisis, I have to say that however valuable this project may be, we will have to postpone it before adopting it.

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that, in principle, the reasons given by the hon. member are acceptable, no doubt, but I think we must put the problem in its true perspective. On one hand, every day the government is urged to reduce its expenditures, to cut its budget, while, on the other hand we hear new demands being constantly pressed upon the government to meet certain needs.

All agree that like many other laws the Farm Credit Act could be amended, as the hon. member has said, and bettered so that we encourage our young producers. On the other hand, in view of the present situation of the dairy policy in 1976-77 for example, not only do we try to find incentives for the producers to produce more and improve their facilities, but at the same time, because of the current world situation, we have to ask the farmers to reduce their production.

So in a context like this, I think that at a given moment the government has had to decide that expenditures for farm credit would be curtailed. I do not think this is an attempt to hold back Canadian agriculture as a whole, but on the contrary, to rationalize its production. Even in our rural areas, where the economy is in a particularly difficult predicament due to the inflation, we still must ensure proper balance between costs and returns in agricultural production.

Almost daily we hear protests about our social legislation as the government has become the main employer in this country with such schemes as health benefits, social welfare and unemployment insurance. But I think that after having pondered on the present economic situation, we are rather led to bring back the workers to work, to try to find them new job opportunities and to stop creating and encouraging ventures which would represent far too many risks in the present conditions of our economy.

This means that the policy of the government with regard to assistance to farmers is to make sure first and foremost of the profitability of existing farm operations. On the other hand, we must really be certain now when offering farm credit that those who are eligible to it really have the ability to do the job so as to minimize lending risks for the government and to ensure maximum yield of the money that the government makes available to producers.

Therefore, it is now almost unthinkable that in its agricultural policy, the govermnent should add some so-called incentives when the priority as concerns agriculture really seems to be to stabilize and ensure profitability. I therefore consider that, in theory, the suggestion of the hon. member is acceptable. However, at this time, in view of present conditions, this subject should be referred to the committee on agriculture where it can be studied in depth while taking into account in particular rural areas which are now more likely than others to be affected by the current problems caused by inflation.

Of course, I am among those who are quite concerned by the econcomy of rural areas. Obviously an attempt must be made to save the economy of our rural areas. We can probably hope to succeed in the not too distant future, and even in the near future in reviving our rural economy, which must necessarily provide farmers with sufficient economic means.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we on this side cannot help rural economy without speaking of agricultural zoning. I know that, in this regard, the provinces have already undertaken projects which, I hope, can be realized and it is really in this sense that any amendment to the farm credit act will be truly effective and acceptable, and I would even say necessary for rural areas.

Therefore, we must definitely assess the needs of young producers. To deal with the need of young producers is also to deal with their training, because agriculture was once a venture we must now realize that the Canadian farm producer has become a true expert in his field. I think that government members cannot take the risk of plowing huge amounts of money without making sure that prospective farm producers are equal to the task and this means having an adequate and complete training in order to ensure the survival of the farming community.

● (1510)

Therefore, in my view, raising the problem of farm credit amounts to actually considering on the one hand saving the economy of Canadian rural areas and on the other hand encouraging producers to make use of their personal skills and enabling them to earn an honest living. By the same token, it also amounts, for instance, to requiring from producers enough preparation and seriousness so that government loans may really be considered profitable and that risk may also be considered as really calculated.

Then, looking at the hon. member's proposal, I suggest that the committee which is now discussing the estimates has already raised the problem of a readjustment of our farm credit policy, and I think this is indeed the most appropriate and acceptable way to discuss the new farm credit policy.

Turning back especially to the developments we have been, and will be, witnessing as regards our dairy policy, it is nevertheless necessary to ask producers as well as producers' associations to make an effort at this stage so that our partners in Canadian agriculture, namely the producers themselves, may strive to rationalize their own operations and we may really believe that agriculture must be supported by the government. However, it must not become a novel form of welfare; rather it must consist of elements necessary and essential to a rural economy based on efficiency and profitability.

Now, this is also an appeal to producers themselves as well as to producers' associations to ensure that they are as serious as this government can be, and only in these conditions will the government be eventually able to grant loans which will really assist agriculture and will not simply be another form of welfare.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I think that somewhat explains the concerns we are sharing with the hon. member. On the other hand, in the present context, there is always this dilemma which we are facing: as each day come to pass we are asking more from this government while on the other hand, we are requesting at the same time that it should practise restraint. But one must realize that the government, like any other organization, must do some accounting, calculate its risks and make its decisions. And I suggest that the decision that was made recently in the area of farm credit has been at the advantage of the Canadian economy. And until further notice, we must support the government's present position unless we can demonstrate the merits of another policy.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 12 proposed by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and dated January 27, 1975 recommends that the government amend the Farm Credit Act to encourage young people to stay on the farm or expand their farm operations or in some cases to allow young people who left the farm because of a lack of financial means to come back.

The last amendments made by the government are giving encouragement in that direction. Mr. Speaker, as we are now aware, a person under 35 can, without leaving his job in the industrial sector, buy a farm and benefit from the Farm Credit Act.

Motion No. 12 has some good aspects. It particularly recommends an interest rate of only 5 per cent. A member of the government side mentioned that we should also take into account the case of young couples who want to buy a property. Those people will have to pay a rate higher than 5 per cent. In some cases, they can benefit from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation grants and pay a rate of 8 per cent. The suggestion has some good aspects and in certain cases that rate can apply to young farmers and not only the young but every farmer in the province of Quebec.

Another suggestion that could be considered by this government is that for a certain period the Farm Credit Corporation could, through an agreement, increase the loan of those young people without professional fees. It is another suggestion that could be considered by the government. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) responsible to Parliament for the Farm Credit Corporation announced in a press release this week that the funds available for 1976-77 would not be as high as for 1975-76; one of the reasons alleged by the minister is the following: For 1975-76, the Farm Credit Corporation loaned upwards of $600 million, or made loan commitments that will be considered in 1976-77 and in such cases we have, as it is called mortgaged the available appropriations for 1976 and 1977.

In various instances in the past, the government took measures to help young farmers expand their operations. This provided increased loan opportunities where two or three people get into a partnership to continue the family operation. Hon. members are aware that the average age figure among the farmers is relatively high. I understand the most recent statistics show the age to be above 50, and the Farm Credit Act amendment has allowed the senior farmer to indirectly carry on farming, while allowing one or two sons to take over the operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is with regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with deference and respect, I do not know whether in the circumstances you can say the private members' hour has expired. Standing Order 4 states that the House adjourns at five o'clock on Fridays. I look at the clock and it is only 3:20. If the opponents to the point of view which I am putting forward say that there was unanimous consent, I have to say there was unanimous consent only to part of the matter that would allow us to continue to the actual time of 3.20 o'clock.

The unanimous consent that was given when Your Honour was not in the Chair was to call if four o'clock at that time so that private members' business could continue. However, there was no attempt at that time, nor was it asked that there be unanimous consent that the House adjourn at the end of an hour. Therefore we are now stuck with the Standing Orders of the House.

In view of all the circumstances I do not believe Your Honour could properly rule, and I gather you have not ruled, that private members' hour has adjourned.

• (1520)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the Standing Orders do not say that private members' business shall be for 60 minutes—for one hour. The Standing Orders say that private members' business shall be from four o'clock to five o'clock. It so happens that at 2.20 this afternoon, eastern daylight time, we decided by unanimous consent that it was four o'clock. So private members' business lasts from that point until five o'clock. It is not yet five o'clock, not even in Newfoundland where things are always half an hour later. There is nothing in the book which says it is an hour. The book says it shall be from four o'clock to five o'clock. Joshua made the sun stand still a long time ago. We have not done the same thing. We pushed the sun back a bit. But there has been no unanimous consent to call it five o'clock at 3.20. If the government wishes to make a motion to adjourn, that is a different story, but I do not think we can now decide it is five o'clock unless there is unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am really surprised by the remarks of the hon. member who spoke before me, considering what was said in this House during the past few years. At 2.20 it was unanimously agreed to call it 4 o'clock. The hon. member says he cannot stop the sun, but everyone can very well stop his watch or move it forward. I suggest this is exactly what this House did at 2:20, when we unanimously agreed to call it 4 o'clock. It does not matter much where the sun lies for that matter. We call it 4 o'clock, we move on to 4 o'clock. There has to be some consistency in this House. If we unanimously call it 4 o'clock, one hour later it has to be 5 o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: When the Deputy Chairman of Committees was in the chair there was some discussion about business for this afternoon and I recall saying that in order to bring about the adjournment of the House on June 30 it was undesirable to open discussion on measures which do not appear on the order paper. Following this the Chair, as I recall the words, asked "Do we hafe unanimous consent to call it four o'clock?" It was my understanding that what we had agreed to was to advance the clock and I suggest it would be ridiculous on our part to turn it back now. The implication was that we had come to the end of the day and were beginning the private members' hour by advancing the clock to four o'clock. If we were to take any other point of view, then at four o'clock we would have to call it four o'clock twice, and that would be ridiculous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do understand the preoccupation of the hon. member. Recalling what was said when by unanimous consent the House decided at 2.19 to call it four o'clock, I have to consider the situation in the perspective of the decision made at that time. The Chair has to judge not the intent of hon. members now, but the intention which was in their minds when they agreed to call it four o'clock.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, and I agree with him, that nowhere does the Standing Order say that the private members' hour shall last 60 minutes. Such words do not appear. But we can see from Standing Order 15(4) that the time allotted for private members' business every day is either from five o'clock to six o'clock or from four o'clock to five o'clock on Friday, which is the equivalent of 60 minutes. Hon. members want the Chair to decide that this hour should, today, last two hours and 41 minutes. I do not think the Chair can do this. They have heard me say that the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. That is the form which has been in use here ever since I have been in the House, either in the chair or as a private member. To me, that hour is 60 minutes in principle.

Hon. members should also consider the fact that they do on occasion recognize that the length of time allotted to private members' business is 60 minutes even though it might only last for 15 minutes. Moreover, if it is the wish of the House, private members' business can be extended. What is being suggested now could be done only by unanimous consent. Hon. members are asking the Chair, in the absence of unanimous consent, to say that the hour allotted to private members' business should extend to two hours and 41 minutes. This cannot be done by the Chair alone; it could be done only with the consent of all hon. members.

The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) said it has always been recognized, in recent times at least, that when hon. members decide to advance the private members' hour, it is understood that the time allotted for that portion of our business will be 60 minutes. So my interpretation of the situation, in the light of the precedents and taking into account the unanimous agreement which was reached at 2.19 to call it four o'clock, and reading in that decision the intention to proceed with the private members' hour for the time normally allotted, that is, for one hour, is that I have to call it five o'clock. And I do call it five o'clock.

Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m. under the terms of Standing Order 2(1).

At 3.31 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HEALTH

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF FUNDS FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that it is always easier to prevent than to cure and that preventive medicine should be the goal of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, considering also that medical research is the main and most important element of any preventive program because research makes it possible to face future problems, and considering finally that control measures in the field of medical research jeopardize the future health of Canadians, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That this House or its Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs consider forthwith the matter of the medical research budget so that the available funds be sufficient to provide for the fastest progress in the field of preventive medicine and thus meet the main priority, namely the present and future health of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

ENERGY

OIL—REASON FOR REJECTING BLENDED PRICING CONCEPT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I was going to say "in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources", but I see him coming in just now. Can the minister tell us why the federal government has rejected the blended pricing concept for oil, given the fact that it is alleged this process would provide incentives for oil exploration and production and at the same time provide additional protection for consumers?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is the very problem. There is no evidence that the proposal will indeed provide the kind of incentives to which the hon. member refers. The other problem is that the Ontario government has not demonstrated how, if you freeze the price of old oil at $8, with declining production you will generate more cash funds which are needed for exploration and development.

● (1410)

Mr. Gillies: Would the minister not agree, though, that by taking the position he is now taking he is prejudging one of the items which will be put forward at the conference, presumably starting within the next day or two, and is it appropriate for the government to reject a position which is going to be presented there even before there is an opportunity for the people supporting that proposition to put it forward?

Mr. Gillespie: I am very much looking forward to an articulation by the province of Ontario as to how this would work, but up until now the province of Ontario has not demonstrated how it would meet either one of the two points I have made: one is the incentive question, and the other is the provision of cash flow.

Mr. Gillies: Is the minister now saying that if that argument is made forcefully and successfully at the conference, the government has not rejected this possibility out of hand?

Mr. Gillespie: The discussion will take place. There will be other different points of view put forward. I am sure the federal government will have its view. There are many different provinces involved. As far as I know there is only one province which has even flirted with the idea the government of Ontario put forward. None of the others has supported it.

IMPACT OF INVESTMENT PROPOSED IN "ENERGY STRATEGY FOR CANADA" ON OTHER AREAS OF ECONOMY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, has the minister any estimate of the impact of the investment of $180 billion proposed in "An Energy Strategy for Canada"—which, as the minister knows, appears at page 106 of that document—for energy related activity on availability of investment funds for housing, manufacturing and other non-energy uses in Canada?

Oral Questions

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, "An Energy Strategy for Canada" made it very clear that the implications of very massive investments for energy over the next ten and fifteen years are serious because other aspects of the economy clearly will not be able to call upon the same investment funds if we are to fund fully the kind of investment we need in Canada for energy exploration and development. If the hon. member will take a look at the low price and high price scenario, he will see some very interesting implications with respect to investment policies and how we can husband our resources.

EFFECT OF INVESTMENT PROPOSED IN "ENERGY STRATEGY FOR CANADA" ON INTEREST RATES—SOURCE OF INVESTMENT FUNDS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Because of our interest in this, and because of the horrendous possibilities, I should like to ask another supplementary. Has the department made any calculation of the possible impact of investments of this dimension on domestic interest rates, and has the department estimated what proportion of this investment will come from Canadian sources?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I cannot give the hon. member a precise figure with respect to interest rates. There are, of course, many factors which affect interest rates, and equally there are many factors which will affect the amount of foreign funds which will be required by this industry and other industries in the future.

Mr. Baldwin: Have you considered the weather?

FINANCE

REASON FOR DECLINE IN BALANCE OF TRADE IN MANUFACTURED GOODS WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Minister of Finance, and they relate to some of the information placed before the House last Friday in the "Economic Review". The conclusions of the review are not clear, and because the information in the review will form the basis of the coming debate, it is important for us to know what conclusions the minister has drawn from the statistics which were presented.

In looking at the productivity figures in the manufacturing sector, the review points out that for the last three years increases in labour costs per unit of output have been lower in Canada than in the United States, and the graph dramatically points that out. How, then, does the minister account for our sharp decline in the balance of trade in manufactured goods? Surely the minister cannot hold increases in labour rates in Canada responsible for that.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, some of the conclusions to be drawn from the "Economic Review" will be dealt with at some length in the budget. The drop in Canadian exports over the past year—not just in the last several quarters—has been due to a rather less buoyant condition in the United States market in particular, but in other export markets as well, than was the case in the Canadian market. Certainly, in the early years of the period covered, the disincentive was not the Canadian labour cost. However, the concern of the government of Canada was that with the rate of wage settlements which were contemplated in September and October 1975, namely the 30 per cent, 40 per cent and 50 per cent settlements being sought at that time, then any trend of that kind would be directly adverse to the rate of productivity in Canada.

INFLATIONARY EFFECT OF INCREASED PROFITS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CONTROL

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. On a number of occasions the minister has stated that wage and salary increases—and he is restating it today—are going to make our international trading position uncompetitive. In the "Economic Review" labour costs per unit of output have increased by 38.9 per cent since 1972; however, despite a decline in 1975, profits per unit of output have increased by some 62.9 per cent. Is the minister prepared to express his concern about this kind of inflation in demand, and can he indicate what he intends to do about the increase in profits as compared to the increase in wage and salaries?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is because we are concerned about both wage and salary increases—which I would remind the hon. gentleman make up two-thirds of the gross national product—and increases in profits that we put forward the anti-inflation program which touches equally on controls of profits and of incomes.

REQUEST THAT LOANS BE GRANTED PROVINCES UNDER SAME CONDITIONS AS LOAN TO CHILE

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

On April 28, 1976, our leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) asked the minister what were the conditions of the loan of $125 million to Chile, and in particular what was the rate of interest charged and the term. The minister promised to inquire and to make a statement on this subject. I would like to know whether the minister has the information.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I made an inquiry and there was no participation by the government of Canada in such a loan. It was a loan, I presume, made by commercial banks. If we do not participate in the loan, of course we are not informed on all the details.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—REASON PARLIAMENTARY AUTHORITY NOT SOUGHT FOR LOAN—AMOUNT OF LIABILITY IF CONTRACT NOT SIGNED

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Supply and Services concerning the LRPA contract. Section 36 of the Financial Administration Act states:

No money shall be borrowed or security issued by or on behalf of Her Majesty without the authority of parliament.

As the Lockheed loan appears to be on behalf of Her Majesty or the government, can the minister explain why parliamentary authority has not been sought?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the loan is strictly between Lockheed and a group of Canadian banks. The federal government has nothing to do with the financing agreement between the two parties.

Mr. Paproski: Except guarantee it!

Mr. McKinnon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the loan is not to the government, why is the government going to pay interest charges on the loan?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the loan is on behalf of Lockheed and Lockheed will have to deal with this question. Of course, there are some charges and it is normal for the purchaser to assume the charges. Nevertheless, all the financing agreements will be signed between Lockheed and the interested Canadian banks.

Mr. McKinnon: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. The minister wrote to Lockheed on December 2 telling them to proceed with the necessary work on the LRPA contract. Ignoring the question of whether the minister exceeded his authority at that time, is it true that if the minister had not written such a letter the government would have been in a much better position to bargain about the $16 million cost of the resultant work? Would the minister also confirm or deny that legal commitments by the government, such as his letter, may mean a liability of up to $80 million if Canada does not go through with this contract?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian Government is well protected with this ceiling of $16 million which is still in force. If the contract is not in force because of the lack of agreement between Lockheed and the Canadian banks, still the ceiling is $16 million. I think it is a very good agreement that was reached at the end of March.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT AMOUNT OF INTEREST PAYABLE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. In reply to the questions put by the hon. member for Victoria, the minister indicated that the government was not involved in terms of interest payments. If that is the case, does it mean the government will pay whatever rate of interest these two outside organizations decide upon? Has the government not protected itself in any way in this respect?

● (1420)

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the government has something to do with the payment of interest to Canadian banks. I said that agreement will be reached between Lockheed and Canadian banks and the Canadian government will, of course, assume the payment of bank charges to Lockheed, because Lockheed is providing this service to the Canadian government. That is normal business practice. We have nothing directly to do with the loan to Lockheed.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY LEGAL OPINION SOUGHT ON WHETHER GOVERNMENT THE BORROWER IN CONNECTION WITH LOAN TO LOCKHEED

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that appears to answer my question. Apparently the government will abide by any decision concerning these charges to which the banks and Lockheed will come. May I ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question? Has the government sought his legal opinion on whether the government is, in a legal sense, the borrower in the Lockheed-Canadian banks projected loan? I ask this because of the answer just given by the Minister of Supply and Services, and because I have in mind the provisions of Section 36 of the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice has been involved, pursuant to its obligations, in providing legal advice to the government.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like a specific answer. In view of what the Minister of Supply and Services just said, what is the capacity of the Government of Canada in this arrangement? Did the Department of Justice give a specific opinion? If so, can the minister say what it was? Also, has the Minister of Justice reviewed the approval mechanisms employed in this matter by Treasury Board, which is responsible for making sure that they conform to guidelines laid down by the government for this kind of financial arrangement?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as I say, we have been providing legal advice to ministers who are carrying out their responsibilities. As the hon. member knows, the nature of the advice is something which is between us and our clients. The answers should be given by the responsible ministers.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

DECLINE IN PRODUCTIVITY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As productivity figures released last Friday by the Department of Finance show that during the past two years there has been a sharp and accelerating decrease in productivity which has been the major factor in increasing unemployment and inflation, when will the Prime Minister take the House into his confidence and tell the House, as he promised three months ago, on February 5, how the government intends to correct this serious situation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give my office notice of his intended question. I have asked to be informed of the status of the various works in progress on which I reported to the hon. member about a couple of months ago. The work is progressing well. I am advised that it is important not to draw extreme conclusions from the cyclical slowdown in productivity which took place in 1973 and 1975. The dominant factor was the economic recession. The counterpart to this slowdown is expected to be above-trend productivity increases in the next year or two.

POSSIBILITY OF FORCE BECOMING INVOLVED IN JURISDICTIONAL DISPUTE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General? Did the minister recently discuss certain matters with his counterpart, the Solicitor General of Quebec? Did the two ministers iron out the jurisdictional issue involving the RCMP and other law enforcement agencies? If they discussed these matters last Friday, what agreement did they reach?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I met the Solicitor General of Quebec last Friday. We discussed Olympic security and jurisdictional questions affecting Sky Shops. We agreed to prevent these disputes in future. It was suggested that the federal-provincial conference of attorneys general and law officers of the Crown should discuss what is to happen when police in two or three provinces have jurisdiction if a criminal offence is committed. As for outstanding charges, the RCMP agreed to discuss with the Crown in Quebec any proposed charges before proceeding further.

NATURE OF CHARGES BEING CONSIDERED BY PRE-ENQUÊTE HEARING IN QUEBEC

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, that does not sound very much like an argument of any kind. I will put this question. What charges are being considered and reviewed by the justice under Section 455(4)(a) of the Code and so on, in a hearing being held ex parte, in camera, called in short pre-enquête. Are they the charges laid by the RCMP, namely conspiracy, which are much easier to prove, or are they the charges of fraud or bribery suggested by others? What is being heard in private in this regard?

[Mr. Basford.]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the matters that are before the pre-enquête were placed there by the province of Quebec. That will continue. They are considering the substantial offence of fraud against the government. The charges laid by the RCMP in Ottawa will also continue, although an agreement has been made between the RCMP and the government of Quebec to transfer all evidence necessary for the pre-enquête to Quebec.

Mr. Woolliams: Let us clarify one situation. Are the charges being dealt with in camera those laid by the RCMP, namely conspiracy where, as the Solicitor General knows, you have to prove the illegal agreement and maybe a part of the offence, or is it offences that are more difficult, suggested by others, which could be thrown out in this hearing? Which charges are they, those laid by the RCMP or by others? That is what I want to know.

Mr. Allmand: The charges laid by the RCMP are conspiracy charges. They are against five individuals. They are being heard here in Ottawa. The pre-enquête in Montreal deals with one charge against one individual which is a substantive charge of fraud against the government.

Mr. Woolliams: If I might be permitted to ask one further question, Mr. Speaker. The charges laid by the RCMP, where the bulk of the evidence is, are not being considered by this hearing being held in camera?

Mr. Allmand: That is right, Mr. Speaker. The pre-enquête is dealing with charges prepared by the Crown prosecutor in Quebec.

TRANSPORT

CREATION OF RESERVED LANE FOR PUBLIC TRANSIT VEHICLES ON CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—REMOVAL OF TOLLS

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Because of the urgent need to encourage more effective use of the Champlain Bridge between Montreal and the South Shore for public transit purposes, can the minister assure the House that every possible federal co-operation is being offered the province of Quebec in establishing a public transit vehicle reserved lane on the Champlain Bridge? Also, will tolls be removed for public transit vehicles on the Champlain Bridge and all other federal bridges in Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following the hon. member's previous question, these matters were pursued. In both cases I think I can give him an encouraging answer. We are co-operating with the provincial government on the various physical changes that are required to eventually allow a public vehicle lane and we are having serious discussions concerning the question of avoiding collecting tolls on public transit vehicles.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAILURE OF OLD AGE PENSIONERS TO RECEIVE THEIR INCOME SUPPLEMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, may I direct my question to either the acting minister or the parliamentary secretary. In view of the inconvenience suffered by many old age pensioners who did not receive their guaranteed income supplement in their April cheques, can the parliamentary secretary indicate whether this matter has been resolved and, if all these persons have not yet received their guaranteed income supplement, how soon it will be in their hands?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should have a copy of the news release issued by the department on Friday indicating that extra service is being provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare and that office hours are being extended so that this matter can be rectified as quickly as possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I guess that press release must have been put in the mail.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will steps be taken, either by amending the legislation or in the administration, so that this will not occur again next year?

Mr. Kaplan: That is being considered, Mr. Speaker. I should like to add that the release indicates that retroactive payments are being made as well, so that no one will suffer the absolute loss of a pension to which they would have been entitled if a proper application had been made.

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF PROVISION RELATING TO PROHIBITED DEGREES OF AFFINITY AFFECTING MARRIAGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that problems have developed in relation to the prohibited degrees of affinity affecting marriages as a result of the Power vs. Power case decision in the Province of Ontario, can the minister tell me whether or not remedial legislation will soon be introduced—I understand the department is already working on it—to amend section 16 of the Divorce Act?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): I shall be tabling in the House tomorrow the report of the Law Reform Commission on family law which represents the conclusion of some five years of study of the subject. I have obtained the agreement of the provincial attorneys general that we shall take a day of our meetings in June to consider family law and I hope to present to the attorneys general at that time a paper on the whole subject so that, hopefully, a consensus can develop as to what the federal government and parliament should do in the area of divorce and family law and what the provincial attorneys general should do. In answer to the specific question as to whether the law of consanguinity should be changed, that is one of the matters involved in the general review of family law.

ENERGY

OIL—REASON FOR LOW PRIORITY GIVEN DEVELOPMENT OF RENEWABLE RESOURCES UNDER ENERGY STRATEGY

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Given that the government has changed its energy policy from the goal of self-sufficiency to that of reliance for one third of our oil requirements on offshore sources, will the minister explain why his new energy strategy ranks renewable energy second last in terms of research and development priorities and why the least amount of money has been allotted to this kind of research although it has the greatest potential for self-sufficiency.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Without accepting the premise of the preamble, and that is important, I would like to say that conservation has been given one of the highest priorities. If the hon. lady were to look at the whole area of priorities, she would see that energy conservation is one of the six priority areas.

Miss MacDonald: Obviously, the minister was not listening. I was asking about research and development priorities in connection with renewable resources. They have been allotted the lowest amount of money and I was asking him why they were placed at the present level when they have the greatest potential for self-sufficiency. Further, I should like to ask him, with respect to the expansion of nuclear research which accounts for three-quarters of the total research and development budget, whether the estimates of nuclear safety contained in the document are any more reliable than the estimates of the extent of Canada's energy resources given by the government in past years?

Mr. Gillespie: I would say that those two questions are quite unrelated. As to the first, having to do with renewable sources of energy, I would say this is quite an important area of research and development but as the hon. member may understand, while one would like to have additional funds for these areas there are other areas for which I should also like to have additional funds. The hon. member and her party have been asking the government to cut expenditures. Well, we got an increase in this connection. I would have liked it to have been a greater one.

The second point I should like to make is this: the main thing is to spend money where it can be most useful. I think in terms of solar energy, in terms of wind, in terms of tidal energy, in terms of bio-mass. In a number of these areas we shall have to move rather slowly because very large sums of money would not generate any immediate pay-back. All the experts tell me this is an area in which we can expect significant amounts of energy, but not for 15 years or more.

Miss MacDonald: The way you are going it will be 100 years.

ROLE OF PETRO-CAN IN SUPPLYING EXPLORATION CAPITAL—SOURCE OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): My question, too, is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; it relates, also, to government expenditures. In the light of government statements that Petro-Can will ultimately put up about 10 per cent of Canadian exploration capital, and in the light of the fact that the government's energy strategy speaks of an exploration program costing about $40 billion over the next 15 years, is it the minister's opinion that Petro-Can will be able to fulfil its self-appointed role, that is, to provide about 10 per cent of this $40 billion?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It is not a self-appointed role. I realize the hon. member has difficulties in connection with Petro-Canada because his party and associates will have no part of it. They do not understand the potential or the importance of this national institution. If the hon. member were to take a look at expenditures offshore in the Arctic he would know that Petro-Can will be contributing probably close to 15-20 per cent in the next couple of years to all the exploration costs there.

Mr. Jarvis: I might tell the minister that any of my problems in connection with Petro-Can are miniscule compared with his. Will he advise us where Petro-Can will obtain the extra $2.5 billion over and above the $1.5 billion already promised by the government to achieve the goal I mentioned? While he is answering and talking about government institutions, can he tell us whether it is the government's intention that this money shall be one more government hand-out to Petro-Can out of the taxpayers' funds?

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member does not agree with the kind of expenditure Petro-Can has undertaken, for example, $25 million to the Nova Scotia shelf operation each year for five years, let him and the rest of his party so declare.

Mr. Jarvis: Will the minister please indicate whether it is government policy to expend an additional $2.5 billion over and above the $1.5 billion already promised to Petro-Can out of general tax revenues?

Mr. Gillespie: That is an altogether hypothetical question.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

RESIGNATION OF MR. BEAUDET—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE AND EARLY ACTION TO REPLACE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing hypothetical about the question I have for the Minister of Transport. Now that Mr. Yves Beaudet has submitted his resignation, and his resignation has been accepted by the Prime Minister, can the Minister of Transport or the Prime Minister tell us what intention the department has for the early replacement of Mr. Beaudet to the board so that it might retain at least its capacity to function at least in a legal sense?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Beaudet indicated his desire to resign toward the end of last year; he continued to serve at my request until this time. The appointment of a replacement is expected to be made this week.

Mr. Forrestall: I understand from the minister's reply that the appointment will be made toward the end of this week. I hope it will be somebody who knows something about ports. Would the minister table the exchange of correspondence leading to Mr. Beaudet's resignation and any memoranda which might be attached to it, since we understand it was not a friendly resignation, and that is regrettable.

Mr. Lang: I should like to make it quite clear to the hon. member, and to hon. members generally, that the termination of the relationship between Mr. Beaudet and the National Harbours Board was carried out in a friendly manner. As I indicated, Mr. Beaudet continued to sit for a number of months at my request. As to the other part of the question, I will look at the ordinary procedure covering the tabling of documents.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REASON FOR REFERRAL OF AWARD TO FORESTRY AND BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES GROUP TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board. After a number of starts, stops and backtracking Treasury Board decided within the last three or four weeks, contrary to all respect for law and past practice, to disregard an arbitration award affecting the forestry and biological sciences group of the Professional Association of the Public Service of Canada and to place the award before the Anti-Inflation Board. Can the minister say whether this indicates that Treasury Board has altered its policy and no longer intends to honour arbitration awards in the public service, even when these particular public servants concerned as far back as August opted for this route rather than the conciliation-strike route.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we will respect all the decisions made by the arbitration board which are within the guidelines issued by the House of Commons after October 14.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think I did place on the record that the choice was made in August for arbitration. As these public servants are known for their responsible attitude toward their work, is the minister aware that he may by this action, depending on the AIB's ruling, be pushing these public servants towards strike action against their will, and is he aware of the consequences of strike action by these particular employees in terms of ruined experiments, wastage of public funds and possibly the endangering of public health?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is most difficult for me not to classify that as a hypothetical question.

TEXTILES—REFUSAL OF DUPONT TO PUT INTO PRODUCTION NEW POLYESTER YARN PLANT BECAUSE OF LOW-PRICED IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware of the decision today of the Dupont Company not to put into production its newly constructed $50 million polyester yarn plant at Coteau, resulting in a loss of 325 employment opportunities at Coteau, a lay-off of 125 permanent employees at Kingston and the decision not to hire 200 summer students, all of which the company attributes to distress price imports and the refusal of the government to implement the recommendations of its own textile clothing board?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to remind the hon. member that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce already appeared before the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, and that the reading of that report will show to what extent the minister is enthusiastic, confident and optimistic about the future of the textile and clothing industry.

On that occasion, we announced the establishment of an ad hoc committee to review thoroughly the quotas, imports and the textile manufacturing industry. The report should be tabled by the end of June. Three interested provinces are members of the ad hoc committee and representatives of the clothing industry also sit on that committee, whose report must be tabled by the end of June.

As to the last part of the question, I would like to point out to the hon. member that I willl discuss that situation with the director of the textile industry this week, and I will inform him of his decision.

HEALTH

POLIO VIRUS IN OTTAWA AREA—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CONTROL AND TO IMMUNIZE SCHOOL CHILDREN

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I should like to direct a question to the acting minister or to his parliamentary secretary. My question has to do with the alarming reports of five different strains of polio virus in two sewage treatment plants in the Ottawa region. I recognize that some of the responsibility lies with the provincial government, but in view of the fact that this is a communicable disease which can spread to other parts of Canada I should like to ask my question in two parts.

First of all, what steps are being taken to control the spread of the polio virus in the sewage treatment plants in question? Secondly, since nearly 30 per cent of the school children in Ontario have not been immunized against polio, what steps are being taken to ensure that all children whose parents agree are immunized before the fall; and also, will additional supplies of vaccine be available for other persons who want to be vaccinated?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this investigation of the polio virus strains found in the Ottawa area is continuing. Information has already been relayed to the provincial officials concerned, since as the hon. member noted, there is a considerable provincial responsibility in this area.

I am glad to have the opportunity to remind all Canadians, through you, Mr. Speaker, that a person is not automatically immune to polio and that polio vaccine, as well as booster shots, have to be taken to be immune. I have no knowledge of any shortage of polio vaccine. However, I think this is a good opportunity to remind all Canadians of their responsibility for their own health and of the necessity for them to seek this vaccine which is available and to obtain shots.

POLIO VIRUS IN OTTAWA AREA—SUSCEPTIBILITY OF STRAIN TO SALK VACCINE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like some assurance whether or not adequate supplies of vaccine are on hand and, even more important, is a delivery system being set up for school vaccination programs so that every child in the province who has not been vaccinated will have the opportunity to be vaccinated before the end of the school year?

May I also ask another question related to the same matter while I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker. Have any laboratory tests been conducted to see whether or not the five strains that have been discovered in the sewage treatment plants are strains which are susceptible to the Salk vaccine, or will some other vaccine be necessary in view of the types of strains that have been discovered?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, laboratory tests have been requested by the researcher and the viruses have been identified in federal laboratories, but it is my understanding that the tests have not yet been completed. As for special vaccination programs particularly in schools, these are a provincial responsibility. I will bring the hon. member's question to the attention of the appropriate provincial ministers.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—REASON FOR CONTROL OF IMPORTS BY MARKETING AGENCY—BENEFITS TO CONSUMER

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last Thursday in the House the minister stated that the Canadian consumer received no benefit in the past from private egg importers. What benefits can the Canadian consumer expect from CEMA's recent profitable transactions? I would also ask the minister, since it has been stated government policy that CEMA should not have control over licensing for egg imports, how he can explain to the House his encouragement of CEMA to do indirectly that which government policy forbids directly, or has there in fact been a change in government policy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will try to remember all the questions that the hon. member asked. Basically, what CEMA is doing is supplying eggs to consumers at prices that are not inflated, and they have done so more successfully than have the producers of any other commodity consumed by Canadians. The price of eggs has changed less that that of any other product. If other products had changed in price as little as eggs, then we would have had no such thing as inflation over the last six months.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Whelan: CEMA has to observe the global quotas that are laid down, but as for the supplementary quotas they are well within the law in what they are doing. They put the eggs on the market, and if they were the sole importer and they made the money the private importers are making, then they could offset the cost of eggs to consumers.

Mr. Grafftey: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Prior to the business that occurred last Monday, of which the minister has told the House he is well aware, the minister told the House that it was government policy that CEMA should not have control over licensing for imported eggs. The minister has encouraged CEMA to do indirectly what it has been forbidden to do directly. For that reason I would ask the minister, yes or no, whether there has been a change in government policy; and is he now admitting that CEMA has a complete monopoly over eggs, including imported eggs?

Mr. Whelan: No, Mr. Speaker, CEMA does not have a complete monopoly. There are approximately 4,600 egg producers in Canada and several hundred, maybe thousand, additional egg producers who have anywhere from one to 500 laying hens and market their eggs in many forms. These producers are under the control of no one. So they do not have a monopoly. There has been no change in government policy concerning who should or should not be importers of eggs. They have made a submission to me and to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce asking that they be the sole importers of eggs. It would be nothing new. To import oats, wheat or barley through the Canadian Wheat Board one must obtain a permit from the Canadian Wheat Board. If one wants to import butter into Canada, one must obtain a permit from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is the same thing that is being done in respect of eggs. It is nothing new at all.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

VETERINARIANS—UNFILLED POSITIONS AND LOW MORALE AS RESULT OF LOW SALARIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the 140 unfilled veterinary positions and the increasing number of resignations of veterinarians in the health of animals branch of the Department of Agriculture in Canada due to a salary schedule which over the last eight years has not even kept up with inflation, what action is the minister taking to rectify this? As he knows very well, morale in the department is now less than satisfactory and getting worse every day.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows that negotiations are going on between the veterinarians and my department and between the civil service commission and the Treasury Board. Maybe the President of the Treasury Board can add a little to that.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATIONS WITH VETERINARIANS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that salary negotiations have broken off between the veterinarians in the health of animals branch and Treasury Board and a strike is now imminent which would have disastrous results for consumers, the livestock producers, the meat packing industry and our meat exports, will the Treasury Board now meet with representatives of the veterinary group, bargain in all honesty and good faith and formulate a salary schedule that will at long last recognize a long overdue inequity?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we are always prepared to meet our civil servants' organizations to settle our problems by mutual agreement. Of course we must comply with Parliament's decisions which imposed limits on amounts to be paid as salary increases. Veterinarians could take into consideration that hon. members are going to freeze their own salaries and expenses this afternoon.

FINANCE

EFFECT OF ENERGY POLICY ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN ATLANTIC AREA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and relates to questions raised last week concerning the meeting of first ministers later this week with regard to energy pricing. Inasmuch as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion indicated last week the concern of his department with regard to the growing price differential, particularly in the area of electrical costs, and expressed this concern to other colleagues in the cabinet, could the minister indicate whether or not the government has arrived at a policy decision in respect of the differential which will be allowed to develop in electrical prices realizing the offsetting effect this would have on the government's whole program relating to regional development.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government will be put before the provinces. As the hon. member knows there will be a meeting of first ministers on Thursday this week. The position of the government I think will become clear at that meeting.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since the minister last week referred specifically to the question of the price of petroleum and natural gas, but did not indicate specifically whether the question would also centre on the matter of electrical pricing which has become extremely difficult for a number of provinces, particularly those in eastern Canada, can he indicate whether there is preparation to discuss this issue with the premiers when they meet.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there has been a specific discussion of the question of the position of the Atlantic provinces which are dependent in the main upon petroleum for electricity generation within the province. The governement has not reached a decision nor do I believe there will be any discussion about the general pricing of energy in Canada. As the hon. member knows the lowest rate for electrical energy I believe is in the province of Manitoba at this time. The government has no notion of equalizing electrical rates across Canada to the rates in Manitoba.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT—INQUIRY AS TO TREASURY BOARD APPROVAL

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question follows one by the hon. member for Victoria and by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. It has to do with the Lockheed contract and is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It is understood that before major projects are submitted to cabinet for approval the Treasury Board must approve the financial arrangements. Did this happen in the Lockheed deal before the project was submitted to cabinet on November 27 last and if not, why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board had studied this contract as any others and, as a matter of fact, one of the issues which the Treasury Board was concerned with was the interim financing, and the matter having been apparently settled, at the last meeting of the Treasury Board we authorized the Minister of Supply and Services to sign the contract.

MANPOWER

REQUEST THAT FUNDS BE ALLOTTED COMMUNITY PROJECTS ALREADY UNDERTAKEN

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

As the Company of Young Canadians has been dismantled, and, as a result, some areas such as the Gaspé Peninsula and Témiscamingue have been severely affected, can the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether the government intends to give special assistance so that the community projects now under way can be completed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House knows that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has had discussions with the provincial authorities and that several projects now under study are being implemented in that area of the province of Quebec.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST PRIVATE SECTOR EXPANDING IN HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT AREAS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board as a result of the discussions he had with the Canadian Economic Policy Committee. It is reported that the President of the Treasury Board has urged the private sector to help cut public spending by shifting investment and expansion plans toward high unemployment regions. Is the minister in a position now to advise the House what type of incentives are being considered by the government to assist the private sector to realize this objective, keeping in mind that the control period certainly does not lend too much to reaching that objective at this time?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my message to that group was rather simple. I told them they should themselves also make efforts to create employment in those areas where there is unemployment. We often hear complaints about there being a shortage of workers in areas of great economic growth; without asking everyone to move to the Golden Horseshoe perhaps some of the industrialists in that area could go to other places in Canada where there is competent manpower that is eager to work.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the private sector will have a great deal of difficulty accomplishing the minister's objective. At the same time the minister indicated, and it is reported, that the federal government is determined to limit further its expenditures. As I understand it, this matter is presently before cabinet for approval. Can the minister advise when a statement will be made in this regard?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly in what regard. I spoke of the government budget control policy. We do not want to increase our expenditures during the current year and have shown great determination in reducing them since last December. With regard to the invitation extended to industry to settle in areas where there is a shortage of employment, it is self-explanatory. I am happy to see the hon. member does not disagree with my policy.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING PROFESSIONALS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the publication by the Anti-Inflation Board of the regulations regarding professionals, and in view of the fact that the initial advice of accountants is one of considerable dismay about the ability of the individual professional to comprehend and comply with the regulations, and as the advice now given to many professionals by their accountants is to reduce their productivity, will the minister consider having another look at the regulations to see if they could be made clearer and easier to follow.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as a first step I think I would like to check as to the accuracy of the premise of that question.

HOUSING

REPRESENTATIONS FROM QUEBEC CONCERNING RENOVATION PROJECT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, of which I have given him notice, but since he is not here I will put it to his parliamentary secretary.

As a result of a meeting with the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs and the vice-president of the executive committee of the City of Montreal, could the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs tell the House whether the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs has sent him a letter or telegram about housing renovation within the sector of intervention recognized at the meeting of March 1975 concerning the subsidies provided by Quebec for residential renovation?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I must answer no. I have tried to find the answer, since the member had given notice of his question. I could not communicate with the minister concerned. We are as anxious as he is to proceed with housing renovation. I hope that in Montreal a residential rehabilitation assistance program will be undertaken as soon as possible and I will be expecting as he is the answer of the Quebec department.

PENITENTIARIES

SUGGESTED INSTITUTION FOR INUIT INMATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. R. Holmes (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Solicitor General and it is related to the recently reported comments of Michael Labrie, a detention guard, regarding the need for a northern jail for Inuit inmates. In view of the fact that related concerns were expressed at the Edmonton conference, which I know the minister attended, and in view of the fact that many of the recommendations made at that conference if implemented would have a positive effect in reducing the high rate of incarceration of native people in our penal institutions, would the minister indicate whether he will be making a full report and recommendations to the House in the near future about this important matter?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there was a more recent conference in Montreal about two months ago at which we attempted to follow up on the recommendations of the Edmonton Conference. Right now we have a penal institution in the Northwest Territories which is operating with our assistance in Frobisher and there is one in Yellowknife, but the Inuit people would like their inmates closer to their own towns, and we are looking at ways of doing that.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier in answer to a question I said that the Public Service Commission would join in the negotiations with the Treasury Board. In fact I should have said it is the Professional Institute of the Public Service.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK ACT

MEASURE TO ENCOURAGE DEVELOPMENT OF CANADA BY CANADIANS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-437, to amend the Federal Business Development Bank Act (corporate objects).

He said: The purpose of this amendment to the Federal Business Development Bank Act is to encourage the development of Canada by Canadians and to ensure adequate assistance for this effort by providing financial assistance and other assistance to Canadian citizens, landed immigrants and Canadian companies of which 51 per cent of the equity voting shares is owned by Canadians. This bill, in effect, will provide assistance and encouragement for Canadian ownership of the Canadian economy.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—SEPARATE UNIT SYSTEM FOR DISEASES SUCH AS "LASSA FEVER"

Question No. 4,121—Mr. Robinson:

Do any hospitals have a separate unit system for a disease such as "Lassa fever" and, if so, how many?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No hospital in Canada has at present a separate unit system designed specifically for a disease such as Lassa Fever. A Federal Provincial Isolation Facilities Working Group is currently well advanced with studies designed both to assess the need for such facilities and to provide both short and long term proposals in relation to the assessed need. The scope of the studies embrace other related aspects of contingency planning for such diseases including availability of appropriate virus laboratory and other support services.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ST. JEAN BASE, MONCTON

Question No. 4,594—Mr. Jones:

1. What is the (a) total, (b) estimated cost for construction of the Department of National Defence language training school at St. Jean, Quebec?

2. What is the estimated total annual (a) operating, (b) maintenance cost and, in each case, what are the details?

3. What is the total annual operating and maintenance cost for Canadian Forces Base Moncton?

4. For the years 1970 to 1975, were capital expenditures made at CFB Moncton and, if so, in what amount?

5. For the years 1975 and 1976, what is the estimated capital cost for CFB Moncton?

6. Is the Department of National Defence able to reconcile the expenditures for the language training school at St. Jean, Quebec with the possible reduction of the infrastructure and support services at bases such as Moncton?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) and (b). The National Defence Language school is part of the redevelopment of Canadian Forces Base, St. Jean which also includes the Francophone recruit school, Francophone technical training elements, base support elements and support to Collège Militaire Royal. Since the majority of the facilities are being built for the Base as a whole it is not possible to provide a realistic estimate for the language school by itself. The cost of the redevelopment of CFB St. Jean is $84.1 million in total program dollars including inflation.

2. (a) and (b). The total annual operating and maintenance cost for Base St. Jean for fiscal year 1975/76 is listed below. Operating and maintenance costs for the Language school cannot be given separately for the reasons given above. Military Personnel Costs, $3,819,543; Civilian Personnel Costs, $4,142,078; Equipment Operating and Maintenance Costs, $2,477,148; Facilities Operating and Maintenance Costs, $692,624; Total: $11,131,393.

3. $8,812,242 in Fiscal Year 1975/76.

4. The capital expenditures made at CFB Moncton are as follows: FY 69/70, $95,000; FY 70/71, $47,800; FY 71/72, $162,900; FY 72/73, $72,000; FY 73/74, $82,000; FY 74/75, $74,700.

5. The estimated capital expenditures at CFB Moncton are: FY 75/76, $128,000; FY 76/77, $96,000.

6. There is no direct relationship between the development of CFB St. Jean and the future status of CFB Moncton. The Department of National Defence has allocated resources to the redevelopment and expansion of training facilities at CFB St. Jean in order to meet approved federal government and departmental policies and objectives.

STOL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT

Question No. 4,913—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Has the government ended the STOL demonstration four months early and, if so, for what reason?

2. How much was budgeted for the STOL demonstration and how much of the budget was and will be spent?

3. What were the projected and actual (a) capital, (b) operating costs of the demonstration?

4. How much revenue was collected from STOL passengers and did it cover the operating costs?

5. Will DOT and Airtransit employees who worked on the STOL demonstration be re-assigned or released?

6. (a) What will be the disposition of the equipment used in the STOL demonstration, (b) will it be used in other (i) sections of DOT, (ii) departments and, if so, is this future use reflected in the 1976-77 Estimates?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The STOL demonstration is to end four months early on April 30, 1976 because the objectives of the project will have been met by that date, and the monies budgeted to the program will have been expended by that date.

2. A total of $24.411 million was budgeted for the STOL demonstration project. On April 30, 1976, it is estimated that this budget will have been overrun by $124,000.

3. The projected capital and operating costs of the demonstration were $15.5 million and $8.9 million, respectively. The actual capital and operating costs to April 30, 1976 are estimated at $15.5 million and $9.035 million respectively.

4. Total revenues collected from STOL passengers up to the end of February amounted to $3.378 million. It is estimated that by April 30, 1976, total revenues collected from passengers will have amounted to approximately $3.6 million. These revenues do not cover the operating costs.

5. Term employees with Transport Canada, will be re-assigned where positions are available. Otherwise, they will be released. Indeterminate Transport Canada employees will be re-assigned. Air Canada has been working very closely with Airtransit to ensure that all employees of Airtransit are given full consideration for any Air Canada job vacancies for which they are qualified. A number have already been hired by Air Canada. Also, Air Canada employees who were seconded to Airtransit are being reabsorbed on an individual basis consistent with commitments made to them when they were seconded.

6. Disposition of the equipment used in the STOL demonstration project will be determined in accordance with the needs of various agencies of Her Majesty's Government. Some equipment will be re-allocated to other sections of Transport Canada. Some equipment will be used by other departments. This future use is not reflected in the 1976-77 Estimates.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—GRANTS FOR AMATEUR SPORTS IN CONSTITUENCY OF TÉMISCAMINGUE

Question No. 4,918—Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue):

1. Since 1970, did the Department of National Health and Welfare spend money on amateur sport in the Constituency of Témiscamingue and, if so, in what amount?

2. What were (a) the names of the (i) short-term, (ii) long-term projects in the Constituency, (b) the amounts involved, (c) the names of the municipalities involved?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. There were no recipients of grants-in-aid resident in the Constituency of Témiscamingue during 1974-75 and 1975-76.

NOTE: The Fitness and Amateur Sport program does not normally cover capital projects and other forms of expenditures that are amendable to a designation by constituency. The nature of the funding program is outlined in the 1973-74 Annual Report of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Branch tabled in the House of Commons on February 11, 1975 (Sessional Paper No. 301-1/150).

VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—PARKING STRUCTURE

Question No. 4,948—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,556, could the Minister advise (a) on what date the feasibility study for a parking structure at the Vancouver International Airport was authorized, (b) what is the name of the company who made a proposal for indoor parking facilities at the Airport and what are the details of the proposal?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) In July 1973, a study was authorized to determine the parking requirements until 1980. The recommendations are being evaluated as part of the overall master plan for the long range development of Vancouver International Airport. (b) Rotopark Intercontinental S.A. of Montreal, presented a proposal for an automatic car parking system, utilizing computer controlled electro-mechanical equipment which would transport a vehicle from a designated drop-off point into the garage. The procedure would be reversed when the vehicle was required.

(d) (i), (ii) and (iii). Visual contact was established by aircraft with the Cape Freels at 0628 hours and surveillance was maintained till 0857 hours when due to deteriorating weather conditions the aircraft had to return to St. Johns. At 1357 hours visual contact was established with the life rafts and surveillance was maintained by a Buffalo aircraft until the Hudson arrived at 1725 hours to pick up the survivors. (e) (i) Aircraft, 38.2 flying hours. Marine craft, 72.4 hours float time. (ii) 205 personnel.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MANPOWER STRENGTH, 1970-76

Question No. 5,002—Mr. Matte:

1. From 1970 to date, what was the military complement for the (a) Navy, (b) Army, (c) Air Force?

2. How many servicemen were posted in the Province of Quebec in (a) 1970, (b) 1971, (c) 1972, (d) 1973, (e) 1974, (f) 1975, (g) 1976 to date?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. The Canadian Forces Reorganization Act of 1968 unified the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canada Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force into the Canadian Armed Forces. The table below gives the total strength of the Canadian Forces and the number of Canadian Forces personnel located in Quebec. The system of maintaining data was changed in 1970 and reliable data is not available for that year.

USE OF CANADIAN WINES AND CHEESES ON DOMESTIC AIR CARRIERS

Question No. 5,039—Mr. Flynn:

1. Has the Minister of Transport urged Canadian air carriers to use domestic wines on all flights?

2. Will the Minister consider urging all Canadian air carriers to use Canadian cheeses in place of foreign cheeses on all flights and, if not, for what reason?

3. Will the Minister consider urging all restaurants and duty-free shops who lease space in Canadian airports to stock Canadian wines and cheeses and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Transport Canada presently has no policy whereby I can urge or direct Canadian air carriers as to what type or origin of products the carrier stocks or offers for sale to its passengers. The carriers determine their requirements by customer preference, availability of product and the eventual selling price to passengers.

2. All Canadian air carriers stock Canadian cheeses on both domestic and international flights.

3. At the present time all restaurants who lease space in Canadian airports stock Canadian wines and cheeses. In response to the question of stocking Canadian wines and cheeses at duty free shops, I will direct my officials to explore this potential market area.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—ICEBREAKING AND DREDGING SERVICES

Question No. 5,105—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government considering assessments of any sort against ports in the St. Lawrence River who benefit from the provision of icebreaking and dredging services at those ports and (a) if not, for what reason, (b) if so, on what date can government action be reasonably expected?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Government is looking at the subject on a global basis and considering many ways to improve the revenue picture for the Canadian Coast Guard. Amongst the items under consideration are charges to beneficiaries of services provided through icebreaking and dredging services particularly when the advantages can be identified with individual industries. The benefits arising from these services in the St. Lawrence River do not always accrue to any one particular port or industry but may be beneficial to the entire St. Lawrence basin from the point of view of shipping, flood control and economic development.

TRANSPORT—LOANS TO MARITIME EMPLOYERS ASSOCIATION

Question No. 5,106—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the current extent of loans and guarantees of loans by the National Harbours Board and the Department of Transport to the Maritime Employers Association?

2. On what date is it anticipated that such loans will be fully paid?

3. Is any consideration being given by the government to forgiving such loans in whole or in part?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: 1. At the beginning of the 1976 shipping season, the loans outstanding to the MEA from the Department of Transport were $6.6 million. In addition, there exists a guarantee of $1.2 million which was extended by the Government to the banks in 1974. On all occasions the financial assistance was provided to cover expenses related to the early retirement of redundant port workers.

2. The MEA is to repay these loans—principal and interest—over a 10 year period with the final payment December 31, 1985.

3. No consideration has been given by the Government to forgiving its loans to the MEA and in fact an increase in the cargo assessment has been made effective March 22, 1976 to ensure a balanced repayment of Government and bank loans.

The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Nil.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

TRANSPORT—BERTHS 73 AND 74 AT PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 5,108—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Are berths 73 and 74 at the Port of Montreal leased by Logistic Corporation and operated for Care Line and, if so, under what terms of payback was the roll-on/roll-off ramp constructed?

2. Does the lease compare with the terms under which the ramp at Halterm Limited's facility at Halifax was leased and, if so, in what way?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Berths 73 and 74 at the Port of Montreal are occupied by Logistec Corporation under a permit of occupancy. The roll-on/roll-off ramp is part of the total complex the cost recovery of which is assured through land rental and a minimum wharfage warranty.

2. The ramp at Halifax, as in Montreal, is part of the total complex—Pier "C"—which is under lease to Halterm Limited. The terms of the lease include a land rental but no minimum wharfage warranty.

PROPOSED NEW CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

Question No. 5,179—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has the government prepared a draft of a proposed new Canadian Constitution and, if so, what are the names and job designations of all those involved directly or indirectly in the preparation of such a document?

2. Will the document be made public and, if so, on what date?

3. Was the document circulated to Members of the Cabinet and, if so (a) on what date, (b) what persons in the Privy Council Office and the Prime Minister's Office were involved in the circulation?

4. What other persons have been permitted to see the document?

5. Has the document been circulated to the Provincial Premiers and, if not (a) for what reason, (b) is it the government's intention to do so or does this represent a government policy of unilateral action on the matter?

6. Has the Prime Minister received expressions of deep concern from certain Anglophone Cabinet Ministers in regard to certain portions of the document?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. During the constitutional discussions from 1968 to 1971, many reports were prepared on different aspects of the constitution and on the way it might be modified or modernized. The schedule to the Victoria Charter contains a large number of modernizations, including the designation of a series of constitutional instruments as "Constitution Acts". In total these would under the Victoria plan, have constituted the "Constitution of Canada". The discussions which began in April 1975 have been much more limited and have not involved consideration of any new constitution. None has been prepared for or considered during these discussions.

2 to 6. See reply to question No. 1.

MANPOWER—CARIBBEAN SEASONAL WORKERS PROGRAM

Question No. 5,183—Mr. Matte:

1. For each year since 1966, has the Department of Manpower and Immigration made any grants to the West-Indian Seasonal Workers Programme and, if so, in what amounts?

2. For each year since 1966, how many West-Indian workers have had temporary agricultural employment in Canada?

3. (a) From what countries were they from, (b) since 1966, what was their salary in (i) Quebec, (ii) Ontario, (c) how many worked in (i) Quebec, (ii) Ontario?

4. Is the Programme restricted to the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. 1966, $6,804; 1967, $10,120; 1968, $14,110; 1969, $14,000; 1970, $14,000; 1971, $14,000; 1972, $14,000; 1973, $14,000; 1974, $14,000; 1975, $14,000.

2. 1966, 264; 1967, 1,077; 1968, 1,258; 1969, 1,449; 1970, 1,279; 1971, 1,271; 1972, 1,529; 1973, 3,048; 1974, 5,342; 1975, 5,584.

3. (a) Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, and Barbados. (b) Existing regulations require that Caribbean seasonal agricultural workers be paid at a rate equal to the minimum wage for industrial workers provided by law in the province in which the worker is employed, or at a rate determined from time to time by the Department of Manpower and Immigration to be the prevailing wage rate for the type of agricultural work being carried out by the worker in the locality in which the work will be done, whichever is the greater. The actual wages paid have usually ranged between the minimum hourly wage rate to levels much greater than the minimum. The comparison of the minimum hourly wage rates for each year the program has been in existence is as follows:

	(i) Quebec	(ii) Ontario
1966	$ *	$ 1.25
1967	*	1.30
1968	*	1.45
1969	*	1.56

4. No. Caribbean workers have not been requested by employers in provinces other than Quebec or Ontario.

MANPOWER—CARIBBEAN SEASONAL WORKERS PROGRAM

Question No. 5,208—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government consider abandoning the Caribbean Seasonal Workers Programme on the grounds that unemployment will likely reach 7 per cent during the summer months of 1976?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The Caribbean Seasonal Workers Program is designed to supplement, rather than replace, the supply of seasonal agricultural workers in Canada. The number of Caribbean workers admitted into Canada for agricultural employment during 1976 will be limited to the extent that qualified Canadian workers are not available for agricultural employment.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO CANADA THIS SUMMER

Question No. 5,210—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Prime Minister and/or his office or anyone else in the government aware of Her Majesty the Queen's wish to hold a dinner party on the Royal Yacht Britannia during the Olympic Sailing Games at Kingston, Ontario and of Her Majesty's desire to invite the Lieutenant Governors and provincial premiers together with their spouses and, if so (a) since what date, (b) did the Prime Minister and/or his office or anyone else in the government agree to such an invitation?

2. Has there been a delay in replying to Her Majesty's wish to extend such an invitation and, if so, for what reason?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Government is considering the final arrangements for Her Majesty's visit to Canada this summer. The Government is examining the possibility of proposing to Her Majesty a dinner to be held on board the Royal Yacht Britannia while at Kingston. There have been no delays to this point, and if a proposal is made to and accepted by Her Majesty, invitations will be issued shortly

TRANSPORT—GULF FERRY SERVICE TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 5,248—Mr. Marshall:

1. What are the names of the ships operating the Gulf ferry service to the Province of Newfoundland?

2. What is the classification of the ships as to ownership, charter, crew and cost per day?

3. What is the disposition of the ships owned and operated by CNR?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The following vessels are designated as operating in the Gulf Ferry Service to the Province of Newfoundland: (a) M.V. Sir Robert Bond railcar ferry. (b) M.V. Frederick Carter railcar ferry. (c) M.V. William Carson. (d) M.V. Leif Eiriksson. (e) M.V. Marine Nautica. (f) M.V. Marine Atlantica. (g) M.V. Ambrose Shea. (h) M.V. Marine Cruiser.

2. The following schematic of those vessels operating in the Gulf Ferry Service supplies information re. ownership, charter, crew nationality and charter hire cost per day.

Vessel	Owned by	Chartered Vessel	Crew Nationality	Charter Hire/Day
(a) Robert Bond	D.O.T.	No	Canadian	Nil
(b) Frederick Carter	D.O.T.	No	Canadian	Nil
(c) William Carson	D.O.T.	No	Canadian	Nil
(d) Leif Eiriksson	D.O.T.	No	Canadian	Nil
(e) Marine Nautica	Stena Line A/B[1]	Yes	Canadian[3]	$7,550 Canadian
(f) Marine Atlantica	Stena Line A/B[1]	Yes	Canadian[3]	$7,550 Canadian
(g) Ambrose Shea	D.O.T.	No	Canadian	Nil
(h) Marine Cruiser	Bahamarine[2]	Yes	Canadian	$1,397 Canadian.

[1] Firm Location—Gothenburg, Sweden

[2] Firm Location—Bermuda

[3] There is a Swedish Master and a Swedish Chief Engineer aboard these vessels in order to comply with Swedish law. These two (2) crew members are paid by Stena Line A/B. There is also a Canadian Master and Chief Engineer aboard these vessels who have the primary operating responsibility.

3. There are no ships owned by C.N.R. However, the current status of each of the vessels previously designated as operating in the Gulf Ferry Service is as follows:

Vessel	Current Status
(a) Robert Bond	In service between Port-aux-Basques and North Sydney
(b) Frederick Carter	In service between Port-Aux-Basques and North Sydney
(c) William Carson	Tied up at Point Edward
(d) Leif Eriksson	Tied up at Point Edward
(e) Marine Nautica	Out of service at North Sydney following accident
(f) Marine Atlantica	In service between Port-Aux-Basques and North Sydney
(g) Ambrose Shea	Tied up at Point Edward
(h) Marine Cruiser	In service between Port-aux-Basques and North Sydney

MANPOWER—AVAILABILITY OF SEASONAL JOBS IN AGRICULTURE, 1976

Question No. 5,251—Mr. Marshall:

1. Is the Department of Manpower and Immigration taking any action to advertise nationally the availability of seasonal jobs to assist farmers and food processors in the growing, harvesting and processing of the 1976 fruit, tobacco and vegetable crops and, if so, what is such action?

2. Has any consideration been given to tying-in the farm labour shortage each year with a training programme for students who may want to enter farming and food processing as an occupation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. A national advertising campaign will not be undertaken by the Department to make known the availability of seasonal jobs in agriculture in 1976. However, a national advertising campaign is already underway advising students to register with their local Canada Manpower Centre for Students. Students who register there or with other Canada Manpower offices are informed of any available seasonal agricultural employment. In addition, the Department will offer service to both farmers and workers through the network of Canada Farm Labour Pools (CFLP) during the coming months. During the peak manpower demand periods there will be no less than 78 points of service, some 62 of which are operated year round. Publicity and advertising is again being organized at all levels to ensure that the employment needs of both the farmers and the agricultural workers will be met. (a) Locally, CFLPs advertise the need for workers in local newspapers. They also arrange with Canada Manpower Centres on a daily basis to have workers brought in from outside the local area, as they are required. (b) Regionally, particularly in Ontario and Quebec, radio stations will be used for frequent spot announcements to outline current situations in the fruit, vegetable and tobacco harvests. (c) Nationally, brochures and fact sheets are used to inform potential employers and workers of the services available at the Canada Farm Labour Pools and Canada Manpower Centres (CMCs). During peak demand periods, the CMCs of agricultural manpower supply and demand areas are in daily contact with each other to make sure that workers are at the disposal of employers when required.

2. The Department already sponsors a program designed to attract young Canadians, primarily students, to agricultural work during the summer vacation period and to possible future careers in agriculture. Known as Agriculture for Young Canadians, the program features federal participation in the establishment of new or existing agricultural manpower programs for youth, operated by the provinces and cost-shared under the provisions of the existing Federal-Provincial Agricultural Manpower Agreements. The program was initiated in 1974 and, to date, the Provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia have participated. Inexperienced students, as well as other workers, who obtain seasonal agricultural employment through any of the Department's agencies are eligible to receive up to four days training with full wages. This assistance is provided at no cost to the agricultural employers under the Canada Farm Labour Pool's worker orientation program. Graduate students who wish to enter farming or food processing as an occupation have always been eligible to receive training directly from employers participating in the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Program.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AND SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING CERTAIN PAYMENTS THEREUNDER

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-81, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act with respect to the escalation of certain payments thereunder, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As is required by the Standing Orders of the House, this motion refers to second reading and reference to a standing committee, and in this case it is the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Because of the nature of the bill, it being a bill which concerns the internal affairs, in a sense, of the members of the House of Commons, it seemed to us to be more appropriate that the bill be considered in committee of the whole rather than referred to a standing committee where there would be few representatives of all of us from the various parties. I therefore seek unanimous consent to have this bill, after second reading, referred to committee of the whole.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the principle is certainly agreeable to us. I would just ask the minister, as the government House leader, whether it is still his intention to introduce the amendment which he spoke abut when I asked the question on business of the house; and when it is introduced in committee of the whole, I understand it will be done either by himself or by the spokesman for the bill. If that is his undertaking, then we are prepared to consent. I would be quite prepared to accept a nod of his head, if that is acceptable.

Mr. Sharp: That is the government's intention.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We welcome the assurance about the amendment. We would be prepared to give consent to have the bill go to committee of the whole.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I understood correctly—

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We were told that there would be a speech, on second reading, by the minister introducing the bill. I think we should hear that speech first.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as I have said at the meeting held at the House leaders level, I want this bill to follow the same process as for all the other bills and be sent to the standing House committee so that we, the representatives of rural ridings, can outline the reasons why we are opposed to the passage of this bill under the present circumstances. That is why we are refusing our consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to allow the minister to speak now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the bill speaks for itself and I would have thought that it could have been referred directly to the committee, but if it is understood that I am to speak, I do not believe it will be the most joyous speech I have had to deliver in this House.

On December 18, 1975, I announced expenditure reductions of the order of $1.5 billion during the 1976-77 fiscal year. Of course, these reductions were part of the government program to curb inflation. Among them were measured to end some programs, to cancel indexing of family allowances, to reduce costs approved for some Crown corporations and to freeze certain payments to members of the House of Commons and the Senate, officials and Crown corporations agents whose salaries are in the upper brackets.

At that time I mentioned that certain pieces of legislations had to be amended to make those cutbacks; I was the one who the day after tabled this bill whose purpose is to delay until the beginning of 1977 the escalation of the sessional allowances of members of the Senate and the House of Commons, which would have automatically taken place at the end of the year 1975; to delay until 1977 the escalation of the extra salaries and allowances payable to ministers, parliamentary secretaries and other members of the Senate and House of Commons receiving remuneration over and above their sessional allowance; for the year 1976, limit to $200 the portion of the monthly increase in the supplementary retirement benefit that is attributable to the 11.3 per cent rise in the Benefit Index during the 12 months ending September 30, 1975.

On December 18, 1975, I announced that we could save $600,000 in this way; according to our latest estimates, we will be able to save nearly $750,000. As the House leader said on Thursday, April 29 last, I will be moving in due time an amendment to this bill to freeze also expense allowances as well as current salaries for 1976. It is anticipated that Bill C-87, the Government Expenditures Restraint Act, will be given second reading soon.

As to the level of pay of the senior staff in the public service and crown corporations, I repeat that it will be frozen, that is maintained at the current level by an administrative measure, until April 1, 1977.

Mr. Speaker, if members of the Senate and the House of Commons examined this Bill C-81 diligently the Canadian people would know that we are capable of making very great sacrifices.

I hope that people, particularly those who are sometimes very cynical about members of this House, will understand that they are making an enormous personal sacrifice today. I think the salaries that members currently receive are really too low for good members, and I will defend that before any audience. There are thousands of people in the public service and crown corporations who are paid much more than private members. But, once again, for the good of the community, members decided to make enormous sacrifices by waving any increase in their salaries or with respect to their expenses for the current year. What I regret, Mr. Speaker—

● (1510)

[English]

This measure was announced last December, and there were very few people in the land who gave any credit to members of parliament for that. We imposed that kind of sacrifice upon ourselves. I am not talking about myself. I am a minister and I can survive with my salary, but I know many members of parliament who do not make much money, who have to go into their riding, who are not assisted by all sorts of organizations, yet they are ready to impose that sacrifice upon themselves. When we got a little increase a few months ago, there were all sorts of articles all over Canada blaming members of parliament. I consider $24,000 a very small salary for a person who represents thousands of people in the House of Commons every week from Monday to Friday night, who flies or drives back to his riding every weekend, who works 12 hours a day, and so on.

Mr. McGrath: We believe you, but they won't.

Mr. Chrétien: I am speaking for those upstairs.

Mr. McGrath: They won't believe it.

Mr. Chrétien: I know they will not believe it, but I can speak my mind.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I know of some in this House who have no obligations and no family. They do not care. But the backbencher who has a family is imposing upon himself and his family a very harsh thing. However, even if it is tough for him and for me as a minister, I want to tell the nation that members of parliament are not selfish and are putting the interests of the nation first.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the reluctance of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) in rising today to open the debate on this bill. The unfortunate thing for parliament, about which he spoke in such sincere terms, is the long-term effect of his statement of December 18, not for what it said but for what it failed to say. I characterize the minister's act on the night of December 18 as either an act of duplicity, on the one hand, or an act of stupidity on the other. But in both cases—not one of the other—parliament was dealt a great blow. So if the President of the Treasury Board is now speaking about parliament and what it means, then I am prepared to agree with him in those terms. I am no different from any other member of parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You sure are.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —in terms of how I view this place. I do not believe that the attraction to this place ought to be the salary. Of course it ought not to be. On the other hand, I have said in other debates, and I say again, that I do not believe that salary ought to be the determining factor as to whether a person who is here can continue to serve as an MP. That is the other side of the coin. The minister and I share the same view. But if that is the view which is held generally on all sides of the House of Commons, I think it is important that in terms of salary there should be some reasonable consultation with respect thereto among all parties in the House. In the case of this bill there was not that consultation. That is why I say it was either an act of duplicity, on the one hand, or an act of stupidity on the other. That is the first point.

The second aspect of this matter is how it was handled on the night of December 18. Many people have not gone back to look at Hansard for that night, but I have. Although most members of parliament are prepared to deal with the matter of restraint, this is what the minister said as reported at page 10156 of Hansard:

We are introducing a bill to freeze the pay of members of the House of Commons and the Senate for one year—including the salaries of ministers.

The word he used was "pay" and there was not one member who left the House that night absolutely certain in his own mind that the word "pay" applied only to salaries.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I know that the hon. member wants to be fair. After I made my statement on December 18, the new rule of this House permitted members of this House to ask questions. Perhaps the hon. member left, but some members of his party should have listened.

● (1520)

The first question asked of me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was, "Does that include expenses?" I replied, "It is the salary only." There was no duplication and no duplicity, Mr. Speaker. I was very clear in the reference I made in the House. I referred to the pay. If I had wanted to refer to expenses, I would have said so but I said the "pay". If the hon. member did not understand, it was clear to me, and also the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre recognized that and is why he asked for precision. He got it that night in the first question that was asked of me.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I am talking about the statement. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was making a statement to the country via television with respect to this answer, he said that the government was introducing a bill to freeze the pay of members of the House of Commons and the Senate for one year, including the salaries of ministers.

I do not know the feeling about a later clarification in this House in answer to a question, but even the clarification was not very direct if one looks at page 10165 of Hansard. What I am saying is that the impression among members of parliament who were here that night, and certainly the impression given to the country—which is perhaps more important in terms of the honour for which parliament is to stand in the minds of the people—was that all of the pay and allowances being set forth were being frozen. I do not care what was in the minister's mind—

Mr. Chrétien: If you do not know how to read, I cannot teach you.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Perhaps I cannot teach the minister either, but that was the impression, because next day the headlines in the newspapers indicated just what damage had been done to parliament. That is the point I am concerned about.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is credibility.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) says, it is credibility.

Mr. Dionne: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If you want to be all day on this—

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says that every member in this House had a specific impression when he left the House. I would ask how he knows what impression any member had? He certainly did not discuss the matter with me. As far as I know, the impression was clear.

An hon. Member: Your mind is an open book.

Mr. Dionne: Don't speak for me.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is hardly a point of order, in any event, Mr. Speaker. The other thing that makes the whole issue a bad thing for parliament generally is the relationship that existed with respect to this matter among members of parliament. There has been a tradition in this House of consultation among members. That was the tradition when we dealt with Bill C-44 which was handled in a way that brought disrepute to parliament. There was consultation then, and there has been consultation on these matters from time immemorial. As I understand it, in this case the only consultation that took place was with the Liberal caucus prior to that time.

Mr. Sharp: There was not, no.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If I need any indication of the argument, I can look at the Globe and Mail for December 20, 1975, where the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader (Mr. Blais) is quoted as saying that the increase in the tax-free allowance is needed to meet the higher cost of serving one's riding. How did he come to that conclusion? Obviously, there had been some consultation.

Mr. Chrétien: None.

Mr. Sharp: There was none.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): All right. I would not want to ask the minister, on the floor of the House of Commons, whether there had been any consultation in caucus since then. However, I think this House is entitled to know why, when the matter was raised by the then leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), by way of a motion under Standing Order 43 on December 20, it has taken all this time to bring the bill forward. What is the reason for the delay?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What consultation had to take place prior to that time? That is the position we are in. I am going to say to the minister, with all the respect I have for him personally, that in terms of the way this was handled, which has been described as shabby—and I repeat the word here, that is was handled shabbily by this government—we want to know why has it taken them all this time? Our party took the position, and some quite reluctantly, with respect to this particular place of legislation, that in terms of parliament and a commitment to restraint which the government had not answered in any way, we had no alternative but to say as our then leader did at the first opportunity on January 29 in a press release:

Clearly there was an element of deception involved in the discrepancy between the impression which the government generated and the bill which it presented. There was also a gross and needless breach of courtesy in the government's departure from the traditional practice of consultation with the opposition on matters affecting members' remuneration.

The government can accept this, or not, as they choose. That was the impression left among members of the House of Commons on the night of December 18. It was also the impression left with members of the press gallery on the night of the briefing prior to that, because I spoke to many of them afterwards and they felt that the allowances were subject to the same rules of restraint or freezing as were the salaries. We have had a difficult enough time in this House—

An hon. Member: Thanks to you.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —with respect to salaries. I think it did not lie in the mouth of the government to leave the impression it did on the night of December 18, and then refuse to do anything about it until today, or until last Thursday when it announced it intended to move an amendment in committee to bring the bill into line with the perspective it had tried to create.

Mr. Sharp: That is not the purpose.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I say that with some regret, because I am as proud to serve in parliament as anyone. The government should not play fast and loose with the traditions of this institution, however—and when it does, there should not be too much reaction from members of the government, particularly the minister, if I point out, with all the respect I can muster in the circumstances—

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): —that their handling of this pay issue has been had. Here we are, with Bill C-44 in place which entitles us to a salary increase as of January 1. That is the law. That increase happens to be frozen, se we are not receiving it. In the same bill we are entitled to an increase in allowances.

Mr. Sharp: Not "pay", you will notice.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We are in a position now where something will have to be paid back. The situation has just been exacerbated by delay on the part of the government. All I am saying to the government is that somebody on that side should tell us why. I think they should disclose to the House the reason for this. The position of the official opposition was quite clear on December 20, 1975—that extraordinary Saturday. I am sure the government had no doubt about the position of the New Democratic Party, and they had no doubt about our position and what we intended to do. The then leader of the opposition said that he intended to introduce an amendment to have the freeze apply to members' expense allowances as well as their indemnities. It would have been as well to take the bull by the horns and do the right thing, instead of delaying. The delay has not helped parliament.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Let me repeat what I said earlier about this place. I firmly believe that members of parliament make sacrifices. There are sacrifices involving travel which hurt the body and the spirit. There are absences from families. Many members must support two homes and meet double expenses. Many things disrupt and make difficult the life of the member of parliament. It is no answer to say, "But you volunteered for the job. You can always leave if you want to." That is putting service in parliament on the wrong basis.

As I said at the beginning, the decision to serve in parliament should not be governed by monetary considerations. I know some will say that it is easy for me to talk this way as my situation is somewhat different from that of a great many members. There are differences in circumstances. But if we all believe that service is the vital thing, and every one of us in this House ought not to let the President of the Treasury Board off easily. I am thinking of what happened on December 18 and December 20 last and the long delay in implementing this matter.

That is why we welcome this move for which we have asked time and again both inside and outside this House. We welcome the amendment to the bill which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) and the President of the Treasury Board said would be brought before the House. I do not welcome it because members of parliament will be entitled to less money than if the amendment were not brought forward; that is not my position. I think that members of parliament agreeing to accept restraint symbolize something important. It shows that we are willing to restrain increases in our own salaries and expenses and that members of parliament enjoy no hidden benefits.

Mr. Stanfield: There is nothing under the table.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, there is nothing under the table; everything is open and above board. All this should have been done on December 18, in my respectful opinion. I know that Bill C-44 provided for statutory increases to members well within the guidelines of the anti-inflation program. I suppose it is logical to talk about increases falling within the guidelines. I suppose we could do what is logical and permitted. But I ask hon. members to consider that this would affect how people outside parliament perceive this place.

The government embarked on the restraint program. I foresee difficulties down the road concerning pay and allowances. Nonetheless, we have embarked upon that road. That is why I regret that the government did not deal honestly, squarely and openly with this matter. I regret the impression parliament left with the people. For that reason, I welcome the amendment. We have waited for it a long time. It is a limited welcome, but a welcome nonetheless. The bill allows the government to do directly what it was afraid to do indirectly on the night of December 18, 1975.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the important fact before the House is that the government has agreed to present an amendment to Bill C-81 so that the freeze for 1976 on the income of members of parliament and senators will apply to all the moneys we receive. Bill C-81, without an amendment, went part way and, of course, we would have voted for it. But we shall vote for it much more enthusiastically now that we have the assurance that the freeze will be put on the tax-free allowance we receive as well as on our indemnity or salary.

I agree with part of what the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said, but with part of his speech I am in complete disagreement. I agree that the way this matter was presented on the night of December 18, 1975, gave the press, and through the press the public, the impression that our total income was being frozen. It was not so. Sir, I do not agree that we who were in the House that night went away under any doubt as to what was happening. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), during the course of his restraint speech said, according to Hansard at page 10156:

> We are introducing a bill to freeze the pay of members of the House of Commons and the Senate for one year—including the salaries of ministers. That is, the increase in pay they would have received in January under existing legislation they will not receive when the bill is enacted into law.

I recognized that the minister said "pay"; he did not say "income". But I could smell what was taking place. As soon as he sat down, I was recognized and I put the following question to the President of the Treasury Board, as reported at page 10165 of Hansard:

> Mr. speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In the bill to which he referred in his statement which is to freeze the pay of members of parliament for a year, may I ask whether that applies only to the indemnity or does it also apply to the tax-free allowance?

The minister replied in French. The English version of his words reads as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, that applies to the members' salaries.

Sir, I remember our discussion in the lobby that night. We knew, in all parties, what had happened. We knew that the impression was being given in a public way that the pay of members of parliament was being frozen. But we knew from the minister's statement that our indemnities would be frozen, but that there would be given a $700 increase in our tax-free allowance. The next day I protested strongly. That protest reached the ears of the media. By Saturday morning it was headline news in the paper on which hon. members base most of their questions.

An hon. Member: The Daily Worker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, it was not the Daily Worker; it was the Globe and Mail, without which the question period sometimes could be a flop. As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton said, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who was then the leader of the opposition, on the morning of Saturday, December 20, moved a motion under Standing Order 43 regretting the lack of consultation on this matter. He regretted the way in which the government was embarrassing all members of parliament outside the Liberal caucus by pretending that members' remuneration was to be frozen for 1976. Later, the hon. member for Halifax made it clear that he wanted an amendment to Bill C-81. But at that moment he was only expressing regret. A few minutes later, in the same period when motions under Standing Order 43 are considered, as recorded on page 10218 of Hansard I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the following motion:

> That this House urges the government to substitute for Bill C-81 a bill to freeze the total income of members of parliament including both indemnities and the tax-free allowance.

Of course somebody said "No." There was not unanimous consent and the motion did not carry. That was the last sitting day before Christmas. When we came back on Monday, January 26, lest the issue had been forgotten I moved the following motion, this time seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman):

● (1540)

> That this House calls on the government to indicate forthwith its readiness to move or accept an amendment to Bill C-81 to prevent any increase at this time in the tax-free allowances as well as the salaries of members of parliament, senators and cabinet ministers. . . .
>
> SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.
> SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

We did not get anywhere by trying to deal with this matter under Standing Order 43. However, we did make it clear on December 18, 19 and 20 and on January 26 that in our view, if we were going to take this big step of freezing the incomes of members of parliament, we should freeze our total income.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton says there has been a lot of delay. I join with him in regretting that long delay. I wonder why it has taken so long to resolve the issue. On two or three occasions when I asked questions about it, the reply from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) was to the effect that the government was not prepared to go along with our kind of amendment. At last the members of the government have come to the point where they are willing to do it. We are glad that is the case. Today we shall support the amendment that is to be proposed when this bill gets into committee, and we shall support the bill as amended.

The public was annoyed last year about the increases that were voted. It was annoyed again when the impression was given that we were freezing our total pay, when we were not doing so. I hope the same public will now give the House credit for doing what it is going to do today, or whenever this bill goes through, namely, removing the hypocrisy or stupidity of the December 18 position to the effect that the freeze would be on salaries only. Because we have reached that position I do not think it is necessary to keep this debate going much longer. However, I was startled at the President of the Treasury Board making such utterances as telling us that members of parliament are making a great sacrifice. Those were his words. He did not say that it was a generous offer or just a sacrifice, but a great sacrifice.

We are denying ourselves, in the year 1976, $700 that we are in the process of getting, some of which we will have to pay back. Surely, for persons who are receiving indemnities of $24,000 a year and then a tax-free expense allowance or $10,600 a year, to deny themselves $700, no matter what terms you put it on, is not a great sacrifice. When my friend, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), sat near me I could hear his interjections. I have an idea that on this subject he and I are not in agreement as we sometimes are on other subjects.

The other interesting statement of which the President of the Treasury Board delivered himself today was that the present salary scales are too low to attract good members to this House of Commons. That is a terrible condemnation of all members who are here.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the hon. member to be misled. I did not speak about attraction. I said that for a good MP with a family, the present salary is not enough. It is not a question of attraction, because they are here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: That is the point I wanted to make. I did not talk about attraction. I said that to pay a good MP $24,000 is not enough. For those who are no good, it is away too much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: However, there is nothing we can do about it. I just hope that at the time of the next election the electors will kick out those who are no good. In any event, I was talking about a good MP with young children. I was not referring to those who are rich, have other incomes, or no family. I am talking about the normal, average, young MP. It is not enough. I will repeat that anywhere in the land. However, I agree with the hon. member that for a bad MP that is too much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the statement of the President of Treasury Board that for MPs who are no good, the amount of money is too much. I wonder if we can post a list somewhere showing who will come under that category!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not like quarrelling with a good friend such as the President of the Treasury Board over what he said. He did say that the amount of pay is too low for those who have work to do, other responsibilities, and so on. He also said—and I wrote it down the minute he said it—that the present pay scale is too low to attract good members. If that is the case, how did the members of this House get here, because when we ran in the last election the pay was only $18,000, plus $8,000 tax-free allowance?

Mrs. Sauvé: Because we have a fabulous sense of sacrifice; that is why we are here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) says it is because of a great sense of sacrifice. You would think that the whole crowd around here were living in sackcloth and ashes, or in third-floor, tenements, making a great sacrifice. That is not true.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With $24,000 indemnity and $10,600 tax free allowance, we are not making any sacrifice in agreeing not to take another $700. In addition, we get free trips by air, telephone service, and all the rest. Also, there are the cars we are able to buy and the trips we are able to make. There are no great sacrifices around this place. On top of that, we have something that money cannot buy. We have the privilege of being here and playing our part in directing the affairs of this nation. I submit that is worth a great deal. In years gone by, greater persons than anybody now in this House came here for a lot less pay. Some of them really did make sacrifices.

My friend, the Minister of Communications was smiling when she talked about sacrifices. However, the President of the Treasury Board uttered those words as though he was quite serious.

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I was smiling, it was not because I did not believe what I was saying. I repeat that many members here live in digs you would not want to live. If you had to provide two homes, you have no other choice. I know that some of my colleagues have big families and cannot afford to live in what the hon. member refers to as luxurious apartments. They do not. They need to have a sense of sacrifice in order to stay here for the present salary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Before this debate is over, I wonder if the government will be bringing in a bill to double the salary.

An hon. Member: Would you accept it?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, I certainly would not. I voted against the last increase, as everyone knows.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the questions came one at a time, I should be glad to answer them. However, when there are so many interruptions they cancel out each other. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was dead right when he said how this place is perceived—as terribly important in this country. One of the ways Canadians have of perceiving this place is how much concern we show for ourselves or for the job we do. I think we are only doing as we ought to, as a place which is preaching restraint, in agreeing not to take any increase this year after the very substantial increase voted by the House in 1944.

● (1550)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where have you been?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sorry; I mean in 1975 by way of Bill C-44. The bill was brought in in 1974, but it was not passed until 1975. I hope I have made that clear. We support the present bill. We support the freezing of the pay, salaries and allowances of members of this place and of the other place for the year 1976.

The bill does not stop with the clauses which amend the Senate and House of Commons Act. It also contains clauses amending the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. The aim of that amendment is to make sure that no one, in 1976, will get an escalation in his pension beyond a certain amount, and this applies not just to members of parliament but to retired public servants, retired members of the armed forces, retired members of the RCMP, and so on. It applies to anyone getting any kind of pension coming under the government. The provision is that no one is to get an increase amounting to more than $2,400 a year. This, I submit, is a good idea. I would remind hon. members that there are lots of Canadians who never see a pension from their work amounting to $200 a month. We are simply saying that no one should get an increase, in 1976, of an amount greater than $200 a month. We certainly support that limitation.

I regret that when the President of the Treasury Board brought in a bill containing this clause he did not see fit to deal with some other things as well. He proposed a measure to prevent certain persons from getting pensions which would be too high, but I regret he did not bring in a provision to correct a situation which we thought would be corrected last December when we were dealing with Bill C-52. I refer to the fact that retired members of the armed Forces, the RCMP and others are obliged to wait until they are 60 before their pensions are escalated unless they can qualify under a rule which is sometimes known as the 85 rule.

When we were dealing with Bill C-52 last December, it looked for a time as though that rule would be modified, and I had hoped we might have dealt with this matter by way of the legislation presently before us. In other words, while we are seeking to ensure that some persons should not receive pensions which are too high, we should also seek to deal with the positions of those who are not getting the escalation they should be entitled to receive. I hope we can deal with this aspect in the committee or at the report stage.

After this quiet speech, despite the cut-calls and interruptions, I am happy to say we shall support, Bill C-81.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy with my action this afternoon, in preventing unanimous consent to the motion by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). If I objected, it was mainly in order that the people, at least those who receive Hansard, be better informed on the subject of members' salaries and allowances.

Had the first motion gone through, everything would have gone under the veil of silence as usual, and the people would have gone on reading all kinds of suggestions concerning our salaries. I want to point out I have no grudge against newspapermen. Only, I resent that some of them take pleasure, when referring to member's salaries, in including both indemnity and allowances under salaries paid. Imagine the reaction by people believing that our salary is tax free. This is unfair to the greater majority of newspapermen. I commend those stating the the salary is $24,000, the allowances are such and such a figure, but the salary is subject to income tax, and therefore if a member gets $24,000 and pays $4,500 in income tax, his net salary is only $18,500. The press have a duty to tell that story to the people, if they are to really inform the poeple.

Ot course, allowances are tax free. Nowhere in industry or the public service are officials' expense allowances taxable. The contrary would be impossible and irrational. Why should our expense allowances be taxable? They must be deductible, as those of senior officials, considering the higher cost of living.

I refer directly to the President of the Privy Council. I did not think him capable of dealing that way. Usually he practices consultation, he acts in a less unilateral way. But today, he introduced an amazing piece of legislation. If the MP's expenses are frozen, finally they will be the ones who absorb the higher prices granted big companies, oil and other. I changed car this year, and it cost me $800 more than last year. I use it in my riding to work for my constituents. Some may find this odd but, in my riding, people find it strange because they have never seen, in 14 years, a federal member of Parliament go around visiting the riding. But for 14 years now—the federal Parliament really does exist—people see the federal MP go about the riding. May I say to the hon. members and the people that to go around our riding costs something, especially in the rural ridings.

● (1600)

And I say that the motion moved by the minister today, the amendment to Bill C-81, discriminates against rural members of parliament. I would like to quote some figures. We are not all in the same situation as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who stays in Ottawa and never goes anywhere else. Mr. Speaker, I live 500 miles from here; each week, I must drive 1,000 miles before covering from 300 to 500 miles in to my constituency on Saturdays and Sundays.

I drive an average of 40,000 miles a year for the government. If people want to see my figures, I will show them. Last year, with what the government paid me, I had a deficit of $2,842. This does not matter since I depend on my two companies to make ends meet. But I agree with the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) when he says that if a member of parliament must subsist on his allowance alone, be will starve, and I have said so for 14 years. A member who has only his allowance must either starve or do nothing in his constituency, and if he does nothing, he will not last long in his constituency these days. This is why members of parliament who have only a salary and expense allowances live very frugally. They do not need to say so, they live very frugally. This is why I speak on their behalf today. I speak on behalf of all members who represent rural constituencies. When you have to drive 100 or 125 miles to meet a group of senior citizens who are unable to travel, this costs money, and we do not receive one penny for these trips, while members of legislative assemblies receive 10 cents a mile for their travels. I can assure hon. members that at the federal level, we look like beggars.

When the President of the Treasury Board introduced the bill to reduce salaries on December 18, 1975, I was in favour of a salary freeze. I was in favour of such a move even though it was completely different from the theories that are accepted for other workers. See how stupid we are in this House, if I may use this expression. We allow, and I speak of all other workers, increases of at least 12 per cent to be accepted, and increases of 12 per cent, 10 per cent or 8 per cent, and what do we do to give the example? We do not even allow ourselves a 7 per cent rise in the cost of living. Would you believe! In the constituencies, we pass for idiots. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is certainly to meet the wishes of the government, because some ministers are afraid of losing their job; as for me, I am not afraid, when they vote against me, I shall go back home singing, and as long as I am elected, people will have to put up with me and I intend to go on saying the truth in my constituency. When I meet intelligent people in the departments, I say so, and when I meet idiots, I say so as well.

Mr. Speaker, I know that today most members do not support this particular motion. It is not because they like money, but because they are tired of trying to boost the government's popularity, the popularity of politics. I think that a member's salary should be at least that of a high official who earns $30,000 a year; let the journalists note this figure, high government officials make $28,000, $29,000, $30,000, $32,000, $40,000, $42,000 a year, excluding their expenses. And I repeat, this year, their expenses will not be reduced and, mind you, I do not blame them, I admire them, because they know how to look after themselves, they are clever, their expenses will not be reduced by a single cent. They will pay and if the price of gas goes up to $1, they will pay $1. But us, if the price of gas goes up to $1, we will have to make a gift to the government and say: For our good government, let us pay out of our own pockets. Imagine that!

Once again, if they want changes, if they want to standardize things—I have been asking this for a long time—all they need to do is to give us the status of high government officials. Yes, the status of high government officials and let us be paid $32,000 a year plus an expense account. Wait and see at the end of the year when I submit my expense account, there will be much to be paid. Instead of $10,000, the expenditures will be around $25,000. Let us be allowed expense accounts. But no, we are restricted and we have to pay the difference. Then, we have to provide service that is in adequate, unsatisfactory in our riding.

I feel that the government is now working not only against members of parliament but also against the rural people. Today the government wants to prevent those people from receiving the services they are entitled to get from their members in their constituencies. Again, the salary does not matter to me. But as regards expenses, I shall not give up. If the government wants to freeze expenses, it should first freeze the prices asked by big companies. We have been asking that for a long time. The government keeps knocking down wages, but it should first freeze the prices of all those big companies, for they are at the root of inflation. Why not touch them? The government will come begging members of parliament again in order to save these big corporations.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

Mr. Speaker, I am fed up, tired of all this sham and I simply ask the President of the Treasury Board, if he is honest and sincere, to withdraw his amendment.

I was listening a moment ago to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I wonder which of the two has the power. He or the President of the Privy Council? It would seem that he follows the orders of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The minister should keep in mind that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre lives here alone; he has no family, he has nothing and he is satisfied with that. He does not have nine or ten children to look after, to educate, to clothe and to feed. Keep that in mind because he does not set an example for Canada.

An hon. Member: He is a burden for Canada.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Someone says that, on the contrary, he is a burden for Canada. Fortunately he compensates for this somewhat in another way. He is a very learned man who, I think, is needed in this House, because of his sensible questions. I am convinced that it is important to have people of such calibre in this House, but he is not worth much for reproduction.

Mr. Speaker, the minister said earlier that we might save $600,000. Imagine all this turmoil to save the meager amount of $600,000, when we have just authorized the Department of National Defence to go into debt to the tune of $1 billion. I really say to run into a $1 billion debt and I am satisfied that most people do not know that: it passed unnoticed. We want to save $600,000, and Canadians are saddled with a $1 billion debt for national defence. But for the defence of whom? The defence of what? We have nothing to defend, we are going to defend foreign countries. And now we run into a $1 billion debt for national defence. And if I were to go on this way, I could prove one by one every extravagance made by this Parliament in its expenditures, when it appeals for anti-inflation restrictions. But the government is at the grassroots of inflation through its wasteful expenditures.

But let them not put forward such a ridiculous amendment to make believe that something is done. We, the members of parliament, the people's representatives, have to pay at each election all our election expenses, let alone those used to help the population. Let us sacrifice ourselves! Let us not complain, let us not wonder why we cannot get members I was going to say of high calibre. There are here wonderful members, good workers, but no one with the Public Service with a yearly salary of $40,000 or $42,000 will be interested in becoming a member unless he can be assured of receiving a minimum increase of $3,000 a month or a minister's portfolio. Apart from that, we will not get anybody worth while, and we are going to keep on, with the new ideas that the President of the Privy Council has just put forward, finding it difficult to get serious candidates to come to this House and defend the interests of our fellow citizens.

I hope that the minister is not in fact looking for incompetent members so that he can control them more easily. In conclusion, I hope with all my heart, that this amendment will be lost and I once again ask the President of the Privy Council to simply withdraw his amendment and please everyone.

Let us stop this. He is embarrassing his own members, his own ministers, and there is a limit to making fun of members of parliament.

I think this nonsense has lasted long enough Mr. Speaker, and the President of the Privy Council should purely and simply withdraw his amendment.

● (1610)

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I think this debate is totally superfluous. This bill should not be before us. I do not suppose any woman giving birth to quintuplets would go through what we went through in setting the salaries of members of parliament with a formula to take care of cost of living increases. We had a fight among members of this House on all sides, and with the press and media: that is where the opposition was.

That having been settled, now we have what I suggest is a totally hypocritical and cosmetic action by the government, through the lips of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The blame lies right there. It is said that members of parliament should forgo the cost of living increase in their salaries. Nothing is said about expenses. Of course nothing is said about expenses, and quite rightly so. The world was not discovered yesterday. We have seen the tribulations of members of parliament on all sides. We have seen good members of parliament driven out of this House because of the financial exigencies of their position.

I agree with the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier). Those who speak against increasing salaries of members of parliament who must meet the obligations of their position either have an independent income or sit here in a corner in Ottawa and do not know what the constituency problems are. They do not know what it is to maintain a separate home in a constituency and one in Ottawa, or to maintain an apartment here. They do not know what it is to drive an automobile in a constituency, whether urban or rural. I have an urban constituency. I marvel at my colleagues in this House who represent rural constituencies when I see how they are able to absorb, without loud protest, the cost of moving around in that constituency at today's prices. What about the cost of hotels, the price of meals, the price of gasoline and the cost of automobile repairs? It is only a self-deluded fool who would say that these costs have not gone up. A member of parliament is supposed to absorb those costs out of his salary.

The union official, the teacher, the newspaper reporter, the news editor or anyone else who goes on official travel can deduct the cost as a business expense. They are compensated for the increase in those expenditures. However, the elected official, be he a school board trustee, a municipal councillor, a city alderman, a member of a provincial legislature, or a member of this House, is dismissed. He cannot absorb that cost. What public hypocrisy that represents! That is what I object to. I have been in this House for nearly 20 years and I object to these double standards.

The businessman is entitled to deduct his expenses in the course of business at the level of the expenditures. The union officials, the CLC officials who came to Ottawa the other day, will be able to collect their expenses and be reimbursed on the basis of today's costs. They are able to do it at any time. We have the situation in respect of the teachers and all the officials moving around. Do not think that all the shifting around of the officials we have in respect of labour unrest at the present time does not represent a great expense. Those men and women do not give up one penny from their pockets for that. All along the line in the public service, pensions are escalated to meet cost of living increases. Old age pensions are escalated in order to meet cost of living increases. Veterans pensions are escalated to meet cost of living increases.

An hon. Member: Escalations were denied in respect of family allowances.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They were denied in respect of family allowances; that is right. But all along the line pensions have been escalated. After that nauseous, hypocritical debate of last year with regard to the salaries of members of parliament, when a negotiated conclusion was reached about the first thing that was done by the government in order to, shall we say, sweeten the pill with regard to denying the vast salary increases to senior public servants who just previously had had a salary increase was to deny this to members of parliament.

This is purely a cosmetic and unwarranted gesture. The elected officials in this country are a small number of people dispersed in every constituency. In a school board district there may be six, eight or ten representatives. In a rural municipality or country there may be a few dozen representatives. In a city there may be from 6 to 20 aldermen. The members of a provincial legislature may total 105 or 110 across the country. We are 264. We are easy game to pick off. How do we react? People come down to this place to observe, and with less than two of three month's experience in how this complicated shop operates they are prepared to levy judgment on individual members and tell this place how it should be run. They do not even know their way to the head, to use a nautical term. If they had been here a couple of years, maybe they would have discovered the way to the head and then they would have decided how to run the bridge. I know I will not make any friends with this speech, and I do not intend to. However, I will say this; if I and the hon. member for Roberval and a few others intend to make ourselves the self-appointed ombudsmen on behalf of elected officials, I am quite prepared to do it because I think there is something fundamental to be said all through our system of government on behalf of the elected people.

● (1620)

I will not go into the various motives of why elected representatives seek office. But having sought office and having been rewarded with the confidence of the people, many hon. members—and I look to the left at my colleagues, all the way down to the NDP and the Creditistes, as well as to the government side—men and women who would have had far greater success in other occupations have given them up. Something that all too often John Public in the street, the reporters, their editors, and, God bless them, their publishers, seem to forget is that until you get into this game there is no way of knowing how your own personal occupation will be affected.

Those full-time parliamentarians who are professional men have seen their practices wiped out because this is a full-time job. There are some pooh-bah colonels running around in this country. I use that phrase to express that mentality which prevails in the newspaper offices, magazine offices and among commentators who seem to think that this is a part-time avocation; that having been elected, a member can just retire without loss, senior members of the House can be shunted out without any difficulty, members in the House who do not speak very often are not the best constituency people, and representation in parliament means putting on a show for the two o'clock follies known as the question period. That is the only thing that counts with a great many people, and particularly with the press. Let us consider the constituency. I point out to members on all sides of the House, who rarely speak in the House, who are true representatives of their people and who do their jobs well—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —that this is a complex job, more complex than any man written about, because in this day and age none of our colleagues has developed that disease of instant book and instant comment—we are too busy with other things to do.

I think this bill is an insult to members of parliament. It is an insult to say that we should not increase our salaries by 7 per cent, when everybody else is insisting upon their increase. What sort of chumps do the public think the members of this House are? I have already been asked in my constituency, "What kind of silly fools are you?"

An hon. Member: Yes, I know you are.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The only thing is that the proposal came from the Prime Minister. That is the point. This is a government bill, and he is the man who announced it. Why? Because there were some senior civil servants whom they want to whip into line. Therefore, they use members of parliament as whipping-boys on the fringe of that line. I know how many members here have spoken to me; I am a member of the members' services committee, if you have been here a long time, you get to hear confidences from members on all sides of the House, and I share their concerns because I think this bill does a total disservice to them. With all due respect to my friend the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), let me say to hon. members outside the city of Ottawa that the amendment is even worse.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will not only ask members of the House to vote against this bill; I will ask the government to adjourn this debate and withdraw the bill. It is unworthy of the House and it should never have seen the light of day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was an aberration in somebody's thinking that they should offer, as sacrificial lambs, members of parliament. Have we seen anything comparable in other legislatures? No, not for a total freeze but for a total wipe-out! Are we going to see anybody voluntarily giving up the cost of living escalation in any negotiated contract? Will there be senior citizens' organizations, who have as great a stake in fighting inflation as we have, writing in to say that next January the cost of living escalation formula with regard to basic pensions should be waived? Are we going to get the Royal Canadian Legion writing in to say that the war service disability pensions escalation formula should be waived next year? I challenge the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to say whether this should be done. Why should it be done only here? As an example?

Last year the hon. member participated in what I call an undignified public chase by people who did not know the complexities of public life. They did not know what it was like in several provincial legislatures where many of them are trying to catch up. I know that at the provincial level many elected individuals have to expect to live and support their families on their salaries. God only knows, but somebody seems to have forgotten families and our normal aspirations for our children in this day and age. When you get down to city councils you find that the level of remuneration there is far less than any minimum wage, yet the hours are far in excess of any union contract.

Why is one supposed to do that? For the honour and glory of the job? Is one to tell one's wife that she cannot have new drapes and the normal things in a home, and that the children cannot have what their peers or their counterparts have, because there is not any money? Everybody does not have a beautiful, cushy job. There are some people who have to earn their living today out of their own efforts, and we refuse to give them any consideration. I say that this is rank, public hypocrisy of the worst kind.

I want to ask those people who are the chief critics of this place, the publishers, what they have done with regard to their salaries in the past five years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about those editors? What have they done about their salaries? What about everyone in the media, or are we not supposed to criticize the media? Are they the sacred cows? They are people like ourselves. They live, too. They have their problems—but, my goodness, did they cut back? Does it cost me less now than it did five years ago to buy the Globe and Mail? No! I think it costs me 80 per cent more to have that newspaper delivered. I use the Globe and Mail only as an example because it was cited earlier. The Montreal Gazette is another one, as well as the Ottawa Journal and the Edmonton Journal.

Have hon. members looked at their advertising rates and considered what they will have to pay for advertising in those newspapers in the next election campaign? Have hon. members talked to the television stations and asked about their rates? They would say, "Don't be so silly. That is another thing; it is not in the same league". What is good for them is not good for us, but there are still some people who are prepared to pay, shall we say, a tribute to this gesture. I would simply call it brown-nosing, to be very blunt about it.

Mr. Speaker, I speak as one who has occupied the chair formerly. I have been in this House for almost 20 years, and the more I see of it, the more I feel that one of the chief requirements in this country is an ombudsman for elected people, elected members all the way from school boards up to members of parliament. Having said all that, I wish to reiterate what I have said before. All I have said since I started is a preamble to the plea I make, the plea I made at the time of Bill C-44 and on other occasions. That plea is that there must be an independent board, set up by statute and required by statute to report regularly on the level of salaries of members of parliament, judges, senators and senior public servants.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Because of the exercise we went through last year, and this particular exercise, frankly, I would like to puke because I do not like to talk about this. This is repugnant to us, but sometimes one has to speak out. We do want to have something which is honourable and decent. Let us not have anyone come back with the hokum argument that only members of parliament have the right to set their own salaries and that this is the only place where that is done. Let us consider members of boards of directors. Who sets the salaries of publishers? Who sets the salaries of editors? Boards of directors do, but many of those people sit on those boards. In any company where the principal officers are directors, who sets the salaries but the board of directors? The officers themselves. In any private company, who determines the salary of any of the directors or any of the officers but the owners themselves?

Mrs. Holt: This is the board of directors of Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is right, and there is no one else. The decision is made right here. But I say to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) that it would be far better for this to come under perpetual review. I do not disagree with hon. members setting the level of salaries, provided some experience, some common sense and some fairness is brought to bear upon the deliberations.

So let us get away from this charge, even if it is artificial, and let us have an independent statutory body which every year or every second year will make a recommendation that the salaries be adjusted. Let us not leave this to cabinet ukase to implement, so that there will be no political consideration. Unless there is a very substantial objection from this House and from the other place, the decision or the recommendation of that review board should be implemented. Then I think an adjustment would be safe from comment.

This bill is unnecessary, and frankly the government would do this House, the other place and the public a great deal of service if it withdrew the bill.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would entertain a question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Most certainly, if I still have time.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to say to the hon. member that of course I find the refusal to adjust members' expenses absolutely unfair, but I would also like to ask the hon. member who made a very nice speech on that subject why the former leader of his party, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), issued two press releases that lead to today's proposed amendment?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will very simply ask the hon. parliamentary secretary why did the Prime Minister make the very first move? I do not accept either.

Miss Bégin: No, it was your leader who started this by failing to abide by the agreement about readjusting members' expenses.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding all the hon. member's protests it was indeed the proposition of the Prime Minister that members salaries would be frozen at that level. That was the first proposition, and the most unfair of all.

Miss Bégin: No, he talked about expenses.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some enjoyment to the last two speeches. They were reminiscent of all the speeches which have been made on the occasions when pay for members of parliament was discussed. I thought we had got away from that. We got to the stage of setting up a commission at considerable expense. In fact, we did that twice, and a number of suggestions they put forward finally were enacted in legislation, including such things as an escalation clause attached to the composite wage index. This seems to be a fair and reasonable way of handling the situation. It is much more fair than members having to make decisions periodically. There are some of us who believe that our expenses are detached from our salaries, that they are separate and there is merit in some of those separations.

● (1640)

Mr. Speaker, I very much resent the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) went on television and used our salaries and expenses as the basis for eliminating some desirable and some less than desirable programs—LIP, LEAP, CYC, and one that I consider to be very advantageous, the indexing of family allowances. He indicated that he was going to cut down on the civil service. In my opinion that has not been done, and in fact a very poor example has been set in the Prime Minister's own office where a number of people have been added to his staff. The Prime Minister suggested on that telecast that members of parliament were going to help him justify his austerity program and set an example for the country.

I intend to move an amendment to the amendment that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has indicated he will introduce. I think this is the worst kind of legislation we could possibly have, where the government puts up a kite to test whether they can satisfy the public or even members of parliament. They went halfway; they put the freeze on salaries but they did not put it on the pay which included expenses. Now, after nearly six months, they have decided to amend the bill and ask for a recall of the pay that has already been collected on the expenses.

This is the worst of two worlds, Mr. Speaker, and what the government has done is a disgrace. They have delayed making a decision and putting a bill before this House for almost six months to freeze the salary increase that would have been obtained by the index. They have listened to the public and decided they have to add the expenses to the freeze as well. If they had found the public was not interested, this bill would never have been called but would have been allowed to die on the order paper.

I am sympathetic to some of the remarks that have been made. We have set a standard that can be justified. The index takes into consideration most of the negotiated contracts in other civil service fields. That criteria has been applied to our salary and the cost of living has been used in the expenses. That seems reasonable to me, but it also seems an idle gesture to make the compromise we are making in this bill and to add the amendment that the President of the Treasury Board intends to introduce.

Today we have been informed that Canada will spend a billion dollars to buy a number of outdated aircraft which are not suitable for the job they are intended for. No one in a responsible position has indicated that they can justify the role played by the Argus aircraft which they are to replace. I think the government's position is similar to that of Mayor Drapeau: when that billion dollars is multiplied over the years, it will probably amount to about $3 billion. The amount of money involved annually for the expense allowances of members of parliament is approximately $185,000. I think the government should not be allowed to pass this kind of restrictive legislation after they have tested the wind.

The easiest way to bring this matter to the attention of the House is to amend the amendment that will be introduced by the President of the Treasury Board and to make the operative date the date of the passing of this bill. I believe we should make this gesture, Mr. Speaker, because members of parliament should have been consulted. This House should have decided how the country could be persuaded to make the changes that are necessary to alleviate inflation. But we were not consulted. If the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) had listened to the question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when this matter first came up, he would have realized that only a partial gesture was being made and he would not have added the $700 increase that members were expecting on their expenses.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish on the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, nor on the President of the Privy Council newly married though he be the ten children that were mentioned by a previous member. Such a family would be difficult to raise on their salary. Many of us in this House who have no small children now forget about the responsability of raising a family. Recently I was talking to the provincial member of the legislature just elected in my area who had an new son a few months ago. His salary is about the same as ours, but he indicated that it is $4,000 or $5,000 less that he received for teaching school. He remarked on the statement I had made to a newspaperman who had asked me why I thought we should elect a provincial member who was a school teacher. I had said that we probably could not find anybody less intelligent, because as a school teacher earning the kind of wages he did, for him to want to run for elected office and get less money than he was getting would not be too bright.

● (1650)

Talking to him, I was surprised to learn that he must meet expenses to which I have been accustomed for many years. He cannot charge them against income, against income tax, and cannot obtain the sort of relief available to other people who in their type of work charge expenses against income. Perhaps members who have no young children should sympathize with those who have. Most members of parliament are willing to make this gesture. But I should hate it to be a political gesture made only to satisfy the Prime Minister. Also, I distrust any amendment which includes a member's expenses with the rest of his income. The government is doing it this way because otherwise it could not sell the idea. But this is a shoddy way of going about it. I am not proud of the government and I am not proud of the way members of parliament have gone about this business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Chrétien) which was agreed to on the following division.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—National Defence—Request for details of planning for improved surveillance, search and rescue in view of possible extension of jurisdiction to 200 miles; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Transport—Possible abandonment of rail service in Prince Edward Island—Government action to avoid crisis.

It being five o'clock, pursuant to order made on Friday, February 27, 1976, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, notices of motions.

The Territories

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR APPLICATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES TO TERRITORIES

On the order:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Nielsen, seconded by Mr. Stanfield:—

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should immediately introduce legislation to implement the resolutions of the Yukon Territorial Council and the Northwest Territorial Council requesting that the government apply those principles of constitutional and democratic development that will establish a fully representative and responsible system of government to the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories respectively.

Mr. Speaker: Is there an agreement or understanding about the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen)?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken with the government House leader but on February 3, 1975, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) proposed an amendment which is to be found at page 2855 of Hansard for that date. At that time the Acting Speaker reserved his ruling on whether or not that amendment would be acceptable.

In order to provide an opportunity for the Chair to consider that amendment, and in order for us to have ample consideration of the motion with the inclusion of the amendment, in private members' hour I would hope the House would consent to putting this motion over until tomorrow during private members' hour at which time the Chair could rule on the amendment of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie and we could proceed with the consideration of the motion, thus having a full hour's debate.

● (1740)

Mr. Speaker: The immediate difficulty with that is that tomorrow is an opposition day. I take it the intention is that it be on the next appointed day.

The House has heard the terms suggested by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Is it agreed that the motion which would ordinarily be called at this time will be put over and will retain its priority until the next appointed private members' hour, and in the interim the Chair will prepare whatever ruling was anticipated. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 5.45 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE RESPECTING PUNISHMENT FOR MURDER AND OTHER SERIOUS OFFENCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General) moved that Bill C-84, to amend the Criminal Code in relation to the punishment for murder and certain other serious offences, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, on opening the debate on Bill C-84 I am sure all of us are aware that we are beginning the latest instalment of a very old debate. Hon. members who have been here for ten years, as I have, will be participating in their fourth full-scale debate on capital punishment.

I am hoping that the House leaders will be able to work out a formal agreement among all parties that speakers will be limited to 20 minutes. I had prepared a much longer and more detailed speech, going into each of my arguments in some depth. However, in order to stay within 20 minutes I have cut the length of my speech so that we may use the time of the House in the most efficient way possible. The full text of my original speech will, however, be made available to hon. members and others, and I hope it will be read with some attention.

If in speaking today I convince some hon. members—and I am especially thinking of the almost 60 members who have not participated in a debate on this subject before—that we must look at this matter from a new perspective, then I will have done much to get this debate off to a good start.

I am convinced that if we attack this question objectively, then we must, from a logical, ethical and public policy point of view, conclude that capital punishment must be abolished once and for all.

In my view there are two central themes and two general lines of argument which embrace all of the secondary questions which must be answered in this debate. The first central theme concerns the issue of deterrence or, more broadly put, the question of how we can effectively protect the Canadian public against violent crime, in this case, murder. It is a discussion of the means to accomplish the end, which is protection.

I should like to go through the argument with regard to deterrence and protection step by step because in my view an examination of the evidence must lead us to the conclusion that capital punishment is no more effective a means of protecting society than other alternative less severe and less error prone means.

The second general line of argument concerns goals. While it is often said that arguments concerning means and arguments concerning ends or values are wholly distinct kinds of arguments, I feel that each has something to add to the other. I am convinced that many of those debating the question of capital punishment focus too narrowly, and for that reason misconstrue the nature of our task in this debate.

[Mr. Speaker.]

There is no doubt that those opposing the abolition of capital punishment will cite statistics to show that the reported murder rate in Canada has climbed since the last executions were carried out in 1962 from 1.2 murders per 100,000 population to 2.4 murders per 100,000 population in 1974. This is a legitimate statistic to cite, but the conclusion drawn from it is often based on such a narrow view of the problem we are confronted with as to make that conclusion suspect.

Those citing the increase in the murder rate and concluding that the lack of executions in Canada since 1962 explains the increase in murders delude themselves and those who listen to them. I say this because this argument utterly ignores the dimensions of the problem of violent crime. This lack of perspective, and this facile assignment of cause and effect relationship between the lack of executions as cause and the rise in the murder rate as effect are a principal stumbling block to an intelligent and informed public discussion of the real problem.

I can demonstrate to hon. members that the real problem we must deal with is not simply one of murder here in Canada but that of crime throughout the western world. In my original text I give statistics and arguments to support that demonstration. I do not, I hasten to add, point this out with a view to sloughing off responsibility or minimizing the horror of murder. Far from it. I do so only in order to point out that we must address ourselves to the right questions and that a simple concentration on capital punishment and murder takes much too restricted a view of the questions about which Canadians are concerned.

Concentration on the issue of capital punishment does not serve us well if our purpose is, as it should be, the finding of truly effective means of protecting the public against violent crime. Such a concentration serves instead to distract our efforts, as was pointed out by Sir Robert Mark, a 38-year veteran and present commissioner of the London Metropolitan Police, better known as Scotland Yard. This distinguished spokesman for the police community in Great Britain, in addressing the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police in Canada last summer made precisely this point. He said:

> I am therefore opposed to the death penalty and so are most of my senior and most experienced colleagues, simply because its continuance prevents the reforms necessary to increase the effectiveness of criminal justice.

In presenting the peace and security program the government is focusing on these real problems and this focus aims at including only effective measures to protect the public and excluding ineffective measures. That is why we are now debating this bill to abolish capital punishment.

Having said this, I should like once more to come back to the two principal questions I set out a few moments ago on the specific question of capital punishment: the question of whether capital punishment is an effective means to the end of protecting the public, and the question of whether the use of capital punishment is in keeping with the end or values which we as a society embrace.

The question of means boils down in essence to a question of effectiveness. The essential question is not whether the death penalty deters any would be murderers but whether it deters them more than life imprisonment does. As Professor James Q. Wilson of Harvard puts this issue:

> It is a matter of dispute whether any penalty will have a deterrent effect on murderers, but surely the prospect of a long prison term will have as much as most others. For the death penalty to be warranted, it would have to supply an additional increment of deterrence sufficient to offset the costs of imposing it, those costs being the risk of executing an innocent man, the opportunities for discrimination in imposing the penalty, and the foregone possibility of rehabilitating the murderer. Fairness would always be a problem . . . because, though imposition of the death penalty could be made mandatory, juries in such cases might be unwilling to convict at all for fear of convicting wrongly.

If this is the question, Mr. Speaker, what is the answer? From all the studies that have been done, both here in Canada and in other nations, one cannot draw the conclusion that the prospect of capital punishment is a more effective deterrent to prospective murderers than is the prospect of life imprisonment. Hon. members need not take my word for it. Let me refer to other authors more expert in the field than I am whose conclusions, I think, hon. members should listen to with close attention.

If I had time this evening I would cite at some length the conclusions of Professor Thorsten Sellin who showed that capital punishment has no unique effect as between abolitionist and retentionist states over time, and as it especially affected the safety of policemen and prison guards. For a fuller examination of these points I would refer hon. members to the speech I gave on capital punishment three years ago and again to the original text of the speech I was to give here tonight.

Professor Sellin's findings were also supported by many other researchers. This evening I will cite only one of them who carried out research on the subject of deterrents in the Canadian context.

Professor Fattah's findings played an important role in the last debate on this subject and are worth referring to again by those who have not read them recently. The conclusion of the study on the deterrent effects of capital punishment in the Canadian context is that homicide rates are conditional on factors other than the death penalty. They suggest that the cause of homicide and murder cannot be found in any single factor but in a total social situation in which a specially important or particular punishment can have little or no effect. Professor Fattah concluded that:

> The suspension (of the death penalty) is unlikely to have played a part in the . . . light increase in the homicide rate in recent years . . .

These conclusions of three years ago are equally supportable now, on the basis of later data. In 1973 as compared to 1972 the murder rate in Montreal and Vancouver fell and the murder rate in Toronto rose. The 1974 figures as compared to 1973 show a reversal of this: that is, the murder rate in Montreal and Vancouver rose, while that in Toronto fell. In 1974 as compared to 1973 the murder rate in Canada dropped in four provinces and rose in all the others.

Since the same law, with the same penalty, is in effect in all parts of Canada, then clearly the variation in rates of crime cannot be explained solely by that sanction. Other factors are at work, and if we are to do anything effective about violent crime then we must focus on those other factors rather than on the illusionary effect of the statute and the penalty itself.

While I am on this topic I should like to address the question raised by the findings of the Econometric School of Deterrence and, specifically, the findings of Professor Ehrlich of the University of Chicago. In a widely cited article Professor Ehrlich's sophisticated statistical studies are purported to show that each additional execution would have resulted in seven or eight fewer murders. Because the results of Professor Ehrlich's analysis differ markedly from the results of previous research on this question, his work has naturally been very closely examined by a large number of scholars representing a variety of academic disciplines.

Robert G. Hann, in a detailed analysis of the Ehrlich study and the follow-up studies resulting from it, stresses the finding of Professor Friedman of Berkeley University, whose examination of Ehrlich's work led him to the startling conclusion that if an algebraic error committed by Ehrlich himself were corrected and if the other aspects of his work were valid, then Ehrlich's own analysis would imply that each execution is related to an increase of 14 murders, rather than a decrease of seven or eight. I cite these studies because it is important to recognize that those who would cite Professor Ehrlich without at the same time citing those who feel his study is fatally flawed by methodological and statistical errors are treading on very shaky ground.

What is it possible to conclude from all of these studies on the deterrent effect of capital punishment? It is my contention that if no irrefutable evidence can be brought forward that capital punishment is a more effective deterrent to the commission of murder than is a lengthy sentence, then we must conclude that a lengthy sentence is preferable, and that the burden of proof to conclude otherwise rests with those favouring the death penalty.

An hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Allmand: Because you are taking life when you propose the death penalty. The burden of proof is on those who propose retention of the death penalty. They must show that retention does some good in society and has positive effect. Furthermore, I do not think retentionists can logically or ethically discharge that burden of proof.

But in saying this I am moving into the second question of major importance, the question of whether the death penalty can be supported by moral arguments, which is to say, by arguments setting out to show that capital punishment is the only adequate punishment to express society's outrage against the murderer. On the one side of this question are the many Canadians who would reject the death penalty even if it could be proven to have a significant effect in furthering the end of protecting Canadian society against murder and other violent crime. One of the most moving statements of this nature I have ever heard was written by Mrs. Pauline Maitland whose husband, Constable Leslie Maitland, was murdered in Toronto by a man who currently awaits our decision on death row. Mrs. Maitland wrote as follows:

> In no way do I wish to interfere with the course of justice and the safety of an already overworked police department, but the killing of this man would be completely foreign to all the moral standards of both my late husband and myself . . . It would not bring Leslie back and it is too easy a way out for all of us. Society condemns murder, but is willing to accept the murder of this man, in the name of justice. Please do what you can to prevent this terrible second crime, before it is too late.

On the other side of this question are those who believe that it is a dishonour to the victim of murder to do other than put to death his murderer, quite aside from the possible deterrent effect on others.

There is little that argument can do to affect those who hold either absolute view. But, despite this, I do think it is reasonable to say that the vast majority of Canadians hold views on the question of the suitability of capital punishment in our society that are amenable to factual and reasoned argument, and are not based on either absolutist moral position. It is these people I am addressing this evening.

To begin with, then, let us try to define the argument that capital punishment is the only "just" or "fitting" penalty for murder a little more closely. Clearly those who call for the reinstatement of capital punishment in order adequately to satisfy society's justified condemnation of the murderer are not setting up the death penalty itself as a goal or a value for society. I am sure that those who argue this position take it up because they see capital punishment as a justified reaction, not as an end in itself. But if it is not an end in itself, what then is it? Clearly, then, it is a means to another end, and that other end is the effective protection of society and the righteous expression of society's outrage against those who violate the ultimate value of the right to live peaceful and safe lives. But just as clearly the moral discussion on this point must then centre around the question of whether capital punishment is in fact just and fair both in theory and in application.

This is a complex argument, and because of time restrictions I must leave out some parts which are included in my original text. In the first place there is a great deal of evidence that, if justice requires fairness in application, then application of capital punishment in the past has not been just, because it has been applied disproportionately to those who are poor, unrepresented, and members of minority groups. This is a fact that is well established and does not merely refer to the contentious issue of execution in error alone.

Second, the sanction of death cannot be considered merely a quantitative extension of other sanctions in our criminal law. It is qualitatively, fundamentally, irretrievably different in kind and, as such, we as policy makers and as citizens bear an especially heavy burden to show that the special disadvantages which accompany the use of capital punishment outweigh the need to demonstrate society's outrage against murderers by other, less severe means.

What are some of these special disadvantages which accompany the use of the death penalty? I have very briefly referred to the irreversibility of the act of execution, which sets the death penalty in a separate category apart from all other penalties. I have also referred briefly to the possibility of execution in error, and to the inevitability—according to Professor Charles Black of the Yale Law School—of execution as a result of the application of capricious, arbitrary, and therefore discriminatory standards. Another argument frequently brought up in this connection is that juries are more reluctant to convict when the life of the defendant is at stake than when the penalty is one of fine or imprisonment. Do we have evidence to support this contention? The answer in Canada is yes, we do.

In the eight decades between 1880 and 1960 the average yearly conviction rate in Canada for murder was 37.7 per cent, whereas for manslaughter it was 49.7 per cent, for attempted murder 51.6 per cent, for shooting and wounding 64.6 per cent. A study of these figures, and of the figures between 1961 and 1974 showing that three out of five of those charged with capital murder were convicted of a lesser offence, makes it possible to infer that Canadian jurors are loath to convict for capital murder, but are quite prepared to convict for a lesser offence where life is not at stake.

From another point of view Professor Wilson takes note of the interesting fact that:

> In Great Britain, where judges had less discretion in imposing the death penalty than they do in the United States, the number of murderers found insane—and so spared the gallows—dropped sharply after the death penalty was abolished in 1965. It is hard to believe that there were fewer insane persons in Britain after abolition of the death penalty; what apparently happened was that the authorities no longer felt that it was necessary to protect the accused from penalties when the penalty was no longer death.

There is one final set of facts which I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members in order to allow them to weigh more adequately the wisdom of approving the death penalty as a justifiable penalty for murder. A recent article by Daniel Glaser and Max Zeigler showed that those who would have us indulge in the violence of state-sanctioned executions would do so only at the cost of engendering more violence—more murder—in our society. Glaser and Zeigler wrote:

> Demands that capital punishment be restored are raised whenever the public is outraged at a particularly heinous and highly publicized killing, but the geographic facts presented here suggest that this 'gut response' is counter-productive as a means of reducing the prevalence of murder. The evidence shows that where use of the death penalty is most frequent there is less long-run outrage against killers than prevails in states that forbid murder, whether by private parties or by the government. The alternatives to violence are, in addition to a respect for the sacredness of life, the many civilized procedures and practices of analysing, negotiating, legally adjudicating, or simply tolerating disagreements. All of these alternatives are impaired or impeded rather than nurtured when the government resorts to the murderer's methods.

● (2030)

If this conclusion is correct, that the carrying out of executions by the state not only does not prevent murders but actually may serve to create or maintain a climate where more murders and more violence exists, then the argument that the death penalty is a just and fitting punishment in our society in order to show our outrage against murder must be seen to be empty and dangerous rhetoric.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to say a few words to those who might be inclined to oppose this bill on the grounds that it is not a perfect piece of legislation, or on the grounds that the alternative suggested in the bill is not precisely the alternative they would like to see.

First, I am not arguing that this bill is perfect, or that in proposing this bill we are offering a guarantee that there will be no more murders in Canada. To those who have doubts about this bill because they think that abolition is right but the proposed alternative is not, I would sound a note of caution. The Canadian public are concerned about crime and have a right to expect protection. Murder is a horrible and heinous crime and must be sanctioned severely if we are adequately to express society's denunciation of the murderer.

I disagree with those who argue that a life sentence with no parole eligibility for 25 years is worse than death. A period of incarceration, with hope of parole, and with the built-in additional incentive for the inmate, and protection for the guards, of a review of that parole eligibility after 15 years is necessarily better than a sentence of death because it removes the possibility of an irreversible error of execution.

Second, available studies, including those carried out by Joseph Vernet, S.J., provide no evidence that life imprisonment is as cruel or more cruel than is execution. His survey of European countries which have abolished the death penalty in order to ascertain whether this abolition gave rise to more cases of insanity, premature death, suicide, escape attempts, and frequent punishment among those sentenced to lengthy periods of incarceration, provided no evidence to support this proposition.

Furthermore, the government has committed itself as part of the peace and security package to improving general conditions within institutions through such measures as greater flexibility of institutional assignment in smaller and more specialized institutional centres, greater efforts toward staff training and improved deployment of staff resources in such programs as the team concept and living unit concept, new programs for training and work assignments for inmates, the completion of the five regional psychiatric centres, and a great deal of research to identify the effects of long-term incarceration and other related factors.

Some hon. members might cite their constituents as saying this sort of program costs too much and that the taxpayers do not want to bear the burden of paying approximately $14,000 per year per capital murderer over the term of a long sentence. To those who are unwilling to pay the costs of incarcerating these people and who wish to save money by carrying out executions, I would like to say the following in reply.

First, I am certain that no hon. member would agree that human life should be expended because of potential monetary savings alone. That is a principle which I am sure no serious person would argue.

Second, the whole argument is based upon a fallacy. If we were to execute the 11 people currently on death row we would not be saving $14,000 a year for each of those inmates for each year he is kept in prison. This is because the cost of maintaining the inmate is arrived at by dividing the total number of inmates into the total cost of running our institutions, and the marginal difference of eliminating 11 inmates would be so miniscule as to make practically no difference whatsoever in the over-all cost of running our system.

One recent estimate of the marginal cost of keeping one more inmate in our federal penitentiaries worked out the additional cost for food, clothing, sanitary supplies and daily wages at just over $3.50 per day. This marginal cost may even be less than the special costs of trying, appealing, detaining under special guard and executing those found guilty of capital murder, as was suggested before the United States Senate committee on the death penalty and by such authorities as the late Governor Winthrop Rockefeller of Arkansas and former Governor Pat Brown of California.

I have argued today that there are two major themes of debate on the subject of capital punishment: the first is an argument over means, the second over values. I have examined briefly each of the attendant arguments on these two major themes and would refer hon. members to my full text for a more detailed examination of the arguments involved.

As a result of these arguments I am convinced that hon. members will see that the retention of capital punishment is not only ineffective but that it may actually be counter productive to the goal of protecting the Canadian public against murder.

When we examine the question objectively, and when we study the evidence closely, logically, and with an open mind, then the conclusion we must reach, if we are to discharge our responsibility to the Canadian people as legislators of sound and effective laws, is that capital punishment must be abolished in Canada now, and that this bill should be passed.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to think that in the four times that I have participated in the debate in connection with the abolition of capital punishment, back to the time of Prime Minister Diefenbaker up to this evening's commencement, that I too, as I am sure all hon. members do, have approached the matter with a logical and open mind, even though my views differ with those of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). I only hope that all members do not follow his example, and I say this without intending to be offensive to him—in attempting to be short, don't overshoot by ten or 15 minutes. My speech is going to be brief, as my speeches usually are in this House.

I am a retentionist and will be voting against the bill. I want to make clear at the outset that I, as with other members of this party, will be speaking for myself. All members in this party who will be participating in this debate will be speaking their own minds and will be voting as they see fit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2040)

Mr. Nielsen: I dare say there will be members opposite telling us that since this is a free vote the same will be the case with respect to members on their side also. Mr. Speaker, I am a cynic and I don't believe that, although I am prepared, as is customary in this place, to accept any hon. member's word to the contrary. I cannot see all those ambitious members sitting on the back benches over there going against the cabinet, and the cabinet in this case is 100 per cent behind the Solicitor General in favour of the abolition of the death penalty.

Mr. Allmand: What about your leader?

Mr. Nielsen: The Solicitor General asks: what about your leader? I can tell him that this party is, as it were, split when it comes to the support or non-support of the bill before us.

An hon. Member: So are we.

Mr. Nielsen: Members over there say "So are we", but I cannot accept that.

Mr. Sharp: We accept your view. You accept ours.

Mr. Nielsen: When I see that the cabinet is absolutely solid on the question I cannot imagine the mass of those backbenchers over there—and they are all ambitious people—going against the will of the cabinet.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): A lot of bull.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Marchand) says it is a lot of bull. It is not a lot of bull.

Mr. Sharp: Why not get down to your argument?

Mr. Nielsen: I am merely making the point that there will not be the kind of free expression of opinion from the benches opposite that we have been led to believe, just as there was not the last time we discussed this matter. It is just not going to happen.

Mr. Allmand: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, right now the hon. member is questioning the motives of members who voted in the last debate on capital punishment and he is questioning the motives which will lead them to vote on this particular bill. I do not think that is right. I believe members in all parties will vote in such a way as to give free expression of their views on the issue. I do not think it is proper for the hon. member to question why people will vote one way or the other.

An hon. Member: What about the cabinet?

Mr. Sharp: They have consciences, the same as you have.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The minister will agree that it is very difficult for the Chair to prevent an hon. member from passing a judgment as to the reasons for which members are going to vote. I hope the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will soon come to the subject matter of the bill. I do not think that reflections which are of a general nature can be forbidden. I believe the hon. member was referring to the procedures surrounding this debate, and in my view he should be allowed to do so.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me make this perfectly clear. I am not attempting to cast a reflection on the vote of any particular member, because that would be offensive to our rules; I am simply making a few observations with respect to the approach taken toward the free-vote aspect of this debate. To put it very simply, there is not going to be the kind of free vote over there as will be the case on this side of the House.

Mr. Lee: You will see that this vote is free.

Mrs. Holt: This vote is free. I will be voting free on this.

Mr. Nielsen: I have no doubt that that one particular vote is going to be free; none at all.

The Solicitor General will, I am sure, review the statistics, as no doubt other members intend to do. In my opinion that is a useless basis for argument. I do not think any more can be said than has been said in the three previous debates on this subject. Nonetheless I do not endorse the point of view expressed in one of the newspaper editorials tonight—I believe it was in the Ottawa Citizen—that closure should be imposed; that was the course this newspaper advocated on the ground that everything has been said which could possibly be said and therefore we should vote and get on with it. I happen to agree with the latter part of the suggestion, but I also believe members should have an opportunity to speak. However, those speeches, I believe, should be brief so that we need not be here until mid-July or mid-August.

No doubt those responsible for government strategy had the vacation in mind when they put the bill before us at this time. Speeches should be kept brief for that simple reason.

One can use the statistics the Solicitor General has exposed tonight to support an argument either for or against the retention of capital punishment. I do not intend to deal with those statistics but I am going to maintain that the death penalty is a deterrent. Obviously the government does not share that view, although I am sure the vast majority of the people of Canada do share it. The most recent polls certainly seem to support that contention.

I certainly do not put down the vast majority of Canadian public opinion as the Solicitor General attempted to do tonight, by inference if not directly, as being illogical or ill-reasoned, or opinion which is the product of closed minds. Simply because our opinion does not agree with his does not mean it is illogical, it does not mean that it has been reached with a closed mind, or that it has been formed by bias or prejudice on one side.

Mr. Allmand: I did not even mention public opinion in my remarks.

Mr. Nielsen: I will accept that statement, but the hon. gentleman did generalize by referring to "those on the other side of the argument", which includes that segment of the public which holds differing views.

My belief that the death penalty is a deterrent has its roots in my early experience in the Armed Forces. There are not too many of us left in this House who served in World War II. And there are not many of us, if any, who were not scared proverbially every time we came face to face with situations in that war which might cause death. In my activities, as someone required to fly over enemy territory and shoot and drop bombs and so on, there was never a moment when death was not a constant companion or when I was not frightened of meeting the spectre of death. I maintain that every one of us, or at least every normal one of us—I do not know how many that eliminates on the other side—would react in the same way.

There is not one normal human being on the face of the earth who does not fear death. I do not believe this can be gainsaid. One is therefore led to the conclusion, probably over-simplistic, that death must be a deterrent. No one is going to attempt to cross the tracks at a subway station if he sees a train is coming. No one is going to open the door of an aircraft flying at 30,000 feet if he believes that by so doing he is bound to fall out. No one would do a rash, foolish act if they thought death would result.

● (2050)

It may be that because medicine and law stand widely apart these days the provisions of the Criminal Code do not adequately provide for the treatment of those who commit murder, of those who are not absolutely normal. I am speaking of the legal definition of insanity and the medical definition of insanity. Perhaps they should be brought closer together, but that is another matter. However, it seems to me there are a large number of murders committed by persons who, even medical science would agree, are normal but for the commission of the crime of murder on their part. To them I say the death penalty is a deterrent.

I know the government does not believe this for a number of reasons, one being its recent rejection of the bill of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) respecting the carrying of firearms. The right hon. gentleman by his bill, which is on the order paper, wants a mandatory five year term imposed on any person caught with a firearm in his possession during the commission of a criminal offence. I say that is a deterrent. Before individuals commit a crime with a firearm in their possession I suggest they will think twice, knowing that if they are caught they will serve an additional five years in prison on conviction, quite apart from the sentence imposed on them for committing the actual crime.

It may be over-simplistic, Mr. Speaker, but I also believe that people will think twice about committing murder if they know that on conviction the death penalty awaits them. That is the conclusion I have reached, and I have not been swayed otherwise by the last debate on capital punishment or the two previous debates through which I have sat and listened to all the statistics and arguments pro and con.

The Solicitor General says that an examination of the evidence—and I am sure he has read volumes of it—reveals that capital punishment is no more effective than other means in deterring crime. One can cite the same statistics and adopt the same philosophy for saying that an examination of the evidence reveals there is no other more effective method of deterring murder than capital punishment. You can go around in an ever-repetitive circle in the statistical argument.

I believe my argument may be best summed up for the most part by a letter that I received very recently in the mail, as did all hon. members, from a Vancouver solicitor in connection with the recent murder there of Doreen Garbutt. He writes as of April 7 last:

At this most important time in the parliamentary debate concerning amendment to the criminal law and, seemingly incidentally, concerning capital punishment, I thought you might wish to consider the recent murder of Doreen Garbutt in Vancouver.

Doreen had risen to be office manager in a local company and was indeed a very charming, intelligent, hardworking woman who participated actively in voluntary community affairs. My wife and I considered her to be a most delightful friend as did the hundreds of others who attended her funeral.

One day, a few weeks ago, a former employee of Doreen's employer, who had been fired and who had threatened the employer, brought a rifle—

In my own parenthesis I say not a "handgun".

—into Doreen's office and killed her instantly in her chair. So much for a meaningful, worthwhile 35 year old; death instantly, at the hands of a man who then said; "that's my kind of justice".

This murderer will receive all the protection and help that our law has provided. He will be treated politely, will be well fed, well housed, given psychiatric examination and help, should he need it, and will be provided with competent counsel. He may then be convicted and jailed after which he will probably be paroled.

Even with our law as it is, this murderer could never be executed. Even with our law as it is, no murderer is executed in Canada because our federal cabinet abuses at least the intent of the law and commutes every sentence of death. The cabinet does not follow the law—it willfully disregards the law and for individual, personal reasons, collectively applied, it refuses execution for all convicted murderers.

Again I say in parenthesis, as it has been doing for the last seven to nine years.

And so it is that a bill is now before parliament which is not a "free" vote with respect to capital punishment because the issue of capital punishment is protectively cloaked in deliberate confusion by that same cabinet which ignores the law today.

I do not wish to make Doreen Garbutt a martyr to any cause, I do not believe she would wish to be. I do wish to point out that any person who has killed any other and who has been given the protection of the police and judicial systems which Canadians previously enjoyed and who is then determined sane and then on final court appeal, found guilty of that killing, has received every reasonable human and humane consideration.

It is my opinion that the convicted killer should then be put to death. I do not approve of hanging because I believe it to be unnecessarily cruel—the least cruel, least sensational, method of all should be used.

You may, or may not, agree with my opinion but at least I can speak freely. You, as a representative of your constituents, do not have the freedom I have because the bill ties your hands. It has been seen fit to present a bill to you which refuses you the "free" vote promised.

I urge you to defeat the bill presently before you and require the government to provide you with an opportunity for a truly "free" vote on capital punishment. At that same time, by additional legislation, the permissiveness now so evident in our criminal law could be restrained.

I might close on that note, Mr. Speaker. How does the cabinet, let alone the Solicitor General, expect me to lend credibility to his argument when he and his colleagues in cabinet have for so many years been willfully disregarding the law which they themselves presented to parliament and provided the majority for its passage?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: It is indicative of the malaise which pervades this cabinet not only with respect to its approach to this debate but—

Mr. Allmand: That is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: The Solicitor General says that is not true, but its actions speak louder than its words. Not one killer of a prison guard or policeman has been executed since the first law was passed in 1963.

Mr. Allmand: All in accordance with the law.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not argue for a moment that those commutations have not been within the law, but what the cabinet has been doing is abusing the prerogative which lies in its hands to commute sentences which the members of the ministers own party in this parliament decided should be applied to the murderers of prison guards and policemen.

Mr. Allmand: Only five since 1968.

● (2100)

Mr. Nielsen: They quote statistics. If I could be heard, Sir, may I say that the number does not make a particle of difference. What is important is what the cabinet is doing. It is evident from the fact of the public statement the Solicitor General has made that there will not be an execution while he is Solicitor General.

Mr. Allmand: I never said that.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not think—

Mr. Allmand: If you want to hang somebody, get somebody else to do it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member for the Yukon should be heard.

Mr. Nielsen: Again in response to the rather emotional outburst by the Solicitor General may I say I do not wish to provoke him. Even less do I want to provoke the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I certainly do not want to become involved in that kind of situation.

We are not arguing in this debate the question of hanging or not hanging. We are arguing whether or not there are justifiable reasons for the maintenance of the death penalty. Let us not colour it with the method of achieving that.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Are you ashamed of the means?

Mr. Nielsen: In case the hon. member did not hear me, I believe that the death penalty is a deterrent. It is that simple. Because of that I am not ashamed of voting in favour of the death penalty in cases of the deliberate murder of individuals, the premeditated deliberate murder of individuals. I am not ashamed at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: If the hon. member holds the opposite view, I respect absolutely that view. I do not wish to become involved in an emotional partisan split here in this debate. However, there are those of us who believe the death penalty should be retained, just as there are others who believe, just as deeply and just as sincerely, that it should be abolished. I am simply stating the reasons why I believe it should be retained.

I believe the death penalty is a deterrent. I have no knowledge to believe it is not. It seems logical to me that, since every human being has a fear of death, if this is on the law books it will make a person think twice before planning to kill someone deliberately. The statistics really are not convincing to me. They can be used either way.

Having said, and having promised the House, that I would be brief, I shall resume my seat after once again emphasizing the fact that those who follow me in this debate from this party will be speaking from the depths of their convictions on a personal basis and not on a party basis. That is the way the vote will go over here. I would hope there will be a change on the opposite side from the previous situation. I would hope hon. members opposite will swallow their ambition and vote from their beliefs at this one time and freely express their opinions.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I share one thing with the last speaker, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). This is the fourth debate in which I have participated on this subject of capital punishment. Having agreed with him that far, may I say I agree with very little else he said.

There is, of course, a danger of repetition. It is reasonable also to anticipate that in a matter of such emotional content it will be difficult to imagine that the attitudes of members will be much changed by the speeches made in this House. Nevertheless it is one of the most solemn obligations we have as members of parliament to deal with this issue as wisely as we know how.

In my party we agreed with the view that the subject matter, being clearly one of principle, members should be permitted to vote freely according to their consciences. It is nevertheless a fact that a common approach among the members of my party has brought all members of our party to the same view, namely, that we should vote for the bill and in favour of ending capital punishment.

In this debate I shall be speaking for myself, and other members of my party will be speaking for themselves. We understand why there are so many in society who believe that capital punishment is a necessary protection for human life and who believe, however unpalatable it may be, that the state should deliberately take the lives of individuals, and that this must be done in order to protect society. If we believed that society could be so protected we would have to support capital punishment; but after the closest and most careful study we are satisfied that capital punishment does not discourage crime nor is it the most effective deterrent. If it is not an effective deterrent, there is no excuse for it.

We reject the view that the state should impose capital punishment to satisfy public demand for vengeance. It is perfectly true that the death penalty may deter some. It is equally clear that life imprisonment may deter some. The facts on record are beyond dispute that on balance the death penalty does not perform the function its supporters claim.

A British royal commission on capital punishment noted that a study from many countries showed there was no definite evidence that the abolition of capital punishment led to an increase in the murder rate. Studies have been made in neighbouring states of the United States of a somewhat similar nature. Some of these states had abolished capital punishment and some had not. Similar studies were made of states and provinces in Australia. A study was made in two adjoining provinces, one of which had abolished capital punishment and the other which had not. All these studies indicated that the rise and fall of the murder rate were just about the same in the states which had abolished capital punishment as in those which had not. So the death penalty was not a determining factor.

Two eminent penologists, Barnes and Teeters, in the book "New Horizons in Criminology", state:

History reveals the most varied and numerous proofs—

I underline the word "proofs".

—that there is no correlation between the severity of the criminal code and the infrequency of crime. The statistics which we have available show that there is no ground whatever for holding that the murder rate increases when the death penalty is abolished.

Canadian studies have produced precisely the same conclusion.

The chairman of the British commission, Sir Ernest Gowers, was originally a supporter of capital punishment, but after presiding over the commission for four years and hearing expert witnesses, he became an abolitionist. He referred to the situation in Belgium where the results were so conclusive that further argument has been silenced and the lesson seems to have been learned, he said, that the best way to have respect for human life is to refrain from taking it in the name of the law.

Sweden formally abolished capital punishment in 1902, and I believe has one of the lowest murder rates in the world. It has one of the lowest rates of homicide of any country in the world. I was speaking to Swedish members of parliament and they told me there is no pressure whatever to reinstate capital punishment in that country.

Many hon. members here may recall that in the past in Canada the crime of rape was a criminal offence. The death penalty was abolished in Canada in April, 1955, and the maximum penalty of life imprisonment was substituted for it. Since that day there has been a steady fall in the convictions for that offence. Once again it is perfectly obvious that the death penalty was not an effective deterrent. Are we to ignore these facts, or should we take facts into account in making our judgment on this solemn matter? I suggest that we are obliged by conscience and common sense to have regard to the clear facts of the situation.

It was almost 13 years ago that the British House of Commons declared by a majority vote that the death penalty for murder no longer accords with the true needs or interests of a civilized society. One could go on and on with statistics, but the picture is indeed clear enough.

There is one aspect of the matter which should not be overlooked. I think the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) mentioned it. I have and I retain a deep respect for the administration of justice in Canada, and believe that it is of the utmost importance to the maintenance of law and order in a decent society that we should respect the law and those who are appointed to administer it. But this does not mean that there is not a real possibility of error. The courts themselves can make mistakes and sometimes make them.

Indeed, as one who practised before the courts for nearly 40 years, I personally know of cases in which the courts did in fact make mistakes. One of the best known cases was in England, the Christie case, where a man was executed after having been found guilty of murder, and only some years later did the person who committed the crime admit his guilt and demonstrate beyond doubt that the court had erred. There is a finalty about the death penalty which makes it impossible to correct such errors.

I was very familiar with the case of Steven Truscott who escaped capital punishment when he was found guilty of murder only because he was 14 or 15 years of age. I followed that case closely, and in my belief the dissenting judgment of Mr. Justice Hall in the Supreme Court of Canada was correct and the majority judgment of that court was wrong. Perhaps my judgment is wrong in respect of this case, but the possibility of error is very real and it is inconsistent with capital punishment.

The Solicitor General has already referred to P. C. Leslie Maitland who in 1973 was shot and died. He was a constituent of mine, and so is his wife. Naturally there was great indignation about the murder for he was a very fine police officer. I have received, and handed to the Solicitor General, a letter from Mrs. Maitland who now resides in Scotland. I have a slightly fuller version of the letter than the one which the Solicitor General read to the House. I have her permission to quote the letter, which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Brewin:

I learned from my brother-in-law that the man who killed my husband P. C. Leslie Maitland last February 1st, has now been sentenced to death. I would like you to know that the views of myself and my husband's family, on capital punishment, remain unchanged. We are totally against it. It would not bring Leslie back and it is too easy a way out for all of us. Society condemns murder, but is willing to accept the murder of this man, in the name of justice. Please do what you can to prevent this terrible second crime, before it is too late. Abolitionists may be in the minority but we still have the right to be heard. You can count on me, and my family to do anything possible to help. In no way do I wish to interfere with the course of justice and the safety of an already overworked police department, but the killing of this man would be completely foreign to all the moral standards of both my late husband and myself.

I have received, and I am sure all other members have, a number of messages from constituents, some for and some against capital punishment, but frankly I regard Mrs. Maitland's letter as one of the most cogent influences on my decision.

I want to mention another matter. Quite a few of the letters I have received have invoked religion and the Bible in support of capital punishment. The fact of the matter is, however, that nearly all the major churches have clearly and emphatically repudiated capital punishment. Included in these are the Roman Catholic church, or at least many of its spokesmen, the Anglican, Presbyterian, United, Baptist and Mennonite churches, and many others such as the Society of Friends.

I believe that the ancient precepts in the Old Testament which are quoted as supporting capital punishment were written when a barbaric system prevailed. Indeed the writers of those words were progressive. They sought to restrict the desire for vengeance to the person responsible for some crime and not invoke it and promote feuds between warring families. But they did not confine the notion of capital punishment to murder, nor did they confine the passage in the Bible in which they referred to murder but included such offences as cursing one's parents, trespassing on a neighbour, adultery, and other such offences. Can it be seriously urged that we go back to those barbaric days?

For me the basic Christian message is contained in the spirit of compassion and mercy with which Christ treated the crime of adultery. When a woman who was clearly guilty of adultery was being stoned by her accusers, Christ said, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone". In my view this represents the voice of true religion.

All I can say to those who have written and urged me in the name of Christianity to support capital punishment is that I think they are wrong. I do not say this arrogantly but with a clear conviction. I have also received letters from social workers, and they too have expressed the view that capital punishment should be abolished.

I am well aware of the fact that as a general rule policemen are of the opinion that capital punishment protects them. But this is not a universal view. The Solicitor General has already mentioned Sir Robert Mark, the head of Scotland Yard, who in a statement published in the Globe and Mail on August 29 of last year called for the abolition of the death penalty.

As I am sure all other members of the House do, I respect the important function that the police have in the protection of society. Nevertheless I think many people are in danger of expecting police to fulfil a function which they are not trained or obliged to fulfil in society, that is, to make the laws. In a democratic society it is the elected members of parliament who make the laws, not policemen. We should, of course, listen to what policemen have to say, but we should not permit ourselves to accept their views automatically as to what the law should be. Their function is to enforce the law, and in my view an effective enforcement of the law, the adequate training and payment of the police, would be a more adequate protection for society than capital punishment could ever be. I do not believe that capital punishment is an effective protection for society.

I want to deal now with a matter which has been discussed, and that is the position that members of parliament should take on this issue in respect of opinions expressed to them by constituents. It is sometimes said, by means of consultation of polls, that a majority of people in a particular riding, or in Canada as a whole, favour capital punishment, and therefore it is the duty of a member of parliament to reflect this opinion. I reject this argument. It is contrary to the principles of parliamentary democracy.

Of course any sensible member of parliament and one who expects to be re-elected considers his constituents' views and is sensitive to their opinions. However, we were not elected to be computers who count heads. We were elected to use our own judgment and conscience in the interest of the society we represent. We have no right, in my opinion, to put that responsibility off or to yield to what may be a temporary majority, or indeed may not be a majority.

I have received letters on both sides of the question from my constituents, and I think they are fairly evenly balanced. However, in the ultimate analysis I must vote in accordance with my own conviction of what is right or wrong. If enough of my constituents reject my view, they can defeat me in an election, but they have no right to stifle my own conscience or principles. If we were all to adopt this philosophy—that it is the majority view in a constituency, when one does not know exactly how to determine, which should dictate our opinions and actions in the House—we would deprive the House of members of independence of character who are required for the job.

I have stated this clearly and can only add that this view of the functions of a member of parliament has been clearly expressed many times before. As far as I know the first expression was by the famous Conservative writer, Edmund Burke. The same opinion was expressed by Winston Churchill, and if one comes closer to home, by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. I am not ashamed to follow in their tradition, which I think is the true parliamentary tradition.

I regret that so many people in our society misunderstand and think that they have the right, because they believe they have a majority, to decide how we should vote. Quite recently the British House of Commons voted almost overwhelmingly for the continuing abolition of capital punishment. This was contrary to the views said by the pollsters to represent majority opinion in Great Britain. If the elected members of the mother of parliaments have the guts to stick to their convictions, I believe we in Canada should follow their example.

I should like to close with two or three quotations. The first is from the great Archbishop Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury, who said:

> I believe that the example of the state taking life even when it does so in return for a life already taken does more to lower the value of human life for its citizens than the deterrent influence of this penalty can do to protect lives. In this way I believe that the main influence of the retention of the death penalty is rather to increase than diminish the numbers of murders.

I want to quote another person who has already been quoted by the Solicitor General, Professor Sellin, who indeed is a scholar and expert in this field. He said this:

> I have attempted to show that as now used capital punishment performs none of the utilitarian functions claimed by its supporters, nor can it ever be made to serve such functions. It is an archaic custom dying out through the world and ought to disappear in any civilized country.

There is one other quotation I wish to give to the House. It is a fairly lengthy one. It is a quotation from the writer Albert Camus, a very famous French writer who won the Nobel prize. He wrote an article entitled "Reflections on the Guillotine". It is true he was referring to the guillotine and not hanging, but I do not think the distinction is a very real one. He wrote this:

> Shortly before the war of 1914, an assassin whose crime was particularly repulsive (he had slaughtered a family of farmers, including the children) was condemned to death in Algiers. He was a farm worker who had killed in a sort of bloodthirsty frenzy but had aggravated his case by robbing his victims. The affair created a great stir. It was generally thought that decapitation was too mild a punishment for such a monster. This was the opinion, I have been told, of my father, who was especially aroused by the murder of the children. One of the few things I know about him, in any case, is that he wanted to witness the execution, for the first time in his life. He got up in the dark to go to the place of execution at the other end of town amid a great crowd of people. What he saw that morning he never told anyone. My mother relates merely that he came rushing home, his face distorted, refused to talk, lay down for a moment on the bed, and suddenly began to vomit. He had just discovered the reality hidden under the noble phrases with which it was masked. Instead of thinking of the slaughtered children, he could think of nothing but that quivering body that had just been dropped onto a board to have its head cut off.

I should like to have read more, but I will not do so. I commend "Reflections on the Guillotine" by Albert Camus as a most valuable and extremely well written statement of the case.

I conclusion I wish to say that I like all hon. members of the House, am very proud to be a Canadian. I will be even more proud if we in parliament reject firmly the backward step which would be involved in the retention of capital punishment.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, a moment earlier the speakers before me were saying that it was the fourth debate on capital punishment and I realized that they are older than I as I participate in the third debate on capital punishment which is the subject matter of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Criminal Code.

In 1967, the Liberal government presented the first bill concerning the abolition of capital punishment for a five year period experiment. In 1973, the present Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) tabled Bill C-2 recommending a partial and temporary abolition for another five year period but this time, to innovate, there was an exception for murders of policemen and prison guards. The Solicitor General was probably not satisfied with the results as Statistics Canada showed that violent crimes had increased during that experimental period.

With Bill C-84 we are again discussing capital punishment for the third time in ten years but this time the Solicitor General forces more firmly upon us the view that he always had about capital punishment. He proceeded progressively but so imperturbably that if he were alone against a whole population his view would still triumph. This is why he has always refused to submit this question to a public referendum. The minister knows very well that 70 per cent of the people would oppose his old bill and he still knows today that 71 per cent of the people favour the death penalty as long as social security will not be better guaranteed by the Criminal Code. And what is even more surprising is that the Solicitor General pretends to be a democrat in a one way democracy directed from the top. Mr. Speaker, I call this dictatorship. In any case, the present minister lost all his credibility with the people as he never respected his own legislation of 1973.

While emphasizing in his own Bill C-2 that murderers of policemen and prison guards would be put to death, what did the Solicitor General do with all these murderers who ridiculed the act by killing a number of prison guards and policemen between 1967-72 and 1976? He himself commuted these sentences into life imprisonment. Such is the concrete result of efforts by all members here during the past years. If the minister had spent the same amount of energy on improving penitentiary system, my assurance is we would not be faced with such a prison record that is shameful for a nation as industrialized and technologically advanced as ours, because these institutions are much more in the nature of schools for crime than rehabilitation establishments. Therefore, I cannot approve the suggestion by the minister, in Bill C-84, that capital punishment should be reduced to 25, 15 and even 10 years according to the criminal's classification. Certainly within a few years we will have to follow the United States. They are considering reestablishing capital punishment that has been abolished in a number of states.

Since the tree must be known by its fruit, we cannot expect anything better if the minister keeps his portfolio for the next five years. After the law providing for capital punishment has been ignored for the past years, in cases where prison guards and policemen have been murdered, what will happen now that the sentence will be reduced to 25 years imprisonment? Everyone knows perfectly well that if the minister ignored the former restrictions, he will ignore to a greater extent still the maximum penalty of 25 or even 10 years imprisonment for first and second degree murder. I am even amazed there is no reference in the bill now before us to a third degree murder, for which a decoration would be provided.

What is discouraging in this bill, as indeed in every other one, is the total lack of any reference to the murderers' victims. The minister commiserates with the unhappy murderers but he cannot spare a thought for the latters' victims. Mr. Speaker, when will we have members humane enough to look into that difficult problem, namely the future of the murderers' victims. I have always felt the essential purpose of a legislation was the adequate protection of the general public, to ensure a safer and therefore more humane social life. This assumes elimination of troublemakers, and if possible their rehabilitation, and the redress of first or second degree damage done by such trouble makers. Finally, we need an effective and permanent policy for the diehards, since in my view they are the worst kind of mental cases there are in our psychiatric wards, with that difference that the latter are not first degree murderers. Before going any further with parole provisions, we will have to consider total reform of our Criminal Code to include rehabilitation, help for crime victims and also greater rights to police officers.

As long as we persist in shutting up our criminals in the schools of crime that our prisons now are, whether it be for two, three, four or even six years, they will come out even more rebellious, and I would even say even more refined in their future actions.

Let us stop deluding ourselves, Mr. Speaker, and let us listen to the opinions of former convicts who, after their release, found themselves homeless, with no money, with the identity of a former convict. What can such a man do under the circumstances if not go back to his former profession?

If we want to really help the convicts, let us forget about Bill C-84 and introduce in the House another bill which will allow us to make our prisons and reformatories more humane. We should first of all select convicts according to their age, their offence and their social condition. For this, we should have appropriate facilities, and, even more important, qualified personnel, including doctors, psychiatrists, nurses and social counsellors, to bring the required help to all those who can be rehabilitated, and especially those who wish to get out of their abnormal situation.

It is certainly not by arresting a young man and putting him in a cell with habitual criminals that we shall reach our common goal. A society is made up of many elements and all its members cannot be super-intelligent beings or angels. We must therefore take it as it is, and face reality. It is certainly not by releasing someone who is not ready to reintegrate society that we can maintain peace. However, it is up to us parliamentarians to act on behalf of those who cannot express their opinions, that is the convicts themselves. Of course, there are some habitual criminals, but the very great majority can be rehabilitated if we bring them the help that they expect from us, the elected representatives of the people, and only from us, let us not forget it.

Prisons can be compared with psychiatric institutions, and this is why I firmly believe that a selection is necessary and that the people responsible must be given the necessary tools to operate a selection and give each individual a proper orientation. I have known some young people who went to prison for a small offence, or for a trivial slip, and who became then well-known bandits because of a penitentiary system which denies them any opportunity for rehabilitation.

Have we thought for one moment of this prisoner who is labelled as a bandit and who once was a little boy with very legitimate ambitions, like any other youth but for whom, during all his childhood and adolescence the streets were the only meeting place and who often had to look into garbage cans to find his food. One day, he decided to get out of his misery at all cost, even through illegal means since he already saw himself in an illegal situation. This adolescent had all the necessary qualities to become a leader, but because of the serious faults of our society, he became the leader of a gang. But is he really responsible for his situation? Whose fault is it, I ask you, hon. members, whose fault is it?

Conditional release is still mentioned in this bill, but in order to make it less accessible. With the experience of recent years, I do not call it conditional release, but "protectional" release, because unless an external influence, whether political, financial or other, apart from a few exceptions those releases are empty words. And I will go further, Mr. Speaker. In most cases, who is released and from what? Inmates from a smaller prison are released to go in a wider prison, but all the more fatal because of their lack of preparation. As a result they will become recidivists, for they will still prefer the walls of their earlier prison to those of incomprehension. As to assistance for victims of criminals, I repeat, our present code does not provide anything for them. Nevertheless, if the government is responsible for the welfare of the inmates, it is all the more so for that of the victims of criminals.

For example, take a father who is shot during a hold up; what is to become of his wife and children? Their pictures are taken at the funeral home, in church, and even back home from the graveyard, and then great silence. Often the families get only the meagre social welfare benefits to replace the income of the family's breadwinner shot while protecting our nice society.

Each time I witness such incidents, I wonder, in all fairness, what we are doing here. What does social justice mean to us? Mr. Speaker, why do 90 per cent of the policemen favour capital punishment? They do so for all the reasons I just mentioned, and also because policemen feel increasingly vulnerable in front of well armed criminals. Besides the risks they run with criminals, they always fear that their efforts be destroyed before the judges.

I would even say that in some cases policemen have two enemies: the first standing in front of them, namely the gangster, and the other behind him, the judge who is waiting for him. In this regard I note some of the weaknesses of the present Criminal Code, because of the restrictions it imposes on them, namely that they must warn the criminal before firing. In short, the killer must shoot first. The consequence is logical: the policemen get it first.

I personally witnessed trials which I found simply repulsive. While I was well aware of all the precautions taken by the police agents, throughout the trial one would have sworn the real gangsters were the policemen themselves. If it is their duty to see to it that the law is respected, then the judges should give them greater support in what often proves to be a thankless task. After all those considerations, I often wonder who the real criminals are: are they to be found at the top or the botton of the ladder?

If we could question every prisoner to find out what really happened, we would be surprised to find out that 90 per cent of them are in prison through society's fault, often because of some influence which is said to be unknown but that we all know full well, that of money which has forced those people to choose the less honest way out.

I certainly do not have the time to present a table of the serious faults of our society in arriving at our judicial system, nor do I have the time to go over all the arguments that were made in this House since 1967. Everyone knows quite well why we were against the previous bills and why we will be against Bill C-84. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) repeated tonight all the arguments we heard in the past 10 years, and I am sure that a month from now we will be able to make another volume similar to that of 1967 and that of 1965.

In all those arguments, one soon realizes that the Solicitor General has a fixed idea on the issue of capital punishment. Indeed, he will necessarily continue to use his right of veto on every future conviction, and continue to have it his own way. That is why I regret this absolutely useless discussion and we should let the Solicitor General of Canada continue to commute sentences, as he has already done, without asking for anybody's permission. When the Solicitor General talks about respecting life, did he only ask himself whether murderers ever thought about the nice theories advocated by the minister? We noticed in the inquiries into organized crime that the heads of criminal organizations have much more realistic principles than the present legislators. They have their own law, and that law is beyond appeal. You notice that gangsters do not play on words, as politicians who always fear public opinion do. They do what they think is best for their own society. So I say that if you want to fight those organizations you will not win by decorating their murderers. Let us not forget that the state is there to fully protect society, and nice speeches will not make our fellow citizens feel more secure.

Let us get down to the job of reforming our whole Criminal Code, and let us stop wasting time repeating 10 or 15 year old speeches. In the meantime, let us keep the principle of capital punishment, even if the Solicitor General has his mind set on commuting all sentences to at least reassure a bit our people who are waiting impatiently for something new in criminal legislation.

[English]

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in view of the speech I made in the House on May 14, 1973, and the many memos and papers I prepared and distributed on the subject of capital punishment, I shall refrain from elaborating on any arguments with which I dealt in the past. My approach means that many substantive points relating to capital punishment per se will not be made in this particular speech. I have chosen, instead, to deal with six aspects of the problem relating to capital punishment and crime in Canada: first, the general attitude of the public toward violence; second, my general approach to peace and security; third, the exaggerated perception of violence in society and one of its primary causes; fourth, the facts relating to violent crime in Canada, as I have determined through research; fifth, the new peace and security package, and a critique on it; lastly, capital punishment itself, on which subject I intend to make a few remarks.

Events in the past few years have created a condition in which the public are demanding sterner measures for the prevention of crime and the retention of criminals. Public clamour for sterner measures is both understandable and justifiable. The public's clamour and concern stem largely from the following considerations, as I see them: a perceived increase in violent and other types of criminal activity; a feeling that the criminal law is too lax that the judicial system imposes too light a punishment for many crimes that our prisons are insecure that our parole system is too lax in granting paroles generally and that temporary leaves and day passes are abused that the government itself is hesitant if not downright opposed to implementing capital punishment even when it is on our law books and that there is too much consideration for the criminal and too little consideration for the victim and society as a whole.

There is a feeling that dangerous criminals are too readily released on bail. There is a feeling that more emphasis is given to the rehabilitation of criminals rather than the protection of society. There is a general rebellion against the permissive society that all of us have lived through since the end of World War II. My approach to the general disposition of society largely parallels the concerns as I perceive them to be.

I am convinced that the vast majority of Canadians want to be assured that they and their children will be safe on our streets and not become the victims of criminal activity. I am inclined to believe that what we really need is new and tougher legislation covering a broad range of criminal offences, not just murder. I think the public to some extent feel that capital punishment through some miraculous means will in fact achieve those objectives. There are others, and there are many parliamentarians among that group, who feel that in fact the retention of capital punishment will not facilitate the return to a more peaceful and secure society.

We must be assured that those who are imprisoned for criminal offences are held in institutions which are secure. That is self evident. We must also be assured that our parole boards do not grant temporary paroles or temporary leaves to prisoners if their release into society would pose a threat to the peace and security of the public at large.

We must take steps to guarantee that our law enforcement officers at every level are given adequate protection under the law and are provided with an appropriate legislative base so that they may perform their function of protecting society effectively.

We must ensure that our prisons are secure and that prison guards are given the maximum degree of protection in the performance of their dangerous work.

We must review our rehabilitation procedures so that the term of imprisonment itself will be conducive to rehabilitation. We must have special provision in the law to deal with the case of the "habitual criminal" so that such persons will not be released into society at the termination of a sentence if the court feels that they will constitute a continuing threat to the community as a whole.

The whole Criminal Code needs to be reviewed to ensure that penalties match the crime and to guarantee that sentences will be served so that we can maximize the deterrent effect of the criminal law. We need appropriate and reasonable control of firearms in our society so that we can minimize the incidents of their misuse. I have spoken more specifically on firearm control in a separate speech in the House of Commons and I will not go into detail on that today.

We require bail reform to ensure that bail is not granted to individuals whose release pending sentence would be a threat to society. We need to re-define first and second degree murder, and to increase substantially the pre-parole period for such offences. Police powers need to be substantially increased to assist them in successfully combating organized crime. In order to give more emphasis to crime prevention we need to broaden government activities by every level of government.

Efforts must be increased to identify the causes of alienation within our society which give rise to anti-social behaviour. Concentrated effort must be put forward to restore public confidence in the criminal law and its application through the courts and our law enforcement agencies. These and other things have to be done if we are to have a peaceful and secure society. However, governments and members of parliament must not only take into account the reality of the situation but also bear in mind the general attitude of our people.

Many Canadians are deeply disturbed by a persistent belief that their governments and institutions are "soft" on crime; there is a belief that there is more concern for the criminal than the victim. Neither of these beliefs are adequately based on fact. However, in a democratic free society the facts are almost irrelevant. The perception of the public is extremely important and governments and our institutions must behave in such a way as to restore their fundamental confidence.

Aside from taking the measures already outlined, we must also take positive action to prevent the occurrence of crime. This is a very complex subject area and to deal with it we need to reconsider our present approach to education, mental health, recreational and employment opportunities, and a broad host of social measures. The conditions that give rise to young people turning to crime should be eliminated. The proposals for legislative change inherent in the preceding suggestions are reasonable but tough measures to provide greater security in our society. Such measures, however, will not satisfy everyone because some in our society have an exaggerated perception of the problem of violence in society. Radio, television, and the press have created in the minds of many a situation where they believe that there is more violence than actually exists.

A friend and constituent, Ann Farquhar, forwarded me the April, 1976, edition of Psychology Today. In that issue there was a research article dealing with violence on TV. The thrust of this article indicates that one of the more far-reaching effects of violence on television is to create a condition where people equate the violence they see on TV to the real world around them.

Violence on television thus has a two-fold effect. First, it suggests that violence is the appropriate and traditional means of settling disputes. Second, it creates in the heavy TV viewer a feeling that the world in reality is as violent as he sees it on television. This fear, the article indicates, may also bring increasing demands for police protection and election of law and order politicians. This has already happened.

I will continue later and call it ten o'clock now, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF PLANNING FOR IMPROVED SURVEILLANCE, SEARCH AND RESCUE IN VIEW OF POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF JURISDICTION TO 200 MILES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-Ste. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question which I directed to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) on April 8 is important enough to take up a lot more time than that which is allotted tonight. The planning and implementation of a surveillance policy for Canada involves air-sea rescue and the patrol capability, not only to protect fishing vessels, but on a much broader base.

In his reply the minister stated that the imposition and extension of a 200 mile limit was hypothetical. However, he knows that Canada will declare either a 200 mile fisheries or economic zone and that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) must now be making plans for such a course of action because there is little likelihood the Law of the Sea Conference now drawing to a close in New York will achieve international agreement.

The reason I continually raise the question of surveillance is because it appears that not too many appreciate the mission that Canada must undertake to provide a surveillance capacity and the enormous funding that will be required if one can imagine the area that will have to be patrolled. We must recognize the size of Canada, the length of its coastline, the massive extent of the part of the globe we occupy. We are far from ready to provide the surveillance which is required even though the minister has told us that the Department of National Defence plans to increase the amount of equipment available for this purpose.

● (2200)

Looking over the various departments concerned I find that the available strength is far below what is required. For example, the Canadian Coastguard Service operates 10 offshore cutters of between 70 feet and 224 feet, only one 33 foot shore based hovercraft, six 40-foot shore based launches, nine 15-foot inflatable inshore rescue boats, 14 44-foot lifeboats, and 33 helicopters which can respond only under ideal weather conditions. In addition, the Coastguard operates 65 other vessels with a secondary search and rescue role.

The Department of the Environment is increasing its inadequate patrol capability with a 205-foot helicopter-equipped patrol vessel, and two high speed aluminum patrol boats.

Moving to the navy, I feel I should quote from articles written by two of our learned retired admirals. This is what Vice-Admiral J. C. O'Brien had to say:

> It is vital for us to invest in a strong navy with a realistic number of aircraft if we are to exhibit a real presence in all the ocean areas for which we consider ourselves responsible. I have always suggested a strong naval capability to at least 1500 miles off our coasts and this requires a much bigger effort than we are exerting now.
>
> Clearly, we must have more ships. But the most direct way to meet this shortcoming initially would be to implement a composite plan involving a common fleet in which naval aircraft, support ships and destroyers would team up with a force of armed trawlers manned by a para-military reserve. This reserve would, I suggest, be directed by the navy because only the navy has the command and control facilities as well as the professional know-how to undertake the responsibility.

The writer goes on to recommend the formation of other para-military forces.

My second quotation is from an article by Rear-Admiral R. W. Timbrell who says:

> For a number of years our government has expounded that both in the national and the world's interest our seabed out in the continental shelf or at least two hundred miles will be preserved and protected, and the point is rapidly approaching where this must be accepted either at this month's resumption of the Law of the Sea Conference (now taking place in New-York) or by unilateral action.
> Such action will be meaningless unless we are prepared to provide a visible force of sufficient credibility in size and determination to enforce our declaration effectively. These forces will be required to patrol hundreds of thousands of square miles frequently and must be able to follow up immediately with on-the-spot investigation. The occasional patrol is clearly insufficient and of little value in view of the vastness of the area to be surveyed and the difficulties encountered in all the forms of weather to be found off Canada's seaboard. It would be simple, say, for a large group of foreign fishing trawlers with their factory ships to move into a declared area, reap a harvest of fish in 12-24 hours and proceed outside the national limits without being spotted, let alone apprehended, unless we provide constant patrols and presence.

The time allotted to me does not allow me to refer to more examples. It is obvious that with the task force report due to surface by this summer, and following the recommendations from the Canadian Coastguard, there must be co-ordination of effort on the part of all. The report to which I have referred should be carefully considered by a joint committee at which time witnesses such as Rear-Admiral Timbrell and Vice-Admiral O'Brien should be heard. My colleague tells me that the Americans now have a contingency plan. We must plan to improve surveillance immediately and must consider the report since in the very near future we will have to provide a massive capability, requiring a massive infusion of funds, to protect not only our fishing resources but our oil and mineral resources, as well as to build up the economy of Canada and—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to say that I think the hon. member is quite right to question the capability of Canada to patrol and survey, as well as provide search and rescue facilities in, an expanded zone off our coasts. However, when he put his question in the House on April 8 the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) made it clear at that time that the various departments involved are preparing plans to carry out that task. He also made it clear that, as the need arose, additional equipment would be acquired to carry out the tasks referred to by the hon. member.

In his question the hon. member referred to foreign fishing fleets operating in our economic zone if and when we declare a 200 mile limit, and I share his view that we will definitely declare such a zone. I agree this is a legitimate concern. However, it is worthy of note, I think, that perhaps the best way to preserve our fishing stocks, particularly in that expanded zone, is through negotiated agreements and then being able, following agreement, to put them in force. Canada has already negotiated agreements with the four major fishing nations off our coasts. I think it is also worth nothing that some figures I saw the other day, which I believe the hon. member also saw, indicated that it was not foreign fishing fleets off our shores but Canadian vessels which were the biggest offenders in regard to the ICNAF quotas.

I should also point out that at the present time the boundaries of Canada's search and rescue responsibility are much larger than the 200 mile zone, and they are recognized both by the International Civil Aviation Organization and the International Maritime Consultative Organization. The military air search facilities for which my minister is responsible are located at Summerside, P.E.I., right at the hub of the active search area, and as I say they cover a far greater area than 200 miles.

While the 200 mile economic zone has not yet been established, the Department of National Defence is making plans to cover this is limit adequately once it is established. Planning is being conducted with the Department of the Environment. Surveillance of the zone will be conducted by increasing the number of ship days at sea and by increasing the number of aircraft patrols over areas of interest.

I also point out that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has undertaken to study marine rescue and has advised the House that he will be reporting on planned improvements before mid-summer. I cannot speak for him tonight; we will have to await his announcement before mid-summer with regard to increased marine capability.

In closing I want to thank the hon. member for asking the question, and I am pleased to have this opportunity to put on record the fact that plans are being carried out to cover—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his allotted time has expired.

TRANSPORT—POSSIBLE ABANDONMENT OF RAIL SERVICE IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVOID CRISIS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the question I am raising tonight is a follow-up to the question I put to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on March 26 having to do with the possibility of rail line abandonment in Prince Edward Island. The importance of this subject has been stressed as recently as last Saturday, in an article in the Globe and Mail on Prince Edward Island's rail situation, entitled "Railways in Danger."

● (2210)

At the time I put my question on March 26 I asked the Minister of Transport mainly to comment on the statements made on more than one occasion by the provincial minister of highways with regard to the very serious situation concerning the railroad in Prince Edward Island, and the report which came from one of the minister's colleagues, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) before the Standing Committee on Regional Development, a report which said that the situation in respect of transportation in Prince Edward Island was in fact reaching a crisis stage and should be dealt with very shortly if we were not to be faced with a situation which would literally be irreversible. The reason I raise this matter again this evening is that apparently there have been meetings between the Minister of Transport and the provincial minister of highways, Mr. Stewart.

Perhaps it would be useful to give the nature of the problem in brief form through quotations which have appeared in articles over the last month and a half. I shall quote first from the Globe and Mail of last Saturday which is perhaps the best article at this stage in respect of the situation as it pertains to Prince Edward Island. It states:

Prince Edward Island, the first province to have all its steam locomotives replaced by diesels and the first to lose passenger service, may soon be the first to do without the railway entirely.

At a glance, the rail system looks adequate. True, 22 of 27 railway stations have been closed but derelict stations are national landmarks. And, although Canadian National hopes to gain permission from the Canadian Transport Commission to scrap a couple of branch lines this year, there are still more than 200 miles of track, down only 20 or 30 miles from the railway's peak.

However,—

This is really the important part of the question before us this evening.

—the railbeds have been allowed to deteriorate to the point where all trains are forced to move at a crawl and the ancient and inadequate cars relegated to hauling island produce are being scrapped at the rate of more than 100 a year.

The situation has been reported in the provincial legislature at its sessions this year. Again I am quoting from an article in the Summerside Journal. It refers to a statement by Mr. Stewart:

'The handwriting is on the wall,' he said, 'road bed maintenance has deteriorated with all trains running on' "slow order". He said in some cases there are areas where train traffic is slowed down to 10 miles per hour on road beds.

Unfortunately this is not a new but rather a continuing situation which indicates again the lack of study and the totally dreadful approach taken by the CNR in respect of its obligation to Prince Edward Island. I say it is doubly disturbing not only because this Crown corporation is committed to providing some form of national railway service, and it has certainly shown a great default in this instance, but in addition there is the fact that one of the major commitments the federal government made at the time of Confederation in 1873 was not only to maintain a continuous ferry service from Prince Edward Island to the mainland but also to provide a train service to transport basic Island produce.

This is the situation which confronts the government today. I think it should take swift and definite action in respect of the CNR. It is perhaps a little ironic that we are discussing this matter at a time when the CNR has already announced increases up to 69 per cent on the car ferry service operating between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. This is a case in which the CNR has definitely defaulted on its obligation.

One of the reasons why I put this question down for the adjournment debate—and I do not like to say this—is the rather cavalier attitude of the Minister of Transport. His answer to me on March 26 was:

Mr. Speaker, we always attempt to analyse trends in traffic and to look ahead to the steps that have to be taken to accommodate them, and this is what we are doing in this case.

That, Mr. Speaker, is no assurance at all. It is a denial of the federal government's obligation and responsibility.

It is a well known fact that there is no way possible—and the minister of highways reaffirmed this in the legislature recently—in which we can make an orderly transfer from the utilization of the railroad traffic both to move our basic produce out of the province or to bring in items to P.E.I., except perhaps over a five to ten year period. Both the time period required to upgrade the highways and to handle the amount of increased traffic that would occur through lack of railroads as well as additional cost, which would certainly be in the order of $20 million or more, would make it an almost prohibitive option at this time. Therefore I trust that my good friend, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), parliamentary secretary to the minister, will be able to assure me and the people of P.E.I. tonight that in fact the government is taking definite action to make sure that CNR does not achieve by its neglect the total abandonment of railroad service in P.E.I.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, to begin with I must say I regret the reference which the hon. member has made to some sort of cavalier attitude on the part of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in this situation, or in any situation with regard to transportation matters in Canada. His attitude is surely not that, as I think has been amply demonstrated in the House and in public forums outside the House, and certainly at his meetings with his provincial counterparts from the Atlantic region and other regions. I regret indeed any inference to the effect that his attitude can be interpreted in any way as being cavalier. It is a very serious one, and he does wish very much indeed to develop in this country from coast to coast the very best kind of transportation system that we can possibly develop.

My hon. friend on March 26 first raised this issue concerning the possible abandonment of rail service by CNR in Prince Edward Island. I would like to assure the House that no application has been made by CNR to the Canadian Transport Commission for such an abandonment.

May I also assure the House, and my hon. friend as well, that both the Railway Act and the National Transportation Act seek to protect shippers for the sake of the public interest with respect to the provision of essential services. That is to say that within the normal process that is established by statute, railway services are not allowed to be abandoned unilaterally by the railways. The railways must first make an application to the CTC and then, as hon. members know, the CTC holds public hearings in the national interest, and one of the key matters which is always considered is whether or not an alternative transportation facility or service is available to the area being served. Only after such hearings, and after due consideration has been given to the provision of alternative means would the CTC make a decision on an application.

At this point there is only one CN application in front of the CTC for the abandonment of nine miles of spur track. A hearing on this 1972 application has tentatively been scheduled by the CTC for later this year, but this will depend on priorities, such as passenger hearings for example.

There does not appear to be imminent danger that the existing rail system would not be adequate to meet immediate requirements. As to longer term needs, Transport Canada is working in conjunction with other federal departments, the railways, the provincial governments, and the local market boards to determine the nature and shape of an efficient and economic transportation system which could be implemented to deliver products to the major market areas. CN in conjunction with the Potato Marketing Board is presently testing an intermodal transportation system.

Present load restrictions on highways would hamper potato movements during the spring break up period. The extent of the problem and the cost to upgrade the roads cannot be established at present until conclusions are drawn from the present testing of the intermodal system.

Generally speaking, on the question of federal support for provincial highway strengthening work in the Atlantic region, as my hon. friend knows the four provincial highway ministers, recently at a federal-provincial ministerial conference, presented a joint report to the Minister of Transport entitled, "Atlantic Provinces Primary Highways—Ten Year program". This report represents a statement of needs as seen by the Atlantic provinces, and results directly from previous federal-provincial meetings—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but the time allotted to him has expired.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF DIFFICULTIES EXPERIENCED AS RESULT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This matter is the current $2 billion plus deficit Canada is running under the Canada-United States auto pact, with devastating consequences to the Canadian auto parts industry in particular and to the over-all economies of Ontario and Canada. Inasmuch as the government is not acting to deal with this crisis, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That this House constitute a special committee to inquire forthwith into, report upon and make recommendations with respect to the problems and difficulties of the Canadian auto and auto parts industries under the Canada-United States auto pact.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY RATIFICATION OF NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY BEING REQUIREMENT PRIOR TO SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, particularly in view of the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question concerns the four countries to which Canada is committed to sell nuclear reactors, the countries being India, Pakistan, South Korea and Argentina.

In view of the fact that none of these four countries has yet ratified the non-proliferation treaty, and considering the increasing concern expressed in many quarters of this country with regard to these sales, I wonder if the Prime Minister could indicate whether in fact before any final sales occur the ratification of the non-proliferation treaty will be a requirement.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to inquire, but my impression is that the facts as stated by the hon. member do not explain the case as we understand it. That ratification is to come from at least one of those countries. I do not know about the others.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS OF NUCLEAR EXPORTERS' AGREEMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): It would be very helpful if the Prime Minister could confirm that none of them has ratified. One has initialled or signed the first part of the agreement, but none of them has ratified. In addition, in light of the increasing lassitude with which certain countries seem to be interpreting the agreement reached in London by the Nuclear Exporters' Consultative Group, would the Prime Minister reveal to the House the specific terms and conditions of this agreement, as the secrecy provisions of this particular agreement will certainly prevent any public censure being invoked when in fact the agreement is violated?

● (1410)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Part of the agreement, of course, was reached in secret on the understanding that no one country would make the terms of it public. If the terms are being made public in a general way I am sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs would not object to making it public also. I would not want him to break that agreement unilaterally, however, nor would I undertake to ask him to do so.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. When the Prime Minister is checking into these questions I wonder if he would also inquire whether the recent agreement includes some kind of threat of collective sanctions by the exporters in terms of an embargo on future distribution of either nuclear materials or technology. I think the present situation with regard to the unwarranted secrecy makes it difficult for public opinion in this country or elsewhere to determine whether our government acted responsibly.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of the conference and the active role Canada played was predicated on the realization that it was an act of futility for one country like Canada to upgrade its safeguards unilaterally—as we did—and impose more stringent safeguards if other exporting countries of nuclear technology or materials were to continue individually to lower the safeguards. That was the purpose of the congress. As I indicated I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to inquire and I will report to the hon. member.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF AMOUNT OF LOSS ON SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR TO ARGENTINA

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the meeting held earlier last month when officials of the Argentinian nuclear project were brought back to Canada, presumably for discussion with the department, and in view of the minister's admission that even after renegotiation the Canadian taxpayer is going to have to pick up the multimillion dollar tab for these nuclear adventures in Argentina, can the minister now tell the Canadian public exactly how much we are going to lose on the Argentinian deal and if not, why not?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House the other day and perhaps the hon. member was not present at that time, these matters are not yet concluded. They are still under negotiation but very substantial progress has been made.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that a report commissioned by the United States energy resources development administration indicates that the Canadian vendors of nuclear power "lost their shirt" on the sale to Argentina, the sale to India and the sale to Pakistan, could the minister clarify, now that he has had these discussions on renegotiations, just exactly what progress he is talking about? How much "progress" are we losing on this matter?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member has followed debate on this, as I am sure other hon. members have, he will realize that the issue is the inflation rates in the two countries. When the Argentinian commercial contract was originally negotiated there was a certain assumption about the level of inflation in Canada; unfortunately, the inflation rate turned out to be greater than the basic assumption at that time. Similarly, there was no accurate forecast of the rate of inflation in Argentina; no one foresaw at that time that the inflation rate for Argentina was going to be somewhere between 300 per cent and 400 per cent, which is what it is running at on an annual basis right now. That was the basis of the renegotiations to protect our trading interests.

Mr. Lawrence: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Can we therefore assume that the cost to the Canadian taxpayer is going to be between 300 per cent and 400 per cent greater than the initial cost envisaged by the government? Is that what the minister is telling us?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member understands arithmetic. I was trying to explain the situation to him. Perhaps we could find the time outside the House when I could go through the sums with him. Clearly, the object of the exercise was to reduce the possibility of extra exposure because of inflation rates which had not been foreseen. I indicated that substantial progress had been made.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ALLEGED OBJECTION OF UNITED STATES TO CANADIAN SUBSIDIARY OF PRATT-WHITNEY ENTERING INTO CONTRACT WITH ROLLS-ROYCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As a result of the extra-territorial intervention of the United States Department of Justice, preliminary development work on a new engine being developed by the Canadian Pratt and Whitney Company in Montreal was recently brought to an abrupt halt. Last Friday the Prime Minister said he would investigate the situation and report to the House. Is he now in a position to do so?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that an answer was supplied to the minister, but unfortunately he is at the UNCTAD conference. I will ask the parliamentary secretary to inform himself of the answer, and perhaps tomorrow he can give it to the House.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the question involves broad, general principles which will interest the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Perhaps either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce will say what the government intends to do to ensure that the more than 1,000 jobs which would have been created in Canada in that high technology industry will not be lost. I suggest that the matter applies not only to this company, but to other companies which find themselves in a similar situation.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member a partial answer. We have been aware of this matter for some time and have kept close watch on developments in Washington particularly. As the hon. member may know, two engines are involved, a large engine and a relatively smaller one. I understand there is no difficulty with regard to the arrangements between United Aircraft and Rolls-Royce on the larger engine but there is some question about the smaller one which is of particular interest to Canada.

There has not been a resolution of it yet; but neither has there been any development which could be classed as a prohibition or anything which would inhibit development in Canada. We are keeping a close watch on this. I assure the hon. member that we shall use whatever influence we possess and do our best to make sure that the Canadian interest is not affected adversely.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, since, as I understand, the United States Department of Justice has ruled on the matter, and, as a result, the parent company in the United States ordered its Canadian subsidiary to stop forthwith its development work; and since that seems to be contrary to what ministers said, as, apparently, development is no longer underway, would the minister clarify the situation. Is work underway, and will it continue?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, the matter is complex. I hope the hon. member will appreciate that I will be glad to give him a written explanation of the situation. To the extent that I can explain it orally, I will. I understand—I am not exactly sure of the legal word—that a more or less informal opinion was sought from the U.S. Department of Justice. In other words, it was not a formal representation. The next step—and I hope the hon. member will understand my difficulty in not wanting to be too open; I do not want to become involved at this stage in a public way—is, as I understand it, to seek a more formal ruling. That is my information. I am subject to correction but I understand that may be the next step.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON FIXING OF PRICES OF OIL

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs the following question.

In view of the fact that for two and a half years already an inquest on price fixing of petroleum products has been conducted by the federal Department of Consumer Affairs, which seems to be the most important one ever made by that ministry, would the minister indicate to the House what stage has this inquiry now reached?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire tomorrow if possible, even perhaps this afternoon, and shall contact the hon. member directly.

EFFECT ON PRICES OF IMPORTATION OF EGGS BY MARKETING AGENCY—AGENCY CONTROL OF IMPORTS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. As eggs were imported into Canada last week and purchased by CEMA at a price substantially lower than usual, can the minister say if this substantial saving in price is to be passed on to the Canadian consumer and, if not, why not? Does the minister believe, as his colleague the Minister of Agriculture appears to, that CEMA is justified in indirectly disobeying government policy by seeking control over licensing for egg imports?

● (1420)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not agree that the Minister of Agriculture would condone in any way, fashion or form anybody circumventing government policy. The question is, is there a government policy? The government policy on egg imports, as I understand it, is that CEMA has 48 hours to make up any deficiency in Canadian production after which private importers, selected by IIC, have the opportunity of importing those eggs that are needed for local consumption. I do know, for instance, that the eggs sold last weekend in a local chain store in Montreal were selling at 14 cents less than the prevailing rate the week before, probably the result of importing.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBLE INVESTIGATION OF COMPLAINTS REGARDING IMPORTATION OF EGGS—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Last week he reported that there were complaints regarding these egg transactions and imports, and that an investigation would ensue. Can the minister report to the House on the progress or otherwise of this investigation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, last week I said that one complaint had been made to the RCMP and that they were assessing that complaint, but that no investigation would take place until they felt it was warranted. I have no information that they have proceeded further.

TRADE

IMPORTATION OF EGGS—POSSIBLE TIGHTENING OF PROCEDURES

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I will direct my final supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is it the intention of the minister's department to tighten up procedures vis-à-vis applications for permits to import eggs? Can he report to the House on the status of CEMA's application to have sole receivership rights for eggs imported into Canada at the present time?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if "tighten up" is the word. However, I have had two meetings, one late yesterday afternoon with my officials in which I made it perfectly clear to them, although it was not necessary because they had already taken certain steps, to make sure the process was in fact monitored on an ongoing and continuing basis. I am following that up by further discussion with some of my colleagues who have even more direct responsibilities in this regard. On the second part of the question, no licences will be issued to CEMA for direct importation as long as the current policy stands.

AGRICULTURE

REASON EGG MARKETING AGENCY USED PORTER COMPANY AS BROKER

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. It arises from the reply he gave last Thursday to a question from the hon. member for Windsor West when the minister said:

In essence, they are using a perfectly legitimate broker bringing eggs into Canada and CEMA is paying them only the brokerage fee.

Can the minister confirm that, in addition to the one quarter cent a dozen brokerage fee, the Porter Produce Company also received, at CEMA's expense, a windfall income of three cents a dozen for handling the eggs? May I ask the minister why the eggs CEMA imported were not sent directly to the distributors to whom they were ultimately destined, thereby eliminating some of the delays encountered in shipping the eggs through the Porter Company and eliminating the need for CEMA to pay Porter the three cent handling fee?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, from the information I have received, they would actually have to do some work in handling the eggs before they would be compensated. I do know if a brokerage firm is doing the normal work involved they are entitled to a brokerage fee. That is all they are entitled to. I will have to investigate this further and check it out.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's reply and his willingness to investigate that. Can the minister confirm that the Porter Company has also been used as a first receiver for western eggs shipped into Ontario and has received a handling fee which has not been paid to other distributors? What is the reason the Porter Company was chosen? Why have they received a handling fee that has not been paid to other distributors, and how many cents per dozen was Porter paid to handle western eggs?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, all I know is that the Porter Company is a licensed brokerage firm. If they are doing anything illegal, I will have to determine this through my inquiries. However, no one has pointed this out to me previously.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

POSSIBILITY OF FULL-SCALE CONFERENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the first ministers' conference on May 6 will deal primarily with the question of the domestic price of oil and gas, and that the subsequent conference in June will focus on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, and since it appears that the issue of the constitution will be dealt with only tangentally at both these meetings, will the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to propose to the premiers on Thursday the convening of a full-scale constitutional conference similar to the Victoria Conference of 1971 to discuss the proposal contained in his recent correspondence with the premiers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to make that proposal to the provincial premiers. My intention is to report to them on the evaluation of the situation since we all agreed one year ago to explore ways of patriating the constitution with an amending formula—we agreed we should not get into any other areas such as the division of powers. I intend to report to them, to hear their reaction to the report I put in writing to them about a month ago and then to assess the situation. If they wish an open conference on a patriation formula, I have no objection to that.

Miss MacDonald: Given the emphasis which the Prime Minister has placed on patriation, can he assure us that he does not intend to negotiate this vital issue simply via the mails, in which case it might take another hundred years to deal with? Or does he intend to consider this important matter in the time left over after other issues have been dealt with, in which case it would appear he is prepared to regard the discussion of constitutional matters as a footnote to these meetings? Can he give us an assurance that this will not be the case?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I made it quite clear to the premiers that the item would be raised at this meeting and at the following meeting. I must remind the hon. lady that the premiers, in April a year ago, unanimously decided we should attempt to patriate with an amending formula. This was not something that I alone was pressing for; there was agreement. I still hope this agreement will be carried forth with the consent of all the premiers.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

POSSIBILITY JUNE CONFERENCE OF FIRST MINISTERS WILL BE OPEN TO THE PUBLIC

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Would the Prime Minister indicate whether the June conference of first ministers, which will focus, I understand, on renegotiation of tax-sharing arrangements and the equalization formula, matters vitally affecting all Canadians, will be open to viewing by the Canadian public in part or in whole?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I made it clear, I believe, two or three years ago in this House when responding to this type of question that I, as chairman of these first ministers' conferences, would adopt the course which appeared most acceptable to the majority of first ministers. I indicated then, and repeat now, that I am completely indifferent to whatever option they prefer. In other words, if they prefer an open conference it is my slight preference to have an open conference at all times; if it is the collective assessment that we would make more progress at a closed conference, my preference would be for a closed conference. There is an in-between solution which we shall also examine: it is to have a wider conference than that of first ministers—as will be the case on Thursday—but one not quite as wide as to include invitees from the public and members of various parliaments and legislatures; in other words, a full conference with other ministers and advisers present, but still not open to the press. I repeat that as chairman of the conference I shall not attempt to impose my views on the other members. It is a matter for collective decision.

COMBINES

REQUEST THAT DIRECTOR INVESTIGATE ALLEGED INTERFERENCE BY UNITED STATES WITH CANADIAN PRATT AND WHITNEY

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The new section 31(5) of the Combines Act recently adopted by the House authorizes the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission to issue orders blocking the application of foreign law in Canada. I am therefore asking the minister whether he will ensure that the director of the combines branch carries out an inquiry into the Pratt and Whitney matter so that where appropriate the director can make application to the commission for an order preventing the application of any U.S. department of justice ruling in Canada that could prevent Canadian Pratt and Whitney from doing work here that would provide jobs for hundreds of Canadians.

● (1430)

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that matter has already been brought to the attention of the director.

INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION BY FIRESTONE OF DUNLOP TIRES FROM UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY CONDITIONS SET BY FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY BEING BREACHED

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It concerns the phasing out of production in the former Dunlop tire plant at Whitby. It seems as though the minister is going to have another foreign trademark case on his hands. The information that has been brought to my attention is that Firestone Tire, which bought out the Dunlop tire plant in 1974, has relinquished the right to use the Dunlop brand and tires under that name will be imported from the Unites States, so that no manufacturing under that name will take place in Canada. Would the minister therefore tell the House what he knows about this particular situation, and if he does not have the information today, would he assure the House that he will bring the information to the House at the earliest moment?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I regret that it will have to be the latter. It is not a case with which I am personally familiar, but I will make inquiries.

Mr. Saltsman: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the minister is checking into the details of that particular situation, would he also inquire as to the conditions that FIRA attached to the Firestone takeover in 1974 and whether those conditions have been met in terms of national benefit? Since the Firestone firm is cutting back on production and reducing the number of its employees, it does not seem to be meeting the test of national benefit.

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to do that.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF TENDERING PROCEDURES FOR DE-ICING EQUIPMENT—AMOUNT EXPENDED ON EQUIPMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport which relates to the central aircraft de-icing facilities at Mirabel international airport. I know the minister is familiar with this since I have correspondence addressed to him on this subject. Would the minister confirm that in fact proposals, in the first instance, and tenders, in the second instance, were cancelled in relation thereto, and would he state whether reports that the system in question has never functioned properly are accurate?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the system is a new one and therefore the developmental phase obviously involves some trial and error. That is the only comment that I will make with regard to the second part of the question. It is accurate to say that initial tenders that were called were cancelled when a further technical examination did determine it would be important to have each user of the facility made responsible for his own aircraft, and that is the way the matter is now proceeding.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister further state whether GENAC, a joint venture of Air Canada and General Aviation, to whom the operation of the de-icing facility at Mirabel was ultimately awarded following the cancellation of tenders at the last possible moment, are in fact still ready, willing and able to continue their operations? Would the minister also indicate what is acceptable practice in the government with respect to notices of cancellation of tendering procedures? Does a telegram sent the night before purporting to cancel tenders to be opened the next morning meet the criteria?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that, as is usual in a tendering procedure, we are in the position that we need not accept any bid, and indeed at any point we can make a change in our over-all view of the situation. Obviously, we would not do so frequently or lightly because of the problem that it would create for people who were considering putting in bids. In this particular case, however, when it was apparent that technical advice was in favour of individual operation and responsibility on the part of the owners of the aircraft, it was decided that this was the right procedure to follow and therefore the bids were cancelled. That could have taken place after the bids were opened rather than the day before, as the hon. member suggests.

However, I believe he will find that he is in error in saying that the matter was turned over to GENAC. It may be the case in this particular operation in relation to Air Canada and other contracts with Air Canada for other aircraft, but essentially as I understand the situation the individual owners of aircraft have responsibilities for the operation of the de-icing of their aircraft.

Mr. MacKay: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm that well in excess of $4 million has been expended on this reportedly unsatisfactory de-icing facility, and will the minister advise the House whether his department is now considering any alternate plans, including a possible retendering of the concept?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is any thought of retendering. As I understand it, the technical advice still continues to be strongly in favour of responsibility for an individual aircraft. I will, of course, be glad to supply on the order paper the other information that the hon. member seeks. As I understand the situation, the difference between different aircraft is sufficiently significant that it seems wise to allow the owner of the aircraft, the person responsible for the aircraft, to determine the exact technique of de-icing, and that is the reason for the change in plan.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EFFECT OF VOLUNTARY ARBITRATION OF VANCOUVER GRAIN HANDLERS' DISPUTE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In light of what appear to be favourable conditions for a voluntary arbitration of the grain handlers wage contract dispute, would this suggest Vancouver greatly enhancing its trade reputation for the handling of grain? I have one short supplementary to that question.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to indicate to the hon. member that the grain handlers and operators have come to an agreement on voluntary arbitration binding on both sides, which I think is significant and something of a breakthrough in labour negotiations in Canada. I think it also ensures that grain will move through the port of Vancouver without the dislocations that have unfortunately marked this industry for some years, and we are very happy about that.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH RAILWAY WORKERS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): One short supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister also comment on the labour negotiations taking place with the railway workers, and whether or not the grain will get to Vancouver?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the situation there, I would advise the hon. member, is that the negotiation committee for the railway unions recommended Mr. Justice Emmett Hall's report to the general conference of chairmen numbering approximately 150. The general chairmen rejected the recommendation of acceptance of the negotiating committee, so it is now in the process of going out to the rank and file railroaders in Canada who will indicate their preference by a vote. That process will take approximately two to three weeks, perhaps marginally longer, but I am still hopeful, and so are some of my officials involved, that this matter may be resolved without either a strike or the intervention of parliament.

USE OF ARBITRATION TO SETTLE DISPUTES—NAMES OF INDUSTRIES ADOPTING ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in this general area. I am pleased to hear that the minister acknowledges that the arbitration route taken by the grain handlers is one that does call for some thanks. Seeing that his ministry is moving in this direction, is the minister now in a position to advise whether he has had any success with other major industries under federal jurisdiction in adopting such a procedure as arbitration and, if so, would he give the House some indication of the industries involved?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, much of the innovative work that has been conducted on an experimental basis in terms of broader based bargaining has been going on in the grain handling industry with the co-operation of myself, the labour movement and the operators, so I think it is to be expected that this type of development might occur in that industry first. As the hon. member might also know, some months ago I appointed a commissioner to make recommendations that would improve the unhappy state of industrial relations in the industry, and that set the favourable backdrop for this type of approach that is now being adopted in connection with the grain handlers.

It was hoped that we might proceed to look at other industries, such as the air industry and others, through the Canada Labour Relations Council, but there has been what is, I hope, a temporary withdrawal by labour there which is not speeding up the process. However, I hope this will set the example—similar to the example set for the steel industry in the United States—and will bring about a satisfactory, civilized resolution of disputes which other unions and management will follow.

METHOD USED TO ATTEMPT TO AVERT A GENERAL STRIKE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister does have another problem with regard to the CLC. Documents released yesterday by the CLC indicate that 40 of the 440 resolutions submitted by local unions and affiliates for consideration by the upcoming CLC convention call for increased political pressure to halt controls, one at least calling for the mobilization of a general strike.

● (1440)

Given the withdrawal of the CLC from both the Economic Council of Canada and the Canada Labour Relations Council, and in light of our concern about strikes, general or otherwise, can the minister outline those liaison mechanisms through which he is attempting to head off such a general strike, which would be disastrous to the economy of this country?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I have said that that would be an eventuality which the government and, I am sure, every hon. member of this House would like to avoid. What we are doing is continuing talks in a bilateral way with leaders of the labour movement, and I think there is a good possibility that meetings will carry on. They will not carry on in the multilateral context of having management, labour and government at the same table, as takes place within the Canada Labour Relations Council, but directly between the government and the business community to try to develop a consensus to arrive at some satisfactory solutions through that technique, and that process is going on.

Mr. Alexander: Without the CLC.

CRIMINAL CHARGE AGAINST HOWARD BUCHAN, FORMER PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE EMPLOYEE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the RCMP laid charges of fraud against one Howard Ernest Buchan, former chief of field operations, PFAA, a 1973 appointee of the Minister of Agriculture, has the minister conducted an in depth investigation as to whether that employee acted on his own initiative or on the instructions of another?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the courts have thoroughly investigated what it was alleged this man did wrong. I forget the legal terminology for it, but I understand that the case has not gone any further in the court because it was felt that there was not any evidence against him.

Mr. Towers: Since someone must be held responsible for such personal appointments and for the conduct of those employees while carrying out their assigned duties, does the minister accept that responsibility?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I accept the ruling of the court.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF REORGANIZATION OF INFRASTRUCTURE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister in a position to give us a fairly firm date when he might expect to announce the reorganization of the infrastructure in Canada for the Canadian forces?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that subject is before cabinet. I cannot predict how long it will take for those deliberations to be completed.

HEALTH

WORK STOPPAGES AT HOSPITALS IN QUEBEC AND SASKATCHEWAN—POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I would like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering the problems caused by labour disputes, particularly in Quebec and Saskatchewan hospitals, would the Prime Minister advise the House whether his government is conducting an inquiry in these two provinces to ensure that in spite of the reduction of required and necessary services, no patient's life has been placed in jeopardy, as rumours would have it? I would like to add that last week a Montreal physician declared that he had to resort to war time medicine.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring this question to the attention of the minister who is away on official duties.

IMMIGRATION

MEASURES TO ASSIST ENTRY OF FRANCOPHONE LEBANESE

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour and Immigration.

In view of the intensification of the fighting in Lebanon, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to set up a special team within his department to ensure that Canada welcome a greater number of Lebanese who are facing serious problems in their country? Lebanese citizens wishing to emigrate to Canada would thus allow us to take more humane measures to reach a more equitable linguistic balance in our country.

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have been watching the situation with regard to Lebanese very closely, and I am considering some further measures upon which I will be in a position to make a decision very shortly.

Oral Questions

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTED EARLY ACTION ON WAGE SETTLEMENT WITH EMPLOYEES OF CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—DATE OF CLEARING BACKLOG OF CASES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is aware of the fact that CBC employees who will be working on televising the Olympics reached an agreement with the management of CBC six weeks ago. Since that time that contract has been before the Anti-Inflation Board without any disposition of the case. The employees have set a deadline of May 15, and if after that time they still have no settlement, they will resort to strike action. Would the minister take up the case with the AIB to see that there is some disposition of it, thus avoiding a strike which would have very serious effects on the televising of the Olympics?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to pursue this.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could confirm the truth of reports that the Anti-Inflation Board now has a backlog of close to 6,000 agreements with which it has not yet dealt, and will the minister explain to the House how long employers and employees will have to wait after they reach an agreement before they know what their situation will be for the coming year or possibly two as a result of the board's decision?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I had occasion to refer to that in debate last week. My understanding is that a very substantial number of the agreements will have been dealt with either by this time or within a very short time. Of course, there will still remain some outstanding and difficult cases, particularly cases in which the question of historical relationship is involved. Naturally, the board will do its best to dispatch these matters as quickly as it can.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED DIFFICULTY OF UNITED STATES MAGAZINES IN OBTAINING WORK VISAS FOR CORRESPONDENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I asked a question on Friday which is recorded at page 13031 of Hansard. In an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, May 1 the following quotation can be found:

> An immigration department spokesman said there is a general policy that Canadians be placed in vacant positions in Canada if they are qualified for the post.

I am asking the minister if he is saying that by withholding work visas or extensions of work visas for foreign correspondents that the government will insist that openings for these correspondents in Canada will have to be filled by Canadians. I suggest that it would be similar if the United States were asking that CBC openings in the United States be filled by Americans.

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to require foreign correspondents of periodicals or media institutions to have work permits if they are reporting on Canadian affairs to a foreign audience. On the other hand, if a visitor from some other country were to apply for a job in a media servicing organization within Canada which serviced the Canadian public, that would be a different matter, and we would then examine the question of his eligibility to work in terms of the availability of Canadians. However, this would not apply in the case of truly foreign correspondents representing foreign publications.

Mr. Epp: This being an intricate matter, I want to confirm with the minister that when U.S. newsmagazines or news service agencies post correspondents to Canada, they will receive work visas without any disruptions, such as have occurred in the last few weeks.

Mr. Andras: With regard to the first category, absolutely. That is to say, a foreign correspondent of, say, Newsweek, covering the Canadian scene for Newsweek and a foreign audience, would be exempted from the requirement of an employment visa. The second category might be slightly different if it is a foreign person taking a job in, say, UPI to service a Canadian news service where certainly there is no foreign audience involved. That might be slightly different.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR LATE PAYMENTS TO MILITIAMEN

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it true that the department is now three months behind in paying militiamen? Can the minister give the reason or reasons for this, and can he assure the House that something will be done about the situation at once?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that not only will something be done, but also that something has been done. We were putting the matter of militia pay on a computer—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Richardson: —in order to improve the pay system. It took a little time to achieve that, but the bugs are now out, and the cheques are going forward.

ARCHAMBAULT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON HOSTAGE-TAKING

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General and it relates to the hostage-taking which is underway at present, unfortunately, at Archambault penitentiary where a guard and an instructor, namely Léopold Mercier and Michel English, are being held and there is a demand for two mediators, Mr. Robert Sachitelle and Mr. Laplante who is presently in Alberta. I wonder if the minister is in a position to give us a report as to the situation with respect to this hostage-taking incident and whether he is in fact considering the appointment of a mediator as requested by the inmates.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the two inmates asked for the attendance of Mr. Laurent Laplante and Robert Sachitelle who had been acting as negotiators in the strike which is taking place. Mr. Laplante is in Alberta and is unable to attend but Mr. Sachitelle has gone to the prison and is attempting to work out a settlement.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I gather from the answer of the minister that he is in fact prepared to allow a mediator in these circumstances, since it seems a reasonable request.

Mr. Allmand: I understand that Mr. Sachitelle has gone to the prison to act more as a representative of the inmates in discussions with the administration than as a mediator, but he had been acting as a mediator until now.

LAW OF SEA CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF RESULTS AND DATE OF NEXT MEETING

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fisheries.

Following the visit of the minister—who was accompanied by his colleague the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—last Friday to New York, on the occasion of the 4th Conference on the Law of the Sea, which is to end next Friday, can the minister tell the House whether he expects concrete results, if not considerable progress, from this 4th conference, and whether the participating countries have agreed to meet again for a general assembly in July of 1976, even before the meeting which had originally been scheduled for early 1977?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea whether the report to be tabled this week will indicate as much progress as we had hoped, but there is no doubt that if the majority of countries agree to meet again in July, it will be because they expect to be able to come to an agreement. As for Canada, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and several of us have already clearly indicated that 1976 will be a decisive year for us.

REASON FOR ERADICATION PROGRAM TO DEAL WITH BLUE TONGUE DISEASE

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that the United States has had the cattle disease blue tongue for over 15 years and has never instituted an eradication program, would the minister inform the House why he has allowed an eradication program to take place in the Okanagan when the health of animals department has admitted they do not even know what type of blue tongue exists in Canada or its seriousness?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have instituted an eradication program because there is evidence of the disease and history shows that this is by far the best way to deal with any virus infection such as this. The hon. member knows full well that the virus infection is difficult to identify, but it is not worth taking a chance because leaving it in abeyance and hoping things will go away by themselves is too risky. The health of livestock is much too important to us. Many things are being done in the United States that we do not do.

GRAIN

SUGGESTION PRESSURE NOT BE USED TO PREVENT OPTING OUT OF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the fact that producer contributions to the western grain stabilization plan became effective on April 1 and it has been very difficult if not impossible for producers to opt out, can the minister give the House an assurance that undue pressure will not be used to prevent opting out?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be taking every possible step—and I hope the hon. member and his colleagues will join me—to bring the advantages of the stabilization plan to the attention of each individual farmer. To the extent that we do that, if the hon. member wants to call that undue pressure, I will gladly not only confess to it but claim it. There is no difficulty in opting out. The producers should realize as well that there is no particular hurry in doing so, even if they want to opt out for this year, because if they opt out at the end of or just after the end of 1976 their entire levies for 1976 will be returned to them. I hope therefore that the hon. member will join me in making farmers aware of the financial advantage to them and to the prairies this plan will be, so that they will not end up a year or two later being hurt when payments are made to all their colleagues in the farming business.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EFFORTS TO CONTINUE OPERATION OF FERRY SERVICE TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND IN EVENT OF WORK STOPPAGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a brief question to the Minister of Labour, and it is really supplementary to some earlier questions. What progress is his department making toward an arrangement which would allow the continuation of the operation of the main ferry services to P.E.I., on which all surface travel is dependent, in the case of a work stoppage on the CNR?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the policy that we have been adopting in conjunction with the Department of Transport and with the union leadership is to have a voluntary agreement that the strike weapon would not be resorted to, despite what happened throughout the rest of the industry, with respect to this particular ferry service. I have received a very encouraging word from the union leadership to the effect that they think they can accommodate this particular objective, so I am hopeful that a successful conclusion along those lines can be reached.

ARCHAMBAULT—ALLEGED INSENSITIVITY TO WARNINGS OF TROUBLE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the one asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar about the hostage taking at Archambault. It is directed to the Solicitor General. Surely in this case the penitentiary service of Canada had ample warning that serious trouble would ensue. Can the minister comment on the fact that there was a good deal of insensitivity on the part of the penitentiary service with regard to the warnings that many of us had in our ordinary duties as members of parliament?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the inmates at the Archambault penitentiary have been on a type of strike for some time now. They had made certain suggestions to the administration. It is my understanding that the administration came to an agreement with them on all suggestions expect one, which was that they be allowed to have open visiting. That was refused by the penitentiary service on the basis that this was a maximum security penitentiary, a lot of contraband had been going into the penitentiary, and open visits should not be permitted. Open visits are permitted in the medium and minimum security penitentiaries and in part at a few of the maximum security penitentiaries, but they felt that if inmates at Archambault wanted open visiting they could improve their conduct and in time be transferred to either Leclerc or Cowansville or one of the medium security penitentiaries where they could get that.

On the whole, the administration was very open to negotiation and came to an agreement on all the proposals except this one. After all, it is the administration and not the inmates that is running the penitentiaries.

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REPORT OF DR. HALL ON RAILWAY PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he say whether he has yet received the report of Dr. Noel Hall who has been working on the question of railway pensions for quite some time?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the hon. member that Dr. Hall has communicated with the department. He has indicated that the actuaries are taking a great deal of time but they are doing a thorough job of examining the present methods and basis for funding plans. Another area that is taking him more time than he anticipated is comparing railway pension plans which, as you will recall, the terms of reference call for, with the plans in the public service, Crown corporations and other plans in the private sector. All this is of greater complexity than he first anticipated when he gave his deadline. I hope to have a new prognostication from him as to when he will have it ready within the next few weeks.

ADVANTAGES OF CONTRACTUAL LINK WITH EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET—NATURE OF SUBMISSIONS TO GATT

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and is in two parts. Since the government has placed such great importance on contractual links with the European Common Market, can the minister give the House examples of advantages to the agricultural industry as a result of this relationship? Second, on a very relative subject, what submissions are planned by agriculture Canada, either directly or indirectly, through our negotiators at the present GATT discussions?

● (1500)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on the last part of the question about representations to GATT, I am sure the hon. member is aware that our department and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce have had consultations with their provincial counterparts asking them for input. We also asked the farm organizations for input. This is being done in preparation for the talks at GATT. With regard to formal arrangements, the fact that we have a European Community representative in Canada now is very important to us for exchange of trade and of agricultural products, including cereal grains, livestock of all descriptions, farm implements and many other things. I think this is most important and also the fact that we can talk directly to them about exporting subsidized cheeses to Canada.

Mr. Wise: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister intend to encourage and promote discussion regarding Canada's need to convert from our traditional method of tariff calculation to the constant percentage of value, or ad valorem, particularly during periods of high inflation?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can be assured that all these things are being discussed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL PARTICIPATING IN PUBLIC SERVICE CLOSED COMPETITIONS

Question No. 3,706—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the Minister of National Defence aware of the answer to Question No. 2,849 and, if so, does he accept its implications as to the ability of members of the Canadian Armed Forces born in the Atlantic Provinces but not stationed there to enter closed competitions offered by the Public Service but restricted to residents of the Atlantic Provinces?

2. Does this policy and its workings advance morale within the Canadian Armed Forces for those members finding themselves affected by the policy and, if so, in what manner?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes. The concept of closed competition in the Public Service is to provide career opportunities within a region and a designated section of the Public Service, when competent candidates are considered to be available in the region and section designated. The regulations for such competitions are applicable to all public servants, including members of the Armed Forces. The place of birth of a member of the Public Service has no bearing on his or her eligibility for the competition.

2. There is no evidence that this policy has affected morale in the armed forces.

REGISTERED CANADIAN CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS—OXFAM

Question No. 4,154—Mr. Brisco:

1. Does the Department of National Revenue list OXFAM as a charitable organization and, if so, are donations tax deductible?

2. Do liberation movements in Africa receive support from OXFAM and, if so, does the government (a) approve of each liberation organization receiving such support (b) financially support such liberation movements and, if not, is it considering giving such support?

3. Does the government register organizations which engage in funding of political liberation movements as charitable organizations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Revenue and the Canadian International Development Agency as follows: 1. OXFAM-Canada, an Ontario Part II no share capital corporation, has been registered as a Canadian charitable organization with Revenue-Canada since January 1, 1967. Accordingly, donations to it are tax deductible by the donor within the provisions of paragraph 110(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act.

2. Some liberation groups in Africa have received support from OXFAM, and OXFAM has sought financial contributions from CIDA for such assistance projects as might qualify under Canada's humanitarian aid program for southern Africa. To date, CIDA has given financial assistance to OXFAM/Quebec for its humanitarian assistance program for the Zimbabwe African Peoples Union. This involved a grant of $5,000 to OXFAM for the purpose of sending clothing, food and medical supplies for refugees who fled from Rhodesia to neighbouring countries. At the present time CIDA is considering a request from OXFAM-Canada for assistance to the South West Africa People organization in Namibia for a project involving Adult Education. (a) The Government approves the receiving by liberation organizations of support by Canadian non-governmental organizations for humanitarian purposes. However, firm assurances are required that the aid is utilized for purely peaceful purposes involving strict accountability by sponsoring bodies for any CIDA funds. Funds are not made available directly to the liberation movements. While it is obvious that the ultimate recipients of this type of humanitarian aid will include both those who are politically militant and those who are not, the ultimate test of the value of this aid is the peaceful and humanitarian nature of the project itself.

This humanitarian aid goes to sponsoring bodies that have in mind medical, educational, agricultural and other humanitarian projects. Under this program, CIDA considers requests for contributions from reputable Canadian non-governmental organizations and international bodies for projects of a humanitarian nature in Namibia, Rhodesia and South Africa. (b) No, and it is not considering giving such support.

3. Revenue-Canada in its determination of what is and what is not charitable in the legal sense, relies heavily on common law established over a period of some 300 years. It has been held at law that if the purpose of a trust is the attainment of a political object, the purpose will not be charitable. The financial support of a liberation movement would be a political purpose and an organization engaged in this activity would not qualify for registration as a charitable organization with Revenue-Canada. A Canadian charitable organization may, on occasion, find it necessary to utilize the facilities of an organization outside of Canada to assist the Canadian organization to carry out its charitable activities outside of Canada. The intermediate organization may be a political organization but if the activity is charitable and is carried on in the name of the Canadian organization the activity normally would not be considered to be a political one. Revenue-Canada is seeking further information in regard to OXFAM-Canada dealings with a liberation movement in Africa.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY—MONITORING OF UNDERTAKINGS

Question No. 4,620—Mr. Leggatt:

1. How many court applications to enforce compliance with undertakings attached to the approval by the agency under the Foreign Investment Review Act have been made to date?

2. How many persons or corporations have been deemed eligible under the Foreign Investment Review Act and what are their names?

3. (a) How many persons or corporations satisfying the conditions of non-eligibility under Section 3(2) of the Foreign Investment Review Act have been deemed eligible on the grounds of actual control (b) what was the evidence for actual control in each case (c) what are the names of such persons or corporations?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: 1. None. In the Agency's monitoring of undertakings to date, no investors have been found to be in default of their undertakings. Undertakings are in principle binding and enforceable through the courts. However, where it is established that a foreign investor has not fully complied with his undertakings due to unforeseen circumstances such as a major change in market conditions, every effort will be made to negotiate new or substitute undertakings so that the original objective of significant benefit to Canada is achieved. Enforcement action through the courts is likely to be a procedure of last resort.

2. As of March 12, 1976, 28 corporations were found to be eligible persons. The following is a list of names of those corporations: Bow Valley Industries Ltd.; Brascan Limited; Canadian Enterprise Development Corporation Limited; Canadian Keyes Fibre Company, Limited; Commonwealth Holiday Inns of Canada Limited; Denison Mines Limited; Federal Industrie Ltd.; Hastings West Investment Ltd.; Horne & Pitfield Foods Limited; The International Nickel Company of Canada Limited; The Metropolitan Trust Company; Alcan Aluminum Limited; Nordair Ltd.; Numac Oil Gas Ltd.; Oakwood Petroleums Ltd.; Panarctic Oils Ltd.; Ventures West Capital Ltd.; The White Pass and Yukon Corporation Limited; Asamera Oil Corporation Ltd.; Voyager Petroleums Ltd.; Waltec Enterprises Ltd.; Chieftain Development Ltd.; Consumers Glass Company Limited; Peyto Oils Ltd.; Placer Development Limited; The Big "0" Drain Tile Company Limited; Ranger Oil (Canada) Limited; Maritime Agencies Limited.

3. (a) The 28 corporations referred to in 2 above were deemed to be non-eligible under Subsection 3(2) and were considered to be eligible persons on the basis that control in fact resided with Canadians. (b) Information submitted to the Minister in the course of the administration of the Act is privileged under Subsection 14(1) of the Act. However, as all the eligibility opinions have concerned corporations, the Minister has considered all pertinent information as to where "control in fact" actually lies. In general, this information includes the following: (i) the identity and holdings of substantial non-Canadian voting blocks; (ii) the identity and holdings of substantial Canadian voting blocks; (iii) the description of the proxy practices of the company; (iv) the identity and holdings of each Canadian and non-Canadian director; (v) the identity and holdings of each Canadian and non-Canadian senior officer; (vi) the description of decision-making practices of the management; (vii) the details of agreements or arrangements with outsiders which may affect control of the company's affairs. (c) See 2 above.

PROPOSAL BY HUDSON'S BAY OIL AND GAS CO. LTD. TO ACQUIRE CONTROL OF CERTAIN ASSETS

Question No. 4,621—Mr. Leggatt:

1. In the case of the proposal of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Co. Ltd. to acquire control of certain assets of Sulpetro of Canada Ltd. under the Foreign Investment Review Act (a) what conditions were attached to the approval respecting (i) increased employment (ii) new investment (iii) increased resource processing or use of Canadian parts and services (iv) additional exports (v) Canadian participation (such as shareholders, directors or managers) (vi) improved productivity and industrial efficiency (vii) enhanced technological development (viii) improved product variety and innovation (ix) beneficial impact on competition (x) compatibility with industrial and economic policies (b) what time was permitted for compliance with the attached conditions (c) what was the last date of government review of compliance with the attached conditions?

2. As of the last date of review or as of January 31, 1976 (a) how many new jobs were created (b) what was the level of increase in new investment (c) what was the increase in resource processing or use of Canadian parts or service (d) what improvement in Canadian participation has occurred (e) what has been the increase in productivity and industrial efficiency (f) in what respect has technological development been enhanced (g) in what respect has product variety and innovation occurred (h) in what respect has competition been beneficially affected?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: 1. The privileged information provisions of Section 14 of the Act specify that the Minister may not be required to disclose undertakings given by an investor where in the opinion of the Minister the disclosure of such undertakings would prejudicially affect the person who gave the undertaking in the matter of conduct of his business affairs. Accordingly, as a matter of policy and consistent with the Act, undertakings are only disclosed when and to the extent that such disclosure is not prejudicial to the business interests of the parties concerned. In such circumstances the undertakings are indicated in press releases issued by the Minister announcing the decisions of the Governor in Council with respect to the cases concerned. The Government is reviewing the nature and extent of the information that may properly be made public concerning proposed investments reviewed under the Foreign Investment Review Act. However, with respect to cases that have already been reviewed, the disclosure of information and undertakings given in confidence, and in the knowledge of the government's existing practice and policy regarding disclosure, would be improper. The Foreign Investment Review Agency monitors and reviews compliance by an investor with all undertakings, at appropriate intervals after allowance of the investment by Governor in Council. As was indicated in the first Annual Report to Parliament on operations under the Foreign Investment Review Act, it is normally impractical to commence the monitoring process until approximately one year after allowance of the investment by the Governor in Council.

2. As the monitoring of undertaking in this case has not commenced, the information specified in the question is not available. Even if it were available, public disclosure of such information with respect to the specific business would not be permitted under Subsection 14(1) of the Foreign Investment Review Act.

2. As of the last date of review or as of January 31, 1976 (a) how many new jobs were created (b) what was the level of increase in new investment (c) what was the increase in resource processing or use of Canadian parts or service (d) what improvement in Canadian participation has occurred (e) what has been the increase in productivity and industrial efficiency (f) in what respect has technological development been enhanced (g) in what respect has product variety and innovation occurred (h) in what respect has competition been beneficially affected?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Insofar as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: 1. The privileged information provisions of Section 14 of the Act specify that the Minister may not be required to disclose undertakings given by an investor where in the opinion of the Minister the disclosure of such undertakings would prejudicially affect the person who gave the undertaking in the matter or conduct of his business affairs. Accordingly as a matter of policy, and consistent with the Act, undertakings are only disclosed when and to the extent that such disclosure is not prejudicial to the business interests of the parties concerned. In such circumstances the undertakings are indicated in press releases issued by the Minister announcing the decisions of the Governor in Council with respect to the cases concerned. The Government is reviewing the nature and extent of the information that may properly be made public concerning proposed investments reviewed under the Foreign Investment Review Act. However, with respect to cases that have already been reviewed, the disclosure of information and undertakings given in confidence, and in the knowledge of the Government's existing practice and policy regarding disclosure, would be improper. The Foreign Investment Review Agency monitors and reviews compliance by an investor with all undertakings, at appropriate intervals after allowance of the investment by Governor in Council. As was indicated in the first Annual Report to Parliament on operations under the Foreign Investment Review Act, it is normally impractical to commence the monitoring process until approximately one year after allowance of the investment by the Governor in Council.

2. Public disclosure with respect to the specific business is not permitted under Subsection 14(1) of information obtained in the course of the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act.

EXPANSION OF ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 5,097—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development receive a letter, dated March 12, 1976, from the Honourable Leo Bernier, Ontario Minister of Natural Resources on the subject of the proposed expansion of the St. Lawrence Islands National Park and, if so (a) did Mr. Bernier express Provincial Government «misgivings» on the expansion (b) did Mr. Bernier suggest the possibility that ownership of the present St. Lawrence Islands National Park be turned over to the Province of Ontario?

2. What is the policy of the government with respect to all the matters raised by Mr. Bernier in his letter?

3. Will the government review its expansion plans for the St. Lawrence Islands National Park because of expressed Provincial Government opposition, and (a) if so, on what date will this review take place (b) if not, for what reason?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes. (a) Yes; (b) Yes.

2. Our policy is to create a National Park of a character and size which adequately preserves and presents the important natural values of the Thousand Islands area.

3. No. (a) (b) However, it is proposed, in co-operation with an independent Advisory Committee, to develop options from which a «best concept plan» for the Park can be determined. This will take up to two years. It is expected by the end of this period that a plan for a more suitable National Park will have evolved that will not only be welcomed by the local population but which will be supportive of both Provincial and National objectives.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING PROPOSALS TO CANADIAN BUSINESSES

Question No. 5,117—Mr. Matte:

1. Since 1971, has the government made purchasing proposals to Canadian businesses under the Foreign Investment Review Act and, if so, how many?

2. Were any such proposals accepted and, if so, in each case (a) how many (b) what was the name and address of the business concerned (c) in what year was it accepted (d) what was the amount negotiated?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: 1. The Foreign Investment Review Act was promulgated on December 12, 1973. Its first stage, namely, the acquisition of control of existing Canadian businesses by foreigners, was implemented on April 19, 1974; the second part, which prescribes the review of some categories of new enterprises established in Canada by foreigners, was implemented on October 15, 1975. The purpose of this law is to ensure that the acquisition of Canadian businesses and the creation of new Canadian enterprises by foreign Companies would result in significant advantages for Canada. There is nothing in the text of the Act concerning the acquisition of businesses established in Canada, by a Canadian buyer, whether it is a government or a private company.

2. Please refer to the second paragraph of the reply to the first question.

8. (a) What are the unions, if any, who represented the employees (b) did they approve or disapprove of the takeover (c) was their opinion sought?

9. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

10. How is the takeover (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the takeover?

11. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the takeover?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): See reply to question No. 3,954, answered March 2, 1976.

NEW INVESTMENT PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH A NEW BUSINESS IN BRAMPTON, ONTARIO

Question No. 5,135—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Was a new investment proposal made by Selly Oak Diecastings Ltd., of Worcester, England, which is 51 percent controlled by A.L. Dunn (Holdings) Ltd., of Nuneaton, England, which in turn is controlled by Central & Sheerwood Ltd. of London, England, to establish a new business in Brampton, Ontario, under the name Selly Oak Pattern and Mould Ltd., to be engaged in the production of moulds, patterns and tools for general industrial use and, if so, what is the total and/or per share price of the transaction, including the value of share transfers or other considerations?

2. Who are the principal shareholders of Central & Sheerwood Ltd.?

3. Does Central & Sheerwood Ltd. control and/or partially own, directly or indirectly, any other businesses in Canada and, if so, in each case, what are the holdings by percent of control and value?

4. What will be the effect of the establishment of this petroleum refinery on (a) the level and nature of economic activity in Canada (b) resource processing in Canada (c) utilization of parts, components, materials and services produced in Canada (d) exports from Canada (e) productivity, industrial efficiency, technological development, product innovation and product variety in Canada (f) competition within any industry or industries in Canada?

5. How many persons will be employed once the new plant is established?

6. What is the degree and significance of participation by Canadians in the business enterprise or new business and in any industry or industries in Canada of which the business enterprise or new business forms or will form?

7. How will the establishment of this plant be (a) compatible (b) incompatible with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives of any province likely to be affected by the new plant?

8. What is the significant benefit to Canada of the transaction?

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned: a proposal was made by Selly Oak Diecastings Ltd., of Worcester, England, to establish a new business under the name Selly Oak Pattern and Mould Ltd. in Brampton, Ontario. The proposal was allowed by the Governor in Council on March 9, 1976 (P.C. 1976-545). All information with respect to a person, business or proposed business obtained in the course of the administration of the Foreign Investment Review Act is privileged and may not be released except as provided in section 14 of that Act.

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Question No. 5,235—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Is the position as head of the Equal Opportunities for Women Section of the Department of Agriculture filled by Ms. Helen Hogan and, if so, within what salary range is the position?

2. What are Ms. Hogan's projected expenses for 1976?

3. Does Ms. Hogan have any staff working directly for her and, if so, what are the costs for such staff?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes. Salary range—$14,937—$16,934.

2. 1976-77—$50,000, including salaries.

3. Yes. Salary range—$10,394—$11,364. (CR 4).

*PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO JUNE 6 TO 8, 1975

Question No. 2,679—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. Were any government aircraft used in the advance preparation of the tour of Southwestern Ontario, on the weekend of June 6 to 8, 1975, by the Prime Minister and, if so (a) which aircraft (b) for how long was each used (c) what was the exact itinerary of each (d) what was the cost of use of each (e) what reimbursement was (i) sought (ii) received from the Liberal Federation of Canada or the Liberal Party of Ontario (f) what was the (i) name (ii) job description and who was the employer of each individual taking part in any of the trips?

2. Is it general practice of the government to allow government aircraft to be used by individuals making advance arrangements for trips by the Prime Minister, which include partisan functions and, if so (a) what is the authorization for such practice (b) what guidelines cover such practice?

3. For each year 1974 and 1975 (a) on how many occasions (b) on what specific dates were government aircraft used for such purpose and, in each case (i) what was the name (ii) who was the employer (iii) what was the job description of each passenger (iv) what was the exact itinerary of the aircraft (v) what was the cost of the use of such aircraft (vi) what remuneration was sought or received from the Liberal Federation of Canada or any other organization and what are the identities and amounts paid by any such organization?

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Here is the answer, Mr. Speaker. Paragraph 1. (a), (b), (c), (d) see reply to question 2,708. (e) None. (f) See reply to question 2,708.

2 and 3. It is not general practice. This is the only instance in the calendar year 1974-75.

*PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP TO JAMAICA—1976 EASTER HOLIDAY

Question No. 5,339—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Prime Minister use a government owned aircraft for his 1976 Jamaican Easter holdiay and (a) if not, who is the owner and what is an exact description of the aircraft (b) if so, what was the (i) cost per hour of flying time (ii) cost per hour of waiting time (iii) amount of fuel consumed and its cost (iv) total cost to the taxpayer of all flights made?

2. What is the (a) name and job designation (b) reason for being on board the aircraft, at any time, of all persons (i) from Canada to Jamaica (ii) from Jamaica to Canada (iii) during other flights?

3. (a) What were the (i) names and job designations (ii) annual salaries of the crew (b) did they remain in Jamaica while the Prime Minister was there and, if so (i) what were their total salaries earned for the period of the trip (ii) in what locations did they stay (iii) what was the total cost of their accommodations, meals etc. to the taxpayer?

4. Were any expenses paid by the government other than transportaton for the Prime Minister or anyone in his party and, if so, in each case (a) for whom (b) for what purpose (c) in what amounts?

5. What was the overall total cost to the taxpayer of all aspects of the Prime Minister's Easter holiday?

[Translation]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer, to question

No. 5,339 is as follows. In so far as the Prime Minister's Office is concerned the answer to paragraph 1. is no. (a) Schedule commercial flight. (b) Not applicable. 2. Not applicable. 3. Not applicable. 4. Not applicable. 5. Nil.

Mr. Speaker: Will the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT FAILURE TO DEVELOP EFFECTIVE ENERGY STRATEGY FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley) moved:

That this House regrets the government's failure to develop an effective energy strategy for the Atlantic provinces and in particular deplores the callous attitude shown by the government to the plight of hundreds of those families living in the Atlantic provinces who in many cases can no longer afford to heat their homes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to raise the subject of this important motion as a member from central Canada because, unlike government members, I believe Canada can only prosper when all Canada prospers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: It is imperative, if we are to have an energy policy, for Canada, that it is a policy for all Canadians and not just western Canada or, indeed, central Canada.

The policy document "An Energy Strategy for Canada" presented an opportunity that has been sadly wasted—the chance to take leadership on the Atlantic power issue. In 23 pages of policy recommendations, Atlantic Canada was mentioned only eight times. No new policies were announced which will answer the special problems the region faces. Moreover, the policy of moving to world prices, aside from whatever other benefits may accrue, will certainly put a heavy strain on already fragile economies. the Atlantic region, consuming 40 barrels of oil per capita, uses a third more oil per head than Quebec, the next largest consumer. Half of the region's electricity is oil-fired.

Even with subsidies, the escalation of oil prices in the past two years has created real hardship. In Nova Scotia, electricy prices have risen by approximately 70 per cent in one year. There is only a vague reference to the problem in the report, as follows:

—(the government will be) encouraging substitution of electricity generated from domestic energy resources, including hydro and coal, for electricity generated from imported oil.

Beyond this the government has nothing to say about this crucial problem. The people of the Atlantic provinces do not want jam tomorrow; they want leadership today. The arrogance of this government is summed up by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) who seems to believe that what benefits central Canada is in the national interest, but what harms Atlantic Canada harms that area alone. The federal government offers no special assistance of any kind to alleviate the region's pressing problems. To date, the principal forms of aid offered by the federal government have been grants to cover 50 per cent of the cost of nuclear power stations, grants to cover half the cost of regional interconnections between provinces, and Fundy tidal power studies, but nothing has been done to help alleviate the problems—and it is obvious from ministerial pronouncements that nothing will be done.

The federal policy of giving grants to cover half the cost of the first nuclear station purchase by a province is not motivated by any compassion for the east coast's energy problems, but is simply a loss leader for nuclear sales. Aside from considerable doubt about the safety of nuclear power stations, their reliability and the hazards of waste disposal, the economics of nuclear power are coming into serious question. Last month it was announced that the anticipated costs of the New Brunswick nuclear power station had increased by $100 million to $600 million, an increase of 20 per cent. The net result is this: at present coal prices of about $30 per ton delivered, nuclear and coal-fired electricity cost about the same.

Despite not knowing what the impact of nuclear generating will be, the government insists on going ahead with nuclear generators. Would it not be a great deal better for the provinces concerned if the construction of coal-fired electricity plants was encouraged, thus avoiding the problems associated with nuclear power and encouraging the growth of an indigenous coal industry.

An examination of the proposal for research and development as it affects Atlantic Canada shows that it is totally inadequate for meeting the needs of the Atlantic provinces. The policy document spells out exactly where the special research and development needs of the Atlantic provinces are as far as federal research funding priorities are concerned—namely, at the end of the line. Renewable energy, which includes as its biggest component the Fundy tidal power scheme, is second to last in terms of federal priorities. Transmission system research ranked last. But transmission systems are of vital importance to the Atlantic provinces if the full benefit is to be derived from a regional or national grid. Transmission losses from ordinary power lines over long distances are substantial. Research taking place at the moment indicates that supercooled conductors could reduce power losses almost to zero. Yet the federal government put research and development in this area at the very bottom of the list. Another area of research taking place in Britain is in wave power. Preliminary findings indicate that more power generators may well be economic at current oil prices and could generate a significant proportion of base load electricity in the Atlantic provinces. Yet the government has neglected this area entirely.

It could be said that the Nova Scotia power crisis is partly the fault of the province's Liberal government. Nova Scotia, as a province, is hit hard. It is to some extent a victim of the provincial government's own energy policy. Following the provincial takeover of the industry, Nova Scotians were subjected to a barrage of advertising designed to encourage the growth of all electric heating. There was substantial response: some areas, such as new developments in Halifax's Sackville suburb, are virtually all electrically heated. Home owners now pay as much as $350 in power costs every two months during the winter. In a significant number of cases, individuals have had to sell their homes because of power costs.

We now need some scheme in the Atlantic provinces which will encourage home owners whose principal residence is electrically heated to convert to more efficient fossil fuel fired heating systems which should take the place of their electrical heating systems. A given quantity of heat in an electrically heated home in Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island requires three times as much oil as the same home would require if heated with an oil furnace. In addition, great strides have been made in coal fired central heating in Europe. Some of this technology could be applied in the Atlantic provinces.

In summary, my party believes that an adequate energy policy for Canada must include a positive program for dealing with the high cost of fuel which the people of Atlantic Canada must pay. We do not think that the policy of continuing to support the Atlantic provinces' energy costs with the type of subsidy which has been paid in the past is viable. We think it essential that the federal government should take strong action in research and development so that the Atlantic provinces can use their potential energy resources for the generation of power. That part of the country should not be dependant on changes in price governed by OPEC countries. It should not be the victims of the federal government's insatiable need for tax revenues. Its energy program should be indigenous, using the resources of the area so that the people of Atlantic Canada may have energy at prices appropriate to their incomes.

It was totally unacceptable for the minister to bring down a report on energy strategy for Canada which ignores totally the substantial needs of the people of Atlantic Canada. In the report, the government showed, again, that it is interested in technology and techniques but is not at all interested in people. The report should have dealt with an energy policy for all Canadians. It ought to have evaluated what the people of Canada, of all regions, need—not just of the west, of the central part or of the eastern region. But it did not do this. Also, this report does nothing at all for the people of Atlantic Canada.

We ask the government to reconsider what it is doing in research and development, to reconsider its priorities, to reconsider its proposals for nuclear energy and to provide realistically for the energy needs of Atlantic Canada. We ask it to develop an energy program which will meet the needs, not in 15 years, not in 10 years, but immediately. The government is responsible for developing a realistic energy program for Atlantic Canada. We must move in that direction. The purpose of the opposition motion today is to bring to the attention of the government as forcefully as possible the need for responding to the energy requirements of the people in an important part of this nation, namely, in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) for introducing the important topic of energy on a Tory opposition day. Nova Scotia now has the dubious distinction of having the second highest power rates in Canada, next to Prince Edward Island. These rates, combined, are now about double the national average, Nova Scotia being some 27 per cent above the national average.

Let us briefly summarize our position from the point of view of power sources and our position relative to other Canadian provinces. Prince Edward Island uses oil for 100 per cent of its generating capacity. New Brunswick generates about 40 per cent of its power from oil, 50 per cent from hydro and 10 per cent from coal. Nova Scotia depends on oil for 70 per cent of its requirements, on coal for 16 per cent, which is contractually tied to the price of oil, and on hydro for 14 per cent. Newfoundland and Quebec derive between 90 per cent and 95 per cent from hydro sources. Ontario derives about 50 per cent of its energy from hydro, but also has a substantial nuclear base and depends on United States coal as well to fuel thermal stations. United States coal used by Ontario has increased but has not gone up at the same percentage rate as oil in the Atlantic region.

The western provinces have substantial hydro generation in their systems. Their thermal operations use coal, in most cases from their own leases, which is provided through what the English call open cast mining and which we usually call strip mining. The price of coal there is less than $5 per ton.

In early 1974 the Canadian wellhead price of oil was $3.80 per barrel. It rose to $6.50 and on July 1, 1975, to $8. We know that very likely it will rise to $9.50 or $10 per barrel by July. The federal government is pursuing its goal of allowing the producing provinces to go to parity with the world monopoly price established by the OPEC cartel. Meanwhile, oil which in 1971 was brought from Venezuela and the Middle East to the east coast for less than $2 per barrel now costs more than $13 delivered by tanker from the same two sources.

The federal government estimates that for the fiscal year 1976-77 it will cost some $1.41 billion in subsidy payments to make up for the difference between the Canadian and the world price. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), when replying to a question of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) on April 27, 1976, as reported on page 12915 of Hansard, misled the House, I think, when he said:

The numbers I have seen indicate that very close to $1 billion has been paid indirectly to the consumers of Atlantic Canada as a result of the compensation program; that is, very close to $1 billion will have been paid to them by this summer.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Trudel), when he used the figures for compensation payments in the House on March 16 in replying to me, used the figure quoted earlier of $1.41 billion for the 1976-77 fiscal year as referring to all the territory east of the Ottawa Valley line. This means that anywhere from two-thirds to 75 per cent of the total compensation payment was going to the province of Quebec. On that premise, I conclude the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources misled us, perhaps inadvertently, on the compensation payments made to the Atlantic region.

Last year, power rates in Nova Scotia increased by 50 per cent. As every member from Nova Scotia knows, there have been citizen protest meetings held all over the province. Now, if we assume an increase by July 1 of $2 a barrel, the province's power rates are estimated to increase by an additional 10 per cent. However, that is not the end of the story for Nova Scotia. The Nova Scotia Power Corporation gets about one-half of its heavy fuel oil from Imperial Oil. A long-term contract with that company expires at the end of the year. We are purchasing that oil now at $1.75 a barrel. There will be another 20 per cent increase in our electrical costs when that contract expires. Incidentally, Imperial Oil has the Power Corporation before the courts on the interpretation of this contract which, if the Power Corporation loses, could cost the province another $100 million more or less.

In any case, Nova Scotians are faced with a maximum increase of 100 per cent in cost over a two-year period. In a have-not province, these are formidable obstacles to development, even with a special federal government subsidy which cabinet members who have spoken so far seem to frown on. It is estimated that it would take a total subsidy of $15 million to $16 million to bring Nova Scotia's electrical costs in line with the Canadian average.

The fuel bill for the Nova Scotia Power Corporation in the fiscal period which began April 1 is forecast to be $85 million. On the basis of 1972 oil prices, this would have been $20 million to $25 million. This I submit, Mr. Speaker, is a valid indicator of the extra burden now being shouldered by Nova Scotians and Prince Edward Islanders and, to a lesser extent, citizens of New Brunswick and Newfoundland. With the exception of Ontario, where imported coal from the U.S. would have a much less significant impact, this unfair situation applies to no other electric consumers in Canada outside of the Atlantic region.

Some of Ottawa's energy planners have, through the press, suggested that the present Liberal government in Halifax has brought the trouble upon its own head. The reference by the hon. member for Don Valley to electrical heating that was promoted by the Nova Scotia Power Corporation is, in my opinion, valid. I hold no brief for the government in Halifax, especially since they, along with the Tory government which ran the province before them, badly messed up the redevelopment and modernization of the vitally important steel plant in Sydney. However, I find it difficult to fault Nova Scotia's claim that they were led down the garden path on power costs by the federal government.

It is a fact that the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who was then minister of energy, mines and resources, in 1973 tabled a document in this House entitled "An Energy Policy for Canada". That document projected that foreign oil would be less than $4 per barrel by 1976 and would not reach $7 per barrel until the year 2000. On March 30, in response to a question of mine, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, said that they offered Nova Scotia the opportunity to participate in a regional nuclear reactor. He went on to say: "That offer was not taken up." As I understand it, that offer was one of a loan, or loans, to help build a second nuclear reactor at New Brunswick's Point Lepreau nuclear complex which is slated to be on-stream by 1980. The last estimate that I saw for the Lepreau plant amounted to $650 million. That was a couple of years ago. I understand—and maybe the minister can give us a better figure—it is now estimated to cost well over $1 billion.

The power officials in Nova Scotia said they would not take part in the Lepreau complex because they could not get a guarantee on the price power and they were concerned about escalating capital costs over which Nova Scotia would have no control. They also argued that Nova Scotia would not get any economic spin-off if the plant were built in another province, and from their point of view it would be unsound to get a large block of power from a single source susceptible to breakdowns in an electrical system as isolated as that of Nova Scotia. I doubt whether the minister can claim that nuclear-powered electricity will be cheap at the New Brunswick plant. The experience of these plants in the United States has not shown that to be so. In fact, nuclear costs keep rising at a great rate.

Ottawa claims that its other offer was to pick up 50 per cent of the tab for the study of a regional power grid, plus 50 per cent of the capital cost. The Nova Scotia government denies flatly that they ever refused that offer. In fact, the Premier of Nova Scotia tabled a submission in the Nova Scotia House recently showing that is 1971 the Nova Scotia Power Commission, as a member of the maritime power pool, made an offer to the federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion for assistance toward an accelerated generating transmission program between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. No federal action was taken on that submission.

A regional power grid involving the five eastern provinces would be helpful, but it requires the co-operation of all provinces and it seems that they have not been eager to go ahead. In fact, New Brunswick has given notice that it will charge what the market will bear for any electricity crossing its territory between Labrador, Quebec and Nova Scotia. It was at Nova Scotia's suggestion that the interprovincial advisory council on energy was established in late 1974. Last September, on the initiative of Premier Bourassa of Quebec, the premiers of the five eastern provinces agreed to a study to determine the availability and the economics of transmitting any surplus power. The manager of the Nova Scotia Power Corporation, Mr. Kirkpatrick, told the industry committee of the Nova Scotia legislature at the end of March that the preliminary report was not optimistic. It appears that there will be no surplus power from Quebec or Labrador in the near future. Every indication points to the fact that the regional power grid would not bring in cheap power from Nova Scotia.

I was glad to see, in the minister's submission last week, the renewed effort to get the Fundy tides studied again, but I think we have to be realistic on this score and realize that if this is going to be a steady power contributor, rather than one depending on the peaks of the tide, it will be extremely expensive and very capital-intensive. What the government of Nova Scotia should do is open two additional coal mines in the Cape Breton area, one at Lingan on the Phalen seam, and one at Donkin, which was recommended in 1971 after the closure of No. 2 mine in Glace Bay by the then special adviser on coal to the federal government, Mr. Alex Brown.

[Mr. Hogan.]

I think that in terms of British thermal units, one ton of coal is equated to four barrels of oil. The usual estimate for Cape Breton coal is 26 million Btu's per ton; for one barrel of oil it is six million Btu's. If oil is to cost the Power Corporation of Nova Scotia between $15 and $17 a barrel by 1980, then surely, given the high rate of unemployment in Cape Breton and the diseconomies which come from depending on buying nuclear power from New Brunswick or obtaining cheaper power from the regional grid, the province should return to coal to provide a great deal of its thermal needs, although we must admit that up to now the reserves capable of being mined are not accurately known. However, Devco intends to carry on an active program of offshore drilling.

Of course, it takes time and money to open new coal mines and the only answer to the short run problem of Nova Scotia from now until 1982 is a special subsidy or special equalization grant from the federal government to keep that have-not province from becoming even worse off economically. If we neglect to do this, not only will development be hindered but many pensioners and others in low income groups will face an unbelievably cruel situation as human beings and as citizens of this nation.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this difficult and complex subject I thought that there would be somebody on the government benches with at least enough interest, if not enough comprehension, to rise and take part in the discussion. The minister waves his hand and says they want to hear me first.

Mr. Gillespie: It is an opposition day. It is your day. I hope the hon. member will have something better to say than we have heard so far.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If the minister wants to make a speech, why does he not get up and make it?

Mr. Stanfield: I do not think the minister is anxious to make a speech, in view of what he has been saying today and what he has said in the past. Regardless of what they believe the approach to this problem should be, every one has to agree that the maritime provinces, especially Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, are confronted by an alarming prospect. Whether a solution is difficult or whether it is reasonably within everybody's grasp, one gets the impression here in the House that the minister and the government are not really sympathetic in terms of finding an approach to this problem.

There can be no question about the prospect in store for a good many individuals, some of whom are obliged to get along on low incomes. In any event, I assume the government of Nova Scotia will have to show some leadership, hopefully in association with the government here, in finding some way of alleviating the conditions in which those individuals find themselves.

I want to take the limited amount of time available to me today to talk about the effect of higher increased fuel costs, both the increase which has already taken place and the increase which is to be expected, on the economy of the region. In doing so, I do not in any way play down the effect of those increases upon individuals, but I am concerned this afternoon to place before the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie)—who is in the House and who is the responsible minister—the effect of those increases in power costs upon the government's whole program for fighting regional disparity in the maritime provinces. This is a subject in which the minister responsible for DREE should have an intense interest.

Fighting regional disparity has been an important aspect of government policy during the lifetime of the administration under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and, indeed, prior to that time. The results have not been particularly sensational, but the government has made this a priority and certainly it has spent a good deal of the taxpayers' money in an effort to reduce regional disparity by encouraging the development of the maritime economy. Ever since 1968, the year in which the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was established, I have contended that one of the great weaknesses of the government's program of regional economic development has been the lack of co-ordination within the government of Canada itself. The minister responsible for DREE would take some initiative which would be helpful, only to find it counterbalanced by action taken, for example, by the Minister of Transport.

Today we are discussing a striking example of a development which will clearly undermine the efforts of DREE to develop the economy of the maritime provinces generally. I do not want to be unfair to the minister, but in my opinion he, as the minister responsible, has shown a most cavalier attitude toward this whole question. I am not referring to the minister responsible for DREE, but to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Here is a striking example of a development which is taking place and threatening to escalate, one which is most discouraging to the development of industry in the eastern provinces. It affords a striking example of lack of co-ordination in terms of government effort.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said in the House the other day that the government of Canada is not likely to get into the business of equalizing power rates across the country. I accept that statement, but I have to ask the question: What will be the economic consequences of what is taking place with respect to power costs in the Atlantic provinces? What is likely to be the effect of increases in power costs on the movement of the economy in those provinces? Is it possible to develop some answer, if only a partial answer, which will not have the effect of offsetting any forward thrust which has been generated by DREE, by the provinces or by the people themselves? Is it possible to develop such an approach, rather than simply taking the attitude the minister seems to have taken, that the government of Canada has already done a great deal for the people of the maritime provinces, and let it go at that?

I accept the minister's point that a good deal of money has been spent in terms of tax-sharing and equalization. But I would ask the minister: What is the sense in the government of Canada involving itself in the kind of expenditure about which the minister has boasted, and then letting the effects of all this go down the drain by allowing an increase in power rates? Let us give the minister and his government whatever credit they may seek for equalization payments and other special programs; but if they accept that credit then they must explain to the people, not only of the maritime provinces but of Canada why, having embarked on those programs, why they are sitting back coolly and allowing to happen what is happening to power rates while permitting the price of oil to move up toward world prices.

The minister and other spokesmen for the government have inferred from time to time that there are solutions available to the province of Nova Scotia, but they try to leave the impression that somehow the government of the province of Nova Scotia, or somebody down there, did not take advantage of the wisdom handed out in various emanations from the federal government from time to time.

What are the alternatives in Nova Scotia, for example, to the development of power from oil? There is the possibility of a switch to coal. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) and my distinguished colleague from Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) of the NDP spoke about this. I should like to think that there is some prospect of a significant increase in the use of Nova Scotia coal in the development of power, but this would represent a substantial investment that would take a fair amount of time. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond understands all too well that we do not open a coal mine, for example, in six months, a year or even two years. It takes time.

I want to be frank with the House, Mr. Speaker. How much would a switch to coal really reduce the cost of power in Nova Scotia? I think it is an excellent idea in that it would involve additional employment in Nova Scotia and would add to the economy of the coal mining areas there. But I rather suspect that the price of coal from the mines would tend to follow upward the price of oil. I see the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond nodding his head in agreement. So that I am not misunderstood, certainly I favour the use of coal in the development of power in Nova Scotia, but I doubt very much whether, in terms of Btu's, over the years, coal would be a cheaper source of electrical power than oil. I gather from his nod that the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond tends to agree that that is probably the case, though like me he has indicated that he favours the use of coal for this purpose in view of the development and employment opportunities involved. In any event, any movement in that direction would take time.

Federal ministers have also talked about development of an interprovincial grid. That, too, takes time. Recent inquiries have indicated that there is not likely to be any power available from sources outside the maritime provinces for a good number of years. There is no reason to believe that if a grid could be constructed, even within six months, it would result in the availability of cheaper power for Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island. There is absolutely no indication that any such power would be available from Quebec, Newfoundland or Labrador for many years to come.

Another alternative is nuclear power. The station in New Brunswick, I understand, will not be finished until 1980. But how much is this power going to cost? For the sake of New Brunswick, I hope it is not going to cost too much. I doubt that we will get any firm indication today from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of what will be the cost of power generated by that nuclear power station. If the minister and his colleagues are going to talk to the House about sources of power other than oil, and are going to push nuclear power in Canada and its use in the maritime provinces, then they should be prepared to give us some pretty firm prices.

If these ministers are going to suggest to members of parliament in this country that this source of power constitutes an alternative—leaving aside for the moment any questions of safety in the CANDU system—and if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is going to suggest to the people of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island that they should turn to nuclear power, then they have to be able to give some pretty firm assurances as to cost, and I do not think they can do so. So I suggest that some of these alternative sources are pretty dubious. It seems difficult to put a firm cost on nuclear power.

Access to cheaper power through a grid seems to be based on the assumption that cheaper power from somewhere else is available, whereas in fact inquiries reveal there is no such power available, at least for quite a number of years into the future, if then. Where does that leave us, Mr. Speaker? I think it leaves the government of Canada in the position where it will have to stop talking in general terms and get down to actual cases. The government was told in the House today that there is no power available in the future under a grid system. Use of nuclear power has been questioned on the basis of how much it is going to cost. Is it going to be any cheaper than power generated by oil, even with oil at world prices?

I do not want to talk too long, Mr. Speaker, but may I just say that these alternatives will take years to develop. I do not think it is any exaggeration to say that it will take ten years to bring about any significant change in the cost of electric power in Nova Scotia by turning to an interprovincial grid or to nuclear power to any extent. I should like the minister, as well as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), to indicate to the House what they think is going to happen to industry of all kinds in the maritime provinces during that ten-year period. I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should get together with the power authority down there with a view to working out a longer term solution which would hold together, not just generalities such as they have cast out to date. Certainly that is part of the answer. Part of the answer is for the responsible minister in the federal government to work out a longer term solution with the maritime provinces. They have not done that yet, at least I do not see any sign that the minister has put forward concrete, hard-headed alternatives to the way in which power is presently being developed there, unless one wants to talk about coal.

I ask my colleagues opposite what will happen to the economic development of the maritime provinces during the ten-year period when they switch to an alternative which the government of Canada has not yet developed. Does it make any sense to have embarked upon a program of regional economic development in that area and let all else go down the drain by simply sitting back and refusing to work out some kind of interim solution?

I was amazed, in the committee on regional development, to find that the department has not had any study made of the effects of the anticipated higher power costs on the economic development of those provinces. They can ascertain very easily what the projections are about power rates. The Nova Scotia Power Corporation and the authorities in New Brunswick and in P.E.I. can tell the ministers what they expect the power rates will be, based upon changes in oil prices. But the responsible authorities in this government have not conducted any studies to ascertain what the effects of those high power rates will be on the economic development of the maritime provinces.

How can one possibly justify such a lack of interest? I do not pretend that the problem is easy to solve, but I cannot accept what seems to me to be the very cool, detached, cavalier attitude of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to this problem. I do not want to be unfair to the minister. I do not think it makes sense for the government of Canada, having involved itself deeply in a program of regional economic expansion, to refuse now to attempt to work out a selective and transitional program which will enable the economy of those provinces to continue to move forward.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There is probably a pretty fair percentage of the industry—I am not talking simply about the manufacturing industry, but I am referring to farmers, fishermen, and so on—which will be hurt by the higher power rates but which can carry on and still continue to develop because power costs will not be a large proportion of their costs. On the other hand, there is probably a significant proportion of the economy of those provinces which could well be obliterated completely if those industries had to operate with the anticipated power rates for a period of five to ten years. Yet the indications are that this government has not even attempted to find out what those industries are likely to be and what might be done in conjunction with the provinces to enable them to carry on. I think that is inexcusable.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are starting to rise in order to remind me that my time is up. I am almost ready to sit down, in any event. I call upon the ministers present, and the members behind them, to ask themselves whether they are not sufficiently committed to the program to fight economic disparity, both in terms of commitments already made and moral commitments to the people of the maritime provinces and the people of Canada, and whether they are not sufficiently committed to the policy of fighting regional economic disparity to come seriously to grips with the effects of the anticipated higher power rates on the economy of these provinces. Are they not prepared to sit down with the provinces and work out, perhaps not a solution—that would be too much to ask for—but a method of enabling the economy to go forward, to work out what I call a selective and transitional program? It is not good enough for the government simply to say they have already done a lot for the maritime provinces. Maritimers can talk about what they have done for the people of Canada, as far as that is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is not good enough simply to talk in these terms and to waste the taxpayers' money that has already been spent by allowing industry after industry to go down the drain as a result of higher power costs. So I say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that he should come to grips with this problem, face it, and for goodness sake I hope he does not get up and talk in general terms about long-term solutions that are vague. I ask whether he is not prepared in principle to accept the program of selective and transitional aid to preserve the validity of the government's program of fighting regional economic disparity.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I very much welcome the opportunity that this debate provides for us to discuss a very important question to Canadians, particularly to Atlantic Canadians. But I do not think we should see the problem just in Atlantic terms. As important as that problem is to Atlantic Canada, it is quite clear to me that other communities in Canada can make their own claims for special treatment. However, that is not the debate today. The debate today is on special concerns of Atlantic Canada—and I want to address myself to that debate.

I listened with great care to the energy critic of the official opposition. Indeed, I had already had the benefit of reading his new release which went out yesterday, in which he stated:

During this debate the Progressive Conservatives intend to press home the government's responsibilities to the people of Atlantic Canada and make positive suggestions to ameliorate the situation.

I listened very carefully to hear what those positive suggestions were that he would offer us and the people of Canada, more particularly the people of Atlantic Canada. Quite frankly, I have to say that I could not find them in his words. I listened carefully to the former leader of the opposition, and if the Tory party has some ideas, I hope during the course of the debate there will be more specific information provided to us.

● (1600)

Quoting the lead-off speaker, I think he said that his party does not want to hear from the government about grants toward the future and that they want something for today. I may not have quoted him exactly, but he seemed to opt out completely from the problem in Atlantic Canada. The former leader of the opposition was careful to point out and explain to us the problem and its over-all effects. He pointed out the long-term problem and the problem with respect to the industrialization of Atlantic Canada. I can understand that, but I had great difficulty when I listened to the energy critic, the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), turn his back on the long-term solutions. He referred to nuclear power as if that was something we should not even consider for Atlantic Canada. He called it a loss leader for nuclear sales in Canada. That was his phrase. It was a great phrase, but that is the problem with his party; it is faint-hearted when it comes to the best piece of technology Canada has ever developed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The CANDU system has already demonstrated that it is a system which is second to none. If the hon. member disagrees with me or questions that, I ask him to ask his colleague from a provincial riding very close to his, the minister of energy for the province of Ontario, Mr. Timbrell. It seems to me that is the only basis upon which the Ontario government can justify spending millions, if not billions of dollars in the future. We in Canada have the best nuclear system in the world. I think it might be useful if I were to spend a few minutes dealing with the dimensions of the problem and, more particularly, with the reasons for there being a specific problem.

Mr. Gillies: We know the questions; what are the answers?

Mr. Gillespie: That is the glib, superficial approach of the hon. member for Don Valley. He would like to be instant expert, without knowing what the problem is.

An hon. Member: Better an instant expert than no expert at all.

Mr. Gillespie: It is suggested time and time again that the only problem the Atlantic provinces have is that they are dependent upon foreign oil and that a very large proportion of their electrical energy is generated from oil. The hon. member for Don Valley said so. That came through. That is all that usually comes through. There is very little recognition of the fact—I have not heard anyone opposite say this—that probably the most important fact is that the energy efficiency of generating plants in Atlantic Canada is about 50 per cent of those in other parts of Canada.

Mr. Hogan: That is because they use oil.

Mr. Gillespie: It has nothing to do with the fuel; it has to do with the size of the plants and their efficiency. That is why grids and interconnections are important. They are important because the people of Atlantic Canada can benefit from very much larger, more efficient generating units. If the hon. member would listen, he might recognize where some of the leaders of Atlantic Canada have been rather shortsighted.

Mr. Gillies: To say nothing of the leaders of the federal government.

Mr. Gillespie: If we look at the generating efficiency of plants in Ontario, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, we find that in Ontario roughly 665 kilowatt hours per barrel of oil can be produced. In Nova Scotia, that figure is 550 and in P.E.I. it is 445. If we put the fuel requirement ration for Ontario down as 100 per cent, we find that Nova Scotia's is 120 per cent and Prince Edward Island's is 150 per cent. In other words, the ration is very important when it comes to the cost of generating and converting oil into electrical energy.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Gillespie: I would be pleased to answer questions at the end of my remarks. The second problem is that of dilution. Every increase in the price of oil will have a greater effect on Nova Scotia and P.E.I. than elsewhere because of the higher proportion of their electrical energy which is generated from oil. The net effect of these two factors, lower efficiency and greater dependance on oil, is the real problem as far as the increase in electrical energy costs in Atlantic Canada is concerned, particularly with respect to Nova Scotia and P.E.I.

There are several other problems which I think are important to place on the record at the present time. One has to do with the rate of change of electrical energy costs. The Nova Scotia government did not increase the price of electrical power between 1958 and 1974, a period of 16 years. During that period most of the public utilities of the other provinces were moving the cost of their power up, so that their consumers were becoming adjusted to higher power rates. The Nova Scotia Power Commission, on the other hand, waited a full year and a half after the oil price increase before it moved its price up. Subsequently, of course, it had to move it up very much more dramatically, with all that that entails for the people and the squeeze on their incomes. Perhaps it might be worth noting that the real cost of electrical power today in Nova Scotia and in the Atlantic provinces, when compared with the average hourly wage of Nova Scotians and those in the Atlantic area, is lower today than it was ten years ago. To put it another way, wages have increased much more rapidly than power costs over that ten-year period, so that they have to work 35 per cent less time to purchase the same amount of electrical energy in 1976 compared with 1966.

Mr. Gillies: What about the last two years?

Mr. Gillespie: I am not trying to make the case that electrical energy is cheap, but I am trying to put it in some kind of context so that hon. members can understand the problem. Another point which the hon. member for Don Valley overlooked was the whole question of insulation standards. His remarks were really geared to the electrically-heated house. As I understood him, the one measure he would promote and advocate would be some kind of temporary assistance to convert from electrically-heated houses to houses heated by coal or some other form of energy; but he did not spell that out. If he has any particular views as to how that should be done or what amounts of money should be devoted to it, I would be very interested in hearing from him. The point which has to be made is that in many electrically-heated houses the costs have gone sky high, and they have done so because electric heat has gone into the wrong kinds of houses. The houses have been either poorly insulated or not well designed for using electric heat. Hon. members pointed out a number of very unfortunate incidents, but I think they are for the Nova Scotia Power Commission to deal with. I think they should introduce insulation standards and regulate the use of their own resources.

● (1610)

Over the years, the federal government has put together a number of particular thrusts with respect to the energy future of Atlantic Canada. I think the best way for me to deal with this is to put them into five different categories.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Let me start with those policies which are aimed at increasing access to large units of generating capacity. I refer to the efficiency of the average-sized generating station in Atlantic Canada. The federal government has provided assistance for the upgrading of the size and financing of power generation. I am referring, of course, to the Gull Island project in Newfoundland. The federal government said it would underwrite the transmission costs for this with loans to cover half the transmission costs, providing access to a larger unit. There is the interconnection from the mainland to Prince Edward Island, with loans and grants of $27 million to provide, for Prince Edward Island, access to larger units of generating capacity. There is also the access of which New Brunswick took advantage, namely, to an interconnecting grid arrangement.

In July, 1972, officials of my department made proposals to the electrical utilities departments in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for a joint power pool plant in the Atlantic provinces which would give access to larger, more efficient units. These proposals were made more than a year prior to the oil crisis of October, 1973. I regret to say that these types of initiatives have not been picked up as we would have liked.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) pointed out that grid arrangements are not going to solve the problems of the Atlantic provinces and that, indeed, this would take some years. He is right. But if the Nova Scotia government, in its wisdom, had chosen to avail itself of some interconnecting possibilities several years ago—

Mr. Stanfield: Where?

Mr. Gillespie: —it might today be using the power which is now exported to Maine.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: Does the hon. member realize that New Brunswick is exporting power to Maine?

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Yes. And the other way around; it is coming back.

Mr. Gillespie: I would invite hon. members opposite to look at a missed opportunity when it comes to grid interconnections. I have referred to larger units, Mr. Speaker. I would hope it would be possible to bring on the Gull Island development project, at least in the transmission stages. In that connection, the government has an offer on the table of $343 million, being 50 per cent of the estimated transmission cost.

I have already referred to the other interconnections that the federal government is involved in with Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. Perhaps I should put on the table an overview of the amounts which the federal government has made available to the provinces of Atlantic Canada over the last ten years through grants or loans. I am speaking now only of electrical generation, not the total picture.

There is the oil import compensation program just for electrical energy, which is modest when you compare it with the total; the grant to the New Brunswick interconnection; the grant to the Prince Edward Island interconnection; grants for interconnection studies for Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland; grants for the tidal power program; grants for present tidal review; Atlantic Development Board grants for electrical projects; grants for coal subventions under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, 1958-1969, and the losses which have been picked up by Devco on the pricing of coal, which is a form of subsidy to the electrical users of the Atlantic provinces. These grants total $269 million.

In addition to these, Mr. Speaker, loans were made available to the Atlantic provinces under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act for transmission and thermal power plants, to the Prince Edward Island interconnection, to the Point Lepreau nuclear plant, and the offer for Gull Island transmission. These total $927 million. That does not include grants under the oil import compensation program which have been paid to Atlantic provinces consumers directly or indirectly over and above the oil import compensation program of approximately $90 million for electrical generation noted above.

The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) asked some questions about this, and I think I can satisfy him on the reconciliation of the two sets of figures. The first point is access to large units of generation. The second point is that the thrust has been made to provide alternative sources of power which are not subject to the same kind of escalation as oil prices when they are under the control of the OPEC nations' cartel. Clearly, I am talking about nuclear power and the offer made to the province of Nova Scotia. I would hope the province would find it in their interest to re-examine plans for their participation in a nuclear plant for the province, probably in conjunction with other provinces in the region.

With regard to research and development for new types of energy such as Fundy power, I have referred to grants made with respect to tidal power. There have been demonstration projects in Prince Edward Island on solar and wind power, and Iles-de-la-Madeleine this summer will have a wind power demonstration project, costing roughly $250,000, which should provide enough electricity to light approximately 600 houses. These are alternative sources of power and I believe each has a particular relevance to a particular type of community need.

The opposition has made no reference to Petro-Canada. I can understand their reluctance to give it any credit. After all, they held up debate in this House for weeks last summer when they tried to stop passage of the bill establishing Petro-Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: I find it passing strange that when Petro-Canada puts together a deal along with two other oil companies, a consortium, which in all likelihood would not otherwise have been formed—a deal of $25 million a year on the Scotian shelf for five years—to stimulate the search for oil and natural gas off that coast, there is no comment by the opposition. Mr. Speaker, you might ask about the long-term plans. I would ask you to look at the operations of Petro-Canada in the eastern offshore: you would discover some real benefits for eastern Canada.

Mr. Jarvis: You told us yesterday in the House that that was hypothetical.

Mr. Gillespie: If you would read the question and answer, you would discover it was right on. Over the years the federal government has provided a good deal of assistance to the Atlantic provinces in regard to coal, and for very good reason: it hopes to assist consumers in the Atlantic provinces to use their indigenous resources. But we also have to recognize that some of that coal has pretty high sulphur content. I should like to hear how hon. members opposite would rationalize using high-sulphur coal in a dense urban environment.

● (1620)

Mr. Forrestall: Is the minister worried about the environment?

Mr. Gillespie: I am talking about environmental concerns. Many in the Atlantic provinces, particularly in urban areas, are concerned about the environment. The hon. member may not be, but I am sure many of his constituents are.

A number of times in the House I have referred to the need for energy conservation. I should like to be able to say that all provinces in the Atlantic region have adopted conservation as a major priority. Unfortunately, I am not sure that their heart is in conservation. It would not be helpful to identify particular governments, but I can say that some governments are reluctant to accept the federal government's suggestions about conservation. I am talking about speed limits, which are important.

I do not think there is any comprehensive program in the Atlantic region concerning insulation or building code standards. If heating costs in Atlantic Canada are high, it is up to the people of the area to ask why there is no building code and why the provincial governments have not established insulation standards. Why have they not insisted on certain insulation standards?

Mr. Hogan: But they have.

Mr. Gillespie: If they are in place, it is not clear they are being properly enforced. I think my time has nearly ended, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Gillespie: I refer to the point made by the hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Stanfield). He said we should work with the provinces. I assure him that we are anxious to work with the provinces and have taken initiatives in the past to work with them. We tried to interest them in interconnections We tried to work out with them new regulations governing existing resources off their coasts. I admit that we made progress slowly. Regulations concerning offshore drilling have been in a sort of hiatus condition for two years. I hope that that particular problem which affects Newfoundland, perhaps uniquely, and involves the federal government and the other maritime provinces will be solved this summer.

I assure the hon. member that the federal government is anxious to sit down and work out the rules. I hope that particular bottleneck can be broken. Until it is broken, the oil companies will not show much interest in drilling offshore in eastern Canada. They will stand off, and that is not in the interest of the people of the Atlantic provinces.

We wanted to discuss interconnections, or grids, with the provinces. So far the provinces have regarded this as being a matter for their public utilities bodies. In a sense, the various provincial public utilities must work out the problem. Until we are invited to take part in the discussions we shall have no way of influencing grid arrangements or interconnection arrangements other than through the sort of measures already taken; that is to say, with conditional loans or the sort of grants made in the past. I hope the Atlantic premiers will show an increased awareness of the possibilities of joint action in these areas. I hope, also they will show a growing commitment to energy conservation—because, as hon. members know, a large part of the energy conservation job is the responsibility of the provinces. They must consider building standards for houses, and insulation standards. They must consider speed limits on highways and lighting standards in buildings. In these areas we think we can assist.

Mr. Forrestall: How are you doing in Ottawa with your lighting standards?

Mr. Gillespie: We hope, also, to work out with the provinces the kind of fuel use which the energy strategy document makes clear. We want to encourage greater use of nuclear fuel, greater use of coal and of tidal power. For our part, we are committed to working with the provinces. I invite hon. members opposite to put forward any specific suggestions, and I invite hon. members from the Atlantic provinces present in this House to work actively in their own backyards to encourage their provincial governments to move forward in this area.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) may ask a question only if he has consent.

Mr. Gillespie: Certainly.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister many questions. I grant the importance of pursuing conservation even more vigorously than the government of Canada has, but I wonder how this will meet the problems of industry in Nova Scotia. I grant that Petro-Canada is looking for oil off our coasts, and hope it succeeds, but I wonder how this will reduce electric power costs in Nova Scotia.

I grant that the size of electrical generator units has an important relationship to costs. Does the minister contend that any generating units built in Nova Scotia in the last 10 or 20 years, since the Nova Scotia system was tied in with that of New Brunswick with federal aid almost 20 years ago, should be abandoned? There is an interconnection between the systems of which the minister may not know. Does the minister suggest abandoning some of the smaller plants built in earlier days, as a means of reducing the cost of electric power? That is the real question. Further, am I correct in assuming that the minister will not recommend this year or in the next few years any method for overcoming this problem but, rather, that he is counting entirely on working out some long-term solutions with the provinces concerned? Is that the minister's position?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked a series of questions. I shall do my best to answer. The longer run strategy for electrical generating is that it must be based on more efficiency. That means access to larger units. It also means interconnections.

Mr. Stanfield: But there are interconnections. Am I to understand that that is the minister's long-term solution?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants me to carry on the debate, I shall be pleased to do so. I was trying to say, succinctly, that there must be access to large units and that interconnections are important for that purpose. I do not think existing interconnections are sufficient to look after the longer term needs of Atlantic Canada, and in Atlantic Canada I include Newfoundland and Labrador. I do not know whether the hon. member includes those parts of Canada. Perhaps he does not.

My second point was that nuclear power will be a most important future source of energy; that nuclear costs for electrical generation do not escalate in the same way as for coal or other fossil fuels which are subject to the influence of a cartel. The comparison probably is a good one between the cost of generating power from hydro projects, which are capital-intensive initially, and nuclear. That is the reason I think nuclear power is very important for the future of Canada, including Atlantic Canada.

• (1630)

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, the recently proposed energy strategy for Canada tabled in this House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) was received with great disappointment and some disillusionment in Atlantic Canada because the strategy does not seem to fully contemplate or to appreciate the severity of the impact of increasing electricity costs on consumers who live in an area which suffers from the effects of chronic regional disparity.

Hon. members may recall that people in Atlantic Canada, where wages in many cases are one-third below the national average, were among the first to feel the sharp edge of the government's anti-inflation program when the Irving firm dared to raise the wages of its employees above the guidelines. Some people in Atlantic Canada, particularly in the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, are facing electricity increases of 200 to 300 per cent and they have absolutely no hope of seeing wage increases to compensate for it. It is important that members of parliament from the Atlantic provinces make our colleagues in this House aware of this situation, and in my opinion it is imperative that any energy strategy for Canada should contain a thorough discussion of this situation if it is to be national in scope. Any attempt to ignore this problem or to avoid it is to tell maritimers to go back to the wood stove and furnace.

There is an uprecedented need for real statesmanship from our federal and provincial government leaders, and a greater need than ever for objective thinking and technical competence on the part of all professional people dealing with the short-term and long-term energy perspective. Compared with other nations, we are fortunate in that our problems are more in the nature of making choices between different energy sources and designing export policies in relation to surplus resources rather than of allocating supplies and rationing consumption.

In the field of energy development in Atlantic Canada, the federal government has not given the necessary leadership in developing, with the provinces, a master plan to provide a complete assessment and future development of the tremendous energy resources of Atlantic Canada which have been placed too far in the background in the minister's considerations and in his energy strategy. Without a full evaluation of the abundant hydroelectric and tidal resources of Atlantic Canada, the energy strategy for Canada and its policies for self-reliance are inadequate. The development of these resources for use in concert with other energy sources will provide an energy surplus for possible export at prices that can ameliorate the effect of accelerating fossil fuel costs.

One has to go no farther than the maritime provinces to see the sharp difference emerging in the cost of electrical energy produced in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, from basically a fossil fuel base, with the cost of electrical energy produced in New Brunswick where the development of hydro resources now in place has diluted the effect of fossil fuel increases. An energy strategy for Atlantic Canada must consider the combined uses of our four basic, potential energy sources. These are: nuclear, fossil fuels, the tides, and hydraulic resources.

The escalation of fossil fuel prices has placed a burden on economic development in the Atlantic provinces in general, and in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island in particular, to the extent that producers and manufacturers in these provinces have a very grim future indeed, and that future may very well be complicated by the existing restraint policies of this government.

I would like to outline some of the region's power resources. First, hydraulic resources. The major undeveloped water power resources of the Atlantic region total 38,130 gigawatts per hour annually. Of this amount, Newfoundland has some 36,000 gigawatts of undeveloped hydro potential, of which the Gull Island site on the Churchill River would produce 12,000 gigawatts, and Muskrat Falls 4,000 gigawatts per hour. The Saint John River in New Brunswick has an undeveloped potential of some 1,160 gigawatts in three sites. The 20 sites in Labrador amount to 35,000 gigawatts of the total potential. In addition, there are two sites in Newfoundland, five in New Brunswick, one principal site in Nova Scotia and miscellaneous smaller sites there. Of the five sites in New Brunswick, one contemplates the addition of units five and six to the Mactaquac dam site, and this is just about accomplished. The site in Nova Scotia that I was referring to is Wreck Cove in Cape Breton. This is under construction.

The maritime provinces coal reserves are set out in "An Energy Policy for Canada," volume 2, page 59. These indicate a total of 1,286,000 units of coal reserves measured in terms of thousands of short tons. Of this number, all but 10,000 units located in New Brunswick are in Nova Scotia. The price of coal in Nova Scotia has been tied to the price of oil and this has been a factor in the elevation of the price of coal. Obviously, coal will continue to make a major contribution to the generation of thermal power in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Most certainly, one worthy federal project is to inventory the lower grades of coal and include in that peat moss and continue to support the modernization and mechanization of the coal industry in the maritimes. The gasification of coal and waste wood has reached a relatively high degree of technology and it, too, should be considered.

With regard to oil and gas, it is thought that most of Canada's ultimate potential for conventional oil remains to be discovered, with a large proportion of these resources being found in the frontier areas such as the continental shelves and the slopes of the Atlantic coast. Since 1959, some tens of millions of dollars have been spent there on geophysical surveys, and some hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent on exploratory drilling. Over 200 million acres are now under permit.

The first offshore discovery was made by Mobil Oil on Sable Island in 1971, with significant oil and condensate finds. With 83 wells having been drilled, some would have been commercial discoveries had they been drilled on land, but with the high cost of collecting the oil and gas they will not likely come into commercial production until cheaper sources have been exhausted.

With regard to tidal power, the tides of the Bay of Fundy have, with possibly one or two exceptions, the greatest amplitude in the world. In Minas basin, the eastern branch of the upper bay, the maximum spring tide reaches an amplitude of 53 feet, and in Chignecto bay 46 feet. Thus, an immense volume of water moves in and out of these inlets every 12 hours and 25 minutes, which is the period of a tidal cycle governed by the rotation of the earth and its position relative to the moon and the sun.

Obviously, the energy contained in the moving mass of water is enormous. For centuries man has pondered way of recovering this energy. In recent years the problem has been studied in great detail. The dynamic and physical problems have been largely solved, and our technology and capital resources exist whereby there is no question of the capability of man to harness the tides. There are, however, a number of difficulties in the way of successfully and economically generating firm electrical energy from the tides. The first is the fluctuating nature of the tide, which means that in its present form there is no firm energy available except by adopting what is known as the two-basin scheme, which adds greatly to the capital cost of the structures. Thus, the form of processing or retiming involving additional generating facilities must be introduced before the tidal energy can serve a normal electrical power system.

● (1640)

A second difficulty lies in the magnitude of the structures and the problem of building these in what is essentially the open sea. The schemes which are being considered for the Bay of Fundy consist of dams across the inlets containing a large number of turbines connected to generators and a series of sluice gates. When the tide is rising, water flows through the gates and to some extent through the turbine openings into the basin formed by the dam. The basin can thus be filled to approximately the same level as that of the incoming tide. The gates and turbine passages are then closed and remain so until the tide has dropped sufficiently to create the head necessary to turn the turbines. The turbine intakes are then opened and the water passes from the basin through the turbines and into the open bay. Thus, during every 24 hours and 15 minutes there are two periods of roughly four hours when generation takes place. There are many other arrangements of generation and filling cycles, but I shall not go into these as the one I have briefly described is the simplest.

Present studies indicate that the easiest site to develop on Minas basin would produce about 8,000 gigawatt hours per annum, and the two other most attractive sites on Chignecto bay could together produce about the same amount. Other arrangements might be found which would produce more energy. Studies carried out in 1967-1969 resulted in the conclusion that the cost of this energy was not competitive with that of other sources at the assumed interest rate of 7 per cent and considering the market price of fossil fuel at that time.

Subsequently, serious doubts have arisen as to whether these findings are applicable under conditions prevailing now. Retiming the tidal energy through hydro pumped storage or other means can serve the peak or middle range of the load demand. As such, it would be much more valuable than it would be as fuel replacement. Furthermore, with today's confused oil supply situation and current rates of inflation, a source of energy which once built can serve for decades at an assured cost is very tempting. Fossil fuel, nuclear and even hydro plants create some disruption of the environment. The environmental effects of a tidal development would be minimal.

The annual energy available from these principal sites that have been studied is just about equal to the total electrical energy consumption annually of the Atlantic region at the present time. It would provide for seven years' growth requirements of the region. To generate this energy in an oil-fired plant would require some 28 million barrels of oil a year.

Five potential pumped storage sites in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were examined in a preliminary way in 1968. The smaller sites of the order of 100 megawatts were found to have a cost of $90 to $130 per kilowatt at that time, excluding transmission, while sites of the order of 50 megawatts were estimated at $65 to $80. These sites will become particularly attractive for peaking purposes when nuclear plants are added to the system, with their low incremental energy costs. The pumped storage plants would also complement the development of tidal projects by upgrading the tidal energy from secondary to primary.

If nuclear power is used for load purposes, tidal power can be retimed to supply maximum and intermediate demands above the base load of an interconnected system. A power pool in eastern Canada involving the four Atlantic provinces and the province of Quebec, with interconnections to central Canada and the United States, has tremendous potential for both the economic development of the region and the provision of power from renewable resources for all of Canada. This consideration should be heavily weighted in any energy strategy for Canada, but it is not mentioned in the paper presented to us.

The maritime electric utilities have made more progress in deriving benefits than interconnections and integration of their electrical systems and from interconnections with neighbouring regions than any other area of Canada. Since the action taken on October 17, 1973, by a number of Arab states, the whole world has suddenly become aware of the fact that drastic changes in our supply and use of energy, and no doubt changes in much of our social and economic structure, are a reality which must be faced. The era of cheap energy is passed. Every effort will be needed to conserve, especially, expendable fossil fuels.

We are told that oil and gas upon which our present society depends so greatly could be depleted within the next three decades if the ever-increasing rate of consumption is continued, and certainly the cost of these present basic energy sources will continue to increase at rates which will place further severe stress on our economic structure. It has been stated by most authorities that in the decades ahead the rate of consumption of oil and gas must decline drastically. However, the prospect is for a sixfold growth in the demand for electrical energy in the next three decades, and by the year 2000 some 50 per cent of Canada's increasing energy consumption will be in the form of electricity. In the future, our basic electrical energy supply will tend no doubt toward nuclear fuel generating plants, and the variable component of this massive electrical demand will be carried by such facilities as conventional hydro plants operating at low load factors, smaller existing thermal units and tidal power plants.

The maritime region is most fortunate in that there exists within its boundaries the largest tidal power potential in the world, a source of energy the cost of which, after being constructed, will not be affected by inflation. Another very important natural resource which the region possesses is the availability of large bodies of cold water which cannot ecologically be degraded by thermal pollution and which are essential to the nuclear or high load factor component of future integrated electrical systems.

The maritime region has a very great potential in meeting the energy needs of the region for the future at the lowest possible cost, and it is suggested that this challenge can only be effectively met by a very close co-operative and completely co-ordinated effort by all the Atlantic provinces and the government of Canada, and in giving leadership in this field the government of Canada has been more distinguished by its omissions than by its acts of commission.

In the longer term search for new energy options, the government places in the same category the feasibility of using renewable resources represented by solar, wind, tidal, geothermal and biomass techniques. From this one can infer that the foot-dragging which has marked the government's performance to date in regard to the Fundy tidal power potential will continue. The government has not learned the lesson that the New Democratic Party taught so effectively, namely, "tomorrow begins today". There is a real need to develop blocks of energy in excess of the immediate needs of the region and the necessity of integration with other power systems in regions of Canada and the United States. A great deal of mutual benefit has resulted from the existing transmission interconnections New Brunswick has with Nova Scotia, Quebec and New England.

The New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, for example, has demonstrated great leadership and courage in pioneering much activity which has lead to these benefits.

There is no doubt that these benefits will be shared by Prince Edward Island when the cable interconnection is completed. However, there seems no doubt that if the maritime region is to acquire full use of its natural advantages in supplying the electrical energy needs of its people, and at the same time meet the challenge created by the oil crisis and the magnitude of the future requirements, then, as emphasized before, it is essential that the federal government provide an imaginative plan and give leadership and work in co-operation with the provincial governments who own the assets that this nation needs so greatly.

The energy from the three tidal power sites would save Canada, in balance of payments, at least $3 billion each decade and would generate electrical energy to the equivalent of 28 million barrels of oil per year every year. The sooner the tidal projects are developed, the more likelihood of lower capital costs due to inflationary trends. Even if present and future contemplated studies are accelerated by a crash program, the lag time to in-service would likely be 12 to 15 years. Very lucrative markets now exist for surplus energy which would be developed over the immediate requirements of the region. This could provide a return on investment to the region and would certainly assist in the amortization of borrowed capital. Contracts for the sale of this surplus could also provide collateral for borrowing in the United States in particular.

Some of the major power generating facilities on the Columbia River were built and owned by small rural communities through the use of taxes and bonds and contracts for the sale of power. These avenues of financing the tidal projects warrant investigation and have not been mentioned in the so-called "Energy Strategy" paper. An energy strategy for Canada should treat as a priority the development of the great potential in Atlantic Canada so that the region can take giant strides forward in its battle against economic adversity and all Canadians can share in the benefits of these great resources. All we need is a government which has the wisdom and courage to undertake great tasks and perform great deeds. It is a pity we did not have it ten years ago.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert)—Industry—textiles—Refusal of Dupont to put into production new polyester yarn plant because of low-priced imports—Government position; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Post Office—Closing of canteen at Calgary—Government position; the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens)—The Canadian Economy—Request for estimate of unemployment rate and level of inflation for the year.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT FAILURE TO DEVELOP EFFECTIVE ENERGY STRATEGY FOR ATLANTIC PROVINCES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillies:

That this House regrets the government's failure to develop an effective energy strategy for the Atlantic provinces and in particular deplores the callous attitude shown by the government to the plight of hundreds of those families living in the Atlantic provinces who in many cases can no longer afford to heat their homes.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in indicating quite clearly that I support the motion presented by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies). It should not be necessary for the House to spend time debating a motion of this type, but the philosophy behind the government's paper on energy seems to indicate that something happens to Canadians from parts of Canada other than the Atlantic provinces. Some of these people, particularly cabinet ministers, seem to be obsessed by the belief that Canada ends to the east at the St. Lawrence River. Believe you me, Mr. Speaker, it does not.

Let me remind the House, and in particular the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), that Canada started in the Atlantic provinces, the provinces by the sea where the natural energy is. The document called "An Energy Strategy for Canada" presented to the House by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources seems to be mainly dedicated to a solution of our oil problems, oil being a depleting resource. Little or no reference is made to the renewable resources in this country. In the maritime provinces, our seaside provinces, the good Lord has provided us with a natural, renewable resource. I refer to Fundy tidal power to which the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) has already referred. This power is, proportionately, cheaper than a barrel of oil.

For most of my adult life I have heard time and again of studies being undertaken of Fundy tidal power. Again this year I understand another study is being made. One of the consultants is also one of those who made a study as far back as 1946. The studies in 1946 concluded that the harnessing of Fundy tidal power was possible, feasible and practical. The Fundy tides are not only the highest in the world, but the strongest. Anyone who has watched them and observed their effect knows that this is true; you do not need a study to find that out, Mr. Speaker.

One study that I know of had to do with the erection of facilities in Shepody bay, one of the bays in the bay of Fundy, at the junction of the Petitcodiac and Memramcook Rivers. In 1946, harnessing the tides was considered possible. Owing to the way the tides flowed in that particular location, it was possible to get the benefit of them, not once or twice a day but four times a day; and there was provision for storing power. This sort of thing has been done successfully in European countries and I see no reason why Canada cannot do it in the maritime provinces.

Since the forties, some progress has been made in the Atlantic provinces in relieving regional disparity. In addition, since that time the federal government has seen fit to spend millions of dollars on the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway, even though this had a detrimental effect on the ports of Atlantic Canada.

The solid solution to the shortage of energy in the Atlantic provinces is the immediate development of tidal power. We need it now. There have been enough studies made of the question. It is essential that the federal government realize that the people of Atlantic Canada are as true blooded Canadians as those in any other part of this nation. We want to share in the progress of this nation along with the rest of Canada. We think we are part of confederation, yet when we read the document tabled by the minister we wonder if we are considered at all by those who prepared it.

In order to share in the growth of Canada, the people in the Atlantic provinces must be given greater attention by harnessing the power of the Fundy tides. I suggest that the minister of energy become more cognizant of what are the energy problems in Atlantic Canada. I take issue with the misleading conclusion reached by the minister today, though perhaps he did not intend to do so. He stated that the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission exported power to the state of Maine. That is true, but he did not indicate just how much power was imported by the province of New Brunswick through its electric power commission. As late as last night I was speaking to one of the ministers in the cabinet of the province of New Brunswick, and he told me that he believes imports and exports of power by the province of New Brunswick either balance or that the province is in a deficit position. This was not mentioned by the minister today.

The minister also made reference to insulation. I happen to be one of those in the maritime provinces who acted in response to the advertisements placed by all governments across the country for the installation of electric power. I put it in, but I put in the kind of insulation required by the power commission. There is a code and there are rules in the maritime provinces, and I suggest that the minister misled the House when he said there were no regulations. He also referred to speeding on highways. I contend that speeding in Ontario and other provinces in Canada is far more prevalent than in the maritime provinces. Our roads are not that good, Mr. Speaker.

There are several other items to which the minister and his department should direct their attention when it comes to providing electric power in Atlantic Canada. We need electric power immediately, and this energy is there. The good Lord put it there, and as minister responsible for energy, he can do something about it. An energy report of this nature so far as the maritime provinces is concerned is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to make a few brief comments on the motion before the House moved by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies). It relates to the government's energy strategy paper which was introduced in the House last week. The motion makes particular reference to Atlantic Canada, whereas the document placed before the House last week refers to an over-all strategy for Canada. I think it is regrettable that the hon. member for Don Valley did not make specific proposals for overcoming the increased cost of power in the maritime provinces, especially in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. He indicated that he would do so, but today he did not give any specifics when he spoke.

I was interested in the speech of the former leader of the opposition, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who spoke about the regional development aspects of the problem. As a member who comes from a designated regional development area, I have great concern, along with him, for that particular aspect.

● (1700)

I think the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), when he spoke about the need for co-operation between the four Atlantic provinces and the federal government made an important point. This is really the key to solving the problem before the House today, especially the electrical power rates in the maritimes. This has been the approach that the federal government has taken through the years to the problem of providing assistance to provincial governments on a regional basis. Surely this is a region with special problems in that regard.

I want to refer briefly to the strategy paper, because it is important. I believe that all parts of it have significance for Atlantic Canada. The over-all plan laid out in the strategy paper is to reduce demand in the country through an active and aggressive energy conservation program and to balance this demand, which has been increasing at a rapid rate, with increased supplies of energy. Indeed, the paper foresees a reduction in the kind of growth of energy which we have had from 1970 to 1973 of about 5.7 per cent to about 3.5 per cent and perhaps much lower than that over the next ten years.

I think the government's program on conservation as introduced in February and as implemented now is very commendable. It has tackled the problems of the automobile. It has told auto manufacturers in this country that they must manufacture cars with an average fuel consumption of 24 miles to the gallon by 1980, and 33 miles to the gallon by 1985. It has indicated that the National Research Council has to produce a new set of minimum building standards for insulation which will be implemented by the end of this year either through a federal energy conservation bill or through provincial building code systems. It has provided an outline of minimum standards of energy efficiency for appliances, furnaces and home equipment. It has provided a proposal for the reduction of energy in industry.

Last month I had an opportunity to attend a conference of some 300 people from major industries across Canada which was attended by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Marchand). It was interesting to see representatives from each sector of the economy outline how they would reduce, during the next six to ten years, energy consumption in their industries even though the industries are growing. Most of them indicated they would affect a 10 per cent to 15 per cent reduction in the energy consumption of the industry. The chemical industry, for instance, suggested they would be able to reduce their consumption by some 11 million barrels of oil a year by 1980. The federal government, in its own in-house use of energy, uses a large percentage of energy in Canada and it has indicated that its target for this coming year will be a 10 per cent reduction of energy and that that level will be maintained during the next ten-year period. These are positive plans and proposals to reduce the increase in use of energy in this country to less than 3.5 per cent during the next ten years. At the same time, the paper outlined how we plan to increase the production of energy through exploration and development by doubling the exploration effort during the next three years in offshore areas and in the Arctic region to increase our supply of energy.

Likewise, the paper indicates that the pricing of our crude oil will move up during the next two to four years to world prices, not necessarily equalling world prices but approaching them. I think it is rather interesting that many of the newspapers in the country have extrapolated this figure to 25 cents a gallon increase. If we look at the price of oil, at $8.80 a barrel in the east, and the world price of around $13, we see a difference of $4.20. The figures given to me indicate that this would result in an increase in the cost of gasoline by some 12 to 15 cents a gallon, rather than 25 cents a gallon. By moving up toward the world price we would reduce the amount of compensation that has to be paid for oil imported from offshore to eastern Canada, we would increase the incentive for exploration and development, and the increased price would have a strong effect on conservation.

The paper also indicates there will be increased resource information so that companies exploring in the offshore areas or in the north, at least under federal jurisdiction, will have to make this information available earlier than they presently do, which will provide more information for the exploration of hydrocarbons.

The paper also indicates that interfuel substitution will be an important aspect of the strategy—the use of coal for gasification and to back up oil and natural gas, and the increased use of nuclear energy to save on oil and gas-fired thermalgenerating plants.

It also suggests that there be new delivery systems, whether they be pipelines from the Arctic, pipelines across Canada from Sarnia to Montreal, or other delivery systems which would be required with the new, increased use of western oil in Central Canada. It also talks about emergency preparedness. We are a member of the international agency, and we have responsibilities there. In the event of curtailment of energy supplies from offshore, there would be a sharing of shortages. This agency also provides us with an opportunity to exchange information on research and development in energy use. This is a very important aspect of that International Energy Agency.

Increased research and development is another point in the strategy. Our budget in the past year has been some $113 million. This will be increased during the coming year by some $10 million, which will put additional funds into the research and development programs for energy conservation, the policies which the hon. member for York-Sunbury spoke about, increased studies in tidal energy and the other renewable resources of wind and wave action, as well as solar energy.

Energy

The last point in the strategy relates to increased Canadian content and participation in our energy programs through Petro-Canada and through the oil and gas regulations which will be tabled in the House later this year. If we look at the special problems of Atlantic Canada and their use of crude oil and fuel oil, whether for heating, gasoline or electrical generation, we find that during the past 2½ years from January 1, 1974, to the end of June this year over $900 million will have been spent in subsidizing the crude oil used in Atlantic Canada, whether for use in automobiles, for heating or for electrical generation. This is part of our plan for one price oil and it gives Atlantic Canada a price which is competitive with other areas of our country.

● (1710)

Likewise, the coal which is used in Nova Scotia for thermal uses, whether for heating buildings or for use in generating electricity, has been indexed. The coal which is produced by the Cape Breton Development Corporation has been indexed to the price of crude oil. Up until the last couple of years the price of crude oil in the maritimes has always been lower than the oil coming from western Canada, and this coal has been indexed to the crude oil price. This amounts to a significant subsidy to Nova Scotia through the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

The problem is electrical energy. Prince Edward Island uses 100 per cent crude oil. Nova Scotia uses some 62 per cent of oil in generating its electrical power supply, and about 24 per cent is from coal. I have already indicated that both these commodities are presently subsidized by the federal government. In fact, for heating oil used for electrical generation about $120 million in subsidies has been paid or will have been paid between January 1, 1974, and June, 1976.

I think it would be well for hon. members to remember that the generation of electricity and the running of provincial electrical utilities is primarily under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments and they jealously guard that jurisdiction. In fact, when considering matters of emergency before the Energy Supplies Allocation Board it was pointed out that the provincial governments have primary jurisdiction for the generation of electrical energy. However, in spite of this, I think it would be well to note that during the past decade or so the federal government has made significant contributions toward the generation of electricity in Atlantic Canada. These include the subsidies I already mentioned for the fuel used in electrical generation.

Under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, loans of some $225 million were made, a grant for New Brunswick interconnection of some $4 million, a loan and grant for Prince Edward Island interconnection of some $27 million, a loan for the Point Lepreau nuclear plant of $350 million, an offer for the Gull Island transmission of some $343 million, grants for interconnection studies for P.E.I. and Newfoundland of $600,000, a grant for the tidal program from 1968 to 1969 of $1.6 million, and for the tidal study which is now taking place of $1.5 million, as well as Atlantic Development Board grants for electric projects of $55 million. This gives a total of $1,127.7 million which the federal government has contributed toward energy projects in Atlantic Canada and for the construction of these projects.

It would be well for us, also, to look at electrical rates across Canada. In March of this year the average rate across Canada was $23 per thousand kilowatt hours of electricity. By comparison, the Halifax rate at that time was $27.24 per thousand kilowatt hours. The Vancouver rate was almost $25—so they were both in the same ballpark. In the Ottawa area, the Kanata rate of Ontario Hydro is some $25.08 per thousand kilowatt hours. By comparison, the Charlottetown rate is higher, some $42 per thousand kilowatt hours. But I think we have to realize that all rates of electricity are going up in Canada. For instance, Ontario Hydro will be increasing its rate by some 22 per cent per year over the next five years. Manitoba Hydro has indicated that in April of this year its rate will be going up by some 28 per cent, and New Brunswick has indicated an increase of 12 per cent. So there are many areas in our country which have rates which at the present time are comparable with Halifax, and in practically every province these rates tend to be moving up.

I should also like to mention the exploration which will be taking place this year off the east coast under the auspices of Petro-Canada which will cost some $25 million in each of the next five years. This represents about 25 per cent of the budget of Petro-Canada. It is interesting to consider whether the official opposition, and especially those hon. members from Atlantic Canada, would support their leader's proposal to wind up Petro-Canada if the Conservatives ever were in power—which, of course, is very unlikely to happen for a very long time.

In reviewing some of the points I have made, I want to mention that Atlantic Canada does have some higher electrical rates, but coal rates and heating oil rates are comparable to other parts of Canada and those rates are subsidized by the federal government. The federal government has provided a great deal of assistance—almost $2 billion—over the last few years for electrical and other energy assistance to the maritime provinces. It intends to continue its assistance by providing for interconnections, the assistance I have already indicated as well as the assistance which it has already offered for nuclear plants in that area.

I think this is a strong indication of the kind of commitment the federal government has made, not only in the past but also in the future, to equalize opportunity in Canada and especially in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I think that sometimes during these opposition day debates hon. members may wonder whether any real progress is made, particularly when dealing with very difficult issues for which the government has responsibility. It may well be argued after this debate that not much progress was made with respect to the government's altering its insensitivity and lack of concern with respect to the very serious problem of skyrocketing energy costs in the Atlantic provinces.

● (1720)

I suppose that after listening to the parliamentary secretary just a moment ago, and previously to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), members on this side of the House might be consoled by the fact that at least to some degree we have their attention. While that may not seem like much progress to the people of Prince Edward Island or most of the citizens of the Atlantic provinces who are very concerned about this issue, I can tell my constituents and others that it is no mean feat to get the attention of this government. That we now have their attention, and the admission of the parliamentary secretary that there is a problem, is some progress. Perhaps when the subject comes up again in questions or debate they may treat it seriously enough to try to deal with it in some fashion.

The motion of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) which is before the House is quite specific. It says that this government has failed to come up with any effective strategy for an energy policy for the Atlantic provinces, and in particular "deplores the callous attitude", and so on, with respect to the problem as it will affect many people in the Atlantic provinces in relation to heating their homes.

My former leader, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), referred to the "cavalier" attitude of the government, and the motion refers to its "callous" attitude. To this point I find it a more or less "unconscious" attitude. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred to a dense urban situation, I wondered if the use of the word "dense" could have a double meaning in this instance. I would direct the attention of the minister and his colleagues to a recent report of the National Utilities Service, an international organization which examines energy policies for 25,000 corporations. It says that in Canada energy costs will continue to rise fastest in the Atlantic region. Lest the minister and others assure themselves, with some kind of false concept, that we have reached the outer limits of the problem, I want to indicate them that this will likely get worse if it continues to be dealt with in the unconcerned manner expressed in the minister's speech today and his response to questions on the problem recently.

While the parliamentary secretary was forced to acknowledge that there is an alarming discrepancy between the average consumer costs for electricity in Charlottetown compared with any other part of the country, he did not refer to the fact that this estimate was taken before the announcement made by the provincial government that, because of all the other pressures it has been under with respect to its interdependence on the federal government, it will be forced to removed the subsidy of some 12 per cent for users of electricity in Prince Edward Island. This was before the meeting of the first ministers to be held this week which will try to arrive at some upward pricing formula for petroleum products. I cannot understand the sanguine attitude of the minister and the parliamentary secretary in regard to this serious problem.

I understand, of course, that the minister has other responsibilities and other pressures. Perhaps his orientation and basic frame of reference is from another part of the country. I cannot understand his somnolent attitude, however, when since 1969 the government has repeatedly announced the elimination of regional disparities as a cornerstone of its policy. I cannot understand how anyone can assess the logic of allowing this very large disparity to grow in Atlantic Canada with regard to the basic cost of energy and the cost to the economy.

I do not think the minister was entirely candid about some of the information that he placed before the House this afternoon. He talked at some length about the inefficiencies of the present generation of electricity in Atlantic Canada, but did not relate it to the age of the units or the scale of units that we must work with, given the population in the area. One fact conveniently omitted was the actual usage of electricity in Atlantic Canada. In Prince Edward Island the kilowatt use per hour per customer is 5.146; in Newfoundland it is 7.104; in Nova Scotia, 5.633; in New Brunswick, 6.158; and the Canadian average is 8.170. This means that Prince Edward Island is consuming only about two-thirds of the average consumption on a per capita basis, of the rest of Canada.

These figures indicate that it is not the Atlantic provinces that should be lectured by the minister on the subject of energy conservation, seeing that at the present time they use less than the Canadian average. It seems to me that one of the reasons for this is that individuals are suffering very directly because of factors which have been in existence for some time, some of which have been exacerbated by the energy situation.

The abnormally high cost of electricity in Prince Edward Island, particularly Charlottetown where the average cost per consumer is $41.53 per month—that is before the increase which is to come shortly—compares badly with a town of the same size in Ontario where the average cost per month for electricity is $22.68. I am equally concerned with the effect on the industrial structure of the Atlantic provinces. The hon. member for Halifax dealt with this at some length, pointing out the discrepancy between the present energy policy with respect to the Atlantic provinces and the attempts of the government, through DREE, to alleviate regional disparities.

I should like to give an example of the type of problem we face in the Atlantic provinces. Prince Edward Island industries which are involved in exporting basic products such as potato processors—perhaps the most significant export industry—are worried about the effect on their competitive position. Power rates are higher in P.E.I. than anywhere else on the continent. One food processing company indicated that in January their electricity bill was $35,000, claiming that for a similar company in Ontario the bill would have veen $18,000. The problem is compounded by the additional burdens of distance from markets and communications. The government's position in regard to this question is totally illogical.

Referring to the over-all question of electrical costs, the APEC Newsletter of December, 1975, stated:

> It is obvious that higher electrical energy costs in the region point to this as one possible cause of continuing disparity.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am appalled by the lack of concern expressed in the minister's speech this afternoon. At the end of his remarks, the hon. member for Halifax asked in specific terms what the government was going to do. It is all well and good to talk about the establishment of a much larger power grid or bringing a nuclear power plant into production some four or five years hence, or eventually starting a Fundy tidal project when studies and surveys have been completed; but problems that exist for the people in Atlantic Canada today and tomorrow are growing daily. Nowhere is this more acute than escalating electrical costs. The minister was somewhat critical of the hon. member for Don Valley for not speaking specifically to this point and making suggestions about what should be done. Somehow the minister forgets that he is responsible for energy, mines and resources. Many in my province wish that he could be transferred form that portfolio in the not too distant future.

● (1730)

Mr. Gillespie: I was quoting his release. He said he was going to make positive suggestions, but I did not hear them.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): There were suggestions. The minister showed, by not expressing an opinion, that he is without ideas. That is bad enough. But I am more worried because he seems to show no basic concern.

Mr. Gillespie: Read the record.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, not only have I read the record; I am about to quote the minister's previous comments.

Mr. Gillespie: How? Today's record has not yet been printed. How can you have read it?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will not quote what the minister said today. Perhaps the minister will say why he no longer thinks this afternoon what he thought yesterday afternoon. I shall reach that point in a moment.

I want to deal with the minister's gratuitous comments concerning conservation. He hypocritically accused the Atlantic provinces of not being concerned about conservation. He talked about their hearts not being in it. I tell him that in Atlantic Canada we consume less energy per capita, on average, than people in the rest of Canada. We do it of necessity. I am concerned about the minister's hypocritical approach.

It is well known that in 1974, in the year following the OPEC embargo, every industrialized nation except Canada decreased its consumption of energy. Our consumption rose by 7.75 per cent. That is a publicly acknowledged statistic which I have not heard the minister refute. He talks about leadership, and about responsibility for conserving energy, but no government has been more irresponsible in conserving energy than the government which sits opposite us this afternoon.

Mr. Stanfield: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): He talked about establishing better insulation standards, as if provincial governments have sole responsibility in this area. Where has the minister been? Does he forget that his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), is responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing, which sets these standards?

If he is worried about insulation standards not being applied in homes built in this country, why has he not leaned across his desk and conferred with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs? Or does he think that that minister has no influence with that Crown corporation? Suggesting that the provinces are not concerned about energy conservation is trying to pass the buck to the provinces. The minister's action was shoddy.

He suggested yesterday afternoon that Nova Scotia had not raised electric power rates substantially between 1958 and 1974; then he suggested that the rise in electric power rates has not been as great proportionately as the price rise in other commodities. I suggest that such statements could badly mislead this House and the general public. Allow me to quote some figures to the minister. We are talking about average, annual energy costs in the Atlantic provinces. I will compare those costs with other costs in other parts of the country and relate those costs to wages. For example, the average yearly wage or salary in Toronto is about $11,000 and the average annual cost of energy about $525, or roughly 4.8 per cent of income. Average annual income in Charlottetown is about $8,100, and the average annual cost of energy about $980, or about 12 per cent of income on average.

There is a disparity of 250 per cent in the proportionate annual cost of energy. I could quote other figures but do not have time. When the minister suggests that the cost of energy has risen less, proportionately, than the cost of other commodities, he is doing his own credibility a disservice and not dealing satisfactorily either with national or regional energy concerns in this country.

Mr. Gillespie: You do not believe that, do you?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I do. That is why I put the figures on record. Can the minister explain why the man in Charlottetown pays 12 per cent of income for energy, whereas the man in Toronto pays roughly 4.8 per cent? Has the federal government no responsibility in this regard?

Mr. Gillespie: Would the hon. member like to hear my figures?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps the minister could mention them some other time. My time is limited. I am making a few comments in order to assist the minister.

The minister talked about alternate forms of energy. He cannot seem to make up his mind. Today he seemed to suggest that there is merit in developing alternate sources of energy and in doing more research and development in this field. But what did he say yesterday? Answering the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), the minister said, as recorded at page 13059 of Hansard:

> The second point I should like to make is this: the main thing is to spend money where it can be most useful. I think in terms of solar energy, in terms of wind, in terms of tidal energy, in terms of bio-mass. In a number of these areas we shall have to move rather slowly because very large sums of money would not generate any immediate pay-back. All the experts tell me this is an area in which we can expect significant amounts of energy, but not for 15 years or more.

This afternoon the minister spoke more favourably of alternate energy sources, but this government is committed to spending only about 2 per cent of its total research and energy budget on alternate energy sources other than nuclear.

Time and again we have asked the minister if he is considering alternate energy sources. As far as he is concerned, energy sources apart from the nuclear source are simply a waste of time, or are to be developed in future and hence are scarcely worth considering at present. I ask the minister why the United States Government, which has been spending almost twice as much proportionately as we have in the last few years on alternate energy, has again doubled its budget in the last year? We live in a dream world. The minister thinks alternate energy sources are fantasies. Apparently he thinks it enough to show us the odd demonstration project, or another survey on Fundy tidal power. He thinks we are doing enough to find alternate energy sources. Frankly the government's position is less than satisfactory. Denmark, hardly an underdeveloped country, is sufficiently committed to developing alternate energy sources that it is preparing for the day when all its electricity will be generated by wind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member whose time has expired.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased for the opportunity to participate in this debate which concerns all Canadians, particularly those in the maritimes, as the motion suggests. Without question the rising price of energy, as the minister said, has had devastating effects on practically every one in the world. When the world price of oil increased in a short period by a factor of four, hardly any person in the world was unaffected. Probably the people in the maritimes in Canada were affected more than other people in this country.

Hon. members raised several points today. I think the previous leader of the opposition raised a point which is of great concern. He wondered how rising energy costs will affect the industrial health of the maritime area. It is difficult for the individual homeowner to rationalize rapidly energy costs, costs which must be faced when people pay their energy bills.

Perhaps the more important question is what is the long term energy cost for industry in the maritimes. If industry cannot be competitive there is an unemployment problem, and many other social problems resulting from that. We should look carefully at some areas where it might be possible to improve energy efficiency within industry. In all of the conservation efforts that have been talked about and introduced, the area of the industrial sector is the one that has perhaps been overlooked the most to date.

I was most encouraged to have the opportunity of attending the meeting recently held in Ottawa with various energy groups meeting with the minister, and sensing what a tremendous difference there has been this year in industry as opposed to last year. In other words, they are now indicating that they sense the urgency of doing something about energy conservation in industry. At the present time they are doing a good deal of study and research in their own industrial sector on what can and should be accomplished in a certain time frame.

There is one basic question that has come up in this, and it is something we should not entirely pass over. When we had this substantial change in price for energy, and even some problems with availability, it brought home the fact that for the past 20 or 25 years we have been overlooking the need to build a strong infrastructure in all parts of the country to deal with problems like this. It has been politic and even correct to be more concerned with glamorous types of projects in the industrial sector, from many points of view.

In retrospect, in not only the maritimes but many other areas of Canada, some of the infrastructure relating to the energy field has not been put in place. We are paying very dearly for it now.

Previous speakers made the point very well that the maritimes is not the only area where the cost of energy, particularly electrical energy, is increasing rapidly. This reflects a number of things. First was the putting off investing in capital projects at the time that they should have been advanced.

Initially when the price of energy started to move, people became very concerned about the impact on consumers. They set aside capital projects and capital investment in the energy fields that should have been proceeded with, thinking it would level off and there would be a more opportune time to do it in the future. The problem is that in terms of pricing, the future got worse. For new electrical utilities across Canada the construction program is costing a good deal of money. Interest rates are high. That is a problem. All of this adds up to some very large increases in the cost of energy.

It might be a good lesson for the future that when we are faced with a situation where costs are increasing and, where it makes sense, we should do something about it at the right time. We should have the courage and fortitude to do it then because putting it off will only will make the situation considerably worse.

Another point has been the fallacy of it being very opportune to go around the basic problem when we should attack it head on. The Maritimes is not the only area where this is a problem, that is, in terms of using fairly high quality energy, oil and natural gas, to generate electricity, rather than using coal substantially to do that. It was very understandable at the time, and this is prevalent throughout much of the United States, particularly the eastern seaboard where a good deal of the generation of electricity was changed from coal to natural gas and oil for environmental reasons and, perhaps in some cases, cost reasons.

If we have that period to run through again, it would make a good deal more sense to attack the pollution problem sincerely and work on the technology very hard, pay the price of pollution control, and continue to use coal as a fuel source. For a variety of reasons it is incorrect to use natural gas or oil to generate electricity at this point in time. This is needed for many other areas, many of which are related to higher technology and a good deal of employment.

There is a point upon which we take issue with the mover of this motion. I have had a good deal of difficulty with this since coming to this House. I refer to the debate in committee and in the House where the opposition opposes any government intervention in the energy field.

There was long and bitter debate on the Petroleum Administration Act and on the establishment of Petro-Canada. However, when there is a problem the first thing to surface is a motion asking what the government is doing. Members opposite once and for all will have to make up their minds about the role of energy. What are they in favour of the private sector doing, and of the public sector doing?

Had Petro-Canada not been established the problem in the maritimes would be a good deal more severe. As the parliamentary secretary indicated, there is a good deal of exploration ongoing through Petro-Canada, and more is planned for the future. If I am correct, between 20 and 25 per cent of its entire budget is for offshore exploration. This indicates an interest in making that area more self sufficient in energy.

It seems this type of approach is the answer to many of the outstanding problems, particularly in the Atlantic area. But it does not seem to be in tune with the debate we heard from the opposite side at great length some time ago opposing the establishing of Petro-Canada. I understand from the newspapers that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) says that if his party is elected to government, they will wind up Petro-Canada. I also note from the newspapers that since becoming leader he has visited the maritimes once. On his next trip he might wish to look at the energy situation a bit closer. Perhaps he will understand that Petro-Canada is a key part of the solution to the energy problem in the maritimes.

There is the other policy issue, and I just comment along that vein because these are difficult issues on both sides. Perhaps that is what the opposition has tried to be. I refer to the establishment of the Petroleum Administration Act. This act gives authority to negotiate one price across Canada. I cannot think of any area in Canada that benefited more by that than the maritimes.

These are policy initiatives the government has taken in the last year and a half, particularly the establishment of Petro-Canada and the Petroleum Administration Act, of which members opposite, particularly those from the maritimes, should be very strongly in favour.

There is both a short term and long term problem to be dealt with. In the long term the objective must surely be to make Canada, particularly the maritime area which is dependent on imported crude, as self sufficient in oil as possible. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) will probably support this, when he speaks in a couple of minutes, that some of the ideas put forth today in terms of wind, solar, and tidal, great as they may be, are not short term answers. The only short term answer that we have nationally, and supposedly in the maritimes, is to have a fundamental commitment to a conservation program that works.

● (1750)

It has been suggested we should be making substantial use of solar, wind, and tidal power, but I do not think this is a good short term solution. First, the capital costs involved are enormous, and then again the technology still has a long way to go. If we were to count on these systems in the short term I think we would be disappointed.

I have some small knowledge from my own background of heating in the residential sector. I know that when electrical heating was introduced great emphasis was placed on home heating standards; most of the participating utilities spent a good deal of money and effort not only to establish those standards but to make sure they were adhered to. Part of the problem may be that in some parts of the country the emphasis on inspection has been left to the industry itself, with the result that a number of sub-standard insulations have been put in place. I do not intend this as a reflection on builders and electricians, but this is a part of the argument one always has to make on the necessity of doing a good job of insulation when using that form of heating.

A few years ago, when the price of oil was relatively low, anyone who was not particularly interested in putting up a quality building or insulating to a high standard, installed oil heating. Today, as the price of oil keeps rising, we realize that it might have been better to have insisted on electric heating standards in the case of all types of fuel.

I hope the government will adopt a suggestion I have made on two or three occasions that consideration be given to providing some type of tax write-off in respect of energy conservation equipment such as is presently available in connection with devices designed to ensure a better environment. Industry has available to it a preferred tax position in respect of money spent on equipment to diminish environmental threats. Many times this equipment has worked against the best interests of conserving energy sources. It might well be in the best interests of the energy situation to extend an equivalent tax concession so that a company trying to conserve energy would gain the same tax advantage as one installing equipment to handle an environmental problem.

Part of the problem we face today is the high wastage of energy by industrial users. Those who are concerned about this energy loss and who wish to make their plants more efficient find it difficult to purchase any equipment of proven reliability. The government could play a useful role here by stimulating this sector; perhaps this could be done through assistance in development costs. In my opinion such a policy would pay off handsomely. Indeed, in the final analysis the government might well find itself in a plus position.

One only has to look at the situation in the commercial sector where energy conservation equipment is available "off the shelf". We are finding now that when any commercial building of importance is constructed in Canada consulting engineers and architects instal such equipment as a basic feature of the building. This is not the case in the industrial sector, however, although industry uses close to 50 per cent of all the energy consumed in Canada.

The case for the development of tidal power as a source of energy in the maritimes has been raised on a number of occasions. I believe the first debate I attended in this House was on that subject. I did not know much about it at that time but I spoke in favour of it, and I am glad to learn that a significant study of the prospects of such a scheme has now been completed. My hon. friend from Wellington has a far better background in science than I have, and I believe he will be making some comments on the role he sees for energy development in that sector.

Nuclear energy is one of the relatively short term answers. I noticed in the question period today that members on the other side of the House were expressing a good deal of opposition to the nuclear option. I rather feel they over-estimate the problem associated with the CANDU nuclear system. Had the nuclear option been put in place two years ago when the rise in oil prices first became apparent, it seems to me the maritimes today would be in a much better position. One thing which is overlooked very often is the fact that though the initial cost of establishing a nuclear plant is high, once they are in place the cost of production is extremely low—the cost of the uranium which is used can probably be doubled without causing the cost of the energy produced to rise more than 10 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.01 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, during the course of the debate today one has had the tendency to get the impression that the energy crisis in the Atlantic provinces is confined primarily to two provinces, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. That, Sir, is just not the case. First of all, the magnitude of the problem stretches into every part of the region. For example in my own city of St. John's consumers are now paying the third highest energy costs in the country, and that in a province that has been blessed with an abundance of hydro resources.

The island of Newfoundland, as distinct from the whole province which takes in the great territory of Labrador with its vast storehouse of energy, depends on sources other than hydro—primarily thermal sources—for approximately 44 per cent of its total energy. That, of course, explains why energy costs are escalating in the island part of the province of Newfoundland. Indeed at the present time there is before the government of Newfoundland an application by the power companies for still further increases in power rates.

The principal hydro development in the province initially received a grant from the now defunct Atlantic Development Board which made possible the development of the great watershed of Baie d'Espoir, producing a total of 450 megawatts, which brought the total capacity of the island part of the province by 1970 up to 762 megawatts. All sources today within the province provide approximately 1,062 megawatts of energy.

The second biggest single source of energy in the province comes from the Churchill Falls power development. This great development has an approximate capacity of 34 billion kilowatt hours, by far the largest hydro power development in the world outside of the U.S.S.R. However, the bulk of the Churchill Falls output is locked up in a 65 year contract with Hydro Quebec, and in my estimation that contract has to be the single biggest sellout of energy resources in the history of Canada.

To give you some idea, Mr. Speaker, of why I say that, about the deal with the province of Quebec for hydro power from Churchill Falls works like this: for a fixed period of 40 years, with an extension of 25 years, all power must be sold to the province of Quebec. This brings into the province of Newfoundland approximately $99 million a year. This power is now sold at 3.5 mills per kilowatt. Contrast this with the fact that the Newfoundland Light and Power Company, the largest utility in the province, presently has to pay 9.7 mills for its power at wholesale rates. Since there is currently an application before the province for a still further increase by the Newfoundland Hydro Power Commission that would boost that to 12.2 mills, obviously this will mean there will be a rate increase. Whether it will be that extensive or not remains to be seen.

The deal with Quebec provides for a de-escalation in the rate, and this will reduce the cost of energy to 2.4 mills by the end of the century. Newfoundland energy minister, recently speaking in the legislature of the province, had this to say:

> Churchill Falls energy today is worth about 15 mills per kilowatt-hour on the North American market.

Yet that power, Mr. Speaker, is locked into a 65 year deal with the province of Quebec at 3.5 mills. I say shame.

● (2010)

The minister went on to say:

> If we could get that price, Churchill Falls would be generating over $200 million in extra revenue for the province today.

In other words, we would be realizing from the sale of Churchill Falls power in today's prices over $300 million a year in revenue for the province.

In order to meet the needs of the island part of the province of Newfoundland two things must happen, otherwise we will have an energy crisis by 1980. There will be an actual shortage of energy in the province of Newfoundland by 1981. We either must have the capacity to produce the additional resources of the Churchill river, the lower Churchill known as the Gull Island project, or else we will have to depend upon thermogeneration. At present only 9 per cent of our energy resources come from this island part to the province. I am told that unless we can produce other sources of energy by tapping the resources of the lower Churchill or by renegotiating the deal with the province of Quebec, this will grow to 48 per cent by 1980. It is interesting to note that based on the present rate of inflation this means we would have to pay $16.50 a barrel of oil in 1980, which would mean that we would have to pay about $100 million a year to produce this additional energy source by 1980.

The minister made reference to the Gull Island project in his speech, albeit a very brief reference. I am sorry he did not enlarge upon the current policy of the government with respect to how hydro energy fits into the over-all government strategy. I am told by the Churchill Falls Power Corporation, for example, that in the Labrador part of Newfoundland at present there is an undeveloped potential of approximately 5,000 megawatts which, when added to the 5,225 megawatts flowing from Churchill Falls, amounts in Labrador alone to a hydro potential in excess of 10,000 megawatts. Yet it is interesting to reflect that the first ministers of the five eastern provinces meeting in Quebec addressed themselves to this vast potential and recommended to the government of Canada that hydro power be included in the total energy policy of the government. We must have government policies addressing themselves to the generation of hydro power, otherwise we will have a crisis of considerably greater proportions in the Atlantic provinces than we have at present.

This great undeveloped, unharnessed potential in the Labrador part of the province has to be developed, and will be developed eventually. But unless it is developed soon we will have a crisis of major proportions in Newfoundland. I am advised by the Newfoundland Power Commission that the Gull Island project has the best potential for meeting Newfoundland's present energy needs. However, the minister knows better than anyone else that Newfoundland is unable to finance that vast project on its own—there has to be federal participation, indeed there has to be substantial federal participation.

We know that the federal government has offered $341 million toward the development of the lower Churchill, but that is not enough. Because of the escalating costs, as a direct consequence of inflation, the total cost of developing and harnessing power from the lower Churchill is now in excess of $2 billion, and we must have greater federal participation. As a result of the attitude of the federal government, that project is at present in limbo. We cannot undertake the development necessary to transmit that power to the island part of Newfoundland, the substantial expenditures involved in building the hydro transmission lines, and the 11 mile tunnel across the Strait of Belle Isle, unless we have some assurance from the Government of Canada that it will reassess its position with respect to the development of the lower Churchill.

Of course the other alternative to meet the energy needs of the province of Newfoundland would be to retain some of the power that is now going into the province of Quebec for 3.5 mills. That power is worth today on the northern American market 15 mills. We should have the right to renegotiate that contract because, shortsighted as it was, it was entered into at a time when no one in Canada could foresee the energy crisis in which we find ourselves today as a result of the raising of oil prices by the OPEC countries. So we must be able to reopen that contract.

Negotiations have been taking place with the province of Quebec, but I am sorry to say that these negotiations have been fruitless. There has to be federal participation, we must have input from the federal government, in order to regain some of that power.

With the coming on stream of the James Bay project in Quebec, some of that power should be available to us. It is power which is now surplus to Quebec's needs and we should be able to regain some of it without having the gun put to our heads by the province of Quebec, and without being forced by that province to reopen something at the bargaining table which, in the opinion of province of Newfoundland and its people, is not negotiable, namely, the boundary between Quebec and Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Yet we are told by the province of Quebec through their minister of energy that if we want to buy back in excess of 300 megawatts, which we can now have under the contract and which we need in order to make it feasible to finance the transmission lines and the building of the tunnel across the Strait of Belle Isle to get that power into the island part of the province of Newfoundland, we must be prepared to renegotiate the boundary. Indeed we are told that if we want that power we must be prepared to sell all the land around the head waters of the rivers flowing into the north shore of the St. Lawrence so that Quebec can tap that undeveloped resource potential. That is the same as asking us for a hunk of our territory, and we are not prepared to even consider that. But we are prepared to sit down and negotiate.

Surely we should be able to recap that power that is going into Quebec from Churchill Falls now and then flowing into Consolidated Edison in upper New York, and here is where the bargaining power of the federal government should be used to help one of the Atlantic provinces which is suffering the consequences of the energy crisis.

The consequence is very simple, and I am afraid this is something which the minister does not seem to understand, namely, that until we resolve this energy crisis in the Atlantic provinces you can forget about regional economic expansion because DREE policies are unproductive. No industry is going to settle in an areas which has an energy crisis because most industries require vast energy resources in order to be able to operate. I hope there can be some meetings of minds on this. I hope there can be some input by the Government of Canada, and I am hoping that the Government of Canada will take to heart seriously the recommendations of the five premiers that it consider hydro potential in the over-all energy policy of the government. With this realization there will hopefully flow a decision by the Government of Canada to assist in the development and the building of an eastern power grid which would tap all of these vast resources of the great Labrador storehouse, not for the good of Consolidated Edison in the state of New York, but for the good of eastern Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces.

● (2020)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Surely in that regard the national government has an ongoing responsibility with respect to regional development. If we are going to continue with the present DREE policies, then we must ensure that the energy infrastructure is in place. Otherwise all the regional incentives in the world will not entice industries to establish in power hungry provinces.

I can talk about the unemployment statistics of the four Atlantic provinces, and I can talk about the hardships of the consumers of electric energy in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and in eastern Newfoundland, but the fact is that if this region is to develop its full potential, then obviously the last major power resources in the region, that is, the undeveloped portion of the lower Churchill represented in the Gull Island project and the headwaters of the rivers flowing into the north shores of the St. Lawrence, have to be tapped. Once that decision is made we can think in terms of developing a regional eastern power grid which could be developed in the over-all context of a national power grid. It is only by that kind of thinking that we will have this great renewable source of energy developed for the good of the people of Canada and for the good of the people of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

[Mr. McGrath.]

I submit to the minister that he has more than a passive role to play. As the minister responsible for energy in Canada he has to provide leadership. We can certainly sympathize with the problems he has with respect to the cost of oil in Canada, but he has to realize that there are other sources of power in this country not yet developed, and the most important underdeveloped potential source of hydro power resides in Newfoundland, a portion of Quebec, and in that great flow of energy going into the Quebec grid from Churchill Falls, much of which is now flowing into New York state and which should be recaptured by a renegotiated contract based on more realistic bargaining in the context of today's energy crisis and used for the over-all development of the region. Some of that power must be brought back to Newfoundland, and some of that power, through the development of a regional grid, can be brought in to the power hungry Maritime provinces.

These are the kinds of questions to which we would have liked to have heard the minister address himself today, instead of taking the very defensive and passive attitude he took. Of course he has to be apologetic because of the present energy problem, as witnessed by the very serious problems in federal-provincial relations which are developing and as exemplified by the meetings which will take place in Ottawa later this week. He has to reassess the total energy picture today, and he has to be able to come to the conclusion, which is obvious and self-evident, that unless hydro power is included in the total energy policy of the government we will continue to have a crisis of very serious proportions in the four Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McGrath: Certainly.

Mr. Gillespie: I should like to ask the hon. member if he would clarify his position. If I understood him correctly, it seemed that he was advocating that the federal government move into the electrical power utilities in the provincial jurisdiction and impose a solution with respect to the power generated in the Atlantic community, and more particularly, the Labrador power. Is it his view that we should impose a solution?

The second question I should like to ask is whether he is advocating that the federal government impose an electrical grid on the Atlantic provinces regardless of what the feelings of the provincial premiers might be.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, obviously I did not get the message through to the minister, or he was not listening. What I am saying is that the Government of Canada should provide some leadership.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I suggest that the federal government should develop an energy inventory of the region, and in the light of that energy inventory assess what the needs of the region are and then work that out in the context of a regional power grid, which the five first ministers are advocating at the present time.

In reply to the minister's second point with respect to federal government involvement in what is essentially a provincial jurisdiction, the minister could provide the same kind of leadership which was provided by the Atlantic Development Board when it made substantial capital grants toward power development, not only for the Baie d'Espoir power which developed as a result of a $25 million grant, but also for the power which was developed with federal government help on the upper Saint John river. That is the kind of help we want. That is the leadership we want.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic members in the House support this motion because it seeks to draw attention to the appallingly high costs of electric power in the Atlantic provinces and the hardship which follows therefrom, and seeks to censure the government because it has not yet presented any constructive policies to meet that situation, and also because we think that this is a good opportunity to discuss some of the things which might be done to improve the lot of the people in the Atlantic provinces. There can be no doubt about the fact that hardship is being suffered in the Atlantic provinces because of high electrical rates. I keep getting letters from people in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): And Manitoba.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): — enclosing their power bills, and how they are able to pay them is beyond me. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) says "and Manitoba". I should point out that his own Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said in the House yesterday that Manitoba has the lowest power rates in Canada. The hon. member ought to remember that.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It has still doubled up, just the same.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If the hon. member wants to make a speech I will let him do so, but not on my time.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I can do that, too.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member ought to do it. He has a big voice. I should like to hear if he has anything to say.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I have a lot to say.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Not only have the high electrical rates caused hardship to individuals in the Atlantic provinces, but as the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) pointed out this afternoon, they can have disastrous results for the economy of the Atlantic provinces. In order to be competitive today any industry must be able to get power at reasonably low cost, and I must say that I was disappointed to see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) treat this matter in what I thought was a somewhat callous and offhand manner. He discussed the problem. He found fault with what everyone else had to say. He blamed almost everyone he could think of because of the plight of the Atlantic provinces, but he did not once come up with a concrete commitment as to what the federal government is prepared to do about this situation.

● (2030)

If I have any criticism of the motion presented by the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) it is, first, that it did not give the reasons why the Atlantic provinces are in this predicament and, second, it did not make any concrete proposals on what might be done. Let me deal with those two items briefly.

Why are the Atlantic provinces in the position where their energy costs are higher than any place else in Canada? As a matter of fact their industrial power costs are 100 per cent higher, and in comparison to some provinces they are 150 per cent higher. The dream of Cape Breton for years, for instance, has been for a steel industry but there cannot be an economically viable steel industry there unless these power rates are substantially reduced.

We are in this situation, Mr. Speaker, because there has not been a coherent energy policy in Canada. I was interested to notice in this morning's paper that the Liberal leader in the province of Ontario said that yesterday in the Ontario legislature.

Mr. Woolliams: He has to say something.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The federal government has never come up with an over-all, integrated energy policy. We did have an oil policy which the administration of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) introduced in 1961 following the report of the Borden commission. That oil policy was a disaster. It was based on the assumption that we had unlimited supplies of oil and gas and could afford to sell 60 per cent of our production to the United States, without any thought that we had less resources than the United States and that our resources were dwindling very rapidly. That was carried on by the successor government of Mr. Pearson, and under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the government has constantly refused to face up to the realities of the energy situation in Canada.

In 1969 the report of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources claimed that by 1990 we would not only be able to meet our own oil needs but also to export four million barrels of oil per day. By 1973 they have modified that somewhat and said we would be self-sufficient by 1985. Last week the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources brought in his so-called self-reliance program, in which he said that by 1985 we will be importing one third of our oil requirements. That statement is not quite accurate, Mr. Speaker. If you look at the figures in the report it is much higher than one third. I suggest that by 1985 we will probably importing over 50 per cent of our oil requirements and will probably be paying in the neighbourhood of $15 per barrel for it. That is a bill of $4½ or more, that the Canadian people will have to pay to import oil.

There has been no long term planning with respect to energy. I attended a federal-provincial conference 20 years ago at which we urged the federal government of that day to assist the provinces and to give leadership in establishing a national power grid. Because of the various time zones in Canada it would have been possible, by a national power grid, to have reduced the amount of installation for peaking periods. That could have reduced capital costs and operating costs by about 25 per cent, and consequently reduced the cost of electric power. Some of the provinces on their own worked out arrangements on interconnection but the federal government has never put before the provinces a plan for for a national power grid such as has been done in many countries in Europe and other parts of the world.

It is distressing to look back over the last few years and realize the mistakes we have made with respect to the development of energy. The Atlantic provinces have become mainly dependent upon imported oil, which means that they will be paying ever increasing prices for it as the years go by. That means their economy will be vulnerable if at any time the OPEC countries decide to cut off supplies.

The Atlantic provinces have two major resources. They have large coal deposits, particularly in Cape Breton, and they had high potential. But they have done very little with them. Nova Scotia, which has large coal deposits, generates 62 per cent of its power from oil and only 23.5 per cent from coal. In Prince Edward Island virtually 100 per cent of their power is generated from oil. They have made very little use of the coal they have which is readily available.

With reference to hydro power, history will record with irony that the great Churchill Falls development has not benefit the consumers of Newfoundland. As the hon. member for St. John's East very properly pointed out, that power is sold to Quebec at 3½ mills, the most scandalously low price on this continent. What is more, Quebec has been selling some of that power on an interruptable basis to the State of New York after a mark-up of 200 per cent or 300 per cent. It is inconceivable that this great resource which could have helped the Atlantic provinces has not been used for that purpose.

The James Bay project, one of the largest in the world, is being developed in the province of Quebec and much of that power is for service to the United States. Power which was going to be used for a uranium enrichment plant is now going to be available. It will be interesting to see whether that power is also allocated to the United States at the very time the people of the Atlantic provinces need cheap electric power for hydro.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources asked the hon. member for St. John's East whether he would impose some controls on the provinces. I would point out to the minister that power cannot be exported from this country without the consent of the National Energy Board and that board is subject to policy decisions laid down by the government. If the government had wanted to make sure that the power stayed in Canada for the benefit of the people in the Atlantic provinces it could have done so if it had possessed the vision or courage to give leadership in this country with respect to power.

The result is, of course, that our energy policy has not been made here in Ottawa or by governments; in the main our energy policy has been made by powerful corporations which have used the energy resources of this country in whatever manner would bring the greatest financial return. Our quarrel with large corporations is not just that they take a higher share of the national income than they are entitled to; our objection also is the fact that they use their economic power to make major economic decisions without any regard to the public welfare or the public interest. That is certainly why the maritime provinces face the very difficult situation they do at the present time.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

What can we do to remedy this situation? First we must recognize that the day of cheap, abundant oil supplies in Canada is over. Even Middle East reserves of oil may not last more than 35 or 40 years, which is not long in the life of a society or civilization. The price of oil will rise steadily.

Foster Associates, which did the study for the Syncrude consortium, showed in their working papers that they predicate the success of the Syncrude project in the Athabasca tar sands on a price starting at $15.50 per barrel and rising to $35 per barrel within the lifetime of the plants. We can get some idea of what oil will cost in the next 35 years. Therefore we must recognize that the Atlantic provinces face economic disaster if they continue their dependence on oil as a means of generating electric power. Perhaps they will be fortunate and find oil offshore; if they do that oil will be needed to produce petroleum products for fishermen's boats, and to power tractors on farms and cars. The entire world faces a growing shortage of oil. Increasingly, oil must be diverted away from the generation of electric power.

I suggest, first, that the federal government should step in and give financial assistance, particularly to Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, which depend largely on oil. When the government raises the price of oil on July 1 either to $9 or $9.50 per barrel, which probably will happen, the price rise will place a tremendous burden on those two provinces.

I agree that we need lead time to fing solutions to the energy difficulties of the Atlantic provinces. That lead time can only be bought if the federal government is prepared to make large sums of money available to enable the Atlantic provinces to generate electric power for a limited time with subsidized oil. But that is not the solution. It is only a temporary expedient which will give the Government of Canada and the governments of the Atlantic provinces time in which to deal with the major difficulties.

Second, we must consider the possibility of using coal, because the development of hydro and nuclear power are longterm projects. I shall return to that in a moment. I understand that practically all power plants in the maritimes, except one, are convertible and can use either oil or coal.

This afternoon the minister mentioned the high price which would have to be paid for coal. I point out that even if the government paid a subsidy on every ton of coal used for generating electric power, the cost would be less than what the government is now paying. It will pay less than what it now pays the oil companies in order to keep the price of oil down in Canada. If you work on the ratio of four to one, that is, four barrels of oil being equivalent to one ton of coal, even if the federal government paid $10 per ton on coal to enable the Atlantic provinces to have coal cheaply for generating electric power, the government would pay less than it now pays the oil companies. Also, there is this important side effect: It would create employment in Canada for many unemployed and boost economic growth in the Atlantic provinces; on the other hand the money we pay the oil companies simply enriches the coffers of the OPEC countries.

The government should consider making available funds to enable additional coal seams to be opened on Cape Breton Island, and consider a subsidy program, to be in place for a stated period of time, to enable electric power to be generated in the Atlantic provinces at rates lower than possible at present.

This afternoon the minister talked of difficulties with sulphur in coal. I point out that we have been using sulphur coal in many parts of Canada for years. You can extract sulphur from the coal successfully if you use scrubbers which eliminate pollution. I remind the minister that the oil we have been burning east of the Ottawa Valley, which comes from Venezuela, is sulphur oil, and we have been able to eliminate the problem of pollution. I do not think the difficulty is serious. If the coal possesses an adequate BTU content and a subsidy is paid on it, it will be possible to bring down the cost of electric power generation to a reasonable figure.

The other possibilities are hydro or tidal power. I agree with the hon. member for St. John's East that we should renegotiate the agreements governing power generated at Churchill Falls. If it wants to renegotiate these agreements, the federal government can bring to bear much power. It can force the phasing out of the export of power, if we need the power in Canada. We would do if if we were at war, and we are war, at war against poverty and the lack of opportunity available to people in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. McGrath: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The federal government should show leadership in bringing together Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, to see that some of the power being generated at James Bay can be used in the Atlantic provinces instead of going to the state of New York.

We should also keep in mind tidal power, the development of which faces snags. But it should be kept in mind as a possible source of power in the Atlantic provinces. We must also remember nuclear power. New Brunswick is already planning to produce nuclear power. It is possible that if the hydro power—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its indulgence. I shall take only a few moments more. I was saying that if coal thermal plants and hydro power do not meet the full energy requirements of the Atlantic provinces, nuclear power is a possibility down the road.

If we are to solve the energy problem of the Atlantic provinces we must set up an interprovincial grid. The minister asked the hon. member for St. John's East if he wanted to "impose" such a grid. I suggest that it is not necessary to talk about imposing a grid. I suggest that the federal government should sit down with the four Atlantic provinces and say, "Look, here is your situation; we can help you at present with oil, by giving financial assistance. We can help you to generate electricity by helping with coal. We can also help you to renegotiate some power contracts, but nuclear power down the road may be your ultimate answer. We are prepared not only to help you with the financing of a nuclear reactor, but with the building of an interprovincial grid". If the government were to say that, I am convinced that the premiers of the Atlantic provinces, facing the situation in which they presently find themselves, would readily comply.

I close by saying that ultimately we shall solve the energy difficulties of this country only if governments, federally and provincially, are given a greater voice in the decision-making process and are involved in long-range planning.

I agree with the minister that Petro-Canada must have an important role to play. I see one of my Tory friends shaking his head. I want to say to him that if there is any group of people in this House or in this country who ought to recognize the need for public intervention in the development of energy, it is the Conservative party. The man who piloted this whole idea was Sir Adam Beck who, when he set up Ontario Hydro which has produced one of the greatest power systems on this continent, did it with the slogan "The gifts of nature belong to the people". That is still true. Whether it is coal, gas, oil, hydro or nuclear power, these belong to the people. This government and the provincial governments have a responsibility to see that the gifts of the people are developed for the benefit of the people.

● (2050)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I know the hon. member's time has expired, Mr. Speaker, but if the House agrees I would like to ask him a question.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: The distinguished member has always been most fair. He was quite critical of the national oil policy of 1962. I think he will agree with me that Saskatchewan and Alberta oil was brought to the Ottawa Valley. We exported to the western United States exactly what we imported from Venezuela. The reason was that the maritimes and Quebec could buy it cheaper in that fashion and we could export it to the United States in an equal amount; both exports and imports being equal so that we were self sufficient. That is the real reason the national oil policy was developed under the Diefenbaker government. We were exporting equal to the amount we were importing because it was cheaper for the maritimes and Quebec to do it in that fashion. That was the reason for the national oil policy which the Liberal party continued and which they endorsed. I hope the hon. member will be fair in that regard.

Energy

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair. However, I point out to the hon. member two things. First, his figures are wrong. The amount of oil which we imported was much less than we exported. We imported around 750,000 to 800,000 barrels a day and exported anywhere from 1.2 million to 1.5 million barrels a day. We exported almost twice as much as we imported.

Mr. Woolliams: It depends on what year you take.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): You can take it over the average of years and you get the same answer. Second, by making all of the area east of the Ottawa Valley dependent on imported oil we left that area in a very vulnerable position, and the people of the Atlantic provinces are paying the price today. Incidentally I came to Ottawa with the Independent Petroleum Producers Association of Canada to plead with the government at that time to extend the pipeline to eastern Canada to keep our oil in Canada so that we would be self sufficient against the day we would not be able to get imported oil at reasonable prices.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): At last, Mr. Speaker, at long last someone else besides the federal government has recognized that there is an energy crisis in this country. The day of cheap energy is gone. The House, indeed the whole country, owes a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies). However, it is unfortunate that his flash of brilliance did not continue into the second half of his motion where he failed to present some solution to the problem.

The motion under debate, Mr. Speaker, represents another attempt by the opposition to have the federal government come to the rescue because a provincial government has been unable to manage its own affairs. They would have us believe that the skyrocketing price of energy has come as a complete surprise, when in fact the handwriting has been on the wall for at least the last two and a half years.

As has already been pointed out, the responsibility for electrical power generation rests with the provincial governments. It was the provincial governments which decided to burn oil to produce electricity. Security of supply was of less importance than low price in the decision to rely on foreign imports rather than western Canadian crude oil.

While the dramatic price increases which resulted from the actions of the OPEC members could not have been foreseen, the possibility of such action taking place always existed and therefore should have been allowed for. The Atlantic provinces are now paying the price for having chosen the wrong long term option. If the hon. members opposite choose to see a statement of fact as representing a callous attitude, then they are unduly sensitive. The free enterprise system, which they admonish us not to destroy, rewards those who make the right decision and penalizes those who are wrong. Surely no one who loses money in the stock market expects to be bailed out.

The federal government is being asked to bail out the Atlantic provinces now that they are faced with a serious situation. The opposition fails to recognize, however, the fact that the federal government has initiated, during the last two decades, a number of endeavours designed to provide that region with a stable and affordable source of electrical energy.

These have included loans under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act totalling $225 million, grants of over $3 million to study the possibilities of tidal power, a loan of $350 million for the Point Lepreau nuclear plant, a grant toward the New Brunswick-Nova Scotia interconnection of $4 million, and a loan and grant totalling $27 million toward the P.E.I. interconnection with New Brunswick. As well, the federal government has contributed $120 million in oil import compensation for the production of electricity. Over-all financial assistance totals more than $1.2 billion.

In a further attempt to stabilize the price of electricity the federal government has pressed the maritime provinces since 1972 to co-operate in an inter-provincial grid and has offered funds to support the establishment of such a network. Another product of federal initiative, Petro-Canada, plans to devote $25 million or 25 per cent of its exploration budget over the next five years to exploration for oil and gas on the east coast. Until the discovery and development of significant reserves, though, the maritime provinces, and especially Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, will have to rely on existing energy sources. It will be several years before any alternative sources become available.

Considering Nova Scotia's abundant coal supply it would appear logical to devote a larger amount of that fuel to electricity production in order to decrease reliance on oil. However, this does not provide a short term solution. Problems are encountered in transportation, including the need for sea rather than rail transport, and the upgrading of port facilities. The process of converting generating plants from oil to coal burning would be expensive both in time and money. Problems of air pollution from the high sulphur content coal must also be considered. It may be reasonably assumed that a three to five year lead time would be required before the use of coal would alleviate the problems currently being experienced. As world oil prices continue to rise, coal will look increasingly more attractive. At present the price of coal is tied to the price of oil, but there is no reason why that policy must be continued indefinitely.

Nuclear energy holds the answer to future requirements in the maritimes, but reactors cannot be built overnight. This is where the need for responsible long-term planning becomes very evident. Nova Scotia Light and Power has had an agreement with Imperial Oil Limited since January 1, 1970, and running to December 31 of this year, whereby the utility is guaranteed its fuel requirements at $1.75 per barrel—the cheapest oil in the world right now. Surely it did not take until 1976 for the province to realize that it was in a very favourable position because of that contract.

When it became clear that petroleum prices were rising, steps should have been taken immediately to prevent the situation now facing the population of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) demonstrated, the price of electricity remained constant in Nova Scotia from 1958 to 1974 while the cost of all other goods and services continued to rise. The province had a responsibility throughout that period to explore possible alternate energy forms, especially after the OPEC oil price increase in October, 1973.

● (2100)

Although the outlook for the future appears dismal when one considers the lack of substitute energy forms, there is one very worth-while step that not only can but must be taken now, that is, to increase public awareness of the need to conserve energy. Every incentive must be offered to encourage a more responsible use of our energy resources. Unfortunately increased cost has proven to be the most effective incentive.

Significant increments in supply can be realized by lowering thermostats a few degrees and driving our cars only when really necessary, and then at lower speeds and with more efficient engines. Conservation is a priority before we begin to discuss new sources of energy to replace those we are using up at an unsustainable rate. Conservation is now. It is the immediate solution which will buy time until the other solutions can be implemented.

Hopefully it is becoming apparent to all Canadians that the federal government is not an endless source of funds ready to save publicly-funded enterprises or other governments within Canada from the excesses of poor management. Whether we are discussing electricity rates in the Atlantic provinces or the cost of the Olympic Games, the same problem emerges. The government has a responsibility to the taxpayers of Canada to ensure that their money is used in a responsible manner.

The hon. member for Don Valley wants more money for research and development. I entirely agree. It is one of the things I have been stressing for some time. But we cannot complain; in this time of restraint and budget cutting the government recently announced an increase of $9.7 million in funds available for energy research and development. This indicates how high a priority the government places on this line of endeavour. I understand, too, the provision of additional funds is presently under consideration in connection with the fusion program.

The hon. member wanted the government to change its priorities. He did not elaborate on that theme, but I would be very interested to hear what his priorities happen to be and how they happen to differ from those set out in government policy which are almost identical to what was suggested almost a year ago by the Science Council, an independent group to which the best brains in the country contribute. What does the hon. member or his party know that the best talent in the country doesn't?

As indicated both by government policy and by the conclusions of the Science Council, in the short term, conservation will buy us time and reduce demand. We will increase supply in the short term by using coal and nuclear fission. No new technology is needed in these fields; it is a matter of implementing what we already have. In the intermediate term, the oil and gas resources of the tar sands, the Arctic and the Atlantic offshore regions should be brought to the market place. In the long term, solar energy and energy from fusion should be the largest suppliers of our energy needs, but this will not be until the end of the present century. Energy produced as a result of novel techniques; e.g. wind, biomass, geothermal and tidal sources will not make any significant contribution until the end of the century.

The hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) proposed the early use of tidal energy. He mentioned the several studies which have been carried out in this connection. Studies have certainly been made, but their conclusion is that it is not economic to proceed with such projects at the present time. Even if a decision were made to begin such a scheme today it would be many years before we could expect energy to be derived from that source.

The hon. member for Moncton also commented on insulation standards in his province. I happen to know that in his own riding there is an insulation factory under construction right now but the project has been delayed for many months because there has been no increased demand for insulation in that part of the country. The standards may exist but they are certainly not being implemented. Conservation is for now. Now is the time to save energy while we bring more energy on stream to supply our future needs.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down will be happy reading for Mr. Regan, the Premier of Nova Scotia, as an indication of the tremendous support his Liberal allies are giving to his province. It might have come from the back benches but that speech was applauded by everyone on the Liberal side. It was prepared and, we must assume, researched prior to delivery. It was not an off-the-cuff statement. It was Liberal policy and must be considered as such in view of the way in which it was presented.

The hon. member mentioned energy from wind. I do not want to speak in a derogatory way about anyone who advocates the conservation of energy or the exploitation of new forms of energy, but it might be of interest to the hon. member to learn that wind energy is so important in the Atlantic area that when a meeting connected with the preservation of the environment was held last week in New Brunswick they tried to run their PA system by means of batteries charged by a wind-driven generator. Their meeting was constantly interrupted because the fan failed to run; it did not generate any energy, the batteries ran down. That sort of situation, I suppose, is one to which he would relegate the Atlantic region. It is typical of Liberal party policy, historically and traditionally, to take that kind of position as their supporters look eastward.

Mr. Forrestall: Exactly so. It reminds me of what Mackenzie King said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) has the floor. If the hon. member wishes to make a speech he can make it later on.

Mr. McCain: My hon. friend may be disturbing, but at least he has his feet on the ground and he has some knowledge of the requirements of the Atlantic provinces. He is therefore far ahead of some of those on your right, Mr. Speaker.

I suppose we might go to biomass as was suggested by the last speaker, but this is an alternative which has not been researched by the Research Council; the process has not been developed in practical terms even for individual farm use. It is certainly worthy of research, and indeed one member on this side of the House has been promoting this suggestions for years—it has fallen on deaf ears until tonight, and now it becomes a practical source of energy which the Atlantic area ought to consider.

There is no question that we should consider conservation. It is a must. But up to this moment there has been very little concrete policy to indicate that the government itself is promoting research in this direction. Have we researched a new carburetor? Have we researched a new motor? Have we researched anything in this field which has become commercially viable? Not to date.

In the speech we just heard, we were called gamblers. I would point out that the Atlantic area and New Brunswick in particular have gone far ahead of some of the ideas which have been presented today. We have tried nuclear power but we were delayed by red tape for years. We have tried to take advantage of the need to refine offshore oil but we were denied this opportunity as a result of National Energy Board policy which refused to allow the refining and processing to go to the Atlantic area.

I think it is high time that we took a solid look at the Atlantic area. We have been given a couple of little books lately. I have not read them word for word, but I have studied them and I have asked others about them. I am told that the Atlantic provinces are not mentioned by name in these books anywhere. I have in my hand a news release which followed the tabling of these books and their presentation for public consumption. The Atlantic provinces are not referred to as a problem area in this news release. One must assume that the Atlantic provinces, in the mind of the government today, have no energy problem. Nothing could be further from the truth.

We have a study by the government that indicates that we must have self-reliance. This means reducing the vulnerability of Canadians to arbitrary changes in prices or the supply of imported energy by using domestic resources to the greatest extent possible, and protecting against interruptions in the supply of energy we must import. And, Mr. Speaker, we must import energy in the east. According to the study, a strategy of self-reliance does not mean self-sufficiency at any price unless, I might add, Mr. Speaker, it is for the maritimes.

We are going to reduce net Canadian dependence on imported oil in 1985 to one third of our total oil demands. Economists are predicting that this target will bankrupt us before we reach 1985, not only in the Atlantic area but in Canada as a whole. The next 10 to 15 years are crucial for both the short-term and long-term energy future.

Let me examine the situation in the Atlantic area. For example, let me talk about our residential energy. I would ask the hon. member who has just taken his seat to take what I propose to say into consideration. He should take some lessons from the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) who, though I disagree with him philosophically, has objectives that are admirable and much preferable to those on your right, Mr. Speaker. He has made a study of his subject and he knows what he is talking about. He was a credit to himself and he spoke as a supporter of a total over-all policy for the good of all Canada. He was not accusing anyone; he was merely pointing out the problems.

While the east has been experiencing energy shortages that could have been anticipated, the Government of Canada has been saying that oil in Alberta belongs to Alberta, that oil in Saskatchewan belongs to Saskatchewan, but that oil lying offshore in the Atlantic area belongs to Canada. The manipulation of offshore permits for drilling has been such that drilling has been discouraged. Those who have had the courage to drill have had to apply both provincially and federally, not knowing the regulations that the federal government would impose. I submit that the search for and development of energy off our coasts has been set back by at least ten years as a result of negative and controversial policies. Ask some of the responsible premiers of the Atlantic area what their opinion is.

Mr. Breau: That is nonsense.

Mr. McCain: The hon. member had better check with some of his political friends down there.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. McCain: Yes, when I am through. I should like to plead for one other position, Mr. Speaker, and it is this. The Atlantic premiers should at this time recognize the fact that, regardless of their political faith, their prime loyalty must be to the Atlantic area and to each other. The members of the Atlantic legislatures must recognize that in unity there is strength and in discord there is weakness. We have operated from a position of weakness for too many years. There are not many seats in the Atlantic area but there are enough to change a government. It is high time they recognized, as the west has already recognized, that there is no sympathy from those on your right, Mr. Speaker, for people in need anywhere in Canada, whether they be native people, maritimers or northerners. The needs of Quebec and Ontario are prime in the minds of those to Your Honour's right. The Atlantic premiers must recognize this and act as one. There have been too many quarrels among the premiers to have a united policy.

The Hon. Jugh John Flemming, a Conservative, started the maritime and Atlantic premiers get togethers. The next premier of New Brunswick practised politics and caused dissension to the point that unity could not be obtained among the premiers of the Atlantic area. He played politics with this crew of which the hon. member is a member and for which he must assume some blame.

We now find ourselves in the position where the Hon. Richard Hatfield, a Conservative, is pleading with the maritime premiers to take a united position, and the only thing interfering with that position is politics. It is becoming more and more obvious to maritimers at this time that the policies proposed and the united position won by Premier Richard Hatfield are indicative of the course they must follow if they are to survive remarks of the kind we have heard a moment ago which will, by the way, be widely read as Liberal policy in the Atlantic area. We will like that speech very much.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what does the government propose that the pulp and paper industry use as money? On the basis of the cost of energy in the province of Nova Scotia, which is dependent upon oil, on the basis of the cost of energy required in New Brunswick which is derived from a combination of oil, nuclear and water power, which is still not competitive when related to the cost of power which is being distributed from Churchill Falls to Quebec, Ontario, and in a small way to New Brunswick, and on the basis of the cost of power located beside coalfields of almost limitless extent in the prairies and in British Columbia, how, is it proposed to keep the forest industry and its pulp and paper mills working?

I also ask, Mr. Speaker, how do those on your right expect a mining industry to survive which at the moment is dependent, not because of poor planning but because it has no alternative, on a thermal plant located in the northeast of New Brunswick to provide its power? How will it remain competitive? I suggest it will be among the earliest industries in the mining areas of Canada to close down if it becomes a marginal producer, and there will go the jobs that so many have pleaded so hard for in the northeast. Where will we get the money to pay for energy to operate farm machinery in the Atlantic area?

I suppose it is ridiculous to say that at some point we must pay a higher price for oil. But let me get one thing very clear, Mr. Speaker. The money that comes from higher prices for oil must be spent on research, exploration, and development. It must not be grabbed by the Government of Canada fallaciously under some policy that is intended to better Canada. We must step up all aspects of our energy structure, including conservation, but research, exploration, and development are essential. Those are the areas in which our money should be spent regardless of what may be the philosophy of those on my left and of many on Your Honour's right.

An hon. Member: That is all spelled out in the energy paper.

Mr. McCain: It is also spelled out in one of these little books that the tax structure has discouraged research, exploration and development. It is also spelled out in another of these little books that the tax structure has now been corrected. That statement has to be qualified and you have to go into the situation a little more deeply to see how much incentive is actually left. Mention is made somewhere that if you do not spend this money correctly you will not have very much of it left, perhaps 25 per cent. The government lays down rules and regulations governing how any additional money accruing to the oil companies may be spent. Those regulations are fickle; we have seen that throughout various years of government opposite.

I think it is absolutely necessary that the Government of Canada adopt some policies in the energy field. One of its proposals is to pay 50 per cent of the cost of studying new sources of generation. Another is to finance 50 per cent of a distribution line, and the government might finance 50 per cent of a construction program. The figures read off by the last speaker did not amount to the $300 million that was put into one project by the federal government, namely, Syncrude, which admittedly will produce oil but at a price that will make it uneconomic to transport to any other area of Canada. That oil must be used on the spot or nearby if it is to be used practically and economically.

The amount of moneys the government has said will be spent in the Atlantic area comes to just a little bit more than what the government has chosen to spend in one lump sum on the Syncrude project. I do not quarrel with putting money into the Syncrude project. It could come virtually under the heading of research, if you wish, Mr. Speaker, because some element of research is required. But I submit that a new look must be taken at undeveloped sources of energy.

Should we look at a new way to extract coal from the Nova Scotia fields? Should there be a new, more productive and more economic way of extracting such coal as may be left in New Brunswick? Should it be the development of existing hydro power which may be in neighbouring provinces but which might be the salvation of energy prices in the Atlantic area? Should it be the removal of restrictions with respect to exploration offshore, thus removing the uncertainty of knowing where I stand if I find oil? To whom will I pay the tax, the federal government or the provincial government? Who will let me remove it, the federal government or the provincial government? What is the conflict that exists?

Are we in the position in which Premier Moore says we are? "It is all mine", says Premier Moore, and I support him. Or are we in the compromise position of Mr. Regan who says "We will let you have some"? These are items which will have to be resolved and these are uncertainties which must be resolved.

It is time that Quoddy power was developed. Reasons were given why it was economically unfeasible. One of the reasons was that there was no sale for the total possible production of the tidal power which might be generated in the Bay of Fundy. This has been an ongoing piece of research which has been continued since the 1920's by U.S. forces. An application was presented to the Government of Canada for permission to go ahead in the late 1900's, and it was presented by a constituent of mine who was their lawyer. It was not considered feasible by Canadians, although it was by Americans, but we never resolved that dispute because we did no research into it. We know there has been some problem with respect to the economics of it and that it was not economical initially.

We now have the techniques; we know that at the present prices it is probably viable. It should now be immediately researched and, if necessary, the Government of Canada should finance the development. It should not subsidize it but I think it should finance it and operate it if it so wishes—that is the government's privilege—and the energy should be available for the Atlantic area. Initially some of it would have to be exported because the market is not at home.

We have alternatives. We have a broad range of interprovincial, federal, co-operative programs which could bring power electrically from other sources. We have coal, although we need more research on it; we have Quoddy power, which should be researched. We need an immediate answer, not a commission which would start its study in 1976 and report only in 1979. Now is the time when the research needs to be done. We have an industry which will not be competitive with Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia or any other part of Canada or with world-wide competitors if we do not get some kind of rational federal program to give us energy at competitive prices, which we cannot have now.

Mr. Breau: Would the hon. member entertain a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not the decision of the hon. member because his time has expired. The only way in which he can answer a question is by unanimous consent. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies)—

[English]

Mr. McCain: You have had your chance to speak for New Brunswick. You have been in the House for a long time but you have not spoken for New Brunswick yet.

Mr. Breau: I am on the list.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, first I would like to express my gratitude and extend my thanks to the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) who introduced that motion which in my opinion deserves very special consideration.

There is no doubt that the prospection for traditional oil resources has decreased more quickly than expected by the National Energy Board. Just the same the federal government must meet as much as possible the energy requirements of Canada with our own resources.

In that connection, on April 27 last, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) tabled in the House a paper entitled "An Energy Strategy for Canada". To that end the federal government is considering making Canada self-sufficient in energy within the next ten years. However, Mr. Speaker, I remember quite well that three years ago, that is in June 1973, the present government published a paper on its energy policy which was to make Canada self-sufficient by approximately 1983. And barely three years later after that publication, we were told once again that Canada will be self-sufficient only in 1986.

● (2130)

It is therefore easy to realize that the ten-year goal set by the Canadian government has deteriorated from year to year. On several occasions I asked for the unanimous consent of the House, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to discuss some measures the federal government had to bring in to save energy as much as possible. As usual, my proposals did not receive unanimous consent. Among some motions that I wanted to move, there was one to maintain daylight saving time throughout the year.

I am convinced that this measure would enable the federal government to save thousands of barrels of oil, not to mention electricity. All that is needed is to recall the experiment conducted in the United States in 1973, which proved to be very conclusive when one considers the saving of energy that was realized, that is 2.5 per cent. Moreover, we have ready access to wind energy which appears as a replacement formula, specially for a country like ours where the winter season limits the possibilities of solar energy.

Mr. Speaker, since the days of cheap oil are over and those of oil itself are numbered, why should we not take advantage of the energy potential of the wind which is really tremendous in our beautiful country?

Mr. Speaker, what I find really curious in all this is to see that the federal government does not yet have real means to assess scientifically the Canadian oil and gas supplies which it has up to now consistently overestimated. We, in the Social Credit party of Canada, deeply feel that this government should establish, with the consent and the participation of the provinces, a Canadian energy resources board. That board would be responsible for the assessment of the energy requirements for the next 25 years and the availability of adequate supplies to meet those requirements. For the moment, as I was saying a while ago, our energy resources cannot be scientifically assessed, yet it would be really urgent to see that our energy resources be rightly assessed, given the fact that we consume much oil and that this energy source is not renewable.

Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) also announced that the price of Canadian oil would move up to the level of the world price. But one way or another, it was to be expected, considering that the present government has always lacked foresight, as far as I can remember. Because of the inability of the government to develop an efficient energy strategy, Canadian taxpayers will pay even more for oil.

There is no doubt that a real policy cannot be separated from a global economic policy. Now, as was foreseeable, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announces sharp increases in oil and gas prices. But before announcing such increases, did the government realize that they would have a direct impact on inflation in Canada, that this so-called energy policy is working directly against the price and wage control policy of the Trudeau government? In this document, the minister invites taxpayers to save energy, oil in particular, when the policy of the Department of Transport encourages air rather than rail transportation. Is there anything to understand in all this, Mr. Speaker? I, for one, cannot understand. It is inconsistent to the point of being staggering.

Under those circumstances, one may consider, Mr. Speaker, that Canada stands at a crossroads where not only the future of its oil industry but of its whole economy is at stake. May we seriously continue to produce enough oil from Canadian sources to satisfy domestic demand or must we become increasingly dependent on foreign oil as we are at present?

We all know that huge oil and natural gas supplies have been discovered in the Arctic and that we now have the technology required to develop oil from tar sands in superficial fields and at the same time process it into thick oil. Indeed, our great country has huge potential supplies of crude oil and natural gas. It also has limitless coal supplies that can be processed into gas or synthetic oil, but in order to really develop new sources of hydrocarbons in Canada, the Canadian government must spend over $50 billion to achieve the goal it has set for 1986.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be helpful to recall that as a whole, less than $9 billion have been spent these past few years on exploration and development. And what about inflation of construction costs which increase by 40 to 50 per cent each year, a problem which is becoming more and more serious?

Mr. Speaker, let us be realistic, our economic policy is such as to continously promote an increase in capital at the expense of the work and purchasing power of our fellow citizens. At any rate, one can easily realize that with our present laws, the rich are making net profits of millions of dollars, the effect of which is to substantially reduce the purchasing power of Canadians.

Those who suffer most from this situation, Mr. Speaker, are low wage earners and those citizens who do not have a sufficient purchasing power, simply because the present financial system does not reflect the reality. As a matter of fact, the present system finds no justification in the nature of things and perpetuates a wrong conception of money in a human society.

Before going any further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from an article published in "Le Soleil" on March 25:

> Through interest rates, a huge financial spider-web surrounds us and becomes tighter, leaving us just alive . . . or nearly so.
> As it snowballs, interest accumulates and centralizes money in the hands of a select group of financiers . . . On the other hand, being hunted down from all sides, the small people are divided against themselves, abandoned and exploited by their leaders who are eager to get rich, they are left at the mercy of these loathsome heartless financiers in top hats; they have no revolver but from their ivory tower they are more efficient than the armed forces in making us accept smoothly a way of life which is impossible, disgusting, even revolting and which does not take human values into account, in which money prevails.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the present financial system prevents consumers from really living. It prevents them from enjoying the advantages of their association because it eradicates these advantages which should belong to all citizens; if Canadians are to take real advantage of the fruits of their association, it is absolutely necessary to put financial credit in line with real credit or social credit, if you wish. In other words, we should be putting money and credit in line with what Canadians produce and supply.

A little further, the same article went on to say:

> These financiers represented by chartered banks, ably disguised by the Bank of Canada which makes only pocket money with 8 per cent of the money supply of the country, while they are making the rest—92 per cent of the nation's credit.

It must be said that a country should not buy money: it should create it itself so as not to owe it to anyone else. That is strictly a sovereign right, that belongs to the state. In other words, a government cannot administer a country if it continues to buy money abroad, thus distorting and disrupting the economy.

With multipliers, single strokes of the pen, chartered banks convert the wealth of the country into money and unjustly cash in interests in the process. They take over our wealth, become the masters, the tyrants from whom we must ask permission to draw a breath. Nothing will change, Mr. Speaker, unless we have the courage to ask the government to alter this importing monetary system, to which we owe directly the hardships of most Canadians and the ceaseless borrowing and indebtedness of our municipalities, the provinces and the central government.

If the Maritime provinces better controlled their money, today we would not have to deplore their shortage of energy, and especially, the price those people now have to pay for their energy and will have to pay in the future for heating and transportation. That, Mr. Speaker, is the main source of energy our government should put at the disposal of the people; in that way, many other energy problems would be solved automatically. Mr. Speaker, those are the few notes I took with a view to supporting the motion of the hon. member for Don Valley.

[English]

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise on this opposition day and contribute my views on the problem of the Atlantic region energy crisis. First of all I should like to congratulate the minister for "An Energy Strategy for Canada."

Mr. Paproski: You don't mean that.

Miss Campbell: It is certainly full of good suggestions for the provinces to take up. Energy is not just a problem in the Atlantic provinces and in particular Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island; in Canada it has become a very grave problem. Internally we hear rumours of disputes between the provinces, and internationally the United States has still not forgiven us for cutting back our oil exports. Other countries are also finding things difficult.

The problem has been recognized by the government which has held many federal-provincial meetings, the most recent in March this year, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) intends to meet with provincial premiers on Thursday when I am sure this will be one of the main topics to be discussed.

The provincial minister in my province of Nova Scotia, the Hon. Bill Gillis, spent a good part of his Easter recess touring Canada to look at existing energy systems and the long range potential to serve the needs of the people and to bring the problems of Nova Scotia to the attention of all Canadians.

Governments, both federal and provincial, are working toward solutions. It just happens that we are a big country. Many areas in the world are in worse shape than we are and we hear about that, but when one area of Canada is in trouble, such as Prince Edward Island or Nova Scotia, it seems that the rest of Canada does not recognize the dilemma. In fact New Brunswick is not too eager to look at the interprovincial grid lines and other systems.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Campbell: Well, we cannot arrive at a solution. I just mention that for members of the opposition. Is it unreasonable to say at this time, perhaps Nova Scotia is in trouble but the solution we obtain for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island should help all the provinces as well as Canada? It is time for us to forget our regionalism in the light of such a problem. We as a province enjoyed having access to the cheap oil producing countries, therefore we did not get subsidies on pipelines or on oil and gas production in the west. We do not have gas piped to us on the trans-Canada pipeline and we do not have oil pipelines. In fact, we do not have any oil. Unfortunately we are at present in need of some attention from both the federal and provincial governments across Canada and priority should be given to us by other provinces at this time for our future plans.

Nova Scotia depends on oil-fired electricity generation for 65 per cent of its needs, with an additional 23 per cent being supplied by coal-fired generation. The rest is in water. In the search for a form of power to reduce the province's dependence on oil the Nova Scotia Power Corporation is looking very closely at the coal situation. As has been mentioned today, the use of coal might well offer an offset to oil costs since most thermal plants could be modified to switch from oil to coal. Before this happens, however, the coal—which is currently hitched to the cost of oil—would have to be made attractive in price. Again, coal generated power is not the long term solution—even though Nova Scotia holds good coals reserves—as pollution and environmental problems become magnified. At present, however, an accrued benefit is that incomes are circulating throughout the province. As well, the province has stated that any further expansion will be coal generated.

What are the alternatives? Perhaps tidal power development and the possible importation of power from Quebec and Labrador, but both projects would take many years to materialize.

At this time I should like to refer to an article, "Energy by Fundy Tides," by R. H. Clark, which appeared in the Canadian Geographical Journal of Novemeber, 1972. Clark stated that the one and only area in Canada and in fact in North America where it is feasible to harness tide waters for energy purposes is in the Bay of Fundy. The world's most powerful tides are experienced in the inlets and estuaries of the Bay of Fundy. We also have the highest tides in the world, achieving up to 53 foot tides. Many locations have been indicated as ideal in the Bay of Fundy. Studies of tidal power have been going on since 1915. In 1967 the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board was established to deal with the study. It cost $2.5 million when it was finished in 1969. It reiterated former studies, that is, a tidal power development is technically but not economically feasible.

Because of the quadrupling in oil prices brought about by the formation of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), however, the federal government, along with New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, instituted the Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Review Board on February 29, 1972. This board was charged with reviewing the detailed findings of the report done by the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board. The preliminary investigations of the Tidal Power Review Board were made public in November, 1974, in which it was noted that tidal power's economic position had significantly improved, vis-à-vis oil-fired electrical generation, since 1969. I wonder what the position would be today if updated.

The latest study, as recommended by the Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Board, was announced in November, 1974. To be known as the Bay of Fundy Tidal Power Study, it is to cost some $3 million and will again be sponsored by the federal government, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—with the federal government putting up half the funds for the investigation. Nova Scotia, which is more affected by oil price increases than New Brunswick and is thus vitally interested in tidal power development, has been concerned for quick advancement of the study. Its purpose is to make a more in-depth study of certain areas. In my view the Annapolis Basin or Digby, which are not being studied at this time, would probably be prime locations because there are no mud deposits as there are up higher. Mud seems to be one of the problems in establishing tidal power.

In the case of tidal power, if construction commenced in 1980—after completion of the current study ended—it would still take ten years to 1990 before first power was produced—and this is assuming all schedules were met and no technical drawbacks were encountered.

The first, and to date only, operating industrial scale tidal power project in the world is a double flow turbine plant located at Rance near St. Malo in France. It cost $80 million to build approximately ten years ago. Great Britain is now looking at that project and France is also looking at it.

I should like to read from a very interesting article entitled "Fringe Energy" which appeared in The Economist of March 27. Under the subheading "Water" the article states:

> On the Rance estuary in France, the first major effort to harness tides to generate electricity is seven years old and has proven a greater success than expected. It is said to generate electricity more efficiently than other hydro electric sites and has worked at virtually full capacity since 1973 without failure. There is now talk of a second French tidal plant, but a decision is still far off.

● (2150)

> Britain is still flirting with the idea of tapping Channel tides for electricity, but drawn-out discussions on the Severn estuary tidal barrage are continuing. The chief drawbacks to tidal projects are the costs. The Severn project could eventually cost much more than the estimated $3 billion.

I bring this point up because one of the assets of tidal is that it is not exhaustible, unless the tides go out and do not come back.

Mr. Gillespie: That would be lunar power.

Miss Campbell: I do not profess to be a scientist. I merely want to compare the $3 billion estimated cost with the $10 billion the federal government plans to invest in the exploration and the development of unknown areas. That is how much we shall spend in the next ten years in our search for oil and gas.

Perhaps Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and other provinces should bring this matter up at some provincial conference. The $10 billion figure does not take into account the subsidized cost of oil and the need for subsidized oil in future. Actually by mid-summer this year the subsidy for the Atlantic provinces will amount to about $1 billion.

The Point Lepreau nuclear project was estimated to cost between $400 and $500 million. It will be in full operation in six to ten years. But my sources tell me that the estimated cost is now $700 million. Further, nuclear power is an exhaustible source of energy, and the costs will probably be much higher than estimated. Tidal power is not exhaustible, as I said. The Atlantic provinces should consider as a priority the development of tidal power, and perhaps bring up the subject at the next federal-provincial conference.

An alternative solution is to import power from outside Nova Scotia, for example, from Quebec or Labrador. But we have no interprovincial flow of power. For instance, power cannot be transmitted interprovincially as crude oil and gas can be through an interprovincial pipeline.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not think the present speaker who has the floor wishes to be inaccurate, but I submit that there is provision for a power interconnection. It is being constantly extended in New Brunswick. It was pioneered in New Brunswick and is hooked up to Nova Scotia. It can bring power from Churchill Falls to Nova Scotia.

Miss Campbell: Mr. Speaker, with respect that is not a question of privilege. The hon. member has his sources of information, and I have mine. I do not see evidence of any existing interprovincial flow of energy which could reach Gull Island.

Mr. McCain: There is provision for transmitting power right now from Churchill Falls to Halifax. The system is in place now.

Miss Campbell: I understand that New Brunswick and Quebec will not allow us to be involved in this. I understand, for instance, that the project at Gull Island could go ahead if it has markets, but there is no interprovincial grid to carry the energy, as there is in the case of interprovincial gas.

Mr. McCain: Nonsense.

Miss Campbell: I ask, should this not be a national priority? As an aside let me say that perhaps Atlantic union would bring one benefit. We should not triple expenditures in the Atlantic provinces and most of our provincial problems would be done away with if there were one system in the Atlantic provinces for carrying energy. I say that as an aside. That should not prevent the National Energy Board from becoming involved with the question of the interprovincial flow of energy. This has already been done in the case of oil and gas.

I think that we should look beyond the interest of the provinces and consider questions of national importance. Under the Churchill Falls agreement Newfoundland perhaps is not receiving as much as it should. When the time of the agreement runs out, Quebec will be the sole bidder for that power. I suggest that no province except Quebec will be in the position to bid for the power.

That brings me to another point. In the last few years in Canada we have seen cartels arise in the west and cartels arise in the east. Nationalism goes out of the door when one begins to think in terms of provincial priorities rather than national priorities. I feel that the provinces should be entering into arrangements and taking advantage of the federal government's new energy strategy for Canada. They should consider energy self-reliance within 10 years. But their endeavours should be directed to new areas.

I return again to tidal power. Tidal power is not new, as it has worked at Rance, and other countries are looking into its effectiveness as an endless source of energy. Let the province consider this source of energy. At present we are heading into unchartered areas. We are entering unknown areas. For example, we do not know how much oil and gas we will find; what is the lifetime of nuclear power, and what is the cost of coal and the cost of delivery.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) said that in the next ten years we shall spend more than $10 billion in 1975 dollars on exploration and development with regard to oil and gas. So, why not consider tidal power? It is proven and certainly an inexhaustible source. We could consider this possibility without lessening our search for oil and gas.

Perhaps the provinces should strongly stress conservation measures at this time. The insulation of homes should become a priority and there is need, for a scheme which will involve an incentive to individuals, perhaps with easy financing. No doubt we could lower room temperatures without any of us being hurt. The short term elements of saving will be in the conservation area, and we will be looking at coal-generating power. But let us not think that Nova Scotia is unique, and that other areas will not be looking at the example we set. I feel that the provinces should take advantage of the schemes laid out in "An Energy Strategy for Canada", particularly at page 28 where it is said that:

> The Government of Canada will continue its policy of funding 50 per cent of approved studies of interprovincial and interregional electrical interconnections, and financing up to 50 per cent of the capital cost of approved projects. In view of the objective of minimizing Canadian dependence on imported oil, the federal government believes that the development of regional electrical interconnections, particularly in eastern Canada, should be accelerated.

I see that it is almost ten o'clock. I look forward to greater consideration by all provinces of what I consider a national issue and I do hope that the best solution will be achieved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 58, the proceedings on the motion have now expired.

Adjournment Debate

INDUSTRY—TEXTILES—REFUSAL OF DUPONT TO PUT INTO PRODUCTION NEW POLYESTER YARN PLANT BECAUSE OF LOW-PRICED IMPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote three paragraphs out of the 1975 annual report by the Dupont of Canada Company Ltd:

The net sales amounted to $410,219,000, that is an 11 per cent increase over 1974, which is mainly attributable to higher prices to the consumer.

The net profit in 1975, including extraordinary items, reached $2,419,-000 or 28 cents per ordinary share, compared to $21,491,000, or $2.70 per ordinary share in 1974.

Construction works on the latest of the company buildings, the Coteau plant, near Montreal, have progressed at a satisfactory pace in 1975, and the operation of the facilities for Dacron polyester yarn is expected in late 1976.

[English]

In the letter which the Dupont Company addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commence (Mr. Jamieson) on March 26 of this year they point out that the present position of the polyester yarn industry has arisen for two reasons. First, imports of garments, fabrics, and yarns have pre-empted over 50 per cent of this market. The nature and the extent of these imports has caused major problems for the industry. Some are from low cost countries, some are normal competition from developed countries, and some are distress priced imports from developed countries. In total they have risen from about 25 million pounds in 1970 to over 50 million pounds in 1975.

● (2200)

This situation was exacerbated by a sudden market slowdown in the U.S. yarn market in January which has led to a collapse in prices. U. S. producers are now selling below their cost. Sales and offerings by U.S. producers have driven Canadian prices down from about $1.30 per pound to just over $1 per pound over the last two months.

The import supply line is a long one, particularly for fabrics and garments. Import supplies cannot be quickly cut back. As a result, when a market slowdown occurs, virtually all of the adjustment is directed to domestic suppliers. Thus when imports have 50 per cent of the market and there is 20 per cent market slowdown, the domestic suppliers can be cut back by as much as 40 per cent suddenly.

The company have just had to reduce their operating rates in their polyester facility at Kingston from 90 per cent of capacity to 50 per cent as a direct result of the above import pressures. This volume reduction, combined with the price reductions, are causing them to incur serious losses. In addition their market development program to support the fall start-up of their large new facility at Coteau du Lac is in a state of disarray. The company were to soon start hiring and training over 300 employees and now this is a questionable plan.

Employment is also being affected at Kingston. They are trying to avoid a layoff there by transferring workers to other parts of the plant, by building inventories till summer vacation period and by sharply cutting back student hiring for vacation relief.

Through the Canadian Textiles Institute they, in company with Celanese Canada and their throwster customers, have brought the polyester yarn problem to the attention of the Textile and Clothing Board and have asked them to make an urgent investigation leading hopefully to the quick implementation of remedial measures.

The Du Pont Company then comment on their new facility at Coteau du Lac. This plant can make a significant contribution to the domestic economy and to the balance of trade. It will be a serious setback to all associated with this venture if it is made non-viable by imports, particularly since it is the most modern facility of its kind in the world and well able to deal effectively with normal competition.

The company vice-president who wrote this letter to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concludes that this is an urgent matter for Du Pont of Canada as they are faced with a decision on Coteau du Lac in the next few weeks. Therefore they are asking for a review of the polyester textured yarn situation at the earliest convenience following the board's recommendation.

This same gentleman, the executive vice-president of Du Pont of Canada, appeared before the Senate Standing Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on February 18 of this year. He outlined the position as he found it to the Senators, and received a sympathetic hearing. He stressed the need for urgency in arriving at some decisions.

That is why I posed my question to the minister when the company announced that, due to the delay and the tardiness in arriving at a decision, it was forced to stop the introduction of its new plant at Coteau du Lac which was built at a cost of $50 million, resulting in a loss of 325 employment opportunities at Coteau du Lac and a layoff of 125 permanent employees at Kingston and the decision, as I mentioned earlier, to cut back entirely on their summer student hiring program, some 200 positions.

In view of these circumstances I implore the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to realize that we cannot wait several months. We must have a decision in the very immediate future.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) for expressing his concern to the House about the expansion of the Du Pont company which planned the construction of a new $50 million polyester plant at Coteau. He indicated to us how many jobs would be created by such expansion and also expressed his interest concerning the generation of summer jobs for students.

This matter is all the more interesting that it concerns a dynamic and efficient company. As the vice-president of Du Pont said when he appeared before the banking, trade and commerce committee, all the studies undertaken by the government and by experts from outside indicate that Du Pont can compete with most of the foreign countries as regards production costs. He was speaking, at that time, of polyester yarn. Once again, I quote: "We can meet our responsibilities towards the consumer".

The government has received many protests because of the problems faced by polyester yarn producers and caused by bad market conditions and the supposedly disastrous reduction of import prices.

In February 1975, the Textile and Clothing Board recommended to the previous minister the imposition of a surtax on certain polyester yarn imports. This could only be done under Article XIX of the GATT, which provides the following criteria, and I quote:

> Emergency Action on Imports of Particular Products
> 1. (a) If, as a result of unforeseen developments and of the effect of the obligations incurred by a contracting party under this Agreement, including tariff concessions, any product is being imported into the territory of that contracting party in such increased quantities and under such conditions—

I could read the rest of the article, but I shall refer the hon. member to Article XIX. It was decided that, under this article, evidence of import increases alone could not justify the proposed surtax at that time. In view of this decision and other circumstances, it was decided to maintain a certain surveillance with an import control list.

During the second half of 1975, the polyester yarn market improved considerably, but a reduction seems to have occurred just recently. The Textile and Clothing Board has already started an urgent investigation on this situation. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to close by saying that following comments made during the hearings of the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, it was decided to ask an advisory committee to study present conditions and the future outlook of the textile and clothing industries, as well as their business situation; to examine the administration of the policy concerning import competition; and once again, to examine the timeliness, in view of present legislation and instruments, of implementing the policy under articles 3 and 4 of the Agreement on Textile Trades and of Article XIX of the GATT; to report its conclusions and recommendations to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce by June 30, 1976. And finally, I wish to ensure the hon. member that the minister will deal immediately with this report and that we shall inform the industry as soon as we receive it.

POST OFFICE—CLOSING OF CANTEEN AT CALGARY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, on April 26 I raised a question with the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) regarding a third attempt to close the canteen at the Calgary Post Office terminal. I return to the subject tonight because this is the third attempt to discontinue canteen service to the postal workers on the graveyard shift when morale is lowest, and again on weekends, another difficult time for Post Office workers.

● (2210)

The first time it occurred the Postmaster General and I happened to be visiting the terminal at the opening ceremony. The hon. gentleman was so incensed that he immediately reordered the canteen opened on the basis of the fact that if you are going to maintain good morale you must provide good working conditions. When it occurred again, it evoked the same immediate response.

I was pleased to see in the Postmaster General's reply that he was going to investigate the matter. He said:

> I would be surprised if no food is available to employees on the graveyard shift or any other shift.

Later on he said:

> Obviously, well fed postmen on the midnight shift will do a lot to increase morale.

So we are in agreement thus far. Just to indicate that the canteen has in fact closed let me say that I receive regular communiqués from the CUPW people in the Calgary Post Office and they inform me that the canteen in the Calgary mail processing plant is to be closed for the midnight shift and for weekends beginning April 1, 1976. In one letter they say:

> The reasons given last time were that Caterplan was incurring losses in revenue. The Post Office, I understand, agreed to underwrite the losses. This was one of the more positive investments made by the Post Office.

The letter was signed by Jim Hall, Business Agent of CUPW in Calgary.

This might seem like a small issue but it is in line with the thesis that the Postmaster General has been preaching since the new year. According to an article by Guy Demarino in the Montreal Gazette issue of January 30:

> . . . Postmaster General Bryce Mackasey has begun unveiling his Post Office salvation plan.
> His philosophy is that only co-operation between postal workers and management can save the Post Office from future disaster . . . Mackasey is ready, he says, "to set up employee-management teams in one or more Post Offices" . . . "Each team will set its own goals and decide how to achieve them," Mackasey said in a recent Montreal speech. Supervisors will no longer tell employees what to do and how to do it, they'll ask how they think it should be done . . .
> Mackasey knows "It won't be easy. In the inside workers are bitter and suspicious. There isn't a lot of trust on either side. But we need their help, so we'll have to convince them that we are sincere".

The Calgary Post Office happens to have one of the labour management committees to which the Postmaster General has referred in the quotations by Mr. Demarino of the Montreal Gazette. They meet regularly with the management of the Post Office and they try to come to grips with the little irritants that concern good human relationships. This particular Post Office is an excellent example of the malaise to which the Postmaster General has referred on many occasions which infested the Post Office Department and caused all the problems that are only too well known in this country. I refer to the 24 wildcat illegal strikes between 1970 and 1975, for example. I trust that now the investigation has been carried out this particular irritant will be resolved.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the hon. member that this is not a small issue. I believe—and I think the minister agrees—that perhaps the most pressing problem in the Post Office is corporate morale, the esprit de corps which has not been present for a long time. I think there is another very serious problem and that is the very high cost differential between revenue and cost in the Post Office. In this situation we are caught between two very difficult problems, one of morale and one of cost. Let me give you some background.

The canteen at the Calgary postal plant is operated by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind for the Department of Public Works. When it was first opened in April of 1975, full, 24 hour service was provided. It soon became apparent to CNIB that this service was not being used to a great extent, and during its first 12 months of operation $20,000 was lost. As a result service during the night shifts and at weekends was reduced to vending machine service.

A senior officer of Canada Post Office prevailed on CNIB to restore full service. This was done, but just before last Christmas CNIB proposed withdrawing completely and the service was stopped. Again the intervention of a CPO official prevented this.

As of April 1 last discussions between DPW and Treasury Board have brought about a changed relationship between caterers and employers in all federal government departments across the country. The new arrangement allows caterers to withdraw from unprofitable situations while at the same time limiting their profit to 6 per cent on productive shifts. While the Calgary situation did not bring this change about, the change does affect the Calgary problem. Canada Post Office continues to look for alternative ways to provide equal service to all shifts.

Both the Postmaster General and myself are concerned to see that everything possible is being done to provide the level of service necessary to maintain the morale of the postal workers.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT RATE AND LEVEL OF INFLATION FOR THE YEAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on March 16 I put a question and a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). If I may repeat my question, first of all I asked:

Considering that last month's brightening of the unemployment picture proved transitory and noting that the unemployment rate has remained near 7 per cent for nearly a full year, can the minister tell the House when improvement in the unemployment rate may be expected and what he anticipates the unemployment rate to be for the balance of this calendar year?

Unfortunately rather than give the House the information to which I believe hon. Members are entitled—certainly the Department of Finance officials have some estimate of the unemployment level in Canada for the coming year, if not even for two years ahead—the minister used a stall. He said there was a budget coming down and that in the context of the budget he would be pleased to refer to that matter.

Then I asked a supplementary question as follows:

In view of the minister's forecast of a 5 per cent rate of growth in the economy in the current year, could he explain the basis of his forecast of the rate of growth at 5 per cent with a specific indication of job creation for the year, the level of inflation he anticipates and the trade deficit for the current calendar year?

Again the minister unfortunately said:

Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that in a budget debate.

This is nothing but a stall. Earlier this evening I had an example in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of a very deliberate stall on the part of administration members who sit on that committee. They were, in short, protecting the minister from any further questioning. I think it is too bad that the government has chosen to put a shroud of secrecy around what is the favourable or unfavourable nature of our economic indicators in the country.

[Mr. McRae.]

● (2220)

In tonight's adjournment debate I sincerely hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Trudel) will shed some light on these important subjects. Budget or not, there is no reason why the people of Canada should not be given the true facts as to what the Finance Department of the government believes to be in store for the coming years. I say that because in sharp contrast to what is happening here in Ottawa we find that in Washington the administration and Congress are going out of their way, year by year, to give more and more detail as to what they see in the nature of the economic future of unemployment, inflation, real growth, their trade deficit and their own budgetary deficits, and in fact it is now the law of the land in the United States that they have to show these figures at least two years in advance. In short, instead of talking only about the 1977 fiscal year at the present time, it is now the law in the United States that they have to be showing 1977 and 1978 figures.

They have even gone beyond that. In the President's economic report and in the annual report of the council of economic advisers in Congress they are giving a five year estimate as to what is to be anticipated along the lines of unemployment, employment, and the trade figures. For example, I find it very startling that while we cannot extract these figures from this administration, in the United States they are predicting that their output from 1975 through to 1981 on an annual basis will be 5.9 per cent per year, and they point out that their inflation rate will be somewhere around 4 per cent by the year 1981. That is the type of openness they are now experiencing as far as the administration and Congress in the United States are concerned. Unfortunately the public in Canada is not being given this type of information. That is the purpose of my question.

I believe that tonight the parliamentary secretary should be able to indicate what his department is anticipating. After all, the government is asking for an estimate to clear $19 million for some 690 personnel. Incidentally that estimate is 15.5 per cent higher than last year, well above the 8 per cent guideline the government is asking other people to abide by under the anti-inflation program. With that type of personnel, including highly technical people and economists, there is no reason that the parliamentary secretary tonight cannot indicate to us what the government estimates to be the employment level for fiscal 1976-77, what the government anticipates the unemployment level will be for those two years, what it sees as the inflation level for those two years, what it sees to be the real growth in this country for those two years, what it anticipates the trade deficits to be, both on a merchandise basis and on a total trade deficit basis, and what the budgetary deficits, based on the current expenditures and revenue forecasts which are available to the government, are likely to be in fiscal 1977-78.

Those are the two years we are asking about, and I believe it is time that the Minister of Finance and the administration started to take the people of Canada and the members of this House into their confidence, because if they want co-operation in an anti-inflation program the least they can do is to be open with the Canadian public as to what their own estimates are.

That is the purpose of this debate tonight, and I hope it will be worth while and that we will learn, for example, the anticipated real growth for 1976. We know that it was only 0.2 of 1 per cent last year, in spite of the fact that the former minister of finance at one time predicted it would be over 4 per cent. That is why I suggest that the government is now hesitant to make forecasts of real growth. It has been so wrong over the last two to three years that it is now a little timid about offering forecasts in case they prove to be wrong. That is not the purpose of a forecast. A forecast is an honest estimate of the officials of the government as to what they see ahead for our economy.

That estimate is really public property and should be open to review by those in the financial community, economists, universities, businessmen, and members of this House. That is what I am seeking tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member does not expect me to cover in three minutes all the points he mentioned.

However, I would like to answer one of the charges he made when he said that the minister had refused to answer the questions asked in committee. I would urge hon. members to read the report of the committee meetings. The minister repeated time and again that he was ready to answer all the questions that the hon. member for York-Simcoe or his colleagues would like to ask him. And I think that the report prepared by the House employees will prove that.

Mr. Speaker, he raised another point, but I am wandering away from his question. I shall come back to it before my time is up. He talked about the 15 per cent increase, and it has been proved that they were only talking about the ½ per cent left from the 15 per cent. The political argumentation in committee deserves also to be mentioned.

Answering directly the question of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) about the economic prospects for Canada, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) indicated that he will deal with all these questions in May, as is usual, in the budget speech. Declarations about the economic prospects are not usually made while the budget is being prepared, just before it is submitted to Parliament.

During the last few months, and I agree with the hon. member, independent research institutions have made a certain number of careful statements about the economic situation and the economic prospects for Canada. Among these are declarations from the Conference Board in Canada, from the Institute of Quantitative Analysis of the University of Toronto, from Informetrica Ltd., and from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). For 1976, all those organizations are expecting a higher output in Canada, a significant increase in employment, a slowdown of inflation rates and an improvement of the current account situation in Canada.

In Canada, financial institutions, labour organizations and enterprises also published their forecasts which however are of a rather smaller scope. In spite of some discrepancies there seems to be a certain unanimity as in the case of the four big organizations mentioned above.

As for job creation, the hon. member should note that if the economy were to progress at a rate of 5 per cent as he said in his question, the number of jobs would have to increase by more than 220,000 so that national productivity reaches or slightly exceeds the 2 per cent provided in the white paper "Attack against Inflation".

As to inflation rates, we should mention that none of the independent research agencies and no serious economic observer suggested that a basic rate other than 8 per cent, would be more appropriate to establish the basic protection factor provided under the terms of the anti-inflation program.

Finally, with the economic recovery in the United States and the rest of the world, Canadian exporters will be in a better position than they were recently.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I did not deal with all the other subjects raised by the hon. member, but the minister or myself will be in a better position to do so before the committee or the House as mentioned in the budget.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10 . 30 p.m.
